Legislative Assembly of Alberta

3 p.m.

Thursday, March 2, 2017

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! All rise, please.

[The Clerk read the Royal Proclamation dated January 18, 2017, summoning the Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to convene on this date]

The Clerk: Please be seated.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! Order! Mr. Speaker.

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, the Speaker, accompanied by the officers of the Assembly, entered the Chamber and took the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Welcome back, hon. members. Honoured guests and visitors, welcome to your Legislature.

Would you please all bow your heads. Let each of us pray or reflect, each in our own way, to search for wisdom, knowledge, and understanding of and with each other. We ask for guidance in order that truth and justice may prevail in all judgments for the benefit of all Albertans.

Ladies and gentlemen, I would now invite Maura Sharkey-Pryma, accompanied by the Royal Canadian Artillery Band, to lead us in the singing of our national anthem. Please join us in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members and Guests:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
Il sait porter la croix!
Ton histoire est une épopée
Des plus brillants exploits.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Entrance of the Lieutenant Governor

[The Premier, the Clerk, and the Sergeant-at-Arms left the Chamber to attend the Lieutenant Governor]

[The Mace was draped]

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Royal Canadian Artillery Band will now play a brief musical interlude. The piece to be performed is entitled First Suite in E Flat for Military Band, composed by Gustav Holst. Composed in 1909, the First Suite was the British composer's first composition for a military band. Today we hear the March, one of the three movements in the suite.

The RCA Band, Canada's oldest regular army band, was formed in Quebec City in 1879. It was subsequently stationed in Montreal and in Halifax. It has since seen service in both world wars and in Korea, and it has travelled across Canada and beyond our borders. Reconstituted in this city of Edmonton, Alberta's capital, in 1997, the band is under the direction of Mr. Benjamin Van Slyke, who is in the Speaker's gallery.

[The Sergeant-at-Arms knocked on the main doors of the Chamber three times. The Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms opened the doors, and the Sergeant-at-Arms entered]

The Sergeant-at-Arms: All rise, please.

Mr. Speaker, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor awaits.

The Speaker: Sergeant-at-Arms, admit Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor.

[A fanfare of trumpets sounded]

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta, Lois Mitchell, CM, AOE, LLD, and Honorary Colonel Douglas Mitchell, their party, the Premier, and the Clerk entered the Chamber. Her Honour took her place upon the throne]

Her Honour: Please be seated.

Good afternoon, everyone. I was just explaining to the Premier why I am wearing this purple robe. It was given by the Legislative Assembly to the Hon. Helen Hunley in 1987 to commemorate the 75th anniversary of this beautiful building, so I felt that it was only appropriate, as you all know that it's Canada's 150th anniversary, that I should wear it today. I also, though, want you to know that it is a tribute to all the wonderful Albertans, the committed, dedicated citizens who worked in this building for over a hundred years and made such great history, just like we're doing this afternoon.

Let's begin.

Speech from the Throne

Introduction

Her Honour: Friends, welcome everyone to the first day of this new session of Alberta's Legislature. As we gather today on Treaty 6 land, we are reminded again of the bedrock importance of this institution to the democratic life of our province.

Albertans come from every part of the globe. We are an open and inclusive society built on enduring values: compassion, hard work, and justice. In an uncertain world these values are more important than ever, our North Star to guide us through our deliberations as we seek to build a better province for every Albertan, no matter their background, birthplace, or creed. We are one province, one people on a common journey towards a common future. Let's never forget that.

The power of these values revealed itself again this past year. Albertans came together in a time of extraordinary danger. As the Wood Buffalo wildfires tore through communities, we stood as one, as fellow citizens with a shared responsibility to each other. When called upon, ordinary women and men from all walks of life do extraordinary things. Therein lies hope for the future, not only here in Alberta but throughout the world.

Of course, the wildfires were one of the most significant events in what has been a very challenging time in Alberta's history. The collapse in the world price for oil continues to affect the well-being of families and communities, reverberating at boardroom and kitchen tables throughout the province.

Cutting the Growth of Government Spending

It has also affected the province's bottom line. For too long Alberta tied spending to the price of oil, which resulted in volatile funding swings for core services. For instance, under former governments the rate of yearly spending growth increases was as high as 11 per cent. Your government stopped that practice.

Through diligent action and targeted reductions we are bringing the rate of spending growth down thoughtfully and prudently. Your government has cut and amalgamated government agencies; frozen salaries for cabinet ministers, MLAs, political staff, and management in the civil service; and streamlined spending across government. For example, last week your government took action to cut salaries and eliminate bonuses for the highest paid executives of agencies, boards, and commissions, including eliminating perks such as retention bonuses, golf club memberships, and housing allowances.

As we pursue further spending reductions, your government will hold firm to the belief that spending reductions should never happen at the expense of our schools, hospitals, and those very things Albertans rely on to weather the downturn and provide for their families. Such reductions certainly should not happen at the expense of Albertans who need government to have their backs in a crisis such as the residents of Wood Buffalo.

Working to Make Life Better for Families

Now more than ever the fundamentals matter. Albertans are worried about the basics: paying the bills, keeping or finding a job, saving for retirement and their children's education, and caring for loved ones. As our economy recovers, families rightly expect their government to help them come through the downturn and make their lives better. Your government understands this is its core responsibility, to make life better for everyday Albertans. Over the last two years your government has aimed its every action and decision at meeting this test. We will continue to do so.

Building New Pipelines

Making life better starts with coming to terms with an economic reality that past governments failed to address. Alberta is too dependent on selling its energy products to one customer at one discounted price. As a result, we have been at the mercy of global economic forces over which we have no control. This must change. Under this government it is changing.

In last year's Speech from the Throne your government committed to erasing doubts about Alberta's environmental reputation as part of an effective economic diversification strategy that would break Alberta's land lock and open up new markets for our oil. The plan is working. Last November the government of Canada approved the Trans Mountain pipeline and line 3, citing Alberta's climate leadership plan as key to its decision. Let there be no doubt: the approval of these two pipelines is a historic step forward. Though we won't celebrate until the first drop of oil leaves Canadian shores from a new pipeline, we recognize the spirit of co-operation and hard work by those who have brought us to this point. Our energy industry, indigenous communities, environmentalists, and ordinary Albertans came together in common purpose, showing, once and for all, that a strong economy and a clean environment can and must go hand in hand.

In the weeks and months ahead your government will remain focused on bringing this pipeline to completion. But to get the job done, we must all pull in one direction. We must speak with one voice and communicate one message: a strong energy industry supports a strong Canada. This is a message we will repeat at every opportunity. On the Trans Mountain pipeline our work is not done. In any and all appropriate forums your government will continue to make the case that this pipeline is critical for Albertans and all Canadians. To that end, your government will defend our province and its key industry in court, seeking intervenor status on legal challenges to the Trans Mountain pipeline.

Trans Mountain is not the end of our market diversification efforts. This year we will also continue to work thoughtfully and respectfully with the federal government, indigenous communities, and elected officials across Canada on the Energy East pipeline proposal.

Creating and Supporting Jobs

Your government's singular determination to build new pipelines to Canada's shoreline is for an equally singular reason: Alberta's energy industry creates good jobs, and good jobs are the bedrock of a strong province.

Good Jobs in Alberta's Energy Industry

Since the beginning of its mandate your government has zeroed in on the task of supporting Alberta's energy industry. Three weeks ago Alberta celebrated the 70th anniversary of the Leduc No. 1 oil strike, which inaugurated the rise of modern Alberta: strong, confident, and proud. Over those seven decades Albertans have become world-class innovators. The same is true today. Through innovation our energy industry will always stay ahead of the pack.

Innovation is one of the driving motivations behind Alberta's modernized royalty framework. The new framework is now doing its work: offering incentives to reduce costs, improving efficiency, and, through increased activity, creating jobs, a fact recognized by industry leaders and energy experts. Although the framework only came into force in January, many producers opted in early, leading to the approval of 158 new wells that would not have otherwise been drilled last year, with each well supporting up to 135 direct and indirect jobs. Mid-January of this year saw a 50 per cent increase in active rigs compared with the same point in 2016. Shipments in energy products in December of last year were the highest in two years and almost double the 2016 low. Your government is taking action to build on this momentum and make life better for families.

In addition to accessing new overseas markets, this year further work will be undertaken to add value to our energy products here at home. Through the petrochemical diversification program your government will continue to work alongside our energy industry to push forward on the construction of two new world-class petrochemical plants. These new plants will create thousands of jobs and diversify our economy by adding value to our energy resources here in Alberta, producing products used in plastics all over the world.

Later this year we will receive recommendations from the energy diversification advisory committee. Committee members are currently consulting with industry, economists, academics, and labour to find ways to get more value and more jobs from our energy resources and diversify our economy. Also, your government is working with Ottawa to create good oil field service industry jobs and make sure more orphaned wells, those no longer under the care of a company, are safely closed and reclaimed.

Creating Jobs Across Our Economy

As important as it is to create jobs in energy, it is equally critical we create jobs across our economy, in agriculture, forestry, tourism and manufacturing, as well as in emerging sectors such as high tech, craft brewing, and more. To help, your government has cut small business taxes, created new tax credits to encourage innovation, and helped entrepreneurs get loans to start new businesses. The newly introduced capital investment tax credit and the Alberta investor tax credit, both of which are tax credits other provinces have enjoyed for years, are doing exactly what they are supposed to: helping business expand, innovate, and hire more people. This year work continues to support small businesses, entrepreneurs, and job creators.

Alberta's agricultural producers are the world's best, and so are the products made by them. Building on investments your government made last year such as capital to expand the Agrivalve Processing Business Incubator and Food Processing Development Centre in Leduc, an investment that doubled the size of that facility, making it the largest of its kind in Canada, this year will see further support to help Alberta's agrifood entrepreneurs.

Entrepreneurs across the province will also get tailored, new supports. The expansion of more entrepreneurship incubators in communities across Alberta will help get good ideas off the ground and provide new businesses with tools to help them grow. Alberta small businesses with this type of support average a 25 per cent annual growth rate compared with a rate of less than 5 per cent nationally. Your government will also remain nimble and responsive to good ideas for bringing more business to Alberta, like we were with the city of Lethbridge to ensure the expansion of Cavendish Farms, the single largest private-sector investment in the history of Lethbridge, which will create good jobs and more opportunities for Alberta farmers.

Clean Energy

This year your government will also move forward on attracting more renewable energy investments. When it comes to renewables, investors world-wide are looking to Alberta as the next exciting place to bring their money. This spring the first competitive renewable energy auction will take place, securing up to 400 megawatts of new renewable energy investment in Alberta. Over the coming years more renewable auctions will take place, keeping Alberta on track to add 5,000 new megawatts of renewable energy capacity while also generating more economic activity in a more diversified economy and creating jobs.

While your government works to attract more renewable energy, we need to ensure that green power is backstopped by strong, stable power from clean-burning natural gas. So this year your government will continue with Alberta's electricity market transition. By changing our electricity market so it is no longer a risky outlier in North America, we can provide more stable, predictable prices, less risk for investors, and attract the new natural gas generation investments needed to create jobs and power Alberta's future.

Infrastructure

While we are building renewable energy infrastructure, we are also building the hospitals, schools, highways, and transit that are the lifeblood of the modern economy. Jurisdictions with the foresight to invest today will be tomorrow's economic leaders. Last year shovels were in the ground on nearly 300 transportation projects, more than 100 schools, plus universities, colleges, and health facilities. This year even more progress will be made on Alberta's historic capital plan, putting thousands of Albertans to work on construction sites, building the infrastructure we need to secure our economic future and way of life. With interest rates at historic lows there is simply no better time to get projects built and create good jobs.

Protecting Alberta's International Trade Interests

This year action is also being taken to protect Alberta's interests and jobs in a fast-changing global economy. The Premier just returned from Washington, DC, where she had productive conversations with members of Congress, officials from the Canadian embassy, industry representatives, policy experts, and others. Those conversations were grounded in advance work with representatives of key Alberta industries. The Premier and members of cabinet got good advice from industry leaders on how to best approach upcoming trade discussions, with a focus on protecting jobs and seizing new areas of opportunity.

These important conversations will continue. Your government's message to officials in Washington was clear: a strong Alberta contributes to a stronger Canada and a stronger continent. Your government will continue to work closely with Ottawa and officials in Washington to ensure our shared economic interests are protected and advanced. In order to bolster and diversify Alberta's trade relationships, additional trade missions will be undertaken this year to key markets across the world, including Japan, India, and China.

Making Life More Affordable

Whether it's selling Alberta to new markets, attracting new investments, building pipelines, or putting Albertans to work on vital infrastructure projects, your government's focus is the same: creating good, family-supporting jobs. Those good jobs are even better when paycheques go further, and paycheques go further when life is more affordable.

Reducing School Fees

Every September parents across Alberta scramble to cobble together money to pay for a host of school fees. Rather than having a bit extra to put into savings or groceries or their mortgage, parents are forced to redirect their money to pay for education services. For years families have said enough is enough; the fees are too much. Yet school fees have grown and grown. This session your government will take a major step forward to make life more affordable for parents and families by eliminating instructional supply and material fees at Alberta's public schools. Your government will also eliminate busing fees for children travelling to their designated school. The first bill tabled this session will start that work, by eliminating these fee categories in time for the start of the next school year. These changes will reduce total mandatory school fees by approximately 25 per cent. Work to further reduce school fees for families will continue.

Capping Electricity Rates

But that is far from the only step your government is taking to help protect the family budget and make life better. This year your government is capping electricity rates for families and businesses because an electricity bill isn't a jack-in-the-box. There is no need for a surprise. Rates will be capped below the average price families have paid over the last decade. If electricity prices go up past the cap, electricity bills won't. Period. Legislation will be introduced this session to make this cap the law.

Energy Efficiency

Not only will energy bills be capped, but tools will be made available to bring energy bills down. Your government will help families, businesses, nonprofits, farmers, municipalities, and indigenous communities save money and increase energy efficiency with programs to support more energy-efficient appliances, heating, lighting, and more. In addition, your government will make it more affordable to install solar panels on homes, supporting jobs and growth in Alberta's residential solar industry and helping families power their homes with more green energy. All the while, carbon levy rebates will continue going right to the bank accounts of two-thirds of Alberta households.

Protecting Consumers

But to protect the pocketbooks of families, your government is not stopping there. We banned door-to-door energy sales and put an end to predatory payday lending. This year your government will take further action to protect consumers and give them more peace of mind. Also, in this session your government will make consumer protection laws in Alberta stronger and introduce a consumer bill of rights.

Strong Support for Health Care and Education

Focusing on jobs and affordability helps to make life better for families. So, too, does a focus on other fundamentals such as high-quality public services. This year your government will build on its plan to protect and enhance health care, education, and the public services families in Alberta count on every day.

Strong Public Education

Albertans want their children and grandchildren to fulfill their potential and realize their dreams. It's for this reason that generations of Albertans built a strong public education system to provide our children with tools they need to lead productive and happy lives. It's for this reason that through the economic downturn your government has made classroom education a top priority, including reversing planned cuts that would have taken teachers out of the classroom. Through the future ready initiative we are freezing tuition, working with parents to modernize our curriculum, expanding access to student loans, and investing in more apprenticeship and training. This year, in addition to eliminating certain school fees, your government will continue to provide stable, predictable funding to our schools, universities, colleges, and institutes and will announce the approval and construction of new schools.

Strong Public Health Care

At the same time as we are improving education across the province, we are also improving health care. Modern new hospitals are being built such as the new cancer building in Calgary, and services at rural health centres are expanding such as the one in Sylvan Lake. But hospitals aren't the only answer. We can deliver more care in our communities. This year your government is partnering with the Alberta Medical Association to help communities find and retain the health care professionals they need both in rural and urban areas and especially in underserved communities. New ways to pay doctors are being developed, ways that support them in spending more time with each patient. Taken together, these initiatives mean families spend less time on the highway and in the waiting room and more time with a medical professional who knows them.

Your government will continue to create new long-term care and dementia spaces and offer more home-care services to help seniors live safely in their homes and communities. We will make life better for vulnerable Albertans by putting nurse practitioners on the front lines to care for homeless women and youth in Calgary and Edmonton. We will invest in mental health care, with specific programs for youth, for children and families, for Albertans who have experienced trauma, and for indigenous communities. We will move forward with supervised consumption services and other harm reduction measures to address the rising tragedy of opioid overdose deaths. Above all, we will maintain a stable, dependable health care system that Albertan families can rely upon to make their lives better.

Protecting People, Workers, and Families

For Alberta's youngest and most vulnerable more needs to be done to help struggling families thrive and to make sure every child has a safe home. When a child's home isn't safe, we have a responsibility to step in and do whatever it takes to make sure kids are protected. Child protection is one of the most important services any government can provide, and we owe it to our children to get it right. It is for this reason that your government created a new department to focus on services for children and launched an all-party Ministerial Panel on Child Intervention. Building on the work of that panel, your government will introduce new legislation focused on ensuring child death reviews receive the utmost care and attention.

Your government will also build on our work to better help and protect victims of sexual and domestic violence with the introduction of legislation that eliminates barriers to pursuing justice.

For Albertans with disabilities more work will be done to provide timelier, more accessible services.

More work will also be done this year to modernize working conditions for Albertans.

For low-income families in need of housing, your government will continue to address long-overdue repairs of the affordable housing units we already have, and we will build more units for families and seniors in need.

Hundreds of thousands of families will continue receiving the Alberta child benefit and the enhanced Alberta family and employment tax credit to ensure that children get a good start in life.

This year your government will also make further progress on its commitment to $25-per-day child care. Bids to create or expand new affordable and innovative child care centres will be awarded in the coming weeks.

Your government will also continue to make sure Alberta's lowest paid workers, most of whom are women and many of whom are parents, get a modest and predictable raise, staying on track to fulfill our commitment to increase the minimum wage to $15 an hour.

Supporting Local Government

In addition to creating jobs, making life more affordable, and supporting strong public services, this year your government will take further measures to support communities and families. Important work remains this session on the Modernized Municipal Government Act. This work will build on the strong, respectful relationships developed with municipal leaders. Those relationships have allowed us to bring in new measures that empower local governments, enabling them to provide their communities with better services and more jobs. Your government, the city of Edmonton, and the city of Calgary will also continue to work together to create city charters, with a view toward building stronger, more vibrant cities that attract trade, investment, and jobs.

Working with Indigenous Communities

Important work remains to improve relations with indigenous communities and people. To date the Alberta government has signed new relationship agreements with Treaty 8 and the Métis Nation of Alberta. This year your government will pursue further agreements.

When it comes to ensuring that First Nations communities have access to safe drinking water, our country has a shameful record. Many First Nations communities in Alberta currently have boil water advisories and have for some time. This is unacceptable. Indigenous people in Alberta need to see concrete action that makes their lives better. Working with First Nations and the federal government, your government will address the critical need for access to clean drinking water on reserves, thereby making real progress on fulfilling the principles of the United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples.

Protecting Our Natural Heritage

As we work to create better conditions for communities across Alberta, we also have a responsibility to protect our extraordinary natural heritage. Albertans love to hike, fish, hunt, and enjoy our natural beauty. This year your government will continue to improve parks across our province and build on the historic protections we have brought into place such as the recently announced protections for the Castle area. Consultations on the plan to protect the Castle area will continue this year, as will your government's commitment to create better opportunities for everyone to enjoy our parks. Investments will be made in new campgrounds, trails, and roads, and we will support all types of recreation with real improvements to our parks, whether you are exploring on a motorized vehicle, horseback, or lacing up hiking boots. Alberta's natural beauty is part of the wealth we all inherited, and that natural inheritance must be protected and passed on for future generations to enjoy.

Strengthening Our Democracy

Finally, to make life better for families, we will continue to strengthen our democratic institutions. To date your government has taken big money out of politics and enacted an ambitious democratic reform agenda. This session that work continues. New measures will be introduced to expand protection for whistle-blowers and to strengthen our conflict-of-interest laws.

Conclusion – Working to Make Life Better

Friends, grit built this province. Grit will build its future. That future is in the hands of us all: farmers, teachers, oil workers, nurses, welders, entrepreneurs, public servants, and so many others, everyone who made the decision to call this northern slice of the continent their home and never looked back.

As a province we have had our ups and downs. But we have always been at our best when we are focused on what matters. Two years ago oil prices collapsed. It hurt badly. Did Albertans panic? No. Did we sacrifice the very things that make our province strong? No. We didn't do those things because that's not who we are and it wouldn't have solved a thing. What we did was simple. We got down to work and stayed focused on what matters to everyday Albertans: good jobs, protecting pocketbooks, strong health care, and education. These are the things that count, the things that make life better.

Two years later our economy is starting to turn the corner. We are on our way to breaking the land lock, jobs are coming back, our kids have good schools, and our loved ones have the care they need. Are we there yet? No. Though the world around us may be growing more uncertain, your government will remain calm and focused. Now is not the time to let our steady hand waver. As we have from the start, we will continue to create jobs, diversify our economy, and protect the health and education services on which families rely. In that work we will make life better for Alberta families.

Thank you, friends.

God bless Alberta.

God bless Canada.

And God save the Queen.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! All rise, please.

The Speaker: Ladies and gentlemen, I would now invite Maura Sharkey-Pryma, accompanied by the Royal Canadian Artillery Band, to lead us in the singing of God Save The Queen. Please remain standing after the conclusion.

Hon. Members and Guests:

God save our gracious Queen,
Long live our noble Queen,
God save The Queen!
Send her victorious,
Happy and glorious,
Long to reign over us;
God save The Queen!

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order!

[The Mace was uncovered]

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Hon. members, ladies and gentlemen, it's an honour and a privilege to be before you today as Speaker of this, the 29th Legislative Assembly, to share with you a few words about an important anniversary, an anniversary that binds us all together, the 150th anniversary of Confederation, which we will of course all celebrate together on July 1.

I want to inform you of a number of events that are occurring here on the Legislature Grounds to help celebrate this occasion. Canada Day 2017 will feature a full program highlighting established and emerging Alberta artists throughout the Legislature Grounds. Additionally, Canada's 150th anniversary represents a unique opportunity to celebrate the great diversity of our country, the diversity that binds us together in this Legislature. Performers will be on-site for National Aboriginal Day on June 21 to celebrate our indigenous origins, La Célébration de la Francophonie Canadienne on June 24 to fete our francophone heritage, and Canadian Multiculturalism Day on June 27 to acknowledge that immigration has contributed to the development, the strengthening of our inclusive society. Of course, there will also be a series of Canada Day events across this province, giving us the opportunity to celebrate this great and wonderful nation on its 150th birthday from our smallest rural communities to our urban centres.

A more sombre but no less important anniversary is that of the Battle of Vimy Ridge. Now, I know you know that Vimy is one of if not the most important military battles in Canadian history. Many historians consider that battle at Vimy Ridge a defining moment for Canada, with some saying that after that battle Canada truly emerged as a nation. But that battle was not without its heavy costs. Taking place over four days, from April 9 until April 12, 1917, the Canadian Corps successfully took Vimy Ridge, which was an important strategic position on the front lines in northern France overlooking enemy positions. Fighting together for the very first time during the First World War, approximately 15,000 Canadian infantry stormed German positions on the morning of April 9, showing tremendous bravery as they moved forward during the barrage even though thousands of their soldiers fell in that battle. More than 10,000 Canadian soldiers were killed or wounded on just those four days.

After the battle was fought and the war was won at a huge cost, Vimy Ridge has endured as a reminder of the sacrifice that the young Dominion made. In 1936 an impressive memorial was unveiled in northern France, which commemorates the sacrifice and the contributions of Canadian soldiers at that battle. Anyone who has seen that monument can testify to its magnificence. I have visited that solemn place. It screams of the pain and loss of war. Fifty thousand Albertans were a part of that Canadian force and enlisted in the Great War, and nearly 50 per cent of those Albertans were either killed or injured.

Partly to commemorate the 100th anniversary of the Battle of Vimy Ridge, we are presenting an impressive exhibit called Alberta and the Great War, which is featured in the Borealis Gallery in the Edmonton Federal building's visitor centre. It will be on display until May 22, 2017. I would invite and ask all of you present today to attend an opening reception of Alberta and the Great War at 5:30 this afternoon.

[The Premier returned to the Chamber]

Tablings

The Speaker: I have the honour to table a copy of the speech graciously given by Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Bill 1

An Act to Reduce School Fees

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today with a great deal of pride to introduce the first reading of Bill 1, An Act to Reduce School Fees.

This is legislation that through a series of amendments and a new school fee regulation will make life better and more affordable for Alberta families.

Our government ran on a platform of commitment to reduce the burden of school fees on Alberta families, and we are following through with that commitment. If passed, this legislation will put money back into the pockets of parents of nearly 600,000 Alberta families. They will no longer be billed for textbooks, workbooks, photocopying costs, and so much more. Our government is protecting and improving education because of the difference it makes in the lives of Albertans, Mr. Speaker.

With that, I am truly proud and honoured to move first reading of Bill 1. Thank you very much.

[Motion carried; Bill 1 read a first time]

Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that the speech of Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor to this Assembly be taken into consideration the week of March 6, 2017.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I move that the Assembly stand adjourned until Monday, March 6, at 1:30 p.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:04 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 29th Legislature - 3rd Session (2017)

Activity to Thursday, March 2, 2017

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 1 to 200 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 201 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

* An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at 780.427.2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned chapter number until the conclusion of the Fallittings.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Welcome back. I'm glad to see that all of you had safe travels to and from.

I would ask you to bow your heads as we reflect and pray, each in our own way. Allow us to be a source of support to one another, and let us allow others who garner support from a higher authority to do so in peace. During times of debate, disagreement, and conflict let us take moments to listen, understand, and reflect. Let us be reminded that in the end our shared ultimate goal remains the same, to improve our province for future generations. Amen.

Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, we will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Mr. Joel Crichton. I would invite all to participate in the language of their choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and to all members of this Assembly a group of 37 brilliant grade 6 students from Norwood school in my constituency. They are accompanied by their teacher, Ms Susan Strebchuk. These students are participating in the School at the Legislature program this week and will be enjoying extensive tours of our building and the visitor centre, presentations by various officers and agencies of the Legislative Assembly, and many other activities during their stay with us. I would ask them to please now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you a number of students, staff, and chaperones from Spruce View school in the magnificent riding of Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. We have Ms Michelle Long, Mr. Ryan Johansson, Mr. Ryan Skage, Ms Kim Davies, and the class. If you'd all stand up, please, and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other school groups today?
Seeing and hearing none, the Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this House Mickey Wilson, who for over four years has served as the executive director of the Pride Centre of Edmonton, providing important supports and services to Edmonton's LGBTQ-plus communities. He also travels to communities across our province, providing training and education to help various organizations better support and understand the same. He's a tireless advocate for justice and a true friend to some of the most marginalized among us, including LGBTQ youth, trans youth, and new immigrants to Canada from the LGBTQ community. I'd ask that he rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three individuals from the University of Alberta whose work is influencing innovation in many areas, including agriculture and environmental sciences, and I ask that they stand when I say their names.

Dr. John Wolodko is the Alberta Innovates strategic chair in bio and industrial materials and an associate professor at the University of Alberta. His research focuses on the development of sustainable green materials from agricultural and forestry feedstocks and microbial-influenced corrosion and wear materials, which we'll hear more about in my member's statement today. Dr. Stanford Blade is dean of the Faculty of Agricultural, Life and Environmental Sciences at the University of Alberta. He has contributed greatly to Alberta's understanding of innovation in the resource economy, and he was also the CEO of Alberta Innovates: Bio Solutions corporation, which co-ordinates science and innovation to grow prosperity in Alberta's agricultural, food, and forestry sectors. Cait Wills is the director of communications for the Faculty of Agricultural, Life and Environmental Sciences at the U of A, but more importantly she happens to be an old friend. I ask that they receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a real honour for me to stand today and introduce to you and through you to the members of the Legislature five women whose lives have been grievously and irrevocably touched by the ongoing opioid crisis in Alberta. After losing or nearly losing a loved one to the scourge of opiates, they have all become passionate advocates on these issues. Through their activities in groups, including Moms Stop the Harm, Get Prescription Drugs off the Street, and Changing the Face of Addiction, they hope to stem the tide of overdoses so that no one else has to suffer the pain and grief they have endured. They are here to listen to today's emergency debate on opioid-related deaths, and I ask them to stand as I introduce them so they can receive the warm welcome of the Assembly: Rosalind Davis of Changing the Face of Addiction, Susan Robblee, Amy Graves, Regan Magnus, Lorna Thomas. Thank you for joining us today.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Pipeline Corrosion Research Project

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is the energy leader the world needs for the 21st century. That's why I'm very proud to rise today to speak about the way our research community helps to ensure safe and environmentally sustainable oil transportation. I'm pleased to speak about Genome Canada's recent announcement of $7.8 million in funding to support an Alberta-based oil sands innovation research project.

Two scientists, Dr. John Wolodko from the University of Alberta and the strategic chair of Alberta Innovates: Technology Futures and Dr. Lisa Gieg from the University of Calgary, are coleading a project that aims to decrease microbial decay in pipelines. Fixing this type of decay is like a diagnosis and treatment in the medical field. It is necessary, and it's important to not only the patient but also to everyone who is impacted. If we live in concert with our environment, keeping it healthy is a requirement for the oil transportation industry. This announcement is an example of the investment being made to support innovative research that promotes safe and environmentally sustainable oil transportation.

The expected cost savings resulting from this project are significant. It is estimated that corrosion of steel infrastructure costs the oil and gas industry $3 billion to $7 billion each year in maintenance, repairs, and replacement. Canada's energy transmission pipeline industry alone spends $2.9 billion a year to monitor and maintain pipelines. This team will turn science into solutions and, in doing so, potentially reduce operating costs for the Canadian industry by $300 million to $500 million over the next 20 years. The financial impact of this type of research is significant, but the environmental benefits are priceless when this team is able to stop pipeline corrosion, saving the environment and the economy from the risk of pipeline leakage and spills.

Congratulations to Dr. John Wolodko and Dr. Lisa Gieg on the grant and helping to make our energy industry the best in the world.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, the NDP claimed last week that they care about making life more affordable for Albertans, but the problem is that no one believes them. Their carbon tax will raise the cost on the average household in Alberta by $2,500 a year. It has already caused . . . [interjection] Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

It's already caused a big spike in inflation this year, with higher gas and fuel prices raising the cost of everything. There's no question that this carbon tax hurts all Albertans but especially those in rural and central Alberta.

Life is already too expensive, and the NDP is making it worse, but they're just getting started. They're shutting down coal, destroying historic communities across Alberta, and putting livelihoods at risk. They've raised business taxes, personal taxes, gas taxes, beer taxes, and almost every fee in the book. The NDP is driving our province tens of billions of dollars into debt, with no plan to pay it back or even to stop borrowing. That's billions of dollars that will be sucked away from hospitals and schools just to cover the interest of this government's reckless borrowing.

Where are they spending this money? There's the $9 million on the carbon tax ads that angered Albertans throughout the Christmas season and now $10 million to tell Albertans how to change a light bulb. They're throwing out billions of dollars to kill coal, wasting millions of dollars to protect government-run laundry services at AHS, all at a time while wait times increase in our health care system and violent criminals are getting off scot-free because of chronic delays in our court system. This is the type of waste and mismanagement that is making life more expensive and exactly why Albertans are ready to throw this government out.

The Wildrose will be here and ready to take the NDP's place. We will continue to be on the side of everyday Albertans. We will fight for a better, stronger, more prosperous Alberta, and we will fight every day in this Legislature to carry those forgotten by this NDP government.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Government Spending

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the past two years every time members of the opposition call on this government to exercise even modest spending restraint, they tell us that they cannot without firing thousands of teachers and nurses. In fact, the government has worked very hard to convince Albertans that they must choose between billions of dollars of debt and gutting public services and that any reduction in spending automatically equals a cut to the front lines, which is why I was surprised to hear the Education minister declare last week that he's able to offer Alberta parents a legislated reduction in school fees due to internal savings that his department found over the last year.

Mr. Speaker, I have to ask: how many educational assistants and teachers did they fire? How many larger class sizes are they going to create? When the only path is through front-line cuts, where did he find the $50 million? If that sounds ridiculous, that's because the NDP's logic is ridiculous. My colleagues and I on this side of the House have been saying for years that it is absolutely possible to find internal savings and efficiencies without gutting front-line services. It seems that the minister is finally in agreement. The only difference is that while we would use those savings to reduce the size of the deficit, the minister decided to spend it. He decided he should spend it bribing Alberta parents.

The truth is, Mr. Speaker, that borrowing money doesn't make life more affordable for Alberta families in the long term; it mortgages their children's future. It makes it more expensive because that money will eventually have to be paid back with interest. Even though the Finance minister says, "Albertans should not have to pay this back," well, Minister, there is no one but Albertans to pay this back.

The huge cost of interest would be much better spent on things like cutting the debt, on teachers, nurses, schools, and hospitals. Since this government has demonstrated that there is no interest in developing a plan to pay any of this borrowed money back, it will fall to the very children who attend these schools today to deal with the mess tomorrow. Not a very good education for our children, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Red Deer Seniors' Birthday Celebrations

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise proudly to reflect on an event held in my constituency of Red Deer-South this past weekend. With the help of my colleague the MLA for Red Deer-North and the Golden Circle seniors' centre we hosted community celebrations for the birthdays of local seniors.

Seniors are an essential part of the cultural makeup of Red Deer and Alberta communities and cannot be overlooked. That is why this past Saturday, March 4, seniors with birthdays falling in the first quarter of the year were invited to partake in festivities and be commended for their unique role in our community. I was honoured to meet with Albertans like Violet Elliot, who was celebrating her 100th birthday. From music of the '50s to cake and ice cream it was a day full of fun and entertainment, and I'm happy to say that it was a success.

Seniors are some of the most active people in our communities, and their past and current efforts to make lives better throughout Alberta are truly cherished. Our senior population devotes on average more than double the time of individuals aged 15 to 34 volunteering in their community, showing that seniors know the value of social activism, and we can all be thankful to them for that.

Mr. Speaker, while this government is working to make life better for our seniors by adding supports and building more long-term beds, these Albertans have already spent a lifetime working in and for our communities, and they deserve to be celebrated. Though this was for those with birthdays January through March, I am looking forward to working with the Member for Red Deer-North, the Golden Circle, and more community stakeholders to hold three more of these events to recognize the work and presence of seniors within the Red Deer community. I hope that people remain mindful of the great things this group brings to the province of Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Pink Shirt Day

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In September 2007 Jadrien Cota of Berwick, Nova Scotia, arrived for the first day of grade 9 wearing a pink shirt. Sadly, what should have been an exciting day kicking off a fresh school year was marred by students who bullied him for his choice of clothing. Two other students at his school saw the incident, decided to do something about it, and after school they went and bought 50 pink tank tops. The next day they stood in the school foyer and handed them out to other students to wear in solidarity with Jadrien. In the face of oppression, hatred, and prejudice they chose to stand with the oppressed. Because of their example, every February we now celebrate Pink Shirt Day.

Mr. Speaker, 50 per cent of Albertan students report having been bullied in school. I myself was bullied in school. It causes real emotional and psychological damage that victims are often too ashamed to talk about. In fact, only 10 per cent of them find the courage to speak up. But, sadly, 28 per cent of Albertans believe that bullying is just a normal part of growing up.

Mr. Speaker, bullying is not normal, it is not acceptable, and it is not right. But while 80 per cent of Albertans say that they've witnessed bullying, less than one-quarter stepped in to intervene. That needs to change. We as adults need to set better standards, stand up to bullying behaviour in our homes, in public, and in our places of work, and teach our children that they should never seek to boost their ego at the expense of someone else, that might does not make right.

Mr. Speaker, I call on all of us in this House to not just wear a pink shirt one day a year but in our roles as representatives of Alberta to be better people, to stand up against hatred, ignorance, fear, and intolerance and for acceptance, inclusion, and true equity for all regardless of their ethnicity, gender, orientation, self-expression, or choice of faith. That is what it means to be Albertan, and that is the meaning of Pink Shirt Day.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Rainbow for the Future's Aid to Ethiopia

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I am pleased to tell the members of this House about Rainbow for the Future, a charitable organization based in my constituency of Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock. It's a story of a group of western Canadians reaching out across the ocean to benefit communities and improve the lives of individuals in Ethiopia.

In 1984 Canadians heard about the drought in Ethiopia that was causing millions of people to starve, and they took action. One man, Leo Seguin, started working with Westlock area farmers to organize grain drives. The Westlock growing project partnered with the Canadian Foodgrains Bank and Canadian Lutheran World Relief to feed over 400,000 people. Once the situation stabilized, Albertans like Leo didn't consider the job finished but, instead, dedicated themselves to helping the poor help themselves.

Rainbow for the Future was born in 2005. Their name signifies hope after experiencing dark clouds of turmoil, and it's about being a bridge, a conduit of love and compassion. To date the organization has raised more than $10 million. Among other things they support irrigation-based development projects as a means to improve food security. Having food security allows communities to turn their attention to education, health care, and income generation projects, especially for women. Their philosophy is that small steps lead to big changes.

I look forward to participating in their sports for Ethiopia fundraiser on March 17 and 18 and will be playing in their 24-hour hockey tournament. Last year's event raised $87,000. This allowed us to finish funding the Kuriftu orphans and vulnerable children's support project, the women living with HIV support project, and the construction of the Dode primary school. I am looking for pledges to support me in raising funds for the admirable work Rainbow for the Future does.

Thank you for your consideration.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm sure you all read that memo that was sent out to you back in February. I'd just draw your attention to the point that I underlined in that note and remind you. Each of you, I'm sure, will abide by it. Please keep the volume down in this room.

The Official Opposition House Leader.

Government Policies

Mr. Jean: The NDP said last week that they understand it's their responsibility to make life better for Albertans. They've failed, every single one of them. Fresh off a carbon tax, Albertans have seen the annual inflation rate climb by 2.5 per cent, driven in large part by this government's new carbon tax. Natural gas prices are up 42 per cent. Thanks, NDP. It's more expensive to drive, to heat your homes, and to buy groceries for every Albertan. Can the Premier please explain how making everything more expensive is actually making life better for Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm incredibly proud to be part of a government that is working each and every day to make life better for Alberta families. That's why last week we brought forward legislation that's going to cut school fees for Alberta families. What did the opposition do? They sued the Ethics Commissioner. I think we know who has their priorities on the right side, making life more affordable for Alberta families. That's the difference. That's the choice.

Mr. Jean: I know it must be absolutely crushing for the Premier that the vast majority of Albertans think that the carbon tax is absolutely terrible. People who work in our energy and agriculture sectors drive trucks, and they use fuel. Moms and dads can't just hand in their car or turn their heat off in their homes, and the NDP has already rubber-stamped a $50 carbon tax from Ottawa that will pull $2,500 out of every single family's budget in Alberta. How can the NDP possibly justify not only their carbon tax but a 150 per cent increase in the carbon tax in just a few years?

Ms Hoffman: I'm so glad to talk about affordability, Mr. Speaker. Under previous governments tuition went up year after year after year, and under this government we froze tuition to make life more affordable for Alberta families. On this side of the House we're working every day to keep money in Albertans' pockets and to keep money in the local economy. On that side of the House all they care about is standing up, running in circles, and fighting among themselves. We're going to keep working to make life more affordable by cutting school fees, by keeping tuition affordable, and by keeping strong public services, and I will stand up for that each and every day.

The Speaker: Hon. members, on this side please keep the volume of your hitting the desks down, and on this side please keep the volume of your voices down. Thank you.

Second supplemental.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let's look at the facts. The NDP has overseen the worst budget crisis in Alberta's history. To date they've tried raising taxes on everyone and everything, but that hasn't worked. In fact, Alberta is raking in nearly a billion dollars less in income taxes than they budgeted. The NDP have made it clear that they have no appetite to cut spending for the most expensive government in Canada by far, so that leaves only one other option, more tax hikes. With the NDP now leaving a PST, believe it or not, on the table, what new taxes should Albertans expect, and when will the NDP government bring them in?

Ms Hoffman: Let's keep talking about facts and affordability, Mr. Speaker. Under the former government rates for electricity skyrocketed. They were in constant chaos. It was a jack-in-the-box. Under this government we brought in a cap. They want to jack up your fees; we want to keep them affordable. They want to make sure school fees go up; we want to keep them affordable. They want to see tuition rise at postsecondary; we're not going to let that happen. The choice is clear. You've got a government that's standing up for ordinary Albertans, or you've got an opposition that only wants to stand up for themselves. We've made the right decision.

The Speaker: Second main question.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier and the NDP seem – and, frankly, I think they are – totally out of touch with reality here in Alberta. If there's a new recovery, Albertans certainly aren't feeling it. In the past year 45,000 full-time jobs have evaporated, including 24,000 just in January. Downtown vacancy in Calgary is at more than 30 per cent, and we now have Ottawa promising to phase out our oil sands. How, then, can the NDP justify raising taxes, crippling small businesses, and driving our balance sheet off the cliff?

Ms Hoffman: You want to talk about Ottawa? Let's talk about Ottawa. Under this government Ottawa has approved us to move forward with two new pipelines to the west coast, Mr. Speaker. We're moving products. We're getting results. What happened in the 10 years the member opposite was in Ottawa? No pipelines, no new access, no international markets. I want to say that we're working hard to make sure that we're diversifying the economy, getting new jobs, and making life more affordable, and I think it's time that the members opposite acknowledged the real progress this government is making.

The Speaker: The first supplemental.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to talk about progress because in just two years the NDP has hammered Albertans with personal and business tax increases; increased regulations; Bill 6, of course; caps in our oil sands; coal shutdowns that are killing historic communities; lawsuits against power companies; record debt and record deficits; and the largest tax increase in Alberta's history. The new carbon tax alone will cost families $2,500 each and every year and has already increased the price of everything for Albertans. How can anyone in this government stand behind these policies, that are obviously hurting Albertans and handcuffing our economy and our future?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you for the question from the leader of the Wildrose. Now, whether it's the Wildrose, Wildrose 2.0, Conservatives, Conservative Alliance, Conservative Reform Alliance, the answer will always be the same. They will always stand up for themselves and for the big insiders while we are on this side making life better for Alberta families, Mr. Speaker. That's why we have a government that's making life more affordable by bringing in modest salary increases to the lowest wage earners in Alberta. They want to cut the minimum wage. We're standing up for low-income Albertans, we're standing up for Alberta families, we're keeping money in their pockets, and it's time for the members on the other side of the House to stop saying the opposite.

The Speaker: I think we're on the second supplemental.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta should be doing much better right now, but it's not, and NDP policies are to blame. The Premier promised 100,000 new private-sector jobs last April. Instead, 45,000 full-time jobs have disappeared in Alberta. After jacking up business taxes and bringing in a carbon tax, our number one competitor, the United States, is making drastic cuts to their taxes, building pipelines, and won't see any carbon tax any time soon. When can Albertans expect to see a plan to keep Alberta competitive instead of letting jobs and investment move out of the province?

Ms Hoffman: Well, one of the ways we keep Alberta competitive is by keeping Alberta families strong and supported and by making their lives better, Mr. Speaker. That's one of the reasons why last week we took real action to reduce school fees for Alberta families. Instead of the members opposite screaming angry rhetoric and sending angry tweets out late on a Friday night, we're actually making lives better for Alberta families. We'll continue to do that today and tomorrow and for the days to come because Albertans deserve a government that's on their side. It's clear that they have a choice between the guys opposite, who are busy arguing amongst themselves, and a government that's on their side.

The Speaker: Third main question.

Energy Efficiency Programs

Mr. Jean: I know, Mr. Speaker, that most of the NDP's inner circle come from out of province, but here's some free advice. Albertans don't like carbon taxes, and they especially don't like it when you take their money to hire Ontario companies to install light bulbs and power bars.

There's no reasonable control and no restrictions on who can access it, and it's just the start of the NDP carbon tax fuelled boondoggles. I have an easy question for the Premier: how many NDP bureaucrats does it take to install a light bulb?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The members opposite have no interest in energy efficiency or anything that will make life more affordable for Alberta families. That's why we were the last jurisdiction to finally catch up to the rest of Canada and bring forward an energy efficiency program, and I'm not going to apologize for putting money back in Albertans' pockets. This is the right investment in making their lives more affordable, and we're going to keep moving forward on those initiatives, that should have taken place decades ago, but the folks on the other side had no interest. Instead, we're going to actually take concrete action to make life more affordable for Alberta families.

Mr. Mason: [inaudible] and three Wildrosers to heckle her.

Mr. Cooper: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order noted.

Mr. Jean: Well, actually, Wildrose believes that Albertans spend their money better than any government's going to. The NDP believes they need to take people's money to show them how to spend it better. It's NDP elitism and condescension at its finest. Oh, and if you've already paid for energy efficiency this year in Alberta in your own home, you're out of luck. Albertans care about the environment. They don't need the NDP to tell them how to do it. How many more millions of dollars in boondoggles can Albertans expect to pay with this environment minister in charge?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With the price on carbon we're investing every single dollar back in the local economy, and as a result we're going to have good, long-term jobs here in Alberta, and we're also going to have lower bills for Alberta consumers. The Dunsky report says that it will lower bills by $6.3 million. That's money back in Albertans' pockets. The members opposite want you to pay more for electricity. This side is working hard to keep your costs down. The dichotomy is pretty clear.

Mr. Jean: Well, here are the facts, Mr. Speaker. There's absolutely no ceiling whatsoever on how much it's going to cost Alberta taxpayers, how many people will have to be hired, how many light bulbs, how many power bars, and how many shower heads people will receive, and who actually will qualify. It's a mess. But at least the NDP are helping out-of-province Ecofitt's bottom line by helping them expand their warehouse total by nearly a third nationwide. Here's a solution: scrap the carbon tax and respect the intelligence of Albertans. Does the minister really believe Albertans need some contractor from Ontario to show them how to change their light bulbs?

Ms Hoffman: As you probably have heard, Mr. Speaker, Alberta is the last jurisdiction to finally come out of the Dark Ages and move forward on electricity and retrofits, and that's one of the reasons why we've used some of the best folks from across the industry to be able to help us do that. This company works in Nova Scotia, Ontario, Manitoba, Quebec, British Columbia, and they're going to be doing good work right here to help Albertans save money and put those dollars back in their pockets. This is good news for Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Provincial Third-quarter Fiscal Update

Mr. McIver: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, the Finance minister presented the third-quarter fiscal report, where he spent more time talking about green shoots than he did explaining why the fruits of those green shoots, an extra one and a half billion dollars in resource revenue, were not applied against the massive $10.8 billion budget deficit. It's a great thing. We're starting to see some modest economic recovery in Alberta, but nothing this government has done since it took office has contributed in the slightest to the increase in the price of oil. To the Finance minister: why are you now taking credit for the price of oil on the way up, when you were running away from it ever so recently on the way down?

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, it's really great that the price of oil is slowly climbing, and people talk about it coming up, but it's going to be lower for longer, so in that regard we are doing the things that Albertans require in terms of addressing things like the biggest natural disaster this country has ever seen. We showed Albertans and all of the country that we have Fort McMurray's back. We had expenditures there. We are addressing that. I would really love to see oil go higher and higher and higher, but the base is going to be lower for longer. With that, we have to budget properly, and we are.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. In that same third-quarter update the minister bragged about the creation of 18,000 new jobs since July 2016. What he failed to mention is that 13 and a half thousand of those jobs are part-time. Given that he called his last budget the jobs plan – a failure – and approximately 100,000 mortgage-paying jobs have been lost since this government took office, can the Finance minister explain to the hundreds of thousands of unemployed Albertans why he is satisfied with switching out full-time jobs for part-time jobs?

Mr. Ceci: You know, Mr. Speaker, these are difficult times. We're coming through a two-year recession and just finally seeing the economy start to turn around, but it is quite tenuous, and we will have to do everything as a government to support Albertans through this time. But we're working always to create good jobs, we're working to diversify the economy, and we are investing in infrastructure. Those will get us through to better times. The opposite group here cut, cut, cut, and they figure that nirvana is going to happen with that. That doesn't get you there. It's a long, tough road, but we're supporting Albertans.

Mr. McIver: Tax, tax, tax doesn't work, Mr. Speaker.

The Finance minister also bragged about diversification in the Alberta economy. As examples he pointed to the uptick in drilling rigs and overall oil and gas activity as proof. Previously he said that economic diversification equals getting away from our reliance on the energy sector, but now that oil and gas is solely responsible for recovery, or largely, they couldn't be happier to champion the central role that it plays in our prosperity. Again to the Finance minister: now, does this mean your government is finally willing to embrace the energy sector and work with the men and women that have depended upon it for so long?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, the oil and gas sector is incredibly important in this province and always will be into the future, but diversification is also important. The oil and gas roller coaster got us to the place we're at now. That group didn't do a lot to try and get us off the roller coaster. We are not going to be in this funhouse forever. They created it. We are going to be bringing jobs back through diversification, and that's the role of government.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Mr. Clark: Why, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last week I released Pathway to Prosperity, the Alberta Party's plan to get our province back on track. Our plan curbs government spending without hurting front-line services, reduces reliance on nonrenewable resource revenues, and not only balances in four years but also starts to pay back debt. That's quite a concept. As part of our analysis we modelled the NDP budget, and guess what? It never balances, ever. To the Minister of Finance. You claim you will balance the budget by 2024. Will you prove it by showing your work and including a detailed plan to balance in next week's budget?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you. Well, you know, you'll have to wait till next week's budget to see where things are at, but I can give you the answer about PST right now. We will not bring in a PST. We have a plan to thoughtfully reduce our spending over time. We have a plan to deal with the deficit without bringing in a sales tax. Our plan focuses on important things Albertans need, and we're going to do those. We're going to freeze tuition. As the Deputy Premier said, we're cutting school fees. That side would create more after school fees for kids. That side would raise tuition. They have before. We're not going to do those things. We're going to thoughtfully bring the deficit down.

Mr. Clark: So that's a no. You will never balance the budget.

Mr. Speaker, this government doesn't seem to understand that some day it's Albertans that will have to pay back the massive debt load the NDP has piled up. This means raising taxes or sacrificing public services or probably both. Their plans so far haven't worked. Their NDP tax increases have resulted in billions less in revenues because business is leaving the province, and further tax increases will make the problem worse. To the Premier: beyond simply crossing your fingers and hoping the price of oil goes up, what is your plan to put Alberta on a sustainable ...

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our plan is to continue to work to make life better for Alberta families each and every day. That's one of the reasons why we're bringing forward a reasonable, predictable salary increase to the lowest wage earners in this province, because everyone deserves to put food on the table if you're working full-time. That's one of the reasons why we're going to keep moving forward by protecting health and education. The members opposite want to cut those areas, and they want to cut the minimum wage. We're not going to do that. We're going to stand up for Alberta families, make their lives affordable, and defend their jobs.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, our Pathway to Prosperity document also modelled the Wildrose plan, and I put that in air quotes because the Official Opposition hasn't actually put out any plans or shadow budgets or, frankly, much at all. But based on public statements and party policies, we know that they would make massive and devastating cuts to public services. Again to the Premier: do you have any estimates on how many teachers, nurses, Crown prosecutors, judges, court staff, social workers, or first responders would be laid off if the Wildrose or whoever they become cut $8 billion or more from the provincial budget?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. We saw what was being proposed in the last election: billions of dollars of public-service cuts to the front lines. We see that there are folks out there talking about being able to cut 10 per cent from line items. I'm sorry, but 10 per cent from Health is major hospitals in everyone's ridings that would be negatively impacted. We're not going to do that. We're going to stand up for Albertans. The members opposite have a lot of areas they want to cut. The member who just asked the question has only three letters for an answer: PST. Neither one of those is the path that's going to bring Alberta forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Rural Economic Development

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Rural Alberta plays a critical role in building a strong, resilient economy that all Albertans can count on. From strength in oil and gas, forestry, and agriculture to tourism, rural Alberta has opportunities across many sectors to build on. In fact, municipalities and industry groups in regions such as my constituency of Stony Plain have long been partners in securing jobs and economic growth. To the Minister of Economic Development and Trade. The economic downturn has hit rural Alberta hard. How are we supporting our communities to help build a diversified economy?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll thank the member for the question. I know that she's been a very vocal advocate working with businesses in her constituency and municipal leaders. I can tell you that last year we launched our two-year community and regional economic support program, or the CARES program. What this program is doing is partnering with municipal leaders, with regional and community organizations looking at opportunities to develop business plans to further economic development that are local to those areas. I'm very proud of the amount of applicants that we had in the first intake. The second intake opens April 1, and I encourage community members and municipal leaders to look at this program.

The Speaker: Thank you.
First supplemental.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: in these difficult economic times what is the minister doing to address the unique challenges that we all see that rural Alberta faces to create good jobs in our communities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the question. There are a number of different tools and entities that we're working with and working through. The regional economic development alliances: Alberta has 11 REDAs across the province, that are made up of municipal leaders, community leaders, and economic development organizations. That's one of the ways that we're working in rural Alberta and through these entities. We know that they have the expertise and the ideas. What they need from the government of Alberta is some support. I can tell you that REDAs were developed out of a need to stimulate long-term economic development and growth strategies in Alberta. We're working closely with them along with the Northern Alberta Development Council.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Canada is one of the many countries moving away from coal-powered electricity and that Albertans whose livelihood depends on coal are concerned about their future, especially in my riding of Stony Plain, to the same minister: what does a made-in-Alberta plan look like for these communities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know that Canada's transition away from coal is creating uncertainty in Alberta's communities. We know that, and I know that because I've recently visited a number of plants and communities. We've met with miners, with mom-and-pop shops, and worked closely with mayors and councils. My message to them is that we have your back. In 2012, when the Leader of the Opposition was in federal government, the federal government prohibited coal plants from generating beyond 2030 and actually stopped the conversion of these same plants to natural gas. What our government is doing is we've reversed that so facilities can continue to . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon minister.
The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Justice System Delays

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While this government prioritizes their radical environmental agenda and changes every facet of Alberta's economy, our justice system is falling apart. Last week we learned that 15 cases in Edmonton were dropped due to the Jordan ruling and an attempt to triage charges. The accused are not going to trial, and victims are being robbed of justice. When victims of crime don't have confidence that they will see their day in court, it diminishes the will to come forward when a crime has been committed. What does the minister have to say to the victims of crimes where charges were stayed last week?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We believe passionately that Albertans have a right to a strong and effective justice system. We never want to see a charge being stayed and a victim not getting their day in court as a result of a procedural matter. The decision in Jordan brought to the forefront backlogs that have been building over many decades. Certainly, we've worked quickly to address that, and we will have more to say about that after the budget.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that Crown prosecutors are doing their best with the resources that they have, but given that included in the charges stayed last week were multiple counts of impaired driving over .08, assault with a weapon, and possession of a weapon with danger to the public, to name just a few, and given the fact that Edmonton's chief Crown prosecutor expects more charges to be stayed unless something is changed, when will we see action and an attempt to fix a broken system?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government is moving forward to ensure that we have the necessary resources for the government. We are actively recruiting 15 Crown prosecutors right now, and more will be coming in the future. This government is doing a careful assessment of what resources are necessary for all our systems. We'll have more to say after the budget, and I hope the members opposite will support it.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, given that this government has been in power for almost two years and given that this problem has only grown during their term in office and given that there is a failure by the NDP government to fill Crown prosecutor positions and also fill other gaps within the system and given that there is also a responsibility of the federal government to appoint more Court of Queen's Bench justices, what assurances can the minister give that we will receive the appropriate level of judicial positions immediately to address a serious shortage?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Well, as the House will be aware, the government has created a number of positions, including nine positions on the Court of Queen's Bench. I find it a little ironic that the opposition is taking this particular tack given that they voted against a budget that allowed us to hire front-line Crown prosecutors and that when the Leader of the Official Opposition was in the federal government, he never once advocated for more justices.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Education Policies

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Based on minutes we've received from a meeting of the leadership of the ATA, SOS Alberta, and others, a stated objective is to direct children from the private system into the public system. This is a direct attack on educational choice by groups like SOS Alberta, who openly admit to not representing parents. To the minister, who allegedly mandated that a letter be sent to all school boards with a quotation from SOS: how is this not an abuse of government resources? Will you commit today in this Legislature that you will not slash private and charter school funding and allow parents to make educational choices based on their children's . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, this government right from the beginning ensured that we funded enrolment for all forms of schooling across the province, $110 million and counting all the way for each of the years. In direct contrast to the Conservative opposition on the other side, who made cuts and made unreasonable and very unstable funding, we have stabilized the situation. Parents appreciate the work that we have done.

Mr. Rodney: No answer to either question. Albertans deserve to know.

Given that recently a union coalition pushed for the elimination of funding for independent schools and the union coalition controls tens of millions of dollars in dues, money that parents can never dream of matching, and given that in the last CBE trustee election a former NDP candidate won with $20,000 of union money, much more than trustees would ever spend on their entire campaign, can the Premier ensure that the voice of parents will not be drowned out by big money from special-interest groups in the funding of trustee elections?

Mr. Eggen: Well, once again, you know, it's pretty rich, Mr. Speaker, coming from the Conservative opposition, that cut millions of dollars from education and continued to campaign on that in the last election. Well, you can see the result of doing that. The people of Alberta want to have the investment in public education. We want to make sure that we have the resources available for all forms of education. We did do so. They just cut.

Thank you.

Mr. Rodney: I'll just wait for that answer some other time.

Now, given that parents deserve to know the changes that are being recommended for the instruction of our children and given that the Education minister has embarked upon curriculum redesign in a manner that is alarming to Albertans clear across the province, in the spirit of openness and transparency when will the minister release the names of the committee members, the details on the groups that have been presenting, the documents that have been presented to the working committees, and as a show of common courtesy and simple respect why has this information not been readily accessible from the get-go?

Mr. Eggen: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, it's a matter of common courtesy to ensure that the hard-working teachers that have been working on the curriculum – they deserve the respect that they have, working through volunteers and so forth. I would like to protect them from personal attacks from this Conservative opposition. That's why I'm reluctant to release the names.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Health Care in Central Alberta

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Central Alberta region health care is no longer a priority on Alberta Health Services' top 20 list. The people of central Alberta are starting to wonder if they are less valuable than other Albertans. I understand that this is a 20-year problem, but the current government took the Red Deer central region hospital off the priority list. This hospital has not had a new bed in 17 years despite a population growth of 50 per cent or better. Can and will the Minister of Health provide a reason why this hospital was taken off the priority list, leaving 450,000 central Albertans with substandard health care?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question about ensuring that everyone, no matter where you live in this province, gets the right care at the right place by the right provider. For decades we saw that there were drastic cuts in a number of areas throughout the province. I'm not one to say that things are perfect in Alberta. Far from it. That's one of the reasons why we're campaigning on making life better for Alberta families by making sure that we're investing and providing stable health care services and working with front-line providers. Mr. Speaker, it's important to us to ensure that every part of this province gets quality health care.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the government has created 15 different planning documents in the last 10 years, which included central Alberta every time except this last one, and given that metro areas have received 8,300 per cent more funding than central Alberta residents, the people of central Alberta are wondering why they are not equally valued. We are beyond planning. How does the minister suggest we move past 10 more years of planning and on to real, actual new beds and essential programs that other hospitals have had for years already?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and for the important question. We are working to make sure that every part of this province gets the right care, and that means that they have the right investment in terms of deferred maintenance. We have significant deferred maintenance in this province because of drastic, irrational cuts that happened by Conservative governments. Instead, we're moving forward by increasing the infrastructure maintenance plan. By making sure that we invest in that Red Deer hospital, we've done things to increase opportunities for obstetrics and for operations, and there is a great corridor now between Calgary and Edmonton, with a central hub in central Alberta, in Red Deer, for cancer treatments as well. The members opposite want to cut. We want to make sure that we're protecting important health care services for all Albertans.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this government does not have a really good track record on plans, Albertans are not trusting that the requirement for yet another plan or any plan to help the people of central Alberta will ever come to fruition. It appears Alberta Health Services would rather provide plans than essential medical services. Can the minister be up front and tell central Albertans if plans are a deliberate but deceptive denial of resources instead of providing fair and essential medical services to central Albertans?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, we are making important investments and making sure that folks in central Alberta, just like people living in Sylvan Lake, have increased access to essential after-hours care. I'm so proud of the fact that we've been able to work with community, not treat community like an obstacle like happened so many times in the past when political games were played with communities that deserved to have better access to health care.

The members opposite want to cut. We want to make sure we're working in partnership to invest where it's needed to make sure that everyone has access to the very best care. You can't cut $2 billion and increase access at the same time, Mr. Speaker. The members opposite know that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Prescription Drug Coverage for Rare Diseases

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year my colleagues brought forward the case of Haley Chisholm, a young girl from High River who needs a rare drug, Soliris, to survive. After much pushing, the ministry finally met with the family, and the solution was: try an alternate remedy. Five months later Haley has endured painful hospital visits and medical procedures, missed school, had multiple visits to the hospital, failed drug therapies, and her parents' unpaid absences from work. Haley's doctor has reapplied to the STEDT program and is now back to square one. When is the Health minister going to do the right thing and help Haley?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You're right that I did meet with Haley myself, and my office continues to be in regular contact with her. The situation that she and her family are in is one that no Alberta family wants to ever have to experience, where you're worried about a child being sick. It's important to us that we ensure that health professionals are the ones determining treatment and the course for moving forward on prescribing drugs. But I also have raised with the family – and if members opposite want to do the same – that I understand that drug companies can provide compassionate coverage and regularly do, so that's an avenue that we're supporting them in, and I would encourage others, if they want to join us in that cause, to do so as well.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that precedent has been set and this funding issue should be taken care of provincially and given the precedent has also been set that the provincial minister should reach out to their federal counterpart and work together in a campaign with the drug manufacturer to provide this life-saving medicine, when will this minister take ownership and start the process of helping this poor child and provide this life-saving remedy through the specialized high-cost drug program?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is clearly a dangerous path for politicians to be determining who is getting what types of drugs. That's one of the reasons why there are experts in the profession who actually make the decisions and that there are committees that are applied to, with physicians that make those decisions around the best course of medical treatment.

When it comes to opportunities where things could be experimental and might have opportunities for benefit, again, drug manufacturing companies do sometimes take exceptional measures, when something isn't on label, to pursue that angle, and that's something that may want to be pursued further by the family, by the physician. Of course, we are going to support this family in making access available when we can.

Mr. W. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, given that on August 7, 2013, the then opposition NDP Health critic, currently the Minister of Education, stated in a press release that the "province must fund treatment to save young girl in St. Albert" and then stated that "this is another sad and stark example of the PCs' approach to health care... to diminish and delist services" and given that this government is always blaming the past government for its lack of empathy and inaction, the then Minister of Health at that time signed off on the funding for the drug for that girl and saved her life. Again to the Minister of Health: now that you are in government, have you decided that other things are more important? Why won't this current Minister of Health do the right thing and give Haley back her life?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is very important that we work with the medical professionals who are in the best position to make determinations about prescribing and access to these types of medications, that may or may not be of benefit. I think it's a very dangerous path for somebody to stand up and assert that he knows better than medical professionals. That's one of the reasons why we're making sure that the actual expert panel on drug therapy has support to be able to make decisions, and it's up to those physicians that are governing these programs to make sure that they have access to the right areas.

I do want to remind everyone that there are opportunities for us to make sure that we look at – when there are manufacturers who are putting impediments, that might be able to increase access, that we support them in considering those options.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Opioid Use Prevention and Mitigation

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The first step in dealing with addiction is admitting that you have a problem. Unfortunately, addicts remain in denial for years, but in doing so, they damage everyone around them. Premier, Minister of Health, associate minister, Justice minister, you all have a problem because Alberta has an opioid crisis and you are in denial. To the Premier: will your government take that first courageous step today and admit that Alberta has a public health emergency?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We have taken many actions to make sure that we're addressing the extreme situation that is happening in Alberta with regard to the opioid epidemic. That's one of the reasons why we're making naloxone kits available throughout the province, to make sure that anyone who wants one can get one. That's one of the reasons why we're moving forward aggressively on supervised consumption services, to make sure that real harm reduction strategies can save lives. I hope the members opposite will determine which side of the debate they want to land on that one, because this is a life-saving strategy.

I know that my colleague the associate minister will have more to say in supplemental answers, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, thank you. Given that the federal government has set aside $65 million in funding for provinces to respond to their fentanyl crises and given that Alberta will not even admit it has a crisis despite the deaths of 717 citizens in three years and given that Alberta could use that money to fund crucially needed programs to reduce opioid abuse, to the Health minister again: when are you going to request Alberta's share of that $65 million?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Our government has been working very closely with our federal counterparts to ensure that we have a seat at the table on all discussions around funding for mental health and addiction. Make no mistake. Alberta will get a fair deal and a fair part of that, and we'll have more to say about that in the coming days.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, given that B.C. was quick to declare a public health emergency after overdoses spiked in Vancouver and given that it has received $10 million from the federal government to combat the opioid abuse and given that Alberta's stubbornness has meant that we are refusing to accept millions of dollars to fight our own crisis, to the minister: please tell Albertans what it will take for you to declare a public health emergency.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government is working very closely with public health officials. We're meeting with experts in drug addiction as well as people with lived experience, who actually are some of the foremost experts in what it will take to help address this problem. We haven't declared an emergency because we have the tools that B.C. needed to call an emergency for. We are continuing to move forward on a variety of fronts. Is there more work to be done? Absolutely, and I hope that when we table our budget, the opposition will support the measures we're taking.

School Fees

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, we know that school fees can be a major burden on Alberta families and even more so in these difficult economic times. Some of my own constituents in Edmonton-Decore have told me that they struggle to pay these fees and often have to make difficult choices with their family budgets in order to do so. This is unacceptable. To the Minister of Education: how extensive are school fees in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's a very good question. We heard from parents loud and clear that the school fees were simply too high right across the province. For many years this conservative opposition allowed out-of-control school fees to take place, and we are there to clean up the problem. We ran on a platform to reduce school fees, and now we are acting on that promise. We're looking for ways to reduce instructional supply and material and busing for students as well to their designated schools. We're happy to work with everybody to ensure that we have a more equal and affordable education system for . . .

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the opposition had the chance to reduce school fees and instead let them grow, to the same minister: do these fees vary across the province, and on average how do these fees compare to those being charged in the rest of the country?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, this is part of the issue. Over many years, because school boards were trying to of course deliver the best education possible but not getting stable, long-term commitments for funding from the conservative opposition, the fees started to turn into a bit of the Wild West, quite frankly. So we're here to clean it up. I've looked across Canada, and certainly there are much more reasonable ways by which we can have school fee reductions and make differentiations, say, between field trips and basic instructional fees. We don't want anything to get in the way of a strong education for every student regardless of how much money they have in their pocket.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that noon-hour supervision fees and those charged for technology like computers are also quite high. To the same minister: what are some other examples of the most concerning school fees currently in this province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you. Again, there are so many different school fees. It needs to be rationalized, Mr. Speaker, for one thing. Part of this legislation, which I hope that everybody will support, will be in order to make sure that we get a grip on new fees being charged and to make sure that, you know, instead of maybe ridiculing this bus fee thing, they can think about actually supporting it. That would be a good idea. I'm here to clean up the Conservative mess that happened over a long period of time. They should have the decency to listen and support this bill.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans do not trust this government. Just look at the mishandling of the PPAs, the unwanted carbon tax, and the way they mistreated 3,500 students when they closed Trinity Christian and Wisdom home-schools. Now this government will not release the names of the organizations that are influencing the unprecedented rewrite of kindergarten through grade 12 curricula. To the Premier: when will this government get its head out of the clouds and start being honest and transparent with its intentions for our education system?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was very interested in having questions like this because, you know, we have many, many teachers, postsecondary institutions, school board trustees, everybody working as volunteers to build the curriculum. The curriculum has been sitting idle between eight and 30 years now. It's high time that we did this work, and – you know what? – let's judge the work that they do based on the results that they have and not make personal attacks on the individuals that are writing this curriculum as volunteers.

Mrs. Aheer: I think Albertans asking for information about organizations is not personal attacks.

Given that in response to the 13 labour unions, advocacy groups, and school boards that called for the defunding of independent schools last week, the minister said very clearly that he supports the current funding model and has no plans to defund independent schools but that since this weekend the minister waffled on his stance and said that the funding model will likely be changed during this term and given that we've asked the minister about his intentions before and each time he has refused to give a straight, yes-or-no answer, to the minister: are you going to change the current funding for independent schools during this term of government? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, you know, it's interesting. Every two months or so the conservative opposition likes to resurrect this thing to try to whip up their base and get votes, score cheap political points, but we are actually doing the work to ensure that education is delivered right across the province, that it is funded in private schools and in home-schools and in public schools, too. We have raised that level of funding to meet enrolment, and we're very proud of what we have done. Quite frankly, this opposition likes to go around chasing their tails on cheap political points while we actually get the job done. [interjections]

The Speaker: Folks, tone it down. Tone it down.

Mrs. Aheer: To the minister: are you going to change the current funding of independent schools during this term of government? Yes or no?

Mr. Eggen: Well, certainly, as I said on Friday, we review all forms of funding every year. We call it a budget, because that's what we do, because we're responsible for public funds. So, you know, that's the way it goes. Certainly, I've worked very hard with all forms of education and lots of different choices. That is a reasonable thing to do. One thing I can tell you that I am going to do: I'm going to cut school fees because they're too darn high.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Government Spending

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In last week's throne speech and the previous week's update to Albertans the government congratulated itself on its self-described measures to cut targeted reductions and reduce the growth of government spending, but the numbers tell a different story. Total expenses for this fiscal year are projected to be 5.2 per cent higher than originally budgeted and 9.8 per cent higher than last year's actual expenses. To the minister: if you're doing such a great job of cutting government spending, why are expenses up nearly 10 per cent?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier. Please proceed.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll be happy to start, and then, of course, the Finance minister will follow. Let's look back at what happened in past years in the Health budget, for example. We saw increases that were close to 10 per cent each and every year, and certain line items went up even more than that. That's one of the reasons why we sat down with doctors in a respectful way and found ways to save Alberta taxpayers $500 million over two years. That wouldn't have happened under the last guys. Instead, they would have just had rash, drastic cuts. We're working with people. They used to do mean things to people.

Dr. Starke: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, the Health minister's budget is $200 million overspent. That's not restraint. Given that this government preaches financial restraint but then has cost overruns of nearly $800 million, some 50 times the amount of their so-called savings they announced in the throne speech, to the minister. Your last budget forecasted an increase in total expenses of 4.4 per cent, and we know you missed that target. What is your target for this year, and why should Albertans have any faith at all that you're going to meet your objective?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, we are bending the cost curve down. Of course, just two weeks ago I cut CEOs' salaries at ABCs, saving $16 million for Albertans. I cut $250 million out of the budget in 2015 and 2016 again, and we've got more coming in 2017. That gang couldn't shoot straight. They never could. We're targeting, and we're cutting, and we're saving Albertans money.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, they may well be targeting, but let me tell you that they are missing the mark on every single occasion. With regard to your statement about the reductions in CEO funding, Minister, I'd like to know: what's the actual amount that you're actually going to spend? It's not $250 million. I actually read your press release, which you didn't. What percentage of your total expenses does that actually represent, Minister, or do you even know? [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet, please.
The Finance minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, it sounded like that side was defending perks and golf course memberships, the kinds of things that were present in ABCs before we got here. We are cutting that. I said: $16 million. I also said that we cut or amalgamated 26 ABCs for a savings of $33 million. Those are the kinds of real savings we're achieving. You never did over there, and you won't do it again. [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet, please.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise and today provide notice that at the appropriate time I'll move the following motion.

Pursuant to Standing Order 30 be it resolved that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the growing number of deaths from opioid use and abuse, including the use of fentanyl, which now constitutes a state of emergency.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I want to remind all of the members again. When there is one of the members speaking, try not to get out of your chair while the Speaker is speaking to the member present.

Tabling Returns and Reports

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I rise to proudly table five copies of Pathway to Prosperity, which I referenced earlier today in my question. It is the Alberta Party plan to get our province back on track by curbing government spending without hurting front-line services and reducing reliance on nonrenewable resource revenues. It not only balances the budget in four years but actually starts paying back Alberta's debt as well.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any other reports or returns, hon. members? I have one, I believe. I rise today to table five copies of a letter I sent to the Speaker of Quebec on behalf of all of our members, expressing our deepest sympathies to the people of Quebec for the tragedy that occurred on January 29, 2017.

In addition, I'm tabling five copies of Speaker Chagnon's response.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Ms Ganley, Minister of Justice and Solicitor General, pursuant to Standing Order 52.09(1), response to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship recommendations from the final report, review of the Alberta Property Rights Advocate office 2014 annual report.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I believe there were two points of order. Is that correct? The Opposition House Leader.

Point of Order

Interrupting Members' Statements

Mr. Cooper: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During Members' Statements earlier today, while, in fact, I was on my feet, members of the government side took some objection, I suppose, with some of the things that I may or may not have been saying. I just wanted to point out that on March 13, 2016, the Government House Leader rose in this place to speak about Members' Statements and the long-standing tradition inside the Chamber of Members' Statements going uninterrupted and allowing members to speak about the issues that are important to their constituents for that period of time. His words, sir:

In [the] future I would ask that people be allowed to give their members' statements without being interrupted by [any] other members.

Then, Mr. Speaker, in your ruling following you noted:

Speaker Kowalski did [the same] on April 5, 2006, at page 733 of Alberta Hansard for that day, the principle that members should have the opportunity to speak on any subject they wish without being interrupted.

Mr. Speaker, if you're looking for a standing order, I think you will find that even though the words that they may have used are not unparliamentary, when they're interjecting during Members' Statements, it is likely to create disorder in the Chamber. So if we're going to utilize a standing order, it would be 23 (h), (i), and (j) "uses . . . insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder." The words they may have used were not insulting, but certainly the act of interrupting a member's statement, something well established in this House, clearly is out of order.

Perhaps I'm willing to provide a little bit of grace today, being the first day after an extended period of time away from this Chamber, but I would ask, Mr. Speaker, that you would find the government members out of order for interrupting Members' Statements.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I suppose it's a good reminder on the first day, actually, of full business, the first day back, that members are not supposed to interrupt other members through heckling or applauding or other methods during the course of a member's statement.

It's also a good reminder, Mr. Speaker, that an equally important rule is that no points of order are permitted during Members' Statements. So I would remind the hon. Opposition House Leader of that.

The Speaker: Any other points with respect to this item?

I would say that the practice, as I've said at least three or four times in this House, and the point being made is: let's keep the courtesy. I happen to like no interruptions for two minutes. It's the one time that I can hear members speak. So allow me, allow all of us to at least preserve that one practice. Please, everyone, pay attention to that.

The second point of order.

Point of Order

Language Creating Disorder

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak to an incident that took place during question period while the Leader of the Official Opposition was asking a very important question about how many NDP bureaucrats it takes to change a light bulb. [interjection] I'm not sure why that was funny. The Government House Leader made some comments that certainly were not adding to the decorum inside the Chamber. I, unfortunately, don't have the benefit of the Blues, and I'm not entirely sure if they were heard by yourself, but they perhaps were a response to Wildrosers and either how many it takes to change a light bulb or how many heckles they have. This certainly did not create order inside the Chamber. I'd hope that the member would be willing to withdraw those.

And just so that we're clear, if there's a question about how many Wildrosers it takes to change a light bulb, the answer is one because the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre can do it on his own.

Mr. Mason: Spare me, Mr. Speaker. Spare me.

The Speaker: Hon. members, on the point of order I didn't hear the specific point, but I can tell you that your heckling continues. In fact, I received a note from a couple of our members that are here today that, you know, if we're going to get through this next three months with some degree of decorum and professionalism, I've got to tell you again that the volume and the comments are not respectful. I would leave it up to you individually to govern yourselves differently.

I use this time to rise on a point of privilege which took place in the last session.

Privilege

Obstructing a Member in Performance of Duty

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm prepared to rule on a purported question of privilege raised in December. The Government House Leader raised the purported question of privilege on December 12, 2016, during question period immediately following the Member for Calgary-Elbow's second supplementary question that day. The Government House Leader gave oral notice under Notices of Motions later that day of his intention to raise a question of privilege under Standing Order 15 regarding supposed allegations made by the Member for Calgary-Elbow about the minister of what was then Human Services. The Government House Leader made arguments to support his purported question of privilege later that same afternoon. These comments can be found on page 2507 of Alberta Hansard from that day.

The Member for Calgary-Elbow and the Official Opposition House Leader made their arguments on the following day, December 13. Their remarks are found on pages 2584 and 2586 from the December 13, 2016, edition of the Alberta Hansard.

Hon. members, since the purported question of privilege was raised and argued, I've taken the time to review Alberta Hansard and the parliamentary authorities on the matter. On December 12 the Member for Calgary-Elbow made a comment during the preamble to his second supplementary question, the substance of which is as follows: the minister's "inaction means that whoever murdered Serenity is walking free today." I will note that Alberta

Hansard has recorded the member saying “inaction” on page 2500 and not “negligence” as was suggested by the Government House Leader as indicated in Hansard for December 12, 2016.

In his arguments the Government House Leader said that the Member for Calgary-Elbow made an inappropriate allegation against the minister of what was then Human Services. The Government House Leader also raised concerns about the impact of the member’s comment as in his view it “places [the] minister in a very, very difficult position and may in fact threaten his very safety.” He argued that the statements “represent a direct interference in the ability of members on this side of the House to do their job,” which, he submitted, “must be treated as a contempt of Parliament.”

Hon. members, Joseph Maingot on pages 230 to 231 of the second edition of his book Parliamentary Privilege in Canada articulates the privileges and immunities of members pertaining to freedom from obstruction, interference, and intimidation in their parliamentary duties. Maingot writes that Members are entitled to go about their parliamentary business undisturbed. The assaulting, menacing, or insulting of any Member on the floor of the House or while he is coming or going to or from the House, or on account of his behaviour during a proceeding in Parliament, is a violation of the rights of Parliament. Any form of intimidation . . . of a person for or on account of his behaviour during a proceeding in Parliament could amount to contempt.

Maingot provides additional insights on page 224.

Parliamentary privilege is concerned with the special rights of Members, not in their capacity as ministers or as party leaders, whips, or parliamentary secretaries, but strictly in their capacity as Members in their parliamentary work. Therefore, allegations of misjudgment, or mismanagement, or maladministration on the part of the minister in the performance of his ministerial duties do not come within the purview of parliamentary privilege.

Hon. members, a very similar issue arose in this Assembly in 1998. On April 29, 1998, the then Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert asked the following question. First supplemental:

Given that people are on the verge of blocking off highway 794 in protest, what is it going to take for the minister to do the right thing? Make it safe. Plan it this year. How many deaths does it take? What’s the magic number?

Second supplemental:

My final question, Mr. Speaker: why do you put partisan politics ahead of the safety of people? Are the lives of the people in Westlock more important than the lives of the people in Sturgeon?

On November 16, 1998, the then minister of transportation and utilities reported that his privileges as a member of the Assembly were breached because the statements and the questions implied that he as a member and a minister of the Crown did not care about the lives of Albertans.

In his ruling on the purported question of privilege Speaker Kowalski noted that it is the role of the Speaker to ensure that the language members use complies with the rules of what is parliamentary language. But he added, quoting Maingot, second edition, pages 254 to 255, as follows:

Language spoken during a parliamentary proceeding that impugns the integrity of Members would be unparliamentary and a breach of order contrary to the Standing Orders, but not a breach of privilege.

Ultimately, Speaker Kowalski found that a question of privilege is a very serious matter. In order for a prima facie case to be established, it must be shown that there has been an interference or an obstruction in either a member’s ability to perform his or her functions or the ability of the House to carry out its functions. This type of obstruction does not appear to have occurred. Rather, these statements, although clearly unparliamentary and inappropriate, appear to be of the nature that can arise during the heat of debate in question period.

Speaker Kowalski’s ruling can be found on pages 1908 to 1909 of Alberta Hansard for November 17, 1998.

Hon. members, I would also note two similar questions of privilege that arose in this Assembly involving language that was allegedly unparliamentary. The first of these was raised on May 24, 2001. In his ruling on the matter Speaker Kowalski found that the language used in a question posed by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands was likely unparliamentary, but it did not give rise to a valid question of privilege. That ruling can be found on pages 808 and 809 in the May 28, 2001, Hansard.

On April 19, 2007, an additional similar purported question of privilege was raised, the basis of which is found on page 638 of Alberta Hansard for April 18, 2007. Again in his ruling Speaker Kowalski quoted the passage from Maingot, which I already noted, which states: “Language . . . that impugns the integrity of Members [may] be unparliamentary and a breach of order . . . but not a breach of privilege.” Furthermore, while Speaker Kowalski concluded that “it is unseemly to cast aspersions on members,” he ruled that there was no prima facie question of privilege. Speaker Kowalski’s ruling is found on pages 679 and 680 of the April 19, 2007, edition of Alberta Hansard.

As were other Speakers, I am acutely aware that there must be a balance between this fundamental right of the freedom of speech and the responsibility of members to use language which befits the office of a Member of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, which also complies with parliamentary rules and practices. In this instance it could be argued that the language used was intemperate and unparliamentary, and it certainly caused disorder. Clearly, the remarks that the Member for Calgary-Elbow made could have been the subject of a point of order, but no point of order was raised. As noted, parliamentary authorities are clear. Uttering words that are unparliamentary is a breach of order, but this is not enough to constitute a question of privilege.

Furthermore, the standard applied in adjudicating a question of privilege in which it’s purported that a member has been obstructed in his or her duties is that the member has been obstructed strictly in his or her capacity as a member in his or her parliamentary work, not in his or her role as a minister or caucus leader or other role. I found no evidence that the member had been obstructed in such a way. Therefore, I can find no prima facie question of privilege.

Allow me to conclude by cautioning the hon. member and all hon. members of this Assembly to please be careful that the words they use conform to parliamentary rules and practices. Do unto others as you would have done unto you. I realize that rhetoric has become a part of this question period – hon. member, could we wait until I’m finished, please; thank you – but members must appreciate that the words they use should not lower the public’s estimation of the Assembly.

This concludes the matter.

Emergency Debate

The Speaker: I believe we have a Standing Order 30 application. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Thank you. I can circulate it to the members and proceed at your will.

The Speaker: Hon. member, at this stage we are arguing the importance of the urgency of the matter.

Opioid Use

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to ask you to approve my motion under Standing Order 30 to adjourn the ordinary business of the Legislature to discuss a matter of urgent public health importance – namely, the growing number of deaths from opioid abuse, including the use of fentanyl – which now constitutes a state of emergency.

To be clear, I am not asking the Assembly to declare a state of emergency. Rather, I'm categorically stating that a state of emergency exists, and that it is up to the Assembly to urgently debate this issue in this Assembly. The issue is being debated everywhere but here, Mr. Speaker. It's happening at the federal level, at the municipal level, in the media, in our health and justice systems, by our police, fire, and ambulance services. MLAs on both sides of the House are touched by personal stories which are being sent to our constituency and our caucus offices. And Albertans are talking about it around their dinner tables.

It is time for this Assembly and this government, which has jurisdiction over the areas of health, justice, social services, and emergency management, to have the courage to talk about it here. It is time to put aside pride and partisanship and discuss how, together, we're going to stop this scourge and make lives better or even possible for Albertans. We will leave it up to the government to determine if it is going to keep being reactive or show stronger leadership for what matters. After hearing this debate, should the government decide that calling a state of emergency is needed in order to tackle this epidemic, then I would encourage it and applaud it and thank it for this leadership.

Now, in terms of the specific requirements for this motion I am confident that the Speaker will find it is in order. Standing Order 30(1) states:

After the daily routine and before the Orders of the Day, any Member may request leave to move to adjourn the ordinary business . . . to discuss a matter of urgent public importance when written notice has been given to the Speaker at least 2 hours prior to the afternoon sitting.

This is clearly a matter of urgent public importance given that it is, in fact, a genuine crisis which is putting public health and safety at risk. As well, proper notice was given to the Speaker. It clearly meets these criteria.

Beauchesne's section 387, on page 113, says:

It must deal with a matter within the administrative competence of the Government and there must be no other reasonable opportunity for debate.

Certainly, the government has the administrative competence to deal with whether or not a state of emergency exists.

Furthermore, should the government want to act on the matter, the Emergency Management Act also gives the Lieutenant Governor in Council the power to formally declare a state of emergency should she be satisfied that "an emergency exists or may exist." In that context, an emergency is defined as a public health risk that exceeds the capacity in technical, human, and material resources. End quote.

In terms of opportunities for debate there is no proposed legislation or motion before the Assembly that would provide us with another opportunity to debate this matter.

Beauchesne's section 387, page 113, also says:

In making his ruling, the Speaker may, on occasion, take into account the general wish of the House to have a debate.

I believe the Speaker will find that at least on this side of the House there is a general wish to have this debate. There are also people in the galleries who have joined us to hear the debate and would like to see it proceed.

Beauchesne's section 389, page 113, says:

The "specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration" . . . must be so pressing that the public interest will suffer if it is not given immediate attention.

The current opioid crisis is ending lives, destroying families, disrupting communities at an incredible rate, and clearly is a matter of public interest, approaching more than two deaths a day and a greater number of deaths than motor vehicle injuries, motor vehicle deaths, and homicides combined. Clearly, failing to recognize this as an emergency or refusing to talk about how to address it will cause the public interest to suffer.

Beauchesne's section 390, on page 113, also says:

"Urgency" within this rule does not apply to the matter itself, but means "urgency of debate", when the ordinary opportunities provided by the rules of the House do not permit the subject to be brought on early enough and the public interest demands that discussion take place immediately.

Given that this is the first day of regular government sitting, obviously it is the first opportunity for us to debate this. This is also our first opportunity since the government released the report called Opioids and Substances of Misuse, fourth-quarter report, to discuss the shocking data that it contained. I don't know how we could in good conscience just let that report hang over us without taking the time to take a critical look at what has been reported and what it means for the future.

It is fitting and right that we take this opportunity to debate a matter of such urgent importance instead of throne speeches, which were on the agenda for today. Likewise, I would draw your attention to the fact that despite the release of this alarming report, the government only gave the issue one sentence in the throne speech. Finally, perhaps now would be a good time for the government to tell Albertans more about what it plans to do in response to this opioid crisis.

There is also the matter of precedent. The Speaker has previously permitted debates to occur on similar matters under Standing Order 30. As recently as November the Assembly held an emergency debate on the deaths of children in government care. I would argue that the need to discuss the opioid crisis is equally or more serious and urgent, and it is getting worse.

Finally, under SO 30(7):

- (a) the matter proposed for discussion must relate to a genuine emergency, calling for immediate and urgent consideration.

With regard to whether this is or isn't a genuine emergency, the facts speak for themselves, Mr. Speaker. In fact, if these numbers were related to an influenza epidemic, a public health emergency would already have been declared. There's been a steady increase in fentanyl-related deaths for four years. Our last fourth quarter shows 343 deaths, a 33 per cent increase over 2015. That is not counting roughly 150 unspecified opioid-related deaths that have still to be characterized by the medical examiner.

In 2016 there were 2,267 emergency medical service responses in Alberta to opioid-related events. Eighty-four per cent of these events occurred in the following large urban settings: Calgary, Edmonton, Grande Prairie, and Medicine Hat. There is a continual backlog in the medical examiners' office, causing lengthy delays in confirming suspected opioid-related deaths. This week I got a letter from a gentleman whose stepson's death occurred 11 months ago. He has yet to hear from the Chief Medical Examiner. His is one of many stories I've heard over the past year, and I'm sure my colleagues have heard similar stories.

There is also a rise in overdose deaths in Alberta's correctional facilities and remand centres, eight deaths last year compared to one in 2015 and 27 near deaths that presumably were overdoses reversed by naloxone. We don't know about those 27 near deaths because the medical examiner hasn't finished the deaths and doesn't cover the near deaths.

Police services have expressed frustration at the lack of co-ordinated wraparound health and social service supports. There's a clear lack of strategic leadership for large-scale, co-ordinated, and well-funded intervention with police, health, social services, and even our education institutions.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I want to urge you to speak to the matter of urgency and then to the substance of the debate.

Dr. Swann: Fair comment, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

The list goes on. The opioid crisis is literally a matter of life and death for those who are facing it, and we need to talk about it. Therefore, with respect, I'm asking you and my colleagues in this House to recognize that the growing number of deaths from opioid abuse in this province, including the use of fentanyl, is a genuine emergency requiring our urgent consideration and debate.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to respond to the request made by the Member for Calgary-Mountain View. I believe that everyone in the House today shares the view that the spread of fentanyl and the deaths that have occurred as a result as well as the spread of other high-strength opioids are extremely alarming. In fact, I would say that this has undoubtedly created a public health crisis right across Canada and here in Alberta. I know that it's an issue that the government is very committed to tackling, whether that be through greater efforts at education, better intervention and treatment, or better supports to help break the cycle of addiction.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has dealt in part of his remarks today with the requirements for consideration of an emergency debate on this matter, and I will leave those decisions to you with respect to that rather than present arguments for or against here but will only indicate that I believe that it is fair for all members of the House to be given an opportunity to be able to weigh in on this important issue. For that reason, I support the request from the hon. member to set aside the normal business of the House in order to discuss this critical issue.

Mr. Cooper: Well, Mr. Speaker, in light of that, it sounds like we may have some agreement around the Chamber. I'll keep my remarks very brief. I think the Member for Calgary-Mountain View did a fine job of laying out just the urgency of the debate. I think a very good case could be made that this crisis, in fact, on its own merits – it would be reasonable to have an emergency debate on the fact that this is very clearly an emergency in our province and should be dealt with at the earliest possible time, which, of course, is today. Given that we've heard from the government and given that he has clearly laid out that House of Commons Procedure and Practice states, "Finally, the Speaker may take into account the general wish of the House to have an emergency debate and grant a request for an emergency debate," it appears to me that we are certainly going to have a general wish of the House today. I would encourage you, sir, to rule in favour of proceeding with Standing Order 30.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Clearly, the fentanyl crisis is baring its ugly face in every community across the province, and we're currently facing at least a death a day from fentanyl itself and double that if we include other opioids. We have people in the gallery today who know how truly tragic that is, and that's why our Progressive Conservative caucus stands united with all other opposition parties and, hopefully, the government as well to urge them to hold an emergency debate on the provincial response to the opioid crisis.

I have abbreviated my remarks. I will give you all the citations right now. First of all, this is not before the House in any form of a bill debate, and the most reasonable opportunity is right here and right now. According to Beauchesne's 387 to 398 – and I'll only read a sentence. Regarding motions to adjourn the House to discuss an important matter, Standing Order 30(7)(a) states, "the matter proposed for discussion must relate to a genuine emergency, calling for immediate and urgent consideration." If the skyrocketing number of opioid-related deaths in our province does not constitute a genuine emergency, I don't know what does. We're seeing an increase in deaths caused by fentanyl which is 57 times higher than we experienced just a few years ago.

Beauchesne's 390 states that a motion for emergency debate must meet the test of urgency; that is, "when the ordinary opportunities provided by the rules of the House do not permit the subject to be brought on early enough and the public interest demands that discussion take place immediately." Mr. Speaker, when it comes to the well-being of Albertan families – and the lives of Albertans are at stake – nothing could be more urgent than this. Opioid addiction has been raised in question period in previous sessions, as you know, many times, and we have yet to have a proper debate and focus the attention of this House on the crisis and those it affects every day. There is no government motion on the Order Paper asking for a debate on this very important issue, which there certainly must be. There was no mention of the immediate and continuing pressing issue of fentanyl in Alberta in the throne speech last week, but I'm sure you noticed that, Mr. Speaker.

On to Beauchesne's 389, which states that the matter "must be so pressing that the public interest will suffer if it is not given immediate attention." I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that this issue, if not dealt with in a real and comprehensive way immediately, will be nothing short of suffering to the public interest. In fact, it is much more pressing than that. It is, indeed, a matter of life and death.

From Beauchesne's 387: "Most decisions based on these conditions are bound to be subjective and few clear cut decisions can be made. In making his ruling, the Speaker may, on occasion, take into account the general wish of the House to have a debate." Now, Mr. Speaker, as you may well know, thousands of families of current and, I dare say, present and future victims of opioid addiction are depending on your decision, sir. This matter is urgent enough to proceed. Our guests here today will attest to that.

I urge you to consider that this very important matter has escalated since – another quotation from the Premier herself, who declared on December 13, 2016, page 2578 of Hansard: "The rise of illicit opiates, including fentanyl and the more powerful carfentanyl, has created a public health crisis here in Alberta and, quite frankly, across the country." I don't think it needs to be much more clear than that. In Hansard, page 116, on March 14, 2016, the Health minister called fentanyl "a deadly threat," and on May 19, 2016, page 1054 of Hansard, the Health minister said, "The situation with fentanyl is something that we are dealing with in Alberta very seriously. We've been doing so for many months." It has been a year since that statement.

An application was approved for an emergency debate on “the sudden and unexpected revelation of events which [had] taken place in the past, in that they might precipitate a course of conduct which, if allowed to continue unchecked, would certainly classify itself as an emergency and a matter of urgent consideration”.

Many feel that the system has failed Albertans who are addicted to opioids, and we need to do everything that we can do to ensure that this problem does not get any worse.

We can start that right now, Mr. Speaker. It is a public health crisis. We must deal with it in this Assembly as a state of emergency. Earlier today all opposition parties stood together to call on the government to take a proactive and co-ordinated approach to dealing with this issue. Our province is already in an emergency when it comes to the opioid crisis, and it's time we treat it as such.

The Speaker: Point of order noted.

Mr. Mason: I can wait till he's done if you would agree.

Mr. Rodney: One sentence. Mr. Speaker, I ask that you rule in favour of this motion, and I urge the members of the Assembly to vote to move forward with this very important debate, that indeed is a matter of life and death.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader raised a point of order. Is that correct?

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The House leader for the third party indicated in his remarks that there was no mention of the fentanyl crisis in the throne speech. I just want to correct that because it does in fact refer to it on page 15 of the speech. I just wanted to put that on the record.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we're dealing with the urgency requirements, not the substantive.

The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much. I will be brief. I will not repeat citations made previously, but I wanted to briefly rise and be on the record in support of the call for an emergency debate. The opportunity in the urgency is to show Albertans that we genuinely care about this issue, show Albertans that this is, in fact, a crisis, and here in the Assembly, for all of us to show leadership and, ideally, talk about solutions. It is an opportunity to hear from all members of the Assembly about proposed ways that we can address this issue. To the question, just briefly and finally, of urgency: with the 343 deaths last year that we know about plus the 150 as yet unspecified deaths and likely many more deaths as a result of fentanyl, carfentanyl, and other opiates, this meets the very definition of urgency. I would encourage you, Mr. Speaker, to support the call for an emergency debate.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, hearing the debate, I am prepared to rule on the request for leave for this motion to proceed in accordance with Standing Order 30(2). The Member for Calgary-Mountain View has met the requirements, providing at least two hours. His motion reads as follows:

Pursuant to Standing Order 30 be it resolved that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the growing number of deaths from opioid use and abuse, including the use of fentanyl, which now constitutes a state of emergency.

The relevant parliamentary authorities on the subject are pages 689, 696 of the House of Commons Procedure and Beauchesne's paragraphs 387 to 390.

I have listened carefully to the argument, and my sense is that the House has an almost, possibly unanimous desire to treat this and does see this as a matter of urgency. I am for the record going to cite some of the same statements that have been made by various members. The Standing Order is clear that the question must be specific, must require urgent consideration. It must deal with a matter within the administrative competence of the government, and there must be no other reasonable opportunity for debate. House of Commons Procedure and Practice further notes, on page 695, that “the Speaker may take into account the general wish of the House to have an emergency debate and grant a request for an emergency debate.”

The motion by the Member for Calgary-Mountain View raises an undoubtedly serious and pressing matter. The first meeting at the first regular sitting day of the new session: this is also the first opportunity for debate to take place.

With respect to the requirement for urgency, the following can be found in paragraph 390 of Beauchesne's, sixth edition:

“Urgency” within this rule does not apply to the matter itself, but means “urgency . . .”

Hon. members, please don't speak while I'm speaking, particularly on this matter, that I know you are all concerned about. Thank you.

. . . when the ordinary opportunities provided by the rules of the House do not permit the subject to be brought on early enough and the public interest demands that discussion take place immediately.

I note that the Leader of the Official Opposition has Motion 501 on the Order Paper. Even though that motion refers to opioid addiction, I don't think the debate would necessarily be devoted to that subject. Of course, there is the Speech from the Throne debate and, early in this session, the budget debate, but I sense from the hon. members this afternoon that there is a desire on all sides of the Assembly to discuss this issue as it is so important. For these reasons, I find that there is a matter of urgent public importance in this case, and the request for leave is granted.

The rules governing the procedure, once the chair finds the request for leave to be in order, are as follows: Standing Order 30(3) requires that the question be put to a vote of the Assembly. If there are any objections to the question, then the chair will ask “those Members who support the motion to rise in their places.” If 15 or more members rise, the debate will proceed, and each member who wishes to speak will have 10 minutes until all who wish to speak have done so or until the hour of adjournment. If at least five members rise but fewer than 15, “the question whether the Member has leave to move adjournment of the ordinary business” is put immediately and if necessary is determined by division. If fewer than five members rise, the debate will not proceed. Finally, the standing order states that an emergency debate will not entail a decision of the Assembly.

Now, to the question: shall a debate on the urgent matter proceed? All in favour, say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Speaker: All opposed, say no. The motion is carried. The debate on this matter will now proceed.

The Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the members of the Legislature. This is a debate that's long overdue here and recognizes the deep sadness, grief, and anger developing at the inadequate and fragmented response to five years of increasing deaths due to addictions and mental illness, especially of our young adults and First Nations. Most members and professionals have been surprised, I included, at the devastation this has taken and at how quickly and quietly it has overtaken our health care, our justice system, our social services system. Surely there is enough statistical evidence and anecdotal stories to suggest this is indeed a public health and safety emergency in this province.

Our two major municipalities are having their own discussions on how to better tackle this issue. Edmonton's mayor, Don Iveson, is quoted as saying that there's no doubt this is a serious and escalating crisis, so the time well may come for that declaration to be issued. End quote. Calgary's mayor, Naheed Nenshi, is reported saying that we lost more people to opioid overdose last year than the combined deaths from homicide and car collisions. We're not talking about this enough. We've got to do something. End quote. The Calgary Police Service is holding a public discussion on opioids March 7, this week, expressing frustration at the lack of co-ordinated social and health services. Health stakeholders are holding a public panel discussion this week, March 9, at the University of Alberta, Edmonton Clinic Health Academy, on opiates.

As an MLA I'm hearing these concerns raised almost on a daily basis from constituents, advocacy groups, and professionals in the medical, policing, and social services systems. As a physician I can confidently say that the current levels of opioid addiction overdose are beyond anything I've ever experienced in a lifetime of medical practice and constitute indeed a threat to public health and safety.

Assuming that these last-quarter reportings, that showed 343 deaths related to fentanyl, which was a 33 per cent increase over the previous year, similarly constituted only 57 per cent of all opiate-related deaths, as was reported in previous quarterly reports, then another 43 per cent of deaths have actually occurred this year than has been reported and are still awaiting final medical examiner confirmation. That would mean roughly 500 deaths last year, Mr. Speaker. We're approaching two deaths per day in this province. I happen to believe that the provincial health officer cannot be expected with the resources she has to manage this extraordinary multidisciplinary, multidepartmental crisis. Consideration should be given to reinstate the provincial mental health and addictions officer that was let go last year. It's critical to have someone in place with a mental health and addictions leadership background.

I'd also like to see a clear, comprehensive plan for mental health and addictions, specifically on the opiate crisis, that is related to a collaborative stakeholder consultation; adequate, shared resources; more open communications between these organizations; and a close monitoring to see what is working and what is not working in our systems of care. I hear too many reports that people are not getting help, are pushed from place to place, do not have a clear plan, and do not have the emotional or mental support to go through the very difficult, painful family challenge of getting off opiates.

I also believe that resources beyond those currently being used are needed and that the federal government has recognized this. It means that we have to recognize other resources outside of Alberta, which is the definition of an emergency, when current resources fail to meet the needs of the emergency.

While we don't necessarily understand all the dimensions of this epidemic, we must address the urgency. We must acknowledge that we do not have the resources or expertise currently or the co-ordination of resources needed to bring this under control. Five years surely has shown us that. With the recognition that we need resources, consideration should be given, as we have in other natural disasters, to call an emergency under the Emergency Management Act if not the Public Health Act. This would demonstrate (a) that we now appreciate the unpredictable devastation of this evolving and increasing crisis. It would demonstrate (b) that we will develop a comprehensive plan and more effectively manage and mobilize the resources we have within this province as well as seek other resources from outside the province – why? – because we recognize that this is a national crisis needing federal, provincial, and municipal collaboration, because unprecedented numbers of people have died, and the rate has increased progressively over the last five years despite the welcome distribution of free naloxone that saves lives every day.

It's not enough to save lives. We have to get ahead of this and get people off the drugs. Harm reduction elements are important – the tremendous and growing cost and the failure of our current approach with tremendous loss of money and morale in our police service, in our social service, in our front-line health workers, who see the same people coming in again and again without getting the appropriate supports they need.

Finally, "why" includes the need for strong and expert leadership focused on developing the plan that includes policing and the justice system; human services; our education, including the post-education system; and, of course, Health, which should be leading the charge and co-ordinating this effort as well as nongovernmental agencies, some of whom are represented in the gallery today; and the professionals outside the health system that are dealing with this: social workers, psychologists, counsellors.

What is needed? The government of Canada signed on November 19, 2016, a joint statement of action to address the opioid crisis with eight provinces and the Northwest Territories but not Alberta. Why is that? Why was Alberta not at the table?

More money needs to be directed at various sites and harm reduction approaches, especially supervised substitute therapy, and approaches to more focused leadership and a plan that includes all stakeholders. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that new and expert leadership focused on co-ordination and integrating the partnering of these various organizations and stakeholders with experts in mental illness, addiction, as well as the police, social services, and schools is essential. Clearly, enhanced funding for supervised injection sites and opiate replacement therapy are needed. Other harm reduction programs are needed beyond the big cities, where we know that we have much stronger resources available to deal with poverty and homelessness, including their families in a comprehensive approach to their care.

Doctors, too, are fundamentally involved in this crisis. They have been involved in prescribing too many opiates, failing to monitor the opiates and other psychoactive drugs, and according to the college's triplicate prescription program requiring all doctors prescribing opiates to register these, there's been a failure of doctors to check on individual patients on whether they're taking more drugs than they should be or continuing to take opiates from more than one physician. That is the responsibility of the medical profession and the college. To its credit the college has finally brought in this week standards for opiate prescribing. Now they must monitor and enforce more stringently, confronting the painful truth that most addicts were begun on prescription opiates.

My final comments, Mr. Speaker, have been said.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I have a request. The hon. Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to start by thanking the Member for Calgary-Mountain View for his passion and his advocacy on this issue. I know that he comes to this with his full heart and a deep caring for the future of Alberta.

Over the past year I've met with Albertans who've been touched by this crisis of opioid use and overdose that we are experiencing. I've met with doctors who realize that the prescription practices of the past decades have helped create this problem. I've met Albertans with chronic pain who are deeply concerned that their needs will be lost in the work to solve the problem. I've met with members of Alberta Addicts Who Educate and Advocate Responsibly, or AAWEAR, who said clearly that they need a seat at the table. They've said: nothing about us without us.

I've met Albertans who've lost loved ones to overdose: sons, daughters, brothers, husbands, wives, neighbours, and coworkers. I think most if not all of us in this House have either lost someone they know or know of someone who has. There are hundreds of grieving families in Alberta. I know that every day those families want to see their government taking more action to prevent deaths and to spare other families from enduring this grief, and they are right. We absolutely must do more.

I'm going to touch on the language used by the Member for Calgary-Mountain View. I know he has called for a public health emergency in the past. Today he is calling for a provincial emergency, and I understand that sentiment. I would like the member to know and this House to know that the use of emergency powers is something that this government has seriously considered and that we continue to review. We know that more action is necessary. We do not believe at this time that activating our provincial emergency response system will provide new ways that we can help Albertans who use substances. We do not believe that substance use is something that can be fixed in the 30 days provided for in the Emergency Management Act or in the Public Health Act. It would not be helpful for the province of Alberta to enter an indefinite period of emergency in response to what is fundamentally a crisis of social isolation and stigma.

More help is coming. It will build on the work that we have already done in several key areas. Health and Justice staff are working side by side to track this problem in detail, providing important information to law enforcement and public health officials. Officials from across this government are working together to collaborate within individual departments and individual ministries to address this problem.

I recently met with both the mayor and the chief of police in Calgary. In both meetings we discussed our desire to work together to share data and to find collaborative solutions. The issue of wraparound services came up, and that is something that all of us are agreeing is an important piece of solving this puzzle. I know that the federal Health minister is also very interested in a national opioid data program.

I would like to assure the House that Alberta is a leader in Canada in providing timely and accurate data on opioid misuse. In fact, when I was at the Opioid Summit in late November, which the member referenced, many of the provinces across our great land were looking to Alberta as a leader on this issue, and we heard from experts in all fields and all areas of addiction and support that the work we are doing is on the right track.

Is there more to do? Absolutely.

We are working closely with the College of Physicians & Surgeons of Alberta. We are very pleased to see the college's updated prescription guidelines. These will help doctors and patients make the best decisions about appropriate prescribing of opioid painkillers. We know that the college is also aware of the need for more doctors to be able to treat substance use, and we are working with them to help bring more treatment options into primary care. We've also heard the challenges around data sharing for doctors and pharmacists and are working with the colleges to address those issues.

This government has moved quickly to make naloxone as widely available as possible. This is a short-term intervention, the definition of a Band-Aid. Naloxone is meant to save a life at the last possible moment. We know that the take-home naloxone program, the kits, have reversed hundreds of potentially fatal overdoses. Today any Albertan who wants a kit or is concerned that they might need one can get one easily, for free, without a prescription. Any Albertan who knows someone or thinks they might know someone who may be at risk of an overdose can obtain this life-saving kit. They can get it at a community pharmacy in communities across our province, or they can get it from a local harm reduction agency. Recently we made sure that all of our first responders across Alberta will have access as well.

Beyond naloxone, we have made opioid replacement therapies like Suboxone and methadone easier to access, with new clinics that have opened in Cardston and new clinics that will be opening soon in Grande Prairie and the central zone. Clinics already exist in Edmonton and Calgary, and in those communities an Albertan can receive this treatment inside of a week. Is that good enough? No. Reducing these wait times and expanding access outside of urban centres is a priority for this government.

We are also working to reach out and connect with Albertans who use substances even if they are not yet ready to enter treatment. Treatment only works when an individual is ready for it, and we need to make sure that treatment is available when people are ready. We are also needing to make sure that those people are able to live another day to make another choice. Offering supervised consumption services is one of the most critical life-saving measures available. We are working in partnership with outstanding community agencies to provide these services in a way that provides wraparound social and medical care and provides access to counselling and treatment. We are doing this in partnership with the local residents, local government, and law enforcement. I would like to do this in partnership with members opposite as well, and I would strongly urge them to support supervised consumption services.

Our government committed to moving forward with supervised consumption services in the throne speech and to working with communities to open these life-saving services. The issue of supervised consumption services has been intensely studied, and the evidence is crystal clear: supervised consumption saves lives. Communities across Canada are developing applications to the federal government, and the federal Health minister has made it very clear to me that she wants to make these services available to Canadians as quickly as possible.

I look forward to hearing from the Official Opposition and the third party on this, much like I look forward to the continued debate on this issue here in this House and to plans, concrete plans, to address this crisis. I've met with members opposite as well as many community groups, and my door is always open. I look forward to hearing their ideas.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In just three years the number of fentanyl-related deaths in Alberta has surged from 117 to 717. I think I can illustrate the magnitude of those deaths in a way that we as Members of the Legislative Assembly can relate to. Losing 717 Albertans in just three years would wipe Bashaw off the map, it would turn Boyle into a ghost town, and the homes of Consort would be empty. I know that's a bit alarming, but it's true.

Now, try to imagine the pain and suffering of the thousands of families and friends of each of the dead. It's almost too much to comprehend. The 717 dead Albertans are just a tally of the fentanyl-related deaths. We don't even have accurate figures for the opioid-related fatalities, which is a related and growing issue.

I am proud that so far our work to combat this scourge has been collaborative in this Assembly. For instance, after I encouraged the Minister of Justice to increase the funding for ALERT, the provincial government stepped up, and they did do the right thing. We also put aside partisan politics to unanimously approve Bill 205, which controls the pill presses used to manufacture the deadly concoctions sold on Alberta streets.

But while Bill 205 was designed to halt the production of tens of thousands of fentanyl-laced pills, I warned the government that Albertans would still die without a comprehensive, co-ordinated approach for dealing with our opioid crisis. I had thought that action would have already occurred, and I'm disappointed that it has not. Once again I'm urging action, further action. We are in the midst of a crisis, and we need to treat it as such. More needs to be done, full stop.

I'm not accusing our government of indifference or even inaction. What I'm saying is that we need to do better. The first step in dealing with the addiction is admitting that we have a problem. Premier, Minister of Health, Associate Minister, Justice minister, you have a problem. We all have a problem. Please admit it. Take the appropriate action to deal with it.

What is that action? Well, we must follow in the footsteps of our neighbours in British Columbia and declare a public health emergency. I often talk about former Police Chief Hanson's motto of education, prevention, and intervention. Declaring a public health emergency will allow front-line responders such as police and paramedics as well as the whole health system, the justice system, and municipalities to address this crisis using a multipronged approach. We need a crossministerial body established to quickly implement new models of prevention and care. We need real-time data that will allow law enforcers to address an evolved and a very evolving situation which occurs rapidly. We need full commitment to educate the public on the serious dangers of all opioids, the terribly toxic recreational ones that appear quickly on the streets and the opioids that Albertans obtain legally for bona fide health problems. If this government does not declare a public health emergency and instead continues to deal with our opioid crisis in a reactive, piecemeal fashion, more and more Albertans will die.

The federal government is taking action, and it's listening to advice. After Bill 205 passed in the House, I reached out to the federal Health minister, and I asked her to do the following: prohibit tools used to manufacture drugs, prohibit the ingredients for creating fentanyl and other illicit opioids, expedite approval for the nasal spray version of naloxone. I'm pleased to note that Minister Philpott has either taken action or is in the midst of taking action through Bill C-37 on all of my recommendations.

You can likely understand, then, why I find it strange that our own province is so hesitant to take advice on the need to implement a comprehensive plan to combat the opioids that are killing our citizens in ever-increasing numbers. I'm absolutely baffled why this government chooses to double down and dig their heels in the sand and not call this what it is, a public health emergency. The federal government has even made $65 million available to the provinces for opioid programs. B.C. called it a public health emergency and received $10 million of that funding. Alberta has yet to secure a penny. Yet AHS's own figures allow us to conservatively estimate that opioid abuse is costing $5 million a year in emergency room visits alone. That doesn't take into account hospitalizations or treatment or enforcement or naloxone, and I could go on and on and on. If only for the sake of receiving this money and earmarking it to the positive opioid abuse initiatives, why would our government not declare this emergency? I'm clearly frustrated, Mr. Speaker, but I will not give up.

Once again I'm calling on this government to build on the collaborative efforts that we have seen so far in the Legislature on this issue. Please declare a public health emergency, launch proactive, multiministerial attacks on opioids. Working with experts in the field, this government can focus on increasing access to long-term treatment of opioid addicts. Far too often we incarcerate an addict for the night and release him or her back onto the street, back into their addiction, and the cycle goes on and on and on. It's time for a different approach. It's time for real help, help that will pull them out of their addiction. Albertans continue to die, and it is time for us to find proactive, all-encompassing solutions.

To the Premier, to the Health minister: please do not make any more excuses. Albertans are not buying it. Again, please declare a public health emergency today.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is an issue that affects all Albertans. I don't think it can be overstated, the devastating impact that fentanyl and other opioids are having on our communities, on our families, and on all of our loved ones. What's necessary to address this crisis, as my hon. colleague the Associate Minister of Health has pointed out, are actions, and that's why the government is taking action.

Have we solved the crisis yet? No. I don't think that anyone would say that we have, but as my colleague has outlined, the government is taking steps to ensure that we move forward. We're investing money in treatment beds, in replacement therapies, in naloxone, and we're advocating for supervised consumption sites.

Mr. Speaker, the evidence is clear, and our law enforcement professionals, many of whom I've spoken to in detail on this issue, support this. This is not a problem that we can enforce our way out of. We have to attack the demand side. It's true that there is an enforcement element, and we do have that role. This government has taken action on that front as well. After the former Conservative government, the federal government, cut funding to ALERT, this government, this NDP government here in Alberta, stepped in to fill that funding to ensure that we had that integrated model, the best in the country, to help us on the enforcement side. These actions were taken as a result of listening to Albertans. We listened to community groups. We listened to the Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police, to front-line police officers, and to mayors throughout the province.

Mr. Speaker, we know we won't solve this problem overnight. We know that it is a complex problem with multiple influences that we will need a long time to work on, and one of the things that we think is necessary to address this is good data. That's why we've asked the office of the Chief Medical Examiner to continue doing significantly more work. They were the first we know of to develop a test for carfentanil in blood. In cases previously noted as multiple drug toxicity, our medical examiners are going back to re-examine those deaths to determine if opioids were the primary cause. This is complex and detailed work. In many cases, with the volume of drug in the blood, multiple different drugs could themselves have caused the death, so we need to be sure that we're taking our time to get it right and to ensure that we have good, solid, concrete data to roll out the door for Albertans.

This increase in work required additional resources, and that's why this government stepped up. I announced just a few months ago a million dollars in additional funding. This will fund, Mr. Speaker, two new medical examiners and one research officer, who will be able to help co-ordinate the data to ensure that we have the best information available in the country. We've also just completed a new toxicology lab that will help us to get a handle on this problem. We know that saying that we have better data and a better understanding of the problem will not come as comfort to those who have lost loved ones to this crisis, but we do know that it's a necessary precursor to continue moving forward and to continue addressing this crisis.

This crisis requires investment, Mr. Speaker. It requires investment in front-line resources throughout the province, and I hope that when it comes time for budget, when it comes time to make and pay for those investments, all of us will remember that this is the cost we are talking about.

Mr. Speaker, we've been working closely with police services. I've been in constant contact with the Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police, and in fact I raised this issue with them just in February. We've been working with police and communities on the need for supervised consumption services. I have found that our police partners are very supportive, that the evidence indicates that this is the way to go. EPS certainly has been very publicly supportive of such supervised consumption services provided they have wrap-around supports to ensure that people have access to alternatives, not only that they survive to make a better choice in the future but that we make those better choices available to them.

In addition, we've been working with our federal counterparts. In fact, at the Justice table I was the first provincial Justice minister to raise the issue of fentanyl in January of 2016 at our Quebec FPT.

Mr. Speaker, it's clearly the case that this is a challenge. The government is willing to step up and meet that challenge, and I'm glad to see that all members in this House support our efforts in that direction.

Certainly, with respect to opioids in correction facilities we have a huge concern for the safety of our front-line staff and for the safety of the inmates in those centres. We have been working, Mr. Speaker, with advocates for those who are incarcerated. We have been working with the union to ensure that our corrections professionals have the necessary tools to deal with this because it can be very challenging for them. We have naloxone available on all sites. Our officials indicate that there isn't an increase in the frequency of drugs coming into the centres, but because fentanyl is very deadly, that's a huge concern for us. We take a number of steps, including examination for drugs, weapons, and other items when the inmate is admitted, drug screening, the use of drug dogs, regularly scheduled rounds, and we're also reviewing the effectiveness of body scanners for inmates coming into our correctional facilities.

Mr. Speaker, to conclude my comments, we can't overstate the impact that this is having on our families and communities. We know and our partners throughout the justice system know that this is an issue that needs to be addressed by way of support for the addict, by way of ensuring that people survive to make a better choice, and that we support them to make that better choice in the future. It's a complex issue that requires a complex and co-ordinated response, and that's why we're working so closely both between the ministries of Health and Justice but also with our partners in the health care field, in the corrections field, and in policing.

At the end of the day, this is a problem that requires action, and those actions are ones that the government is taking. We have not solved the problem. We will need to continue to take further actions in the future, and this requires that we invest resources. These lives are worth that investment, Mr. Speaker, and I hope, again, that when it comes time to debate the resources necessary to achieve those outcomes, everyone will, at the end of the day, remember that the costs can be measured in lives and that those investments are absolutely critical.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with a great sense of urgency and seriousness that I rise today to speak to the emergency debate on the fentanyl crisis here in Alberta. Today all parties in the opposition have risen above partisan lines to call on this government to do their job. Fentanyl, according to the data provided, has risen to a point where there is almost one death per day. It is clear that the government's strategy to deal with this is just not working. This government has taken a singular, narrow-minded approach, which involves primarily the use of naloxone. This is a Band-Aid solution, and it has done nothing to help address the serious addiction treatment problems or to help get any of these drugs off our streets.

The Wildrose cares about saving lives, Mr. Speaker, the lives of individuals suffering from addictions. The Wildrose cares about safe and strong communities. Albertans care about these things, too. This is why we believe the government needs to take this issue seriously, that they need to have a well-thought-through, unified, and co-ordinated plan across all government ministries. This is certainly something that we feel the NDP government has failed at.

As the shadow minister for Justice and Solicitor General I've been appalled at this government's silence as to how they plan to tackle this problem from an enforcement side. In fact, the only leadership Albertans have seen from this cabinet and the minister is the willingness to hire more medical examiners to conduct autopsies on victims. We need action now.

The fact is that criminals are importing cheap sources of fentanyl from overseas in order to cut their costs. They create knock-off versions of oxycodone, heroin, and they're even adding fentanyl to other drugs such as marijuana. The problem with this is that drug dealers are not chemists, and the quality, the consistency, and potency of these drugs are unable to be tested. Fentanyl is a drug which is 100 times stronger than morphine, and even more scary are some of the derivatives like carfentanil, which is up to 1,000 times stronger than fentanyl. Every time people use these drugs, they are playing a dangerous game of Russian roulette.

Those who are lucky enough to survive the odds are causing other challenges. This drug and its derivatives are so powerful and so addictive that people will do anything to get it, which leads to increased crime, thefts. Both major cities' chiefs of police have stated that crime is linked to a number of factors. Both are seeing a direct correlation between fentanyl and our crime surge. Now, ALERT, the Alberta law enforcement response teams, has been doing a good job of taking pills and dealers off the street, but they can't stop everything. We need to ensure that all police forces are properly equipped and that the government is approaching this from a co-ordinated position: all ministries, all stakeholders.

Now, this is why we believe it is necessary to declare a public health emergency. There are several reasons for this, and I will attempt to highlight some of the most relevant. First and foremost, there is an aspect of raising public awareness. It is absolutely crucial that we recognize that this is not just an issue affecting those living on our streets or chronic drug abusers. This is hurting all Albertans in all walks of life, all demographics. The stigma needs to go away.

This does not just mean the general public, either. This means awareness amongst health care professionals.

When we are talking about a drug that can cause an overdose with two tiny flakes, it is important that we keep our first responders alert and aware that this drug is out there and it's dangerous. Outbreaks only get worse when they also pick off first responders. This is something that's already happened in B.C. a few times, putting police officers, paramedics, and firefighters in the hospital due to skin contact with this deadly drug. We as Albertans risk a similar experience here if we take our own first responders for granted in this ongoing epidemic.

Second, a declaration will result in real-time opioid statistics being published on a frequent basis. This is very important. Currently there is no mandate for the government to report, and there is no sense of urgency to report the data in real time. Every life is important; they deserve to be counted. This drug has claimed several lives. If this is a tool that will help law enforcement and health professionals come up with solutions, then the government has an obligation to declare a public health emergency.

Thirdly, this will allow for a co-ordinated response from the government, allowing all ministries to collaborate in a deliberate effort. This means including the ministries of Justice, Health, Community and Social Services, aboriginal affairs, and all others. We need to be assured that there is a plan in place so there will be measurable results. These results are not simply counting how many naloxone kits have been distributed. This is not a success that is measured in costs. Naloxone is an important tool that will allow vulnerable individuals the opportunity, as has been said before, to make a better decision on another day. But it is just a tool. Solutions include bringing everyone together.

This is an emergency. There's been a 33 per cent increase in the rate of overdose deaths linked to the drug from just 2015, and a shocking 110 per cent rise from just two years ago. Calgary had a death toll of 149 people, people with families, just in 2016.

Wildrose released a combatting fentanyl 10-point plan last year. We provided several solutions to help this situation. In here we gave several recommendations, and it's worth noting a few of them now. Point 5: "Increased funding for addictions and detox programs within the province." This is crucial. Many people, especially those who choose to seek help, cannot access it. Point 6: "Ensure that all ambulances and hospitals have adequate supplies of naloxone available." Point 8: "Urge the federal government to amend the Criminal Code to ensure the harshest possible prosecution [and punishment] for fentanyl trafficking or creation." Point 9: "Urge the federal government to enact federal laws or regulations regarding the import, export, sale, and possession of commercial pill presses in Canada." We have done some of these things here in Alberta. We need to do more outside of just this province.

Today we have heard from families who have been devastated by this crisis. All of us have spoken with these people here today in the gallery, who are very brave for being here, pushing this issue. These families have been devastated by this crisis, the seriousness in which it should be taken. We have an obligation as legislators to stand up for these families and for others across this province and take action to address a situation where almost one person per day is dying.

There are obstacles to monitoring activity as federal and provincial authorities have no real-time data collection of opioid-related hospital visits, coroners' toxicity reports, arrests, border seizures, drug and urine tests, or reports from addictions counselors, probably because they're not totally accessible.

The Wildrose is urging the government to answer our call from spring of last year, renewed today: implement a public state of emergency, please.

Thank you for your time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to have the opportunity to rise in the House and participate in this debate today on a very important and crucial issue. I, too, would like to acknowledge the families that have joined us here today. I appreciate that you've come here to share some of your stories and recognize some of your own pain in trying to seek that this does not happen to other families in our province, and I honour you for joining us and being part of this here today.

I first had the opportunity to meet families and friends of people who had died from overdoses at the international overdose day here in Edmonton back in August of 2015. It was my honour to speak on behalf of the government as part of that. There I saw many people whom I had the opportunity to first meet just shortly after my election in 2015, when I had the opportunity to tour Boyle Street Community Services, a truly amazing social agency operating right here in Edmonton-Centre.

On that tour I met Marliiss Taylor, a nurse and community advocate who for over 20 years in Edmonton has been running the Streetworks program. Now, Streetworks' original goal was to combat HIV, but over time they expanded their work and became the first organization in Canada to equip workers with naloxone kits. But all along the principle that Streetworks has been committed to has been the principle of harm reduction, the recognition that substance use is a chronic medical issue, that it's not a moral issue but a medical condition, one that touches almost every family in every community in our province.

Members today have spoken of the need to remove the stigma around substance use. I absolutely agree. It's regrettable that in past years some politicians, including, I think, some past federal politicians, have failed to do that. They took actions which furthered the stigmatization and which prevented the implementation of important services that could be saving lives.

Now, harm reduction focuses on practical strategies that work to reduce the negative consequences associated with substance abuse, allowing workers to build relationships of trust with those who are suffering from substance use so that they can help them address the root causes and the drivers of their substance use and begin to help them on the difficult road to recovery.

After having met Marliiss, I was very happy a short while later to have the opportunity to bring up her name with Minister Hoffman – pardon me; I apologize – with the Member for Edmonton-Glenora, the Minister of Health. It was the opportunity to help connect Marliiss with her, and I was overjoyed when in October 2015 Marliiss was appointed to the board of Alberta Health Services, bringing a strong voice to advocate for those suffering from substance abuse.

That same month I had the opportunity to meet with Marliiss and fellow members of a group called AMSISE, Access to Medically Supervised Injection Services Edmonton, at my office. They shared with me their proposal to embed safe consumption services in existing community agencies here in Edmonton. They explained how these sites could help to combat the incredible costs that substance use visits on individuals, families, and our health care system and how safe consumption sites could drastically reduce those effects by greatly reducing substance users' likelihood of overdose, by reducing their exposure to criminals, by reducing their need to commit criminal acts, by reducing the spread of infectious diseases, and by reducing the stigma and isolation of substance use, a crucial step in addressing its root causes and helping users on the road to recovery.

Now, being familiar with the incredible results that have been seen through similar work at Vancouver's InSite clinic, I was very excited by AMSISE's proposal. I made every effort to give them the opportunity to connect with our government, and in February 2016 I had the honour of bringing them in to share their proposal with some of our fellow MLAs and the Associate Minister of Health. Last October I was incredibly proud to see the minister announce funding of $230,000 to support AMSISE in engaging our local communities as part of their application for a federal exemption to operate those sites here in Edmonton as well as another $500,000 to help other communities conduct needs assessments for safe consumption services in their areas.

Mr. Speaker, there is overwhelming evidence that these service sites save lives, providing users with social support, medical care, and the opportunity to live long enough to make better choices. They also provide a vital on-ramp for the wraparound services that can change people's lives.

Mr. Speaker, I also note that AMSISE began developing their proposal over five years ago. They were unsuccessful in getting any support from previous governments. They were unable to get support to move these projects forward. It's been four months since we announced our support, and to the best of my knowledge I have heard nothing from the Official Opposition or the third party. Now, I recognize that our previous Prime Minister and some federal politicians that our opposition continues to vocally support went out of their way to make these important, scientifically proven, life-saving interventions next to impossible to provide, but it's my sincere hope that members on all sides of this House will have the courage to take a clear stand in support of these crucial investments because saving lives is far more important than trying to preserve or burnish our political reputations.

Investing in harm reduction – specifically, safe consumption sites alongside opioid replacement therapy, needle exchanges, and additional treatment beds, which we have invested in and continue to invest in – is one of the most effective tools we have to address the challenges posed by fentanyl and opioid use. I recognize, Mr. Speaker, that the initial sites that are proposed are within the downtown core and are targeted at those who have the most need. I recognize that we need to see more of these sites, and I look forward to seeing this federal process go forward. I look forward to, hopefully, AMSISE receiving the federal exemption so that they can start these sites, that we can prove their efficacy and see more of these sites open up throughout our province, around our city, because we know that when people use alone, they are at their most dangerous. When we provide them with safe places where they can get support, away from stigma, we have the opportunity to save lives, to help connect people with services and supports that can help them make better choices.

I appreciate the concern that's been brought forward by members on all sides of this House today. I recognize the desire to want to do something publicly to declare support. I agree that we need to work to remove that stigma, work to bring this out more to the public, and we can do that. We are doing that here today. I've been doing that since I was elected to this office. I was very pleased to see at international overdose day last year that Dr. Verna Yiu of Alberta Health Services was there to speak and indicate their support for harm reduction and addressing these problems here in our province. But, Mr. Speaker, I have not heard anything today that requires a provincial emergency to be called to accomplish. These are things we can all do. We can work together, we can be collaborative, we can raise awareness, and we can continue to take the important steps that our government has been taking.

Mr. Speaker, none of us want to see any more lives lost. I look forward to continuing to work with my government colleagues, to work with members across the aisle, and I look forward to hearing them give their vocal support for important services like safe consumption sites as part of harm reduction and part of a comprehensive plan to address this issue in our province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many of my hon. colleagues may be surprised to learn that Grande Prairie has had a difficult struggle with fentanyl and other deadly opioids, but I'm very proud of the way our first responders, the RCMP detachment, medical personnel, and social agencies have dealt with this devastating epidemic. In fact, our community's attempts have been so successful that Grande Prairie has seen a reduction in the number of fatalities in the past year.

Fort McMurray's efforts to tackle the crisis have also proved positive. As proof let me review the numbers of deaths in our major northern cities over the past two years. In 2015 Grande Prairie lost 18 of our citizens to fentanyl-related overdoses. The drug also killed 17 people in Fort McMurray. But in 2016 each city saw the number of fatalities drop to nine. That's a 50 per cent reduction in Grande Prairie and slightly more than that in Fort McMurray. The reason we are seeing this change for the better is due to the concerted efforts of many local agencies in northern Alberta; for instance, health units have made special attempts to generate awareness of the dangers of fentanyl and other deadly synthetic opioids.

The RCMP and the Alberta law enforcement response teams, known as ALERT, also waged aggressive antidrug campaigns. In Fort McMurray ALERT managed to wipe out an entire drug operation, which took thousands of pills off the streets. Grande Prairie's Mounties established a special police unit to combat the drugs in our area. HIV North also mobilized to distribute naloxone kits to smaller rural communities in northern Alberta. I have to credit the provincial government for announcing plans to open an opioid dependency treatment clinic in Grande Prairie this spring. All of these initiatives have helped the north to at least gain some control over a terrible crisis that has been tearing apart our communities.

Grande Prairie, which saw its crime rate spike in recent years, has even seen a decrease in criminal activity. The positive turnaround in the north shows us what can happen if this kind of co-ordinated approach were to occur on a provincial scale. Of course, it'll take the government of Alberta to implement the framework, and I hope that that happens. If the provincial co-ordination does not take place, fentanyl will continue to take a toll throughout our province, and it could even regain its foothold in the north.

While I've been pointing to some progress up north, fentanyl and other deadly synthetic opioids are devastating small communities. Red Deer, for instance, has lost 39 citizens to fentanyl-related deaths in the past two years, and we know that a number of First Nation reserves faced severe crises over the past few years, to the point of declaring their own states of emergency in order to stem the carnage. Like all other communities, the leaders of the reserves had to create a framework from scratch when they were forced to take action due to their desperate circumstances.

Fentanyl is also prevalent in small-town Alberta, where crime has climbed alarmingly. Taber is an example of a small rural town that has been dealing with a steep increase in drugs and other crime. It is especially hard for communities like Taber, which is only a short distance from Calgary, because its residents fall prey to criminals bent on stealing their vehicles and ATVs to make money for their next fix or to drug dealers seeking new customers. As the Taber chief of police noted, break and enters and property crimes fuel the drug trade. As we have seen an increase in fentanyl and crystal meth usage in southern Alberta, we can draw a nexus to Calgary. Like so many communities, the Taber police service took matters into their own hands by launching a public awareness campaign on fentanyl that went viral in its community. Taber also found its own school resource officer who teaches students about the dangers of drugs.

I've outlined a few of the occurrences around rural Alberta in an effort to demonstrate the efforts communities and regions are making to combat this crisis and to underline that this crisis is occurring throughout Alberta, not just in our large cities. But if mid-size and small communities can implement measures and programs that make a difference locally, can you imagine how powerful a provincial response would be? Mr. Speaker, I urge our government to call a public health emergency and start taking this step today for all Albertans. If they do not take this step, they are doing all Albertans a disservice because everyone is suffering in some way from this crisis, whether they know it or not.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was going to say that I'm pleased to rise, but this is an important subject. I do want to honour the attendance of those in the gallery on this. Our hearts go out to all these families who have lost loved ones.

The rise of illicit fentanyl in our communities has created a public health crisis here in Alberta and across Canada. Just as the Member for Airdrie mentioned, this is a crisis in my riding of Edmonton-Whitemud. We've had several deaths from fentanyl overdose in that area. You know, the stereotype about Edmonton-Whitemud is that it is the nicest part of Edmonton and that it is generally well off. That hasn't protected us in Edmonton-Whitemud from the scourge of this drug.

You know, I attended the opening of the Alberta and the Great War exhibit just last Thursday evening. I toured the exhibit, and I couldn't help but think that there's a similarity in this. I mean, we talk about the death toll, but think about the families who got those telegrams after those brave soldiers in the First World War were killed or were a casualty. It's a very analogous situation now for our first responders who have to contact families here in our ridings to let them know that there's been a death. I think that, you know, we all need to recognize the impact of this.

I really want to commend the MLA for Calgary-West on his private member's bill, that was unanimously passed by all members of this Assembly to try to limit the production of illicit pills. I think that this was a shining example of the kind of co-operation that this House can come to that's going to have some impact.

I want to turn to my experience as a physician. I've actually been on the front lines of illicit substance abuse for many, many years. I had an experience about eight years ago in which we had several patients show up in the hematology ward here in the University hospital: some from Fort McMurray, some from Grande Prairie, some from Red Deer. They all were common. They were young people that had a profound shortage of white blood cells. Now, ordinarily that means you've got leukemia, and I've got to give you chemotherapy, and I'm going to hopefully fix your leukemia. But, in fact, what was going on was that these individuals had been poisoned. It was men and women, and it wasn't the classical substance abuser profile.

These men and women had been exposed to a chemotherapy agent called levamisole. Levamisole caused a profound leukopenia in these patients. The Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster will know all about levamisole since it's a veterinary product. But that medicine was only detected because our toxicology lab at the University of Alberta hospital was the first one in North America to actually detect it in urine. We were able to recognize that this epidemic of leukopenia was coming from contaminated cocaine, crack cocaine. We were able to actually alert public health and get the word out to my fellow physicians that if you saw a young person with a low white blood cell count, you should get the testing done.

Now, the Alberta OCME is believed to be the first toxicology laboratory in Canada to positively identify carfentanil in human blood, and this was just developed last October. The new toxicology lab is going to increase testing capacity for drug-related deaths from opioids like fentanyl as well as carfentanil. With this help we're going to be able to provide interim reporting as well as quarterly reporting of opioid deaths. This is a really important advance and is an example of how the province of Alberta is responding to this crisis. As the Minister of Justice indicated, the government is supporting the OCME by hiring two new medical examiners and a research officer, and this is going to help support the data collection that is shared with Alberta Health.

I wanted to mention one other thing that's going on that's quite important, and it was alluded to in previous remarks. We need to be able to have greater use of the pharmacy information network and Netcare. These are things that physicians should be using before they prescribe medicines. I think we need to come to some understanding with physicians in general that that's a requirement. It's a standard, and as was indicated by another member, the College of Physicians & Surgeons of Alberta has said that.

Now, I want to turn back to my own experience. There are many Albertans with acute or chronic pain that cannot abstain from opioids. Some high-dose narcotic treatment is essential, particularly in palliative care or if you've got diseases like sickle-cell crisis, osteoporosis, phantom limb pain, vertebral disc disease, fibromyalgia. These are people that need to have opioids, so you can't expect that everybody that's on opioids is going to be abstaining. We've got to come up with some systems with medical supervision and with appropriate documentation by physicians and nurses as well as pharmacists on the use of these medicines.

Basically that's the message that I wanted to get across. I think that Alberta is approaching this in a multipronged way. I've very impressed with the way that our police and other first responders are responding to it. I'm impressed with the way the pharmacists as well as the College of Physicians & Surgeons of Alberta are responding to it. I basically think we need to continue to support that sort of activity and, hopefully, overcome this scourge.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to start off by recognizing the people in our gallery for being here today and thanking you and all of the members that have spoken to this opioid crisis. We've heard many impassioned arguments today, and I want to thank the members for their combined wisdom on this issue.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

Now, earlier today I heard someone refer to this crisis as a war, and I think that's an appropriate term. The impact that this war, this crisis, will continue to have on our society is just going to devastate the lives of so many Albertans, and in many ways it does feel like a war. I think it's up to us as legislators to try to find the concrete and the workable and adaptable solutions to address this crisis. That's why today all of the political parties in opposition gathered together. The Wildrose, the Progressive Conservative Party, the Liberal Party, the Alberta Party: that's why we gathered today, to jointly call on the government to declare a public health emergency to deal with the fentanyl crisis.

This crisis may appear to have exploded on the scene in just the last couple of years, but as is often the case, that's not the truth. It's come to us with a history that's quite complex. The path of opioid abuse and addiction can be traced to the rise of drugs like OxyContin. OxyContin, a slow-releasing pain reliever, became the drug of choice for many when patients and users discovered that it produced a heroin-like rush when crushed and consumed. It was a prescription drug that could be purchased over the counter, and it's left a trail of addicts and pharmacy burglaries and dislocation of society for Canadians to have to deal with.

As society took measures to try to deal with the misuse of OxyContin, desperate addicts looked for other options, and they soon turned to other opioids like fentanyl, a commonly prescribed drug to treat chronic and serious pain. Fentanyl is relatively cheap, it's a powerful drug, it's easy to manufacture, and it's toxic in very small amounts. It's up to 50 times more potent than heroin, I'm told, and a hundred times more potent than morphine. I was surprised, as I've educated myself on this, that two milligrams is enough to kill the average person in less than 15 minutes and that an overdose of fentanyl shuts off the oxygen to the brain and the heart and can kill you in minutes.

Many addicts begin their addiction when they're prescribed fentanyl to address their pain issues, and we've seen an increase from January 1, 2014, to December 31, 2016, that the quarterly opioid dispensations from community pharmacies have increased by 23 per cent to approximately 1,034,000 in the fourth quarter of 2016. We've seen a continued increase.

Carfentanil. Some of you have mentioned it. It's another opioid, 10,000 times more powerful than morphine. It is so potent that an amount the size of a grain of sand can kill a person.

The use of fentanyl and other opioids has grown. It's grown considerably in the last few years, and it's meant that we've had to address and try to deal with this crisis. Last year approximately 2,000 Canadians died as a result of opioid overdoses. In 2015 in Alberta 257 deaths were related to fentanyl. In 2016 in Alberta 343 drug overdose deaths were related to fentanyl. From January to December 2016 there were 149 drug overdose deaths related to fentanyl in Calgary and 109 in Edmonton. Since January 1, 2014, a total of 717 Albertans have died from an apparent drug overdose related to fentanyl. It can be cut into other drugs, like cocaine and alcohol and methamphetamines.

The causes of an opioid addiction are complex, but, then, issues around addictions are generally very complex. Some Albertans are drawn into addiction by being prescribed an opioid like fentanyl by a doctor in order to control their pain. Others fall into a drug addiction as they try to address psychological and social and emotional pain, and that often accompanies mental health issues. Some of the people become addicted as they experiment with other drugs. As a former teacher I've seen that pattern over and over in some of the students that I've taught.

The Calgary Herald reported in an article by Michele Jarvie that the Stoney Nakoda First Nation is facing a prescription addiction crisis. It was reported in that article that addiction rates were skyrocketing as high as 60 per cent among the adult members of the reserve. The Stoney Nakoda First Nation has declared a state of emergency. There were 139 deaths attributed to opiates in a two-year period out of a population of only 6,000 people. It is understood that fentanyl is the number one drug of choice on the reserve.

Regardless of the path to addiction this emergency is placing great stress on our public services: emergency departments, police, ambulance, detox centres, the justice system. Even education and mental health services are having to address the carnage that this public health emergency is creating.

It is for those reasons, for all those statistics that I just finished reading, for all those pressures that are being put on the services that we try to provide to our citizens of Alberta, and for the addicts and the families that are left behind that the Wildrose Party is calling on the government to declare a public health emergency. The Wildrose Party, while calling on the government to declare a public health emergency, has been urging all levels of government to more seriously address the fentanyl crisis. Brian Jean, the leader of the Wildrose Party, has said that the Wildrose believes that all levels of government need to be working collaboratively to combat this crisis head-on. We have already lost too many lives to this deadly drug. And I apologize for using the member's name.

We have asked for funding for addictions programs. Today we are once again asking for the government to enact a public health emergency to allow for greater information sharing and further education campaigns regarding these deadly drugs. The declaration of a public health emergency would provide the government with the tools to more effectively address this crisis. Declaring a public health emergency would increase awareness in the public health care community and the general public. It would provide additional resources to the coroner's office to conduct autopsies. It would help to co-ordinate one unified government response. It would provide real lifetime tracking and geographic breakdowns that would be useful for law enforcement agencies.

British Columbia, which has been ground zero of the fentanyl crisis, has declared a public health emergency. The increasing number of deaths in British Columbia were, quote, unusual and unexpected, according to medical health officer Dr. Perry Kendall and are therefore one of the criteria needed for declaring an emergency under the Public Health Act.

Even a cursory reading of the evidence collected in Alberta thus far would suggest that the number of deaths due to fentanyl would be sufficient reason to call a public health emergency. When questioned on the use of a public health emergency in Alberta to deal with the fentanyl crisis, the Associate Minister of Health said: we just don't feel that it's appropriate when responding to a serious addictions and mental health issue.

In contrast, the Wildrose Party believes that a public health emergency would help to provide timely information on the number of deaths and the circumstances of those deaths, et cetera. Vital information . . .

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Madam Speaker. In my time as a paramedic for well over a decade in this province I've seen all too often the many overdoses, the results of overdoses, whether it's within our street communities, whether it's in rich homes, poor homes. All too often. As we try to personalize this – and I know that often it's said in government: don't get too operational; think high level. But we need to humanize this, and we see some of the human faces in the gallery today of families that have lost loved ones. I want every member in this Chamber to stop what they're doing and listen for a second.

We can all relate to a family that has a 14-year-old child. You may have a 14-year-old son or daughter. It's a Saturday night. Your child comes home at curfew as normal. Nothing is out of the ordinary. You go down 20 minutes later into the basement or the rumpus room to check on your child, and the child is unresponsive. They're no longer breathing. This is not a homeless person or an addict on the street, on the corner, in a back alley. This is in a middle-class home, suburbia in Alberta. By the time the paramedics get there – I know because I was one of those paramedics – the child is no longer breathing, and we have no idea how long the child hasn't been breathing.

That 14-year-old will never get the chance to be a leader like us, to help somebody else with addiction or mental health, or to hug their parents. This is what we're talking about. Yes, we're talking about a public health emergency or a provincial state of emergency. Look, let's face it. Overdoses have been happening in this province for a long time. What has changed?

Well, let's ask the folks in High River. High River flooded over and over and over and over again. At times there were local states of emergency. What did they do? They brought more sandbags. They tried this; they tried that. What changed for them to get a provincial state of emergency? The water overflowed every single sandbag, every solution that had been put forward and drowned the town. And other communities in this province. I'm sure that there have been forest fires in Fort McMurray before that have encroached close to the city. But what changed? The fire consumed most of the town.

What is happening today? This drug is overflowing our communities. That's what has changed. Our perception of it has changed. The way drug dealers operate has changed.

A grain of sand of carfentanil is enough to kill a human being, and if they don't die, it's enough to shut down vital organs and definitely enough to destroy a family. All it takes is a drug dealer because I'm assuming the ones that are making the pills and all the other drugs that kids may be interested in – make no mistake. Each one of you in this House has a loved one. There's a good chance they might try a drug, and if that drug dealer pressed some other drug and a piece of carfentanil wasn't cleaned up, like that 14-year-old, an honest mistake takes their life.

The hon. Member for Calgary-West worked alongside me in downtown Calgary. I can tell you that over time perhaps Conservative governments – as things change and as we evolve, this caucus does support safe injection sites. The hon. Member for Calgary-West supported those initiatives as a police officer. All the other tools that we used and are using now are important. Absolutely.

But you know what? For the families in the gallery, for the family of that lost loved one, there was no Narcan kit for them. The majority of these overdoses are happening outside of our most populated downtown areas. As we heard, they're happening in Grande Prairie. They're happening in suburban parts of our communities, where not every family has a naloxone kit. Naloxone, whether you aerosolize it or inject it, doesn't always save people. Sometimes it's too late.

So when we think about this, calling a public state of emergency, what these families want to hear is not: well, we've tried this, and we're trying that. Quite frankly, they're sick and tired of us blaming one another because, to them, it doesn't bring back their loved ones. They're here today with their bravery and around this province trying to prevent another one. What they want to hear and what a public state of emergency does or a public health emergency does for these people is not to say, "There, there," but "We're fighting for you; we recognize that this drug is overflowing our streets and killing our children and our loved ones."

Now, that's the drug itself. The hon. Member for Calgary-West has brought policing solutions to the government. There are lots of ideas. We can go around and around and around, but if we're going to save lives, we need to put money into mental health. During the floods in High River the provincial state of emergency allowed us to co-ordinate with different agencies and, again, pull money from the treasury to the tune of $5 million to support mental health. Families are breaking apart today because we are not brave enough to address the issues around mental health and addiction, and it should be at the forefront.

We should be teaching kids in our schools about fentanyl and the risk of drug use and abuse and addiction. We should be supporting our educators and our family counsellors and our local leaders and church leaders because this is an issue. The best way to do that, to get people to stand up and pay attention to it, is to co-ordinate all these efforts like we did in Fort McMurray, that got world recognition, like we did in High River, national attention that brought communities together because the government said: this is a priority.

What that state does – and I heard the hon. Associate Minister of Health say: well, in 30 days what are we going to change? I can tell you that it's maybe not a lot for those who are already addicted, but you're going to start the ball rolling with these agencies that you mean business. That initial co-ordination keeps that momentum to do what? To save families.

Now, I was on the phone last night with a constituent, a brave lady with a brave son. Her name is Jacqueline. Her son's name is Jacob. He wrote a paper that spoke about the Charter of Rights and Freedoms for Canadians. It's a plea for his older brother, who is on the streets of Vancouver now because of an addiction and suffering from mental health. They have no avenue in which – a public state of emergency would allow us to have a conversation about that Charter, to maybe open it up for these folks who no longer have the mental capacity but still have the right to go kill themselves.

That's what a state of emergency does. It allows us to open up pieces of legislation that normally might not be opened up, to have a conversation with our federal counterparts to show them that we mean business. Now, I know that everybody in this House truly means business when it comes to fentanyl, so let's show Albertans that we're going to stand up and fight for them by calling this state of emergency. I implore the government.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I really want to say to the Member for Calgary-South East: thank you for your passion; thank you for your service as a first responder. You're a braver man than I for doing what you do. As you were speaking, I was just reflecting as a father of a junior-high-aged daughter and another daughter who is younger but will soon join her sister in junior high and I think about our life, the life that we have at our household. I think: well, my daughters can't possibly be at risk. We love them very much, they're safe at home, they're well fed, they're not abused, they don't see addiction at home, but of course they're at risk. Of course they are. Every single one of our children is at risk, all of our neighbours are at risk, and we as individuals are at risk as well. None of us are immune from this. I think the story that the Member for Calgary-South East told really brings that home.

What also brings that home are the people who have joined us here today, some of whom spoke this morning at our news conference, others who joined our news conference, like the father who lost his daughter just last November to a carfentanil overdose. She was loved. She was supported by her family. She looked like a normal, ordinary teenager. She was a big sister, she was a granddaughter, she was a friend, but she's lost to us because of an accidental carfentanil overdose at age 19.

We were joined this morning also by Rosalind Davis, who is here now, who lost her spouse, Nathan Huggins-Rosenthal, to an accidental fentanyl overdose, which he became addicted to after being prescribed opioids in response to a back injury. But they sought treatment. They had the means to seek private treatment, and Nathan for a time was clean and sober, but he relapsed, which is something I've learned is tragically common. I've come to understand that an addict will relapse up to seven times before getting clean permanently. It's not simply a matter of saying, "Well, just please stop; just quit cold turkey," especially with opioids. It's far more complicated than that.

Nathan and the 19-year-old daughter: it's a common story. It's not just people who are street involved. Every single one of these people and every single one of these lives has their own story. There is no such thing as a typical, quote, opioid addict.

There have been too many deaths in this province, far too many deaths in this province, and there has not been enough co-ordination, not enough sense of urgency from this government to stop this epidemic. I'd ask this minister, who I know to be a compassionate person, to listen to your heart, to not just listen to the technical arguments that you may be hearing from your department. It's important that we use all of the tools at our disposal.

It's important that naloxone is made available, as it has been, but it's nothing more than a Band-Aid. People will die alone. That happens in suburban Alberta, it happens in small-town Alberta, it happens in dense urban areas. Naloxone cannot be the only solution. We need more in-patient treatment for people who finally choose to seek help. We need more outpatient treatment for people who finally seek help and are appropriately able to continue on about their lives and don't require in-patient treatment. We do need supervised consumption sites. That can't be the only answer, but it needs to be part of the solution. We need opiate replacement therapy.

We need to declare a public health emergency. Now, declaring a public health emergency is not just some symbolic act. I quote from the Public Health Act. It allows for the "prompt co-ordination of action . . . required in order to avert or minimize the pandemic." What we're dealing with here is a pandemic. It is an epidemic that is rampaging through not just our streets but our neighbourhoods, our homes, our communities.

Further quoting from the Public Health Act, declaring a public health emergency will also "provide for the distribution of essential health and medical supplies and provide, maintain and co-ordinate the delivery of services." I want to emphasize the importance of that word "co-ordinate." A public health emergency would provide focused leadership, it would provide a sense of urgency, and it would allow for the co-ordination of efforts between departments. Now, I know that various departments of this government have a plan. I know that the Department of Health has a plan, the Department of Justice has a plan, Community and Social Services has a plan, Education has a plan, Indigenous Relations has a plan, but I've seen scarce, if any, evidence of co-ordination within and between those departments of their plans. We need a public health emergency to bring focus to this issue.

Any large organization has challenges working within and between departments. For something like this we cannot have, we cannot afford to have different departments working at cross-purposes. We need to use all of the tools in the tool box. We need to use every tool at our disposal. There's no reason not to. In fact, there are tragic consequences if we don't.

Now, there have been some objections raised by the fact that a public health emergency would expire after only 30 days. That's true, but it does not prevent the minister from renewing that should she decide it is required to be longer. The other question that has been asked is: "Well, when do we know that this public health emergency is over? It's not a typical, obvious, contagious disease, influenza or other, where we would know that it's over." Well, the answer is that it's over when the rate of deaths from opiates – fentanyl, carfentanil, others – drops back to its long-term average. Right now – we've seen the graph – it's just a hockey stick. It goes through the roof. It is literally off the charts. That is an emergency. It is a crisis.

Madam Minister, there's no shame in now declaring a public health emergency. We all would have liked to have seen that done months or even years ago. It should have been done sooner, but it wasn't. But it still can be. It still can be to the benefit of people who are struggling with opiate addictions now, to the benefit of their families, who will not lose those people to opiate addiction. I can assure you that every single member in this House will thank the government for doing so. There will be no we told you so. There will be no gloating. It will be an acceptance that it's the right thing to do. I will be the first to congratulate the government, to praise them publicly, and to thank them for taking this important step. It's not too late, Minister. Please, I urge you to declare a public health emergency.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Madam Speaker. My thoughts and prayers go out to the families who have lost a loved one due to an opioid overdose. My thoughts and prayers also go out to the families who are watching a loved one live with and suffer from an opioid addiction. Just this past Sunday I met with a father and mother of a 16-year-old who just celebrated her 17th birthday in hospital after taking a concoction of a number of illicit opioids. The doctors looking after her care could only guess what drugs she had taken. This young woman is just one of my constituents of Red Deer-North who has been adversely affected by the rise of dangerous drugs here in Alberta as well as across Canada.

Since being elected in 2015, I have met with mothers, fathers, grandparents, aunts and uncles, and siblings of those suffering from opioid addictions as well as business owners and neighbours. Madam Speaker, I heard from my constituents asking that our government take more action to help those suffering from opioid addictions in order to get well and potentially prevent premature deaths – premature deaths – of adults and youth.

Madam Speaker, my community asked for more action, and I am proud to say that our government has listened. As you have already heard, Alberta is a leader in our country in providing timely and accurate data on opioid misuse. The College of Physicians & Surgeons of Alberta has updated prescription guidelines. The college is also aware of the need for more doctors to be able to treat substance abuse, and we are working with them to help bring more treatment options into primary care. Our government worked quickly to make naloxone kits as widely and readily available as possible, an action that has reversed hundreds of potentially fatal overdoses here in Alberta. Opioid replacement therapy is now easier to access, with new clinics opened or opening in Cardston, Grande Prairie, and the central zone. I am proud that our government is working hard regarding opioid addictions in Alberta. My constituency of Red Deer-North has just received additional medical support for 20 adult detox beds as well as five additional youth detox beds.

On behalf of my constituents of Red Deer-North and on behalf of all the constituents in the central zone I thank our government. I thank our government for listening and taking all of these actions. The parents of the young woman who just celebrated her 17th birthday in hospital are grateful for the supports already put in place for their daughter. I'd like to recognize Turning Point in Red Deer as well as Safe Harbour for working with those in our community whose lives are impacted by the serious drug addictions that they have.

Madam Speaker, we know that Albertans that suffer with opioid addictions are all kinds of Albertans from all different walks of life. They are from communities, from suburbs to inner cities. They may be your next-door neighbour, a straight-A student that made a wrong choice. We know there is still more work to do, but our actions are going in the right direction.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Today I rise to speak to the state of emergency in our province that has been caused by opioids. A public health emergency is long overdue and will give the resources needed to our front-line workers to combat this crisis head-on. As a former paramedic and firefighter for a long time I can tell you that there is an emergency here, and as the shadow minister for Health it is my job to educate and to inform and to eventually ask our good Minister of Health and Associate Minister of Health.

Opioid use, misuse, and overdose have risen at exponential levels in the past few years, and as often is the case, the situation did not appear overnight. In fact, Madam Speaker, it has a complex and lengthy history. Opioids are a group of drugs that are used for treating pain. They are derived from opium, which is from the poppy plant. Opioids can go by a variety of names. You can call them narcotics, opioids, opiates. From history's earliest civilizations to the modern day, societies have struggled to find the balance between medicinal properties, that are used to treat pain, and the euphoric effects, that have led to recreational use and misuse. That's the problem that's plagued so many countries, so many societies, and so many governments.

Part of the problem we are seeing now is the creation of designer drugs for pain management. Extended-release OxyContin is twice as potent as oral morphine, and fentanyl is 100 times as potent as that, and carfentanyl is 10,000 times as powerful as that.

Let's take a closer look at some of these designer drugs. Oxycodone was developed in 1917 in Germany as one of several semisynthetic opioids in an attempt to improve on the existing opioids, and it is twice as potent as morphine.

Fentanyl was developed in the 1960s by Paul Janssen, and it entered medical use as a general anaesthetic. It was in the mid-1990s that fentanyl started to be used for its palliative qualities, and it is 100 times stronger than morphine. I remember as a paramedic that when they put fentanyl in our cars, in our trucks, a lot of the guys started to use it because it was known to have less respiratory depression, so it was better for our patients than morphine. We give anywhere between 10 and 50 micrograms, compared to 10 milligrams of morphine.

Then there's this carfentanyl, which is marketed under the trade name Wildnil and is supposed to be a general anaesthetic agent or tranquilizer for large animals. That's right, Madam Speaker. This is literally an elephant tranquilizer. It's 10,000 times more potent than morphine.

All these drugs have legitimate medicinal purposes, and when used appropriately and prescribed by a medical professional for pain management, they do their job.

But part of the reason why these drugs have become so important in our society is due to the exceptionally long wait times for surgeries. As reported in the 2016 Waiting Your Turn report by the Fraser Institute, Albertans are waiting nearly three weeks longer than the national average for treatment, and this is the second worst amongst all provinces outside the Maritimes. The report also demonstrated that in 2016 Albertans were waiting five more weeks than was reasonable between appointments with a specialist and receiving treatment. This, to me, is completely unacceptable. Despite the fact that we're spending almost half of our budget on health care, Albertans are continuing to experience long wait lists and uncertain outcomes when it comes to their health.

This negatively affects all aspects of a person's life. This is true regardless of if we're talking about physical health or mental health, relationships with friends, family, and co-workers. This adds costs that are more than just dollars and cents. Furthermore, these unreasonably long wait times can lead to a decrease in the person's overall health and, in turn, create increased costs on our already taxed health system. What is often ignored is the fact that the stress is passed along to the nurses and to health care staff, who may feel helpless to remedy the situation.

Several studies have shown that the increase in wait times creates worsening symptoms and conditions, long recovery times, and more cases of depression. As pain increases, there is greater dependency on these pain drugs, and that leads to the substance abuse, particularly the opioids like fentanyl and oxycodone. Ultimately, longer wait times have also had an effect on the mortality rates within Canada, with the Fraser Institute publishing that 72 per cent of premature deaths – that is, deaths under the age of 75 – are avoidable either via prevention or treatment.

According to the College of Physicians & Surgeons of Alberta opioid use has increased threefold. In 2012 there were over 500,000 – half a million – prescriptions for opioids for under 200,000 patients. In 2015, a mere three years later, it tripled: 1.7 million prescriptions for just over 500,000 patients. That's a 300 per cent increase in opioids in three years. Now, it's good to see that the College of Physicians & Surgeons and the AMA are trying to make some changes, but we can only hope that those are effective and that they're supported.

This highlights, though, that we need solutions that prevent the overprescription of all drugs, including opioids. We need to move away from a system that is focused on illness and injury to one that is focused on the promotion of early intervention using crossdiscipline teams. We need to have more pain-management programs that include a more holistic approach, incorporating exercise, physiotherapy, and dietitians as well as painkillers. We need to focus on palliative care options that focus on the wide array of treatments that are the options other than drugs.

Part of why this is an issue of such importance is due to the fact that these opioid painkillers are highly addictive. These medications provide users with a sense of pain relief but also that feeling of pleasure and euphoria. As time goes on, patients develop a tolerance to the drug and, therefore, need to increase their dosages to have that same effect. These drugs are so powerful, so addictive that people will do almost anything, which leads to increases in crime.

Furthermore, there is an extremely high risk of experiencing severe withdrawal symptoms from these drugs. Medically, when the drug has been taken regularly over an extended period of time, it has to be gradually withdrawn over a period of time rather than abruptly. It has to be noted that this risk is even higher for people who regularly use these drugs recreationally. The symptoms of opioid withdrawal can last anywhere from a week to a month and even longer. These people go through a lot of suffering. They go through low energy, irritability, anxiety, agitation, panic attacks. They go through nausea, vomiting, diarrhea, insomnia, muscle pain, muscle weakness, and fevers. These withdrawal symptoms end up encouraging many users to use more drugs to fend off these undesirable symptoms.

Our government isn't doing enough to save these citizens from this crisis. It's bad enough that we have that increased drug use when the economy goes down. There are a lot of unemployed people who are running from things, and we have increased crime, more theft because of that same thing. But we can't wholly blame the low economy. We have to also look at what these physicians are doing and how they're treating their patients and make sure that they follow up with their patients.

There has been a 33 per cent increase in the rate of overdose deaths linked to these drugs from 2015 and a dizzying 110 per cent rise from just over two years ago. Calgary saw the lion's share of the death toll with 149 deaths in 2016. Of those 343 deaths 22 were linked to carfentanil. That's the elephant tranquilizer.

There is no doubt in my mind that this is an emergency situation and that we need to have an emergency debate. We need to find solutions for addiction treatment, a focus on the cure and the rehabilitation of these victims. That's exactly why Wildrose released over a year ago a report calling for harsher penalties for trafficking and producing fentanyl and for solutions that help deal with those crises on the front line. A public health emergency is long overdue and will give the resources needed to our front lines to combat this crisis head-on. Please give it the attention that it deserves.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I would like to begin by telling all family members and friends present and all those far beyond these walls who've lost loved ones to fentanyl and all other opioids and beyond that my heart breaks with yours.

My comments, I suppose, Madam Speaker, come from my time in cabinet in wellness and as the chair of the Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission and as the advocate for Indigenous Relations and, to be honest with you, just a fellow Albertan. Because I think my colleagues have said it well, many different angles being represented here, I'll focus for the moment on our friends who are from indigenous communities, all of those individuals. I know from speaking with them personally that fentanyl is a killer that's taken cruel aim at indigenous individuals and communities both on- and off-reserve. It's a terrible thing. Opioids have no respect for culture or age or anything else. I think it's fair to say today – we all agree – that this issue goes far beyond any politics.

Alberta's fentanyl crisis first showed up on reserves in early 2015, and the death toll was simply staggering. Reserve leaders started blowing the whistle on the crisis as far back as 2015. The Blood Tribe was particularly hard hit with 20 deaths in six months, and on one terrible day four people died from an overdose. Now, for the sake of comparison, in a small city in Alberta of maybe 12,000 people that's equal to 20 citizens dying a terrible death in just a few months and 60 others overdosing. That's just horrifying. It's also horrifying that it took 20 deaths and a plan created by doctors and a community before certain government action. The situation had become so dire that the Blood Tribe band took it into its own hands and declared a state of emergency. They did that a long time ago, and AHS assisted by making the antidote available to its band and training 50 members to administer it. The band also launched an addiction crisis line.

Now, two doctors that I've spoken about in this House more than once, the intrepid Esther Tailfeathers and Susan Christenson, who ran a clinic in the Cardston area, mobilized the community and the government to save lives, and save lives they did by convincing the government to supply naloxone and provide reserve members with training to administer it. That's a good thing.

Now, in November of 2015 in question period in this very Chamber I urged the government to use the tragic Blood Tribe experience as a model for other reserves facing desperate circumstances. What did I hear? This. The Justice minister said: yes, this is a true tragedy; we are working with partners, and we've had meetings, and we're committed to looking into ways to make naloxone more available.

Now, when nothing happened to share the successful Blood Tribe framework, which did save lives, I asked the government again to help Albertans on other reserves. And what did I hear? Well, for one, that "fentanyl is one of the most extreme drugs we've seen in our time." The Minister of Health said that. And what were we told? That there's "a four-pronged approach," and not one of those prongs involved re-creating the successful Blood Tribe fentanyl crisis model on other reserves. If that isn't frustrating enough, we could ask this question: did the government take the loss of life seriously? Well, I believe that the government does take this seriously. I would never suggest that anyone in government did not want to try to gain control over a public health crisis. Perhaps, in all fairness, they just didn't know how to go about it.

Here's yet another successful Blood Tribe initiative the government did not jump on to assist other reserves. The Blood Tribe Police Service launched an extremely effective on-reserve crime unit dedicated to gaining control of fentanyl distribution. So when I asked the Justice minister again in this Legislature in question period what she was doing to adapt the Blood Tribe's model to other reserves trying to get a handle on fentanyl abuse and distribution in their areas, Madam Speaker, the response was sad at best. Here it is, right from Hansard.

Well, of course, we have a number of police forces throughout Alberta policing on First Nations. There are a couple of other First Nations that have their own policing forces, but a majority of it is done with the RCMP, so we are working with those partners to ensure that they have access to naloxone and that they have access to all the information necessary going forward to make sure that they can cut off the supply.

That's it, and that's not enough.

Perhaps the government of this day doesn't understand our motivations in opposition. When it comes to a crisis that is killing Albertans in alarming numbers, I would trust that nobody is looking for glory and that we're just offering solutions. So, please, don't dismiss them out of hand. That helps no one. We're trying to help. When I ask a question and other members do, on certain occasions it's actually okay to say: "That might be a good idea. Let's talk about it. Let's do something about it. Let's look into it." But to get political doublespeak and then find out a year and a half later that maybe your government is kind of encouraging partners to work together, that's not just disappointing. Some would call it unconscionable.

The government also ignored advice from the Alberta mental health review to specifically deal with opiate dependency among indigenous peoples on- and off-reserve. After all, the overall rate of emergency visits related to opioids and narcotics is 5 times higher than the rate for non-First Nations, and the opioid dispensation rate is twice what it is for First Nations. Clearly, these communities do need special attention. I hope the minister in charge will look into this.

Now, establishing the Alberta mental health review was a positive step I can give you credit for. Our new Premier did that as one of her first acts. My hat's off to that. It identifies as an immediate priority the creation of an opiate addictions plan for indigenous peoples. Now, the report way back in November of 2015 offered as part of its first recommendations this suggestion: "Engage federal counterparts to increase access to harm reduction tools on reserve." But, Madam Speaker, the province's opioid crisis progress report released in October 2016, just four months ago, indicates that Indigenous Relations only recently facilitated an initial meeting of representatives from AHS, Human Services, Health Canada, and doctors providing services in indigenous communities. That's a full year and a half after the crisis began.

And there's more. According to the same provincial report on November 7, 2016, Alberta Health had started working with the Alberta First Nations Information Governance Centre and Indigenous and Northern Affairs Canada, our federal partners, who have so much responsibility for indigenous peoples. The associate minister tells us that this has been a priority. Well, I think it's fair to say that actions do speak louder than words.

Now, Madam Speaker, I'm outlining this history because it displays that, while perhaps well intentioned, this government needs to look further. It's out of its depth on this, and it does not appear to be taking the epidemic seriously enough. As evidence I note that the NDP will not use the word "crisis," yet everyone else has, from the federal Health minister to the mayor of our largest city to B.C.'s Premier, who declared a public health emergency in the past – let's set the record straight – when her people began dying from fentanyl in alarming numbers.

Now, Madam Speaker, it's time for Alberta to do the same. On behalf of all Albertans and especially as the PC advocate for indigenous peoples I implore this government to declare a public health emergency, and please – please – pay special attention to First Nations, indigenous, Métis, and Inuit Albertans in the process of establishing a co-ordinating body to oversee a desperately needed, fulsome response to the opioid crisis.

Now, in the 30 seconds that I have left, I was hoping to quote an article from the Rocky Mountain Outlook from just four days ago entitled Wesley Band Hosts Meeting to Discuss Community Solutions For Drug Problems. I won't have time to do that. It is worth your time to read. The bottom line: "The short term focus is saving lives."

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Thank you to everyone who travelled here today for this important debate, and thank you to everyone listening in. I thank in particular the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, who has called for a public health emergency in the past and today is calling for an important debate about this tragic trend that is killing Albertans. Of course, the rise in illicit fentanyl in our communities has created a public health crisis here in Alberta and across Canada, just like the minister said earlier. Like with any problem, it's important to understand the scope of the problem.

The Globe and Mail published a very interesting and in-depth piece recently on this very topic called A Killer High: How Canada Got Addicted to Fentanyl, a deadly denial. Very clearly, this detailed piece pointed to the fact that a lack of focus on harm reduction measures contributed to the crisis that we are faced with today. What it found particularly alarming were the many factors that led to widespread loss of life in Canada related to opioid abuse.

The Globe and Mail writers noted that the previous federal Conservative government were said to have spread word that not-for-profit groups would have difficulty getting federal funding if they continued to provide harm reduction services. It was also noted that previous governments attempted to shut down North America's only supervised injection site at the time.

The reason I refer to this history as reported in the Globe and Mail is to emphasize the importance of harm reduction strategies as well as prevention and treatment. We need to learn from this history. Albertans would have benefited from increased access to harm reduction services for many years. Sadly, this is not the first time Albertans are dying because of substance abuse. Show Albertans that we're fighting for them by supporting intervention supports and strategies. These are not free, and these require a commitment of resources.

Earlier the member said that actions speak louder than words. They certainly do, and I'm so proud that we have made naloxone kits available to more first responders than ever before. Remember that. I'm thankful we're finally focusing more resources on harm reduction. I'm thankful that a short-term intervention, naloxone, is widely available. I'm thankful that all of our first responders across Alberta have access.

Better access to opioid replacement therapy and shorter wait times for substance abuse treatment will continue to be vital. These critical services require resources. Offering supervised consumption services is one of the most critical life-saving measures available. This complex problem requires complex answers. These complex answers are not short-term answers but require a commitment to fighting this fight until it's over: prevention, education, treatment, mental health care, awareness, and harm reduction, all the things that we're doing, all of the things that we're focusing on.

I believe the number of opioid-related deaths in 2016 was 343. One life lost to substance abuse is too many. Add to this the staggering number of Albertans who die by suicide, approximately 500 per year, and it's clear that we need a long-term strategy to address a complex and widespread problem. One life lost to mental illness is too many. I hope that we continue to act with the intensity and swiftness that we've recently seen in response to this emergency.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. If you could just remember to please table the Globe and Mail article you referred to tomorrow. Thank you.

The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I have sat this afternoon and heard a lot of my colleagues give some very impassioned speeches about fentanyl and the various forms of fentanyl. There are a lot of sad stories, a lot of distressing facts that come out that come from this fentanyl crisis that we're looking at.

I'd like to make sure, before I get too far into my speech, that people understand that I'm not trying to pin blame on the government. I am trying to bring forward some concerns that I and my caucus mates have got regarding some of the handling of this.

Now, I will start off with that I was elected May 5, 2015. Why is this relevant? It's relevant because I was pretty excited to get into my new role as an MLA, to represent my riding of Bonnyville-Cold Lake. This later came to me meeting with my new caucus mates, and I was given the mandate of the shadow Minister of Justice in June 2015. Why this is, again, important is that when the Leader of the Opposition gave me my mandate, he said that you need to review all of the concerns that are happening within the justice system right now. I'll tell you that one of the clear concerns that came forward was fentanyl. This was early in my mandate, in the early, early days of my mandate.

So we sat down as the Wildrose. We came up with a plan, Safer Communities, Saving Lives: Combatting the Fentanyl Crisis. Now, a lot of people say that it's easy to pile onto the government when it appears that they've mishandled a file or a crisis. But let's look back. This was done by myself and my colleague the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, who was the shadow Minister of Health at the time, on December 18, 2015, so this was about six months after our election. It was important that we were putting in some time here. It took us some time to get out to the stakeholders, to hear what they felt were solutions to this fentanyl crisis.

So we came up with this 10-point plan. What's important here is that a lot of people say that the opposition only criticizes, that that's all they're good for, but that is not a fact. My colleague and I and the staff put a lot of work into this plan. And you know what? There are a lot of things in this plan that have already been implemented today.

Now, I'd like to start off by reading a part of the plan, from the executive summary.

Alberta is at a critical stage in safeguarding our communities and improving the health of our citizens with the rise of illegal fentanyl use in our province. The misuse of fentanyl has long-lasting and devastating impacts on the user, their loved ones, and the community at large.

Improper use of fentanyl just once can [lead to] a deadly impact. Health authorities and police officers have said they have never encountered a drug as deadly as the fast-acting opioid. Fentanyl is reported to be approximately 100 times more potent than morphine and 20 times more so than OxyContin.

Now, as little as a few grains' worth of drug can prove deadly. While the NDP has recently acknowledged that there is a problem, there have been little to no solutions offered. It was December 18, 2015, that this was released. This is something that has been available to the public, and we actually have referenced it a lot.

I would like to go through the different points. But, really fast, I'd like to start off with what it is that we're actually asking for before I go into the 10-point plan. What we are looking for is a public health emergency. This must be declared by the chief medical officer and approved by cabinet, and it includes tools such as increased awareness both within the health care community and the general public. It would provide additional resources to the coroner's office to conduct autopsies, help to co-ordinate one unified government response, and provide real lifetime tracking and geographic breakdowns useful for law enforcement agencies. You've heard that from my colleagues already. That's what we're asking for.

When I read through these points, it's important to remember what it is that the Wildrose has been calling for. The first thing: empowering local police forces and health professionals. That means better reporting. That's how we know people are dying.

Right now it is my understanding that we're doing quarterly updates. We need monthly updates on this. This needs to be implemented now. [interjection] Well, I would say that that is unfortunate to be mentioned.

Now, we've got a state of emergency with the neighbouring province of B.C., so how exactly is it that our neighbouring province sees that their province is at the state where they actually have to call a state of emergency? That means that they've actually had to go further.

What we need to be making sure of is that when we look at where our fentanyl is coming from – it is coming from outside of the province. It is coming from a different country. We are suspecting that much of it is coming from China. We need to make sure – and this goes into the second part of this 10-point plan – that we improve collaboration between provinces, territories, and the federal government so that we have the ability to find out where it's coming from and prevent it from getting into this country in the first place.

The third part is implementing a patch-for-patch system. This has already been done in Ontario, and this is something that we need to consider here.

The fourth part is pushing for further education campaigns. This is important because in the end we need to make sure people understand the risks of fentanyl. Having a debate like this will do that, getting it into the Calgary Herald, the Edmonton Journal, the National Post. These are all good ways of getting it out. But I will tell you that a lot of times it comes down to making sure that it gets also to our education system, medical officers, and shelters because these are the people that are going to end up using it. Now, this is where we also mention a push to bring forward an ability for people to understand that if you are going to abuse fentanyl as a drug, you need to have a naloxone kit nearby.

Now, the fifth part is increased funding for addictions and detox programs within the province. You know, you hear us in the Wildrose always saying that we need to find better ways of being accountable to our taxpayers, so when you hear Wildrose actually calling for funding in this area, you'd think they would take notice.

Number 6: ensure all ambulances and hospitals have adequate supplies of naloxone available, particularly those serving rural and remote areas. Now, it's good to see that the government brought this forward.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Hon. member, just a reminder that you'll need to table that tomorrow as well, please.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by the hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Alberta's big cities have been raising the alarm on fentanyl as an insidious killer of their vulnerable citizens for over 18 months now, fully a year and a half of inadequate action on this issue. Our big cities are the battleground and perhaps the epicentre for the attack we need to launch against this crisis.

I've got some words I want to share with you here. Addiction turns your world upside down. That little kid, that funny sibling, that devoted friend, that loving spouse, that admired, caring parent you remembered has disappeared. Your family is tearing itself apart. You feel helpless. You are looking for hope, but more than that, we need to give people hope, to tell them that they shouldn't give up hope. Hope can be here in our communities, and the time to give Albertans that hope is now, to treat and save the lives of their beloved family members.

Some of these words are taken in part from an inspirational message on the AARC, Alberta Adolescent Recovery Centre, website. But what happens to youth applies to addicts of all ages, and we need to start education and treatment early to save Albertans and, quite frankly, to create hope and a path to truly address this crisis, this emergency we now face across our province.

Anecdotally, I recently visited an alcohol and drug addiction treatment facility in Calgary: 50 beds, a 12-week program which translates into potential treatment for over 200 clients per year. Of their $2.4 million budget, they shared with me that just $39,000 comes from government funding, or the equivalent of a hospital stay for just five of those same clients. This does not factor in the even steeper price emotionally for just one family with the loss of a loved one. Can we do better as legislators, as a province, as Albertans in working within our health care, justice, social services systems? Can we work more effectively with a lean and passionate nonprofit sector? I believe we can.

Now back to those big cities. Calgary was the first big Canadian city to struggle with a spike in use of powerful opioids such as fentanyl, but it did not take long for the deadly drugs to make their way north to Edmonton, an element of civic competition that I think we would all rather avoid. In Calgary 249 people have died since 2014. In Edmonton that figure is 215. Calgary police chief Roger Chaffin, our city's primary defender of public safety, noted on December 28, fully two months ago: it is a crisis; look at the number of deaths; the number of homicides and traffic fatalities don't come anywhere near the deaths associated with these drugs.

Let's look at why our police chief is making this statement. Last year 35 citizens died in fatal vehicle collisions in Calgary while 149 people died of fentanyl-related overdoses. That's almost five times the number of traffic fatalities, and we rightly put a lot of resources into trying to address the carnage on our roads. In Edmonton 109 people died from overdoses related to fentanyl in 2016, sobering numbers indeed. Mayor Nenshi also calls it a public health crisis. He says that we need to try new things, gather evidence, do pilot projects, be innovative, and move quickly. Lives depend on it.

Fentanyl addiction doesn't just kill people. People overdosing on fentanyl and other opioids account for 39 per cent of emergency ward patients. I looked it up: $7,580 for the average stay, where I got my number of the five clients being served. It doesn't take a lot of people fronting up in the acute-care system to tell us that we need to be spending more money on prevention and education.

Because these life-threatening situations must be dealt with urgently, of course, it affects wait times for patients with other illnesses and injuries. Calgary EMS crews responded to 988 calls related to opioids. Edmonton's statistics are similar, with its emergency medical responders handling 812 cases. As we know, a huge cost to municipalities in our health care and justice systems comes with statistics of this magnitude.

Ironically, while I noted that the number of people killed in vehicle collisions doesn't come near to the fentanyl statistics, traffic deaths also involve fentanyl and other toxic opioids. According to police, people who are under the influence of opioids are not just driving under the influence; they are overdosing at the wheel. Think about it. People may even unknowingly ingest a toxic pill. Their body goes into an immediate medical shutdown, and a 2,000-pound missile is now travelling down the road without someone at the controls.

The point is that these people are not just killing themselves; they are killing others. It's called collateral damage, and it could be our loved ones who perish suddenly, tragically, and without warning. Yet this government says that this is not a public crisis or societal emergency. Madam Speaker, I believe it is.

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

The Acting Speaker: A point of order has been called.

Mr. Gottfried: And while I'm talking about the crisis in our largest cities, for every statistic or situation I mention, add Red Deer, Lethbridge, or Fort McMurray . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, a point of order has been called.

Mr. Mason: Would you mind stopping the clock?

The Acting Speaker: Yes. It's stopped. Please go ahead.

Point of Order Factual Accuracy

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. Under 23(h), (i), and (j). Madam Speaker, this is not the first time it's happened. I've let it go a couple of times. The hon. member suggested that the government does not consider this a crisis. That's not true. Even in my introductory remarks supporting the debate I indicated that it was, in fact, a crisis. The government takes it very seriously, and it's not fair of the member to impugn our motives in such a way as to suggest we don't care about this. We have called it a crisis, it is a crisis, and we are dealing appropriately with it.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. member, are you wishing to respond?

Mr. Gottfried: Madam Speaker, I'd be happy to withdraw that if it's offensive. Certainly, I think we've all been addressing this public crisis and societal emergency, and we are obviously addressing that issue today in this House, so thank you. And I withdraw that if it's offensive to you at all.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. We will now start the clock.

Debate Continued

Mr. Gottfried: Okay. Thank you. So we've talked about the other cities and the meltdown of statistics accordingly and the same crisis occurring across other cities across the province. This has to stop, and we have the opportunity here today to do something about this province-wide crisis. This is one place where urban and rural challenges meet head-on, and it must stop.

[The Speaker in the chair]

In every community crime has spiked, and police point to fentanyl and other highly addictive drugs as one of the major culprits. Chief Chaffin also says that when you have powerful addiction rise in a community, crime tends to move with it. With crime comes property offences such as theft. With crime comes assault. It can be very serious assault because addicts are desperate. They don't care about the welfare of others. They only care about finding a way to get their next fix. With crime comes death, homicides as well as overdoses.

In 2015, the year when fentanyl announced its arrival in the city of Calgary, our crime rate rose the highest in Canada, increasing by 29 per cent. To put it in context, these figures are from the crime severity index, which measures the volume and severity of police-reported crime. Prior to 2016 Calgary's crime rate had actually dropped for 11 consecutive years. In 2015 Alberta recorded the largest provincial increase in the country. Its crime rate jumped 18 per cent. Here is a statistic that may surprise a lot of people. As you may expect, the map of the hot spots for overdoses is downtown in both Calgary and Edmonton. In Calgary the east-central areas also had high concentrations, and that includes neighbourhoods that typically are in higher risk and higher crime areas. Again, no surprises.

Mayors of our largest cities have joined 10 of their colleagues from other major Canadian cities to form a national fentanyl task force to look at best practices in combatting opioids. It's good to see our mayors displaying the kind of leadership we need and that we should be delivering from our province and from this Legislature.

Speaking of leadership, we only need to look to the west to see true strong provincial leadership on this front, that we should emulate. British Columbia acted rapidly and effectively by declaring a public health emergency when fentanyl and fentanyl-laced drugs started killing the citizens of Vancouver, its largest city, in increasing numbers. The question is: why not in Alberta; when in Alberta, which experienced a spike in deaths even earlier than British Columbia?

We must not be reluctant followers in this area. We can show Albertans and Canada that we are leaders in caring for our most vulnerable. We may never know if earlier action could have made a difference, but it doesn't mean Alberta can't still act. I believe the time to act is now. It can and should be declared an emergency today in this Legislature, and we need to develop a crossministerial, province-wide approach to dealing with this terrible scourge. Let's all of us right now as responsible legislators in this House do the right thing. Let's act today to save the lives of Albertans.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you. I've spoken to this, Mr. Speaker, so it's a matter of procedure. I know that there's at least one other government member who would like to speak to this life-and-death issue. We have two, possibly three members who would like to speak to it as well. I know that would take us slightly past 6 o'clock, but I beg indulgence, and I would humbly request the unanimous consent of all members of this Assembly that on this occasion we go for a short time past 6 o'clock in order that those who are representing various constituencies in their various roles as advocates would have the chance to speak to this important topic as this is the first and only chance we've had so far. Again, unanimous consent is requested, please.

Thank you.

The Speaker: A motion, I think, has been called for unanimous consent.

Mr. Mason: Are you going to put a time limit?

Mr. Rodney: We just have three or four speakers, so it won't be a long time. How about 6:45? But I'll bet you it's before that. Or 6:30?

Thank you.

The Speaker: So if I heard that correctly, the unanimous consent was to adjourn no later than 6:30. Am I correct?

Mr. Rodney: I'll take that friendly amendment.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is an issue that I have very, very personal experience with in my family. Opioid addiction is very dangerous, and it doesn't just affect the individual in question but their entire family, their friends, and their community. I know that in my life I fully expect to receive that final phone call one day. It won't be the first time I've gotten one of these calls and waited in hospitals and taken care of family through the crisis moments, heard the promises and the pleas from my family member for treatment and then refusal of treatment that was offered. This is something we have dealt with in my family since I was 11, almost the same age as my youngest daughter is now.

I clearly remember the first time that I had to report the overdose to someone. I remember how we spent time in the hospital due to a number of overdoses. I remember the emotions of my family members, the anger, blame, tears, screaming, and recrimination. Remember that at this time my family member wasn't yet an addict, but these events helped set the stage for the future addiction. This has had a powerful effect on the makeup of my family and always will have.

My family is not unique, sir. The long-term effects of opioid addiction, the effects on mental health of children and spouses, never mind the mental health of the person addicted, hospital stays, caregiving, and the worry that never goes away, the fear that accompanies phone calls from that household or the worry when we ask each other if someone has spoken to the individual lately, and everyone says no: I understand that.

I also understand that an individual cannot get help until they are ready to get help. For years I have watched my family member turn down alternative therapies even when offered at no charge. It is chronic pain and mental weariness that won't even allow the thought of abstinence. We continue to hope in my family that this family member will take advantage of opioid replacement therapy someday.

Mr. Speaker, I have also had several of my constituents come in and share with me their personal story of opioid use and their addiction to those very, very dangerous drugs or those family members that are affected around the individual.

Supervised consumption services provide Albertans who use substances with social supports, with medical care, and with the opportunity to take a new path in life. The evidence is overwhelming. Supervised consumption services save lives. Opioid replacement therapy is part of harm reduction, recognizing that not everyone is ready to permanently stop using substances and that relapse for an opioid user can be fatal. They also provide a vital on-ramp for the wraparound services that can change people's lives, and I am proud that our government is supporting these initiatives.

We announced that four months ago, and I am very proud to have been a part of this government that accomplished that first step. Harm reduction recognized that substance abuse is a chronic medical condition and that it is not the result of bad choices or bad character. It is a medical condition that reaches out far past the cities into rural areas, that are greatly in need of support.

We did not grow up in an urban centre. I did not grow up in a family that wasn't privileged. I grew up in a small town in rural Alberta. I grew up where everybody knew who we were, and we knew who they were. This is a problem that has continued in those communities as well as our urban centres, so to say that this is something that we find only in our vulnerable populations is wrong. To say that it is something that we find only in the populations on reserves or in inner cities is wrong. We find it in every community in our country and in our province and in every community in my riding and in every single one of yours.

There is more to do on data tracking and reporting, and the work is under way at all levels of government. It's important to remember that those affected by poverty and trauma and everyone else around them are affected by this as well. My history in nursing has also given me insight into this growing problem in our society with the number of deaths and people that are struggling to get off these very, very dangerous medications. I've witnessed and assisted a number of people suffering from the DT's due to an overdose. I've seen the positive effects of opioid replacement therapy. It can change lives before Albertans get to this crisis point, as can harm reduction.

Mental health professionals are also part of the solution as no one sets out to become an addict, and we cannot take away the substance of addiction without treating the underlying personal issues that created the frame for that addiction, whether it is a case of chronic physical pain or mental anguish. The real opportunity for social support, medical care, and maybe even a new path is with the wrap-around services that are available.

As someone who is very, very personally affected by this issue and has spent too much time at the bedside, I ask everyone in this House to work together to embrace and promote the supports that are available, the programming such as safe injection sites and replacement therapy, the education and law enforcement that are working so hard to make a difference, because they may have to make a difference in my family, and they may someday have to make a difference in yours.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For two years now Staff Sergeant Martin Schiavetta of the Calgary Police Service has been saying, "Police [cannot] arrest their way out of this problem . . . It is a health problem. It is a law enforcement problem. It's a problem for all of society." I agree with this experienced police officer. Fentanyl and the growing problem of opioid abuse is a problem for all of Alberta, and I would bet that Albertans agree with that. If Albertans agree with that statement, then it's incumbent upon us, the Members of this Legislative Assembly, and the government of Alberta to act upon what we can all agree is a provincial crisis.

The death of 717 Albertans from fentanyl-related overdoses in the past three years is unquestionably a public health emergency. Quite frankly, if that death toll and all the repercussions for our communities from the prevalence of opioid abuse do not qualify as a public health emergency, I don't know what else would. Yet this government has repeatedly ignored pleas to declare an emergency and move quickly to put a co-ordinated plan in place to deal with it. Today we're seeing all opposition parties come together to make this plea with one voice. I believe it will finally work.

One of the reasons, I believe, our effort here today will prove successful is that one year ago Alberta was seeing one death a day from fentanyl, and at that time the Health minister was asked about safe injection sites. They were not something that she had been concerned about. But when the federal government recently enacted policies to allow provinces to set up these sites, Alberta made a positive move on that front. It was the same with the nasal spray version of naloxone. When my colleague asked about it in the House last fall, he was loudly derided by the members opposite. Today it is widely available. Of course, there was another colleague's bill, Bill 205, from Calgary-West, which proposed to control the use of pill presses, and the NDP, thankfully, agreed to approve this nation-leading and life-saving legislation.

Now, we're asking the NDP to declare a public health emergency and co-ordinate a crossministerial approach to gain control of opioid abuse in our province. One of the reasons I'm hopeful our government will take this necessary step is that they need only to look at the successful inroads British Columbia made after declaring its own public health emergency. The B.C. declaration resulted in a joint task force of leading health and criminal justice experts to address this crisis on all fronts.

Why has B.C. been so open in declaring an emergency and Alberta has not? It is impossible to say, but perhaps the crux of the problem is this. The Health minister would not even admit we have a crisis until recently. Instead, Alberta, the province where fentanyl first raised its deadly head, has taken a reactive stance and a wait-and-see approach. I cannot tell you what our government has to lose by taking strong action now. I don't know what the rationale is for not doing it. I will confirm that we have seen some positive initiative on the part of this government. The concern is that they have not been proactive.

As the Member for Calgary-West pointed out, B.C. received $10 million worth of federal funding for its opioid crisis after it declared a public health emergency. Wouldn't the extra money alone be worth making the same declaration in this province? I'm sure Ottawa has been waiting for months for Alberta to step up and declare a crisis, and perhaps it is as baffled as we are that the Minister of Health and the Associate Minister of Health and Alberta Health Services keep telling us that a declaration is unnecessary because they already have all the resources they need to combat opioids. If that's the case, why are they not doing more?

I would argue that the declaration is critical to raising public awareness of the dangers of opioids. Whether they're illegal recreational drugs or legal prescription drugs, alerting the public is a critical piece when a province is facing a crisis. However, when you read the province's last urgent opioid response team's report, you can clearly see that public awareness is an afterthought. Education, prevention, and intervention: that is my colleague's mantra about dealing with societal problems. Yes, already naloxone's availability is saving lives, and I credit the government for intervention initiatives, but where are the education and prevention that will help us ensure that people do not need an antidote to save their lives?

Another critical preventative piece that can come into play by declaring an emergency is the ability to track fatalities quicker. The government keeps claiming that it is more important to ensure each death is properly identified as fentanyl related, but tracking deaths quickly in a specific area of a big city or in a rural community alerts our medical and enforcement personnel to new killing drugs on our streets, which, in turn, lets them alert the public and bring all the forces to bear on the problem.

I'm particularly confused about this government's resistance to declaring a public health emergency, especially when they received applause for the way they handled the Fort McMurray fire, which involved the same crossministry approach we are recommending today. There is no question that a similar co-ordinated approach to combating opioid deaths would receive similar appreciation from Albertans, and more importantly, Mr. Speaker, it will save lives.

As I said at the outset, Mr. Speaker, I remain hopeful this government will take the right steps at the right time, and I believe that the right time is now. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very happy to join the conversation this afternoon because, clearly, as everyone in this House has indicated, this is a topic that is very important and one that needs to be addressed by us here in the House. As the Minister of Indigenous Relations, of course, I'm also deeply concerned about this issue as it directly affects the communities that I represent and the communities I deal with.

I know that as I travel the province, I have had many opportunities to speak with chiefs and councils and members of friendship centres and the Métis Nation of Alberta, all of whom express concerns about the need to respond to fentanyl as an issue as we move forward. They, of course, also indicate that fentanyl is simply the latest drug of concern for them and that, as has been previously mentioned by members of the opposition, there have been concerns about drug use over many years, and there are many different drugs that have each taken their turn in time to devastate our communities and destroy families. Each one of them brings us great anxiety and concern here in this House, on both sides of this House. As a result, it is important that we respond to this issue as we respond to the other drugs that are of concern.

I might note that the chiefs and councils often remind me that alcohol still takes many more lives in an average year in their communities than any of the other drugs that may be mentioned, fentanyl and so on. The concern is that while we do want to pay attention to fentanyl as a drug, the responses that we need to employ in this situation are ones that are really systemic and sustained. It's really a structural intervention that they're looking for rather than an immediate response, intervention, to a particular drug. While it is fentanyl today, we know that it will likely be another drug. We've already unfortunately had to deal with the introduction of carfentanil as well, and perhaps next year it'll be another drug. They seem to keep coming from some awful, hellish place in this world.

I think it's really important that as we respond to this crisis, we respond to the fact that we are going to need to have a response in place to all the crises that are yet to come. That means that we need to have processes in place which are about responding to the needs of the community, based on good science. In this case, for example, the doctrine of harm reduction is a very good, strong policy basis on which we should create the responses to the fentanyl crisis and to the other crises which we anticipate. As a result, I think it's very important that we follow up with those things that are not an immediate response, necessarily, to one situation but that will deal with all of the situations forward.

As a result, we have done a number of things that I think are really important, and that includes things like increasing funding for addictions and detox, dramatically increasing the availability of naloxone in this case and other responsive drugs in the future. Of course, we were very happy to support the bill by the MLA for Calgary-West that helped to ban pill presses. These are the kinds of things that are structural and that will actually deal not only with this crisis but with future crises.

Now we are looking at opioid dependency treatment in a variety of places: Cardston, Grande Prairie. I was fortunate enough to go down to Cardston and meet with the city council and subsequently, that afternoon, go to the chief and council of the Blood Tribe and talk to them about the issues and the problems that they're experiencing, learning from those problems so that we can develop new plans. I look forward to the plan of opening a treatment centre as well in Grande Prairie, and of course I'm very much looking forward to the medically supervised injection sites that are being trialed here in Edmonton as they teach us the things we need to understand to reduce stigmatization, to respond in a harm reduction, scientifically based manner, and to set up structures in society that will deal not only with this crisis but with all crises.

As a social worker of many years I want to take a moment to advocate for us to think broader, long term and to develop those processes and practices which will enable us to deal with all of the issues that come forward and the issues that we are still stuck with such as alcohol abuse and other kinds of drug dependencies.

I'd like to thank the House for everyone's comments in this conversation today because I think it's very important that we work together just as we ask the community members, the police, the medical associations, and the street-front agencies to work together. That's the kind of constructive, process-oriented, long-term thinking that I think will help us to deal with this crisis and other crises in the future.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, thank you, and thank you to the members of the Assembly for extending debate time this afternoon. I appreciate the opportunity to address this critically important issue. I thank the family members in the gallery as well for their attendance and, of course, their profound interest in this key issue for us.

I've been listening to the debate very carefully this afternoon, and over the course of the debate I would say that this debate has represented a microcosm of the problem that we have. We have had presentations from various members that have been, you know, very excellent in terms of their own personal experience with this situation. We had the presentation from my colleague the Member for Calgary-South East with regard to being an emergency first responder. We had the very passionate presentation from the Member for Edmonton-Centre talking about the work of AMSISE and harm reduction.

For the record – I will say it here – I support harm reduction measures, including safe consumption sites. This is one of those science-based, clearly demonstrated, evidence-based measures that can be taken for harm reduction.

But I will add to this – and I know that the Health minister has just recently had a meeting in this regard – that if we're going to talk about harm reduction and making investments in prevention in health care, then by the same token, while we're helping people who are in a cycle of addiction, we should also help people, for example, that have diabetes that don't have the money to buy the test strips so they can monitor their blood sugar. We would save our system a great deal of time and funds and would also save a great deal of harm to those individuals as well. We should not restrict our looking at and our examination of harm reduction simply to this one restricted area. Harm reduction has to be looked at in a much broader perspective because preventative medicine is much more effective than reactive medicine, and I think my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, who has considerable experience with regard to some of these issues, will concur with that.

This debate has in fact been a microcosm of the problem that we have, and the problem that we have is that everybody is approaching this same issue from a slightly different angle, from a slightly different perspective, but there is a lack of overall co-ordination in our provincial effort in addressing the problem effectively. That is what this motion is asking for. It is to provide a level of focus. It is to provide a targeted response to this crisis as was mentioned by the Member for Calgary-Elbow. This is our challenge. This is our difficulty.

Included with that, there are some, you know, particularly alarming statistics. I am always hesitant to quote statistics in a debate like this because statistics make it sound like we're reducing these discussions to numbers. I will tell you that this is much, much more important than individual numbers. This is talking about people. This is talking about people's lives and the lives of their families, and it doesn't matter if it's one or 100 or 1,000. Those are important things to look at.

Nonetheless, the statistics that we have from Alberta specifically are alarming. Alberta's statistics, when compared to other provinces, indicate that we have a much higher degree of a problem than just about any other province with the exceptions of British Columbia and Saskatchewan. It's interesting that the three western provinces have by far the highest rates of hospitalization for opioid overdoses compared to any other province and that our rate of emergency room visits for opioid poisonings are 57 per cent higher than the province of Ontario's according to the CIHI report which was just published. These statistics indicate a significant problem that needs to be addressed if we are going to have an overall, wraparound response to the opioid problem.

Has the wider distribution of naloxone kits been helpful? Yes. We won't argue that. But has it been the answer? No. And to pretend that it is the answer is wrong. It's fooling ourselves. Now, I'm not saying that that's what the government is saying, but it is not where we have to stop this discussion.

I'm grateful that my colleague the Member for Calgary-Mountain View mentioned some of the issues with regard to prescription of opioids and not just prescription of opioids but the prescription of benzodiazepines, which is often related to opioid abuse. We have seen an increase in opioid dispensations of 23 per cent over the last three years where we have recorded data in Alberta, and we have this as a long-standing problem. You know, in terms of people who have suffered from a fatal fentanyl overdose, some 60 per cent of the people were prescribed an opioid in the year prior to the incident of the overdose, and also benzodiazepines had been prescribed in the week before or after the opioid was prescribed. This is one of the issues that needs to be discussed with our medical community, and it is something that has become pervasive.

Overall, what all of this means – and the word comes up again and again in this discussion and needs to be addressed – is that all of these efforts, whether it's the efforts that are being made in our indigenous communities, as outlined by the Minister of Indigenous Relations, or whether it's the efforts that are being made as outlined by the Associate Minister of Health, right now are not properly co-ordinated. By declaring a public health emergency, it brings together the clear focus that is required on this issue rather than continuing these earnest, honest but piecemeal efforts at addressing the problem. This problem can only be addressed if it is done in a more co-ordinated manner.

That is what is missing right now, the co-ordination of our efforts and those efforts becoming more co-ordinated with our medical community's, working with the College of Physicians & Surgeons to reduce opioid prescriptions. In the last four years of my veterinary career I had to fill out triplicate prescription forms to prescribe narcotics and controlled substances to my veterinary patients. Now, people might say: well, why would you do that? It's to eliminate the risk of triple prescribing. Triple prescribing, where patients go from one physician to another physician to another physician, can only be detected if there is a monitoring system in place, and that monitoring system has to be beefed up as well because a significant number of people who have suffered from fentanyl overdoses have in fact seen two or more prescribing doctors and received product from them. That's a problem, and that's one of the things that needs to be addressed.

Again, my concern is: I'm not criticizing the efforts that are being made individually, but they are not co-ordinated in any way. If we cannot co-ordinate our efforts, we will continue to have a situation where we have 20 horses hooked up to one cart, all going in separate directions. They're all pulling the cart, but the cart is not moving. We have to harness these horses together and head them off in the same direction, and that harness can be provided by the declaration of a public health emergency. That's why I support the motion of the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, and I urge all members in the Legislature to support this measure for the sake of Albertans and for the sake of those who are vulnerable or who have a situation where they could be vulnerable and where they could suffer from an opioid overdose.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any other members who wish to speak?

Seeing and hearing none, pursuant to the unanimous consent of the Assembly and Standing Order 30(5) the Assembly stands adjourned until tomorrow morning at 10 a.m.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good morning.

Please bow your heads. Let each of us reflect or pray, each in our own way. Let us have confidence in our abilities to make decisions while maintaining respect for those who may oppose those decisions. Never let our actions or our words be disrespectful. Amen.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Government Motions

2. Ms Ganley moved on behalf of Mr. Mason:
Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly resolve into Committee of the Whole, when called, to consider certain bills on the Order Paper.

[Government Motion 2 carried]

3. Ms Ganley moved on behalf of Mr. Mason:
Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly resolve itself into Committee of Supply, when called, to consider supply to be granted to Her Majesty.

[Government Motion 3 carried]

4. Ms Ganley moved on behalf of Mr. Mason:
Be it resolved that the message from Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, the 2016-17 supplementary supply estimates (No. 2) for the general revenue fund, and all matters connected therewith be referred to Committee of Supply.

[Government Motion 4 carried]

5. Ms Ganley moved on behalf of Mr. Mason:
Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 61(2) the Committee of Supply shall be called to consider the 2016-17 supplementary supply estimates (No. 2) for the general revenue fund for six hours: three hours on Wednesday, March 8, 2017, beginning at 3 p.m., and three hours on Thursday, March 9, 2017, beginning at 9 a.m.

[Government Motion 5 carried]

6. Ms Ganley moved on behalf of Mr. Mason:
Be it resolved that the message from Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, the 2017-18 interim supply estimates, and all matters connected therewith be referred to Committee of Supply.

[Government Motion 6 carried]

7. Ms Ganley moved on behalf of Mr. Mason:
Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 61(2) the Committee of Supply shall be called to consider the 2017-18 interim supply estimates for three hours on Tuesday, March 14, 2017, beginning at 3 p.m.

[Government Motion 7 carried]

Amendments to Standing Orders

8. Ms Ganley moved on behalf of Mr. Mason:
 - A. Be it resolved that the standing orders of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta effective April 21, 2016, be amended as follows:
 1. Standing Order 14 is amended by renumbering suborder (1) as (1.1) and by adding the following before suborder (1.1):
Withdrawal and custody of strangers
14(1) For the purposes of this Standing Order, a stranger does not include an infant being cared for by a Member.
 - B. And be it further resolved that the amendment in this motion shall come into force on passage.

The Speaker: Are there any members who wish to speak to the motion? The Member for Calgary-East.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Sorry; I'm a bit out of breath. I was just running from Public Accounts. I just want to speak briefly to this. This is a recommendation that came about as a result of the recommendations of the family-friendly subcommittee of the Members' Services Committee that was charged to look at ways in which we can make our Legislature more family friendly. This is the result of that committee. I just wanted to say that I thought the committee worked really well together. It was an all-party committee, and we worked, you know, co-operatively. We worked on a consensus basis, and this is a recommendation that everyone on the committee agreed was something that we should do. I just would like to take the opportunity to thank all of the members of the family-friendly subcommittee for their work on that subcommittee in allowing this to be something that we can act on.

Now, as many of you know, there have been a few babies in the House already. I think some of us might argue that said babies have been better behaved than members at times. However, these children that have been in the House have been here as the result of work that has been done through the Speaker's office to allow the babies and not as a result of a change in the standing orders. So with this change to the standing orders we are making this a permanent change.

Now, as many of you will also know, it's Westminster parliamentary tradition that no one is allowed on the floor of a House or a Legislature who is not a member. Anyone else is deemed to be a stranger. Now, I've mentioned this to many of my colleagues before, and I want to reiterate it now. I don't think that tradition is ever a good reason to continue to do something if the basis of continuing to do it is tradition alone. So I think that in this sense we are changing tradition in a very positive way for the future of parents and people all over Alberta.

However, in recent years this particular issue has come up again and again in parliaments around the Commonwealth. It's come up here, in the House of Commons in 2012. It came up in Australia recently, and they've had to make changes there. Just in April of 2016 a Slovakian MP was barred from bringing her child onto the floor of the House there because of this rule.

I just want to say that there are a few facts, I think, worth considering, to my mind, in this matter. First of all, elected officials, MLAs, in Alberta don't get parental leave. Regular folks in Alberta are entitled to parental leave; MLAs are not. As a result of that, we sometimes need to bring our children with us to work, and I would encourage folks to do so.

Second, it's quite obvious to me and, I think, anyone who's been around small babies and small infants that the best place for an infant is always in the arms of a parent. That parent could be a male parent or a woman parent or a parent of any gender. It really doesn't matter. Babies like to be snuggled. It's an incredibly crucial time, the first three months of life especially, so to be able to have the opportunity to bond with your baby and still be a sitting member of the House is a huge benefit.

Thirdly, I think this really sends an important signal to Albertans. It sends a signal to Albertans that in this province we believe that you can be both an MLA and a parent. This is one step that we're doing that really makes that clear. It makes it clear to women and men all over the province who have small children that you can still run for public office and you can still be involved. You can still be involved and be a parent. It's something that you can do. I think we want to have members in this House that represent all ages and all stages of Albertan life, so making this change makes that possible.

I think it's also very clear – it's been clear to me – that all of us in this House who are parents struggle. We struggle to do this job, and we struggle to balance our responsibilities as parents with our responsibilities as MLAs. We struggle every time we have to leave our kids at home and come here for four days. We struggle every time we have to bring them to an event on the weekend and they knock down a signed B.B. King guitar, like mine did this weekend. We struggle every time we miss a recital or we miss a soccer game or a school event. So, you know, something small like this is perhaps more . . .

An Hon. Member: Symbolic.

Ms Luff: Symbolic. Thank you.

. . . than something that actually makes a difference, but I think that sometimes these symbolic gestures are important.

I do want to just take this moment to thank all of the people who are not here in this House who make it possible for us to parent and to do our jobs. My partner, who stays at home with my two-year-old and my four-year-old during the week so that I can come do this job; I know the Minister of Status of Women's partner did an amazing job when Patrick was little; the Associate Minister of Health's husband; every single partner, every single grandparent, every single family friend that has helped out when we needed it: I want to take this opportunity to thank all of those people.

What this change is really about at its core is the acceptance that children are part of life and part of society. Being a new parent can be an incredibly isolating experience because it's this thing that happens, that you're not supposed to bring your baby places because it might cry or because it will cause a fuss. But children are part of life, and children should be part of society. We should embrace them at every level of society, and a change like this really makes that possible.

I think it's also appropriate that on this day so close to International Women's Day and given things that are happening in this world, the House embrace what I consider to be a very feminist change. It's a step towards equality, equality in opportunity to be both an elected official and a parent for all genders. I thank my colleagues in the House for accepting this very feminist revision of the standing orders.

I'd just like to take a moment right now to read something that my dear friend Kate wrote on Facebook last night that I think deserves to be on the record. She said:

If feminism is cancer, it is cancer to misogyny, cancer to modern backwards double standards, cancer to discrimination and oppression. Feminism shall invade those practices, shall morph them into equality and humanity, shall multiply rapidly. Let this "feminist cancer" wreak havoc on prejudice and bring about symptoms of . . . respect, fearlessness, merit, opportunity.

This is a great opportunity that we have here today to make history in this change, so I'd like to thank all of the members of the House for supporting it. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to speak to what in some ways is a historic change to the standing orders. As you know, sir, there's nothing that gets me more excited in the morning than the standing orders of this place, so it is a pleasure to be part of the discussion today, this discussion around what is a positive change.

I think you'll probably remember, Mr. Speaker, that quite some time ago I rose in this place to suggest this very committee. At that time members on this side of the House and that side had identified some shifting demographics here inside the Chamber and that perhaps it was time to address some of these very important issues that face families here inside the Chamber as well as right across Alberta. I was pleased to be able to sit on the family-friendly subcommittee. I think that there was some significant work that was done. I think that there was some very positive work that was done. I might add that it was very positive, very good to be able to work in a bipartisan way as this affects so many members of the House.

I might just add that my good friend from Strathmore-Brooks is, I believe, next on the list to be able to bring an infant into the Chamber as we look forward to the arrival of a new bundle of joy just in the next couple of weeks, so there are lots of exciting things that are happening for him and this side of the Chamber when it comes to babies being passed around caucus, et cetera. We look forward to that, and we'll celebrate with him as we've celebrated with many in this House on the birth of new arrivals.

With respect to moving forward and identifying areas where we as members can support each other as parents as well, I think it is critically important that we do those things, not in a way that makes us more important or less important than any other Albertan but that acknowledges it is important that through our public service we are also able to make our families a priority.

Oftentimes, as was mentioned by the Member for Calgary-East, our families do wind up taking a bit of a back seat, so I know that I'm just so grateful for the work of all of our spouses and partners, that provide us the opportunity to serve the public day in and day out. They have an equally great commitment to this Chamber. They have an equally great and sizable commitment to our province to ensure that we all play our particular role in ensuring that we leave our province better. Really, creating a family-friendly environment is just about that. These young babies and children all across our province are the next generation of Alberta and are so critical to the success of this province.

I know that I and members of this side of the House, too, will be pleased to support this motion. I know that we are happy to be able to make some positive steps for all members of the Chamber, and I think that on a go-forward basis, it is really great to be able to see ways that we can engage more people in the political process.

In many respects this committee was about that, not putting barriers in place for those who are in the very critical years of their lives, where they're raising children, but to be able to remove barriers. We should ultimately be trying to remove barriers for all folks. I think that the Member for Calgary-East is correct in her assertions about not placing barriers for people, particularly for women that may like to engage in the political process.

I know that when people from all backgrounds and all genders are engaged in the process, our democracy is strengthened and our Chamber is strengthened and our province is strengthened. I know, Mr. Speaker, that I can tell you that I and members of this caucus want to partake in encouraging people to engage in the process, particularly women.

I also shared last night some significant – significant – disappointment in some individuals that are not in our party but associated with our party that produced some very inappropriate content on the Internet. I certainly reject their comments. Any indication or any comment that would discourage women from wanting to be involved in politics is absolutely unacceptable and in no way, shape, or form reflects my views. I will speak for everyone in our caucus that those comments or statements are not reflected by anyone in our caucus and should be dealt with appropriately.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your time. Thank you to the members opposite for their input into the community and as well, in this particular case, into the committee, and thank you to the members of the third party and the independent members, who also had the opportunity to provide some comments specifically to the motion. I think that it is a positive step for all of us here today.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. I wonder if you as an experienced parent might give some lessons. I'm sure you'd be welcomed by the Member for Strathmore-Brooks. It would be nice to see the Member for Strathmore-Brooks snuggling, with a soothing and soft voice. I'm sure that the House but certainly I will look with anticipation to that.

I think we have application of 29(2)(a) here. Are there any questions or comments to the Opposition House Leader? Okay.

The hon. member of the third party. Please proceed.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I stand in support of the motion, and in the spirit of the member that moved it, who talked about the way that the committee worked very much in a collaborative and co-operative fashion to get here, I will simply say: what she said, what he said.

Mr. Hanson: Not under 29(2)(a) but just while we're on the subject of babies and babies in the House, although I've been sworn to secrecy, I'm going to take this opportunity to say that I'm going to be a grandpa.

Mr. Cooper: Relevance.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I must tell you that it is very, very relevant.

Are there any comments under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Taylor: I was just going to, I guess, comment on what Dave said. On April 27 I'm going to be a grandfather as well for the first time.

The Speaker: Are there any other members who would like to speak to this motion?

[Government Motion 8 carried]

The Speaker: Hon. members, I wonder if I could inquire if someone from Executive Council, the cabinet, would be prepared to introduce this motion.

Amendments to Standing Orders

9. Mr. Schmidt moved on behalf of Mr. Mason:
Be it resolved that Standing Order 52.01(1) be amended in clause (a) by striking out "Human Services" and substituting "Community and Social Services, Children's Services."

The Speaker: Are there members who wish to speak to this matter?

[Government Motion 9 carried]

Ombudsman and Public Interest Commissioner Search Committee

10. Mr. Schmidt moved on behalf of Mr. Mason:
Be it resolved that the Select Special Ombudsman and Public Interest Commissioner Search Committee be authorized to meet during the consideration of the 2017-18 main estimates.

The Speaker: Having heard the motion, anyone wish to speak further to it?

Opportunity to close debate, Mr. Minister?

[Government Motion 10 carried]

Adjournment of Spring Session

12. Mr. Schmidt moved on behalf of Mason:
Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 3(9) the 2017 spring sitting of the Assembly shall stand adjourned upon the Government House Leader advising the Assembly that the business for the sitting is concluded.

[Government Motion 12 carried]

Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Ms Jansen moved, seconded by Ms Miller, that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois Mitchell, CM, AOE, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to members of this Assembly for the opportunity to respond to the Speech from the Throne. It is such an honour to be able to debate on the throne speech. I'd like to thank Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor for her thoughtful and passionate words about our province and for laying the groundwork of this, the Third Session of the 29th Legislature of the province of Alberta.

I'd like to echo some of Her Honour's words that have stayed with me since that speech. "We are one province, one people on a common journey towards a common future." Those words gave me pause for thought. It's not easy to work together on a common future in an often confrontational parliamentary system. It's even harder when some people use the excuse of confrontational politics to justify threats, bullying, and harassment.

That's why, Mr. Speaker, I'm proud to stand before this Chamber and give my support to this year's Speech from the Throne, because while working together towards a common future is a goal that some days seems elusive in this Chamber, we all know, at least, that the values espoused by Her Honour in her speech are worth the effort, and they're worth stating again: openness and inclusiveness, compassion, hard work, and justice. I'm sure that every person in this Chamber will join me today in showing their support for those values.

When we talk about openness, we're celebrating the Alberta we know today, built by people from all over the world, all religions, all creeds. For many of us our parents or our grandparents were the beneficiaries of that openness and came here to build a new home and a new life. We must protect that heritage and those values to ensure that our province continues to grow strong into the future. Inclusiveness of all kinds is the key to the values of this province.

I was thrilled to hear in this year's Speech from the Throne that the government is going to work with people with disabilities to provide timelier, more accessible services. A powerful voice for inclusion and persons with disabilities ally, Leah McRorie, shared her thoughts with me about the throne speech. She said:

I believe the majority of Albertans share my vision . . . for an Inclusive Alberta where all people have equal access and opportunity.

I do not know of another Govt that shares my vision & values. NDP are the 1st & only government to not only hear thousands of [persons with disabilities], but listened to folks and took action.

I found her words very moving. It's satisfying to know that a group of Albertans who traditionally felt overlooked or ignored now feel that they're being heard and respected by government. This world that we live in was made, for the most part, for the able-bodied. For people with disabilities, physical or learning disabilities, there's often a daily struggle to belong in a world that wasn't really built with them in mind. But that's changing, and I'm proud to work with the people who want to make that change.

Of course, inclusiveness is not just about people with disabilities. Creating an inclusive society also means helping those who are excluded from enjoying the basic benefits of our province because of poverty. The Alberta child benefit and enhanced family and employment tax credit have helped nearly 200,000 children in this province to date. These kids now have nutritious food to eat, a warm winter coat, or new books to read, when they didn't before in this province. In the fall families all across Alberta had to dig a bit deeper into their pocketbooks to come up with extra money to pay school fees, but no more. For some families, including families in my constituency, in Calgary-North West, those fees added to a lot of pressure on the family budget. When a child comes from a low-income family, they may be left out of activities that their classmates get to enjoy, noticeably left out, and this can make them feel different in the eyes of their classmates. When kids go off to school – it was the same for me when I was a child, and I can imagine that it's the same now – they just want to fit in, to be accepted by their peers and not singled out for their differences.

Once again I turn to the wonderful Leah McRorie for perspective on this. She shared her personal experience on social media, saying, "I was called to the principal's office b/c my fees were not paid. No fieldtrips 4 me . . . Humiliating!" She went on to tell me about how she got in trouble at school for having unpaid fees and was given a letter to take home. She was afraid and didn't give the letter to her mom. She knew that her mom had no money to give, so she ripped it up, and the next day she skipped school for the first time. She was 10 years old. No child should have to go through that. This government agrees, and I think that's wonderful. We're taking steps to reduce school fees, saving families hundreds, potentially thousands of dollars every year, and that means that kids won't have to feel the pain of being excluded from activities that their friends get to enjoy. They can focus on their school work, making friends, and having fun.

A strong education system, Mr. Speaker, is the key to a strong Alberta. We all want children to fulfill their potential. I know that the parents in Calgary-North West are very thankful that their government continues to provide stable, predictable funding for education. That means that teachers have remained in the classroom; new schools are being built. As laid out in the throne speech, I was so happy to see that classroom education will remain a priority, as will infrastructure. Children can't learn if they don't have a proper space to learn in. They need a school, a classroom that's up to date, that's safe, and that's not overcrowded.

Last year shovels were in the ground at over 100 new school sites. This year thousands of Albertans will be put to work on construction sites across the province as well: new schools, health care centres, roads, and bridges, infrastructure that is critical for Alberta's economic future, a future that is starting to look very bright.

The world-wide collapse in the price of oil left our province reeling, but we are stabilizing. There have been positive signs of economic recovery, but it is going to take a while before Albertans feel it in their daily lives. Until then I want to reassure my constituents, the people of Calgary-North West, that I as your MLA will continue to support you. I'm proud to be part of an inclusive, compassionate government that is truly working to make life better for Albertans. The agenda laid out in the throne speech may seem daunting, but it's one that is so worth while to accomplish because it puts Albertans first.

I along with my government colleagues will continue to work to create good jobs, to make life more affordable, to protect and enhance the public services relied on by everyone who calls this great province their home. I am proud to be an Albertan, Mr. Speaker, proud to be a member of a caring and compassionate government, and proud to work every day for the residents of Calgary-North West.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and members of this Assembly, for this opportunity to respond to the Speech from the Throne. It is such an honour to be able to second the motion to accept Her Majesty's speech. Every day when I step into this House I am humbled by the task before me, that the great constituents of Red Deer-South entrust me to speak for them on matters that are vital to the well-being of their families. I want them to know that I will continually strive to earn that trust.

I'm proud to be a part of a government that is working to make life better for ordinary Albertans. Albertans are worried about covering the basics: paying the mortgage, putting food on the table, and making sure their kids get a good education. I've been there myself, sitting at the kitchen table looking at a pile of bills and wondering how I was going to make ends meet. The agenda laid out in Thursday's throne speech is an ambitious one but one that puts Alberta families first by creating good jobs, making life more affordable, and protecting the public services that families rely on.

These goals reflect the values of my constituents in Red Deer-South. Every fall families across Alberta have to reassess their budgets in order to ensure they have enough money to pay for school fees. This government's plan to reduce school fees will save families hundreds, if not thousands, of dollars. This is money that families in Red Deer-South can now put towards their bills, their mortgage, or put into a savings account.

Red Deer, like a lot of Alberta communities, is feeling the effects of aging infrastructure. The city is now home to over 100,000 people. It's the third-largest city in Alberta, and millions of vehicles pass by every day as people travel between Edmonton and Calgary. I'm so grateful that our government has seen the need to invest in infrastructure, including the Gaetz Avenue-QE II interchange that is currently under construction. This project will not only improve traffic flow in the critical corridor; it will make it safer, too. It has created many good, mortgage-paying jobs.

Another project I'm really pleased with is the Red Deer regional airport runway extension. I stressed to my colleagues the importance of this, and we got it done. Having been already completed, this directly created jobs, and we're already seeing interest in expanded usage of the airport, meaning more jobs are sure to follow.

Last year construction started on hundreds of infrastructure projects across the province: roads, bridges, schools, health care facilities. I was happy to see in the throne speech plans to continue to rebuild and replace aging infrastructure, creating even more construction jobs. I will work with my colleagues to give Red Deer a voice at that table as our city is growing in number and in need. Our city needs new schools. I've heard this first-hand from teachers and educators during my numerous visits to the schools in my area. We need a new courthouse, something I've been working on with the appropriate ministries so that this necessity materializes.

I also need to stress to my constituents: I've heard your concerns about Red Deer regional hospital loud and clear. This government has already met with the hospital many times in recent months to address your concerns, and we will continue to work on making health care in Red Deer world-class quality. Expanding the hospital and the services it provides has always been and continues to be at the top of my priority list.

Red Deer is a growing city. It is also an aging city. Senior care is a priority for residents of Red Deer-South. Seniors helped build this province. They deserve to retire in comfort and dignity. However, seniors can be overlooked. Recently I was shopping at a local Red Deer grocery store when I ran into a senior lady that I know from my days at Safeway. It was her birthday, so I wished her a happy birthday. She smiled and thanked me, and then what she said broke my heart. She told me that I was the only one to wish her a happy birthday. Her family and her friends had all passed on. This is the reality for many seniors in Alberta. It was then I realized I could do something. I teamed up with my wonderful colleague in Red Deer-North to start hosting birthday parties for Red Deer seniors and those in the surrounding areas, a simple thing, really, just cake, entertainment, and good company, but it's something that can make a big difference in the lives of seniors, to know they have not been forgotten, to know that we recognize how important they have been and continue to be in making our communities stronger.

Seniors deserve a government that makes life better for them. I applaud the provincial and federal governments for providing funding for Red Deer senior housing groups in order to pay for much-needed maintenance. Having upgraded fire safety systems, new hot water tanks, and upgraded furnaces will make our seniors safer and improve the quality of their life. I'm pleased that this government will continue to create new long-term care facilities and offer more home care services to allow seniors to stay in their homes and communities. To those of you who fear that your quality of care depends on the state of our economy, you can rest assured that we are on your side. To this government austerity can't be the answer to the pressing question: what's going to happen to vital social services when times get tough?

Low-income families in Red Deer can often feel that their concerns are overlooked also. I want to say to them: I see you, and I hear you, and so does this government. We have been and will continue to be in your corner fighting for you. We are moving towards a minimum wage of $15 per hour, a wage that will mean that low-income workers won't have to go to the food bank in order to feed their children.

This year we will also continue to make progress on our government's commitment to $25-a-day daycare so that more families can access affordable, safe child care, more women can enter the workforce, and we remove a barrier from mothers who want to work but sometimes can't. Raising a family and providing for one shouldn't have to be a choice. We won't let it be. Bit by bit this government will help to eliminate the wage gap and empower women.

I'm also glad to see a pledge in the throne speech to build more affordable housing units so more Albertans will have a roof over their head. Providing access to the most basic of human needs shouldn't be lauded as generous or wasteful but, rather, acknowledged as the simple first steps in building a bigger and better middle class.

No Albertan should have to live on the streets. In October I participated in the homeless count that took place all across the province to show that this government wants to address the issue of homelessness. I want to tell people in Red Deer that if you ever find yourself out in the cold, my office is open to you. If you need to warm up, please come inside and share your experiences with me and my staff. The humanistic aspect of my job is something that I will always be able to make time for. I recently moved my constituency office to a street-front location to make it more accessible for exactly these reasons. An open and accessible office is something I pride myself on, and I hope my constituents take me up on this. Every time I walk into this Chamber, I do it for the benefit of you folks, the hard-working people of Red Deer-South.

We all know that a strong energy sector in Alberta is vital for our province's economic future and Canada's. Last November the federal government approved the Trans Mountain pipeline and line 3, citing our government's climate leadership plan as one of the main reasons the pipelines got the go-ahead. But our government's work isn't done yet. I'm proud that our Premier and ministers continue to make pipelines a priority. Just how big a priority was outlined in Thursday's throne speech. Albertans now know that their government will defend this province and our key industry in court by seeking intervenor status on any legal challenges to the Trans Mountain pipeline.

Alberta's energy industry impacts every corner of this province. It's no different in Red Deer. I will join my voice to those of my hon. colleagues in this Assembly to continue to speak in support of these pipelines. They are critical not just for Albertans but for all Canadians because a strong energy sector in Alberta makes Canada stronger.

There's no doubt that low oil prices have hurt our province. Alberta's economy has taken a beating lately, but as we've seen time and time again, when this province takes a hit, it always shakes it off and keeps its head up. There are already positive signs of recovery: more wells are being drilled, exports reached $8 billion in December, and employment has grown by 18,000 since bottoming out in the summer. While our economy continues to recover, I'm proud to tell my constituents and all Albertans that their government will help them through this downturn and make their lives better.

It looks like we've weathered the eye of the storm in true Albertan fashion. We pushed onwards with our goals and promises. We will continue to reduce costs and bring government spending down while maintaining and protecting the core services – health care, education, and social services – that many Albertans rely on. Steps have already been taken. This government has cut and combined government agencies; frozen salaries for cabinet ministers, MLAs, political staff, and civil services management; and spending has been streamlined. I know that we will continue to work to find further reductions and bring down spending growth at a thoughtful pace.

While it might have been easy to cut services during our tough economic times, you don't turn your back on Albertans when they need it the most. Providing front-line services are some of the most important duties of a government. To wash our hands of these responsibilities would be short sighted, with poor consequences.

We will also be helping families by introducing a consumer bill of rights, further building on consumer protection steps that we took last year to end predatory lending practices and ban door-to-door energy sales.

I'm proud of what our government has accomplished and eager to get back to making this province a more progressive and accessible place for the 4 million people that have the pleasure to call this beautiful province home. I'm proud to go to work every day in service of the people of Red Deer-South, and I'm thankful they trusted me with their vote. This agenda laid out in the throne speech is an ambitious one, but it is one that will put us on the path to a brighter future for all Albertans, including my constituents in Red Deer-South.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to reply to Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor and the throne speech. Myself, my colleagues here, and the good people of Calgary-Foothills: all of us are very pleased to see Her Honour address the issue of building new pipelines to markets. She's right. Alberta is too dependent on selling its energy products to one customer at one discounted price. This must change.

The government of Canada approved the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion over the existing pipeline right-of-way. The line 3 expansion to Wisconsin was also approved to reach the installed capacity of that pipeline. This was done despite the opposition of the NDP in both British Columbia and Manitoba. Pipeline construction brings with it good-paying jobs, including union jobs. I can't believe that the NDP in those two provinces threw their union brothers and sisters under the bus for ideology. I guess they have enough money and enjoy being the permanent opposition in those two provinces.

Speaking of being in permanent opposition, Mr. Speaker, I dare say that this throne speech is a large warning shot across the bow of the British Columbia NDP as it heads to the polls in two months. The hon. Premier is correct. How dare her NDP comrades in British Columbia oppose a pipeline expansion allowing a route that has provided the safe movement of petroleum to Vancouver since 1953. I know Albertans and British Columbians will be relieved that Alberta NDP government ministers, backbenchers, and staffers will not be going to British Columbia to interfere with that province's election that's coming up soon.

I'm also pleased to see that the government is going to work thoughtfully and respectfully with the federal government and business communities and elected officials across Canada on the Energy East pipeline proposal. Canada is home to the third-largest oil reserve in the world. Still, Mr. Speaker, Canada is not energy independent, although we own the third-largest resource. Support for Alberta oil and gas means not just a stronger Alberta but a stronger Canada.

Mr. Speaker, the Energy East pipeline is still not approved, but just the prospect alone is causing global investment decisions to be made. This pipeline alone can displace almost 800,000 barrels per day of foreign oil coming into Canada. The Liberals and the NDP want to leave our bitumen and the conventional oil in the ground and be dependent on foreign dictators. Investment decisions are happening that will one day see Alberta's petroleum products sold all over Europe. Talk about market diversification.

First, let's talk about utilizing about 925,000 barrels of Alberta oil in refineries within Canada and Europe, and that's not counting the United States, our largest trade partner. Irving Oil already operates at 300,000 barrels per day in its refinery, the largest in Canada, at Saint John in New Brunswick. Irving boasts having long-term supply arrangements with the offshore of Newfoundland and Labrador, the North Sea, and Saudi Arabia. I'll come back to Saudi Arabia a little later. Irving recently purchased the Whitegate refinery in County Cork, Ireland. This being the only refinery in Ireland, it has 75,000 barrels per day of capacity and currently sources oil from North Africa and the North Sea, selling gasoline, diesel, and kerosene across Ireland and Europe.

Can you see, Mr. Speaker, that we are on the verge of selling Alberta's synthetic crude? Western Canadians sell it to Ireland and Europe, and that's travelling from New Brunswick in Irving's double-hull tankers. This would not have been possible without the work of our Alberta international offices and the diplomats at Global Affairs Canada, who worked tirelessly to end the proposed European Union's field quality directive.

Alberta could very well soon displace 375,000 barrels per day of Saudi Arabian and North African oil used by Irving Oil. The oil that they currently use is conflict oil, dictator oil, bloody oil, or whatever you want to call it. It's an exciting prospect to think that it could be replaced by free, ethical, and democratic Alberta oil. Their women are not allowed to vote. Women are not allowed to drive automobiles or have the freedom to show their faces.

The Energy East pipeline is just getting started. Then there is the Valero refinery in Lévis, Quebec. Beginning in 1971, it produces 265,000 barrels per day. Then our Suncor's Montreal refinery, built in 1955, has a capacity of 160,000 barrels per day. Coastal Petrochemical operates the Montreal East refinery. Built in 1963, it has a capacity of 70,000 barrels per day. That's another 495,000 barrels per day for Alberta's petroleum products to be moved into the domestic market in addition to Irving Oil refineries' 300,000 barrels. This oil is not coming from places where people are taking up arms against each other and committing atrocities on a regular basis. Need I mention the Burnaby refinery at the end of the Trans Mountain pipeline, which handles 55,000 barrels per day for the B.C. Lower Mainland's use?

Speaking of trade, Mr. Speaker, I did notice Her Honour mention that "additional trade missions will be undertaken this year to key markets across the world, including Japan, India, and China." As you know, I was in India and Japan not even two months ago, at my own expense, and I have reached out and am prepared to sit down with the Minister of Economic Development and Trade and the Premier to brief them on my experience and provide them with insights into the government and business community to better prepare them for the trade promotion that they seek to undertake to those countries.

Alberta has incredible scenery and resources for the staging of motion picture productions. Bollywood produces over a thousand films a year, and there is no reason why Bollywood films cannot be filmed in Alberta.

Seventeen per cent of India's GDP comes from the agriculture sector, and that is valued at over $152 billion. Agrifood alone is valued at $40 billion and expected to grow to $65 billion by 2018 in India. India remains an important player in the global agriculture market as an importer of commodities like edible oils, pulses, lentils, wood, and wood products. Guess what? Alberta produces all of those products, and we need to be selling more into that market. In the last fiscal year India imported about 6 million tonnes of pulses. We have so much opportunity to grow more pulse crops in Alberta. Mr. Speaker, the majority of the Indian population is vegetarian, and they consume lentils and pulses as their main diet regularly, so we have an opportunity to export more of our valued agriproducts. Canadian pension funds and institutions are very bullish on India and have committed about $12 billion over the last 24 years in equity investments.

My former employer Reliance Industries Limited is the largest privately owned company with interests in telecommunications and oil and gas. When I met them, they expressed interest in importing our bitumen from here because their refinery can process the hardest crude in the world. Reliance was the first refiner from India to import about 320,000 barrels of Canadian crude in 2012. After that, there was not much business with them. I used to work at the company, and I was part of the team which built the world's largest refinery, producing 1.4 million barrels per day, on the west coast of India in the province of Gujarat.

While I was in India, I carried your best wishes and compliments and greetings to the Speakers of the Andhra Pradesh and Telangana provinces, and they were quite happy to receive your greetings and gifts. They also sent their greetings and best wishes to all of us here. Thank you for that.

I also met many union ministers. They call their federal ministers union ministers. I happened to meet with India's Housing and Urban Poverty Alleviation minister and India's ministers for Information and Broadcasting and Civil Aviation and their Minister of Science and Technology and Earth Sciences. They have shown lots of interest.

I also happened to meet the Speakers of both Telangana and Andhra Pradesh states. Most of the questions they asked were about how we run the business here and whether there are disruptions in the House. That's the kind of thing that happens in that part of the world. They were quite pleased to actually follow us as a role model in their proceedings in their Legislatures.

But one thing I was excited about, Mr. Speaker, is that I happened to visit my native place, where I was born. All my relations send their greetings and best wishes to all Albertans and to all of us here. I happened to meet their Premier, who's a very, very dynamic leader. He's building a new capital in Amaravati, a brand new capital. It's a greenfield capital. He said that there will be lots of opportunities for Albertan and Canadian businesses, so I'm going to meet with our economic development minister and update him on the opportunities there.

I also met numerous cabinet ministers from the Premier's cabinet and neighbouring province in Telangana as well. They have shown lots of interest. With Mr. Trump as President of the United States there are lots of inquiries from students in India. They used to go to the U.S. before, and they're looking at Alberta and Canada for opportunities in our universities here. So I'm planning to meet with the presidents of the U of A and the U of C and update them on the opportunities. If I get time to meet with our Minister of Advanced Education, I'll be happy to brief him, too, on the opportunities.

Mr. Speaker, on my way home I stopped in Japan, the world's third-largest economy. It's interesting that I found Alberta pork. It was displayed on grocery store shelves, very proudly, there. With Abenomics happening there, there is cheap Japanese money that overtook Chinese direct investment into Canada in 2015. It used to be China that was high in the trade between Asian countries and Canada, but now Japan overtook that.

AltaGas LPG in Alberta here have received approval to build a liquefied propane export facility on Ridley Island near Prince Rupert to ship Alberta's surplus propane for use in Japan. That's a good opportunity for exporting LPG, for using Alberta's surplus gas – convert that into LPG and ship it to Japan.

Mr. Speaker, it is through trade and selling quality Alberta products into these emerging markets that we will diversify the economy. That way we can build on our strengths in the energy sector as well as diversify in sectors like agriculture, forestry, tourism, and even producing Bollywood movies in Canada and in Alberta, particularly.

The world is at Alberta's doorstep, Mr. Speaker. [Mr. Panda's speaking time expired] Sorry. I ran out of time.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. I hope you enjoyed holiday time as part of that. It seems to me you were doing a lot of working.

Under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Orr: I really appreciated your comments and your thoughts and your experiences. I just wonder if you would like to sort of continue, any other things you'd like to add to that, please.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Panda: Thank you so much. As I said, Mr. Speaker, the world is at Alberta's doorstep. I know how scary it can be to take that first step onto the plane or ship and venture to a foreign land, but we need to make that step. Our airports have grown, and airlines keep adding new offerings to new destinations. Entrepreneurs are now taking advantage of dedicated air cargo to help move products made right here in Alberta to Shanghai. It's a direct, nonstop flight to China. If not for the Air China cargo at the Edmonton International Airport, pump manufacturers in the Nisku industrial park would be shut down due to the recession, but because of the direct cargo access, they can ship to buyers around the world and keep people employed here in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I thank you for this opportunity to speak and reply to the Speech from the Throne. There is much more potential in Alberta than this government has ever recognized, and for everyone's sake I hope we can unleash much more of it to get out of this recession in Alberta.

Also, Mr. Speaker, you know, I visited the Canadian consulate in Mumbai and the Canadian High Commission in New Delhi and met with the Alberta tradespeople, and I did the same thing in Tokyo. I met with the Canadian trade commissioner and his staff and Alberta's managing director there. They're all doing a great job. They need a little bit more encouragement on finding ways to diversify the markets. That needs political leadership. This government can actually do much more.

I recently found the India itinerary of the agriculture minister. I felt it was too light, and the stakeholders he was meeting were not the best return for the money and time he spent there. He could consult with his opposition critics, whichever ministry is travelling. We are here to help and collaborate. That's the job of any elected official here, to make sure that we advance the cause of Alberta in the international market because we are in a recession. We are all in this together, and we have to find ways to get out of these economic difficulties we're in.

On behalf of the Wildrose and all my colleagues we are here to help the government bring in good policies that will improve Alberta's economic conditions. With that, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a) are there any other questions or comments to the hon. member?

Seeing and hearing none, the hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Mr. Speaker, M. le Président, I would be tempted to talk about my recent travels overseas, but I think I'm going to limit my response to the throne speech this morning. First of all, I would like to thank the Lieutenant Governor, the Right Hon. Lois Mitchell, for her speech outlining the government's agenda for the session of the 29th Legislative Assembly. I would also like to thank her for her remarks reminding everyone of the 150th birthday of Canada, that we are going to be celebrating in 2017. I liked the explanation as to why she was wearing the special purple robe and the significance. As someone who became a Canadian citizen on Canada's 110th birthday, I recognize the significance of this birthday and the privilege of calling Canada my home and the honour of serving Alberta as an MLA.

In the Speech from the Throne Her Honour reminded all Albertans that we are an open and inclusive society built on enduring values: compassion, hard work, and justice. Albertans come from every part of the globe. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to be a government MLA with my colleagues that truly represent a diversity of backgrounds of Albertans. This is important to not only myself but also to many Albertans. The reason I became a Canadian citizen was because Canada is an open and inclusive society where everyone has the opportunity to reach for their dreams. No one is excluded. It is important to remind oneself often how easy it is to exclude people and how easy it is to perceive others as different, as a threat, or as not welcome.

During my maiden speech I mentioned that as a daughter of a French Jew I have lived all of my life with the consequences of what happened to his family and friends. This should not be happening to our Muslim neighbours or the LGBTQ-plus community. I am proud of a resident of Strathcona county who after the massacre in the mosque in Quebec invited community residents to write messages of love, peace, and welcome to our Muslim neighbours who are building a mosque in my riding.

One of the first actions of community building I did when I became an MLA for Sherwood Park was to form the Strathcona diversity committee. This committee is comprised of strong, passionate residents from a wide range of faiths, ethnic backgrounds, ages, and interests. This committee has shown incredible leadership. Members have taken the initiative to promote diversity through hosting events, writing articles for local newspapers, and spreading the message of unity and diversity through the daily actions in their lives. This committee hosted a blanket exercise led by youth, and one of these youths organized a Christmas potluck for the LGBTQ-plus youth in the community. These are, I believe, common values in Alberta, and it was an honour to invite two members of this committee to witness the reading of the throne speech.

As stated in the Speech from the Throne, "the Alberta government has signed new relationship agreements with Treaty 8 and the Métis Nation of Alberta" and is continuing to pursue other agreements. An ongoing issue for our First Nations communities is the lack of clean drinking water, which is deplorable. I know the challenge of access to clean water for drinking, washing, cooking, and daily activities. It means the constant search for water for infant formula, washing clothes, and the huge expense to households. In light of our government's commitment to the principles of the United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples I am happy that addressing the critical need for access to clean drinking water on-reserve is a priority.

Mr. Speaker, the leadership the government is showing in terms of relationships with First Nations has inspired municipalities, schools, and other institutions to model the government's leadership and acknowledge the treaty lands they are located in. I am delighted that my own municipality of Strathcona county is starting a process to make such a statement at the start of council meetings.

Mr. Speaker, it is difficult not to cheer for the work being done by the government to advocate for the building of pipelines to get our oil to tidewater. This was achieved because of the clear vision of the government to work with diverse sectors to demonstrate how a strong economy and a clean environment can and must go hand in hand. As my riding is part of the Industrial Heartland, I often meet with oil and gas executives and tradespeople. They appreciate the work done by the Premier and her ministers to promote the need for pipelines and market for oil. They also appreciate the guidelines around emissions and clear environmental standards. The Kinder Morgan pipeline will be starting in Sherwood Park. It will provide employment for many in my community and throughout Alberta. I will actually be able to watch the pipeline construction from my constituency office, and I look forward to it being constructed.

In late 2016 the Minister of Economic Development and Trade and the Minister of Energy announced the first grants for the petrochemical diversification program. The first grants were awarded to companies in the Industrial Heartland. This was great news not only for constituents of mine but for construction and oil and gas workers throughout the region. The plant site will be built, adding value to our energy resources, and will be producing the chemicals needed to produce plastics that are used all over the world. More grants will be announced later, when the Energy Diversification Advisory Committee makes its recommendation on how to find ways to get more value and more jobs from our energy resources.

Mr. Speaker, over the past year the government has made great headway in showing its commitment to improving Alberta's environmental reputation as part of our highly effective and realistic economic diversification plan: renewable energy businesses, retraining for workers, solar installation companies, geothermal and wind energy businesses as well as the creation of several boards and foundations to support the work of this growing sector. In Sherwood Park we have formed the Strathcona county environmental committee so that we can identify local expertise and promote awareness of this wide-ranging and quickly growing renewable energy sector in our county.

The government has recently completed the Anthony Henday ring road to the relief and delight of not only my constituents but everyone who works and lives in the capital region suburbs. More infrastructure projects are being planned to make up the infrastructure deficit inherited from previous governments. It is especially important that school construction keeps pace with enrolment projections, and I look forward to seeing the completion of schools announced for the Elk Island public and Catholic boards.

The recent announcement of renovation funding for social housing and seniors' projects was important in ensuring that the existing stock of housing is maintained and remains suitable for habitation. I am delighted that in the projects funded the Robin Hood Association will be able to renovate some of their group homes and the Strathcona Shelter Society will be able to make the much-needed repairs to A Safe Place, the shelter for women and children. These infrastructure programs are keeping our skilled workforce employed in Canada and providing oil and gas companies with alternative projects.

Now, Mr. Speaker, school fees. After hearing about the promise in the throne speech of a reduction in school fees and the tabling of Bill 1, An Act to Reduce School Fees, a constituent contacted me to say: thank you for the reduction in school fees. This constituent is a single mom with three teenagers. This woman's income is high enough that she doesn't qualify for government subsidies or credits. Her family income provides stability but no frills. Last year the cost of instructional fees and transportation for her kids' designated school was close to $2,000. She is extremely grateful for the savings she will experience next school year. This savings can now be added to her children's education savings, which will continue to benefit the family financially as time goes on. This is a direct increase in the quality of life for this family, and it will make these kids' futures easier to navigate.

I can identify with this constituent. When my children first started school, we lived on a limited income. I remember the challenges of budgeting for school fees and the embarrassment of asking for a fee waiver, letting the principal know that I was not supportive of an expensive field trip because my family's budget had no room for it. No child or family should be in the position of struggling to pay for fees in our public school system. On behalf of this constituent and, I know, many other parents I would like to thank the Premier and the Minister of Education for this step in ensuring that all children in our public school system are not embarrassed about their family's financial situation. This government is truly making life better and more affordable for Albertans.

In the throne speech Albertans were reminded of the natural beauty that is part of the wealth we have all inherited and that that natural inheritance must be protected and passed on for future generations to enjoy. As an MLA I am privileged to visit different parts of the province and meet individuals and elected officials who are taking the protection of our natural heritage seriously. Some of my favourite examples are the sasquatch project in Clearwater county; the North Saskatchewan Watershed Alliance and their wonderful, informative book; and RiverWatch, a group that focuses on providing students an opportunity to learn about water and its conservation.

Mr. Speaker, a couple of weeks ago I attended a conference of lay and ordained leaders in Christian churches who gathered to talk about creation care. This gathering included farmers, who saw the results of climate change yearly; theologians, who understood the message of the Bible as humans called to be good stewards of the earth; and members of the green church network, who work with churches to green their buildings and build environmental sustainability programs, including energy efficiency.

The Canadian Foodgrains Bank is an institution heavily supported by Albertan farmers and started by church groups. This organization has a climate change fund. Their brochure states: each of us has a role to play in addressing climate change. Fortunately, more Canadians today are recognizing the frightful consequence of climate change and their role in generating the greenhouse gas emissions that contribute to it. The Canadian Foodgrains Bank brochure encourages individuals to reduce their emissions and to contribute to the climate change fund by calculating their greenhouse gas emission and donating it to the fund. So when I hear the opposition remarks about how the impact of humans on the Earth is negligible and that there is no acceptance of the work that the government is doing on renewable energy and energy efficiency, I would like to encourage my colleagues in the opposition to pay more attention to what these community leaders have to say.

I am delighted that the new mosque in Sherwood Park has made environmental sustainability one of the core pillars for their new building. The government's energy efficiency agency programs will be helping individuals and congregations to explore how they can save money and increase energy efficiency.

But, Mr. Speaker, it is not only faith communities that will benefit from the energy efficiency agency programs. There are currently about 10 groups in Alberta exploring the development of community solar energy projects that will provide electricity for communities, members of co-operatives, and community associations. These groups can be found all over Alberta and are made up of a wide range of individuals who are committed to using renewable energy.

Mr. Speaker, the throne speech is dedicated to making life better for Alberta families, ensuring that Albertans' health care and educational needs are met and continuing to develop good jobs for Albertans.

Le discours du Trône est dédié à la vie plus facile et meilleure pour les familles Albertaines: accès aux soins de santé, aux écoles et institutions d'études supérieures, et à des emplois bien payés. That's the translation of the sentence I just said in English.

Mr. Speaker, as an Albertan I am proud of the government's work towards creating a strong, diversified economy that will see Alberta through the ups and downs of the resource industry and that will make life better for Albertans for generations to come.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any questions or comments under 29(2)(a) for the hon. member?

Mr. Rodney: Yes, sir. With respect, just a quick question for the hon. member. I'm just curious. Can you tell us who it was in opposition, any of the parties, who said what you said that they said about climate change, someone here that said on some occasion that they don't think climate change is related to human activity? Who said it and where? What are the details? Can you quote Hansard or any other document, please?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm grateful today to have the opportunity to rise and give my response to the Speech from the Throne. I'm grateful to be an Albertan, and I'm grateful to represent the good people of Cypress-Medicine Hat.

I want to start by complimenting the government on the 25 per cent reduction in school fees. I'm absolutely proud of the fact that in my two campaigns as a Wildrose candidate, in 2012 and 2015, we absolutely realized, Mr. Speaker, that these mandatory fees were a huge hardship on Alberta families, got in the way of the equality and the direction that was best for our education system. Of course, in both campaigns we campaigned on a hundred per cent eliminating these mandatory school fees. If memory serves me right, I believe the government actually campaigned on a 50 per cent reduction, so 25 per cent is good, sort of a failure, sort of not measuring up to where they set their initial goal. I'm wondering the possible reasons for that, and maybe I'll touch on that as we go. But hats off to the government. You're headed in the right direction to making life more affordable for Alberta families, to making it so that our children have more opportunities. So thank you for that.

I want to put the next series of my comments on what I've heard several times in the last several months in Alberta. I bump into investors who say: we were going to invest in Alberta, but we decided to go to Saskatchewan instead. I heard of a company that is putting hundreds of millions, billions, into the petrochemical company in the Gulf states at the same time as they reviewed going into Alberta and decided not to because of the political climate. Whether it's the high per capita spending started by the last government and drastically continued by this one, whether it's the high taxation, whether it's the carbon tax, it's costing us all – it's costing us all – jobs, opportunities, investments, costing in taxes that we can put to worth or costing individual Albertans and individual companies the opportunity to be even more successful than we know the good Alberta companies can be.

I always like to try to put myself in the shoes of my constituents, so I want to start with this point in this way. I had an elderly gentleman come to my office and show me his utility bill, how it was up approximately $266, how large parts of that seemed to relate to the carbon tax, tears in his eyes, how it meant that he had to miss a trip somewhere with his family.

Later that day I had a younger Albertan, a friend of mine, come in, who two years ago in the oil and gas industry made $120,000. Mr. Speaker, he had just accepted a job for $1,800 a month. I absolutely can't imagine what my friend and his family are going to have to go through to make that happen.

My first point is a small one, but for some reason it still bothers me. This happened on the day that I got the notice that we were going to have the throne speech on Thursday. I still don't understand that. Of the 87 of us, there are 50 or 60 of us that the taxpayer pays for us to come in and out of the city. It started at 3 o'clock on a Thursday; we were done at 4:30 on a Thursday. At what point do we start caring about taking money from Albertans? At what point do we start caring about value for taxes? I don't know. Cabinet, I'd ask you to consider that each and every time. An Albertan somewhere has to get out of bed, an Albertan somewhere has to take a risky investment decision so that we can be here. Please don't waste their money.

You know, I've heard the other side talk about how this throne speech is a way to enhance quality of life and government programs. So much of it, to me, is an attack on families, communities, and charities. I want to start with what I've been told is the biggest per capita deficit in Canadian history since World War II. The biggest per capita deficit. It's almost $11 billion just to keep the lights on, for operating. If we add the $7 billion the government says that they want to spend on infrastructure, that's an $18 billion deficit. With 4.1 million Albertans, Mr. Speaker, it will take years to dig out of this hole.

Mr. Nixon: Decades.

Mr. Barnes: Yeah, exactly. Decades.

You know, I understand that this year alone it's $714 million of interest. So while our government, our cabinet doesn't look for efficiencies, let me tell you what that $714 million could have bought instead, Mr. Speaker. That's the construction of about 24 schools. That is some side of 5,950 nurses or teachers, annually, never mind the social programs, never mind letting Albertans keep their own money so that they can go to support restaurants, so that they can go and buy clothes, so that they can travel to Cypress Hills or Banff or Jasper, so that they can truly make their own decisions to make our economy strong. And then I think: well, where does this interest go? Who collects this interest? Not too much of it is ordinary, everyday Albertans, those two gentlemen that I talked about that were in my office. No. The people that collect interest are the rich. Non-Canadians own a lot of our provincial government debt, I'm sure. Big corporations, no doubt, own a lot of our debt.

So $714 million taken from the pockets of hard-working Albertans . . .

Mr. Hanson: Just this year.

Mr. Barnes: . . . just this year. You're absolutely right. Just this year, and escalating, costing our children, our seniors, our communities, our charity services, and paying the rich of the world. It's not a philosophy I subscribe to. It's not something I believe in. It's not something I would do.

You know, then I want to talk a little bit about the carbon tax. A lot of Albertans were hopeful that this new government would be different than the last government, who after 44 years maybe had a certain way of doing things, who maybe was a bit hard to consult. But the Premier came to Medicine Hat for the first time about a month ago, and she was asked a question about why it took so long to come to Medicine Hat and if that was a problem. If I heard the answer right, it was: no; it was okay because her ministers had been there, she'd heard some consulting, and Cypress-Medicine Hatters and Medicine Hatters were happy with what she was doing. Sorry; but I thought: are you kidding me?

First of all, Minister of Labour and minister responsible for democratic renewal, thank you for coming to Cypress-Medicine Hat on your trip. But I clearly heard, as you did when you met with all of our small-business people, when you met with our job creators, that they were absolutely opposed to how fast the minimum wage had gone up. They want to pay their employees well. I think they all pay them more than minimum wage. But the overall theme that I kept hearing was: "It took 15 years for it to go from $5 to $10, and now in three years you're going to go from $10 to $15. How in the world are we going to adjust to that? How are we going to adjust to that without some labour changes, without some price increases that we may or may not be able to pass on." That's what I heard.

Same on the carbon tax. At least 70 to 80 per cent of Cypress-Medicine Hatters that I talked to are absolutely opposed to this and opposed to it for a number of reasons. I was at an ag conference the other day where the speaker said that only four-tenths of 1 per cent of the world has a carbon tax – four-tenths of 1 per cent of the world – and here we are in one of the coldest parts of the world, one of the most remote parts of the world, where transportation and travel are not an option. We're not given recognition for our forests, our greenhouses that regrow and replant and refurbish, so much of those carbon capture trees. We're not giving great recognition to our ranchers. I think it's $13 billion I've heard. The value of carbon sequestration in our grasslands and our ranches is worth $13 billion a year, so compare that to the $5 billion you're taking out of the economy annually. Guys, guys, we're already there.

That's before we talk about how this carbon tax, because everything is transported so much in Alberta, is going to be compounded every step of the way. It's going to be so inflationary. If a good has to move three or four times before it's finally completed, carbon tax will be added every step of the way. The inflation will be phenomenal, making it very, very hard for our families, our seniors to afford this.

Then carbon leakage. I'm told about the plants that aren't looking at Alberta, the plants that won't expand, the plants that are looking to jurisdictions without a carbon tax because it will save them tens of millions of dollars, and I think: "Oh, my goodness. Not only was this the worst timing possible for something like this, this will be a wealth destroyer. This will be a job destroyer." As the Premier to the east of us has pointed out so capably, western industries are structured more and they're more sector-specific based on carbon. How is a federal tax going to pass on any level of equity and fairness?

I want to take a second in the time I have to talk about Cypress-Medicine Hat. We have a lot of good things going. Our people are industrious, our people are strong and entrepreneurial, and our people are hoping to take advantage of the fact that we have the most days of sunlight in all of Canada. We have some of the best winds in all of Canada. They are looking for the opportunity to be included. Like so many other parts of the province we're often thought of as the forgotten corner. Possibly when it took the Premier two years to come and see us, that was reinforced, but I think that's a small thing, actually.

For years – for years – the southeastern part of Alberta was the leader in providing wealth to the Alberta treasury through the royalties on natural gas, through the Suffield military base, where Alberta Energy started and EnCana and Cenovus grew out of it. That's not the case anymore, colleagues. The price of gas is low. Unemployment is high. My goodness, it's hard to go a day without talking to somebody who hasn't worked for two years. The good news the last little while is that it sounds like 20 or 30 per cent of them are back to work. They used to work at $40 or $45 an hour, and now they're telling me two things. They're now working for between $20 and $25 an hour, and they're working in Kindersley or Estevan, Saskatchewan.

So don't forget us. I mean, we're independent, we're proud. We have a strong petrochemical industry, Methanex, Canadian Fertilizers. We have a Goodyear tire plant. A lot of us were disappointed when the petrochemical money wasn't brought our way. If we're going to transfer taxation and people's hard-earned money around, please don't forget a part of the province that might need it the most. I do know that we've talked lots about the trade corridor and opening the 24-hour border at Wild Horse for our connection to Montana. Again, that's an important thing. I do know that the Minister of Economic Development and Trade is on it, so thank you for that. But please, please don't forget us.

I want to talk a little bit about pipelines before I close. I'm disappointed to see that once again political propaganda is getting in the way of facts for the NDP.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any – the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: I'd like to hear a little more from the hon. member in regard to pipelines. I was quite interested in where he was going there.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you to my colleague. There's a section in this throne speech entitled Building New Pipelines in which the speech claims: "Making life better starts with coming to terms with an economic reality that past governments failed to address. Alberta is too dependent on selling its energy products to one customer." And then it goes on.

This line is problematic, Mr. Speaker, for a few reasons. It's not true that previous governments failed to address market access. Of course, with a change in government in the States, we're on the verge of gaining Keystone XL, an expansion that will see an increase of our commodity to that one customer, but this will benefit Alberta's economy. It will benefit the Americans as well. In a show of working together and in a show of getting our asset to market, I'm grateful for that.

Previous Conservative federal governments had built pipelines, and I wonder why it's so hard for this government to acknowledge it. You guys know that they exist. A lot of you were there protesting when they were being built. You know, the Harper government built four major pipelines. It was responsible for brand new pipelines like Keystone phase 1 from Hardisty, Alberta, to Roxana, Illinois. This was built in June 2010. Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Clipper, Enbridge line 67, was built in 2010. It was also responsible for major pipeline expansions like the Kinder Morgan anchor loop, which was expanding an already existing Trans Mountain pipeline, completed in 2008. The Enbridge line 9 reversal was completed in November 2012.

You know, guys, I'm so cheering for you and for Alberta and for all of our good industries to get the two pipelines. There are many, many conditions that need to be met, and I hope we get there. Albertans need this. We especially need access to the west coast. The truth of the matter is that the federal Conservative government got four lines done while we were stalled on Keystone. I think the Americans built more pipelines in America than the entire length of the Keystone would have been. So I guess the truth and the reality need to be discussed.

I want to talk a little bit about the idea of social licence. You know, if social licence was real, we have our carbon tax, so where's the Northern Gateway approval? Where's the Energy East approval?

Mr. Bilous: Working on it.

Mr. Barnes: I hope you get it.

You know, Energy East, I understand, is like 15,000 construction jobs, 3,500 annual jobs, and it's entirely, entirely in Canada. We have the mayor of Montreal possibly blocking it. We're looking at some of the stuff with Trans Mountain, where there are groups that are still opposed to it, possibly the B.C. NDP party – not possibly; I think they have come out against it. That will make that an interesting election. We've had some success, principally with Keystone. We have two pipelines tentatively approved. We have four that federal Conservative governments got through, and for the jobs and the commodities that that will provide for us we are grateful.

I want to talk a little bit more about Keystone XL, Mr. Speaker. I was surprised it did receive no mention in the throne speech. It's a huge opportunity. It's a huge opportunity for our producers, experts, safety conscious, socially conscious people that are experts, the best in the world at bringing the product out of the ground to the pipeline.

The Speaker: Thank you. I'm sorry; time has lapsed on 29(2)(a).

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure and an honour to rise and present remarks in response to the Speech from the Throne by the Lieutenant Governor. I was really impressed with her delivery of this. I think that she was enthused, as I was, with the contents of that speech. I remarked on the feeling and the emphasis that she put into that speech, and I'm pleased to respond to it.

I also want to mention your services, sir. In the introduction to the speech the Lieutenant Governor said, "We are reminded again of the bedrock importance of this institution to the democratic life of our province." It's only through the work of your office in this Legislature as well as in the precincts of the Legislature that the value of our democratic life is seen. I particularly want to commend you on the current exhibit that was opened on the evening of the Speech from the Throne, Alberta and the Great War. If none of my colleagues here have gone through the exhibit, I really would commend that exhibit to them. As I mentioned yesterday, there's a tremendous amount of relevance of that exhibit to our current situation.

The Lieutenant Governor also in that first paragraph said, "We gather today on Treaty 6 land." I don't think that's been mentioned today, but I think that's something that should be repeated again and again and recognized that it's an honour and a privilege. I respect that we are here because of the work of the original inhabitants of these lands. One of the things that I've really enjoyed that was facilitated by your office, sir, was the recognition of the Métis Association of Alberta and the event that was held in the rotunda. Many of the people in this room attended it, as did representatives of civil society and of treaties 6, 7, and 8 First Nations. It was a very important recognition of the very important role that the Métis of Alberta have made to this province.

A similar event was held, again under your auspices, for Black History Month just within the last few weeks, again organized by one of my colleagues, the Member for Edmonton-Centre. Over 450 people attended that. I can tell you that my constituents who attended that event were very gratified at finally getting some recognition.

I'm one of the older members of this Legislature, and I've lived in this province for almost 40 years. I have to say that over those 40 years I've witnessed a lot of changes in this institution. The one that I'm, of course, most proud of is the change that occurred on May 5, 2015. The reason that I ran in that election was not to defeat the ex-mayor of this city although I'm proud of that, and that's probably going to be on my political tombstone. What I'm proudest of is that I played a small, small role in the election of the current Premier. Our Premier and her cabinet have completely changed the tenor of the government of this province, and I am extremely proud to have played a small part in that and to continue to play a small part in that.

I want to just record some of the things that have happened over that period of time since May 5, 2015. I'm particularly proud – and I mentioned this in a member's statement previously – that we opened the Nellie Carlson school in Edmonton-Whitemud. Nellie Carlson is a phenomenal leader, educator, great-great-grandmother, and we're very proud in Edmonton-Whitemud to have her name on a school that had been promised by the previous government for over 12 years. In May 2015 the Premier promised that we would get that school built. In September 2016 that school was opened to over 900 residents of my riding as well as my colleague in Edmonton-South West.

That's not the only school that was opened, of course. Everybody in this Legislature knows of a school that's been opened in their riding because we are an education government. We are going to promote the best of public education and advanced education, make sure that training and apprenticeships are developed. That's going to be a focus of this government.

I'm going to come back to things that are important to my riding. The Alberta child benefit and the child care pilot study that's going on, $25-a-day child care: very, very important to all the families in my riding, particularly those that have young children that need child care.

I'm also pleased – and I'm going to come back to this – with the climate leadership action plan, that was announced in November 2015 and which is already showing a lot of benefit. It does give us social licence. We did get two pipelines approved, and there's more to come.

Not to forget my Calgary colleagues, another advance that I'm very proud of is the funding and the planning and the building of the Calgary cancer centre. Our party ran on this in the May 2015 election, and it's another example where our government has come through. I can tell you that this is a very positive measure in cancer care in Alberta. I happen to work here in Edmonton at the Cross Cancer Institute, and I can tell you that all of the oncologists, nurses, and other staff are really pleased that, finally, Calgary is going to have its equivalent to the Cross Cancer Institute.

I also want to mention something else that happened that you may not think would apply to a relatively well-off area of Edmonton like Edmonton-Whitemud; for instance, banning door-to-door sales of various products. That's a scourge on seniors, and I've got a lot of seniors in my riding. These folks need to be protected from predatory door-to-door salesmen. I think that the measures that have been introduced and discussed in the Speech from the Throne are really helping in this regard.

Talking about predatory, we also got rid of predatory payday loan operations. Again, this affects all Albertans, whether or not you're in a riding like Edmonton-Whitemud or any other riding. We need to make sure that consumers are protected from unscrupulous business practices, and I'm really proud to be associated with that.

Another thing that I want to mention – it was alluded to earlier today – is the way that Albertans of all stripes have come together to deal with disasters like the fires in Wood Buffalo. I want to bring it to the context of Edmonton-Whitemud. Last June I was very pleased to be able to speak at the graduation at Lillian Osborne high school, which is in the beautiful riding of Edmonton-Whitemud. The principal is actually the spouse of an ex-Premier of this province, and despite our political differences she was happy to have me speak at the event. At the event I learned that Lillian Osborne high school actually had about a dozen students graduating from there who had been students in Fort McMurray, and I know that there were many other schools in Edmonton and elsewhere that did this. Now, they did this without asking for additional monies or asking for special recognition. This was the Albertan way to respond, and our schools and our teachers and the school councils responded very well.

The Minister of Culture and Tourism, actually, gave me the opportunity to hand out a cheque to a project in Rainbow Valley, which is in my riding of Edmonton-Whitemud. This was in support of development of a campground in Edmonton. It turns out that it is the only campground within the city of Edmonton, and I would recommend it to any of you who have friends or relatives that are looking for a place to camp here. It's a beautiful site. That campground was opened, actually, to folks with RVs and other camping equipment from Fort McMurray. Again, without any fanfare they just did it. I can tell you that I met with several of these families that day, and they were very, very appreciative.

I want to actually turn to some of the details that are in the Speech from the Throne. One of them that I want to mention, because it was brought up by a member opposite, is about the B.C. election that's coming up. You know, when I look at what's going on in politics in B.C., I see basically distortion. I mean, every day in the Globe and Mail or the Edmonton Journal I'm reading reports about how big money is corrupting the political process in British Columbia. It's big money but not to the B.C. NDP; it's big money to the governing party of B.C. This is something that I'm very proud that our government is starting to work at. We're strengthening our democracy. We've taken big money out of politics in this province, and we've still got more democratic reform to go. I'm hopeful that we are going to continue with that.

There's also going to be protection for whistle-blowers, and we're going to be strengthening our conflict-of-interest laws. This is democracy, folks. This is what we have been elected to do, to come here and make sure that these democratic institutions are protected.

In the few minutes I have left, I'd actually like to turn to making life more affordable for Albertans, and I'm particularly going to focus on what we've done in terms of capping electricity rates and the energy efficiency manoeuvres. You know, electricity is an essential for all Albertans, and we're going to cap the rates below the average price that families have paid over the last decade. If electricity prices go up past the cap, electricity bills won't, and we're going to protect. The question is: who pays? The capping of electricity rates means that our consumers are not going to be the ones that pay. We're going to introduce legislation this session to make the cap law.

I was really pleased to be part of the sponsorship of Bill 34, in which we basically created or allowed the creation of what are called capacity markets. Alberta was an anomaly in North America. Almost no other – I think only one other jurisdiction . . .

Under 29(2)(a), the Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Mr. Speaker, the MLA for Edmonton-Whitemud and I share an interest in common. We both attended the recent solar energy trade fair and so on. I know we both have a passion for climate change and the science of it, and we both have degrees, actually, from the same university, so we're both – I would call us really steeped in science. I was wondering if you could comment on a recent article in the Edmonton Journal where an MLA from the opposition was asked by a journalist about climate change.

"According to scientists who study this, the majority of the increase is man-made." The MLA from the opposition said, "You can't say that anymore." The journalist said, "Why can't you say that anymore?" The MLA said, "The science isn't settled." I was wondering if you had a comment on that issue.

Dr. Turner: Well, thank you very much for that very, very important question. I think that this is something that needs to be aired greatly, aired even more. Do you believe that man contributes to climate change, or do you not? Is it reasonable that we make every human effort to limit the amount of greenhouse gases that are being produced? I can tell you that just last Friday I made arrangements to have LED lights installed in the constituency office. Not only is that going to save taxpayer money because we're going to be consuming less power; I'm actually going to be responsible for, quote, unquote, saving the planet. We're going to be reducing that.

Now, I also walk the walk in my own personal life on this. Four years ago I had solar panels installed on the roof of my personal residence, and I'm very, very happy with that. What I'm really happiest about is that our government is actually going to be helping Albertans on this with the new grants for solar panel installation, not only on residences but on farms . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I would move adjournment under Standing Order 4(2.1) until 1:30 p.m. The House stands adjourned.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, March 7, 2017

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you. M. le Président, c'est avec fierté que je me lève à la Chambre aujourd'hui pour introduire two schools from Beaumont. Thirty-five students are here today from l'école Beau Meadow school and l'école Bellevue school. The students are accompanied by their teachers, Mme Brigitte Marshall and Mme Danielle McCallion, ainsi que de leurs chaperons Mrs. Pam Nelner, Mrs. Rachel Gregor-Stang, Ms Tracy Callahan, and Mrs. Hannah Klar. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure and a great honour to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly the students, teachers, and helpers visiting the Legislature today from Velma E. Baker school in the beautiful constituency of Edmonton-Mill Creek. Could the teachers, Mr. Philip Singh and Mr. Bruce Grant; helpers Mrs. Christine Braun, Mr. Alex Fisher, Mrs. Kelly Nicolson, Mrs. Andrea Carreiro, Mrs. Muna Ali; and the students please rise and accept the warm wishes of the Assembly. Thank you.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other school groups today?

The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Master Warrant Officer Garry Wood, CD; Master Corporal Hugh Hayes, CD; and Corporal Rebecca Campbell. Master Warrant Officer Wood has served in the military for 33 years, served two tours in Bosnia, and is currently the equipment technical quarter-master sergeant at Lord Strathcona's Horse. Master Corporal Hayes has served in the military for 14 years and is currently serving with Lord Strathcona's Horse out of CFB Edmonton. Corporal Rebecca Campbell has served in the military for seven years and also serves with Lord Strathcona's Horse as a supply technician. I would like to thank my guests for their service to Canada, and I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Les Landry and his service dog, Annie. Les Landry is a well-known advocate for expanding the access to service dogs for people in Alberta that need them, and we're thankful for his work. I'm sure many of you know him. Please join me in welcoming Mr. Landry and Annie to the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you a friend but, more importantly, the mayor of the village of Amisk in my riding of Battle River-Wainwright, Mayor Bill Rock. He's here in Edmonton taking in the AUMA convention. Of course, following a rash of crimes that have happened in his community, he would like to find out what the government is going to do to keep his community and communities like the village of Amisk safe. I would now ask him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mr. Carlier: Mr. Speaker, it is my sincere pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a large contingent of forestry stakeholders. Today we have 20 hard-working mayors, reeves, and councillors from different towns, counties, and municipal districts that have forestry as a major industry, supporting the livelihoods of thousands of Albertans and the respective local economies. With them are 17 equally hard-working board members and officials of the Alberta Forest Products Association, an industry that has been providing jobs to thousands of our citizens. Alberta's forest sector represents a great story for our province because it's one of the most sustainable industries on the planet and a major contributor to our economy. I would ask them to now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly Samantha Pearson. She's the director of the sexual assault centre at the University of Alberta in the magnificent riding of Edmonton-Riverview. The centre strives for a campus free of sexual violence, providing free, anonymous, and confidential support for members of the university community who are survivors of sexual assault and abuse. Samantha is a graduate of the University of Alberta, as I am, and has been volunteering with the centre since she was a student, after seeing one of the centre's awareness presentations. She's dedicated and optimistic and proud to say that she is helping make the University of Alberta a safer place. Samantha, please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all of the Assembly two friends of mine: first, His Worship Pat Alexander, the reeve of beautiful Clearwater county, which I am proud to represent inside this place; and, with him, His Worship Terry Leslie, the mayor of my hometown of Sundre, who is also with me here today celebrating the one-year anniversary of the attempted shutting down of the Sundre hospital, which, I am glad to say, is still open to this day because of the hard work of both this side of the House and that side of the House. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly several dedicated and passionate Albertans who work with survivors of sexual assault and domestic violence. I'll ask them to rise as I say their names and to remain standing till the end: Mary Jane James, the executive director of the Sexual Assault Centre of Edmonton and the team at SACE; Deb Tomlinson, CEO of the Association of Alberta Sexual Assault Services; Jackie Foord, CEO of the YWCA Edmonton. I also have the great pleasure of introducing Elizabeth Halpin, a survivor who has courageously shared her story and is an inspiration to us all. I would ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Wildrose on Campus Calgary Film Screening

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. "Feminism is cancer." At least, that's what the Wildrose club at the University of Calgary would have you believe. Yesterday that's what they wrote on their invitation to a film screening about the men's rights movement called The Red Pill, funded and supported by Breitbart and Milo. It's a fundraiser they were cohosting with the campus federal Conservatives for a men's rights group. Now, these so-called men's rights advocates belittle the advancement of women and promote hatred and violence. One of their leaders in the U.S. advocates legalizing rape so that, in their minds, women would learn to protect their virtue.

Mr. Speaker, the language used by these people online degrades women. They use slurs and insults, calling women special snowflakes, social justice warriors, and other unparliamentary language. Where have we heard that before? It is a sickening message any time, but on the eve of International Women's Day it is a sobering reminder of how far we need to go.

Mr. Speaker, the opposition is outraged when anyone suggests that they're far-right social conservatives, but holding fundraisers like this shows just how out of touch they are with Albertans, especially Alberta women. While we work to get more women on boards and in leadership roles, they nurture hateful language. While we take action on domestic violence, they say that feminism is a horrible disease. That is the Wildrose. They've proven time and time again that they can't keep their true colours from showing, and that's whose ranks the PCs want to join?

On the upside, seeing as how their prospective dance partners for a united right just drove out the only woman in their caucus, I would say that they're getting the unity part right.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Rural Crime

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, the people of my riding need help fighting crime in their communities. Many of our communities have been hard hit by crime that has started with this economic downturn, and we need this government to do something and do something more.

Let me paint you a picture of how bleak this situation has become in Amisk. The local ATB has recently been robbed twice. Additionally, last year there was an armed robbery at this bank. A gun was pointed at an expectant mother in an attempted vehicle theft. The post office was broken into, robbed, and vandalized, and the crimes aren't slowing down. There have been many more criminal complaints. In just the past few weeks the local officials are coming together to say that enough is enough. This issue of rural crime is very real and very serious, especially in this economic downturn as it persists.

On February 21 I invited the Justice minister to meet with local officials and make some important choices on rural crime. The minister ignored my request, and the problem hasn't gone away. The NDP has made a priority of everything from taxes to free light bulbs, but this government needs to understand that it has no greater duty than protecting the people of this province.

I'm proud to welcome the Amisk mayor, Bill Rock, to the Legislature today. Together he and I are calling on this government to take action to protect the people of rural Alberta, who feel vulnerable and violated. Yesterday we had an emergency debate in this Legislature about the opioid crisis that is happening right here in our own backyards. I want to commend my colleagues in this House that have been calling for action on this opioid epidemic for years now and remind them that these issues only get worse when we ignore them.

Let's not ignore this. Let's face this heartbreaking issue with swift, strong action that leaves no room for doubt that this Legislature won't ignore rural crime.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Calgary Gravel Pit Operation

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thanks to great planning and budgeting by the previous government, the Edmonton Anthony Henday has become a reality, and three-quarters of the Calgary ring road is now complete. It was our very own PC leader who was the minister responsible for engineering the historic agreement on the southwest Calgary ring road with our friends from Tsuut'ina. But nowhere on his plans or even on the plans of the current Ministry of Transportation has there ever been any evidence of a huge gravel pit and asphalt plant to be placed right behind the fine residents in Bridlewood.

Many weeks ago I wrote to the minister in charge now, and I sent him 13 pictures illustrating the monstrosity. I personally asked him about it, and I was told: we are looking into it. Now, residents in the area sure wish that he had done exactly that a long time ago. If he had, he'd know that there was absolutely no public consultation about this and that all the residents ever received were household notices after the operation had already begun.

It's to run nonstop, Mr. Speaker, for several years, from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. every single day. Now, the noise and smell from a project of this magnitude will impact the quality of life of these residents in extremely negative ways. This is fraught with damage to air quality, including potential carcinogens, and we have no indication whatsoever that environmental or health studies were ever even conducted. A number of residents have been told by the company that this was supposedly a fortuitous decision, if you can believe it, and Alberta Transportation indicated that it is unfortunate that the company did not inform them of the plans until after public consultations were already done. The department expressed disappointment over this, but that is not enough.

With the full support of the community association and on behalf of their residents I formally request that the minister intercede and have the company move this operation to a site which is much more appropriate for all involved this month. By the way, there is another site I'll have questions about tomorrow.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Black History Month

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just over one month ago I joined over 400 Albertans here for Alberta's first official recognition and celebration of Black History Month. It was a powerful moment that paid tribute to our original settlers of African descent and those who continue to come here from around the world, men and women seeking to escape racism, prejudice, and hatred due to their ethnicity or choice of faith and to build better lives in our province. I was honoured to be joined by some of my colleagues from across the aisle.

A few days before that, members from all sides of this House stood with members of Alberta's Muslim communities to condemn the slaughter of six Canadians at prayer in their mosque in Quebec. Mr. Speaker, Alberta is home to nearly 75,000 African Canadians, and 113,000 Albertans practise the Muslim faith. I'm proud to be working with my colleagues to make their lives better through truly inclusive government and support for families.

But, Mr. Speaker, I'm sorry to say that some here are choosing to make the lives of these Albertan families worse. For their own political gain they stand with a so-called media organization who celebrated Black History Month with a video of a correspondent in blackface arguing that it was historically a sign of respect for African culture, an organization that is a constant source of fear, hatred, and misinformation about the Muslim community. Members of this House have granted them interviews, appeared at their rallies, and paid them to distribute fundraising e-mails. That is not the face of a modern, inclusive Alberta. That is the same face of ignorance and prejudice that black Albertans have fought for over a century and that they and others are forced to continue fighting today.

So I commit that if any member of this House stands with those who spread this kind of ignorance and prejudice, I will call them out because families in our province deserve a government that supports all Albertans, a government that moves us forward instead of trying to drag us back. That is what we've promised, and that is what we will deliver.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Order, please. Order.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Students' Association of Mount Royal University

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to offer my congratulations to a group of young Albertans for their leadership and commitment to fostering engaged citizenship on the Mount Royal University campus, the Students' Association of Mount Royal University, also known as SAMRU.

As some of you know, when I was a science student at Simon Fraser University, I served as president and vice-president of the Interactive Arts and Technology Student Union. It quickly became clear to me that it was important to focus on the needs of students, and that's why I'm proud to be part of a government that is working to make life better and more affordable for our postsecondary students.

Over the past year I've been able to attend various SAMRU organized events designed to create a healthier, more inclusive campus. I continue to be impressed by the calibre and diversity of their events such as their Black History Month workshop that explored indigenous and black relations in Canada and encouraged students to spit yo' game and talk yo' stuff. I'll let you figure out what that original quote was. And last October I participated in SAMRU's Student Connect event that brought politicians to campus to meet and speak with students about being community leaders.

Student unions are also laboratories of leadership. They are places where lessons about policy are learned and confidence is built. Like our Legislature, they're places where Albertans meet, debate their values and ideas, and perform citizenship by voting, which is why I must applaud the over 1,700 Mount Royal students who marked their ballots in last week's SAMRU election. Although a slightly lower turnout than last year, it's a significant improvement over the 1,000 who voted in 2015 and speaks to the student association's work to get out the vote.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the members of this House join me in recognizing the important work performed by student unions and congratulate this year's winners: Madelaine McCracken, VP student life; Cordelia Snowdon, VP academic; and Shifrah Gadamssetti, president.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Crime Prevention

Mr. Jean: There's no question about it. Crime is on the rise in communities all across Alberta. The most recent StatsCan data shows an 18 per cent rise in crime in Alberta just in 2015, including a 12 per cent spike in violent crime. Very troubling. The 2016 data from the Calgary police shows that property crime and personal crime continue to rise. Albertans feel vulnerable while the accused walk scot-free. Rather than accuse us of fearmongering, will the Premier listen to the police, acknowledge a growing crisis of crime across Alberta, and start putting in the resources that we've asked for to keep Albertans safe?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our government believes that all Albertans deserve to live in safe and resilient communities. The police work very hard to keep those communities safe. While we have seen a recent upswing in crime, it's important to keep in context that this is still lower than the crime rates were 10 years ago. You know, we are very concerned to see any increase. We work very closely with the Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police and the RCMP to ensure that we're able to provide them with adequate resources, and we will keep working in that collaborative way.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, the fact is that Albertans don't trust the NDP. They're too busy worrying about spending millions of dollars on light bulbs instead of addressing this serious issue. The president of the Alberta Crown Attorneys' Association has said that in 2017, 200 significant charges have been stayed due to a lack of resources, charges including assaults, violent crimes, and DUIs. That's on your watch. Will the Premier release to Albertans the total number of trials stayed under this government and detail what charges accused criminals are simply walking away from?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our government is committed to ensuring that Albertans have a safe and resilient justice system and that it's able to work as well as possible. We will continue to work with the association. It's true that we need to find efficiencies within the system, and we have been doing this in order to address these ongoing problems. We have also been looking very carefully at the resources necessary to pursue these aims, and we will be coming forward – I hope the opposition will support that.

Mr. Jean: The fact is that under the NDP watch, under this government's watch, accused murderers have been let go free of charge before even going to trial. Assault charges against police officers have been stayed, and so have several DUI cases. This means that our streets are less safe. Gun thefts are up. Property crime is up. Personal crime is up. Violent crime is up. This government needs to lift the veil of secrecy on a system that is failing Albertans. Why won't the Premier give Albertans the full picture of the state of our justice system by publicly reporting the total number of charges stayed since taking office and what exactly those stayed charges were?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Our government is committed to being transparent on this issue. I have been out in the media several times on this. We regularly release numbers detailing the number of Jordan applications, whether they've been successful, whether they've been abandoned, and what the outcome was. We release those numbers all the time. We are absolutely committed to addressing this issue. We have worked very hard to find insufficiencies and to put in a triage system, but what is necessary is more resources, and I hope that the opposition will support that.

The Speaker: Second main question.

Energy Efficiency Programs

Mr. Jean: It's very clear that the NDP need to figure out how to brighten up their dismal approval ratings, but I can assure you that no amount of free light bulbs is going to accomplish that, not with a carbon tax increasing the price of everything, making everyone in Alberta poorer, as they've done. The new plan is to take billions of dollars out of Albertans' pockets and give back a fraction of it in free light bulbs, installed, of course, by an Ontario company. Not the brightest idea, I would suggest. Can the Premier please tell us how she will ensure this doesn't turn into a boondoggle of a program, or is she simply leaving us all in the dark?

Ms Hoffman: What is it, Mr. Speaker? Groundhog Day in here? I think the member's staff gave him last year's envelope.

Now, the member is worried about his job – we understand that – but he needs to get his head in the game. Yesterday the Wildrose called feminism a cancer, and you guys want to join them. So let me ask the Leader of the Opposition a simple question: why is your party spending its time calling the fight for women's equality a cancer on our society?

An Hon. Member: Point of order.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition. First supplemental.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member is right. Absolutely unacceptable. But Albertans want to upgrade products at home. They've been doing it for years. And now more than ever they are making the switch in an attempt to survive the carbon tax. It's going to be difficult. What's driving Albertans crazy is the fact that the NDP government seems to think they need to go into our homes to change our light bulbs using our money. It may come as a shock to this government, but Albertans actually want to save money on their energy bills, and they're going to have to because they're going up. Why didn't the Premier trust Albertans and give them a program to upgrade their homes on their own?

Ms Hoffman: I wish I could say good try, Mr. Speaker, but it's weak, weak, weak. A strong opposition is good for democracy. It happens again and again with you guys. The Wildrose is spending more time having to apologize than doing their jobs. So why won't the member stand in this House and admit that feminism isn't the problem? The problem is within his own party.

Mr. Jean: The NDP must listen to talk radio. If they did, they'd hear caller after caller talking about how ridiculous the Ecofitt program is. Albertans have been buying new bulbs, new thermostats, and a lot more for years. They're savvy. Those Albertans who took the time to upgrade before the NDP ecomonster was created: well, they aren't going to see a dime. They're justifiably upset. Will the Premier commit to putting an end to this Ecofitt fiasco and taking the time to create an energy efficiency program that doesn't penalize Albertans for using their own initiative to save energy?

Ms Hoffman: In the last few months the Wildrose compared . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the last few months the Wildrose compared the climate leadership plan to the Ukrainian famine. Then they attacked the Premier of Ontario when she visited this very House. The leader of the party joked about beating up women. Now they're comparing our struggle for equality to cancer.

Mr. Nixon: Point of order.

Ms Hoffman: Another day, another half-hearted apology. Will the Leader of the Opposition actually show some leadership, put an end to these Wildrose bozo eruptions?

The Speaker: Third main question.

Municipal Infrastructure Funding

Mr. Jean: The building Canada fund is a crucial federal program for Alberta's municipality, and I hope this government will take this seriously because it helps to build the infrastructure that our communities rely on right across Alberta to survive. As recently as August 2016 the Minister of Infrastructure provided assurances to the AUMA that $300 million of that fund would be allocated for municipal projects. However, in a letter to AUMA members just last month the Infrastructure minister stated that he will not honour his promise or the commitment of $300 million. To the Premier: why is this happening?

Ms Hoffman: Our government is making life better for everyday Albertans by building new schools, hospitals, and roads that communities need to thrive and to grow. That's why we've put shovels in the ground on nearly 300 transportation projects, more than a hundred school projects, plus postsecondary and health facilities. Our government is the most generous in the country when it comes to funding municipalities. Even in the midst of the current downturn our government is investing. You know you guys would cut. Stop playing martyrs.

Mr. Jean: Nice read, Mr. Speaker.

Alberta's municipalities have been counting on the $300 million for critical infrastructure projects. The NDP government's decision to instead use those funds for provincial projects and the province's deficit is disappointing, to say the least, especially to those municipalities. The NDP doesn't trust Albertans to install light bulbs, and now they don't trust municipalities to build local projects. We've seen what centralized power in the hands of the NDP looks like, and Albertans don't like it. Why doesn't the NDP restore local decision-making at the local level for municipalities so this money actually gets out the door?

2:00

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I met with the AUMA today, with the mayors' caucus from around Alberta, and we talked about the issue of infrastructure funding. Alberta spends, for example, about a third more than the next highest province on a per capita basis on its grants to municipalities. Furthermore, $260 million of federal infrastructure money has already gone to municipal governments, and more to come. We've applied, furthermore, for funding for the Springbank reservoir to protect Calgary from flooding.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Jean: The NDP just can't seem to help itself when it comes to meddling in systems that previously worked well. The building Canada fund, before the NDP government, was an effective way of flowing through infrastructure that were necessary projects for local communities and that were deemed as a priority for a local municipality. The fact is that local government knows best what projects are urgently needed, or at least that was the fact before the NDP world view came into play, where they know best. Can the Premier tell me why her government doesn't trust local municipalities to know what their projects, their needs for their local municipalities are?

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, you know, one of the projects that we've applied for under the federal infrastructure program that the member is talking about is the Springbank flood mitigation project to protect the city of Calgary from flooding. We know that members opposite don't support that. They would rather give the money to someone else and let Calgary flood, but we're here to protect Alberta families. [interjections] We're here to make sure that they get the infrastructure they need. That's what this government stands for.

The Speaker: I think the young students are leaving because they thought it was too noisy in here.

The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government talks a big game when it comes to making life better for Albertans, but the opposite is true. At the AUMA breakfast this morning I heard from municipal leaders who are upset that $300 million in the federal building Canada fund that was to go to municipalities never got there. Withholding the $300 million has meant that $900 million in projects didn't get built because it's usually a three-way split between governments. To the Minister of Infrastructure: given that your Infrastructure budget was underspent by more than a billion dollars, why did you deny Alberta municipalities this much-needed funding when you didn't even use it?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Nothing could be further from the truth. As I mentioned in my earlier answer, over $260 million of that federal infrastructure money has already flowed to municipalities. We've asked for more, including for the Springbank diversion project that I referred to. This government funds municipalities' infrastructure needs to a much higher level than any other province in this country. Quite frankly, for the members to suggest otherwise is simply to mislead the public.

Mr. McIver: It's a shame to hear the minister tell municipalities that they're wrong because they're the ones that told me they're not happy. I'm disappointed that despite keeping $300 million in federal funding, the provincial deficit is still going to hit $10.8 billion this year, further proof that this government can't help itself when it comes to reckless and irresponsible spending. Given that this money did not go to municipalities like it was supposed to, can the minister tell us: what did you spend it on, please?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the Conservative opposition would like us to reduce the deficit, but when we try to reduce the deficit, they object. Not only did we reduce the deficit by $600 million, but we provided $260 million for municipal projects. This government is making life better for Alberta families. We're spending money on infrastructure to meet the needs for transit, for roads, for housing, for justice facilities and hospitals and other health care facilities that that government ignored while it was in office. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members.

Mr. McIver: The minister is reducing the truth.

Alberta municipalities depend on stable, predictable funding, which is why the previous government created the MSI program, which provided 10 years of stability. This morning the Municipal Affairs minister couldn't tell AUMA mayors what next year's funding is going to be like, one year out. This shows a complete lack of competence on the part of the new minister. Given that Alberta municipalities are struggling with the economic downturn and the NDP carbon tax, to the Minister of Municipal Affairs: when will you finally give some clarity to these municipalities on MSI, or will it even exist next year?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I appreciate the question from the opposition member. Unlike what they're trying to say, the taps aren't turning off on March 31 like they're telling everyone. They are continuing. For the next budget cycle they will have their funding for MSI. As I said this morning, if the opposition member was actually listening as I have been doing to municipalities, we are going to work collaboratively with them going forward to find something that's sustainable, not a 10-year Band-Aid.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Opioid Use

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday we debated the increasing number of deaths each year for the past five years caused by opioids. The government calls it everything from an epidemic to a crisis, but it refuses to call it an emergency. The definition of an emergency in the Emergency Management Act is, quote, an event that requires prompt co-ordination of action to protect the health of people and limit damage to property. End quote. Health and crime statistics say that this is an emergency. To the Premier: why is the government the only one who won't call this an emergency?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I was really pleased to be part of the discussion in our House yesterday as we talked about some new ideas. You know, I was certainly pleased to hear from most of the opposition their support for supervised consumption services, which are viewed as leading best practices for how we can help stem the tide of deaths from the opioid crisis. I agree with the member opposite that we need to be doing more and continuing this hard work that we've started to protect Albertans and to make sure the supports are in place. We're going to do that no matter what.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, two of the courageous survivors of this crisis, Petra Schultz and Rosalind Davis, said that this government's refusal to act on the call for an emergency is, quote, unacceptable and the inadequate response perpetuates the stigma about opioid-related deaths. End quote. The government insists that a state of emergency isn't appropriate in this situation. Clearly, the government can do more to help and mobilize resources without kicking down the doors. If the government has all the resources it needs, why is the opioid crisis continuing to worsen? Why are you failing?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When I hear people call for a public health emergency, I hear them wanting to know that their government understands that this is a serious issue, a top priority, and that we are taking action. Is there more to do? Absolutely, and it is top of mind for this government. Earlier today I met with Marliss Taylor of Streetworks and Jennifer Vanderschaeghe of Turning Point in Red Deer to discuss practical, on-the-ground solutions that we can do to help save Albertans' lives, ways that we can support front-line workers who are working to support people who use substances day in and day out so that we can help to stem this tide.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, the reason we're failing is that the government's response to this emergency has been piecemeal at best. During the emergency debate it touted more incremental, one-off measures. Harm reduction is good; it is not enough. The government has provided no comprehensive plan. It is unwilling to admit that the opioid crisis has become an emergency. Focused leadership is what is lacking. The NDP campaigned on leadership for what matters. Well, certainly, these nearly 500 lost lives last year matter. How many deaths will it take before you call it an emergency?

The Speaker: The associate minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to disagree with the member's categorization of our approach as piecemeal. We have moved forward on harm reduction by expanding access to naloxone for people who need it. Yes, definition of a Band-Aid. It's going to save a life when it's needed. That is one part of our plan. We've been working on opioid dependency treatments, Suboxone and methadone, which are top-of-the-line clinical evidence for helping people who are living with opioid addictions. That is the treatment that is needed, and we are working to expand access to that treatment.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Calgary-Klein.

Postsecondary Students with Disabilities

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Jason Lang scholarship is awarded to any postsecondary student in Alberta who earns a 3.2 GPA on a full course load. In 2007 the course load eligibility for students with documented disabilities was reduced from an 80 per cent course load to 60 per cent in accordance with a Human Rights Commission decision. In 2009 the previous government ignored this decision by reverting the criteria for the scholarship back to 80 per cent, leaving many students with disabilities ineligible. To the Minister of Advanced Education: will you commit to including . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, thank you.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my hon. friend for the important question. Our government is making lives for students better by providing support to students who are seeking to further their education, and we're continually looking for opportunities to improve our programming. As he mentioned, Advanced Education is currently conducting a system resource review, which includes learning supports such as loans, grants, scholarships, and awards, and the Jason Lang scholarship will be included in the scope of that review. We understand the extra challenges that students with disabilities face and that financial support for this population must support their unique needs, and we're committed to making our postsecondary system . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: are there other programs and scholarships for disabilities with the Jason Lang scholarship in the review you are currently conducting on student grants?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thanks again, Mr. Speaker and to the member for that important question. There are a number of resources available to support students with disabilities, including both federal and provincial student grants for students with permanent disabilities. The Canada student grant provides $2,000 a year to assist with education and living costs as well as up to $8,000 a year for services and equipment. Additionally, the Alberta grant for students with disabilities provides an additional $3,000 in funding for each student. All these grants provide nonrepayable assistance to students who may not otherwise be able to access postsecondary education and are administered by Student Aid Alberta through the Student Aid Alberta Service Centre.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you, Minister. To the same minister: what programs are available to help students with disabilities transition into the world of postsecondary education?

Mr. Schmidt: Well, Mr. Speaker, each of Alberta's public postsecondary institutions provides services to students with disabilities to minimize barriers to education. These include various accommodations provided as necessary on a case-by-case basis. The appropriate accommodations are identified in consultation with professional staff at each institution, the student, their physicians, and other professionals working with them for care and support. Accommodations can include extensions of exam time limits and private exam spaces, modification of course loads, and additional equipment. All of these help students with disabilities have a more successful transition into colleges and universities as they make their lives better.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Government Communications

Mr. Fildebrandt: Today the government's official propaganda wing testified before the Public Accounts Committee. We asked real, simple questions about the extent of partisanship in this historically partisan branch of the public service. Government has parachuted NDP apparatchiks into dozens of positions across the government that are supposed to be nonpartisan. For the most part they refused to answer our questions, so I'll ask the government directly. How many employees in the Public Affairs Bureau have partisan ties to the NDP?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The question that's being asked is one that I'd say was directed to the appropriate body. It's a public agency, the Public Affairs Bureau, and they are working as public servants, and it's important that we respect their professionalism as public servants. I wish the members opposite would show a little bit of professionalism as well.

Mr. Fildebrandt: They're not professionals; they're party bureaucrats, Mr. Speaker.

They are using their position in government to spend taxpayers' money . . .

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

The Speaker: Continue.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Do I get to start again?

The Speaker: No, you can't start again.

Mr. Fildebrandt: They are using their position in government to spend taxpayers' money to convince people to vote for the Progressive Conservative Party. Those words were spoken exactly five years ago to the day, when the Government House Leader was in opposition. Now the NDP are spending tens of millions of dollars to convince people to support their carbon tax. Can the Government House Leader stand up, look me in the eye, and tell me with a straight face that they're not doing the exact same thing?

The Speaker: I would ask whoever . . .

Ms Hoffman: I'll start, and if the Government House Leader wants to answer . . .

The Speaker: Hon. Deputy Premier, I wonder if you would look me straight in the eye, though, rather than the other side. Please proceed.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll start, and I'm sure that if the Government House Leader wants to respond to the third one, he'll have an opportunity to. The Public Affairs Bureau is a professional communications branch. It supports campaigns about things like seat belt importance and public health. I think it's important that we pay attention to what they have to say. I know Albertans want to hear what the campaigns are and make sure that they're hearing clear communications from a professional communications branch.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Professional communicators who used to be party campaigners.

Alison Redford was set to go down in history as the most wasteful Premier in Alberta's history. She squandered $4 million on wasteful government propaganda over her entire term. I say "was" because this Premier has budgeted $10 million on a single ad campaign. Given that over Christmas I went to watch a movie where people literally booed as they were subjected to this kind of propaganda – Albertans aren't buying it, and they want them gone – won't the government just save us the money and cancel the propaganda ads?

Mr. Mason: Well, I'm glad that the hon. member watches movies other than on Rebel media, Mr. Speaker, because he might get a bit of an education.

Now, the Public Affairs Bureau are professional public civil servants. I have a point of order with respect to this matter because the impugning of professional civil servants by the opposition is unacceptable, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Farm and Ranch Worker Regulation Consultation

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday's announcement was that two technical working groups developing recommendations on how employment standards and labour relations should be applied in the agricultural sector as a result of Bill 6 have now finished their report to the government. We have been told that the next step is to provide feedback on these recommendations through a web portal for the next four weeks. To the minister: why is there no attempt to have face-to-face feedback with Albertans such as town halls?

The Speaker: The Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Farming is more than a job; it is a way of life, and this government recognizes that. We have heard from some very balanced technical working group tables that members of those tables included voices representing employers, farmers, experts from various fields. They had such fulsome discussions at these groups, and I'd like to thank all of the members for the work that they did at those technical working groups. We are now taking the reports that came from our technical working groups and asking Albertans to give us feedback on the work that was done at these technical working groups.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that there are still four more working groups, two of which are reviewing the applicability of the Occupational Health and Safety Act, another one on best practice for agriculture, and one on education and training and certification, and given that these groups have not completed their consultation and that no expected date for completion has been outlined, to the minister: when can Alberta farmers expect to see these consultations completed?

The Speaker: The Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I have said from the beginning and this government has said from the beginning of the process that we're going to take the time that is necessary to make sure that we get this right. As the member I'm sure recognizes, some of those issues are complicated, especially in occupational health and safety. The nuances in agriculture have to be examined to make sure we get it right, and I'm very happy, as is the Minister of Labour, with the hard work that these technical working groups have done.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that it's been over a year since Bill 6 legislation was passed and given that parts of it are already being implemented, such as WCB, and given that the regulations for this legislation have still not been completed, to the minister: when are you going to have the regulations in place for Alberta farmers to be able to follow?

The Speaker: The minister of agriculture.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is important that we get this right. We're continuing to take the time. I've heard from the opposition that they would actually repeal this legislation that will protect farm workers. This government believes in the protection of farm workers as all workers. We're going to continue to do that work. We're going to continue to make lives better for Alberta's farmers, ranchers, and workers.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, for the past few months I've been hearing disturbing reports from members of the Bill 6 round-tables about whether this government has been taking their input seriously. The concerns being voiced are that should there be no consensus, the government will simply toss out any views that don't mesh with their ideology and create regulations as they see fit. To the minister: what assurances can you give these round-table members that their hard work and efforts will not simply be sent to the burn barrel as so much trash?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Again, there were 72 members total for these technical working groups – they have put in hard work – a variety of interests right across Alberta. I thank them for their hard work. They were not able to reach consensus on everything, but the ones they do, we're going to be able to have all Albertans examine, looking for that input. The opposition had criticized the consultation process. They were wrong on that. We've had fulsome consultation and are looking to the results.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, given that per the government's press conference yesterday consensus was not reached on all round-tables and given that if there is no consensus, the final decision on which recommendations to accept lies with the government, which means that choices will have to be made, to the minister: for those round-tables that didn't reach consensus, will the minister side with views that mirror their ideology, or does the minister plan to break the stalemate in some other way, and if so, what will that be?

The Speaker: The minister of agriculture.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. The members opposite would have preferred these technical working groups to be made up of all the same people. They weren't. There were very diverse views right across – labour, workers, farmers, ranchers, experts in health and safety – that all made up a part of that table. The discussions were robust. That they didn't come to consensus in all the recommendations is natural, but with all those views, on the ones that they have, we're looking forward to those recommendations and hearing from all Albertans as we always said we were going to.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Southern Albertans are struggling, and this government's bad policies . . .

The Speaker: My apologies. I was jumping ahead.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that in yesterday's press conference the minister stated that government will decide what regulations come out of the Bill 6 round-table reports, certainly on reports that have points where consensus hasn't been reached, and given that even if the vast majority of Albertans submit their opposition to certain recommendations, the government will have the final say, to the minister: how do you plan to respond to complaints from some table members that fear that the results of these consultations are ultimately predetermined?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know the opposition has gone on record saying that they will repeal this legislation if and when they ever get in power, that they would deny basic workers' rights to these workers, and I'm assuming they would deny basic rights for every worker in Alberta. For that, I say: shame. This government, I as minister, will continue protecting Alberta's workers, will continue making lives better for those workers.
[interjections]

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Please keep the volume down.
Now the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Carbon Levy

Mr. Barnes: Thank you. Southern Albertans are still struggling, and this government's bad policies have made things worse. The carbon tax has increased the cost of everything. This government refuses to provide any evidence that this tax won't just force industries to relocate. Recent public policy research identified that families, couples supporting kids or relatives are the biggest losers of the carbon tax. This tax won't help the environment, has harmed our economy and our job creators. To the minister of environment: when will this government put Alberta families first and abolish the carbon tax?

The Speaker: Thank you.

Ms Phillips: Mr. Speaker, we learned over the weekend that members opposite seemed to have problems interpreting the dictionary. We learned that again yesterday in terms of the definitions of words. Why don't I just help out the opposition with a couple of definitions of our own? Made in Alberta is a plan designed by Albertans. It means a plan that is carefully structured around our unique economy. It is Alberta's climate leadership plan. I'll give you another definition: made in Ottawa, which is the sum total of the opposition Conservative Party's so-called plan to deal with climate change. That is not our approach. Our approach is to make sure that we are moving carefully, creating . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, study after study shows that this government doesn't care about the damage they're causing. Given that good Medicine Hat employers like Rosenau Transport have been forced to pass along the expense of the carbon tax and given that this government's own estimated cost per family of the tax never bothered to consider the price increases that the tax has put on every good from farm equipment to groceries, again to the minister of environment: how can you claim that your efforts to mitigate a tax with impacts that you refuse to acknowledge have made the carbon tax easier to swallow?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member asks about the business climate, so it's very interesting to me that that's why we cut small-business taxes by a third. They would increase business taxes by that third. We have put money in the pockets of Albertans, starting on January 5 with the rebates, moving along with various energy efficiency programs for farms, for schools, for nonprofits. [interjection] They would take money out of those pockets, and they would cancel all of those ways that people are saving money on their . . .

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, please keep your volume down. Thank you.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, the day after the carbon tax was implemented, my office received call after call from petroleum service stations across the province shocked and confused as to why they needed to apply GST on top of the carbon tax. Given that this government had the option of lobbying the federal government to exempt the carbon tax from the GST and given that we're now forcing Albertans to pay a tax on a tax, Albertans are left wondering: when will this government stop lining the pockets of bureaucrats in Ottawa and start working for Alberta families?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On this side of the House we understand that a strong economy and a clean environment go hand in hand, and part of that is creating good jobs both in our energy industry and in our emerging industries. That's how we secured approvals on two pipelines. The Wildrose still believes that their dead-end approach will work. [interjections] That failed to get pipelines built. They would repeal the very plan that secured those two pipelines.

The Speaker: We're certainly having a robust afternoon.
The Member for Calgary-South East.

Addiction and Mental Health Emergency Responder and Family Supports

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We spent the afternoon in the House yesterday debating the need for an emergency response to the fentanyl crisis. In order to get to that point, every member of this House agreed to have that debate, recognizing that there is a crisis. Yet the government has failed to respond by calling a public health emergency to co-ordinate resources to save lives. Since the minister and the government won't call an emergency, my question is: where is the support for the true emergency worker, emergency medical services, how much money has been allotted to them during this crisis, and how much in additional resources?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We are incredibly grateful for the work that first responders, including firefighters, paramedics, police, and peace officers, are taking in responding to this crisis. We have been working very diligently to ensure that they have the mental health supports that they need to help process any of the trauma related to the work that they do day in and day out. I'm regularly meeting with members of emergency responders, representations from across the province, to make sure that we have those supports in place. One of the key things that we've heard was the desire . . .

2:30

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Fraser: Given that addiction and mental health issues are extremely complex and that it's certainly a tragedy for those that are suffering from addictions and mental health problems but that it is equally tormenting for the families that love them, to the same minister. You've outlined some help for addicts. Can you tell Albertans: where are the supports for families of those suffering from those problems? They're also hurting. Can you tell me if you're supporting them?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. One of the first things that our government did when we came into office was to create the valuing mental health commission to review some of the work that government had been doing on mental health supports and to make sure that we had a more co-ordinated system. What we found was a very fragmented system, without supports for families. Our government, since the adoption of that report, has been working diligently to make sure that we have supports across the province so that it doesn't matter which part of Alberta you live in; if you need mental health support, that help will be available for you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you. Given that during the emergency debate we heard multiple stories about the tragedy of addiction in families – and I referenced one such family during my speech – and most members of this House recognize that their families and all families are at risk, to the same minister. Families are calling this government to action. Can you outline what steps are being taken with our youth to educate them and their parents to prevent the issues that our province is currently facing?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the very important question. Our government has been working very closely crossministerially to make sure that we've got supports available in schools and have that education piece available in addition to some of the public advertising that we've been doing on the concerns around the dangers of fentanyl as well as the take-home naloxone program. I am always very eager to meet with other members of this House and with members of our community about ideas for things that we can be doing that will help to improve the supports available as well as the services . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Indigenous Child and Family Services

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that there is an overrepresentation of indigenous children in care and that the Ministry of Children's Services is responsible for overseeing the delivery of child intervention services on-reserve, funded by the federal government, to the Minister of Children's Services: please explain how the government works with indigenous and federal partners to support indigenous youth in care.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for a very relevant question. We all know that the overrepresentation of indigenous youth is a heartbreaking reality of our child intervention system, and we know that all children, no matter where they grow up, deserve a safe, healthy, loving home and opportunities to thrive in strong communities. Now, while the number of indigenous children receiving services over the past few years has decreased, we know that there is more work to do. A ruling by the Human Rights Commission has asked the federal government to increase funding for on-reserve service delivery. We will continue to work . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the funding for supports is less on-reserve versus off-reserve, to the same minister: how is programming such as family support programs offered on-reserve?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I feel very strongly that where an Alberta child or family lives should never dictate the level of support that they receive. We need to do better for these children, for our youth, and for the families. As a former front-line service professional this issue is near to my heart. Our government is working with First Nations partners and other orders of government to make sure indigenous people have the support they need. For instance, Children's Services is working with Kapawe'no First Nation to develop a pilot program to license child care on-reserve. We are working with the Bigstone Cree Nation to establish an on-reserve reunification home . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the federal government is responsible for providing funding for on-reserve programs, to the same minister: what work is being done to advocate for more program supports on-reserve?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the reasons this government created a stand-alone Children's Services ministry was to maintain and strengthen supports to indigenous children, families, and communities. We are also focusing on the root causes affecting the safety and well-being of children, including poverty, addiction, mental health concerns, and family violence. We're committed to working with indigenous partners and the federal government to ensure that indigenous families have fair access to the support they need. We will continue to look at this issue as part of our ongoing work on the UN declaration and the TRC's calls to action.

Thank you.

Access to Information

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, we have heard time and time again from the media, the opposition, and from the Privacy Commissioner that the NDP refuses to improve our province's access to information. Last session the Official Opposition asked the Justice minister what she was doing to clean up the mess in her department, but it was no surprise to us when we didn't get an answer. The Privacy Commissioner's recent report clearly shows that she still has a problem. Minister, it's been two years now. Why should Albertans trust you to get the job done?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our government values the importance of transparency and access to information. It was clear from the reports that the backlogs had built up over a number of years. We've been increasing the number of full-time positions. We're increasing those positions from 10 to 18 in order to get this backlog cleared. I hope the members opposite will support the resources necessary to do that.

Mr. Cooper: Given that last year Canadian privacy experts described Alberta Justice as a rogue organization due to their manipulation of FOIP requests and since Alberta's Privacy Commissioner stated as recently as two weeks ago that the NDP government needs a top-down culture change to address a "lack of respect" for freedom and information, to the Premier. Your Justice minister is falling short. The experts say that you need a top-down culture change. When will you listen to those experts?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, it's always fun to see how people can pull one area within a report to try to create some massive drama. But the truth is that our government has worked diligently to increase investment in the area of FOIP. The number of FOIP requests, for example, in Executive Council has gone up threefold in the last two years, and we're working diligently to address those by putting the resources and the people where they're most needed. I hope that when they push for cuts in all ministries again, if they do the same as they did last year, they'll remember that they're proposing cutting things like FOIP, that we're actually investing in.

Mr. Cooper: Given that last fall the Premier stood in this Assembly and assured us that "transparency and openness are exactly what [this] government is endeavouring to do" and given that the Privacy Commissioner's report has found that FOIP requests sent to the Premier's office are delayed due to lengthy and unnecessary processing delays, to the Premier: is it a lack of leadership, or is having a trustworthy government simply not a priority?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our government is putting our money where our mouth is, so when it comes to increasing access, we're doubling down on efforts to make sure that we have the right resources aligned to be able to meet with the FOIP requirements. They would cut those offices. The same people that they're expecting to do more and more and more they have no respect for. All they want is to try to create some drama and some speculation when the truth is that we're putting our money where our mouth is. We're aligning resources, and we're committed to following the legislation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Social Service Provider Staff Safety

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In early February a 60-year-old woman was viciously attacked at the Elk Island youth ranch. The beating took place at 11 p.m., and the RCMP were not called until 1 a.m. Understandably, the minister was unable to answer critically important questions about the incident immediately after it occurred. It's been a month now. To the minister: was there a delay in emergency response because she was working alone that night?

The Speaker: I'm not exactly sure where this line of questioning is going. It could be a sub judice issue, so I would seek the guidance of the government as to how they may choose to answer this.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Out of respect for that, I'll just say that I respect the personal sacrifice of our front-line workers that undertake to support and protect others, but absolutely we all understand that that sacrifice should never mean that people are not supported to do their job safely. Certainly, we've been working with the facility to ensure the safety of both the staff and the residents. As an independently contracted service provider, certainly, Elk Island youth ranch is in the best position to speak to the specifics. However, we continue to ensure the safety and well-being of both the staff and residents . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that just days before the attack the judge presiding over a fatality inquiry for the murder of a care worker in Camrose released seven recommendations and given that the Premier indicated that this government planned to act quickly to hold itself accountable for recommendations from fatality inquiries, to the minister: what have you done since February 1 regarding these recommendations?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Of course, we watched with interest the recommendations that came out of that particular fatality inquiry. We are aware that one such recommendation was that the government begin tracking such recommendations. The reason for that was that under the former government they had never been tracked. So we have committed to come up with a system to do that tracking to increase transparency, and that's what we're going to do.

Mr. Gill: I'm talking about the recommendations released on February 1, Minister, not the previous government.

Given that two youth in care at the centre have been charged with attempted murder and given that one of them has since pleaded guilty to assaulting other workers in the months leading up to this attack and given that ensuring that workers know the histories of those in their care is a fatality report recommendation, again to the minister: was the care worker aware of the youth's history of violence, and was she trained to deal with it?

The Speaker: Please proceed, hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, in response to this terrible event our government has been working with the facility. We put a conditional status on their licence so that we would have oversight of their day-to-day decisions. There are a number of investigations and reviews currently under way: occupational health and safety, the RCMP, and Children's Services is reviewing policy and licensing requirements and accreditation. We will certainly be acting quickly on any findings because, as I stated, our government believes that no one's life and safety should be put unnecessarily at risk when they go to work. We're committed to taking a closer look at how we support safety for contracted service provider staff.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Carbon Levy and Agribusiness Costs

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, two-thirds of Albertans do not want this punitive, destructive carbon tax that's been levied on them. Examples of business costs skyrocketing have increased dramatically since its inception. I sit on the Alberta's Economic Future Committee. We are dealing with how to promote value in business and agriculture. The comment that we heard more than any other from presenters was that this carbon tax is making business increasingly noncompetitive.

On the weekend I sat down with the owner of one of the largest exporters of dehydrated forage products in Alberta. Their company produces dehydrated alfalfa and other forage products for both domestic and foreign export. They also send dehydrated corn and barley silage into Asian and Middle East countries. This is a niche market that they created. This should be an Alberta success story. This is as value-added as it gets.

Unfortunately, the implementation of the carbon tax is imposing a huge competitive disadvantage on this Alberta exporter. During the month of January alone their natural gas bill increased by over $20,000 from the carbon tax. This cost cannot be passed on to consumers. Imagine: $260,000 a year in increased tax. The carbon tax has also increased trucking rates to the plant by 8.3 per cent. The annual cost of the carbon tax on this business is higher than the profit margin. This plant operates year-round and has 50 full-time employees. Millions have been invested in the dehydration equipment. If this entrepreneurial agribusiness disappears from Alberta, a huge market for Alberta hay producers disappears with it.

Mr. Speaker, the negative realities of this crippling tax on business and families are becoming clearer by the day. Across that imaginary line they call the 49th parallel, those folks don't pay a carbon tax. This Alberta company cannot be competitive in this market in a carbon tax environment. You are killing business, Premier. Axe this tax instead. Act like you care about . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Bill 2

An Act to Remove Barriers for Survivors of Sexual and Domestic Violence

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce first reading of Bill 2, An Act to Remove Barriers for Survivors of Sexual and Domestic Violence.

Bill 2 proposes amendments to the Limitations Act that would eliminate legal deadlines for commencing civil claims related to sexual and domestic violence. These changes include the following types of claims: sexual assault and sexual misconduct or nonsexual assault involving a minor, an intimate relationship, or a dependant.

Mr. Speaker, the decision to come forward is extremely personal and can be very difficult. Survivors of sexual and domestic violence should be empowered to do so on their own terms. The proposed amendments would put Alberta in line with the majority of the country. However, this change would also make Alberta a leader across the country in addressing sexual misconduct in intimate relationships. This is a change Albertans have asked for. This government listens to Albertans, and we are taking action to address their concerns.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 2 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, not all Albertans were elated to receive their carbon tax rebates. I have a bank draft made out to the Provincial Treasurer for $100 from Mr. Stan Olszowka of St. Paul, Alberta, and he writes:

I am refunding my carbon tax refund. To accept it on my part would be like accepting blood money for over educated stupidity.

This money could be used to develop refrigeration units to stop global warming.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm disappointed to table this document dated September 28, 2016, that shows that the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, the executive director of the Wildrose Party, is an active member of the Wildrose on Campus club, with the subtext: "As the executive director of the Wildrose Party I probably should be involved with our Wildrose on Campus group." I have the requisite five copies.

Ms McKittrick: Mr. Speaker, I would like to table two articles – one is called Is Wildrose Still Cool to the Reality of Man-made Global Warming? and the other one is called Wildrose Still Seems to Be Flirting with Denials of Man-made Climate Change in 2017 – in response to a Standing Order 29(2)(a) question I was asked by the Member for Calgary-Lougheed and in response to my question to the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of a Twitter message from Wildrose on Campus titled Feminism Is Cancer. "You and I both know that feminism is cancer. To create a dialogue on campus, we have decided to take action." It's an advertisement for The Red Pill, a movie on men's rights activists. I table five copies.

I have a second tabling, Mr. Speaker, a little explanation of The Red Pill by MRA – that's men's rights activist – Roosh V. This is titled MRA Roosh V Wants to Legalize Rape to Teach Women a Lesson. That's what happens when you take the red pill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As promised yesterday, I'm pleased to table this article entitled Wesley Band Hosts Meeting to Discuss Community Solutions for Drug Problem, the gist of which is that "this is a crisis we don't even have a name for in our language" and that "we need to battle this demon upon us."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of an article I referred to yesterday from the Globe and Mail called A Killer High: How Canada Got Addicted to Fentanyl.

Thank you.

The Speaker: I believe we may be at points of order. If I recall, I think there are a total of three points of order.

The Opposition House Leader.

Point of Order Language Creating Disorder

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I rise to speak to a point of order. I will be speaking specifically from Standing Order 23, "uses abusive . . . language of a nature likely to create disorder." That's 23(j) for those of you following along at home. I will speak to both points of order that were raised by my hon. colleague from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre here, on the first one predominantly because I have some significant concerns about language that the Minister of Health used. She used language that was likely to create disorder and, in particular, made allegations about members of this Chamber.

Let me be very clear that no one in this caucus thinks or agrees with statements that were made by members of Wildrose on Campus. The statements that were made are totally inappropriate, completely wrong, and do not represent myself or any member of this caucus. I had the opportunity this morning to rise in this Chamber and also denounce those comments, and I am in agreement with my colleagues that those comments are totally inappropriate.

However, today in question period the Minister of Health said that the Wildrose said that feminism is a cancer. No one inside this Chamber has ever or would ever make the statement that was made by members of an association that is no longer connected to the Wildrose. For the Minister of Health to imply that it was said by a member of this Chamber is not likely going to create order. I cannot be more clear that I, the House leader of the Wildrose Official Opposition, and our caucus denounce these sorts of statements. In fact, Mr. Speaker, I feel personally responsible to do things that create an environment where more individuals, including those of all genders and females in particular, would feel welcome and safe to engage in the political process.

Making allegations like the Health minister did today is not going to create order in this Chamber. I think the Health minister understands that. I think the Health minister understands a lot about my personal motives and my personal beliefs. For her to make such a claim, that would imply all members of this Chamber had made statements like that, is not going to be part of productive discourse in this Chamber.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to start by saying that I accept the hon. member's assertion that he and other members of the Wildrose caucus have disavowed themselves from those statements. Nevertheless, what the hon. Deputy Premier was saying is that there are repeated what she called bozo eruptions coming from the Wildrose membership, which indicates a deeper problem, and this was just one example.

Other examples, as we know: the famous examples before the 2012 election relating to the lake of fire for gay and lesbian people or on the denial of climate change, and we've seen some language by, actually, caucus members around that as well. There are a number of other instances that the member has cited, including the willingness of members, including the leader of the party, to appear on Rebel media, which is noted for its spread of anti-Islamic hatred and, as well, homophobia and a number of other things that I think Rebel media has talked about, yet we've yet to see members opposite disavow that particular organization. They attend the rallies – the Deputy Premier pointed that out – as well as appear on their online programming.

The Deputy Premier did not use unparliamentary language. She referred to very specific matters that have happened. Now, whether or not individual members opposite support or agree with any of those things is not what the Deputy Premier was talking about. She wasn't talking about members opposite; she was talking about the party. She was talking about views that are within the party that keep popping up from time to time that are very disturbing and very contrary to the views of most Albertans and certainly the ones that we represent. So I would submit, Mr. Speaker, that there is no point of order.

I would just like to quote from House of Commons Procedure and Practice, which is very clear that while the opposition may not like an answer, it doesn't mean that it's a point of order. It says:

The Speaker ensures that replies adhere to the dictates of order, decorum and parliamentary language. The Speaker, however, is not responsible for the quality or content of replies to questions. In most instances, when a point of order or a question of privilege has been raised in regard to a response to an oral question, the Speaker has ruled that the matter is a disagreement among Members over the facts surrounding the issue. As such, these matters are more a question of debate and do not constitute a breach of the rules or of privilege.

Mr. Speaker, with the greatest of respect, I don't believe that the Deputy Premier impugned members opposite but, rather, was talking about some basic problems within the political party itself. I think that her answer was not unparliamentary, and I would ask you to so rule.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I want to ensure that I'm on the same page. There were, in fact, two points of order, that we're dealing with now. As I understood, the first one was about a comment made concerning, I believe – I have a copy of the Blues with me here: "Why is your party spending its time calling the fight for women's equality a cancer on our society?"

Can I just get a clarification that we're dealing with both points of order together, hon. House leader?

Mr. Cooper: I will withdraw the second point of order because it's on a very similar topic. My concern was the minister saying: Wildrose said feminism is a cancer. That's what I believed was said. It's certainly not true. I don't have a copy of the Blues. I'm not sure if that is the only reference in the answer, if that's what you call it, that you have access to now or if, in fact, those words were said. Those are the words that I had heard. But this is the only point of order that I will need to have dealt with on this issue.

The Speaker: Well, just for the sake of clarity, thank you, hon. member, for making that point. The Blues have it so that we all are dealing with the same document.

I believe the point that was being focused on in the first point as well as the second was:

Yesterday the Wildrose called feminism a cancer, and you guys want to join them. So let me ask the Leader of the Opposition a simple question: why is your party spending its time calling the fight for women's equality a cancer on our society?

Then there was a second reference, which I believe the Government House Leader addressed, which was the "Wildrose bozo eruptions."

Let me just say this. In its purest sense this probably is not a point of order but a difference of opinion. However, the language used in those kinds of comments is not helpful to this House agreement on arriving at good policy. You all know which buttons to push on the other side. If you choose to do that, it just consumes your time. You can get the anxiety of the place. In this particular instance I don't believe it was a point of order. However, particularly when you're answering these kinds of questions, I would caution you, hon. House leader, that your members be more cautious about the words that they are using.

Point of order 3. I believe you raised this one, Government House Leader.

Point of Order Reflections on Nonmembers

Mr. Mason: I did indeed, Mr. Speaker. I raised it in response to comments made by the MLA for Strathmore-Brooks with respect to the Public Affairs Bureau. I heard him refer to members of the Public Affairs Bureau as partisan bureaucrats and, I believe, also partisan hacks. There were a number of other terms that were used along a similar vein.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think it's important to distinguish between a criticism of the organization and an attack on the public servants who work within it. If the opposition feels, as it may legitimately do, though I don't agree with it at this point, that the Public Affairs Bureau or any other agency or department of government is behaving with a bias towards the government, that's one thing. However, when a member stands up and singles out the individuals that work for an organization and labels them, he not only demeans those individuals, who have no recourse to defend themselves, but also undermines their ability to do their work. I think that is unacceptable. I've seen on a number of occasions that this particular member is unable to distinguish those two things. To him, in my experience, they're one and the same, and he can't stop at that line where the organization ends and the person begins.

Mr. Speaker, there are a number of references in the rules to nonmembers, people who are not in the House and are unable to defend themselves. Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules & Forms on page 151, section 493(4), states, "The Speaker has cautioned Members to exercise great care in making statements about persons who are outside the House and unable to reply."

O'Brien and Bosc on pages 616 and 617 states, "The Speaker has ruled that Members have a responsibility to protect the innocent, not only from outright slander, but from any slur directly or indirectly implied."

On June 25, 2015, Mr. Speaker, you yourself cautioned members, stating, "Members must remember that when they refer to people outside of the Assembly, those individuals have no ability to respond to the allegations that may have been made in here."

Your predecessor, Speaker Zwozdesky, in 2012 made similar cautions. For example, on November 26 he said, "We should not be referring to people who are not here and not able to defend themselves."

Mr. Speaker, I certainly don't have a problem ruleswise with the members criticizing an organization of government if they feel that it's demonstrating a bias. I may not agree with it, but that's fair game. But to label the individuals as hacks and to suggest that they are partisan people who are there in order to promote one party over another is simply beyond the pale. It should not be accepted in this House, and I would ask that you so rule and that you ask the hon. member to stand up and withdraw the remarks and apologize to those individuals as well as to the House.

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Well, Mr. Speaker, thank you. I rise to discuss a point of order here. I think if we have learned anything this afternoon with respect to what is a matter of debate and what isn't, clearly you have just ruled on what is a matter of debate, and I think we have seen that here again.

The member opposite made a career out of criticizing this particular department, and that is exactly what we saw today from the Member for Strathmore-Brooks. In fact, he used some of the Government House Leader's own words from five years ago, when he was doing the exact same thing. What did happen this afternoon was that the Member for Strathmore-Brooks did not point out any of the individuals that do have significant ties to the NDP that currently work inside this department. It would have been very easy for him to do that because it is well known that there are lots of partisan connections to individuals who are currently working in the PAB. What happened was that the Member for Strathmore-Brooks asked a very important question on how this branch of government, which has been historically partisan, is continuing to do so.

I don't think there is a case that is more clear with respect to an issue of debate as what we have before us this afternoon, and for the Government House Leader to suggest anything different is a new set of reality for the Government House Leader from when he was in opposition to when he was in government, where he used to express concern around the exact same things that the government is currently engaging in. Now he's defending the very behaviour of those individuals. Clearly, this is a matter of debate, one that I anticipate more debate to take place on in the future. I would hope that you, too, would rule that this is just that, a matter of debate.

The Speaker: Any other members?

Well, let me just be clear as to what the Blues say. To the Government House Leader, I see no nor did I hear any reference to use of the word "hacks." What he said was: "They're not professionals; they're party bureaucrats, Mr. Speaker. They are using their position in government to spend taxpayers' money."

Again, you're both zero for zero. This is also not a point of order, in my opinion. The earlier positions that were taken, as I recall, were with respect to where individuals were named, and even today in this House I heard the use of a person's name that probably could have been left out of our discussion in this Chamber. But in both cases the tone, the use of words is not very constructive and not as respectful as the goals that I know all of you are aspiring to, and you don't need me to tell you yet another time to exercise your caution and your respect for each other by avoiding such language.

Orders of the Day

Transmittal of Estimates

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I received a message from Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, which I now transmit to you.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order!

The Speaker: The Lieutenant Governor transmits estimates of certain sums required by the government for the service of the province for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2017, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

Please be seated.

The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to table the 2016-17 supplementary supply estimates, No. 2. When supplementary estimates are tabled, section 4(5) of the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act requires that an update to the consolidated fiscal plan be tabled.

Accordingly, I also wish to table the 2016-17 third-quarter fiscal update, which serves as the updated fiscal plan. The quarterly fiscal update provides a framework for additional spending authority for the Legislative Assembly and for the government.

Mr. Speaker, these supplementary supply estimates will provide additional spending to 18 government departments. When passed, the estimates will authorize an appropriate increase of $1.6 billion in expense funding and $125 million in financial transactions funding for the government. The largest share of these amounts will fund the Fort McMurray wildfire disaster. These estimates will also authorize the transfer of $141 million, with a net transfer of $120 million for the previously approved capital investment vote to the expense vote across 14 departments.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Ms Jansen moved, seconded by Ms Miller, that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois Mitchell, CM, AOE, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Debate adjourned March 7]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's my pleasure today to rise to respond to Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor Lois Mitchell's gracious reading of the Speech from the Throne. That speech began by recognizing that we are a diverse province but that in our diversity we share common values, those of compassion, hard work, and justice, and that we at our best are an open and inclusive society, one province, one people on a common journey towards a common future. I say "at our best" because, admittedly, that's an ideal we haven't always risen to. I think back to the Famous Five, who had to fight for women in our province to have the right to vote and to eventually be elected to this House.

I think back to the First Nations, who walked this land before us, where we stand today on Treaty 6 territory, and after signing those treaties, by whose grace we stand here today, were corralled onto reserves, their children forced into residential schools and their voices not fully heard in our democratic process until 1960.

I think of the many immigrants who came here to build better lives and found themselves confronted with prejudice like the Alberta senior I spoke with at the recent celebrations for Black History Month, a son of the original Exodusters, who told me that his first language was Ukrainian due to the close ties forged between his family and local Ukrainian families as they both faced discrimination.

I think of the Klein cuts of the 1990s, when thousands of Albertans – doctors, teachers, nurses, child service workers – were thrown out of work, tuition spiked, and Albertans suffering with addictions and mental illness were turned out into the street.

I think of the debate in this very Chamber where members of this House stood to argue that vulnerable LGBTQ-plus youth should have to go to court to earn the right to form a peer support group in their school. Mr. Speaker, I dare say that those were moments that did not make life better for many Albertans and their families.

However, there are times when we live up to our ideals. As Her Honour read in the Speech from the Throne, last year “Albertans came together in a time of extraordinary danger. As the Wood Buffalo wildfires tore through communities, we stood as one, as fellow citizens with a shared responsibility to each other.” Indeed, I’m encouraged to think of the thousands of Albertans who donated time, money, and goods to support the residents of Wood Buffalo.

I think of the thousands of Albertans who rose up to demand that the government of Alberta amend Bill 10 to provide true support for LGBTQ-plus students in our schools.

I think of the 400 people who attended our Legislature’s first official recognition of Black History Month, the dozens of articles and stories I saw in our local media celebrating the stories and contributions of Albertans of African descent.

I remember standing here in this Legislature shortly after our election when our Premier on behalf of the government of Alberta apologized to the First Nations people for the injustices visited on them through the residential school system.

I think of the thousands of Albertans who formed community organizations, social agencies, volunteered their time to triage the damage that was wreaked by short-sighted cuts in the funding of our systems of community support and mental health, organizations that have become such important partners with government in delivering street-level services and addressing issues of substance use and homelessness.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta is at its best when we work together, when we stand together, and when we are committed to government that includes and looks out for all Albertans, a government that, when faced with a crisis, doesn’t abandon its responsibility to protect and maintain the core services Albertans rely on, a government committed to making their lives better.

Mr. Speaker, we’re well aware of the impact the historic drop in the price of oil has had on families in our province, and since our election we’ve been working to help protect them through this economic downturn and make their lives better. We’ve maintained stable, predictable funding for health care and education, protecting key services and vital jobs that support everyday Alberta families. While we’ve instituted a freeze on salaries for cabinet ministers, MLAs, political staff, and management in the civil service, we have not resorted to the sorts of sweeping layoffs that devastated Edmonton’s economy in the 1990s, affecting many families in my constituency of Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Speaker, we’re well aware of the integral role that the energy industry plays in our economy and the need to ensure that it can continue and be a sustainable source of good jobs and prosperity in a carbon-constrained future. That’s why we worked with industry, First Nations, and environmental groups to develop the climate leadership plan, a plan that will put our province at the forefront of innovation in clean energy and sustainable resource extraction while protecting the environment and all those who depend on it; a plan that secured the approval of a new pipeline to the west coast, a pipeline that will help ensure that we get the best value for our product, supporting good, mortgage-paying jobs in our province; a plan that will create even more in the development of a robust renewable-energy industry and support communities as we transition away from coal-fired power generation; a plan that supports Alberta families in reducing their energy use; a plan in which all Albertans work together to build a stronger, more sustainable economy for our future.

Of course, our modernized royalty framework also provides new incentives, helping to reduce costs and improve efficiencies, and has led directly to an increase in drilling activity and the jobs that that provides.

I was happy in the last session of the Legislature to have the opportunity to co-sponsor legislation to establish the Alberta investor and capital infrastructure tax credits, programs that will help to attract investment to grow our growing start-up and technology industries, many of which get their start at Startup Edmonton and TEC Edmonton right here in Edmonton-Centre, industries that help to diversify our economy and provide good opportunities for young Alberta families.

Our increased investments in infrastructure are also supporting good jobs in construction while maintaining and increasing our stock of much-needed hospitals and schools.

At the same time, Mr. Speaker, we’re looking out for those that need an extra hand. I have the honour of representing our government as a member of the stewardship round-table for EndPovertyEdmonton. In discussions and recent reports EPE noted that the new Alberta tax credit and the increase in minimum wage are important steps towards lifting hundreds of families in our city out of poverty and giving them the opportunity to truly thrive in their communities. These are concrete actions that make life better, not only for those particular families but for all Albertans, as we work together to build stronger communities and local economies.

We’re investing over $1 billion to upgrade and increase our stock of affordable housing and will shortly be releasing Alberta’s first affordable housing strategy, a plan to ensure that all Alberta families can afford a dignified place to live.

Mr. Speaker, we’re investing in many other areas to support those in need. I spoke at length yesterday about how proud I am to see our government’s commitment to implement the principles of harm reduction. As stated clearly in the Speech from the Throne, we will move forward with supervised consumption services and other harm reduction measures to address the rising tragedy of opioid overdose deaths. I was very happy to hear several members of the third party rise and declare that they also support these sites and these principles during our emergency debate yesterday. I look forward to hearing members of our Official Opposition also voice their support.

We’ve increased funding to FCSS, which funds many important community organizations around our province. We’ve increased funding for women’s shelters in multiple municipalities.

Mr. Speaker, our government is committed to making life better for Alberta’s families. Every week I see all of my colleagues, these other 53 men and women that I have the honour of serving with and, indeed, members of the other parties in this House, out serving their constituents, out working in their communities. I can’t tell you the number of times I’ve gone to events and had opportunities to go out and meet with groups and been told: we’ve never had an MLA here before. I am so pleased to see that all members of this House have begun to have a renewed commitment to the people of Alberta, that they're spending time on the ground listening to the people, working with the people who work on the front lines, who know the work that needs to be done.

Our government remains committed to working with them, to supporting them, to ensuring that we continue to build the facilities we need, provide the services that are required and that we are there to support them through this difficult time, a difficult time, Mr. Speaker, that we will come through together. We are united as Albertans. Our government is there to support, to make Alberta's families' lives better.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any questions or comments for the Member for Edmonton-Centre under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing and hearing none, I would recognize the Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As always, it's an absolute privilege and honour to be in this House to speak to the people of Alberta and lay out a vision as well as critique the government's budget, in this particular case, the thorn – the throne speech. I didn't mean to say "thorn speech," but I understand how that came out, sir.

With respect, you know, it was only two years ago that I had an opportunity to see, for instance, our health care in action. Mr. Speaker, I sat beside my son for four or five months while I watched him die, and it was a tragedy. But what I really saw was a health system that failed my family, failed my son, and fails an amazing number of people in Alberta.

Since the time that I've had the privilege of being the Leader of the Official Opposition, I've travelled the province. I don't stay here in Edmonton under the dome too long, Mr. Speaker, because you get what is called dome disease. That's when you don't understand what the people of Alberta are truly looking for. The people of Alberta have told me, when I've travelled the province – and I've spoken to them in many dozens and dozens of town halls and spoken to literally thousands of people just in the last six weeks and in the previous two years – many stories, many examples of how the health care system has failed them.

Mr. Speaker, I had an opportunity to see seniors in my own community that had been promised, over three times by three different Premiers, a seniors' long-term care facility. Over a 10-year period those promises were broken time and time again. That's why I got back into politics, because politics is important. Policies that this government brings forward are very important. They impact the lives of people: health care, education, forest fires. Yes, seniors, the people that built this great province and this great country, have been ignored by successive governments for too long.

We need a government that will respond to the people based upon what the people need and respects the people, all people, all Albertans and governs for them all equally. A good government truly is practical, is pragmatic, makes decisions based upon the best interests of the people at the time. They are not ideological right. They are not driven by ideological left. They make the decisions based upon the circumstance the people are involved in.

I've watched democratic principles that our party and Albertans strongly believe in be threatened: the principle that the people should make the decision and have the ultimate say. I knew in my heart that Albertans deserve so much more, Mr. Speaker. That's why I've dedicated my life now to make a better Alberta, to make it better for future generations, to make sure that families are supported by their government and supported by their health care system. I knew I could no longer stand on the sidelines.

Although a lot has changed in the past two years, there is one thing that will always stay the same: my resounding belief in the spirit and the people of Alberta, the spirit of our pioneers, our sodbusters, our men and women that drill for oil, that drive the big trucks, all of these people that have built the greatest place in the world to live, work, play, and raise a family. That's Alberta, Mr. Speaker. That's the Alberta I love, but I have seen some of it being dismantled, and I am concerned.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, I saw what I would say – just about a year ago, one of the most significant times in my life, I saw the people of Fort McMurray flee their homes to run into the arms, the open arms, of other Albertans. It was a moment of significant pride for me to see the firefighters, the emergency workers, the RCMP personnel that were not just saving lives but saving homes and property at their own risk.

I do serve a caucus, Mr. Speaker, that is a proud caucus, one that works extremely hard, that is focused on the principles of making sure all Albertans are served equally. I believe I work right now in a caucus where some of the best values, some of the best things of who we are as Albertans are truly found. They've walked hand in hand with our agriculture workers, our energy sector workers, office assistants, small-business owners. They see the same things I do because we are going across the province doing town halls.

Although it's a great privilege to be able to do what I do, I've never seen in the eyes of Albertans such despair, such lack of hope. Albertans want something different, and they're worried about what this government has done in the last two years. They are concerned, and I don't think anybody in this House, including the government, is not aware of that concern.

I went to Grande Cache just a few months ago. I talked to a person that had owned and run a restaurant for many years, a small-business owner, closing their doors, and would not sign a new lease, Mr. Speaker. Just this summer it's up, and they are gone because they don't trust what's happening. I had a couple come to me that had just moved out of their home into their car. They were living in their car – living in their car – in Alberta, the promised land, because they were kicked out of their house. They couldn't afford it, had not had a job now, I believe, for about 10 months.

It's very concerning, Mr. Speaker, and I think the largest concern is that what this budget is doing, what the throne speech is doing, is throwing the problems onto future generations. That's what I'm concerned about. We're spending more money than we've ever spent. Bigger deficits, bigger debt: somebody has to pay that. It's not going to be these people, and it likely won't be us – we won't be able to pay it off, but we will pay for it – because it's going to take far too long.

The longer you travel down that road of debt and deficit and borrowing money, the longer it takes to get back the other direction. Mr. Speaker, I think we have to reach up as a group, as all MLAs in this place, especially the government, and recognize that if we don't turn around and go in a different direction, there is going to be more significant pain, more Albertans that move into their cars, more small businesses that don't renew their leases.

I see people without hope who are desperate for a brighter future. They're resigned and frustrated – and I don't blame them – because they've seen very little help out of this government. Now, I've heard platitudes, and I've heard things and plans and suggestions. In fact, we had a job plan that came up with one job after nine months, the minister's job. That was the only job it created, Mr. Speaker, although it cost a lot of money. That's why we can't get this wrong. We've got to get it right. That's why I truly don't understand why the government doesn't reach out to the opposition and say: "How can we do it better for all Albertans? How can we work together to create a better budget?"

Let's not have any more unemployed Albertans. We've already had a hundred thousand unemployed Albertans in just 16 months. We say that by conservative estimates there are 200,000 Albertans unemployed right now, today, and very few of them – well, about a hundred thousand of them can only get unemployment insurance. Mr. Speaker, 65,000 jobs in the last year, over 20,000 in January alone, were lost. I'm concerned because we don't seem to be doing anything or learning anything from our mistakes. I'm sorry; it was 45,000 full-time jobs lost since last year.

You know, this carbon tax is troubling me as well. We have a carbon tax that by all estimates is going to be costing families in Alberta at least a thousand dollars out of their pocket. Well, the rubber-stamping of Ottawa's carbon tax is now bringing that number up to $2,500 per family. That's going to come out of our pockets, every Alberta family's pockets, Mr. Speaker, out of the money they currently earn. They aren't going to have the money, that $2,500, to pay for their priorities, to take their children to sports or drama classes or ballet. The things and the priorities they want to spend on for their children are no more because this government has taken $2,500 out of their pockets per year and are going to pay it on projects that we don't know much about. A small, small portion is going for these green projects but, the truth is, a very small portion compared to the large part that's coming out of Albertans' pockets.

I did hear the economic development minister stand up in the House yesterday and say that he has – and I quote – the back of the coal workers across the province. Now, Mr. Speaker, these coal workers drive trucks. They do. You know, whether you go on highways 63, 55, 40, 881, or anywhere across the province, you can't ride bikes on those highways. I would say that there are very few coal plants that you can ride a bike to from your house. In fact, very few Albertans outside of the major urban centres and some of the mid-sized centres are able to use bikes because of the infrastructure involved and also because they live and work so far from each other.

We have large distances to travel in Alberta, especially in rural Alberta. That means that for rural Albertans this carbon tax is going to cost a lot more. We don't have those opportunities that other places do have although we do have a great quality of life. These Albertans pay for their own gas, and with gas prices going up, it's going to mean even less money in their pockets.

The NDP have made everything more expensive, whether it's food in your grocery store that's going to be more expensive because they had to pay more to get it shipped in, Mr. Speaker, or more for construction, for farming, for ranching, for industry. All of these will be more expensive, and Albertans ultimately pay the bill.

Now, I've heard them talk about big industry: "Oh, big industry is going to pay some of that," or "These guys are going to pay some of that," or "You know, it's going to be revenue neutral." Well, it's not. The $3 billion, the $5 billion, whatever billion dollars they want to make it, will come out of Albertans' pockets, Mr. Speaker, and those Albertans don't make the money these folks do. Maybe they should try to take some of their money and understand how the rest of the people live in Alberta, how they live week to week, paycheck to paycheck, month to month.

We do have one of the largest consumer debts in North America as well. So as interest rates become higher, as all of these different policies come into play, whether it's the accelerated shutdown of coal, whether it's the carbon tax and the doubling of the carbon tax in just a short period of time, whether it's the uncertainty in the marketplace that they send by way of things like royalty reviews, these things hurt, and they hurt Albertans.

You know, I had an opportunity recently to go to the United States and go, particularly, to Washington and New York, and I did it on my own dime. I had an opportunity to speak to many investors, including other people in the U.S. State Department and industry and other areas, energy in particular. In speaking to these other investors from right across New York and even Toronto, they told me in private meetings, one-on-one. I said: "How can we get people to invest in Alberta? How can we bring back the Alberta advantage, where we received billions of dollars in economic activity and investment each and every month for years?" Alberta was the golden goose. I said: "How can we get them back? How can we get them from the TSX? How can we get them from New York?" They said that it was simple: "Change your government." They said that to me, Mr. Speaker.

You see, most Albertans and most Canadians and the people in the investment community are smart. They know that we sit on the third-largest oil reserve in the world here, 1.9 trillion barrels of oil, Mr. Speaker, and we know where it is. All we have to do is manage it properly as a resource that belongs to the people. It doesn't belong to these people. It belongs to the people of Alberta. These people have a fiduciary obligation to manage it properly, but what did they do? They capped it. It was already oversubscribed, over 100 megatonnes, and they capped it. They broke more contracts. That's not the signal you send to the investment community.

Without the investment community investing in Alberta, we don't have businesses. It would have been just as well for the Premier to have stood up outside the Legislature, here on the front steps, with a big sign that read: Alberta is closed for business. That's exactly what they've been doing, and it's not helpful because those businesses, those investors that come into Alberta, that create jobs, are the ones that ultimately will create employment for Albertans. It's not the government. We've seen what they've done. They made a job plan, created one job, and that was for the minister. One job, Mr. Speaker. That's ridiculous. It took them eight to nine months to figure out that it wasn't working. They could have just come across the floor and asked. I would have told them that that's not going to work.

I've been in business for years, Mr. Speaker, many different kinds of businesses, and I can tell you one thing that I don't do. I don't rely on the government for handouts because they don't work. Creating an environment of low taxation, low regulation, removing red tape, cutting taxes and individual taxes so that people have more money in their pockets, so they'll take that money out and spend it: that's what we need. We need a government that understands that their philosophy, increasing taxes, is only hurting the people of Alberta.

All these pet projects, Mr. Speaker – and I don't even want to get on the free light bulb situation, but let's talk about that just for a moment. We have this government that's focused on free light bulbs installed by a company from Ontario. That's creating employment. And what's happening? We have 100,000 Albertans that are seeking unemployment insurance. I would say that at least 50,000, a conservative estimate, can't get employment benefits anymore because we have a federal government that's not listening to us, and we have an Alberta government, a local government, that's not working with us.

Both levels of government are working against the people of Alberta and our industries. They need to reverse direction, Mr. Speaker. They need to stop thinking they know better. They need to stop believing they can spend Albertans' money better than Albertans can. Albertans know what they're doing. They're smart; they're savvy. They're so savvy that they're not going to spend any money in Alberta until this government is gone. That's how savvy they are. They recognize the steps that they're taking.

Free light bulbs and a hundred thousand Albertans that are trying to collect unemployment insurance: I think they have their priorities mixed up, capping our oil sands while we have a hundred thousand workers in the oil sands leaving town. We have a community that had 2,100 homes destroyed by fire. Free light bulbs, Mr. Speaker, while we can't even build our homes in Fort McMurray: how ridiculous.

What do they say, Mr. Speaker? They call us the embarrassing cousins on the international stage – and it wasn't one of their backbenchers; it was their Premier, their leader; that tells you what their attitude is – or, better yet, that we were in the Dark Ages before they came to government. Well, the way they're going with our industries, especially our oil and gas industry, the only thing left will be to burn wood like in the Dark Ages. But, of course, there'll be a carbon tax, so we're probably not going to be able to do that.

Mr. Speaker, they capped our oil sands, they've raised costs for small businesses significantly, they've raised personal and business taxes, and they brought in the ever-popular Bill 6. I can promise you that every time I mention that in any town hall across any community in Alberta, I get applause by saying that I'm going to take it away and destroy it, which we will do within 30 days of a Wildrose mandate.

Our balance sheet has gone off the edge of a cliff. Downgrades have happened. Laugh if you want, but we have had our finances downgraded, and we're in for more. Do you care? No. Mr. Speaker, we had somebody stand up from the NDP and say: it's not going to affect us. Well, why don't you ask some people that have bad credit how much they'd like good credit? It makes a big difference: you borrow for less, your payments are better, and everybody wants to lend you money.

But we're going down a different path. I've shown you that path. It's so far down there that it's out the door and down the driveway, and we need to come back. This throne speech: $60 billion is what we're going to owe when that government is gone. Now, that's $2 billion in interest payments each and every year. Two billion dollars, Mr. Speaker. That's $1,800, approximately, more or less, for every single family in Alberta to pay that they didn't pay two years ago.

Now, Mr. Speaker, you know what's happening to interest rates. I know you're a sophisticated man. You know that the United States is going to put up their interest rates, and we have to follow. We don't have a choice, or else we're going to be living in inflation.

Right now we have the lowest interest rates that I've ever seen, but I remember 19 per cent. I am that old. I remember paying 19 per cent on a mortgage, and I remember, too, Mr. Speaker, that when I looked at that mortgage payment and that schedule for payments, I couldn't believe how little of the house I was paying off. It was all going, almost all of it – I think 90 per cent when I started – towards interest payments. That's exactly where we're going with this government, interest payments, like Ontario at $310 billion, more or less. That's a billion dollars a month in interest.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I'm not just throwing out numbers to throw them out. A billion dollars: I could build so many schools for that for the people of Alberta, in health care hire nurses, front-line workers that actually get things done, that accomplish things, that don't just fill in NDP paperwork and increase regulation. These are things that really matter. A billion dollars in borrowing every six months: they can say what they want, but it is going to cost Albertans a lot in the long term for our structural investments that are necessary, whether it's infrastructure or schools or hospitals.

We're going to be spending $2 billion a year not on those priorities but going towards big banks. I can't think of anyone that I'd rather see not have my money than big banks except for NDP governments.

Mr. Speaker, I'm not going to take much more time, but I would like to say this to you. Compare free light bulbs with what's going on in Medicine Hat or Calgary, where we have 30 per cent of the buildings downtown vacant today – two years ago they were full – or 200,000 Albertans that are unemployed. I don't think they care about free light bulbs, and they certainly don't want any Ontario companies sending people into their homes to install them, and I think that goes for shower heads and thermostats.

I think right now this government should take a very serious look at what they're doing, what they've done, start talking to the other members in this place, and consult properly with us because we are so far down that road, Mr. Speaker, that it's going to take my great-grandchildren to get us anywhere near back to where we are today even.

I believe that under a vision of a Wildrose government, we can be number one in health care again, we can restore outcomes and make sure we work with a great bureaucracy and public servants that care about their work and care about their job and don't just care about a paycheck. Our public servants are the best in the world, but they're operating in a system that will not work. It cannot work, Mr. Speaker, not when you have one manager for every five employees. That's called paperwork, and they do paperwork to accomplish paperwork to accomplish more paperwork but don't worry about outcomes. I've seen it. It's terrible.

I did hear some bellyaching from the other side. They're right. It's not the worst case in Alberta, AHS. So Alberta Health Services is not the worst. The worst is the government itself, who has three workers for every one manager. Yes, Mr. Speaker, three workers for every one manager. I'm not even going to tell you how much they get paid on average because you are going to get so upset that you'll jump out of your chair.

Mr. Speaker, all we're suggesting and all we've ever suggested is: let's not cut; let's just freeze. Let's freeze wages and freeze hiring. Let's look at 2 cents out of every single dollar. We proposed 2 cents out of every dollar. They weren't interested in that. We proposed $2 billion in savings just over a year ago; 10 ideas on how to not destroy one job in Alberta but how to lessen our bill by $2 billion. They ignored every single one of those suggestions except one, which was a reduction in the small-business tax. Thank you for that. One thing out of 10. They could do better by just listening to us on this side.

We came forward with a 12-step jobs action plan. Not one of those steps was taken, Mr. Speaker. I would say that we had pretty good foresight because since we came forward with that plan, we've had 60,000 or 70,000 people lose their jobs. Full-time jobs, not part-time jobs. Full-time jobs. These are jobs where people go out to work and bring back the bacon to support their family. Not now.

You wonder why so many people are at home and depressed? It's because they don't see any hope from this government whatsoever. This government is not going out and listening to them. They are going out and telling them. Bill 6 was no different. The carbon tax: well, I think we can clearly see where Albertans are on that and free light bulbs. Mr. Speaker, these people are so out of touch that they might as well go and govern in Ontario. I think they'd be more at home there.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I'm not going to take a lot of time, but I do want to just ask what we get for all of this extra spending that we do. As I've mentioned many times in this place before, we spend about $2,700 per man, woman, and child in Alberta more than

British Columbia. We spend between $8 billion and $10 billion more every year than B.C. does when you adjust for population; $8 billion to $10 billion. We're on just over a $52 billion budget. That's a lot of money. I have been to B.C. I don't think that's any capitalist bastion. In fact, I would suggest to you that since it costs a lot more to, for instance, pave highways and create highways there than it does in Alberta and it costs a lot more for other services, it doesn't really make sense that we're 20 per cent more expensive. We need to avoid long-term debt, and we need to go in a different direction. We need a government that responds and listens to the people.

But what do we get as a result of all this extra spending? Well, Mr. Speaker, we get one of the highest rates for wait times for key surgeries out of all of Canada. Highest. The only ones that may be approximately the same are the Maritimes. All the rest are better. Go next door to Saskatchewan: three months. Go on the other side, to B.C.: three months. Here in Alberta: eight or nine months. Yet we spend 20 per cent more.

Our education system is more focused on creating lawsuits, fiddling around with experiments, using our children like guinea pigs in the classrooms instead of getting back to the basics. There is nothing wrong for a child that doesn't do their homework for them getting a zero, Mr. Speaker. There's nothing wrong with that. That's what happens in the real world. You don't show up for work, you don't get paid unless you work for the NDP, I suppose.

We need to protect choice in education. We need the freedom for parents to be able to decide for their children what's best. We don't need bureaucrats in downtown Edmonton telling people in rural Alberta or anywhere in Alberta what their parents should do. We need them to allow freedom of choice so parents can decide what's best for their child so their child can decide the future for themselves, and parents know a lot better than bureaucrats do. You know, it was not very long ago, in fact, when I went to school – okay, that was a long time ago – that we were number one in the world in education. I think most of the people here received that education. Number one in the world. And today, Mr. Speaker, we're not even in the top five. Quebec has a better education system than we give our own children, and we spend a lot more on our education than they do.

The Justice file, Mr. Speaker: I don't want to get too started on this, but do you know that the courts, as a result of a court decision, because of a backlog in our Crown prosecutors and this government not giving enough resources to our Crown prosecutors in our justice system – that's exactly why – a murderer was let go just a little while ago? Two accused of sexual assault were let go because they couldn't get to trial because there weren't enough resources, not enough Crown prosecutors or judges or resources generally, and now we find out just a little while ago that there have been 200 cases in Alberta that have suffered the same fate. In fact, many people were let go for impaired operation, DUI charges. Those people didn't even get a slap on the wrist. They were let out without a trial because of lack of resources, and they're back on the streets along with many violent criminals that should go to jail and should stay in jail. That's because this NDP government is not taking our justice system seriously.

Communities feel less safe. Crime is rising across the province, even violent crime, and we get a great idea from the NDP: let's give out free light bulbs while the justice system is being starved, while the health care system is a broken system that doesn't work, and while our teachers are not given the resources and the tools to teach our children and make them number one in the world. Madam Speaker, they can laugh all they want, but the truth is that they know it. They hear it whenever they leave the dome. I don't think they do that very often, but I can assure you that I do, and when I get a chance to travel the province and to talk to people, I'm astonished by how they feel about this government and the lack of representation they feel they're getting from them.

We need a government, Madam Speaker, that doesn't bring in new taxes without a mandate from the people. Wouldn't that be interesting if the people actually got to vote on the ability to bring in a new tax? You know, this carbon tax is just a 3 per cent PST in disguise, and they know it. Albertans know it. It's not helping. Increasing taxes is taking money out of people's pockets, and it is starving businesses. A government that recognizes that money in the pockets of Albertans is better than in the hands of bureaucrats is what a Wildrose government would do, a government that believes in the unbridled potential of our province and a government that works relentlessly for the people of Alberta on their priorities.

I do believe that Alberta can come back to a place of unparalleled greatness. We want to lead a government that doesn't just tolerate poverty, Madam Speaker, but champions opportunity and tries to eliminate it. I want to fix the health care system so that no other children, no other grandchildren, no brothers or sisters die as a result of negligence. I want to make sure that no other family ever experiences what we did. I want to make sure that when Albertans go to the hospital, they're not seen as simply a number, as a statistic; they're seen as a family member, as somebody that matters and matters to fix not just to treat. It's not about just showing up and finding a comfortable bed. It's about showing up and getting better. That's what our health care system is missing.

I do want our education system to be the best in the world, just like our health care system, and there's no excuse. We have every natural advantage, including the people, including natural resources, including space.

The Alberta advantage. I've over the last year decided what I believe the Alberta advantage was, and I said "was" because it's no more. The Alberta advantage was where everybody in the world wanted to live in Alberta, wanted to raise their children in Alberta, and wanted to work here. The opportunity to move to Alberta meant so much more to people than it does today.

I believe with this vision, the vision of what I'm proposing, it will lead to the greatest job creation that this province has ever seen, the opportunity for people to be able to take their lives back, to be able to find a job in the pursuit they want, and to be able to be educated in that pursuit and for us to be able to have long-term sustainable investment from our government in those core services that are so important to the people of Alberta.

No one in this House believes those core services are not important. Nobody wants to destroy our health care system or our education system. Nobody. We just believe that there are different ways to get to the sustainability. The path out that door and down that lane, Madam Speaker, is a path that is going so far away from where we are right now that it is threatening significantly our ability to provide those core services.

Sooner or later banks will not lend us any more money. Sooner or later we will be paying so much in interest that we will not be paying off principal. That's why we need to turn in that other direction. That's why the Wildrose is here. That's why we fight like we do, Madam Speaker, with words in and out of this House across the province, because we believe Alberta can be great again. And it will be great again. It will be after the next election and the NDP are gone.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's so welcoming by you. It's great to be able to rise and speak just for a moment. First of all, I'd like to thank the Leader of the Opposition for his remarks and his comments. I think one thing that we can certainly all agree upon is just how passionate the Leader of the Opposition is about our province and how he brings such an incredible skill set to his role. I'd like to thank him for his leadership of our caucus and of our party. The work that he's doing plays a critical role not only here in the House but right across the province.

One of the things that I know that he's been doing over the last number of months is travelling across the province. We were together in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills last week and had a couple of events, with close to 500 people attending. There's a real sense of excitement around the vision that the Wildrose is casting and the work that's being done. I know that he had the opportunity to spend time in places like the north as well as Drumheller, Stettler, Hanna, Grande Prairie, Calgary. He really has the chance to hear from such a wide range of Albertans. I'm just curious to know if he might share with us just for the couple of minutes that remain here what exactly is the feedback that he's getting from Albertans. What is the feedback that he's hearing with respect to the direction the government is taking, and what is he hearing about where Albertans are in their desire for the Wildrose and the Official Opposition to take a prominent leadership role in the future of our province?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate that. I would like to just talk about the facts. Now, the member is right. I did attend two particular events and did speak to about 500 people. With those 500 people – you're not going to believe this – we sold 120 memberships. We asked ahead of time, and most of them were already members. I don't know what that means, but most of the 500 people that came out were already members of our party, yet another 120 bought memberships.

What that says to me clearly is that they're interested in a change, that they want to be more politically involved than they've ever been in the past. It doesn't matter where I go in the province, whether it's Grande Prairie or Fort McMurray, Lethbridge, Medicine Hat, Calgary or Edmonton, we're selling a record number of memberships because people recognize, I think for the first time in a long time, in generations here in Alberta, that they need to be involved, that they need to join the Wildrose because whatever happens in the future, Wildrose will be a significant part of it.

They've told me that they want a government that responds to the people, that is practical and uses common sense, that makes sure that they're there for the government not in an ideological bend left or right but one that actually solves the problem for the people that is happening at the time. Right now, Madam Speaker, everyone is worried about the economy. Everyone. They said the same thing. The last question my friend asked me was: what are they saying for the future? These Albertans that I speak to are very intelligent, very smart because they're saying exactly what the investment community said to me in Toronto and in New York and Washington: change Alberta's government. That's what we plan to do.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to the throne speech? The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise to speak in response to the Speech from the Throne. I am proud of our government, which in tough economic times is working to make life better for Albertans by doing things like capping electricity rates, freezing tuition, protecting health care, expanding apprenticeship and training, cutting small-business taxes, and avoiding reckless cuts to health care, education, and infrastructure. We are protecting and improving the things that make a difference in the daily lives of Albertans.

Several aspects of the throne speech are particularly relevant to the constituents of Wetaskiwin-Camrose, one of which is working with indigenous communities. Between 16 and 20 per cent of my constituents are First Nations living in Maskwacis and Wetaskiwin. It is for this reason that if you could indulge me, Madam Speaker, I would like to have an unofficial opening of this session by starting with an elder Cree prayer. [Remarks in Cree]

A very short prayer just thanking our Creator for the protection that they offer all men, women, and children equally.

I and our government stand with and amongst the Maskwacis leaders – and I'm not just name dropping here; these are my friends: Chief Kurt Buffalo, Chief Darrell Strongman, Chief Randy Ermineskin, Chief Irvin Bull – working for justice, language and culture protection, economic growth, seniors' care, housing, clean drinking water, education, health care, and mental health support.

I have been honoured to have taught so many but have learned so much about life and living from friends such as Lucy Kammer; Dennis Lewis; Jason Currie; statesman, lawyer, and Truth and Reconciliation Commissioner Willie Littlechild; grand chief for Alberta Craig Makinaw; political activist Katherine Swampy; social activist Chevi Rabbit; and hundreds more who came out to vote and voted for the New Democrats. They organized rock the indigenous vote against neglect, discrimination, and previous government arrogance and mistreatment.

Working with First Nations, we will continue to address the principles of the United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples. We will implement both Jordan's principle, which is a principle that you help first regardless of your jurisdiction, and we will do Gladue reports, as required by the Supreme Court.

Previously, the habit of the provincial government was to refer all indigenous issues to the federal government. This practice will end. All Albertans are Albertans, and we will be the most transformative in developing relationships with First Nations. We will work to ensure that service levels on reserves are brought up to the service levels off reserves. We will foster the collaborative model, which is characteristic of the traditional indigenous way.

I am proud of the work done by the Wetaskiwin regional school division to foster inclusion of First Nation students and families living within the school district. I would like to congratulate the Montana Cree Nation students attending Red Deer College doing the innovative apprentice welding program, and I would particularly like to congratulate Patrick Buffalo for his recognition by the Alberta Chambers of Commerce with an eagle feather award for outstanding business entrepreneurship by Samson Management Ltd. In conjunction with Alberta Education and Maskwacis four nations are forming one education authority to provide consistent, quality education for their 11 schools' students.

Many of my constituents are voicing approval of our clean energy and climate change initiatives. Their actions are speaking louder than the noisy Alberta bashers. The city of Camrose has recently installed the second-largest solar panel system in Alberta on its recreation centre roof. Augustana campus' new performing arts centre has installed new, innovative exterior wall photovoltaic cells and a new system of LED interior lights, which was the first system not only in Alberta or Canada but in the world. Augustana continues to put up more solar panels on the roof of additional buildings. Camrose is the home of three solar panel installation companies formed in the last year, creating new employment and adding new clean energy self-sufficiency for more and more Camrosians.

Individual entrepreneurs see business opportunities, and some of those visiting my office would say: Bruce, I did not vote for you because I've always been a PCer, but I am excited about new businesses that your government is encouraging. For example, these constituents are moving forward on more efficient furnace baffles; carbon fibre and value-added products; fuel additives which reduce CO₂ emissions, improve mileage and life of engines; and new ways to recycle tires to create new value-added items. And I predict that there will be more.

The county of Camrose already uses biomass fuel to heat their administration building. Let me congratulate city councillor Bill Sears for his personal leadership on renewable energy projects.

Wetaskiwin, likewise, is extremely progressive with regard to green energy. The city would like, in fact, to become the home of the Alberta Energy Efficiency agency, so this is just a gentle hint, wink, and nudge to the ministers responsible for climate change, labour, and economic development. Wetaskiwin city hall has an electric car charger that's free for citizens' use, heats its city hall with geothermal heating, and has solar panels on several city buildings, including the recreation centre and drill hall. Wetaskiwin has replaced every single streetlight with LED lighting.

Bruce Ganske of Wetaskiwin is looking at setting up a school to train certified solar panel installers, and I would like to also recognize Wetaskiwin city councillor Bert Horvey for his leadership in clean energy.

While the Alberta bashers brag about the opposition to the carbon levy, we are seeing what was once a trickle turn into a groundswell of support for entrepreneurial stewardship, environmental stewardship, jobs, and economic growth. It is heartwarming when growing numbers of constituents come to tell me that they have been on the efficiencyalberta.ca website and have registered for new lights and will change their windows or put up solar panels. By the way, two of the four nations at Maskwacis have already installed solar panels on their administration roofs and hope to soon start on their residential buildings.

The feedback on our government's action on economic development reminds me about how on Family Day for Alberta I had the opportunity to witness the signing of a letter of intent between J and H Aviation of Wetaskiwin, whose owner is John Jeffries, and Shengda Xiang Yun Aviation of China and their manager, Feng Ge, for a $200 million project to build an airplane assembly plant in Wetaskiwin to produce eight-seater passenger planes. Economic diversification will strengthen our economy and bring jobs to our unemployed.

The Speech from the Throne highlights other achievements, creating jobs not only in the petrochemical sector but also approval of the two pipelines and the two petrochemical plants, which, of course, will help. It is impressive that tax credits will also help business expansion right here in Alberta. It is exciting to support emerging sectors such as aviation, craft brewing, and high-tech food-processing centres such as the one in Leduc, which will support Alberta's agrifood industry. Likewise, Cavendish Farms of Lethbridge will create good jobs for Alberta farmers. The new federal Canada-European trade agreement has the potential to significantly expand our beef exports to Europe by millions of dollars. Our agriculture and economic development ministers will continue with trade missions, helping to make Alberta a destination for trade.

The recent Conference Board of Canada projection for Alberta to lead all provinces for the next four years in gross domestic production bodes well for all of my Wetaskiwin-Camrose constituents and all Albertans. Alberta led the country in private-sector capital investment in 2016. Alberta will lead the country in economic growth in 2017 and 2018, according to TD Bank as well as other banks.

Alberta has the highest weekly earnings in the country. Alberta has the highest employment rate in Canada. Alberta just led, with the Minister of Economic Development and Trade, its largest trade mission in history, and in the last year our exports have increased by more than 13 per cent while the rest of Canada's have decreased by 3 per cent. Alberta has among the most educated workforces, including the highest concentration of engineers in the country. Alberta has the fastest growing population in Canada. Alberta has one of the youngest populations in the country. Alberta has one of the lowest taxes in the country, with a $7.5 billion tax advantage over Saskatchewan, which is the second best. Alberta's debt-to-GDP ratio is the lowest in Canada. Alberta has the largest economy in western Canada, bigger than British Columbia and Saskatchewan combined. Wetaskiwin for the last two years has set building permit records despite the recession.

Madam Speaker, I have not yet begun to deal with how my constituents are positively thrilled about the reduction of school fees announced in the throne speech. This past Sunday evening six cabinet ministers and over a dozen government MLAs were in attendance at the Alberta Rural Education Symposium. That evening we reaffirmed our commitment to the future-ready initiative: freezing tuition, working with parents to modernize our curriculum, expanding access to student loans, and investing more in apprenticeship and training. Resounding applause welcomed the elimination of those basic school fees, our pledge to restore stable, predictable funding, and our commitment to the construction of more new schools.

We were also able to share our commitment to child care and child protection, to better support students in achieving academic success. In fact, the principal at Norwood elementary school in Wetaskiwin complimented our government for providing the pilot lunch program in his school. He has seen how students who are properly fed are more successful when it comes to behaviour and academic achievement. Albertans have confidence in our government when it comes to guaranteeing quality education.

Madam Speaker, I look forward to another robust sitting of the spring Legislature, where, time permitting, I will have the opportunity to bring forward to the floor a motion other than a government motion and a private member's bill. I have a new desk, looking at the morning sunshine, much closer to you, Madam Speaker, and also Mr. Speaker. I will be keeping my heckling within bounds, maybe.

It is an honour to be here, Madam Speaker, representing the constituents of Wetaskiwin-Camrose. I thank them for their trust in me.

Tomorrow is International Women's Day, and I would like to thank the women of my life. My wife, Janet, who is so passionate about justice, the environment, health care, and education, is my strongest supporter but also capable of holding me accountable in ways no opposition could. I am proud that the Speech from the Throne was delivered by a woman. Our Premier is female. Half of our caucus are women. Half of our cabinet are women. Half of my constituency association are women. My office, on the fifth floor, is where we commemorate the Famous Five women. While much remains to be done to have gender equity, I believe Alberta's strength is the growing number of strong female leaders. I salute all the females of this Legislature for their dedication and commitment to social democracy and justice.

On that note, Madam Speaker, I conclude my remarks. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. If we could just ask you to table tomorrow your prayer in Cree and English so that it can be recorded.

Mr. Hinkley: You want it in English right now?

The Acting Speaker: No. Tomorrow, please.

Mr. Hinkley: Tomorrow. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I will call on the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. We hear that our government is going to solve all our problems through this throne speech, but it seems like they've left out a few important things, that I think I would like to take a few minutes to actually bring forward to Albertans.

Now, I went to the Alberta government website, and there was a nice highlight section for this throne speech. I'd like to go off those highlights, if you will. The four highlights are creating jobs and supporting jobs, making life more affordable, protecting public services, and making Alberta a better place for everyone. These are admirable.

Now, I'd like to start with point 1. If the government is interested in creating jobs and supporting them, then I would suggest that the NDP start listening to Albertans. They are telling them that the direction they are taking us in will only lead us to misery, not salvation. The NDP hasn't figured this out yet, that government doesn't create jobs, but it does get in the way of those who do. With the record unemployment in our province, if this government went to a residence, they would find proud, intelligent, hard-working people looking to get back to work.

As the government continues to grow, we are already weighed down by a crippling bureaucracy that just needs to get smaller. Drawing money out of our economy to pay for your pet projects, that have no economic cost analysis done to achieve a goal, that have no goals attached, is what is actually costing us jobs.

An article in the Calgary Herald on March 4, 2017, by Mark Milke, called Alberta's Carbon Tax Is Already a Failure, explains that the premise of the NDP carbon tax is flawed. The passage I will quote does a great job of explaining how our current government is implementing barriers in front of our job creators and for those that are so desperately needing to get jobs.

Here, Alberta's carbon tax is oddly self-defeating. If a government wishes for people to change behaviour, it must levy a tax so punitive that it modifies actions, i.e., less carbon-based activity.

The province obviously intends that as the outcome. Every year the carbon tax is increased, the more punitive it becomes, including for charities such as food banks.

But to offset the higher costs for some, the province is subsidizing just over 1.1 million people. The province claims that will positively affect about 60 per cent of households.

The plan is thus inherently contradictory: The province will tax everyone more in an attempt to change behaviour. It will then subsidize at least one person in 60 per cent of Alberta's households. That [is counter] the government-intended behavioural nudge.

So the government is saying that it wants to stop people from creating greenhouse gases, and then it subsidizes people to do that. That does seem to be contradictory.

The only result that this government has helped when it comes to jobs is their ability to see that my constituency of Bonnyville-Cold Lake is paying the price with high unemployment and a staggering number of empty houses on our real estate market. Instead of stating how the NDP will create jobs, what I would like to hear is: how will you stay out of the way of our job creators?

Point 2. As we move to the point where we need to identify what the government is doing that will reduce our households' costs and will help to make our lives more affordable given that a number of Albertans have lost hours of work, had salary rollbacks, shifted to part-time jobs, or just don't have a job, making life more affordable must be a priority. In 2015-2016 we saw higher personal taxes and business taxes fully implemented. At the start of 2017 we added a carbon tax, that added to our burden. My question to the government is: how does adding more taxes help Albertans? How does it help Albertans thrive? These taxes, that are there to save us, end up being passed on, through purchases of goods and services, to our families. It doesn't matter who you are.

Yet the NDP has assured us that cutting our spending is not the solution, and I will quote the government on that, where they say:

Under former governments the rate of yearly spending growth increases was as high as 11 per cent.

Your government stopped that practice.

Through diligent action and targeted reductions, we are bringing the rate of spending growth down, thoughtfully and prudently.

Guess what? There's nothing prudent about only reducing how much you increase your spending when you're running an $11 billion deficit. We're still waiting to hear how this will lead to a more affordable life for Albertans.

Why can't this government learn from other provinces' mistakes? Ontario is still learning that if you spend recklessly chasing down a hopeless ideology, it leads to many families choosing between feeding their children, having their utilities cut off, or paying mortgages and rent. If the NDP wants to help make life more affordable, they need to stop blaming the last guys. Axe the carbon tax and the renewable-electricity plan, and reverse most of the legislation that has been a direct attack on our oil sands. This would be a good start. It would also put us back on the road to the Alberta advantage, which will help to keep money in Alberta's families' pockets so they can get through these trying times instead of standing in food bank lines.

Point 3 is protecting public services. This is one point that is actually near and dear to my heart. How do we protect the services that we all value for future generations? Nowhere in the throne speech is debt accumulation or management even mentioned. This is truly astounding. We talk about preserving our public services when we are accumulating approximately $12 billion in new debt just this year. That's borrowing about one-quarter of your spending. I understand that this isn't the budget speech, but I hear our government has a plan in our throne speech, and it is expected that we start to look down to future generations.

Unsustainable debt doesn't protect public services; it does the exact opposite. It puts everything we hold dear at risk, and it puts what past generations have done in jeopardy, irresponsibly, recklessly. Our parents worked hard to ensure that what was handed to us would allow for options in the future. If they had been as irresponsible as we are today with the accumulating debt, you would be forced to make even tougher choices. But since you inherited a big credit card with almost no balance, you're just running it up and kicking the giant can down the road. By having stable government through a sustainable, balanced budget, we can ensure that the level of services that we have today will be available tomorrow. If we don't start planning the balancing of our budgets now, we're putting at risk the jobs of our doctors, nurses, teachers, and public employees tomorrow.

The NDP has rapidly increased taxes under the mantra of vague statements like "getting our fair share." Once elected, in the 2015 Speech from the Throne the NDP shared their vision of what a fair share was.

As its second act our . . . government will introduce Bill 2, An Act to Restore Fairness to Public Revenue. This bill will ask those who have benefited the most from the boom times in Alberta to now contribute a little [bit] more so that our schools and health care can be spared from chaos and reckless cutbacks. Corporate taxes on [our] largest and most profitable corporations in Alberta will be increased from 10 per cent to 12 per cent; small-business taxes will remain at the current rate, 3 per cent; and progressive income taxes will be reintroduced in Alberta for those earning more than $125,000.

Now we've seen what it means when the NDP says: fair share. This means tax increases, especially for job creators.

Then we have the 2016 throne speech, where they announced a carbon tax, that again radically increases our taxes.

[The] government will introduce the Climate Leadership Implementation Act to . . . force and effect [the] key elements of Alberta's new climate plan. Every penny raised by this plan during this period of low energy prices will be reinvested back into the economy to create jobs and to promote diversification in our economy.

It looks like we fell off that bandwagon. The NDP considers taxes collected as investments in Alberta. The Wildrose Party considers them as discouraging investment in Alberta. Well, we have seen two years of so-called NDP investment collection now, and all we have witnessed is high unemployment and low actual investment in Alberta's jobs and the economy.

Our government stated in their 2015 platform that if we raised tax profoundly, we would see balanced budgets within three years. That promise is long broken. They aren't even trying to talk about how to balance anything now. If we avoid the word "deficit," the NDP government considers it to be hidden, and it will just go away.

Let's be crystal clear. Taxes are now the largest expenditure for Alberta's families, not food, not energy, not housing but taxes. With the increase in our tax rates, we haven't seen the success that the NDP promised. That much is clear. All we have seen is continued public service hiring at a time when our food bank use is at an almost record high or record high. This is what happens when government ignores the foundation of low taxes, what has brought success to our great province. Now they are doing irrefutable harm to our Alberta advantage, which makes families in our province and public services more vulnerable.

Point 4, making Alberta a better place for everyone. I must mention that as the shadow minister for Service Alberta I didn't see several major topics this government needs to address. But the one that comes to me as the most serious, the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, is nearing a, quote, crisis situation according to our Privacy Commissioner, and nothing is mentioned. We also just had a fentanyl debate, where we are questioning what exactly "crisis" means.

So we have a government that has stated its intent, making Alberta a better place for everyone, but it doesn't begin to address its own lack of following the rules of law. That's shocking. The February 23 . . .

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Is anyone wishing to speak to 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Loewen: Yes. Thank you very much to the hon. member for his response to the Speech from the Throne. I was interested in all the comments that he had and would be interested in hearing more if he'd like to continue.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Go ahead.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The February 23, 2017, investigation report by the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner of Alberta is called Investigation into Alberta Justice and Solicitor General's Delays in Responding to Access Requests. Page 3, paragraphs 7 and 8, read as follows:

Among the most concerning of the findings from this investigation, however, are the comments related to the investigator about the lack of respect for access to information across the Government of Alberta (GoA). It is easy to regard access to information as a nuisance, particularly when workloads are increasing and staff levels are not; however, access to information is also a cornerstone of democracy and, as has been said, "democracy dies behind closed doors."

With this in mind, I will repeat a comment I made in the 2013 submission to the Government of Alberta's review of the FOIP Act. In a section titled "Strong legislation is not enough . . .", I said that I "encourage the GoA and heads of all public bodies to lead by example and adopt a culture that respects and balances both access to privacy, and to ensure adequate resources are allocated to administering the FOIP Act and fulfilling legislative obligations."

A second report was done on the same day by the Privacy Commissioner on February 23, 2017. The investigation report was called Investigation into Executive Council and Public Affairs Bureau's Delays in Responding to Access Requests. Page 3, paragraph 4, reads:

The investigation confirmed that the Public [access] had not met legislated timelines in responding to [applicants], and it became clear that a number of factors contributed to these delays including processing practices that involved unnecessary preliminary reviews and internal consultations, as well as lengthy approval processes.

Madam Speaker, it seems pretty clear from this that we have a government that has astoundingly disregarded government transparency and accountability. This is a slap in the face to every Albertan. We have a bureaucracy that is not taking the FOIP as law. Even the Privacy Commissioner has found that it appears that they are not only not taking their jobs seriously, but they are actively preventing FOIP staff from following the law. The government is on the record in a CBC article named Information Commissioner Slams Alberta Government for Poor State of Freedom of Information on February 23, 2017. The quote goes:

She was "disheartened" to read Clayton's criticism. She said the government accepted the reports' recommendations and was already implementing some of the main ones, specifically by hiring more staff in Justice and Executive Council.

"I think a big part of it is putting your money where your mouth is, and make sure you have the staff there to support the work that needs to be done to fulfil the requirements under the law and [our government's] commitment to transparency" . . . A Justice spokesperson said the ministry now has 14 FOIP staff, up from 10 in 2015, and it plans to hire four more.

This isn't a new problem. It's long standing enough that they already plan to hire more FOIP staff, but that's not going to change the culture, attitude, and political obstructionism. This government's answer has always been to add more money, then hope it fixes the problem. Now, in this particular case I am not saying that the government shouldn't be reviewing the staffing levels based on the workload. I am saying that I want to see a commitment to this Assembly, Albertans, and our Privacy Commissioner that they will add measurement to the FOIP process to ensure that Albertans can see a measurable benefit. We need to see more than putting your money where your mouth is. We need to see results, not more platitudes.

If the government wants to make Alberta a better place for everyone, it should start with actually giving Albertans access to the information on the government inner workings. That is entrenched in law. I appreciate this opportunity to outline . . .

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

The next member that I have to recognize is the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am honoured to rise as we gather here on Treaty 6 territory and the traditional homeland of the Métis in response to Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech from the Throne. As we begin this session, I suspect that all members of this Assembly are reflecting on the conversations that they have had in their communities and reflecting on the priorities that Albertans hold dear. Those priorities are undoubtedly shaped by global economic realities. Alberta, being a resource economy, has felt the shift in the global price of oil more sharply than many of our Canadian counterparts, to be sure. But this means that the fundamentals matter most now. Albertans are looking for job creation, and they are minding their pocketbook. It is these priorities that I am happy to see in the Speech from the Throne.

Madam Speaker, these are the same priorities for this government. This government has cut or amalgamated government agencies, frozen salaries of cabinet ministers, MLAs, political staff and management in the civil service. This government has been working diligently to streamline spending across government, all while protecting the services our families rely on.

Madam Speaker, I think we can all agree that job creation is one of the foremost duties of any government. In this throne speech we see a commitment to continue to work to support small businesses, entrepreneurs, and job creators. I know that many in this Assembly are anxiously awaiting the report from the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future on agribusiness and how we can expand on what is already the world's best agriculture sector. Last year I was pleased to hear of the expansion of the Agrivalue Processing Business Incubator and Food Processing Development Centre in Leduc. I don't envy the Member for Leduc-Beaumont having to repeat that all the time. The Northern Alberta Business Incubator, or NABI, in St. Albert contributes so much to the community of St. Albert. As such, I was pleased to hear that the government was committed to expand more business incubators across Alberta and in our communities to help get good ideas off the ground.

This government is also committed to infrastructure. Madam Speaker, as you know, there are many projects in my community that were announced several Premiers ago but had not made any progress. Ray Gibbon Drive was first discussed by the Social Credit, and W.D. Cuts junior high school was approved for a modernization by Premier Getty. While I continue to work toward Ray Gibbon Drive, I'm happy to share with you that I joined the Minister of Education at the ribbon cutting of the modernized W.D. Cuts just a few months ago. These investments are putting Albertans to work and will enable greater economic activity in the future. These investments in infrastructure are making Albertans' lives better now and are ensuring that we are ready for the future.

I was also pleased to hear that this year's Speech from the Throne focuses not only on job creation but on supporting the pocketbooks of Albertans. When I rose to last year's Speech from the Throne, I talked about the need for affordable housing, and I hear that both Spruce Grove and St. Albert along with communities across this province are continuing to pursue affordable solutions for all Albertans. This government is helping these efforts with the creation of an affordable housing strategy.

Madam Speaker, in conversations I have had with Albertans as they come into my office or when I knock on their door, they have expressed concerns about the growth of school fees. You see, many families in my communities and in communities across this province are hard pressed to cover these fees when they come due in September. The reduction in mandatory school fees is a great step forward.

Now, as you know, Madam Speaker, I am proud to see that this government has followed up the commitment to maintaining funding per student for schools and to build additional schools in our communities with the initiative to ensure that Alberta's education system is more affordable for all Alberta families.

Albertans are also pleased with the initiative to cap electricity fees. We've seen massive spikes in the cost of electricity in the past, and this was of great concern to our families. I am pleased to see that this government is taking action to keep Albertans' electricity bills below the average price families have paid in the past decade. In short, Madam Speaker, we are working to ensure that the peaks we saw in the past are not quite as high.

Now, I would be remiss if I didn't take this opportunity to talk about a file that is quite important to me. As you know, I am very proud of my Métis heritage. In recent years I have worked to reconnect with the culture and community my ancestors were pushed away from, but I hesitate to claim an indigenous experience. This work has led me to take a strong interest in the continued efforts our communities and governments are making towards truth and reconciliation.

I was proud to attend the signing of the framework agreement between the Métis Nation of Alberta. This agreement commits to move forward on a nation-to-nation basis and to continue our work toward reconciliation together. I was happy to see that the government has also signed a new agreement with Treaty 8, committing to work on several key priorities that will truly help to make the lives for the people of Treaty 8 better. I look forward to seeing more agreements along this line in the future.

Now, one of the recommendations from the Truth and Reconciliation Commission was to implement Jordan's principle. Jordan's principle is a priority in our government's work on the UN declaration and the Truth and Reconciliation calls to action. This principle was initially developed for health care, but I believe that there is great potential for Jordan's principle to be implemented across the board to better the lives of families. Everyone deserves to be supported and to live a safe, healthy life with opportunities to thrive in their community.

As you know, Madam Speaker, Jordan's principle is the idea that governments should ensure that everyone has access to vital services regardless of whether they live on- or off-reserve. No one should suffer because of a dispute between different levels of government over who should pay for medical care. I hope that this government will continue working with indigenous leadership and with the government of Canada to ensure that no one experiences delays or denials of services due to jurisdictional disputes.

In this Assembly we know that there is an outstanding gap between the education of indigenous youth and everyone else. Madam Speaker, I know that the Minister of Education has been working hard to reduce that education gap. We have seen the establishment of education authorities on-reserve to bring the level of funding up to that of any other Albertan student. All students deserve an education, and I am proud to see that the Department of Education is working to ensure that our indigenous students realize the same levels of education as our other students.

Now, as you know, Madam Speaker, many First Nations communities right across the country are, sadly, left without access to safe drinking water. Many First Nations communities here in Alberta are left with boil-water advisories and have been for many years. That is absolutely unacceptable. I was very excited to see that the throne speech made a commitment to work with First Nations and with the federal government to address the need for access to clean drinking water on reserves, and I look forward to seeing more details on how this government will proceed on that.

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, I believe that it is government's highest duty to make life better for Albertans. As such, I was happy to hear commitments on job creation and on affordability. I was also proud to see that this government is continuing action on truth and reconciliation and especially on providing clean drinking water for our First Nations.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. This is the second time today in the House that I've heard references to attending ribbon-cuttings and how proud this government is of the schools that they've built. I'd like the member to expand a little bit on his apparent knowledge of the construction industry. I'd like you to tell me how long it takes to design a school, how long it takes to obtain the land and the permits to build a school, how long it takes to award some pretty significant contracts to get a school built, and then how long it takes to actually build the school. I think that when you start checking those dates, you're going to ask yourself: how can this government possibly take credit for any of the schools that have been opened in 2016?

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, just under 29(2)(a) if I might, there's no obligation on the part of anybody to answer any prosecutorial-type questions that somebody might want to ask. The hon. member needs to know the rules.

You know, Madam Speaker, I appreciate the hon. member's comments with respect to the Speech from the Throne. As we've said, there's been a significant increase in the capital plan under our government, and to give credit to the past government, the plan that they had put in place was already relatively robust. They had much neglect to make up for from the Klein years and had actually increased infrastructure spending. Because of the recession, we thought it was important to increase capital spending for a period of time in order to put people to work and to take advantage of low prices on construction tenders. That certainly has been paying off very well as tenders have been coming in about 10 per cent lower, and we're able to get more done for the taxpayers' dollars. The previous government had invested, you know, at the peak, so they were competing with private industry. They were paying premium prices, competing for capital and labour. We've decided to adopt a countercyclical approach and invest when private industry has cut back and try and keep people working, and I think that that's working, you know, very well.

Obviously, we've continued with most of the projects that were in the capital plan at the time that we were elected. We've continued to do that, and we've made sure that the funding is available for those, and we've added new ones, Madam Speaker. For example, the previous government had cancelled plans to go ahead with the cancer hospital in Calgary. We've resurrected that project and are going to be working very hard to meet the needs of Calgarians.

There are a number of other projects. There is new investment in housing, in affordable housing, new investment in seniors' care that wasn't really there in the past either. We've expanded upon the previous government's expenditures and their program in order to keep people working but also to build critical infrastructure that Albertans need. They need housing that they can afford. Families need that. Really, we need to take better care of our seniors and keep them out of acute care, very expensive acute-care hospital rooms. We're doing that, and we're doing so much more, Madam Speaker. This is about making life better for Albertans, and we're doing that.

You know, with respect to the questions of the hon. member I'm sure this is not an LSAT. This is not a test that is administered by the hon. member to our members. Each member is entitled to stand up and say what's important to them, what's important to their constituents. It's not up to the opposition to try and administer tests on basic knowledge. I might ask the hon. member about his knowledge of labour law, for example, and I'm sure he would struggle with that. He might struggle with a number of other areas that we might raise. The science of climate change might be one of them, Madam Speaker.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. Government House Leader.
The Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Spring is a season of new beginnings, when the long winter begins to dissipate and the buds begin to break through. A throne speech, likewise, can be the sign of a new beginning. It can present an opportunity to recalibrate, to readjust, to refocus. Unfortunately, the government missed the opportunity and instead doubled down on the same old misguided agenda, the same old talking points, and the government is still blaming everything on the price of oil. Of course, it's a factor, but incompetent governance, something the Premier does have control over, is the real issue along with unencumbered spending.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Instead of concrete plans on tackling that ever-growing debt and deficit, the throne speech self-congratulated the government on cutting the growth of government spending. This statement is telling insofar as it exposes this government's ideology for what it is, classic tax-and-spend socialism. Bob Rae couldn't be more proud. Only this government can look at an increase in spending and call it a reduction. Mr. Speaker, when you look at the graph of spending in this government, it goes up, but this government comes into this House and says that that's a reduction. It is because this government subscribes to the idea that the budget will balance itself, I guess.

Now, from the throne speech again: "Your government understands this is its core responsibility, to make life better for everyday Albertans.” Well, I’ll tell you that somebody better call Burger King because I just found their Whopper. This government has made a lot of grandiose claims over its 20 months, but this one takes the cake. They are correct in that government’s first priority should be to make life better for us. Unfortunately, that is where the truth stops. Let’s have a look at this government’s record.

One of the first moves this government made after its election was to call for a royalty review. As the province entered the worst recession in a generation, this government took a hammer to investor confidence. It takes a special kind of someone to look at an entire industry sector that is facing a major downturn and think that it is the best time to establish a royalty review. What followed was the downgrading of Alberta’s credit rating from triple-A to double-A plus and then, finally, from double-A plus to double-A. Instead of looking to our eastern neighbour, Saskatchewan, for inspiration, this government instead looks to the financial pariah, Ontario, the jurisdiction with the highest subsovereign debt in the entire world. They look to them for financial leadership.

The government did get one thing right in their throne speech. “Albertans are worried about the basics: paying the bills, keeping or finding a job, saving for retirement and their children’s education, and caring for loved ones.” However, I find it alarming that we have a government that looks at Albertan families, sees that they are struggling, sees them finding it harder and harder to pay their bills, heat their homes, and put food on their tables, and in response commits to take even more from them. Have they no shame? This government has introduced the largest tax increase in the province’s history, a carbon tax that they never campaigned on, increases to corporate and personal taxes, and a multitude of other taxes and fee increases. In nearly every way this government has made life for the everyday Albertan more difficult and more expensive.

And what does the government do with the money it takes from the hard-working Albertans? It spends it on ridiculous lawsuits with power companies in an effort to cover up its failure to read their own power purchase agreements before instituting their ill-conceived carbon tax. Another of this government’s claims is regarding its long-standing support for our province’s oil and gas sector. By long-standing I guess they mean since 2016.

On June 18, 2015, the Leader of the Opposition asked the Premier, “Can the Premier confirm that building more pipelines to move Alberta’s energy to new markets remains this province’s top intergovernmental and international priority?” The response from the Premier was sad, to say the least. She didn’t answer the question. She talked about the environment, but she didn’t say that this government’s top priority would be getting pipelines.

Now, on November 23, 2015, I asked this question of the Premier. “Will the Premier now start advocating for the Northern Gateway pipeline? Will she start advocating for the Keystone XL pipeline? Or does she prefer that the oil stay in the ground?” The Minister of Environment and Parks answered that question, and you can guess what the response was: more double-talk, no answer, no support for pipelines. So when this government comes in with the Speech from the Throne and says that they have long-standing support for the oil and gas sector, that’s simply not true. The party with the longest record of unwavering support for oil and gas is the Wildrose, a fact that I’m incredibly proud of.

As a province we are too dependent on selling our energy products to one customer, our southern neighbour, the United States. The government’s climate leadership plan gets pipelines? If that was true, what happened to Northern Gateway? Maybe if you’re Meat Loaf, two out of three ain’t bad, I guess, but for Albertans it was just another opportunity passing us by.

In spite of Alberta’s climate leadership plan the federal government still cancelled the approval of the Northern Gateway pipeline.

What was this government’s response? Nothing. They said nothing. Crickets. When the rubber finally met the road, this government blew it like an overinflated tire full of hot air. On this side of the House we proudly support pipelines in all directions because pipelines are the safest and most environmentally friendly way to get our products to market. The government promises that “Trans Mountain is not the end of our market diversification efforts.” No, the end of this government’s market diversification efforts was the Northern Gateway.

The government recently announced their latest boondoggle, the residential no-charge energy savings program. It’s the program where certified installers go house to house installing light bulbs, power bars, and night lights. Not only is this program a gross misuse of taxpayer funds; it shows a total lack of respect for Albertans’ intelligence. Electricity came into widespread use in Alberta in the 1920s and ’30s. Since that time Albertans have been changing light bulbs in their own homes without any difficulty. It is preposterous to believe that since the implementation of this government’s carbon tax just two short months ago the average Albertan has somehow forgotten how to install a light bulb or plug in a night light.

I’ll close with this question. How many Albertans does it take to screw in a light bulb? The answer is none because we’re going to pay the government to do it for us, I guess.

Now I’ll move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 1 An Act to Reduce School Fees

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It’s my pleasure to introduce today Bill 1, An Act to Reduce School Fees, for second reading.

In 2015 our government campaigned on a platform that we would make life better for Alberta families, and among our major commitments was a pledge to invest in reducing the burden of school fees on Alberta families. I am so proud today to advocate for this bill, which follows through on this commitment at a time when Alberta families need it most. I am a teacher myself and a parent, and I have seen first-hand over the years and experienced the impact that fees have had on Alberta families. They went unregulated for far too long, and they acted as a barrier to public education.

I know, just as a high school teacher, for example – it was more than 10 years ago – that when the fees were still running into the hundreds of dollars that many of the kids, when they hit the end of the line signing up in September, you know, were embarrassed to not be able to pay that fee. Of course, individual schools might try to compensate for that and quietly talk to people. But, Mr. Speaker, that’s not a way to run the financing of schools. Certainly, it’s time for us to make a change on this, and together – I’m so very proud of my caucus and cabinet and our Premier that finally we’re here to start cleaning this up.

This bill, through a series of amendments and the creation of a new school fee regulation, will effectively eliminate school boards’ abilities to charge on two specific types of school fees, instructional supply or material fees and busing fees for eligible students travelling to their designated school. If proclaimed, this legislation would also provide the government with increased authority over all school fees.

The savings that come out of this legislation, Mr. Speaker, will be seen immediately this fall and will total more than $50 million annually. That's more than $50 million moving into the pockets of our families that have kids in school. This is money that families can spend on groceries and clothes for their kids, on their mortgages, or that they can put aside into savings.

As important is the long-term work that will be driven from this bill as well. Our government intends to consult further on school fees with parents and school boards, and together we will redefine what public education is and what parents should or should not be paying for.

Each year school boards collect more than $200 million from Alberta families in various fees. Bill 1 would reduce this by 25 per cent, and we have intentions of making further reductions in the years ahead. The bill will prevent charges for things like textbooks, workbooks, paper, and so much more. Parents may know these fees by various descriptions across the province: instructional fees, instructional material fees, basic fees. There are so many different names. Regardless of what they are called, they cause a significant financial strain on our families.

Take, for example, the impact of school fees on one family, Brandi and Hardeep Rai, the proud Edmonton parents of five children between the ages of six and 12. The Rais have three children attending Parkland school division and two in Edmonton public schools. They pay hundreds each year in fees: a combination of instructional fees, lunchroom fees, and technology fees. These fees continue to rise every year. The instructional material fee in Edmonton public is set at a school level in elementary, and it's usually quite modest, but it rises to $50 a child in junior high, and then it moves to $145 in high school. I had the pleasure of the Rai family coming to watch us as we introduced Bill 1 last Thursday. This bill will save them some money this fall. There's no doubt about that, and over the long-term Brandi believes that it could amount to about one thousand dollars or more in savings just for that one family.

Mr. Speaker, it's significant, and you know, it's high time that we did this. Certainly, I think that school boards were always trying to put the best foot forward for a strong public education for all of the students that they were responsible for. But, quite frankly, the long-term sort of unstable funding that they had to live under really caused school boards to try to stabilize things with individual fees. They tried their best, but of course the first thing that we did as a new government was to ensure that we funded for enrolment, that we projected long-term, stable funding so that school boards could be reassured that they didn't have to keep jacking fees up over the long term.

Mr. Speaker, this is the next phase along the way to rationalize the financing of our schools, to reduce school fees. I mean, just taking this one basic ISM fee and then financing the busing of students to their eligible schools is more than $50 million. We know that there is more work to do, but certainly what a significant start. It's not easy to do this during these difficult economic times, but then, of course, if our government is having a difficult economic time, we can only imagine that families are having a difficult time of it as well.

We're pretty proud of this move forward. I know that it is a reasonable and measured response to school fees, and it will help us to reduce school fees further and rationalize and equalize the school fee situation across the province over time.

The bus situation is another issue that we're starting to address here with Bill 1.

We note that poor planning and a lack of funding from previous times, previous governments led to delays in building projects and so forth. You know, it should be noted that with our capital project builds, more than 50 schools are being opened here in the fall. Yes, of course, over time the previous government did announce and build these things, but we built a rational approach by which we could build and have those schools open on time at a much greater rate than was projected before.

Once I got a full picture of what was going on, there were more than 50 per cent of school projects that were late. We brought that down very significantly by building a much more rational approach together with school boards and Infrastructure and the Department of Education to ensure that we could have those schools open on time, to cut those ribbons and to allow thousands of kids to enjoy new schools right across the province.

You know, it's interesting. Just as an aside, Mr. Speaker, at every turn I made sure if a school was being built in an opposition riding to invite that opposition MLA to come and participate in the festivities and also to invite and have the former MLAs that helped to build those schools and planned for them attend those festivities and have them acknowledged in the various school openings that we had over the last number of months. It's very important to recognize that. It's very important to recognize the difference between reaching out and being fair to what is actually happening on the ground or, otherwise, making some sort of snide and unfair comments about taking credit where you're not able to do so.

Our government – what we do do is make sure that we reach out and give credit to all people who are involved in building a more progressive Alberta by building schools and putting teachers in those schools, too. You can't just build a bunch of rooms and buildings and doors and windows. We, through funding through enrolment, actually put schools and support staff and everybody else into those programs as well and to finance their enrolment over time.

You know, it's a little lesson in humble pie, which is a much easier thing to digest and eat than a bologna sandwich, which I was tasting previously. I hope that everybody is reminded about that as they move forward.

An Hon. Member: What's wrong with bologna?

Mr. Eggen: Well, no. I'm a fan of bologna. I don't want to denigrate bologna sandwiches. With a fair bit of mustard in there, they taste pretty good.

Anyway, back to looking in terms of the busing. You know, we're looking to make sure that we are helping because the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, in many places, especially where we saw rapid growth, places like suburban Calgary and Edmonton and other places like Rocky View, say, for example, is that you had a school being built, but it was oversubscribed as soon as the school went in. So they would hold lotteries – right? – for kids to be able to go to those schools. You can have a circumstance where you live right across the street looking at the school, and you lose the lottery, and you end up having to be bused many kilometres away. By paying for that busing for eligible students, I think we are providing a degree of fairness and are opening the door to more school fee and busing reform and transportation reform down the road, working together with school boards and parents and families.

That was a very interesting time last week. We've seen lots of good support from school boards and parents' associations across the province in regard to taking a stab at reducing school fees. We had the Alberta School Councils' Association that told me that families report that their annual school fees sometimes will cost more than Christmas, Mr. Speaker, for kids and for families, people taking out loans for their school fees in the fall, borrowing against their houses just to send their kids to public school.

I also was just, as many of my colleagues were as well, at the Rural Education Symposium here in Edmonton last Sunday. We had a chance to speak to more than 200 school board representatives from right across the province. Again, they were echoing the same enthusiasm for reducing school fees, and they really thought it was a big step forward because, of course, for our level of government and trustees and so forth, this is a perennial problem for them, Mr. Speaker, dealing with school fees and bus fees and so forth. So, you know, we're reaching out to ensure that school boards are getting that support, that we're covering from the government to do so, and that they're not compromised in any way with other programming or teachers and all of that kind of stuff.

You know, I want to reassure Albertans every step of the way that our program to reduce school fees here will not result in any compromise in other education programming that we have here in the province, that we will make sure that kids are getting the education that they need, and that the reduction of school fees is only a net benefit to them and their families to have that access to public education that they so deservedly should have.

Anyway, we're moving on, and there are questions, and we will help to try to resolve those over time. School boards have requested the opportunity to have their say in the development of regulations related to these fees, and, Mr. Speaker, we're happy to do so. We will work with them because, of course, they know where they are at better than anybody else, and they know where they need to build their fees and to have regulations that allow some greater equality across the province.

What I did hear was a recognition that the amount charged in school fees each year widely varies, so we are intending to take action on this as well. As I've said, our initial focus will be on instructional supplies and material fees because that's where we see the greatest measure of equity possible. You know, I won't pretend, Mr. Speaker, to say that from school board to school board there's not some differential in the immediate year or two or three of building this out because, of course, some school boards charge a lot more fees, some places charge fewer fees, and so forth. This isn't just a way to save money for families across the province. This is also a way to try to pull these things in, to have them responded to in a more equal manner across the province.

Almost every school board charges a fee at some level. We do recognize two school boards that don't, and we will be giving them, based on their population, some equivalency of compensation for them to build programming. Those two school boards in northern Alberta, you know, of their own choice – and I thank them for that – had already eliminated school fees. We will, based on population, compensate them in the appropriate manner so that they are part of this initiative as well.

The removing of the fee will lead to immediate savings for parents in nearly 600,000 Alberta families, Mr. Speaker, so it's a pretty good deal. There are many sitting in this House here now, if you have children, that might, you know, see this benefit yourselves and for all of your constituents, right? It's a pretty big deal. Like I say, the Rai family is a good example of literally hundreds of thousands of families that will derive a benefit from this.

I just want to carry on. Of course, you know, we're talking about the importance of technology in our schools – it's very important, too – and we want to make sure that our students are ready for their future careers in a diversified economy.

This is where the new school-fee regulation comes in, to allow us to start to set some rules for fees and justify to families what the money they do spend is going towards. This regulation would affect all fees, Mr. Speaker, charged by school boards. Right now various sections of the act refer to the charging of fees: for example, section 30 deals with fees charged by public boards for early childhood services programming, section 34 addresses fees charged by charter schools, and section 60(2) addresses field trip fees. Amendments to these sections would ensure that school boards charging fees for these purposes must follow requirements of the new school-fee regulation.

After section 39 Bill 1 would also add a section that would expressly provide the minister – that's me – with regulation-making authority with respect to school fees. There is currently no such authority under the School Act. As I already described, a number of existing sections within the act currently authorize boards to charge fees; however, these fees are not legislatively regulated. This proposed section contains a listing of authorities in addition to general powers that the minister would specifically be able to address through the regulation.

These additions, Mr. Speaker, are broad enough in scope that they would provide the authority to deal with all matters related to school fees. For example, section 39.1(2) of the act would allow the minister to make regulations respecting fees parents may be charged by boards, including but not limited to authorizing the charging of fees, defining fee types or costs, limiting the amount of fees or costs that they may be charged by the board, the refund of fees or costs, the waiver of fees or costs, the establishment of policies and procedures by boards in respect to school fees, school fee reporting by boards, and penalties or sanctions for a board's failure to comply with the regulations respecting fees or costs.

Specific to transport fees, or busing fees, Mr. Speaker, the amendments are in section 51(3). This section currently allows boards subject to the current transportation regulation to charge fees. Through the amendments the boards' current fee-setting authority to charge transportation fees would be shifted somewhat. Instead of explicitly being permitted to charge fees, they would not be able to do so unless they adhere to the regulation, including the new school-fee regulation. This provides greater ability to regulate certain transportation fees, which, like I've outlined before, we certainly intend to do.

Now, for the amendment that will along with the forthcoming regulation lead to the elimination of instructional supply and material fees, section 60(2)(j) of the School Act currently allows a board to charge parents for instructional supplies or materials. Bill 1 would repeal this section, Mr. Speaker. The new school-fee regulation would then establish which fees may or may not be charged.

Finally, section 124 currently provides parents with a mechanism to request a ministerial review of matters pertaining to fees after an appeal to the school board. Through these amendments parents will continue to have the right to request a ministerial review of these matters but only after a specified process has taken place. This new process will outline requirements boards must follow to address the parental concerns regarding fees or costs. This review process will be another mechanism to hold boards accountable for requirements regarding school fees.

Overall, then, this legislation will strike a balance between making life more affordable for Albertans with families immediately and giving us flexibility to see further reductions and rationalizations over time.

Since I tabled Bill 1 last week, Mr. Speaker, I've seen lots of support from parents and from school trustees and from teachers and many more quarters of our society. Albertans know how important this legislation is. There's high anticipation for it, and I'm very, very proud to . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, Wildrose has been pushing for all mandatory fees to be scrapped since 2012, so I am extremely, extremely grateful to see this government step up and make changes so that public school boards can stop charging fees for instructional materials. Fees should not be charged for instructional supplies and other basic needs. This is a most welcome and sensible change, so thank you.

This is a massive win for Albertans as well, so I congratulate the government on its ability to find the efficiencies within the government and to fund, well, it's actually $54 million or so so that the burden of this bill is not shifted onto the school boards. Boards are already struggling with increasing costs due to the carbon tax and are trying to find a way to provide a quality education for all of our students, especially at this time when we have scarce resources. Each school board has done their best to work within the fiscal constraints with insufficient funding, lack of autonomy with respect to so much of the funding that they do receive.

Next to parents our teachers are the most important and influential people in the lives of our kids. I would personally like to take this opportunity to thank our teachers for their hard work every day, their adaptability to changing environments and expectations. I would like especially to thank the people of Alberta and the public school boards for their dedication and their contribution to this bill through their lobbying and pressuring this and previous governments to find ways to be able to meet the growing financial pressure.

We are immensely privileged to be here in Alberta and to live here, but we are facing extremely challenging times, so this bill is a good start, and again I'd like to thank the minister for tabling it.

I do look forward to full discussion and debate on this bill, and, as always, I have some questions, so I'm going to jump right in. I'd like to look first at transportation, and this is a highly, highly complex funding model. I have to admit that when I first looked at it, at the funding manual, I literally went cross-eyed. Kudos to the government for wading in, but I'm wondering if the public may not be better served if the funding model could be simplified. It might be something you want to think about, going through this process, so that we actually understand what the provisions in Bill 1 for transportation mean.

Some of the questions that I've heard from school boards include things like: do all public schools benefit from this bill, or are there just a chosen few? The minister was mentioning that he had met with rural schools, so I look forward to finding out what that means for rural school boards, that travel literally millions of kilometres each year. As for our urban schools, what does this mean for urban school boards, that may not travel as far but who transport thousands of students every year?

Also, what does this mean for parents who send their children to a specific program outside of the mileage parameters that meet educational requirements of the child but that is not a designated program? I mean, I have personal experience with this. My youngest son did not go to his designated school because of the disabilities that he had when he was younger. We were fortunate enough to be able to go through Renfrew services. That's quite a distance from Chestermere, as you can imagine. I'm looking forward to having that discussion to find out what the parameters are of that, especially if there's not a designated special education program in that area. A lot of public schools actually provide special education programs, but as I'm sure the minister would agree, Mr. Speaker, the parent is obviously the best person to make the decision as to the education of their child, especially if there are specific requirements for that child. So I look forward to having that discussion as to how that's going to be determined and if the parents will be consulted in that as well.

Also, what does this mean for families whose children take urban transportation? Also, there are families who drive their children to school because the bus rides are too long and the walk distances to the congregated bus sites are too far. We have lots and lots of rural folks who have driveways that are miles and miles long. I'm sure any of you who've door-knocked in rural areas know how long some of those driveways can be on a cold, stormy day when you're walking up there. You know, having little munchkins walk down those long, long driveways is not always feasible. Just curious about that, too.

One of the number one messages that I heard from the education stakeholders is that one funding model – and this is really important – does not meet the idiosyncratic needs that we see across the province. We just have to make sure that this model looks at all of the various and thumbprint issues that each of these school boards has. So I look forward to the consultations on that to see how that's going to go forward.

When it comes to a transportation funding model, one size fits no one. Again I go to the transportation funding model. It's very, very complex. So I'm looking forward to those discussions.

What measures will be built into the regulations to allow the school boards some flexibility in using the funding to meet the needs of their communities? I believe I heard the minister mention that school boards may be or will be consulted and included in that discussion to figure that out and how that's to go along within the regulations. I'm sure the school boards will be pleased to hear that that consultation will happen.

On another note, I applaud the government for finding efficiencies to underwrite the $54 million that is being billed for this cost. Many of us would like to know where those efficiencies come from and if we will see similar new efficiencies each year to cover the ongoing costs associated with this bill. I believe I heard the minister say that this is an annual thing; it will be year after year. Again, I look very forward to the discussions on finding out where those efficiencies were found. If you found $54 million this year, will you find another $54 million next year, adjusted, of course, for the increasing costs of the carbon tax and then, of course, the successive years that follow and the sustainability of making sure that school boards and parents are going to be able to depend on this program that reduces fees in schools?

I have a lot of questions about the transportation fees, and I look forward to learning more about that as we go through debate in this House.

I also have a couple of questions about the instructional material fees. My main question is: what is a basic instructional fee? These reductions in school fees: are they limited to the provided list within the bill? If so, we could see some trouble as future ready, as the minister would know, sets out a vision of education that moves well beyond the four walls of the classroom and the school. To bring future ready alive, school boards will have to offer a wide variety of options for students to allow them to take advantage of the dual credit opportunities, to participate in learning activities outside of the school, and to apply that learning to life outside the school. Teachers will also have to provide a whole array of learning opportunities that fall well beyond the realm of photocopying and workbooks.

The minister was mentioning about field trips and technology and other things. We just need to understand if those are included or not included in the fee reductions. Again, I look forward to discussions to find out the logistics and some clarity on where these dollars are being spent. While on one hand this government looks to foster a new and forward-thinking model of education, we are hoping that that funding will follow with that mandate.

There are a couple of troubling things, and this just goes to historical issues within this Legislature, with a bill coming forward and the consultations following. Much of this bill will be fleshed out through regulation, which doesn't happen in here. The government has followed this pattern of consultation since they were elected, and it's disturbing. While the intent of the bill is laudable, the implementation may fall short of its intention. Again, we would encourage that many, many of these things that the government is thinking about doing be brought forward here in the debate of the bill so that we can have some stakeholder outreach and have some feedback while we're all in the House to discuss this together.

Given the unsettled climate within the education community these days – I mean, we have, as you know, been very vocal about the secrecy with the curriculum rewrite, with regard to associations that are impacting the curriculum rewrite; the union and lobby groups, Mr. Speaker, that are pushing governments to defund independent schools; public school boards calling for Catholic schools to be incorporated into the public model; and many, many other conflicts. I've heard concern that this bill will be passed before appropriate consultation has given shape to the substance and the provisions of the bill.

There's also some confusion – we've heard this, and I don't know if the minister has heard this as well; again, I look forward to hearing what the minister has to say about this – about why the bill is being tabled now. Previously I believe the minister had stated that the election promise of reducing school fees by 50 per cent would not see the light of day until 2018. So while I'm very grateful, I am curious as to the reasoning behind this. With 50 per cent, we would have seen a much larger reduction.

Is the bill a partial recognition of the devastating impact of the carbon tax on school boards and families? Better yet, the government could just scrap the carbon tax and add in this reduction of fees, and you would have a perfect recipe to make life better for Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, I do indeed applaud this government's actions in introducing this bill, and I truly, with all my heart, recognize that this is a step in the right direction. But I believe that all of us in this House need to take some time to be convinced that the government has considered the full implications of the provisions of this bill, and I'm very much looking forward to more discussion and receiving some of the answers to the questions that I've asked.

Thank you so much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to stand here in support of Bill 1, An Act to Reduce School Fees, in second reading. You know, it was one of the key campaign promises. Being in a suburban riding in the south end of Calgary, I really heard from a lot of constituents that it was something that was very important for them, something that they would rely on us as well to make sure that we follow through.

You know, it's funny. Many of us here are blessed to be parents, have heard the great news of finding out about motherhood or fatherhood, and many of us here have held a newborn baby in our arms. The number one thing that we never really thought about when this was coming down the pipe was: what's my busing fee going to be? If I live near my designated school, am I going to lose the lottery? Realistically, it becomes a very big shock when you get closer and closer to that first day of school and you find out what the burden is going to be, especially if you have a larger family.

You yourself, Mr. Speaker, said once that you don't know where you're going unless you look at where you've come from. I'm going to reflect back and share sort of my experiences as a young parent. I've shared some of them before in this House, about being a 21-year-old and having my first child. It was an exciting time. We made the choice to move back to Calgary from Ottawa after our son was born. We never really thought about school fees in Alberta, what was happening and how they were gradually and gradually increasing, especially when it came to busing fees. To be honest, as we moved forward on buying a house, we wanted to make sure that our kid had a good school, but we also had to make sure that our house was affordable. So, as many experience, our house and the area that we lived in was a little bit further from our school than what was ideal.

As I was building my career and developing as a young person who's trying to build a profession as a young parent, there was something I experienced in the '08 recession. I actually had to deal with a 25 per cent income decrease because of many variables that existed within my employment, like many families are dealing with today here in Alberta. So as I'm continuing to pay these bills that aren't going to go down, like mortgages and insurance, I start getting closer and closer to the date that my son is going to be going to school. And I was blessed to find out in 2008 that I was going to have another child. Eventually what ended up happening was we started learning what the school fees were going to be, and I reflected back to when I was in school, which wasn't too, too long ago. The busing fees weren't as high as they are today, especially in Calgary, especially in the public board.

Right then I was dealing with this area where I was on the cusp of what would be defined as low income. I refer to it as sort of the no-man's-land, where you're not eligible for any benefits, but you're really pinching every penny to get by. I remember hearing on the news a year out of my first son going to school about a hike in busing fees because there was a shortfall in the CB's budget, and that got a bit scary because, you know, I was reflecting back to what it was going to be.

Right now in Calgary our busing fees in the public system sit at $335. Now, I reflect on the fact that I had a third child. That would be over $1,000 to take my kids through school, and to reflect back to where my income was sitting when my first son was going to school, I was going to be paying 4 per cent of all the money in my pocket to bus my kids to school, just to bus my kids to school. That didn't include any of the other fees that were coming in there, including instructional fees.

When you're a young parent, you have a lot of pride. You know, you don't want to seek that help. Sometimes people look at you, and you feel like you're being stigmatized, so you don't necessarily seek the help that you need. I'm going to tell you that, especially when it came to that September fee for my first son, that was around a time where it was paycheque by paycheque. That was around a time where, yep, you're going to have holes in your knees for a little bit longer. It was really tough, and this is a basic necessity. This is a basic necessity that as a taxpayer I'm already paying into and the generation before didn't have to pay as much for, so you're really questioning the equity around this. Fortunately, I had a little bit of a shift in career and was able to move up, and it became a bit more affordable for us to maintain that.

But I reflect back to many other variables. I reflect back to where it's a single parent, how when you're a single parent and you have a situation where you're raising a family by yourself, it's a lot harder for you to progress through any structural system and move up the ranks. The reality here in Alberta is that a lot of our single parents, not all of them, are women, and the reality here in Alberta is that there is a huge pay inequity that exists between men and women. I can only envision the burden that we see on many of these single, stay-at-home moms who are in that no-man's-land that I speak of, where they're not eligible for the supplements and the subsidies for busing, or they carry that pride because they want to show that they can do it on their own and they don't seek them out.

Growing up in northeast Calgary I saw a lot of challenges. I would say that with our new Canadians there are a lot of language barriers that exist. So a lot of people are not aware that these subsidies do exist, or they're worried about trying to seek them out, or there's a lot of pride that exists with it, as I just spoke about.

When we reflect back to how much is collected by school boards, it's a significant amount of money. It's over $200 million. Now we're helping assist with backstopping the school boards, which is something similar to what we saw with the tuition freeze. It's our government making sure that not only are we going to implement a policy, but we're going to make sure that we support our stakeholders when we do it.

In the past we used to see mandates – and I use the tuition freeze as an example – where we would say: we're going to freeze tuition; figure it out. One thing that our government acknowledged is that there are many variables that cause increases in overall costs for many of these institutions, so when we implemented a tuition freeze, we made sure that we backstopped our postsecondaries so that they weren't going to take an unnecessary burden, so that we didn't see unnecessary cuts that were going to the classroom, so that we could allow them to continue to accept as many students as possible. That's one thing that we're supporting with this policy. Not only are we implementing the policy; we're helping our stakeholders get there.

It's important to recognize, too, that for many of the people who are in their designated areas and who are busing their students, when we speak about, on average, that a lot of parents are going to see a 25 per cent decrease, to be candid, especially in a lot of the newer communities in Alberta, some of them are going to see potentially more than a 50 per cent increase because they're paying a significant amount of money for their busing fees.

Recently we had the opportunity to have the minister down in Calgary to speak to many stakeholders, including the Calgary school board, about this policy and about moving forward with it. Unfortunately, I didn't have a chance to attend that because I was down in Auburn Bay with the Member for Calgary-South East to open a new school there.

I chatted with a lot of the administrators and a lot of the principals there. We've seen a significant amount of growth in south Calgary, and unfortunately we weren't catching up to the school builds that we needed to with the growth that we're facing in that area. I spoke with some of the administrators about the student population that we're seeing there. They had over 600 kids from day one in that school – 600 – so the reality is that even though the new developed community of Auburn Bay down in the south end has that new school, there is a huge possibility that not all of the kids are going to go there, that some of the parents who live in that community may end up having to bus their kids anyway.

The reality is – and you hear this all the time in Calgary; you hear it in the radio ads and you see it in any of the advertisements they do for any new development – that there's a perception, a misleadingness that happens because they talk about: oh, a new school is coming in this area. Well, the reality is that there is designated school land, and the reality is that we might be breaking ground or that the community is very new and there might only be 50 kids living in that area. But the reality is that there isn't a school right now, there isn't a school for that kid in that area, and the child has to be bused.

Subsequently, these families who've moved into this area because it's going to be a new, well-developed area for a family are going to face this heavy burden. In Calgary specifically, a lot of young families go into our suburban areas. A lot of them, building their careers and sometimes dealing with financial hardships, live in those areas because they're affordable and we've seen inflation in more centralized houses. Just as I spoke about, most families, when they're holding their newborn child, aren't thinking about the school fees that they're going to have to pay. So they ultimately face the heavy burden that parents who have to pay for these busing fees face.

Now, the one challenge that I've always acknowledged that we face with this is that there's been a gradual increase in costs, and the previous government was not looking at ways that we could ultimately support this long-term growth. So we saw gradually a lot of things that were eroding within how much people are paying for bus fees. One thing that we specifically saw in Calgary as well is the subsidy for transit passes. Most high school students take public transit to school because their high school is maybe far away, especially because we have a lot of centralized high schools in Calgary, so a lot of students end up going, you know, dozens of kilometres in some cases. Myself, even, when I was in high school, I went from literally the end of Calgary to downtown to go to high school on a city bus.

An Hon. Member: Was this four years ago?

Mr. Sucha: Unfortunately, no. It was not four years ago. I don't show the grey yet.

With that being said, the fact of the matter is that in the past there was a significant subsidy that parents received for having to pay for public transit passes, and that subsidy has eroded. One thing that our government is looking at is supporting that subsidy as well as we move forward with this program.

The one thing that we have really shown as we implement policies like the tuition freeze, as we implement policies, as we saw, similar to the TEBA board, looking at collective bargaining negotiations with our school boards, is that we've always had a collaborative approach with our stakeholders. We're going to continue collaborating with organizations like the ASBA and all 61 school boards here in Alberta to ensure that we can implement this in a very fair and transparent way, that we can continue having these conversations as well.

You know, when you look back at some of the instructional fees that many people are paying – I mostly spoke about busing fees – the fact of the matter with our instructional fees is that as you go up the grade levels, surprisingly, as I've learned, the older your kid gets, the more expensive they become, especially when you're looking at activities like sporting activities. The instructional fees also start to increase. We've gradually seen an increase in our instructional fees that has not really matched the level of inflation, so it's been that heavy burden that a lot of our students are realistically facing.

Reflectively, I'm very excited to move forward with this because I know it's going to impact over 600,000 students, and realistically it's something that we've always committed to. It's a way that we can help many parents during these hard economic times, and it's a way that we're continuing to make life more affordable for Albertans. It's a way that we reflect on and look at people who are marginalized, people who don't need handouts, those who are lower income, similar to myself a few years back, but who are working hard, are pulling those 50-hour workweeks.

You know, it wasn't like I was looking for a handout when I was a parent. I was coming home at 2 a.m., waking up at 7 to bundle up three kids, sometimes holding two of them in my arms because they get tired and don't want to walk, to drop my first son off at school. I always reflect on the anxiety that used to come as September was coming closer, trying to figure out how we were going to pay for this, having to maybe delay that credit card bill or maybe having to think twice if I'm going to actually make that cable bill or that telephone bill.

You know, many of these commitments, similar to what we've seen with the investments that our government has made for low-income transit passes and the supports that we're doing with some of our municipalities to really encourage supports for lower income and marginalized people, are really trying to widen that gap because we do recognize, especially in a province like ours, that for many individuals it can be really tough to try to have these essentials, and ultimately school is something that's essential for all kids.

We need to do what we can to remove the barriers for parents, to make sure that ultimately our schools have all the tools they need to succeed and that we follow through with the commitments that we've made. This is the first step as we move forward in our mandate. It's something that I'm proud of, and I know that the constituents of Calgary-Shaw and all Calgarians are going to be happy that we moved forward with this.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: A question under 29(2)(a)?

Ms Fitzpatrick: Yes.

The Speaker: The Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for quite an enlightening, I guess, discussion about the bill.

Now, I was certainly a single parent for quite some time, and I remember actually walking and dropping my daughter off and carrying her to take her to school. If you'd just tell me a little bit more about kind of where you think we need to go in terms of giving support in this area.

Mr. Sucha: You know what? I think that we're making some great strides, and this is the first step as we move forward. I really reflect back to the biggest burden as a young parent who dealt with some challenges in relation to a little bit of financial hardship. That was the biggest anxiety, to be completely honest and to be completely candid. That's why, you know, when I was sitting here for the throne speech and we were moving forward with first reading of Bill 1, it got really exciting for me.

You know, I had an individual here, whom I invited, who's with the Aboriginal Friendship Centre in Calgary. We reflected on how this would possibly impact a lot of people. It was very funny because we actually sort of grew up in the same area of Calgary. It was sort of these parallels in life.

You know, it's very easy, when we sit here, if we've had good jobs for a long period of time or if we've had our career for 25 years or if we're in a situation where we're becoming a grandparent, to kind of forget what it was like to be raising those kids and the challenges that we had with the finances.

It's also important to reflect back – you know, it wasn't that long ago; it was only 25 years ago – to when a house in Calgary was a five-digit number and when you didn't have to deal with as many technologies to make sure that we keep our school systems modern. It's important to reflect back that I was going to school at a very interesting time because it was when we faced a lot of heavy, heavy cuts. We started to really see that in the implications in the classroom, even when I reflect to myself on the troubles that I had learning how to read and write as a young child and the lack of supports that I had in the classroom, because it gradually went up from 20 students to 30 students, where the teachers were overwhelmed.

So we have a choice to make here, ultimately, and it's either (a) heavy cuts and letting our students pay for it and ultimately impacting our economy in the long term or (b) supporting our essential services and our education system and making sure that we move forward in supporting those families who need it most and reflecting on how we can support them through reductions in things like school fees. Ultimately, we're looking at it as – you know, I'm going to call it the way I reflect on it, that it's almost like a flat tax in many respects.

One thing that we asked Albertans when we were standing up during the election – and this is one of the key things that we said over and over again, and people looked at it as our mandate – was that we asked for those who reaped the benefits of our province, who are earning a little bit more, to pay just a little bit more. Realistically, we still sit here with one of the lowest tax jurisdictions in the country. We're reflecting on how we can move forward with this, and it's asking those who might earn $200,000 to pay a little bit more so that we can support those families earning under $40,000, who are struggling to get by day after day, have that support and not see the soaring costs that come from these fees and ensure that we continue to fund for enrolment, ensure that we can give their kids the best-quality education.

At the end of the day, these kids are going to be the ones taking care of all of us in this province when we get old, and they're going to be the ones sitting in these chairs. Maybe it reflects our government sooner than expected. Nonetheless, it's important that we make sure that we do everything we can to support these students moving forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It looks like we'll have a few minutes left to wax eloquent on Bill 1, An Act to Reduce School Fees, a welcome addition to the Legislature. I think you'll find unanimous consent for this and maybe not unanimous consent for how you're going to finance it. That may be the challenge that you're up against. Borrowing is not a solution if we don't have a long-term plan to address this important contribution to young families particularly.

Of course, it was under the PCs that these fees got out of control. Under the Klein cuts in the '90s the schools had to make up the reduced income they were getting to function, and Ralph Klein's government allowed schools to levy whatever fees they wanted, so they went from about $80 a child in 2008 up to $240 a child in 2012 and even higher since. The only question, I guess, that all of us need to look at is: how can we continue to spend more and not get into trouble for those very children and their future and the level of debt they're going to incur?

One suggestion we have on the Liberal side – and it's been in our platform for some time – is to phase out the private school fees as they're able to and find the resources to sustain some of their needs, not suddenly but over the course of five to 10 years. That would amount to something like, I believe, over $200 million. That could help to sustain the kind of reduced school fees in the public system that I think we're all looking for. According to my research $248 million is now being paid for private schools in Alberta. That would go a long way in moving us towards a sustainable source of funding and satisfy us that we're honouring our commitment to public education while not compromising some of the special schools that are in the province that have to be subsidized because of disabilities – learning disabilities, physical disabilities, autism, and significant learning disabilities – and that at this point are under the private purview, perhaps.

I guess that in the short time that I have, I just wanted to make the point that we certainly support this. It's another important step that this government is taking to make living more affordable for lower income people and education accessible for more people at the lower income levels and allow people to keep their own money and use it in other ways. We often hear from this side of the House: leave money in people's pockets. Well, that's exactly what you're doing in this case. You're leaving more money in people's pockets to spend in other ways that they consider valuable and preferable for their own families.

However, borrowing is not an answer in terms of the longer term. We have to be careful that this is also a slow transition away from private school funding and ensure that we deal with the special populations that they are dealing with. We believe that there should be more support for wraparound services, including affordable lunch programs and transportation, as is indicated in this bill.

Subject to hearing more about just how we're going to fund this, we will certainly be providing provisional support from this side of the House. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Any questions under 29(2)(a) to the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View? The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I can either adjourn the House, or I can ask the hon. member under 29(2)(a) to enlighten us further for a couple of minutes about the Liberal plan to make education more affordable.

The Speaker: There's a question under 29(2)(a).

Dr. Swann: Well, I would be very pleased to add more to what I've said. The Liberal plan has been outlined in our platform for a number of years along with the message about shifting more of the private school funding to the public school system. I think that is well recorded. I'm pleased that the government is borrowing our policy and looking at that still although the minister has been a bit ambiguous about exactly what he's going to do with the private schools. I hope he will become more clear with time and ensure that we do provide the more fair response to a public system that is struggling. I encourage the government to look more seriously at that private funding source.

The Speaker: Hon. member, under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Hanson: Yes. I'd just like to clarify: is it your party's position to defund private schools and charter schools?

Dr. Swann: It's our position that over time we should bring all the school systems under one public school system. That will not be quick or easy because, as I indicated, there are some special schools that are only funded by private funds right now. But the goal is the same, to ensure that public funds go to public schools over a period of five to 10 years.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I will adjourn the session until tomorrow morning at 9.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good morning.

Let us reflect and pray together, each in our own way. Hon. members, today is International Women's Day, a day to celebrate and thank the Creator for the people in our world who are mothers, partners, daughters, sisters, grandmothers, friends, and women who lead in families and in communities every day. Amen.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Ms Jansen moved, seconded by Ms Miller, that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois Mitchell, CM, AOE, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate March 7: Mr. Loewen]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Yes, Mr. Speaker, on 29(2)(a) for the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky. I was listening intently yesterday as he took the members of this House down a little bit of a Willy Wonka's wondrous boat ride.

The Speaker: Hon. member, we're not able to be under 29(2)(a) at this point. It ends. So to the main question: is that what you wish to speak to?

Cortes-Vargas: Because he adjourned debate?

The Speaker: Debate was adjourned.

Cortes-Vargas: Yes? Okay. Excellent.

The Speaker: Your main speech? Is that what you're . . .

Cortes-Vargas: That's okay.

The Speaker: Okay.

The Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, good morning, everybody. I would like to say that I'm very grateful for the opportunity to have a response to the Speech from the Throne. Thank you to Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta for her beautiful expression of this document.

Last year we saw many, many Albertans standing up against a government that wants to alter the very fabric of our community. They stood up against actions of a government that insult the people who built this province. We've seen so many Albertans actually gather at the steps of the Legislature asking, demanding, crying out the government, trying to be heard. Albertans have tried to help bring some common sense to this government. We have seen a government that is bent not only on altering the very province that they are privileged to govern but also the people who live here.

What this government does not seem to understand is that you can only blame low oil prices for a very, very short period of time and that solid economic policy and fiscal policy are the keys to surviving and thriving in these terrible economic times. This, however, would only become clear to this government had they the wisdom to actually reach out to Albertans and converse with them about their needs and provide real solutions for living through this downturn. I've heard from many of the members opposite that they've had many conversations with people, and I'm curious as to why those conversations did not turn into consultations and then impact the policies that they brought forward. Many times we're able to see outside of our own ideology when we have legitimate conversations with those who challenge or oppose our own ideas, and we have yet to see the government have these conversations authentically with Albertans. Instead, they've simply pushed through legislation that supports their own agenda and that sidesteps Albertans.

This government has blamed the opposition for public concern over unpopular and unwanted legislation and regulations and has accused us of fearmongering and has sidestepped accountability to Albertans. They claim that the concerns that we bring on behalf of Albertans to this Legislature are exaggerations. It's time for the government to get off their talking points, I think. The language that is being used is flying in the face of the open statement of this throne speech, where it states, "We are an open and inclusive society built on enduring values: compassion, hard work, and justice."

This government not only talks down to the opposition, but it also has belittled the very people that they are put here to represent. Perhaps most disrespectful is that this government has said to Albertans who are saying that, for example, they can't afford the cost of the carbon tax to take the bus. Very thoughtful indeed. The government will never – never – win the hearts and minds of these great people in this province in this way. The desire to build a better province lies in the hearts of every member of this Legislature. I mean, I've said this many, many times in the past, that the broad and ideological objectives that guide this government have left us all wondering what it is about the spirit of Albertans that is overwhelmingly offensive to this government.

I'm surprised to hear in the Speech from the Throne that the government claims that they've brought down the rate of spending thoughtfully and prudently. Well, we only need to look at the billions of dollars in debt repayment, the lowering of our triple-A, which I know doesn't seem to be a very big deal to them, and the bureaucracy to see that this claim in no way reflects the reality of their actions and it certainly does not meet the needs of this province.

We have seen an increase in the price of oil and, thankfully – thankfully – we have seen a change in this government's stance on pipelines and our precious natural resources. The people of Alberta deserve a huge pat on the back for that. That came from Albertans and their strength of lobbying this government and past governments to do the right thing and to allow, actually, the folks at the National Energy Board to do their job to help provide information necessary to the federal government so that they can do their job and approve pipelines.

Now this government needs to fully support and move forward – and I see some changes there – toward Energy East as well and Keystone XL. The proof is in the pudding. Right, folks? The eco-activists involved in this government have had their say. Their needs as well as those of every other Canadian will be balanced in the outcomes of the NEB, and this process must be and needs to be respected and followed so the interest groups on all sides of this discussion have their say. To date this government has fallen short of its claims, especially the claim of making life better for all Albertans. I personally receive thousands of e-mails weekly asking, begging for answers. No government truly, truly invested in making life better in an oil-rich jurisdiction would cap the oil sands, which translate to prosperity for Albertans and Canadians. I just can't imagine how that makes life better for all of us.

What government truly invested, Mr. Speaker, in making life better would bring back a capacity market and then sell it to Albertans as that somehow they're trying to help families when we all know that that cost of electricity will be hidden in every other tax you pay? What government interested in making things better would spend $9 million on a campaign for a carbon tax when we have massive levels of child poverty in this province? Nine million dollars in the pockets of those families through tax breaks and education: that could have changed lives.

The Premier is on record as stating that the previous government's commitment to environmental protection was anemic and that our air, land, and water would continue to be threatened by government neglect. What exactly has this government done differently?

The debacle over the PPAs is a perfect example. I would certainly appreciate understanding how this makes life better for Albertans. In the government's own words, "Alberta's energy industry creates good jobs, and good jobs are the bedrock of a strong province." Well, everyday Albertans expect, then, from this government that when we are thrown under the bus by people in other nations who call our oil sands dirty that this government will be the first to stand up and educate and alter the untrue perceptions of our environmental stewardship in this province. Some of these perceptions are courtesy of this government. It is now time to fix that. Now, in my opinion, that is how you make life better for Alberta families.

I would like to give another much, much needed shout-out to Albertans for their work in pressuring this government and others into fulfilling, at least partially, their commitment of reducing school fees and to the government for taking this very first and necessary step. I believe we can go further, as I stated before. Because the numbers in this reduction did not include the carbon tax, we'll see how the numbers shake out. But again to the government: thank you. What I would also like to say, though, is that, unfortunately, what should have been helpful for Albertans is only going to have minimum impact because of increased taxes, carbon taxes, out-of-control spending, expanded size of government, and new spending commitments.

We're thrilled to see, though – and this is awesome – that parents will be consulted outside the structure of predetermined surveys in modernizing the curriculum. Again, to the people of this magnificent province: this is your victory lap. We will be watching to make sure that this government follows through with its promise of parental involvement in the curriculum rewrite, choice in education, and local decision-making at the board levels. We saw this government tear apart a home-schooling community, and we will be watching closely this government's commitments to funding independent schools.

We, unfortunately, see very confusing commitments to literacy, numeracy, and testing for our kids. If we expect to give our kids the best education possible, we need to look at some proven teaching strategies as well as those strategies that link classroom education to life outside the classroom. Our children are not guinea pigs, and Albertans will not sit back and watch this government experiment with our children any longer.

I look forward to seeing how this government will provide accessibility to services for our very able special-needs people, Mr. Speaker. This is imperative, and I'm grateful to see it in the Speech from the Throne. This government has the opportunity to lead by example through collaboration with all Albertans, but so far what we've seen from this government is labelling and dividing groups of Albertans and using this divisiveness to pit groups of Albertans against each other in its race for scarce resources. The government has created anger and distrust where there was once open discussion and thoughtful discourse.

So, Mr. Speaker, here is my love letter to the government. If you truly want to make life better, you must create a strong economic environment and communities that have resources to celebrate, love, accept, and enjoy each other's uniqueness. Good governance will get to the heart of the problem without politicizing or polarizing society for its own gain. This does not make life better. While we see glimmers of hope in this Speech from the Throne, this session will be very telling. I know that I and the rest of us will be watching and waiting for the actions from this government that demonstrate that they're truly interested in enhancing and strengthening our open and inclusive society that is built on enduring values: compassion, hard work, and justice.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any questions under 29(2)(a)?

Ms McKittrick: I'd like to thank the member for the interesting discussion on the throne speech. I was wondering about those letters that she had received. She mentioned that she had received thousands of letters, and I was wondering if it would be possible for them to be tabled or to have access to them because I'm very interested. I haven't received those letters, so I'm not quite sure what those thousands of letters mean.

Thank you.

Mrs. Aheer: Well, I'd said thousands of e-mails. I will, certainly, if you would like. I haven't read specifically from any e-mails, Mr. Speaker. I'm not sure if I need to table, but I would happily provide this House with the thousands of e-mails, without the names, if that's what's required of me. I'm not sure. I did not speak specifically of any e-mail, but I would be happy to send this member – in fact, I will forward you the thousands. I would happily share those with you any day. You just let me know. We'll talk about it, and we'll make sure that the e-mails that are coming to me – I'm not sure what the privacy situations are with that. Let me look into that. But I will happily – happily – forward the thousands of e-mails that I get and happily share them with you.

Thank you for the opportunity, actually.

The Speaker: Are there any other questions or comments to the hon. member under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing and hearing none, the Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As we come to the halfway point of our first mandate, it is an incredible honour and privilege for me to respond to Her Honour's Speech from the Throne. This provides an opportunity to not only look forward in anticipation of what is to come but also to look back at what has been accomplished and what we had set out to do in our platform.

Alberta has a long and proud history. Despite recent economic challenges beyond our control Alberta also finds itself in an enviable position in the present. Thanks to the visionary leadership laid out in the Speech from the Throne, Alberta has a bright future, set to lead the country in economic growth. Albertans elected us on a platform of change, of doing things differently. The trust placed in me by the voters of Banff-Cochrane to be their representative is something I always keep top of mind.

On International Women's Day I'd like to pay tribute to the women in my life: my wife, mom, sister, niece, my 101-year-old grandma, and my constituency staff.

I'm honoured to represent such a diverse and vibrant constituency, full of community-minded Albertans, who look out for one another. I'm inspired by them every day. Indeed, the determination and resiliency they displayed during the 2013 floods influenced my decision to run for election.

Alberta is going through difficult economic times due to the low international price of oil. At times like these Albertans expect a steady hand on the tiller to navigate challenging situations, and this commitment was reaffirmed in the Speech from the Throne. Like all Albertans, the people of Banff-Cochrane are pragmatic and sensible, but they also don't shy away from challenges or let hard work deter them from striving to reach new heights, literally and figuratively. It's quite the opposite really.

Take the recent reintroduction of bison into Banff national park, for example. In early February bison were successfully translocated to the Panther valley after many years of planning. This historic return of bison, a keystone species and North America's largest land mammal, coincides with the 150th anniversary of Canada's Confederation. After being absent from the wild for over a century, the bison's homecoming is a historic and cultural triumph.

This was made possible by people like Banff national park superintendent, Dave McDonough; bison reintroduction project manager and wildlife biologist, Karsten Heuer; Bison Belong co-ordinator, Marie-Eve Marchand; and Eleanor Luxton Historical Foundation trustee Harvey Locke, just to name a few. This was a significant team effort, and I'd like to thank all of those involved in this historical undertaking. There are too many to name them all.

Preceding the physical reintroduction of the bison, another example of determined co-operation took place during the signing of the Buffalo treaty during the summer of 2015 in Banff. At that time First Nations from both sides of the Canada-U.S. border gathered in Banff to welcome the Stoney Nakoda and the Samson Cree as signatories to this treaty of renewal, co-operation, and restoration.

It is truly inspiring to see the recognition of our past creating a path toward a vibrant future. This is especially so with respect to the reconciliation process with Canada's indigenous peoples. The traditional territory of the Stoney Nakoda First Nation, or İyāhé Nakoda, includes Banff national park. A letter signed by 20 First Nations leaders is calling for the name of Tunnel Mountain to be changed to its traditional name, Sacred Buffalo Guardian Mountain.

Alberta's wild spaces are world renowned and form an important part of Albertans' personal and collective identity. From our rugged mountain landscapes, rolling grasslands and foothills, boreal forests, and badlands, tourists from across Canada and around the world have a visit to Alberta on their bucket list.

Banff-Cochrane is fortunate to be home of the global water futures research station led by Dr. John Pomeroy. Over the next seven years the program will involve 18 universities and over 700 scientists studying ways to improve disaster warnings, water quality, and finding innovative ways for local and regional governments to adapt to and manage risks related to climate change.

During the Speech from the Throne, Her Honour told us that the government will continue to improve parks across our province and build on the historic protections that have already been brought into place such as the recently announced protections for the Castle region. The constituents of Banff-Cochrane are especially delighted to hear about improvements to Alberta's provincial parks, many of which are located in this constituency.

Camping and recreating in Alberta's outdoors is a family pastime, where many fond memories are formed. Albertans and visitors love to hike, fish, hunt, and enjoy our natural places. Greeting those visitors are our world-class tourism partners. Whether you're looking for the thrill of a dogsled tour across the Continental Divide in Lake Louise, snowboarding on Olympic terrain at Nakiska, being pampered in the spa in Banff, attempting some of the world's most difficult rock climbing routes in Canmore, watching the Lions Club rodeo in Cochrane, or cross-country skiing in Bragg Creek, there are family-friendly activities for all ages and all ability levels throughout Banff-Cochrane.

Supporting the businesses who cater to visitors and locals alike are several active and engaged chambers of commerce and business associations throughout the constituency. Launching just this past January, the newest addition to these hard-working groups is the Bow Valley Chamber of Commerce. I had the honour of attending several of their conversation cafés while they were in the formative stages of creating a chamber.

I'd like to congratulate for their efforts the founding members of the Bow Valley Chamber of Commerce: Chair Brian McClure, Vice-chair Stephanie O'Brien, Treasurer Stefan Armstrong, Secretary Elaine McPherson, and members at large Isabelle Daigneault and Darin Fauth. I look forward to working with them and all other businesses as we diversify and strengthen Alberta's economy together.

Banff-Cochrane is fortunate to be home to no fewer than five craft breweries and two craft distilleries. The newest additions – Wild Life Distillery, Canmore Brewing, Half Hitch Brewing, and Bragg Creek Brewing – join their more established counterparts Grizzly Paw brewing, Banff Ave. Brewing, and Park Distillery. The Minister of Finance is known for declaring that beer is good, and I'd like to add that craft spirits are good.

The tourism sector in Banff-Cochrane is thriving. Canadians are looking forward to celebrating 150 years of confederacy, and many are planning a visit to Banff, home of Canada's first national park. To help ensure that these visitors have the best possible experience, our government recently committed $14 million for public transit projects in the Canmore to Lake Louise corridor.

There are many tourist attractions to choose from for those visiting Banff-Cochrane. The Whyte Museum, located in Banff and founded by Peter and Catharine Whyte, inspires visitors by providing a glimpse into the area's rich history. Museum Director Vince Varga, Board Chair Marino DiManno, and CEO Brett Oland work incredibly hard to collect, preserve, and tell these important stories.

Another unique attraction for visitors near and far is the Cochrane Lions Club Labour Day rodeo. I'd like to thank Lions Club President Darren Begg for inviting me to celebrate the rodeo's 50th year this past September. The rodeo is considered one of the toughest amateur events in Canada.

The Cochrane & District Agricultural Society is yet another organization serving Cochrane and the surrounding areas. President Justin Burwash and the board of the ag society are working hard to preserve and promote Alberta's traditional roots.

While we work hard to celebrate and preserve Alberta's proud heritage, we must also work to ensure a bright future. Her Honour's Speech from the Throne indicated that our government plans to do exactly that by supporting energy efficiency programs. The programs will help families, businesses, nonprofits, farmers, municipalities, and indigenous communities to save money by supporting more energy efficient appliances, heating, lighting, and more. In addition, the government will make it more affordable to install solar panels on homes, supporting jobs and growth in Alberta's residential solar industry, and helping families power their homes with more green energy.

KCP Energy, located in Canmore, is one such company that helps homeowners to use less energy and save more. With young children and a strong belief that climate change is real, KCP Energy founder, president and CEO Geoff Domenico decided to create a business that would help his family and others to move towards living more sustainably.

Consideration of what the future holds in store for generations to come is a strong motivator for action. When a child's home isn't safe, we have a responsibility to step in and do whatever it takes to make sure that kids are protected. As Her Honour said in the Speech from the Throne: "Child protection is one of the most important services any government can provide, and we owe it to our children to get it right." It is for this reason that I'm honoured and humbled to be a member of the all-party Ministerial Panel on Child Intervention. Building on the work of this panel, the government plans to introduce new legislation focused on ensuring that child death reviews receive the utmost care and attention. This is difficult yet important work, and I'm committed to working hard alongside fellow panel members to ensure that children are protected.

I was also pleased to hear in the Speech from the Throne that the government will work to better help and protect victims of sexual and domestic violence with the introduction of legislation that eliminates barriers to pursuing justice. This work will complement that being done by the Banff YWCA, which offers a safe place for those leaving domestic violence situations in the Bow Valley. The Banff YWCA's women's emergency shelter project is led by CEO Connie MacDonald, with a strong team and talented board supporting her. A person of courage and determination, Connie and the YWCA team are working to create a made-in-the-Bow Valley solution.

Affordable housing in Banff-Cochrane is a long-standing issue. I was pleased to hear Her Honour refer to our government's commitment to continue to address long-overdue repairs of the affordable housing units we already have and to build more units for families and seniors in need. Affordable housing helps make our communities whole, and these are essential in communities like Cochrane, Canmore, and Banff, where housing costs are high.

I'd like to express my gratitude on behalf of the constituents of Banff-Cochrane for Her Honour's comments in the Speech from the Throne regarding our government's commitment to building infrastructure, supporting public education, and health care. This will especially benefit residents of Cochrane, which was the second-fastest growing municipality in Canada according to the most recent census. Residents of Cochrane will benefit from the construction of a new school, the Calgary cancer centre, and the Calgary ring road. I'm looking forward to attending the grand opening of RancheView school in Cochrane later this month.

Our government's legislative and policy agenda is bold and ambitious and exactly what Alberta needs in this time of economic recovery. As Her Honour concluded in the Speech from the Throne:

Though the world around us may be growing more uncertain, your government will remain calm and focused. Now is not the time to let our steady hand waver. As we have from the start, we will continue to create jobs, diversify our economy, and protect the health and education services on which families rely. In that work we will make life better for Alberta families.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I took particular interest in the Member for Banff-Cochrane's comments regarding the reintroduction of bison into the national park area. It sounds like he is well versed in that and took great interest in that. He also made significant comment in regard to the people that were involved in the reintroduction and going forward, so I was wondering if he could provide to the Chamber the wildlife management plan for the reintroduction of that.

I noticed also that the minister of environment is here today. I don't want to offend any sensitive ears, but the introduction of elk onto the Suffield base, that was also federal property, did not have a wildlife management plan and to this day still does not. We've since only recently learned that those animals have had chronic wasting disease discovered in the facility there. I'm wondering if the Member for Banff-Cochrane could tell us if there is indeed a wildlife management plan that's available for the introduction of those species in a national park.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you very much for the opportunity to expand on the reintroduction of bison. As I mentioned during my speech, the bison are a keystone species in the Rocky Mountain area. The activity of the bison, the way they eat and graze, stimulates the biodiversity of the region. Then, you know, their dung supports insect species, which also feeds the birds, and the birds also use the bison fur that they rub on the trees to line their nests. So it's an incredible opportunity to increase biodiversity in the region.

I'm not an expert, but I was fortunate to attend a ceremony in Banff national park just last week at the cave and basin site, where the folks involved in the reintroduction told us the background story of how they were introduced. The way I understand it, the plan for reintroduction for the next two years or so is to keep the bison in, as they call it, a soft release pen. There are 16 animals. Most of them are pregnant females, about two or three years old, so the plan is to have them calve about twice in this enclosed area so that they have a better understanding of the geography and they create sort of a home base, a home territory in that region.

Once those calvings have been successful – and there's a team supporting the bison through that process – then they're going to open up the pen and have them wander in a larger area. The area that they were reintroduced to in the Panther valley is ideal for buffalo grazing, bison grazing because it's a very grassy area and there are also lots of natural barriers for the bison. They have a large space for a home range to roam, but even without a pen they're somewhat contained in a certain valley.

It's quite an exciting project. This is something that our indigenous and First Nations people are very excited about. It's something that required an incredible amount of collaboration and planning. They had to bring in a heavy-lift helicopter from the west coast to carry the bison to the soft-release enclosure. The buffalo came from Elk Island national park. This is a place where they keep bison, and it was part of the plan all along to select healthy young animals that were pregnant and bring them to the enclosure.

I'm really excited to see how this goes. I know that people are watching this closely and interested to see what other effects this reintroduction might have. You know, it's a really great way to celebrate Canada's 150th birthday as well.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise under 29(2)(a) to reflect upon the response to the Speech from the Throne from the Member for Banff-Cochrane. I want to ask him to tell us a little bit more about the balance that's always been sought in the Banff-Cochrane area with respect to keeping a balance between environmental protection and economic development. It's something that's been going on for decades and decades. I remember one family's story, that's been told often... [The time limit for questions and comments expired]

The Speaker: Respectfully, hon. member, you don't get to ask the question.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real privilege to respond to the forward-looking Speech from the Throne we heard last week, especially on International Women's Day. Throughout the world today people are commemorating the struggle for women's rights. This is feminism, and feminism is simply equality, something we're all entitled to and something that is not a cancer.

Before I get started though, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to take a minute to thank my constituency assistants, Stephanie and Marie, who are in the constituency office today making sure that the people of Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill can connect with their government.

Governments are elected to do many things, Mr. Speaker. To give hope, to lead in good and tough times, and to make life better for Albertans. Sometimes that includes making difficult decisions, and I'm proud of my colleagues in the cabinet and all the hon. members in the government caucus who do just those things. Since being elected in 2015, I've seen how dedicated all members of this House are to serving the people of Alberta, and I want to acknowledge you all.

I'd also like to recognize the staff of the Legislature. I've seen how hard they work. The long hours they put in and their commitment to doing excellent work are obvious every day we are in the House. Thank you.

On May 5, 2015, the people of Alberta chose a new government because they wanted change, change from feeling disconnected from their government, change from obscure election financing rules that allowed those with the deepest pockets to have the most influence over elections, change from seeing our provincial savings stagnate, change from uncertainty about the health care and education that their families depend on, and change from relying heavily on resource revenue that is at the mercy of markets we do not control. I was proud to run for election and support a platform that promised Albertans what they have always needed and should expect from their government: funding for health care and education that they can rely on, respect for the environment, and a commitment to ensure that people in the province will get the maximum benefit possible from natural resources that belong to all of us.

Our government under the leadership of our Premier is committed to serving Albertans. With the clear agenda detailed in the throne speech and with an eye to the future, we're showing Albertans that we have a plan for today and tomorrow.

Alberta is the land of milk and honey, and Albertans want strong leadership. They want stability, and they want to know that the government has their back when times are tough. This is exactly what this government has promised and has been delivering since the last election. Our busy legislative agenda shows Albertans we are committed to their future. Through thoughtfully cutting the growth of government spending, we can ensure that vital services remain accessible and innovation and prudence are valued.

In the last throne speech our government committed to a strong, diversified economy in concert with strong environmental policies. Protecting both our below and above ground resources is imperative to Albertans today and into the future.

Last year the federal government approved both the Trans Mountain pipeline and line 3 as a result of the climate leadership plan, and we will continue to nail our colours to the mast and foster the co-operation that led to these approvals to ensure that the pipelines are built and Alberta oil is exported through them because what is right for Alberta is right for Canada, too.

Alberta is seeing the benefits of the new royalty structure. Already this year there has been more than a 50 per cent increase in drilling activity over last year. While the oil patch hasn't rebounded to where it was before the price of oil fell so dramatically, some of the workers affected by layoffs over the last two-plus years are heading back to work, and the outlook for our province is to lead the country in economic growth this year.

Our government knows how hard the downturn in the economy has been on Alberta families and how important jobs, both in the energy sector and in other industries, are to them. By investing in infrastructure that is essential to ensuring our economy is in a good position to rebound and continue to gain strength, our government is providing the elements that both industry and individuals need to get around, grow, and be productive.

Even with the downturn, Mr. Speaker, Evanston in Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill continues to be one of the three fastest growing neighbourhoods in Calgary, and the people of Evanston need good neighbourhood schools for their kids to attend. I was very pleased to attend the opening of two schools in the area. Kenneth D. Taylor school is named after the former Canadian ambassador to Iran, and each one of the students has been appointed an ambassador to the school. I also went to the opening of Our Lady of Grace school. Investing in this type of infrastructure not only provides good jobs so people can support their families and plan for the future; it builds community.

Other industries are vital to the economic success of Alberta, and our government is supporting small businesses. We reduced the small-business tax by a third, cutting it from 3 per cent to 2 per cent. Stimulating investment and growth in start-ups is an integral part of supporting a healthy economy. By introducing the Alberta investor tax credit, we are encouraging the flow of venture capital dollars within the province. I was very excited to be one of the co-sponsors of this bill.

I worked in information technology for a number of years, helping companies in manufacturing, health care, and oil and gas meet their strategic business goals, and I know that the scope of technology is wide. Technology pervades almost every aspect of our work and personal lives. While Alberta has some incredible tech leaders and innovators, especially in the oil and gas industry, the top three tech companies world-wide represent market capitalization of almost $1 trillion. Our province is full of smart, well-educated people who are positioned to take advantage of the tax credit, grow the technology sector, and create very good, well-paying jobs for Albertans.

Through this program and the capital investment tax credit, coupled with the establishment of business incubators like the one recently opened in Medicine Hat, we are making the province a desirable home for start-ups.

AgriFood will continue to be a shining light in terms of economic growth. In addition to investments made in expanding the Agrivalue Processing Business Incubator in Leduc, this year our government will further support Alberta's entrepreneurs in this sector. Agriculture is what helped to make Alberta the strong province it is today. I grew up in what was a small farming town outside of Grande Prairie called Sexsmith, and I know first-hand how the pioneers of our province helped create our culture. This is critical to our future.

Many of my colleagues and I had the chance to meet with the Alberta Beef Producers at the Canadian Beef Centre of Excellence in the fabulous riding of Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill, and sampling the beef there reinforced something I've known my whole life and was able to brag about at PechaKucha events in London last year. Alberta has the best beef in the world.

Our government knows that Alberta doesn't exist in a vacuum. We need to nurture the relationships we have with current and potential trade partners so our shared economic interests are protected and can grow. Our government will keep supporting and growing Alberta's trade relationships, with missions to Japan, India, and China this year, because the world has an appetite for what our energy, agriculture, and forest industries have to offer.

What all these actions have in common, Mr. Speaker, is the same commitment, a commitment to creating good-paying jobs that support hard-working Alberta families.

Good jobs mean good paycheques, and those go further when families aren't paying out of pocket to cover rising school fees. Every year it's been getting harder and harder for many families with kids in school to make ends meet. Our government promised to do something about rising school fees during the last election campaign, and we announced in the throne speech that we're reducing school fees by 25 per cent, keeping our promise to families to make life more affordable for them. We'll continue to look for ways to reduce school fees even more. Money should not be a barrier to attending school.

In addition to these strategies to support the growth of the economy, create jobs, and keep costs down for families, our government knows that some people in our province haven't always had a fair shake. We signed the new relationship agreements with Treaty 8 and the Métis Nation of Alberta, and we'll work with indigenous communities and the federal government to make sure that First Nation communities have access to clean drinking water.

Our government has taken steps to make sure that every child is protected because it is one of the most important services our government and any government can provide. We've established an all-party Ministerial Panel on Child Intervention, and we will introduce new legislation focused on making sure that child death reviews get the attention and consideration they deserve.

Our government is continuing to address long overdue repairs on affordable housing units we already have, and we're building more units for low-income families and for seniors because everyone deserves a safe, affordable home.

We're continuing to act on our commitment to affordable, $25-a-day child care, which is a huge help for parents, and families will continue to receive the enhanced Alberta family employment tax credit. We will continue the path to $15-an-hour minimum wage because no one should have to work three or more jobs just to pay their living expenses.

Mr. Speaker, as a survivor of sexual assault I am especially heartened that our government has tabled a bill that, if passed, will empower survivors of both sexual assault and domestic violence to bring forward civil cases when they're ready by removing the time limitation. It takes time to be strong enough to share our stories. Lifting this limitation respects the time it takes to heal. If we hope to eradicate domestic violence and sexual assault, we must provide the support that survivors need to overcome what has happened to them.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans can be proud of their government. We've stayed by their side during one of the tougher times our province has faced, and we will continue to stand by Albertans while our economy recovers and more people re-enter the workforce. We'll continue to stand by our industries, both the established ones like agriculture, oil and gas, and forestry and markets that are emerging in our province like value-added agribusiness and agrifood and advanced technology.

I'm proud to have run for and been elected to a government that keeps its word, a government that has followed through on what we promised Albertans we would do in spite of the mock outrage we often hear, and I'm looking forward to the many good things we will do this session.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any questions to the member under 29(2)(a)? Please proceed, Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I see that in the throne speech we've got the announcement that there's been a 50 per cent increase in drilling, and I welcome that as well. But my riding hasn't seen the people going to work quite yet. I noticed that you had mentioned in your Speech to the Throne that people are going back to work. What kind of, I guess, justification do you have to show that, like, Bonnyville-Cold Lake is going to see the spike of people going back to work? I guess, right now I can tell you that people are still concerned in my riding with how to feed their families, and food bank use is at an all-time high.

Thank you to the member.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the question brings up a valid point. It is going to take some time for as many people who have lost their jobs to get back to work. I have seen, however, a lot of advertisements for people to go and work, especially up in northern Alberta, and I often post those kinds of job postings on my Facebook page so that people who are in my riding are able to connect with the employers that are looking for well-qualified people. There are definitely more opportunities opening up than we've seen over the last couple of years, and I'm happy to help the member connect with those companies and share that information with him if he thinks that'll be helpful for him.

Thanks.

The Speaker: Any other questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? Seeing and hearing none, the Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to respond to the Speech from the Throne. What Albertans heard in the Speech from the Throne was a continued commitment from this government to value and be inclusive and intelligent when considering legislation. Now, one might say that that's how all governments approach legislation, and that may be so, or at least that's what they think. If that is the case, then it must be that different governments have different definitions of what it means to value and be inclusive and intelligent. The throne speech highlighted what these words mean to this government, and it's very different from what Albertans have experienced for far too many years, and it's very different from what's being proposed by opposition parties or being proposed by other loud factions who are set on turning back time.

Mr. Speaker, the policies that this government has passed and proposed demonstrate what value means to this government. It's a value system that says that at all times and especially during tough economic times everyday Albertans deserve a government that considers them and that they deserve a government that tries to make their life better for them.

Mr. Speaker, it didn't take long for this government to reiterate its values with its first bill of the spring session, that commits to reducing school fees across our province. The decision to eliminate fees for the instructional supplies and materials and busing students to their designated schools will see parents of nearly 600,000 students save $50 million a year. These are the actions of a government that thinks about making life better for the majority of Albertans, a government that understands that these fees are a burden to many families and the importance of putting money into the pockets of these families. Not even in good economic times did previous governments see reducing school fees as valuable. They didn't see or understand that school fees can put some children at a disadvantage, that it staggers the starting line.

In addition to reducing school fees, we have introduced the school nutrition pilot to help get our students future ready. Building on our successes, our government has appointed a panel to review the curriculum and has been seeking input from Albertans. Mr. Speaker, it's our job as legislators to ensure that all of Alberta's children are given an equal opportunity to succeed. The bottom line is that not only do we stand behind Alberta's families by trying to make life more affordable, but we simply value education.

This government treats education as an investment, an investment that we cannot afford to not be part of and that we refuse not to make a budget priority. The dangers to our education system with the previous government's plan to remove $500 million from the budget were immediately evident to our government and the public. I've been speaking to grade 6 students all over Calgary's greatest riding, Calgary-Klein, over the last couple of months, and rest assured, Mr. Speaker, that these kids are aware of those proposed cuts, and, believe it or not, they did not hear it from me although I do get to tell them that we restored the $500 million to the budget.

They ask me: how many kids would be in my class? Would Ms Smith be my teacher? Would they have had to have gone to another school? Well, Mr. Speaker, this government values education and understands that quality education is a right and not a privilege. I'm proud of this government's stance and record on education.

I'm also proud of our government's position to protect people from predatory payday lenders. We've all borrowed money, Mr. Speaker, mainly to make large purchases that we can't pay in full. But when you're borrowing money to pay bills and having to borrow from predatory payday loan operations, it can be difficult to dig out. We also recognize the need that some may have for these types of services. This is why we introduced new laws covering payday loans. Alberta now has the lowest fee for payday loan borrowing in Canada.

As well, Mr. Speaker, the government will put more money in the pockets of families as it continues with its plan to raise the minimum wage to $15 an hour. And let's not forget about the Alberta child benefit. For years we had one of the lowest minimum wage rates in Canada. We need to recognize fair value for work, and we need to recognize the cost of living in all parts of the province.

Another way of ensuring that more money stays in the pockets of everyday Albertans is to reduce the chances of losing money to people and companies using disingenuous sales tactics. That's why this government has eliminated high-pressure door-to-door sales of items such as utility rates and energy products, and as was noted in the throne speech, a consumer bill of rights will be introduced, protecting Albertans' hard-earned money.

What's more, Mr. Speaker, this government has capped electricity rates to ensure that there are no surprises on electricity bills. Electricity bills will always be reasonable and predictable. Instead of a government that builds escape clauses for corporations, we now have a government that takes the needs of Albertans across the province into account, and it understands that there needs to be a balance between what allows the economy to work and what allows families to make ends meet.

Mr. Speaker, in difficult economic times a good measure of a government's values is how it deals with necessary cutbacks and where these cutbacks occur. I'm pleased to say that this government takes a very different approach to trying to control spending than previous governments did. This government refuses to make things worse for Alberta's families by making deep cuts to front-line staff, by reducing services, or by reducing the quality of education and health care.

This government is trying to steady the rate of spending by reducing the salaries, bonuses, and perks such as golf and country club memberships to executives in the province's agencies, boards, and commissions, and it has now legislated that the executive compensation of the heads of the ABCs will be transparent to both the government and the public. Not only were these salaries out of line with comparable positions in other jurisdictions; they were insulting to Albertans struggling to pay the bills.

This government is also freezing the salaries of government employees and dissolving or consolidating 26 ABCs. These moves taken together represent annual savings of $16 million a year. While this is a small step in controlling the province's finances, it's clear that this government has its priorities aligned with making life better for Alberta's families and is not just here to reward those who've helped us get elected.

Mr. Speaker, this government is built on inclusion – just look at our caucus – and we never forget that with our policies. Our commitment to the LGBTQ community has been a pillar of this government's mandate, and we are working with the PDD community to ensure that improvements are made to have access to services that are required by every individual.

I'm immensely proud that this government had the courage, Mr. Speaker, to protect paid farm workers in this province. This was an act of inclusion, an act that sent a message to the province's paid farm workers, who work our land and grow our food, that they matter, that they will be protected in the case of injury, and that they no longer fall outside of the government's purview. There is little explanation as to why this never happened before other than that it was merely a tradition not to include them. This is wrong.

Mr. Speaker, I am elated that this government developed a Ministry of Status of Women, especially on International Women's Day. This is 50 per cent of our population not given the inclusion that it not only deserves but is necessary for a better society and province.

Another example of inclusivity that may not be as obvious is the bill An Act to Renew Democracy in Alberta. What this bill did, Mr. Speaker, was remove big money from our elections. It removed corporate, union, and executive influence from politics, and it levelled the playing field for our democratic parties in this province. I've also been told by constituents that this bill has restored their faith in Alberta elections. They believe that ideas and policies will again be the determining factor in voting and that elections will not be won simply with a chequebook. We will continue to work on electoral finance reform.

Mr. Speaker, it's not a secret that the price of oil has had an impact on Alberta's economy. It's also not a secret that this is not the first time that the price of oil has had an impact on our economy. So why has no previous government made decisions to move Alberta's economy into a position in which it can weather downturns in the oil price with diversification strategies and make it equipped to deal with the realities of the 21st century?

Well, Mr. Speaker, I just don't know the answer to this, but my intuition says to me that at the core of this is that change is difficult for some. Thinking beyond what you've always known in terms of relationships and the economy and recognizing that there are new ways and alternative economic opportunities is crucial to building a better province and a better world. We need to make intelligent decisions in regard to our economy. Every time there's a downturn in the price of oil, slashing public services and cuts to health care and education and layoffs are not the answer. These types of austerity measures look good on paper, and they work for a short time, but they actually do more damage in the long run by putting more people out of work and creating massive infrastructure deficits that impact generations to come.

Fortunately, Mr. Speaker, we now have a government that gets it. We have a government that is working to ensure that we will be able to weather further economic shocks from low oil prices while at the same time strengthening our oil and gas sector in a way that accepts the ecological realities of the 21st century.

This government has opened up investment in this province with the investor tax credit. We are putting shovels in the ground and putting people back to work with several infrastructure projects.

The climate leadership plan is as much about protecting our environment as it is about growing our economy in renewable energy. It's about demonstrating to the world and the rest of the country that we can have a strong oil and gas sector and still be stewards of our environment. We can use our oil and gas wealth to fund our increasing need to transition to renewable energy. To be sure, we would not have federal approval of two pipelines to tidewater without the climate leadership plan.

The carbon levy will enable us to grow the renewables sector, creating more renewable energy on the grid and 21st-century jobs in this growing sector.

The new royalty structure is paying off, Mr. Speaker. There has been steady growth in drilling and extraction over the last several months, and industry and economists are applauding this incentivized plan. But we didn't do it alone. We worked with industry experts to ensure that we would arrive at a place that was good for industry and the province.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I am proud to be part of this government, and I am certain that our definition of values, inclusion, and intelligence resonates with more Albertans than the definitions held by the opposition.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), the hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I know that in the previous session of the Legislature the Member for Calgary-Klein introduced a private member's bill regarding bullying in the workplace. He never had a chance to discuss that. I know that we've made some commitments in the throne speech to make life better for working people. I know that bullying in the workplace is one of those elements that the member is very passionate about, and he's been working collaboratively with the ministry, so I wonder if he might want to tell us a little bit about that.

Mr. Coolahan: Sure. Thank you for the question. Well, yeah, I was disappointed that that bill did not pass, but that's okay. I'm pretty sure that we as a caucus and the government are very committed to making sure that psychological harassment finds its way into our legislation.

You know, it is a shame. I think that that legislation is a lot like the farm workers legislation. It just baffles my mind that we don't have that type of legislation in this province. Many other jurisdictions have it, and we wouldn't be reinventing the wheel on this because we can take from other jurisdictions what has worked and what hasn't. The numbers are astounding of how many people have actually suffered bullying in the workplace. If I can remember correctly, just over 60 per cent have been victims of bullying in the workplace.

You know, I do admit that there are a lot of companies that have harassment policies, but it's not mandated, and I think that was the first step in legislation, to mandate that we have this type of legislation in the workplace. I know companies try very hard to make sure that their employees are safe, but without the legislation, workplace harassment policies really don't have the teeth to back up their policies. [A cellphone rang]

What's more, Mr. Speaker, the policies that we do see in workplaces throughout Alberta are kind of piecemeal. There's no consistency to how these policies are written and how they're enforced.

Yeah, I do look forward to more debate on this, and I do look forward to support from opposition parties on this matter. I think this is a very important topic for everyone in this province. Nobody deserves to be bullied at work in our province. We do a very good job of staying off bullying with children and online. We've worked very hard on that, but we've kind of forgotten our adults in the workplace. We've always focused, unfortunately, just on the physical aspect of bullying or harm reduction, I guess, at work. You know, it's just not enough. I mean, people that have been bullied at work: they suffer symptoms that are similar to PTSD. It's really quite disturbing, and this can go on for years and years without somebody coming and making a complaint, a formal complaint. Even if they do make a complaint, there may not be a harassment policy in place, or the HR department is not equipped to deal with these types of situations because they haven't been trained on it, or they simply just don't understand what their recourse is.

I think what we are trying to do with that type of legislation is to give people recourse when they can't get satisfaction, I guess, or a resolve at work. I would hope that they would be able to go to a third party and file a formal complaint that will be investigated by a third party. Quite frankly, I think the notion of having a third party investigate is really an incentive for employers to ensure that their workers are safe at work and that harassment is dealt with immediately and satisfactorily.

Anyway, I'll end it there. Thank you for the question, and I do appreciate thinking about this topic.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, I would have recognized you earlier, but I was distracted by a sound in the gallery. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for overlooking my ...

An Hon. Member: Indiscretion.

Dr. Swann: My indiscretion. That would be a good term, yes.

Thank you. My honour and privilege to speak to the throne speech, a very fine speech, to be sure, as all throne speeches are. I haven't heard a bad one in 11 years. The question is: what follows, and what's the action on the ground?

I acknowledge we're here on Treaty 6 land. Our First Nation brothers and sisters clearly need to be heard and seen and be part of the activities of this Legislature more than they have been. I acknowledge a government that, perhaps for the first time since I've been here, recognizes First Nations and the importance that they have and the relationship with them as critical to our success, all of our success, going forward.

This is probably my last Speech from the Throne as leader. Who knows? It's possible. I won't be the interim leader for a third time.

An Hon. Member: We've heard that before.

Mr. Cooper: It's the swan song.

Dr. Swann: I hope to have many farewells over the next few years.

I want to acknowledge International Women's Day and in that context the Calgary Police Service's troubles over harassment. I've been working or trying to work with the Calgary Police Service to establish two things: one, independent hearing officers in our police forces so that the hearing officers for complaints are not past police people but independent, legally trained people. The chief has said that he's interested in this and is going to look at the possibility and feels that it's an important area. Other police forces should be looking at this, as far as I'm concerned.

The second is amendments to our Human Rights Act. Under the Human Rights Act the Human Rights Commission can only hear complaints within a year of them occurring. For many of these women who have been harassed, it's been years, and they haven't felt that they could come forward. We need to extend that period. Just as the minister is doing with respect to sexual assault, sexual harassment should also be included in extending the timelines, and I'll be coming forward with a suggested amendment there.

But the other part of the Human Rights Act that needs to be amended is for the Human Rights Commission to be able to independently investigate systemic concerns like what is going on in the police force today. It's something like 28 women who've now come forward in Calgary in addition to the others that have come forward. It's clear that none of them felt free to make a complaint to the Human Rights Commission, and therefore the Human Rights Commission can't act. It can't investigate without a complaint. Well, if we amend the Human Rights Act – and in special circumstances only. We don't want them going willy-nilly into organizations and pulling down people. But I think it's important that the Human Rights Commission be empowered. In situations like this, where there's clear evidence of wrongdoing and it's being hidden, they need to have the power to go in and launch investigations.

Yes, the speech was excellent, and I acknowledge that many of the issues that were raised were important. We all, I think, could agree on most of the statements that were made. I was disappointed with only one sentence which related to the ongoing crisis with opiates in this province ravaging our families and increasing by the month, even in our remand and jails. Last year there were eight deaths in remand and our provincial jails and 27 near deaths in our remand and jails. The near deaths were reversed by naloxone – great – but if the naloxone or the guard wasn't there, that could have been a potential 35 deaths due to overdose, raising a lot of questions about what is happening, how the drugs are getting in, how well they're being managed by the staff, whether there is access to professional health care workers in there, how they deal with people who are coming off drugs as they come into jails. We need a public inquiry there, as far as I'm concerned, and I'll be again raising that with the minister, which I raised in the fall as well.

I want to acknowledge the bold new direction this government has taken. It's the first serious commitment I've seen since I got into the Legislature to reduce inequity and poverty – the first serious commitment to reducing inequity and poverty – and the first serious commitment I've seen to climate change. You know, I got into politics because of climate change and the lack of action, and I want to acknowledge this government for being bold and moving the yardstick down the field, if you will. Most Canadians believe that climate change is real, and they want to protect future generations from the scourges of extreme weather events, new infectious diseases, droughts and floods, and the increased impact on the global community with refugees and the massive immigration that we're going to be facing. Someone has said that what we've seen from Syria so far is a small indication of what we're really going to be seeing in the next two decades if we don't get some degree of control over all three: conflict, poverty, and climate change.

The Stern report – some of you may remember it, from 2006, 11 years ago – said that we can spend 2 per cent of our GDP on climate change now, or we can spend 20 per cent of our global GDP in 30 to 40 years. That's what we're faced with, and this government has taken that on actively if not aggressively.

Infrastructure: surely worth investing and borrowing for at this stage and protecting our employment here, with interest rates being favourable. These echo the Liberal platform, which I'm very pleased to have influenced this government on over many years of advocating.

Parks. By the way, I meant to mention parks in the environment portfolio. Happy to see the commitment to protecting our wildlands, our eastern slopes. It needs to go much further, and there need to be, as with everything, authentic consultations. I'm glad to see the off-highway vehicle people being listened to. They're a strong lobby. They're going to be very, very active, very challenging to the protection that is needed in the eastern slopes. Science is the basis for evaluating linear disturbance. We need to make sure we're protecting our waterways, primarily, and our habitat. We can co-exist in some areas with off-highway vehicles, but there are certain areas where we cannot. Our eastern slopes have to be very carefully examined, which I applaud.

The electricity agenda moved ahead without sufficient research, in my view, and with a lack of awareness of unwanted side effects, negative effects, from some of the changes. I will be tabling a motion next week, with the help of the former Utilities Consumer Advocate, offering a regulated rate option that we believe would save Albertans up to a hundred dollars a year, and that amounts to, you know, significant dollars over the course of the next 10 years. We calculated that close to a billion dollars could have been saved in the last 10 years if we had used this form of calculating the regulated rate option over the current one.

There needs to be – and I'm pleased to see it – a stronger emphasis on mental health and addictions in this province. I was pleased that the Premier included me in the review last year. I still haven't seen an update on where that is. There were 32 recommendations. Six were acted on within a week, but we haven't heard any follow-up on the other important recommendations, that relate not only to the lack of integrated mental health services in this province but also now to the opiate crisis, that appears to be out of control. That is all I can say. Whether we call it an emergency or not doesn't matter, but we need to mobilize resources. We need to co-ordinate the departments of Justice and Solicitor General, Education, homelessness, First Nations, and Health. If we don't get all those departments working together, we are not going to get ahead of this terrible and costly tragedy that's going on.

Bill 6 was a wonderful, welcome initiative, again, by this government. They've been part of recognizing basic human rights for the people that feed us every day: the right to a safe working place, the right to compensation, not being booted down the road because they can't perform their functions after an injury. I'm not saying that all farms and ranchers were not ethical and good employers, but some were not, and all workers deserve a standard of safe conditions and compensation when they get injured.

I'm pleased to see a couple of reports come out this week from the working groups. I'm waiting now for the other three. I hope they will not be delayed too long, and I hope they will not be watered down by the very strong push-back from the ag coalition, who only came on the scene since Bill 6 came in. Formerly it was the Alberta Federation of Agriculture that spoke for the agriculture community and agriculture and the ranching and farming industries. Somehow the ag coalition jumped on the bandwagon against a lot of the positive elements of Bill 6 and undermined any belief in the rural community that this is actually going to be good for both owners and farm workers.

It's going to improve both the image of the agricultural and farming sector, and it's going to obviously improve, hopefully, long-overdue child labour standards, which we still don't have in this province for farm workers. There are no child labour standards. Especially in the context of the Mexican Mennonites, I've seen and heard lots of stories about some of the ways that they have been misused and abused, not only by working in situations that are not safe, but because their families needed the income, they allowed them to skip school to go and work in some of these somewhat dangerous areas.

So that is an ongoing satisfaction to me, and I'll be watching for progress reports and holding the government to making strong decisions there.

Health innovation is happening, but it's much too slow and much too piecemeal. We need to address the waste and inefficiency in our major public service health care, consuming more dollars per capita than any other provincial budget and getting poorer results in spite of it. It's not about money. It's about better management, and I hope that the minister is going to be bolder in looking at the ways that the systems are top heavy. They're focused on treatment and high tech, and they're not addressing early intervention/prevention programs in the community that would make such a difference.

Primary care family physician teams are not working well together. They're not working consistently on some of the most important issues plaguing our population, including mental health, addictions issues, child poverty, child behaviour and learning problems. If we don't get primary care networks to work more effectively and efficiently and clearly fit into the rest of the system with the other players in social services, in education, and with the other departments that are important to health, including the poverty work that needs to be done, we're going to see a continued escalation in costs that we're not going to be able to afford without sacrificing many other things that are needed.

I'm happy to see the commitment to high-quality, affordable child care and, obviously, given the financial situation recognize that we can't do everything we would want to do at this time. I'm pleased to be part of the panel reviewing child deaths in care, and I hope that we'll soon focus on the early determinants of child health and family health. This is clearly an area where we are missing the boat.

Since 1994, when Ralph Klein cut social services, we now have 20 per cent fewer social services supports than the national average. It has never caught up. As a result, we have families in distress, families unable to meet their basic needs, families that are in a cycle of poverty and violence and unable to succeed in school. The vicious cycle continues. I think we have Ralph Klein to thank for that, but successive Conservative governments have not addressed the issues of basic social supports for people.

I'm pleased to see First Nations and Métis appearing to be more of a priority. Clean drinking water clearly needs to be addressed. Both provincial and federal governments have to step up and make sure that we can guarantee every person in this population clean drinking water. We need regular progress reports on that. I hear a smattering from time to time: oh, this reservation, this organization now has clean drinking water, and another one is going on a boil water order. Well, let's make it a systematic and consistent progress report that we get with, again, joint federal and provincial response.

Change is difficult. I think we recognize that. It disrupts people and organizations in their lives, in their work. Essential as it is, the pace of change I think has to be examined by this government. The pace of change in some areas has been beyond what many people can tolerate. Particularly the business community has been giving me an earful. I think that if you want to be successful in the next election, you need to listen to the legitimate concerns of the business community and understand that all the wealth that we are distributing here comes from business.

Oh dear. Is it possible I've run out of time?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you very much for your thoughtful response. I do want to go back to your comment about the opioid crisis. I want to go back there because you and I have had many conversations over this and my over 30 years of experience in corrections. Certainly, I would have to say that staff in every institution in the country, in the remand centres are vigilant in terms of stopping drugs coming into that institution. They do everything that they can to stop it. Unfortunately, it doesn't stop. My question to you – well, I need to back up. Those drugs come into the country, come into the city, come into the province. In fact, Lethbridge police had a huge drug bust of over a million dollars just a couple of weeks ago. Somebody is fronting that money for those drugs to come in. Can you give me a suggestion of an achievable objective to stop it there? Certainly, from my experience that's where it needs to stop.

Dr. Swann: Thanks very much for the question. I would leave that to the federal and provincial authorities, who know much more about screening packages and substances and finding these.

I would flip that to recognition that maybe we don't have enough discussion at this time about the revenue as well as the spending. We've been very focused on the spending in this government, and I think we need to have an adult conversation about the revenue side as well, recognizing that, again, all the revenue that we distribute comes from business and, yes, some federal transfers, some fines, some land sales, and taxes. I see a real need to examine what is happening on the spending side, though, as I mentioned, in public services through independent reviews, I would hope, of all the public sectors. Independent reviews. I haven't seen or heard any of the ministries doing independent reviews and examining with real action following the failure of certain aspects of our delivery services.

We cannot expect carbon taxes, royalties, fines, and federal transfers to meet the burgeoning debt load, which ultimately will fall to our children. We have to examine other options. We have to look at other sources of revenue. That includes a PST; I'm sorry. We used to have a 7 per cent national GST. Now it's at 5 per cent.

A 2 per cent PST would simply take us back to where we were before. We need to have an adult conversation about a PST in conjunction with a very rigorous examination of what we're spending in the public sector and how we can bring that under control.

I know of all kinds of examples of waste in the health system. That's the system I know best, but I'm sure that there are areas in every branch of government that, because they haven't had an independent review, are not able to make serious and strategic, maybe surgical, decisions about where we can find efficiencies. I would be willing to entertain a discussion about a PST if we're seriously exploring and publicizing the changes that we're making in our public sector through independent analysis of where we could make significant improvements and efficiencies, better management styles, strategies, people who are not doing effective work within their job portfolio. Those kinds of changes have to be much more rigorously done.

I think that if we don't address the growing and burgeoning tax level, we are going to be passing on to future generations a tremendous boondoggle. We've heard already about the $2 billion that we can anticipate in interest payments coming up. So I would welcome and I think this Legislature should welcome an adult conversation about where we're going to get the revenue to continue as well as finding the efficiencies in our spending.

Getting back to the original question that the Member for Lethbridge-East asked, I think that if we're not screening appropriately for drugs going into the correction centres, if we're not equipping the staff appropriately to do thoughtful engagement with people who may be coming off drugs or who may be addicted or who may be at risk and are desperate to do anything to get a fix because of the pain they're in, then we need to do something else.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to stand on behalf of the Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville constituency to reply to the Speech from the Throne. I would again like to express my gratefulness for the opportunity that my constituents have given me to do this. I would like to thank the Lieutenant Governor, Her Honour the Honourable Lois Mitchell, for sharing this government's direction for Alberta for the next year. The beginning of the speech honours the fact that this Legislature, our Legislature, is built on Treaty 6 territory, something that we should think about every time that we create and debate policy.

All the decisions that we make have lasting consequences and affect all relationships that we have with the people of Alberta. This has never been more important to me than after listening to stakeholders that came to the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices, where we're reviewing the Child and Youth Advocate Act. This is why I finally seized the opportunity from my friend Doug Heckbert to go out to his acreage to take part in my first sweat. On the walk there we saw a moose bed, a large spot that was made in the snow by a moose that was lying down on the side of the path. It reminded me of the interconnectedness that we have with the land. The elder that was there asked me why I was there, and I told him that it was to experience the lives of others.

Mr. Speaker, 70 per cent of the children that are in care are indigenous, and it's up to each one of us to engage and learn why that is. It was quite powerful. I shed a lot of tears in the dark. I heard a lot of stories, and the elder told me something that resonated with me and that I carry with me, that words are powerful. Words can build us and each other up, and they can also tear us and each other apart. We must be careful with each word that we say.

Madam Speaker, in the Speech from the Throne we were reminded that Alberta is "an open and inclusive society built on enduring values: compassion, hard work, and justice." It's those inclusive values that are the underpinnings of our government's work, like bringing in the Alberta child benefit and the enhanced Alberta family and employment tax credit that are helping hundreds of thousands of families make ends meet as we work towards economic recovery. That's just one way that our government is helping our communities.

Bill 1, An Act to Reduce School Fees, sets the framework for helping take part of the burden of school fees off families. A publicly funded education is supposed to be a right and a cornerstone to helping kids get the best start. Sadly, it's not the reality for many families. I've visited with many teachers that pay for supplies for families out of their own pockets because they see these students come into their classrooms every single day without the tools and basic necessities to learn.

Visiting St. John XXIII elementary in Fort Saskatchewan, I read to a group of grade 4 students who asked me questions afterward. One student stood up and asked me how his mom is going to be able to pay the rent. It wasn't because of the carbon levy. It wasn't because his mom lost her job. It is because this young man's family is part of the working poor in this province. Sadly, they are just one of many families who weren't planned for when government was making policy for the last 25 years.

My own mother, who relied on the welfare program, had her benefits cut, when I was about 11 years old, from $800 a month, just enough to pay for rent, food, utilities, and maybe to take the bus every now and then – she had that cut in half to $400. That meant that at the time she was forced to move in with her boyfriend, who was abusive, and it meant that at 11 years old I couldn't visit my mother anymore. I know that our case isn't special.

Growing up with my sister and my dad, socially funded programs like the Alberta child benefit stood between us and homelessness. This is why every time in this House and every time in my community I will stand and defend a $15 minimum wage in this province. It's a steady increase, and it's an initiative that is supported by the Alberta Council for Women's Shelters. People like my mom, women that are stuck in minimum wage jobs, when they leave abusive situations – we know that it's the right thing to do.

Alberta's government kept the minimum wage depressed while the cost of everything else skyrocketed for almost a decade. So while we know, Madam Speaker, that families are being careful with their own hard-earned dollars, our government is making strategic, well-intentioned decisions when it comes to the money that belongs to the public. Spending almost $35 billion on critical and long-neglected infrastructure and transportation projects will keep roughly 10,000 workers a year employed.

Two schools that are under way in the city of Fort Saskatchewan are a necessity to the current and future needs of a very young, expanding population of Fort Saskatchewan. SouthPointe elementary will have kindergarten to grade 9, and St. André Bessette, that broke ground last year and at which the Minister of Infrastructure was able to join us, will be home to students from grades 9 to 12. These schools were promised over and over and over again by multiple governments and never got a shovel in the ground. Finally, our government was elected. We understand and the government understands the value of investment in education in our community. Music rooms, libraries, and school gyms will no longer need to be made into classrooms.

We have a situation in Fort Saskatchewan that remains a key infrastructure issue: the highway 15 bridge. Madam Speaker, let me draw a picture for you. You are driving out of Edmonton. It's the Manning freeway, and you're headed east. It's easy; it's twinned. Traffic moves along as people drive out from Edmonton from work or to visit Fort Saskatchewan or back to the farm or you're one of thousands that are employed in Alberta's Industrial Heartland: Dow, Sherritt, Shell, Plainsman, Stream, Kiara.

It's a beautiful drive as it turns into highway 15. It's still twinned. Traffic is moving, and then for no apparent reason four lanes of divided highway narrow down to a two-lane highway. Heavy traffic, tanker trucks, and large transport vehicles are speeding by you in the opposite direction at 110 or 120 kilometres an hour. You're feeling a little bit more anxious because all that divides you is a line on the road. Then the speed limit for some reason drops to 80.

Then you hit a light where there are two major highways that come out of major transportation corridors in our province, that create billions of dollars of GDP, that intersect with yours. There are traffic lights, and you grind to a halt, and you patiently take your turn for an hour. You get through the lights, and then for no apparent reason the speed goes up to 100 kilometres an hour around a hairpin turn in the highway down a steep hill. Then, finally, the speed goes down to 70 to cross a two-lane bridge, a bridge built in 1957 that didn't anticipate the size of the trucks that we have now and didn't expect the booming heavy industry. So you cross this bridge, and finally after getting out of that traffic jam that happens every morning, every evening, every day through a short valley between two banks, for no reason other than trying to deal with our province's planning shortfalls, it opens up to eight lanes in the city of Fort Saskatchewan. They tried to solve a problem, but they couldn't because they didn't have the partnership of a province.

The traffic situation is serious. On the evening that I was elected, the mayor of Fort Saskatchewan, Gale Katchur, came to visit me. She said, as she shook my hand for a photo: we need to talk about the bridge. Being part of Alberta's Industrial Heartland Association, Gale knows the economic growth that can happen if we invest in healthy trade corridors, and as mayor she knows that we have lost people on these roads and on that bridge. You don't have to imagine what happens when you go through a hairpin turn on highway 15 after being frustrated, stuck in traffic for an hour. You don't have to imagine what happens on that turn in the winter when the roads have ice and you have headlights in your eyes and you try to move your vehicle a little bit to the right and you hit the rumble strip and it jars your senses. That's what's happened. People have died on that turn and on that bridge. That is why I am continuing to ask our Minister of Transportation to help us find a solution because our core responsibility, Madam Speaker, is to make life better for every Albertan.

Madam Speaker, making life better also means looking forward to the future, creating the opportunity for our resource owners and resource developers to get a better return on those resources. It was incredible news to hear that our climate leadership plan, with a cap on oil sands development and a price on carbon, had secured us federal approval on a pipeline that gets us to Canadian tidewater. For too long we have been dependent on one customer at one price, and this will finally open up markets in a way that gets us a better price, more customers, and a better tax revenue to build the things that we need. This commitment to growing our economy also applies to my core principles, adding value to our resources before shipping them away. This was perfectly aligned with our government's petrochemical diversification program, a program that has seen the announcement of two projects, one in the constituency of Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville with Inter Pipeline. This will create thousands of jobs and diversify our economy.

It's this innovation that created our new royalty framework, that has led to the approval of 158 new wells that wouldn't have been otherwise drilled last year, a framework that rewards those that can reduce their costs and improve efficiency, a situation where Albertans and industry both win. It's for this reason that my constituents wait with intense anticipation for recommendations from the Energy Diversification Advisory Committee's discussions with industry, economists, academics, and labour to find ways to get better value and more jobs for our energy resources and to diversify our economy.

Madam Speaker, my constituency very much wants to be part of the conversation about orphan wells. This continues to be an issue with farm and land owners that have wells abandoned by bankrupt companies that have little to no recourse when trying to recoup payments or trying to get a well capped.

This year work continues to support small businesses, entrepreneurs, and job creators, job creators like Alberta's Two Sergeants pub and microbrewery, located in my home of Fort Saskatchewan. They continue to add new brews like the oatmeal stout and Bear Beer and to partner with other small businesses to create products like IPA beard oil, some of which I hope to buy for my new neighbour, the Minister of Municipal Affairs, or the buns that they serve with their elk smokies that use their own spelt grain that has been used for brewing.

Madam Speaker, our government is also working to help and protect victims of sexual and domestic violence with the introduction of legislation that eliminates barriers to pursuing justice. Bill 2 will eliminate limitation periods that are bound by time so that when a victim of sexual violence is ready, time has not gotten in the way of justice.

Madam Speaker, this government is making life better, and it's never too late to make progress so that we can protect families; so that we can include women in the future; so that indigenous people are not just partners but teachers; so that I can be an active part of our government building bridges to help heavy industry, our farming sector, our youth, our Muslim brothers and sisters who I prayed with in Vegreville after the attack in Quebec, our temporary foreign workers, that need a voice. I am here for them to make their lives better and ensure that they are included with the future that Alberta offers. On this International Women's Day and every day I am here to be part of a feminist agenda.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I was pleased to hear the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville talk about the increased drilling that's gone on in the province and that this government's policies have increased that. I was wondering if the member could also give us her opinion on how those increased drilled wells would be protected by the orphan well policy that the government has and if this government is going to give more funding and more stabilization to those wells that are being abandoned. If the policy is going to be increasing well drilling, then how are the landowners, you know, many of whom are her constituents – how would that be protected by this new government?

Mrs. Littlewood: If I understood the question from the member properly, I think that there is a lot of discussion around how we address those issues. There are a lot of wells across the province that need to be remediated, and there could potentially be work there. The government will be talking with our federal counterparts and industry to see how we can address those issues because it is something that needs to be addressed.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Under 29(2)(a), the hon. member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Madam Speaker. With much respect to the member who just shared her throne speech with us, I know that she has also talked openly and candidly about her experience with sexual assault. On this International Women's Day I think it's absolutely essential that we as men be in solidarity with women, all women. So I'd like to ask my hon. colleague and member how I as a man, from her perspective, can be a better ally to women who have experienced sexual and domestic violence.

Mrs. Littlewood: I want to thank the member for the question and recognize all the effort that you have made on this issue with your family and with your community and with your friends. You know, standing in the Legislature and talking about experiences like that is not easy because you put it on the record for everyone. It's important, though, to do that because we have the opportunity here to be that voice for those that aren't ready yet to speak about it themselves.

In the thought of what we can do, anyone, whether it's men or women, it's even just to listen and to be there if they're asking for support, to believe them. You know, the campaign I Believe You was such a remarkable message because the message was that you don't have to know what to say. You can just say, "I believe you," and that's enough until the person asks you for further support. It's a campaign that I believe in because even in my own family or friend circles it's actually still really common to talk about those things and experience that sort of slut shaming and victim blaming that happens with those conversations. Just having that initial step of empathy and believing someone is an incredible thing that you can give that person in that moment.

It was interesting when I had people coming to me, texting me, or e-mailing me and calling me after I shared my own story here. It was interesting how many people felt guilty about not sharing their own stories, and we have to ensure that we don't make those people feel like they have to yet. They can do it when they're ready.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to respond to the Speech from the Throne? The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: All right. Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is my great privilege and honour to rise in the House to respond to the Lieutenant Governor's Speech from the Throne. It's hard to believe that almost two years have passed since that wonderful orange wave brought our government into power. I mean, it's been an incredible learning experience for all of us. I guess one of the great things I've learned is just what amazing people we have the privilege to represent.

As many members are aware, my riding has a big stretch of highway 63 and highway 28, which were the main evacuation routes during the Fort McMurray wildfire. Just the level of assistance and support without thought to personal cost or personal advantage that my constituents, of course, along with the rest of the province showed to people as they fled I think speaks to the incredible sort of bedrock morality that our society and our province is founded on. It's been this – I think the Lieutenant Governor referred to it as grit – grit that I think has allowed us to weather what have been very trying circumstances for many people. I mean, we've had, of course, the collapse in oil prices. We've had, you know, poor weather in many parts of the province. It's made agriculture quite challenging. Of course, in my own hometown we had our sawmill close, which had a huge local impact. With all these things happening, there could be a possibility that people would have maybe a bit of despair.

That's not something that I've seen. I've seen people being, you know, resilient and hopeful through that, and that extends to our business community as well. There are signs that things are picking up. I mean, one huge thing: Athabasca now has a Tim Hortons, which is a milestone in that community. Much more than that, though, two years ago the future of Athabasca University had clouds over it. I have to say that now it is absolutely clear that Athabasca University will continue to remain a world-class university and continue to remain in Athabasca. Things could have been much, much worse.

I grew up in Alberta, you know, as many of you have. I graduated in the late '80s. When I got out of high school, there was no work. What's more, there was no support. That was the beginning of the age of austerity. It went into Klein's time. I'm just so grateful and happy that we don't have to deal with the types of issues that afflicted us then. At a time when people need support and assistance the most, unlike in the past, that's been there for them. I mean, just think how much worse this could have been. We could have had to deal with laid-off teachers. We could have had to deal with laid-off social workers. We could have had to deal with laid-off nurses. We could have had to deal with closing hospitals. We could have had to deal with our infrastructure continuing to fall apart. We could have had to deal with the very necessary improvements to roads and transportation being frozen.

Just to sort of pause and think about that, just imagine what would have happened during the Fort McMurray wildfire if we hadn't proceeded to finish twinning highway 63 up to the Atmore corner.

Mrs. Pitt: Or budgeted properly.

Mr. Piquette: Yeah. We won't get sidetracked there.

What would have happened if we'd frozen the work on the highway instead of taking out those suicide corners? I'm looking at Mr. Cyr, who I know is quite aware of some of those issues.

Mr. Cyr: Name. Name.

Mr. Piquette: I'm sorry. I was so proud of myself because I remembered to call the Lieutenant Governor the Lieutenant Governor. The Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

But, you know, how many lives have been saved and will be saved as a consequence?

I reflect on the additional money that our government gave to FCSS, which I know helped them deal with the spike in domestic violence and other issues that have come with some of the economic troubles with the collapse of oil. So I'll just say that I'm very proud and happy to be part of a government that, at the very least, has not made things worse and, in fact, has made things a lot better. In particular, in our riding has been the great success of the resource diversification program, with the renewed hope that those massive investments in petrochemical diversification will be coming forward, and our continued support for the North West refinery phase 1, which has kept thousands of workers still working in a situation where there weren't really many other alternatives.

That kind of leads me to a wonderful line from the Speech from the Throne, which I think speaks, like I said, to Albertans' bedrock values and especially to the values that I see in my colleagues, that we understand that "we are an open and inclusive society built on enduring values: compassion, hard work, and justice." These are values that I know Albertans still believe in. Albertans believe in justice; however, it is not always straightforward to know what the right thing to do is even when you know that's what you want to do. Not only does the scope of our values change over time; how we interpret those values in the real world is always changing in light of new information, and that's always changing in the light of our own increasing maturity as individuals and as a society.

I think you can really see that in some of, you know, the important moves that our government has made recently; for example, the recognition of the United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples. First Nations for far, far too long were regarded and treated by too many of us as second-class citizens. We have a lot of damage to undo, but at least I think we're on the right track, and I think that speaks to a growing moral awareness of what it means to treat other people with respect.

I think this is most definitely true with International Women's Day. Now, I should say, of course, that Alberta historically was among the very first, I think, in the dominion to recognize the rights of women to vote. That wasn't, I guess, because of the goodwill of the men of the province. I think we were kind of led to that and continue to be, but at least you could say for us that we have the good grace to know when to shut up and listen and to change our behaviour when it's needed.

I think this also speaks to, you know, in this past year the recognition of the contribution of Ukrainian immigrants to Albertan society. That's a big change. I remember reading memos that our predecessors, the Social Credit government, back in the late '50s wrote about asking the RCMP to spy on Ukrainians in northern Alberta because they thought they were untrustworthy foreign elements and they suspected them of maybe coming up with an insurrection. I hope you won't ask me to table that document. I can find it somewhere in the records.

Now, they also said that the other kind of really disreputable group that you needed to keep an eye on were those damn Frenchmen up there as well. I have to say that I'm very proud, and I know that my father – unfortunately, he's not here today. I know he'd be happy to see that. He missed that. It's, of course, due to the wonderful work of our Minister of Culture and Tourism that we're recognizing francophone – I'm trying to remember exactly what it's called. But we raised the flag. I think that the recognition of French Canadians as a central and equal element of Alberta society is something that I'm very proud our government has embraced, something that I think is long overdue.

It also just speaks to that real change in our maturity as a society. When my father spoke in the Legislature back in the '80s, for those people who are a little bit younger, I don't think you can really imagine just what an uproar it caused. Now, these were, of course, the days long before Facebook. However, that was also the day long before call display, so if you wanted to give death threats or threats to people, you could just leave a message on the telephone answering machine. We used to get these messages at home. They'd be things like, "Oh, you frogs should be taken up against the wall and shot," or, you know, "Get your ass back to Quebec," and things like that. It was a big deal.

Dr. Turner: Is that parliamentary?

Mr. Piquette: Don't do that. This is going to be in Hansard, you know, Dr. Turner.

Now it's noncontroversial. So I guess what this speaks to is that, I think, as a society we are maturing.

This brings me to, I think, my second-favourite job of all time. From 2006 to 2011 I had the privilege of teaching ethics in law and education at the University of Alberta. I had the opportunity to teach education students from around the province, everywhere from down in Hanna up to Peace River, High Level, and, of course, Edmonton and Calgary, all points in between. These students, to a person, shared one overwhelming characteristic, and that is that they all really wanted to do the right thing. Like I said, though, it's not always kind of clear what that right thing to do is. One thing I used to do to kind of shake them up, to get them thinking about moral reasoning was that I used to use a little exercise called Heinz's dilemma. Now, I'm not sure if members have heard of Heinz's dilemma, but it's just a very simple little story. It's a druggist named Heinz, and he had a drug, a very special drug, a very expensive drug, that could cure a very particular illness. Another gentleman's wife in that same community contracted that very illness. Unfortunately, he did not have the money to pay for the drug. So then the question you pose to the students is: what should this individual do?

Now, the answer is irrelevant. What's important is how you reason out your answer. Basically, a moral theorist called Lawrence Kohlberg used this as a way of kind of showing that the way you approach moral questions, the kinds of ways you relate to them, speaks to your maturity as a moral person. So at the very bottom stage, basically, you consider: "What's right to me? What's in it for me?" You know, what works for me is what's right, which basically corresponds to the toddler stage. Everything a toddler sees is "mine," right? But as we mature and if we work at it, we progress. From there, you go into basically looking for: what will make me popular? What's going to help me fit in? What do people see from me, right? That will be the stage of – it's a kind of advanced stage of: what's in it for me? But that's to avoid punishment and to be popular.

However, the goal as an adult is to reach the final stage, which is to think of the primary consideration of what's right and what's right in the sense of even if the role was reversed, if I'm making a decision about that person and even if I was in that person's position, I would still find the decision acceptable. So a universal ethic. It's treating all people as equal and worthy of moral consideration. That's what it means to be a mature person ethically, and that's what it means in the end to do the right thing.

Now, of course, this is nothing new. I mean, that final stage of moral development is something that, I think, expressed – of course, there's a famous little poem on it. Very quickly – actually, I don't think I'll have time to quote that poem. But let's just say that there was a very famous teacher that lived long ago that made that same point but a lot more succinctly: love your neighbour as you love yourself. It's this type of approach that I think we as elected officials need to take in all the decisions we make.

This is what, for me, makes it all the more disappointing to see the . . . [Mr. Piquette's speaking time expired] Oh, no. How could 10 minutes have shot by already?

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Shaw under 29(2)(a). Is that correct?

Mr. Piquette: Could I say something before I sit down?

The Speaker: You need to sit down.

Mr. Sucha: I was enthralled by the Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater's comments. I was wondering if he would care to elaborate some more.

Mr. Piquette: I was just going to point out that that's why I find the opposition's resistance to the climate leadership plan to be so disappointing, because as far as I can understand, the position that they have come to now is that they no longer – okay; well, I won't say no longer because that might be loaded. They do not deny the science of climate change. They do not deny that it is being influenced by human factors, by factors, you know, caused by us as a global community. What they deny is that it's our responsibility to do anything about it, right? What they deny is that we have a responsibility, and they use tactics that are, frankly, unethical. I mean, in ethics you'd call it special pleading.

The Speaker: I caution you, hon. member, in the use of the word "unethical."
Continue.

Mr. Piquette: Okay. I guess I think that along with our province it's time for our opposition to grow up. Thank you.
With that, I would like to move to adjourn debate.

The Speaker: You can't do that.

Mr. Piquette: I can't do that either?

The Speaker: I'm not able to accept the motion to adjourn. We're at 29(2)(a).
The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was listening to the member's comments, and I would like to take some time to thank the Transportation minister for reviewing highway 28 and making some alterations and taking the time to sit with me and my colleagues. I also acknowledge that this impacted a fellow constituency as well, and it's great to see that we can work together to fix some of Alberta's problems.

I would like to say this to your 29(2)(a) response. With jobs and unemployment being so high in our ridings right now, how do you feel about an Ontario company getting jobs to install light bulbs within Alberta, when you have constituents out of work just like me, under this new climate change plan that you've got going forward?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Piquette: All right. Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the hon. member for the question. This is the type of thing that I think I was kind of referring to in the sense that I think that – well, I don't want to cast aspersions, so I'll just maybe quickly explain to the hon. member that we do have interprovincial trade agreements that restrict what types of jobs, you know, or contracts we can have only provincial bidders for. Our businesspeople depend on interprovincial trade, and interprovincial trade is a give-and-take, so we cannot expect other provinces to honour that agreement if we don't honour that agreement. What's more, though, is that this company has established an office in Calgary, and they are hiring all Alberta people to do the actual work, so we will be getting employment from this.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a)?
Seeing and hearing none, the Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As much as I would love to hear about bright ideas and light bulbs from the other side, I'll move to adjourn debate at this time.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 1 An Act to Reduce School Fees

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-East.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased today to be able to rise as a cosponsor and supporter of Bill 1, An Act to Reduce School Fees. This was a campaign promise. It was something that resonated deeply with parents across Alberta and parents in my riding of Calgary-East. When I was door-knocking during the election and when I've been door-knocking recently and when I talk to people in my community, I often hear from them: "Hey. What's up with the school fees? Are you doing something about the school fees?" So I am so happy that we are doing something about the school fees.

The very nature of public education is that it's free. This is something that we've agreed on as a collective here in Alberta, that every child in our province has the right to a good, free public education. The issue of school fees and rising school fees has in recent years become a bit of a barrier to this promise that we have to children in Alberta.

Education is why I ran. It's why I ran in 2012; it's why I ran again in 2015, because as a teacher in schools in Alberta I felt that the government was not fulfilling its promise to students and to teachers and to public education in Alberta.

I remember in 2010, after I spent my first full year as a teacher in the public education system, that the government made some decisions about funding for education that were going to result in cuts to teachers in classrooms. Many of my friends who had been out of school, who had been teaching for a year, were told that their contracts weren't going to be renewed for the following year. There were going to be fewer teachers in classrooms. In my own school I saw the effects of that. My principal was an amazing woman who worked very hard to be able to keep all of us, and I thank her so much for the opportunity to have been able to keep my job through that situation. But our school did see a reduction in educational assistants, our school saw a reduction in technology that was available, and our school saw reductions in supports for ESL students' technology in the classroom.

It was these collective actions of the government of the day that led me to run for elected office. It led me to be here in this House today because that message, when I talked to parents in my constituency, resonated. People value education in this province. People know that education is the key to making the province better long term, into the future. If we educate all of our students well, to be critical thinkers, to be forward lookers, to be co-operative people, to solve problems, to be entrepreneurial, if we do that well, we are going to continue to have an amazing province well into the future. If we do education right, Mr. Speaker, it solves so many other problems. That is one thing I'm so proud of our government for, our enduring commitment to quality education for every student in this province.

Now, while I am very proud of our public education system in the province, the issue of school fees and their increase has been an ongoing issue for families and can sometimes be a barrier to accessing public education. As a teacher in the Calgary board of education one of the things that I was responsible for at the beginning of the school year was collecting school fees, which is a downer for a lot of reasons. One, it takes time away from me being a teacher in the classroom. I have to spend time at the beginning of the year making sure that all of my students have collected fees, filing them appropriately, making sure that they get to the office. As those of you who know me know, organization and paperwork is not one of my strengths. This was something that, you know, was not a good use of my time, this collection of school fees.

But it was also a downer because I would have to send continuous letters. I would get letters from the office to tell me: "So-and-so hasn't paid their school fees. So-and-so hasn't paid their schools fees. Could you remind them, please, that they have to pay their school fees?" You know, there are reasons why families aren't paying school fees, and I think those reasons were outlined very well by the Member for Calgary-Shaw in his speech yesterday. Parents don't always want to admit that they don't have the extra money to pay these fees. There are systems in place where parents can apply for waivers so that they don't have to pay the school fees. However, that often involves filling in forms with very personal information, taking those forms to the school, and functionally telling all of the staff at the school that your family is too poor to pay for school fees. That can be embarrassing, and that's something that people don't necessarily want to do.

Sometimes parents would, you know, have to make hard decisions in order to pay these school fees. They might be making decisions about whether to buy their kids extra toys or whether to enrol their kids in lessons because they have to pay these school fees. So in a public education system this is a barrier, and this is a problem.

I do, though, want to say that I am very excited that we are finally moving forward on addressing this issue that affects so many families across the province. I do want to say that I am impressed by the considered and thoughtful approach that the ministry has taken on this issue. When I was at the doors, people would say, you know, "What are you doing about school fees?" And I would say: "The ministry is looking into it. They've been looking into it from the moment they got elected." Part of the issue is that we didn't know. We didn't have the data. We didn't know what school boards were collecting, what school fees. We didn't know how much were the school fees that were being charged. We didn't know what those school fees were being used for. So rather than charging ahead and just saying, "We're cutting school fees," we engaged in some very thoughtful consultation with school boards across the province to be able to see where school fees were being charged, what they were being charged for, and where we might be able to make a difference. This took some time, and we took some heat for taking time. But because of the nature of what we've done and because we've taken time, we're able to zone in on the particular fees that we're able to eliminate right away.

Some of the places that we've started: we've started with the elimination of materials fees and the elimination of busing fees to designated schools. Now, this is going to save parents a significant amount of money. If you look at Calgary, if you consider that you have two students in high school in Calgary and they both take the bus, this could be saving you nearly a thousand dollars a year if your child goes to a Calgary board of education school. You know, that's a significant amount of money. That's money that parents are going to have in their pockets at the end of the month to pay for other things.

I also just want to mention that we have had, if I can locate it, several people who have been onboard with this decision to reduce school fees. Allison Pike, who's the president of the Alberta School Councils' Association, said:

We commend the Education Ministry for working to reduce school fees paid by Alberta parents. School councils look forward to consultations supporting this legislation as an important step in ensuring the success of all students.

Michelle Draper, who's the board chair of Edmonton public schools, said:

Edmonton Public Schools is supportive of the government continuing to invest in education and in Alberta families. We share a commitment to equity and accessibility of public education.

When I spoke to board trustees, I spoke to the chair of the Calgary board of education and my trustee on the Calgary board of education the day after the announcement came out, and they said that they were so happy for their families. They have kids in school, too, and they know that these fees can be burdensome, and they're happy for families. They are, of course, waiting to see what comes through in terms of funding to replace the school fees, but we have assured them that the Department of Education has found $15 million worth of efficiencies in the budget, which we will be finding later, to be able to address the gap that will exist because of the elimination of these school fees.

Now, the other thing is transportation fees. We've managed to look at busing to designated schools. In my ideal world every student would have a school in their community that they could ride or walk to and busing wouldn't be necessary. Unfortunately, due to the growth of many of our communities, this isn't something that's happening, and we are working to address that shortfall with school builds. I, like many of my colleagues, am proud of the schools that we've been building around Alberta so that kids don't have to pay for bus fees, so that they can bike and walk to school every day. I do just want to note that it does absolutely take time to design a school, to find land for a school. It takes a long time, but the reality is that this government right now, today, is building those schools.

I sit on the Public Accounts Committee, and I did see the Auditor General's report that noted that the previous government didn't allocate the appropriate resources or have the planning in place to build all the schools that they had promised. I will quote from that report right now. It says:

The departments' systems and capacity to support the school-building program did not keep pace with the very large growth and complexity of the program. Our audit found that neither department has adequate systems to plan, deliver and report on the program. Both departments were individually responsible for certain aspects of the program, but no one was responsible for overall results, so information on project schedules, including completion dates, was not known. Internal reporting on project progress was lacking, and public reporting was consequently weak.

So while, certainly, the previous government was very good at announcing schools, they were not particularly good at actually building the schools.

I would like to thank our Transportation and Infrastructure ministries. I would like to thank all of the school boards who have collaborated with our Transportation and Infrastructure ministries to get those schools built, to get them designed. And I'd like to thank all of the students and staff. My neighbour across the street has just moved, and she's had to spend the first half of this year in a different school before she can move into her new school. That's a lot of work for teachers, to have to move schools in the middle of the year. But they're so happy to finally have new schools and to have new schools in their communities so that kids don't have to bus to school. These are huge improvements that have been made.

While this bill reduces two types of fees immediately, the materials and instruction fees and the busing to designated school fees, in my mind the real benefit of this bill is that it allows the ministry to have more oversight into school fees: what's being charged, why these charges are being made, where we can make decisions to cut or reduce fees.

I think everyone agrees that kids need to be supervised at lunch, and I think everyone agrees that students need to have access to technology at school. However, I don't think that parents, certainly, agree that we need to pay for those things. The idea that a student has to go to school and then you have to pay for your student to remain at school over lunch is a little ridiculous to me. Clearly, people, you know, work and aren't necessarily sitting at home waiting for their children to come home at lunch, especially if you have to bus your child to school in the first place. So the idea that you would have to pay for your student to be supervised at lunch is a little ridiculous.

I do want to mention something that I hear a lot. I hear a lot that people say: "Well, why can't teachers just do the lunchtime supervision? Why can't teachers just sit in the classroom while the students eat lunch? Why isn't that a thing?" Well, because they're doing other things, Mr. Speaker. They're supervising extracurriculars. They're tutoring kids that need help. They're doing marking. They're working. They're often working over lunch hour, you know, and sometimes they're maybe not working. Sometimes they're eating. An amazing thing that you might be doing: you might be eating lunch as a teacher.

I would challenge anyone who makes the claim that teachers should be doing the lunch hour supervision to come to a school, stand in front of students for three to four hours, help them to learn, make sure they're not hurting each other, you know, create a warm, welcoming learning environment that all teachers do every day in school, and then I'd challenge them to feel that they don't deserve to have lunch like every other worker in Alberta. Every other worker in Alberta gets lunch. Teachers are allowed to have lunch, too.

You know, through this bill we will continue to look for solutions. We will continue to look for solutions for lunch fees, for technology fees, for all of the other fees that school boards charge. We will work with school boards and parents to make sure that school fee structures are more fair. Again, the public nature of education in this province means to me, anyway, that whether you're going to school in Cardston or Medicine Hat or Grande Prairie or Calgary, your school fees should be relatively the same. I mean, in an ideal world there wouldn't be any school fees at all, but regardless of that there should certainly be some equity and fairness among the school boards so that there's not this vast inequity that we see right now.

One of the things that we are doing is working on the definition of what constitutes a basic education because in order to determine what school fees can be charged and which can't be charged, we have to have a common understanding of what a basic education is, and that is something that we will be working on through consultation. Now, I would argue, again from my personal opinion, that a basic education includes things like technology. I had a smart board. It was helpful. I think . . .

The hon. Opposition House Leader on 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Cooper: Yes, please. Thank you. It sounds like the member ran out of time, so I'd be riveted to hear the rest of her remarks, and perhaps in those remarks she could also answer the question that I have. I was recently speaking to a school board trustee in the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, and they had expressed some concerns, particularly around busing fees. They have some parameters where kids inside 2.4 kilometres of the school pay a fee and those outside don't. I know that there is a wide range of busing fees that are applied and administered at the local level at the school board's discretion.

In a situation like that, where some people were already paying and others weren't, how exactly is the process going to work for them to make the necessary adjustments? Were all of those things calculated when they arrived at their total number? Can they receive any assurances that even though they have local policies around who is paying school fees and who isn't, those are going to be taken into consideration and not wind up in a situation where the government has created the illusion that there's not going to be school fees – and by school fees I mean busing fees in this case – and then next September the school board is going to feel some pressure when the government didn't consider how the local policy had been applied?

Ms Luff: I do want to finish my statement about what I would argue is a basic education. What I would argue is a basic education is access to technology. I would argue that it includes experiential learning outside of a school. I would argue that it includes things like music and art and programs that enrich, you know, every child's educational experience. Not every child loves math, unfortunately, but every child loves something, and I think it's important for students in school to have an opportunity to do what they love.

In terms of busing fees we recognize certainly that it is complicated and that different school boards have different standards when it comes to school fees. The ministry has done extensive work looking into different systems for different school boards and will continue to consult widely with school boards to make sure that, you know, everyone understands the standards that are laid out in this legislation.

The Speaker: Any other questions under 29(2)(a)? Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently myself and the Member for Calgary-Currie had an opportunity to go to the Member for Calgary-East's constituency to announce a pilot project that the government was launching in collaboration with a lot of our school boards in relation to nutrition programs. I was really excited to go there because it was where I grew up, and I know that that's going to pay dividends. I know that the Member for Calgary-East represents a lot of working-class constituents, so I would love to hear how this is going to have a very positive effect on her constituents in Calgary-East.

Ms Luff: Thank you to the Member for Calgary-Shaw for that. I was going to speak a little bit about this, and then you'll catch a little bit more in my response to the Speech from the Throne if I get a chance to do that tomorrow. Certainly, I was thrilled when the school nutrition pilot program was announced. I was thrilled that the announcement was in my riding, and I was thrilled that all of the three schools that were chosen were schools in my riding. The reason that that was is because the need is greatest in my riding.

There are lots of kids, and there are lots of schools who are working with local nonprofits to be able to provide school meals already. Many of my schools in Calgary-East provide school nutrition programs, and they do that because they know that kids can't learn when they're hungry. They're seeing over and over again that kids would come to school hungry. I have heard very sad stories about teachers who would see kids grabbing granola bars, you know, and filling their pockets on Fridays because when they would go home over the weekend, they knew that they weren't going to have anything to eat. So to be able to provide a program like this to families in my riding means a lot. It means a lot. It saves time. You don't have to pack lunch. You know your kids are going to be fed nutritious meals at school. They're going to be able to learn, and they're going to be able to succeed.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The wheels on the bus go round and round, round and round, round and round, but how are we going to pay for them to go round and round? In the 30 years that I taught school, transportation and school fees were always a discussion that we had every year. As an educator I would sit down with our administration, and we would review the school budgets. We would attempt to find that magical point somewhere between balancing our school budget and trying to meet the classroom needs of our students.

As educators we understood that one of the foundational cornerstones of a public education system was that all of our students, no matter what their financial circumstances, should have the opportunity to have a high-quality education. I think we've heard that shared on both sides of the House as we've talked about this. One of those amazing things that we have as Albertans is a commitment to ensuring that all of our students will have a high quality of education.

Now, that didn't mean that that educational experience wouldn't have some inequities, but as far as the core curriculum was concerned and as far as the educational outcomes were concerned, we believed and we continue to believe that they have to be accessible to all of our students free of charge. But in the diversity of the courses that we provide in our schools and in our school boards, of all of the educational offerings that we have for our students, there is great diversity, and there's often a huge amount of inconsistency from school to school, from school board to school board.

Often financial realities meant that some families in my school would struggle to make ends meet. Outside of school they would have to make tough choices about their kids and where they would find the money to be able to meet the financial needs of their family. Those questions and those concerns didn't end at just their lives outside of the school. They also had to encompass how they were going to find the money for some of those school fees. It was never easy as a schoolteacher, as an educator when a family was identified that was truly a hardship case, for the administration to try to step in and either make arrangements for some small monthly payments, putting them on a schedule, or whether we would have to try to find some form of discretionary funding in our school budget that would allow for the coverage of those school fees.

There was no doubt that there were some years that the school fees could add up very quickly in the lives of our families and of our children. Instructional fees such as photocopying, field trip fees, school books, resource book rentals, band instruments, physical education fees, cosmetology fees, welding fees, art fees, drama fees: there are a lot of places to spend money in education and in the lives of our students. The list went on and on, and it still didn't include the fees that could accompany extracurricular sporting activities or performance fees. I know that as a parent who chose to live as a single-income family, trying to live on a schoolteacher's wage, the month, especially in September, often lasted a lot longer than our money in the bank.

Now, this system of handling school fees, while at times burdensome to our school administration, did have at least one advantage. The decisions were often made locally, often at the school level, and at the most at the school board level. The advantage of that is that these decisions about what to charge and how much to charge and how to pay were done at the local level. These were done within a community of people that knew each other. The decisions were always made knowing that the impact that they would have would be on our friends and on our neighbours and on kids, who we cared a great deal for. Bill 1, An Act to Reduce School Fees, while a well-intentioned piece of legislation, seems to come at this problem indirectly, and it is putting much of the consultation, much of the decision-making with regard to these school fees under the consultation that will occur after the bill is passed.

The Wildrose Party will be supporting this bill, but we do have some concerns. The first concern revolves around local decision-making. It is the Ministry of Education that will define instructional fees. It may appear easy for those not having taught in the front lines to try to decide what an instructional fee is, but it's not easy. You can't just simply define that fee. Because of the great diversity, it's a very difficult thing to do.

The government has said that an instructional fee will be textbooks, workbooks, photocopying, printing paper, and any common fees charged to an entire student body or grade cohort. This definition and, for that matter, any definition of instructional fees is going to be hard because every school and every school division offer in many cases very unique courses and educational opportunities that may not fit easily into this definition of instructional fees. Even the government understands this and understands the difficulty of this as they have reserved the right to further define what an instructional fee is through regulation.

Now, there are so many different types of courses and mandatory experiences within our education system that trying to figure out what should be an allowable instructional fee and trying to define and put a price on that instructional fee is going to be difficult. What about safety goggles for welding? What about gym clothes for physical education? What about supplies for a sports medicine class? What about school fees for noon-hour supervision or mandatory field trips? This could become as convoluted and as confusing as is the case presently in home education when trying to decide what a home education parent can claim as a reasonable expense when educating their child.

Home education expense reimbursements have become a fiasco. Great expense is being created within the bureaucracy of this government as they try to identify and list and catalogue and reimburse in an equitable fashion legitimate home education expenses. It is quite possible that the issue of school fees will go down this same path of confusion and mismanagement as schools, in an attempt to balance their budgets, look for creative school fees.

This is particularly of concern as we look at the government's future ready initiative. In an attempt to broaden our framework and thinking around what it means to go to school and how to relate what we learn in school to what we do outside of school, indeed as we consider that school no longer even has to be conducted within the four walls of a classroom, we wonder where the discussion on school fees begins and ends. We understand that many of these details will be discussed in the future, and I can only say that I hope that the consultation process will be robust and transparent as we attempt to try to understand how we can take what appears to be a very narrow definition of instructional fees in Bill 1 and help it to serve the students that we educate and the parents that have to pay the fees.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 1 has set aside $54 million to partially cover the costs of school fees and transportation, starting in the fall of 2017. Approximately $39 million is set aside for school fees and another $15 million for transportation fees. Now, our next concern focuses on where the government is going to find the money for this initiative. The government says that the money will be found through efficiencies. As the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills would say, hooray, but forgive us for not getting too excited until we can actually see a ledger that outlines exactly how this government is going to actually pay for this program. Is this coming from efficiencies found in the Education budget, is it going to come from some other portfolio like Health or Seniors and Housing, or is the government going to download once again onto the backs of school boards and expect the efficiencies to come from that level of government?

The Wildrose Party can and does support the elimination of mandatory instructional fees. We campaigned on that promise. Bill 1 does not come close to the Wildrose proposal, but it is, finally, a step in the right direction, assuming that they don't once again confuse the idea of government efficiencies with the concepts of borrowing and debt. Based on this government's track record with budgets, I do wonder if this government is simply going to find the money by posting another record-level deficit and contributing to an even greater debt burden on Albertans while trying to convince them that the instructional fees will come from efficiencies.

Lastly, this government's bill does not live up to the NDP promise to reduce school fees by 50 per cent and to eliminate the noon-hour supervision charges, so while we will give this conditional support, this move in the right direction, let us remember that it is still a broken NDP promise.

Bill 1 does not simply address instructional school fees; it also tries to hide the effects of the carbon tax on transportation costs in a bill that is titled as all about school fees. Having said that, trying to finally address the cost of the carbon tax will have our general support. The carbon tax is estimated to cost school boards somewhere between $8 million and $12 million. How the $15 million is set aside for transportation costs and how this money will be allocated is, like with so many government bills, left up to regulation. Will a student whose designated school is full or where a parent chooses to register their student in a nondesignated school still be forced to pay a transportation fee?

Wildrose will support this bill, but we have many concerns and questions about this bill that the government would be wise to consider at Committee of the Whole. Will the wheels of the bus go round and round? For Albertans' sakes, we hope so, but it is quite probable that Bill 1 could find itself on the side of the road with several flat tires if the concerns of the Wildrose Party are not effectively addressed.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Any comments under 29(2)(a) to the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon?

Seeing and hearing none, the Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Imagine that it's September. You've picked out new clothes, shoes, a shirt, and, if your child is like me, maybe you've bought them a new tie as well. School supply shopping is done. You walk your child to school, or maybe you bring them to the bus stop. They get on the bus, they go off, and you wish them a great first day. That's what a lot of my constituents and the families in my riding are going to be doing this September.

Now, your child is going to come home, and they're going to have a note from their teacher. It's going to say that you owe the school hundreds of dollars in fees, and this is in a publicly funded school, Mr. Speaker. You're being charged for textbooks, workbooks, instructional materials, and whatever they want to call these fees. That's sticker shock. There's going to be sticker shock there. A lot of parents will go: I thought education was free in this province. This is the reality that my constituents would face, will face this September if the government was not moving along with Bill 1.

Every single school, every single teacher, every single principal will say: "Well, we have an opt-out program. We have something for the parents that don't want to or cannot afford to pay these fees." Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, that not a single parent and not a single family wants to be the person walking in saying: "Please, I need help. I can't afford these fees, and my child needs to go to school." Not a single parent wants to be put in that situation with that social stigmatization or any of those embarrassing circumstances.

In this year and last, Mr. Speaker, I'll have opened eight new schools that were, yes, announced by a former government but were not funded by a former government. If you want a school built, it takes more than just an announcement. You must actually put the money where your mouth is. Now, many of my constituents and families know that this government is committed to education, and opening those schools was step 1. It was just one of those many important steps.

I just met with a school group just outside this Chamber, took a photo with them. It was a group of bright grade 4s, and one of the first things that I heard from the parents accompanying them was: hey, we were talking about Bill 1 at our parent council meeting yesterday. These are the things that matter to families. These are the bills that help Albertans. These are the bills that make a difference in their pocketbooks at the end of the month.

Madam Speaker, that's why I'm so proud to be able to cosponsor this bill. That's why I'm so proud to be able to support this bill, a bill that will save Albertans $50 million and each of my families up to a thousand dollars per year. I've heard from families, from parents, from school board trustees and teachers and so many more people that know the difference that this bill will make in the lives of an average family.

It was a platform commitment of this government, Madam Speaker. It was something that I was very proud to bring to the doorsteps of Edmonton-South West, and it was something that this government is taking action on to support families. Our government is making good on that promise. We know families are happy to see the relief, especially in these times of economic downturn, of economic hardship. We know families are happy to see that this government is standing up for them, is making the right choices, and is moving in a direction that helps Albertans. We're helping Albertans save money that they can spend on their mortgage, maybe their groceries, hockey for their child, or any number of other things that their kids may want to partake in, that they may want to partake in. It's something where families will be able to say: we can now do what we couldn't do before.

It's important to note, Madam Speaker, that we're able to do all of this without compromising education for our students. We're able to do all of this while making sure that school boards and schools and teachers and students and class sizes are funded exactly the same way they were before, that we are guaranteeing a high standard of education in this province. Education is the core of our future. Education will improve the lives of all of the children in this province. This is one more step, one more small step, admittedly, that makes their education more accessible and makes students more successful. It's progressive, it's the right thing to do, and it will make families' lives better.

Madam Speaker, the opposition would have us let these fees grow. The opposition would have us tell families: "We can't help you with fees. We can't help you with that little bit of difference in September, with that little bit of an extra step. We can't do that." That's what the opposition would have us do. This government will not stand for that because we're committed to helping Albertans. This legislation gives the government the authority to make lives better. It gives the government the ability to save money for families. That's why I'm so glad that this government is our government, a government that cares about Albertans, a government that's thoughtful, a government that's looking out for my constituents and looking out for families.

The Alberta School Councils' Association reports that some families spend more on school fees than on presents for Christmas, Madam Speaker. That's something that we shouldn't stand for. Instructional and material fees are an equitable way that we are able to make a difference for those families. These benefits will be seen across almost every single school board in this province. The amendments that are being made to the School Act give the minister and the government that power to regulate these fees and help Albertan families. It will also introduce a brand new fee review process that will allow parents to have their concerns heard by the school board of their choosing and to address any issues that they may have around fees.

Madam Speaker, the Edmonton public school board and the Edmonton Catholic school district, the two largest boards that service my constituents right here in Edmonton-South West, have both stated that this legislation will allow their schools and their school board to act in a way that is more equitable and accessible for their students. It will ensure that all of their students and, by extension, my constituents can succeed at school.

Madam Speaker, this bill has my full support. It is simply the right thing to do for Albertan families. If we do not move on this, we are letting families down, we are letting my constituents down, and we are letting Albertans down. I urge all members to support this bill so that we can take action on making life more affordable for families right here right now.

Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd like to move to adjourn debate on Bill 1 as well.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 2

An Act to Remove Barriers for Survivors of Sexual and Domestic Violence

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and move second reading of Bill 2, An Act to Remove Barriers for Survivors of Sexual and Domestic Violence.

Bill 2 proposes amendments to the Limitations Act that would help survivors of sexual and domestic violence by allowing them the time they need to come forward and file a civil claim. If passed, this bill will eliminate limitations periods for civil claims related to sexual and domestic violence. Right now in Alberta if a person wants to sue for these types of assault, the action must be started within two years of when the person knew about the incident. There are provisions in the current legislation that suspend the limitations period in certain circumstances. The provisions of Bill 2 would remove limitations periods for making the following types of claims: sexual assault or other sexual misconduct or nonsexual assault which involve a minor, intimate relationship, or dependant.

Madam Speaker, we recognize that for survivors of sexual and domestic violence the decision to come forward is extremely personal and often difficult. Removing limitations periods empowers survivors to come forward on their own terms, when they are ready. With respect to sexual assault the proposed amendments would put Alberta in line with the majority of the country. However, Alberta will be leading the way in addressing other sexual misconduct in intimate relationships as no other jurisdiction in Canada expressly states this in their legislation. Removing the limitations period for claims stemming from sexual misconduct in intimate relationships would increase recourse for people who have endured a broad range of unwelcome behaviours such as sexual exploitation, sexual harassment, stalking, indecent exposure, voyeurism, or the distribution of sexually explicit photographs without the individual's consent.

The provisions of the bill would apply retroactively, meaning that claims that stem from incidents that predate its coming into force would be allowed. It's impossible to know how many historical claims would have been subject to the limitations period and will be brought forth as a result of removing these. Each survivor will have a unique journey, but this will open one more door for those seeking to hold their attacker accountable in the court system. Applying these changes retroactively is consistent with other jurisdictions and aligns with the purpose of the bill, the recognition that survivors of sexual and domestic violence may need to come forward.

This is a change Albertans have asked for, Madam Speaker, and it's the right thing to do. This government is listening to Albertans, and we're taking action to address their concerns. Every Albertan deserves to feel safe and respected in their communities, their homes, and their workplaces.

When we introduced this bill, we heard from a survivor and from organizations who work with survivors. They told us that this opens one more door for survivors to come forward and provides one more option for a survivor's journey.

Madam Speaker, 1 in 3 women and 1 in 6 men will experience sexual violence in their lifetime. We hope this bill will help to make their lives a little bit better. I urge my colleagues in the House to support this bill.

Thank you very much.

11:50

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak to Bill 2, An Act to Remove Barriers for Survivors of Sexual and Domestic Violence. I know that in this House we have heard and have all the statistics about how prevalent sexual assault and battery is. We've heard harrowing and heartfelt accounts from members in this House about their own experiences with this crime – and I'm extremely proud to serve alongside you for your bravery in stating that – and we've welcomed guests that have bravely come to share their stories about dealing with the trauma that accompanies crimes of this nature.

I'm very happy to speak to the bill before us today, recognizing that this is a step forward in how we as a province treat those who have been victimized. The bill removes the limitations period for sexual assault or battery as well as for sexual misconduct or sexual assault or battery in certain circumstances, like being a minor, being in an intimate relationship with the accused, or being in some way dependent on the accused. These changes will help protect the rights of survivors and allow them more flexibility when they can bring forward civil cases against the accused.

This flexibility is important because in many cases there are very real traumas that prevent victims from coming forward immediately after these crimes. The intimate nature of the crimes being addressed by this bill makes victims that much more vulnerable to manipulation and intimidation from their abusers. Sometimes it takes many years for these people to escape the influence of those committing these crimes or many years before they feel comfortable sitting across from them in court.

Those considerations could be serious obstacles to achieving justice for survivors of sexual assault and battery, and the government has done excellent work with this bill by removing some of those obstacles. I'm pleased to lend my support to this bill, and I will be voting to see it passed.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to speak to Bill 2, An Act to Remove Barriers for Survivors of Sexual and Domestic Violence. Today is the perfect day to be discussing this piece of legislation, on International Women's Day, as we all know that most of these acts are committed against women and girls. Every person should have the right to be free from sexual violence and assault, and we all have a role to play in ensuring that right is upheld.

Sexual assault is a legal term used in Canada to refer to any form of sexual contact without voluntary consent. For many people experiencing a sexual assault can be very difficult to understand, and sometimes the true trauma does not set in until very late in life, many, many years later. Many people often have no idea what to do or where to turn for help, support, or even understanding. Since every person's experience and recovery process is unique, each person must decide for themselves what is needed for healing, but it is important that these decisions be made by the victims and that we respect their own unique healing process. This means giving them time.

Sexual assault is a violent and heinous act. It can take years to overcome. Legislation meant to compensate victims and allow them to seek justice needs to reflect this, and this is why I am pleased to support Bill 2. Removing the statute of limitations brings us in line with the majority of other provinces. This is important. I look forward to seeing this bill move forward, offering to the debate, listening to the debate, and I encourage all members in this Legislature to support this bill.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Is there anybody wishing to speak on 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any wishing to speak to the bill?

The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Yes. Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would like to move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Acting Speaker: The House will be adjourned till 1:30 this afternoon.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, March 8, 2017

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Please be seated.

Hon. members, I would just repeat a message that I've mentioned several times in the Assembly before. I would urge that we be as brief as we can on introductions of guests and visitors, and I hope that you will be able to at the same time give due respect to the parties that are here.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today on your behalf to introduce Jennifer Franki-Smith, who is seated in your gallery. Jennifer Franki-Smith was born and raised in Yellowknife, Northwest Territories. She completed her bachelor of arts in sociology and anthropology from the University of Prince Edward Island in 2016. Jennifer is the public affairs and communications intern with the office of the Clerk at the Legislative Assembly of the Northwest Territories. Jennifer's main duties consist of conducting daily tours of the Assembly, assisting with the production of educational outreach programs, and updating content on the Legislative Assembly website. She is accompanied by Al Chapman, manager of visitor services for the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, and will be observing and learning about our approach to educational programming and public tours. I would now ask Jennifer to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. First, it's a great pleasure to introduce two strong Alberta women leaders from the Alberta coalition on human trafficking who are seated in the gallery across from me: this organization's executive director, Andrea Burkhardt, and a project manager, Amy Wilson. They work every day to ensure that we have an Alberta free from human trafficking. Please join me in welcoming them.

For the second introduction, Mr. Speaker, as we celebrate the contribution of women trailblazers, it's my honour to introduce to you and through you Starr Curry and Tamara Chivers, who are both women who live in the constituency of Edmonton-Glenora. I should also note that they're both seated behind me. Starr Curry works tirelessly to support women in politics. Starr's commitment speaks for itself with the diversity that you see here in our government caucus as she has campaigned for a very long time to get more women onto our NDP ballot. Tamara Chivers is a woman leader from Edmonton-Glenora who balances the challenges and responsibilities of being a mom with her work as a lawyer for the United Nurses of Alberta. She is also a tremendous advocate for equality and diversity, and she signed my nomination papers. Please join me in welcoming them both as well.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: My apologies, Mr. Speaker. You also have two other guests in your gallery today. Sarah Hurcomb and Karine Landry are with the Library of Parliament. If they could please stand, I'd like to introduce them to everyone in the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to the rest of the Assembly Aminah Aboughoushe, who is a tireless volunteer in her community. On top of her role as a fundraiser at the MAC Rahma mosque in my riding, Aminah continues to be a busy hockey mom to three boys. She also serves as the secretary on the executive of the Wolf Willow country club community league, where recently she spoke eloquently at their annual general meeting about the rewards of volunteering to serve one's community and thereby convinced three more women to accept nominations to serve. I ask her now to rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two very important guests from the constituency of Cardston-Taber-Warner. With us today are His Worship Henk Devlieger, mayor of the town of Taber, and, as well, Cory Armfelt, chief administrative officer of the town of Taber. Both are here trying to meet with ministers to get answers about having the local FCSS moved from the agriplex into an AHS building that has sat empty for two years. I would ask these two individuals to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms McKittrick: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to celebrate a strong Albertan woman. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you Jennifer Kauffield, vice-president and CFO for Titanium Corporation. Titanium's patented technology Creating Value from Waste recovers lost bitumen, solvent, and heavy minerals from the oil sands tailings stream, materially reducing greenhouse gas emissions. Titanium has also received valuable support from Alberta Energy. Ms Kauffield is a great example of a woman in an executive position in the oil and gas sector, with a career that spans over 17 years while raising three boys. I would like to ask Jennifer to please rise to receive the traditional warm welcome from the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two extraordinary women from the riding of Edmonton-Decore. Tracy Patience is the executive director of Dickinsfield Amity House, and just like her favourite superhero, Wonder Woman, she takes her job just as seriously. We also have Badrieha Taha, who is a volunteer and special events co-ordinator at the KARA Family Resource Centre. I'm also proud to be able to say that she is also a constituent of Edmonton-Decore. Dickinsfield Amity House and KARA are both pillars in the community, and these women work tirelessly to help anyone in need. It's truly an honour to have them here today to celebrate International Women's Day. I would ask my guests behind me to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm thrilled to introduce a fierce and loving advocate, Velvet Martin, from St. Albert. Velvet is many things, but I believe her greatest joy is being a mom. Velvet's daughter Samantha was born with a rare chromosomal disorder and autism. Samantha died when she was only 13 years old, following many years in care separated from her family. Velvet responded to this life-changing loss by successfully lobbying for changes to Alberta's Family Support for Children with Disabilities Act. These amendments were called Samantha's law. Velvet is president of the Alberta chapter of Protecting Canadian Children and has worked tirelessly for years to protect our children. She is one of the many women whom I'm very grateful for today. I ask her to rise. Please join me in thanking her and welcoming her to this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you two powerful women from my constituency of Edmonton-Riverview, Jane Arscott and Linda Trimble. Together they have published several books on the topic of women in politics. Most recently they are both editors of Stalled: The Representation of Women in Canadian Governments, which was published in 2013.

Jane Arscott is a member of the First Nations Caring Society and is a board member of Changing Together: A Centre for Immigrant Women. She is a professor at Athabasca University doing research to promote gender parity in Legislatures. She is a proponent of the UN convention on the elimination of discrimination against women and an advocate for gender equality in Alberta and Canada.

Linda Trimble is a professor of political science at the University of Alberta. In 2005 she was awarded an Alberta centennial medal for her research in the area of women and politics and for her community work to persuade women to run for office. She has been counting the number of women elected in Canada for 25 years, and I'm proud to say that our government has given Professor Trimble more women to count.

I would ask them both to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two women who are strong leaders in their community. Jessie Trottier is a constituent of mine. She is an advocate for seniors' health and works to organize events and activities with her neighbours at Rosedale Estates, where she makes sure that I visit regularly. Annamaria Edwards is a contract analyst with Enbridge and serves as the president of the Cariwest Festival, a favourite summer event here in Edmonton-Centre that's been contributing to the vibrancy of our city for over 30 years. I ask that they both rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you four amazing women. From the department of oncology at the University of Alberta: Yvette Labiuk is a proud third-generation Ukrainian Albertan and a graduate program administrator who mothers over a hundred graduate students, and Anaïs Medina Martin, originally from Madrid, Spain, is a post-doctoral fellow in experimental oncology who has studied around the world, including at Harvard. She's in Edmonton to pursue her dream of doing cancer research. From my constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud: Judy Robinson is a community activist, artist, entrepreneur, and proud mother of three, and Vanessa Desa is a passionate advocate for vulnerable children, youth, and the integration of immigrants and refugees. She's a founding member of Brander Gardens ROCKS and has received a YWCA woman of distinction award. I ask Yvette, Anaïs, Judy, and Vanessa to stand and receive a warm welcome from this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour and pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all the members of this House my guest, Jan Reimer, the executive director of the Alberta Council of Women's Shelters. Jan is a trailblazer and an inspiration to women throughout our province as Edmonton's first female mayor. We all know about the important work her organization does to support Albertan women. Last December her team launched the Lift Her Up campaign, calling on all Albertans to stand up against sexist or violent language towards women. On this International Women's Day I would like to thank her for standing up for women throughout Alberta and across Canada. I would now request Ms Reimer to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I am so proud to rise on International Women's Day to celebrate two extraordinary women. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you Wendy Rudiger and Lillian Lubyk. Wendy began working in a nursing home at the age of 14, helping seniors. She has since had a full career as a nurse, persevering through a hiring freeze to work at Calgary General hospital. She is very active in the community of Stony Plain, helping many people either by holding a hand or driving them to the Cross cancer clinic. Lillian is a proud grandmother who spent nine years teaching in Papua New Guinea and 20 years teaching in Canada. She resides in Carvel with her husband and is an active volunteer for CKUA, Folk Fest, and the Kids with Cancer Society. In my riding of Stony Plain the culture of volunteerism is always amazing but no more so than now, today, with these two women. I ask them to please rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Linda Crockett of Alberta Bullying. Linda is a social worker who has dedicated many years to bullying research, and she was a great help in writing my private member's bill. I ask that Linda receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to celebrate two strong Alberta women for International Women's Day. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to this House two incredibly dedicated feminists and advocates for social justice from Amigas Latin-American Women Society, established in 2001, an organization committed to the individual and collective social development of women both here in Edmonton and in other parts of the world. They're women of my community who I admire and who have been an inspiration in my life, for which I'm eternally grateful. I now ask Nelly Rosende and Marianela Iglesias to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Labour and minister responsible for democratic renewal.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure and a great honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Manal Alnajjar and Tripat Kaur from the Indo-Canadian Women's Association in Mill Woods. Manal moved from Palestine to Edmonton with her family in 2013 after pursuing her master's in education. She has shown leadership by advocating for women's rights, preventing violence against women, and helping to change attitudes. Tripat moved from India to Canada six years ago. She has a master's degree in public administration and a wealth of experience in community counselling. She has been busy helping new immigrants and women fleeing domestic violence.

I'm very pleased that they could join us to celebrate International Women's Day, and I ask them both now to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour and privilege to introduce to you and through you to all the members of this House my friend Dorothy Anderson. Dot is a member of the Gift Lake Métis settlement, is currently secretary for the Métis Settlements General Council, and has a long history of advocacy for Métis settlements, including working with the Métis Settlements Health Board to engage our government on Métis health issues. Dot is a leader and an inspiration to women in her community and across our province. This International Women's Day I'm thankful to her and to all women for the differences that they make in our communities. I would now ask her to stand to receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Infrastructure and of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed my pleasure to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly two extraordinary women from my constituency of Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. Teresa Spinelli is the president of the Italian Centre, headquartered here in Little Italy, which is expanding across Edmonton and even to Calgary. She is an outstanding businessperson, also a founding member of the Viva Italia business association and very active in community and charitable events.

Habiba Abdulle is the executive director of the Alberta Somali Community Centre in my constituency. The centre provides a wide range of services to members of our local Somali community, including help with housing, jobs, training opportunities, child care, and others.

I would ask them to please rise now and accept the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure on International Women's Day to rise on behalf of my colleague from Calgary-Foothills and myself to introduce one of the very prominent female reporters in the very, very strong Alberta press gallery here at the Legislature. She joins us regularly. She's a strong voice for a free and open press. She does a wonderful job here, as so many of the women in our press gallery do. I'd ask that Emma Graney rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome. I suspect you may have been here before.

The hon. Minister of Status of Women and of Service Alberta.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on International Women's Day to celebrate strong Alberta women from my Ministry of Status of Women. Although they are a small group, these public servants work diligently to provide their best advice, focusing on initiatives that lead women out of lower income situations, reducing barriers that keep women from leadership positions or from running for office, and eliminating and preventing violence against women and girls. I'm pleased to have them here with us today on International Women's Day.

I also want to celebrate strong Alberta women working in their communities to advance women's equality. Joining us here today are Mary Jane James, Sara Cameron, and Annette Klevgaard from the Sexual Assault Centre of Edmonton and Muriel Venne and Gwen Nahorney from the Institute for the Advancement of Aboriginal Women. They are our partners in our work to improve the lives of women and girls. I ask them all to rise in this House, and I ask this House to please join me in providing these strong Alberta women with the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there any other introductions? The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly some of the smartest and hardest working students in all of Alberta, the students of Suzuki Charter School. It's located in the most humble constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar. They're accompanied by their teachers and parents: Ms Clare Young, Mr. Jason Callow, Ms Shannon Eremenko, and Mr. Stirling Perry. If they could please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome to you.

Ms Ganley: I rise to seek the unanimous consent of the House to allow the Routine to continue past 1:50.

The Speaker: Any further introductions? Please proceed, Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to stand today and introduce to you and through you a group of students – I think between 43 and 46 of them; we're not sure how many are here today – from the beautiful l'école Beau Meadow school in Beaumont. The students are accompanied by their teachers, Mr. Brad Hayes and Mrs. Jolanda Nichols, and a host of chaperones. I won't read them all because I know we have lots of things to do today, but if they would please rise, we could give them the traditional welcome of this House.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The Minister of Service Alberta and Minister of Status of Women.

International Women's Day

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to celebrate strong Alberta women. Today, on International Women's Day, we recognize the social, economic, cultural, and political accomplishments of women around the world and the ongoing struggle for equality. In 1975 the United Nations designated March 8 as International Women's Day to advance the status of women worldwide. Countries around the world unite every year on this day to restate our dedication to the principles of gender equality. We need this day. Decades later women are still not equally represented in corporate boardrooms or at decision-making tables in public office. In Alberta we have had a thousand male MLAs and only 99 female MLAs, 29 of whom are sitting as members today.

Sadly, Alberta women continue to face some of the highest rates of sexual violence in the country. Changing old ways is not easy, but the people of Alberta asked for change, and our government is honoured to answer that call. We started making history in 2015 by appointing Canada's first gender-balanced cabinet. We launched the Status of Women ministry with a commitment to make the lives of Alberta's women and girls better. And I'll tell you something about my ministry, Mr. Speaker: though she be little, she is fierce.

We are working hard to advance gender equality. After our first year Alberta now has a law that lets survivors of violence break a residential lease without fear of a financial penalty; a minimum wage that will keep increasing, to $15 an hour, making sure that women who are clustered in the lowest range of pay have a little more at the end of the day; a new disclose-or-explain rule for publicly traded corporations to report on gender equality at the highest levels of their organizations; a grant program that supports community projects and programs that advance our ministry's mandate of leadership, economic empowerment, and ending violence; a partnership with the city of Edmonton and UN Women to reduce sexual violence in Edmonton; Ready for Her, a website to encourage women to see themselves as candidates in the upcoming municipal elections and resources to help them get on the ballot; entrenched gender expression and gender identity in the Human Rights Act, making it illegal to discriminate against anyone on those grounds. We joined the national inquiry into missing and murdered indigenous women and girls, and we invested an additional $10 million to increase affordability, quality, and access to child care for Alberta families.

We are building on a legacy of women who fought in their day-to-day lives to be treated as equals. They were our role models, and now it's our turn in this House, in boardrooms, on sports fields, and in law courts. We will continue to be leaders of change. Your government is working hard to make life better for all Albertans, ensuring that the necessary policies, programs, and services are in place for the advancement of gender equality in Alberta. Women shouldn't have to spend the next century fighting for equality. It's time now.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, and all members of the Assembly to join me in the fight for women's equality. [Standing ovation]

Mrs. Aheer: People may try to use their words to diminish women, our work, and our passion. I have the immense privilege of meeting people every day from every background, and just when I think I can't be surprised, someone will challenge me. Even if I disagree with the challenge, or the words are disagreeable, or the tone or colour of their words rubs me the wrong way, or we differ in ideology, or if I disagree inherently with their values or their take on life, the content of their conversation, the rudeness, the kindness, the education, passion, the division, the sexual appropriateness or lack thereof, even then, and more often than not, I am so pleasantly surprised by the kindness and compassion of Albertans.

I'm a proud woman who stands here solid on the work of many women who came before me from all nations. India had two powerful women who ran that nation, Indira Gandhi and her daughter-in-law Sonia Gandhi. It's inspirational. Even more inspiring for me: in 1969 my mother-in-law at the tender age of 18 made her way across the ocean by herself, not reading or writing in any language, all the way to Canada to meet up with her older sister. She came from a culture and a village where it was impossible for her to leave the farm without an escort as she could have been raped or killed should she venture out on her own. But she travelled across the sea because her father wanted her to have a better life. She came from a culture and a life that did not always accept all of the freedoms that we are privileged to have here. Today, even though things have changed and she comes from a time that does not always align well with today's values, I seek her wisdom. I argue with her, I trust her, I don't always see eye to eye with her on many issues, but I respect the conversations and always leave the conversation having learned something.

As women we provide the humble template for that which we want to see: our hopes for future women and our desire to encourage and protect them as they make their way on their terms into careers where they are needed, where they belong, and where they are honoured. To me, this inspiration comes from the many pioneering women before me who are here now in this building. They are the faces of the women across the aisle and on this side, and my hope is that we will not engage in polarizing politics.

I have been attacked many times by those who don't agree with my politics, in horrible and distasteful ways, and, believe me, I do not stand and will not stand for it. However, words, to me, are an expression, and they've been used throughout history in poetry, music, to express, no matter how pretty or profane.

On this day, March 8, 2017, that celebrates International Women's Day and the awesomeness of being bold for change, this means ending discrimination and ending violence. Let's take action to empower, not to destroy, to elevate and not belittle, to honour those incredible souls that engage in discourse and common purpose that moves us forward.

To the women who have inspired me, to women who supported and encouraged me: you are my enduring heroes and my reason for continuing, no matter the insults, the condemnation, the platitudes, the nonsense . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member?

Mrs. Aheer: . . . and no matter what other . . .

The Speaker: Could you wrap up the comments?

Mrs. Aheer: I will respond, and I will not hide. You will not shame me because I'm a woman.

2:00

The Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to request unanimous consent for responses from the third party and the two independent members.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on behalf of my Progressive Conservative colleagues to recognize International Women's Day. I'm especially proud to stand as a Member of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, a province where so much trail-blazing took place with respect to women's rights. Three of the Famous Five, the group of women who launched the famous Person's Case, sat in this very Chamber. Among them was Irene Parlby, who served as the MLA for Lacombe from 1921 to 1935 and was the first female ever appointed to cabinet in Alberta. It's a privilege to be a member of this Assembly where such remarkable women once served and continue to serve the people of Alberta.

Nearly 100 years after Irene Parlby and her colleagues Nellie McClung and Louise McKinney were elected, women in our province and around the world still face serious challenges when it comes to equality. Women still earn less than their male counterparts. Women are still vastly outnumbered by men in boardrooms and in leadership roles.

As we've seen time and time again in Alberta and elsewhere, female public figures face a level of online abuse that as a man I will never experience. This kind of abuse keeps other women from entering public life in the first place. I know I have more than one colleague in this Chamber today who has been subjected to this gendered, sexist, and misogynistic treatment. To all those who have faced online bullying and abuse being women, I am truly sorry that you had to experience that. This behaviour is a scourge on our society and is completely unacceptable. By rejecting this hateful, discriminatory element of our society and carrying on with their work, these courageous women set a remarkable example for all Albertans. They embody the 2017 International Women's Day theme, Be Bold for Change.

I join with all Albertans in celebrating the invaluable contributions that they all make as women in every facet of our lives and pledge to use every opportunity to take bold action myself to advance the goal of equality.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. An honour to stand with the Liberal caucus on this important day of celebrating women. Today we celebrate the achievements made in gender equality over many years. Just over 100 years ago women did not have the right to vote. Even 50 years ago the franchise was still withheld from our First Nations women. Today women hold 1 in 3 seats in this House. While there is still much progress that needs to be made on many women's issues, this is an encouraging trend. I look forward to seeing it continue into the future.

The theme of this year's International Women's Day is Be Bold for Change. Across Canada, Alberta, and the world individuals and organizations are honouring this day by encouraging women to be bold and, by doing so, with the full support of real men, create real change.

I particularly want to acknowledge the work of Ask Her, a group in Calgary that's working to encourage the greater representation of women in municipal politics. Ask Her recognizes that one of the reasons so few women hold public office is that they are too rarely asked to run. As such, they encourage Calgarians to seek out strong, qualified women in their communities and ask them to take leadership roles. This year Ask Her will ask 20 women to run for Calgary city council. At present only two of the city's 14 councillors are women, a meagre 14 per cent. Ask Her aims to achieve 50 per cent female representation on council after this fall's election, and they have my full support.

Our province, our country, our society are made better when strong, passionate, engaged women are involved in their communities and bring their voices to the table. This International Women's Day we have much to celebrate in the progress women have made. I encourage women, especially young women, to continue to press forward, be bold, and take the lead in creating the change we all so desperately need.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed an honour to speak on International Women's Day. Yesterday my staff and I were talking about the controversies spurred by that reprehensible The Red Pill feminist ideology. Of course, I was shocked by the entire idea, but I have to admit that I was shocked even further to hear about the ingrained sexism that some of the women on my own staff have faced in their recent past.

I was told that in a recent role one of my staff was told that she wasn't capable of being on the communications team because, quote, women disrupt the morale of the men; or was encouraged to run for secretary, not VP, because women are better organized; or was called sweetie or darling at a board meeting; or was told that she was only hired in a senior role because the boss wanted to, quote, get it wet. If that makes you uncomfortable, it should. These sound like stories from 40 years ago, but they're stories from less than two years ago. This is what many women in Alberta struggle with every day.

Now, recently I was asked if I am a feminist. Well, I was raised by a strong single mother. My wife is a strong, smart leader who makes a difference every day, and I am honoured and lucky to be the father of two intelligent daughters, who deserve to grow up in a world where they don't worry about sexual assault or domestic violence and they have exactly the same opportunities as any man. So, yes, I am a feminist. The real question is: who is not a feminist?

Despite the challenges that persist in our society, I am encouraged by the work I see women doing every day to strive for equality even in situations where some want them to fail. Today the daughters of the vote sat in the House of Commons. These inspiring young women refuse to go unheard, and I hope they continue to inspire other young women to become involved in their communities. I want to recognize the countless women who live their own quiet activism every day, shaping communities and making change.

So I do have hope, hope that we will become more aware of the work still to be done to create a truly equal society. I have hope that the next generation of young women will live in a world where opportunities are limited only by their capabilities and desires, not by their gender. I hope to be able to work alongside the strong women in my life, both personally and professionally, and among all of you here to create a better world for all of our daughters.

If we call out sexism when we see it, if we seek to create opportunities for women to take on leadership roles in elected office, in senior staff positions, in business, in community, then we will be taking concrete steps towards building a truly equal society.

Thank you. [Standing ovation]

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Justice System Delays

Mr. Jean: Crime is up across the province, and over the last two years Alberta has seen very serious cases being dropped. The problem is only getting worse, and today we found out that the Justice minister sent out a brand new protocol just last week advising prosecutors that it may not be worth pursuing serious violent crimes due to the resources required. We're talking about murders and sexual assaults. This is sickening. This means victims will likely see the accused criminals walking free on our streets. How on earth did the Premier or anyone in this government possibly think this was a good idea?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The opposition doesn't know whether they are coming or whether they are going. One day they call for cuts. The next day they're calling for more money. Yesterday another Wildrose bozo eruption, and today it's the Keystone Kops in this House. Those folks broke things. We're working to fix it. We've got real leadership from the minister. She'll be happy to answer the remainder of the questions, but I have to say: Wildrose talk is cheap; leadership is action.

2:10

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Here's the NDP government's new position, and I quote: even once a file is determined to be prosecutable and is serious or violent and, therefore, a priority, it may still not be worth prosecuting to the fullest extent possible. End quote. Tell that to the victim of a sexual assault, tell that to the family who's lost a loved one, or tell that to the growing number of Albertans who are quickly losing any faith in the ability of our justice system to keep our streets safe. These victims deserve every single effort to make sure violent criminals are kept behind bars for as long as possible. Why are you doing this?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We want to ensure that Albertans have a justice system that they can be confident in. Backlogs developed over decades. When the decision in Jordan came down, we had to respond very quickly. That's why we've given prosecutors the tool to focus on serious and violent crimes. The triage protocol is explicit. Things will not be lost as prosecutions merely because of timing, but prosecutors are empowered to make the decisions necessary to focus on serious and violent crimes.

Mr. Jean: Well, I think it's disgusting, Mr. Speaker.

Here's what Rick Woodburn, president of the Canadian Association of Crown Counsel, has to say, and I quote: how are you going to look into the eyes of a victim's family and say that we're not going to do that because we don't have enough money? That's ridiculous. Triage under the government now means fewer resources for serious and violent crimes. That's not how this is supposed to work, and this is not what you're supposed to do as a government. Today Albertans feel less safe than ever before. The NDP has been in charge for over two years. How are they letting this possibly happen?

Ms Ganley: Mr. Speaker, no victim ever wants to see their accused person walk free without a trial, and neither do we. That's why we've taken the necessary steps to ensure that our prosecutors can focus on serious and violent crimes. The opposition's story just doesn't add up. One minute they call for more resources, the next minute they call to cut and slash, and now they're calling for more resources again. We're taking leadership to ensure that serious and violent crimes are prosecuted.

The Speaker: Second main question.

Carbon Policies

Mr. Jean: This government is blowing through a billion dollars just to destroy our coal sector here in Alberta. This policy is killing jobs, killing livelihoods, hurting historic Alberta communities, and it is hurting Alberta families. So I was shocked on Monday to see the economic development minister actually stand up and tell coal workers, "We have your back." Well, I'd hate to see what it looks like when you don't have their back. Does the Premier honestly believe that spending $1 billion to destroy our coal sector is having coal workers' backs?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, I know that math can be difficult for the members opposite, but let's review a couple of simple equations. Let's take one made-in-Alberta plan to deal with climate change plus the courage to try a new approach after years of the same old dead-end path that failed to get us new market access. What does that equal? Two new pipeline approvals and $14 billion in direct investment, thousands of good jobs for Albertans. Our plan is working, and your plan just doesn't add up.

Mr. Jean: Well, I've been all around Alberta, and in Hanna I met a husband and wife that were forced to sell their home and now live in their car. This is not an abnormal story in Alberta anymore after this NDP government, and it's not a joke. This is serious. Your policies are hurting people's lives. I can tell Albertans one thing for sure. I haven't heard from any of these communities or these workers that you are listening to them at all. I'll ask the Premier a simple question: when will she and her ministers hold open town halls in these communities so they can look in the eyes of the men and women whose livelihoods they're destroying?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, our agreement last year with electricity companies opens the door to good, long-term, cleaner electricity jobs. This means that electricity will be green and long-term for Albertans who rely on those jobs. We've visited and met with community leaders in Hanna, Leduc, Wabamun and will be visiting soon with more impacted communities, including Edson and Forestburg. We're open. The only ones who are covering their ears are the members opposite.

Mr. Jean: Here's the reality of life outside of the dome for many Albertans right now. In Hanna, for instance, while you laugh, their mayor is estimating that 10 per cent of the workforce is going to disappear. Folks have seen a carbon tax come on their farms and their ranches and their businesses, and life is really tough right now. I know that the government thinks they're doing the right thing, but if they want to show Albertans they have their backs, here's some free advice from the Official Opposition. Premier, just reverse the carbon tax, stop the billion-dollar, job-killing coal shutdown, and start having Albertans' backs.

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, this side of the House has Albertans' backs. It's that side of the House that's completely out of touch. They want to paint a bleak picture and scare community leaders with misinformation about the workforce. They can choose to be apologists for coal and ignore the devastating health and environmental impacts of it, or they can stand up, be leaders. That's exactly what this government is doing. We're going to keep standing up for Alberta families while they keep fearmongering. That's not leadership; this is.

Child Death Review System

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, last fall Albertans were shocked and outraged to learn about the tragic killing of four-year-old Serenity. We know that at the time of her death she was severely malnourished and underweight and she had bruising all over her body. She died more than two years ago. Sadly, we know she's not the only child in this province who has been failed by those in charge of protecting them. Can the minister please update Albertans on this file? Has a cause and manner of death been determined yet, do the police finally have everything they need, and is anyone over there – anyone – seeking justice for poor little Serenity?

The Speaker: The Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for his commitment to getting justice for all children in Alberta. Certainly, every single member in this House was outraged about the lack of support that we have for many children in care. You know, we really need to improve a system that has been broken for a long period of time. That's why we have the all-party panel, to work together to ensure that the processes improve and we finally do it right for those kids. I'm really thankful for the commitment of all the parties who are at the table, and I look forward to the ongoing work to bring forward recommendations to make it better, finally.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I'm part of the minister's panel on children in care, and each time that we've asked about Serenity, the NDP chair has shut us down because we aren't allowed to talk about her case. We aren't told what went wrong. At best we get the chance to ask one or two questions of presenters while so many questions are left unanswered. The NDP are even refusing to create transcripts of the panel meetings. Given that we can't actually talk about Serenity at this panel, does the minister think her panel will deliver justice for Serenity or any improvements for the next Serenity?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again, I know that everyone in this House is committed to improving the system for our children in care. Obviously, the death review process needs some changes. That's why we have the panel in the first place. That panel is designed to improve the reviews in the first phase but then, moving into phase 2, to finally get to the root problems as to why children are in care in the first place and making the changes necessary to make life better for them and their families. This is not about a witch hunt on a particular case. This is about working to ensure that Alberta children in care finally get the care that they need.

Mr. Nixon: Albertans are angry when they hear about our system failing children in care. During the panel meetings we keep hearing that there were 73 reported deaths of children in care, and apparently 11 are proceeding to statutory review. Despite years having gone by, none of these reviews are finished. Senior bureaucrats say that it's very complicated work and it takes a long time, but our children don't have a long time. Serenity isn't even included in those 73 deaths. Will the minister please tell Albertans if Serenity's death is even being investigated by her department and why it takes so painfully long for her department to complete a review?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every single one of us is outraged by what has happened in the past, and I am definitely one of those people. Obviously, the processes that were developed in the past are not okay. We need to change them, and we are moving forward to change them as quickly as we can. We are doing that through a process in which we engage families, we engage workers, we engage all those who have been affected by this to ensure that instead of the existing processes with many separate reviews, we can finally get down to the bottom of this and do this right going forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's another day and another crisis in Alberta under the NDP. Our Justice minister is directing Crown prosecutors to let violent criminals go because they may take up too much court time, and that includes – wait for this – alleged murderers and sexual predators. A triage protocol, accepting plea bargains: why don't we just do the NDP's version of Let's Make A Deal? To the Justice minister: are you on the side of criminals, or are you on the side of victims?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government came into a system of significant court backlogs that built up under that party over there. We have been taking action to address those backlogs. We are moving forward because Jordan forced us to move very quickly with the triage protocol to ensure that serious and violent crimes are prioritized. We know that more resources are necessary, and we will have more to say about that very soon.

Mr. Ellis: Minister, I think you need to focus on the four fingers that are pointing back at you.

Mr. Speaker, thank you. Given that last year I asked why you were cutting the budget for Crown prosecutors and given that your government put on a hiring freeze that left 35 positions open when 50 prosecutors were desperately needed and given that we warned the minister that the consequences of reducing the budget for Crown prosecutors would create havoc, to the Premier: is this job just too much for this minister?

Ms Hoffman: Absolutely not, Mr. Speaker. We have one of the most competent, focused, diligent Justice ministers that this province has ever seen. And it is true that she inherited a heck of a mess from the guys who just asked that very same question. So guess what? She is focused on making sure that she moves forward with Jordan's decision as the guiding legislative focus. We have to; it's a court ruling. And she has to make sure that we're continuing to increase where we need it so that people can get justice. For the folks on the other side who are always calling for cuts, keep this in mind because it's important that we invest in making sure that we do get justice.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you. We didn't call for cuts. We want to support the victims of crime.

Given that this government is proposing legislation right now that is supposed to strengthen the rights of victims of sexual... [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, keep the volume down on this side.

Mr. Ellis: Given that this government is proposing legislation right now that is supposed to strengthen the rights of victims of sexual violence and given that the minister quietly provided a directive to drop sexual assault cases when the Crown has a, quote, slim likelihood of conviction, which is a major change from the current threshold, to the same minister: how can you one day be an advocate for victims of sexual assault and revictimize them the next day?

Ms Ganley: Mr. Speaker, nothing could be further from the truth. We have empowered prosecutors to focus on serious and violent cases. It has always been the case that where there is no likelihood of conviction or it's not in the public interest, those individual Crown prosecutors have been empowered to exercise their discretion. We know the system is under significant pressure. There have been significant backlogs, and that's why we're taking action to get it fixed. I have no idea why the opposition can't get their stories straight. One minute they want me to cut; one minute they want me to spend. They have no idea what we're doing. We're moving forward with a real plan.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Opioid Use

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A briefing note I obtained from the Calgary Police Service shows the further impact that opioids, including fentanyl, are having on policing resources in the community. In 2016 the Calgary Police Service responded to 223 overdose calls, including 111 fentanyl-related charges. These numbers have risen dramatically every year for the last five years. There's also been a corresponding spike in property crime driven by addiction. To the Minister of Justice: if the government has all the resources it needs, why do these numbers keep going up?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We know that fentanyl and addictions are best attacked on a health front by ensuring that we have the necessary treatments, and that is why our Associate Minister of Health has been moving so quickly to ensure that we have treatment beds available, that we have replacement therapies available, that we have naloxone available. I'm in regular contact with the Calgary police and every other police service. They support the approach that we are taking, and we will move forward together.

Dr. Swann: That's a bit of a stretch given the chief of police's comments in the last month.

The danger of falling victim to an opioid overdose doesn't end once people are arrested. A letter I received from the Justice minister just last month admits an unprecedented 10 Albertans died in custody last year. Two of the deaths have been confirmed to be the result of overdoses; six more await the final ME, medical examiner, report. There were also 27 near deaths – 27 – that were prevented by emergency intervention in remand and corrections. To the minister: how are you investigating these deaths, what are the results, and what actions are you taking to prevent this?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The safety of our inmates and our correctional workers is of the utmost priority in the correctional division. We know that fentanyl has a much more deadly effect than other drugs. We do know that that can cause some challenges. I think that we should await the actual statistics before we draw any conclusions on that, but corrections officers take steps every day, including searches, intelligence, and we're even investigating body scanners, to ensure that our inmates are as safe as we can make them.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The opioid crisis is pervasive, affecting urban, rural, First Nations, and all economic classes, and it crosses all government jurisdictions. Beyond Health it includes human services, Education, Justice, and First Nations. We need a clear, comprehensive, evidence-based strategy. So far the government has failed to deliver this. To the Premier: when will a comprehensive, government-wide strategy for the opioid crisis be tabled in the Legislature?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for his question. My door continues to be open, and we've been pleased to receive some of his feedback as well as the feedback of others throughout the province, whether it's with regard to Health, Justice, human services, and so on. We continue to work on pulling all of those pieces together. The member is absolutely right that more can and must be done. I'm confident that the associate minister is taking those recommendations into consideration, and we'll be happy to update this House in a timely fashion as we continue to move forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Services for Persons with Disabilities

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In Calgary-Currie, organizations like the Association for the Rehabilitation of the Brain Injured help people recover from brain injuries and strokes. They have recently come under funding pressure due to the United Way cutting back on their support. ARBI has responded with fundraising efforts and, where they can, cuts. However, it is not enough. To the Minister of Health: how is the ministry supporting organizations like ARBI?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. During tough economic times I understand that organizations funded by the United Way are feeling additional pressures lately. The Association for the Rehabilitation of the Brain Injured provides continued service to help Albertans with brain injuries, and we are grateful for the work that they do, integrated within the community, outside of hospital, or in long-term care as well as working with all partners. That's one of the reasons why AHS is currently providing $400,000 in funding to ARBI to provide community-based care for Albertans in need of ongoing supports for brain injuries. I thank the member for bringing this additional point to my attention.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is good that we are continuing to fund these important services. However, again to the minister: are there other sources of funding available to organizations like ARBI?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you again to the member for the question. My department is certainly experiencing tough financial times like all are, but we know that it's important to consider extraneous situations as they do arise, so we're willing to hear from the member and other community organizations in an ongoing way. If an organization has a proposal, I'd be more than pleased to consider it and see if there's something that can be done. This afternoon we'll be considering supplementary supply. I think folks know that times are tough, but I think it's important that we do look at the realities that are happening on the ground in this specific situation as well as others.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that organizations which provide support to PDD clients have also been affected due to the decrease in support from United Way, to the Minister of Community and Social Services: what steps has your ministry taken to ensure that PDD service users continue to receive the support they deserve and need?

The Speaker: The Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member. For thousands of Albertans PDD is not just a program; it's a comprehensive set of supports to promote their safety and inclusion. That is why we have increased funding for PDD by $22 million to meet this growing demand. We have been prioritizing access to PDD services for people who have health and safety risks to ensure that their needs are met in a timely fashion. Our government is protecting and strengthening the services that Alberta needs during tough times. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Addiction and Mental Health Services

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Associate Minister of Health. There's an unfortunate lack of co-ordination, clarity, and collaboration between Alberta Health and Alberta Health Services. These two bloated bureaucracies historically have been ineffective in staying abreast of the health needs of Albertans, particularly in the areas of mental health and addictions. This is resulting in disengagement of the front-line workers and a drug abuse recurrence rate that is demoralizing both clients and staff. What is the minister doing to improve the working relationship of the two organizations to get Albertans the services they require?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. As one of the major health providers within the province of Alberta, particularly when it comes to mental health, the role that Alberta Health Services plays is invaluable, which is why they've been a key stakeholder as we move forward with the recommendations from the Valuing Mental Health report. We will have more to say about that in the coming days. Certainly, we've been reaching out to community providers as well as across ministries throughout the government and within Alberta Health and Alberta Health Services to ensure that we've got co-ordinated efforts and supports for Albertans, regardless of where they live in our province.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this health crisis is extremely complex and that complex issues require complex solutions and given that a holistic approach must balance harm reduction with other measures addressing mental health and addictions across the lifespan of an individual, with the intent of reaching all vulnerable children and teens, including First Nations and Métis youth, what has this government done to develop a balanced approach that addresses the underlying causes of addiction through mental health, rehabilitation, and education?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm really thrilled for the opportunity to continue to talk about some of the collaborative work that we've been doing. A big piece of the response, particularly around mental health and addiction supports, has been to work with our partners in Education, Indigenous Relations, and within the communities to ensure that we've got the supports that are appropriate. Where possible we are reaching out to indigenous communities to ensure that there are culturally appropriate supports, recognizing that a lot of the challenges that are sometimes faced by indigenous peoples are rooted in a history of oppression and colonialism and that part of reconciliation is . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Stoney Nakoda First Nation reports that up to 60 per cent of the adults living on the reserve are battling drug and alcohol addictions and given that many of the other First Nations communities in Alberta are also being devastated by drug and alcohol addiction and given that fentanyl tends to be the main cause of drug-related deaths within the larger mix of drug and alcohol abuse on-reserve, outside of providing naloxone, what help is this government giving to First Nations communities struggling with the fentanyl crisis?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The impact of the opioid crisis on First Nations communities, both on- and off-reserve, is something that our government takes very seriously. One of the communities that has been most impacted is the Blood Tribe, which is why we're proud that the work of the Cardston Suboxone and methadone clinic has been able to support quite a number of members of the community both on the Blood reserve but also in the surrounding communities. We are continuing to work with First Nations partners to ensure that we're working together from a nation-to-nation perspective and providing culturally appropriate supports both on- and off-reserve.

The Speaker: Thank you.
The Member for Calgary-Hays.

Status of Women Ministry Initiatives

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On this International Women's Day I want to commend the Member for Calgary-Varsity for her work as Minister of Status of Women, the ministry dedicated to the advancement of gender equity and the reduction of harm against women and girls.

Given that the ministry's most recent annual report on page 11 refers to stats that show Alberta has one of the highest rates of violence against women and given your collaboration with the city of Edmonton to create safer spaces, to the minister: how much safer should a woman or girl in Edmonton feel today as a result of your work, and why?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the lovely question. I'm very happy to report on some of the work that the city of Edmonton is doing with the United Nations safer cities initiative. They are currently working on the scoping part of that project. The ultimate goal is to make streets safer for women and girls in the city of Edmonton, and we're hopeful that we will gather learnings from other cities that have engaged in the safer cities initiative as well and that those learnings will then be able to be implemented across the province of Alberta.

Thank you very much for the question.

Mr. McIver: "Scoping" and "learning" sounds early, so we'll hope for an update later on.

Again to the minister. Given that on page 13 of the same report you refer to progress in Albertans receiving high-quality programs and services and given that that sounds like it could be good but little detail is attached to that high-minded objective, here is a chance to brag, Minister. What does that progress actually look like, and how will Alberta women and girls recognize that progress in their daily lives?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. As he's pointed out, Alberta women and girls deserve to feel free from threats of violence. They ought to feel that they have choice and that they in reality do have choice, so our government has taken important steps to ensure that women and girls can seek leadership positions, have stronger economic outcomes, and be free of violence. To that end, we've increased funding for women's shelters so that more second-stage shelters are available. We also increased funding to 11 sexual assault centres. We joined the inquiry into missing and murdered . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
Second supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. I appreciate that. We'll look forward to prevention as well, but thank you for the answer.

Given that on page 23 of the ministry's annual report the Auditor General notes that "the ministry's work is mostly internal to government" and given that one of your main purposes, as stated on the same page, is "decreasing violence against women and girls in all its forms," to the ministers: when will you turn your efforts external to government so that your efforts will protect even more women and girls from violence in all its forms, not just in government but across Alberta?

Ms McLean: Thank you again for the question. I'd like to take the opportunity to address two things. First of all, our internal work does lead to external work.

The other thing is how we do that, Mr. Speaker. We've implemented a gender-based analysis requirement in all of the policies, across all ministries, so all decisions that are made take into account women and girls, how they benefit, and how they might be excluded from a policy. That has led to the additional funding that I mentioned. It includes our partnership with the I Believe You campaign and our continued funding of that on the prevention side. We've also invested additional dollars . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Economic Downturn in Calgary

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, while Calgarians are losing jobs, the city of Calgary has signalled that property taxes are going to go up. With the NDP government tinkering with the electricity market, Enmax can no longer pay a dividend to the city of Calgary to keep the property taxes low. To the Minister of Energy: why is your government making life more expensive for Calgarians in the middle of an economic crisis?

The Speaker: The Environment minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to answer on behalf of the Energy minister, who is of course promoting Alberta's energy industry in Houston this week. Of course, our government is making life better for Alberta families by capping electricity rates.

Mr. McIver: Point of order.

Ms Phillips: The members opposite would put Albertans back on a roller coaster of skyrocketing electricity prices from the failed deregulation experiments of the previous government. What we are doing is making life more affordable by capping those electricity rates for small farms, for small business, and for families. That's our commitment to Albertans.

2:40

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Panda: It's all hot air with this minister.

Mr. Speaker, given the 30 per cent vacancy rates in downtown Calgary the city is going to penalize business owners in the suburbs with higher property taxes because the NDP took away the Enmax dividend. Given that the NDP is also raising the minimum wage to $15 an hour, to the minister of economic development. Under your watch thousands of small businesses in Calgary closed. How many more will you close to support your ideological policies?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to start off by saying that our government has introduced a number of initiatives to help cities like Calgary during this economic downturn. We recognize that they're going through a very difficult period. I do want to point out the fact that all of our initiatives – lowering the small-business tax, our investor tax credits, our headquarter attraction program for Calgary – this opposition voted against in the 2016 budget. As opposed to our government, that's taking action to partner with the city of Calgary and other communities around the province, this party just would rather do nothing and vote against any incentives.

Mr. Panda: Given that the unemployment rate in Calgary is over 10 per cent and my constituents still can't get retraining through Alberta Works though they are educated, experienced and they're just trying to save their house and retirement and given that Alberta Works contracts out services to third-party providers, who won't help my constituents unless they meet narrow criteria, to the minister of social services: how does a laid off 50-year-old qualify to access retraining?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. We have increased funding to Alberta Works and all its programs so that Albertans can get the supports they need. Under their plan they would have cut $2 billion, which would have impacted these services that Alberta Works and other programs are providing, gone even further down, and made the situation worse. We are strengthening the services that Albertans need. That's the choice we made. They would cut, slash, and burn those services.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Drinking Water Regulations Health Services Building in Taber

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Red tape seems to spring like a well from this government, and unfortunately it has real consequences, as in the case of the Barn Store in the beautiful hamlet of Mountain View in my riding. The store owner was ordered by Alberta Environment to install a commercial source of water at a cost of millions of dollars in order to stop using the residential groundwater well that they have been using for generations. Such action would effectively shut their doors. To the minister of environment: if water is fit for human consumption, why differentiate between residential or small commercial?

The Speaker: The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, I just wrote to the hon. member's constituent, signed the letter this morning. The fact of the matter is that Environment and Parks has a number of regulations to keep drinking water safe. We have those regulations in place, unlike the members across the way, who would repeal those regulations and simply, you know, leave Albertans without the clean, safe drinking water that they're looking for and without the infrastructure to support it because they would also cut those programs.

Mr. Hunter: I don't think they're going to be happy about that response, Minister.

Mr. Speaker, given that someone in the department of environment doesn't think groundwater is good enough for a small store and motel but it's fine for residential and given that Mountain View's Barn Store draws their water from the same aquifer as the school, the church, the art gallery, the garage, the seniors' care home, and other businesses, is the minister of environment prepared to stop this nonsense, rescind the noncompliance letter, or pony up for a 26-kilometre waterline to Cardston?

Ms Phillips: Well, once again, Mr. Speaker, first of all, I have responded to the member's constituents directly, but second of all, this is a side of the House, the Wildrose, that would have cut our infrastructure budgets, that would have cut our water transportation funding. So it is a little bit rich from a side of the House that would have cut infrastructure investments by $9 billion to now stand in their place and ask for more. They have to decide which side they're on. We're on the side of clean water and well-supported communities.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, they don't need any more light bulbs. They need good solutions.

Another example of red tape is found in the town of Taber. Given that AHS has a building that they aren't using and that the government has already indicated they would like to sell to the town of Taber and given that Taber needs the building to house the local FCSS, that is having to use a section of the Taber Agri-Plex, which, incidentally, they have to be out of by June, and given that the AHS building has sat empty for two years due to government red tape and indecision, how long will the people of Taber have to wait before this government gets the deal done?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I am in the process of considering the ability to ask AHS whether or not they would like to dispose of the building itself to be able to hand that over to the town of Taber, which would have the first right of refusal, which might be able to facilitate that. So this is something that we are actively considering.

With regard to light bulbs, Mr. Speaker, I know the members opposite don't want us to turn on the lights. They don't want us to shine a light on the fact that they continue to have these bozo eruptions on the other side. On this side of the House we're going to keep helping everyday Albertans save money on their electricity bills, and we're going to make their lives . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister. I'm just trying to think of a good joke to bring a little humour in here.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Calgary Gravel Pit Operation

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The NDP claim to care about Albertans and claim to consult with them, but their words and actions often indicate the opposite. Many weeks ago along with the residents of Bridlewood I wrote a letter to the Transportation minister about the new monstrous gravel and asphalt plant in their community. I also sent him 13 pictures since we have no indication that he's seen it with his own eyes and have asked him personally about this. No public consultation was ever done on this, and notices were in mailboxes only after the plant was built. When will the minister provide detailed answers to the issues raised by the residents in that letter?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I've taken the letter that I've received from the member and I've had an opportunity to discuss it with him. I have asked the department to prepare a report so that I can give complete and full answers to him in this House, and when I've received that, I will do so.

Mr. Rodney: This is time sensitive, Mr. Speaker. Given that the plant did not appear on ministry maps and given that it is to run nonstop for several years from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. every single day and given that the noise and smell and potential carcinogens very negatively impact the quality of life of the residents, can the minister please table in this Legislature here today all of the environmental and health studies that were conducted before the operation was built that would prove that all of the concerns of these fine Albertans are wrong about this megaproject in their neighbourhood?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I indicated to the hon. member, the matter is under review, and when I have an answer for him, I will provide it.

Mr. Rodney: Don't cause damage and then do a review.

Given that there is a similar situation in West Springs – and we're happy to work for other MLAs as well – despite the concerns being illustrated in the media and given that workers on-site often must wear masks because of silicosis but that residents have been given no information on this and given that there's been no public government response to anyone in either West Springs or Bridlewood and given that the residents are happy to work with government to ensure that these operations are located on sites that are most appropriate for all involved and given that critical consultation should have happened long ago, will the minister commit today to meeting face to face this week with residents from both communities about this urgent issue? If so, when? If not, Minister, why not?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I'll remind the hon. member that one of these gravel pits is in the constituency of the Member for Calgary-Bow, and she has organized a meeting with her constituents. We had officials there from Transportation to answer questions, and we're pleased to do the same thing for this member should he choose to undertake it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In both this House and in my community I've spoken strongly in favour of harm reduction, practical policies and strategies that reduce the negative health, social, economic consequences of substance use. As such, I've been proud to support Access to Medically Supervised Injection Services Edmonton as they work to establish sites in our community. However, in talking with community residents, I found that some are unsure of the role our government has played and will play should their federal application prove successful. To the Associate Minister of Health: can you clarify what part our government has played and will play in this process?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'll take a moment to thank the member for his advocacy on this issue. As we look for ways to respond to the opioid crisis in our province, our government is proud to be expanding harm reduction efforts, including supporting supervised consumption services. This includes letters of support from the provincial Minister of Health, the chief medical officer, and the Minister of Justice, which will be forthcoming as part of the application process to the federal government. I was also pleased to stand alongside members of AMSISE as they launched their public consultation process, which was supported by a $230,000 grant from this government.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that community members also have some concerns that investing in harm reduction alone is not enough and that it is also important to provide more opportunities for users to access treatment and supports to achieve sobriety, to the Associate Minister of Health: what actions are you taking to help Albertans break the cycle of substance abuse?

Ms Payne: Harm reduction, without a doubt, saves lives, but we know that addiction is a chronic issue that needs sustained and systemic action. We are taking those actions collectively, pulling together ministries and community groups through the valuing mental health initiative to help educate and prevent addiction, to intervene and treat substance abuse, and to give people the social supports they need to break the cycle. This includes expanding treatment beds available for children and youth, increasing access to Suboxone and methadone clinics, and through primary care doctors.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question is to the Minister of Community and Social Services. Given that Ambrose Place, a local housing facility implementing principles of harm reduction, has successfully housed 42 individuals who were chronically homeless, drastically lowering the costs of supporting them through our health care or justice systems, what investments will you be making to help build and operate supportive housing across our city and throughout Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member. Everyone deserves to live with dignity and opportunities to thrive. That's why we provided $13 million in the '15-16 budget for housing projects that support complex-needs clients, and we have invested more than $77 million in the housing first program throughout this province. We do know that housing first reduces the use of the corrections and health systems, and that is the reason that our government is protecting and strengthening these services to make a difference in the lives of Albertans.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Drivers at Risk for Medical Reasons

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In early spring of last year I requested the government amend the Traffic Safety Act similar to that of our two neighbouring provinces, where they require mandatory reporting of medically at-risk drivers by physicians and optometrists. This legislation has been in place in British Columbia since 1996 and in Saskatchewan since 2004. To the Minister of Transportation: when will you join our neighbours, protect our citizens, and address this critical safety issue?

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I've had the opportunity to recently review two fatality inquiry reports by judges here in the province. I read them both very carefully. Of course, it's always a tragedy, and these are designed to help us prevent the repeat of these tragedies. I'm looking very closely at the recommendations with respect to the medical issue that the hon. member has made, and all I can say is that I take that very seriously and he should stay tuned.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that bills 16 and 36 last year both opened the door for amendments to the Traffic Safety Act and given that on both occasions I approached this minister to add this important amendment but was denied on both occasions, to the Minister of Transportation: what is preventing you from dealing with this critical safety issue?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, nothing is preventing me from dealing with it. You know, with the greatest respect to the hon. member, I take a judge's recommendation based on an inquiry into an actual situation very seriously, and we're going to be taking a look at that.

I get lots of suggestions for amendments that would tie up the whole Legislature with Transportation amendments, and as much as I would love that, Mr. Speaker, my colleagues would not.

Mr. Hanson: Mr. Speaker, we recently received a copy of the fatality inquiry into what was determined to be the avoidable death of Megan Wolitski and now the recent passing of her classmate Maddie Guitard. This preventable tragedy devastated their families, the school, and our entire community. The most troubling part of this report to me was the statement that this tragedy could have been avoided by a simple $25 SIMARD test, a screen for identification of cognitively impaired, medically at-risk drivers. To the Minister of Transportation: when will you respond to the recommendation of the inquiry and amend the Alberta Traffic Safety Act?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. As I said in the answer to his first question, I've reviewed both of these recommendations based on the fatality inquiries. I have looked very closely at the recommendations therein. I'm considering what action needs to be taken, and he needs to stay tuned.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Provincial Debt

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since the NDP formed government, Alberta's credit rating has been downgraded twice despite assurances to the contrary from the Finance minister. Major concerns of credit-rating agencies: our ongoing deficits and mounting provincial debt to the point that it may be perceived as unserviceable. Yet the minister says that he has a plan to get us back on track. To the Finance minister: will you commit to a responsible debt repayment plan today or give Albertans your predictions on postbudget credit downgrading? As the saying goes: say it ain't so, Minister.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. I'm not sure who said: say it ain't so. A baseball player. Yogi Berra, I think.

What I can tell you is so is that the budget is coming out next Thursday, so you're going to have to wait to find out more about where our numbers are with regard to all of that. You know, this dire kind of gloom-and-doom presentation from across the floor just needs a little tuning up here. In this fiscal year we expect to spend 2.4 per cent of our revenue on debt servicing. Do you know where B.C. is at? They're at 5.5 per cent. We're in good shape. We have the fundamentals going. [interjection] You're not asking the question; he is.

The Speaker: Might I remind the two members that their comments should continue to go through the Speaker's chair.

First supplemental.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and you're welcome, Joe. But it isn't a contest to try and beat British Columbia.

Given that this government was recently given a fiscal gift of $1.3 billion and given that irresponsible fiscal behaviour delivered just $100 million of that to Alberta's bottom line and given the spend-thrift ratio of revenue-to-deficit reduction would require a revenue increase of a paltry $140 billion to deliver a balanced budget, to the minister: how do you plan to generate such additional revenue by 2024 when neither a punitive carbon tax nor your musings about a PST could ever deliver a balanced budget to Albertans?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. You know, it just astounds me: a fiscal gift? We qualified to get those payments for Fort McMurray from the federal government. We put those to Fort McMurray so that they wouldn't be suffering. We're not sure what they'd do under your government. We're focused on making life better not only for Fort McMurray but for everybody in this province. The collapse in oil prices has meant a significant dip in our resources, but we've got the back of Albertans. You would let them suffer.

The Speaker: Second point of order noted.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that by 2019 this government will have spilled so much red ink that a typical Alberta family of four will be burdened by over $53,000 of provincial debt and given that this four-year debt burden would take each household 25 years to pay off at a rate of $270 per month, again to the minister. You say that you have the backs of Albertans, but the real question is: how much debt will you load on the backs of Albertans before you slay the debt monkey and present a credible and responsible debt repayment plan?

3:00

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, debt is very important. We're carefully watching that as we go forward. But you know what that group couldn't do? They couldn't balance the budget on $100 oil. They never did. We've got the lowest tax jurisdiction – maybe thanks for that – we've got no PST, we've got no premiums for health care, and we've got no sales tax. We're working through this, the most significant recession in a generation. You couldn't do it. We're doing it over here.

Ms Ganley: Mr. Speaker, I rise to request unanimous consent of the House to waive Standing Order 7(7) to allow for the Routine to continue past 3.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: For the record, before we begin, I think there were a total of two points of order.

Members' Statements

Justice System Delays

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, a strong judiciary is the cornerstone of a strong democracy. Under the NDP government's watch we are watching that cornerstone crumble. When a victim comes forward after a crime has been committed, they need assurances that they will see their day in court. That should be the priority of our Crown prosecutors, and that should be the directive from this Justice minister. Instead, the priorities of the NDP government have been clearly shown in a memo sent to the Crown prosecutors entitled prosecution service practice protocol. It shows in black and white that fiscal constraints are hampering our justice system. It spells out that there is a clear gap between the resources allocated to Alberta's Crowns and the number of viable charges laid by the police, and the blame for that gap rests squarely on the shoulders of this government.

It tells our Crown prosecutors to accept the status quo. That status quo has seen charges stayed for first-degree murder, impaired driving, and assaulting a peace officer. This minister's directive tells sexual assault victims, whom they claim they support, that their case may not go to trial if there's a slim chance of conviction. It allows a system where, instead of focusing on the most serious cases and getting them to trial, it is acceptable to take a plea to a lesser offence. That could mean seeing someone who has killed a loved one be sentenced to second-degree murder when they full well could be charged with first-degree murder if they had their day in court.

Let's be clear. According to the president of the Canadian Association of Crown Counsel no other province is known to be staying cases because of a lack of resources. We need to do better. Our democracy relies on our judicial system to be responsive to the people and to instill confidence that justice will be served when a crime is committed. On behalf of women – no – on behalf of Albertans: shame on you.

International Women's Day Violence against Women

Ms Fitzpatrick: Today I take the United Nations challenge for International Women's Day, to be bold for change, and I take the opportunity to remember: to remember a daughter, a mother of three young children, a physician, Elana Fric, found dead December 1, 2016, at 40 years of age; to remember January 3, 2015, when members of the Edmonton Police Service entered a residence in north Edmonton to find Thuy Tien Truong, 35, along with seven others, murdered through an act of domestic violence; to remember and acknowledge all of the Jane and Janet Does throughout Alberta because every day in Alberta these scenes of horror play out for so many women and children on the run just to stay alive.

I also take this opportunity to acknowledge that there is still much to be done. It was with horror this past week that I heard of the ruling finding a taxi driver not guilty of sexual assault on his passed-out, drunk female passenger because there wasn't enough evidence to prove the woman's lack of consent, with a blood alcohol level three times the legal limit to operate a motor vehicle. We cannot defend a system where the right to drive a car is more easily removed than the right to protection of person.

I will not forget the evidence dismissed, those who have suffered, those who have died, and those children who are left traumatized by domestic violence. Today I pledge to be bold for change, to do everything I can through words and action to bring an end to disrespect, an end to domestic violence. This is why I am a feminist. Will you join me . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Government Policies

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Uncertainty in this province is killing jobs and investment. No one is blaming this NDP government for the price of oil, but they are blaming this government for making the situation in Alberta worse with their policies.

There is uncertainty in the oil and gas sector. This government chose to do a royalty review soon after they were elected and implemented a carbon tax, which, when compounded with the low price of oil, further drove away investment.

There's uncertainty in the agricultural industry. This government passed Bill 6, which caused Alberta farmers much unneeded stress and expense, and the carbon tax added yet another expense for them for things such as fertilizer.

There is uncertainty in the forest industry because of the mountain pine beetle and the caribou management plan and decreased timber allocations because of cutblock retention increases. Added to this, there's still no answer on whether a new softwood lumber agreement will be struck.

There is uncertainty in the coal industry as this government is shutting down coal-fired electricity generation.

There is uncertainty in municipal development. Developers will have to pay more off-site levies, and they do not yet know what that looks like.

There is uncertainty in the tourism industry in Alberta. Taxes that used to be collected and put directly back into tourism are now being siphoned off into general revenue, leaving yet another industry unsure as to this government's ability or desire to advocate for them.

There is uncertainty for families in the province because of increased gas prices, home heating, and food costs because of the NDP carbon tax.

Mr. Speaker, this government needs to provide Albertans with certainty and stability in these tough economic times.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Latin American Women in Alberta

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [Remarks in Spanish]

The Speaker: Hon. member, you will be providing a copy of that in English.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation] It gives me great pleasure to provide a greeting of solidarity to all the women of Alberta and specifically to the Latin American women who have created in Alberta their own home. On this International Women's Day I want to acknowledge, thank, and celebrate the great contributions made by Latin American women in this province. We also commemorate many women who have passed away but who in life struggled to create equality and justice.

This history begins in the '70s with the first wave of Chileans fleeing the military dictatorship. The '80s and '90s, because of wars and persecution, brought the Central American wave. They came from El Salvador, Guatemala, and Nicaragua. In those years they also came from Argentina, Uruguay, Brazil, and Peru. In the most recent wave they have come from Colombia, Venezuela, and Mexico, largely for economic opportunities.

All these women, although from different countries, share a strong work ethic and a desire to make life better for their families and all Albertans through their immense contributions to our province and communities. They are our sisters, daughters, mothers, neighbours, and companions. They are businesswomen, professors, artists, activists, and students. They are doctors, nurses, teachers, engineers, managers, politicians, and most, at the same time, mothers dedicated to the upbringing of the next generation.

This International Women's Day I thank all these Latin American women, who, like my mother, fight for their families, for gender equality, for human rights, and for the rights of Mother Earth. We owe them a tremendous debt of gratitude.

Thank you very much. [As submitted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Symons Valley Ranch

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to tell you about an interesting property in Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill, Symons Valley Ranch. The property was purchased by the Jones family in 1968 and has been transformed a number of times in its history. The rowdy barn dances of the late '60s and '70s led to the construction of three banquet halls, a lounge, and a restaurant in the 1980s.

Operations took a difficult turn in 1989, when a fire destroyed the three halls, but that didn't stop the party at the Symons Valley barbecue ranch. The ranch was reconstructed bigger and better with logs, vaulted ceilings, hardwood floors, western light fixtures, and private courtyards that improved the rustic cowboy castle and created a space for a farmers' market. Many memories were made at the ranch, including corporate Christmas parties, wedding receptions, and my own Stampede barbecue last year.

On January 26 around 6 a.m. a fire started at Symons Valley Ranch near the far north side of the riding. The property was home to the Symons Valley market, a year-round farmers' market with 33 vendors that has become a focal point for the neighborhood and drew customers from across the city. I liked going and buying fresh fruit and vegetables there, and there was always something interesting going on like showcasing local artists.

Recovering from the devastating fire has been a challenge that has been ably led by Tracy and Ken Aylesworth, the managing partners of the market. Since the fire they've organized a T-shirt drive to raise funds – you can purchase the T-shirts at many places around the city; check out www.symonsvalleyranch.com for information – and a pop-up market that over a thousand people visited last Saturday.

They're planning another pop-up market on the 18th at the ranch. Just head north on Symons Valley Road past the fire hall, and you'll see it on the left. I'd like to urge everyone in the Calgary area to visit the market, support our local small-business owners, and make sure you bring cash because they couldn't save the ATM from the fire.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Energy Efficiency Programs

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. How do you make a light bulb more expensive? It's simple, really. Get the government to buy it and install it for you. Sound ludicrous? Well, that's exactly what the Alberta NDP government is doing. Their new residential no-charge energy savings program will send installers house to house to replace night lights, light bulbs, shower heads, faucet aerators, power bars, and – you got it – thermostats.

Now, when you hear “no charge,” you think “free,” right? Well, no. That's not correct. This program will cost tens of millions of dollars. Who's paying for it? Well, you know the answer to that one. You are. You know that carbon tax that you see on your heating bills and fuel bills? Well, the government is using your money, that they've collected from you, to give you – you guessed it – light bulbs.

Now, obviously, I have serious concerns about this program. To start with, the NDP government hired Ecofitt, which is an Ontario-based company, to do the work. That means that regardless of where they hire installers from, at minimum the profits of this program will be going out of province. That's carbon tax money headed out of Alberta. The NDP must think Albertans are stupid. Why else would they hire Ontario-based Ecofitt to receive tens of millions in tax dollars for this boondoggle?

Unlike the NDP, Wildrose knows that everyday Albertans can see that it doesn't make sense to use taxpayers' own money to fund this program. Oh, and for those Albertans who upgraded their lights and thermostats on their own, they aren't going to see any benefit. The Albertans I talked to would rather have their money stay in their pockets instead of government taking their money and offering them free installation of power bars and light bulbs.

This was one of our concerns about the carbon tax, how the government would spend that money. Corporate welfare for an out-of-province company for a service that Albertans are fully capable of doing on their own is a classic example of government waste. At least now we know how many Albertans it takes to change a light bulb. The government has hired . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As members are aware, Mr. Peter Hourihan, who has served this province well for many years as Ombudsman and Public Interest Commissioner, will be retiring from these roles in April. As it is not anticipated that the search committee appointed to find a successor will have completed its mandate at that time, the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices has issued a report, which I am tabling today, that recommends the appointment of Mr. Joe Loran as Acting Ombudsman and Mr. Ted Miles as Acting Public Interest Commissioner until such time as a replacement for the Ombudsman and Public Interest Commissioner is appointed. I have the requisite number of copies of the report here.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Bill 201
Justice System Accountability Act

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased today to introduce Bill 201, the Justice System Accountability Act.

I can't think of any more important bill to bring to this Legislature, especially at a time when we're losing out on opportunities to prosecute people that may be guilty of crimes. This particular piece of legislation would remove, first of all, the cloak of secrecy surrounding the performance of our justice system, and it would seek accountability for a system that is seeing serious charges being stayed, justice delayed, and justice denied.

The bill will compel the minister to track the length of investigations, track the length of trials, sources of adjournments, mistrials, and the number of charges withdrawn, reduced, and stayed by the Crown prosecutor or the judge. The minister will be also required to report this information to the Legislature on an annual basis – we believe in transparency here on this side of the House, Mr. Speaker – so that we can all work together to resolve the backlogs and bottlenecks preventing victims of crime from receiving justice and make sure that our streets are safe and Albertans understand that the streets will be safe in the future.

I trust that I can count on all of the members from all of the parties for their support on this particularly important bill, that will see justice finally come back to Alberta. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 201 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-North West.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Interesting. We heard the opposition yell “take responsibility” a number of times in question period today, so indeed here’s their chance.

In a follow-up to yesterday’s documents, in the wake of the Wildrose on Campus declaration that feminism is cancer, the Wildrose opposition was quick to distance themselves from this club, but apparently the club appears to have been well entrenched in the culture of the party. I have five copies of a document here. This is the Wildrose newsletter from the 2015 annual general meeting in which the Wildrose on Campus club is . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, table the document. I’m sure they can read it.

Ms Jansen: . . . featured on the front page, and certainly in their AGM have a central place.

The Speaker: Hon. member.

Ms Jansen: I table the five copies.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Ms Jansen: Wait. Sorry, Mr. Speaker. I have some more tablings.

The Speaker: Oh, all right.

Ms Jansen: Thank you.

The Speaker: It took so long.

Ms Jansen: I wonder what they do for the clubs that they don’t vouch for.

Mr. Speaker, another photo from the Wildrose on Campus celebrating a visit from eight Wildrose MLAs and a lovely picture on Facebook. I table that.

Certainly, here’s a page from the antifeminist Wildrose on Campus featuring the Member for Strathmore-Brooks, and he actually appears as their special host at campus week. There you go. Thank you for that.

The Speaker: How many more do you have, hon. member?

Ms Jansen: Just a couple more, Mr. Speaker. I beg your indulgence.

The Speaker: Very quickly, please.

Ms Jansen: Certainly.

An article here from the Gauntlet magazine, where the antifeminist Wildrose on Campus endorses Jason Kenney, also, as it happens, endorsed by most of the PC caucus for leadership of a new far-right party. Here is the article for tabling, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. member.

Ms Jansen: Finally, Mr. Speaker, the Wildrose on Campus, disavowed by many far-right politicians yet managing to attract so much attention from them . . .

3:20

The Speaker: Editorial comment limited, please.

Ms Jansen: Of course, Mr. Speaker.

And I have a large collection of, certainly, wonderful photos from the federal Conservative politicians.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. One, a copy of a letter from the Justice minister from February 2, 2017, outlining some of the deaths in custody over the past year.

The other is from the strategic services division of the Calgary Police Service, outlining some of the activities of the police service related to the opioid crisis in Calgary.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’ll avoid full on members’ statements for this. Yesterday we had a spirited debate of the political nature of the Public Affairs Bureau, when there was a point of order from the Government House Leader criticizing about calling out the Public Affairs Bureau as political. For the next 14 days of the sitting I’m going to be tabling a new quote every single day from the Government House Leader, where he calls the Public Affairs Bureau political in different ways. I’ll abstain from reading it because he has amassed a whole library.

The Speaker: I would appreciate that. Are you tabling it now? Is that right?

Mr. Fildebrandt: I have five copies to table today, and I have 14 more to table every single day of the sitting for the delight of the Government House Leader.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’d just like to table the Cree prayer that I delivered in . . .

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker. I’m sorry. Just on a point of order and not because I wouldn’t enjoy seeing the various quotes, but Hansard is an official record of the House.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I think you’re just signalling at this stage in our discussion that there will be a point of order. We’ll deal with it after we finish this.

Could we start again, please. The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Hinkley: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much. I just wanted to table the Cree prayer that I delivered in my response to the Speech from the Throne. It has the Cree translation and the English version as well.

Thank you.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Ms Hoffman, Deputy Premier and Minister of Health, pursuant to the Health Professions Act, Alberta College of Social Workers 2014 annual report, Alberta College of Social Workers 2015 annual report, College of Dietitians of Alberta 2015 annual report, College of Registered Dental Hygienists of Alberta 2015 annual report, College of Hearing Aid Practitioners of Alberta 2015-2016 annual report.

The Speaker: I believe there is a total of four points of order if I recall correctly. The first one to the Government House Leader. Am I correct?

Point of Order

Referring to a Member by Name

Addressing Questions through the Chair

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, yeah. That was a case of the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek referring to the Minister of Finance by his first name in the House and speaking to him directly rather than through the chair.

The Speaker: Yes, I noted that. I actually referenced it. I think the hon. member corrected it on the record, but I would like him to reinforce that he did.

Mr. Gotfried: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I withdraw that comment, and I apologize to the minister.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Cooper: Minister Ceci.

The Speaker: Opposition House Leader, I heard that as well.

I believe there was a point of order, in fact two, raised by the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. Is that correct?

Mr. Cooper: That is correct. I'd be happy to withdraw those on behalf of the member.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Back to the Government House Leader. I believe there was a fourth point of order.

Point of Order

Tabling Public Documents

Mr. Mason: Yes. Mr. Speaker, not that I didn't want to enjoy the daily exposure to my own wise words in this Assembly; however, as the Hansard, which the hon. Member from Strathmore-Brooks indicated he would be tabling, is already a record of the Assembly, it is not subject to tabling because it's already part of the record. In the past Speakers have ruled those kinds of tablings to be out of order.

The Speaker: Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and speak to this point of order. While I know that my hon. colleague from Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills pointed out the brevity of which the Government House Leader has had the opportunity to serve here, I just might make two quick comments. One, I know that he is the dean of this House, and he would know that there is no standing order that would prevent the tabling of that. I also know that he would know that a long-standing tradition of the House is, yes, that one is able to table a Hansard document from a previous session, just not from a current session. I'm a little surprised to hear the argument today, and I know we all have lapses from time to time, but I'm certain that you, in fact, sir, will find this to not be a point of order at all.

The Speaker: Hon. members, given what I've heard from both sides of the House, I think I'm going to have to do a little research and come back with a ruling on this particular order.

Orders of the Day

Committee of Supply

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Good afternoon, everyone. I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

Supplementary Supply Estimates 2016-17, No. 2 General Revenue Fund

The Deputy Chair: Just before we get started, I'd like to remind everyone of the Standing Orders 59.02 and 59.01(6).

Hon. members, before we commence this afternoon's consideration of supplementary supply, I will review briefly the standing orders governing the speaking rotation. As provided for in Standing Order 59.02, the rotation in Standing Order 59.01(6) is deemed to apply as follows:

- (a) the Minister, or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may make opening comments not to exceed 10 minutes,
- (b) for the hour that follows, members of the Official Opposition and the Minister, or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak,
- (c) for the next 20 minutes, the members of the third party, if any, and the Minister, or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak . . .
- (d.1) for the next 20 minutes, the members of any other party represented in the Assembly or any independent Members and the Minister, or the member of Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak,
- (e) for the next 20 minutes, private members of the Government caucus and the Minister, or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak, and
- (f) for the time remaining, to the extent possible, the rotation outlined in clauses (b) to (e) shall apply with the speaking times set at 5 minutes as provided in Standing Order 59.02(1)(c).

During the first rotation speaking times are limited to 10 minutes. Once the first rotation is completed, speaking times are reduced to five minutes. Provided that the chair has been notified, a minister and a private member may combine their speaking times, with both taking and yielding the floor during the combined period.

Finally, as provided for in Government Motion 5, approved by the Assembly on March 7, 2017, the time allotted for consideration is six hours: three hours this afternoon and three hours tomorrow morning.

The Committee of Supply has under consideration the 2016-17 supplementary supply estimates, No. 2. I will now recognize the hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance to move the estimates.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'd like to move the 2016-17 supplementary supply estimates, No. 2, for the general revenue fund. When passed, these estimates will authorize an approximate increase of $1.6 billion in voted expense funding and $125 million voted capital financing financial transactions for the government. These estimates will also authorize $141 million of the previously approved voted amounts to be transferred amongst 14 departments.

The estimates are consistent with the fiscal plan as presented in the 2016-17 third-quarter fiscal update and will authorize an increase and transfer for the following 18 departments: Advanced Education, Agriculture and Forestry, Children's Services, Community and Social Services, Culture and Tourism, Economic Development and Trade, Education, Environment and Parks, Health, Indigenous Relations, Infrastructure, Justice and Sol Gen, Labour, Municipal Affairs, Seniors and Housing, Service Alberta, Transportation, and Treasury Board and Finance. The ministers for these departments, including myself, will be pleased to answer any questions from members of the Assembly.

Before we get into the discussion at Committee of Supply, I'd like to say just a few words about the largest element of this supplementary supply, the costs associated with the Wood Buffalo wildfires. While the numbers before you are in black and white, roughly $499 million for the wildfire response and $240 million for the wildfire recovery, they don't really tell the story of unimaginable courage and determination by first responders and the people of the affected communities. This wildfire was one of the most challenging disasters to have ever faced our province, indeed the country, and through this disaster Albertans came together like never before. I believe that all members of this Assembly can be proud of who we are as a province and of our commitment to one another in these tough times.

Let me wrap up these brief comments by expressing my enduring respect for the courage demonstrated by first responders who battled the beast this past year, and let me commit once again to those affected by the wildfire that this government and all Albertans indeed remember, support, and want you to know we have your back.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks. Hon. member, do you want to go back and forth?

Mr. Fildebrandt: I'll go back and forth.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. Thank you so much.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. Thank you, Minister, for being here for the discussion and consideration of supplementary supply. I've missed you over the break, and I'm glad we could do this again. I'm going to ask questions that'll be mostly short and pointed, and I'd appreciate short, pointed answers on topic.

Of extreme concern – much of the supplementary supply here is connected to the third-quarter fiscal update provided a few weeks ago. In the third-quarter fiscal update the minister admitted to being in direct contravention of the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act. This is in regard to $1.1 billion for the early phase-out of coal. A part of this can be noted in a transfer to the Department of Economic Development and Trade, on page 34 of the supplementary supply. That is a fraction of the overall amounts allocated for the early phase-out of coal. The third-quarter update admits that it is in direct contravention of the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act.

The government effectively had two different options. One, it could be in violation of public-sector accounting standards by not booking it all in one year, or it could book it in one year and be in violation of the legislation. The minister effectively had to pick one of those two. I'd like to give the minister a chance to explain why he chose to be in violation of his own legislation, passed about a year and a half ago.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Madam Chair. Actually, there were two ways that this could have unfolded. The first was the way that the Auditor General had identified. The other was to do as we were planning to do, which is to treat this as a contingent liability that could be paid out over 14 years. That is also in compliance of public-sector accounting standards. So there's no accuracy to what the member is saying.

Secondly, I do want to say that, you know, the 1 per cent in-year spending increase limit that was exceeded in '16-17 was due to a one-time anomaly that was not anticipated. We took the Auditor General's recommendation and booked that all in '16-17, reported the coal electricity plant phase-out expenses of $1.1 billion as is identified in the Q3.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Okay. Thank you very much, Minister. No, I want to bring this . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I recognize that during estimates outside of the House there's an ability to cut each other off, but because you committed to going back and forth, you have to wait till the . . .

Mr. Fildebrandt: But I've already had an answer, and it's pointless.

The Deputy Chair: . . . you have to wait until the minister is finished speaking.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Okay. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: He's entitled to 10 minutes.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. No, I've already stated to the minister that he is in compliance with accounting standards because they booked it on a single year. He had two options for this spending. The $1.1 billion is, in the opinion of this side of the House, money that is virtually incinerated, for which the taxpayers are getting absolutely nothing in return. That is beside the point, though. The point is that this is illegal spending, that it is in direct contravention of the act.

Now, this kind of legislation has no penalty for government. You don't go to jail. You don't pay a fine. You just have to pretty much admit that you broke the law.

I'm looking at page 15 of the government's own third-quarter fiscal update, where they state that they are in contravention of the act. The Auditor General said that this needed to be booked as a single year, bringing it in line with public-sector accounting standards, but it does bring it in violation of the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act. I'm looking for a simple yes or no, if the minister will admit that this is in contravention of the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act.

Mr. Ceci: I'll read what it says in the Q3. "As there is no exclusion in the [Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act] for this extraordinary expense, the $1,132 million increase in operating expense results in a lack of compliance with the FPTA." So it was a lack of compliance, and I've put it right here for everyone to see. And it was only because of the Auditor General's view, insistence, that we had to book it this year, though we could have booked it differently, over 14 years, and that would have also been in compliance with standards of public accounting.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you. Yeah, I remember not being in compliance with my teachers and doing homework sometimes. There are normally penalties for it. But I appreciate the minister's candour, that they admit that they have broken the law, that they are not in compliance with the law.

Now, $1.1 billion was transferred from Environment and Parks to cover the cost of administering the climate leadership action plan, otherwise known as the CLAP, for consumer rebates. My question is: is this the entire amount needed to administer the CLAP rebates, or will this amount be needed every single year?

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Member.

Mr. Ceci: You know, the Minister of Environment and Parks is not here right now. But they've provided me with some details.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, just to remind you not to reference anybody that may not be in the House, please.

Mr. Ceci: I'm sorry. I didn't hear you.

The Deputy Chair: Just a reminder to refrain from referencing anybody who may or may not be in the House.

Mr. Ceci: Okay. Thanks.

I'm happy to have a minister of the Crown address this issue when they're in the Chamber later today or tomorrow during Committee of Supply.

The hon. member mentions $1.1 billion again. I don't know. Are you going back to talking about the booking of this $1.1 billion, or are you talking about the rebates, which is something different?

Mr. Fildebrandt: The rebates.

Mr. Ceci: You're talking about the rebates. I don't think those are the same amounts.

Mr. Fildebrandt: No, no. This is a different question you're talking about.

Mr. Ceci: But you mentioned $1.1 billion.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, although you are going back and forth, if I could . . .

Mr. Fildebrandt: I can clarify.

The Deputy Chair: Could we maybe get – yes – the Member for Strathmore-Brooks to clarify his question for you, Minister?

Mr. Ceci: That would be great. If he could clarify the exact amount and the exact page, then we would all be a lot clearer here.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Yeah.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.
Please proceed, Member.

Mr. Fildebrandt: I'm not sure if the minister is all here right now. No. Thank you.

Madam Chair, I'm referring to $1.1 billion, not for anything to do with the early phase-out of coal; I'm referring specifically to rebates. Money was transferred from Environment and Parks to Treasury Board and Finance. I'm referring exclusively to rebates right now.

Mr. Ceci: You know, the money that was transferred is being transferred and made available to Treasury Board and Finance, and it will be accessed over time by CRA to address the rebate situation, going out to Albertans who qualify. So this is for more than one year, obviously. It's for several years. CRA has a contract with us. The $1 million that's in my budget: that money is being remitted back to CRA for this service. So I can speak specifically to the service CRA is giving us. That's in the neighbourhood of $1 million. The climate change levy monies that are going back to Albertans will be more than that over the years. But that's not all in one year, so it's $1 million.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Fildebrandt: I'd like to thank the minister for the answer.

The cheques delivered to Albertans came, if I'm not mistaken, just one to two days into the new year. I'm not sure exactly how much carbon tax had been collected, my own tax evasion efforts aside. Not much tax had been collected, obviously, in order to be able to distribute that money first. The rebates were sent before people actually paid the taxes. Could the minister explain where the money for those rebates came from since the revenue had not yet been collected and if the government borrowed to issue them?

The Deputy Chair: Just to clarify, Member, do you know where that line item will be in the supplementary supply? Have you been able to find it?

Mr. Fildebrandt: I am referring to monies transferred to Environment and Parks for the rebates, and I'm asking specifically where the money came from in Environment and Parks to supply that money. There were rebates. Environment and Parks sent money to Treasury Board and Finance for rebates. I'm wondering where that money came from. It couldn't have been collected through the carbon tax because it was issued two days after the coming into effect of the carbon tax legislation. Where did that money come from, and was it borrowed?

The Deputy Chair: I'm just again trying to clarify what page it's on, though, and if it's in this actual document because we have to make sure we're sticking to actual questions that are related to supplementary supply.

Mr. Fildebrandt: It is. I'm referring very specifically.

The Deputy Chair: Would you be able to help me out to find the page? Page 44: does that sound right?

Mr. Fildebrandt: Page 44, line 10. Between pages 42 and 44 there's lots of information about transfers concerning the carbon tax rebates. I would like to know where the revenue generated for those rebates came from. In addition, was any of that borrowed?

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. Thank you.

Mr. Ceci: I think what the hon. member has done is that he's just pointed to the Environment and Parks section and said: it's somewhere in there. That's fine. The money was not borrowed. The money comes from the monies that were in Environment and Parks beforehand in 2016. That money was collected by Environment and Parks. I believe it was for SGER, and that money . . .

Mr. Fildebrandt: Sorry?

Mr. Ceci: The specified gas emitters program. That's the money that was – there were monies available. It wasn't borrowed.

It wasn't January 2; it was January 5 that cheques started to arrive.

Lastly, your tax evasion efforts weren't in January. They were on December 31, so I think you weren't paying any carbon levies at that point. It only came in after midnight.

The Deputy Chair: I'm just going to caution the both of you about the tax evasion comments. I mean, we could just move on to the next question.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Well, I still like talking about rebates if that's okay.

An Hon. Member: The chair's job is to save them.

An Hon. Member: From themselves.

Mr. Fildebrandt: I appreciate the commentary from the chair. Appropriate or not, it's taken well.

Mr. Cooper: She's helping.

Mr. Fildebrandt: She might be trying to help.

Thank you, Minister. Okay. So the money wasn't borrowed. You say that it came from the department, that the department already had money collected. Is that to say that the carbon tax rebate money provided to Albertans did not actually come from the carbon tax, then?

Mr. Ceci: No. It came from a similar payment around emissions, so it did come from carbon emissions payments.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Only one round of rebates was delivered to consumers thus far. How do we know that this is the entire cost needed to administer the plan if only one round of cheques has thus far gone out?

Mr. Ceci: You're talking about my ministry and the million dollars that CRA is under contract to provide for this year. So that's this year.

The Deputy Chair: I just want to be cautious that we're not sliding into the budget and that we're actually speaking to, again, the need for the money in the estimates.

Mr. Ceci: It's in here.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Madam Chair, I assure you that we're talking about the estimates. There is a significant amount of money transferred for these rebates, and we're trying to get to the bottom of this.

The Deputy Chair: Okay.

Mr. Ceci: The administration of it.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Absolutely. This is in addition to money spent by the CRA. How many people were employed to administer these rebates?

Mr. Ceci: Madam Chair, that's up to the CRA. They are the ones who are doing the, I guess, cheque issuing based on qualifications of Albertans through their income taxes. It's not unlike the Alberta child benefit, that has been delivered to families since June 2016, I think, when the first Alberta child benefit cheques went out to families.

Mr. Sabir: August.

Mr. Ceci: August 2016.

Using the same approach, the CRA has, you know, appropriately resourced the number of people that they need to make that happen for Alberta. That's wherever that is in Ottawa.

3:50

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. member.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you. Eight hundred thousand dollars was transferred from Environment and Parks to provide information technology to administer the CLAP rebates. We were under the understanding that Canada Revenue Agency was going to send out these payments. What is the purpose of this $800,000 if Canada Revenue Agency is administering these rebates?

Mr. Ceci: That's on the rebate side. On the collection side of the levies there needed to be upgrades with regard to, you know, the thousands of points of providing the monies to the government of Alberta. On the collection side there needed to be upgrades to IT. On the rebate side there is a contract with CRA.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Just to be clear, none of this $800,000 has anything whatsoever to do with providing rebates. This is purely to do with collections.

Mr. Ceci: Sorry. Yes. That's my understanding, Madam Chair.

Mr. Fildebrandt: If Canada Revenue Agency had all the information on Albertans to send out the rebate cheques and they mailed them out, what did this money go towards – sorry. The $1.1 billion from earlier: what money did that go towards that CRA did not do?

Mr. Ceci: Madam Chair, I think I just want to go back and address this in maybe a more holistic way. The operating expense transfer amount of $1 million from Environment and Parks is requested to provide funding for the cost of administering the climate leadership plan consumer rebates.

Secondly, the capital investment transfer amount of $800,000 from Environment and Parks is requested for information technology development to administer the climate leadership plan consumer rebates.

Mr. Fildebrandt: I want to bring this back to transfers for the early phase-out of coal in compliance with legislation, the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act. That's obviously an area of great concern to members of the Official Opposition and, I think, in fact, all private members of this House around governments complying with their own legislation. We'll recall that the Minister of Finance introduced a debt ceiling, I think, of 10 per cent of debt to GDP, 15 per cent of debt to GDP, which I think lasted approximately six months before they repealed it as it became apparent that the government would not be able to comply with their own legislation. They repealed other pieces of the fiscal accountability act, which had already been gutted by Premiers, but they replaced it with the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act, which was a pretty low bar to set. It did not allow the government to exceed 1 per cent of in-year expenditures without the authorization of the Legislature. That would seem to be a pretty low bar to set considering the strength that this legislation had in the early 2000s and the subsequent watering down we've had around our fiscal framework legislation.

Can the minister comment on: what are the chances of the government breaking its legislation around this again? He's called this an extraordinary exception. I know that he had to choose either to not comply with public-sector accounting standards or to not comply with the act. He's called it extraordinary, but we know they've repealed their own legislation in the past when they've found they were running into potentially violating it. Could the minister give the House any assurance that this is not going to be a regular function here, that they're either going to repeal their own legislation when they're in potential violation of it or just admit that they're in violation of it?

One of the basic functions of any Legislature since the Magna Carta has been that parliament has the sole authority to vote funds to the government. When the government can exceed those funds without the authorization of parliament, they are violating a sacred constitutional history handed down to us. If the minister would like to explain why his government is in violation of this.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The next speaker. Member, would you like to go back and forth, or would you like to . . .

Mr. Hanson: I'll go back and forth, but I'd like to hear the answer to the previous question.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you. I appreciate you using up some of your time for this answer. You know, I just want to correct some anomalies with what was said across the aisle or some things that were wrong from across the aisle. The first thing is that there were two interpretations of public-sector accounting standards and the ways, the possible treatments, that $1.1 billion could be booked. The other professionals and indeed professionals in my department felt we could book it over 14 years as a contingent liability. You know, being prudent with going forward and involving the Auditor General, we asked what the Auditor General would feel about this, and his views were different than ours, though ours weren't incorrect. It was an interpretation of the same public-sector accounting standards. People viewed them differently. His view was the one we ultimately supported, so we booked it over one year. We are doing that because of the views of the Auditor General.

Actual payments, though, to pay off this money – it's an accounting treatment – are going to be over 14 years, and those monies are coming from the climate leadership plan. This is strictly an accounting treatment. So we are doing that.

Subsequently, with regard to the 1 per cent rule I can tell you that Alberta's population continues to grow. Alberta's population has the fastest rate of growth amongst provinces, and combined with the economic downturn, this put tremendous pressure on government programs and services.

Our government was committed to providing those services, obviously: stable education, stable health care, and social services. Our student population ballooned larger than expected, and we wanted to fulfill an important commitment to provide per-student funding to all of the schools who had students in them. We increased our expense to the health area primarily because of supports to physician compensation and drug costs. Additionally, we addressed the funding for this person's caseload growth, which was in income support, persons with developmental disabilities, assured income for the severely handicapped, and child interventions.

So our government made the choice to ensure that all of these things would be covered as opposed to not doing them and recklessly, you know, throwing Albertans to the winds. That in large part is the reason why the financial transparency and the FPTA were breached. It also is the reason why we have identified that here.

With respect to any questions about the budget, that will come out next Thursday, you'll just have to wait and see where we are with regard to all of that, and I look forward to lots of discussion in the future about it.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Most of my questions are regarding the Fort McMurray wildfire and the spending that has gone on and resulted from that. Regarding the wildfire how much in total amongst all government departments is being requested in this supplementary supply towards wildfire response, relief, and recovery?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you. As I said earlier, you know, the amount of – other ministers can probably address it more specifically, but I think I talked about two numbers here. One was $499 million, and the other was $250 million. I think that it was in the area of $249 million.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you. From a cursory review I see $739 million from Municipal Affairs and an additional $252 million from Ag and Forestry for wildfire disaster emergency assistance. That's a total of $991 million, almost a billion dollars, two-thirds of this supplementary supply request. Would you say that this incredible sum might be the result of the original cuts to wildfire management, line 7.1 in the last spring's budget, or do you still consider our warnings about that as fearmongering?

Mr. Ceci: You know, I don't think I made those statements personally, but I will say that the amount in our budget with regard to wildfire preparation of $200 million is appropriate and is something that we will continue to do going forward just as it has been done in the past. That gets you ready for wildfires; that's not the funding for wildfires. To that extent, I think Albertans would say that this government – and I've heard the mayor of Fort McMurray say it, too – had their backs, that whenever they requested support, we were there to make sure that they had the financial and other resources necessary to address that conflagration, the worst that Canada has ever seen. So rather than commenting on what you said or didn't say or what a person on this side said or didn't say, I will say that we appropriately funded every instance that was requested to address the wildfire.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Hanson: Of the $252 million for wildfire disaster/emergency assistance in the Ag and Forestry supplementary estimate, how much is for contracting of air tankers from out of province above and beyond our normal contract?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you. I apologize that I don't have that off the top of my head. Obviously, another ministry is responsible for that. I'm hoping that they'll be able to provide you with all of that information when next they are here.

I will just say that the supplementary estimates for the Ministry of Agriculture and Forestry reflect additional investments in addition to wildfire protection, and though you haven't asked about this, but you may, they talk about crop insurance and agricultural support programs, energy efficiency programs, and value-added industry development. Those are all the things that that supplementary estimate, in addition to the one you're asking about, specifically addresses.

Mr. Hanson: Well, I'd appreciate it, if you don't have the information available, if we could get a written response to my question. That would be awesome.

You probably won't be able to answer this question as well, but how many days were the additional air tankers contracted for? Do you have that?

Mr. Ceci: I don't, no.

Mr. Hanson: Has the department reverted to a 123-day contracting period for air tanker groups?

Mr. Ceci: You know, I should be writing these down so that I can get you those follow-up answers, or you could provide them to me.

Mr. Hanson: I'll get you a copy. It will be on the record as well.

Mr. Ceci: Okay.

Mr. Hanson: Again, how many air tanker groups and aircraft are contracted from Alberta, how many are contracted from out of province, and how many total aircraft?

Mr. Ceci: I suspect that those answers would be on the top of the appropriate minister's head when he gets here.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister. A cautionary again. If you could refrain from mentioning anybody who may or may not be in the House, please.

Hon. member, please continue.

Mr. Hanson: We can direct these to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Why does the government insist on using AT-802 Fire Boss aircraft, which carry a fraction of the load and speed of a CL-415 Super Scooper?

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, maybe the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry would like to answer the question.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much. Maybe he can help me. I'll repeat that question. Why does the government insist on using AT-802 Fire Boss aircraft, which carry a fraction of the load and speed of a CL-415 Super Scooper?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Chair. Thank you for the question. I don't know for aircraft, but I do know that our wildfire disaster assistance is well funded. Last year is an example and 2015 is another example of where our resources that we have – our personnel, our first responders, whether they be wildfire personnel from Agriculture and Forestry or from the municipality or from other first responders – did a fantastic job, last year in the Fort McMurray fire and others as well.

With that, our air tanker crews that we contract out have also done an amazing job. You know, we'd seen some criticism last year about not having enough, but I had an opportunity to be there myself. Aircraft were back to back even in the sky, so we had no opportunity to add any more aircraft. I am confident that the aircraft that we are using are adequate. I have understanding from officials from my department that they have been adequate and continue to be so.

Other resources, if needed: as we've done in the past, we have had international contracts from our partners within the United States and, frankly, world-wide, including Mexico and South Africa. So I'm confident in the advice I've got from the department that the aircraft that we have are more than adequate.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. member.

Mr. Hanson: Okay. We'll get to some money questions, and perhaps we can get some answers. It doesn't matter who answers, actually. Of the $1 billion being asked to be voted to cover the cost of this disaster, one, how much is to replace Crown assets lost in the fire? How much will be recovered from insurance on Crown assets? How much is to reimburse municipal fire crews from Fort McMurray and from outside of Fort McMurray, and how much will be required to cover private contractors hired to help put out the fire?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Treasury Board and Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Those specifics are not before us, obviously. They're with ministry officials, and those people could probably tell you. We're just talking about the rolled up amounts, and that description is not in this either.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Hanson: A question for the Minister of Finance: has Treasury Board authorized the borrowing of funds to cover this $1 billion fire?

Mr. Ceci: No, not specifically. The government of Alberta borrows money regularly to address our fiscal plan. This, obviously, was something that impacted our fiscal plan, and we have the assistance of the federal government in terms of remitting back to Alberta about $500 million in coverage for some of this cost. The available monies within the government of Alberta were used to cover this. The various ministers came forward to address cost pressures, and through Treasury Board and Finance and, ultimately, Executive Council we supported those requests for finances. So borrowing specifically for this did not occur.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Hanson: Have any bonds been posted on the market to obtain this funding?

Mr. Ceci: As I just said, borrowing for this purpose was not specifically done. The government of Alberta has borrowing needs, obviously, and those monies are laid in or borrowed in advance. This impacted our fiscal plan. We addressed it with monies that the government of Alberta had, and we got payment back from the federal government as quickly as we could to offset our expenditures.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Hanson: I'll share some time with the hon. member.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm not here that often. I'm glad I was recognized easily. Good afternoon, everyone. As my role primarily here is Municipal Affairs, I'd like to address some questions to the minister.

Minister, congratulations on your new position. It's one of the ministries that does affect most people's lives in Alberta. I know it is a big, big, big act, about 800 pages. My book is that thick, and there are a lot of notes. I'm sure yours will get that way, too. I'd just like to glance over what we can today. If you have some information that you need to go and catch up on at some point perhaps, a written response would be much appreciated in respect to that, please.

So let's start, then. I'd like to direct you to the supply booklet, page 68, that's under Municipal Affairs. There are a number of items there that we're going to be talking about. Let's start with line

9, if you will. Line 9 basically says that there's $748,000 there. We're just wondering: is that allocated mostly to the wildfire? Is that what it is related to, or how exactly is that being allocated within that budget line? For example, is it going to maybe a managing director's office, some new operations, or policy and support? Could anyone over there perhaps shed light on what that is for, please?

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you to the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod. I respect that he's got 15 years of municipal experience, so I'm looking forward to working with him going forward. Is it 15? I think it's 15. Sometimes I do my homework here.

Mr. Stier: On council for four.

Mr. S. Anderson: Is that what it was? Okay.

Yeah, you know, I do have that $748,000 that you were talking about there for the Alberta Emergency Management Agency. I don't have the specifics of how it was allotted, so the specifics I would have to get for you from my staff. I know that they're probably checking on that right now as we speak. Obviously, from May 23 to 26 the wildfire part of this was what was going on in the MD of Opportunity. As a state of emergency was called, more than 5,000 residents were displaced, so part of that was to go to there. When we're dealing with that, the DRP funding is what we're talking about.

Like I said, I'll have to get the specifics for you, but I have no problem doing that for you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. member.

Mr. Stier: Yes. Thank you. To move on, then, let's have a look, therefore, at line 13, which kind of follows that line of thinking. We're just wondering: at what number does a disaster really get its own line in the budget like this? Perhaps the Finance minister might know more about that. I'm not sure. This is a separate line item. It wouldn't normally be there if it was in a regular year, but we've got Wood Buffalo there. Is there a number that a disaster has to reach before it gets into this kind of a document?

Mr. S. Anderson: Well, that's a great question. I'm not sure if there's an actual limit to get into a line item. That's something that I would like to know. I'll have to ask about that specific one. I mean, obviously, I do have the line items for the different ways that these were spent, you know, with urban interface wildfire, Red Cross, contingencies, and so on. But I don't know if there's a threshold on that.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Stier: Yeah. Thanks. Okay. Thank you. I understand that's kind of a vague one at this time.

Let's move on to line 9, then, again. Just so you know, I recall from the budget estimates last year that the budget for disaster recovery is usually budgeted at $200,000 despite the fact that since the '09-10 era the average disaster recovery supplementary budget is around $214 million. That's the average. Even if we take out the 2013 flood, the average overall for a number years has been about $54 million, so why does the department not budget a little bit more for these natural disasters? Why is it sitting at $200,000?

Mr. S. Anderson: Back to the previous question about when there's a DRP. We just open up an event, and there's no number for it.

Sorry. That last line item that you were talking about, did you say 9?

Mr. Stier: Right.

Mr. S. Anderson: Did you mean 9 or 8?

Mr. Stier: Oh. Excuse me. I'm not working on the right number. I apologize. Once again the question was: normally every year we see $200,000 in that line. You know, it seems that over the past 10 years there's been an ongoing amount of money spent as a result of disasters that do happen. Why do we always seem to have that number of $200,000 in there?

Mr. S. Anderson: I think it's more of an accounting thing. We don't have a disaster every year, and we can't budget specifically for – you know, we deal in hypotheticals, I guess, right? So it's one of those things.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The second 20 minutes is now up. Who would like to go next from your caucus? You will carry on? Okay. The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Thank you. So let's move away from that.

Municipal assessments and grant administration, page 68, line 3: can you explain where the $146,000 may be going, please?

Mr. S. Anderson: That's line 3 you're looking at, the $146,000 for municipal assessments and grant administration? Is that what you're saying?

Mr. Stier: Right.

Mr. S. Anderson: Yeah. Okay. Sorry. I had it written down here different, too. Basically, with that money there Municipal Affairs is working with Transportation and Infrastructure on ways that the climate leadership plan can support our municipalities. So with an area of opportunity where we can work in partnership on climate change to protect health and environment and the economy, we will do so. We heard from AUMA and Calgary and Edmonton that to significantly reduce these greenhouse gas emissions, municipalities need to work together, you know, whether it be on energy efficiency or renewable energy or land-use planning or transit or what have you. So we have spoken with AUMA and these municipalities, and, you know, this is the number that we've used to allocate here. The funding that's in the supplementary estimates is part of the steps that we're taking to move in this direction. I'll be working with the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation a little more on this going forward.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. member.

Mr. Stier: Yes. Thank you. My next question actually goes back to line 8, again on page 68, and the question is: is the public safety increase of $200,000 related again to the wildfire? If not, can you provide some context as to where this might be going?

Mr. S. Anderson: Sure. Yes, the $200,000 that you're looking at on line 8, public safety, is an increase for the firefighter certification initiative, and it's funded by the increased revenue that's collected. Part of the ongoing commitment is that the office of the fire commissioner will administer provincial certifications to ensure the quality and effectiveness of the fire search and rescue training program. This will be across the province and with entities both public and private. So that $200,000 is to support that initiative, and it's fully funded through exam and certification fees. It's consistent with the office of the fire commissioner's mandate to oversee the fire search and rescue systems. It is covered by the fees for the exams and certification.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Madam Chair. Let's move on, then, if we could, Minister. Line 4 on the same page 68 is good old MSI, and it's under the operating side. It's coming in about $1.7 million under budget. I did a quick check of the estimates back some years ago, 2009-2010, and at that time only once did MSI under operating run a surplus. It was internally transferred to capital. What was the cause of the unspent amount in this? Do you know? Was this a single municipality failing to use up all of their operating funds, or is the program as a whole reporting under budget?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you. The MSI program was designed, you know, obviously, for municipalities so they can focus on their priorities. Last year five municipalities that received the MSI operating converted their funding to the MSI capital for that $1.712 million. So the savings were found because of lower than budgeted gasoline and diesel sales in Edmonton and Calgary. The sales determine the amount of the basic municipal transportation grant that the two cities get, and under that BMTG each municipality receives a formula-based grant. It provides a sustainable, predictable level of funding for them. Lower than budgeted gasoline and diesel sales in Edmonton and Calgary meant the savings.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Madam Chair. Again, if I could, on page 68 we'll move on now to line 6, if you will, Minister, grants in place of taxes. We've got $1 million in there, and I'm just wondering again about that lesser amount. Was that the result of lower assessment values for provincial properties? If not, where is the savings coming from specifically, please?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. S. Anderson: All right. Sure. Sorry; I'm just trying to find where I had my information in here. I've got lots of papers to go through.

The information I've got in front of me: if it doesn't answer your question, I'll get something else for you. The cut is part of our Municipal Affairs in-year saving of $3 million. It doesn't affect the municipalities who are currently receiving GIPOT. The growth in GIPOT was less than anticipated due to lower construction and assessment growth, resulting in a savings of about a million dollars. We are committed to paying the GIPOT to municipalities with Crown property, and there are no plans to change that.

Mr. Stier: On that note, I'd just like to add a little bit here in my remarks on that same subject, same item. The grants in lieu of taxes was quite a significantly sensitive issue in the past couple of years, and to my memory, if I recall, there were a lot of municipalities not compensated for that. So I still remain a little bit curious about what that number is, what it represents, and why it is there. If you could perhaps elaborate on that now or in writing later, that would be fine.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. S. Anderson: Sure. Yeah. I will have to get you a little more information on that to give you a better breakdown if you don't mind. I don't have that off the top of my head.

Mr. Stier: That'd be fine. Thank you.

Line 7 on that same page is the Alberta community partnership, and there's $1.5 million unspent. I'm just wondering where that's coming from, why that took place. Can you tell us a little bit about that community partnership, what it's about, why it is there, and what it normally serves, please?

Mr. S. Anderson: All right. Community partnership: I'll try to find that for you. Of course, you're asking me questions that – I didn't write down my information for that one. That's fantastic. You know what I said to you earlier: I don't like not having the answer. That's going to drive me crazy. I'm going to have to get that for you. I'm sorry about that, hon. member.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Stier: Yeah. Well, again, with these books that we get, sometimes a guy doesn't see every page in the book, I'm sure. There was quite a list of things there that we had questions on, so I can appreciate your situation.

Okay. Let's move on to capital grants, line 4, same page, MSI one more time. You know, it's probably looking like it's going to come in about $17 million under budget. We went back through some of the budgets dating back to '11-12, et cetera, and not once in all those years did we have unspent money. It's been chronically underfunded over its entire life. I know that you can't talk about what's happening in the future. Is there any information that you have to give us more of an understanding of: why the $17 million surplus? This might be a little bit redundant from a question earlier, but I think it would be something that we would like to have. You talked about lower gas and diesel costs and so on and so forth. Do you have any other information regarding that, please?

Mr. S. Anderson: No, I don't. You're right. From the answer before, the BMTG and so on: that's where that comes from. I don't really have any extra information for you on that, and some of the stuff we're still working on, you know. You'll be finding out a little more information coming down the road here. One of the ministers used the words "stay tuned." You'll find out more information soon.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Stier: Okay. There's another add-on to that. Is this perhaps initial money that's been transferred in from the federal government, as an example? By the way, related to that, is there more federal program money coming from the federal gas tax fund, the building Canada fund, or the small communities fund that we aren't aware of and doesn't show up in these documents that you might be able to enlighten us on, please?

Mr. S. Anderson: Sure. Yeah. The federal grant program: the federal gas tax fund obviously provides us with some predictable long-term funding, and obviously under this funding we can, you know, let our municipalities determine how this money is going to be used for their local priorities. There was last year an increase of $1.162 million in the funding because of a carry-forward in unused funding from the previous year. As you well know, the funding is 100 per cent by the federal government for the gas tax fund.

The building Canada fund: the communities' component is designed for unique infrastructure needs. Obviously, they contribute to our strong communities with a cleaner environment. The projects are cost shared between all three levels, as you well know, and that $558,000 increase is to carry forward unused administration funding from the previous year. Like I said, we promised to support these needs of our small communities, so we'll continue to do that.

Mr. Stier: Madam Chair, I'd just like to thank the minister for his responses today in a tough situation. It's one of those first-time situations, and I really appreciate his work so far.

Now we have another speaker. The Member for Little Bow may be interested in talking now. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. My questions are for the Agriculture and Forestry minister. I see he isn't here. What would you suggest?

The Deputy Chair: If you could maybe just direct them to the Finance minister right now.

Mr. Schneider: Sure. He was here, but he kind of disappeared. He might come back.

Supplementary supply for agriculture – you know what, ma'am? The Agriculture and Forestry minister may hear what's going on in the House and determine to come back, so I'll let my colleague . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members of the House, I just need to remind you again: if we could please refrain from commenting on whether individuals are in the House or not in the House.

I will recognize the Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: All right. I have some questions for the Minister of Justice on supplementary supply. Under line item 2.1 of the operating budget you have an additional $3 million there. Can you expand on what that might be for exactly?

The Deputy Chair: Go ahead.

Ms Ganley: Do I need permission to go back and forth, or are we good to do the . . .

The Deputy Chair: Would you like to go back and forth, Member?

Mrs. Pitt: Yeah.

The Deputy Chair: Please, Minister, go ahead.

Ms Ganley: That money is for resolution and court administration services. Those are employees who support the courts, not judges but things like court clerks and resolution clerks and those sorts of folks. That is just as a result of increased pressures on our justice system and trying to keep staffing levels up.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you.

Under 4.3 there's a request for a $5 million increase for criminal and youth prosecutions. Can you tell me what those funds are going to?

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much. Again, those funds are going to support staffing. Those will be both prosecutors and support staff. Some of those funds are to ensure that we can continue to retain people because even though they're management, opted-out employees and they don't get the same raises, sometimes the increment is in terms of levels. Those are to ensure that we can retain the staff we have currently. We've also had to hire some additional staff to deal with some caseload backlogs we're having and as a result of the bail review. So those are Crown prosecutors and support staff for those prosecutors.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you.

How many prosecutors? Sorry. We're up and down.

Ms Ganley: I do have that somewhere. I can tell you, for sure, that it includes 10 that we've hired recently and 15 more that we're in the process of hiring. I don't want to commit that that's the entire number, so I'll get back to you with more precise figures on that.

Mrs. Pitt: Okay. If there could be a breakdown of how many are actually in this particular line item on this one – I assume the next one will be in a future budget shortly – that would be handy.

At 6.1 you're requesting an additional $600,000. It's a pretty low amount of money. Why is it so low? What is it for?

Ms Ganley: Yes, indeed, program support. I believe that that is additional money coming from the federal government for the aboriginal courtwork program, but I will write you a correction if it turns out that that is not the right number.

Mrs. Pitt: Sorry. I need clarification on that. That's money coming from the federal government? Why are you asking for money?

Ms Ganley: When the federal government makes an increase, they send the money to us, but then we have to ask for an increase in the estimates even to spend that money which is coming in. I understand that to be what's happening here.

Mrs. Pitt: Do those two numbers add up exactly?

Ms Ganley: They should do. I believe so.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.

Mrs. Pitt: I like it when we sit down in other committees, not up and down.

At 6.6, under Public Trustee, you're spending $1.7 million for the trustee, but why the spending there and not on prosecutor services?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much. Most of those decisions were made when the office of the Public Trustee and guardian was still in its previous home under human services. It came to us. They are looking to replace their operating systems, and that money is offset by dedicated revenue, so we can't spend it anywhere else. We can only spend it there.

Mrs. Pitt: It's interest from the Public Trustee's fund? Is that correct? Is that the revenue increase?

Ms Ganley: I feel a little like a jack-in-the-box, but, yes, that's my understanding.

Mrs. Pitt: All right. Okay. So you're using the additional revenue from the Public Trustee's funds to pay for government systems changes?

Ms Ganley: Yeah. The project is fully offset by revenues. I mean, the reason for that replacement is that, obviously, they have rather sensitive information of many vulnerable people in their care and custody. My understanding is that they, essentially, need these upgrades.

It also relates to recommendations, as I recall, that came out of an Auditor General's report in terms of how they were tracking and storing data and tracking and keeping track of where things are. These additional systems will also help them to make sure that they have greater transparency in terms of where their numbers are because they're able to keep track of them.

Mrs. Pitt: Is that an allowable use of funds from the Public Trustee's account, to pay for the systems change? I'm wondering if we're wading into, like, ethical concerns, maybe. I don't know.

Ms Ganley: I am assured that it's a perfectly normal process, but it sounds like my hon. colleague may have something to add.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you. I can supplement on that. I believe the Minister of Justice is right. Under the Public Trustee legislation there is a provision for the use of the funds from that account, so it is consistent with that legislation.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Hon. member, do you have any more questions?

Mrs. Pitt: Yes, I do. Correctional services, line item 8: you're requesting $14 million. Can you let me know where it went and why it wasn't budgeted?

Ms Ganley: That increase of $14 million is for manpower pressures. It's essentially to deal with increases in inmate population growth. We've seen a significant spike . . .

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister. The first 60 minutes are now up.

We will be moving on now to the third party. I will recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you for the opportunity to ask some questions.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, sorry. Are you going back and forth, or did you want to take your . . .

Mr. Gotfried: Back and forth, please.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. Thank you.

Mr. Gotfried: I'll start out with the Minister of Municipal Affairs. It's understandable that the rebuilding from the Wood Buffalo wildfire is an important priority for our province. The $1.3 billion in supplemental supply will hopefully go a long way to help tens of thousands of Albertans rebuild a community that has contributed so much to the vibrancy of Alberta's economy and to our public coffers through regional resource extraction. My first question is: what are the government's priorities in the Wood Buffalo rebuild?

Mr. S. Anderson: That's a pretty open question, I guess. The two words that we use are "recovery" and "repair." I think that what we want to make sure of is that the money is in the hands of the municipality, where it needs to be. They know what's going on on the ground, obviously, with the disaster funding and things like that. I had the opportunity to be up in Fort Mac a couple of weeks back to announce another $20 million for them and to see the rebuilding, what's going on up there. I would say that our priority is the rebuild – there are a few different priorities, I would think – of the houses and the businesses that were lost, and I think the other one is making sure there's funding there for mental health, which is a huge, huge issue.

I was able to speak to a gentleman up there when I was there about the things he's doing. He's rebuilding his house. He's probably one of the most positive people I've ever met in my entire life.

Yeah, we're trying to make sure that the priorities are that the money is there when they need it. We want to make sure that we have their backs. That encompasses a whole bunch of different line items in here, whether it's, you know, support services or grants or what have you. I mean, it's a pretty broad-based thing.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Minister. I know that you're relatively new to your portfolio. I'm sure you will be as diligent as you possibly can, but I think what's important to Albertans and to the residents of Wood Buffalo is this government understanding what the critical infrastructure and services are. I guess to that point: given that you're going to be turning a lot of this money over to the municipality, it sounds like, and, I'm sure, overseeing that, do you have a timeline on when the critical infrastructure – let's just call it that: critical infrastructure and services – will be fully restored in Wood Buffalo given this investment?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you. Well, obviously, you know, one of the other things that is a priority is just supporting families. As far as a timeline goes, the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo is in charge of the rebuild. We're here kind of to, as I said, have their backs. So they would know best on the timelines and on how things are going. When I was up there, they did indicate that it's going well. Things are going fairly smoothly. There are some glitches, obviously, here and there. As far as a timeline, they haven't really told me when they think full recovery will come. They've cleared off all the debris, all the things that were there from the fire. All that is gone. So it's basically in rebuild phase now. But as far as a timeline, they would know best on what that is.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you again, Minister.

Again, I understand that this is a very big investment for Albertans and also very critical to the restoration of the vibrancy of that community and a very strong part of our economic engine. This is a big investment. I would hope, again, that there's an opportunity for you to work more closely with the municipality to really identify that critical infrastructure and the critical services and to get timelines on that.

What I'm also interested in, again, is to ensure that Albertans are getting the value in terms of what we're doing with that. What are you doing to mitigate the impact of project cost inflation through oversight of competitive bidding or other controls, workforce housing to ensure that we have the labour in place, and things that we've heard of such as the drywall tariffs that are affecting some of the costs, particularly as it relates to the cost of rebuilding public infrastructure in the region?

Mr. S. Anderson: Well, I would say that we're in contact with the regional municipality on a constant basis – you know, I wouldn't say daily but frequently – to understand what issues they're going through. Like I say, we're in a support role for them right now. So when we get information, like you were saying, about drywall and things like that from them, then we can investigate or help them however they need. It really is one of those – response and recovery are happening, and we're supporting what they're doing. It's really the information we get from them day to day.

I know one of the things that we did up there for the home builders is an interim pilot program. Basically, we didn't want fly-by-night people coming in and taking advantage of vulnerable citizens, so we made sure that there's a little bit of checks and balances as far as information goes on the builder side of it just to make sure that, you know, these people that are rebuilding aren't taken advantage of by shell companies and things like that. That's something that we're trying to do on our end to help out, and it's working well. People are getting the information they need. They know where these companies come from and what they've done before, if they're financially viable, and that it's not just a guy in a pickup truck coming out and building their house.

Anyway, we're doing little things on our end on that side, but we are relying heavily on the municipality to let us know if there are any issues that we can help with. It's an ongoing thing that's going to last a long time, but we'll be here as long as needed.

Mr. Gottfried: Thank you, Minister.

Again, recognizing that this is a new portfolio for you and that it will take you some time to get up to speed, particularly with significant expenditures in this particular instance, have you had a chance to identify what expertise you may have in your department that can help Wood Buffalo, again going back to such items as procurement and, as you mentioned, maybe working with some of the province-wide associations like the Home Builders' Association to ensure that there's protection both within the industry and from different levels of government? Have you identified some critical areas with this investment that actually may be beefing up some of the resources in your department to assist Wood Buffalo?

Mr. S. Anderson: Sure. Yeah. I mean, obviously, the staff that's in our department has done some incredible work over the last year with the people in Wood Buffalo. We are working with the Canadian Home Builders' Association on some of these things, like I mentioned, making sure that these builders are competent and financially viable and things like that. Just like after every disaster, there's a third-party review that's ongoing. We're waiting for the information to hear, you know, what can maybe be done better or tweaked or what have you. We have made sure that the experts are in place that we need, but again that's using the municipality as well and their expertise and what they know of their builders on the ground and the people in the areas, too. Our Alberta emergency folks are unbelievable, so we've relied on them a lot, too, and on the people on the ground.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. member.

Mr. Gottfried: Thank you. I'd like to switch questioning over to the Minister of Finance if I could and go back and forth if you're amenable to that, Minister.

The $1.72 billion that we're seeing also includes over $300 million in new spending. That's in addition to over $200 million in savings achieved by Alberta's front-line workers despite increasing demands on Alberta's services. We saw $215 million in savings in Health on page 46 – that's a whopping .0109 per cent, but savings are savings; we'll take that – and $16 million in savings in Environment and Parks, page 42, and $7 million in savings in Transportation on page 78.

Minister, since this government continues to claim that savings and efficiency can only come from cuts to front-line workers and services, which front-line workers and programs were cut to achieve these savings in these departments?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister of Treasury Board.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. You know, we're finding efficiencies all across government, and we are doing that by asking all the ministers. I've had a process of sitting down with all the ministers, and then they come up with savings within their departments. For instance, on salaries and supplies, supplies was an area and salaries was an area where there was $121 million achieved in the last year. That was because we reduced those budgets in '16-17 for services and supplies and for salaries.

We have a hiring restraint on, so not everyone is being put into positions that are vacant. Those requests are having to go up to the deputy minister level, and they're also having to go up to the Public Service Commissioner's level for outside of government.

The other savings achieved were $28.5 million from freezing management salaries. We have just recently moved also on a compensation framework that'll achieve $16 million in savings going forward for the highest paid CEOs of agencies, boards, and commissions. We have undertaken those efforts and will continue to do that in budgets going forward. It's just the way we do business, to find savings and to make sure it happens.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. member.

Mr. Gottfried: Thank you. Minister, I find this very interesting because, again, I think we've been told many, many times in this House that there are no opportunities for cuts without cutting front-line workers, yet you've found millions and millions of dollars in savings here. To identify those savings, in my world you actually have to find them in the budget, find out where you can cut them, to quantify them to give us, certainly, millions and millions of dollars of savings. So I'm a little surprised that you can't present to us something a little bit more detailed, particularly in Health: $215 million. You don't get that without sending everybody back into their budgets and finding things with a fine-tooth comb, recognizing that it is only .0109 per cent of the total budget. You did have to find those somewhere so you didn't have to cut front-line staff, again, as we've heard time and time again.

Let's look at maybe the Health budget: $215 million in savings. Will you be able to deliver to us specifics on where those savings were achieved and demonstrate to Albertans that it wasn't from cutting front-line staff?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you. With regard to Health, you know, there would have been additional costs and pressures in that area had there not been an amended agreement with the AMA. The AMA came back to the table in November 2016, and they amended an agreement that, had it not been amended, would have taken them to 2018. Some of those savings are in that area with physician costs – they would have been higher – savings resulting from the amended agreement signed by the AMA in November 2016.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. member.

Mr. Gottfried: Thank you. Minister, that's actually a great example of the kind of detail I'm looking for. Could you give us the numbers on the savings from that AMA renegotiation or contract or agreement that are part of this $215 million?

Mr. Ceci: Obviously, the particulars are most known by the minister responsible for those areas, but I can tell you that I regularly hear that minister talk about $500 million in savings going forward over the next two years.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. member.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you. Minister, you brought that one up, so I thought maybe you had the numbers already in your hands there.

Minister, I think one of the concerns we've got is: are these one-time savings, or are these sustainable savings? I'd like you to tell us a little bit more. With these numbers, are these one-time events, or are any of these savings sustainable through future budget cycles?

Mr. Ceci: That's a great question. With regard to the AMA agreement, obviously it's during the term of that agreement. Subsequent to negotiations, we'll see where that agreement is in 2018. You know, I was a bit of a broken record with some of my colleagues that we needed to find in-year savings. We did that both in budgets '15 and '16. Some of those savings are on a one-time basis, and some will take money permanently out of their budgets and our overall operating budget, so the percentage is not something I can recall off the top of my head. But it is a good question to ask, if they're permanently out, and the answer is that some are one-time, which get us to our in-year savings goal, and some are permanently out, which will not come back.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you again, Minister. Again a little bit short on some of the details I'd like to see, but I'm sure we'll see those as we go forward, particularly those that are sustainable savings, not just one-time, so that we can see some quantification of that.

What I'd like to ask you now is: what's being done to ensure that the savings achieved in this budget cycle by front-line programs and workers will not be wasted on spending growth that does not deliver additional value for money and front-line deliverables for Albertans? How are we going to actually make these savings work for us so that we don't affect front-line services but we sustain them by not spending them on other growth areas which do not deliver a benefit to Albertans?

The Deputy Chair: Go ahead.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. You know, I think I provided a bit of this answer before, but investment that's identified in this budget's spending is to provide stable funding for some key programs like education, health care, and social services. I kind of think that those are things that all Albertans value.

We wanted to fully fund student enrolment, and we have kept that promise. That is expected to address an underexpenditure in that area that caused schools to have larger than necessary classroom sizes.

We increased, obviously, the expense to Health, primarily to support physician compensation and drug costs. There were more people going to physicians, so these are driven not by the AMA agreement but more by the use of doctors. Those are good uses, we think, addressing things preventatively and as they need to be for individuals and will keep them out of more acute-care settings.

Additional, obviously, supports, driven by the downturn in our economy. Thankfully, that is starting to turn around, and we're starting to see some green shoots and more confidence from investors, more confidence from businesses and Albertans generally. Those people that were affected negatively by the recession came to our income support offices in large numbers, and we addressed that pressure. I think that that, again, is a good use of tax dollars, to make sure that Albertans aren't left out in the cold by their loss of employment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Minister.

Madam Chair, I'm going to move on to just a slightly different line of questioning. I'm glad you brought out the green shoots because the trouble with green shoots is that they're very tender and delicious and tend to be consumed quickly before they actually get to grow. The $1.72 billion request for additional funds represents a 3.78 per cent increase to the $44.5 billion budget this government asked for last year. Alberta's population growth and inflation were around 1 per cent each, and that's on top of, of course, a 3.4 per cent increase over the prior year's budget. Given that the Finance minister has repeatedly said that it was a priority "to bend the curve," how do you explain this growth in spending, which far exceeds population growth plus inflation even without the funds required for Wood Buffalo recovery? Is this now called bending the subcurve, or are we still on the main curve?

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. You know, it's been a really challenging year, obviously. The Fort McMurray wildfire: you didn't take that out of this amount that you're talking about, 3.8 per cent or whatever, but those monies needed to be spent to address the significant natural disaster that was ongoing for 80,000 people. I think any government would spend those monies up front. They would not skimp on that sort of expenditure.

The other thing we did, of course, was to protect more broadly the programs and services Albertans rely on. Especially during the downturn, they were called on by greater numbers of Albertans coming to get the support they needed. We didn't skimp on that either. We thought that that would have hurt average families, and it would have made this downturn even more prolonged had we skimmed. So we chose to invest and not cut. We protected services rather than turn Albertans away from the doors of this government, and we'll continue to work to protect those things that are important to Albertans.

Health has been a particularly challenging area across this country. We are doing things to bend that curve, but that's a work-in-progress that will take some time. Instead of the 6 to 10 per cent increases to that budget that have occurred in the past, our target is to try and get it down to 3 per cent, lower than 3. There are some provinces that talk about success in that area. We need to look more into how they're doing those things.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

We are now moving on to the next 20-minute block, for the members for Calgary-Mountain View and Calgary-Elbow. Do you plan to split the time?

Mr. Clark: Yeah.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. So 10 minutes on the clock for you to go back and forth?

Mr. Clark: Yes, we'll go back and forth if that's all right with the ministers. Thank you very much. I don't suspect I will take the full 20 minutes, and I believe my hon. colleague here – I don't know if he has any questions for any ministers today but, I suppose, will reserve the right to do that. I don't expect I'll take the full 20 minutes.

I will start with Municipal Affairs and, with apologies to the minister . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I'm just going to interject. It's 20 minutes to be shared between the two of you. I will let the two of you figure that out. But I just want to be clear that it's 20 minutes for both of you.

Mr. Clark: Yes, 20 minutes combined. Yes. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Mr. Clark: Yes. I don't expect that I'll take much of it.

Let's get after it here. Starting with the Minister of Municipal Affairs and, again, with apologies if some of this is ground that has already been covered, I am very interested in the $240 million allocated to the recovery effort within Wood Buffalo. Instead of asking a general question about what that's for, I'm just curious if some or all of that is encompassed within the disaster recovery program. Is that DRP money, or is that going out through a different method?

[Mr. Sucha in the chair]

Mr. S. Anderson: You're talking about the recovery, the $240 million right there? That's what you're talking about? Okay. I don't have the breakdown of that in front of me. I'll have to get the breakdown exactly for you so that I can give you the specifics of it. Yeah, I don't have it exactly, I don't think, how you would like it, and I don't want to give you a broad answer because I don't think that's what you're looking for. But we do get some of that back from the disaster funding. I'll get some more specifics for you, and we'll get that back to you.

Mr. Clark: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Minister.

Just perhaps more specific questions, then, to just get on the record specifically as it relates to the disaster recovery program, and that's, as you've intuited, precisely where I'm going. Is there a certain percentage of this money – some or all; I don't suppose all – that we could expect back from the federal government in reimbursement from the disaster recovery program? That, I guess, itself is one stand-alone question. Is there money that we can expect back at some point through federal disaster recovery reimbursement?

Also, I'm very interested in knowing if you can let me know what number of DRP claims have been made by the municipality, by individuals, and by businesses as related to the Wood Buffalo wildfire, please.

Mr. S. Anderson: Yeah. To your first question there: about 90 per cent of the money back; they've advanced $300 million already. Once it's all said and done, you know, like, it's going to take a long time for the money to come back to us.

But as far as the – you're looking at claims by individuals? Is that what you're asking about?

Mr. Clark: I'll just restate my question, and then we'll come back to the federal reimbursement afterwards. What I'm interested in is that, as I understand it, there are at least three categories of DRP claims. One is municipalities' potential DRP claims, one is from individuals, and another category would be for businesses. I'm curious if you have a breakdown of DRP claims filed by municipalities, by individuals, businesses, or by any other category that I haven't captured.

Mr. S. Anderson: I don't have those specifics on me, obviously, but I can look into that for you, for sure, and see what I can find. I don't have the private-sector DRPs because it is an insurable event, but I can ask through my staff and see what information we can get for you.

Mr. Clark: Yeah. Thank you very much. That's really what I'm interested in, is given that it's an insurable event if there are any DRP claims at all. I'm just curious if there are things that fall outside of the scope of what is insurable but potentially fall into DRP. Of course, why I'm interested in knowing that is: do these numbers potentially go up in the future? Are there some liabilities here that we're not aware of? I'd be very interested to know that. If there aren't, obviously, that would be wonderful as well.

Just back to that first question, and I guess I'm focusing specifically on the $240 million for recovery. I just wonder if you could tell me if the $300 million that has been advanced by the federal government is accounted for in the $720 million or so that we're talking about here, or is that over and above the $720 million? I guess what I'm curious about is this $720 million number. Could we expect it to go down by $300 million, or in fact is that $720 million with the $300 million from the federal government over and above. And is there more money coming potentially from the federal government that at some point would reduce this $720 million figure?

Mr. S. Anderson: Yes, there is more money coming. I don't know what it is yet. But the $300 million was advanced already. I don't think that counts in that $720 million, but I'd have to check on that for you because I don't have that breakdown off the top of my head, obviously. I do know that it was advanced already, but I'd have to check into that there for you.

Mr. Clark: I don't want you to tell me what's in the budget next week because I know that would be . . .

Mr. Cooper: That would be a short term for cabinet.

Mr. Clark: That may set the world record for shortest time in cabinet, if you were to do that, so please don't.

However, what I'm interested in is whether you have given thought to increasing the amount you budget for disaster response. Generally what I've observed from past budgets is that the disaster response number in the budget is quite low, with the understanding that it's really either a subtext or a nudge and a wink or even perhaps an express goal of: look, if something happens, we'll spend whatever it takes to recover should there be a disaster. But I'm just curious if for budgetary purposes you have given some thought to increasing that number or coming up with a five- or 10-year actual average that you would use to budget as we go forward with this coming budget and future budgets as well?

Mr. S. Anderson: So, no, I'm not going to talk about the budget that's coming out on the 16th. But I think that part of what we're talking about – it's kind of hard to deal in hypotheticals. With that third-party review that's being done, you know, we're going to look at efficiencies and look at the way things were done and look at the way we can maybe do things better going forward. I can't speak to whether that's going to have any effect on how we determine budgets in the future. Like I said, I don't want to deal with hypotheticals.

We have stated before in the House that no matter what, whenever a disaster hits in Alberta, we will make sure that the money is there for whichever municipality, whoever needs it, at that time. We will make sure it's there. That's what the government is there for, to make sure they have the backs of their citizens. Regardless of what that's going to cost, we have to make sure that we're there for people.

I think that the Auditor General has actually indicated that our disaster recovery accounting has been – the best practice is to fund after the event rather than, as I said, hypotheticals, so we will see what the third party says. You know, we're always looking at our departments and trying to make sure that we're doing things that are going to be best for Albertans, and we'll continue to do that.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, and congratulations to the new minister. I think you're acquitting yourself very nicely in this process. I will move on, and let you relax here for a moment. I will ask the Minister of Finance a couple of questions and then cede whatever time I have to my colleague here if he'd like to use it.

So to the Minister of Finance. I'm very interested in some of the requested increases directly in your ministry that, as I understand it here from the notes, are related to administration of the climate leadership plan rebates. I guess I'm just curious as to why we have an increase here of perhaps not the largest gross number, but what planning went into deciding that budget figure in the first place? Why is it that we need yet more money at this stage of the game for increased administration of the climate leadership plan?

The Acting Chair: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. Why those items weren't in our Budget 2016: I can tell the hon. member that Budget 2016 introduced plans to implement a price on carbon through a carbon levy on purchases of transportation and heating fuels. Although the budget for Alberta's climate leadership plan is with the climate change office, which is in Environment and Parks, Treasury Board and Finance was expected to incur . . .

The Acting Chair: I apologize for interrupting, but the first 10 minutes is . . .

Mr. Ceci: Can I just finish this? It will just take a second.

The Acting Chair: Be brief, Minister.

Mr. Ceci: Okay. Thanks. Treasury Board and Finance was expected to incur implementation costs, both operating and capital, with regard to the administration of the carbon levy. Getting closer to the launch of that program, our costs and obligations under the legislation became clearer, and new estimates for our costs incurred and budgeted for the coming years were made.

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: So are you continuing, Member for Calgary-Elbow, and then the remainder of the time will go to the Member for Calgary-Mountain View?

Mr. Clark: My hon. colleague for Calgary-Mountain View has indicated to me that he doesn't plan to use his time this afternoon, so I will use a little bit more of the time. I don't imagine I'll use the next full 10 minutes. If that's all right with the minister and the chair.

The Acting Chair: Please proceed.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much. I do want to ask – and I'm very interested as we're talking about the climate leadership plan and administering the consumer rebates – why it is that as the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board you feel that Albertans with a household income of nearly a hundred thousand dollars can't afford your policies, being the carbon tax in particular, why you're rebating 60 per cent of Alberta households or two-thirds of Alberta households by some measures. What's the magic number there? Why were those decisions made? As President of Treasury Board you have a role in approving some of these expenditures. I'm just very curious whether you feel rebates, in fact, defeat the purpose of a program that is intended to disincent Albertans from certain activity by making it cost more.

Mr. Ceci: I know the hon. member knows that there was an expert panel that gave advice to government with respect to setting up the climate leadership plan for this province, that took us from being a laggard province to a leader province. You'll hear that several times over the coming weeks. Making life more affordable for Albertans is what this government is all about. The expert panel gave advice to government and said that, you know, to appropriately incent and to ameliorate the effects of carbon pricing on both transportation and home heating fuels, this would be the appropriate way to go. Rather than me second-guessing that expert leadership panel that set up the carbon plan, I agreed with it, as members of this government did, and we implemented it.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Minister. I'll finish with one final question, which really dovetails on that question as it relates to just new programs in general. We're looking at the seniors home adaptation and repair loan program. A certain amount of money, which I believe to be $7 million, was originally allocated for that, but the supplementary estimate here is requesting yet another $2 million. I'm just curious, again in your capacity as President of Treasury Board, if there's any sort of vetting that goes on, where you say: well, we can achieve a certain amount with this certain new program. Is there any sort of process where you would perhaps push back and say: well, this is what we thought it was going to be; this is all the money we have; and, no, there is in fact no more money no matter how important the program may be?

And let me hasten to add that I certainly take no issue with this particular program. I think it's an important one for seniors to allow them to stay in their homes. But I'm just very curious what that process looks like from your perspective as the one who ultimately controls the purse strings.

Mr. Ceci: Well, that program, obviously, is $2 million higher than expected because of the applications that have come in to that program, asking for seniors to get loan money so they could repair their homes. It's a worthwhile and positive thing to do, to assist seniors with these costs up front, and it's recovered on the back end when they either sell their property or an estate takes care of that. You know, that's what we hear is important for seniors all over Alberta and, indeed, everywhere, that they want to stay in their homes as long as possible.

My review of that is that the minister comes forward with a desire to address this pressure because the pressure is for the number of applications that come forward. We have provided the minister with that support so they could make the program available to as many Albertans as possible. I look at these things within the context of available funds as well as within the context of whether it is delivering good value. And I can say on both levels, yes.

The Acting Chair: Member for Calgary-Elbow, you're finished with your time?

Mr. Clark: All done.

The Acting Chair: Member for Calgary-Mountain View, are you wishing to ask any questions?

Dr. Swann: No questions.

The Acting Chair: All right. So we're ceding the time for independent members.

The chair will recognize the Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. Happy to lead things off over here. One of the problems, of course, when you're kind of last in line . . .

The Acting Chair: Sorry, Member. I just want to confirm that you're combining your time.

Mr. Nielsen: I am, yes, with your blessing, of course, and the minister's blessing as well.

. . . is that some of the good questions got used up here already. But if I may call upon our fantastic Municipal Affairs minister. Although I know you're new to the position, I'm sure that if you don't quite have the answers here, you can get back.

The Acting Chair: Member, through the chair.

Mr. Nielsen: Yes. Sorry.

Minister, I know that this was talked about a little bit earlier, and I'm not sure if I had caught the answer. I was just wondering why the basic municipal transportation grant was lower than budgeted.

Mr. S. Anderson: I did touch on it a little bit, but it is something that's actually a good thing to maybe repeat. The BMTG has different funding models for Edmonton and Calgary than it does for the rest of Alberta's municipalities. So the amount of the grant for Edmonton and Calgary is determined based on the proportion of gasoline and diesel fuel that's sold in Alberta whereas the remaining municipalities receive the grant based on a combination of population, length of primary highways, and other factors, depending on the size and type of municipality. So the reduction to the basic municipal transportation grant, as I had said before to another member, was due to lower than budgeted gasoline and diesel sales in Edmonton and Calgary, which determines the amount of the grant that's for the two largest cities in Alberta.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Minister. I know we had talked about the climate leadership plan here just a little bit earlier, and I was curious about how the funding of the climate leadership plan and implementation was used, and I'm also wondering how this will benefit our municipalities as well.

Mr. S. Anderson: Sure. As many of you know, there are a lot of municipalities out there that are doing great things as far as climate change and energy efficiency. You know, we heard from the Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose about what Wetaskiwin is doing with solar and a whole bunch of things that they're doing, and I would actually like to go for a tour and see all of it. I know that Leduc put a big solar array on their rec centre. Devon is doing some amazing things out there. Those are just examples that are close to us that I know of. We know that municipalities are doing some of these things on their own. They're very concerned out there about the future of our environment and sustainable energy, which is good. The funding that we have for our climate leadership plan: we're working, as was stated before, with Transportation and Infrastructure to look at ways that we can support these municipalities with our climate plan.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

It's a really big area of opportunity, I think, for partnerships in Alberta. You know, we talk about partnerships, whether it be with the MGA or whatever it is in collaboration, and I think this is part of that with our climate leadership plan. We want to make sure that our health and our environment and our economy are protected. I have little boys, so I want to make sure that we're doing what's right for them and, hopefully, for when I have grandkids, possibly, when

I'm a little older. I'm still pretty young. Just because I have white in my beard, it doesn't mean that I'm that old yet.

One of those things that we've been doing is that a few of us had a tour of the AUMA building here. They're doing some really neat things with energy efficiency, so we've been working with them and their members a fair amount to figure out what might work better for them, whether it be with energy efficiency, whether it be with renewables, land use, waste management. Transit is a big one, especially in the big cities but also in the surrounding areas, too, so if we can do things, you know, GreenTRIP funding and things like that.

These are the types of things that we're discussing with all these municipalities to try to help them and work, obviously, in partnership with them and try to make sure that we're doing the right things and sustainable things for the citizens out there. That's kind of a general overview of what that's being used for right now.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Chair, we've had a lot of discussion here, of course, about the wildfires. I was just wondering, because you had alluded to it earlier, Minister: what is the firefighter certification initiative?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you. Yes, I did kind of just touch on it briefly there. It's a commitment that we have to public safety for Albertans. It's working through the office of the fire commissioner. They provide training courses and certificates. I'm happy to say that the increase in funding reflects an increase in certification. That means that there are more firefighters and more boots on the ground. That's where that funding comes from. The additional $200,000 that supports this initiative is fully funded through the exam and certification fees. You know, it's kind of one of those, I guess, good things that happened, in a sense, because we know that there are going to be more firefighters out there.

People, I think, have seen what's happened in the past, whether it be Slave Lake or with the fire up in Fort Mac, and they know that we need more help out there. There are a lot of citizens out there that want to do the right thing for their neighbours, and we see that reflected in that. That's a really positive thing, I think, that we're going to have more people out there on the ground in case there is an issue or a disaster of some sort. We don't ever want that, of course, but we know that we need to have people in place when things like that do happen.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Madam Chair. Just switching gears a little bit here, ministry support services saw savings of about $500,000. How was this achieved, and are there any plans for future savings?

Mr. S. Anderson: Sorry. Can you repeat the first part of the question? I didn't hear it.

Mr. Nielsen: I believe I saw – and maybe I'm mistaken – that there were savings of around $500,000 achieved. I was wondering how this was achieved. Are there future plans for those savings, or was this just one time?

Mr. S. Anderson: Sorry. My mind was still on the firefighting stuff.

Yeah, actually, it's kind of nice when we can save money, obviously, and find efficiencies through the ministry. You know, all the ministers are asking our staff to find efficiencies and make sure that we're doing things that aren't redundant, things like that. One of the ones that we did – I mean, it might not sound like a ton of money, $500,000, but we did find efficiencies in our IT programs. Because it was previously outsourced and we did bring that network maintenance in-house, we managed to save $500,000. Going forward, of course, we're going to keep looking at things like that, and as technology evolves – I mean, I don't like to speak in hypotheticals, but who knows what we can find out there, right? It's something that we're always trying to do, be more efficient, and we found a $500,000 efficiency in IT, which I'm happy that my staff did.

5:20

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. member.

Mr. Nielsen: Thanks, Madam Chair. Those are all the questions that I have at this time. I know that my colleague from Edmonton-Ellerslie has some, so I'll cede the time to him.

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak from the government side?

Seeing none, we will now move to our five-minute rotation for the Official Opposition. The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Madam Chair. Supplementary supply for Ag and Forestry is $332,493,000 plus a little over $5 million made available from lower than budgeted expenses, and $6 million from the climate leadership plan has been brought forward for the farm energy program. Can you just tell us what exactly this energy program provides for farmers?

The Deputy Chair: Just to clarify, Member, are you going back and forth for the full 10 minutes?

Mr. Schneider: Back and forth, please, yeah. Sorry.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. Thank you.
The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Chair. Thank you, Member. Yeah, the farm energy program enhancements, we had that earlier. You're able to do those enhancements. There are four specific programs. There's on-farm energy management, on-farm solar photovoltaics, the irrigation efficiency, and the accelerating innovation program.

Mr. Schneider: Can I just ask about irrigation efficiency, a little bit of the details of what that might be?

Mr. Carlier: Yeah. Good question. They'll be able to find whatever efficiencies there might be in irrigation. There are already a lot, I'm sure the member realizes. They'll be able to convert to lower energy irrigation systems themselves: pumps, et cetera. I had the opportunity – as a matter of fact, I think it was in your district, Member – to view some pumps that looked to me like they were close to magic; they used so little energy. So whatever we can do around those efficiencies around irrigation. There's a whole suite of different things and new technologies as well.

Two years ago I had an opportunity to have a discussion with the Canadian Jewish council. The irrigations systems they have in Israel are the best because of the dry climate. Personally, I'd like to explore a little bit more what they're doing in other countries. I'm sure we could apply some of that technology here.

Thanks for the question.

Mr. Schneider: There's $16,621,000 for the Alberta small brewery grant program. There are approximately 40 small breweries in Alberta, and that represents about $400,000 per brewery. This program was announced late last June, and I just wonder why the government did not make sure there was enough funding available to cover off this program when it was announced.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Yes. Thank you, Member. That was announced in July last year. I believe the Minister of Finance and Treasury Board said, "Beer is good." I think he's saying that a lot all over the province, and I would agree. Yeah, the funding will be available to candidates in this program. As you said, there are about 40 or so craft breweries right now. The program has been extremely successful, and we're looking forward to it being even more successful as well.

You know, it helps out, obviously, small business. It helps them innovate. It helps find that diversification that we all want. It's a good marketing strategy for our barley growers as well. We have some of the best malted barley in the world. I found out something really interesting just a few weeks ago. There's actually a barley grower north of Edmonton that's contracted to Heineken in Amsterdam. Their malted barley goes straight to Amsterdam. Of course, a lot of it goes to Japan as well because they do value our barley.

Thank you.

Mr. Schneider: Anheuser-Busch as well.

You announced this, I believe, as a $20 million program, if I'm correct, in the summer, in July, apparently. There was a $20 million program, and we have a budget here of $16,621,000. I just wonder if there was 3 and a half million dollars paid somewhere else before today.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Yeah. In the supplementary estimates the $16.621 million is extra money for the program. It has shown great success notwithstanding, you know, that some places around the country are a little bit jealous, maybe, of our breweries. But it has been a success. That's new money allocated for the new program.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. member.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you. There's $35,723,000 for the department's grant to the AFSC insurance programs for the provincial share of insurance premiums. Now, do you not already have that money set aside? Is that normally money that would be set aside every year to pay the province's share of this program?

Mr. Carlier: That is the share of the premiums from the province. As I'm sure the member knows, the federal government's is 36 per cent, provincial 24 per cent, and the producers pick up the rest. That's just our statutory obligations to the AFSC for the portion. I suspect that has some flexibility year to year, but for this year that's the amount.

Mr. Schneider: So this is the total amount? I mean, $35 million: is that what would be expected in the budget from '16-17, or is this more money? If so, why is there a shortfall, please?

Mr. Carlier: That is a good question. I think it's derived much like the emergency funding is as well. You see how the year has gone and what actually has to be paid out, you know, indemnities and into the pockets of the farmers that have made the claims. It isn't decided until towards the end of the year. That's why it has to be a supplementary estimate. Because you don't know at the beginning of the year, you can't budget what it is exactly, so it has to come towards the end, when you finally get the numbers.

Mr. Schneider: Would some of this money be destined for the snowed-under crops north of Edmonton, north and east and west of Edmonton?

Mr. Carlier: That's exactly right, yeah, for that. There are, I think, five or six counties that actually declared a drought last year, too.

Mr. Schneider: There's $25,503,000 for the department's grant to the AFSC agriculture income support program for the provincial share of AgriStability indemnities. I guess the question just is: was this shortfall due to the high level of claims on top of poor yields due to weather conditions last season?

Mr. Carlier: Absolutely. That question was on AgriStability, right? It's a little bit different there. AgriStability would go towards income support for lower than normal beef prices, for example. Another portion of that was $6 million for the bovine tuberculosis wreck that we had in the southeast corner. That was included as well. Interesting to note there that originally the province had to allocate $15 million for AgriStability, in particular for the bovine tuberculosis, but the federal government then reimbursed $9 million, which goes then directly back to AFSC's bank.

Mr. Schneider: The $252 million – some of this question was asked earlier – for wildfire disaster/emergency assistance to provide for wildfire management costs: is this shortfall a direct result of moving the start of the fire season back a month?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Chair. Thank you, Member. You know, that's a good question. That has nothing to do with it because actually in the past five or six years or so, every year the previous government had bumped that back anyway, right? The changes we made last year to the farm and prairie protection amendment act made that permanent. That's not so much. We still have to have our base budget. That gets the equipment ready, the people ready – the hiring, the new recruiting, whatever that might be – gets the towers ready, the landing strips, all that kind of thing. This is just the money, then, that's needed to actually fight those wildfires that do pop up. That's the money we need to get the boots on the ground.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.

Mr. Schneider: Will this ensure that we have the proper coverage of water tanker and other firefighting contracts in place for the season?

Mr. Carlier: You know, this is the supplementary estimates for what we need to cover our expenses now. I can't give anything away that's in the budget, but it's tempting. Yeah, this will be adequate to make sure that we have the equipment that we needed, you know, in the past year, to cover off all our expenses, whether the resource is our own or what we needed from our international partners.

Mr. Schneider: How much of this money is for contracting air tankers from out of province above and beyond our normal contracting?

Mr. Carlier: Good question, Member. I don't have the actual breakdown of what that might be from ours to theirs. I know that last year we had 1,338 wildfires, that burned 611,000 hectares. Now, if you recall, a big chunk of that would be the Fort McMurray fire. It's interesting to note there, as we know in the agriculture . . .

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister. Thank you, hon. member.

We will now be moving to the third party. The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. Chair, do I have 10 minutes or 20 here?

The Deputy Chair: You have 10 combined if you'd like.

Mr. McIver: Okay. We'll go back and forth if that's okay with my esteemed colleagues across the aisle. Thank you, Chair.

First of all, to the Finance minister if I might. You're out by $1.6 billion. I guess the first obvious question is: how could you miss by so much?

Mr. Ceci: Well, this was a significant and challenging year for Albertans and for their government. We made sure that we had Albertans' backs through this recession. We had expenditures that we hadn't anticipated, obviously, for emergencies that we addressed, whether those emergencies were in agriculture, whether those emergencies were as a result of the wildfire.

In addition to addressing those significant costs, we also addressed the challenges that Albertans had with not being employed during this recession or losing their work. Income support, persons with developmental disabilities, and assured income for the severely handicapped were all areas that had significant cost pressures that needed to be addressed.

Our student population grew larger than anticipated. We addressed that with full funding.

Lastly, there were health supports that needed to be addressed as well and things like drugs and physician compensation.

Mr. McIver: Okay. I'll ask that question again at another time and try to get a better answer.

In the meantime FTE changes. Can you tell us what difference there was in FTE changes at the end of the year that these supplementary supply estimates will be paying for? In other words, how many full-time equivalents are we adding as a result, please?

Mr. Ceci: Well, we can probably go back to Budget 2016 to see where the full-time equivalents are in that document, and with Budget 2017 we'll have an accounting again for the FTEs. I don't have that off the top of my head, though as I talked about, many of these expenditures are with regard to schools, health care, and income support. Many of these other monies, like for the income support, go directly to Albertans so that they can have a quality of life. I don't have the exact number, but it's coming in Budget 2017.

Mr. McIver: Okay. I'm not very lucky today, Chair. I'm zero for two in answers. But I'm optimistic, so I'm going to carry on.

Minister, do the supplementary supply estimates include any or all of the $50 million a year in savings in education, or do those savings start later on? Is all or part of the $50 million in savings reflected in these estimates? That is my question, kind of a yes or no thing.

Mr. Ceci: I believe yes.

Mr. McIver: Okay. Thank you. One for three. I'm good. I appreciate that. We're making progress here. Thank you, Minister.

Now, what were the areas specifically? Where exactly did we save that money in education, please? Since you've confirmed that some of those savings are in education, can you tell me, you know, whether – I'm just looking for exactly where the money was saved, please.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Yes. I apologize. That probably is something that he should direct to the other minister.

Mr. McIver: Okay. I'd like to ask that same question to the Education minister, please.

Mr. Ceci: Sorry. I know the full complement of – let me just take a look here. Today is Wednesday. I think there was an agreement, perhaps not with your party but with others, around who would be in seats at what time. That does not come up on Wednesday's agenda; it comes up on Thursday's.

Mr. McIver: Okay. We'll keep trying.

On page 18, on the climate leadership plan, it talks about the transfer of $50,000 in capital grants to the Alberta energy efficient carbon-neutral greenhouse infrastructure modelling project. I'm tired just saying that. What did we buy for $50,000 that qualifies as capital? And I only ask the question because of having been the minister of the major capital ministries. You don't get a lot in capital for $50,000. So what did we need for $50,000 in the climate leadership plan?

Mr. Ceci: I have a similar kind of answer. Perhaps your party wasn't part of the agreements around who should be in seats at what times. That person is identified, again, on Thursday and not Wednesday.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: This is most disappointing, Chair, I must say. I'm doing my best to direct my comments towards you. We keep trying.

Employment and income support, $111 million; $80 million for benefits for the unemployed. I can appreciate how we need more benefits for the unemployed when so many Albertans are unemployed under this NDP government. My question for the minister is: how much of the $80 million is actually direct benefits to people, and how much of that is administration, please?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Chair, and thank you, Member, for the question. My supplementary estimates amount is $173.2 million, and in virtually all cases the funding will be used to address unavoidable caseload pressures in the following areas. One, that you identified, is income support to people expected to work. The caseload in this program area has grown from 15,622 in October of 2014 to 30,121 in October of 2016. That's an increase of 14,499 cases, or 92.8 per cent. This is a statutory program where somebody qualifies. The qualifications are given in the statute and regulations. The ministry has to provide that. So this $80 million will go for the most part to providing additional benefits to those who need those benefits.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.

Mr. McIver: I'd like to say to the minister that I appreciate the information he did give me. I do appreciate it a lot. It just wasn't the information that I asked for, so I'll ask again. Of the $80 million, how much actually went out to people in direct cheques or benefits, and how much was to pay for the administration end of it? If you don't mind, please.

The Deputy Chair: Minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Chair. I can tell the member what is the split in the overall budget for the income support area per se. This $80 million was needed to address the caseload pressures. I can say that this $80 million, all of it, went to address the caseload pressures. Administration costs were there. There may have been some hiring for some positions, front-line positions, where it was absolutely unavoidable, to deal with the amount of caseload pressure. But for the most part, these are monies that were needed to get benefits to Albertans.

Secondly, these income support programs also provide training and retraining so that these people can get back into the job market. So it's going to that end as well.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.

Mr. McIver: Zero per cent administration. That's impressive.

An Hon. Member: That's not what he said.

Mr. McIver: That's not what he said. Okay.

Mr. Sabir: That's exactly not what I said. There are admin costs around this program. That's given in Budget 2016. That has been split, but this increase was needed to get Albertans the benefits they need.

Mr. McIver: Okay. So my question was . . .

Mr. Sabir: So the admin costs are already stated in the previous 2015-16 budget. They are given there in the line items, but these were to deal with the pressures that we were facing. Were we doing just hiring with that? No. For the most part, I am saying that this amount is going to get benefits to Albertans.

The Deputy Chair: Minister, thank you.

We are now moving on to the Member for Calgary-Mountain View. No? Okay.

We will now move on to the government side. We will look to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. Will you be going back and forth for a total of 10 minutes?

Loyola: Yes. Back and forth with the Minister of Seniors and Housing, please.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. Please go ahead.

Loyola: Yeah. Thank you. Well, before I start, please let me take this opportunity to wish you a happy International Women's Day, Madam Chair. Since I'm asking questions to the Minister of Seniors and Housing, I'll wish her a happy International Women's Day as well.

Of course, I'm referring to page 70 in the document that we have before us. To the Minister of Seniors and Housing. I'm hoping that she can elaborate on the $2 million that is expected for the seniors' home adaptation and repair loan program. What's the additional funding required for?

The Deputy Chair: Minister, please go ahead.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the member for the question. Yes. We did ask for an additional $2 million for that program because it has been enormously successful. Many Albertan seniors want to remain in their communities, and doing home renovations – sometimes we have mobility issues as we age, so sometimes renovating a home so there aren't carpets that can get in the way of a walker or putting bars around the bathtub, all sorts of things, really helps seniors be able to be comfortable and safe in their own home. This program, that we announced last summer, is a very successful program, and many seniors are asking for the funding of the program. So we have a larger uptake than we anticipated, which is a good thing; therefore, we do need an additional $2 million. Of course, this is to fund the loan program. These funds will come back to us as a government, but it will help seniors now age in their communities, close to family and friends, which we know is where they want to be. It's an excellent program that's serving seniors in Alberta very well.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Madam Chair. Once again, I know that the Minister of Seniors and Housing is pretty passionate about this program. In order to help us understand it a little better, I'm hoping that she can give us a particular success story that she's aware of and further elaborate on how this makes life better for seniors.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you very much, Madam Chair. Certainly, there are many success stories to be shared, but there is one in particular that I'm happy to share, and that's about a couple that live in Sherwood Park. Their names are Jill and David. Jill has multiple sclerosis. This is a degenerative disease, so she has progressive difficulty with going up stairs. They live in a split-level. This program helped them install a lift on their stairs so that she can access the basement and the second floor. They estimated that they can probably live there for 10 more years.

They have this magnificent home in Sherwood Park that they love, very close to their friends and family, a beautiful backyard that they've sort of lovingly nurtured over the years. This program is enabling them to be able to stay in that community, enjoying their surroundings. It's really giving them, you know, an enhanced quality of life. Unfortunately, Jill's disease, her multiple sclerosis, is degenerative, and over time it may get worse, and there may be a time when they're not able to stay in their home. But for now and for some time to come this program helps them. They said that they would have had to move, like, within the next six months, but because of this, it's given them about another 10 years to be able to stay in their own home because they could not afford those repairs without this home equity loan.

I'm very pleased to say that we are supporting seniors to stay in their own homes and their own communities and be able to do that safely and to really enjoy the pleasures of the home that they've lived in for many, many years. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Yes. Thank you. While I've been door-knocking in my community – and I'm sure it's been the same for many MLAs here in the Assembly – I've heard from a number of seniors who have talked about the importance for them of aging in place and staying in their own homes. I understand how this program is a benefit for that in a number of ways. I imagine that that's the reason for such a high demand on these programs. I'm hoping that you can elaborate, Minister, from your own experience, on why there's such a high demand on this program.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you very much. I mean, I think it shows that there is obviously a need in the community. People do want to stay in their own homes, and they want to make sure, you know, that they can be living safely when sometimes they have mobility concerns. We estimated – it was the first year of the program, so certainly the ministry did their best to estimate, and obviously we're a little bit short, $2 million short. But it's all good. It's wonderful that so many seniors are seeing the program as an important and helpful way for them to be able to stay in their own homes.

You know, certainly, over time we'll have better data to be able to share about how come there's such a great uptake, but I think it has a lot to do with the need in the community and seniors being well informed about the program. We certainly work with networks of seniors' centres and different groups across the province so that they know about the program. We've done lots of promotion. Seniors see this as a very good opportunity for them to be able to do the renovations that they need in their home. It doesn't have to only be regarding sort of what I've described already. Sometimes you need a new roof, and you don't have the income to be able to do that.

The thing about this loan program is that it's simple interest. You don't have a monthly payment. You only pay when you sell your house or, you know, if the estate sells the house, so you don't have to have that burden of a monthly payment, and it's at prime. These are things that we offer: a much better deal than if you went to the bank.

I think all of these combined have demonstrated to seniors in this province that this program is, really, a helpful program that really supports them, so we're so pleased that there has been this great uptake of it. We're looking forward to supporting many more seniors to be able to age in their communities and their own homes in a safe way.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you. It's wonderful to hear that the program is such an amazing success and that there are so many Alberta seniors out there that are taking advantage of the program. Minister, let me ask you: do you think that the increased demand is manageable?

Ms Sigurdson: Absolutely. We're very pleased that even more people than we anticipated have taken advantage of the seniors' home adaptation program. As I said, you know, seniors want to be in their communities, close to family and friends, and we're pleased to be able to support them to stay in their own homes.

Some of the things that they're doing are putting in energy efficient furnaces, maybe flooring, windows, things that will support them to have their homes well maintained and, you know, make sure that they're safe for them to stay in their communities. We absolutely have the capacity to support them, and we're pleased to give all these seniors the opportunity to do the maintenance that they really need to do on their homes and really enjoy being in the communities that they've lived in for many years.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.
The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Yes. Thank you, Minister. You've given us quite a few examples of maintenance projects that seniors have been able to follow through with. I'm just wondering. Could you comment on: what are the most common repairs under the SHARP program? If you could elaborate on that.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Yes. Thank you so much. Certainly, you know, it's really up to the seniors what they identify as the needs they have to repair their home or renovate it in some way, but common ones are widening doorways or hallways to increase accessibility – someone might be in a wheelchair; therefore they need that wider access – and installing walk-in tubs. Oftentimes when you're sitting in a tub, it's difficult to get out. Walk-in tubs, of course, very much enable seniors to be able to have access without having the concern of not being able to get out, which, of course, is very important for their safety. Roof and window replacements: they may not have the funds to replace the windows that they want to have upgraded, and certainly roofs over time deteriorate. That's another common reason that they're asking for this funding.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.

We are now back to the Official Opposition for 10 minutes of back and forth if you would like. The Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate being able to talk with the Minister of Transportation about these supplementary supply estimates. I have some questions, found on page 78, first of all, Minister. If we could talk about that. In there it says that there's going to be $210,000 for administering the climate leadership plan, the green infrastructure initiative. I just want clarity if I could. It looks like it's possibly operating dollars for three full-time equivalent employees: a manager, a couple of program service employees. Am I correct in this, Minister?

Mr. Mason: Yes, you are, hon. member.
Do I need to stand up?

The Deputy Chair: Yes, hon. minister, please.

Mr. Mason: I've been here longer than anyone else. I should be able to sit down and answer questions.

The Deputy Chair: Please go ahead, Minister.

Mr. Mason: Yes.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Minister. Levity is appreciated.

Is the ADM of the safety, policy, and engineering division the oversight for this program administration?

Mr. Mason: Well, if you'll just give me a second to find my notes.

I think the $210,000 in operating expense is to create a work area to lead and manage ministry climate change initiatives and to explore additional policies and programs. This area will develop, monitor, and evaluate policy and program options; work with stakeholders, municipalities, community leaders, and industry groups; and educate and inform the public about the new emission reduction initiatives. The funding is from the climate change and emissions management fund with the Ministry of Environment and Parks. There will be no impact on the deficit.

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Minister of Infrastructure and of Transportation, but pursuant to Standing Order 4(3) the committee shall now rise and report progress.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

Mr. Hinkley: Madam Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration supplementary supply estimates, No. 2, for the 2016-2017 financial year, reports progress thereon, and requests leave to sit again.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Does the Assembly concur in the report? All those in favour, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Acting Speaker: All those opposed, please say no. So ordered.

Mr. Mason: Madam Speaker, I would like to move that we call it 6 o'clock and adjourn until 9 o'clock tomorrow morning.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. Government House Leader.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:57 p.m.]

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

Prayers

The Acting Speaker: Let us reflect. As we conclude our work this week, let us keep in mind why we are here. Let us strive to help one another to reach our common goals and continue to work diligently on behalf of Albertans for the betterment of our province. Amen.

Please be seated.

Committee of Supply

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

Supplementary Supply Estimates 2016-17, No. 2 General Revenue Fund

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, before we commence this morning's consideration of supplementary supply, I would like to remind you where the committee left off in the rotation. When the Committee of Supply reported progress yesterday, the Official Opposition had the floor, with eight minutes remaining in its 10-minute allotment with the minister. The committee had completed two hours and 24 minutes of consideration. As provided for in Standing Order 59.02, the rotation under Standing Order 59.01(6) is deemed to apply, which means the rotation will then proceed as follows:

- (c) for the next [10] minutes, the members of the third party, if any, and the Minister or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak.
- (d.1) for the next [10] minutes, the members of any other party represented in the Assembly or any independent Members and the Minister, or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak.
- (e) for the next [10] minutes, private members of the Government caucus and the Minister or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak.

The rotation will then repeat for any time remaining.

Speaking times are now limited to five minutes; however, provided that the chair has been notified, a minister and a private member may combine their speaking time, with both taking and yielding the floor during the combined period.

Finally, at the conclusion of six hours of consideration or earlier if no members are wishing to speak, the Committee of Supply shall vote on the supplementary supply estimates.

Are there any members from the Official Opposition wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. My questions are regarding Health.

The Deputy Chair: Would you like to go back and forth?

Mr. Yao: I'm fine with back and forth if you guys are.

The Deputy Chair: Please go ahead.

Mr. Yao: Excellent. To the hon. Minister of Finance or to the Minister of Health. The transfer of $1.5 million from Environment and Parks is requested for green infrastructure as part of the climate leadership plan. The monies are being transferred from Environment and Parks for green infrastructure. Can you give specific examples for this $1.5 million, please, and where exactly you're spending it?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Yeah. Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. At this point, since it's such a small amount, we're focused on the easiest savings, which is through the replacement of inefficient light fixtures and electricity distribution of light in the facilities. It's primarily going to be used in acute care, all AHS facilities at this point, and it's going to be focused on the light bulbs, primarily, or the light fixtures.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Yao: Did you factor in any increased operational costs for our health care facilities due to the increased cost of energy? Where is the increase in the operating costs included? Or did you take the Wildrose suggestion and exempt health care facilities and other such?

Ms Hoffman: Health care facilities are very proud and happy to do their part in terms of being responsible energy consumers and curbing their electricity use where it's possible. That's one of the reasons why they're keen to take advantage of some of the opportunities that exist through low-hanging fruit like changing light bulbs to find ways to do some curbing of electricity.

We'll be considering the overall budget next week, and there may be opportunities for us to have some discussions following that about ways that there might be additional opportunities to curb electricity use or how we're going to adjust for the very small possible increase on the cost for usage in those facilities. We're happy to do our part as major health infrastructure throughout the province to curb our use to make sure that we're responsible on behalf of the taxpayer and using responsibly.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The member, please.

Mr. Yao: Thank you very much. Just to go back to that $1.5 million, you said that that was for things like light bulbs, things like that. Is that not part of Ecofitt's mandate? Is this in addition, supplemental to those funds as well?

Ms Hoffman: I believe – and if I'm wrong, I'll be sure to follow up in writing – that rather than applying through Ecofitt, this is strictly a transfer of funds to focus specifically on those initiatives. They are the initiatives that I believe would be part of the green energy plan as a whole, but Health is fulfilling those themselves directly through the transfer of these funds rather than using other means that could be used to support residential Albertans so that the programs that are in place there can focus on supporting families. Alberta Health is doing their part to make sure that they do the transfer and try to move as effectively as possible in doing these initiatives that will help curb their usage.

Thank you.

Mr. Yao: The sum of $20 million for continuing care beds due to contractual obligations: can you explain the contractual obligations that result in that additional sum of $19.454 million, please?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Happily, Madam Chair. The total ASLI projects were committed to over many years, and some of the funds were planned to be distributed next year. Good news: the projects are moving more quickly than they'd been planned, so this is money that was in next year's budget that we're moving into this year's current budget. It's money that was planned on being spent in the next fiscal year, but because we were able to move quickly with the construction, we're moving it up to this year.

Mr. Yao: You have $54 million for primary care physician remuneration, $210 million for specialist physician remuneration, so you're recording an increase to physician remuneration for primary care and specialists to the tune of $264 million. Can you explain that? If that's contractual, shouldn't that have been budgeted for previously?

The Deputy Chair: The minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much. Absolutely a fair question. You probably recall that we did have a contract with the physicians of Alberta and we asked them to come back through the AMA to the table more than two years before their contract was set to expire. The targets that we put in the budget last year were very aggressive targets. We were in the midst of negotiating, and we were hopeful that we'd be able to see all of those potential savings. What we did see was up to $500 million over two years. So we saw a significant portion of what we were hoping for and what we laid out in the budget documents. Obviously, through negotiation there's an ebb and a flow, and I'm very proud of the fact that we were able to work in partnership with the doctors to realize $500 million in savings over two years, but it isn't as aggressive as we put in the budget documents, which were in the midst of negotiations.

Thank you.

Mr. Yao: Thank you.

The last question. I'm astonished to see some savings here. I didn't think that was possible, so thank you so much for that. That said, it's only $60,000. Can you explain where you found those savings? Like, was it infrastructure, was it equipment, fewer patients, like, a lower call volume? Can you explain those savings?

The Deputy Chair: Go ahead, Minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Madam Chair. I believe this is one of the questions that was asked yesterday that I have responses for today as well. So when we do have a chance to read in those responses, I won't read this one in for a second time. Thank you for the opportunity today.

Most of the savings initiatives that were undertaken are more long-term savings initiatives, so we're hopeful that we'll be able to see those savings in the out-years as well. For example, through the work that AHS has been doing in the 16 major hospitals around operational best practices, there are some areas in terms of delivery costs on the front line that have been able to change some of the staffing complement or find ways to realign patients and the way that they're being served. That's one of the major examples.

Another one is some of the significant savings that we saw through the RAPID eye program, which moves patients from a very high-cost drug that was used to treat macular degeneration to a far more affordable drug that we use to treat macular degeneration. That was in the midst of the fiscal year, so some of those savings were realized because of that.

These initiatives are going to continue for Albertans for years to come, and we've seen some very good results with those in the short term as well as changes that have been made to the schedule of medical benefits. Present projected adjustments to billing are expected to result in about $100 million in savings over the next year without impacting quality or access to patients. That, of course, is a very good thing.

We're working on a new funding formula as well: blended capitation, as it's been referred to. It will enable patients who require more time with their physicians to spend a little bit of that, and the physicians will still be compensated in a way that won't punish them for spending more time with patients that sometimes have more complex care needs.

Some of these savings and initiatives are the ones that were realized this year, and we look forward to seeing opportunities to capitalize on those and others in the years to come.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.

Mr. Yao: My apologies. I actually do have one last question.

The Deputy Chair: Please go ahead.

Mr. Yao: We're spending a lot of money due to an increased number of claimants accessing brand name drugs. Can I just get clarity? I'm assuming that there are no generics available, that these are newer drugs that are fresh on the market, that are trying to accommodate our disease processes.

Ms Hoffman: Absolutely. Some of these are biologics or biosimilars that are looking at specifically treating hepatitis or other diseases that are quite complex. They are new treatments that are actually able to cure some of these illnesses. These are areas where there isn't a comparable generic right now.

Mr. Yao: Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.

We will now move on to the third party. Are there any members wishing to speak? Hon. Member for Calgary-West, were you . . .

Mr. Ellis: No.

The Deputy Chair: You're good? All right.

We will move on, then, to the government side. There are no independent members here, so it will be the government side at this time. I recognize that the Minister of Health would like to read some information into the record. I'm just wondering if the government side would be willing to cede some time for her to be able to do that.

Some Hon. Members: Yes.

The Deputy Chair: Please go ahead, Minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Some of this may actually elaborate further on the questions that were just asked from the critic from the Official Opposition.

With regard to $250 million in savings that was realized this year, this was around savings that were surplus across the ministry, so this included things like $64 million from physician compensation development programs, including physician benefits due to the amending agreement that we touched on; $60 million in primary health care, which is due to the application of accumulated surpluses that were carried over from past years. I think that there is no more important time to access some of these savings than in this current very difficult fiscal situation. I'm really proud of the fact that the primary care networks and my office and department were able to work on a plan that would enable us to use those savings. That was $60 million that they had that wasn't going towards patient care.

We also had $53 million in a variety of other drug and supplementary health benefit programs, including $37 million from lower-than-anticipated outpatient specialized, high-cost drugs and lower-than-anticipated expenses for assured income for the severely handicapped benefits. That was a bit of a surprise, something that we can't necessarily bank on because it's always a demand-driven program, but demand didn't actually meet what the projections were on that line item this year.

The $23 million in community programs and healthy living: most of this was reduced spending due to prior year surpluses that organizations had that they were able to capitalize on. Again acknowledging that we're in very difficult financial times, we're appreciating partners in the community stepping up when they do have surpluses that they can use to carry on their programs. They're doing that this year and last year. A $4 million surplus, for example, in this area was realigned to resources to better meet the support of management and oversight in the health system within the ministry. That was offset by a corresponding $4 million in the ministry support services. We're realigning some of those resources to meet demand where it's most significant.

We also had $3 million due to vacant positions and reduced contract requirements within the department itself.

The $3 million surplus in immunization support is due to the prior year's surplus. The prior year's immunizations weren't accessed to the same degree that was anticipated, so some of that surplus carried over. That meant we didn't spend it out of this year's allocation.

The $5.6 million surplus in children's initiatives is due to some different areas, again, where they had surpluses in community that they used to carry over their funding and bridge it.

The $5.4 million was unallocated grant areas this year. But we certainly have significant plans for that in the upcoming year: $19 million for the information systems, cancer research and prevention investment as well as $4 million for ministry support services, which is offset by that surplus that we had in the community programs and healthy living deficits and reflects the realignment of resources within the department to better support the management and oversight of those areas within the system.

These were some of the additional highlights that I wanted to mention that I know arose from questions yesterday. There was a second one, around agreement with the AMA, and I believe that we did discuss that in the member from Fort McMurray's question. I believe that that addresses any questions that were outstanding from yesterday.

I'd like to thank you, Madam Chair, and the House and my government colleagues for allowing me some time to read that into the record to ensure that those questions are adequately addressed while we engage in this exciting and lively debate this morning.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any government members wishing to speak?

Seeing none, we will now return to the Official Opposition. Hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon, would you like to go back and forth with the minister and combine your time?

Mr. Smith: Yeah. I'd like to go back and forth if I could, please.

The Deputy Chair: Please go ahead.

Mr. Smith: Thank you for remembering where I come from, my roots.

I want to rise today to address the supplementary supply. I'll forgive the minister, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, if he thinks that he got rid of me earlier. Now I'm back, so this may be a nightmare – I don't know – but, no, this is real life, okay? Okay.

This transfer amount from Education: it appears to be about $107 million. You're transferring it from capital investment into your operations and maintenance, and it appears that that is the only amount that you're really dealing with in the supply estimates here. So $107 million is a lot of money. Where did you find the money from capital?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you. I appreciate that, Madam Chair, and the hon. member for reminding me as well that this is, in fact, reality.

I'll just give you the whole kind of package, and then, you know, we can talk about it more specifically as you see fit. Based on these estimates, then, the department's 2016-17 spending targets have increased by $106.7 million. This increase is actually a transfer – okay? – from capital investment to operating expense to provide funding for the operations and maintenance of school facilities. This transfer will not result in a net change to the overall government budget as there is also an offsetting $106.7 million reduction in capital investment.

This action reflects better how school boards are using the funds provided through the infrastructure maintenance and renewal grant, otherwise known as IMR, to address minor repairs conducted to maintain their facilities. School boards will often charge these costs as operating expenses as opposed to capital investments, and this is an accounting procedure that follows their manual for accounting. These repairs do not extend the useful life of their buildings or assets. I should also just note that this transfer does not affect the total IMR envelope for 2016-17. That remains at $138.8 million. It's basically a transfer from capital to upgrading, and it's a reflection of the accounting that takes place between our ministry, the department, and each of the school boards.

Let's not forget as well, Madam Chair, that basically we transfer more than 95 per cent of all of our monies that flow through Education to the school boards, so you'll see often quite a lot of differences. For example, their fiscal year is different from ours. Again, this IMR transfer that's just reflected here in the quarterly update is a reflection of some of those differences as well.

Thank you.

9:20

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The member.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. I guess the question that I – I realize that it's going from capital to operations and maintenance, okay? But where did you find that money in the capital budget? I heard you say that it's going to go towards doing minor repairs, and that's a good thing. We do need to keep our schools maintained as we move forward. But did you consult? How did you come up with the figure of $107 million? That $107 million is coming out of capital. That money was targeted for something else, I would assume, so where did you find that money, $107 million, a lot of money, to go from capital into operations and maintenance? Who was consulted?

The Deputy Chair: The minister.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thank you for that question. Again, each of the school boards is aware of this. They have different amounts on an annual basis, but the procedure or the circumstance is the same. In order to account for the money that is otherwise registered on the books of individual school boards as operating, this transfer is necessary. It's not a question of really finding money as such, but it's a way for us to account for and to balance those two columns between the school boards' ledgers and the way that they account for IMR funding and the government of Alberta's accounting. It is something, if you look back, that does take place in estimates usually at this time, and it's a way for us to sort of update the current situation as we move forward between IMR funding and capital expenses.

You know, just as an aside as well, certainly our capital expenditures and our way of flowing through capital monies to school boards and to projects has been going very well. We have built a just-in-time funding mechanism, by which we have school boards and projects submit their expenses instead of giving them just lump sums on a periodic basis, and I believe that's been part of the way we have increased the efficiency of both the speed of building our new projects and also the accounting of the money that pays for those projects. For example, I think about half of our projects from last October were behind, and we have reduced that considerably. The school boards would take that money on a periodic basis and just put it in the bank and get interest off it. Instead, we are keeping it in the government of Alberta's coffers and then doing the same in that way. I mean, it's a way by which we can rationalize the budgets between the operating and capital, and this is a reflection of that.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.
The member.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. Okay. I guess I still need a little bit more clarity. I'm glad that you did bring in the idea of previous school builds, and I want to touch on that as well as tying it to this conversation. I'm not sure that I understand exactly. I know that you put in gatekeeping. You just mentioned here that boards are coming back with their projected needs, and then you're meeting them at the time that they need that money and that funding. That seems like a reasonable way of doing things and probably a better way of doing things.

I guess the question I've got, then, is this. You talked about previous builds. You've got $107 million that you're taking out of capital and now rearranging and placing back into operations and maintenance. I'm wondering: are there any schools that were slated for completion in 2015 that are not yet finished, and then how about 2016 and 2017? The reason I'm asking that is that I want to know how that relates to the $107 million that you're transferring to operations and maintenance.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The minister.

Mr. Eggen: Okay. Sure. That's great. In regard to your first question in regard to schools that were either as a new build or as a major renovation, for those ones that were delayed, I will be happy to get those numbers to you. I don't have them right here at my fingertips.

Then in regard to this transfer amount: again, this transfer amount provides funding for operations and maintenance of school facilities. We have it sitting on our books as capital, and they put it on their books as infrastructure and maintenance, so that's the only differential. You know, I have looked into the difference in the accounting, and it is in keeping with standard accounting practice for individual school boards as per accounting manuals. I've also looked into the possibility of them making some alterations so that we have more alignment between the accounting principles that we use between the government of Alberta and individual school boards. That's an ongoing thing that I just thought would help to . . .

[A timer sounded]

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.

Mr. Eggen: . . . you know, not have this particular pursuit here . . .

The Deputy Chair: Minister.

Mr. Eggen: . . . taking place on a quarterly basis. Was that the end of my . . .

The Deputy Chair: Your time is up.

Mr. Eggen: Oh. I'm sorry.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Mr. Eggen: I thought I'd heard a bell.

The Deputy Chair: Are there any members from the third party wishing to speak?

Seeing none, are there any independent members wishing to speak?

Seeing none, are there any members from the government? Would you like to go back and forth, hon. Member for Calgary-Currie?

Mr. Malkinson: Yes, I would, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. Please go ahead.

Mr. Malkinson: My question is for the Minister of Health. I'm just wondering what measures the ministry is taking to reduce the cost of drugs for Albertans. I know this is an issue I hear at the doorstep in my riding rather often.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Chair and to the member for the question. It's something that we, I think, all hear about. There are studies that say that about 25 per cent of Canadians don't use their prescription drugs as prescribed because they're worried about the cost. This is something that, of course, has negative health impacts for them and potentially could impact long-term costs that they incur themselves and also that the system would should their conditions worsen and they come to the point where they might need to be patients within the system and then in an in-patient way. Certainly, it's, I believe, in everyone's best interest to make sure that we're taking significant efforts to move forward in making the cost of drugs more affordable for Albertans and Alberta families.

We are working with provinces and territories through the FPT work that we've been doing to negotiate reduced prices on those brand name drugs that we've referred to earlier. There are definitely some jurisdictions in the world that are getting better per-pill returns on their investment. One of the things that we've heard is that Canada's buying power just isn't as large as some of the other, more densely populated countries in the world. We are working to make sure that we, at a minimum, work as united jurisdictions throughout Canada. It still doesn't make Canada as large as the population in many other countries, but it does give us a far more significant buying power. So that is one of the areas.

As well, the majority of negotiations that we have been engaged in around product listing agreement rebates: we can't speak about those publicly because of confidential agreements within the pricing piece. What we pay for it is public. There are a number of different drug companies that actually do give rebates back to the province of Alberta. While we aren't able to talk about the amounts, know that that is an avenue that we pursue aggressively at every opportunity. Sometimes they are straight in-cash rebates. Sometimes they are benefits through research and development. These are some of the areas that – obviously, we have to respect the contract agreements – we do pursue whenever there is an opportunity.

Additionally, Alberta's price policy limits the three-year price increase that drugs manufacturers may request so that we have fixed prices for at least three years at a time. Again, through confidentiality agreements with manufacturers, if the brand drug is not subject to other price control mechanisms such as availability of generic alternatives or a product listing agreement, these price increases will be rebated back to Albertans through direct payments to the treasury. These are opportunities that we pursue wherever there is a possibility for us to access a few more dollars to go back into supporting Albertans and the programs that they rely on.

Make no mistake: drug costs are continuing to rise, though. Science is evolving – this is a good thing – and new drugs are coming on-label regularly, but the costs of them are very aggressive. I think it's important – period – that we work in a way that is professional and collaborative but also that we don't let ourselves be held hostage. It is challenging because we want to make sure that everyone has opportunities. Where science has proven that there could be benefits, we need to pursue those, absolutely.

The interest, of course, of the manufacturers: they have responsibilities to their shareholders as well as to the scientific community, and I respect that. We have responsibilities to the citizens who require those drugs as well as to taxpayers, and I hope they respect that as well. We're working to make sure that we make drugs as affordable as possible.

There has also been a working group created through the federal-provincial-territorial committee to make sure that we have opportunities to come up with ways that we might be able to expand on pharmacare within Canada. We know that we have drug plans for seniors. We have drug plans for very low-income Albertans. There are lots of other areas where for folks it's just such a barrier.

It's not within the Canada Health Act today, but we know that, for example, children in middle-income families who have extraordinary health costs can significantly benefit from having a provincial or, rather, a national pharmacare strategy. There is research happening within the federal-provincial-territorial groups being led by Ontario right now about what the costs would be as a whole and ways that we might be able to partner and call upon the federal government to support us in making sure that children who require drugs for a number of different conditions have access to those because, really, at the end of the day, money should never be a barrier to having good quality health care.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. You know, it's interesting and timely. I talked with the Health minister. I remember I was visiting my grandma earlier this year, who was, unfortunately, in the hospital for a little bit. After she came out of some surgery, she was in the hospital for a while, and during that time, actually, I saw the long-term care that was available at that particular hospital. From what I saw there and the good care that does happen in those facilities, it sort of reinforced my New Democratic principles. You know, we had a major platform commitment to build 2,000 new long-term care beds to help cut waiting times so that every Albertan, including my grandma, can get the help they need and also to reduce pressures on our hospitals.

I was wondering. To the Minister of Health: how does the $19 million that's identified here in the supplements support that goal?

The Deputy Chair: Go ahead, Minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. One of the things that I mentioned previously is that we've been very fortunate to have some of the construction move along more quickly than what was outlined within the budgets. Some of the projects that were planned on being at this point of development in the next fiscal year are actually ready now, and that's one of the reasons why we've asked that $19 million be moved up to help us meet those contractual obligations through the Alberta supportive living initiative, also known as ASLI.

When we were elected, ASLI was well under way, and a number of projects had been preannounced, one might say, just before the election, and one of the things that the department – then it was under Seniors; now it's under Health – took upon themselves with, obviously, encouragement and support from us was to meet with the people who had been announced, find out which projects were viable into the long term and find out if there were any ways that we could address the needs in the communities better through these resource allocations for capital.

Through this, I have to say that 25 of the original 31 projects were able to move forward. That is very good news. For the ones that weren't, we just weren't willing to invest public resources if we weren't confident that they would be sustainable into the long term. We, of course, want to make sure that we're getting the very best return for every taxpayer dollar, every Albertan's dollar, as possible.

So we're moving forward with the 25 projects. There were over 2,200 long-term care and dementia care spaces just within those projects. We have been working diligently to make sure that the higher levels of care are available. Those who are, obviously, in hospital and it's not safe for them to be at home with home care or in lower levels of care should be our top priority. We are proud that we've been able to work in partnership with those service providers to make sure that they, wherever feasible, were able to deliver on those higher level of care beds that were needed.

So with that additional $19 million: it's supporting those projects as they near completion and are beginning to come online. Of course, for anyone who's living in a hospital bed who would rather be in a home-like environment, it's important for those beds to come online as soon as possible. For anyone who's in the community in a way that they could be more safely cared for in an acute-care or dementia care space, it's very important. So I'm keen to be asking for this $19 million to be spent this year rather than next year because, of course, it does help those folks live with dignity in an increased way, I would say. It also helps our hospitals use the spaces that are currently being used by folks who are ready to move into these spaces to reallocate those to patients who need to be in acute care and it's just not currently available.

I really do think that these 2,200 ASLI spaces coming online as quickly as possible is going to create better opportunities within our acute-care health care system as well as better living opportunities for the folks that you mentioned, hon. member, just like your grandmother, who might need enhanced supports. There are so many folks in this province who really do require that, and of course I believe and we believe that it's the government's responsibility to meet that demand.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

We will now return to the Official Opposition. The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon. Will you be going back and forth?

Mr. Smith: I would appreciate that.

The Deputy Chair: Yeah. Please go ahead.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Minister, based on our conversation that we were having just a few minutes ago, I guess a question that came out of our conversation is: have you changed from last year to this year the accounting practices that you follow? I mean, I assumed that how you've handled IMR funding in the past is probably going to be similar to the way you've done the accounting for this past year. Why $107 million for IMR funding this year if you've handled and done the same accounting practices as in the past?

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thanks. I appreciate the question. Yes, I believe that it is the same procedure that did take place last year. The only difference is in the number amount, but in regard to the actual event and procedure I believe it's the same as it was before.

You know, again, as I said, I did investigate the difference between the accounting practices of individual school boards and the government of Alberta and did pursue that to see what we could do to align that, and that is still, I guess, being looked at. But for this time and this year this is what is happening. It's a transfer, so it doesn't affect the bottom line of how our budget goes forward. You know, like I say, the school boards will charge it as an operating even though it's capital. I mean, I guess there's some reason to suggest that there is an argument to say that it actually is capital because you're putting, let's say, shingles on a roof or changing windows and so forth. But, as I say, it doesn't affect the envelope that we provide for IMR funding for schools, so we're not shortchanging them in any way.

We definitely see the value of investing in maintenance. Especially with all these new schools that we're building, I want to make sure that there are proper protocols set into place that would have a proper regime for maintenance over the lifetime of a new building. We don't want to have all these new, wonderful schools built without, of course, putting the money aside and the procedures aside to ensure that they get the full life of that building by ensuring that there's proper maintenance being invested into each of those.

Yeah. Again, just to your question, I believe this is the procedure that we did follow from last year, and that is the way that we're doing this whole procedure.

I mean, there are lots of aging buildings and structures in our school boards around the province. You know, for example, in Calgary and Edmonton – I think Edmonton probably has at least 90 schools that are over 50 years of age, so we know that it's very important to invest in structures that are over 50 years of age. It's important to invest in people that are over 50 years of age as well, as you and I know both very well. I invest longer and longer every morning when I wake up to look as good as I do.

Anyway, to the point again, we, I think, in the future might look to streamlining some accounting ledgers between the individual school boards and the ministry, the government of Alberta, but this is certainly a thoroughly transparent mechanism that we do have here in place that does not affect either the IMR funding or the overall ledgers of either individual school boards or the Ministry of Education.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.

The hon. member.

Mr. Smith: Okay. Thank you, Madam Chair. To the hon. minister, I want to make sure that nobody in Alberta figures that we're taking some of that $107 million and investing it in this 50-year-old infrastructure here – okay? – maybe Health but probably not Education. Okay.

I hate to come back to this, but if you haven't changed your accounting principles and you had a budget that set aside a certain amount for IMR and a certain amount for capital, you are taking $107 million out of the capital budget, your capital budget, and you're reassigning it into the IMR. I've got a question here. How can that not affect the capital plan? You've already told me that you haven't got all of your school builds completed. You've said that there are still schools, I understand, that are not finished and not completed, and now you're taking $106 million out of the capital budget for badly needed schools in Alberta and giving it to IMR. Why? Is that not going to affect the capital plan that we have in the schools moving forward? Could we not use that $107 million for where it was planned in the budget for those schools, or am I missing something here?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thank you. You know, I certainly will check to get clarification on that. I do not believe that it has any effect on our capital commitments, but I certainly will check to get clarification on that.

Offhand, I know, of course, that capital projects proceed over an annual basis, right? Like, let's say that a typical example is a major modernization, which more typically end up overdue because you have kids in the school while you are doing the renovation. It's not as though capital monies are an annualized thing that disappears on an annual basis if you don't spend it, right? For example, if we have, you know, five projects that are overdue in this year, if they're not being ready and open in September, then that money and that continues on over the next number of months until we get the job done. Yeah, I mean, I was always concerned about that from the beginning, too, but of course our capital monies do stay with the projects from year to year or month to month even if they do move over the time that they did.

You know, in fact, what I've noticed with our just-in-time funding mechanism that we've put into place is that we might be retaining more of the capital monies that go to individual projects. We're only paying for something when a bill comes due – right? – so if they're putting in the next section of the building or the new modules or something like that, then that money moves over only when we need it there, not just being dropped into quarterly lump-sum payments to either Infrastructure or to individual school boards if they're building their own schools. That has created some difference on the capital side of things.

Certainly, hon. member, I appreciate your line of questioning. It's very legitimate. I will certainly pursue that and give you a written detailed answer as to the state of moving money to IMR and its effect on capital projects.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. member.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. Okay. I'm getting a little more confused here as time goes on. If the money stays with the capital project for the entirety of that project and you're taking $107 million out of capital, then only one of two things can happen. You have to be able to explain where you're getting that $107 million worth of efficiencies from that capital project, or you have to be taking it out of next year's budget. Is that what you're doing? Where is that $107 million coming from? What is it going to? Have you got projects for IMR? I'd like you to start first with that question. You've got monies that are staying with the capital project – that's what you just said – so then where is that $107 million coming from, and how can it not be affecting the capital project as it moves forward?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thank you. As I said, I will certainly pursue this in regard to the integrity of capital projects.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, your time is now up. Thank you.
Moving on now to the third party, are there any members wishing to speak at this time? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, are you looking to go back and forth, or would you like to . . .

Mr. Gotfried: Yes, please. That would be preferred.

The Deputy Chair: Please go ahead.

Mr. Gotfried: This question would be directed within the portfolio of Community and Social Services. Hopefully, we can get some answers from those in the House. After two iterations of this government's failed job-creation plans, it's left over a hundred thousand Albertans still unemployed, which is obviously of concern to all of us in this Legislature. I'd like to understand why Community and Social Services is only now asking for the $111 million for still more employment and income support. That's on page 26.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I will do my level best, and if there are further details, we'll be sure to table those in the House as soon as possible.

What I can say, given that we do cover the supplementary drug costs for those folks who are on those programs, is that during the year there's been an ebb and flow in terms of the number of applicants who are eligible for those types of coverage. It's, again, a program that's demand driven. If applications and approvals go up in one quarter, then we'll be needing to come forward for additional monies sometimes because the numbers ebb and flow throughout the year. It's not until that sort of fourth-quarter period that you know where you're going to come out for the whole year overall. That's why at this point there would be the request for a supplementary increase, because there isn't the certainty in Q1 that necessarily everyone who's on that program will still be on that program at Q4. I think there's some variability that results, based on the applications and the number of people who meet the criteria for those programs.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Minister. You know, I think we're in a period of time here where I'm hoping that Labour and Community and Social Services are working very close together. There are obviously lots of predictions to be done in terms of statistics, in terms of employment opportunities. We understand that there have been jobs created, some of those part-time, not full-time necessarily, which could still leave a lot of families under stress. I guess one of my questions is: with still over a hundred thousand unemployed Albertans and tens of thousands of underemployed Albertans, how are we going to be sure that they're getting what they need and value for money with this additional investment, that will help them through these difficult times and perhaps even help them to find alternate employment, not just income support?

The Deputy Chair: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Yeah. Thank you very much. Again, if there are further details that I am not aware of, we'll be happy to table those.

With regard to these programs many of them work in partnership with community agencies. I know, for example, in working with the Métis Nation of Alberta, they've been doing a lot of work around making sure that they have the right employment counselling in a variety of communities based on where the needs are. As well, there are a number of people helping navigate folks back into postsecondary. This is a perfect time for those opportunities to be embraced and harnessed. For example, I know that earlier this week the Minister of Advanced Education announced that another thousand tradespeople would be having opportunities to go back and further their education in this fiscal year. So part of it is about employment counselling, part of it is about harnessing opportunities for further training at this time, and part of it is that there are families who just straight up need these supports, monetary supports, and making sure that we have the options available to do all of those.

I would be happy to direct any supplementary responses on this line of questioning, if there are any, to my colleague the Minister of Finance.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Deputy Premier.

Mr. Gotfried: I guess just one further question, which is sort of along the same line. Obviously, we're providing some funding for people to retrain and to find alternate employment opportunities. We're hearing a lot about new jobs, new economy jobs, green economy, and economic diversification. What specifically is the ministry doing to direct funds to those specific areas of training that will help employees to find jobs in the new economy and to fulfill the needs that we'll see, skills like maybe changing light bulbs and things like that?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the member for the question. As Minister of Advanced Education I oversee the portfolio that plays a significant role in training and retraining Albertans for the jobs of tomorrow. Of course, as the Minister of Health rightly noted, we announced an expansion of the program to retrain unemployed apprentices or to allow unemployed apprentices to continue with their technical training. We had initially announced $1.5 million available this year in that program. That program was very successful, and we expanded that by an additional million dollars, so we've got, you know, another thousand apprentices who currently are unemployed but can continue with their technical training so that they can go on and pursue jobs in renewable energy, green energy, those kinds of fields, if that's related to their technical training.

You know, we've provided stable and predictable funding for every postsecondary education institute in the province, and that's played a key role in making sure that Albertans have the opportunities that they need to change their skills or upgrade their skills so that they can pursue new work opportunities. We see that enrolment is up at virtually every university and college in the province. Of course, now is the best time to be investing in students, and freezing tuition has made pursuing an education at that level much more affordable than it would have been under the previous government's plans to jack up tuition and increase market modifiers – right? – that would have raised the cost of tuition and put it out of reach for many Albertans. We're quite proud of the fact that we're supporting people who need these opportunities to retrain, to gain new skills, to seek new opportunities in new work areas. We're giving them those opportunities.

If the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek has some further questions on the support that we're giving to Albertans who are pursuing advanced education so that they can seek new work opportunities, I'd be happy to continue this dialogue.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you to the minister for that response. This actually is a good segue into my next questions. The government is asking for $121 million more to support student loans, page 14. You've noted that it's a good time for people to go back to school, but sadly, I mean, a lot of people are being forced to consider that option because there's no employment for them with their bachelor's degree. I know many students that are going back to further their education by taking master's degrees because there are no employment opportunities. Some of those are lucky enough to have either financial assistance from their families or to have reasonable part-time employment to support that. But the student loans, obviously, are going to be a big issue for people to continue on that path during the downturn in the economy.

With respect to the $121 million I'd like to know how many students applied for but did not receive loans in the current cycle? Is that the reason for the request for the additional funds, or is this to bolster that going forward?

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you to the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. What I can tell the member is that we've had a significant increase in the number of people who have received student loans. In the 2015-2016 budget year we had 68,613 student loan recipients, and the forecast for the upcoming year is 80,955 student loan recipients, so that's a significant uptick in the number of people who have applied for and received student loans. You know, of course, it's important right now to make sure that we have the finances available for students to pursue higher education, and that's why we're considering this request for an additional $121 million to support those student loans.

We want to make sure that student loans are available to people who want to go to school, and we know that student loans are the lowest cost option that's available for borrowing money to finance their education. I'm quite proud of the system that Alberta has in terms of supporting students. Our system provides interest-free loans for the time that they're studying, and then when they get out of school, they only pay interest rates at prime, which is much more favourable than the Canadian student loan program, of course, which has prime plus a certain percentage. You know, Alberta does quite a bit to make sure that student loans are affordable for the students of Alberta so that they can afford to finance a higher education.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Minister, for the answers.

Certainly, we're all concerned about the education of our youth and future employment opportunities. To get to the $121 million, I guess, I'm sure that there were lots of metrics put in place to ensure that that was not only adequate but that there was some projection of where those funds would be allocated.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Moving on now to the independents, are there any members who are wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Yes. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Would you like to go back and forth, sir?

Dr. Swann: Back and forth with the Health minister to begin. Thanks very much.

The Deputy Chair: Please go ahead.

Dr. Swann: I'm obviously very interested in the minister's earlier comments and would appreciate at some point any reference in the supplementary estimates to the opioid crisis and whether any of the new funding was required for some of the extra demands that clearly have been on the system and how that is being disbursed.

I'm also a bit curious about the amended agreement with the AMA and how that's resulted in increased costs. I had thought that it was resulting in savings, especially in relation to primary care. Maybe we could have some clarification around that. I guess it relates to the specialist remuneration as well.

In relation to the increased seniors' drug benefit and nongroup drug benefits and brand name drugs how is that relating to our generic policy? Is it the fact that physicians aren't prioritizing generics or pharmacists are not providing generics? Why are we spending more on brand name drugs when we have made such an effort and spent heavily on promoting the generics?

The $15 million for the pharmaceutical innovation and management program, I guess, raises the question now that pharmacists can do a whole bunch of things that they couldn't do before. They can now diagnose. They can now prescribe as well as dispense. I met with the pharmaceutical college and the association to talk about how they're supervising this second set of professionals who are fee-for-service billing. We have already identified that physician billing as a fee-for-service system is not optimal. It is rewarding volume. It's not rewarding quality of care, continuity of care. We now have another group of professionals who are able to bill up to $125 for a drug review per year for people.

So as we do on physician billing, we have to have a way of overseeing and ensuring that those who are outliers, who are perhaps billing more than usual or not adding substantial value – we have to have a way of monitoring that use and ensuring that it's within guidelines and appropriate.

Finally, the $19 million for continuing care beds due to contractual obligations: I assume that's salary, incremental salary stuff, operational costs. Perhaps you could comment on those.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much. I think what I would like to do, if it's okay, with the consent of the member or yourself, Madam Chair, is that I'd like to answer – I think there were five questions. I think for four of them definitely I'm best suited to do that, and the fifth one, around addictions and mental health: I think, if it would be appropriate, the associate minister will respond to that one. I'll let you consider that while I respond to the first four and then guide us on how to address that last, remaining question.

I'll do it in reverse order, starting with the continuing care piece. That was $19 million for ASLI contracts, actually, so it's related to the construction of those buildings and being able to bring them online sooner than what was budgeted. That $19 million would have been in next year's or out-years' budgets, but we were able to move forward on those projects more quickly. That's a quick response to that one.

With regard to pharmacy and the oversight in those areas, point taken. We are soon embarking on renegotiation with the pharmacy industry as well in terms of the pharmacists, and I think that the points you raise are well heeded. If you have additional feedback or other members do, I'd certainly be happy to take that into consideration as we prepare for conversations that we'll be having with pharmacists to ensure that we have a respectful, collaborative dialogue but also an efficient return for patients and for those who fund the treasury, those being Albertans. In terms of some of the oversight I think that those points are important, that we noted, and the $125 for the review of sort of the scope of prescriptions and whatnot is an important piece.

Some of the other areas. The increased costs that we saw, which were $50 million, as was noted, for the higher level of service around pharmaceutical innovation and management: I just want to highlight a few of the other pieces that are included under that scope. There are many, but a few, for example, are compensation for injections that are provided in pharmacy, modifying prescriptions based on patient need and feedback that's been given at the counter, prescription renewal and emergency prescription needs, which I think is a very important tool. I know many Albertans who access that service as well as tobacco cessation services and counselling around tobacco addiction; that is a useful service as well. Then, as was mentioned, the medication management, including management for things like diabetes, and publicly funded vaccines that are currently compensated for, including influenza. Those are a few of the points on that $50 million. Again, it's a demand-driven line item, and I think it's important that we have some oversight in choosing wisely and using the best practices within all professions within the health system. I appreciate the points that were raised, and those will certainly be topics of discussion, I imagine, as negotiations continue.

With regard to the AMA the member is correct that we were able to achieve savings of about $500 million over two years, $100 million in the fiscal year that we're just reviewing and $400 million in the next. The targets that were put in this budget were very aggressive targets, and they were done while we were in the midst of negotiating.

We were able to achieve significant savings in terms of that projected line of growth. Traditionally the physician compensation line item increased at about 7 to 9 per cent per year, and we've gotten that down to I believe it's about 3 per cent for projections for out-years – 3 to 5 per cent, I believe, is the range; if I'm wrong, I'll make sure that I follow up before the end of this time – which is significant progress. But we are still looking at having some growth in terms of physician compensation, making sure that it's in the right places and that those physicians are being rewarded through blended capitation and ARPs to make sure that those who can and should be spending more time with patients are supported and appropriately compensated for such.

And then the last piece I wanted to touch on was the generics piece. Absolutely, when there is a generic available, the ministry is moving aggressively on getting people onside with prescribing that generic. There are still a number of drugs – and there continues to be evolution of drugs – where there aren't generics available: biologics or biosimilars, for example. There is work to make sure that biosimilars are tried first, but when there isn't a comparable biologic, because it is a living organism, available on the generic side, there are times where it's important to make sure that the patients get the drug that is continuing to work for them. Efforts are ongoing and will continue, but there will still be some patients who require brand-name pharmaceuticals, and we want to make sure that we're not compromising their health in the process of trying to get the most cost-effective measure.

Madam Chair, how did you want to handle the remaining question around opioids?

The Deputy Chair: If the associate minister would like to respond, please go ahead.

Ms Payne: Yes. Thank you, Madam Chair. To address the member's question, the funding with respect to addressing the opioid crisis has been previously allocated in the '16-17 budgets by both Alberta Health and Alberta Health Services. Of the funding that had been allocated, we had $4.5 million in capital funding for treatment beds, $3 million for Suboxone and methadone treatment, $900,000 to expand the take-home naloxone kit program as well as $300,000 to support data sharing and other work specifically targeted around making sure that we had the data available. We also had the $230,000 in grant funding to AMSISE, the Edmonton group working on supervised consumption services, as well as $500,000 for groups in other urban populations in Alberta to study potential need.

We were able to find those dollars via reallocating some of the proposed spending, and that is really just the beginning of some of the funding that we're working on. There will be more that we'll have to say about that in the coming weeks, with the upcoming budget.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Associate Minister.
The Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. The minister has, I think, philosophically embraced prevention and health promotion in a lot of respects, but this year we saw cuts to injury prevention. We saw no increase that I was able to detect in the prevention programs beyond injury, some of the lifestyle issues, the health promotion programs. Indeed, maybe she wouldn't be able to comment on it just yet but next time.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members from the government side that would like to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie. Would you like to go back and forth?

Mr. Malkinson: Yes, I would.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you, Madam Chair. My questions are just going to continue where I left off with the Minister of Health. You know, as I was commenting before, as you know, my grandma was in the hospital, and one of the things that struck me was the great work that our doctors were doing in our health care system. I have a two-part question for the minister that relates to the recent AMA agreement with those doctors. The first part of my question is: how will the amended agreement slow the growth of spending in upcoming budget cycles? And the other part of that is: what has been the cost reduction this year in regard to the amended AMA agreement? If the minister could answer, that'd be great.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Chair, and thank you for the question, again, to the member. A few points. We have already seen $64 million in physician compensation and development programs, including the physician benefits, from the amended agreement within this year's fiscal as well as some other savings that do tally about $100 million this year because of the fact that we were able to reach a new agreement mid-term. In next year's agreement it's projected that the savings will be about $400 million.

Some of the main ways that this was able to be achieved were, first of all, by sitting down collaboratively. You don't have to look very far even within Canada to see what happens when jurisdictions have some conflict with their physicians. I'd say that at the end of the day, conflict happens but respect and a desire to have a partnership are far better for patient outcomes. I'm very proud of the fact that we've been able to do that.

There is work happening around the schedule of medical benefits, which again relates to some of the compensation that happens for individual components within the fee-for-service bundle. We're continuing to work with physicians around the Choosing Wisely campaign and making sure that they're aligning their resources appropriately.

One of the other pieces is that we're hoping to glean some intelligence from them as well as communities throughout the province. There is a component within this that looks at us having the ability to make sure that we do meet supply with demand. I'm sure there are members, particularly in rural communities, who have heard frustration from their constituents around a variety of health practitioners, including physicians, not being easily accessible within their communities. Of course, you've heard me many, many times, and you can probably say it with me: we want to make sure that Albertans get the right care in the right place at the right time. That includes working with practitioners, including physicians themselves, to help us develop that right approach, to make sure that we are attracting and retaining in the right places the professions and professionals who are most needed.

This isn't just about rural and remote, I want to assure everyone, including residents in the province of Alberta. There are areas of specialty within even Edmonton and Calgary where we're still really struggling. This is about making sure that we have a long-term plan, one that puts us in the right set to make sure that we can continue to have a strong and robust public health care system with the right professionals throughout the province.

Again I want to say how proud I am of the work that we've had with the AMA. I think that their past president as well as their current president are to be commended for the work that we're doing in partnership there. The past president, Carl Nohr, regularly talked about physicians as stewards and partnership in the health care system, and he couldn't be more right, Madam Chair. Many of our costs, where we've seen overruns in the past – we want to make sure that physicians are working in partnership with us to be the best stewards of the system that they themselves have a direct influence on.

Those are a few of the highlights.

There is much work that has been accomplished. I think that $500 million in two years will not only keep the same level of service, but arguably it's going to improve services because of things like the fact that we have the blended capitation model, that's going to enable physicians to spend more time with patients who need it.

I've heard many patients say that the amount of time they spend sitting in the waiting room often exceeds the amount of time they spend sitting with their health practitioners in clinic, and that is not the kind of health care system we want. I know I've lived that experience many times myself. I don't in the current primary care network that I'm a member of, and I think it's doing a fantastic job. But we want to make sure those best practices are the reality for Albertans throughout the province, so working in partnership with the physicians on both the monetary savings and also patient quality and access goes hand in hand.

I'm really quite proud to be able to share some of those highlights with this House and look forward to continuing to update members of this House and the public about the great strides we've made in this area.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.

Mr. Malkinson: I'm going to cede the remainder of my time to the hon. Member for Calgary-Klein if that'd be okay with you.

The Deputy Chair: All right. Please proceed.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Will you be going back and forth as well?

Mr. Coolahan: Yes, with the Minister of Children's Services. And if I haven't had the chance, congratulations on your appointment to this very important ministry.

Twenty million dollars being requested in supplementary funding for the Ministry of Children's Services: myself and Albertans are looking to know how that will make life better for children in Alberta.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the member for the question. Certainly, when we talk about investing money in Children's Services, we are not just, you know, talking about money theoretically; we're talking about truly an investment in the future of our province. You know, we often say that children are our future. It's expected that we make those investments to ensure that every child, no matter where they grow up or what their circumstances are, has the support they need to succeed and thrive.

At this time we're seeing significant growth in the number of children and youth in this province, which directly impacts many of the services and supports that we as the government of Alberta provide to Alberta's children and families. The reality is, of course, also that during tough economic times, the demand for some of our programs also increases. So these supplementary funds keep stable funding in place so we can continue to meet the needs of Alberta's children and families and continue to invest in the future of our province. We work closely with our partners to make sure that all children grow up in a safe environment.

In all cases the funding will be used to address caseload pressures. Obviously, again, caseloads are not just numbers on a balance sheet but real people, real children in real families that we need to support to ensure that they have the best possible outcomes. In terms of where the caseload pressures are located, there's $17 million for child intervention services, $3 million for supports for permanency, and $8 million for foster care supports.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.
The hon. member.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Minister. You mentioned the $17 million being directed to the child intervention services. I think I'd like to hear more about how that is going to improve services that keep children in a safe and caring environment.

The Deputy Chair: Minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the member for the question. Certainly, if we want to be a society that protects our children and ensures that they have every opportunity to succeed, we need to be there to invest in the supports that truly make a difference in their lives. Again, we need to be there for our children for their future and invest in the opportunities to allow their future to be bright. So we have invested $4 million in family enhancement services to provide the kind of early wraparound services to families to ensure that children stay with their families when it is safe to do so and that they do not, ideally, have to enter into care if we can provide the kind of support to their family that allows them to have that safe future in the best place for them to be, which is with their family.

We've invested $4.5 million in supports and financial assistance agreements to provide direct supports to clients to ensure that successful transition to adulthood.

Certainly, Madam Chair, you know, it's apparent and we all understand that when you turn 18, you don't just magically figure out how to become completely independent, with no support. So it's really essential that we provide the kind of supports to these youth for whom we as the government are acting in the role of parent, to provide that support and to help them with that transition to adulthood.

Of course, we've also invested $8.5 million in child protection to provide adequate support to complex cases that remain in care, ensuring clients' critical needs are being met. You know, Madam Chair, all of that work is being delivered by the amazing staff, who are committed professionals and dedicated advocates that help Albertan families make small changes that make a big difference in their lives. Certainly, many of those workers are social workers, whom we honour this week.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

We are now on to the Official Opposition. Is there anyone wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky. Would you like to go back and forth?

Mr. Loewen: Pardon me?

The Deputy Chair: Would you like to share your time and go back and forth?

Mr. Loewen: Yes, please.

The Deputy Chair: Yeah. Please go ahead.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you. The third-quarter update projects the carbon tax to raise $230 million. How does that break down in terms of the amount raised from specified gas emitters versus the amount raised from the carbon tax applied to gas, natural gas, things like that?

Mr. Ceci: You're asking about the breakdown of gas and natural gas for the SGER prior to December 31?

Mr. Loewen: Yes, for the third-quarter update.

Mr. Ceci: Okay. Yeah. I don't have the fuel source revenue breakdown here, but that's something I may be able to source for you.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you.

Now, the department is requesting approximately $74 million in additional funding for the climate leadership plan. Is that $74 million from the carbon tax?

10:20

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks and minister responsible for the climate change office.

Ms Phillips: Yes. Thank you, Madam Chair. The $74 million is actually transferred out of the climate change and emissions management fund, which is the fund that was established under the previous government's specified gas emitters regulation and had developed within it.

I apologize, hon. member, that I don't have the revenue piece in front of me. I have the voted expense piece in front of me. So we'll get back to you on the breakdown between the SGER revenues and the other revenues.

But that's where those transfers are coming from, the CCEMF, as we call it.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.
The member.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you. Now, can you please provide the specific subline item under section 10, Climate Leadership Plan, that each transfer listed on page 42 of the supplementary estimates is originating from?

Ms Phillips: Sure. Thank you, hon. member. The transfers are from the climate change and emissions management fund.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Mr. Loewen: So which subline item under section 10 does that fall under? I see adjustments for communities, green infrastructure, regulatory and operations, renewables/bioenergy, and other investments.

Ms Phillips: Yes. That's correct, hon. member. So those transfers to fund those line items come from the climate change and emissions management fund.

Mr. Loewen: Now, in the document I see here, I don't see that line item that you're referring to.

[Ms Goehring in the chair]

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Madam Chair and hon. member. The transfers are from the climate change and emissions management fund, which was part of the budget plan for 2016. So those transfers were already expressed, that they would come from the climate change and emissions management fund. Hon. member, if you'd like, we can ensure that we follow up with you in writing about how those mechanics work and the relevant section from Budget 2016 that underlies that.

The Acting Chair: Thank you, Minister.

Mr. Loewen: Okay. That would be great because, yeah, I don't quite follow there where those transfers don't come out of a line item that exists in the document here, these supplementary estimates. So it would be great if you could follow up on that.

Now, how is the money awarded from whatever fund I guess they're coming from? How do these monies – do the departments apply for specific grants to get these transfers, or what's the process that these transfers come from the Environment and Parks estimates?

Ms Phillips: Just for clarification, hon. member, you're asking about the green infrastructure line item and how those decisions were made? Which line are you referring to in terms of that?

Mr. Loewen: Sorry. What I'm referring to is on page 42, the list of transfers that come from Environment and Parks. What's the process that these departments apply to get these funds?

Ms Phillips: Yeah. Absolutely. Thank you, hon. member. In terms of transfers to other departments some of them are for things like the on-farm solar PV and efficiency programs. Of course, we dedicated $10 million to those programs, and they have been fully subscribed. So some of those come from those kinds of programs.

Others. As the hon. Minister of Health indicated, there was $1.5 million of low-hanging fruit, if you will, opportunities for some electricity-related retrofitting within health facilities that would save on operating costs going forward, that could be accomplished relatively quickly. Those transfers then support those activities.

In the main any of those transfers or green infrastructure projects have had to ensure that they are reducing greenhouse gas emissions at the lowest cost per tonne possible. So those are the projects that are being funded out of that.

The Acting Chair: Thank you, Minister.

Mr. Loewen: Okay. So, for instance, the $1.5 million to Health: would Health have made an application to Environment and Parks to have those funds? How would that process have worked? You know, just using that as a for instance.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Member. We had received some applications from various departments for lowest cost per tonne initiatives that we could undertake in the early days of carbon pricing to ensure that we were meeting some of the lowest cost per tonne needs but not doing so in a way that would require large amounts of capital infrastructure spending. For example, in Health that was the initiative that was supported.

Other examples are a solar project in a park that we are upgrading anyway in Environment and Parks. There are a number of facilities that are being upgraded at Miquelon Lakes, and it was a low-cost initiative to add additional efficiency and a renewable capability to those pieces. That was also a very low-cost initiative that we could accomplish relatively quickly and also ensure increased employment for some of those projects.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

Those are the considerations that underlie some of these smaller initiatives as we move forward and have a much more comprehensive approach to green infrastructure in the coming years both as we reinvest our carbon levy and the revenues from the carbon competitiveness regulation into the economy but also as we ensure that we are partnering appropriately with federal infrastructure investments and not just the low-carbon fund but also the transit initiatives and other infrastructure investments that are flowing from the federal government.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.

The hon. member.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you. Just so I'm clear – and we can keep this answer really short – is there an application process that Health went through to apply for this funding to come into Health? Was there an application process? Was the decision made by Environment and Parks to approach Health? If you could just clarify that shortly, please.

Ms Phillips: Yes. Thank you, hon. member. The process is that Transportation, Infrastructure, other support, Health, and so on, have a committee in which they determine appropriate investments with metrics of low costs per tonne and ease of delivery of those particular investments. As we go forward, there will be a larger capital planning process, that exists already for our capital planning in the $34 billion, for example, and a similar process for the green infrastructure investments.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.

The time for the Official Opposition is up for this rotation.

Is there anybody from the third party wishing to ask any question? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gottfried: Yes. Great. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Would you like to go back and forth again?

Mr. Gottfried: Back and forth if I could. I'll continue on my line of questioning with the Minister of Advanced Education if that's fine. Minister, we talked prior about the increase of $121 million to support student loans. Again, we talked about whether there are some metrics. Obviously, with $121 million I'm sure that there's been lots of work behind the scenes to determine the requirement for those funds. I'd like to find out from you what the projection is in terms of how many years of education this is going to support for how many Albertans. And how many of those students will be in province versus out of province in terms of where they're going to be studying?

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you to the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for his questions about student loans. You know, he asked a question about how many years of education this will support. Of course, the loans are disbursed on a yearly basis, so every loan is given for an academic year. We don't give loans out on a per-program basis, so it's impossible for me to say how many years of education this will go towards. I guess the thing that I would suggest is that a journey of a thousand miles starts with one step, so you can't complete a program until you do your first year. We know that a student loan that's disbursed this year will enable a student to attend a program of his or her choosing.

In terms of the number of students who travel outside of the province from Alberta to study, I don't have those exact figures with me today. I do know that the majority of students at our universities and colleges here in Alberta do come from Alberta. You know, most Alberta students stay close to home to pursue higher education here in the province, but regardless of whether or not a student pursues higher education here in the province of Alberta or pursues an education outside of the province, we are investing in our people to make their lives better, of course, by pursuing higher education. We know that in terms of improving the quality of life, there's no better investment that can be made than into higher education. We know that people who have higher levels of education have improved health outcomes. They have improved employment outcomes.

So it's incumbent upon us as the government of Alberta to invest in our people so that they can better themselves, lead good lives, you know, and hopefully the quality of life, the opportunities that present themselves to people here in Alberta will attract the students who do pursue education outside of the province of Alberta to come back and contribute again to life in this wonderful province.

I know that I myself am a graduate of a university outside of the province of Alberta. There is no better place to live than this province, and that's why I chose to come back after I completed my education. At the time, though, that I pursued higher education, the government of the day decided not to invest in me. They did not allow me to have access to Alberta student loans, so I had to fund my education outside of the province of Alberta from the paltry amounts that the federal government extended to me, and then I had to live on the generosity of my parents, and I know that it was a tremendous hardship for them to support me while I was going through school. I am forever grateful that they were able to provide that support to me. The education that I was able to achieve with their support I'm sure will stand me in good stead one day. I have hopes that my university degree will pay off in some way.

I'm glad that the government has changed its attitude towards supporting students going to pursue education outside of the province of Alberta, Madam Chair, because we know that it's a significant investment in the lives of the people of Alberta. It improves their families, it improves their prospects of leading a good life, so we're proud of being able to continue that commitment to the sons and daughters of our province.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Minister.

Yeah. You know what? I'm actually sort of in the midst of that myself. I have two children in postsecondary and one graduating from grade 12, so I'm in the middle of juggling between RESPs and student loans and those things to help to finance my children's education, which, as you noted, is important.

I know that there were student loans available for out-of-province students as early as three or four years ago, when my son studied at Dalhousie in Halifax, so it's not something entirely new. Just a point of clarification on that.

I am interested in some of the work that you're doing behind the scenes with respect to not only funding those educations but also to helping postsecondary students make appropriate and strong choices in terms of employment opportunities. I talked earlier about the fact that we've got students graduating with strong bachelor's degrees in geology and engineering and law not being able to find employment in this province. That deeply concerns me. But I think we also have a duty to students to provide them with robust information about employment opportunities post postsecondary education. I know that in my time with Calgary Economic Development we did a lot of statistical work on employment opportunities and where the pockets of potential employees were, where the jobs were available not just in Alberta but across North America, to find opportunities for people that were graduating or to direct students.

I'd like to understand from you, for the Albertans that we're directing into these programs, whether we've done some background research and provided some insights and information about their ability to find employment through the completion of their training programs, whether those are technical institutes or colleges, whether that's postsecondary. Of course, the lag time in a four-year degree can mean that things change substantially through that period, but I think we have a duty to try and inform students who are taking on significant debt, who will not only have student debt but, unfortunately, are going to also have public debt that's going to be layered on that, about $14,000 per student by 2019. They're going to have that on top of their student debt.

My question to you is: have you done that research on the background of this funding, $121 million, which we hope will be not only well spent by the taxpayer but well spent by the students as they move forward, recognizing that they have choices to make with respect to their choices in how they educate themselves and create a path for themselves in the future?

The Deputy Chair: The minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for his question. He's quite right to highlight the importance of understanding the labour market in Alberta. You know, directly to answer his question – that is an unusual thing in this Chamber, I know, so going into a risky venture – the Department of Advanced Education doesn't collect any labour force statistics, of course. It's the Ministry of Labour that collects that information and projects into the out-years what the labour demand in particular occupations is going to be. Individual postsecondary institutions also do that work, and certainly the individual institutions collaborate to varying degrees with industry partners to determine whether the training programs that they're offering are appropriate for the employment situations that their graduates will find themselves in and also whether or not there will be demand for graduates from those programs. It varies from institution to institution. Colleges and technical institutes, of course, rely much more heavily on industry partnerships and labour market demand than universities do.

I'd remind the hon. member, certainly, about an investment in a degree in geology, a degree in mechanical engineering: while perhaps if you were a graduate last year, you'd be struggling for a couple of months to find immediate employment in your area of technical training and expertise, over the long term we see that investment in education of any kind results in improved employment outcomes, improved earnings – right? – and improved health outcomes. So, you know, regardless of whether or not they can get a job immediately upon graduation in a tough economy – we know that that's harder to do than it has been in years previous – over the long term the prospects for people with degrees or diplomas or certificates of any kind are much better.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.

We are now on to the other parties. Is there anyone wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'll have some questions for environment and First Nations. Let me begin by congratulating the environment minister on her leadership on climate change. I've said before – and I think it needs to be said – that this is the first meaningful and bold initiative we've seen since I was elected, and we're starting to see some of the benefits in terms of people recognizing their own impact on the environment.

I am curious, though, to see why there is no supplementary estimate for the new park. Is that because nothing has been done this past year and it's going to be in a future budget, or is it under other categories?

I'm not clear either on the $5.4 million for surface rights compensation grants. Oh, those are related to the unpaid oil and gas rental industry. I guess I'd missed that.

I'd be interested to hear how the flood hazard identification program is getting on and what progress is being made, how close we are to understanding the full flood mapping. Again, if you could comment with respect to water on the groundwater mapping that was to have been – well, it was started under the previous government, and I thought we were moving forward pretty close to completion or should have been by now. Is any of this relating to groundwater mapping in the province?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Sure. Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the hon. member for his questions. On the topic of the new parks, the Castle wildland and provincial parks, in the capital plan we have $20 million set aside for those parks and some of the adjacent planning, and those are capital investments that were already in the voted amounts last year. As for additional operations, those were already budgeted in the '16-17 budgets and going forward.

Regardless of what the management outcomes are, the operations piece remains relatively constant given that enforcement and other pieces are in a separate – well, the park rangers are within the operations, but then there are also conservation officers, which come out of the environment part of the budget, not parks. Then, of course, there are fish and wildlife officers, who are actually within the Justice and Solicitor General portfolio. Certainly, enforcement is a major undertaking of the province, but those were already in the '16-17 voted amounts.

As for the Surface Rights Board piece, we had an increase to surface rights compensation grants this year as a result of increased defaults to surface rights compensation payments by industry to landowners. The SRB has in fact experienced quite an increase in the volume of applications for recovery of unpaid rentals pursuant to section 36 of the Surface Rights Act. That is, of course, the section that addresses situations when a landowner has not been paid funds that are owed by an operator under a surface lease or under a right-of-entry order or a compensation order.

You know, for context, over the previous 11 years the Surface Rights Board received an average of fewer than 370 section 36 applications every year, but for the period of April 1, 2016, to August 31, 2016, for that five-month period, the Surface Rights Board had already received 1,064 section 36 applications. That has a lot to do, obviously, with the downturn in the price of oil. You know, under the act as we now have it, the Surface Rights Board provides that payment so that landowners are not left without.

As for flood mapping, the $2.7 million increase is for continued studies under the provincial flood hazard identification program. There's been some reprofiling there as well from the national disaster mitigation program. We had some increase on one side of $6.9 million from that national program, and then you had reprofiling to reflect the ongoing mitigation work that is not necessarily recovery of costs directly related to the 2013 flood.

Also, in flood infrastructure a couple of other items that these estimates reflect are a transfer of voted amounts, a decrease from capital and into expense. What that means is that we are providing mitigation projects with a grant instead of it being provincial capital. In this case it's $12.4 million to provide funding to the hamlet of Bragg Creek to build berms on the Elbow River. This is part of what we committed to doing. When we made the decision to protect Calgary with the Springbank project, there were pieces in Bragg Creek and Redwood Meadows that had to be done in order to keep those communities safe.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.

Dr. Swann: With respect to the groundwater mapping how much progress are we making there? There are serious concerns about understanding better our groundwater.

Ms Phillips: Absolutely, hon. member. We're looking at the groundwater and surface water management framework in the lower Athabasca regional plan, for example. That was a piece of work that had been sitting for some time under the previous government, and we're moving that along under the lower Athabasca regional plan. There are frameworks that contain within them triggers and thresholds so that we can better appreciate the cumulative effects. I'd be happy to follow up in greater detail in writing on where those processes are at and, once those management frameworks are complete, what changes they reflect in terms of how we manage cumulative effects on the landscape.

Dr. Swann: Just quickly to the First Nations minister: what impacts has the opiate crisis had on your department, and what in your budget reflects the concerns around the opiate crisis?

The Deputy Chair: The Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you very much. There is no particular request for a change in our supplementary income during this time with regard to the opiate crisis because that particular issue is being handled directly through Health, through the Associate Minister of Health, and as well through our Solicitor General. All of those programs are aligned and assigned through those two ministries, not through IR particularly, because they're the ministries that actually do the hiring of individuals who will do the work. In our ministry we are spending time working with the communities, of course, on relationships, building and working with both the reserve communities and the neighbouring communities. We already have a full contingent of people who are assigned to each reserve and who are working with that, so it becomes a particular focus of their work but doesn't change the number of people that are required. Therefore, no supplementary estimate is required at this time.

Dr. Swann: Thank you.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Member. Thank you, Minister.

We will now move over to the government side. Are there any members wishing to speak at this time? The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Madam Chair. If I could go back and forth with the Minister of Children's Services.

Thank you for all your previous answers in helping us understand how the request for $28 million will be used. You mentioned the $4 million in wraparound services that are being asked for. Maybe you could explain to us what those wraparound services actually are and how they will help the lives of Alberta's children.

The Deputy Chair: The Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the member for the question. Certainly, it's our responsibility to ensure the safety and well-being of Alberta's children. You know, that is something that our government takes very much to heart, which is why we're always looking for ways to strengthen and improve these life-changing supports and services.

Children's Services is currently implementing strength-based approaches such as signs of safety that help staff to work in partnership with families and children to increase safety and reduce risk and danger by focusing on strengths, resources, and networks the families have. Children's Services has also created a child intervention practice framework that includes respect for indigenous experience as a key principle. We are developing training for staff that will create greater understanding of indigenous culture and historical trauma, helping them to better support children and families across Alberta. We've also engaged in multiple practice initiatives to support staff to work with indigenous children and families in a different way, with the goal of supporting families to keep their children safe at home.

Again, Madam Chair, our staff are such committed professionals, and they truly do make Alberta a better place through their caring and advocacy. Absolutely, they are changing the world one client, one family, and one community at a time. As a public health nurse I worked with them on this, and I just want to say thank you again to all the social workers for the work that they do. This week we recognize the work that social workers do, making a difference in people's lives.

Again, this $4 million for wraparound services provides those very staff the additional support that they need in order to ensure that families and children can stay together in a safe way.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you for that, Minister.

Of the $28 million, there is a big chunk, $8 million, that is going towards foster care support, to support kinship and foster caregivers. As we know, foster parents are an essential part of the continuum of care for children receiving services. How will the $8 million improve foster care supports programming and provide stable supports for the foster parents?

The Deputy Chair: Minister, please go ahead.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the member for the question. You know, certainly, foster and kinship caregivers are amazing individuals who step up to offer children in need love and support and a place in their homes. Truly, they demonstrate the best of Alberta and show what community truly means. We continue to be very thankful for those who step up to the plate on this and continue to encourage more families in Alberta to consider becoming foster parents if at all possible.

The funding will address some caseload growth pressures in the foster care program to provide supports to foster and kinship caregivers, either directly or through agencies, to ensure children's needs are met in a home setting.

[Ms Goehring in the chair]

In December 2016 approximately 3,500 children and youth were in foster care, and an additional 2,000 children and youth were living with kinship caregivers. Alberta has approximately 1,800 foster homes and 1,750 kinship homes. Compared to last year, there's been a 4 per cent increase in the number of children and youth placed in foster and kinship care. Again, foster and kinship caregivers provide critical support to the children and youth of our province.

Children's Services has begun to implement the foundations of a caregiver support model to support the achievement of more positive outcomes for children and youth by ensuring they are nurtured by caregivers who respond to them in a developmentally appropriate way, interpret their behaviour through a trauma-informed lens, and have an appreciation for the impact of grief and loss.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Acting Chair: Thank you, Minister.

Go ahead.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you for that, Minister. I really appreciate that.

There's also $3 million that's being slated for supports for permanency. Supports for permanency have been identified as a priority in recent recommendations from the Auditor General and the Child and Youth Advocate. What will the additional $3 million do to protect and improve supports for permanency?

The Acting Chair: Go ahead.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Chair. Certainly, we know that every child deserves to grow up in a healthy, loving environment that supports their healthy development and prepares them for a bright future. This funding will address caseload growth in the program that provides supports for caregivers caring for children who were in permanent care but have been adopted or cared for under a private guardianship order. We must continue to support children and youth who cannot return to their biological families to benefit from lifelong permanent connections.

This program recognizes that many children who have been in care require additional support even after leaving care. This program provides much-needed supports for caregivers to meet their children's needs, whether through ongoing counselling, respite, or support to maintain cultural connections. We remain committed to working closely with First Nation and Métis leaders to ensure that legal permanency for children respects meaningful involvement of their families and communities. There has been a 4 per cent increase in the supports for permanency caseload compared to last year, so that's a reflection of why the additional dollars are required.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Acting Chair: Thank you, Minister.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Madam Chair. Thank you for that response, Minister. Let me just go back to child protection for a second, the $8.5 million. Why are the additional costs necessary to ensure children's needs are being met in child protection?

The Acting Chair: Go ahead.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Chair. You know, certainly, we know that when families are facing tough economic times, they want a government that works to make their life better and ensure that the supports that they rely on are in place. Unfortunately, increases in child protection costs are driven by a growing number of children and youth receiving services and by increased costs per case resulting from greater complexity of cases, where children require additional psychological supports, therapy, and specialized placements.

The ministry works to provide children with a safe and nurturing environment that is free from abuse and neglect and that encourages the development of lifelong relationships. I'm certainly proud of a government that chooses to maintain stable services and the supports that the families of this province need and the children of these families need through these tough economic times. We'll continue to ensure that those supports are in place to make the lives of those children better.

The Acting Chair: Thank you, Minister.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Madam Chair. Thank you, Minister, for those answers. In reviewing the 2016 budget, can you tell us some of the successes that Children's Services has seen?

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: Go ahead, Minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Chair. We've seen a leveling off of the savings attributable to the prevention and supporting families strategy. As a result of that, we're experiencing modest increases in costs. Including the supplemental funding, the increases under the Ministry of Children's Services still represent a reasonable 4.6 per cent increase over last year's actuals based on the 2016-17 forecast of $1.173 billion compared to the '15-16 actuals of $1.122 billion. We'll continue to, you know, focus on prevention and supporting families as the best strategy to keep children safe and with their families, and we'll continue to move forward to support those whose safety requires additional supports as well.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Acting Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.
Go ahead.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Madam Chair. You mentioned the funds going towards supporting Albertan families. I'd like to specifically ask you about how the delivery of child intervention services is supporting Albertan families.

The Acting Chair: Go ahead.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Chair. Again, our government is protecting the things that matter by working to provide Alberta families the support that they need to keep their children safe and to raise loving, healthy families. Every child, regardless of whose care they are in, deserves to grow up in a safe, loving, nurturing environment with opportunities to thrive. When we give families the supports that they need to thrive as a family, we can keep families together. Alberta's child intervention system supports child safety and well-being and strives to keep families together whenever it is safe to do so. The child intervention program delivery continues to focus on supporting families as the primary means of protection. We are providing services to more children at home.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Acting Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

At this point the time allotted is for the Official Opposition. Is there a member wishing to speak?

Mr. W. Anderson: Yes, Madam Chair. Thank you.

The Acting Chair: Would you like to share your time? Go back and forth?

Mr. W. Anderson: I just was going to say – thank you, Madam Chairperson – back and forth with the Minister of Advanced Education if I may.

The Acting Chair: Thank you. Go ahead.

Mr. W. Anderson: Further to what the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek had spoken to regarding the student loans increase, that being said and looking at the numbers, it's about a 20 to 25 per cent increase. My understanding is that that is due specifically to requested additional need by a lot of the students.

Now, a couple of points of clarification if I may. How much, if any, of those funds is being allocated toward administration costs or processing fees? Then, secondly, in trying to move away from debt-loading students, was any opportunity given for additional bursaries or grants or scholarships from this ministry?

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: Thank you.

Go ahead, Minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the member for the question. I want to welcome the member to his new role as Advanced Education critic. I know that I enjoyed my time and exchanges with the Member for Battle River-Wainwright when he filled that role, and I'm sure that the Member for Highwood and I will further have such good exchanges on the topic of advanced education, which is, of course, a topic that's so important to the people and the future of Alberta. I look forward to engaging with you in these roles.

With respect to the questions around student loans and the administrative costs, I don't have those details with me right now.

The member did ask about increases, of course, in bursaries and grants. We have created an indigenous student award, which offers, I believe, $7.5 million to indigenous students pursuing courses of study at universities and colleges all across the province. That was a new award that our government created in the first budget that we brought down.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

As well, we created the apprentice training award, which was an initial $1.5 million in additional training for apprentices who are currently unemployed so that they can continue with their technical training through their second, third, or fourth periods. That program was oversubscribed almost the day it was announced, and we expanded that by an additional million dollars. We expect that by the end of the year there will be approximately 2,500 unemployed apprentices who are continuing with their second, third, or fourth period of technical training.

You know, the member opposite, of course, asks the question about preventing student debt. Madam Chair, our government is very concerned about the level of student debt, and that's why we have decided to continue with the tuition freeze for a third academic year. We don't want the cost of tuition to skyrocket so that it's out of reach for most Albertans, which is in stark contrast to actually what the Member for Battle River-Wainwright said that he wanted to see when we announced the third year of the tuition freeze. Of course, he was in the media the next day stating that he thought that it would be wise for tuition to go up. Our government disagrees, and we continue to make sure that tuition is affordable so that every Albertan, regardless of how much money their parents have in the bank, have the opportunity to pursue a higher education.

Of course, we continue to look at and we are engaged in a tuition funding review. That work will continue throughout 2017 to make sure that we can maintain affordability for higher education for the students of Alberta. That will look at issues of tuition as well as student aid and the grants and bursaries that are available so that we can make sure that the money that we spend on supporting students achieving higher education is going towards those who are most in need and who will benefit the most from accessing a higher education.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.

The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you. Thank you to the minister for your kind accolades towards my opportunity to be the shadow minister.

Rest assured, I hope to provide you with some positive feedback so the taxpayers of Alberta receive the best return on their investment, and I look forward to receiving in writing your answer to the question of the administration costs regarding the student loans application process.

Further to my other question here, looking at the transfer of funds from Mount Royal University on a capital project requirement, my experience is that capital projects typically in any large institution or organization require a considerable amount of planning over a period of time. The building functionality or the buildings will put forward a budget and that capital project will be looked at and considered over a period of time. My question is – the $700,000 that's being transferred from Environment and Parks is requested to provide climate leadership plan funding for green infrastructure. Now, this being a cap. ex. project, I would assume it had been going on for some time. I'm looking – well, they would have probably requested it internally for some time. That being said, when they required the funding as a cap. ex. project, did they ask for the money or request the funds from Advanced Ed, from Finance, or from Environment? If you could clarify that for me.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the Member for Highwood for this question. With respect to the administrative costs our office will of course make all efforts to direct you to the appropriate place to get the information on the administrative costs with respect to student loans.

With respect to the infrastructure the capital expansion question with respect to our supplementary supply ask, of course, I just want to build on something that the Minister of Environment and Parks stated in response to the question – I can't remember who asked the question – around the process of applying for the money for these green infrastructure investments. Of course, there is a crossgovernmental committee that is tasked with looking at how to make these investments. It takes in investment proposals from every department, and we evaluate the proposals against each other, and of course we spend the money on things that meet the criteria that have been established by that committee for wise investments of our green infrastructure dollars.

With respect to this, I think it's no secret that the deferred maintenance at postsecondary institutions in this province is significant due to a lack of investment from the previous government in maintenance and renewal on campuses all across the province. That has created a significant backlog of energy efficiency investments that could be made, energy improvement, upgrades in those kinds of things, that will result in significant energy savings at universities and campuses all across the province.

There's no shortage of asks that have been submitted to the department. They've been on the books for a significant period of time. It's just that the previous government never really made the money available to universities and colleges to make those investments. We, of course, are committed to making lives better for Albertans by making sure that our postsecondary institutions are in top shape. We have taken advantage of the money that's available from Environment and Parks to address some of these infrastructure, maintenance, and renewal issues because we know that those kinds of investments will result in significant energy efficiencies.

Of course, I'm sure that the Member for Highwood would agree that investments in energy efficiencies are not only good for that particular institution but good for the people of Alberta because the money that the institution will save can be better directed towards classrooms, making sure that students have spaces and teachers so that they can learn the things that they need to learn to make their lives better.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.

The hon. member.

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Minister, for that answer. This being a long-standing cap. ex. project and now the funds are coming out of the Environment and Parks ministry, my question is – the request went through a committee process, as I understand, to you, to Finance, and to Environment, but the funds are coming from Environment. The capital that Environment has to provide for long-term cap. ex. projects, the funds: do they come from the carbon levy, or do they come from the other source that the minister had alluded to if I may ask?

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the member for the question. Of course, the money for this particular project comes from the existing fund that is made up of funds that have been collected from industry through the SGER process, and I'm guessing from the nods from the Minister of Environment and Parks that I'm right on that.

You know, I do want to commend the previous government for at least taking baby steps towards pricing carbon in this province. We know that pricing carbon is the right direction for the province of Alberta to be taking in order to improve its environmental outcomes and enhance energy efficiency in the province.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.

Are there any members wishing to speak from the third party? I recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Great. Thank you, Madam Chair. I've got just one last question for the Minister of Advanced Education just following on the line. I think we've certainly pursued that.

One of my concerns with the student loan program right now – I think there was a federal writeoff just recently of significant amounts of money due to long-standing defaults or deferred payments. I'd like to understand, with the current situation with our student loans, obviously – we're now investing another $121 million, and our hope is that those dollars are not at risk, that they can be repaid by those students as they find gainful employment in the future and pay that off diligently over the ensuing years.

My question is: how many student loans are at least being deferred by some of those past students now because of unemployment situations? How many have defaulted, and how many are you expecting to be written off due to the inability to pay in terms of the period of time that those would be considered as actually a full default and then written off by the government? I think that it might be good for us to understand those metrics not only looking backwards but looking forward with this additional $121 million investment.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you to the member for the question. Of course, with respect to the default rate on student loans historically we have seen approximately, from my notes here, about a 6 per cent default rate on student loans. Of course, the student loan default rate is not evenly distributed across institutions, Madam Chair. We have a mix of public institutions, and that's where the bulk of our students go, but students in Alberta are also eligible for loans to pursue studies at private career colleges. The member may be interested to know that the bulk of the defaults in our student loans come from students who have applied for and studied at private career colleges but find that the cost of the programs that they've taken far exceed the earnings that they can expect to make in the programs that they've studied. So they've paid thousands and thousands of dollars to take a program that will result in an occupation that pays a very small amount of money and, of course, can't afford the crushing student debt that they've been saddled with.

You know, our office gets stories all the time from students who have attended private career colleges in the province of Alberta. They feel that they've been treated unfairly by the student loan officers who they applied for student loans from that they couldn't possibly afford to pay back, Madam Chair. This is a significant issue that our government is very concerned about because we want our students to be successful, and we certainly don't want them to be saddled with student debt. So this issue around the default rate among students who are attending private career colleges is very concerning to everyone in this House, you know.

I don't think that anybody thinks that the people of Alberta are better off if we've spent thousands and thousands of public dollars on education that is yielding no appreciable outcome. You know, as our government continues to look at this issue around how to protect students who are looking at private career colleges as an education opportunity, I hope that the member opposite will support our efforts to make sure that students are protected when they choose that as an education path.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Minister. It just concerns me. I was just looking at some statistics federally, and last year it was over 32,000 student loans written off; the year before, 33,000; so about $175 million a year. It's peaked as high as close to or even over $300 million in the last five years, federally. So I'm just concerned. Obviously, we want to invest in our youth, but we also want to make sure that there's a reasonable opportunity for them to pay that back.

As was mentioned by the other member, you know, does this mean that we have to look at other options for them, whether there are additional grants or bursary programs that may assist them, particularly in those areas where we feel that there might be higher employment opportunities? But I hope that, again, your ministry is watching that metric closely as it is an investment, not just an investment for those students but an investment by us Albertans into our future, so it's a very, very key issue for us.

I'd like to shift gears. This is probably more geared towards Infrastructure and Education. Government members this week hinted at new schools for Albertans, but these estimates asked for $107 million to be transferred from school capital to operations and maintenance on page 38. Knowing that we have an expert in the Minister of Finance, I'm sure you're well versed in all these requests coming towards you, Minister. I guess my question is: how many new student spaces would have been funded by this $107 million that's now being moved over into operations and maintenance? How many spaces are we losing, and how many spaces are we assisting with possibly some much-needed operations and maintenance funding with this $107 million switch of funds?

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you for the question. My understanding is that this is money moved out of capital to operational spending because the uses that school boards throughout the province put it to is for things that improve the life of the facility for less than five years. These kinds of improvements like painting and upgrades are not about increasing spaces in the education system. It's improving the quality of the spaces. That's why the movement took place.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Minister. Through the chair, I understand that, obviously, there's probably some deferred maintenance that needs to be caught up. We don't want older schools falling apart, so I understand that. With the allocation of that, obviously, there's $107 million – it sounds like a lot of money; it is a lot of money – but we have lots of schools across the province. How will communities and schools be prioritized to receive this switching of support from capital funding to operations and maintenance? Is there a prioritization that we'll be able to see on how that's allocated, or is it on an as-needed basis? Or is everybody going to have to come to you and say, "I want a chunk of the $107 million"? How is that going to be allocated through your department and through Infrastructure and Education as well?

Mr. Ceci: Actually, it's not through my department. Treasury Board received this input from Education, where they looked at the kinds of improvements that were being done with this money. It wasn't for the construction of new schools. That's a totally different line item. With the budget coming up shortly, you'll see where that is going for this government. The school boards were utilizing this money, to the tune of about $117 million, for improvements to their schools across Alberta that were adding less than five years, as I said, extending the life of that facility for less than five years, so the kinds of things that I talked about earlier. So there was a determination made that if school boards are already using it for that purpose, then we'll book it for that purpose as opposed to in the capital plan.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Minister.

I'd like to move some questions over to the topic of Indigenous Relations. The estimates that we've seen here on page 50 show that $1.75 million was underspent in Indigenous Relations programs. I'd like to understand, and if the minister could explain: which programs had lower than budgeted expenses, how many FNMI Albertans were affected by that reduced spending, and how was that reduced?

Mr. Feehan: Thank you to the member for the question. The answer is all located in one section of the budget, and that is the southern Alberta flood program. The original estimates that were brought in under the previous government were moved forward in the budgets over the last couple of years. Last year, in Budget 2016, we had allocated $6,557,000 in support of the Siksika and Stoney . . .

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister. Thank you, Member.

We will now move on to the other parties.

Seeing none, we will now move on to the government side. Are there any government members wishing to speak?

Ms McKittrick: Madam Chair, I would like to ask a question to the Minister of Indigenous Relations. As I ask this question, I would like to take this opportunity on the work that the minister has done in terms of indigenous relations and the leadership that he's shown in helping indigenous communities. The question I have is: why did the Labour ministry transfer $1 million and then another $3,845,000 to Indigenous Relations?

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you to the member for the question and for the support. I'm happy to talk about the transfer of $3.845 million from Labour into our ministry because it represents some pretty successful stories in terms of our support and advancement of including the indigenous community in the labour market in this province. We work closely, of course, with Advanced Education, Community and Social Services to deliver programs that enhance employment and training to Albertans and, specifically in this case, to indigenous Albertans. So this is a good-news story for everyone involved.

We have been collaborating particularly with a variety of market challenges and supporting unemployed and underemployed workers, of course, to get back and participate in the economy. Part of these collaborations have happened over the last little while. We have been running programs for a number of months or years, in fact, in this initiative and have found that the subscription to the program has been, really, much larger than anticipated. The Labour department was very helpful to us in finding new approaches to providing opportunities for indigenous people, and we're very pleased that we were able to provide quite a bit of money in a variety of areas. I'd be happy to detail that specifically for you.

In November 2016 Indigenous Relations worked with the Labour department to identify projects totalling $1 million. This was the first piece that you asked about. From that, $200,000 went to Trade Winds to Success, which is pretrades training for indigenous people, which I know has been very highly supported by members on both sides of the House. It's a very effective program. It is particularly focused on helping people get into trades and has a strong focus on indigenous women. So it's a very nice program to be supporting.

Another $180,000 went to the Northeast Alberta Apprenticeship Initiative to support indigenous apprentices in the northeast area of the province to enrol in and complete trade certificates, which is the ongoing desire to help people move on to get their certificates and become red seal tradespeople.

Then $150,000 in Lesser Slave Lake for a transition support worker, to help improve job retention for community members once they've completed training. We found that just simply having the training didn't always suffice in terms of allowing people to engage in the community and in the marketplace, so we provided that money to allow the workers to be supported in terms of preparing their job applications and attending interviews, those kinds of activities in supporting and helping make that life transition, which is often difficult for people going from school into the working world.

Finally, we had $120,000 to the Kee Tas Kee Now Tribal Council for a transition support worker to help with job retention in very much the same way.

There was $40,000 to the Athabasca Tribal Council to provide driver training to five member communities as this is one of the biggest barriers in the north. The reality in the north is that if you don't have a driver's licence, it's very hard to get appropriate employment and that access to drivers' licences for communities that are often two or three hours away from any kind of a testing facility is very difficult and becomes a barrier for people moving forward. We know that once they have the skills necessary and once they have the jobs, the indigenous community are excellent workers, and we just want to make sure that there aren't barriers that stop them from moving through that process quickly and being successful.

Additionally, we provided $105,000 to the Saamis Employment & Training Association for a pre-employment program in Lethbridge in collaboration with Community Futures Treaty Seven; $85,000 to the Metis Settlements Strategic Training Initiatives for their forestry management program; $25,000 to the Tribal Chiefs Employment and Training Services Association for safety ticket training; $50,000 to Beaver First Nation for an employment readiness program; and $50,000 to Community Futures Treaty Seven for their pre-employment program for youth at risk.

All of these things, as you can hear, are spread throughout the province, encouraging young First Nations people to be successful in advancing themselves from their primary education into the workforce. The outcomes are very strong, very good. We're supporting communities that have struggled historically with employment records, and we're seeing some very substantive change now as we enable these communities to work with their own youth, help them develop skills in their own communities, that they then employ in their own communities.

One of the things that we found in doing these programs is that not only are we actually helping the indigenous communities, but indeed we help the much larger communities around the First Nations. They find themselves with a stronger workforce, people with high levels of skills, and, of course, people who are going to stay in the area because they live in the area and they're committed to the land in the area. Having these kinds of programs is, you know, very important in terms of helping rural Alberta communities enhance their success on an economic basis.

Let me just go on to add a bit more information because there were two pieces to your question.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, each response cannot be longer than five minutes.

So if the member has a question?

Ms McKittrick: I do. Thank you. I wanted to thank the minister. The Member for Red Deer-North and myself actually visited one of these training programs in Bonnyville and were just delighted as to the extent of the program and how proud the tribal council and the community were of this training program. I'd like to echo your words on how helpful those programs are to provide employment and to break down barriers for indigenous communities.

My next question is around the $6,805,000 that was transferred from the climate leadership plan to Indigenous Relations. I know that this has been a focus of your ministry, around climate change leadership in indigenous communities. There have been a number of solar energy projects and other green projects in indigenous communities. I was wondering what the money transferred from the climate leadership plan is going to be used for.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you very much to the member for the question. Again, this is an area that Indigenous Relations is very pleased to report about because it's about including the indigenous community in the major projects of this province, in this case the climate leadership plan, and ensuring that while we move ahead in the transition to a greener, more prosperous economy in terms of renewables, the indigenous community are there as true partners in this.

The money that you were speaking of, the $6.805 million being transferred from the climate leadership plan, is divided into a number of areas. In our assessment of the work that was needed in indigenous communities, we found, of course, that while we wanted to ensure the focus remained largely on the reduction of GHGs in the environment, we also needed to ensure that the communities themselves were prepared to take advantage of the programs and to develop the wherewithal to be a true partner. So some of the monies are allocated toward supporting leadership development and supporting educational programs.

Of course, we had two very successful pilot programs that were announced in the fall of this year with regard to doing a community audit so that there could be assessments of the First Nations communities, looking at ways in which they, first of all, could enhance their use of electricity through renewables and therefore reduce greenhouse gases but, furthermore, even to prepare themselves to participate in the larger electricity market, where they would be able to produce electricity as well as consume it within their First Nations and then perhaps, in time, sell that electricity into the larger market.

So there are a number of different programs that are established, from the very basic assessment and business plan preparation phase right through to the establishment of resources.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister. The time for the government side is now up.

We will move over to the Official Opposition. Is there anybody wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Chair. My question is to the Minister of Economic Development and Trade. I noted that you're asking for $562,000 to be transferred from the Ministry of Environment and Parks. I just want to know what the money is going to be used for.

My other observation is that in the last two budgets your ministry got $400 million plus $300 million, in total $700 million. Was that all spent and this is over and above that? What is that going to be used for? How many jobs are going to be created?

Also, in total how much more money will come for this coal transition? Is that your department that is going to lead?

Minister, I would request you to be brief. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair, and I thank the member for the questions. I will endeavour to answer all of your questions, but brevity is not my strong suit. So $562,000 is being transferred over from Environment and Parks, and this money is specifically used for the coal panel and the coal transition. This is money that's used to support the advisory panel that we stood up. There are three members on the coal advisory panel, that have already begun travelling to impacted communities, so part of this is dollars for them to engage in 10 facilitated discussions with stakeholders in the communities most affected by the retirement of coal-fired generation facilities.

I think it's really important to note right now that at this point in time these facilities – outside of our regulations, which would have them phase out by 2030, the federal government has in fact put a coal phase-out by 2029.

So this money is for the coal panel to engage with communities. They'll be meeting with municipal leaders, First Nations, community economic development organizations, small businesses, affected workers. Really, what they're doing is looking at the assets and strengths of the different communities, looking at the opportunities, whether with workers and what are the opportunities in the communities but as well looking at future opportunities.

The breakdown I can give the hon. member is that there is a portion of it that will be for salaries for three and one-half FTEs to support the panel. The panel themselves, I just want to say off the top, are not paid. Their travel costs are covered, but they are not drawing any type of salary or stipend or anything from government. There is a little over $150,000 that will support the engagement and the consultation. That's things like a facilitator, a writer, and event costs. There is $2,000 for education outreach and marketing, again, ensuring that the communities are well aware that the panel is coming in. And then there's about $16,000 earmarked for travel.

I can tell you that, you know, on the coal file working with the communities to transition is under my ministry, and that's part of the reason why it's transferred over. I myself was in three of the communities last week meeting with community leaders. So in addition to the work that the coal panel is doing, we are also, myself and my ministry, taking a very active role in working with the communities to help them identify opportunities moving forward.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.

Mr. Panda: I'll share my time with my colleague.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. I'd like to now recognize the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to move an amendment, please.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Member. If you can just give me a second for the original. We've stopped the clock while I'm getting the amendment.

Please go ahead, Member.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. Mr. Cyr to move that the 2016-17 supplementary supply estimates, No. 2, of the Ministry of Service Alberta be reduced by $899,000 for procurement and administration services under reference 8.1 at page 75 so that the supplementary estimate to be voted at page 73 is $1,000.

I would like to ask a few questions. Unfortunately, I would have liked to have done this at the end, but we're running out of time. To the Minister of Service Alberta: can you tell me how much you have spent on postage for the last three years?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Madam Chair. Certainly, Service Alberta is committed to streamlining and standardizing government-shared services to ensure we deliver the best possible value to Albertans. Through continued improvements in technology and innovation we have avoided mail and print service costs of $763,000 since 2013. It would be the equivalent of removing five vehicles from the road. The financial transactions budget is used in part to purchase postage inventory from Canada Post. Service Alberta either uses the postage for its own program needs or sells the postage to other government departments for their program needs. Service Alberta continually improves to ensure that the government-shared services process delivers the best possible value to the public as well as government stakeholders while avoiding unnecessary costs.

To reduce service costs, shared services has introduced efficiencies to the government's mail and print services that resulted in meaningful cost avoidance and environmental benefit. Consolidations in print services have avoided costs of $300,000 while the adoption of technology innovation will enable 20 million pages of print materials to be diverted to electronic submissions. Government print and mail volumes continue to decline by approximately 3 per cent annually as ministries find online, electronic ways to deliver programs and services.

A review of centralized government print and mail services in 2013 demonstrated the continued need for these functions. Print and mail services are not only relevant, but they are a critical component of successful program delivery for all government ministries, including subsidy cheques to vulnerable Albertans, service usage and financial statements, health and identity documents – health cards, birth certificates, drivers' licences, et cetera – and program and service information.

Service Alberta received a supplementary estimate of $900,000 for financial transactions. The estimate has gone from $7,650,000 to $8,550,000. The financial transactions budget is used in part to purchase postage inventory from Canada Post. Service Alberta either uses the postage for its own program needs or sells the postage to other government departments for their program needs.

The supplementary estimate will be used to address a larger than originally budgeted volume for search services in corporate and personal property registries, searches which are mailed out to the requesting party. As of December 31, 2016, year over year corporate search volumes have increased by 7 per cent, and personal property searches have increased by 3.7 per cent. Revenue for the two registry search fees had increased by $910,000. Overall Service Alberta's financial transaction budget remains lower than previous years, reflecting the savings from the elimination of mailing out registration renewal reminders.

The supplementary estimate is being funded by a reallocation from the department's operating expenses. The department will surplus $900,000 in operating to fund the increase to financial transactions. The long story short here, Madam Chair, is that these are not new dollars. We are simply moving dollars from one area to another.

The proposed amendment by the member opposite would mean that subsidy cheques would not go to vulnerable Albertans. That's something that he might be arguing for. It might be in line with their particular stance on not particularly caring about social issues. Perhaps the reduction is being proposed for the reason of not wanting to send out financial statements which would be in accordance with a goal to ensure a lack of transparency, perhaps so they could create some sort of political issue. However, I would suggest that's not in the best interests of Albertans nor anyone working for the government of Alberta.

Additionally . . .

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: For the information of the member and all members in the House, the amendment will be referred to as A1. The amendment will be voted on once the committee has concluded and before the vote on the supplementary supply estimates, so it will not be voted on right now.

We will now be moving on to the third party if there's a member that would like to speak. The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Chair. I had pursued a short line of questioning that we were both cut off on, so I'll defer back to the Minister of Indigenous Relations. We were talking about some underspending in his department and his programs, and I had asked: could you explain which programs had lower budget expenses and how the FNMI budgets were affected by reduced spending? Now, we've heard that the floods were part of that and flood mitigation, but could you tell us which communities specifically were directly affected by the reduced Indigenous Relations program funding and what specific projects were deferred or cancelled because of that?

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you very much to the hon. member for a chance to continue this conversation. I think it's a very important one. As I was indicating earlier, we had indeed allotted a little over 6 and a half million dollars to the funding for the Siksika and the Stoney Nakoda tribes for the flood recovery. At this time I can tell you that a little over $2 million extra was given to the Stoney Nakoda Nation to hire additional staff required for painting, drywall, but also youth and student work programs that allowed youth in the communities to be trained to do the work for the flood recovery. It was a good program for developing skills in the trades. We used approximately $500,000 to support the salary, benefits, and travel expenditures for five staff overall. I can tell you, though, that that money, including the $4 million that was originally funded for the Stoney Nakoda, has all indeed been used appropriately. The houses have been completed in the fall of this year, and we have essentially put an end to that program because of the completion.

However, we found that in spite of the fact that all the house work was done – and we had indeed even included some employment training in the work that was done – the estimates that were originally provided by the previous government were an overestimate of the actual costs as might be predicted five or six years ahead of the time. So we were able to take $1 million from that phase of the flood recovery program and were able to transfer it back to Treasury Board.

The program that is remaining, still in process right now, is the Siksika community program. That program has been a little bit slower in moving forward because the community itself chose to become the primary contractors for the building in their own community, and you may know that they faced some political opposition within their own community about the site of those houses. While they're working through that, there was some delay in the initiation of the building of those houses.

As a result, we have taken $750,000 that has not yet been distributed to the community and held it to be deferred till next year in case in the finalization of the houses, which are to be completed over the next 12 months, I understand, there are any unexpected costs or things that were unanticipated. Then we would have that money to be able to facilitate any kind of finalization process as necessary.

The simple answer to your question is that no programs have been cancelled; nothing has been deferred. In fact, we've been extremely successful in moving this forward. I'm very pleased to return a million dollars back to Treasury Board and very pleased to have $750,000 in the accounts for next year just as a backup. Perhaps next year I'll be offering some of that money back to Treasury Board again.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you to the minister for his response.

I see we have the Minister of Municipal Affairs available, so I'll shift gears into some questions around some funding there. This government cut $19 million from Municipal Affairs, mostly by reducing the MSI, the municipal sustainability initiative, by $17 million. We heard recently from municipal leaders, in fact just on Tuesday, that community infrastructure is desperately needed in this province. We also understand that some funds have to be reprofiled into future years due to project planning and construction issues. What are you doing to ensure that the reprofiled funds are used for their intended purposes and that future new funding is not reduced due to funds reprofiled into the future so that we're not actually sort of stealing from future opportunities for funding? And what is your approach to this going forward in terms of that reduction and how we're going to help these municipalities to still achieve some of their infrastructure needs?

Mr. S. Anderson: Sir, are you referring to line 3? I just want to make sure I get the right . . .

Mr. Gotfried: Yes. That's correct. A $17 million reduction of the MSI.

Mr. S. Anderson: The transfer from operating to capital?

Mr. Gotfried: Yeah.

Mr. S. Anderson: Okay. I kind of discussed it a bit yesterday. It's one of the ways we support the five mid-sized cities, by allowing them to transfer the MSI operating to capital. It happens every year. It's the way they have chosen to use their MSI funding. But as you rightly pointed out and as we are aware, it's the importance of that core infrastructure to the communities across Alberta.

The MSI agreements that are expiring on the 31st: those agreements are expiring, but the program is not, so we're still going to be supporting these municipalities going forward. As I indicated yesterday as well, the funding for the upcoming budget for these municipalities is still there. It's money that was allocated for them. We are going to be working with them to make sure that we find, I guess, a long-term, sustainable solution. What that looks like, I'm not sure yet because there's a lot of discussion, a lot of consultation ongoing.

I know your concerns. I think that since the first day I got elected, to be honest with you, MSI has come across my plate. Those particulars are going to have to be worked out with those local officials to find out what they think is going to be best going forward. I mean, you'll hear me say "sustainable" numerous times, but that's exactly what we're looking for, something that they can count on through these ups and downs for that infrastructure. For sure, it's going to be a hugely collaborative endeavour.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you to the minister for his response. Of course, sustainability is certainly an issue for all of us, but I'm sure you'll be hearing more from those affected municipalities as we go forward.

My second question is: what do you intend to do to enhance support for communities that depend on funding for the Alberta community partnerships, which was reduced by $1.5 million, and on the grants in place of taxes program, which was reduced by $1 million? What are you going to do with these communities to ensure that this does not affect their ability to do what they need to do in terms of providing support in their own communities? I know that you'll be hearing about this, but I'd like to hear what you have to say in terms of how you're going to address those concerns when they come back to you from the various parts of the province.

Mr. S. Anderson: Sure. I mean, we have talked about the grants in place of taxes. That's one of the issues that I spoke about yesterday. Some of our savings were because of anticipated lower construction assessment growth. That's, I think, one of those fluid things that every year changes a little bit. Again, I don't want to deal in hypotheticals with it, but it's, like I said, a fluid thing that it happens we have to work with those municipalities on.

The other part you were talking about was the Alberta community partnerships. Yeah, we did have savings there for municipal restructuring. I don't have the specifics, like, what the savings were there. I'm going to have to get the specifics for you on that. Definitely, you know, we always want to make sure the funding is there for these municipalities when they need it and make sure that it's being used in the way that is going to be viable for the communities, obviously. I know that there are lots of good examples about water and waste water, things that they've done. We need to work with them and make sure that it's being used appropriately. They're the boots on the ground, and they know better than us in that sense. Like I say, it's always kind of a fluid situation, where we have to make sure we're doing what's right for the residents of Alberta and making lives better for Albertans.

Thanks.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Minister. I know that the municipalities and the regions are a very outspoken group, so I'm sure that you'll be hearing from them as they face funding shortfalls in specific areas. I know that we look forward to hearing how you address that going forward.

My next question is with reference to Children's Services. An additional $28 million is requested for Children's Services on page 22. I'd like to understand which cities, communities, or regions this funding will be focused on. Is that . . . [A timer sounded] That was an easy one.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Member.

We will now move to the government side. Are there any members wishing to speak at this time?

Seeing none, we will return to the Official Opposition. Are there any members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to go back to the Minister of Service Alberta. I'd like to go with a five-minute block with a five-minute answer, please. I've got some prepared questions.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, we will be rising and reporting at 11:55. I just want you to be aware.

Mr. Cyr: Fair enough. I'd like to table this document, please.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, you can't table in supplementary supply. If you would like to table a document, you will need to do it after question period.

Mr. Cyr: Okay. Fair enough. I will table the document later. The one that I'm specifically going on is a press release of March 2, 2016, that is titled Alberta Modernizing Renewal Reminders. "Government will save taxpayers $3 million a year by switching to electronic reminders for registration, licence and identification card renewals." My question to the minister, really quickly, is: how is it that we had $1.2 million in the last two years of inventory with postage, and this year somehow we're out, and we're going for an emergency supplemental of $900,000? That appears to be mismanagement at its best.

Next question. Postage was supposed to go down significantly, and we're seeing that that is not the case. The minister refused to answer what she had spent in this year with her last answer. So I'd like to know again: what are the last three years of postage? How is it that her office has managed it so poorly?

The next one: is this $900,000 going into a postage inventory? If so, it appears that this government is deferring from one year's budget to a next year's budget. If that is the case, that appears to be very unethical. I would ask that the minister respond to this, either to me directly or in writing.

With that, I will end my questions.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Sure. Thank you, Madam Chair. I'll rise and respond on behalf of the Minister of Service Alberta. The supplementary estimate is being used to address a larger than originally budgeted volume for search services, corporate searches and personal property searches as well.

The Deputy Chair: We need to rise and report progress.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration supplementary supply estimates, No. 2, for the fiscal year 2016-2017, reports progress thereon, and requests leave to sit again. I would also like to table copies of an amendment moved during Committee of Supply this day for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Does the Assembly concur in the report? Those in favour, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Acting Speaker: Those opposed, please say no. So ordered.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Seeing the time and the progress made this morning, I move that we adjourn until 1:30 this afternoon.

[The Assembly adjourned at 11:57 a.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, March 9, 2017

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Be careful the ice of March. Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my absolute honour to introduce to you and through you a man who I deeply respect and admire. He's a veteran Canadian politician whose social democratic values are shared by New Democrats across our country and here in this very Chamber, and this, of course, is former Saskatchewan Premier Roy Romanow. I'd love it if you stay standing, Premier Romanow, while I speak about you.

He led our neighbouring province for more than a decade. He's well known and should be honoured by us for his tremendous work as a staunch supporter of medicare, supporting and advocating for stable, accessible public health care for each and every Canadian. We had an opportunity to chat earlier today about how it's always important to make sure that the national stage is aware of your local needs, and he certainly did an excellent job of that. As head of the royal Commission on the Future of Health Care in Canada Mr. Romanow fought hard for supporting stable, accessible public health care for all, and last June Mr. Romanow was named co-chair of the board of directors of the Canadian Alliance to End Homelessness, adding his leadership and expertise to the national movement to eradicate homelessness across our country.

Even nearly 20 years after leaving political life, Mr. Romanow continues to dedicate himself to serving the Canadian people and helping make life better for our country's most vulnerable. I'd ask that former Saskatchewan Premier Romanow please accept the traditional warm welcome of all members of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome, sir.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you Trevor Buttery, who is my office practicum student from MacEwan University in the social work program. He is in his first year and has been an outstanding addition to our team. He joins us today in recognition of Social Work Week, and I will be speaking more on this later this afternoon. Trevor, please rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Fort Saskatchewan elementary school. There are 64 students up in the gallery behind me. They are accompanied by their teachers, Mrs. Laura Simpson, Mr. Tyler Nyznyk, and Mrs. Cindy Flaman, and they also have chaperones Mrs. Monique Bandura and Mr. George Braz. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I apologize if I butcher the French here. M. le Président, c'est avec fierté que je me lève à la Chambre aujourd'hui pour introduire les étudiants de Broxton Park school. Les étudiants sont accompagnés par leurs enseignants, M. Benoit Mathieu et M. Marcel Turcotte. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome. Bonjour.

The Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Ai Tran. Many social workers like Ai, who works at the Edmonton Remand Centre, work within our justice system to ensure that our communities are safe and supported. We thank you all for your incredible hard work and your advocacy and making a difference in the lives of Albertans. I'd ask now that Ai please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

My oversight. Were there any other school groups, hon. members? Seeing and hearing none, the Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions for you today. First, it is my honour and privilege to introduce to you and through you to all the members of this Assembly a group of compassionate and dedicated advocates for Alberta's children, families, and communities. As part of Social Work Week and in my ongoing work as Minister of Children's Services I'm making it a priority to recognize Alberta's social workers for the work they do to support children and families and to celebrate them for changing lives one client, one child, one family at a time. This week I've had the pleasure of meeting many of them, and I'm pleased to be joined by some of them today, including Lynn Labrecque King, Suzanne MacKinnon, Julie Mann-Johnson, and Charity Lui from the Alberta College of Social Workers; Lina Filomeno-Melchionna-Mcman at the Children's Mental Health Center; and from my own Ministry of Children's Services, Cody Murrell and Carmen Deehan. I ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms Larivee: For my second introduction it's my honour and privilege to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly my dear friend Tracey Marshall, who is a public health nurse here in Edmonton and who I worked with for several years. Along with her husband, Rob, she has parented two wonderful boys, Luke and Drake. Tracey and Rob recently moved to Fort Saskatchewan from my community of Slave Lake, and what has been Lesser Slave Lake's loss is Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville's gain. I miss them very much. I'm happy to see her today, and I ask Tracey to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a group of individuals representing Ministik and Uncas parent councils in the wonderful riding of Strathcona-Sherwood Park. Today we have with us Pauline Gurnett and Elizabeth Buzenus from Ministik and Laura Rasmussen and Elyse Chatterton from Uncas. I would like to thank them for their dedication and contribution to our rural education system. Their dedication is a continual source of inspiration to me. May my guests please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure and honour to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly members of the social work community who work in Alberta's social and community service sector to make life better for Albertans each and every day. I am pleased that we are joined today by several social workers. They include Rick Guthrie from Alberta Community and Social Services; Nimir Rasiklal Raval and Martha Sellu from The Family Centre; Bernadette Iahtail from the Creating Hope Society of Alberta; Lovenia Satdeo from strengths foundation; Missa Mvuezolo, a student at Lurana Shelter; as well as Darcy Shields, Claire Ssembatha, and Bukola Salami, who are public members of Alberta College of Social Workers.

This week in Alberta we are recognizing Social Work Week and celebrating the accomplishments of these dedicated, hard-working professionals, and as a former social worker myself I have a tremendous appreciation for the work that these individuals do, and as minister I am continually thankful for their contribution to our province. I ask my guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you Ms Jodi Miller. Jodi is on the Alberta Party board, and she's also the president of the Alberta Party Calgary-Elbow Constituency Association, which, as you all know, means that I have to do pretty much everything Jodi tells me. Jodi is a shining example of long-term commitment to our community, and she works very hard to make our province a better place every single day. If I can ask Jodi, please, to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two of my constituents, Liz Hagell and Neil Kirkwood. Liz was a nursing instructor at Red Deer College for a number of years and is a champion equestrian and beekeeper. Neil has worked with special-needs students and taught high school social studies during a teaching career that has spanned over 30 years. He still substitutes from time to time. They've made a significant impact in the Red Deer area, and I'm honoured to welcome them here today. Will Liz and Neil please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Master Warrant Officer Scott Tanner. Scott has served in the military for 28 years and is currently appointed as a sergeant major of the 3rd Canadian Division Support Group signal squadron. He is here today as part of a course for the members' professional development plan through Algonquin College. I would like to thank Scott for his service to Canada, and I'd like him to please rise and remain standing to receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two separate introductions today. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you three accomplished professionals who are teaching a new generation of social workers as this week is Social Work Week in Alberta. This is a great time to acknowledge social workers and that I, too, am a social worker, to acknowledge my dear colleagues and friends. Please rise when I say your name. Rick Enns has practised as a registered social worker in Alberta since 1991 and holds a PhD from the University of Alberta and a master's of social work degree from the University of Manitoba. He's the associate dean in the Faculty of Social Work for the University of Calgary's central and northern Alberta region in Edmonton.

David Flomo is the program chair of social work at NorQuest College's Faculty of Health and Community Studies. He holds a master's degree in social work and is an active volunteer in the ACSW. He is also an international man, having come from Liberia, studied in Ghana, Kenya, the U.S., and now calls Alberta home.

Kathaleen Quinn is the director of the school of social work at MacEwan University. She holds a master's degree and has extensive years of practice in health care and education.

I'm honoured to acknowledge these leaders here today, and I'm proud to say that I've taught at all three of their faculties. I ask the members of the Assembly to give them the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms Sigurdson: My second introduction is for Natasha Semenjok. Natasha is my constituency assistant in the magnificent riding of Edmonton-Riverview. She is also a social worker, with a diploma from MacEwan and a bachelor of social work from the University of Calgary. She is a field placement supervisor for social work students in Alberta and co-chair of the social action, social justice committee with the Alberta College of Social Workers. Natasha's dedication to constituents of Edmonton-Riverview is exemplary. I am so fortunate to work alongside her in the service to constituents. I ask the members to please give the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly members of the social work community who work in our province's health care system. During Social Work Week we are joined by social workers who provide quality health care and support to Albertans with dedication and compassion and who work to make Alberta a better place. The ones I'd like to introduce you to today are Margaret Brown, Jo-Anne Beggs, and Andrew Mah from Alberta Health Services; Nana Mumford from Alberta Hospital; Nicole Darko from Leduc Home Care; and Neisau Sampson from St. Albert & Sturgeon Primary Care Network. I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and to all members of this Assembly Jennifer Hollett. Jennifer is the head of news and government at Twitter Canada. An award-winning TV reporter and producer, Jennifer has over a decade of experience at CBC, CTV, and Much music. She helped to develop the super PAC app, helping to make political TV ads more transparent in the 2012 U.S. election. She studied public policy at Harvard University and is a strong advocate for women's and girl's rights. I would now like to ask Jennifer to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Social Work Week

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my privilege to rise today to honour social workers here in Alberta and across Canada. This is an opportunity to show our gratitude and respect to the professionals who support Albertans in many different areas, including disability services, employment services, income support, and child intervention, to just name a few. This year the theme is The Power to Empower. I have the incredible opportunity to highlight the next generation of future social workers training for tomorrow.

Trevor Buttery, a placement student in my constituency office, is a first-year social work student at MacEwan University. He chose this profession after working at the Tegler Youth Centre in my colleague's riding of Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. The youth centre empowered Trevor to see the value in creating authentic, lasting relationships that are an important part of a healthy community. These skills became essential and necessary, leading him to pursue a career in social work.

I have been able to observe Trevor as he sharpens his skills. I am so proud to see him grow in his practice of effective advocacy and communication over this past year. Trevor is a great example of the path that many take in becoming social workers. I myself was impacted by a social worker I met who then became a role model for me. She empowered me to pursue a career to help others.

As professionals, social workers make a difference in the lives of so many Albertans. They do so through their professionalism, compassion, and commitment to help and empower others to make a better life. I encourage everyone to continue to thank social workers throughout the year. To all the social workers across Alberta, know that you are appreciated. Your government thanks you for all of the work that you do. Happy Social Work Week.

Co-operation on Economic Development

Mr. Smith: Government is about vision. When conducted properly, it is a carefully orchestrated performance that combines the wishes of the people with the possibilities of the future to produce a harmonious vision, all orchestrated by leadership acting as the conductor of the symphony. When the individual sections are brought together properly, there is a synergy, and government can actually work for the people, as it is intended to do. All of society benefits.

We have seen on many occasions over the last two years how this government is not working for the people of Alberta. Some sections of the orchestra have never been consulted. The government wind section is blowing too much hot air too hard. The percussionists are banging an environmental drum that is drowning out the rest of the financial instruments. Sometimes the audience and musicologists in the opposition try to help the government keep up with the changing times and find a new tempo.

Every once in a while a different conductor takes charge and can make the sections of the band work together in new and harmonious ways. We have a new conductor in the Drayton Valley-Devon constituency, and we are beginning to hear the orchestra tune itself up. Under the direction of the regional hemp committee different sections such as Biocomposites and Hempco; the towns of Drayton Valley, Devon, Warburg, Calmar, and Breton; the counties of Brazeau, Wetaskiwin, Parkland, and Leduc; the Clean Energy Technology Centre; and the Leduc-Nisku business association are all tuning up to compose the industrial hemp supply chain that will diversify the regional economy and create jobs and wealth. A beautiful tune, indeed.

The business sector, local government, and even the provincial government are working together, and the symphony is about to begin. With a little seed capital to develop a few more notes to complete this musical score, Albertans . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Justice System Delays

Mr. Jean: Our justice system is in crisis, and it's taken the NDP two years to wake up. Today we finally heard the first Band-Aid to try and stop the tide of accused murderers, predators, and criminals from getting their own get-out-of-jail-free card from the NDP government. These positions are badly needed, but the fact remains that this Justice minister's edict to prosecutors to pull resources away from serious crimes has sent a chill throughout Alberta. Why hasn't the Premier asked her minister to immediately reverse this dangerous new NDP policy?

Ms Hoffman: The member opposite couldn't be further from the truth if he tried, Mr. Speaker. He spent 10 years in Ottawa and never once brought up justice resources. We've been working diligently to make sure that we follow the Jordan decision, which is required of the government, and make sure that we're staffing up with the appropriate resources when and where they need it. These guys on the other side like to pretend that they're Keystone Kops: cut one day; staff up the next. You know what? Speaking of Keystone, we're getting progress on three pipelines.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, we're talking about dangerous criminals. This is a growing problem that's only going to get much worse. Last year in Ontario, believe it or not, 46 trials were stayed due to delays, but just in the last two months there have been over 200 cases in Alberta that have been stayed. In Ontario the Crown prosecutor association is anticipating that there could be an eventual 6,000 criminal cases stayed or withdrawn as a result of this decision. It's troubling. We need to keep Alberta safe. To the Premier: how many accused criminals does the NDP estimate will see their trials stayed this year?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is one thing for the Leader of the Official Opposition to talk about crime; it's quite another to actually do something about it. We are investing in the system. Let me talk about what the member opposite wanted to do about the justice system. When asked, he said: I think it's going to take a period of time to see where we end up on this matrix. He's been watching too many movies. We are moving forward on ensuring that the necessary resources are in place.

Mr. Jean: Well, Mr. Speaker, we've been waiting over two years for that, and most of it from this government. The NDP soft-on-crime protocol that was released explicitly states that minor files shouldn't be given the same attention. The question is: what's a minor file to the victim of a crime? In what circumstances is a sexual assault ever minor? Will the grandma from Wetaskiwin who had a knife pulled on her last week in an attempted carjacking just have to accept that these things happen because of this NDP policy? There are real people who are the victims of these charges and crimes. What is the Premier going to say to those victims?

Ms Ganley: Mr. Speaker, if the member had taken the time to read the policy, he would see that it allows Crown prosecutors to focus on the most serious and violent crimes. A University of Calgary law professor and former Supreme Court of Canada clerk said that it was eminently reasonable and one hundred per cent consistent with prosecutorial discretion and that it was guided by principled and coherent policies. The inconsistencies on that side of the House just keep piling up: one day it's "Cut resources"; the next day it's "Add resources." They can't even decide . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Let's keep moving. The second main question.

Energy Industry Update

Mr. Jean: Just a couple of weeks ago the Finance minister said and assured Albertans that we had turned a corner in our economy, but that's not a reality outside of the dome, Mr. Speaker. Shell is waving goodbye to Alberta, selling almost all of their Alberta oil sands assets just today, and the price of oil has again plummeted under $50 a barrel. The Premier's plan is not working. Albertans are desperate, hoping the government will finally give them a break and have their backs, but they don't. When will the NDP change course and admit that their plan is simply not working?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, I know that the member opposite wants that to be the case. He's perpetually cheering for Alberta to fail, but on this side of the House we are going to stand up for Albertans, for Alberta jobs, and for Alberta companies. I'm so encouraged that Canadian Natural president Steve Laut stated that over time, opportunities will be explored to increase the capacity of the Scotford upgrader so that more barrels of bitumen which are produced in Alberta will be upgraded in Alberta. That's good news. [interjections]

Mr. Jean: Tell that to the 200,000 Albertans that are out of work.

The Speaker: Keep it down, folks.

Mr. Jean: In the last few weeks I've been to New York, Toronto, and Washington, and I've asked potential investors what it would take to get our province back on track. They said that with the government we have in charge, we may as well hold up a sign that says: "Alberta is not for them. Alberta is out of business, and we are closed for business." U.S. oil supply is rising. Alberta is losing Shell, a carbon tax is now here, and a set of new regulations is being brought in by this government and is making us far less competitive. When will anyone in this government finally admit that it's time to change course?

The Speaker: Thank you.

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, we're proud to work alongside major employers in Alberta, including the president of Shell Canada, Michael Crothers, who said, "Shell has long called for effective carbon pricing frameworks. They create powerful economic incentives to reduce emissions and develop cleaner methods of production." We're working with industry. We're creating great opportunities as we move forward. They're standing with us. The only ones standing alone telling people to move their investment to other jurisdictions are the members opposite. I wish they'd stop cheering against Alberta.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, if you talk to real people, they'll tell you that times are tough in Alberta, and, no, they don't feel that it's getting any better whatsoever. They want common sense, and they want to know that common sense isn't spending a billion dollars to kill our coal industry when there are already 100,000 people unemployed. Common sense isn't increasing the cost of gas and heat when Albertans are facing record levels of consumer debt, and common sense isn't capping oil sands growth while we are desperately looking for investment. How can the NDP be so stubborn as to not just do what's best for this province? Use some common sense, and repeal these bad NDP policies.

Ms Hoffman: You know, I mentioned yesterday that I know math is difficult for the other side, so let's take the time to review another formula. We have two new pipeline approvals, Mr. Speaker. If you were to minus that thoughtful made-in-Alberta plan that got us to that point, what would that equal? Fourteen billion dollars less in investment, thousands more lost jobs, and a return to the same old dead-end approach that the member opposite tried for 10 years in Ottawa and failed on. The opposition: it's time to admit that you're wrong. Stop promising to repeal everything that's happened that's actually helping Alberta move forward, and get on board with our new pipelines.

Child Death Review System

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked the minister whether her department is even investigating the death of little Serenity. Given that the Serenity case does not fall within the purview of the 73 reported deaths of children in care that the panel is currently discussing, we need to know what went wrong in the Serenity case specifically so similar tragic situations can be prevented in the future and, most importantly, to ensure justice for Serenity and her family. Given that the minister did not actually answer my question, I will ask again: is the Department of Children's Services internally investigating the death of Serenity? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Clearly, all Albertans, including the very passionate, committed staff within Children's Services, care deeply about the death of any child in the system. So, yes – yes – the staff are very passionate about figuring out what the opportunities are to do things differently. Ever since it's happened, they've been working on it. We need to change the death review process. That's what the panel is about. We need, going forward, to work on making the system better so there are not the same concerns that happened in this case because of the previously developed procedures.

Mr. Nixon: Another non answer, Mr. Speaker.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, this panel is not the first of its kind in recent years. In January 2014, experts participated in round-tables to discuss improvements to the child welfare system as a result of deaths of children in care. The Child Intervention Implementation Oversight Committee was appointed to oversee the implementation of numerous recommendations that have come from different review bodies. Will the minister please explain to Albertans how her panel is better than the panels and round-tables of the past? What is the magic ingredient so that we will actually get meaningful change this time? Given her answers on Serenity I'm not holding my breath.

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would say that our government has been on the record from long before becoming government, as an opposition, as very passionate about ensuring that change happened in the system.

Mr. Speaker, there is the commitment that resulted in a separate Minister of Children's Services, once again, the commitment that developed a panel that will engage in true engagement with the people who are on the front lines and the people out in indigenous communities and beyond to ensure that we get to the right answers on this and actually take action to ensure that the system is finally improved.

Mr. Nixon: In 2015 it was strongly recommended to the minister to create a multidisciplinary child death review committee led by the office of the Chief Medical Examiner. I requested that all panel members receive briefing notes prepared by or for the relevant government departments regarding this recommendation. We did not receive this. We were told in December 2016, three months ago, that the department's executive director met with the Chief Medical Examiner to explore this possibility. Will the minister please tell us why it took so long to have this meeting and whether the government will be proceeding with implementing this recommendation? Why or why not?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The whole intention of having the child intervention panel and looking at the death review process was to make sure that we made the very best choice going forward to reconcile the fact that right now there are as many as half a dozen separate reviews. I don't want to pre-empt the work of the panel. There is important work to be done there by all people working together within this House. I anticipate that those recommendations will provide some guidance as to how to reconcile the past processes that haven't worked and build a new one going forward that's in the best interests of the children, their families, and the staff who take care of them.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The leader of the third party.

AIMCo Board of Directors

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last night at the heritage fund standing committee meeting the CEO of AIMCo said that the removal of sections 5 and 6 of the regulations came as a surprise, and he called it "not a welcome surprise." AIMCo's governance structure and independence are, he said, "sacred cornerstones" that require directors to have financial expertise. Minister, AIMCo oversees $90 billion of public funds, including the heritage fund. Why did you not even consult with AIMCo about removing the requirement for board members to be qualified? Are you just smarter than the best investment team in the business?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much for the question, Mr. Speaker. You know, I've got great confidence in the professionals over at AIMCo, and they make sound investment decisions for Alberta. They are the best in the business. I want you to know that Mr. Uebelein also said something else. He also said this at the committee last night. He stated that independence "has not been encumbered." This government will not encumber their independence. They are doing the things we want them to do. [interjections] They are not being instructed to invest anywhere else. They are not ... [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. minister, you're going to keep talking to me, right?

Mr. McIver: Those professionals criticized you last night, Minister.

Let's look at your claim that section 5 is now redundant. We looked it up. It's not redundant. The repealed regulation said, "Individuals appointed to the board must have proven and demonstrable experience and expertise in investment management." The new ABC act vaguely mentions identifying skills, knowledge, and expertise in a generic framework, which is kind of vague. Will you commit right now, Minister, to not appointing any NDP hacks to AIMCo in order to push investments toward an NDP world view?

Mr. Ceci: You know, I'm not going to apologize for trying to make the appointment process more open and transparent across ABCs. I'm not going to apologize for getting people on boards for what they know as opposed to who they know on that side. I'm not going to apologize for opening up this process so it's online so that anybody can apply to ABCs, and they have to have qualifications. We got two excellent people recently as a result of our application process, Ken Kroner and Phyllis Clark. Both of them have stellar – stellar – credentials.

Mr. McIver: I guess the minister won't apologize for appointing Ray Martin to NAIT.

At last night's committee meeting opposition members asked for the minister to show up and defend his dangerous and politically motivated change to AIMCo. The committee has agreed to invite the minister to attend and address concerns about repealing sections 5 and 6. Minister, will you personally show up at the next meeting of the trust fund to answer for your reckless decision in cancelling sections 5 and 6? [interjections]

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier. [interjections] Order, please.
The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: The member opposite likes to throw mud and run away, Mr. Speaker, and I'm not going to let him do that. I'm going to be proud to stand up for the fact that somebody who has been a long-time public servant, somebody who has coached, somebody who has taught, somebody who's been a councillor, somebody who's served decades in the public, somebody who's on the Edmonton public school board making sure that kids in Alberta have an opportunity to have career pathways that stretch beyond the K to 12 system, well into postsecondary – in a letter NAIT actually said that Mr. Martin understands governance, having served on several boards over the course of his career; it's clear that Mr. Martin cares deeply for our province and for its people.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister. [interjections] Order, please. The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Transportation Infrastructure in Fort Saskatchewan

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm so proud to represent the good people of Fort Saskatchewan in this Legislature. For forty years residents and industry have been frustrated by the lack of investment in critical infrastructure by previous governments, and the ongoing issues with highway 15 and the traffic congestion have only gotten worse with a booming population and steady growth in our oil and gas industry. What is the Minister of Transportation going to do to finally fix decades of neglect?

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to start by thanking that hon. member for her advocacy on this and many other issues that affect her constituency.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the problems in Fort Saskatchewan relative to congestion . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Proceed, hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you. If the hon. member is finished, Mr. Speaker, I'll resume.

The Speaker: Well, I want you to continue. Please keep going.

Mr. Mason: Thank you. I think it's critical that we recognize that there are many problems around this province that have been neglected by the previous government. This is one of them.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mrs. Littlewood: Mr. Speaker, I think it's unfortunate that members in this Assembly on the other side are making fun of the fact that people have died on that bridge and on those roads over the last number of years, and no one did anything about it. Given that the two-lane bridge creates a bottleneck and then major safety concerns that are not only frustration but accidents and loss of lives, what is this minister going to do to address these grave concerns?

Mr. Rodney: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Point of order noted. [interjection] Hon. member. The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Sad, Mr. Speaker, that after decades of neglect the Progressive Conservatives are still yapping about this.

Mr. Speaker, there are real, serious problems in Fort Saskatchewan with congestion and within the surrounding area. It's very unfortunate the previous government didn't deal with it. I can't really go any further than that at this time other than to say that there are many competing priorities in this province because the neglect of the previous government was so, so, so bad over so many years, but this government cares about Alberta families. We want to make life better for Alberta families.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mrs. Littlewood: Given how important this trade corridor is to the economic development of Alberta's Industrial Heartland and the benefits that it brings to all of Alberta and given that this is the best time to move forward with investment in infrastructure, when can we expect improvement on this issue?

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This government is committed to making life better for Albertans, and that includes making sure that we improve the infrastructure and the transportation network of this province. We're committed to doing that. I can't give the hon. member any kind of specific answer at this time, but I want to tell her that this government cares about the people of Fort Saskatchewan and appreciates her strong advocacy.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently the Finance minister repealed sections 5 and 6 of the Alberta Investment Management Corporation regulations, which means that the qualifications required to become an AIMCo board member are nonexistent within the regulation. Removing these qualifications erodes public confidence in the NDP government and could be seen as a way for the minister to appoint less-qualified people of the NDP's friends. The minister needs to be cognizant that this is how cronyism starts. Why does the minister feel that it's necessary for him to meddle with the Alberta heritage trust fund?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Ceci: Again, nothing could be further from the truth. What we're doing is we're opening up the appointment process, so anyone – anyone – can put their name forward. This is the kind of person you get when you do that. You get a Ken Kroner, who previously managed $4 trillion in assets in a U.S. fund. You get a person like Phyllis Clark, who was a former vice-president of administration and CFO of the University of Alberta. You get stellar people.

It wasn't before it changed. You know, we changed the process on September 21, 2016. These people were appointed more than two months later.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If it ain't broken, don't fix it.

Given, Mr. Speaker, that there seems to be a lot of skulduggery going on within this government and given that the financial state of the government . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet, please.

Mr. Cyr: . . . and their reckless, irresponsible spending and debt accumulation habits are a deep concern for Albertans and given that AIMCo was established as an independent body responsible for the Alberta heritage trust fund, pensions, and other major funds, to the minister: why are you trying to erode the independence of this body?

Mr. Ceci: You know, that's again further from the truth than I can even imagine. The opposition seems to think that because we've allowed AIMCo to invest more money in Alberta, we're somehow interfering with AIMCo. [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet, please.

Mr. Ceci: We are helping Albertans. We are helping companies in Alberta get through this downturn by a portion of the heritage trust fund going into good investments in this province. That's open. That's transparent. That's not interfering. Mr. Uebelein was quoted saying the same thing, that independence "has not been encumbered." That's what Uebelein said.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. He wouldn't have spoken at all had you actually not put his independence at risk.

Given that last night the Deputy Minister of Finance stated that there were no changes in quality to the heritage trust fund management board nominee process and given that the management board CEO stated, "These recent changes to the AIMCo regulation actually did come as a surprise to us and, frankly, not a welcome surprise," Minister, who was right? The CEO or the deputy minister? Why did you fail to consult with this important body within Alberta?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Ceci: Again it's not accurate. There were consultations back and forth.

You know, the process, because it's more open and transparent . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet.

Mr. Ceci: . . . is a problem for these people. You know, they don't want openness and transparency. They want to put their friends on different boards. We're not doing that. We've cut CEOs' salaries and the perks that these people put in place. Those club memberships were there. We cut them. We're not ever going to apologize for improving governance in this province. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, I really don't want to go out into the cold air, but the heat in this place encourages me to do so. Please keep it down and respectful.

The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Public Service Compensation

Dr. Starke: Thank you Mr. Speaker. The public service is comprised of dedicated and hard-working Albertans, and I appreciate their efforts in serving us. These workers recognize the financial difficulties facing our province. They see their friends and neighbours facing layoffs, reductions in hours worked, and wage rollbacks. Yet earlier this week a contract with over 13,000 AUPE members was ratified, giving wage increases of 1.2 and 0.8 per cent retroactively to April 1, 2015. Now, these are modest increases, but to the Labour minister: at a time when most Albertans are happy to just have a job, does she feel that the wage increases set an appropriate example?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. You know, the member of the opposition started out correctly. He said that these were arbitrated settlements that go back to 2015 and '16. These will clean off the amount of organized settlements that need to be taken care of, and when we go forward to '17 and '18-19, we'll be taking care of those ourselves. The arbitration was not our decision.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, let's talk about the future. Given that the data on page 10 of the Bargaining Update 2017 document from the Labour ministry, which I will table, shows that 2017 wage settlements in Alberta for unionized public-sector workers average a 2.94 per cent increase and given that wages make up nearly 50 per cent of the government's budget, can the Minister of Finance explain how he will hold the line on government spending when public-sector union settlements are increasing by nearly 3 per cent?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you. You know, the opposition seems to think it's in the interests of Albertans to throw contracts and other things out the window or to negotiate here in the Legislature. We're not going to do that. We're going to negotiate at the table. We respect the hard work of individuals who work for public services. We're involved in many public-sector negotiations right now. That is going to occur at the table, and we'll show that the proof will be in the pudding when we bring those contracts in.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, I must say that it's a bit rich for this government to talk about tearing up contracts.

When the current government was over here in opposition, it was fond of accusing the previous government of what they called looking after our friends, but given that in 2016 Alberta's average weekly earnings decreased by 2.4 per cent while public-sector wage settlements increased by 2.2 per cent, to the Labour minister: does she feel it appropriate to look after her unionized friends while non-unionized Albertans face wage cuts and job losses?

Mr. Ceci: You know, Mr. Speaker, I just want to talk about some of the thoughtful and prudent actions we're taking to reduce staffing costs because that side doesn't seem to think we're doing anything. We've instituted a hiring restraint across the civil service. We've frozen the salaries of management and other non-union staff. We've frozen wages for all of the people in this Legislature: cabinet ministers, MLAs, political staff. We've frozen managers' and other people's wages for two years, and we've gotten rid of high-priced salaries that you put in place over there and golf memberships as well.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Mr. Fildebrandt: Yesterday, on International Women's Day, I looked to one of the strongest female leaders the world has ever known, Margaret Thatcher. The Iron Lady stands as an example to the world to follow of fiscal discipline, economic prosperity, and national revival. I see none of that in this government. The NDP promised to balance the budget by 2017, then by 2018 and '19, but since then they've abandoned even a theoretical return to balanced budgets altogether. When the minister tables his budget next week, will it include a specific and credible date for a return to balance?

Mr. Ceci: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me start off by saying that we're not going to invade Argentina, all right?

You know, what we're seeing in this province is a return to some growth. We're seeing the recession start to recede, and we're seeing a little more sunshine peeking through every day. Drilling activity is up, we're seeing capital investments up, and we're seeing jobs return. Those things will help us get back to balance a lot sooner than that side, who does nothing to help us get back to balance.

Mr. Fildebrandt: But they have declared war on taxpayers.

Given, Mr. Speaker, that the NDP have ignored repeated warnings from the opposition that their reckless fiscal policy would lead to a downgrade in Alberta's credit rating, in October 2015 the NDP repealed Alberta's fiscal accountability act and imposed a meaningless debt ceiling of 15 per cent of GDP. It was so meaningless that just six months later they repealed the legislated debt cap when it became clear that they would bust it. This led to an almost immediate downgrade in our hard-earned credit rating. Does the minister plan on breaking any more of our fiscal accountability laws or . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, our focus on this side of the House is on making life better for everyday Albertans. We're not going to take the collapse in oil prices as a way to mess up Albertans and make it more expensive for them. We're going to work with the stuff we've got, and the stuff we've got is goods, programs, and services. We've got great fundamentals in this province. We're going to invest in infrastructure, and we're going to take down the cost of government slowly but surely and get back to balance.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, in the government's fiscal update they announced that even though revenues were up, spending would be up even more. The biggest reason for this was a $1.3 billion payout of the government's bungled early shutdown of the coal industry. This money was not authorized by the Legislature and according to the Auditor General was a direct violation of the NDP's own Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act. Yesterday the minister admitted that he did in fact break his own law. Will anyone be held accountable for breaking their own laws?

Mr. Ceci: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, you know, the hon. member across the way forgot to mention one really important expense line that we had in Q3. That expense line was over $700 million for the people of Wood Buffalo so they wouldn't be put out of their homes any longer than was necessary. So the fire was fought. We did things that made life better for the people of Wood Buffalo, and we'll make things better for the people of Alberta going forward, too.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Support for Business

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government is picking winners and losers among our businesses. One example of this is through the summer temporary employment program. To qualify for STEP funding, employers must be registered under an act of the Legislature, but the verification process requires a corporate number. I talked to a constituent of mine who has run a registered business for decades. She was denied this opportunity due to lack of a corporate number. We tried to work with the ministry before the deadline passed, but no solution was reached. Will the minister please explain this discrimination against sole proprietorships?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our government is very proud to have restored the summer temporary employment program, which has provided employment for nearly 3,000 young people. The PC government called it a crutch when they cancelled the program, that had been in place since the Peter Lougheed days in 1972. Now, our government also did something historic. We made it available to small business for the first time, something the previous government had never considered. Small business is now being served by this program, and every year we review the program and make sure it's serving the best possible for Albertans.

Mr. van Dijken: Sole proprietorships still are not eligible.

Another example of picking winners and losers by this government. Given that 21 and a half million dollars from the residential no-charge energy savings program should have been welcome news for Alberta businesses already providing these products and services and given that Alberta entrepreneurs are being left on the sidelines as the NDP takes care of their big friend Ecofitt, will the minister please justify her decision not to engage the services of Alberta businesses that were already established throughout the province?

The Speaker: The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, this was a contract that was awarded leveraging the expertise of the private sector and ensuring that we have the lowest cost delivery mechanism possible. These programs will save Alberta homeowners $6.3 million in electricity savings. Already 60,000 Albertans have signed up for the program. You know, we are not about to erect a number of interprovincial trade barriers, slam the door on external investment, as the Wildrose would do. We didn't have an energy efficiency program because the previous government failed . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, given that this government is seizing carbon tax dollars from everyday Albertans to pay for this Ecofitt program and given that the government has recently announced the residential and commercial solar program, also funded by carbon tax dollars, and given that Albertans want to be reassured that they will be supporting small businesses within Alberta's solar sector, will the minister please explain how Albertans can be confident that this government won't be sending more profits and tax dollars to companies from other jurisdictions?

Ms Phillips: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, it is only the Wildrose who wants to slam the door on the millions and, in fact, billions in investments in renewables, in efficiency, on all of the private-sector interest there is in Alberta right now. They do that because they are more interested in ideology than they are in moving our province forward. Our government, on this side, is worried about hard hats. On that side they're busy spreading, you know, conspiracy theories from the sewers of the Internet. They're more interested in tinfoil hats.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Agricultural Trade

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Agriculture and Forestry recently returned from a trade mission to the United Arab Emirates and India. As I've said before, Alberta producers need the ability to expand to new markets and explore growth opportunities overseas, so I support him on these missions. The minister met with government officials from Dubai, United Arab Emirates, and India on this trade mission. To the minister: did you sign any new agreements with these countries to help expand export markets for Alberta's agricultural producers?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I very much appreciate the question from the member. Yes, indeed, I was on a recent trade mission to the United Arab Emirates and India. Interesting to note that I was actually the first minister of agriculture from Alberta ever to visit India. It's a growing market. It's on the cusp of being the third-largest economy in the world and is very close to being the most populous country in the world, too. It's very important we're there. It's very important that government is there to open those doors for our business to continue to thrive in that burgeoning economy.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that my colleague the Member for Calgary-Greenway asked the minister over a year ago to give an update on the status of the agricultural working group that was formed with Alberta's trade agreement with the state of Punjab in India and given that we still have not received an update from the minister to date, to the Minister of Economic Development and Trade: can you update the House on the status of this agricultural working group with India?

The Speaker: The Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I actually had an opportunity to meet with officials from the various states in India. They were still very much interested in signing agreements with us. They are the world's largest democracy, and many of the states are in the midst of a political election right now. Even though they were very interested, they couldn't at this time make a commitment, but I absolutely understand what the member is saying.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that you have been on two trade missions to Asia in the last six months and given that Alberta's ag exports in the last year have decreased by over $3 million and given that in 2016 the number of agriculture jobs in Alberta has gone down by more than 6,000, to the minister: how many new agricultural jobs and markets for Albertans have your trade missions produced?

The Speaker: The minister of agriculture.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. You know, in 2015 we had a dry year. Last year we had some other challenges in agriculture. We always do. The fact is that our cash receipts in our farming communities are still going up. These markets are continuing to be extremely important. In India, for example, canola, wheat, and pulses continue to be our strong commodities. We have opportunity in swine genetics and in other commodities as well. Those are important. As we diversify the economy, the jobs will be there as we expand these markets.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Educational Curriculum Review

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a teacher and parent I know how important it is that we have curriculum that is relevant. I've had the chance to take part in curriculum sessions and have heard first-hand from participants – these are teachers and university professors – that they are very concerned about their privacy. To the Minister of Education: what reassurances can you provide to these hard-working volunteers and Albertans that they will not fall victim to attacks?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It should be noted that there are more than 300 individuals that are working on the curriculum, and they are all volunteers. They are undertaking these responsibilities in addition to their regular jobs. These are teachers and education professionals, not politicians and public figures, leading the work. Attacks on volunteers are irresponsible and reckless, and I will not tolerate them.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Luff: Thank you. Given that my constituents are very keen to be involved in this process and that I've fielded many questions from the public on when they will be able to have more input into this process, to the same minister: when will further consultation take place?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's important that Albertans know that they will be a part of this process every step of the way. The very first interaction: we had more than 32,000 responses with our survey. We have the curriculum working groups now working with that information, and then they will loop back, and again have public consultation. This will continue on over the next six years. This is the largest and most transparent process that Alberta Education has ever endeavoured to take on. During the course of this work there will be a variety of opportunities for Albertans to interact with the curriculum.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that I hear from teachers every day and given that curriculum changes often increase workload for teachers, to the same minister: what supports will be put in place to ensure that teachers can implement this new curriculum?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you. This is an important point, Mr. Speaker, because, of course, we can develop curriculum, but if it's not interfaced, if you don't have the training and the acceptance of teaching professionals and families and so forth, then it's not going to be successful. So we are working with the curriculum development and management application to interact with the curriculum in ways that have never been possible before. It's an entirely digital, bilingual platform that allows for comment and interaction and sharing information every step of the way. The curriculum then can also be updated as it's needed. It won't have to sit fallow like it did for between eight and 30 years.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Caribou Management

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Everyone knows that this government has a horrendous track record on consultation. Given that it appears this government has no plan to debate their caribou plan in the House before the federally mandated due date for provincial plans is reached, has the government initiated a socioeconomic impact assessment on the impacted regions and province as a whole, and why are local municipalities' expertise and concerns not being proactively addressed?

The Speaker: The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we do have a number of deadlines looming from the federal government to file our range plans, which is why in some of the more difficult areas we put a draft range plan out for consultation. I myself have visited those communities and a number of the forestry facilities there as well. We've also had really good conversations with Saskatchewan and B.C., taking what I would argue is a common position to the federal government in terms of help and flexibility in ensuring that we recover these species, yes, but that we don't adversely impact our forestry and oil and gas sectors. I'll have more to say about that in supplementals.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you. I guess no assessment plan is in the works. The communities definitely don't feel like they're being consulted.

Given that last summer we had a first look at the caribou draft plan and that since then there have been multiple studies and opinions on that plan and given that the federal government deadline is looming, to the minister: what parts of this draft plan are already being enacted?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, it is simply not true that there haven't been a number of consultations, both from my office but also the minister of forestry, the Minister of Economic Development and Trade. Also, the federal government has committed to come and meet with the communities that are affected by these range plans. It was a commitment that Saskatchewan, British Columbia, and Alberta worked towards securing at the federal-provincial-territorial meeting a couple of weeks ago, and the federal government will be ensuring that the socioeconomic effects of responding to the recovery of this species are adequately reflected in their response to our range plans.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Second supplemental.

Mr. Loewen: Okay. I asked what parts of this draft plan are already being enacted, and I guess I got no answer to that.

Given that this government constantly uses the federal government mandate for species at risk as justification for these plans, has the minister met with her federal counterpart or colleagues from B.C. and Saskatchewan to discuss species at risk? If so, when, and what was discussed?

Ms Phillips: Well, Mr. Speaker, I guess that's the problem when you pre-script your questions, that they're already answered. We, of course, have met with B.C. and Saskatchewan. We, of course, have met with the federal government, both the minister and the parliamentary secretary. We had a federal-provincial-territorial meeting that was in large part focused on caribou recovery plans. The fact of the matter is that we must recover this species. The fact of the matter is also that we have a number of different pressures on that landscape, including a thriving forestry industry. We have made the commitment to jobs and making life more affordable in this province, and that's exactly what we're going to do.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Opiod Use

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Monday every opposition caucus urged the government to call a public health emergency due to Alberta's opiod crisis, but government won't do so. Perhaps that's because it doesn't know its full extent. Minister, the Q4 opiod meds misuse report does not include final 2016 numbers for nonfentanyl-related opiod deaths. Why are those numbers missing, and doesn't that misrepresent to Albertans the magnitude of this crisis?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to the fourth-quarter report that was recently tabled, we were able to get quite a number of metrics included in it; however, because of the process that we follow here in Alberta for the toxicology reports, some of the information has not yet been available. We are working diligently with our ministry and with Justice to have those numbers available as soon as possible, and we will be updating accordingly.

Mr. Gill: I have the numbers for that, Minister. I've done my work.

Given that the Q3 report listed 330 total opiod deaths, but those figures were not updated in the Q4, and given that if those deaths remain on track, the number would be 422, and given that we are in fact seeing far more than one death a day due to opiods, to the Premier: now that you understand that your government is facing a more frightening reality, will you finally declare an emergency?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we've said repeatedly, we are continuing to evaluate the tools that we have available to us now as well as any that would become available should a public health emergency be declared. At this moment it is our assessment that all of the tools that we need to address this crisis are currently available. We are working diligently moving forward on addressing this crisis by addressing harm reduction, treatment, surveillance, and enforcement.

Mr. Gill: I guess two deaths a day aren't enough.

Given that the former government invested millions into the medical examiner's office to expand and modernize it and given that the newly renovated office includes a world-class toxicology lab and given that providing police and EMS with rapid information on opiod deaths will help them target resources where they need them the most, to the same minister: now that you know the full extent of the crisis, will you direct the ME's office to provide stats on opiod deaths faster than every three months?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We recognize that this is a major crisis in our province. That's why we've taken such rapid action on a number of fronts, including with the OCME. We have massively changed the way we take and code data. I'm incredibly proud to say that Alberta had the first-known test to detect carfentanil in blood. We've added two new medical examiners as well as a research officer so that they can help get these statistics out the door. Albertans want action, and that's what this government is doing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Transportation Infrastructure in Cochrane

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The charming and historic town of Cochrane was the second-fastest growing small municipality in Canada according to the recent census. That's no surprise considering that Cochrane is a great place to live and raise a family. But the former Conservative government failed to support Cochrane's growth when they broke their promise and removed the critical infrastructure for the highway 1A and 22 intersection from the capital plan. [interjection] To the Minister of Transportation: when can the residents of Cochrane and all of those who use this important intersection . . . [interjection]

The Speaker: Hon. member.

Mr. Westhead: . . . expect to see shovels in the ground?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

2:40

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much for the question, hon. member. You know, I want to thank him for his advocacy on this important issue. We know that Cochrane is a rapidly growing city. We know that there is serious congestion at the intersection of highways 22 and 1A and that this causes delays and safety concerns. All I can say is that the member will have to wait. There are many competing pressures on the capital plan, but we're going to try and make sure that we keep Albertans safe because we stand up for Albertans.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that highway 1A acts as a backup when there's an accident on the Trans-Canada and given that I've seen highway 1A jammed all the way to Seebe on these occasions, will the minister commit to upgrading the highway 1A and 22 intersection to ensure that it can handle these emergency situations?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Obviously, emergency problems are a great concern. Safety is our top priority. This government is interested in making sure that the transportation network serves the needs to make life better for Albertans and Alberta families. We're committed to doing that. Other than that, I think the member knows that I can't make any commitments at the present time. There are many competing priorities for the capital plan, but I want him to know that we have the best interests of Cochrane at heart.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm proud that our government is committed to build the infrastructure that our communities need despite the opposition's calls for us to cut this funding. Again to the Minister of Infrastructure: will you at least ensure that the residents of Cochrane receive a fair share of this funding to support the growth of this vibrant community?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I do have the Wildrose five-year fiscal plan here, and it does indicate that they would reduce capital spending in the province of Alberta, compared to what we're doing, by $9 billion. That's a lot of roads that don't get built, a lot of hospitals and schools that don't. The opposition is interested in cutting. The government of Alberta is interested in making sure that we stand up for Alberta families.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Opioid Use

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This week in a rare display of nonpartisan co-operation we held an important debate on the opioid crisis, and I thank my colleagues across both sides for that.

We also heard from two courageous advocates for better education and more action on the devastating effects of opioid abuse and addiction. Petra Schulz, who lost her son Danny, works with Moms Stop the Harm, a network of Canadian mothers and families whose loved ones have died from substance misuse. Rosalind Davis, who lost her partner Nathan, started the Changing the Face of Addiction organization, a not-for-profit seeking political change and reduced stigma on drug and addictions issues. They say that the government's refusal to recognize a state of emergency is unacceptable. It perpetuates stigma about opioid-related deaths.

To its credit, the government has taken a number of positive steps, but its approach has mainly been reactive, not integrated across government and nongovernment organizations. Opioid-related overdoses and deaths are reaching unprecedented levels and have now become a national crisis. We don't have the whole picture yet because the data is simply not available, but what we do know is deeply troubling. In 2016 there were 343 deaths just from fentanyl and many more from other opioids yet to be classified. This 33 per cent increase in one year shows that the crisis is growing at an alarming rate.

If we were getting ahead of it, then I might agree with the NDP, but we're five years into this, and the government, by its own admission, is still developing the strategy. We require focused leadership and a crossdepartment strategy that would provide co-ordination between all government ministries and nongovernment sectors of society.

Finally, we need to recognize this for what it is, an emergency, and use every means at our disposal to save Albertans' lives.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Refugees

Mr. Dang: A family sells everything they own so that a young boy and his brother can board a boat that's headed to a Malaysian refugee camp. At the same time, a young girl is eagerly reading a letter from her older sister who has landed as a refugee in Canada. Her sister is in school studying, trying to get a job to help bring her family over as economic immigrants. One of the boats in that convoy is raided by pirates, and many of their family and friends are killed.

Fortunately, those boys eventually make it here to Edmonton and Canada. They'll work minimum wage jobs. They'll try hard to make ends meet. Eventually one of those boys will go to NAIT, and he'll complete an IT certificate program. He'll meet that young girl, who's now immigrated to Canada. They'll fall in love and get married on Canada Day. They'll have one daughter, Mr. Speaker, named Tiffany. She'll go on to attend the University of Toronto and Harvard University for her master's in landscape architecture. Now, they'll have one boy, as well. He's fairly average. He's a little bit of a nerd, but on May 5, 2015, he will become the youngest elected official ever in this province.

Mr. Speaker, this is the story of one refugee family. It's one story. My parents, Cindy and Daniel, were given the opportunity to earn everything while starting with nothing. I'm proud of my family's past. We worked hard for what we have.

But when the opposition attends rallies with so-called media organizations that suggest my family and families like it should not even have been allowed into this country, it shows just how far out of touch the opposition is from everyday Albertans. Refugees contribute to the rich history and culture of this province. They contribute to the economy, the diversity, and our society. Albertans know this, Mr. Speaker. They take pride in the welcoming and inclusive society we have built. Our government knows this and hears this, and I'm proud to be part of a government that stands up for compassion, tolerance, and opportunity.

The opposition has shown time and time again that they refuse to stand up for these values. Shame on them, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Rural School Councils

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past weekend I had the pleasure of attending the Rural Education Symposium, which is an annual forum for rural communities and schools to engage in a discussion about the role of education in the ever-resilient rural communities. Today I have invited to the Legislature a few hard-working representatives that contribute to my community and rural communities. In the constituency of Strathcona-Sherwood Park, Pauline and Liz are part of the Ministik school council, and Laura and Elyse are here on behalf of the Uncas school council.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to recognize the work and commitment of these women and all parent councils for their contribution to the school community. School council members work together to support student learning, whether it's fundraising for playgrounds, organizing special theme days, or school recreational activities. These parent councils are vital in providing their unique perspectives and ideas that contribute to school community and school district success. Participation in school councils not only allows parents the chance to demonstrate their support for their children, but it's also an opportunity to share their knowledge and skills and have a direct impact on their child's education. As representatives of other parents and school communities they are often called upon to be advocates, a voice for the collective as they consult with other stakeholders.

Recently I have seen this during the Ministik school closure consultation, and as a former educational assistant working in schools and as their MLA, I have experienced first-hand the value that they bring to the table. For their contributions I would like to thank them and parents throughout the province, for all of their hard work, for being a partner in education.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to be part of a government that is making the lives of parents throughout the province better. Whether it's by reducing school fees or by working and engaging with rural educators and parents, this government recognizes the importance of equitable access to education, regardless of location.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Government Policies

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Say what you will about his politics, but the late Premier Ralph Klein truly was a man of the people. With a larger-than-life personality, he gave Albertans a host of witty one-liners and analogies. One of his favourites was a condition, common to politicians who spend too much time in the Legislature, known as dome disease. According to Klein you're fully consumed with that disease when you start to think that unless it's happening under the dome, it is not happening at all.

Mr. Speaker, there's a growing disconnect between government and the vast majority of Albertans. Life under the dome is pretty cushy for friends of this government. There haven't been layoffs or even pay freezes for many of them. The government has gone out of its way to stack Alberta's senior political ranks and advisory panels with a tidal wave of activists. Outside the Legislature, everyday Albertans face a much harsher reality. Layoffs and business closures have devastated well over a hundred thousand Albertans. Calgary's unemployment rate has ballooned above 10 per cent. The city's downtown office space has 30 per cent availability.

Albertans know that it's a hand up, a business-friendly environment, not a government handout that's needed to restore investor confidence and bring back jobs. This government has increased taxes in almost every other possible way. This year the carbon tax will see government take $3 billion from our struggling families to fund ideological projects, a tax that less than 35 per cent of Albertans support. At a time when so many folks are struggling just to get by, Albertans expect government to present policies that will get them back to work and not add burdensome taxes that are clearly out of touch with the present reality. That is what Premier Klein would call a telltale symptom. Mr. Speaker, this is what the doctor would diagnose as a chronic case of dome disease.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Speaker's Ruling Tabling of Public Documents Statements during Tablings

The Speaker: Hon. members, I think this might be an appropriate time for me to make a ruling on the point of order that was raised yesterday by the Government House Leader concerning a purported tabling by the Member for Strathmore-Brooks. The Member for Strathmore-Brooks attempted to table an excerpt from Alberta Hansard pertaining to a past statement made by the Government House Leader in the Assembly. It should be noted that this document was not recorded in the March 8, 2017, edition of the Votes and Proceedings, pending my ruling on the point of order. The point of order was raised by the Government House Leader and is found on page 129 of yesterday's Hansard and has to do with the appropriateness of tabling Alberta Hansard excerpts.

I deferred my ruling to check rulings on the subject of tablings and the tabling of Alberta Hansard in particular. I found that there have indeed been rulings on this point by former presiding officers of this Assembly. On August 20, 1996, Deputy Speaker Tannas ruled that "excerpts from Hansard are not appropriate tablings, as the words contained are in fact on the record and tabling, therefore, is really a redundant action." This ruling can be found on page 2248 of Alberta Hansard for that day. Similarly, Speaker Kowalski stated, "Public documents such as excerpts from Hansard or statutes of Alberta should not be tabled” in his ruling from November 25, 1998, on the tabling of documents. This ruling can be found on 2089 of Alberta Hansard for that day. Hon. members, after checking, I have concluded that it is not appropriate for members to table excerpts from Hansard even though there have been rare exceptions to this rule.

In addition to the prohibition against the tabling of Alberta Hansard, I want to take this opportunity to clarify some of the rules respecting tablings for the benefit of all hon. members. Comments about the tabling must be brief and should only describe the document itself and not elaborate on its contents. As some of you may have heard yesterday, I made a comment to one of the members about editorializing: it's not permitted. Tabling Returns and Reports should not be used as an opportunity to make a member's statement. Lastly, tablings are just that. They should not be used as props or exhibits.

Hon. members, I have learned that Alberta has some of the most permissive rules concerning tablings of anywhere in Canada. These few restrictions allow for wide latitude in tablings. Please do not move the boundaries any further.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I respect your ruling. I wish to table on day 2 of my 14 days of tabling a letter from myself to the Government House Leader titled Dear Brian, You Said – and then I quote some Hansard – signed by myself. These are letters to the Government House Leader citing Hansard. I wish to table the five requisite copies concerning the Public Affairs Bureau.

The Speaker: I do hope that the boundaries have not moved, as I alluded to in the ruling.

Mr. Fildebrandt: They are letters.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. One is a copy of the Alberta Investment Management Corporation regulations, sections 5 and 6, indicating the high level of financial knowledge to be on the board, and also the public agencies governance framework, which indicates the much lower level of financial knowledge to be on the AIMCo board.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will refrain from editorializing as I table five copies of an iPolitics article from yesterday, where opposition party mentor Preston Manning praises the carbon tax and tells conservatives to stop attacking it.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Ms Jansen: Sorry, Mr. Speaker. I just have two more if I can beg your indulgence.

The Speaker: Two more.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have here five copies of a Facebook page where the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, who attended the antifeminist Wildrose on Campus kickoff, says, “Wildrose spirit is alive and well in Calgary.”

The Speaker: Thank you. Keep going. Number 3.

Ms Jansen: Number 3, Mr. Speaker: another Facebook page where the Wildrose on Campus announces that they are featured on the Wildrose Party website.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have five copies of a letter and a photocopy of a coin from Mr. and Mrs. Cluney of Willingdon. They have decided to return their entire Alberta seniors' benefit increase for this year, 2017. They are throwing in an extra penny to bring it up to a solid quarter. That's right. They each got an increase from the Alberta seniors' benefit of 1 cent per month.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to table the requisite number of copies of a document that I referenced during my question in question period today, entitled Bargaining Update, dated February 2017.

The Speaker: Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table a press release done by the Alberta government, Alberta Modernizing Renewal Reminders. It speaks of $3 million a year that the government will save from sending out mail, if you will, in Service Alberta. I would like to remind the minister that there are still several questions that are unanswered as to why she needs $900,000 added to her budget for postage.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Bilous, Minister of Economic Development and Trade, response to Written Question 18, asked for by Mr. Cooper on October 31, 2016: what are the deliverables from the Premier's trip from April 27 to 29, 2016, to Washington, DC?

3:00

The Speaker: Hon. members, I believe we had at least one point of order today. Is that correct? The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Point of Order Intemperate Language

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you know, I've been here for a little while. There's one member who's been on the job just slightly longer. I think others also know full well that the volume can increase in this Chamber on Thursdays, but that's no excuse for something that happened at approximately 2:09 today. I was actually, on this occasion, sitting back and watching the fireworks, minding my own business, when the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville looked straight at me and said out loud words – I'll phrase it this way – that rhyme with “what up.”

Mrs. Littlewood: That's not true.

The Speaker: Quiet.

Mr. Rodney: They rhyme with “what up.” I'm pretty sure she wasn't just saying hello to me.

It's clearly unparliamentary. There are many citations, including 23(j). There are many precedents. But out of respect for the proceedings of this House and the time to debate very important topics, I would like to suggest that perhaps the member could stand and apologize, and we could all get on with our day.

Thank you.

Ms Ganley: Mr. Speaker, I haven't been in this Chamber for as long as some, but I think I have been here long enough to say that this is fairly frivolous. The member opposite knows very well what was said, and what he quoted was not it.

I'm disappointed to see that members opposite were heckling the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville while she asked a very important question involving lives lost by members of her constituency, and I'm equally disappointed that they would raise a point of order on this.

Oral Question Period is a time when members, including government members, are permitted to ask questions of a minister of the Crown about projects and initiatives that are important to them. It was absolutely in order for the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville to ask this question, and it's really quite ridiculous that, you know, when the members opposite were yelling heckles and trying to shout her down while she stood up for her constituents that when she turned and said, "Shame, shame" to them, they're now taking up these ridiculous antics. Unfortunately, it's unlikely that this was captured by the Blues, but I am assured that those were the words that were used.

Mr. Speaker, this is just an absurd use of the House's time.

The Speaker: The Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Just in recognition of the decorum in the House and what we try to maintain as respect for one another, I know that the heckling does get a little bit out of hand sometimes. At the same time, you know, we've experienced flipping the birds and mouthings of... [interjection] Yeah, from the government side. This is a third example. The member wasn't the only one that saw it. There were other people that saw it.

So the proper thing to do would be to stand up, apologize, and withdraw.

The Speaker: Any other members that would like to speak to the point of order? The Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to say that as the seatmate of the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, I was able to hear precisely what she said. It was not what is being alleged by the Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Thank you. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, please. Please.

Hon. members, there have been other points of order on this kind of subject matter before. While it's not always popular, I sense, to say so, I did not hear or see the particular comment that was raised in the point of order. You have heard in the past that I've ruled because of that.

Nonetheless, hon. members, there were some words that were used that just recently we discussed in this House and that I made a ruling on with respect to comments made to the other parties. I just want both sides of the House to be, again, more conscious when they say things, whether I see it or not, that you are speaking to one of your fellow colleagues in this Legislature. When you show respect for the other members, you're showing respect for the people that they represent here. I would hope that you remember that each time any comment is made.

I leave that, simply. In this particular instance I did not have the privilege of hearing it, but I rule that there was no point of order. However, there were some other comments made that I thought were getting awfully close to the line.

Orders of the Day Committee of Supply

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Good afternoon, members. I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

Supplementary Supply Estimates 2016-17, No. 2 General Revenue Fund

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, before we commence this afternoon's consideration of supplementary supply, I would like to remind you where the committee left off in the rotation. When the Committee of Supply reported progress this morning during the Official Opposition's allotment, the minister had four minutes remaining in her speaking time. The committee has 44 minutes of consideration remaining.

As provided for in Standing Order 59.02, the rotation in Standing Order 59.01(6) is deemed to apply, which means the rotation will then proceed as follows. For the next 10 minutes the members of the third party, if any, and the minister or the member of the Executive Council acting on the minister's behalf may speak. For the next 10 minutes the members of any other party represented in the Assembly or any independent member and the minister or the member of the Executive Council acting on the minister's behalf may speak. For the next 10 minutes private members of the government caucus and the minister or the member of the Executive Council acting on the minister's behalf may speak. The rotation will then repeat for any time remaining.

Speaking times are now limited to five minutes; however, provided the chair has been notified, a minister and a private member may combine their speaking time, with both taking and yielding the floor during the combined period.

Finally, at the conclusion of six hours of consideration, or earlier if no members are wishing to speak, the Committee of Supply shall vote on the supplementary supply estimates.

The Committee of Supply has under consideration the 2016-2017 supplementary supply estimates, No. 2. The minister has four minutes left.

Seeing no minister wishing to speak, I will recognize the Official Opposition. The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Sorry. The third party. You guys were done.

Is there anybody from the third party that would like to speak? Any members? No.

Any government members?

Seeing none, I'll go back to the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. I want to thank the minister for being willing to...

The Deputy Chair: Did you want to share your time back and forth?

Mr. Smith: Yeah. We'll share back and forth. That's fine.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. Thank you.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Minister, for being willing to be here for me while I ask a couple of questions today. We're looking at page 71 in the supplementary supply. I'll be looking at line items 4.2 and 2.3 and 2.6, okay? Let's start with 4.2, the assistance to Alberta Social Housing Corporation. I see there that you're making a transfer to the Alberta Social Housing Corporation of $500,000. This is for doing energy audits or facility audits, from my understanding, facility energy audits. So just a couple of questions. Who will be doing the audits, and how were these contracts tendered?

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you very much, Madam Chair, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. Yes. My ministry received $500,000 from the climate leadership plan infrastructure initiative for facility audits, so housing management bodies in Alberta will have their facilities assessed so that they can see what would be the priorities, what would be the best use of dollars to have maintenance, to improve perhaps windows, or for energy-efficient furnaces. Sometimes it has to do with roofs.

We are very pleased to have these dollars to support housing management bodies to make sure that they have the most energy-efficient operating facilities possible. It's just such a significant improvement and support for housing management bodies that they can have this type of funding so that they can go ahead and make these improvements, you know, obviously being respectful and responsible for the energy that they're using in their facilities.

Certainly, the government's regular process of procurement will be used.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Smith: Madam Minister, could you please explain to us how these contracts were tendered? Was it sole-sourced or not? And do you have any idea who those contracts are going to be handed out to?

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Yeah. Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Certainly, you know, housing management bodies – there are over a hundred in this province. They are the public delivery of our housing management system in our province. We work very closely with them, and they themselves work on what they need in their facilities. The people who do the energy audits will be very much supporting them to make choices that make sense for their facility, the best use of dollars in that regard. Certainly, we work with housing management bodies, but housing management bodies each operate in their own communities. They make decisions regarding what's best for their community, and that process will continue to go ahead.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.
The hon. member.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. Am I to understand, then, that this is different than the company that's been hired to retrofit the light bulbs and to put in new light bulbs? Is this going to be a decision that each of the housing managements are going to be making individually and there's no one individual company, that this could be many different local companies that will be doing the energy audits, that this is a local decision and not one that is coming through the wider body of your ministry?

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Madam Chair. Certainly, I mean, what's most important to us as a government is that we are using the principles of the Natural Resources Canada EnerGuide rating system. Those doing the audits will be using this standardized system to help guide them. Those are the guidelines that are being used. As I said, there are very diverse housing management bodies across the province, and they'll be working with this system to make decisions about, you know, what are the key things that they need to improve in their housing management body facilities to make sure that they are the most energy efficient.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. member.

Mr. Smith: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'm still not understanding something here. My question wasn't about what the guideline was that you were going to be using. My question was: who will be doing the audits, and how were those contracts tendered, and who's making the decision about that? This is the third or fourth time I've asked this question now, and I'm still not getting an answer from the minister. Could she please explain to me who will be making the decision about who will be doing the audits? Is it her ministry, or is it a local housing oversight? How were these contracts tendered? Please.

Thank you.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you very much, Madam Chair. Certainly, we're working with housing management bodies to make those decisions. As I said, the local housing management bodies are diverse. They're all across this province. The guideline that we're using is the Natural Resources Canada EnerGuide rating system. We work with housing bodies to determine, you know, who they're working with, but these are some standard things that we want. We want them to create a baseline so that we know what needs to be improved in their particular facilities, and we'll work very closely with housing management bodies to make those decisions.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.

Mr. Smith: Okay. I guess I'm not going to get my answer.

Why is it costing half a million dollars extra to do the audits? Could the minister please explain to us how much they've spent on the audits to this point and why they need this additional half a million dollars if that's indeed the case? Or is this the only amount of money that they're spending on energy audits?

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. Certainly, this $500,000 is transferred to us, to our ministry, from Environment and Parks' climate leadership plan green infrastructure initiative. It's earmarked specifically for us to do energy audits in our housing management bodies across this province to ensure that housing management bodies are supported to know what are sort of the key things that will make a real difference for them to be energy efficient. We're very pleased to receive this funding.

That doesn't mean that there aren't other investments. This year we put $57 million into maintenance and repairs, and many housing management bodies are using that for improving energy efficiency through furnaces, windows, roofs, a whole myriad of things. There's ongoing investment from the ministry, and these dollars will be an additional support to housing management bodies to ensure that citizens of this province have well-maintained, energy efficient facilities. Certainly, this will help the housing management bodies be able to have more energy efficient facilities, so they'll save money on the costs of energy, and this is all good for our province.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.
The hon. member.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. In answering my question, you suggested that there is $57 million spent on providing better efficiency for our seniors, which is a good idea. I guess the question I've got is this, again back to my question: when these facilities make these decisions about putting in higher efficiency furnaces, et cetera, do they all have energy audits, and if so, how much have you spent on providing the energy audits that would lead you to believe that you need to do the upgrades that cost $57 million to this province? How much money have you spent on energy audits, and how much more have you spent above and beyond the requested $500,000?

The Deputy Chair: The minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just want to make sure that the member understands that it's $57 million in investment for maintenance across the province.

Each year the housing management bodies submit their business plans to our ministry, and in that they have their top asks. They have the things that they know are outstanding and that they're concerned about, so we know each year. We look at that information they send us, and through that, we do allocate those funds. I just want you to know that that's a significant investment we've made and that certainly the housing management bodies are very pleased.

We inherited a billion dollars in repairs needing to be done when we became government. Housing management bodies have been waiting for some time, and they know a lot of the things that they need. They do need new windows. They do need energy efficient furnaces. They do need new roofs. They do need repairs regarding, you know, the sealing of doors. They need all sorts of things, so they are having this funding from us as a government.

This additional funding from Environment and Parks, specifically from the green infrastructure initiative, is further assisting housing management bodies, who, I must say, do an extraordinary job of supporting the vulnerable.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.

Are there any other members from the third party wishing to speak? No?

Are there any other members from the independent group wishing to speak?

Are there any other members from the government side wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung. We have to go through everybody's rotation first, please.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today wishing to speak a bit more about the SHARP program, which I had the opportunity to cosponsor when the legislation passed through the House. Interest was very high in the program according to the minister as she spoke yesterday about the matter. I know that during debate on this legislation the concern was expressed that it was unknown how many people may be interested in taking the government up on its proposal to allow them to borrow against the equity in their house to improve their home and adapt it so that they could live in it longer given that they may have disabilities that prevent them from staying in it without the adaptations. Given our interest in cross-collaboration with other ministries, I'm wondering if the minister is going to be tabulating how many jobs may be created as a result of the work that's being done on people's homes as they take advantage of the home equity loan program called SHARP.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Sigurdson: Yes. Thank you very much, Madam Chair, and thank you to the member for the question. Certainly, the seniors home adaptation and repair program is really a program that we were asked about many times in the community.

[Ms Goehring in the chair]

People want to stay in their own homes, in their own communities, close to family and friends, but unfortunately sometimes as we age, we have some challenges with mobility. Therefore, the homes that we have lived in for many years are just not properly suited, and there could be safety concerns. For example, you know, regular tubs are very difficult sometimes for folks to get in and out of, so changing that to, like, a walk-in tub or putting on some bars for people to hold onto. This program is absolutely essential to supporting people to be able to stay in their own homes as long as they choose to. It gives people a great opportunity to do that.

As the member suggested, this also is investing in our economy because people can receive up to $40,000 in repairs, and that means that they're employing folks in the community and, you know, having different repairs done that they need. It doesn't only have to be about mobility things. It can also be about getting your roof replaced or an energy efficient furnace or windows, rugs. It's a whole myriad of things. Seniors have really been very excited about this program. It's highly subscribed to, and we're very pleased. That shows us the success of the program.

As the member said, we are absolutely getting people working. It's difficult to estimate exactly how many people will be employed by this, but it's absolutely an infusion of dollars into the economy and looking at some significant investments in jobs. We're very pleased to be able to both support seniors to stay in their homes and their communities and to get people working in this province.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Acting Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Any other speakers? The Official Opposition has indicated that they are done. Anybody from the third party wishing to speak? Any other members from government wishing to speak?

Transfer from the expense vote of Labour to the expense vote of Indigenous Relations, $3,845,000.

That concludes my report.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Does the Assembly concur with the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

I would like to alert hon. members that Standing Order 61(3) provides that upon the Assembly concurring with the report by Committee of Supply, the Assembly immediately reverts to the Introduction of Bills for introduction of the appropriation bill.

Introduction of Bills

The Acting Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Bill 4
Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2017

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 4, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2017. This being a money bill, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to this Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 4 read a first time]

Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Ms Jansen moved, seconded by Ms Miller, that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois Mitchell, CM, AOE, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate March 8: Mr. Nielsen]

The Acting Speaker: Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It is always an honour to respond to the Speech from the Throne. I'm a centrist, and I am very proud of that fact. It is the opposite of not believing in anything. In fact, it's about believing in balance. That balance is not only possible but desirable. It's what we should be striving for in this Assembly. It is about thinking long term. It's about people. It's about quality of life. It's about planning. It's about good fiscal management, and it's about vision.

Unfortunately, this government has chosen only one side of the ledger. They've doubled down to target whomever they think their voters are. They've completely ignored the fact that doing so costs money and that money has to come from somewhere and that in tough times that somewhere means borrowed money and that borrowed money eventually needs to be paid back. Sadly, their plan seems to be the same as all governments before them: cross your fingers, and hope to goodness that the price of oil goes up.

On the other side of the equation we have an opposition party focused only on finance. They refuse to share any concrete or plausible plans to ensure that front-line services remain intact as they focus only on the deficit. We know the only logical outcomes of their plans are reduced access to public services, more children in every classroom, longer wait times for health care, and worse outcomes for vulnerable Albertans. If the opposition disagrees, please, by all means, prove me wrong. Show me your work. Show me how you would address Alberta's fiscal challenges without devastating front-line public services. Until then I'm going to continue to call you out on the devastating impact that your ideology would have on our province.

There is a bigger and even more fundamental question. What is the point of government? Is it simply to get re-elected every four years, or should there be something more? Nothing – and I mean nothing – in this Speech from the Throne tells me that this government has a plan beyond 2019. What is missing is a vision. Sadly, based on the tone of the House these past few days, it's clear that the election campaign has already begun. The government seems hell bent on flowing money targeted at their voting coalition with absolutely no regard for the long-term consequences or even the medium-term consequences. If this works and the government somehow gets re-elected, I guess they'll deal with that problem when they get there, but if it doesn't, the next government will have to deal with the fiscal mess they've created. Significant cuts to front-line public services seem to be the strategy. Then at that point, when the government finds themselves in opposition, perhaps they play a strategy for the next election beyond that, and we whipsaw back and forth between two extremes.

That's not who we are as Albertans, and sadly it is not necessary. It doesn't need to be as bad as this government has made it. There are choices. There are options. Not only is it possible to find balance, but if we're going to succeed together as a province, it is absolutely necessary that we do so.

Instead of just complaining, here's my solution. I want to create sustained and shared prosperity in this province. To do that, it means we need to create a business environment that attracts investment and stimulates economic growth, and that investment needs to come from both domestic and international sources. We need to reframe and rethink our tax system to minimize tax leakage to other provinces and encourage entrepreneurship. We need to focus on shovel-ready capital projects that get Albertans back to work today. We need to monitor and take advantage of global market opportunities and trends. We need to not be afraid of what's going on in the rest of the world. We need to embrace that change, take advantage of it, and put Albertans back to work.

It also requires good fiscal management. We need a government that has a realistic plan to balance the budget. We need a government that has a plausible plan to actually start paying back debt. We need a government that commits to building up the heritage savings trust fund to become a renewable, viable, and valuable fiscal resource for this province.

We need to focus on poverty and harm reduction. We need to fund supports for the most vulnerable Albertans, think differently about prevention, and optimize service delivery. We need to transition from an acute-care to a long-term preventative model. We need to address systemic and root-cause issues behind addiction, homelessness, and poverty and implement stable, long-term mental health supports.

We need to create and maintain a high quality of life in this province, which means promoting and encouraging a vibrant Alberta arts and culture scene, supporting Alberta's diverse cultural heritage. We need to ensure that our communities are safe and that we support multiculturalism, respect the LGBTQ community, and work every day towards reconciliation with indigenous peoples. We need to ensure advanced education remains high quality, affordable, and accessible. We need to provide housing and career supports as people transition to new careers.

We must pursue environmental sustainability. The Alberta Party caucus and the Alberta Party as a whole: our members believe in human-caused climate change. We believe in the science of climate change. We don't see that as a threat to our province; we see that as the single greatest market opportunity of our lifetime. There's no benefit to Alberta in pretending climate change doesn't exist, in pretending it isn't a problem that needs to be addressed. Alberta has innovative big thinkers who can help solve the problems of tomorrow, help create entrepreneurial, innovative companies, and help create products that will help diversify our economy while addressing climate change and do so in a way that supports and celebrates Alberta's responsible energy industry.

I am a fiercely proud Albertan, and I am fiercely proud of our energy industry. We do not need to choose between the environment and the economy. We do not need to choose between environmental sustainability and success with Alberta's energy industry. Those are the same thing.

We need to focus our academic institutions and industry on developing innovative technologies that reduce Alberta's carbon footprint and create technologies we can sell to the rest of the world. We need a reasonable rebate program that only helps those who actually need help instead of only supporting NDP re-election efforts. We need to deal with a growing abandoned well problem through innovative ideas like geothermal greenhouse projects and put Albertans back to work by reclaiming abandoned and orphaned wells.

Most of all, though, we need to end this false polarization where one side says that only they can look out for people and the environment and another side says that only they can help and look out for money. I'm an Albertan. I care about both of those things. I care about good fiscal management, I care about my neighbours, and I care about the environment. That's what Albertans believe in.

I stand here before you today optimistic about the future of our province because I'm optimistic about the capability of Albertans and what Albertans believe. I am proud to represent a party that believes that Alberta is the greatest place to live anywhere in the world because Albertans are the greatest people anywhere in the world. The Alberta Party is a party of Albertans by Albertans for Alberta.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to question or comment under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Transmittal of Estimates

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I have received a message from Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, which I now transmit to you.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order!

The Acting Speaker: The Lieutenant Governor transmits interim supply estimates of certain sums for the service of the province and of certain sums required from the lottery fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2018, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

Please be seated.

The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I now wish to table the 2017-18 interim supply estimates. These interim supply estimates will provide spending authority to the Legislative Assembly and the government for the period of April 1, 2017, to May 31, 2017, inclusive. This interim funding authority will ensure continuity in the business of the province while the Legislature takes the time necessary to discuss, debate, and enact the full funding requirement for the government business for the 2017-18 fiscal year.

When passed, these interim supply estimates will authorize approximate spending of $30 million for the Legislative Assembly, $7.8 billion in expense funding, $936 million in capital investment funding, $149 million in financial transactions funding for the government, and $241 million for the transfer from the lottery fund to the general revenue fund.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 2

An Act to Remove Barriers for Survivors of Sexual and Domestic Violence

[Adjourned debate March 8: Mr. Westhead]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 1

An Act to Reduce School Fees

[Adjourned debate March 8: Mr. Dang]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Very often when I'm here in this House, I think I have a lot of déjà vu moments because for nine years I was a school trustee where the issue of school fees was something that we discussed on a weekly basis. So I was delighted when the Minister of Education introduced Bill 1, An Act to Reduce School Fees.

Since we haven't debated this for a couple of days, I thought it might be good to speak again about the purpose of this bill. Bill 1 is a bill to reduce school fees. Through this bill a series of amendments and the creation of a new school fees regulation will effectively eliminate school boards' ability to charge two specific types of school fees, instructional fees and material fees and busing fees for eligible students travelling to their designated school. This legislation will also provide the government with increased authority over all school fees.

We all know that for a lot of parents every September the school fees are an incredible burden. School fees have impacted families, teachers, and school administrators. I really appreciated the Member for Calgary-East, who spoke so eloquently about her experience as a teacher and the impact of school fees. I think we have to remember that school fees are not just a burden on parents, but they also have created a lot of stress and burden on teachers and administrators.

As the House knows, because I discussed it in one of my speeches, I worked for many years in Asia, and for those of you who like me have lived in countries where there's a very poor education system and where parents have to pay incredible fees to access any kind of education system, you would, like me, really want to support a fully accessible public school system with no barriers to any family or child. That's why I stood up to be a school trustee in the public school system for nine years, because I knew that a quality, accessible, free education was what every child needed to achieve their potential.

I also have appreciated the experience of the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, who spoke about the challenges school fees presented for her family and how her family had to make choices about school fees and food or other necessities. I think every single member in this House has met families who also have struggled every single September to pay the school fees.

My own personal experience was that I had to go and beg the principal to have school fees waived for my children, and this was a very embarrassing moment. I know that I'm not the only member who may have had this experience and that you have heard from your constituents.

The other aspect of school fees that I feel is really fitting for us to discuss, even though it's one day past International Women's Day, is that school fees impact the low-income families, who are usually led by women, and I think this is something that we really have to know, that it's the women who really very often have had to find the money to pay for school fees and have wondered how they were going to manage their budgets: school fees, food, all the necessities in the home.

Today I also wanted us to be reminded that currently it's women who make up the bulk of school councils and parents' fundraising efforts. My colleague from Strathcona-Sherwood Park demonstrated that by the fact that she invited members of some of her rural school councils, and it was four women. The women who are involved in school councils and parents' fundraising committees have done an incredible job in raising funds for playgrounds, for school supplies, for nutrition, and also to help parents who cannot pay school fees.

Last year the government decided to increase funding to school boards, and this funding was to ensure that every child was funded for, so we funded for enrolment.

One of the things as a former school trustee that I appreciate the most from this bill is that, as the Minister of Education said the other day in the House, decisions on school fees in the regulations will be made in consultation with school boards. I think this is really, really important because it is school boards who presently have decided on the school fees. It is very important that school boards be involved in any decisions around school fees in terms of the regulation, so I wanted to thank the minister for his words on the involvement of school boards. I really appreciate that the regulations will be drafted only after consultations with school boards and other stakeholders in education.

I personally look forward to listening to the school boards in my own riding about what they think about Bill 1 and the kind of regulations that there will be, and I would like to urge all members to do the same thing, to talk to their school boards and to understand some of the constraints that school boards have every year in meeting budgets and to support the government and especially the minister in his consultation process in terms of drafting the regulations.

This bill will ease the burden on families. It will also ease the burden on teachers. I'm sure if the Member for Calgary-East was here, she would talk about the list that she has to make, the money that has to be collected. While I have never been a teacher in the school system, as a school trustee I definitely heard a lot from teachers how this is something that is really challenging for them and takes away from their instructional time.

I would like to urge all members in the House to support Bill 1 and to look to September, when the burden of school fees will be eased from their constituents. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak to 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway. Go ahead.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to speak to Bill 1, An Act to Reduce School Fees. As a parent of young children I know the importance of school fees. I know the annual cost to send my children to school. You know, the fees include the bus fees, the school fees, the field trips, and lunch supervision fees, just to name a few. Also, I heard from my own constituents to lower the school fees. So I think it's a step in the right direction, and that's why our Progressive Conservative caucus is in support of lowering the cost that Alberta families pay in school fees. When it comes to the lives of Albertans and their families, we'll always support lowering the costs they have to pay, especially in these troubling times.

However, what this caucus does not support is the sleight of hand that this NDP government is attempting to pull on Alberta families. Out of one pocket the NDP are taking more and more from Alberta families every day. From driving up the costs of our electricity by tampering with the Balancing Pool and their aggressive coal phase-out to the carbon tax, that will raise costs for daily goods, the NDP are costing families more. So for the Deputy Premier to stand before this House and say that they have the backs of Albertans and are working to make life affordable: sorry, Deputy Premier; we aren't buying it, and neither is any other Albertan because Albertans can see through the smoke and mirrors. While you put $5 in reduced school fees into one pocket, you have taken $20 from the other one, and the Deputy Premier expects a thank you.

However, you know, reducing school fees is a step in the right direction and a step, I believe, our caucus will support and can support. But if the NDP government wants the support of Albertans, they can start with cutting school fees and move on to cutting the carbon tax. I think that would be a real help for Albertans.

Madam Speaker, we all know that there is only one taxpayer. If the NDP says that the difference in the school fees will be covered by the Education department, a department funded by the taxpayer, at the end of the day, Albertans still pay. It's the same person, same family. It's all of our people who are still paying the tax. If you're truly committed to making life affordable for Albertans like you say you are, show your commitment to lower taxes, that you have driven up since taking office. Albertans have continuously told you that they don't support your policies that drive up the cost of living. You're saying that you're listening, but I don't see changes. You say that you have the backs of Albertans, yet how can they trust and believe anything you say when all they have seen is you driving up the cost for living with each of your policies?

Another concerning piece to this bill is the fact that the Education minister has committed to finding millions in department efficiencies to cover the cost of lowering the school fees. Since the NDP formed government, they have attempted to suggest that any form of government cost saving would be done by cutting front-line staff. Time and time again we heard the NDP justify their out-of-control spending by saying that the opposition party – their favourite words are cut, slash, burn – you know, will slash teachers and teaching assistants. I know, I know; the minister of economic development finds it very amusing because we hear it every day a few times in QP. Well, I would like to remind the NDP that they were the only ones talking about the cuts to the front-line workers.

But after nearly two years of the NDP saying the only way to rein in spending is to lay off teachers and nurses, we suddenly have found millions of dollars in the Education budget. As my colleague from Calgary-Hays asked, how many teachers were laid off to pay this bill? We didn't get an answer, and I don't think we're going to get any answer.

Madam Speaker, we know finding efficiencies are possible, like the efficiencies that were magically found in the Education ministry. Now that the government also knows it's possible, I look forward to seeing what other efficiencies they will be able to find soon in other departments.

I look forward to continued debate on this bill, Madam Speaker. Lowering school fees is the right thing to do. Making life affordable for Albertans and Alberta families is the right thing to do, and we'll continue to push this government to make life affordable for Albertans in all aspects, not just the sleight of hand they're attempting with the school fee legislation.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member from St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you. Just a question for the Member for Calgary-Greenway. First of all – I don't know – I don't mind being called a taxpayer occasionally, but, you know, you guys really go there a lot. I think people like to be called moms and dads and parents and families. You know, just a thought. I was just wondering why you always use that label.

What you said, if I heard you correctly, is that the only way to put money into the pockets of Alberta families, or taxpayers, as you said, was to cut taxes. But you said earlier that you did support what we would do to actually put dollars into the pockets of families in September, when traditionally they would have to find hundreds of dollars that were really difficult to find to pay fees. I don't really understand because you sort of went both ways with that, so I'm wondering if you could clear that up for me.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the Member for St. Albert. She is right, actually. You know, in September, like, the government will be putting money into taxpayers, Albertans, and moms and dads alike, all of us, the majority of us – sorry; I must apologize – who have children. However, by putting money in one month and then taking 11 months out of their pockets, I think it's hypocrisy. That's what I meant. That's why I went both ways.

Yes, government is doing a great thing. This is a great initiative, lowering school fees, which we all support. Most of us in this House will support it. However, you're taking money away from the Alberta families and moms and dads that the hon. Member for St. Albert mentioned. That's why I said it in that way. I hope I've made myself clear.

Ms Renaud: No, not really.

Mr. Gill: Not really? Okay, I can continue. I can continue.

Lowering the school fees by 25 per cent: that's great. But putting on, like, a carbon tax and adding in 4.5 cents a litre to gasoline and approximately five and a half cents to diesel? Ask the farmers how they're feeling, how much money you're taking away from their pockets. Ask the farmers how much fertilizers have gone up and how much transportation costs have gone up.

I don't think this government has consulted, and I don't think we expect them to consult because they've never done it so far in the last two years. That's why I'm saying, Madam Speaker, that, yes, the government is doing a great thing by lowering the school fees on one hand; however, on the other hand, they're just, like, taking money away. It's like highway robbery almost.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Any other members wishing to speak to 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to see you in the chair. You're doing a wonderful job.

You know, I've heard the last few comments of: "Where did you get all this money? You said only efficiencies were found. That caused cutting teachers and educational assistants, front-line workers." The truth is, Madam Speaker, that initiatives like this take a responsibility for the government to make sure they find the efficiencies prior to making the cuts. I think that's the difference between the approach of the opposition of many years, just blindly cutting 2 per cent from budgets and having the results be felt in the front lines, and this government, who stabilizes the funding and then looks at making sure that they get an inventory of what's happening, making sure that they know how the cuts will affect the public services that the families depend on and then finds those efficiencies to make sure that there is a gain for the public services and the level of the public services.

Those members in the third party, Madam Speaker, had 44 years to find the efficiencies. It's rich. It's rich to say that, you know: we support it, but you said you couldn't find it. Well, no. It takes time. It takes time that you didn't take because you didn't prioritize it. You prioritized tax cuts. Please explain to me how those tax cuts helped the families that were sending their kids to school, the single mothers that didn't have the ability to pay those school fees. Those are the kinds of folks that these kinds of initiatives support. [interjections] I think for all of the initiatives that we have taken into account . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's an honour to stand and talk in favour of Bill 1. I know that other members are in favour of the bill, and I really appreciate that they're recognizing the importance of it. I think that they've raised points throughout their speeches that we're going to look at in Committee of the Whole.

But they say that it's going to be complicated and, you know: how are we going to address all of these other concerns? What I would say to them is that just because it's complicated doesn't mean it's not worth the time to investigate and find solutions. Some of those solutions are best to come through Committee of the Whole, through discussions and consultations, and in making sure that you include the school boards in assessing the overall school fees, how much that costs.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The fact is, Madam Speaker, that the opposition continuously backs away from hard decisions. You see that in their position on climate change, whether it's denial or just general ambivalence. The fact is that the members on the opposite side see something difficult and run away. At the end of the day, this government will continue to fight for public services that families depend on and will have the backs of women with children who go to school and who have the issue of school fees.

Let me tell you a story. I was an educational assistant since I was 18, Madam Speaker. I started that because of my mother's inspiration. She was a speech pathologist and taught me about behavioural strategies. She taught me to bring in strategies to help adapt the learning for students with special needs. Those are all very difficult things to do in school. I started early on as an educational assistant to pay my way through school as well. In that position I can tell you numerous heartbreaking stories of the number of times that one of my roles for the day was to make sure that I put a letter in the backpack of a child that I knew did not have money because we had to provide the snacks for that child. That child could not sit still and could not take in the educational practices of that day or whatever curriculum we were doing because they had not had food in the morning, and that led to those behaviours. The fact is that we still had to provide a letter at the end of the day, knowing that it was going to come back unmet.

The fact is that, yes, we need to find a solution. It is important, and it helps level out who has access to public education and reduces the barriers, that shouldn't be there in the first place. Everyone deserves access to education regardless of their socioeconomic status, and that is something that I will always stand for.

The fact is that the opposition lists a whole bunch of issues and says: oh, we haven't looked at that. No. Well, you know what? What it takes is to build a foundation in order to look at those issues. What has the minister done prior to bringing the reduction of school fees act? He did an inventory list of what school fees are being charged across the province. You know what that is, Madam Speaker? That is a thoughtful approach to making sure that you don't just go and hammer something through. We don't want to negatively affect the public services. Can we not make it more clear to you by the fact that we've stabilized the funding? In fact, we will work to that . . . [interjections]

The Acting Speaker: Members.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you for the reminder to speak through you. I get very passionate about education. It is something that I have dedicated my life to and that I will continue to dedicate my life to. I know that at the end of day, one place to start was by stabilizing the funding. And we know that educational centres are also the places that we want to make sure the climate leadership plan is being seen. The fact is that those children – and you know what? The decisions that are being made now I'm going to live with my entire life and . . . [interjections]

The Acting Speaker: Members.

Cortes-Vargas: You know, I'm the youngest female MLA ever elected to this Legislature. Trust me on this, Madam Speaker: I will live for years to see the effects of what is done here. And I am proud of absolutely every single initiative we have brought forward because they are thoughtful, they are looking to the future, and they are making sure that the jobs that my age group will see are sustainable jobs that they will have for a long period of time, that we won't have to continuously clean up by the negligence of the opposition.

We need to see a different approach, and that is what Albertans voted for. This government and the folks that sit next to me will all listen to their constituents, we'll continuously reach out, and we will look for solutions. They need to come from everyone. One thing that has been made clear over and over is that people want education prioritized. They did not want to see the kinds of cuts that we would have seen under them. The fact is, Madam Speaker, that even with the climate leadership plan – and they argue the way it's going to affect this. The fact is that we will work with the school boards to make sure that they can implement a way to build sustainable buildings, to address the overall costs. We will find a way to do that, and it's important.

I'll give you an example. At Strathcona Christian Academy they're currently doing a project on aquaponics. That kind of innovation and doing projects that look at future technologies involves students and starts creating solutions at a young age. That's the kind of entrepreneurship that Albertans are known for. We need to continue developing that kind of innovation. In fact, the strength of our energy industry is our education base and the fact that we have been able to develop technologies that we haven't seen elsewhere. So, yes, we're bringing it to schools, and, yes, we need to make sure that they are properly funded for it, and, yes, we will do that. We have demonstrated that our commitment will not waver.

Then, Madam Speaker, I just want to keep talking about the reduction of and the meaning of the reduction of school fees and why it's a more important approach than just taking a tax cut or a blind cut, that the PCs were very well known for. People knew that that was coming. Announcing a 2 per cent tax cut without proper planning was likely to result in the firing of teachers and educational assistants. I was going to be one of them. The fact is that those kinds of effects – it was also going to cut ELL funding. It was also going to cut funding . . . [interjections]

The Acting Speaker: Members. Enough, please.

Go ahead, Member.

Cortes-Vargas: It was going to cut a lot of things that actually impact the marginalized communities the most. You know, if we want to make sure that we integrate immigrant communities into our communities, we want to make sure that language acquisition is one of the first priorities. Yet that was one of the things that they were going to do during an economic downturn to further create a discrepancy of what they're able to contribute. The fact is that we have a responsibility to make sure that education is accessible to everyone regardless of their background. The kind of approach that is taken that prioritizes it just as, "If you have the money, then that's okay," continues to promote the cycle of poverty that we see, the continuous cycle of that.

You know, there are a lot of platitudes that happen in this House, Madam Speaker. I hear the opposition continue to say that they're in support of the LGBTQ community, that they're in support of the truth and reconciliation. I hear them say that. The trouble I have with it is that they don't follow the things that they say with action. Their proposals continuously disproportionately affect marginalized people. They continuously propose things that would affect women.

You want to talk about the great Klein years? You want to look at how we did in the United Nations in our ability to address the issues of women? You can see that in those years women were the most affected by those kinds of policy proposals. So for them to say that they stand for women and for the things that they do for our communities is absolutely ridiculous. It is not backed up by policy, by action. If you wanted to have nice words, fine, have nice words, but this government will make sure that we follow our platitudes with action, and that's what we're delivering when we do things like that.

The Alberta tax benefit, Madam Speaker. All of that is directed at making sure that we have the backs of all Albertans – and those are inclusive words, "all Albertans" – regardless of where you're from, what age you are, if you're an immigrant.

I'm going to tell you a little bit about the Alberta Legislature's history. I am the youngest female Alberta MLA, I'm the first Latin American Alberta MLA, and I'm the youngest government whip in Alberta's history. The fact that I'm the very first one means that you have not done enough to make this world inclusive. You have failed people like me. The reason I was so motivated to run against folks that have your sort of policies is because I understand that my voice is not being felt in this Legislature.

I am proud to stand for families that want to look at thoughtful approaches. I talk to my constituents all the time about their educational needs. I had parent councils come this morning. I've been talking to them for the entire summer about some of the issues facing their schools. They moved to Strathcona county because they wanted to prioritize their families. I know that in Strathcona county, growing up there, every single thing we do is about making sure that families are protected. You know what's an integral part of that? Education. The fact that we supported education was a very important fact for them.

The fact that the opposition fails to realize that the policies they were putting forward would negatively affect just those things actually tells me that they're the ones that are not talking to Albertans. They're the ones that haven't heard their priorities. The fact that they are unable to stand next to a shadow budget, that indicates what their policies would do, tells me that they are too afraid to stand next to their policies for Albertans because maybe they have heard them and maybe they just say: if we don't have to commit to the things that we are proposing by putting it in a shadow budget, people might not know what we would do. The chaos that we would be experiencing under the opposition because ...

[interjections]

The Acting Speaker: Members. Enough, please.

Cortes-Vargas: As I said, I'm one of the first Latin American members, and in my culture sometimes we get a little passionate. It's not out of anger; it's just actually sometimes a way of conversing.

I really appreciate their engagement on this, and I literally hope that they can take it back and reflect about, you know, whether they're actually going to stand next to their policies and talk about the overall impacts that we would see under the policies that they would bring forward. I want to work with them on making sure that Bill 1, An Act to Reduce School Fees, properly addresses the concerns throughout the province. I want to work with them the same way that I work with my parent councils, the same way that I've worked and continue – I hear you, Madam Speaker.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, Member.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, March 13, 2017

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us bow our heads and reflect or pray, each in our own way. Let us be reminded of the great gift it is to serve the people of Alberta. Allow us to be mindful and understanding of all those who call Alberta home. From our indigenous people to new Canadians we are one. We each share our Commonwealth.

Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, we will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Mr. Robert Clark. I would invite you to sing, each in your own language.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
Il sait porter la croix!
Ton histoire est une épopée
Des plus brillants exploits.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Thank you. Please be seated.

Statement by the Speaker

Commonwealth Day Message from the Queen

The Speaker: Before we begin today, I would like to take a moment to recognize that today is Commonwealth Day. I have a message from the Queen, and I'd like to read it to you. Copies of this message have been placed on your desk for your reference: Commonwealth Day message of Her Majesty the Queen, head of the Commonwealth.

This Commonwealth Day, a Baton will set out from Buckingham Palace and begin a long and extraordinary journey. Over the next twelve months, the Baton will visit people living in the nations and territories of our Commonwealth family in every continent and ocean.

Carried on its way by thousands of people of all ages and backgrounds, by the time it reaches its final destination, the Queen's Baton will have brought together through its route and symbolism, almost 2.5 billion people who share the special connection of being Commonwealth citizens.

Contained within the Baton will be a written message that will be opened and read at the Commonwealth Games in Australia next year. However, there is an even more powerful message to be seen and experienced as the Baton passes from hand to hand, from seashore to mountaintop, through cities, towns, and villages. It is the message of a peace-building Commonwealth.

The cornerstones on which peace is founded are, quite simply, respect and understanding for one another. Working together, we build peace by defending the dignity of every individual and community.

By upholding justice and the rule of law, and by striving for societies that are fair and offer opportunities for all, we overcome division and find reconciliation, so that the benefits of progress and prosperity may be multiplied and shared.

As members of the Commonwealth family we can find much to be thankful for in the inheritances we have received from those who came before us. Through consensus and cooperation great things have been achieved.

We can find further reward and fulfilment by continuing to collaborate with others in a spirit of goodwill to build a peaceful and abundant future for all Commonwealth citizens.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to everyone in this Assembly 65 students, who are seated in both the members' gallery and the public gallery, from Stony Plain Central school in my riding of Stony Plain. They're accompanied by a number of teachers and chaperones: Mrs. Niebergall, Mrs. Fleming, Mrs. Wilms, Miss Van Delden, Miss Schaeber, Victoria Warsame, Mr. Dan Kiryluk, Mrs. Kerri Kiryluk, Helen Parent, Paul McCann, and Faye Ledwon. I ask that they all stand to receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome, welcome.

Are there any other school groups, hon. members?

The hon. Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Seated in your gallery today are four board members of the Royal Commonwealth Society of Edmonton. The Edmonton branch was founded in 2005 during the visit of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II to Alberta. The Royal Commonwealth Society has a long history, dating to 1868. It is committed to promoting the values of the Commonwealth. Through youth empowerment, education, and advocacy the Royal Commonwealth Society champions human rights, democracy, and sustainable development across the 52 member states. Our guests are here to recognize Commonwealth Day, which is celebrated annually on the second Monday in March. I'd ask them to rise as I call their names: Ms Nicky Kobly, Dr. John Dugan and his son Dr. John Dugan Jr., Mr. Gordon Smith, and Mr. Joe Zasada. It's my pleasure to introduce them to you and through you to all members of the Assembly, and I'd ask that the House give them a warm welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise on your behalf and introduce to the Assembly Mr. Richard Brooks, a long-time friend of yours. After residing in Medicine Hat for 35 years, Mr. Brooks now lives in St. Albert. I would ask that he please rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mr. Carlier: Mr. Speaker, it is my sincere pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 19 hard-working civil servants who work at Alberta Agriculture and Forestry. They represent the many women and men who work hard to ensure that farm families and the forestry sector in our province are equipped with information and all the support they need to be successful. They also support my office in providing policies, legislation, regulations, and the services necessary for Alberta's agriculture, food, and forest sectors to grow, prosper, and diversify. I would like to ask them to all rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I have the pleasure of introducing to you and through you an Edmonton mother of a very special 10-year-old girl. Cathy Crowell's daughter Hosanna is in grade 5. Her favourite subject is history. She enjoys Mandarin lessons and playing baseball. She also lives with a blood condition that requires her to receive transfusions every two to three weeks. Her parents are very grateful for the generosity of Canadian blood donors, and they are regular donors themselves. Also with her is Pierre Cyr with the Canadian Blood Services, CBS, which operates Canada's blood supply and is a truly vital service to Albertans like the Crowells. We are very proud of our public voluntary blood donation system here in Alberta. I'd ask that the House extend the traditional warm welcome to both of our guests.

1:40

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your indulgence I have two introductions today. It's a privilege to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Jane Lucille McIntyre. Jane was born in 1915 in North Dakota, grew up in Success, Saskatchewan, and has lived in Wisconsin, California, Saskatchewan, and here in Edmonton. She ran her family business until she was 75 years old and has been very active in countless community organizations. Jane's working philosophy was and still remains that when you can't find anyone to do it, you do it yourself. Jane has two children, eight grandchildren, 10 great-grandchildren, and one great-great-grandchild, many of whom live right here in Edmonton. She is joined today by several of her family members. I would ask that the family members please rise and that we give her and her family the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's also a privilege to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Ellies and Tillie Chudyk. Ellies and Tillie are constituents of mine who have lived in Edmonton-Decore for the last 55 years, but a big congratulations to them as they recently celebrated their 60th wedding anniversary. They were married on February 2, 1957. Both retired now, having worked as a trucker and a government employee, they have one son, one granddaughter, and three step-grandchildren. I would ask them now to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and good afternoon. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you two very special women and friends of mine who are visiting today. These strong women are examples for all women, and they make it their personal responsibility to get involved and make positive change in the world. These women are not only talented and funny and inspiring and hardworking; they're also dedicated to improving Alberta. I would love to introduce Mrs. Leah Wood. Leah is the provincial director for the Wildrose Party and president of the Stony Plain CA. I also take great pleasure in introducing Ms Taylor Wood. Taylor is a university student at Grant MacEwan, studying elementary education, and is also the president of the Edmonton-Calder CA. Taylor has recently started a position in the opposition office as one of our new receptionists. Taylor and Leah, may I please ask that you rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise on this special day to introduce to you and through you a British citizen, my maternal cousin Sana Sajjad and her husband, Ammar Hussain, who recently got married and are starting their new life in the beautiful city of Calgary. I wish them all the very best and request that they rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of friends who are here today to hear my member's statement on the crisis in South Sudan. They're all leaders in their community and are working to organize relief efforts on the ground in their home country. I would ask them to rise when I say their names, and I apologize in advance for any mispronunciations. They are my good friends Khor Top, Stephen Yang, Tut Phot, Wuor Pal, Simon George, Bejien Wang, Wany Jock, and Thomas Gatleak. I would ask that they all rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Red Deer

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is no secret that I'm proud to be the member representing Red Deer-North, within the third-largest city in Alberta. I rise today to bring light to the great organizations, attractions, and phenomenal community that Red Deerians embody. It is my privilege to represent the area and the people.

When I am in my constituency, I embrace opportunities to meet with all stakeholders regardless of title, status, or nature of concern. The open-door policy that I extend at times embraces constituents of the opposition, and that's fine by me. The Red Deer River, that winds through the heart of my city, touches nine other House members and 34 municipalities. My interest is that what happens in my constituency impacts others. We are interdependent.

The peculiar nature of Alberta's interdependence, however, is that there is a connectedness to Red Deer. My government hosts town halls in Red Deer to enlist the pulse of my constituents. Opposition parties visit Red Deer, just as they do in Edmonton and Calgary, because we are a central hub that connects the province. However, we are more than a place to gas up and stop at the Donut Mill for what Red Deerians brag are the best in the province.

Red Deer College draws our province's future, and during our beautiful summers Sylvan Lake experiences a strong influx of vacationers and cottagers. Our neighboring guests drive our economy and rely on our resources. We are interdependent.

All of our service-driven amenities lap in the north-south, east-west connectedness that Red Deer provides. Our steady growth in urban population speaks to the little gem that is Red Deer as well as how it draws to our rural partners. They may come to shop, to seek care at the fourth-busiest hospital in the province, or to take care of business at the courthouse. Whatever they need, Red Deer has it.

My interchange welcomes constituents from every electoral district here and is a vital part of the landscape of the province, so let us dispel the myth that we are just Gasoline Alley.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

RCMP and Public Safety

Mrs. Pitt: This weekend I had the honour and pleasure of attending the RCMP Regimental Ball, an annual event organized for the benefit of the Airdrie and District Victims Assistance Society and hosted by the Airdrie RCMP detachment. The RCMP has hosted these events in communities across this province for as long as they've been a force, dating back to the 1870s, when they were the North West Mounted Police.

Regimental balls allow RCMP officers and community members the opportunity to interact, network, and build relationships in a more positive setting than we're often used to, sharing food and fun, building trust and morale, and raising money for charity. We all know that our police services in Alberta are doing a great job at keeping us safe. It is so important that we take the time to thank these men and women, who often work long hours in high-stress situations and are often forced to deal with the absolute worst aspects of humanity and human behaviour. We place so much responsibility on their shoulders. Their public service is truly admirable, and we cannot ever thank them enough for it.

But despite all this good work, crime is on the rise in our province. When I talk to businesses around Airdrie, they tell me they are extremely concerned about crime in the area. This is no surprise since according to Stats Canada the latest crime severity index for Airdrie rose by 26 per cent. Property crimes in particular are increasing. Break and enters were up by 51 per cent. Robbery is almost up 29 per cent. Thefts over $5,000 were up 24 per cent in the city while theft under $5,000 soared to 46 per cent. Increasing crime means increasing strain on police resources and also on our courts.

It's time for action and to ensure that criminals aren't walking free due to the mounting delays in our courts, and we must act now. Albertans can rest assured that the Wildrose will always stand up for the victims and for safe communities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Justice System Delays

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The administration of justice in Alberta is in disrepute due to the actions of this Justice minister. Allow me to make my case. Two weeks ago the minister issued a protocol directing Crown prosecutors to either stay charges or plea bargain to obtain guilty pleas for cases requiring too much court time. Since then hundreds of charges, including many involving violence and weapons, have been dropped.

There's more. Citizens victimized by these alleged criminals had to hear in the media that the offenders got off scot-free. The minister maintains that she had to take this drastic step because Alberta does not have enough prosecutors. Well, that did not come as a surprise because she's the one who cut funding to Crown prosecutors for two years running, and that left 35 positions vacant.

When the media revealed her court-clearing directive, the public reacted with outrage. The next day the minister found money to hire more prosecutors. Let's put this all in perspective. This NDP government is finally increasing funding for prosecutors, but that $14 million amounts to half the amount it is spending to – wait for it – change your light bulbs.

What is especially concerning about this whole escapade is that the minister attempted to conceal her unprecedented protocol. She hid the directive, and when her own prosecutors blew the whistle, she tried to quell the uproar by serving up millions of dollars.

In Alberta the administration of justice is a primary responsibility of the minister. I'm not just making that up; it's on the Justice website. Mr. Speaker, the court of public opinion is clear, and in this case it's the only one that counts. The minister's actions have eroded Alberta's faith in our justice system, and that means the minister has to go.

I rest my case, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Government Policies

Mr. Jean: Oil prices have slid more than 8 per cent since last Monday. We are under $50 again as the U.S. ramps up its oil production. Today there is more uncertainty with changes coming to the labour code. While the NDP says that it's sunny days again, growth for the private sector in Alberta has been entirely non-existent. Major players in the oil and gas industry are leaving, ma-and-pa shops are feeling hammered by new regulations and tax increases, and life is more expensive for Albertans. When will the Premier admit that her plan is just not working?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Let me begin by saying that our government is absolutely and completely, entirely focused on making life better for Albertans. You know what? The way that we're going to do that is that we're going to focus on job creation, we're going to focus on protecting core public services, and we're going to focus on making Alberta more affordable. That's the work that we're doing, that's what Albertans have asked for, and that's what we are delivering on.

Mr. Jean: Well, Mr. Speaker, the NDP government is out of focus because it's not working, and Albertans are right to be worried about the NDP's gross mismanagement of our economy. Today we heard that there will be consultation on changes to the labour code here in Alberta. We have seen what consultations with the NDP have looked like in the past. Just talk to farmers and ranchers in Alberta. Just talk to small businesses who saw minimum wage consultations quickly become come-and-tell-you sessions. Will the Premier commit to do what's best for Albertans and our economy or only bulldoze through her ideological, risky agenda for Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What we are doing, actually, is working very hard on making life more affordable for Alberta families, as the member opposite just referred to. So we're rolling back school fees by 25 per cent, we're freezing tuition, and we're capping electricity rates. All three of those things the member opposite wanted Albertans to pay more for. We are focused on making life better for Albertans.

Mr. Jean: The fact is that Albertans just don't trust this government to get changes to the labour code right. In the midst of the deepest downturn Albertans have seen in over a generation, the NDP announced income tax hikes, business tax hikes, gas tax hikes, and topped it off with a brand new carbon tax. While small businesses were closing their doors they, the NDP, bulldozed ahead with mandated wage increases, and now expected changes to the labour code have every single Albertan on edge. Times aren't easy right now. Does the Premier understand why folks just don't trust this NDP government to get anything on the economy right?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, what we know is that Albertans trust us to be on their side. Albertans trust us to have their back when times are tough, and that's exactly what we have been doing, and that is exactly what we will continue to do. We will not engage in the billions of dollars of cuts that the members opposite want to take out of our public services and download onto the families of Albertans. That's not the way we will go forward. We will stand up for Alberta families.

The Speaker: Second main question.

Justice System Delays

Mr. Jean: Today is my first opportunity to ask the Premier questions about the crisis in our justice system. Forty-four criminal cases have been stayed in Calgary over the past four months, and 60 more cases have been stayed in Edmonton because of lack of resources. Serious charges are included in that list, like impaired driving, assaulting a police officer, and fraud over $5,000. When these criminals walk free without having their day in court, it erodes confidence in Alberta's justice system. Why did the Premier wait until significant public pressure mounted to fund additional resources in our court systems?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our government believes very clearly that one of the things that does make life better for Albertans is ensuring that they have a secure and safe community. It matters to us. It matters to me as a mother of kids who walk through our communities. That's why our government has been investing in our public safety system since we first got elected. We've been doing it up till now. We will continue to do it. We just announced more funding for prosecutors. We're going to make sure that we get this right.

Mr. Jean: The triage protocol the NDP government has put into place to address the crisis in our courts is, frankly, unacceptable. Fiscal constraints are front and centre in the protocol document and put pressure on Alberta's Crowns to put money ahead of justice. This isn't reasonable. In neighbouring British Columbia the vice-president of the Crown Counsel Association stated, and I quote: the fiscal realities of any particular government are far down the list for us when we consider how to proceed with a case. End quote. Why are the Alberta NDP's priorities so out of whack with the rest of the country?

Ms Notley: You know, Mr. Speaker, as I've said before, we are very concerned about ensuring that our justice system is well funded and that it works well. That is why we're taking action. We're investing more money into Crown prosecutors. We're investing more money into court workers, and last year we invested more money into legal aid. Our government doesn't just talk about things; we take action, and that's the difference.

Mr. Jean: Canada-wide new statistics are being released about how many charges may be stayed as a result of the Jordan decision. In Ontario the Crown Attorneys Association estimates that 6,000 criminal cases could be stayed or withdrawn. In Alberta the NDP government, this government, has been silent about it. Can the Premier please disclose to Albertans how many cases in provincial court are currently exceeding 18 months, how many cases in Queen's Bench court are exceeding 30 months, and how many criminal cases as a result of this government will be stayed or withdrawn?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, as I said before, our government is taking action. Our government is moving forward with investing more into our system of public safety. The member opposite simply wants to study the issue. He wants to raise fears. He wants to raise concerns. He wants to score political points, and then his solution is to study the issue. Say one thing, do another. We're not about studying the issue. We're going to take action. We are taking action, and Albertans will be safer as a result.

The Speaker: Third main question.

Energy Efficiency Programs

Mr. Jean: This government seems to be incredibly proud of the residential no-cost energy savings program. The minister simply can't stop making announcements about it, but unfortunately it's all hat, no cattle, all sizzle, no steak. Albertans aren't being told any details whatsoever: how many light bulbs the government will install per house, whether cabins and cottages are eligible, or if the company chosen will be allowed to upsell Albertans when they're doing it. When will the Premier tell Albertans the details on how her government plans to waste their money on this ill-conceived NDP boondoggle?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, I watched with some relish the member opposite making fun of people in Alberta who are concerned about bringing down their electricity costs and bringing down their electricity use. It was quite something. He had a great time making fun of the issue. But you know what? As of today 68,000 Alberta households have signed up for this program because – you know what? – Albertans want to make progress on this issue. I would suggest that if anybody is out of touch on this issue, it is the member opposite. [interjections]

The Speaker: Government House Leader.

First supplemental.

Mr. Jean: Well, let's look at the facts. There are over 1.5 million private dwellings in Alberta. Ecofitt, the Ontario company that got this contract, is only hiring 70 people to manage and install the program. If you were to take an hour per install, including travel time, it'll take these 70 people over a decade to visit every home. Meanwhile Alberta-based energy retrofit companies say that this program from the NDP has killed their business. Why pay for light bulbs when the government is giving away free ones? Why won't this government send this Ontario company packing so that it doesn't unfairly put even more Albertans out of work, as they've done already?

2:00

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, this energy efficiency program, the first one in Alberta after this province went for decades being the only jurisdiction in the country without an energy efficiency program, will save the average family over a hundred dollars per year. Now, I appreciate that the members opposite don't care about saving money for the average family, but we do. As a result of that, we are moving forward with this plan, and because it is so popular, we look forward to making the changes that ensure that they're able to meet the demands of the very excited Albertans who are wanting to reduce their electricity use.

Mr. Jean: Speaking of boondoggles, Mr. Speaker, the Ecofitt deal is a bad deal for Albertans. Albertans know it, we know it, and I'm sure that even the NDP knows it. Other energy retrofit companies tell us this contract tendering was less than straightforward. Curiously, the short list of bidders for the request for proposal awarded to Ecofitt was never published. Will the Premier now, today, assure Albertans that the awarding of this contract was fairly done, that they didn't create a program that only Ontario-based Ecofitt could actually do, and will they release the list of other companies who bid for this contract? Yes or no?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, moving forward on this program was the result of a wide range of consultation done by experts in the area of reducing energy use, something that these folks wouldn't talk about too much because they don't really spend a lot of time thinking about reducing energy use. Nonetheless, the company that won the contract provides this service in Nova Scotia, in Ontario, in Manitoba, in Quebec, and in British Columbia, and the reason that we had to go out was because we didn't have a program here in Alberta before. But you know what? Now we do.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Oil Sands Investments

Mr. McIver: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, while the Premier was in Houston last week, she made such an impression on the energy industry that Shell withdrew 7 and a quarter billion dollars of investment from Alberta. To the Premier: while you were in Texas – I'd just like to know – did the leaders there give you a nice gift and a thank-you card in exchange for all the head office jobs that have been transferred from Calgary to Houston?

Ms Notley: Well, I do understand that while I was in Houston, the member opposite wasn't really watching that much about what was going on but, rather, was filing his suit against the Ethics Commissioner. Nonetheless, Mr. Speaker, had he been paying attention, he would have known that we had an opportunity then to talk with many, many leaders in the oil and gas industry about how we are working with them to reposition Alberta as a successful, progressive, long-term sustainable energy producer. The matter that the member opposite talks about is fearmongering. CNRL is taking over that work, and it's going to be good for all Albertans.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
The first supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Here's another tale from the Premier's accomplishment book. In 2007 Statoil invested $2.2 billion in the Alberta oil sands. In 2016, on this Premier's watch, they fire-sold that same investment for about $832 million and left Alberta. Now, they're still in the energy business, just not here. To the Premier: how many more companies and good, mortgage-paying jobs will you and your policies drive out of Alberta before you reverse the carbon tax, the corporate taxes, and all the inconsistencies ...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As you know, our government is very concerned about promoting economic growth and about promoting job creation, and that is something that we've been very focused on. I'll tell you what. You know what helps bring investment to Alberta? Two pipelines, two pipelines that those guys over there couldn't get after 44 years. That's the kind of thing that is bringing investment to Alberta notwithstanding the drop in oil prices, and that's the kind of thing that will contribute to our ongoing prosperity under our government's leadership.

Mr. McIver: Last week they said that they wouldn't celebrate till there was oil flowing. I guess they've forgotten about that.

Mr. Speaker, the Premier's hand-picked staff member Tzeporah Berman, co-chair of the oil sands advisory group, two weeks ago was telling Canadian universities to remove their investments from the Alberta oil sands. During the Premier's Houston trip she proclaimed her support for the oil sands, but we know that actions speak louder than words. To the Premier: before more investment leaves Alberta, will you fire Ms Berman, or will you continue to send mixed messages about our biggest industry?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, what I will be very proud to do is to continue our record of building relationships between people who previously were in opposite corners of the room, never speaking to each other, never making progress, never building pipelines, and never protecting the climate. We brought those people together. We've got those people making progress together. We are setting up a better economic environment and investment climate as a result, and I am very proud of that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Springbank Reservoir Flood Mitigation Project

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Springbank off-stream reservoir, or SR1, is the cheapest, most effective, and fastest way to ensure that flood waters do not once again ravage downtown Calgary. But last week the Tsuut'ina Nation stepped up their opposition to the project, saying that they haven't been adequately consulted. I know the government has been in contact with representatives from Tsuut'ina, but clearly they still have concerns. To the Premier: have you personally met with Tsuut'ina leaders about this issue, and if not, will you?

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. I have met with the Tsuut'ina leadership on this issue. While we are very concerned that the Tsuut'ina have issues with the project, I think it's important to remember that we have met with them a number of times. I personally have met with them on this issue. There have been 10 site visits as well, Mr. Speaker, as well as three meetings with department officials and the Tsuut'ina, between the Tsuut'ina and the Transportation department, with respect to this matter, and we have provided over a hundred thousand dollars in funding.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a critical issue. I'd encourage and urge the Premier herself, please, to get involved.

Mr. Speaker, the Supreme Court of Canada has been clear that indigenous peoples must be included in any projects that impact their traditional territories. Given this well-established fact, I would have thought that engagement with Tsuut'ina would have been a priority for this government, but it appears not. Again to the Minister of Transportation: what is your plan to address the concerns of Tsuut'ina about their drinking water and the potential impact of SR1 on their lands?

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, I don't agree with the hon. member that we have not engaged with the Tsuut'ina. I've reached out since its release and hope to have a meeting with the chief very soon. We've engaged in an environmental impact process. That will be complete at the end of this month, and we're expecting that report to be available in early summer. That will shed a great deal of light on the issues that the hon. member has raised, and it will be the jumping-off point for further discussions with Tsuut'ina.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, every year that goes by without significant flood mitigation brings risk, and it's a concern I've raised in this House many times, including almost exactly one year ago to this day. But serious questions remain about when the project will be built, and I want an assurance from this government that they are still committed to SR1. My constituents are also asking me about the process for getting the project approved and construction started. Again to the Minister of Transportation: assuming that federal and provincial environmental approvals are in place that ensure drinking water is safe and lands are protected, is the consent of all parties required before moving ahead?

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much for the question. Mr. Speaker, well, we've certainly – and I've indicated already that we have – met a number of times with the Tsuut'ina, and we have a detailed log of all of the interactions, which is extensive. So we've been engaging the Tsuut'ina on this issue; we want to continue to do that. We want to find out what their additional concerns may be. We want to await the environmental impact assessment and discuss those issues further with the Tsuut'ina. We're very much committed to the Springbank project, and we certainly are looking hopefully forward to having Tsuut'ina agreement as we move forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Red Deer Courthouse

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since my election one of the most frequent concerns I've heard is how Red Deer needs a new courthouse. The mayor of Red Deer has raised this issue on a number of occasions, as have the local legal community and the judiciary. I have brought these concerns to the minister before. To the Minister of Justice: when will Red Deer receive the courthouse it desperately needs?

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Well, we have heard from the community of Red Deer as well and from Mayor Veer that they have considerable concerns regarding the need for a new courthouse. We are recognizing this and listening to all Albertans, and the hon. member will have to wait, like everybody else, to determine how those priorities were prioritized.

Thank you.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Red Deer's courthouse takes in matters from around the region and is a priority for both the city and the county and given that there are significant capacity pressures, to the same minister: what is the government doing to ease these pressures?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question and for her advocacy on this issue. We understand that the court system is under considerable pressure in a number of places. That's why we're investing resources on multiple fronts. We have heard from the community that the Red Deer courthouse is a source of serious concern, and that will be weighed in the balance with government priorities.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the situation in Red Deer is dire and given that the previous government failed to fund a new courthouse for the people of Red Deer, to the Minister of Justice: will the government commit to a new courthouse today? [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet, please.

The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Access to justice is a priority for this government. We do know that that courthouse is a considerable concern. We are aware that the previous government over many years and decades failed to take any action on this issue, and we will definitely weigh the needs of Red Deerians, as we do all members of the province.

Thank you.

Oil Sands Investments

Mr. Barnes: The deal that saw Shell sell most of its Canadian oil sands assets has been in the works for more than a year. That means since shortly after this government unveiled its climate action plan. Instead of stopping investment from fleeing the province, this government was blowing hot air, claiming that Shell was thrilled with the plan. Mr. Speaker, so thrilled, they're leaving. When Shell was lobbying the Premier for a carbon tax, did they explain that they meant the tax to only apply to everyone else while they moved capital to jurisdictions with no carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of environment and climate change.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I find it curious that the member opposite would ask us to interfere in the private dealings between two companies that both stood on the stage with the government in announcing the carbon pricing framework. Both CNRL and Shell supported and continue to support Alberta's climate leadership plan.

As for the details, we are pleased to see an Alberta company and one of Canada's largest energy firms increasing their holdings in the oil sands. This is good news for Albertans, and it's certainly good news for overtime opportunities . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Barnes: Albertans are starting to notice a trend, Mr. Speaker. Companies only support the carbon tax after they've been exempted from paying it. Given that the OSAG panel is tasked with determining who will and who will not be paying a net carbon tax greater than the subsidies funded by our junior oil and gas industry and given that no juniors were welcome on this board, to the Energy minister: will Suncor, the biggest proponent of this government's carbon tax, receive more in subsidies than they pay in carbon tax because of the ruling of a panel that they are on?

Ms Phillips: Mr. Speaker, I find it curious that the members opposite would talk down one of the largest employers in their own leader's riding. I find it curious that the members opposite are promising to scrap the very plan that resulted in pipeline approvals. They're doubling down on the same dead-end approach that resulted in no pipeline approvals. I find that it is actually beneath us as parliamentarians as well to root for Alberta to fail as we move forward with our climate leadership plan. Albertans deserve better, and they get better from this side of the House.

Mr. Cooper: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order noted.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, I work for Albertans, not the oil companies.

Albertans are tired of this government's reckless policy initiatives and the long-term instability they create for our number one jobs sector. Given that companies like Shell want to upgrade their portfolio and that under this NDP government's leadership Alberta didn't make the grade and given that this government's rush job on the 100-megatonne emissions cap bill failed to provide investors with certainty, when can Albertans expect to see the long-awaited results of the now overdue OSAG panel?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, all of the companies that the members of the Official Opposition have spent their time talking down today are contributing to the oil sands advisory group so that we can find ways to move forward with innovation and putting Alberta, really, on the world stage as an energy producer. The CEO of Canada's Oil Sands Innovation Alliance praised the emissions cap when he said that "with the technology being developed in Alberta," the 13 oil companies that are part of COSIA "are confident Alberta can continue to grow its industry while reducing emissions." That is our vision for the future of the energy industry in this province. It is not a vision that is shared by the . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister. Thank you.
The Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Agricultural Trade with India

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In just the past two years Alberta's producers have increased their production of dried peas by 65 per cent and 400 per cent for lentils to feed India's demand. Furthermore, by 2020 India is expected to surpass China as the world's most populous nation. Guess what? Eighty per cent of Indians are vegetarian. Clearly, there's a great opportunity for Alberta to increase trade with India. To the agriculture minister: did you sign any trade agreements on your recent trip to India? Yes or no, Minister?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for bringing up this important trade issue. We have opportunities in India. As the member has stated, the population is growing. They have a very young population. They're going to continue being an important market area for our producers in pulses, wheat, and canola and other products as well. My mission to India saw opportunities to speak with many different members of industry and government, including state officials. Those talks continue as we continue this process.

Thank you.

Mr. Gill: Sounds like a no.

Given that the former government launched a major trade mission to India in 2014, led by the Premier, and given that three agreements were signed that year to increase market access but just like crops, these agreements need nurturing and given that Saskatchewan recently outstripped Alberta as an exporter of pulse crops, again to the minister: what is your government specifically doing to secure market access in India for Alberta's producers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Canada is currently the second-largest producer of pulses in the world. We're the largest exporter of pulses in the world. I'm proud to say that Alberta is the largest exporter of yellow and green peas to India and around the world. That trade continues. We'll continue to do it. I was very proud of my trip to India. We can extend that market even further as the population of India grows.

Thank you.

Mr. Gill: No results by the minister.

Given that last week the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti asked the agriculture minister to provide an update on the status of the historic 2014 trade agreement between Alberta and the state of Punjab but the minister didn't do so and given that I asked the trade minister the same question one year ago and was told that I would receive an update, which has never happened, to the trade minister: what will it take to receive this long-promised update? Would the minister prefer if I sent a formal letter?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of agriculture.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's very interesting to note that actually my visit to India was the first visit by a minister of agriculture from Alberta, the first one ever. That's important to note, that we obviously take that very seriously. We take that seriously to be able to support. This side of this House has given the support, and we support Alberta farmers and ranchers as we continue our market access.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

2:20

Carbon Offsetting

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government told Albertans that the carbon tax and their policy changes were about reducing greenhouse gases, but a letter sent to large emitters proves that this isn't the case. Emitters have been told that in the future they will only be able to use GHG offset credits to pay for a maximum of 30 per cent of their carbon compliance charges, that the rest must be paid in cash. If the carbon tax and this government's policies are really about reducing greenhouse gases, then why is the NDP gutting the one and only policy that actually does that in favour of boosting government revenues?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of the environment.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The changes that we are bringing to the offset protocol system and the compliance pieces to that have to do with the regularization of how we do things compared to other jurisdictions. We, of course, have a very robust offset market in this province, and we want to make sure that that aligns with where they also have carbon pricing frameworks in place, where we also find a 30 per cent cap on offsets. So we are aligning our system as the system grows and making sure that we are the leaders in this country in how our offset markets work.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. Well, since large greenhouse gas emitters were told that the government won't allow companies to use GHG offset credits to pay for all of their compliance charges and that the NDP wants cash instead and since the use of credits, which result from actual and real reductions in GHGs, is "impacting the ability of government to implement meaningful long-term programming" and since NDP programs are more important than reducing greenhouse gases, will the Premier admit that this government's climate policies were never about climate and that this is just a tax grab and a green slush fund?

Ms Phillips: Mr. Speaker, what the opposition calls a green slush fund we on this side of the House call an indigenous solar program. What the opposition calls a slush fund we call an indigenous energy efficiency program. We call it an on-farm solar PV program. We call it an on-farm farm efficiency program. So what they dismiss as real reductions for Albertans and real ways that real communities can save money – they reject those things. They reject supporting communities in that way. They reject those programs because, at the end of the day, they reject the science of climate change.

Mrs. Aheer: Well, I'd like to give some actual information here. Mr. Speaker. Since this means that Alberta companies that actually made a difference in reducing GHGs in the past, actual greenhouse gases, will be punished so that the NDP can flow carbon tax money to their friends who are making NDP-approved investments in the future and given that this is bad for the environment, bad for the economy, bad for future investment, and bad for Albertans, why should any company invest in reducing greenhouse gases in Alberta if the NDP is going to change the rules on them whenever they need more cash?

Ms Phillips: Mr. Speaker, what's bad for the environment is an Official Opposition that doesn't believe climate change is real. What's bad for the environment is a group of folks that would rather spread conspiracies than actually tackle climate change. What's even worse is for an Official Opposition to undermine our energy industry and their good ideas for innovation and clean technology to reduce our emissions per barrel, to make our companies more competitive, and to put people to work while we're doing it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Rural Crime Prevention

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Hard-working RCMP officers and peace officers in my riding have been working overtime to meet the challenges of rising crime. The facts are clear. Crime is up across rural Alberta, and Bonnyville-Cold Lake is no exception. Motor vehicle thefts have skyrocketed 80 per cent from 2015 to 2016; assault, up 36 per cent; break and enter, up 55 per cent. These numbers and more can be found in a report which I will be tabling today. To the minister: what specific steps are you and your government taking to address rural crime?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for what is really a very important question. All Albertans deserve to live in safe communities. That's why we increased funding to ALERT, funding that was cut by the former federal Conservative government, to ensure that they were able to continue to do their important work, bringing together intelligence and bringing together all different services so that they could work to keep the province safe. That's why we're ensuring that we're making investments in our justice system in terms of legal aid, in terms of Crown prosecution services, in terms of the courts. It's why we've created more judicial positions to keep the system running.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this is a serious issue, by not having a clear strategy to deal with rural crime, this government is flirting with disaster. Given that almost every category of serious crime went up in Bonnyville-Cold Lake from 2015 to 2016, including robbery, assault, and uttering threats, Minister, a constituent of my riding would like an answer to whether or not the minister could shift resources from the safer communities and neighborhoods unit or the sheriffs investigative support unit to secure the safety of my constituents and to help support the hard work . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I know that he and his constituents are very concerned about rural safety, and so are we. Ultimately, the RCMP has jurisdiction because they are the experts over how that deployment works. In terms of the SCAN program and the surveillance program that were formerly housed in ALERT, we've heard a lot from municipal leaders that those programs are absolutely critical to them. Those are programs that are involved in shutting down drug houses, in tracking organized crime, and we think that they're very important.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that crime in most categories has risen steadily since the start of the economic downturn and given that there's a clear connection between Albertans losing work and these troubling rates of rural crime as well as the fentanyl crisis and given that these are not just city problems, that rural Albertans are being the hardest hit due to their living in isolated locations, far away from police services, why has this government been too slow to meaningful action to address the problems in my communities and all rural communities?

The Speaker: Thank you.
The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. I'm going to have to beg to differ on this government having moved slowly to action. This government has taken a number of steps to ensure that our justice system is functioning appropriately. We've inserted resources to ALERT. That's front-line policing. We've made sure that resources are available for both defence and Crown prosecutors in the courts to ensure that things are being dealt with in a timely manner. We've passed a bill that ensures that front-line RCMP officers can spend more time on the street and less time doing paperwork. These are all concrete actions that this government is taking. Meanwhile the members opposite propose more study.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Provincial Debt-servicing Costs

Mr. Gottfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Buried in the government's '16-17 budget, we see the NDP spending almost a billion dollars to service taxpayer debt. That's more than the budgets of Indigenous Relations, Service Alberta, Status of Women, and Environment and Parks combined. To the Minister of Finance: so that we don't bury ourselves in servicing your ever-increasing debt, decimating funding for other valuable programs, when will you present a credible plan to return to a balanced budget?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I stood up in this House before and said that by 2023-2024 we will get to balance if – if – we continue to invest in this province so that people have jobs and construction occurs province-wide, if we continue to support Albertans so that they can go to those jobs with training and education and other postsecondary supports. Those are the things I said, and those are the things we'll stick to in this House.

Mr. Gottfried: Sounds like never, Mr. Speaker.

Given that the same budget predicts that these interest payments will rise to $1.4 billion in the following year and given that the total budget for Children's Services provided in the recent Q3 update sits at only $1.1 billion, to the Minister of Children's Services: will you fight to reduce the budget deficit so that money being spent to fund irresponsible borrowing can instead be directed towards increased support of vulnerable children?

2:30

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. Again, Mr. Speaker, I think I've also stood up in this House and said that debt-servicing costs in this province are lower than in B.C. We're at half again below B.C. You know, the kind of thing we won't do is that we won't cut services to Albertans. That side would cut $9 billion – or $2 billion. I get them mixed up because they all want to cut billions out of the budget. That would cut seniors' benefits, transportation services, special-needs students' funding, student aid. All that would be gone if they were in charge.

Mr. Gottfried: So I guess we'll find out when debt servicing trumps children.

Mr. Speaker, given that interest payments are projected to rise to $2 billion in '18-19 and given that this government is expected to take $1.2 billion out of the pockets of Albertans in carbon tax that same year, to the Finance minister: if you believe that $1.2 billion in carbon taxes will convince Albertans to make better choices, why won't $2 billion in debt-servicing costs convince your government to also make better choices?

Mr. Ceci: You know, Mr. Speaker, it's a bit rich hearing this from the other side, a gang who couldn't balance the budget at $100 a barrel. Now they want average families to pay for their fiscal malpractice with reckless cuts to schools and hospitals. They want to hurt everyday Albertans. On this side of the House we're protecting what people need. [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet, please.

The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Highway 40

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The beautiful riding of West Yellowhead is a major corridor for both tourism and industry. Highway 40 is a key road for traffic between the Yellowhead highway and Grande Cache. Since I was elected, local towns and counties have repeatedly told me that highway 40 is in desperate need of upgrading. To the Minister of Transportation: when will the residents of West Yellowhead see this road upgraded?

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. He's an excellent advocate for his constituency, and I want to thank him for the question. We know that this road is critical for that area for industry, for goods, and for the accessibility to tourism. There's a lot of pressure being placed on highway 40 right now, hon. member, specifically from Grande Cache south to the Wapiti River. I can assure you that we've heard the concerns, and I have the department busy working on solutions. Thank you.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Minister.

Mr. Speaker, given that the municipality has asked Alberta Transportation to widen narrow points of highway 40, to the same minister: how is the government going to address the safety concerns of my constituents?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the hon. member needs to know that safety is a top priority for me as minister and for the Transportation department. We take those concerns very seriously, so we're currently working with the municipalities in the entire area to address the safety issues that the hon. member has raised today, and we're working towards a solution that will meet the needs of the residents to ensure they get to where they're going and arrive alive.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given how important highway 40 is to the economic development of the West Yellowhead region, when can my constituents expect improvements on the condition of highway 40?

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much for the question. You know, unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the former government left us with significant infrastructure issues to address. We're committed to investing not only for safety and for convenience but to promote economic development in this region and other parts of the province, but I can't make any commitments at this time. As the hon. member knows, there are many competing priorities that we have to sort through, but I want him to know that we are looking very closely at the issues he's raised today.

Government Policies

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, our province has struggled for almost two years under the NDP reign. In that time the Premier has told Albertans that they are our country's embarrassing cousins. She said that a hundred thousand families who are wrestling with unemployment and ballooning prices from the NDP's disaster of a carbon tax are simply Chicken Little who need to, quote, make better choices. Premier, your policies are devastating Alberta families. For a government that has shown such gross incompetence, when is the Premier going to ask herself to make better choices?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In a tough economy it's so important to ensure that our government continues to have the backs of ordinary families that are working to make their life better. We're creating jobs. We're cutting school fees. We're freezing tuition. The members opposite just want to keep jacking those things up. We're focused on hard hats. They're spending a lot of time with sewer rats.*

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, people in my riding are worried about the effect NDP policies are having on families and communities. Given that my constituents have had to cut their business hours or shut down completely and since this government's policies are also responsible for driving out billions of dollars of investment from large players like Shell, Albertans want to know: when is the NDP going to stop waging war on Alberta's business community, and when are they going to start accepting common-sense solutions to get Albertans back to work?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, I get that the member opposite is concerned about his political future and the political future of his party, but it's time that they got their head in the game. We are working every day to make life better for Alberta families. We're doing that by making sure we're securing two new pipelines, cutting small-business taxes, making sure that Albertans have construction projects to go to work at that will result in good long-term plans for the future and jobs. Instead of proposing that, they'd cut billions of dollars on the opposite side, which would be a threat to schools and hospitals, to the livelihoods that families count on. Our government is focused on doing the right thing for Alberta families.

Mr. Nixon: Insulting Albertans seems to be this NDP government's full-time job. Since they don't seem to understand that they are making a bad situation worse when it comes to the economy and since under their watch we have seen investment flee our province, I'll ask the Premier which one of her inspirational messages she thinks resonates the most with Albertans, calling those who oppose the carbon tax xenophobic or saying that if they can't afford the carbon tax, they should take the bus or walk?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, the member opposite is so out of touch. It is appalling. While he has people that he is being closely aligned with calling the fight for feminism an equivalent to cancer, those who live in glass houses decorated with hate should not be throwing stones. So I have to say: who do you want running this province, making decisions to make your life better? A government that's standing up for Alberta families, a government that's cutting school fees, a government that's capping electricity prices or the members opposite, who just want to jack everything up? I don't think so.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Services for Indigenous Peoples

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the child intervention panel continues its invaluable and, hopefully, life-saving work, Albertans continue to hear about the disparity in outcomes faced by our indigenous children. No one is disputing that this government or previous governments care deeply about all children in care; however, this painfully obvious gap in outcomes must be addressed as quickly as possible. To the Minister of Indigenous Relations: when will the indigenous children of Alberta experience the same level of care and similar outcomes as nonindigenous Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much for the question. We are obviously very concerned about the gap that has been created in this province between indigenous children and nonindigenous children by the previous governments over the last literally hundred years in this province. We've been working very hard closely with each of the bands and councils to develop plans to look at economic prosperity, to look at social changes, and to bring all of that together under the United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples. We're very proud of the fact that we are a party and a government that is committed to these people.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Rodney: Looking forward to hearing timelines.

Now, given that indigenous children are subject to particularly poor outcomes in these and other regards, as the minister knows, and given that much of the funding required to address this issue comes from the federal government, again to the minister, with great respect: what specific commitments have you secured from your federal counterpart in order to assist in rapidly closing this gap in outcomes that is experienced by indigenous youth here in the province of Alberta?

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much for the question. We, of course, do believe that the federal government has a great responsibility for the indigenous people in this province. As a result, we've had multiple meetings over the last couple of years with the federal minister and all of their departments so that we can ensure that the programs that we are putting together in this province do indeed address not just simply the services required by the indigenous community but the gap between where the services have been provided in the past by other governments and what we are able to provide now.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Rodney: Again, we're very interested in specifics.

Given that a culturally competent workforce clear across government is an integral aspect of an effective public service for all Albertans and given that the children's intervention panel along with the July 2016 Auditor General's report highlight the need for increased cultural understanding within government, again to the minister, as I've asked on a number of other occasions, please tell us: what new initiatives have you implemented to address the low level of First Nations representation amongst employees of all government departments and beyond?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. We, of course, have accepted all of the Auditor General's recommendations. We're committed to working with indigenous people. Additionally, we have worked with indigenous communities to help us establish protocol agreements in which all of the ministers in this House are meeting with indigenous communities from across northern Alberta, and soon we will have protocol agreements for the rest of Alberta. In those protocol agreements and at those tables we will have the opportunity to address specific programs required and asked for by the indigenous community. That's consultation.

*See page 235, right column, paragraph 8

The Speaker: Hon. members, we'll go on to the next statement in 30 seconds.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Edmonton-Decore Constituents' Milestones

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, it clearly is no secret just how proud I am of my riding of Edmonton-Decore. Within the past two months there have been some pretty special events that have made me even more proud to be the MLA of this riding. On January 15 Jane McIntyre celebrated her 102nd birthday. My staff helped her celebrate this momentous occasion on February 16 at St. Michael's Long Term Care. From what I heard, it was a wonderful celebration filled with love, laughter, and, from what I hear, some great country music.

On February 2, 2017, two of my constituents, Tillie and Ellie Chudyk, celebrated their 60th wedding anniversary. I had the pleasure of meeting this lovely couple for the first time at the Ukrainian Day celebration at the Ukrainian heritage village, where their family name was unveiled as part of the genealogy project there. They are here today in the gallery, and I congratulate them personally on this momentous occasion that they're celebrating.

Finally, on March 17, Carl Huculak will be celebrating his 100th birthday party at St. Michael's millennium centre. I'm extremely honoured to have been invited to his birthday celebration, and I'm truly looking forward to wishing him a very happy birthday in person.

Mr. Speaker, Edmonton-Decore truly has some amazing constituents. These celebrations and many more milestones such as these are just some of the ways that I get to highlight how incredible these people are. Thank you all for allowing me to be your MLA in this riding.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

South Sudanese Refugees

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Calgary is home to the largest diaspora of South Sudanese in Canada. I celebrated with many of my friends in that community as they recognized the independence of their new country, the youngest in the world, formed in 2011.

Unfortunately, I now see these same friends struggling, worried about their friends and families as their new country is in the midst of a devastating civil war. In a country of 10 million, two million have been displaced from their homes and 450,000 have fled the country altogether. Currently it is the second-worst refugee crisis in the world.

There is widespread sexual violence. In the UN refugee camp in Juba, the capital, 75 per cent of women there have been victims of rape. Ethnic groups are being targeted, and people are being pulled from their homes in the night and killed. There is a possibility of genocide. On top of all of this, the UN has now declared a man-made famine. With people fleeing their villages and living in the bush, they are unable to farm and grow food, and they are starving.

Two weeks ago I was honoured to be able to meet with a delegation of leaders from South Sudan that included opposition members from the previous government who have been forced to flee the country. They are travelling through Canada, speaking to politicians and community members to raise awareness about the extent of the crisis. Here in Canada all South Sudanese, from both sides of the conflict, are working together to advocate for peace in their country, calling on the federal government to support bringing refugees here to Canada and to support the UN intervention in the crisis.

I urge people to write to their MP or donate to organizations such as the Relief Organization for South Sudan, which is run by South Sudanese and is working on the ground with the UN to bring humanitarian aid such as food, health care, and education to people who need it. Mr. Speaker, most of us cannot imagine living through what is the current reality for those in South Sudan nor the anguish our fellow Albertans are feeling right now, but we can support them and use our voices to draw attention to the dire situation they are now facing.

Thank you.

Conservatism in Alberta

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, unlike the NDP members, I dared to host a town hall meeting in Calgary to consult Albertans. I was very surprised and overwhelmed to see 250 people when it was minus 20. Those Albertans showed up to voice their concerns over the NDP's policies and how we cannot have another NDP government elected in Alberta. Albertans want this accidental government, bent on implementing its risky ideological agenda, tossed out. In a survey of Albertans after the last election 90 per cent of those who voted NDP did so because they wanted a new government and only 10 per cent because they supported the NDP's platform and policies.

When a straw poll was conducted at my town hall on uniting the Wildrose and PCs, over 95 per cent of those people in attendance voted in favour of unity. One key condition for unity was keeping Wildrose principles like fiscal conservatism, liberty, recall, and free votes. One member, one vote was also supported by a clear majority, and people wanted party constitutional changes to require so for majorities. A fair majority in the room supported the conservative party of Alberta or Alberta conservative party as the preferred name for the new entity. I want to thank the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View for attending and thank the Member for Calgary-Greenway for coming in as an observer. I heard from Albertans that unity is essential to get Alberta back on track, grow the economy, and get Albertans back to work.

Mr. Speaker, political realignment is under way, and in short order I'm one hundred per cent certain that conservatives across Alberta will unite into a single provincial party . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Thank you.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the chair of the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship and in accordance with section 5(5) of the Property Rights Advocate Act I'm pleased to table five copies of the committee's report on the 2015 annual report of the Alberta Property Rights Advocate. Copies of the report are available through the committee office and online.

Thank you.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier and Minister of Health.

Bill 3 Voluntary Blood Donations Act

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to request leave to introduce Bill 3, the Voluntary Blood Donations Act.

This new act will create a barrier to the establishment of private pay-for-plasma clinics in Alberta. We must ban paying for blood donations to ensure that Albertans have access to the blood and blood products that they need when they need them. Donating blood should not be looked at as a business venture. It's a valuable public resource that saves lives every day. This legislation is the best way for Alberta to have secure and reliable access to donated blood because, Mr. Speaker, to be frank, blood is just too precious to go to the highest bidder.

I look forward to discussing and hearing feedback from my colleagues on all sides of this House with regard to this important initiative.

[Motion carried; Bill 3 read a first time]

2:50 Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two quick tablings, with your permission. First is a Gauntlet article from the University of Calgary dated March 7 entitled Wildrose on Campus Faces Heat for "Feminism is Cancer" Email with a quote from their former president saying: "They are anti-women, anti-feminist, anti-LGBTQ."

The Speaker: There's no editorial. Let's go. Keep moving.

Ms Jansen: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. I thank you for that.

A second tabling, Mr. Speaker. I have provided five copies here, of course. This is from the account of Conservative Maxime Bernier: a photo of the MLA for Strathmore-Brooks choosing the red pill, also known as an antifeminist symbol, in his support of Mr. Bernier.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am tabling five copies of a report done by the local RCMP detachment for Cold Lake. It is of deep concern that we have rising crime that is happening within Cold Lake, and we'd like to see something done within all of rural Alberta by this Minister of Justice.

The Speaker: The minister of the environment.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite number of copies of a letter written by the Alberta Beef Producers. The letter states that they "are pleased that the Alberta Government has recognized the value of cattle grazing for managing and enhancing the health of ecosystems as outlined in the Castle Park Draft Management Plan" and indicates that they are pleased that the government of Alberta "is committed to working with beef producers to develop a sustainable and long term livestock grazing plan to complement the park's conservation objectives."

The Speaker: Thank you.

Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to briefly table two documents, both articles I wrote on the Springbank dam and flood mitigation. The first is entitled Flood Mitigation an Opportunity for NDP to Show Leadership, in which I urged the government to select the Springbank project, which they did, and I'm pleased that they did so. The second is entitled We Should Build a Dam in Springbank as Quickly as Possible, in which I lay out the case why two different governments selected that project over McLean Creek and other options.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On your behalf I'd like to table five copies of the Children's Guide to the City – Medicine Hat. This unique guide provides a new perspective of the city of Medicine Hat through the original art and words of children who range in age from three to six years old.

The Speaker: Hon. members, there was a point of order, but I've been advised that the Opposition House Leader has withdrawn that point of order.

Orders of the Day

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 201

Justice System Accountability Act

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, thank you so much. It's an absolute honour to rise today and to move my very first bill as a private member in Alberta and to actually have an opportunity to speak on it today, which I will take some time with.

It's no secret, Mr. Speaker, as you've heard from the Wildrose members on this side, that crime is rising across Alberta, and our government simply has not been able to keep up. In 2015 Alberta saw an actual 18 per cent increase. Eighteen per cent. That is just in police-reported crime according to Statistics Canada. As you know, many crimes go unreported, so that would suggest that there has been a tremendous increase in crime. That includes nearly a 12 per cent increase in violent crimes. That's what's so concerning as well.

Every part of Alberta is feeling the impact, including rural Alberta and urban Alberta. Mr. Speaker, I've heard many, many stories over the last 18 months to two years about urban horror stories, in particular in relation to fentanyl abuse and selling drugs, and also about rural crimes, in particular property crimes. Every part of Alberta is feeling the impact, and I think we need to be very cognizant of that. In fact, I've heard in Calgary that they've seen nearly a 30 per cent increase in crime itself. So there's certainly no particular community or part of Alberta that does not see the full impact.

There's no question that there's a growing number of families that are concerned about the state of the justice system, and many already knew that trials were taking too long. But I did want to talk just a little bit because I did hear in question period one particular minister say that all we could do was come up with reports, that what we wanted to do instead of solving the issue was to report on the issue and to do studies on the issue. Well, Mr. Speaker, this is about keeping track of information that they already keep track of for the most part.

You know, in our court system we have judges, we have clerks, we have Crown prosecutors, and of course we have defence counsel. Well, Mr. Speaker, when you get into the court system itself, you have a clerk that's there, and they keep track of everything. They keep track of how many adjournments they have, how many attendances for trial, how many settings for trial, how many prelim requests there are, and many other things.

In fact, if you open up Bill 201, in particular 2(2)(c), it talks about the total number of adjournments requested, including the number requested

- (i) by the Crown,
- (ii) by the defence,
- (iii) by the court,
- (iv) due to a disclosure issue,
- (v) due to a witness issue,
- (vi) due to a change in counsel, and
- (vii) due to the absence of the accused.

I think it's very important to report things and to be transparent about things. In particular, as I understand it from talking to Crown prosecutors, for the most part we are already keeping track of all these things in court.

What we aren't keeping track of, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that Albertans know what actually is taking place. I believe, based upon my time in the court system in Alberta for 10 years, that most Albertans would be disgusted to find out that often the accused receive adjournment after adjournment and that trials are sometimes set down three or four years from when the case actually happened, when the complaint actually took place.

What we're seeking is not a further study, Mr. Speaker. In fact, it's just the opposite. We're asking for this government to report on what's already given and kept track of by the court clerk and by the Crown prosecutors office. Let's find out when the original complaint was laid. Let's find out when the investigation was done by the RCMP. Did it take a month, or did it take a year? Then let's find out when the first appearance in court was, when the second appearance in court was. Why was an adjournment granted?

Mr. Speaker, much like we did back in the '90s with civil matters, divorce matters, family law, when we found out what was happening, we were able to make changes. We knew in that particular case that judges were not following a guideline set out in the federal guidelines for support payments, so the Parliament in their wisdom came up with a situation where if a judge went off those federal support guidelines, they'd have to write a judgment. They'd have to do a judgment as to why they didn't follow that.

What we're seeking in this case, Mr. Speaker, by this little bill, that's not very long, is that we are simply asking for this government to report on what's happening in our court system. Why is it taking so long for justice to happen? Why are 200 court cases being thrown out? Why are cases where people that have been accused of a crime being thrown out? Why are dozens of impaired charges being thrown out, people that actually get behind a wheel and continue to drive while intoxicated and kill people and cause serious damage to families? Why are they being thrown out? Why are serious sexual assaults or murders being thrown out? Well, I'll tell you why. It's because this government is not putting enough resources in place. I believe that this particular bill, a five-page bill, will track and report to Albertans why this government is not getting the job done.

We know, Mr. Speaker, particularly, that we are expensive here in Alberta for our court system. In fact, we're much more expensive than British Columbia. I think we're about 15 per cent more expensive for our justice system than British Columbia is. Now, they have much better tracking systems than we do. In fact, they actually have a computer system where you can log on and you can look and see where the court system is. Now, not everything is as detailed as I'm asking for but much the same: find out what's happening with court cases and what's happening to particular courts in the system. How long they're taking, how effective they are: that's what we're asking here.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I said that Alberta's was 15 per cent more expensive than B.C.'s justice system, but when you account and adjust for population, because their population is larger, we're actually 30 per cent more expensive. Our justice system here, which delivers far worse results than B.C.'s, is 30 per cent more expensive. This is an epidemic. It's not just our justice system, but it's also our health system. It's not throwing money that works; it's finding solutions.

This particular bill, Bill 201, is just asking for reporting to the people of Alberta so that we will know whether we need to throw more money at a particular place, or maybe it's a system, Mr. Speaker. I referred earlier to the guidelines and how judges would have to do a written judgment if they would go off the federal guidelines for support payments. Well, that's something that doesn't cost any money. It doesn't mean that you throw money at a system that doesn't work. It means you find a solution.

What I'm suggesting is if it's taking too long to do investigations, which I don't believe is the case except in very complicated matters, or if, in fact, it's taking too long to make sure the accused gets into court the first time or whether it's the adjournment request, which I believe is a large part of the problem, or, Mr. Speaker, if we don't get proper disclosure because we don't have the resources.

People don't understand this in Alberta, but defence lawyers maybe have 20 or 30 cases, Mr. Speaker, that are current. Twenty or 30 criminal cases, for the most part, would be a fairly good law practice, and they, of course, would have new ones come as old ones go.

I remember my time practising in the '90s, Mr. Speaker, here in Alberta, and I saw that the Crown counsel in Fort McMurray, for instance, actually had literally more than a hundred cases. When the Crown prosecutor has more than a hundred cases and defence counsel has significantly fewer than that, they are able to concentrate and put more effort into it and find more loopholes and more situations to represent the accused.

What we need to do is make sure that our Crown prosecutors have every single tool that they can possibly have, including Bill 201, Mr. Speaker, to find out why our court system is taking so long from point to point to point, to remove those barriers so that Albertans can make sure they have confidence in the justice system.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would say to you that we need to also focus on not just Albertans at large to make sure that they feel confident in the justice system, whether somebody breaks into their home or steals their quad off their farm or if there's a violent attack in one of our urban centres. They need to know that when they make the complaint to the police, something is going to be carried through, that the police officer is going to charge that person, that then that person is going to go to court and that that person, when they get into the court system, is going to be held to account and receive due process but that if they are found guilty, they are going to do serious time for a serious crime. That's necessary.

But more important, I think, than making sure the accused actually gets justice – and I do think that's very important, especially, Mr. Speaker, because during the time that I practised, I saw that repeat offenders were the biggest problem we had in our court system. Not just people with no prior records that go into the court system and one-offs; it's the people that have one or two or three pages of prosecutor information sheets or records. Those people, sir, need to be focused on, and I do believe that Bill 201 will give us the tool necessary to be able to see that repeat offenders, people with serious records, are clogging up our court system.

But, Mr. Speaker, it's about victims, and for too long the victims in Canada, in particular in Alberta, have been ignored and have been ignored by this government and previous governments. Victims have to wait and wait to get the ordeal done before they can move on, both mentally and physically sometimes. When you're waiting two or three or four years for a trial to come forward, especially a trial that deals with a violent situation, it just revictimizes the victim time and time again.

When they have to come in for a trial and they come in and they're ready to testify, they don't just come to trial and say: oh, another day. They come to trial emotionally upset. They have to challenge themselves to go to trial. Then when the accused comes in and says, "I'm sorry, but I want an adjournment" and the reason is flimsy, all they're doing is revictimizing the victim, and I think we need to stop that. That's why the victims need to have certainty before they testify and to not be drawn back into court time and time again and especially not drawn back into court so they can see the charges dismissed, as this government has allowed to happen in over 200 cases in just the last four months in Alberta.

When victims see their attacker walk away without even getting a day in court, they lose faith in the justice system. They lose faith in their government. They recognize: why would they ever report an incident dealing with a crime that was committed against them if once it gets into the system, once they've gone through all the different processes to get it there, Mr. Speaker, the Crown prosecutor and the judge and the system allow that accused to walk away?

I'm not blaming the Crown prosecutors, Mr. Speaker, because I know they're overworked. I'm blaming the government because they're not giving them the resources necessary, and, yes, I'm blaming the previous government because they didn't set it up properly so that it was efficient. That's how we got to a place where we're 30 per cent more expensive than British Columbia's justice system.

So it's not about throwing money, Mr. Speaker. I do appreciate the 33 new Crown prosecutors that this government just appointed after they received some pressure from the Wildrose. I appreciate that. I think that's important. Every time we give them pressure, they seem to react, and I think that's a good thing because that's the way this government works.

But what happens when victims hear this and read this in the newspaper? Why would they, then, go and report a crime? Mr. Speaker, after that accused is let go, it's very possible that that victim may see that person on the street, or if that accused is a relative or somebody that that person knows and they're let off scot-free, what happens with that situation? I think it brings disrepute into our justice system. I think it threatens the very foundation, the cornerstone of our society. It's important that when Albertans go to a police officer, they know that something is going to happen, that they're going to be kept safe, that they're not going to be revictimized.

Police do also get frustrated, and I know they do. I had an opportunity to work with many good police officers, many RCMP members throughout the years, great individuals that work extremely hard and are dedicated. But I've also seen these police officers get very discouraged because after they put hours and hours into a case, they see the accused get off scot-free. Mr. Speaker, these police officers work far beyond their normal hours to make sure that they do the best job possible to have the accused be held to account. When this happens, I think it discourages them. I have heard from many police officers about this particular situation in the past. This is not new, but it has become an epidemic just in the last few months here in Alberta.

There are true visions by criminals on how to slow down the system. When we slow down the system, Mr. Speaker, what happens is that people's memories become fuzzy. They don't recognize and don't remember quite as well in two years as they do today. That's why I believe that the faster we give justice to victims and the faster we give justice to the accused, the better the system will be, and ultimately Albertans will feel that their government has done a better job.

What I'm asking for is not additional studies. I heard that in question period. Additional studies are not what we're asking for, Mr. Speaker. What we're asking for is for this government to be transparent to Albertans about what's going on, about why the accused are walking away and why our justice system is so much more expensive than other justice systems across the country, where those provinces are under the same constitutional obligations that Alberta is.

Now, it is not unusual, Mr. Speaker, for victims to wait years and years for trials, but the only thing more unacceptable than a delay in a trial or an extensive period of time to have a trial – two or three or four years – is not to have that trial at all. I do understand the rights of the criminals, of the accused, but I believe that the victims' rights should far outweigh the rights of the accused in this case.

The failure of our court system to properly respond to the Supreme Court case in the Jordan situation is, as I said, allowing criminals to walk scot-free on our streets. This includes those accused of violent crimes, and that is the most disturbing thing because often I have found, through my experience, that the people that commit violent crimes have no hindrance to committing another one. The people I saw with big rap sheets and long records are usually repeat offenders, and those repeat offenders continue to get away with crimes. Why would they not if our system, once they get into it, doesn't even hold them accountable?

Now, we have pushed for more judges, Mr. Speaker. We have pushed for more federal appointments for Queen's Bench judges and for more provincial appointments, but it needs to be done more quickly.

Just in summary, I want to say this. I've taken 15 minutes, and I don't want to take any more time. Mr. Speaker, we have actually had the Privacy Commissioner recently state that our freedom of information system, the Justice freedom of information system, is the worst offender in Alberta, that it's one of the worst across the country, and that's not acceptable. That's why I think this justice accountability act would be so important. When we put in a request for freedom of information, we can't even get it from the Justice department, and if we do, it's months and months if not years away.

We need to be accountable to Albertans. They pay us, they hired us, and they deserve a justice system that keeps them safe and gives them confidence in our government. That's why I'm moving Bill 201, Mr. Speaker, and I would ask all members to support me in moving this.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We are here today to discuss what is ultimately an incredibly critical issue. The justice system balances the fundamental safety of all Albertans and the fundamental rights of Albertans. Nothing could possibly be more important. Our government is committed to ensuring that it works well.

Mr. Speaker, when I took office, I came into a system with incredible backlogs and delays. Much study and much academic writing and much ink has been spilled over this issue and what the appropriate solutions to it are. I began working on this issue immediately upon taking office, trying to figure out where the pressure points are, what needed more funding, what we needed to do to move this issue forward.

We took some initial steps. Almost immediately we launched a bail review to look into our system, to determine how it was working. That system is fundamental to the operation of the entire system of justice, and we've taken steps already to move on that particular bail review, Mr. Speaker. We also took steps to ensure that front-line police officers could spend more time on the streets and less time doing paperwork, to ensure that warrants weren't issued for things like C-Train tickets. That saves work in terms of both police and court officers.

Then the Jordan decision came down, Mr. Speaker. It came from the Supreme Court, and we are constitutionally required to follow it. It imposed time frames with no warning whatsoever. We had to respond incredibly quickly, and we did. In October I went out and I announced our initial response, which was to begin triaging matters, and the reason that that is so incredibly critical is to ensure that the courts aren't picking for us. It's to ensure that we have the opportunity to make sure that the most serious and most violent cases, those that are in the public interest, those for which we have the necessary evidence, are those which are being pursued. It sets direction for our Crown prosecutors to ensure that that is the case, and it is absolutely critical that we lead on this issue, that we take the time to make those decisions in a strategic and intelligent way to defend the rights and safety of all Albertans rather than letting the court pick matters at random.

Mr. Speaker, we took those steps immediately, and the Official Opposition came out and proposed cuts to the justice system. Then they came out with this bill and said that this was not a resource issue. Then the government stepped forward to put more resources in because we knew that, in fact, it was a resource issue. Once we had done that, the Official Opposition turned around and said that we hadn't done it fast enough even though they were calling for the opposite. The member opposite vacillated in his speech so many times between whether it cost too much money for the justice system or not enough that, frankly, I'm a little dizzy.

In terms of the federal justice appointment issue the member opposite actually sat on the federal justice commission . . .

Mr. Jean: Committee. Justice committee.

Ms Ganley: Committee.

In that time, when he had the opportunity to advocate for more judges for Alberta, to appoint more judges for Alberta, he said nothing. Nothing, Mr. Speaker.

This government has stepped forward. We've created nine additional positions on the Court of Queen's Bench and one on the Court of Appeal to ensure that we are able to get the necessary resources. We are working with our federal counterparts to achieve things that the former government was never capable of.

Mr. Speaker, our system is obviously facing considerable challenges. There is no question about that. That's why we're investing in so many different front-line things, including policing, including the courts, including legal aid, and including the Crown prosecution service. We, unlike the Official Opposition, have spoken to Crown prosecutors, to defence lawyers, to the courts, to court clerks. Our largest concern with this bill is that resources which absolutely need to flow to the front lines would instead be focused on collecting statistics, statistics which would require significant additional investment, in terms of those front-line resources that we think belong in courtrooms, in order to collect. We need to avoid turning our front-line Crown prosecutors into statisticians unless it's the case that the information collected would be useful.

We are absolutely in favour of evidence-based solutions. We are absolutely in favour of looking at what statistics the justice system keeps. In fact, we've been looking at this problem for months. I realize that the Official Opposition has only realized recently that we're having a problem with the justice system, but we have been taking steps and making investments since we took office.

The member, when he introduced this bill, noted that it was going to take a period of time to see where we ended up on matrices and what's taking place before we should invest. Fundamentally, we simply disagree. That's why our government stepped up and announced that we're hiring 50 new prosecutors and 30 court administration staff. Mr. Speaker, we've been working with the judiciary, with the Crown prosecution service, and with defence lawyers to ensure that we have the right resources in place.

Mr. Speaker, in addition to vacillating back and forth on whether this is a resource issue or not, the member opposite also cites B.C.'s court system. He seems to love their system and what it is they're doing. In B.C. they have a rather different impaired-driving model than we have here. All across the country, in most parts except in B.C., impaired driving tends to be prosecuted by way of a criminal prosecution. That's true here in Alberta. In B.C. they have instead administrative sanctions. Here in Alberta we have both. We have the criminal prosecution and the administrative sanctions. So while the member is simultaneously saying that we should be more like B.C. and we should be less like B.C., it's a little bit confusing. He's suggesting, I can only imagine, that we should move to B.C.'s model of impaired driving, which doesn't involve a criminal prosecution, while simultaneously complaining that we've only used administrative sanctions. It's just dizzying.

We're well aware, Mr. Speaker, that the system, which has been underresourced for years, requires some changes. That's why we've taken, as I've noted, so many different actions to ensure that we're not wasting time on things that are not within the court's purview, like C-Train tickets, to ensure that front-line police officers are able to spend more time on the front lines and less time back at the office doing paperwork, to ensure that we have the right people running our bail system, and now to ensure that we are providing adequate funding not only to legal aid but to the Crown prosecution service and to all of the courts. We will continue to move forward to ensure that that is the case.

Now, the member opposite certainly cites B.C.'s data portal. It's a little bit different than what he's proposing here today. We will look at it absolutely with interest, Mr. Speaker. We're interested in gathering data. What we aren't interested in gathering is data that our stakeholders, when we canvassed them about this bill, have indicated will just not be very useful in terms of assessing what's going forward. We have had conversations with all system members, and many of them pointed out not only that this would take resources, much-needed resources, from the front lines in order to gather these statistics but that the contents of the bill are not even where we need to focus in terms of moving forward. We're happy to keep statistics; we'd just like them to be meaningful statistics.

They stressed their significant concerns over the lack of consultation on the bill and the lack of asking them, those front-line system participants like Crown prosecutors, like court clerks, what it was that was necessary and what it was that was already kept, Mr. Speaker. The member opposite frequently cites that we have some great database somewhere where 100 per cent of these things are kept, but it's simply not true. The estimates on keeping those statistics are quite high.

Mr. Speaker, when a case comes into court, it's the case of an individual victim, the case of an individual accused person. It is one individual case. Certainly, the case file is noted in terms of what's happening with that particular case, but we don't look at those as an overall view. The reason for that is that there are certain dangers in that. There are certainly dangers in conflating incredibly high-complexity cases like murders with low-complexity cases.

At the end of the day, Mr. Speaker, we have a clear plan, and we're moving forward with it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I'd like to commend the member for bringing this bill forward. You know, one thing I've learned is that knowledge, of course, is power. When we're talking about making informed decisions and we can bring data, whether it be compiled through police services or through Crown prosecutors, in order to improve the system, I think that is something that we as a society should be doing and, certainly, the justice system as well.

You know, it's important any time we are making decisions, especially as a House, that we consider all of the stakeholders. Certainly, something that has come to light most recently, over the last several weeks, has to do with victims, victims of crime and victims who are being revictimized. I can see that when we bring information as to decisions that were made by the Crown prosecutors or by the police officers that can be compiled, where data can be extrapolated in order to improve the system, to ensure that victims are being taken care of, to ensure, of course, to a certain degree that offenders are assured of their rights, that is something that, of course, is important as well.

You know, I have seen through practice in the police services that sometimes unintentional things happen. Sometimes there are errors in law done by sections of police services, sometimes done by whole police departments. That is why, of course, we have the trials, to ensure that that officer has been compliant with the Charter of Rights, compliant with the Criminal Code. It is the Criminal Code of Canada, not the criminal code of Alberta.

We also have to make sure that those victims, again, are assured that they have rights. It is important that everyone knows that victims do have rights. You know, the hon. member there touched on drunk drivers. There was a time when, I certainly believe, society did not really understand the magnitude of the danger that drunk drivers posed to society. What I mean by that is that at any given time any one of our loved ones could be at risk. We have to really think about that. I have been in those situations where we've arrested or I have specifically arrested somebody who was an impaired driver. I've arrested somebody that blew 400 milligram per cent. I think that was four or five times the legal limit. They were barely able to even function, yet that person was behind the wheel of an automobile. As a former certified breath technician for the province of Alberta I can tell you that drunk drivers pose a significant risk to society.

When we understand why cases may be thrown out, why they may be stayed, why there may have been an error, a judgment call, whatever the case may be, by the Crown or by the police officer, I think it is important as a justice system that we know so that we can learn, so that we can give the necessary direction and advice to ensure that mistakes do not continue to happen.

I know the hon. member also mentioned in regard to police confidence in officers that he had dealt with personally in the RCMP. I can tell you that maintaining morale, maintaining confidence by front-line services is vitally, vitally important. Nothing is more discouraging for an officer than when they put in time and effort and assist the victim from the initial complaint all the way up until the trial and then, you know, for a reason sometimes unbeknownst to the officer, that file is thrown out or stayed. Then the police officer – the police officer – is the one that has to go and explain why that occurred to that poor victim of crime.

Now, I specifically dealt with a case where a young woman was a victim of domestic violence, sexual assault. We were able to work with her with the domestic conflict unit to give her the courage to testify against that offender. She was willing to do it. She got up there, and she said: I'm going to do it; I'm going to do it because it's the right thing to do. And that case was thrown out. So then the primary investigator went to the Crown and said: "Why? Why? Why? We put in all this effort, all this work. This woman was truly a victim of crime." The prosecutor said: "Well, in the end, it's his word against hers." It was that police officer that had to go back to that victim and say: I'm sorry; you're not going to receive any justice on this file.

So when we take data from a case like that, when we take data from successful cases, similar cases, sometimes we can extrapolate patterns, and in finding those patterns, we can use data, as outlined here in this Bill 201, that can help us in the future. I'm certainly surprised that I'm not seeing a government jumping at wanting to accept a bill like this. It's very simple; it's only a few pages. As I said, knowledge is power. If we can take that information from a bill like this in order to help the prosecutorial process, in order to help the police officers, why would we not do this?

I'm sure, you know, in brief conversations with the hon. member, the Leader of the Opposition, that they did the necessary work to ensure that this wasn't just thrown together, that stakeholders were consulted, that the data is already there. We just need to centralize it. It's like anything. In order to have a successful operation, we must have a central point of command, a central point where the data is taken, disseminated, and then decisions can be made. This is the government. This is the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General. If information like this is going to come from anywhere, it's going to come from that department.

You know, I just want to say that I do support the hon. member in his bill that he's bringing forward, and I certainly encourage all members of this House to support this bill. I think it can only help the system, and I think that it could help victims of crime to ensure that victims are not revictimized in the system.

Thank you very much.

3:30

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do agree that the administration of justice is a matter of provincial jurisdiction. I do agree that those victimized by criminal activity deserve a timely resolution through the justice system. I do agree that statistics are a tool used to gain a snapshot of a moment in time within the justice system. I also agree that in this country the justice system does operate on a principle of presumed innocence.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

Having said that, I rise to speak against this bill because I must. My perspective and my arguments come from working for over 30 years in the correctional system. My perspective is based on a correctional model dealing with exactly that, a model which assesses behaviour based on criminal involvement and everything surrounding it.

This perspective was solidified during several conversations I had with a former Conservative cabinet minister. During my tenure as regional executive vice-president of the Public Service Alliance of Canada in the national capital region, between 2008 and '11, I met with a former cabinet minister about several issues concerning public service workers. The former cabinet minister knew I came from the corrections field and always commented about that when we spoke. At the time the federal Conservative government had brought in justice legislation that didn't actually protect the public. I asked the former cabinet minister why this legislation was put forward because it would not make the public safer – I'll speak further about this a little later if I have time – it would cost billions of dollars more, and it would put staff and inmates alike at increased risk during incarceration. He laughed at me. He said that it didn't matter what the risk or the cost was as it was the perception of Conservative supporters that mattered. If they thought the government was doing something to tackle crime, they would continue to vote for them. It didn't matter whether they did it or not.

When I look at this bill, I see a similar perception being presented as was done by the federal Conservatives. They will say that they are doing something to protect the public by doing a study, which seems to be a process to delay action. I believe this bill is about creating busywork, with the illusion of change and protection. Adding the need to keep track of multiple statistics for police, court workers, and the prosecutors office is what one might consider adding busywork to an already overloaded workforce. It will take away from the work all of these people need to do to actually protect you. Justice system officials are already looking at it and keeping statistics for the issues that have an impact within the system. The fact is that if the previous government had hired more staff as they were needed, on an ongoing basis, we would not be in this huge backlog position.

Is the opposition, who is proposing this bill, speaking out to spend money on the public service by hiring many more employees to monitor statistics? Where will that money come from? In this bill they have not proposed how to pay for this increased workload, that will do nothing to protect the public or to move things through the court system in a more efficient manner, nor have they identified the cost of completing the statistics request identified in the bill.

The Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin, who introduced this bill, noted that the system required more of a legislative fix overall than a money fix. I would have to respond by saying that perhaps he is out to lunch within his cognitive thought processes as he does not understand in any way how the justice system works as a total entity. Perhaps he should spend some time within the system to understand the complexities of such a system. Certainly, legislation can and does play a role to direct the system for protection of the public and to do it in a way that actually reduces recidivism and crime. Of course, the beginning of any discourse is about treating people with respect, both victims and those charged with the offences.

Having come from working in the federal correctional system, I know that every cent spent on front-line services provides better protection to the public and reduces the cost to the system in the long run. I also know that providing sufficient resources to families – food, housing, education, health care, and the availability of prosocial activities for all kids – goes hand in hand to reduce the involvement of kids, young adults, and adults in criminal activity.

Another step in the process, which would be thwarted by this bill by tying up police time with a focus on keeping statistics – this would be taking away from time the police need to do the community relationship building that is essential to knowing what's going on in the community, having conduits within the community which allow the police to be proactive in stopping crime from taking place, having the time to liaise with other groups to monitor volatile situations, having the time to build trust within the community. Once anybody has committed a crime, identifying the reasons why they committed their offences, utilizing complete assessments, addressing those reasons within programming, treatment, and support while transitioning back into a community all reduce the likelihood of an offender returning to criminal activity.

I am disappointed that I cannot support this bill. I am disappointed that the opportunity to put forward a bill that could provide positive and well-thought-out ideas is not in this document.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and speak to Bill 201, from my hon. colleague the Leader of the Official Opposition. I think that before I really get into the meat of the matter, I'll just address a few of the comments that have been made here already this afternoon by the government and some wild, wild accusations made by the Member for Lethbridge-East about the intentions of the bill or what the Leader of the Opposition was intending to do. Certainly, she implied that he was efforting to make it look like he was doing something but, really, was doing nothing. You know, I certainly take offence to such comments. I'm not sure that the comments are helpful. They certainly don't add to the debate, and I also don't think that they are true.

You know, I've spoken in this House on numerous occasions and my colleague from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre has spoken on numerous occasions about some of the challenges that we see inside the Justice department. You'll know, Madam Speaker, that the Justice department has been described by Canadian privacy professionals and experts as a rogue department.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Just last week I rose in the House to speak about the access to information that's required in order to hold this government to account. One of the things that the Official Opposition takes seriously is the information that is made available to Albertans because, as my colleague from Calgary-West mentioned, this knowledge and information can provide power. It can provide the ability to proceed. And this information that my colleague is asking for is available. We've seen at every turn that the current government has a total lack of respect for access to information. What this bill does is that it ensures that Albertans can have the information that is very important to them.

Access to justice is a fundamental of our society, and right now no matter what the reasons are, whether it's the old guys or the new guys, whatever the case may be, we've seen a significant departure from what Albertans expect when it comes to access to justice. Two hundred cases will be stayed, and that's not just cases like not paying a C-Train ticket, as the Minister of Justice would have you believe, but charges like impaired driving, charges like murder. Serious and violent offences are being stayed because the system is broken.

Now, in conversations that I've had with my colleague the Leader of the Opposition, I know that he is very aware that Bill 201 is not going to solve every problem inside the justice system. Bill 201 is a building block to ensure that we don't wind up in this situation in the future. It's quite possible that information like this, had it been readily available, would have provided the opportunity for governments to make the right decision in advance of having to make a decision. We've seen this government not act when they ought to until members of the public, members of the opposition raise the alarm bells just like James Pickard of the Alberta Crown Attorneys' Association has. It's taking members of the public to raise the alarm about something that the government should have been very aware of. A piece of legislation like Bill 201 will provide that fundamental building block so that we can ensure we have the information to remain ahead of providing access to justice for Albertans.

I know that something I've heard in the constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills on a very regular basis is that Albertans are frustrated at the rise of crime and that, subsequently, now they are coming to understand that all over the province, whether you're rural, urban, north, south, east, or west, there has been this significant concern because we're seeing these charges stayed.

The information that Bill 201 provides will allow us to act on solutions. This is very much part of the solution because it's not going to require significant amounts of resources. Much of the data is readily available. This is information that would be FOIPable, but we all know the lack of success that this government has had when it comes to running a FOIP system. It seems that they can't run any system. They're having a hard time running the FOIP system. The Premier's office: one of the worst offenders. The Justice department has been described as a rogue department. They're having a hard time running the court system, the health system. And there's one common denominator in this whole process, Madam Speaker, and that's the government.

Now, listen; the government was left a mess by the previous government, but they've been two years at the rudder, and things are getting significantly worse. In every area of the justice system people are frustrated. The police are frustrated. Prosecutors are frustrated. Albertans are frustrated. Yet all the government wants to do is point the finger at the previous government and say: don't worry; we've hired 34 new prosecutors. For the record we're happy about that, but we need to do more. We can't just say that we're cleaning up the court system by minimizing the number of C-Train tickets that are clogging it up and saying that we've got 34 new prosecutors, yet there are hundreds of criminals who have had their cases stayed and hundreds of victims who will never see justice.

Bill 201 provides one small piece in making the system better, and the government is going to posture by saying that the opposition only wants to look like they're doing something. They're going to posture on the three or four items that they have delivered up to this point. This, Madam Speaker, is not helpful for Albertans. What Albertans want is a government that takes responsibility for the situation that we are in, and that's not what they're getting from this government.

Alberta prosecutors are – and I quote – at a breaking point. They're crying out for the government to do more. I know that my colleague has had a good opportunity to speak with a number of prosecutors that have said that this information not only would be helpful, but it would be useful, that it would shine light in areas that are important, that it would provide the information to best be able to move forward. Yet all we get from the government is: don't worry; we're already doing everything we can. Nothing could be further from the truth, and, Madam Speaker, I am more than a little disappointed that this government has chosen to do that.

If Bill 201, the Justice System Accountability Act, is passed, it would track the length of investigations and trials; sources of adjournment; the number of charges withdrawn, reduced, or stayed; and it would require the Justice minister to do that in an annual report. As such, all of us would be in a much better place to be able to govern, in a much better place to ensure access to justice, and in a much better place to ensure that our justice system remains as open and transparent as possible.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to get up to speak to this particular private member's bill, put forward by the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin. You know, I think we can all agree in this House that every Albertan deserves to feel safe in their home and in their streets and in their community. Protecting Albertans' safety and providing a fair, efficient justice system is one of the first duties of government, and it's one that we take very seriously.

Recently, actually, while coming up here to Edmonton, I had my vehicle broken into, so when the minister talks about people wanting justice, I want justice, too. When we have instances like the one I personally experienced, with a vehicle broken into and some items stolen out of it, we want justice. However, I know that our government is taking the steps as well to help prevent the root causes of crime, which is something I haven't heard come up in the debate so far. I hear things that we're talking about, things like ATVs being stolen or, in my case, vehicles being broken into. There's a lot of research that would suggest that comes from those most vulnerable members of our society not being taken care of, those with addiction, those with mental health issues, those struggling with homelessness. The list goes on. It's important that we take care of those citizens, and our government has been taking action on that.

Now, when it comes to resources, we've heard a lot of chatter about that, that this particular bill is about finding solutions and that we don't need a legislative fix. Well, one thing I'm proud that our government has been doing is that we are in fact putting resources forward to help solve this problem, that I believe the hon. member's bill is trying to solve, which relates to perhaps that he feels that justice is taking an abnormal amount of time for victims to have their cases go through the court system. That's why our government has taken action. We are hiring 50 Crown prosecutors as well as 30 court clerks and staff. As well, since being elected, we've increased legal aid funding by more than 20 per cent.

Also, there are some legislative fixes that we've done. Those legislative fixes – for instance, the warrant reduction initiative, which the hon. Minister of Justice talked about earlier, ensures that police officers can get back to what they do best, which is being out in our community patrolling and following up on crimes that are reported by citizens and stopping criminals, instead of spending time on jailing people for not paying transit tickets, which does hold up the justice system. And while it's not a legislative fix per se, we have also taken over bail hearings and are hiring new Crowns to do just that. This will free up, again, police officers to go back out on the streets, and this is particularly valuable in the rural areas of our province.

I think we're also open to the idea of exploring the B.C. model of open data, because at the heart of this bill it's about statistics. But I wonder how we would provide that data without fully understanding how much it would cost and how many Crown prosecutors or clerks or other staff members of our justice system it would take to do that and would potentially harm the front-line resources that we need to continue to have our justice system move forward and prosecute and have individuals go through the system with due process.

Now, I heard the hon. member mention in his opening speech for this bill that he wants to make things faster, by his own admission, and I think he and I can share a common agreement with that. He often spoke of a reason for things being held up, that, you know, lawyers or defence lawyers were perhaps saying “oh, we need an adjournment” for flimsy reasons. I think his opinion on that is perhaps why there’s a big section in his bill in regard to the stats related to that. Now, I’m not a lawyer, Madam Speaker, but it sounds a little bit like, perhaps, with the stats he might want to, you know, meddle in the arm’s lengthness of our court system.

In his bill he talks about the adjournments requested by the Crown. Well, I could perhaps think of a reason where that might be a good idea in order to further serve justice. If we wanted to move faster, well, that would require more resources, Madam Speaker. If it was by the defence, in order for us to have due process, there perhaps could be very legitimate reasons for doing that. Stats where an adjournment was required by the court or due to a disclosure issue: I believe that if there was an adjournment due to a disclosure issue, that’s important to ensure fair justice. But if there was a disclosure issue, that would perhaps be because there’s a lack of resources, which would of course cost money, or due to a witness issue – I could see reasons why that might happen as well as due to the absence of an accused or a change in counsel. I mean, if it’s due to an absence of the accused, I’m not sure how the member would suggest that we solve that, but I would imagine that a solution would be to have more resources out there in order to compel accused individuals to show up in court, which, again, requires more resources.

I find that interesting because our government has spent a lot of time putting more resources into various services all over government that deal with the root causes of crime as well as putting resources into our justice system, which I mentioned at length earlier. Now, the hon. member stands up pretty much every day in this Legislature and talks to our Premier about how he would like fewer resources, Madam Speaker. So whether it’s a spend day or a cut day, I feel like there’s a lack of consistency here where this bill, as well-intentioned – I believe stats are good. I think it’s been mentioned that I believe our government would be interested in perhaps looking at the B.C. model, but we have to make sure that we’re not taking away from those front-line services.

At the end of the day, we are doing that. We are putting the resources in place whereas the opposition only wants to study and say that the solution is cutting, cutting, cutting until it’s not.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to talk about Bill 201, a bill that our leader has brought forward after much consultation with Albertans while travelling the province. You know, the people of my riding and other communities have been witnessing an increasingly steady rise in crime over the last few years, and we know that these crimes have increased partly due to the economic downturn, a question the hon. member on the other side was asking. This bill is just one of the many necessary adjustments we need to implement in order to start to fight crime and begin the work of making our communities safe again.

We’re not just blowing smoke. Not only have the citizens in our riding been confirming this increase and are outraged by it – and, you know, they’re feeling violated by it – but also according to a recent crime severity index from Stats Canada there was an 18 per cent increase in reported crimes in 2015 and a 12 per cent increase in violent crimes. That’s outstanding. Currently Alberta has the third-highest crime severity index rating in all the Canadian provinces. Grande Prairie was recently rated as one of the most dangerous cities in Canada by Stats Canada, with both Red Deer and Edmonton well above the national average. Crime is increasing right across the province, and the constituents of Battle River-Wainwright are not the only ones demanding solutions; all Albertans are.

Right here in our province accused criminals are walking free, and there’s little or no recourse for Albertans within our justice system. More needs to happen than just pouring money into the system. We need to change the system. We need more accountability.

This is staggering news. How did we get there? It’s not from a lack of overall spending. We spend about 15 per cent more than our neighbours in B.C. on Justice and Solicitor General, 30 per cent when you factor in the population difference. Either the resources are in the wrong place or the system is broken. Or both.

Last Tuesday I stood up in the Legislature to give a member’s statement on the current crime situation in my riding. You know, citizens are outraged. They’re worried about their safety and are beginning to worry that they will have to take matters into their own hands. They are demanding change. Crime is a government matter, not one that citizens need to worry about. The last thing our province needs is for the public to be vigilantes. I mentioned last week that our local ATB was robbed twice, once at gunpoint, last year. These are serious issues that need government intervention. We need better legislation, and we need to look at this from every angle possible.

There was a mother at home by herself with a one-year-old child that I spoke to. She went out to see what a noise was – she could hear a pickup trying to be started – only to have a gun pointed at her and be told to get back into the home. That was shocking. This is a very serious incident that could have turned very bad and ended up with a fatality, not to mention that I’m sure that this woman is now not feeling safe in her home anymore. Can you imagine that happening to any one of your family members? This is just one of the many cases that are happening in our communities, and this is when people in the rural communities are starting to take matters into their own hands. I’ve already heard from many that they’re arming themselves to protect their property and their loved ones.

Before we can fix these issues, we have to ask ourselves: why is there an increase in crime? What are the common factors? There are many reasons. The economic downturn in the province is one, of course, but the lack of legislative teeth federally and provincially, demands on our court system, and delays give criminals the upper hand. These are all reasons. Local officials in my riding and all over Alberta are saying: enough is enough. We need to work together to fix what is broken and, believe you me, there is a lot broken with our system.

Bill 201 is just one of the many ways through legislation that we need to update in order to make the changes that must happen. The Justice ministry has been deemed the worst for disrespecting public access to information. Bill 201, the Justice System Accountability Act, would help us clearly see the patterns that we know need clearing up in our justice system. If this bill is passed, it allows the ministry to track the length of the time of the investigation to trials, the source of adjournments, the sources of mistrials, and the number of charges withdrawn, reduced, or stayed by having the Justice minister present an annual report to all Albertans on all these metrics. This is vitally important. We need to see where the issues and the bottlenecks are in our justice system.

Too many times criminals are getting away with – well, with murder, literally, and crimes of a serious nature. This is nonsensical. There needs to be accountability. British Columbia is able to provide its systems with an open data portal to track statistics to the courts, prosecutors, offices, and corrections. Alberta’s Solicitor

General, meanwhile, is getting publicly shamed by our Privacy Commissioner for their contempt for the public information.

Not only is this a transparency issue, but it's also one of safety. By creating a system where the investigators in trials are more accountable, we would restore the public's trust. Right now there is no trust that the system is working properly. That needs to be addressed and restored. By failing to make these records public, we are in essence telling the public that there are things to hide in a broken system. Real accountability demonstrates the government's seriousness about changing course as well as the seriousness with government views on all offences. It would help restore the confidence of our citizens and restore the reputation we once had that our families and our properties are going to be protected.

Those who suffer at the hands of our criminals are entitled to see those who are responsible brought to justice as part of the healing process. I would like to see safety restored for the lady in my constituency, Melissa, who in one swift moment in time – the safety of her own home was stolen from her the day the gun was pointed at her and her child at her home. I would like for her and others to feel safe again when they're at home alone. I would like to see justice defuse the angry victims and those who might seek vengeance. I would believe that those who are not guilty of an offence are entitled to have their names cleared and not have to wait years to see that come to fruition. That, too, is very important. Where are the statistics on that?

We need to enter into a new era of accountability. We need to make sure that the courts and the judges make decisions, that there is a trail of evidence and reasoning for each and every verdict, why investigations and trials took the length of time that they did, and what were the source of adjournments, mistrials, number of charges withdrawn, reduced, stayed, and so forth. There is something the public and all of us have to do – and we have a right to know. Not only does the public deserve accountability but transparency in the system, that would also help those who are responsible for those who make decisions to make more educated and wiser decisions moving forward, knowing that those decisions will be held to account by the public.

Having the Justice minister report on these metrics is critical, and I sure hope that the other side of the House sees the importance it has for the security and safety of our citizens. I spoke about the increasing crimes and the use of firearms in my riding. Firearm thefts in Alberta have also jumped 66 per cent in the last three years according to the RCMP. Just eight days ago the Edmonton Journal wrote an article entitled Firearm Thefts in Alberta Jump 66 Per Cent in Three Years.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I want less crime in this province. That should be the objective of every government to keep Albertans safe. How do we achieve that?

I'm an entrepreneur, I'm a businessperson, but this principle applies equally to government, that you can't manage something you don't measure. If you don't have the data, how do you know whether something is working properly? Part of the thing that we do in this Assembly: in essence, we're the board of governors or board of directors for the departments that operate in this province. The things that are happening inside those departments: well, they're a fact, whether we measure it or not. It's far better for us and through us the people of Alberta to have access to good, solid data that is reported in a consistent and regular fashion. That allows us to ensure that those in Alberta who are victims of crime have some assurance that the people who have perpetrated those crimes will be brought to justice and, equally, that the accused is granted their constitutional rights to a swift and fair trial.

Unfortunately, in this province, for a variety of reasons that other members have gone into here over the course of the afternoon, that has not been the case in this province, and it's unclear as to exactly why that is. Not every solution to every problem is simply to add more staff or add more resources. Now, in this case, I do think that we need to address the significant resource shortcoming amongst Crown prosecutors in particular but also amongst judges and amongst the court staff that are required to ensure the swift administration of justice.

But there's one piece that I haven't heard this afternoon mentioned – and apologies to hon. members if others have mentioned this – and that's legal aid as well. All of these are aspects of our court systems. We see an increase in self-representation in our court system, which has contributed significantly to why we are seeing increased backlogs and delays. Why is that? What can we do as a government? What can we do as a province to ensure that either (a) people who choose to self-represent are given the tools and resources they need to do so effectively or that legal aid services are provided so they do not need to make that choice to self-represent?

All of those factors will be revealed to us if we properly gather data and we require that data to be disclosed on a regular basis, which is what this bill does. Now, I share some of the concern that there's a risk that some of the resources required to gather the data may in fact take away from front-line resources. I actually don't feel that that is a substantial or significant risk in this case. Much of the data is available. We know, for example – again, other members have quoted statistics, and I'll do the same – that we have access to some data. Obviously, that data is being collected in some form or fashion, not just in the ministry of Justice but in other ministries as well. Consolidating that data into meaningful information has been a challenge.

This ministry in particular is challenged with transparency, is challenged with responding to freedom of information requests to the point where as just a citizen of Alberta, certainly as a member of this Assembly I have very little faith in their ability or willingness to share that data with us. We require the Legislative Assembly to ensure that there is oversight of that data.

There are many reasons why we've seen delays in Alberta's court system. One is the just straight increase in the number of charges commenced province-wide. We've seen an 8.3 per cent increase in 2015-16 year over year and those facing multiple charges up nearly 10 per cent but our Crown prosecution services operating at levels that were equivalent to 2007, 10 years ago, so clearly there's a gap. The government has finally recognized that and has actually hired in some new Crown prosecutors or is in the process of doing that, and that's important.

We see also an increase in severity of crime, and other members have mentioned that. I am tremendously sympathetic to those who are victims of crime, who have faced that. It seems to be a particularly acute problem in rural Alberta, but certainly that rise in crime is happening all around the province. Now, there are some bigger discussions that I think we all ought to be having as to why that is. Some of it, of course, is going to be related to the economy, but much of it, I'm sure, is related to the opioid drug crisis, and that's something that is not a problem that we can arrest our way out of. It is a problem that has multiple layers and facets to it. There are many social determinants for why people find themselves in that position. There are many, again, compelling reasons why we need to tackle the root cause of these challenges.

Be that as it may, I can assure you that a victim of crime is not especially interested in the social determinants of why that person has assaulted them or why that person has stolen their property or broken into their home, frightening their family. That's a very scary situation. I think it's incumbent that we have good, transparent, and clear data that can ensure that Albertans have continued faith in their justice system. Not only is it important, of course, that justice is done, but it's important that it is seen to be done, that Albertans have faith.

The best way to ensure that Albertans have faith is that they have the data and the information at their disposal. That data and information may be uncomfortable for the government, but I can assure you that it is a fact, whether it is publicly disclosed or not. I think on balance it would be best if the government says: "You know what? I'd rather we know that information. I'd rather the opposition knows that information. I'd rather Albertans know that information so we can set about tackling the problem and actually addressing the issue." We need to measure what's happening in the system so we know where front-line resources are needed. Are we doing things as efficiently and effectively as we can be? Are there new ways of thinking about how we address some of the challenges in the justice system?

Now, there is obviously going to be some restriction, just based on rights of the accused and just simply the way the process works. Again, there may be an opportunity for us to relook at how we do things in this province, looking at other provinces and seeing if there are things that other provinces are doing differently that we could adopt. But, again, let's look at the data coming out of other provinces. Let's compare that to the information that we have here.

Just in conclusion, Madam Speaker, it is important for victims that justice is swift and justice is transparent. At the same time, it's important that the accused receive swift access to justice and that their constitutional rights are guaranteed and in fact are implemented. But the transparency, the measurement, and the reporting of data are the tools that we need in this province to ensure that victims see justice done and that the accused receive a swift and fair trial. That is why I will be supporting this bill at second reading, Madam Speaker.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise this afternoon and speak to Bill 201. You know, I think back to when the member opposite was in the federal government, and there were calls from communities across our country for an inquiry into the long-standing crisis of murdered and missing aboriginal women. I recall that the government in which he served declared repeatedly that we didn't need another study but that what we needed was to be taking immediate action to address the issues that were driving the problem.

Well, today it would seem that these positions are reversed, with the member proposing legislation focused on studying the long-standing issues that have led to the bottlenecks in our justice system while our government is taking concrete action to address them.

Now, Madam Speaker, I'm very happy that the new government of Canada moved forward with that inquiry into murdered and missing aboriginal women and that our government is actively supporting that work because that is an issue where we have much to learn about the challenges, complications, and issues of systemic discrimination that have led to such tragic consequences.

However, on the issue of the backlog in Alberta's justice and court systems we have a very clear understanding of how we've arrived where we are. Previous federal governments, including the government in which the member opposite sat, failed to appoint judges, leaving multiple vacancies unfilled on the Court of Queen's Bench in Alberta. Likewise, previous provincial governments failed to appoint enough judges to keep pace with our rapid population growth or to provide adequate funding for Crown prosecutors, and both federal and provincial governments provided inadequate funding for legal aid, further delaying and tying up our system.

As was noted by journalist Paula Simons on a recent podcast, the Press Gallery – I recommend that everyone listen to it; it's very entertaining and insightful – previous Justice ministers in our province attempted to prove their tough-on-crime stance by pushing to prosecute every possible case, without due consideration of likelihood of conviction, and insisting on criminal charges in cases where maybe misdemeanors and fines could have been more appropriate, further adding stress and duress to our justice system. As a result, we have a system that's under great pressure. But as I just described, we are, in fact, quite clear about how we arrived where we are, and I think we're equally clear on what the solution is. We need to invest the resources that have been needed for so long, that previous governments failed to put in place.

Now, I know that the minister has been an active advocate for the federal government to fill vacancies on the Court of Queen's Bench, and she has been successful in getting them to do so, with four new judges appointed last June, and then this past October the Minister of Justice announced the creation of 10 new positions on the Court of Queen's Bench, with an additional seven new judges appointed by the federal government. Just last week the minister announced that our government will be hiring an additional 50 Crown prosecutors, 30 clerks and staff because, again, Madam Speaker, previous governments failed to invest in the resources needed to hire an adequate number of clerks for the courts here in the province of Alberta.

We are committed to continuing to fund legal aid at a level 20 per cent higher than that provided by previous governments. That, Madam Speaker, is concrete action that will yield immediate results in beginning to address the backlog in our system created by previous governments. Now, I'm not denying the value of collecting and studying appropriate data to improve and better target the provision of government services, but if I might reflect back again for a moment, I remember that the Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin served with the government that chose to gut the long-form census across Canada, crippling Statistics Canada's ability to collect precisely that kind of crucial information. Now, I'm very happy to see that he's reconsidered that position and that he's come to recognize the value of collecting appropriate data again. That's good to see. Learning is important. However, in this particular case I'm not convinced that a bill legislating the additional collection and curation of particular data is going to address the problem at hand.

I was very pleased to hear that the minister did her due diligence upon hearing of this bill. She reached out to stakeholders, including Crown prosecutors, staff in the courts, defence counsel, to discuss the possible benefits or issues with the provisions of this legislation, and as she noted when she spoke today, all stakeholders she spoke with clearly stated that the statistics that this bill proposes to track are likely not ones that would be valuable to track and report.

Again, Madam Speaker, for all stakeholders, the people working on the front lines of our justice system with whom the minister spoke, everyone she spoke with stated that the data this bill proposes to collect would not have value in addressing these issues. I take them at their word, and I fail to see how the solution for an under-resourced system is to add additional burdens, in excess, on the staff who are working in that system to track the effects of the lack of resources. The way to solve this problem is to address the lack of resources, to provide the resources that are needed to properly serve the people of Alberta, to provide them, again, with faith in their justice system, to see us have the opportunity to give our front-line staff the ability to do their jobs to the best of their abilities without the stress that's been created by years and years of neglect, not to add more burden on them to collect information that they themselves have said is not useful for addressing the problem.

Our overall focus needs to be on ensuring that our courts can focus on serious and violent crime. We need to deal with the repercussions of the Jordan decision. We recognize the challenge of that data to the system, and I've been pleased to see that the minister has responded quickly and is acting to ensure that we are able to better protect Albertans by providing the resources that are needed. I'm proud to serve with a government that will continue to make our decisions based on evidence and input from experts, including front-line employees, the people that do this work every day.

Now, certainly, what I've heard about the open portal from B.C. sounds very interesting. I'd be very open to considering the possibilities that could bring. I don't think we need a piece of legislation to make that happen. I know the city of Edmonton, for example, offers some open data and has been looking into that model, and that's certainly something I've seen many in the community use very well in many different respects. In that respect, I think that's something we should explore, and I note that the minister has expressed that she is interested in that model and exploring that further, so certainly I look for the opportunities to do that.

But, for myself, Madam Speaker, I do not see the value at this time in moving forward with this bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is with a great deal of pleasure that I rise today and desire to speak in favour of Bill 201, the Justice System Accountability Act. I want to thank the members for everything that's been said today with regard to this act, even the previous member, who had many good things to say but who, I think, allowed his party politics to intervene when it came to the final conclusion that he needed to make, which was: let's gather appropriate data, and let's be less worried about party politics.

You know, I think all of us understand the serious nature of this. If we haven't been the victim of a crime, we've had friends that have been victims of a crime, Madam Speaker. I can think of the sense of betrayal that a friend of mine had when her house was broken into and just the dramatic change that that brought to the way she sort of viewed the world and to the comfort that she had. We all sort of believe that our house is our castle, that it's a place of safe refuge. When that has been violated, we walk away with a sense of real fear and distrust. It's staggering to think about how, as a victim of a crime, it can just absolutely change the way we look at our world.

You know, if there's one thing that we as a government should have the capacity to do, it's that we should be able to provide a system of justice, a system of law that allows us to realize that we have a modicum of safety and a belief that should that safety be betrayed, there will be a sense of justice, that we can address that crime and that justice will prevail. That's a really important thing. We have to have a system of justice that not only helps victims to receive justice but also to believe that the justice system delivers justice. We need to take this issue, the whole issue of a backlog in the court system, very seriously.

Crime in Alberta, as we've heard people say today, has been on the rise, and there are many ways that we can address that. You know, we can promote education about personal safety, we can set into place precautions to try to prevent crime, and we can push to increase law enforcement. That is just one other vehicle that we can use, Madam Speaker, to gather the information, to gather the data that we need to make sure that we have an efficient system of law that delivers justice in a timely, consistent fashion.

As Albertans we have to learn to live in a world that sometimes is unsafe. I mean, in Alberta we saw an 18 per cent increase reported in crime in 2015. That includes a 12 per cent increase in violent crime. You've heard the Wildrose speak about the increase in rural crime before in this Chamber and about the devastating impact that that has on farms and rural families.

I can speak to examples from my own place. I live in Drayton Valley, where many of the businesses and the equipment yards where they store their equipment overnight have been vandalized and where equipment has been stolen on a regular basis. When you no longer believe that you can, with a modicum of safety, park your vehicles and your equipment, that you've spent years investing in so that you can make money for your family and for your business, when that's no longer safe, if you don't believe that the justice system can handle it, many want to sometimes take steps that they really shouldn't be taking.

For instance, a friend of mine was in his yard and saw a car stop across the alley and a bunch of jerry cans thrown over the back fence, and then it drove off. He couldn't figure out what was going on, so he and one of his employees stuck around to see. About half an hour later the same car came by, and they scaled the fence and started siphoning the gasoline out of these company vehicles. Now, how are we going to handle that? If you don't believe that that's happening, well, I'm sorry, but it is. For them, they had to explain to these young men that they had a choice: they could either leave, or they were going to be in a lot of trouble. I'm grateful that they didn't take justice into their own hands, but you know, they and the citizens in my constituency have to believe that the justice system has the ability to take care of these kinds of issues and where the victims are not victimized by the system.

You know, we need to make sure that we don't have a serious problem with backlogs in our courts that keep things going for so long through the court system that justice is denied. There has been some concern expressed by this side of the House with regard to the actions of the government as they attempt to deal with criminals. We've had discussions in the last week about the protocol that's come out from the NDP with regard to the triage that they're going to do when it comes to violent crime.

This government seems to lack the ability to understand that when a file is determined not to be prosecutable because simply, you know, they don't have the resources, that really sends a message to the ordinary Alberta citizen that you're normalizing a lack of prosecution because you don't have the resources and because you haven't done the job of making sure that our system of justice is capable of handling these issues. Fiscal constraints and increased demands on the justice system should not make it possible for criminals to walk free and for victims to be left without justice.

You know, I once, when I was much younger and, maybe in the minds of some of the kids that I taught, was maybe a little more cool ...

An Hon. Member: You're still cool.

Mr. Smith: I'm still cool. Thank you very much.

... was taking a bunch of kids out to have a barbecue and a wiener roast on a Friday night with our church and saw a car blitz through on highway 16 just out by CFRN – at the time there was a set of lights there – and just about wipe out two cars going through the intersection and then, about 300 or 400 yards down the road, saw the same car upside down in the ditch, a couple of lampposts sheared off, and the individual that had been driving the car in distress. You know, the first time I saw that car coming was when I looked in my rear-view mirror, and I saw it going about 60 miles an hour. It was about 30 yards behind me and at the last second jerked over, went through the intersection, and missed my car. I was that close to having five or six people that were in our vehicle wiped out.

Now, we have to have a justice system that doesn't give people the idea that a person that was as drunk as this individual was can get off scot-free because our system is so backlogged that we can't deal with it. That is not acceptable. We better start asking ourselves: why are our courts so backlogged, and what are the problems that are developing that are keeping us from dispensing justice? What happened to us that we have a justice system where criminals walk free while the victims are left to struggle? Why does our Alberta system have an underperforming system of justice?

Yes, we've admitted on both sides of this House that there was a problem with not having enough prosecutors and that the prosecutors we had were overburdened. We're glad that the government is taking steps to deal with that, but that sometimes is a symptom of a broken system. We have to start asking ourselves: where is our justice system failing Albertans, and what do we need to do in order to find out exactly where that's happening?

Bill 201 is a step in the right direction. It may not be the be-all and the end-all, but it's a positive step in the right direction by allowing us to gather information that will tell us why and where specifically our justice system is failing the people of Alberta. Bill 201 is about gathering data.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Yes. Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak in favour of Bill 201. I think it's important for us to recognize the problems in our system so we can act and make appropriate decisions moving forward. You know, in a recovery program the first step is admitting that you have a problem. We know we have a problem, and now we're putting part of the solution on the table. A constituent just the other day told me: please promise me that in 2019, when you're government and the opposition puts forward a good idea, you'll listen to them because it's better for all of Alberta.

Now, when it comes to the court system, there are many problems that it's facing right now, one of which is, you know, that potentially we're not going to be prosecuting criminals, especially if the case is difficult or unlikely to bring forward a conviction, which, Madam Speaker, is of serious concern for anyone who's ever been sexually assaulted. Those are most definitely difficult cases and could most definitely in the beginning be seen as unlikely to receive a conviction, but it doesn't matter anymore because this government has instructed our Crown prosecutors to not proceed with these cases. That's disgusting.

Now, my hope is that the government will see the error of their ways and will reverse this because there's a good piece of legislation on our Order Paper which will remove the statute of limitations on civil proceedings for survivors, which I think is a great move. It's a great step forward. That's a good initiative. That's a great thing, and we'll talk about that more when that comes back on the paper. But it's a bit confusing that we see a new triage protocol that actually sends the opposite message to survivors. It's deplorable, and it needs to be reversed, and I hope – I hope – that that will be, and I will applaud that government on that day.

Now, Bill 201 would go to address some of the problems that are in our court systems because we're going to see where those problems are and what the holdups are. Instead of just not prosecuting cases and letting alleged criminals go, we're going to be able to fix some of the problems. This is part of the solution, Madam Speaker.

You know, we may see where defence lawyers are using adjournments as a strategy to wear down victims – traumatized victims – to wear down the will to continue to show up at court and try and testify. We may see that. Likely we will.

This will make the system more accountable by accumulating data between the Department of Justice and the courts. This isn't an overburden of work. This is something that's already being recorded. Maybe the system is outdated. I mean, we use a reel-to-reel system for data collection in Service Alberta. That's insane. I sure hope that's not the case in our courts, but we'd certainly find that out should Bill 201 be passed. A bottleneck in the system: that would be addressed. Bill 201 will track how many charges get dropped or lessened, and it's not necessarily a reflection of a soft-on-crime attitude but an overburdened system. We will see these problems.

Madam Speaker, I won't say much more in support of Bill 201 except that we need to look at the hypocrisy of what is happening right now between the triage protocol system and the cases, charges of sexual assault not even seeing their day in court because you're afraid of the Jordan ruling and its data. This is insane. This is absolutely insane. Someone, please tell me. Like, you don't see the hypocrisy of Bill 2 and the triage protocol? It doesn't work. One does not support the other. I urge this government to take a look at that, please. Those who have a voice and an ear of those who make decisions in this government, I urge you to use them. In the opposition we will support you in that one hundred per cent.

Now, please, I urge all members in this House to support Bill 201, to take a step forward in addressing some of the problems in our court system together as a House because this is a good idea. This is what the constituents of Airdrie would want us to do. I will be voting for 201, and, please, I urge all of you to do the same.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to Bill 201?

Seeing none, I'll call on the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition to close debate.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Can you imagine going to school every day, going for 12 years, or going for four years of university or getting a master's degree and having nobody grade what you do during that entire time? Can you imagine going from grade 1 to grade 12, and every day you come home with a report card that's empty, and nobody knows what you did all day in those classes? They don't know what class you went to. They don't know whether you showed up on time for those classes or whether you turned in your homework. Well, that's what they're suggesting, what the NDP government is suggesting, is the right thing to do with our justice system.

Now, Madam Speaker, I've been clear on this. I've been a lawyer for 25 years. For 25 years I've been a lawyer. I worked in the courts in Alberta for 10 years. When I drafted this bill, when I came about the idea and started to talk to people, I talked to Crown prosecutors, talked to defence lawyers, talked to as many people as I could. I actually talked to one Crown prosecutor, one person that I'd actually practised with in Fort McMurray, and she's actually been a lawyer now for – wow – I bet you it's 40, 45 years. During that period of time she was a Crown prosecutor for at least 20 years, she was a defence attorney for at least 30 of those years, because she did both, and she did federal Crown work and provincial Crown work. Now, Madam Speaker, I can't think of anybody more experienced in the entire province than her. She's been at this full-time for over 40 years. She actually helped me in large part to draft this bill or to at least come to the point where I thought it was workable and made a lot of sense.

It does make a lot of sense. If you have an opportunity to do it – in fact, I heard from the other side that many of the people on the other side thought that keeping track of what we were actually doing, having us grade what people are doing, and finding out why they're doing certain things or why they're not getting certain things done would be a good thing. I think it would be a good thing.

Madam Speaker, I do want to clarify a couple of things. First of all, the NDP needs to know that the Criminal Code is a federal statute. It's not provincial; it's a federal statute. Therefore, across Canada all of those federal statutes are the same. Now, there are some administrative changes that are different in each province, but the federal statute is the same. Crown prosecutors are to make sure that that federal statute is kept up and that they're prosecuting people properly. It's not a provincial statute; it's a federal statute. The Criminal Code, as a whole, should be – and I implore all members here to think about this very specifically because the people of Alberta have lost faith in the justice system simply because of these 200 cases, and they see this government doing very little to react to it.

I can also assure the member that most crimes are committed – I mean, she was talking about what the basis of the crime committed is, and I know that a lot of studies have been done on this. For the most part, it's lust or greed, sometimes desperation. In Canada, hopefully, that's never the case because people shouldn't fall through the cracks in Canada.

But the simplest thing – and I implore the members on the other side to think about this because it appears to me that it's only the NDP that is voting against this bill, that is voting against keeping track of what we do in the justice system. I would implore them, Madam Speaker, with this: don't worry about it. You won't be here in two years to put this into action. You won't be here. You won't. I would suggest that what you should do is to put it in place. It's going to take you at least two years to get around to putting it in place or bringing up the rules and the regulations, like Bill 6. Why don't you just put it in place? We're more than happy to administer it because we think it's good government, and we'll be making sure that Albertans know, through transparency in the judicial system, exactly what this government is hiding from them.

I can't imagine anything more important than making sure that criminals are kept off our streets and the people of Alberta are kept safe. This government, by ignoring that and the principles of fundamental justice and the need for transparency and accountability in this bill and in our justice system, is ignoring the best interests of Albertans.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition has moved second reading of Bill 201, Justice System Accountability Act.

[Motion for second reading of Bill 201 lost]

Motions Other than Government Motions

Surgical and Diagnostic Wait Times

501. Mr. Jean moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to complete and make public within 120 days of the passage of this motion a report relating to surgical and diagnostic wait times that identifies the following: barriers causing excessive wait times; estimated costs of wait times in terms of factors including but not limited to lost productivity, health deterioration, and opioid addiction; and cost-effective solutions including those used in other provinces to reduce wait times within the limits of the Canada Health Act.

Mr. Jean: Well, Madam Speaker, one up, one down. Let's hope that we have a little bit more good fortune with the second one. Maybe this government will listen because I do think statistics are extremely important. They're important in our justice system. They're also very important in our health care system.

It's my pleasure to rise today to speak on my first private member's motion here in the House and to talk about an issue that's very near and dear to me. I think it's near and dear to every Albertan. You see, Madam Speaker, I do believe in universal health care. I believe that health care should be there when we need it. Access to health care is important, but actually getting the health care is even more important because access to a waiting line is not access to health care, just like access to a waiting line in the justice system is not access to the justice system. Unfortunately, we saw the members on the other side vote against the opportunity for additional access to the justice system and additional resources. I would be ashamed if I were them. Fortunately, I don't have to worry about that because I'm standing up for everyday Albertans every single day I'm here, and I'm proud to do that.

My motion today calls on the NDP government to complete and make public within 120 days of the motion passing a report relating to surgical and diagnostic wait times. Madam Speaker, we live in the greatest country in the world, in the greatest province in that country. We have tremendous wealth, but it's not giving Albertans a proper return on investment. We know that because when we compare Alberta's medical system, our health care system, to anywhere else on the planet, we find that the amount we pay is not getting a proper return in outcomes. The amount we pay is one of the highest in the world. In fact, in a recent OECD country comparison to Alberta it was determined that we were the second most expensive out of these OECD countries and that we had the 28th worst outcomes – worst outcomes – not best outcomes but worst outcomes. That is shameful.

[The Speaker in the chair]

That's why I'm suggesting that a report be put forward relating to the surgical and diagnostic wait times that identifies barriers that cause these excessive wait times, that estimates as well the cost of wait times in terms of factors that maybe this government doesn't understand. These factors are important, factors including but not limited to lost productivity, health deterioration, and opioid addiction. These are important things to Albertans. Today we're almost losing one person per day from opioid abuse – one person a day – yet what is this government's response? You've heard it, Mr. Speaker, and you're going to hear it a lot: new light bulbs.

While Albertans are dying, our health care system doesn't respond properly. That's why this motion also asks for the government to prepare and submit a report that evaluates the cost-effective solutions, including those in other provinces, that are used to reduce wait times within, of course, the limits of the Canada Health Act.

Now, I was very happy to announce in 2014 my retirement from politics after 10 years, Mr. Speaker. I know the NDP would like me to retire even earlier than what I expect to do, and I'm hoping that they keep saying that because that's going to make me stay here longer. I can't think of anything better than to fight the ideological purpose of the NDP government in this place for the benefit of Albertans. When I left Ottawa and left the politics there – and I was very proud of my time. I was. We passed a lot of things. We built a lot of pipelines. We brought in some great laws, great criminal justice laws. [interjections] These people laugh about it because they don't know about it. I heard clearly from what they were talking about in the justice system that they don't know about the justice system either.

I'm hoping we get a better response on the health care system. Maybe they'll understand that the only reason I came back to politics here in Alberta was to make sure that what happened to my son doesn't happen to theirs or anybody here or anybody that's listening or any Albertan because it was negligence, nothing but negligence. It wasn't the people that were negligent; it was the system. That's why I'm here, to fix the system, and I'm going to fix more than those systems. With the help of my Wildrose caucus we're going to fix the justice system. We're going to make sure houses don't burn down anymore when a government doesn't respond. Mr. Speaker, there's a lot of work to do.

I wanted to spend more time with my family when I came back here. I wanted to come back to Alberta because I love Alberta. It is the greatest place in the world. But after watching four months, five months of delays, seven or eight misdiagnoses, and seven biopsies, my son died. I held his hand during most of those, Mr. Speaker.

Politics matter, Mr. Speaker. Politics matter because we bring in policies. This government brings in policies on justice, or not. They bring in decisions on health care, or not. They can make our system better right now, just like they could have done with the justice system by passing Bill 201, but they didn't. They voted against justice. We have an opportunity, a tremendous opportunity; 55 people, 56 people on the other side could make the decision to save additional children's lives in this province just by getting the system right, by making sure health care responds not just by way of treatment but by outcomes. People can be healed if they focus on outcomes.

I believe that today we can start making a positive change in the lives of Albertans by signalling our intent as a province to finally tackle wait times. I'm going to flip through this speech because I can't believe some of these stats. If you want an MRI in Alberta: 172 days, Mr. Speaker. For an MRI – I can tell you that I've seen the MRI machines in this province. They sit empty. They are not being utilized. They're sitting in rooms where nobody is operating them, millions and millions and millions of dollars of equipment. And what is the response from this government? Hmm; business as usual; let's spend more money. It's not a solution. We need to look at what we've got, the assets that we have. The MRI machines, the X-ray machines: let's use them 24 hours a day until we get rid of the backlog.

If you have a problem with your sight, a degenerative problem or you need cataract surgery, 224 days you have to wait. That's 90 per cent of the time, Mr. Speaker. Two hundred and twenty-four days. January to August for cataract surgery when you can't see very well. And there's a backlog. But you can go to Calgary and decrease that backlog, apparently. You can't do it in Edmonton. That just shows that the system is failing. When you can go from one town to another town in the same province and have totally different outcomes, have totally different response times, something is wrong.

What's the response? Free light bulbs. Yeah. Let's get an Ontario company in and get Ontarians to work in Alberta, and we'll hit – what? We talked about it today.

An Hon. Member: They think it's funny over there.

Mr. Jean: They do think it's funny. They keep talking about how these things are funny. But they're not funny, Mr. Speaker. They're not funny when you have been a victim of a sexual assault and the judge throws out the case and you're a victim being revictimized. That's not funny. It's not funny when your son dies in a hospital because the system broke.

And it breaks every day. There are people dying in our health care system. There are people not getting the response that they should get. People pay their taxes here and they deserve to have a proper response from their government. They deserve to be able to go into a health care system that actually cures them and doesn't just shift them around. My son was refused by two hospitals before he was actually accepted by one, and he died less than eight months later. Refused, Mr. Speaker. Kicked out. Disgusting.

We need a health care system that reacts, that is better than the alternative that we have right now. I believe in universal health care. I believe that every Albertan deserves health care but health care that actually solves the problem, that doesn't just put them in a hospital bed. Mr. Speaker, hospital beds in this province cost up to $15,000 a day to keep people in them. Fifteen thousand. That's what I said, Mr. Speaker: $15,000 a day to keep them in.

My son waited two months for a test that cost five grand. What in the world is going on? I paid for two tests for my son. Finally, I dragged out what tests he needed after two and a half months. I sent money for those tests. One cost $10,000; another, $2,500. Mr. Speaker, I was ready the first day he went into the hospital to pay that amount, but nobody told me. I had to beg. I literally went into that hospital just about every day to find out.

That's why we need to do something different, Mr. Speaker, because what we're doing is not working. I don't care what the Health minister says. Our system is broken, and throwing money at it is not going to solve the problem. If you need a knee replacement in Alberta: 237 days. That's how long you have to wait. For a hip replacement: 209 days.

There is a better way, where we put the needs of patients first, before any ideology. We protect taxpayers while respecting the Canada Health Act. I want to see the greatest health system in the world right here in Alberta. It can be done, and it will be done with a Wildrose government. We will get back to action where outcomes matter more than treatment because it is about outcomes. It's about making people better.

The productivity costs, the loss of the quality of life while we take care of our seniors when they might have a hip they have to wait for – it doesn't cost any more money today to get that hip replaced than it does in 209 days. It doesn't cost any more money to get that cataract surgery today than it does in 224 days. We need to get rid of the backlog.

Now, let's look at Saskatchewan because they're right next door. Their primary product is oil, much like ours. And congratulations to Saskatchewan. They're the number one place in the world right now to invest in the oil and gas sector. We're 48th in Alberta. We do get the same price, Mr. Speaker, and use the same pipelines, but we don't have quite the same government. In Saskatchewan they do have something that is called great wait times. In fact, they are considered clinically reasonable wait times by physicians.

In Saskatchewan they've hit or blown through many of their wait time targets for key surgeries like cataracts and hip and knee replacements. In Saskatchewan, 92 days, three months. In Alberta: 224 days, more than double. Something's wrong. For knee replacements patients in Saskatchewan are waiting 130 days; 237 days here in Alberta. And for hip replacements patients in Saskatchewan are waiting 128 days versus 209 days here in Alberta. It doesn't take a genius to see that something's wrong here in Alberta. If you want an MRI and then want to see a specialist and then want to get referred, well add that 200 to 200 and another 200, and a year and a half later you might see somebody to help you. That's not access to health care. That's access to a waiting list. It's different, and the Supreme Court of Canada said that it was different.

So let's have some difference. Let's have Alberta lead the country in wait time guarantee. Let's move forward, Mr. Speaker, on something that actually gets rid of the same, tired methods of health care that we've seen in this province for years.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I'm just going to give you a couple of examples of what I've seen the money go to. If you're moving from Lethbridge to Calgary and you work for Alberta Health Services, it's going to cost – well, I've seen it cost – $138,000. It's $138,000 if you work for AHS and you move from Lethbridge to Calgary. I'd say that the market rate is a little different.

Or we could talk about the AHS senior manager that had his assistant go and save a parking spot for his wife during Christmas shopping. Or better yet, why don't we talk about the AHS personnel that was sent down to the Mayo Clinic because he wanted a second opinion on his cancer. Guess who paid for that, Mr. Speaker? The taxpayers of Alberta did. It's disgusting that my son waited here, thinking he had health care, and Alberta Health Services sends some bureaucrat down to the Mayo Clinic for a second opinion.

While they banter and laugh on the other side, Mr. Speaker, people in this province are not getting access to health care. This government should take it seriously. This government needs to take it seriously because people's lives are on the line. It's not an issue of money. It's an issue of quality of life. It's an issue of productivity. It is an issue of life. There are innovations that people can make. There are things that people are doing in other jurisdictions.

I have to commend the minister. She has responded, from my understanding, to many of my caucus members that have issues in their particular ridings. I appreciate that, and I would suggest that she's one of the more competent ministers on that side. But that means, Mr. Speaker, that she cannot use any excuses. I've heard a lot of excuses today. She needs to take control of the bureaucracy and find some systems that work, and this particular motion provides one little help, one little helping hand for her.

I would ask that before turning it down, they take it into consideration because there's no reason Alberta shouldn't have the best health care system in the world, certainly in Canada. No reason. I think she's got the capability to make it the best health care system in Canada, and I assure you that the Wildrose members on this side of the House will work to make it that system while we're in opposition. We will work with the government in any way we can to improve our system in justice, our system in health care, our system in education. That's our commitment to the government. I don't want any family to have the same experience that I had. None.

I did not realize how important policy and politics were, not when I was in the federal government for 10 years passing laws, and I did pass a lot of laws. I was very proud of those laws. I was proud of the pipelines we built. I was proud of my private member's bill that was tough on organized crime, Mr. Speaker. I was proud that I asked for many more judges, both at the Queen's Bench level and at the Provincial Court level, because I was in the system for years and I understand how important it is for Crown prosecutors to have the resources, just like it's so important for our health care system to reflect the best practices from across the country and across the world. Right next door in Saskatchewan and in B.C. – you can go east or west – both have better systems than we do, and they do it for a lot less money. I don't care how much money it costs; just get it right because people's lives are at risk.

Let's not waste the money. I've talked to people that can buy a wheelchair for $9,000 that AHS sells for $15,000. These are not funny things, Mr. Speaker. People work hard for their money. Alberta Health Services has an obligation to the people of Alberta to get it right, to get a return on investment not just because of the money but because the return on investment is the person's life, their quality of life, their family's quality of life, the productivity of that person getting back to work.

Can you imagine if the whole backlog was gone tomorrow or even if this government moved forward with this motion and solved it so that we got rid of the backlog in a year, Mr. Speaker? Can you imagine? No more having to go and help family members buy groceries, go shopping, go for a haircut, go see the doctor. They would be back living a high-quality lifestyle. Their quality of life would be back to the point that they deserve, where they have a health care system that is the best in the world.

We all want the same things here. We just believe on this side of the House, the Wildrose, in transparency, accountability. That's why we need to publish these things. That's why we need to move forward, Mr. Speaker, so Albertans know what we're doing. Look around the rest of the country for best practices and implement those best practices. It's important. Until you see a loved one die, until you go through the justice system and it fails you, you don't realize how important it is.

So on this issue today, on my Motion 501, I'm hoping that the NDP, on the other side, and all parties in this place will set aside partisan differences and will say: yes; we are here for Albertans, for Albertans first. That means we have to look at best practices around the world and around Canada and implement those best practices in our health care system.

We don't have to go far, Mr. Speaker. If the Health minister picked up her phone and called the Health minister in Saskatchewan, I bet you any money that they would be able to sit down and the Health minister from Saskatchewan would say: here's what we did; here's what we did to reduce our wait times to three months for just about every normal surgery, for every common surgery. While we here in Alberta have to wait 200-plus days. It doesn't take a genius to figure out that if we emulate systems and copy other jurisdictions that are successful, we will have success here.

Right now it's not an issue of money. We spend almost 50 per cent of our budget on health care, and I know that foundations across this great province raise millions and millions of dollars more. I myself was on the children's health foundation. I was the chair here in northern Alberta, raising money for the Stollery for many years, Mr. Speaker, back in the '90s.

I know how important it is. That's why I'm hoping they're going to support this bill.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very happy to rise and respond to Motion 501. I want to say that I know everyone in this House wants to ensure that we have the very best health care system to serve every single Albertan. We know that wait times are important and that we need to be finding ways to continue to reduce them.

Mr. Speaker, I'm so proud of the fact that we have public reporting on these wait times through a wide range of sources, and the member has mentioned some of them. Alberta Health Services monitors and releases quarterly reports for wait times on coronary artery bypass grafts, scheduled contract cataract surgeries, hip replacement surgeries, knee replacement surgeries, hip fracture repair, and much more. Further, Alberta Health Services' website includes information on the EMS dashboard, which reports response times to life-threatening episodes as a quarterly metric as well. It also tracks real-time monitoring for emergency rooms in Edmonton, Calgary, and Red Deer so far.

The Alberta wait time reporting system publicly tracks wait times for a number of those surgeries, as we mentioned, as well as diagnostic imaging and wait times for oncologists as well as radiation therapy. I'm proud that this information is publicly available through waittimes.alberta.ca. Additionally, the Canadian Institute for Health Information, CIHI, reports comparative wait times for key procedures such as hip and knee surgeries, cataract surgery, and radiation therapy across Canada. We use this information, Mr. Speaker, to target our resources and to help plan for a system that Albertans can depend on when they need it.

I want to also extend my condolences. The system doesn't always get a chance to help everyone in a way that is saving their lives.

Mr. Speaker, we're not afraid of evidence. We know that there is progress to be made on wait times, and we are committed to making progress. But I also want to be clear that if you are an urgent patient, you will be seen urgently. People triage patients through the system. This government will continue to protect public health care for all Albertans, which is one of the reasons why I'm so proud that we restored the $800 million in funding that was planned to be cut just prior to the last election. That represents a lot of patients who would have been waiting longer for care.

I know that it's tough to come up with solutions. I know that there have been proposals for massive cuts to the system and off-loading costs to everyday Albertans with health fees. Tell me, Mr. Speaker, how slashing resources can do anything but increase wait times and off-load costs onto Alberta patients and their families. Rather than continuing to describe our problem – we are thoroughly aware of it – this government is taking action on wait times. We are taking action for all Albertans, not just those who can afford to pay.

With this motion the member opposite is asking us to divert even more resources in providing information that's already publicly available to everyone. I want to say that I welcome feedback for concrete solutions from the member opposite and from all members of this Assembly. I know that we all have great ideas. We want them to continue coming forward, but I do not believe that this motion is a way to make that the reality, Mr. Speaker.

With that in mind, I'm urging my colleagues to vote against this motion as it stands today and to keep bringing recommendations forward as we work in a way that's collaborative to build a better system for all, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am humbled and honoured today to rise to speak to this motion, Motion 501, that's brought forward by the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin, the hon. opposition leader. I really want to thank him not just for his passion on this topic, which is personal, professional, and political, but also for how he's weighed it with a lot of research. It's a matter of the gut and the head and the heart, and I salute him for that.

Now, it's on record in Hansard, so I don't need to read it, sir. There are just so many ideas in here that are completely reasonable. Making it public within 120 days: it's simply asking that the government would complete a report related to surgical and diagnostic wait times, issues that are concerning Albertans in a big way, and they have for a long time. Barriers causing excessive wait times – excessive wait times – estimated costs of wait times, health deterioration, opioid addiction are immediate and urgent issues. This information is quite accessible; it's a matter of collating.

I'm sensing a serious trend here. That information is piecemeal right now in many issues that this government is dealing with. Let's put it together. Let's do the right thing, come up with the best options, implement them, and re-evaluate it for the benefit of Albertans, for their quality of life and the quality of their pocketbook. It's just common sense. It talks about "cost-effective solutions including those used in other provinces to reduce wait times within the limits of the Canada Health Act."

I really need to know – and I think Albertans have every right to know – why anyone on the other side of this Chamber could possibly vote against this. Please be specific. This is not binding in terms of a bill that was just voted down. This is a recommendation. It's a request. You wouldn't do anything wrong by voting for this, private members. Nothing. You would be helping your constituents. They'll be asking why you voted against this if you do. There's no threat, Mr. Speaker. It's just a reminder that this is an opportunity for people to work together for Albertans.

Now, I've heard for a long time about surgical and diagnostic wait times being extremely frustrating for people to work within, not just in this province, though, Mr. Speaker, and not just in this country. I remember from quite some time ago being the chair of the Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission, and the Health minister at the time and myself, over a decade ago, put on a health summit, and it actually focused on best practices from around Planet Earth. I can tell you that no one from any country there would ever – would ever – suggest that they had a monopoly on the great ideas for health care. Speaking at this moment, I don't know if the hon. member happened to be there at that time or not. I wish he had been.

In an ideal situation everyone would receive the very time-sensitive diagnostic tests or surgical procedures that they require, but the reality of the situation is that we have a finite system. It's a finite world. There's only a certain number of doctors and hospitals and time in which to serve an ever-expanding population. Now, I know from my time in cabinet, in wellness, that great gains were made in this respect, and I think it is extremely unfortunate that this government has dropped them. How can you drop the positive, proactive, preventive, happy, healthy, out-of-the-hospital healthy eating and active living? Without a budget. I don't get it.

Now, because of that and because of the fact that we have limited resources, obviously it's incumbent upon any government to be effective and efficient with the utilization of resources that we do have so that we can serve the greatest number of people. We've heard it said in this Chamber many, many times that dumping endless amounts of money into the system is clearly not the answer.

We all know that Alberta has one of the most expensive health care systems per capita, yet wait time statics leave us near average. We can do better, don't you think? Don't you think we deserve better? When I say "we," I mean Albertans. When the government or any major institution sets out to make a significant change, the best thing that they can be armed with is good data.

By taking the time to study the complete picture, with input and advice from relevant stakeholders, the government would be best equipped to fulfill their own priority, their initiative 2.7 from their own Ministry of Health business plan 2015-2018. The initiative states: "Implement a Wait Time Measurement and Waitlist Management Policy to address long wait times in the health care system." You said that you're going to do this. Here's an opportunity to do exactly what you suggested. Wouldn't it be nice for you to say, "Promise made, promise kept"? Then we could all walk out of here at 6 o'clock, have a nutritious meal, get back to work, and all Albertans would know that you've fulfilled your own promise.

I know that this initiative is a work-in-progress. But, honestly, the journey of a thousand miles begins with a single step. You know that from Lao-tzu, don't you? I see no reason why this government would not want to seek out and analyze any and all data that's related to this ongoing issue. It will empower.

As I said, the motion is simply asking the government to within four months complete a report which dives into a number of issues that may be exacerbating wait times. It's finding solutions. I heard the minister a minute ago asking for solutions. That's what this is about.

By making the report public, there's nothing to hide here. The motion would increase the transparency in the health system, and has that not been a hallmark, at least a proclaimed hallmark, of this government? Here's another great opportunity to prove that you're doing what you were saying you are doing, by being open and transparent, this time in the health care system.

Albertans would love to have those insights into factors which impact wait times. By the way, if it made the previous government look a little worse, we're not afraid of that at all. Bring it on. When I say, "Bring it on," Mr. Speaker, that's not aggressive. What that means is: let's continue to solve these problems that continue to evolve and, in this case, get bigger and bigger. We need to reverse that process. This is a perfect opportunity to do exactly that.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we're only allotted a certain amount of time to speak on these. I won't be able to go into other details as to why I'm going to be voting on this motion in a very positive way and why others on this side of the House, I suspect, will as well. Everything about this motion is reasonable, including the timeline, so I'll vote for it. I'd encourage members from all sides of this House to rise in the time that we have and state why they will or will not vote for this. I know that we have esteemed members of a number of realms, including health care, who have incredible experience and expertise, and you know who you are.

Well, let's face it, everyone in this Chamber who has friends and family who have been through the system will have personal experience as well, so let's bring forward the personal, the professional, the political. Let's do the smart thing. Let's work together for Albertans in a cost-effective, quality-of-life sort of way that will make this province even better than it is today.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to respond to Motion 501. I'd like to thank the Leader of the Official Opposition for bringing this important discussion on surgical wait times to the attention of the Legislature.

As a former operating room nurse at the Foothills hospital for nearly 10 years I think I can offer an important perspective to this debate. Mr. Speaker, the operating room is like no other place in our health care system, where patients put their complete trust in the team taking care of them while they're anaesthetized and unable to speak for themselves and where family members are not permitted to enter. Imagine how some people get nervous about visiting the dentist. Well, consider how nervous people are going in for brain surgery.

Thankfully, Mr. Speaker, the people who care for our patients undergoing surgery are some of the most dedicated and caring individuals I've ever met. I was honoured to work amongst them, people like Dr. Garnette Sutherland, whose team developed neuroArm, the first MRI-compatible neurosurgical robot, that was recently inducted into the Space Technology Hall of Fame. I know of many operating room nurses, anaesthetists, and surgeons who volunteer their time and skills to travel to places like Africa and Haiti at their own expense to help those less fortunate.

That's why, Mr. Speaker, I was shocked when in this very Chamber on December 7 last year the Leader of the Official Opposition characterized me and my former colleagues as "people who don't know how hard it is to work a real job" and people "who don't understand the fears of working families across this province." I know it's the job of the Leader of the Opposition to oppose, but I think he's taking his job a bit too literally when he describes people on this side of the aisle, who worked as nurses, teachers, social workers, and doctors before being elected, as not working a real job. The arrogance and disrespect shown by the Leader of the Opposition to these hard-working public servants is stunning. Perhaps instead of talking down about hard-working Albertans and focusing on . . .

Mr. Cooper: Point of order.

The Speaker: A point of order has been raised, hon. member. Stop the clock.

Point of Order
Imputing Motives

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to a point of order with respect to the Member for Banff-Cochrane clearly making allegations against another member in the House, imputing false motives or unavowed motives to another member, using abusive language or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder. While I appreciate the fact that the member may be reading from a quote inside the Chamber, the language that he's using on the opposite side of that quote is certainly language that's likely to create disorder.

He's also imputing false motives to the Leader of the Opposition in what he was or was not saying on that day in this House. I think the Leader of the Official Opposition has a very, very lengthy track record of defending front-line workers, a very, very lengthy track record of speaking highly of those who provide service. Even today, in what I would consider to be very, very, very passionate remarks about a very, very, very personal situation that he underwent inside this province, at no point did he speak specifically about front-line workers and nurses in an emergency room but merely about a system. Perhaps it would be advantageous to this House if that member would speak more along those lines and less about imputing motives to the Leader of the Official Opposition.

The Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understand that the Member for Banff-Cochrane was talking about incidents that had happened in the past. I think the Leader of the Official Opposition had said those remarks. He didn't say anything that hadn't already been said. Understanding the passion that the Leader of the Official Opposition had – and we all recognize that – you know, that passion shouldn't give him or anyone else, for that matter, immunity to be able to say or do anything they want. I believe the Member for Banff-Cochrane has not said anything that would disrupt the duties of this House but things that had been on the record and had been said. He wasn't talking about front-line workers as the Opposition House Leader is talking about. He actually talked about members who in their previous occupation had been members of health services.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The House leader of the third party.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you. Standing Order 23(h) reads: "makes allegations against another Member." That indeed occurred. Standing Order 23(i): "imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member." It's not a matter of interpretation here. That's clearly what indeed has happened. I think it's extremely unfortunate, Mr. Speaker, because I'm expecting that you and all Albertans really want to be debating this motion and not this sort of situation, which is completely, unnecessarily, and extremely deleteriously personal.

Standing Order 23(j) reads: "uses abusive or insulting language." I know that many people would feel that that is exactly what this is.

Now, I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that we could go on, but out of respect for this House and this debate and for this motion and for the people of Alberta I'm not going to go on. I'm simply going to suggest that a very quick, easy, efficient, and fair way to deal with this situation is simply for the member to rise, to apologize, to retract the statements. I'd love to hear the rest of the speech as it relates to this motion on this table at this time.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm of the view that you continue to find reasons that you can antagonize each other across the hall. In this particular instance I don't have the Blues in front of me. I don't recall the exact words that you said. Nonetheless, there was a reference, which I believe the Opposition House Leader made, with respect to comments that were made in the House earlier. I would, however, caution the member. I'm not sure that there is actually a point of order in this instance. However, please stick to the subject matter, avoid those statements that may be perceived as personal, and be respectful.

Please proceed.

Debate Continued

Mr. Westhead: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, perhaps instead of talking down about hard-working Albertans and focusing on his own internal party conflicts and bozo eruptions, he should go out and actually talk to some front-line workers. The Wildrose leader's contempt for public servants is only compounded by his demands to unilaterally impose wage freezes and toss collective bargaining out the window, something Wildrose previously opposed during the Bill 46 debate . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Westhead: . . . demonstrating just how far to the right they've shifted.

Mr. Yao: Easy, commie. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Westhead: Mr. Speaker, if it wasn't bad enough for the opposition leader to publicly . . .

Mr. Carlier: Point of order.

The Speaker: A point of order has been raised.
The Deputy Government House Leader.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Carlier: Thank you. You know, heckling most certainly is part of the customs of this House. What we just heard went over and above that: "imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member," "uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder." If you haven't heard the word that was said by the member, Mr. Speaker, it was actually the word "commie," which I would say most certainly fits into that definition.

Mr. Yao: I withdraw and apologize for those comments.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Banff-Cochrane, keep in mind the earlier comments, and be careful.

Mr. Westhead: Yes. Absolutely, Mr. Speaker.

Debate Continued

Mr. Westhead: First of all, on April 20 of last year in this Chamber the Official Opposition leader said with a straight face in Hansard the following quote with respect to Alberta's health care system: "When people quit or when people move out of the province, let's just not rehire them . . ." [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon member, particularly at this late hour, could you address your comments to the subject matter and try and avoid those clauses that you believe might be taken as causing disorder in the House.

Please continue.

Mr. Westhead: Mr. Speaker, I know I've touched a nerve on the other side telling the truth about the opposition, but I think I've got 10 minutes . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet, please.

Mr. Westhead: Each member is afforded 10 minutes to make their case, and I'd appreciate the opportunity to do that, Mr. Speaker.

He said: "Let's just not rehire them for now . . . It would help morale . . . It would."

Mr. Cooper: Point of order, Mr. Speaker, on relevance, please.

The Speaker: Did I hear a point of order on relevance?

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Cooper: Yeah. That's correct.

Mr. Westhead: Mr. Speaker, I'm talking about what the Official Opposition leader said with respect to surgical wait times and staffing in hospitals. I'm trying to make my point on why I'm not going to support the motion.

The Speaker: Hon. member, please proceed but keeping mindful for this third time that I've asked you to – you've seen what's happening on the other side, so please be conscious of that. Please proceed.

Mr. Westhead: Sure. Mr. Speaker, I can't be responsible . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. member.
Please proceed.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, you heard me correctly. The Wildrose's solution to the unemployment situation and wait times is to leave front-line positions unfilled. Not only that, they actually think this would improve morale. I've heard some far-out things from the Wildrose brain trust, but this one ranks right up there with calling feminism a cancer.

Take it from me; these hare-brained Wildrose schemes would simply not work and would most definitely not help morale. Picture this, Mr. Speaker. Health care being a female-dominated workplace, with a relatively young workforce thanks to the cuts imposed in the '90s by the PCs, that eliminated a generation of nurses and blew up hospitals, there are hundreds if not thousands of front-line workers on maternity leave at any given time. Not only that, the short-term staffing situation was to such an extent when I worked at AHS that staff couldn't even get time off to attend their own wedding. Here we have the leader of the Wildrose saying that it would improve morale not to fill these positions. It's unbelievable. You can't make this stuff up.

I'm beginning to think that the Leader of the Opposition is concentrating more on keeping his job or dreaming up a name for the new party. Mr. Speaker, I'd like to suggest: the wild conservatives.

Wait, Mr. Speaker. Here's another Wildrose plan to make you facepalm. During the 2015 election campaign the Wildrose proposed a catchy-sounding wait time guarantee. The guarantee went like this: if a Wildrose government fails to meet its own wait time targets, which they most certainly would considering their plan to not fill vacant positions and cut billions from health care, Albertans could go to a private clinic or out of province for procedures and be reimbursed by the public system. In a press conference the Wildrose leader said, and I quote: we expect people to go to other provinces; we expect people to go possibly to the United States. End quote. I wish I was making this up, but it's true.

Boil this down, Mr. Speaker, and what you get is the Wildrose plan to funnel public dollars to their friends at private clinics and export public health care dollars to the U.S. or other provinces and bring in a de facto two-tiered system, where the wealthy jump the queue. This is just . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order, please.
Please continue.

Mr. Westhead: Mr. Speaker, this is just another back-of-the-napkin Wildrose plan, that was clearly not thought through, just like the others, a plan that belongs with their shadow budgets, never to see the light of day. It's a shame, really. Albertans deserve better from their opposition.

Let's walk through an example of their plan, Mr. Speaker. The Wildrose sends Mr. Jones to the U.S. for hip surgery. Mr. Jones pays out of his pocket for airfare for him and a companion and pays out of his pocket for a hotel room. Then Mr. Jones suffers a medical complication during surgery and has a stroke. As a result, Mr. Jones requires 24-hour care for the rest of his life and must be repatriated back to Alberta at significant expense. Who pays for all this, you might ask? Mr. Jones. "Sorry," the Wildrose says, "We only offered to pay for your hip surgery; you're on your own for the stroke."

On the other hand, here in Alberta . . .

Mr. Cooper: Point of order.

The Speaker: What's the point of order?

Point of Order Allegations against Members

Mr. Cooper: The point of order is that the member continues to use language and make allegations about the Wildrose, make allegations against members of this House . . .

The Speaker: Opposition House Leader, you've said that before. In this instance, I think the member is offering an opinion, which is the freedom . . . [interjections] Order, please. Are you finished with the point you wanted to make? I heard that before.

Mr. Cooper: No, I'm not finished with the point that I'd like to make because the hon. member is making assertions about things that aren't true. He is making assertions about a policy of the Wildrose Party that are false. He's not telling the truth, and that should be a problem for all members of this Chamber . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order, please.

5:50

Mr. Carlier: I think you said it best, Mr. Speaker. The member was just giving his opinions on things that have already happened in this House. In my wildest imaginings I do not see a point of order here. I think that right now they might agree with me that emotions are quite high at the moment, and that's probably what's giving rise to a lot of these points of order, not necessarily the facts of what's been said.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The House leader for the third party.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, sir. Sections 23(h), referring to allegations, and 23(i), to false and unavowed motives. It's not a matter of opinion, sir, when someone comes forward and says – and we don't need the Blues; we don't need smirking. If the member had read the motion, the last clause includes: "to reduce wait times within the limits of the Canada Health Act." He was going off on a huge tangent about private health care, et cetera. I've got to tell you that it's embarrassing when we can't have a level of decency and respect in this place to concentrate, sir, on the motion . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. member.

Mr. Rodney: On the motion. Let's keep the personalities out of it, please and thanks.

The Speaker: Hon. member, you have two minutes left. It was a matter of opinion – I caution you again, for the fourth time – agreeing with your own deputy House leader. Be cautious of the time of day that you're at and the comments you make.

Debate Continued

Mr. Westhead: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Let's see. Instead of investing in Alberta's health care system, like we are on this side of the House, Wildrose would rather cut billions and export public health care dollars to private providers outside of Alberta and support queue-jumping for those who can afford it.

Mr. Speaker, I can't support this motion or the Wildrose's preposterous and ill-considered solutions to shorten wait times. We already publicly report a significant amount of wait time information. More reports and studies that the Wildrose is calling for would divert resources away from the front lines.

I'm getting a bit tired of the Wildrose leader talking down about Albertans and hoping that the government fails for his own short-term political gain. This motion from the opposition leader was a chance for him to demonstrate leadership and propose some solutions, to show Albertans what he would do differently. If he bothered to look, he would have seen that wait time information is already publicly reported. He'd rather admire the problem and scapegoat and blame front-line workers.

Instead, what we need to do is take action, and that is exactly what this government is doing. We restored $800 million in funding to health care and will continue finding efficiencies to offer more timely care and make improvements in wait times.

Mr. Speaker, I will not be supporting this motion and urge members to do likewise. Thank you. [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon. Quiet, please.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to stand in this Assembly and address Motion 501. I'll try to raise the level of debate from some of the members that have spoken earlier.

You know, every hour in Alberta we spend about $2.4 million on health care. That's about $58 million a day. I think that we have made it very clear and the Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition has made it very clear that we support the public universal system of health care. We just desire, unlike, I guess, the NDP across the way, to make sure that it is efficient, that it is effective, and that it actually delivers health care rather than wait times. Unlike the musings of the individual that spoke prior to myself, we actually care what happens to Albertans when they enter the health care system.

Now, we are arguing in Motion 501, Mr. Speaker, that we simply produce a report and that that report look at the barriers that cause the excessive wait times. We can't argue, nobody in this Assembly can argue against the fact that we have horrendous wait times. It's obvious. The facts are there. Alberta, by one report, spends an average of 22.9 weeks in wait time; Saskatchewan, 16.6; Quebec, 18.9; Ontario, 15.6. Surely to goodness, as legislators in this House we can have a conversation that looks at: what are the reasons, what are the barriers that create those wait times? Let's look at: what are the estimates that those wait times cost?

Let's take a look at the proposals so that we can evaluate cost-effective solutions for those wait times. This is something that is not particularly partisan. It's not left-wing; it's not right-wing. We've all agreed on universal health care in this Assembly. Surely to goodness, we don't have to look at the personal; rather, we can look at the system. Access to wait times is not access to health care. It is not access to healing. Let's take a look at the motion. Albertans wait nearly three weeks longer than the national average for treatment.

Wait times mean that patients continue in their suffering. I have a father, who had a knee replacement. It was done very well by the health care system in this province. The fact that he had to wait a significant amount of time, about, by the way, what I see the average is, about 224 days – if I remember correctly, my father had to wait maybe a little bit longer than that but approximately that wait time. Mr. Speaker, I know the pain that my father went through, and I know the kind of drugs that he was on, and I know that at 77, 78 years of age, when this was happening, he could hardly walk across the kitchen to be able to deal with making breakfast.

Wait times are important. Access to health care is important. We all have loved ones that have this same issue, so we in this Legislature should be dealing with this issue, and we should be dealing with it in a rational fashion. This motion simply asks us to go and create the ability to have a report that within 120 days will report on the wait times, on surgical and diagnostic wait times. That is a completely reasonable thing. I would suspect that all Albertans that listen to what we're doing here today would agree with that statement. I don't understand why the government would not be willing to support this motion.

You know, the Fraser report reports that the estimated cost of wait times can be as high as $3,951 per person, for a total cost of $3.5 billion to the Alberta taxpayer, Mr. Speaker. Those are significant costs. Now, you can argue the numbers, and that's fair enough. You can argue whether you like the Fraser Institute or you don't like the Fraser Institute or whether you believe their numbers or whether you don't. But this report would allow us to take a look and to come up with numbers that we want and reasons that we want. Estimated barriers and estimated costs: that's what this report is about, not some flights of fancy.

Alberta is presently facing an opioid crisis. One of the reasons – not the only reason but one of the reasons – that we have a problem with an opioid crisis is the fact that physicians have been prescribing opioids and people have become hooked. The longer we keep people on wait times, the longer they're on pain medication. The longer they're on pain medication, the more likelihood they have of becoming hooked.

Mr. Speaker, when I take a look at the wait times, I believe that it's important that we start to study this with Motion 501. Albertans demand this. Albertans will benefit from this. The social cost for families, the social cost for individuals suffering from mental health, the social costs and physical costs for people that are suffering from pain and from wait times and that need surgical and diagnostic data: this would help us progress those issues.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I want to adjourn the Assembly pursuant to Standing Order 4(2) until tomorrow at 10 a.m.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Please bow your heads. Let us reflect, each in our own way. Allow us to find solutions and resolve in our debate, acknowledging that conflict, if dealt with respectfully, will often lead to a resolution.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Ms Jansen moved, seconded by Ms Miller, that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois Mitchell, CM, AOE, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate March 9: Ms Ganley]

The Speaker: Would anyone else like to speak to the Lieutenant Governor's speech? Lethbridge-East.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you. I'm very pleased to stand today to respond to the Speech from the Throne by Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor Lois Mitchell. I will try to focus my comments on a few things that were noted in the speech. I think that I will begin with the statements about strong public health care and education systems. Our government will build on its plan to protect and enhance health care and education. I know that things are not yet perfect. My objective as the MLA for Lethbridge-East is to continue to strive for perfection as we move forward in all of our legislation.

There have been issues identified which require action, and they are being addressed step by step as we go. In Lethbridge there are some challenges with triaging in emergency and pressure focused within the psychiatric area. Despite having such issues, we are working to address those, and every day we are working on improving our services and access to those services. We are also addressing the needs within our infrastructure. I thank with all my heart the nurses, doctors, cleaners, LPNs, lab technicians, teachers, aides, principals, administration, school boards, our ministers of Health and Education, and every one of you who makes our health care and education systems work.

In my community the new wing of the Chinook regional hospital was completed under our watch. Parents have come to me and thanked me and our government for not cutting funds to the hospital and for completing the new facilities that now house the incredible neonatal unit so that the facilities were there when their baby was born, where they needed them.

I am truly grateful for the cancer centre in Calgary, which services southern Alberta.

I am so pleased that we will make life better for vulnerable Albertans by the utilization of nurse practitioners on the front lines to care for homeless women and youth in Calgary and Edmonton and eventually, I hope, in Lethbridge.

The Minister of Education asked that I attend the opening of a school close to my home in north Lethbridge and another in my neighbouring community of Coaldale during this past year. What a privilege it was to have represented him at these events and to see the excitement in the eyes of the students, their parents, and their teachers to be in and to be able to utilize such beautiful, state-of-the-art, functional facilities.

I was asked to be a member of the all-party Ministerial Panel on Child Intervention. I take that work very seriously. My colleagues and I are focused on fixing the problems that have been identified so that our children can be protected. I am not focused on blaming. We are working in what I believe is a collaborative manner, using consensus decision-making. I feel that we are moving forward in a positive manner, which is what needs to happen to make our efforts a success.

I have advocated on behalf of my constituents and many from other constituencies to improve accessibility for persons with disabilities, and I am happy that this government is responding. Work is being done to provide timelier and more accessible services, a small step forward. I will continue to advocate on their behalf to further advance this file.

As you know, I've previously spoken to the issue of domestic violence and to a lack of equity for women. Since giving my statement, thousands of women and some men have contacted me about their particular issues around domestic violence and inequity. I listen and advocate on their behalf throughout our ministries when needed and when requested. It is almost overwhelming to see how much work needs to be done, but this pales in comparison to how overwhelming it is for those who are being victimized. We can't do everything all at once, as much as I would like to, so I guess I'll have to run in two more elections to make that happen. We and myself in particular are not daunted by what is required to be done, so we will continue to build on the work done through Bill 204. In this session we've introduced Bill 2, An Act to Remove Barriers for Survivors of Sexual and Domestic Violence. I expect that I will be speaking on that bill in the next few days.

I'm really proud of our government and its support of communities. In Lethbridge we are the recent recipient of the largest private investment ever, $350 million, with the announcement of the Cavendish farm project. When the city contacted me about six or seven months before the project was actually announced, I was thrilled to engage our government in the project and to solicit support.

Our government also supported the city and the county of Lethbridge in their Asian trade mission with letters of introduction and support from our offices in Asia. This resulted in a very positive response throughout the mission.

It would be lax of me if I did not speak about creating better conditions for our communities across Alberta, in particular the protection of our extraordinary natural heritage. I believe this to be an essential direction for our government to take.

I say this following two visits to the Castle Mountain wildlife area. I visited the area with the Oldman Watershed Council in the fall of 2015 and again in the summer of 2016. We visited a few of the same sites on both trips. I was witness to both the beauty and the magnitude of this area. While there in the fall, I saw a number of people random camping at campsites that were set in the woods. There were many, many deep tire tracks into the site for about 400 or 500 metres from the roadway. We walked through the woods to the creek. In some places barriers were laid down and some boulders and fallen trees to deter the crossing of the stream. I saw where diamond willow saplings were planted to deter anyone from crossing the stream in vulnerable areas and areas where there were bridges available to cross without disturbing the stream.

During the summer excursion to the same area the ruts in the drive to the camping in the wooded area were greater and deeper. We again walked through the woods and down to the creek, but now I was seeing tire marks and deep ruts along the banks of the creek and then up the bank on the other side. I saw areas destroyed where barriers had been set up to protect the areas of the creek that were vulnerable, and where the diamond willow saplings had been planted, they too were destroyed. It was so sad to see, especially when there was a bridge so close by. I've spoken to a few people who are part of quad groups who tell me that everyone does not behave like this. They, too, are upset with those that do, and it ruins it for everyone.

I've also spoken to a number of random campers who are very careful to leave their campsites with no visible evidence that they were there when they leave. They have complained to me that the places where they have camped for years are being damaged by other groups who do not respect nature, make so much noise during the weekend that they make camping feel like they are still in the city, not what they expect when wanting to enjoy the tranquility of nature. I am proud of my government, that we have taken action and asked for public input before the final decisions are made.

I thank Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor Lois Mitchell for a throne speech which clearly lays out a positive path forward. Thank you.

The Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Ms McKittrick: I know that the Member for Lethbridge-East is a passionate advocate for her community of Lethbridge and for the surrounding areas. I was just wondering: what are the most important things that she found in the throne speech that are going to empower her community and provide economic development for her community?

Ms Fitzpatrick: I think that within the throne speech, as I said, it was clearly laid out what the path forward would be, and I have to say that everything in the throne speech impacts my community. I believe that Lethbridge is an incredibly vibrant community. I've said in this House many times that I love Lethbridge, and I love it because of the community, because of the caring, wonderful people that are there. Despite the fact that sometimes we disagree about things, they care about our community.

They understand the impact of protecting our water supply. We're in the middle of the Palliser Triangle, which is a drought area, and they do understand that protecting the Castle area actually protects our watershed. If we don't have trees in the ground to hold that moisture in the mountains, we're not going to have water to drink in our community, and it's also going to probably end up flooding the Calgary area. So we recognize how important that is.

I think the throne speech overall really speaks to what needs to be done and the direction that our government is taking to do these things. Again, I'm really proud of what our government has done. Keep up the good work.

The Speaker: Are there any questions or observations under 29(2)(a)?

The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm thankful for the phrase we heard from Her Honour the Honourable Lois E. Mitchell, Lieutenant Governor of Alberta, during her Speech from the Throne on March 2. That phrase was Working to Make Life Better for Families. I'm thankful for this phrase because I believe it's precisely why I and my colleagues and, hopefully, my colleagues on the other side show up every day. We're here because we're all working to make life better for families. As we heard on March 2, now more than ever the fundamentals matter.

One of those fundamentals is creating jobs. I'm going to take a little bit of a turnaround in this area of creating jobs, creating good jobs across our economy by supporting small business and entrepreneurs and job creators, but I'd like to take some time to talk about those jobs for a population that is all too often overlooked and labelled as vulnerable, a people to be cared for, to be pitied: people with disabilities.

Recently the city of St. Albert created a much-needed policy of inclusive hiring. The purpose of this policy is to ensure full participation of people with disabilities as candidates for employment and as employees with the city of St. Albert. The actual policy states that "the City of St. Albert is committed to hiring Persons with Disabilities and strives to provide a respectful, Inclusive, and Barrier-free Workplace." I'm looking forward to hearing from St. Albert's mayor and council on the progress that they've made.

Until then, I can tell you a little bit about the outstanding inclusive employers that I know personally. The Superstore on St. Albert Trail is the employer of a number of people with disabilities and has been for many years. In fact, they are proud union members, actually, and have learned a great deal about managing their lives. Canadian Tire is another amazing employer in St. Albert and recently hosted a retirement party for one of their employees who had worked there assembling bicycles, with some assistance, for many years. Servus Place is another unique employer for someone with very complex needs, with autism, who after a long time job seeking found the perfect job at Servus Place and is doing quite well. The Youville Home hosts a number of people with disabilities and has for years, and McDonald's in St. Albert has employed Jon, a friend of mine, actually, for about 25 years. Other than being away to climb Mount Kilimanjaro, I don't think he's ever missed a shift.

Albertans with disabilities – mild, severe, intellectual, developmental, and physical – consistently experience low levels of employment. You'll hear rhetoric about who minimum wage earners are. I can tell you that they are disproportionately people with disabilities. People with disabilities are unemployed, and they're ready to work. Every person has a right to earn a living to support themselves and their families. That includes people with disabilities. I can tell you that many of them would be so happy to refuse AISH in favour of a good, mortgage-paying job and that indeed many have.

Take in some of the famous St. Albert events, and you'll see what inclusive employment and volunteerism looks like: the International Children's Festival, the Seven Music Fest, and the Rainmaker Rodeo.

I'm going to switch gears a little bit to housing, and I want to tell you a little bit of a story about my community, my constituency of St. Albert. Sometimes you see the beauty and the strength of people in the community in the face of adversity. Over the last year I've attended two hearings before the St. Albert Subdivision and Development Appeal Board. Sadly, this is not the first time I've had to do this, and I'm happy to report that in both cases the appeals were rejected.

The first was a group of neighbours appealing an application for four people with disabilities to share a home in their neighbourhood. It was painful to watch the faces of the people with disabilities who were actually applying to live in that community. It was horrifying to watch the look on the faces of their family members and their friends. It was really sad to hear some of the reasons that people were fearful to have people with disabilities in their community. They were afraid of parking and traffic congestion. Let me tell you: people earning minimum wage and AISH don't tend to have cars. They were afraid of decreasing property values. They were afraid of the loss of enjoyment of their property. They were afraid of the negative impact on the character of their neighbourhood, and they were afraid for their personal safety.

The second appeal hearing I attended was a little bit different but no less painful or ugly. Six biological siblings who had been apprehended were set to move into a home supported by a local organization. The siblings ranged in age from one month to seven years old. The applicants again raised the following as reasons for the board to reject the application: traffic congestion, parking, loss of safety and security, decreasing property values. Many people showed up to support this, but what came afterwards was the beautiful part. Sane Albertans spoke up after the hearing. They spoke up privately. They spoke up publicly on social media. They spoke to the newspaper. They wrote letters to the editor, and they encouraged the mayor and council to make some changes to a process that is not working.

We need to be a community that welcomes children that have had a rough start in life, that welcomes people with disabilities, that welcomes people of every colour, every religion, every age, every background. We need to recognize that inclusive communities are valuable communities.

I wasn't sure that I was going to say this, but I am going to and not for a negative reason, because I do think that the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon is indeed a good person, dedicated to his family and, no doubt, his constituents. However, during the winter session, November 2016, this member stood in the House and proudly shared the fact that he had participated in numerous appeals to prevent a group home from moving into a cul-de-sac in his community. The reason that I raise this is because it is incumbent on each and every one of us to create safe, inclusive communities. I will continue saying this, that inclusion is a verb. You don't get to say it without doing something. Certainly, we can always be better, and I have no doubt that we can all point to ways that things can be done in a better way. However, perspective is important, and I think people look to us for leadership.

Like so many, I was not born in Alberta, but I chose to live here and to raise my children here. Alberta is a beautiful place, full of people who are progressive and who reject the fearmongering and hate-spewing that far too many claiming to put Alberta first endorse. Opposition will tell you that people, Albertans, are overwhelmed by the lack of hope, but I reject that. The sane Albertans that I talk to reject that. Every day the beautiful city of St. Albert walks the talk of inclusion, acceptance, focused on a future that is hopeful and progressive.

The celebration of new schools after years of lots of signs but empty promises: the Lois E. Hole school opened, and students will begin attending in September, and l'École Alexandre-Taché is finally built, the first French Catholic school in St. Albert.

I try to get out at least once per week to meet my constituents one-on-one. I don't hear the hopelessness that the opposition endlessly talks about. I hear frustration with the constant spreading of misinformation, that the opposition is directly responsible for. I hear frustration with rhetoric intent on dividing and harming. I hear fear that professional provocateurs, spreaders of hate are becoming more acceptable, that hateful misogyny and racism are every day. We're not getting used to it. We reject it.

What I hear is gratitude. I hear gratitude for a reduction in school fees, for investment in infrastructure, gratitude for holding the line on education and health. I hear gratitude that massive infrastructure deficits like the Sturgeon hospital – we're thrilled that we got a boiler. We're not asking for a new hospital. We got a boiler because the previous government, that was in power for decades, refused to address the deficit in infrastructure. I heard gratitude for a government willing to create change and willing to stand up for Alberta families.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is going to be under . . .

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Malkinson: Yes. That's what I was going to clarify.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd just like to thank the hon. member for her advocacy for Albertans with disabilities. You know, she talked a lot about how it's important that those with disabilities have a job. I was wondering if she could expand on how important minimum wage would be for those with disabilities as well as for those with disabilities to be in the community. I know I have several persons with disabilities who live in various residences around Calgary-Currie, and I know that Calgary-Currie is better for it. I was wondering if you could expand on what minimum wage means for those with disabilities.

As well, I know that as a passionate advocate the hon. member has been paying rapt attention to what the opposition has been saying, so I was wondering if she could expand on what she's been hearing from the opposition and perhaps contrast that with what we're doing differently.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Renaud: Thank you. Big question. What I can tell you is that I do know that people with disabilities are – the numbers of minimum wage earners are huge. You have to start at a place, and I think that place is that people with disabilities have the right to earn a living just like you and I. They have the right to live in the community just like you and I. No questions asked. Not up for debate. I think if we start there, then we forge ahead. We make a plan.

You know, I hear, "I am grateful for assured income for the severely handicapped," because there are people in Alberta that for whatever reason, be it medical or otherwise, are unable to earn a living and require that type of assistance. However, I can tell you that there are thousands that want to work. They want to work. They want to support themselves. They want to support their families. So I am grateful for a government that is going to look at progressive solutions to problems that have been stewing and festering for decades. We will look at the AISH problem and the challenges that we face with AISH by looking at creative ways of: how can we support employment for people with disabilities? How can we create real, meaningful lives for people with disabilities?

As far as the opposition is concerned, I'm not going to spend too much time talking about them because it's not really my favourite subject. I'll be honest. What I can tell you is that I've been asking for a very long time, I think since we were first elected, that we be careful with the language and the words and the labels that we assign people. It's people first. [interjection] I don't actually think it's that funny. I don't know what you're chuckling about. It is people first. It's not "the most vulnerable." It's not "those poor people with Down's." It's people with disabilities. It's people first. It's about respect. That's step one to inclusion.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Westhead: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I know the Member for St. Albert was the executive director of the Lo-Se-Ca Foundation before her election. She was a champion for people with disabilities. I know that it was a difficult decision for her to decide whether or not to run because of how much she loved that job and the difference that she was able to make in those people's lives. I just wonder if she could tell us a little bit more about the Lo-Se-Ca Foundation and the work that she did for people with disabilities.

Ms Renaud: Well, I think I might have to buy you lunch later.

Thank you for that question. I actually really appreciate it. It was a tough decision, but, you know, I think I was inspired by the vision and the platform, and I'm thrilled to be here. I'm also thrilled to represent the community that Lo-Se-Ca is housed in. Lo-Se-Ca was created by a group of family members, friends, and community supporters that saw a solution in community for their sons and daughters and relatives and friends in St. Albert. I believe they've grown at – when I was there, I think we employed between 125 to 150 people. I think they're up to close to 200 people now. I'm not entirely sure.

Their focus is on creating community living options for people with disabilities that are affordable, that are accessible, and that are meaningful. They work very hard to find meaningful employment. Where employment is not possible, they're looking for volunteer opportunities. They're also looking at some really creative ways to support people with disabilities to age in place. I think all of the things that you hear about . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do just want to take the opportunity before I start to wish everybody in the House a very happy Pi Day. It is Pi Day today, so I would encourage everyone to take a moment to really appreciate the mathematical majesty that is the circle.

I'm very honoured today to be able to rise to respond to the Speech from the Throne, whose central message was: making life better for families. The choices this government has made are doing that, especially in my riding of Calgary-East.

We are making life better for families by cracking down on predatory lending. Payday lenders have been multiplying in my neighbourhood for years, preying on vulnerable people who are in a pinch, who need cash to see them through to their next paycheque. We reined in the ridiculously high interest rates, we brought in payment schedules, and we increased financial literacy. I now see more and more financial literacy and savings programs being offered in my neighbourhood. Momentum has been doing them for years, but now Sunrise Community Link and the Calgary Immigrant Women's Association are also doing them, giving people skills to save money and matching their savings so they can go to school, buy a car, or make a down payment. That's making life better.

We're making life better for families by raising the minimum wage. Disproportionately more people who live in my riding make minimum wage, and $15 per hour goes a long way towards having a little bit of extra money in your pocket, to being able to buy your child a new book or to pay for some strawberries in the winter. Maybe it means that you don't have to work as many hours and that you have more time to spend with loved ones, more time to spend upgrading your education, more time to spend learning English. That's making life better.

We're making life better for families by introducing the Alberta child tax benefit, which helps approximately 235,000 children in 130,000 families. Again, many families in my riding benefit from this. Antipoverty advocacy groups have been asking for this for years. It's a frightening statistic to me that 30 per cent of children who are living with a single mother are living in poverty. Being poor makes life harder. This is a fact. You've heard from many members of our caucus, who speak from personal experience, about only getting five hours of sleep between work shifts, about being unable to buy a winter coat. This child benefit is making life better.

We're making life better by introducing a school nutrition pilot program, by providing free lunch to every single student in some schools every day. Nutritious, delicious food means that they won't be hungry and that they can learn more effectively. This is positive on so many fronts. Food and food security are community issues, health issues, time issues. Not having to worry about making your kids' lunch in the morning on top of everything else you have to do, knowing that your child will have food they enjoy eating and that's good for them: that's making life better.

We're making life better by reducing school fees. We campaigned on this promise and are following through. This will put hundreds of dollars back into people's pockets every year, all the while ensuring that our public education system remains accessible to everyone, which is what public education is supposed to be. That's something that's making life better.

We're making life better by freezing university tuition. This was something I had the benefit of under a New Democrat government in B.C. in the late 1990s. I knew how much my tuition was going to be every semester, and I was able to budget accordingly. Everyone deserves a postsecondary education. Research shows that in our economy your chances of being employed are significantly better if you have some postsecondary training. We are making that more achievable for people, and that's making life better.

We're making life better by helping apprentices continue their training. Many of my constituents work in the trades. These are good jobs, jobs that support families. Electricians, heavy-duty mechanics, carpenters: many of them are in the course of upgrading their training or pursuing a new trade. We're providing a $1,000 grant to help with tuition and fees, and that is making life better.

We're making life better for families by investing in public transit. Later this year ground will be broken on the new 17th Avenue S.E. bus rapid transit, a project that was funded shortly after we were elected. People in my neighbourhood have been advocating for this project for at least a decade. It will make getting downtown faster, it will make it easier to live without a car, and it will mean that families like mine can bike to Inglewood on the river pathway in their own designated bike lane without having to worry about getting hit by a car on Blackfoot Trail. This, Mr. Speaker, is making life better.

We're making life better by banning door-to-door energy sales. I had these folks at my house multiple times last spring, and I had people calling me to tell me that they were out. I had community associations that were complaining at meetings. Having to deal with aggressive salespeople out to sell you things that you don't need under false pretenses is awful, and banning them is making life better.

We're making life better by making it easier for people to reduce their energy usage. People ask me all the time, especially when I'm door-knocking: when will we see a program for solar panels? Soon. When will we be able to get rebates for energy efficient appliances? Soon. Not only will these initiatives lower power bills as well as carbon footprints, but they'll put people to work right here in Alberta. That's making life better, Mr. Speaker.

I could go on. I could go on for a long time: reducing the small-business tax, renewing a school curriculum that's 30 years old, helping survivors of sexual assault, increasing vaccination rates, making it easier to get a birth certificate, putting transgender rights in the Human Rights Act, making work safe for farm workers, getting big money out of politics, increasing the energy supply from renewable resources, investing in affordable housing. We are making life better for Albertans every day, and we're doing it while being hopeful and positive.

It's sometimes hard to be optimistic these days. The tone of discourse in the world and in this province makes me angry and it makes me sad, and it makes me worried for the future of my children. It makes me worried for the world that they're going to have to live in on a daily basis. People operate in silos on social media, where they don't have to hear opinions that differ from theirs, and when they do hear those different opinions, they choose to call names or worse. This is true on all sides. I'm not blaming anyone in particular, but I would just ask that people try to engage using facts, real facts, not alternative ones.

We can start here in this House. People ask me if I'm excited to be back in session, and unfortunately I cannot honestly tell them that I am. The Westminster parliamentary system, within which we exist, is patriarchal and colonialist. It's designed to be combative, to be adversarial, to be theatrical. It is not necessarily designed to encourage thoughtful debate on issues. I think about this a lot and about what the solutions might be. To be honest, short of redesigning the whole system, I'm not really sure what can be done, but I do think that we can try to improve the tone, to be more respectful, to listen to each other. In the wake of the dreadful tragedy in Quebec the Premier said something on the steps of this building that made me hopeful. She said: to those out there giving rise to lies and to hate and to injustice, know that you only strengthen our desire for truth, for love, and for justice.

Now, I also, like the Member for Edmonton-Centre, hear from my constituents very frequently: I've never seen an MLA here before. To me, this says that for too long too many people have been left out of the conversation: First Nations people, whose territory we live on; refugees who have fled their countries in fear for their lives; the LGBTQ community. At the Pride brunch in Calgary last year I heard from some folks who said: before the NDP government, we never got anything from the government that we didn't have to fight tooth and nail for.

Now, I know that one of my passions is democratic engagement. I represent a riding that has very low voter turnout, and I hear from a lot of people that they don't vote because they don't think that it will change anything, that they haven't felt heard, that previous politicians didn't call them back, wouldn't give them the time of day. I strive – and I know that all of my colleagues do – to be open, honest, and accountable to all of our constituents. I think of everyone who has called me or written me or come to see me to talk about issues that matter to them. They give me questions to ask, policy to think about, causes to advocate for. Having government that you can talk to makes life better for Albertans. Having government that does what it promises is making life better. Having government that bases its decisions on science and facts is making life better. Having government that thinks about long-term prosperity by caring about education, air, land, and water is making life better.

Mr. Speaker, I'm proud to be part of a government that is making life better for Albertans every day and is constantly trying to improve accessibility, transparency, and accountability. Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Sherwood Park under 29(2)(a).

Ms McKittrick: Yeah. Mr. Speaker, I'm always very interested by the hon. member's discussion about her riding, and I wish I kind of knew her riding better. I understand that it's a very diverse riding with a lot of people who came here as immigrants and refugees and a lot of persons who do struggle. I was just wondering if the member could elaborate on how the direction of the throne speech is going to be beneficial, especially to the newcomers community.

10:40

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Luff: Yeah. Thanks very much to the member for that question. I do represent an incredibly diverse riding, one of the most diverse ridings in the whole province, I believe, and diverse because we have people from all over the world. There are certainly pockets where there are large populations of people from a certain country or geographical region, but we really have everyone in Calgary-East, and it's what makes my community so great. Within, you know, 10 blocks of my office I can eat food from probably over 20 countries, and I'm so fortunate to be able to have that.

I think a lot of the focus on education in the throne speech is going to be a huge help for newcomers to Canada. I know that education is a struggle for a lot of them because they come here and they have to retrain. I know, for instance, that Momentum does retraining opportunities to help people get involved in trades and to help people access good-paying jobs. Most of the people who access those programs are absolutely immigrants, so our apprenticeship training initiatives will help them hugely.

Reducing school fees: again, many of these people are, unfortunately, underemployed, so anything that can help to make their life better.

Raising minimum wage: a lot of them, unfortunately, are working minimum wage jobs, so making sure that the minimum wage is closer to a living wage is something that will help a lot of them as well as doing things like reducing school fees. A lot of them have a lot of kids. You know, if you have five or six kids, these school fee reductions are going to make a really big difference.

Also, before I sit down, I think I'd like to move to . . .

Mr. Bilous: No.

Ms Luff: No? Okay. I won't. I'll just sit down.

The Speaker: Any other questions under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing and hearing none, the Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I really appreciate this opportunity to speak to the Speech from the Throne. I am very proud to be part of a government that is making some very concerted efforts toward improving lives for everyday Albertans, and I appreciate the opportunity to speak, particularly, to how we are improving lives for indigenous people in this province as well.

As Minister of Indigenous Relations I know I've had the opportunity to travel this great province for the past just over 12 months. In that time I've had the opportunity to visit with chiefs and councils and community members from pretty much every reserve in the province of Alberta. I personally have visited as well 34 of the reserves and three of the Métis settlements and hope to within the next few months complete my visits to all communities so that we can make sure that the indigenous people in this province truly feel like they have an opportunity to be represented in this House, which they have every right to be, and of course over the last number of years they were never given that opportunity.

As some of the previous speakers have mentioned, when we show up at doorways and are told, "I have never seen an MLA" or "I have never seen a minister," we realize how small the contact group of the previous government was in terms of who they cared to talk to and therefore, I believe, in who they cared to represent. One of the things that we are doing that has not been done before is that we are making the basic assumption that we represent every single Albertan and not just special groups who are personal friends of the government. I think that's an important transition in this government.

As Indigenous Relations minister I go out into the communities. I speak to them about the things that are important to them, and I ask them that fundamental question: "What would make life better for you?" The response is: "We would really like to be considered to be Albertans for the very first time." Now, to me, that was almost a bizarre response. How can you imagine that you weren't Albertans all along? You live in Alberta, you've been in Alberta before Alberta became Alberta, and here you are.

They tell us that they've never been considered Albertans. The previous right-wing governments in this province have taken the position that there is a jurisdictional divide and that in that jurisdictional divide there is a responsibility for First Nations people that resides with the federal government, the major Crown, and that as the minor Crown we somehow look at this huge group of people in this province and say to them: "Well, I know that life is not very good. I know that on the United Nations scales your well-being is much less than the rest of the province. We know that the social determinants of health all indicate that your life is much more difficult and less successful than everyone else's. But we're still going to pass you off to someone else because we don't have to do anything."

To hear that that's been the response to this community over literally a hundred years in this province and, I think, particularly over the last 40 years, where we've had real resource revenue – we could have been working with the community to build communities, to build school systems, to build water systems, to enable people to come into the modern age and be equivalent to everyone else in this province. That hasn't been done, and I think it's time that we do that. This government thinks it's time that we do that, and we are taking a very bold and strong stance with regard to how we include the indigenous people in this province.

I'm very proud of a Speech from the Throne that says that the objective of this government is to ensure the well-being of people. Now, that's a word you hear a lot from us. We talk about people all the time. We talk about people with disabilities. We talk about people in the school systems. We talk about people receiving supports from child welfare. We talk about people who are building the economy through the development of industry and small businesses. But you'll notice that what we always do is that we talk about people first, and I think that's a primarily important difference in the way the government is working. Our concerns are about: how do we actually make life worth living in a way that is a life that we would all want? You know, many years ago a leader of our party, J.S. Woodsworth, said that we are to create for others what we would wish for ourselves. I think that's a fundamentally important truism, and it's one that this government has adopted.

When we look at families, we say: "What are some of the things that we know families are going to face? What are the things that are going to need to be addressed?" For example, families have children. That's a fundamental part of many families. So we have increased the amount of monies that are available for families to raise those children. We have increased the supports for the school system so that those children have teachers in their schools. We have increased the number of free meals that are provided in the school system so that those children are well fed so they can learn well.

We have increased the opportunity for indigenous people to speak not only to, you know, how they learn the things that we typically learn in school but how they are personally reflected in the school. We have signed agreements with Kee Tas Kee Now Tribal Council and with Maskwacis, and we're working with other communities. We allow them to bring forward information that will help to transform the schools. In fact, one of the pillars of the transformation of the curriculum review is the involvement of indigenous people in defining their own history, their own life experience, and their own hopes and aspirations as indigenous people. All of those kinds of things are reflections of our commitment to making life better for people and, in this case, better for indigenous people. We have multiple layers of success in these areas.

We're looking forward to the budget on Thursday because there are going to be a number of other areas. We've said all along that you can't have people live in communities where they don't have the resources that we have off those communities, in places where they don't have water, in places where they don't have adequate housing and where they don't have the supports they need to be successful.

You know, it just shocks me, I guess, from time to time when I hear people on the other side of the House make the comments that they should just be left to their own devices. I can't imagine why any society would want a group of people who consistently are found to be struggling more than everyone else – and then be surprised when those people enter into the rest of our society and struggle and end up higher on the scale of the issues that we all regret in our society, issues such as family violence or involvement with the courts or mental health or even physical health in the hospitals.

What we have decided, then, if all those things are true, is that we need to go in and do specific things to change all of the terrible circumstances that lead to a structural deficit. It's not a deficit in the people; the people are wonderful. The people have aspirations and are just like all of us who care for their children, who want to have transitions occur in society so that they can truly become participants. What's gotten in their way is a complete and constant neglect in terms of providing the resources, providing the supports, and bringing that voice here, into this Legislature, and saying: "We as a government care about you. You are Albertans. We will back up our word to you with the resources that are necessary to ensure that your likelihood of success is as great and as forward as the likelihood of success of everyone who lives off-reserve."

This is the whole message behind our Speech from the Throne. This is the message, that we are a people first, that as government we are going to help society make a transition at difficult times. We deeply regret that the economy has been so terrible over the last number of years, and we regret the fact that the previous government, who had oil at $100 a barrel, failed to find ways to ensure that they actually made lives different for people on a day-to-day basis.

How can that happen? We have all these resources. Instead, what they did was that they cut back and cut back and cut back, and they left us with, really, a perfect storm of a disaster: an economy that's based on a commodity that's not doing well, an infrastructure deficit that is devastating people's lives, and a history of neglect of the indigenous people. That's a three-part storm which has led to, I think, complete devastation of a community that, if they were simply given the supports that are necessary to be successful – the schools that everyone else has, the medical services that everyone else has, the opportunity for employment that everyone else has – would show us their great resilience, their great determination to do well, their commitment to their families, and success overall, just as we would wish for all other Albertans. That which we wish for ourselves, we wish for others.

You know, it is my intention as the Minister of Indigenous Relations to ensure that that plays itself out over the next couple of years in very specific and concrete ways. We are working on a whole variety of projects that will allow that structural change to occur, everything from our review of the consultation agreement with the indigenous communities to ensuring that indigenous people get on the agencies, boards, and commissions, which they were clearly not represented on under the previous government, to changes in the school system, to changes in the health system, to changes in the child welfare system. It's that kind of commitment, with very specific outcomes, that I think is very important and that we will deliver on.

So all I can say is: watch us over the next two years; you're going to see some fantastic things. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Okay. Under 29(2)(a), the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the hon. minister for his response to the throne speech. I was glad to hear him talk so much about his desire to reach out to indigenous people and Métis people.

I have a specific question. We have a great and huge Métis community in my constituency, in the Cypress Hills and southeastern Alberta, and not only have they contributed greatly to our culture and our way of life for hundreds of years; they've been an important part of our economy. At one of the meetings I was at with them recently, they expressed a great deal of concern about what they felt was an inequity, an unfairness where for some reason Métis people in the southern part of our province don't have harvest rights similar to what Métis people in the northern part of our province have. Please, Mr. Minister, I'd like to hear what you're hearing about this issue, what you can do to help our good people in the south, and what your solution might be.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much for the question. I do think this is a very important conversation to have. The Métis people clearly are great contributors to this province. In fact, you know, much of the development of Canada is based on Métis people coming across the country and developing the fur trade and opening up the west to settlers. In many ways they did so in a much more respectful way than many of the subsequent settlers in that they actually met with the local indigenous communities and joined in relationship with them and developed practices that were reflective and, I think, more respectful than perhaps we've ever done since. So we're very concerned about the Métis people.

Now, with regard to the specific question of Métis harvesting rights we have an unfortunate situation from the previous government where they simply cancelled the Métis harvesting rights across the province and sat down with their friends and said, "Let's pick a number of communities where we think Métis might exist" and literally pointed out on the map a number of communities, drew circles around those communities, and said, "There; Métis have harvesting rights in those communities," not based on any fundamental discussion about Métis people, where they live, or in consultation with the Métis people at all. For example, they didn't talk to the Metis Settlements General Council about this, did not talk to the Métis Nation of Alberta. They simply, in somebody's office, sat down and picked small areas. One of the devastating outcomes of that was that very few people understood that Métis people live in some parts of Alberta such as Cypress Hills, and they weren't put on the map.

So under the present government's plan we have begun a process of working with the Metis Settlements General Council and the Métis Nation of Alberta and some of the Métis harvester groups to rewrite the policy on Métis harvesting. One of the commitments we make is that there will be one Métis harvesting policy for the province. We're not picking selected areas and saying: these people have harvesting rights; other people don't.

We are in the middle of that process now. It's written into the framework agreement for the Métis Nation, which we announced about a month ago, and of course it's written into our consultation agreement with the Metis Settlements General Council. We anticipate that over the year – we take time to do these things; we're truly a consultative government – we will develop a policy, and I really hope next year to be back in this House announcing a policy.

I'd be happy to chat with the member any time about the particular concerns in your area. Thank you.

The Speaker: Any other questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?
Seeing and hearing none, the Minister of Health.

Member's Apology

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to begin by saying that I've been frustrated by some of the vitriol that's become part of public debate. Yesterday I regret that in response to questions from the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre I contributed to that. So I want to say that I sincerely apologize, and I'd ask that the members accept my apology and that my comment be withdrawn.*

I also ask that we adjourn debate.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 1

An Act to Reduce School Fees

[Debate adjourned March 9: Cortes-Vargas speaking]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my pleasure to rise in the House today to speak to Bill 1, An Act to Reduce School Fees, at second reading. In 2015 our government campaigned on a platform that would make life better for Alberta families, and among our major commitments was a pledge to reduce the burden of school fees on Alberta families. This follows decades of the erosion of what we've come to know of and are proud of in this province, a taxpayer-funded public education system. Over the years the fees that parents would have to pay increased to the point where September was a dreaded month. While parents may have looked forward to the return of children to school because they would not be underfoot in the home, they also dreaded and worried about how they were going to pay the ever-increasing amount of school fees that were shovelled onto their budgets to pay.

We've all seen first-hand and experienced the impact that these fees have had on Alberta families. My own experience comes from being raised in a family of six kids. My mom quit when they started coming in twos. The six children, of course, every fall were marched down to a shoe store named Levine's Shoes, on 142nd Street. It actually had a myna bird that talked. It was one of the thrills of going for new shoes. That was one of the things we budgeted for each year.

The second thing that I now know my mother, in particular, really dreaded was: how was she going to pay for the school fees for those six kids that she proudly trooped off to school every September in those brand new shoes? It's something that I've really wondered about for a long time: how in the world did she pull that off with six kids, especially in the two-year period when my father suffered a construction accident and was on workers' compensation for two years?

I know I lost my first tooth changing lines when my brother and I were on the same house league hockey team. I had busted my stick the week before at a game, and we didn't have enough money to buy a second hockey stick, so as we changed lines, we'd pass the stick to each other. He inadvertently whacked me in the mouth, and that was how I lost my first tooth. Times were a little tough during that period of time, yet those school fees got paid because it was an embarrassment for any parent not to come up with that cash to pay for those school fees.

Those fees from the '60s, when I was going to school, up to this period of time have done nothing but continue to increase, and the scope of them has increased as well. It's definitely a policy of this government to change that, to return, as I say, to a taxpayer-funded public education system that is truly one that looks to all Albertans to shoulder the cost of public education over our tax base to avoid the dreaded September blues that parents now face and will hopefully feel some relief from as a result of this legislation.

To the best extent possible, we will be returning to a true taxpayer-funded public education system in an effort to really make a dent in the costs that parents now face and make a commitment come true, and that is to help Alberta families when they need it most and to really make a difference in their lives, make their lives better in a small way. We'll continue on this path, as the Minister of Education has indicated, but right now what we'd be looking at doing with this bill is covering about 25 per cent of those costs that parents now have to pay out of pocket through our taxpayer-funded public education system improvements and the removal of some of these fees.

I call this legislation uncommon sense. Many people talk about common-sense legislation. Mr. Speaker, I call this uncommon-sense legislation. I think a lot of the things that we have done since we've been elected really are a factor of what one could classify as uncommon sense because what's been going on in the province over the last 45 years really wasn't sensical and has gotten us into some deep, deep financial trouble, which we are slowly working our way out of. Uncommon sense is what we will continue to provide.

This legislation will also provide the government with increased authority over all school fees. We intend to fund the elimination of fees for instructional supplies and materials and busing students to their designated schools for the 2017-2018 school year. Families will save more than $50 million annually as a result. Think about that, that transfer of money into the pockets of families, who can then do what they wish with it to benefit those individual children as they grow up. It could mean a myriad of things, but that is a very, very significant amount of money that families won't have to come up with.

It is part and parcel of what we truly believe to be a function of government, and that is to provide a publicly funded, taxpayer-paid-for education system that increases, as we progress throughout our term and hopefully through our second term that we may be privileged to be granted, to fully eliminate school fees that parents now have to suffer as a result of the erosion of the taxpayer-funded public education system that took place over the last 40 years.

Now, this $50 million annually is money that the parents of over 600,000 students can spend where they need to, on what they need to, and wherever they want to, whether that's on basics like groceries and the mortgage or saving for a family vacation. In consultation with educators and the school boards we'll redefine what a public education is and what parents should and should not be paying for.

School boards collect more than $200 million from Alberta families in various fees, and Bill 1, as I mentioned before, would cut this by one-quarter. We have our eyes on making further reductions in the years ahead. We're doing what we can in a very difficult economic situation, but we are making progress, and we will continue with that commitment to Alberta families as we move forward in the future.

This bill for now will prevent charges for things like textbooks, workbooks, paper, and much more, the things that you expect they will be provided with when you send your child to school. Yet over the decades these things have become extras that parents have been expected to fork out for. Parents may know these fees by various descriptions: instructional fees, instructional materials, basic fees, among other names. Really, what they've been paying for are the necessities that children would have to have in order to be able to go to school. Period. Regardless of what they are called, they cause significant financial strain on our families.

I often wondered, as I said before, how my mother and father ended up paying those school fees for their six kids as we trooped off each September. If we roll back through our family photo album, one thing that would strike you through the successive years, if you look at photographs of my mother proudly beside her six children, is that she always had the same coat for a lot of years. I'm thinking probably close to 20 years. It's a grey cloth coat that was her winter coat, and that never changed for a long time.

That coat is symbolic of some of the sacrifices that my family made, my parents made to ensure that those school fees got paid. I look at that grey coat that my mother wore for close to 20 years without ever getting a new one and realize that those are some of the things that parents in this province have had to do, to sacrifice to make sure that those school fees were paid for and they didn't have to suffer the embarrassment of asking for a subsidy or some other means of having them paid for under the table by the local school so that their kids would be able to carry on with their school year.

As I mentioned, parents may know these fees by various descriptions, but regardless of what they are called, they cause significant financial strain on our families. When you just roll that number in your mind again, that $50 million that with this Bill 1 we are going to be relieving Alberta families from having to pay, it's a monstrous amount of money that over the years has sort of built up as a deficit that was hidden.

We talk about the Alberta advantage and we talk about a low tax rate and so forth, but if you really go across all the pieces of legislation, all the departmental costs and fees, and you start adding these things up – $200 million here, $400 million in another, half a billion dollars in some other spot – fees that people are paying that aren't noted in the sort of Alberta tax rate advantage that was heralded by previous governments, you realize that there are lots of things that we ended up paying for under the table, disguised as some other type of a fee, in order that the previous government could herald itself as a low-tax regime, when in fact we were actually paying for things out of pocket in a way that wasn't really very progressive.

We're about to change that in the best way that we can: incrementally reducing the fees with Bill 1 that are charged to parents for instructional materials and basic fees, among other things. Poor planning and a lack of funding, as I said, from the previous government led to delays, so many have been left scrambling to arrange busing for their children to inner-city schools. In Calgary many families did their homework and chose a community to move to where it was expected that a new school would be built. That's just one more example of an inconvenience, of having to spend an hour a day travelling to and from school, as those families are charged $330 in fees per child.

The instructional fees that Edmonton public schools set at the school level in elementary is usually quite low, but it rises to $50 a child in junior high, and then it moves to $145 per child in high school. Parents with multiple children are struggling to pay fees throughout the province. Now, these charges come over and above an instructional supplies and materials fee which is charged to all students and which tops out at more than $200 for a student attending a high school with the Calgary board of education, Mr. Speaker. We are talking about a substantial amount of money.

I was actually quite taken aback when I heard that $50 million represented just 25 per cent of the school fees that parents have to pay right now for basic instructional materials and busing that we're going to be addressing with Bill 1. It's astounding that it's something that we're not able to address all at once, but given the economic situation we're doing the best we can to allow this substantial amount of money to be paid for by taxpayers in general rather than to force parents to pay it out of pocket and have to budget specifically, perhaps to have to sacrifice in other ways, every September to pay these school fees for their kids to go to school.

Allison Pike with the Alberta School Councils' Association has told me that families report to her that their annual school fees cost more than their presents under their tree at Christmas. Now, that is astounding. I've heard reports of families taking out loans and borrowing money against their homes just to send their children to public schools. This is not an advantage to Albertans, and we're addressing this. It's not right, and we're taking action.

Our initial focus to make life better for Alberta families with this Bill 1 will be on instructional supplies and materials fees because it is where we see a measure of equity. Nearly every school board charges this fee at some level, and removing this fee will lead to immediate savings for the parents of nearly 600,000 Alberta students. That truly, Mr. Speaker, is making life better for Alberta families in a way that they will notice right away. There are many sitting in this House right here today who will benefit from this legislation to varying degrees, and you can only imagine, sir, the difference it will make on the household budgets of hundreds of thousands of families.

I'm very, very proud of this piece of legislation. I know from talking to people in my constituency that it's being extremely warmly received. "It's about time," they are saying to us, "that we don't have to be suffering the burden of these school fees every September. We were wondering what was happening to our public education system. Thank goodness you're protecting it. We didn't think we'd ever get back to normal."

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Under 29(2)(a), Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I really enjoyed the member's speech. He mentioned a key phrase while he was speaking about common sense. I'm originally from Ontario, and the phrase "common sense" is something that I had lived through in the '90s with the conservative government calling it the "common-sense revolution." Common sense for the Conservative government at the time was cutting money for things like education, just like the member was speaking about. It's kind of reminiscent of what happened here in Alberta and why we ended up the way we have today with high school fees. I'm proud that our government is finally taking action to put money back in Albertans' pockets.

On the phrase "common sense" I wonder if the member thinks it's common sense that the Wildrose has said publicly that they plan to undo everything that the NDP has done. You know, they want to raise tuition. They want to roll back minimum wage. Even things like the Ukrainian-Canadian Heritage Day Act is something that they would repeal. So, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Member for Edmonton-McClung can tell us: is the Wildrose plan to cut these things really common sense in his opinion?

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd be happy to respond to the member's question with respect to the terminology that I used. I did very carefully implement the terminology "uncommon sense," knowing full well that in the '90s in Ontario common sense as a phraseology was adopted to describe what the then Ontario government thought was the right way to go in terms of an austerity-type budget, where they slashed and cut public expenses in an effort to get to a balanced budget. The deficit that was created as a result wasn't seen on the balance sheet, but it was seen in human cost.

That's what we're avoiding here. We're adopting a different policy, and I call it uncommon sense. It's maybe against the flow of many of those in this House in the opposition who think that the way to go is to achieve a balanced budget. Although that's a positive goal in and of itself, it's not necessarily the be-all, end-all. It's not a panacea, that some would have you believe. You do obviously want to pay your borrowed money back over time. But to do so in a measured way that doesn't hurt people, that doesn't throw people out of work, that doesn't add to the unemployment problem, to me, sir, is uncommon sense.

Our whole platform really speaks to me about uncommon sense in opposition to what the other side would have us do, and that is to treat people with respect and dignity, to realize that we are here not to serve an economy, that we are Albertans and citizens and the economy serves us. We are not cogs in a wheel. We are human beings. We're a society where we have a government that as a government is here to serve and to ensure that we don't hurt people. Over the long term it's the best policy that a government can have.

It's difficult for governments to think in terms of the long term because of the election cycle, but we're bound and determined to do just that and employ an uncommon-sense attitude and theme in everything we do so that we do return to a taxpayer-, publicly funded education system with respect to Bill 1 and that across the board, no matter what department we end up considering, we employ uncommon sense to ensure that nobody in this province is treated as a cog in the wheel and that any policy that we employ considers the public cost, the human damage that might be caused by a race to return to a balanced budget in a way that forces unemployment and loss of public services.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Any questions under 29(2)(a)?

The Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my privilege to rise in the House today to speak in favour of Bill 1, An Act to Reduce School Fees. I'm very proud to be part of the government introducing this bill. I think it's not only something that will make life better for Alberta families; it also means that we're keeping another one of our election promises. We are committed to the idea that every Alberta student, no matter where they live or what level of income their family has, deserves a high-quality education. Not only that, they deserve to be able to live within their communities with dignity. I'll get to that in a moment.

Now, what Bill 1 will do specifically is that it will take away the ability of a school board to charge parents for instructional supplies or materials and fees for students taking the bus to their designated school. Just to be clear, these would be fees, you know, for mandatory programs that would impact all the students at the school. It's important to note here that this won't have a negative impact on school budgets. Alberta Education will be providing funding to the school boards to make up the difference, so these changes should not affect the level of education or services that schools are currently providing.

Now, prior to us moving on this, school fees have varied a lot from school board to school board and sometimes even between schools in the same region. This is definitely true of my own riding of Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater, where we have four different school divisions and they're charging anywhere from no school fees to very substantial fees. You know, in the parts of the riding where these higher school fees are being charged, these are definitely eating into family budgets and making it hard for lower income families to get by.

This is something that I heard, well, I mean, while campaigning and, of course, afterwards as well. It makes me think back to a family that I met at Carol's Country Kitchen. As an aside, if you're going through Redwater and you want a really fine steak sandwich, that's where you want to go. In any event, I was there talking to people, and I met this wonderful family, five kids, and both parents worked. At that time – this was Sturgeon – the family rate just for school transportation fees was about $675 per family. This is something that was a struggle for this family, to come up with that money at the beginning of the school year.

I mean, many of us are parents here, and I think that we could all agree as parents that September is a particularly expensive month of the year for all of us. You've got only so many dollars and only so many things that you can spend that money on. What that meant for this family was that they weren't able to afford enrichment activities for their children along with their schooling. You know, because they had to pay these mandatory school fees, there were other types of educational activities that their children wouldn't be able to benefit from that others would.

Now, of course, this is something that when I spoke to people at the school boards – and I think I spoke to a principal about this as well – you know, they'd come back and say: well, I mean, if we have families that are facing some type of hardship, we can have these waived. In fact, a couple of them had a process like that. Now, that might be fine to say, but for those of us who represent – well, I don't want to say that it's just rural people in particular, but I definitely think it's true to say that for most rural people that I know, the very last thing they would ever do would be to go and ask for this type of waiver. Instead, they simply would not pay for the additions or struggle to be able to pay the fee. When I spoke at the beginning that I think this actually provides more of a dignified life, that's kind of what I'm talking about. It's not putting parents into this terrible position where they have to make that decision about whether they're going to ask, essentially, for charity or let their children do without.

It also, of course, speaks not just to additional educational activities but to how the child is going to be able to fit in with their peers because if you're struggling to come up with these types of school fees, there are other things that you aren't buying at the beginning of the year. In particular, you know, you're not going to be buying those nice new school clothes. Instead of going to school looking sharp like the other kids, you're going to be wearing maybe your older brother's hand-me-downs. Maybe you're going to have holes in your shoes. These are types of situations that I think it behooves us not to put children through if we don't have to. Thankfully, we're not a society that can't afford this type of support.

I think this is going to have maybe a bit of a disproportionate impact on the well-being of families for the amount of money that we'll spend, not simply because of the reduction in school fees themselves but when this actually impacts families and in what it allows families to do instead of paying the school fees. So I think it's definitely a benefit that way.

Now, my understanding is that overall across the province this should save families around $50 million, which is pretty substantial just the same, and that nearly every family should see some benefit from the bill. Now, of course, this is going to be dependent, as I said, on, you know, how much in school fees their particular school board is charging, but in any jurisdiction where some type of mandatory fee is being charged, there'll be a benefit.

So I'm very happy that I don't have to go back and face that family in Redwater and say: I'm sorry; you know, we weren't able to keep our promises. Instead, I can go and say: well, I mean, maybe we haven't abolished school fees altogether, but we've made a start, and working with your school board and the other school boards in the province, we look forward to a day when the type of education and educational enrichment that children receive will be totally independent of the income that their parents are able to make.

I guess, finally, in this present situation, where so many families are unfortunately having trouble, you know, making ends meet in the month, every little bit helps, and this is more than just a little bit. I know that next fall you're going to be seeing a lot of these families in Alberta that are going to be a little bit happier and feeling a little bit more secure as the school year begins.

All right. I hope all the members vote in favour of this bill. Thank you.

The Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing and hearing none, the Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to speak this morning on Bill 1, An Act to Reduce School Fees. Certainly, when I was door-knocking during the election and ever since then, school fees have been a topic that's been catching the attention of my constituents, and it's something that they're really grateful that our government is finally able to move on.

I just want to begin my speech this morning talking and maybe comparing and contrasting a little bit to what the folks in the opposition might do if the tables were turned here. You know, we've seen that the Conservative opposition, the third party now, had a chance to reduce school fees. We all know that they'd been in government for many decades, and under their leadership school fees grew and grew and grew to the point we're at today, where we're trying to reduce them. And even though we are doing a good job reducing them, there still remain some school fees that parents have to pay for. We know that under their watch and under their leadership they were just downloading those costs to families, Mr. Speaker, and we know that given the chance they would do that again.

You know, consider the Official Opposition. We've heard people running for various leadership races and even the members across the aisle themselves have said publicly that they would plan to undo all of the legislation and policies that our government has put into place. Mr. Speaker, that includes the bill that we're debating today. Although it hasn't passed yet, you know, it seems to me that this is something that they've spoken about undoing. Other legislation that we've passed that they've spoken about was protecting communities from wildfire.

Mr. Hanson: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Point of order noted. What's the point of order?
Stop the clock, please.

Point of Order Allegations against a Member

Mr. Hanson: Mr. Speaker, I've heard just about enough of the member opposite making allegations. Under 23(h), "makes allegations against [a] Member," and (i), "imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member." We've been very clear that there is nothing that this government is going to do in the next four years that cannot be undone. We have not specifically picked out any – well, in the next two years. There is nothing that this government – and I'll reaffirm that – is doing in their four-year term that cannot be undone in the next election, in 2019. We'll be very, very happy for Albertans to hear that.

An Hon. Member: No carbon tax?

Mr. Hanson: We will be looking at the carbon tax and Bill 6 specifically, but for the member to impute that we will be pulling the legislation in regard to Ukrainian day is absolutely ludicrous.

An Hon. Member: Or school fees.

Mr. Hanson: Or school fees. Thank you.

Ms Ganley: Mr. Speaker, I don't see this as a point of order. I actually don't know what it is we're talking about here because the member wasn't particularly clear, but I believe the hon. member was simply stating his view of the facts. They, obviously, have a different view of the facts. What we're talking about here is school fees. You know, obviously, this side of the House thinks that school fees should be lower. That's why we're introducing a bill to suggest that school fees should be lower. I'm perfectly well aware that if the members opposite were elected, they could go ahead and reverse that. They have every right to dislike the legislation; they have every right to object to the legislation. But I don't see how that's a point of order at all.

The Speaker: I must say that I don't believe this is a point of order in this situation as an opinion is being offered. The hon. members do have under 29(2)(a) an opportunity to address questions and issues to the speaker at the end, and I would encourage you to do that.

Please continue.

Mr. Westhead: Well, Mr. Speaker, the crankiness coming from the opposition . . .

The Speaker: Don't take advantage of it, hon. member.

Mr. Westhead: . . . is a good reminder about why we might want to revisit the daylight savings time, to see the effects it has on the opposition.

Debate Continued

Mr. Westhead: Mr. Speaker, I know that sometimes it takes people a little while to make their point, and the opposition are master craftsmen at taking a long time to make their point. I would appreciate the same kind of courtesy that we've extended to them by not calling points of order when they don't like what we have to say. I mean, when the member just got up on the point of order, he talked about undoing protection for workers' rights, allowing Ottawa to bring in a carbon pricing scheme instead of having a made-in-Alberta approach. It goes to show, you know, that what I was saying about what the opposition would do is exactly true.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to maybe talk about some of the more positive aspects of the bill rather than how the opposition would make families pay more. I'd like to talk about leaders in my community that are working hard for schoolchildren, people like Carol Picard. She is the chair of the Canadian Rockies public school board. Actually, just last year she was nominated and won the award for citizen of the year for Canmore. It's people like her and the people who work on their board and, of course, also the people who work at the Rocky View school board, another board in my jurisdiction. These people are doing amazing work for our kids. I know that they're making the best use of the dollars that are available to them to provide education for our children, and we're seeing those results. We've got kids doing great in their test results.

Also, another really interesting thing that Canadian Rockies public schools is doing is that they attract international students from overseas, so that brings more money into the school board. That's kind of an innovative way that school boards are making the best use of the options that they're given, and I'd really like to salute our school board trustees.

Mr. Speaker, it's no secret that my wife and I don't have any children ourselves. I know that when I was younger, one of the things that I thought to myself, just being uninformed and maybe uneducated and, you know, learning life as I was going along – at that time, when I was much younger, I had a mortgage, a brand new mortgage – was: "Jeez, why am I paying school fees or taxes for schools? I don't have kids."

So I thought about it more and kind of informed myself and realized that in Canada we have a social safety net, and we also have people that give generously through their taxes to support that social safety net. Then I realized that even without kids I had a role to play in forming that social safety net as well. You know, children that have a good education grow up to get good jobs, and then they become people like doctors, nurses, teachers, and as I grow older and maybe need a long-term care home one day, these are the people that will take care of me. It really made sense to me when I thought about it more deeply and about how as Canadians we look out for one another.

The most fair way to do that is through paying taxes, especially progressive income taxes, Mr. Speaker, not like the flat tax, that these folks over here would rather have us pay, where their rich friends get off scot-free and put the burden of taxes on everybody else.

Connolly: Shame.

Mr. Westhead: It is a shame, Mr. Speaker. You know, the Wildrose has some pretty far-out ideas that would put the burden back on Alberta families, and that's certainly not something I would support.

Speaking about taxes, something that we like to talk about on this side of the House is that Alberta, even with carbon pricing, still has the lowest taxes of any province in Canada, about a $7.5 billion advantage, Mr. Speaker. As much as they would like to drag Alberta down and talk Alberta down on the other side, on this side of the House we know that Alberta retains its advantage.

You know, I think that this reducing school fees program also complements and bolsters other programs that we're doing for schools such as the school nutrition program, Mr. Speaker. These things sort of dovetail together. I know the school nutrition program is in a pilot stage at this point, and we're looking to see how well it's working and will reinvestigate that at a later point. These are all things that parents have to think about when they're getting their kids ready to go to school.

I think back again to when I was younger and was much less informed than I am now. When I was in high school, I always had a good lunch, and I remember that kids would come around – I would get bullied when I was a kid – and take parts of my lunch. We would call these people vultures, Mr. Speaker. Looking back on that, that was a terrible term. When I think about it now, looking back on those times when people would take my lunch, those were probably the kids whose parents didn't have the money to send them to school with a lunch. You know, I think that's a sad fact. Probably sometimes these kids might have been bullies because they didn't know what else to do. They were hungry, and they were cranky. Thinking back about the way we would call them vultures, I regret that nowadays because I realize the situation they may have been in.

Speaking about making things better for schoolchildren, Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity a few years ago to volunteer for an organization called Stephen's backpacks. Now, this was a young man in Calgary. I think he might have been about 12 years old when he started this charity. He started the charity when he saw that kids didn't have school supplies when they went to school. What Stephen did was to create a charity where they would fill backpacks with school supplies and give them to less fortunate children. I had the opportunity to go and volunteer with this group, and it was a really heartwarming experience. Seeing everybody getting together and making it happen for those kids was great.

What else, Mr. Speaker? One thing I remember also as a young child was that a teacher really inspired me. I think it was in grade 2. I was really into creative writing. My sister was a writer, my dad was an English teacher in high school, so I really enjoyed writing. One of my teachers in grade 2 gave me a little notebook, and she said that she liked my writing so much that she wanted to encourage me to do that more. It was probably, like, a 50-cent notebook, but it's something I still remember to this day. It was pretty special.

Mr. Speaker, I just also want to talk a little bit about how this government, in addition to reducing school fees, is helping to build schools across the province. Coming up at the end of this month in the beautiful town of Cochrane, there is a brand new school opening, the RancheView school. It's pretty exciting because I know that Cochrane is a rapidly growing community. It was the second fastest growing municipality in Canada of the small municipalities according to the most recent census. I think they've grown by about 47 per cent over the last several years. In Cochrane, when a school like the RancheView school opens, it actually opens that capacity.

The PC governments failed to plan ahead for the growth that this vibrant and growing community was realizing. They made these announcements for schools, but they didn't put any funding behind them. The Auditor General has been clear about how much they dropped the ball on that. I'm proud that we're committing the money to also building the schools. I mean, it's great to reduce school fees, but if you don't have the schools and the teachers and the teaching assistants to go in those schools or even the money to build them, as the PCs failed to do – that's something that's important for people in the town of Cochrane, for example.

I also know that in Banff the Banff elementary school is undergoing a renovation, an expansion. Banff is a very unique situation. Because it's a tourist town and there are a lot of service workers, there are also a really high number of folks with English as a second language in Banff, which is great. I mean, we've got people new to Canada calling Banff their home and living the Canadian dream. I mean, people from all across Canada want to come and visit Banff, and a lot of people also like to come and work there. You get to work and play in this mountain paradise. We've got young children learning English, and we need to make sure that we're funding teachers to go into these schools, Mr. Speaker. You know, it's all well and good to say that you support education, as the opposition does, but you actually have to put the money behind this to hire those teachers, too.

I know they've complained about the unemployment situation in our province, and certainly that's something we're concerned about. We've got a jobs plan. The Minister of Economic Development and Trade is doing a fantastic job promoting our industries at home and abroad. But if you were to follow the plans of the Wildrose and cut funding for these crucial public programs, they'd make the unemployment situation worse. We wouldn't have teachers and education assistants in our classrooms. We wouldn't have nurses and housekeepers in our hospitals. You can't fire people and think that that's going to help the employment situation. Albertans are smarter than that, and they know the Wildrose is just full of hot air.

Mr. Speaker, what else do I have to say here? Oh, that's one thing: young moms in the operating room where I used to work. The operating room was a really neat place because we tended to have a lot of young staff members, and of course nursing is primarily a female-oriented position. With a lot of these moms having brand new babies and going on maternity leave, one of the first things that they're thinking about is: how am I going to take care of my kid? They have a shift work type of job, so they're thinking about daycare. I also think that our reducing school fees plays into our $25-a-day daycare program because it helps parents afford to take care of their kids and also send them to school.

So there are all of these different costs that parents have to afford, and what we're doing on this side of the House is making life more affordable for Albertans and making a difference in the things that matter in their lives whereas the folks in the opposition would rather jack those fees up.

You know, another thing about making life more affordable: those folks want to freeze the wages of these people making, like, $20 an hour. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Westhead: They want to freeze wages and impose unilateral wage freezes on workers, and that's something they actually campaigned against in 2013, when we were having the Bill 46 debate, where the government was going to shove the wage freezes down the throats of public-sector workers.

The Speaker: The Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the hon. member for his time and his points. I have a question for you, and I just kind of want to come at it in four ways. I said in my response to the throne speech that I was so glad to be part of a Wildrose campaign and a Wildrose caucus, I guess, candidates that twice, in 2012 and 2015, campaigned on one hundred per cent reducing mandatory school fees. We campaigned on one hundred per cent reducing mandatory school fees. I have not heard a single thing from this side that shows any possibility that we would waver on that or that we would do it differently. So I wondered where your comments came from. I wondered where your information came from. I wondered where your head and your heart were, to be honest with you. Then I wonder how you feel about your cabinet and your government and your broken promise. If memory serves me correctly, Mr. Speaker, the NDP campaigned on a 50 per cent reduction of mandatory school fees and delivered a 25 per cent reduction. As I said in my response to the throne, I applaud that. It's a step forward for all Alberta families. But it's partly a failure. Your government, your colleagues said 50 per cent; they achieved 25.

To me, it's a question of priorities. So often when we stand up on this side, Mr. Speaker, we're talking about where the money goes and where it could be better spent. I was out shovelling my walk this weekend and talking to my great neighbour. Usually I have to beat him to it, to shovelling my walk. I applaud you for talking about how good our schoolteachers are. My neighbour is a former schoolteacher who has impacted the lives of many, many Albertans, as all of our great teachers have, as I've had similar experiences. Thank you for mentioning that. It's never to be forgotten how good our front-line workers are.

I said to my neighbour: what do you think about the direction of Alberta? What do you think? He said some good things, and then he said: what concerns me most is the deficit, the debt, and the interest. I thought of that again when you were speaking. I understand this year's interest expense, Mr. Speaker, is $714 million. I heard from a colleague over here that this 25 per cent reduction is a $50 million saving for Alberta families. So $50 million into $714 million: my goodness, that's 14 years that we could have paid the other half if we wouldn't have that interest expense making rich people richer, if we could have had our priorities to where that money wasn't going to corporations, to bondholders, to pensions, if we could get that money that we take from Albertans, Albertans that work hard, whether it's private people or public people, and put it to the front lines, put it where it's going to do the most good. So that not only concerns me the most, but it concerns my neighbour the most.

I spoke in question period yesterday about Shell taking their capital out of Alberta's oil sands. I'm reading today that this government gave Shell $725 million . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, we're talking about school fees.

Mr. Barnes: I'm going to get there.

They gave them $725 million in 2015. Compare that to the interest. My goodness, how many schools could we build? How many teachers could we hire? And now we've given one of the biggest corporations in the whole world 14 years of those school fees that your government broke their promise on.

You know, another suggestion. High per capita spending: even the CBC put out in the last little while about how Alberta has the highest per capita spending, $2,700 per person per year. Surely to goodness, one of the things that I hear from Cypress-Medicine Hatters all the time is that where they are disappointed with your government is how it appears that you haven't looked for savings of any significance. I stood up and applauded when you reduced the wages for high-level executives.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're making lives better for families in Alberta through the act to reduce school fees, and I'm proud to be part of a government that is doing so. Overall this legislation will strike a balance between making life more affordable for Albertans immediately and giving us flexibility to see further reductions over time. Since Bill 1 was tabled last week, we have seen support from parents, teachers, school trustees, and many, many more.

I'm also incredibly proud of the hard work and collaboration demonstrated by schools in my riding of Stony Plain. Parkland school division, Evergreen Catholic, and a number of independent schools have decided to embrace a regional busing model, which benefits all of our children. As a region fewer buses are on our roads, and buses are being used more efficiently. This adds to safety for our children and certainty for all our families.

In the past few years Parkland school division has had to increase busing fees to families within the Parkland school division regional transportation service area in order to maintain the current level of transportation services available. Now, living in a rural area, where busing is not optional, this legislation will directly impact many families in my region every day by ensuring less financial strain on every family. Many of the children in rural areas live outside of walking distance.

For children living in town, it is incredibly important as well. With small children spending more time in child care, sometimes children leave from home and go to before school care or go to after school care and return home at the end of the day. This adds a measure of complication for our school divisions. And expecting a small child to walk long distances adds to the everyday worry for every parent. I know that as a parent it was incredibly important to me that I knew that my children were safe getting to and from school no matter where they had to travel from.

Mr. Speaker, the previous government had many, many opportunities to lower school fees. Today they tell us that they're concerned with making life more affordable for Albertans. I will say that the opposition likes to talk about how Albertans want a hand up, not a handout, and I hope they will consider this legislation a hand up for all Alberta families. I have never asked for a handout, but a hand up like this would have been very welcomed in my home.

When I was a single parent, I was spending my hard-earned money bettering myself and bettering the lives of my children by returning to college. The government of the day was not concerned about how much I as a parent dreaded September. There were many times I eked out $30 a week for groceries and necessities. Can you imagine how much $600 to $800 in school fees impacted my careful budget, asking my eldest daughter to wait one more month for winter boots because my budget didn't allow for three pairs in one month the month after school fees were due?

My children never got kicked off the bus for nonpayment, although I know many families that have had to deal with that reality. Your child gets kicked off the bus for nonpayment, so as a parent you can't go to work because you have no one to watch your young child. Hopefully, your employer is understanding because otherwise you lose your job. How do you ever get out from under that? Families I know have had to rely on payday loans to pay school fees. The amount of time it takes and the impact to the household budget to pay that off is incredible. The household bills, the rent due: they don't stop just because school fees are due. Not one family wants to be the family that has the stigma of having a meeting with the school to have those fees waived.

These are good, hard-working people, and they struggle to make ends meet every single month. They are not looking for charity, and most people I know wouldn't accept it if it were offered. They just need a break and a chance to get ahead.

With those words, Mr. Speaker, I encourage all members in this House to support this bill. It may seem insignificant to some, but to many families in Alberta it will be more significant than you can imagine.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Malkinson: That is correct, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you. Just a couple of quick comments and a question for the hon. member. You know, she talked in depth about how in rural areas busing is indeed a necessity. We very recently heard at length from the parties opposite, specifically the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, who also represents a rural riding, about priorities and that if we have a problem that is funding related, the solution is just worrying about how the money is spent. I was wondering what her thoughts were on that, considering that that same opposition, of course, wants to balance the budget overnight, as they've said on many occasions, and that the current deficit of this province, as we've mentioned many times during our budget debates, is more than the education and postsecondary budgets combined. I was wondering what your thoughts would be on that apparent position of the opposition, although they are for reducing school fees, which we can all agree is a very good thing. What are your thoughts on when there would be no teachers or schools for your kids to go to in their particular scenario?

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I have to say that the priorities that I believe we stand for are making life every day a little bit more affordable for Alberta families, and by doing so, we are actually allowing every citizen of Alberta to get ahead, not just some folks that this wouldn't impact. I can tell you that three years ago my daughter was in a class of 37. This year my daughter is in a class of 24 because we've built schools in our districts. That same daughter has learning disabilities, and she has an EA now. Before she had to share an EA with five other students. I think that with the wants and the priorities that come with making life more affordable every day, it is a chance for us to help all families in Alberta just get ahead by a little bit.

You know, yes, our deficit is definitely something that we need to discuss, and there's a plan in place to work on that as well, but everyday Albertans shouldn't have their lives and their services and their jobs impacted by the deficit of our province. I will tell you that as a nurse I wouldn't have had a job if the cuts had happened that the previous government had suggested should happen. I will tell you that a class of 37 would probably be one of the smaller classes that my daughter would have to attend if the cuts had happened that the government of the day was proposing.

Mr. Speaker, those are actually the reasons that I got into this position in the first place. As a parent and as a nurse watching my patients struggle to pay for things and watching my family struggle to pay for things and watching my child struggle in school and not having that help available to them and to find out that that little bit of help that was there was going to be taken away, this was not something that I was willing to put up with any longer. They say that in life there's got to be a time when you stand up, and that was my day to stand up, when that proposed budget came forward. I don't want my family and all of the families that I know, whether they live in the centre of Edmonton or the centre of Calgary or in our rural areas, impacted so negatively that we can't afford to send our children to school anymore. My child deserves just as good of an education, whether I'm a nurse, whether I'm a college student, or whether I'm an MLA, that everybody else's child in Alberta deserves.

Thank you, sir.

The Speaker: Any other questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? Calgary-Hawkwood.

Connolly: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the member for her speech. I know for myself when I was in high school, which wasn't too long ago, unlike many members of this House, in my English class there were over 40 kids. I think that was grade 11. If everyone showed up, there weren't enough chairs for everyone, and that was precisely from the cuts that were made by the previous government. There was a culture of cutting education and health care first and letting those people on the ground suffer the consequences.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm just looking at the clock, and I was wondering if...

Connolly: Keep going.

Mr. Malkinson: Oh, okay. I will keep going, then.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to stand and speak on Bill 1, An Act to Reduce School Fees. You know, I do a lot of door-knocking in my riding of Calgary-Currie. It is a very diverse inner-city riding. What that means is that if I go down a block in my riding, I could have everything from a supportive living Calgary Housing subsidized housing development to original elderly residents from when the area was first developed, just after World War II, to new families and young professionals who are just starting their families, like so many families did previous to them in the riding.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in accordance with Standing Order 4(2.1) the Assembly stands adjourned until 1:30 p.m.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, March 14, 2017

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with great pleasure that I would like to welcome the students and staff of l'école Richard Secord school for stopping by and visiting and looking first-hand at democracy in Alberta. L'école Richard Secord is one of the French immersion schools in my riding of Edmonton-Rutherford, and I couldn't be more happy that they're here today. They are accompanied today by their teachers, Ms Biette, Mr. Girard, and Mrs. Cooper, as well as parenting chaperones Ms Milne-Epp, Ms Musial, and Ms Amirsayafi. If I could ask them all to rise and receive the warm welcome of the House, please.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms McKittrick: Mr. Speaker, M. le Président, I would like to introduce to you and through you Wes Hosford elementary school. The students are with their teachers, Richard Henderson and Tanya Landiak, and with chaperones Claire Pearson, Deb Giguere, Colleen Helwig, Cori Willis, Kim Goodwin, Leslie Elliott, and Janet Steeves. The students asked me some really great questions as I was talking with them, and they decided that the age of voting should be age 12. I would like them to rise and to receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other school groups?

Seeing and hearing none, the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a privilege to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Carol Bigam. Carol Bigam is the president of the SouthWest Edmonton Seniors Association. There are over 20,000 people over the age of 55 in southwest Edmonton that her organization works to support. I'll be referring to SWESA in my member's statement. I would invite Carol to now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mr. Westhead: Mr. Speaker, it's an honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly Mr. Silvio Adamo who is the fire chief and director of protective services in the beautiful town of Banff. Chief Adamo has 30 years of experience keeping Albertans safe, and he was the incident commander during the Mount Royal Hotel fire last December in Banff, that successfully evacuated all guests without incident in the middle of the night. He is a brave and courageous leader and is supported by an equally talented and dedicated team of first responders. I'd like to thank Chief Adamo and his team for the work they do day in and day out to look out for our communities, and I will ask him to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much. It's a real honour for me today to welcome to the Legislature and to you, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Ruben Nelson, who is a long-time advocate for real leadership, adaptive leadership, foresight. I think he may have coined the term "wicked problems," and I think all of us have some sense that those are part and parcel of our daily bread. I would welcome Ruben to stand and be recognized by the Legislature.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

Justice System

Mr. Westhead: Mr. Speaker, lately we've heard it all from members of the opposition when it comes to the justice system. Last week the Leader of the Official Opposition said that we shouldn't be investing in our courts because we need to place things on matrices to find out where the problems are first. This government fundamentally disagrees, which is why we are investing in more Crown prosecutors and court clerks as well as pushing the federal government for more judges. This government understands that we need clear evidence and we need innovation. We also need to fix decades of PC government underfunding. We can't cut our way out of these problems.

Then we heard the opposition attack the triage protocol, which prioritizes serious and violent crimes like sexual assaults in our courts. A criminal law professor at the University of Alberta said that the Alberta government should be "applauded . . . for attempting to tackle the problem in such a direct and principled manner."

Mr. Speaker, government is about leadership, and leadership means having to make decisions. The opposition's do-nothing approach would mean that more violent cases would be thrown out without a trial. Somehow the opposition believes that by focusing on nothing, we get further ahead. That would hurt Alberta families. Survivors and victims deserve better. Albertans deserve leadership.

Mr. Speaker, this government is also making changes to Alberta's bail system to ensure that the right information is in front of the right person during bail hearings. This will ensure that the safety of Albertans is top of mind when these decisions are made.

This minister is working to address the entire justice system, not just one part of it. She has made tackling serious and violent crimes a clear priority, and she should be applauded for that. This minister will not back down when Albertans need her.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Government Policies

Mr. Nixon: Here's the reality for most Albertans outside the dome here in Alberta. They're hurting. They're hurting a lot. They've seen friends and neighbours lose their jobs and ma-and-pa shops close their doors, their parks shut down with no consultation, their farms and businesses attacked with misguided legislation, their children's and grandchildren's futures leveraged with unprecedented deficit and debt. They're worried for their future, for their children's future, and they feel like the very best of Alberta is slipping away. Imagine their frustration when they consistently see the arrogance and condescension from this government almost every single day.

The list is growing long, Mr. Speaker. We are embarrassing cousins if we don't like the carbon tax. We're xenophobic. And here's some free advice from the Premier. Can't afford the carbon tax? Take a bus and, quote, make better choices. People in my riding don't like this kind of talk. They're proud people, they're commonsense people, and they expect the government to have their backs. But old habits die hard with this NDP government. I asked simple questions about the devastating impacts of this government's policies on Albertans, and how did the Deputy Premier respond? She implied that opposition supporters and my constituents are "sewer rats."

It's shameful. Albertans can expect two more years of being talked down to, being treated like sewer rats instead of the great women and men who built this province. If the senior at A&W in Sundre is a sewer rat, if the rig worker from Peace River is a sewer rat, if the moms and dads in our cities who are worried about our province's future are sewer rats, if the over two-thirds of Albertans who hate the carbon tax are sewer rats, then I'm proud to stand with them.

We won't divide this province in half. We will unite our province behind common-sense values based on neighbourliness, compassion, and unbridled belief in the greatness of Albertans and the greatness of Alberta. And if that makes us sewer rats, Mr. Speaker, according to the NDP, then so be it.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I would note that the Minister of Health earlier in the session today apologized for the comment that she made earlier.

Blood Plasma Supply

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Health minister introduced the Voluntary Blood Donations Act. Many Canadians believe that we obtain our supply of blood and blood products solely from voluntary donations. We've been led to believe that that makes our blood supply safer and more secure, but it's not true.

Times change, Mr. Speaker, and so do medical treatments. Today Alberta spends some $200 million annually purchasing blood and plasma products from U.S. suppliers who rely on donors who are paid for their donations. Some ask: why don't we produce these products here in Canada? Well, Canadian Blood Services simply can't provide the necessary plasma to meet the demand. After 20 years of trying, CBS obtains only 17 per cent of the plasma needed for Canadian purposes from volunteer donors, which then has to be exported to the U.S. for processing. The rest comes from paid U.S. donors.

Now a private company wants to establish 10 plasma collection centres across Canada as well as a Canadian plasma processing facility. They want to invest over $400 million and employ 2,000 people in high-paying biomedical jobs, and they want to come to Alberta. They want to invest in our province, put Albertans to work, and diversify our economy. And the NDP's response: "Go away. We don't want you. We don't want your money, and we don't want your jobs." The NDP would rather send 200 million Alberta taxpayer dollars every year to highly profitable U.S. pharmaceutical corporations to buy plasma products obtained from paid American donors and then sink $100 million more into preserving union jobs at Canadian Blood Services.

Mr. Speaker, the NDP says that they're all about helping Alberta families, but what they're really all about is looking after their friends in the unions and using taxpayer resources to do it. Now, the NDP calls that a better way. Albertans call it something else, and they want a better government.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Seniors' Town Hall Meeting in Edmonton-Whitemud

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have many seniors as constituents in Edmonton-Whitemud. These seniors want a healthy and active life that is not burdened with difficulties maintaining their lifestyle, including family and community connections.

The SouthWest Edmonton Seniors Association, SWESA, operates in the burgeoning southwest quadrant of Edmonton. Besides providing opportunities to socialize, SWESA has educational sessions covering a wide variety of topics and several activity programs, including yoga and walking, to keep our seniors healthy and aging well in place. Mr. Speaker, I've heard from SWESA and many seniors in my riding that health care, particularly policies affecting the provision of pharmaceuticals, is a major concern for them.

On March 9 my constituency office organized a town hall at the Terwillegar rec centre. Presentations were made by pharmacists, professors from the University of Alberta, and the co-ordinator of Alberta comprehensive integrated services for seniors. Nearly 100 seniors were in attendance, and there was excellent community engagement throughout five presentations.

Five major recommendations emerged. First, Alberta needs a comprehensive, integrated care system to ensure that seniors have access to the services that they require. This would use community-based preventative and basic care and use both administrative and electronic supervision to treat the patient from initial assessment to palliative care. Second, programs like med-wise Alberta can teach seniors how to inquire about new medication, monitor its effectiveness and possible side effects, and follow up on their conditions. Third, pharmacists and nurses can reduce patient care costs by playing a larger role in providing health services. Fourth, the Alberta drug benefit list should prioritize clinical guidelines over cost efficiency when listing drugs. Fifth, Alberta needs a patient-based model where funding follows the patient through every stage of treatment.

These presentations were tied together by a common thread: our health system needs to improve collaboration among professionals, increase accountability at every stage of treatment, and commit to following best practices.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Farm Safety

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak about how farm safety is important to me and to our government.

March 12 to 18 is Canadian Agricultural Safety Week. "Agriculture is a way of life, but one with inherent risks. When it comes to physical safety, [farming] is considered the third most hazardous in Canada, and in terms of absolute numbers of fatalities it is deemed to be the most dangerous occupation," according to the rural and farm safety Ag for Life site. Your family is your pride and joy. Whether you are raising children, watching out for your partner, or checking in on dad after a long day in the field, you would do anything to keep them safe while preserving the farm experience for future generations.

Last year the Canadian Agricultural Safety Association introduced a national three-year campaign, Be an AgSafe Family. The focus in 2016 was children's safety, and this year AgSafe's theme is Appealing to Adults, which I believe is a fitting shift since adults have the responsibility to educate our children and others.

Mr. Speaker, my constituency, the beautiful riding of Stony Plain, has a rich agricultural heritage and is considered an agricultural services community. For more than a century hard-working farmers and ranchers have lived in the area. They flourished through the good seasons and persevered through the challenging seasons to continue to be a lifeline of our society. Some evenings I stop at the side of the road and I watch the combines and farmers hard at work. I know that although my day has been long, theirs has been much longer as I remember taking meals out to my stepdad in the field.

I believe safety is of paramount importance in our community. Mr. Speaker, our government provides a number of resources and tools available for farm owners, workers, and families to encourage the adoption of safe farm practices. FarmSafe Alberta is one tool that is available to help farmers to have safety management systems or a safety plan for their operations.

To all of our farmers province-wide: make every week farm safety week.

Thank you, sir.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Education Ministry Online Student Resources

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Serious concerns were raised by a parents' group about content on a site that can be accessed through Alberta Education's website. The government-funded site says: "a collective of resources specific to Alberta K-12 students, teachers, and school staff." According to the site itself it is funded by the Ministry of Education. The goal of this site is to provide a positive place where students can go to find resources, information and to find connections with local community supports.

We need to know that students are being listened to and supported, that teachers have the resources and the information and support that they need and that parents are consulted and informed and made aware of the materials that are presented to their children. Yesterday a parent group noticed that a link from the site went to a Facebook page with content that was not appropriate for children. Articles about sex positions, adult toys, sado-masochism and acts are not community resources for young students.

Can objectionable material be found on the Internet? Yes. And, obviously, children can access pretty much anything they want on the Internet through their phones and devices. But should we not have links to age-inappropriate government-approved websites? We should not. We need to respect students, parents, and teachers, who reasonably expect materials provided by and connected with our education system to be age appropriate and to promote a safe environment for all students.

I understand at this point that the Minister of Education has looked into this. We must respect the concerns of parents and make sure that the materials on and connected to our education resources contribute in a positive and healthy way to our education community.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund it is my pleasure to table five copies of the report covering the committee's activities during the 29th Legislature from December 2015 to December 2016. This report fulfills the requirements of Standing Order 55 and section 6(4)(c) of the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Act. This report will be posted on the Assembly's website, and copies are also available at the committee office.

Thank you.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Bill 202

Protecting Victims of Non-consensual Distribution of Intimate Images Act

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to request leave to introduce Bill 202, the Protecting Victims of Non-consensual Distribution of Intimate Images Act.

The intent of this bill is about ensuring Alberta has sufficient laws in place for victims of the sharing of nonconsensual intimate images, which is a crime. These changes will create a provincial tort law necessary to compensate victims of these devastating and humiliating acts. This bill will ensure that those who choose to use nonconsensual private images for financial gain will not be able to turn a profit at the expense of others.

This bill will also legislate protection for students under the School Act and the Education Act, to ensure student victims will not suffer further harm, by compelling principals to suspend the offender involved and possibly send the offender before a school board. Our hope is that there will also be an education component to this as well.

I hope that all members of this Assembly will work together with me, whether that will be through support or amendments, to ensure victims of the distribution of nonconsensual intimate images are protected.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 202 read a first time]

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Government Policies

Mr. Jean: Wildrose priorities are to cut taxes, shrink the deficit, support Alberta families, and grow the economy so that Albertans can get back to work. No surprise here. Cutting taxes, shrinking the deficit, and supporting families are the top priorities for the majority of this province. The only name that I will call these people is concerned Albertans, worried about the future of our province. The Premier brought in a carbon tax with no mandate, that is raising costs for Alberta families by up to $2,500 a year. Does the Premier believe that this step is making life more affordable for Albertans?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, of course, what I do believe is that when you talk about affordability, it's probably helpful to begin with the right numbers.

But more important, Mr. Speaker, is that we absolutely believe that it is our job to make life more affordable for Albertans. That is why, as you've probably heard before, our government is introducing a bill to cut back school fees by 25 per cent. That is why our government is capping electricity rates so that regular families don't have to have anxiety attacks around the kitchen table every month when the heating bill comes in. These are the kinds of things that make a difference for Alberta families. We are proud to be moving forward with them, and we won't stop.

Mr. Jean: That fear around the kitchen table is caused by this government.

The majority of Albertans say that the NDP is moving too slowly to balance budgets, and they're right. In fact, I'd suggest that the majority of Albertans also don't appreciate being talked down to. They don't like being called the embarrassing cousin of our country. They don't like being referred to as sewer rats. All of these insults because they don't agree with this NDP government's agenda.

Will the Premier commit today to end this divisive and hurtful rhetoric and begin to respect all Albertans regardless of where they come from or who they vote for?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, what I think actually would be hurtful to Albertans would be the agenda of the members opposite. For instance, they want to take $2 billion out of our operating expenses. Do you know where that would leave us? Let's just walk through it a little bit: seniors' benefit program, the whole program, over $350 million; all transportation for students, including rural students, $350 million. But more: eliminating funding for all special-needs students. And there's more: ending all student aid. You know what? That doesn't get you to $2 billion. There's more to come. The members opposite need to . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, that was not the question. I'm going to repeat it again. Albertans clearly don't like being called the embarrassing cousin. They don't like being referred to as sewer rats. All of these insults because they don't agree. I'm asking today: will the Premier commit to end this divisive and hurtful rhetoric and begin to respect all Albertans regardless of where they come from or who they vote for? Yes or no?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, what we are going to do is continue our focus on making life better for Alberta families, and we are going to do that by not telling them that it is their job to accept less and to cut back in their schools, to cut back in their hospitals, to throw people out of work just to balance the budget tomorrow, to me, an ideological agenda. That's not what Albertans voted for, and that is not what they will get.

The Speaker: Second main question.

Carbon Policies

Mr. Jean: The NDP's obsession with taxing carbon hurts our economy, and now it will hurt the environment, too. The environment minister has told large emitters that they can no longer pay their emission taxes with carbon offsets. Under the old system they could use offsets that came from projects like renewables that had actually reduced greenhouse gases. Now 70 per cent of the tax must be paid in cash so the NDP can then spend it on light bulbs, shower heads, and power bars. How exciting. This means less investment in reducing carbon and fewer jobs for Albertans. Why does the Premier possibly think this is a good idea?

Ms Phillips: Mr. Speaker, this government is committed to full compliance flexibility with respect to the specified gas emitters regulation. What we have done with the 30 per cent cap is that we have ensured that we have predictability for business. Historically the use of these credits has been just over 40 per cent, but it's dropped to as low as 3 per cent last year. The changes we made will help companies reduce emissions on-site, which is also a compliance option for companies. It's one companies take seriously. It's not one that the opposition takes seriously because they don't believe in climate change.

Mr. Jean: If our major emitters are discouraged from investing in renewables here in Alberta just to hand cash over to the government, how does that possibly help our province reduce emissions? This new regulation, put through, by the way, without consultation, has now sent another chill throughout our economy and our industry. It's created further uncertainty, it's hurting our competitiveness, and it will only mean fewer jobs for Albertans over the long term. This isn't about actually reducing emissions; it's just about new NDP slush funds. Why won't the Premier simply admit it to Albertans?

Ms Phillips: Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that when companies reduce their emissions, they also reduce their costs, and that allows them to free up capital in order to hire new people. It allows them to move the economy forward. Now, I know that the opposition has spent their time slinging mud at oil companies. Just yesterday he called out Suncor by name, dragging their reputation through the mud. On this side of the House we are committed to working with those companies to fund innovation, to reduce the carbon in the barrel, to repair our reputation, that that member sat in the federal House and did nothing about for a decade. [Disturbance in the gallery]

The Speaker: Excuse me.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! You're not part of these proceedings.

An Hon. Member: That's a Dipper.

The Speaker: Pardon me? Hon. member, the management of strangers is my responsibility.

The second supplemental.

Mr. Jean: The fact is that this carbon tax has been extremely bad news for Albertans since the very beginning. For businesses big and small it's hurt their ability to compete. For families it's made life less affordable, with higher gas and fuel bills. It's raising the price of everything for Albertans, and it will just keep getting more expensive under the NDP for years and years to come, and all the NDP can show for it is new light bulbs and shower heads to be installed by a company from Ontario. The carbon tax isn't working and is just making things worse. When will anyone in this government actually see it, admit it, and change course?

Ms Phillips: Mr. Speaker, I believe that 68,000 Albertans who have signed up already for the first phase of the efficiency programs will find it fairly shocking that they're being mocked and belittled by the Leader of the Official Opposition.

As to Cenovus, CNRL, Suncor, and a number of other companies, they believe they can reduce the carbon in the barrel, Mr. Speaker, but the Wildrose and the Leader of the Official Opposition talk them down, drag their reputation through the mud. These are some of the biggest employers in the province let alone the leader's own riding. These are companies that helped us out during the fire. They drive the Canadian economy, and all the Wildrose can do is insult them in this House.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Third main question.

Health Care Wait Times

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, the only reason I came back to politics was to make sure that what happened to my son in our health care system doesn't happen to any other family in Alberta. That's why I'm here, to fix the system. The motion that I introduced yesterday was one piece of that puzzle: studying wait times in our health care system, the barriers and costs associated, and looking at other provinces for solutions. Eminently reasonable. Why, then, did the Premier instruct her caucus to vote against this motion?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, let me begin by saying that I think all members of this House do want to see better outcomes in our health care system. We care about the families who need our health care system, and we care about the people who are in our health care system. That's why we want to run it the best way we can. One of the things that we believe fundamentally on this side of the House is that the way to do that is to run a publicly delivered, publicly funded system that everybody has access to no matter how much money they have, and that is the fundamental point that our members on this side of the House are attempting to protect. We were concerned that that was not reflected in what the member opposite was proposing in his motion.

Mr. Jean: The exact opposite, Mr. Speaker. That's exactly what this side of the House is protecting as well, and my story in the medical system isn't unique. I hear heartbreaking stories of families who have lost someone far too often. I apologize, but we all should be doing everything we possibly can to reduce barriers, to reduce wait times because there are very real results when we don't pay attention to the system. People die. If the Premier was in opposition, she would support this. She would support this motion. Does the Premier not believe in reducing wait times in our health care system, and if she doesn't believe in that, why not? Just say yes; pass the motion.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, I think we can all agree that we do need to reduce wait times and that we do need to focus on doing better within our health care system, and that is absolutely what our government is committed to. I've met with and talked with people who've had the same kind of experiences that the member opposite talks about and has experienced himself, and we all know we need to do better. It is just not always the case that we agree on the best way to get there. The disagreement that we saw yesterday was that we just didn't agree on the best way to get there, but we all agree that we need to get there. We will continue to focus our efforts on doing that in the best way possible.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, part of the motion was to look next door at Saskatchewan and B.C. Both of them have better systems. For instance, their outcomes outperform ours. For cataracts they wait 92 days; in Alberta we wait 200 days. For knee replacements they wait 130 days; we wait over 200. For hips it's 128 days; for us it's, again, over 200. We want to help fix this, and we just simply ask the NDP to look next door, but the NDP showed yesterday that they have no interest in improving wait times, not even one little bit. Is it just ideology that prevents the Premier from acknowledging what works in other provinces, or does she just not care?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, as I've said repeatedly, we do very much care, but we have a genuine disagreement on the best way to get to these outcomes that we're looking for. In fact, the Minister of Health can report extensively on the number of wait times that have been reduced under our watch. What we will say, though, is that we are not going to expand private-sector delivery of health care so that only wealthy people can get health care in a timely way. That system doesn't work. You just have to look at the millions upon millions upon millions of people south of the border who have no access to health care to know that that is not the path that we want to go down, nor do Albertans.

The Speaker: The leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. This government's out-of-control spending is a concern to all members on this side of the House, and now we know it's a concern to all Albertans. A Main-street poll says that 58 per cent of Albertans believe the NDP is doing a poor job of handling the economy. Twenty-three per cent of Albertans say that reducing spending to lower the deficit is their number one priority. To the Premier. You've ignored Albertans on Bill 6; you've ignored Albertans on the carbon tax. Premier, will you ignore Albertans again when it comes to this ballooning provincial deficit, or will you just chalk it up to angry "sewer rats"?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I've said before, our government is committed to having the backs of Albertans during this difficult time. What we are doing is focusing on making life better for Albertans by making life more affordable, by investing in job creation, and by supporting those incredibly important public services that we were just talking about in the last set of questions. These are the priorities of Albertans. We will not back down from them because that's what we promised them when we were elected, and that is what we will deliver.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, our PC caucus today launched our balanced budget plan. It outlines a plan that listens to Albertans because they don't want their kids and grandkids to have to pay for NDP incompetence. It will balance our budget by 2020. It includes a no front-line cuts guarantee. To the Finance minister. Toss out your key messages and your fearmongering. Now that we have shown you don't need to rack up $10 billion in debt every year, will you commit today to not create more billions when you introduce the next budget?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I did have a quick chance to look at the proposal put forward by the member opposite, and I have to say that this group couldn't balance the budget when oil was at a hundred dollars a barrel. Now they are proposing that they can cut $4 billion, slash taxes, protect health care, balance the budget in two and a half years. When exactly do they also plan to propose pigs and unicorns flying? They've got that amount of reality in their proposals.

Mr. McIver: No unicorns and lollipops, like the NDP, Mr. Speaker, but we are going to repeal the carbon tax. We would use the federal carbon tax. Instead of a green slush fund, we would actually use it to pay down the debt or make it revenue neutral and reduce other taxes to pay down the debt.

To the Finance minister: will you listen to what millions of Albertans are loudly telling you and repeal the carbon tax to pay off the debt faster? Or when you say that you have the backs of Albertans, do you really mean that you're on the backs of Albertans, making it heavier and heavier with the burden of future payments?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much for the question, Mr. Speaker. You know, that gang over there: seven of the last eight years they couldn't balance the budget, as our Premier said, when oil was $100 a barrel. We'll not take any lessons from that side. The kinds of things we're going to do are to prudently and cautiously bring down the deficit by keeping programs and services strong, by diversifying the economy, and by investing across this province so that more and more Albertans are put back to work.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Gay-straight Alliances in Schools

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In 2014 the Alberta Liberals led the province into the modern era by introducing legislation to make gay-straight alliances mandatory in any school where students request them. I'm proud to say that this is now the law. In recognition of this fact the Education minister wrote an open letter to Alberta students telling them: "You have rights that your schools will respect" and "I'm with you one hundred per cent." Now it appears that not all schools are respecting these rights. Is the Minister of Education still with these students one hundred per cent?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks very much for the question. Every student in Alberta deserves a caring and respectful and safe school in which to learn. We know that experiencing bullying can stress students, and then people don't do well in school and otherwise. We've been working with each of the school boards across the province to build policy to ensure that they are compliant with the law. The right to create a club, a GSA or a QSA, is the law here in the province of Alberta, and we work with individual schools and school boards to ensure compliance.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, the minister cited, quote, big cultural changes and certain religious beliefs as reasons why establishing GSAs in certain schools was complicated. Just yesterday he called some of the schools' attempts at creating GSA policies, quote, a bit clunky. End quote. I'm not sure what is complicated about these GSAs. It should be recognized that they also save lives, and the minister should be doing everything in his power to support them. So why isn't he? Why can't you declunkify this system?

Mr. Eggen: Thank you again for the question. Mr. Speaker, certainly, we are working diligently with all of our 61 school boards and all schools in the province of Alberta to build policy that's in compliance with the law. You know, we have seen the evolution of change in the province here over the last couple of years and before with the work on Bill 10 to create a safe and caring environment for students. We have seen progress, but I won't say that we have solved the issue thus far.

As per declunkifying, I'm certainly looking for more than just that. We're looking for a way by which . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, last year the Minister of Education ordered an investigation into schools refusing to comply with the GSA law. Apparently, the report revealed something so troubling that the minister now appears to be backtracking on his commitment and refusing to tell us why. Alberta students, parents, and school boards need clarity from the minister on this issue, not excuses. Do Albertans and Alberta students still have the legal right to form GSAs in all schools, or don't they?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The law is very clear that students do have the right to create clubs in their schools and that if they choose to name it a GSA or a QSA, they are certainly within the law to do so.

In regard to a particular school that I did use an inquiry process on, the report will be out very soon. Yes, it is complicated, but, you know, it's worth it every step of the way to ensure that we do have safe and caring environments for every single student. It's not just students that are in jeopardy that benefit, but all Albertans benefit from the equality and social justice that this implies.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

2:10 Misericordia and Royal Alexandra Hospitals

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many families in Edmonton-Meadowlark are concerned about the future of the Misericordia hospital. In Budget 2016 we allocated $20 million to consult on the future of the Royal Alexandra and the Misericordia. My question is for the Minister of Health. Can the minister please give us any updates on this file?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. I know that his constituents rely on both of these two acute-care hospitals, that for far too long were neglected under the former government. Certainly, he has been a very strong advocate for them. We are looking at finding ways that we can address the deferred maintenance that we've seen throughout our province. It is significant. The member is absolutely right that we spent $20 million in last year's budget to make sure that we have the right plans moving forward to support these hospitals and Edmontonians requiring their care.

Thank you.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: can you give us any details on the next steps in this process and what this means for funding moving forward?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, the capital planning process is under way. The submissions from AHS as well as other stakeholders and feedback from the community are important pieces as we continue to move forward in planning. I want to say that I, too, along with the hon. member am outraged that the previous government left our major hospital facilities in such disrepair while handing out bonuses and perks to many of their friends and insiders and appointed positions. These certainly don't reflect the values of this government. We've taken concrete action to make sure that we repeal those bad practices that the last government had and that we're putting Albertans' money to support Albertans.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Second supplemental.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: can you give us any details on how the government plans to address concerns about emergency wait times at the Misericordia?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The emergency room at the Mis was one of the very first ERs that I had an opportunity to visit in this capacity. Like many Edmontonians, I know that it can be better and that it should be better. In the past the opposition's only answer was to propose massive cuts and to continue to bring in health care premiums. Our government repealed those premiums and is working and moving forward in a prudent and fiscally responsible way. I look forward to keep working with the member who asked the question and with all Edmontonians to make sure that we're addressing this important, critical infrastructure in the city of Edmonton.

Municipal Infrastructure Funding

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, municipalities around the province are scratching their heads, wondering where $300 million from the nearly $700 million in the building Canada fund/PTIF disappeared to? At the Resource Stewardship Committee on May 11, 2016, the Minister of Infrastructure indicated that federal Minister Sohi wanted $300 million to go to municipal projects. Will the Minister of Infrastructure apologize for misleading the municipalities and getting their hopes up about the money?

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm sorry to disappoint the hon. member opposite, but over $280 million of that $300 million has been allocated already to municipal projects, with more to come. You know, he should check his facts.

Mr. Taylor: I'd like to see where that money is going to.

Given that Dave Breakwell, the ADM of corporate strategies and services at Alberta Infrastructure, indicated at Public Accounts on February 28, 2017, that "those projects have all gone forward since March 2016 for the federal government to approve the specific projects," to the Minister of Infrastructure: before we lose another construction season, why is the federal government vetoing the projects and holding up economic stimulus?

Mr. Mason: Well, I would say, Mr. Speaker, that I'm confused, but I really think it's the hon. member opposite that is confused. The federal government is not holding up projects. We've allocated over $280 million of federal infrastructure money towards municipal projects, and there's more to come. We've applied to the federal government for funding for the Springbank flood mitigation project. We've applied for money for a number of important initiatives. I don't know if the hon. member is against those things, but we need to fund LRT transit projects, flood mitigation, all of that.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Taylor: Well, Springbank still has a lot of hiccups and environmental things that have to happen both provincially and federally.

Given that the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation has decided to allow Ottawa to dictate to him how it's going to be, will the minister commit to tabling in this House the list of the BCF PTIF projects across Alberta that are being held up by behind-the-scenes business so municipalities across the province will know which provincial projects are coming?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Well, thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I don't know where that hon. member gets his information. We're working very well with the federal government. We're working very well with Alberta municipalities. Our government stands to make life better for Albertans and for Alberta families, and we're doing that by working with our federal counterparts, with our municipal counterparts to deliver the infrastructure that Albertans need to improve the quality of life and to create jobs for Alberta families.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Serenity

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In December, when every member of this House was expressing horror about Serenity's death, I suggested a small legislative change to immediately save the lives of children. It would simply amend the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act to compel any adult to call police if they know that a child is in need of intervention. But the government said that it didn't have the time to draft the bill before the Christmas recess. To the Premier. Children are still at risk. Why did you not make Serenity's law Bill 1 for this session?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can say without a doubt that I know that every single member of this Legislature is committed to getting it right for the children who are vulnerable in this province. That is why our government has ensured that the Department of Children's Services has the resources, the support that it needs to move forward with changes, and that is why we are working with all the members of this Legislature to figure out what the best possible actions are to go forward on this. As soon as those recommendations come from the panel, I look forward to acting on them within the near future.

Mr. Ellis: Why is she waiting for a panel? This law could be saving children's lives now.

Given that in the House last week the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre asked the new Children's Services minister twice if her ministry was investigating Serenity's death and twice she said nothing, so we'll take this as a definitive no and given that the RCMP are also critical to ensuring that Serenity gets justice, Minister, you must have been in contact with the RCMP. Are they investigating Serenity's death?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we were all deeply moved by the case involving Serenity, and that's why the Minister of Children's Services has been working so hard with all members of this House to ensure that moving forward, we have better processes in place. In terms of what the RCMP is or isn't investigating, the hon. member is well aware that I don't direct the RCMP's investigations. That would be highly inappropriate.

Mr. Ellis: Minister, this was a simple yes or no question.

Given that a little girl died in Alberta – she was starved, she was beaten, she was sexually assaulted, and her killer is still at large – and given that the ministerial panel is reviewing the death review process, but that will not provide justice for little Serenity, it seems that you want to forget about her. But we will not let you. To the same minister: what about Serenity? What are you doing about her? And use her name in the answer.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Without a doubt, every single member of this Legislature was very much touched by her story. Now, obviously, my answer saying that every single death triggers a review didn't, you know, lead to an answer and understanding. Absolutely we are reviewing Serenity's death. Absolutely. We want to ensure that we learn everything we can to make the system better. So, yes, we're investigating Serenity's death, and yes, we are investigating the death of every child in care because we want only the best for the children . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Workplace Legislation Review

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Labour minister announced a review of our province's workplace laws. These laws are not high on the radar of everyday Albertans I talk to. Thousands of Albertans are currently without work, and even those with a job are worried about losing it. This government's priorities are not helping a difficult situation. This government appears to be more focused on ideology and appeasing their labour activist friends than listening to the fears of everyday Albertans. Minister, will you please explain how you think this labour review will help create the jobs Albertans need now?

The Speaker: The Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. All Albertans deserve fair and family-friendly workplaces that support good jobs in a growing economy. Making life better for Albertans means helping them take care of their families and themselves. It means making sure that they have good jobs that will not fire them if they take time off to take care of a loved one who is ill or injured. Alberta businesses deserve the best laws that allow them to attract and retain the best in the business. We are going to review this workplace legislation, which has not been reviewed since the Calgary Winter Olympics.

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, given that Albertans want to go to work to care for themselves and their families and given that this government has shaken investor confidence by breaking contracts, increasing the minimum wage, shutting down coal, and ramming through other legislation and given that this government is delaying our economy's recovery by again signalling to investors to stay away for now, will the minister please explain how it's family friendly to kill jobs by introducing more uncertainty into the labour market when thousands of Albertans are without a job?

Ms Gray: Mr. Speaker, what I hear when the member opposite talks about us not doing this review is that he does not value the hard-working Albertans that we have in our province. It's very puzzling why the opposition would not want us talking to Albertans. Then, again, they do want to roll back the minimum wage. They're against cutting small-business taxes. They've opposed every action we've taken to make life better for families. So maybe it's not that surprising.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the labour review sends a signal that this government is going to continue to experiment with our economy by moving forward with their NDP ideology and given that entrepreneurs are sitting on the sidelines waiting for this government to provide a stable climate for investment and growth and given that this minister's priorities are not in line with the priorities of everyday Albertans, why is the minister sending negative signals to the market to wait and see what this government will do while we need jobs now?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Making sure that we have workplace legislation that works for businesses and Albertans is a priority. It's something that every Albertan deserves. Right now Alberta has the shortest amount of time that someone can go on compassionate care leave in Canada. Other Canadians have access to rules that mirror the federal system, and Alberta does not because we haven't reviewed the system in that long. Making sure that we are talking to Albertans and looking at critical issues like that is part of our responsibility as government. Just saying, "No; don't touch things," or "No; we're going to repeal it," is not reasonable.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mental Health Services in Central Alberta

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The lack of mental health beds in central Alberta hospitals is a growing issue. A Ponoka doctor told me that by a once temporary, now permanent system Calgary is sending eight mental health patients to take over beds created for local patients. I agree that Albertans should work together, but Calgary receives 1,300 per cent more capital health funding than all of central Alberta combined. How much more money do you need to give the Calgary health region before they can take care of their own mental health patients rather than sending them to underfunded central Alberta?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the very important question. Our government knows that we inherited a very fragmented and disjointed mental health system, which is why one of the first acts of our government was to appoint the mental health review panel to bring forward recommendations to our government on ways that we can improve system access across the province for Albertans in their home communities regardless of where they live.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Albertans would rather hear what the minister will actually really do rather than spout talking points, we need to focus on outcomes, not rhetoric. This issue is really affecting the lives of my friends, my family, and my constituents. We already spend over $2,000 more per capita than B.C. on health care. Other than raising taxes and throwing more money at the problem, by what real strategies will the minister fix AHS to ensure that central Albertans can actually receive mental health care in my region?

The Speaker: The associate minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the opportunity to elaborate further. Our government has committed $5.6 million in new operating funds toward implementing the recommendations of the mental health review. An important piece of that is bringing together stakeholders from across our province, from rural Alberta, from urban Alberta, and from remote areas of Alberta, to make sure that we're all working together – government, nonprofit community agencies, and indeed the corporate sector – to build a system that works for all Albertans regardless of where they live. We'll have more to say about that in the coming days.

Mr. Orr: And how much of that money will end up in central Alberta?

Mr. Speaker, given that today is not a cut day, that it is a save day, saving the lives of Albertans, I want the minister to know that mental health patients in central Alberta are unable to access health care in the community due to underfunded and overcrowded hospitals being taken up by patients from outside the region. Given that central Alberta makes up roughly one-tenth of the population yet only receives one-twentieth of the capital funding, what will the minister do to equalize the amount spent in central Alberta with other parts of the province? Or is this deliberate health care rationing?

The Speaker: Thank you.

The associate minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Again, our government is really committed to working to ensure that we have equitable health care access across the province, so that means expanding access where we can and with the limited resources we have because we're also committed to slowing down the growth in the health care system. You know what we're not committed to? We're not going to be cutting those capital projects that the member opposite is asking for us to invest in. We're not going to cut operating dollars for health care systems, unlike the members opposite keep asking us to. Mr. Speaker, we're investing in health care for Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

AAMDC Spring Convention Ministerial Forum

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Municipal leaders from across rural Alberta will gather next week in Edmonton for the annual spring AAMD and C conference. The highlight of that convention will be the ministerial forum next Wednesday morning. Now, out of respect to those leaders, all of cabinet used to attend these forums. Last fall less than half of the NDP cabinet made it out to attend. Now, two sets of departmental estimates have been scheduled for next Wednesday morning. To the chair of the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future: why have you scheduled estimates for Culture and Tourism at the same time as the AAMD and C ministerial forum? [interjections]

The Speaker: Just a moment. [interjections] Quiet, please. [interjections] Please be seated.

Hon. member, the question was directed to whom?

Dr. Starke: The chair of the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future.

The Speaker: Just seeing the notes, as the member well knows, as per page 506 from the second edition, "Questions to the Ministry or to a committee Chair concerning the proceedings or work of a committee, including its order of reference, may not be raised," only schedule-related items.

Mr. Chair.

Mr. Sucha: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is actually the first I've heard of it because it's a discussion between House leaders on when this happens. I believe that that date is still embargoed, so I don't even know if we're supposed to be talking about it in the House at this time.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, that wasn't that hard.

Given that rural leaders are vitally concerned about the many emerging issues in the Department of Education and given that I'm sure the Education minister is also well aware of these issues and would be eager to answer questions at the AAMD and C ministerial forum, to the chair of the Standing Committee on Families and Communities: why have you scheduled estimates for the Department of Education at the same time as the AAMD and C ministerial forum?

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, as a House leader the hon. member ought to realize that we do consult with the opposition with respect to the scheduling of budget estimates, and that has been the case in this instance. These dates have not been finalized. I take the hon. member's point, and we will consider carefully, in conjunction with opposition House leaders as we always do, the scheduling of these estimates.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that we've told them now three times about the conflict and they haven't changed the schedule yet, we're hoping the fourth time is the charm.

I'm going to ask a question of the new Municipal Affairs minister. Given that I'm sure you're wanting to cultivate a strong working relationship with rural municipal leaders, what are you doing, sir, to encourage all of your cabinet colleagues to attend next week's ministerial forum?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [interjection] Well, somebody over there said, "Whac-A-Mole," and it feels like Groundhog Day because the same thing keeps being said over and over.

I'm discussing with my caucus mates every day how important AAMD and C is to me. I can't wait to be there. Actually, in fact, the 21st is my birthday, and I'm going to be there from about 7 till who knows when because I'm committed to the members of the AAMD and C and to our municipal leaders. I'm very much looking forward to all of the conversations that I'm going to have and to working on municipal issues.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Capital Infrastructure Funding for Red Deer

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the MLA for Red Deer-North I am proud to represent a diverse and growing region. I have heard from my constituents that our infrastructure is out of date and not keeping pace with our growing population and of our role as a regional hub on the QE II. To the Minister of Transportation: what have you done to improve road infrastructure in Red Deer?

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Well, thanks very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for that question. I appreciate her strong advocacy on behalf of the people of Red Deer and central Alberta. Red Deer is fast becoming a major economic centre and a cultural engine in our province. Last year our government moved forward on the Gaetz Avenue interchange project, an $80 million project that will significantly improve critical transportation infrastructure. We stand up for the families of Alberta, including central Alberta. We're going to continue to do that through prudent investments in infrastructure.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

First supplemental.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Red Deer is an important centre for travellers and industry and that this growth has caused transportation infrastructure issues in areas such as the Taylor Drive intersection, highway 2A, and the Waskasoo Creek culvert, what future transportation projects can the residents of Red Deer count on in the upcoming year?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much for the question. Obviously, infrastructure throughout the province, including central Alberta, is a priority for this government as we strive to make life better for Alberta families. We're committed to supporting the infrastructure in the areas that the member has identified. I can't say more than that, but she needs to stay tuned.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Red Deer, the beautiful gem that it is, will continue to grow and given the significant infrastructure gap that was inherited from the previous government, what can the residents of Red Deer expect to see for infrastructure investment in their vibrant and diverse city?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much for the question, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member knows that I cannot talk about things that will be revealed in the budget on Thursday. But I can tell her that we put $20 million in the current capital plan for the Red Deer multiplex project and $9.7 million for the expansion of the obstetrics unit at Red Deer regional hospital.

Mr. Speaker, every time I drive down that highway, I see the work that's going on at Red Deer College, I see the interchange at Gaetz Avenue, I see Albertans' money at work to improve the quality of life for central Albertans' lives and families.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Research and Innovation Initiatives

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, I came to know that the federal government has an $800 million fund for innovation networks and clusters and that they are expected to decide in April or May how the funds will be doled out. Based on our population, if Alberta gets 10 to 12 per cent, that would be $80 million to $96 million. Can the minister confirm or deny that Alberta Innovates is in line to receive funding from this federal government program?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the question. As the member should know, the federal government has not tabled their budget yet, and until they do, you know, provinces will be watching eagerly to see how the innovation dollars will be spent.

But what I can assure the member is that recently, within the last two months, I led a trade mission with the Minister of Advanced Education and the three university presidents to meet with five different federal cabinet ministers to talk about Alberta's innovation priorities, and I look forward to telling the member all about them in the next question.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, given there are clusters and innovation networks popping up all over Alberta in new fields like geomatics in Lethbridge and unmanned vehicle systems in Medicine Hat and given that the fintech sector in Calgary and the computer gaming sector in Edmonton are showing signs of growth, what is the minister doing to ensure that Alberta's innovation networks and clusters like those in the master warehouse are able to access this funding?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll thank the member for the question. Just to fast-forward through the previous answer, there are three areas of priorities that we've collaborated on with the private sector, with entrepreneurs, with venture capitalists, with our post-secondaries, and researchers, and that's that we're focusing on health innovation, on smart agriculture, and on clean energy. These are Alberta's strengths. We're going to continue to leverage them and to work on them.

I'll tell you this much, Mr. Speaker. In the past year we consolidated the four Alberta Innovates corporations into one. We hired an incredible CEO to lead our Alberta Innovates. We are providing funding to ensure that we are supporting these industries. That party over there would cut . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, given that President Trump aims to reform H-1B visas such that computer programmers and entrepreneurs from India will no longer be indentured servants of Silicon Valley and given India's status as the number one country sending out migrants to the world, to the same minister: what are you doing to ensure that those economic immigrants leaving the U.S.A. choose Alberta as their home to create software and start-ups despite the NDP calling Albertans sewer rats?

Mr. Mason: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Point of order.

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, you know, there are a number of initiatives that our government is undertaking, and I want to remind the member and members opposite who continually try to run down our province that our government is standing up for Alberta. Last year we had the largest private-sector capital investment in Canada. We are leading and will lead the country in economic growth in 2017 and in 2018. We have the highest weekly earnings, the highest employment rate. We have the youngest population in Canada, one of the most educated. Our government is investing and working with organizations like Edmonton Economic Development and Calgary Economic Development to attract talent and companies here to Alberta.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Provincial Fiscal Deficit

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today the Progressive Conservative caucus released our balanced budget plan. In this plan we lay out how it would be possible to eliminate the deficit by 2020 and lay out a plan to pay off the debt. This was done by eliminating funding increases to the rate of population growth and without cutting funding to front-line services. To the Minister of Finance: will you admit to Albertans that we can return our provincial finances to balance without drastic cuts to services?

2:40

Mr. Ceci: Unlike the Premier, I haven't seen the plan that they talk about, two and a half years to balance, but it sounds like it's too good to be true. It sounds like a bit of a scam. If they were going door to door, they'd be illegal, I can tell you, in this province. What I can say is that we are prudently and thoughtfully bringing down the deficit, and then we'll attack the debt. Those are the things that Albertans will rely on in terms of programs and services and other things we're doing.

Mr. Rodney: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Point of order noted.
First supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this government likes to keep accusing us of always wanting to cut the budget and given that the PC balanced budget plan actually restores over a billion dollars in municipal infrastructure grants and almost a billion more to transportation funding, to the Minister of Finance: if our caucus can find a way to balance the budget four years earlier than your government while increasing funding for key priorities, why can't you?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much for the question. You know, someone in the back has done the math, and they say that the revenue math is wrong by $933 million, so you might want to look at that first.

Dr. Starke: Your numbers.

Mr. Ceci: No. This is your stuff.

Mr. Speaker, earlier today I met with a young man named Yusef. Yusef and his father, Mohamed, are very concerned about the costs going forward in this province. That's why we brought in Bill 1, which will reduce the cost of school fees by 25 per cent. That will give them more money in their pockets. Those are the things we're going to continue to do for Albertans.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that our caucus's balanced budget plan uses your numbers for revenue projections, includes modest increases to funding to meet growth populations and enrolment, funds critical infrastructure, balances the budget four years earlier, and has a plan to pay off the NDP borrowing, to the Finance minister: do you just want to use our plan on Thursday?

Mr. Ceci: Well, you know, I think I'll stick with the government plan, Mr. Speaker, the one that thousands of hours have been put into, the one that hundreds and dozens of people have been assisting with. That's the one that I talked about when I went around the province in terms of trying to find out what Albertans think. All of that is in the budget. You'll have to check on Thursday to see if any of your plan makes it. Here's a little note in advance: no, it doesn't.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Bill 203 Alberta Standard Time Act

Mr. Dang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and request leave to introduce a bill being Bill 203, the Alberta Standard Time Act.

Mr. Speaker, our government was elected on a mandate of change, and I am going to change time for Albertans. Alberta is one of the sunniest provinces in this country, and Albertans have overwhelmingly told us that they want the sunshine at the end of their day. Albertans work hard, they play hard, and they just want to let the sun shine in.

This week Albertans had to change their clocks in their homes, their cars, their offices, and their phone booths. On my watch, Mr. Speaker, Bill 203 will repeal the Daylight Saving Time Act and give hard-working Albertans consistent time year-round to save money, improve efficiencies, and make life better for Albertans.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion carried; Bill 203 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-North West, just before the returns and reports, I may have yesterday given you not enough time to explain, but again I ask that members, when introducing reports like this, are brief and are not including editorial comments.

Ms Jansen: Absolutely, and I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your patience.

I have three items to table, Mr. Speaker. The first is a Gauntlet article on the membership in Wildrose on Campus held by Wildrose MLAs and executives.

My second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is a copy of the poster for the antifeminist movie The Red Pill, sponsored by Wildrose on Campus and promoted by Rebel media.

Finally, a copy of the Wildrose on Campus constitution, with a special section detailing the aim to promote the Wildrose Party.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Yes. Mr. Speaker, I rise to table a document written on March 9 by Steve Penney, a professor in the Faculty of Law at the University of Alberta, supporting the actions our Minister of Justice is taking.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I rise to table five copies of an article in the Calgary Sun called Anti-bully Minister Sandra Jansen MIA from the Alberta Legislature Since "Electrician" Blast against Len Webber, with a quote from the MLA for Calgary-North West that says that he "should go back to being an electrician."

The Clerk: Tablings to the Clerk.

Mr. Cyr: I have two tablings, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: To the Clerk?

Mr. Cyr: The first tabling is an article: Manitoba Revenge Porn Law Aims to Empower Victims.

The second tabling is Cyberbullying Has "Hugely Disproportionate Impact on Women and Girls."

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Nixon: Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

The Speaker: Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. You seem so much alike.

Mr. Nixon: The Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills and I spend a lot of time together, but there is a slight height difference.

I just rise to table the appropriate number of copies of a column written by Rick Bell this morning called Mainstreet Poll Shows More Hurtin' Numbers for Notley NDP as They Attack Opposition "Sewer Rats." The column just goes on to show that it's not a good idea to try to shore up your polling numbers by calling Albertans sewer rats.

The Speaker: Could I use this opportunity to remind all members that there are differences between Tabling Returns and Reports and Tablings to the Clerk, so please pay more attention to that in the future.

I believe we are at points of order. Is that correct? It seemed for a moment that we may not have any today, but it appears that we have, from my count, four of them.

The first one was by the Government House Leader.

Point of Order Imputing Falsehoods against a Member

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills in his question made the statement that the government was calling Albertans sewer rats. This is a dreadful misrepresentation. The hon. Deputy Premier spoke in the House this morning and apologized for that comment.

2:50

I was present at the time that it was made, and in no way did she intend or, actually, could any reasonable person infer that she was calling Albertans sewer rats, Mr. Speaker. It was intemperate language that the minister has apologized for in this House. Now, obviously, the opposition wants to make as much hay out of that as possible, but they are clearly misrepresenting the words and the intent of the Deputy Premier with respect to that and completely ignoring the fact that she has apologized and withdrawn those comments.

Mr. Speaker, 23(h) is making "allegations against another Member," in this case against all members on this side; 23(i) is imputing "false or unavowed motives to another Member"; and 23(j) is using "abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder."

Nothing could be further from the truth than what the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills said. I understand his political motivation in trying to distort and to convince Albertans that the Deputy Premier meant something other than she did, but it ought not be accepted in this House. I'm quite concerned that in the various conservative parties across the way there seems to be a real looseness with the facts, and I'm compelled to stand up and point it out, Mr. Speaker, and ask that you bring the opposition to order with respect to this matter.

The Speaker: The deputy House leader.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd just like to point out that the member that made the comment wasn't in the House when the minister made her sort of apology this morning. I'm going to say that this is a matter of debate. You know, we've called points of order to stop members of the government, including senior ministers, from using derogatory statements about the opposition over and over and over again. We've continued to call points of order. They seem to ignore it even when it has been ruled as a point of order, so it doesn't seem to stop them. The Minister of Health used the reference to sewer rats, not us. She called down Albertans, not us. The term "sewer rats" will continue to be a matter of debate, as will embarrassing cousins, long into the future, so you might as well get used to it.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I couldn't help but pop up and react to the Government House Leader's remarks. In one statement he said that nothing offensive was said, and in the next statement he said that an apology was made. It can't be both, probably, so based on that alone, I would say that there's no point of order here. We all heard what was said in the House yesterday about sewer rats. It really points to a pattern on behalf of the government – calling Albertans sewer rats, embarrassing cousins, lots of other names, telling them that they make bad decisions, really being disrespectful to Albertans – and it's something that ought to stop.

The Speaker: On this particular matter I'd like to deliberate in consultation with checking precedent on this issue.

Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, I have a note that it was withdrawn. I'm assuming that's the case. Yes?

Member for Calgary-Lougheed, I believe you had a point of order.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Rodney: Yes. I trust this might be dispensed with quickly and efficiently. I'm calling the order at 2:40 p.m. The Minister of Finance used unparliamentary language, including words like "scam" and "illegal." There's a quick and easy answer, and that's simply that he apologize and withdraw the remarks.

Thank you.

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, this hon. House leader always thinks that it's just a simple matter of agreeing with him that he's always right and that we should just do the right thing and say, "Sure," but it's not that easy. The hon. Minister of Finance in answer to the question indicated that what the Progressive Conservative opposition was doing really was to be misleading. I think that it was clearly a matter of debate. I'm not talking about any particular member being misleading but about statements that I think were not going to lead the public to the correct conclusion. He used the allusion to the act where we as a government have made it clear that door-to-door sales in which products are not properly represented are not allowed in this province anymore, a good piece of legislation.

Quite frankly, I don't think that the language was unparliamentary at all. I think it's simply a matter of debate. It was a disagreement between members, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The deputy House leader for the Official Opposition.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I find it interesting that words like "misleading" and "scams" and "illegal" can be found as matters of debate, but terms like "sewer rats" are unparliamentary. I don't quite get the argument there. Either one is one or one is the other. You can't have both.

Now, I find it interesting that the Government House Leader used the situation of door-to-door sales. Now we have people, a company from Ontario, coming into people's houses and trying to upgrade . . . [interjections] Well, what's the difference? It's the same thing.

The Speaker: Hon. member . . .

Mr. Hanson: It's a matter of debate as well, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. member, please don't engage me when I'm speaking to you. Please. Are there any other points you'd like to make?

Mr. Hanson: That's fine. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to cite Standing Order 23(j): "abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder." Calling a document that another party puts in the Legislature a scam and misleading and illegal is certainly designed to create disorder in the House and, as such, ought to be ruled out of order.

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, since apparently everyone is going twice. I just rise to dispute what the member has to say. The comment was made in reference to a document. There's a difference between talking about people and talking about ideas. It was made about an idea, and that idea is that we can have all the front-line services we want, we can have no taxes at all, and it will just all be free. I think that that idea is a little bit silly.

On this side of the House we believe that we have to invest in things in order to get the services we need. Mr. Speaker, ultimately, this is the fundamental conversation of democracy, right? You know, are you willing to invest in things? Are things important enough to you that you're willing to invest in them? That is the fundamental difference that we have with the members on the opposite side of the House. We need to be able to have those conversations. We need to be able to talk about those ideas. If this is a point of order, I'd suggest that we really can't debate anything at all.

Thank you.

The Speaker: When I first heard the comments – and I don't recall; I don't have the Blues in front of me with respect to the scam – I do remember hearing the word "illegal." On first blush on hearing that, I thought it was in jest that the minister was making the comment. But it's clear that words like that continue to be said in this House and seem to have escalated, particularly in the last two days. I have cautioned several times, and not many people seem to be listening because it's coming up on all sides of the House that words are being used.

I think that in the future it would be wise for all members of this House to not use words like "rats" and "illegal" and "scam." In this particular instance I would caution the minister to be cautious about using the words even though they may be in jest because, as you see, it does cause upheaval in this House, and I hope that in the future both sides of the House will do it.

I don't particularly see a point of order at this particular time.

Orders of the Day Committee of Supply

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

Interim Supply Estimates 2017-18 General Revenue Fund and Lottery Fund

The Chair: Before we commence this afternoon's consideration of interim supply, I would like to review briefly the standing orders governing the speaking rotation. As provided for in Standing Order 59.02, the rotation in Standing Order 59.01(6) is deemed to apply, which is as follows:

- (a) the Minister, or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may make opening comments not to exceed 10 minutes,
- (b) for the hour that follows, members of the Official Opposition and the Minister, or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Member's behalf, may speak,
- (c) for the next 20 minutes, the members of the third party, if any, and the Minister or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak . . .
- (d.1) for the next 20 minutes, the members of any other party represented in the Assembly or any independent Members and the Minister, or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak,
- (e) for the next 20 minutes, private members of the Government caucus and the Minister or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak, and
- (f) for the time remaining, to the extent possible, the rotation outlined in clauses (b) to (e) shall apply with the speaking times set at 5 minutes as provided in Standing Order 59.02(1)(c).

During the first rotation speaking times are limited to 10 minutes. Once the first rotation is complete, speaking times are reduced to five minutes.

Provided that the Chair has been notified, a Minister and a private Member may combine their respective speaking times, with both taking and yielding the floor over the combined period.

Finally, as provided for in Government Motion 7, approved by the Assembly on March 7, 2017, the time allotted for consideration is three hours.

I will now recognize the hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance to move the estimates.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I would like to move the 2017-18 interim supply estimates for the offices of the Legislative Assembly and the government.

When passed, these interim supply estimates will authorize approximate spending of $30 million for the Legislative Assembly and $7.8 billion in expense funding, $936 million in capital investment funding, and $149 million in financial transactions and funding for the government, and $241 million for the transfers from the lottery fund to the general revenue fund. These interim supply estimates provide funding authorization that will allow the normal business of the province to continue while the Assembly takes the necessary time to review, debate, and approve the government's budget plans for the 2017-18 fiscal year. I should also add that these estimates will be fully debated as part of that process.

Madam Chair, the amounts in these interim supply estimates will provide the government and the Legislative Assembly with two months of funding. I believe that providing two months of funding is a prudent approach. It provides sufficient time to fully debate the budget, that I will table on Thursday, and therefore allows the Assembly the necessary time to do its work.

Madam Chair, for the benefit of the Assembly, let me say a few additional words about interim supply and how government arrived at the requested amounts that we have here for debate.

Treasury Board and Finance works with officials from across government to forecast the requirements for each department based on their expected costs, commitments, and the timing of payments that need to be made during the months of April and May 2017. Oftentimes as part of the regular course of business payments to certain partners are required at the beginning of the fiscal year. For example, in the case of Advanced Education certain payments are made to postsecondary institutions up front at the beginning of the fiscal year. Likewise, in the case of Agriculture and Forestry certain payments are made up front to the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation. Therefore – and let me emphasize this point – one cannot assume that the amounts before the Assembly today will simply be one-sixth of each ministry's final budgetary figure.

I'd like to remind all members of the Chamber that the government's budget will be tabled on Thursday at 3:15, at which point the detailed estimates for the full fiscal year will be made clear. Once full-year estimates are made public, I'm sure that we'll have a good and robust debate in this Chamber.

Madam Chair, before we debate these estimates, let me emphasize that this government is squarely focused on making lives better for Albertans. This interim supply will make life better for Albertans. Without the funding, many of the services Albertans depend on, like hospitals, schools, and housing for seniors, would be in jeopardy. Simply put, this interim supply is required to ensure that the basic services that Albertans rely on from their government are available when they need it.

On that note, Madam Chair, my colleagues and I will be happy to answer any questions as we continue our work to make life better for all Albertans.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner. Do you wish to combine your time?

Mr. Hunter: Yes, I do, Madam Chair. Thank you.

Minister, spring is right around the corner, and with spring comes pothole season. Last year Alberta Transportation needed over $372 million for the maintenance and preservation of provincial highways. Of the requested expense of over $301 million, how much of this interim supply request is going to fund highway maintenance and preservation?

Mr. Mason: I would prefer it if the hon. member would take his time and ask his questions, and I'll try and answer them when he's completed.

The Chair: Go ahead.

Mr. Hunter: All right, Madam Chair. Minister, municipalities are also looking for grants for water, waste water, public transit, airports, local road bridges, and special cost-shared paving projects. Does the minister have a dollar amount for how much of the $301 million in expense is going to the municipal grants?

Am I just reading this into the record, then, Madam Chair?

The Chair: It's my understanding that the minister would prefer to have all the questions. You get 10 minutes, and then he'll take 10 minutes to respond to it.

Am I understanding that correctly, Minister?

Mr. Mason: Yes.

3:10

Mr. Hunter: Okay. Last fall you signed agreements with the federal government for public transit and water and waste water. It is my understanding that there is still money left over from the federal grants that remains to be allocated to projects. Are there any federal dollars in this $301 million expected to be voted on, and is there any provincial cost sharing with the federal grants that can be found in this interim expense for transportation?

The next question, Madam Chair: are any dollars of this expense being directed to traffic safety services to run advertising campaigns for highway safety?

Next, Minister, you also have $218,640,000 in capital investment to spend in this interim supply, being capital projects like ring roads; highway twinning, widening, and expansion; interchanges, intersections, and safety upgrades; bridge construction rehabilitation; and water management infrastructure. Can the minister advise how many tenders are sitting on the shelf just waiting to be unleashed on the construction market once this money is voted on?

Next, can the minister indicate what is the dollar amount of the tenders on the shelf? If the minister does not have the tenders ready to go for all the capital investment, then I would like to understand why he needs this money now. I guess we'll stay tuned for the answers on that.

We know, Minister, that last year in your annual report you lapsed over $125 million in capital investment. In 2014-15 the lapse for capital investment was $343,696,000. My point is that if the minister cannot spend the money fast enough, why ask for it to be voted on now? Can the minister guarantee that the capital investment to be voted here in interim supply will be expended by June 1, 2017?

Madam Chair, can the minister advise how much of the $218,640,000 that the minister wishes to spend is derived from federal dollars? How much of this over $218 million is being directed to the Calgary ring road? Will there be any highway twinning; i.e., highway 3 in my area emerged from the $218 million. Where and what projects will you be doing?

Will there be any spending on the Springbank dry dam out of this $218 million? Can the minister advise how much of the $218 million is for land buyouts from freehold landowners for the Springbank dry dam? Is there any compensation for the Tsuut'ina Nation in the $218 million for the Springbank dry dam? Does the minister's legal opinion indicate consultation with Tsuut'ina is sufficient, or does the Tsuut'ina Nation have a veto over this project due to the impact on the reserve?

Does the minister agree that the McLean Creek option on our river to protect Calgary and other communities is starting to look a little bit more cost effective? What about the rehabilitation of other water control structures, like the Carseland-Bow headworks? Is there any funding here for that project?

Can the minister advise if there will be any interchanges, like highway 791 and highway 1, funded out of this $218 million?

Minister, you have $6,291,000 in financial transactions. Can you detail any land that will be bought, sold, or swapped with this amount? Consumables like gravel, sand, salt for highway maintenance also get recorded as financial transactions. Did you buy any for the provincial highways?

Finally, Minister, did the highways need more winter maintenance in winter 2016-17 than usual?

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. The member has asked a great many questions in his time, and I thank him very much for that. The questions that I can't answer right now: we'll endeavour to provide written answers to the member and to other members of the Assembly.

Madam Chair, just in general the spending for 2017 estimates – and this is based, of course, on last year's budget, about 17 per cent of last year's budget. So all of the issues that the member has raised have to fall within the previous budget. He's asked, for example, a number of questions that will be best answered in the actual budget that is coming down on Thursday. In other words, he's cleverly encouraging me to tell him what's in the budget on Thursday because he knows that I would get fired if I did that. I'm not saying that he's trying to get me fired, but, you know, in politics these kinds of things happen.

I can't really discuss what's going to be in the capital budget, but I can tell him that we are requesting – and the expenses: 2017-18 the estimated cash is $1,771,356,000. Seventeen per cent of that, as the member has indicated, is $301,131,000. Capital investment is based on $1,276,319,000, of which 17.1 per cent on the capital side is $218,640,000. Financial transactions is $16,291,000 for a total for the interim supply, Madam Chair, of $536,062,000.

It includes a number of things. The $301 million which he's asked about includes funding for programs, services, and support; to provide leadership and guidance in investment and capital planning strategies; standards for transportation infrastructure procurement policies and processes; contract implementation; new strategic procurement initiatives. It includes traffic safety services, which provide leadership and direction for transportation safety programs.

Ministry support services, Madam Chair, is funding for my office, the deputy's office, communications, human resources, and other corporate services. We fund also the ongoing operations of the Alberta Transportation Safety Board, which conducts driver review hearings and independent appeals of driver, vehicle, and safety decisions.

We do, as the member asked, a considerable amount of maintenance, which supports the structural and operational maintenance of all provincial highways and bridges; for example, snow removal, grass cutting, pavement line paving, crack sealing, pothole patching, and maintenance on roadway signs and gravel roads.

The previous government, of course, had engaged in a number of long-term P3 contracts, and those have to be supported financially. It includes structural and operational maintenance of all the provincial ring roads.

Preservation is an important piece of the budget, Madam Chair, to support preventative and corrective bridge maintenance, geotechnical erosion and landslide remediation program, and preventative and corrective pavement maintenance program.

Finally, it also supports assessment and support systems, which includes maintenance of items such as rest areas, vehicle inspection stations, ferries, provincial park roads, and public roads and bridges on First Nations land.

I'll get into the capital grant funding because the member asked about that. The green transit incentives program, or GreenTRIP, provides support for local, regional, and intermunicipal public transit throughout Alberta.

There's the community transit fund, the strategic transportation infrastructure program, which I know the hon. member is interested in because it provides financial assistance to rural and smaller municipalities for developing and maintaining key local transportation for structures such as local bridges, community airports, and resource roads. This was a very popular program in rural Alberta which was defunded by the previous government, and we have restored funding. It's a limited amount of funding, but it is significant to rural Alberta. It includes – let me just get the numbers here – $100 million in the capital plan for the STIP program over two years. Those are all important.

Now, with respect to – and I'll just pick a few of the questions because there are so many of them – the question he's asked about twinning, there's a substantial amount set aside in this budget for twinning. Of course, it's based on a proportion of last year's budget, but that includes providing sections of highway twinning, widening, and expansion to provide a safe and efficient provincial highway system. It includes final paving on newly resurfaced roadways, widening of existing paved surfaces, bypasses, and new construction. There are also items in here for interchanges, intersections, and safety upgrades, bridge construction, provincial highway rehabilitation, water management infrastructure, and flooding.

Now, he's asked a number of questions about Springbank. I can tell the hon. member that the Springbank project is proceeding as planned. We are in the process of arranging site visits in order to do appraisals on the land. We've purchased a number of parcels already.

With respect to issues that have come up recently with respect to the Tsuut'ina Nation, there has been considerable consultation with the Tsuut'ina up until now. I was a little surprised to hear them say that it hadn't taken place. I've met personally with the chief and a number of members of the council, and there have been a number of other face-to-face meetings and quite a bit of correspondence, which we can provide a summary of, but that doesn't mean that we don't need to do more and to do it better. I've reached out to the new chief – there's a new chief – with respect to this matter.

Many of the issues that they've raised in connection with environmental impacts on their land, for example, should be addressed in the report on the environmental impact assessment. That's been a yearly process. We've been out conducting the study over a full year so that we get all four seasons, and that will be completed at the end of this month. That work will be completed, and we're expecting that report sometime in the early summer. It should address a number of the issues that have been raised. If there are flags there, you know, then that is a good point of departure for further discussions and consultation and mitigation if that's actually required.

As far as we are concerned, we did look at this carefully and tried to balance the benefits of Springbank versus McLean Creek, and we haven't changed our opinion with respect to that matter. Particularly, the McLean Creek project would be significantly more threatening to a number of protected species, and the environmental impact, I think, would be much more severe than at Springbank. Ultimately, though, hon. member, our job and our intention is to protect people downstream, in Calgary and other communities, from a repeat of the 2013 flooding impacts.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills. Did you wish to combine your time?

Mr. Panda: I'm going to direct my questions to the Finance minister in whichever way he feels comfortable.

The Chair: Is that acceptable?

Mr. Ceci: I'll try the same thing he tried, 10 and 10.

The Chair: Based on that he may have a long list of questions?

Mr. Ceci: Yeah.

Mr. Panda: Then how do I get answers? Will you make note of each question? [interjection] Oh, he is being assisted by all of the backbenchers.

The Chair: Hon. member, you'll have 10 minutes, then, that you can speak and ask your questions.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Chair. Have you seen this document, Madam Chair? Do you have a copy of this on hand?

The Chair: Yes.

Mr. Panda: I'm going to refer to that. To me, Madam Chair, if the government was organized and if they had done their job, there would be no need for this interim supply. This interim supply is to keep the government running until the NDP do their job. I get that. They need to pass the budget. We understand that. But what are the reasons why your budget was not passed before interim supply was needed? We haven't heard that from the minister or any of the ministers. They haven't told us why they couldn't pass the budget before they asked for approval of this interim supply. I would like to hear that.

Mr. Yao: Why, Minister? Why?

Mr. Panda: Yeah. Is this the only government to pass an interim supply? Absolutely not. We understand that. Are there governments that can pass a budget without the need for interim supply? Yes. Absolutely yes. Then why is this government not choosing the best practices for passing budgets? How many other things in this supply bill will go against best practices? We don't have any details. We have zero details. If you look at this document, there are line items – they list all the departments, and they ask for millions and millions of dollars but zero details on that. We don't know.

I mean, we called it last year a blank cheque. That's what we called this supply bill last year when a similar document came through the House. We asked for more details and were refused last year. That's why we're trying hard this year to see if we can get any details. We were told to wait for the budget, to vote on this with confidence in the NDP government, that they knew best. This year is no different. There are still no details to be found anywhere in these documents. If any of the backbenchers there are wise enough to find details, please pass that on to me.

How can the government ask elected officials to vote on spending when all we have is the final number? We do not know where the money is going and what it is allocated for, how much this budget number is compared to years previous. We don't have all those details. How much debt this adds: we have no details.

I know the Finance minister says that beer is good, but I can't get details of the beer tax on this either. That's why I'm confused.

This supply bill is for two months, yet many of these numbers are much higher than one-sixth of the total budget. Now, I know that spending is not equal every month and that more money needs to be spent at certain times of the year, but how can we tell that from these numbers? We can't. [interjection] I'm coming to that. How do we know that the money allocated in this bill will be for necessary spending and cannot be multiplied by six? You're asking for two months. Do we try to then multiply it by six to get to the annual budget? I don't know. If we had any details, we could eliminate that as an option, but again we have no details.

We are here to represent our ridings, the people that elected us. Mayor Nenshi, my city's mayor, announced today that he hopes there is a large amount of funding for him in the budget. Yeah. Like the central Alberta folks here: they were looking for, you know, big money. Same thing with my mayor. My job is to defend my mayor here. When he is saying that he has to increase property taxes because of your uncampaigned-on carbon tax, I have to believe him. I have to believe him.

3:30

Looking at the Infrastructure budget, for example, we have no idea if Mayor Nenshi's wishes were granted. Looking at the Municipal Affairs budget, we have no idea if Mayor Nenshi's asks were fulfilled. In fact, we have no idea if anyone will get any money. There are many MLAs who meet regularly with their local municipalities, same as I meet with my councillors. I know you don't like to do town halls, but I'm sure you may be meeting with municipal officials.

When they ask us why we voted for any particular line item of this interim supply without having details, I can't say that I have blind trust in the Finance minister because he's a fellow Calgarian. No. I can't say that because he's not doing anything to create jobs in Calgary, so it is tough for me to defend that. That's why when we are being asked to vote on this like a blind man judging an art competition – it looks like that – I'm not comfortable to do it. That's why I need more details.

Madam Chair, I'm sitting in today for my colleague the MLA for Strathmore-Brooks, but I also want to ask the minister of economic development, who is not here . . . [interjections] Sorry. I meant to say – the Deputy Premier is here. She represents all the ministries, so if I can direct my questions to her through you.

For example, the Minister of Economic Development and Trade requested $400 million last year. I guess that was the money that they expensed last year. Now he is looking for $59 million more, almost 15 per cent of his annual budget, for two months, which is less than the money needed for two months of operations of economic development. Looking at the reduction, I'm hoping that it's a signal to cut his overall budget. I'm hoping that you are hearing the concerns of Albertans to restrain spending. I'm hoping that you're trying to rein in the spending based on that indication.

Also, of that $59 million that the economic development ministry is asking for, we don't know how much is going to AITC and CITC. Those are the two featured programs of this ministry, but we don't know which amounts are directed to those two programs. We don't know how much has been expended in 2016 on AITC and CITC. I've asked this minister and sometimes I've also asked other ministers: how many jobs have been created through these programs, AITC and CITC, during the 2016-17 fiscal year? Without knowing that, I don't know how to vote in favour of this money for 2017-18 because they haven't told us how many jobs they created in 2016-17.

I also note that $390,000 is being expended in capital, but is this ministry spending it on new computers or photocopiers? Whatever they're doing, they haven't told us. The minister also listed $8.335 million for financial transactions, implying that they had some consumables they might have used up. We don't know that. Those are the kinds of questions that we have, Madam Chair.

Of this approximately $59 million – that's what the economic development minister is asking for – he needs to advise us how much is going to fund line 1, which is ministry support services. In the same way, how much of that $59 million is going to line 2, which is economic development and small/medium enterprises? And of that $59 million, how much is going to fund line 3, which is trade and investment attraction? Can the minister tell us how much is going to fund science and innovation, which is line 4? Is there any funding going to jobs, investment, and diversification?

Thank you, Madam Chair.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much for the series of questions. I hope to be able to answer all of them. First of all, I just want to look at the preface for the interim supply and just read what it says. The hon. member was saying, you know: why isn't there more detail?

On the detail in the interim supply estimates, the preface says that it reports the requirements for public monies from the General Revenue Fund to fund the operations of the Offices of the Legislative Assembly and the Government from April 1, 2017 to May 31, 2017, inclusive... The amounts in these estimates address only those funding requirements for which the Government will need to obtain authority under an appropriation act.

So this is not the full budget. This is just a portion of the budget, and we're bringing that forward. It's addressing two months of expenditures, and that will give us the time we need to put forward a thoughtful and prudent budget, that we will table on March 16 and start to debate shortly thereafter.

The hon. member also wondered why we were taking that time, and I can say clearly that our government is taking the time to consult with Albertans, hear their thoughts and ideas on the fiscal and economic challenges we face as a province. We will have a full debate on all aspects of the budget in this House.

Why does it come in the middle of March? Why doesn't it come earlier, he suggested, so that we could get it passed before the end of March? I can tell you that of the previous 10 budgets that were tabled in this House, four were presented in April, three were presented in March, and three were presented in February, so there really is no one way of doing things, Madam Chair. A number of different tablings of the budget have taken place over the years across those three months that I talked about. Obviously, if you're going to be presenting in April or late March, then you would need to come up with interim supply, so this is really not anything that's unusual.

The two months of spending that we are talking about, the appropriations that we're talking about, is to ensure, as I mentioned before, that the normal course of government business can be carried out as we take the necessary time, again, to discuss and debate the budget. The opposition and all of the members of this House will have that opportunity through the Committee of Supply process.

We have had to work across government, the officials in my area, to forecast the requirements for each of the departments. Based on their expected costs and commitments and other things that they are required to do, payments for the period between April 1 and May 31, we've arrived at the amount of about $9.1 billion.

Madam Chair, if it's appropriate, I'll cede the rest of the answers to my colleague, who will address the specifics with regard to some of the ministries that the hon. member questioned.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Just to elaborate with regard to the line items that the member asked about in Economic Development and Trade, as was mentioned by my colleague the Minister of Finance, this is standard process for all government departments. In essence, interim supply guarantees that passage of a portion of the year's monetary requirements to ensure that operations can continue.

Some of the operations, of course, in the Ministry of Economic Development and Trade include our international trade offices, which are making really good progress and expanding opportunities in Asia in particular. We want to make sure that they can continue to operate for the up to two months that we want to allow for good, fulsome, and thoughtful debate in this House on the overall budget. We want to ensure that the community and regional economic supports intake happens on April 1 rather than having to wait for two months and leave families in the lurch. We want to continue providing the supports that have been available through grant programs to Alberta small businesses and have the general operations of the ministry continue to move forward.

There are some items that I believe in past years have required more than one-sixth of the payment to be made during that same portion of time. For example, Alberta Innovates has a number of grant programs. Some of those are required to be paid out more than one-sixth of the annual cost during this upfront period. Another one could be, again, for those international offices that we have. We do transfers to the federal government, so again the timing doesn't always line up that it could just be one-sixth. There's some variance with regard to those line items for sure.

In general I want to assure all members of this Assembly that we look forward to a thoughtful, engaging discussion on the entire budget, beginning on Thursday when we all get a chance to review the final documents and move forward through comprehensive debate. The passage of this interim supply will in no way impede our ability to go through each of the line items at that point in much more detail. I want to assure all members that, certainly, the amount that we're asking for in interim supply for Economic Development and Trade will not be the entire budget for that ministry. We will certainly have room for feedback from all members of this Assembly in that regard. It is important to us that we continue to have the operations of government continue while we allow for good, thoughtful, democratic debate.

We actually have in the Chamber right now the president of one of the largest unions that we have in Alberta, who represents many workers in the public service. We want to make sure that we continue to provide stability for those workers and for the union. So thank you very much to Guy Smith from AUPE for being here to observe some of the proceedings this afternoon, to make sure that we provide that stability to the public service, to the citizens who make sure that the direction set in this Assembly is implemented in a way that moves us forward as a province, supporting Alberta families and making their lives better.

Certainly, Economic Development and Trade is a key area of interest. You've heard us say that we are focused on making sure that we work to diversify the economy, making sure that we are continuing to grow the number of mortgage-paying jobs in this province, and making life more affordable. Economic Development and Trade certainly plays a key function in those first two in particular.

We certainly look forward to ongoing discussions and deliberations. I'd be happy to comment on other areas, as would my colleagues. Certainly, any ministry is on the table. We look forward to hearing your feedback, comments, and questions.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Hon. minister, do you wish to add? You still have a few minutes.

Mr. Ceci: Yes. Just to kind of close off that comment and my own previous comment to say that, you know, the budget is going to be tabled on March 16, in a couple of days. The member has many questions about what's in, what's out, how much are things reduced, or what's getting increases. I would just say to that member and all of the members in this House that all of those questions will be answered on Thursday when the budget is released. They can go through all the line items at that point, and many of their questions will be addressed by what's in the budget.

Lastly, Madam Chair, there are a number of ministers here who are pleased to address different ministries that will be questioned. You know, questions from the other side can be directed to people here, and we'll figure out who is to stand up and address them.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Did you want to continue the . . .

Mrs. Aheer: Yeah. If I could go back and forth with the ministers, if that's all right.

This is Education, so whoever would like to take that opportunity with me, I'd be very honoured.

Mr. Ceci: That's me. If you could just direct your questions, I'll take them down and answer.

Mrs. Aheer: Certainly. Thank you very much. With Education, we have a couple of questions, of course, regarding the numbers, and hopefully we'll be able to get some answers about this. I was wondering about the $721.5 million. What is this representing? What percentage of the upcoming budget does that represent? I'm assuming that we'll find out a little bit more about this coming up, but it would be very, very nice, I think, for Albertans to know at this point in time, in interim, what that percentage is and where that's going to be allocated.

Obviously, there are programs that need to be supplemented, so I think some of the questions we would have are around: what percentage of those dollars and what programs will be supplemented through those funds? There's not, obviously, a lot of clarity in these reports, so I think that that would be a very important piece of information to understand.

When we're going through these numbers and once we understand the percentage of that – the portion that I'd like to ask about is: is there an aspect within the ministry that is accountable for the expenditure of those funds, and who would that be? Again, the minister has talked many times about monitoring and evaluating the programs.

These are some questions that not only lie within interim supply but also other questions that we've been asking around the programs. Obviously, we're wondering about: what programs will be supplemented? How much is that going to cost? Who's going to be accountable for the expenditure? How is this monitored? How are the programs monitored, exactly? For example, outside of teachers' costs, how much of that $721.5 million will go directly into the classrooms? This is definitely an aspect that Albertans are very interested in understanding given the fact that so much is going on that is lacking in clarity these days with Albertans. These are a lot of the questions that we're getting.

Another important aspect is that within the throne speech the Premier had mentioned some important aspects about special needs. How will the children with special learning needs be supported by these dollars? Are there dedicated dollars that are coming from this allotment that will be going towards special-needs programs?

Will this amount be used to pay the school fees, transportation reductions, as were just delivered in Bill 1? Is that where these dollars are coming from for September 2017, or will the efficiencies that the government spoke of in Bill 1 come from that operations line? Again, we're looking at $15 million that has been promised by the government for transportation in Bill 1, so we're just wanting to know how that's being allocated and if that's coming from this particular budget.

In capital spending, in the supplementary supply bill you transferred almost $107 million – correct? – from capital to operating expenses, and that's the major chunk that's there. Does the $302-million in this interim supply reflect the reduced amount of capital funding, and how much would that be from that? If the previous transfer had not been made, would you then have required this amount plus the transfer amount? That would then total almost $409 million.

How many schools do you anticipate completing with this $302 million? There's been a lot of talk about school completions, building schools. We're just curious about how much of that fits into this dollar amount in the capital expense in supplementary supply. Are these projects on time and on budget? Is this $302 million what we can expect for expenses across the year, or is this amount weighted more heavily in the spring?

I just have a few more questions, Madam Chair. This is more about operations and maintenance and how they fall in the interim supply. Does the amount that's reflected in the transfer from capital reflect the transfer from capital in the supplementary supply? What operations and maintenance projects are being undertaken with this infusion of funds? Also, was the transfer in supplementary supply a direct attempt to offset the carbon levy? Again, this is something that's very important, I think, for Albertans to have clarity and to understand where the dollars are going. Will the increase to operations and maintenance be continued next year?

Could this funding for operations and maintenance include green or alternative energy initiatives? And if those initiatives are there, how are we going to make sure that Albertans understand that, the dollar figures, and how dollars are being directed from those projects into green initiative projects? Is there a priority list of these operations and maintenance projects? The list, again, would include the funding for the O and M, for the alternative energy request, transfers, all of that. Also, with regard to the priorities, what was the consultation process, and who participated?

Finally, Madam Chair, I just have a couple of questions on the financial transfers. What is this transaction? I would love some clarity on that. Where did the money come from, and where did it go to? What's it for? And how will that impact the upcoming budget?

Thank you so much.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. Thank you for the questions, hon. member. First of all, let me just say by way of background that Treasury Board and Finance has requested that ministries allow for interim supply for the period of April 1 to May 31, 2017, at which time it's anticipated that our Budget 2017 will be passed in the Legislative Assembly. That's why we've come forward with these requests for interim for Education and every other ministry. Based on the interim supply period of approximately two months in the new fiscal year, Education's spending targets are estimated to be just over $1 billion.

It's broken down, as the hon. member has gone through – and I'll just for the basis of everyone here be clear – as $721.5 million for operating of schools. So let's just spend a moment talking about the operating of schools and how that's undertaken. The school boards across the province are the delivery mechanisms for the operations of schools. They have identified budgets, and they bring those forward to the Education minister. That ministry works with those school boards to ensure that the needs identified in the request for funding meet the Education Act.

The Education Act is clear in terms of what needs to be done to address the primary education of Albertans and what those monies can be spent on. So there's an accountability or a compliance, if you will, with the request for funds and the kinds of things they could be spent on, and then that gets reported during the course of the year from the various school boards to the Ministry of Education. Those operating dollars that are identified in the first line, $721.5 million, have been allocated through agreements with the school boards. That's what they will go to do, to address the needs of two months' of funding for schools.

I would just maybe jump from that to something to do with Bill 1 that was asked about in terms of: you know, are these monies going to address the 25 per cent reduction in school fees, that this government has said we will institute as of September 2017? The quick answer is: no, none of these funds that are identified here will go to offset any reduction in fees starting in September 2017. That will be the subject of further work after the budget is passed. I would just clarify that point, I guess.

The next line number is $302.6 million for capital investment in school facilities, and those monies will be used to deliver to school boards, who will be using some of those monies, not all of them – of course, some of those monies will be the subject of expenditures for new school buildings and modernizations of schools, and the cash flow there will continue to make those things possible. Off the top of my head I don't know the exact number of completions that will occur with this $302.6 million or the exact number of modernizations that will conclude with these monies, but to be sure, some of those monies will be for those purposes.

Some of the monies will be going to school boards across this province, and they will use them for the improvement of their facilities as they have identified through budget plans, that are, as I said earlier, made available to the Ministry of Education and ultimately reconciled with: you know, does it meet the act, and if it does meet the act, are they funds that can then be disbursed for those purposes?

One other question on capital investment was asked, and that was in relation to, you know, the movement from capital to operational funding on improvements to schools that improve the facility less than five years. There's an effort to try and put monies in the operational budget that are appropriate for improvements to schools that aren't capital in nature and to take that money out of capital so that during the year there's not an additional hit to, I guess, the deficit or a request for funds to be moved from capital to operations and reported on an operational basis and that then increases the deficit during the year. So this is a positive thing that's being done.

With regard to that $302.6 million I'm not able to confirm how much of that is changed as a result of this transfer of accounting difference so that we treat the expenditure of funds the proper way and account for them the proper way as opposed to putting them in capital and then, partway through the year, transferring them.

You know, the education of children in this province, I think we would all agree, is a top priority for everyone. The interim supply here means that stable funding for school boards can occur and that students currently enrolled in Alberta schools won't see any disruption in their attendance.

This is a continuation of business that we presented in Budget 2016 and covers the 2016-17 fiscal year, which ends on March 31. Stakeholders won't notice the difference in anything that's taking place as a result of coming forward with this interim supply as their current funding will be maintained. There will be no impact on them or their ability to provide services, nor will there be an impact on the ability of any young Albertan to go to school. The funding covers all regular operations, including school capital commitments, and it is a matter of regular course of business to present it here.

With regard to specific questions about special needs – you know, do they have to be concerned, perhaps, that something will change as a result of the numbers in this interim supply? – I would just want to reiterate that no school business will change for anyone as a result of bringing forward this interim supply, debating it, and passing it later. It is business as usual for Alberta schoolchildren.

I'll just see if there are additional questions here that I can address. I think I answered the way the expenditure of funds is monitored, how much classrooms will or won't get, and the percentage of operating here.

As I said earlier in reference to my introductions, this is not to be construed as one-sixth of the total amount necessary for the Education ministry and the school boards around the province. It's a billion dollars, and it's broken up this way because in many cases school boards need some upfront funding to make sure that they have everything they require. We are making sure that in doing that, Madam Chair, we are taking care of the important youth who are in our schools. It's not to be construed as one-sixth; it is to be construed as necessary funds. It's necessary at this time for the work of school boards to continue. The budget that we will table on March 16, in two days, will have all of the line items identified in it, both increases, decreases and other kinds of things that people are looking for.

The Chair: That concludes the time for the Official Opposition, the first hour. Oh, I guess we've got six more minutes. Is there anyone else in the Official Opposition who would wish to ask any questions? No? Okay.

Then we'll move on to the next segment for the third party. Any hon. member from the third party wishing to ask questions? No? All right.

Then we would move on to any other party represented. No questions?

We will move, then, to private members of the government caucus. The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Connolly: Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Did you want to go back and forth?

Connolly: I would prefer to go back and forth, but it's up to the ministers. I'll mostly be talking to the Minister of Health and the Associate Minister of Health if that's all right with you both, to go back and forth? Perfect. I assume that the head nod was a yes.

First of all, I'd like to thank you both, the Associate Minister of Health and the Minister of Health, for all the work you've been doing over the past year to make sure that we've constrained our spending in health care while maintaining front-line services. It's truly appreciated. I know I have a lot of nurses and doctors in my riding of Calgary-Hawkwood who truly appreciate that we are trying our best to support the front-line services while at the same time cutting spending where it is possible.

Actually, one of the main things that I've heard from my constituents is about the compensation for physicians. I understand that we need interim supply to fund operations, including the compensation for physicians, until the budget is passed, and I know that both the Associate Minister of Health and the Minister of Health worked tirelessly to talk to the Alberta Medical Association to try to curb doctors' compensation. I would just like to ask the ministers if either minister can give us an update on where we are at with implementation the new amending agreement we have with the Alberta Medical Association.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Chair and to the member for the important question. Actually, this weekend was with the Alberta Medical Association at their spring representative forum here in Edmonton, and I can tell you that the physician community and the surgeon community of Alberta shares their commitment to make life better for Alberta families and all Albertans.

We've already had some really great outcomes with regard to the amending agreement that are going to help us move to a more sustainable health care system. Obviously, one of the big drivers was to make sure that we were able to get the cost escalators that were about 10 per cent per year to a more reasonable rate of increase.

Another one of the drivers was to make sure that we had new models of compensation so that patients who regularly would say that they spent more time in the waiting room than they did talking to their physician about their complex cases, that that wouldn't be the case. It isn't the case today in all clinics, but it certainly is not as much of an exception as we would like it to be, Madam Chair. We want patients to spend more time with the right providers, not on the highway travelling to and from long waits.

The amending agreement in terms of the savings has already enabled us to save about $100 million last year, and that's because the doctors did come to the table and worked with us on a schedule of medical benefits, which are the kinds of codes that are used when billing happens. This is certainly a very good first step. We anticipate up to about $400 million in this next fiscal year through increased efforts in that regard.

There have already been two rounds of amendments to the schedule of medical benefits. Some were implemented in January – that's why we have about $100 million in savings from the current fiscal year – and more are coming forward April 1. Again, that was done in partnership – actually, a lot of the recommendations that came to the table: you'd think that as this is about cost savings, they would only be from the employer side of the table, but a lot of the cost-saving initiatives that were proposed around the schedule for medical benefits came from the membership themselves.

I have to say that this is something that I think is a win-win. You don't have to look very far either in our past or across Canada to see what happens when the relationship isn't grounded on respect, on collaboration, and wanting to make sure that both sides are working for the betterment of all patients.

Another key area of focus in this agreement is the different types of specialties we're going to require. This is something critical to ensuring that patients have the right care in the right place at the right time. We have a real opportunity to get this right here in Alberta by looking at how we ensure that our students in our major medical schools here have opportunities to specialize in the areas where they are most needed, whether that be a type of practice or whether it be in excitement for preparing to go to one of the communities, for example, in the rural north. Madam Chair, I know that your constituents want to make sure that they have access to both physicians and other health care providers in their communities, and they absolutely deserve that.

The AMA deserves a seat at the table when we're doing that work to make sure that we develop the right plan. To the medical students and to the residents of the province of Alberta: we value their expertise and their skills, and there are many places for them to ensure that they can continue to work in the province of Alberta in those areas of specialization and in those communities that require their expertise.

Certainly, this is very good news, Madam Chair, and I am proud of the fact that I've been invited to every representative forum since becoming minister, and I have taken up that opportunity. I think this was the fourth one, I believe, this last weekend, and I really enjoyed the fact that we had the opportunity for me to deliver remarks, for many of the representatives to ask questions, and then for a lengthy lunch with the students and the residents that extended beyond my time even, in that the CEO of Alberta Health Services and my deputy minister were both in attendance and both spent additional time with those students and residents.

They have excellent ideas. As future resources, as physicians wanting to make sure that they serve the province, that they themselves are in areas where their skills are going to be used to their fullest, they are very excited to be partners with us in addressing how we move forward. I believe some of the residents will be in the Chamber next week, and we'll have an opportunity to hear about some of their additional areas of focus as we move forward.

Certainly, it's been a very good partnership with the Alberta Medical Association. We've made significant amendments that resulted in up to half a billion dollars in savings over just two years, Madam Chair, as well as improving access and quality of care.

I really have to say that this is a win-win-win-win for the budget of Alberta, a win for the physicians and for their demonstration as being strong stewards of the system, and a win for patients and members of the Alberta public. I'm really proud of the work we've made there, and I'm happy to highlight some of it this afternoon in the Chamber.

Thank you.

The Chair: Calgary-Hawkwood.

Connolly: Thank you very much, Minister. I appreciate the answer. Thank you very much, Chair.

Just very quickly, you were mentioning that last week you were in Calgary talking about the health transfer deal the government has made with Ottawa. Just quickly, can you tell us what this means for our budget and if it has affected the total that you're asking for in the interim supply?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Chair and to the member for the question. Our discussions with the federal government have been lengthy, and at all times at the table our number one goal was to make sure that we got the best possible deal for Alberta families. We certainly believe, after lengthy conversations, that that is the result. We did not leave one dollar on the table that could have come to this province, so I'm proud of that.

We've done that in partnership with the federal government, and as a result we're going to see $703 million in federal funding directed specifically to home care. We will also see $580 million in additional support for mental health initiatives. These are two core pillars of what we promised Albertans we would do, and it's great to be able to dedicate additional funds in these specific areas.

We also preserved the per capita funding arrangement with the federal health transfers. This was a fundamental piece of what we sat down at the table hoping to achieve. We know that some jurisdictions have lobbied for a change in formula that would have seen our portion of the federal transfers go down even if the amount went up if they changed the way that that funding was distributed. So I'm very proud of the federal government and of the province of Alberta that we were able to maintain that arrangement. This funding will figure into the 2017-18 budget, and we are very happy to discuss that in greater detail beginning on Thursday.

Thank you for the question, and I look forward to helping these increased dollars be put to immediate use right here in the province.

Connolly: Thank you once again, Minister. You actually touched a little bit on mental health and mental health funding. I know that for myself, I've gone through quite a lot in regard to mental health. Luckily for me, I'm in a position where I have the resources to access mental health funding and mental health resources that already exist. However, the great many Albertans and myself before I was elected weren't able to access these programs. For a short time, while I was under my parent's program, I was able to access it because, luckily, as she was a teacher, she was able to access that funding. For myself, however, in university, it was very difficult for myself as well as my peers in university to access mental health funding.

When it comes to these kinds of conversations, it can be easy to forget that the number one factor behind them is Alberta families and the patients who need care. Can you, really, give us an example of a specific service that comes to mind that interim supply will support, and how much of that is going to help with mental health funding?

Ms Payne: Yes. Thank you to the member for the question. Certainly, we know that access to mental health and mental health supports is a challenging issue here in our province, and our government has been diligently at work around the implementation of the recommendations from the evaluating mental health report. We will have more details to get into about that as we move through the budget process and in the coming days.

But just to, you know, comment on one important piece that I know is of real importance and of interest to this House, and that is the continued funding for addressing the opioid crisis. As the member is likely aware, as part of the negotiations around the Canada health transfer, we were also able to secure an additional $6 million from the federal government in new funding to address the ongoing opioid crisis, which will be bundled with the existing dollars within the interim supply around continuing to move forward with our opioid action plan to address the ongoing opioid crisis in areas such as harm reduction, access to treatment, working with partners in Justice around enforcement as well as increasing and expanding education and awareness campaigns at various levels, not just generally in the public but also specifically with partners in Education and the school system.

With respect to mental health supports we know that the supports that families are able to access in different parts of the province can really vary. Without giving away too much of what we're going to be talking about more later on this week, just to flag that our government is continuing to invest in mental health supports and in ensuring that we have a co-ordinated and comprehensive system.

As we've been doing our work, we've heard from so many families and so many Albertans about the challenges that they've had in terms of accessing the system, navigating through it, and being able to find the right supports in their community. We've also heard so much about the differences in levels of support that are available for an Albertan from one of our large urban centres versus some of our smaller communities. Certainly, we are working very carefully to ensure that we are able to get as close to equitable access as we can because we know that issues like mental health and issues like substance use don't discriminate based on geography. They're issues that are felt all the way across our province.

Connolly: How much time do I have left?

The Chair: About six minutes.

Connolly: I'd like to cede my time. Thank you.

The Chair: Is there any other private government member who wishes to speak? No further questions?

Then under the rotation it will now take us back to the beginning. If there are any further members of the Official Opposition who had any questions?

Mr. Hunter: Madam Chair, I just have one question, actually, for the Minister of Transportation. I had asked 19 questions, and of those 19 questions, I think that you probably answered a quarter of those questions. Now, I appreciate that you do have the opportunity of being able to state how you're going to be able to answer those questions, but you made a comment in your answer that you would be willing to get the answers to my questions in writing. I would like to know, Minister: would you be willing to get those answers to the questions prior to us voting on this interim supply? That's the question I have.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much for the question, hon. member. That, unfortunately, is going to be difficult as the hon. member, Madam Chair, asked a number of detailed questions that require some looking up on the part of officials in the department in order to provide him with a clear and accurate answer. That's the problem in a supply situation like this when you fire off a bunch of very detailed questions like: what's the value of all the outstanding – what is the word? – tenders, you know, how many are there, and what are they worth? I'm sorry. I hate to disappoint you, hon. member. I don't carry that stuff around in my brain. But the department will get that information, and we will get back to the hon. member.

We need to keep in mind that this is a slice of last year's budget and all of the questions relating to the interim supply are questions that would have been asked about the budget that is just coming to an end. This is just a continuation of that for a brief period of time until the Assembly is able to go through the process of evaluating the new budget. We go through Committee of Supply, and we do the estimates on a department-by-department basis, and then we vote on the new budget. So in the meantime we're just carrying on for a brief period of time with the old budget.

There's no significant variation in the Transportation department in the interim supply from this budget year that's just coming to an end. It's the same budget, just extended a little bit till we can get the new budget passed. There are no surprises there, hon. member. A lot of your questions I think are very valid and interesting and I would love to answer them, but they have to do with next year's budget. They have to do with, you know: is there money in different capital projects? Well, that's a question that can't be answered until the hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board tables his budget on Thursday, and then I would be happy to answer the questions, now that I know what . . .

The Chair: The time for that segment has ended, hon. minister.

Going to the third party, this is your last chance.

Any further government members, private members who wish to ask questions?

All right. If there are no more members who wish to speak, I will put the following questions.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

I would like to alert hon. members that Standing Order 61(3) provides that upon the Assembly concurring in the report by the Committee of Supply, the Assembly immediately reverts to Introduction of Bills for introduction of the appropriation bill.

Introduction of Bills

(reversion)

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Bill 5

Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2017

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 5, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2017. This being a money bill, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to this Assembly.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 5 read a first time]

Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Ms Jansen moved, seconded by Ms Miller, that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois Mitchell, CM, AOE, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate March 14: Ms Hoffman]

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any members wishing to speak to this item?

Mr. Nixon: What are we on?

The Deputy Speaker: We're at the Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I could not hear you, but I thank you for clarifying that for me.

The Deputy Speaker: My apologies. You've already spoken.

Mr. Nixon: I've never spoken to the throne speech. Not to this one.

The Deputy Speaker: All right. My notes must be in error. Go ahead.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I thought for a minute I might have missed the whole speech. On my life, I don't know how one could miss my speeches because they're just so spectacular. I know that my side of the House, I hope, agrees with me.

I rise today, of course, to respond to Her Honour's throne speech. You know, it was interesting for me. I, like many members of the Assembly, had some guests that came to watch the throne speech being read. Of course, for them, it was their first experience watching a throne speech, and they were quite interested in the process and the history of it. But as they began to listen to the speech, they expressed to me, they were quite shocked with many things that were in the speech, both some things that seemed quite contradictory to the government's actions as well as some positions that the government was taking in the throne speech that seemed out of touch with the majority of Albertans.

Now, to be quite honest, Madam Speaker, I don't think that one could address all of the concerns that I have as a result of the throne speech, that I've seen in the throne speech, but I will attempt with the short time that I have to try to talk about a couple, particularly areas that I think are impacting my constituents the most. One of the areas I would like to start to talk about is where the comments in the throne speech talk about protecting natural areas, protecting natural recreation activities like hunting and fishing, that Albertans enjoy. I certainly do agree that we have some of the nicest natural areas in the world right here in Alberta. I know that in my constituency of Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre we have a tremendous amount of what we affectionately call the west country, but that's really the eastern slopes of Alberta. Of course, west of Rocky Mountain House and west of Sundre are some of the most beautiful places, without a doubt, in the world.

My community has enjoyed recreation activities inside our backyard for many generations. In fact, our neighbours from the large urban areas come to our backyard to enjoy their recreation time on the weekends. The area outside of Rocky Mountain House, which is a town of about 7,000 people, and the county that surrounds it, with about 12,000 people, can go up to well over 100,000 people on the May long weekend, just for those three days. It's a beautiful place, and they enjoy it. So I don't take issue with the government saying that they want to protect that. I want to make sure that my children can enjoy the recreation activities that I've enjoyed in the west country and their children can enjoy those activities as well, but the action that this government has taken recently in regard to protecting recreation areas is directly in contradiction to what they are saying in the throne speech.

They say that they want to protect the ability of people to recreate in those areas and to make sure that they're preserved for a long time to come, but the reality is that what we've seen in the Castle is just the opposite. In fact, that's what the people down in the Castle were told during that process, that they would still be able to utilize the recreation trails that they have built. They put millions of dollars of their money or their club's money into the infrastructure. They were told that they would still be allowed to hunt and fish in those areas. Now we're hearing that cattle will probably be removed from those areas. Cattle, of course, have been grazed in those areas for over a hundred years in this province. That's directly the opposite of what groups were told at the beginning of the consultation process. That's not protecting the historic use of those areas.

Now, I want to preserve our west country. The west country is something very important to me. As you know, Madam Speaker, I lived in the forest reserve for seven years, running a lodge right on the Red Deer River, an hour from pavement. It was one of the greatest experiences of my life. I loved raising my young family in that area. It's important that we preserve it, but I want to preserve those areas and utilize them. I believe that we can preserve those areas and still be able to recreate in them.

I'll give you an example, Madam Speaker, which I think proves my point. The Ya Ha Tinda Ranch, which is on the Alberta side of the line of the national park, a place that I hold near and dear to my soul, one of my favourite places on Earth, was shut to the public back in the 1980s or the late '70s. There were some situations going on similar to what we've seen in the Castle or the west country around Sundre or Rocky Mountain House, where off-highway vehicles and trucks were being used in inappropriate ways. Camping was not working appropriately. There was a mess. Things were wrong. So they shut it, similar to what this government has just done with the Castle, just shut it to all the people that have used it since the beginning of Alberta, and it sat there. You know what? Nothing actually improved on the ranch during that time.

Then a decision was made about 23 years ago this year, I believe, to form an organization called the eastern slopes foundation, which was made up of volunteers who quad, are active in horseback riding, and who like to camp in the area. They took over all of the recreation side of the ranch in partnership with the national park. It is Alberta land because it's not in the park, but it's actually owned by the national park. It butts right up to it. It's where they train all the national park horses. It's where the Brewster brothers founded their ranch. Of course, most of us would be familiar with Brewster buses and Brewster tours inside Banff. That's where that whole history started, at that ranch.

Now, if you go there now, you will see some of the cleanest campgrounds, well-maintained trails, a very active place where people from all over Alberta, not just in my constituency, get to come and enjoy the weekend, ride their horses in some portions, drive their quads in some portions. So by utilizing the stakeholders, partnering with them, we were able to create something that was great, preserve a beautiful place for many generations to come and still be able to utilize it.

The problem now with what's going on in the Castle is that not only have they kicked all the people out of the area that they get to enjoy; they've now completely lost the trust of the people that are involved in there. So if we want to go to other areas of the province and we want to encourage those groups to build ATV trails, to maintain horse trails, to do those types of things, why would you? If you've put a million and a half to 2 million dollars' worth of infrastructure already into a place like the Castle just to have, you know, your deal basically broken – and there are letters from the minister saying that they would still be able to participate in there, from this minister, not from the minister of the last government, and they already reversed that – why would clubs or people participate in that? That's just one of the things in the throne speech that I find in contradiction of what they're saying.

I'll give you another one. Two weekends ago, when I was back in my constituency, I was at a bull sale in Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, in Ponoka county. I like going to bull sales. I don't know how many members on the other side of the House have had the opportunity to go to bull sales, but they're great. They're a lot of fun. They're a really good time for the community to get together, not only, of course, to buy bulls for their ranches but to be able to interact.

Every person that I spoke to at that bull sale wanted to talk about light bulbs. Now, I've got to say that it's the first time that I've ever been to a bull sale where people wanted to talk about light bulbs. They wanted to talk about the government's program for light bulbs, how they're spending the money that they're taking from the citizens of Alberta through the carbon tax and putting it into light bulbs. Most people, Madam Speaker, thought it was a joke. They actually, literally thought it was a joke. They thought that it was just something that somebody had put up on Facebook, like an urban legend. Nobody could believe that this government wanted to take the money out of hard-working Albertans' pockets and then spend it on an Ontario company going around Alberta and installing light bulbs. Nobody could believe that. They literally thought it was a joke. I had to convince them: "No, it isn't a joke. It's actually true. This is what the government is doing." Again, totally out of touch with the people of Alberta.

Another area in the throne speech talks about getting spending in control. In fact, I think what it says is: "Through [different] action and targeted reductions we are bringing the rate of spending growth down thoughtfully and prudently." Madam Speaker, we are seeing the largest deficits in the history of this province. We are seeing unprecedented debt, that is being borrowed against my children's future and the members opposite's children's future. My grandchildren's future and the members opposite's grandchildren's future. There is not one piece of evidence in the throne speech of any action that this government has done to date or has shown they will do in the future that shows that they are interested in getting our spending under control. Not one action. The complete opposite of what that throne speech is saying.

Now, if we were really going to do what the throne speech is saying, I would be all for it. I find appalling how much money we are borrowing against our children's future. I find appalling the consequences that we will see for Albertans as a result of the decisions of this government. I just don't think that that is realistic, what has been written in the throne speech, compared to what the hon. members' and the government's actions are.

Another one is, to me, actually, I think probably the most shocking. In the beginning of the throne speech it says:

We are an open and inclusive society built on enduring values: compassion, hard work, and justice. In an uncertain world these values are more important than ever, our North Star to guide us through our deliberations as we seek to build a better province for every Albertan, no matter their background, birthplace, or creed. We are one province, one people on a common journey towards a common future.

Those are great words, Madam Speaker.

When you take those in comparison to the government's words in other ways . . .

An Hon. Member: Actions.

Mr. Nixon: And actions.

But their words are what I want to talk about briefly. The government's words do not show this at all. They do not show this at all. While it is a great goal to go to, they do not show it at all.

We have, as you know, a Premier who has called Albertans embarrassing cousins. When you compare that to these sentences, I've got to tell you that the people of Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre or the people that I talk to across Alberta do not see those words when being called embarrassing cousins.

Mr. Yao: Or sewer rats.

Mr. Nixon: We'll get there in a minute, for sure.

There is no way that calling Albertans embarrassing cousins lives up to what has been written in this throne speech.

Albertans across the province, over three-quarters of them, roughly, are fundamentally against the government's carbon tax. They're fundamentally against it. That's a big part of what's in the throne speech, the program that will come from that or the money that they want to spend on that. They're very much against that, and as they speak about it, they are called angry, or – here's the best – the Premier tells them to make better choices or to drive and take the bus.

Well, I know the Minister of Transportation will acknowledge that there is no bus or C-Train in Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. People need to drive. The option of taking a Smart car does not even work on our roads. In fact, the hon. Minister of Transportation would not be able to get down the driveway to my home inside a Smart car. It just would not be able to do the climb, particularly if there was snow.

I can tell you that people in Sundre or Rocky Mountain House or Rimbey are still very deeply insulted by those comments from the Premier. They do not reflect what is in this throne speech. It shows a fundamental lack of understanding of a huge portion of our province and the way of life there and the realities of the situation that takes place inside our communities to tell them to just take the bus, a bus that does not exist. It's insulting, and it does not fit within it.

Now, I know we have lots to do, so I will bring this to a close shortly, but I will close with one other example that does not fit with the vision or the language in this throne speech: sewer rats, as the hon. member pointed out. To call constituents, to call Albertans, to call anybody sewer rats – and whatever version of that or whoever is being referred to as sewer rats, I'll let the government explain who those people are – is absolutely insulting to the people of Alberta. It is particularly insulting to my constituents. Now, I do understand that it was referred to people that I associate with. Well, I can tell you, Madam Speaker, that the people I associate with are my constituents, my family, my neighbours, my friends, my community. Those are ranchers, farmers, small-business owners, nurses, doctors, teachers, rig workers, SRD workers, forestry workers, fish and wildlife officers. Those are the people that I associate with, and they are not sewer rats. That does not live up to what is in this throne speech.

I think it's fair for Albertans to expect better from this government going forward. I challenge them to try to live up to what is in this throne speech because I think they're good words on where to go, but to continue to call our constituents embarrassing cousins, to continue to call the people that I represent sewer rats is appalling and does not fit with what is in this throne speech.

With that said, I will adjourn debate, Madam Speaker.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 1

An Act to Reduce School Fees

[Debate adjourned March 14: Mr. Malkinson speaking]

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise here once again and continue to speak on the importance of Bill 1, An Act to Reduce School Fees. You know, the opposition talks lots. They tend to heckle, and one of their favourite terms is to say: Albertans are watching. Yes, indeed, Madam Speaker, they are. When I go out and door-knock in Calgary-Currie, I hear over and over again about the importance of quality education and the fact that having to pay those school fees can be a burden even on families that you perhaps would think would not traditionally be burdened by school fees. I hear that over and over again. That's why I'm so glad our government brought this forward. Because of school fees, parents are worried, and we are helping to alleviate that.

Now, from the opposition throughout the debate today and yesterday we have heard many heckles, many points of order, and, of course, many tweets on this matter. The Wildrose record is clear. It seems to be that no matter what we're debating in this House, whether it's important things like reducing school fees, the only answer is: cut, cut, cut. Unless it's not. We heard just today about ripping up contracts, which is something the opposition has mentioned previously, when it comes to our public service. We have heard them disparage our oil and gas companies, that the same families they claim to support rely on, that the families in Calgary-Currie rely on. Disparage them.

An Hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Malkinson: I hear some heckling of "shame," and I agree there, Madam Speaker.

I find it a little disingenuous. You can't be pro jobs if you're pro cuts to education and teachers. You know, I have heard that the Wildrose opposition wants no school fees. That's great, and we are moving there, Madam Speaker. But you can't say, "You have no school fees," when there are no schools, no teachers. It seems to me that if you were going out to the doorstep and you were saying to Albertans: we're going to have no school fees; we're going to have lower taxes; we are going to have nothing but, in fact, larger classes with fewer teachers – and for the opposition, which I've heard say that over and over again, to say that somehow that won't be the case, I would say that if they're telling Albertans that at the door, which they are because they say it in this House, that perhaps that is an extremely enthusiastic interpretation of the truth. Shame indeed.

In our platform we said that we were going to reduce school fees, and we are there. I've gone to doors in Calgary-Currie over and over again on issues like this, issues that matter to Albertans, and every time I go out, I'm so proud because when I talk to them, I have a new box that I can tick off on our platform of what we are doing to help Albertans. I mean, I realize that it might be strange for the former party to, you know, have politicians going to a doorstep and saying: yup, this is what we promised during the election, and we're getting there each step of the way, slowly, methodically working through our platform, that I proudly ran on in Calgary-Currie. [interjections] Indeed.

Now, of course, as I mentioned earlier, you know, many heckles, many tweets. I'm hearing heckles from the other side on our carbon levy. That's the same carbon levy that got us two pipelines in this province, two pipelines that are getting our product to market, that are employing Albertans all throughout Alberta and in particular in Calgary-Currie, which is in the shadows of all the office towers in downtown Calgary, where there are professionals who are working in all corners of the oil and gas industry.

Even as I tour Calgary-Currie on a regular basis, I also tour my old workplace, where, again, there are many hard-working Albertans who are right on the shop floor working on heavy equipment, working on engines. I hear from them that the tide is turning. There is more work. More new units are going out the door, Madam Speaker. There are more repairs happening. Companies are spending again. There are green shoots in the economy. We've got to take care of Albertans.

Another thing I heard earlier in the debate was that when it comes to priorities for the Wildrose, one of their solutions in this mismatch between what they say that they can magically do while somehow lowering taxes is that it's just a matter of how the money is spent. Now, I wonder how they reconcile that when in debate today we heard that the amount of money that they want to cut is more than the total budget of our education system. So I wonder how they reconcile that. I go back to what I said earlier. To say that they're just going to cut all that . . .

Mrs. Littlewood: That's $2 billion out of operations.

Mr. Malkinson: Two billion dollars out of operations.

. . . to say that they're going to do that and that somehow that will make Albertans better and that somehow that will put teachers in the classroom: well, again I would say that that is perhaps an extremely enthusiastic interpretation of the truth.

Now, of course, we hear – I say it again – many heckles, many tweets, and again I'm hearing: well, what about the debt? Well, it's a downturn. We had great advice from David Dodge, a former governor of the Bank of Canada. He said that this is exactly the thing you are supposed to do in a downturn: put Albertans to work, act as a shock absorber, make sure that Albertan families are taken care of. We will continue to do that.

They say: cut back. Again, it's cut, cut, cut. When they're going to families and saying, "When we cut back, somehow it's going to make life better for you," what they're saying to that person at the doorstep is: "We're going to make life better for you by cutting services and laying off your neighbours just because you're concerned your other neighbour was laid off." How does that help? It doesn't make sense.

That is why, Madam Speaker, I am so proud that Bill 1, where we're reducing school fees, is just one part of our continuing platform and our commitment to Albertans to make life better for Albertans. I want to say that again: to make life better for Albertans, to make it more affordable without having to resort to games and budgets that are as deep as a tweet even if they do happen to exist.

Our children are our future, Madam Speaker. Children should have a level playing field no matter what their economic background is, and that's leadership. That's leadership our government is taking. That is leadership that I will happily tell all of my constituents in Calgary-Currie about because we are making life better for Albertans everywhere.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), any questions or comments?

I'll recognize the hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm grateful for the opportunity to talk about the government's Bill 1. Well, the government is consistent in one way. The last Bill 1 they had was an embarrassment, and this one is, too. The last Bill 1 that they had was to create a ministry that was already created.

Now, Madam Speaker, to be clear, I intend to vote for this bill because it's actually better for us than it is for the government. You know, reducing school fees is a good idea, but only this government, only the gang that couldn't shoot straight ever, would make it Bill 1. They are actually setting in legislation breaking an election promise – and they call it Bill 1 – because, of course, they promised to eliminate school fees, and this says that they're only going to do a quarter of eliminating school fees. They are calling that Bill 1.

They are actually setting in legislation breaking an election promise, so no one can miss it. I want to congratulate the government for being so up front with Albertans about how much they're going to disappoint them, leaving no room for doubt or misinterpretation in Albertans' minds that this government has broken this promise. They are so proud of breaking the promise that they've called it Bill 1. Wow. Nice work by this government, Madam Speaker, I have to tell you. I'm sure they're quite proud of that little piece of handiwork.

You know what, Madam Speaker? It gets better. When you look at this whole thing, if you read the bill, Alberta parents aren't fooled. They know that there are still risks here. They know that the schools that have collected those fees are going to have to collect that money from somewhere else, and the government has not yet made it clear that they are going straight to those schools and those school boards and replacing that money. And they may. We may find that out in the budget on Thursday, but they haven't made that clear yet.

You know what? The parents of Alberta are smarter than this government is because they know that if there are millions of dollars taken out of their schools and it's not replaced, then something is going to have to give. There are going to have to be fewer teachers, fewer field trips, fewer music lessons. Something is going to have to give. They're not fooled by that. Further, the other thing that I think they're going to be concerned about is the fact that if there are no transportation fees, how do they know that the fees in another area aren't going to go up to compensate for that?

You know what? Parents are smart enough to ask these questions – they've certainly asked me these questions – and the government hasn't answered them for Albertans. This government hasn't answered them for Albertans. So what you have here is the potential – you know, you can't blame the schools. I mean, bless their hearts, they're putting up with this government, too, like the rest of us. They get this thing announced to them, and they find out that this is happening, and they say: well, how are we going to replace that money that we've collected from parents for transportation and other things? If they're going to be short that money, I don't know what the school is going to do to pay their transportation bill, whether it's going to have to come, again, from textbooks or the classroom. The government hasn't answered these important questions. All they've really done is set in legislation that they're breaking a campaign promise, and they've seen fit to call that Bill 1.

Madam Speaker, I'm going to vote for it because reducing school fees is a good idea, but somebody ought to have a plan to go with it, a lot more detailed and a lot better than this government has been able to muster. As a result of that, I will be proud to tell everybody in Calgary-Hays about Bill 1 and how this government was so determined to break a campaign promise that they made a piece of legislation out of breaking that promise. I'm sure that Albertans will notice that. You know what? It's in a long line, unfortunately, of bad decisions by the government, and it's one that Albertans have come to expect. It's certainly not a surprise to me that they have botched this job amongst so many other ones.

With that, I will sit down declaring my support for the bill where the government sets in legislation their breaking of a campaign promise.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any further speakers to Bill 1? [interjections] Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I apologize. Between myself and my colleague for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville we have a great deal of enthusiasm for this bill.

I appreciate the opportunity to rise today and speak to Bill 1, An Act to Reduce School Fees in Alberta, another example of concrete action that our government is taking to make life more affordable, to make life better for Alberta families.

Now, the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat the other day had a few comments regarding our failure with this bill, and certainly the Member for Calgary-Hays just had some comments along those lines as well. Certainly, we did make a bigger commitment in our platform that we had in the last election than we are currently putting forward with this bill. You know, my colleague the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park I think offered some very trenchant comments explaining many of the thoughts along these lines, but it appears that there's been a lack of understanding, so perhaps we need to review some of those concerns and questions again.

Now, in the past, you know, when we've had governments that have come in and have made the kinds of cuts that are being proposed again by members across the aisle, those cuts have not been implemented with thought or with care. Those cuts have generally been implemented recklessly, I think without much responsibility taken by those who were implementing those cuts. Indeed, Madam Speaker, they seem to have some understanding of the principle that the buck stops here, but certainly while the buck stopped there, no responsibility for the effects of cutting that buck seemed to rest with the people that were making those cuts. Instead, the theory seemed to be that you make the cut, and then you simply leave it to everybody else to figure out how they are going to deal with that.

That's left, then, to trickle down. Of course, we know that many of those across the aisle are big fans of trickle-down economics. They seem to be big fans of the trickle-down cut, where the cut is implemented without thought, without consideration, without taking the time to look at the impacts that it would have, and indeed without trying to ensure that when that cut was made, it did not impact the front-line services.

Now, I appreciate that the document that was put forward by some of the members of the third party today is offering a no-front-line-impact guarantee, so it seems that perhaps they've learned and may be looking to do better than they did in the past with some of these cuts. Of course, there are some other issues with that document, but that's not the topic of discussion here today. The real thing, Madam Speaker, is that the reason that we are not proceeding with a full repeal of school fees right now, why we took two years to look at and determine the best direction forward with this, is because our Minister of Education took a great deal of care and time to study the potential impacts these moves could make.

Now, I recognize that members across the aisle seem very concerned. I know the Member for Calgary-Hays just expounded at length about his concerns about the impacts this could have on schools and where they're going to find the money, and again it's good to hear that this is a lesson that he's finally learned. It's good to know that this is something now that they think about and care about.

Our Minister of Education, of course, understood the necessity of doing just that. He undertook a careful study of all school fees in the province of Alberta, recognizing that different boards are charging different fees for different purposes. It's not a simple system. It's a complex system that, frankly, grew up over time, much like a thick forest of weeds, due to neglect of previous governments. Again, they implemented cuts that were not thought through, that were not carefully planned, that did not take into consideration the needs of individual school boards but, instead, simply downloaded the responsibility for that thought and care to the individual school boards and told them: deal with it.

As a result, we had basically this forest of school fees which sort of sprung up on that untended ground, leaving us with this complex system of different fees for different purposes all over the province, largely because previous governments consistently failed to properly fund the education system. The Minister of Education undertook to weave through those labyrinthine paths to determine what fees were happening where, to consolidate that data. We heard yesterday, apparently, that the members are very supportive of collecting proper data to understand problems, so I'm very happy that the minister undertook the time to do so, and I hope that they appreciate that. The minister took that information. He considered carefully what needed to be done, how we could best move forward in addressing these fees, and based on that careful consideration, he is moving forward with our first step towards fulfilling that campaign promise.

Now, the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat observed that his caucus and his party would completely, one hundred per cent, eliminate all school fees. That would be wonderful to see. It would also be wonderful to see how they would actually plan to do so. Being as they intend to cut billions of dollars out of the Alberta budget and being as they intend to cut public services, one has to wonder, then, where they're going to find the millions of dollars required to eliminate all school fees. Perhaps they intend, as previous governments, to simply make that cut and let everybody else figure it out. Certainly, they have yet to show any calculations, even on the back of a napkin or an envelope. We look forward perhaps at some point to seeing some actual, concrete examples . . . [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Edmonton-Centre has the floor, please.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate that. I realize that this is something that they may feel a bit concerned about. Being as they don't have any information to put forward, they can instead only heckle. But we'll take it as it comes.

Now, we recognize that it is important that we move forward with this legislation, having done the careful time and study and the minister having worked within his ministry to find the efficiencies and the cost savings to be able to enable this step, again, Madam Speaker, taking care and attention that previous governments often did not take. That minister, having found those savings, now has the funding needed to compensate school authorities.

The Member for Calgary-Hays was very concerned about where the money was going to come from and that his school boards were going to have to cut other fees. No, Madam Speaker, they will not because this minister took the time to carefully study, find the savings, and provide the money that these school boards need so that they can look out for their students, providing proper funding to support parents rather than asking parents, asking Alberta families to step up and pay more. So the funding needed to compensate those school authorities for this lost fee revenue will come from these efficiencies that were found, and details of that will be tabled in the budget this Thursday. I'm very encouraged that I'm seeing this work on behalf of our minister.

I know that the Minister of Health has been engaging in similar careful study to look at how we can make thoughtful, careful improvements in our health care system rather than rash, reckless cuts, knee-jerk reactions based on political ideology that do not take due care and consideration for the impact this has on Alberta families. I will tell you, Madam Speaker, that the impact of this bill on Alberta families will be to make life more affordable and to make life better. That is something that I find very encouraging because while I do not have children of my own, I do have 13 nieces and nephews ranging in age from about four years old up to about 24. They range across the grades in the school system, range across systems of schooling. I have some nieces and nephews that are home-schooled, others that are in school, in public schools. In fact, my oldest niece just began her first year in her career as a kindergarten teacher in St. Albert.

I have many friends who have children. I also hear regularly from parents in the communities I represent. In my work with the African and Caribbean communities here in Edmonton I've gotten to know many families who have children in our schools, many families who are new to Alberta, who are just getting their start here, who are working at minimum wage jobs as they work to get their certification, jobs which, thankfully, due to the actions of our government will pay more. Still, even with the increases to minimum wage these are families who are struggling as they try to build new lives here in this province. This is a bill that impacts them directly. This puts more money back in their pockets so that they can look after their families, so that they can spend that money in our local communities, helping boost our economy, helping to support the goods and services that we all need, much as our government is committed to supporting the services that all Albertans need. And I will make note that that was a commitment in our platform, and that is another commitment that we are keeping.

To tie it all together, Madam Speaker, I'm very proud that this is our Bill 1. I'm far more embarrassed for the members across the aisle, who can't seem to comprehend the value of this bill, the care and attention that has gone into developing this bill, how important and valued this is by Alberta families. I have not heard one negative comment from any family I've spoken with about the fact that they will no longer have to pay these particular school fees and that our government will continue to find careful savings and efficiencies to further reduce school fees in the future. That is our commitment, and we will stand by that.

I am proud to serve with a government that looks out for Albertans first, that is not beholden to political ideology, that will not make reckless cuts, that will not try to find efficiencies on the backs of other people in this province but will instead ensure that we have the stable, secure education system we need, one that does not place needless additional burden on parents just so that we can claim that we have such a sterling fiscal record. We're not here to cast illusions, Madam Speaker. We're here to do real work on behalf of the people of Alberta.

With that, Madam Speaker, I move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

5:20

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Seeing as we had anticipated our discussion of interim supply to take rather longer and we've made some additional progress on top of what we even anticipated doing, I would move that we call it 6 o'clock and adjourn until 9 a.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:21 p.m.]

Bill 1

An Act to Reduce School Fees

[Adjourned debate March 14: Mr. Shepherd]

The Speaker: The Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege and pleasure to stand and speak to Bill 1, An Act to Reduce School Fees. Being Bill 1, this is something that is important to all families in Alberta. It's something that will make life more affordable for Alberta families. Even though it's something that has been a very long time coming in Alberta, I think now is a perfect time to help families that still need help in this economy.

My father would often laugh when people called education free because it was not free for him. Even though he was someone that didn't make a lot of money, he still had to find those few dollars that he could pull together at the beginning of the year to pay for things like textbook fees, to pay for things like pens and paper and binders. I know that it was something that was almost like Christmas in September every year because it was one of the few times of the year when we got something new.

Of course, there are a lot of details to work out, and the regulations of the bill will be the most important part because it will be through consultation with school boards and with parents to see what those most important things are to school boards and to families to make sure that the government is coming to bear with the resources to actually cut school fees by 25 per cent for families. It would mean for the $200 million that currently school boards collect, we would be going through that with them to see where it makes the most sense to cut those fees by a quarter with this bill.

The initial focus will be instructional supplies and materials fees because that is where we see a measure of equity. Even though it is free to register your child in public education, there is still a lack of equity when it comes to families bringing their kids to school, when they come into the classroom. When I posted about this bill being introduced, I heard from a number of people that said that they often made excuses to their peers in class because they didn't want to bear the shame of not being able to afford something like a trip in class or not being able to afford to stay at school for lunch hour supervision or that they couldn't afford to pay for a bus pass. These fees being removed will instantly affect 600,000 Alberta students in a positive way.

The important thing that we see is that it's a further commitment to accessible public education for Alberta children and for Alberta families, Mr. Speaker. I know this is something in my own constituency of Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville that is very important, where we have a lot of rural families that have to bus their children in to school. This will give them the ability to take that money that they pay and put it toward something like their kids' future education in postsecondary, or they will just be able to take those fees and do outdoor ed or something like that, which is currently inaccessible to them, something like putting their kids into hockey or putting their kids into golf. There are so many sports that families put their children into that are inaccessible to many.

Also, in a city like Fort Saskatchewan we have a very young population. The average age of a person in Fort Saskatchewan is very young because we had a huge boom in population over the last 10 years of families coming in from all over Canada to get good-paying jobs in the oil and gas sector near the heartland. We have a lot of people that came and had children and made Alberta their home, made Fort Saskatchewan their home.

That's part of the reason why I'm here and why we were elected, because education became a huge election issue for my constituency. Having a young population, we were feeling huge pressures with sizes of classrooms in Fort Saskatchewan, and it's why we needed to have two schools built. It's very rewarding to be able to deliver two schools to the city of Fort Saskatchewan, to have a public elementary and to have a Catholic high school to address those needs, schools that were announced two, three times over a number of governments that never broke ground. So that's part of the reason why I'm here.

Part of the reason is also because there were many school boards that talked to me about how concerned they were that there was going to be a three-year freeze on hiring teachers. So this is another step that shows that this government and I support having accessible education and a good education. Not having those students funded for enrolment for teachers for three years meant that class sizes would have risen 1.5 per cent. The research that has just been released shows that children have a harder head start in learning when their classrooms are larger. We hear from teachers about that all of the time, that they don't have enough support in classrooms today, that the more students they have, the less time they have to spend with each individual.

Also, part of the concerns that the school boards had was the threat to cut classroom supports by 3.1 per cent, 3.1 per cent of the money that helps support First Nations, Métis, and indigenous children; supports that help children with disabilities; supports that help English language learner students; supports that would help poor families like my own that have a hard time with that first step into education. Not every child has equal entrance into this world, and this is something that will tangibly be able to positively affect future generations. This is something that is not just an urban issue; it's a huge rural issue. In many small municipalities we have a lower average income, so I know that having these school fees reviewed will directly impact each of those families positively.

I know that there has been good support from the school boards in my area. And I understand the people that say that they are concerned about where this money is going to come from because, you know, two years ago they were being told that the reserve funds and surpluses that these school boards had would have to be used to pay for anything that they needed in the future. There was a quote from the then minister that school boards are school boards and not school banks. It showed a level of not really being in touch with the experience of these school boards, the lack of reliable, sustainable funding, always being under the threat of being cut.

Understandably, we still have the emotional and historical effects on these school boards when we talk about things like cutting fees.

I know that the Minister of Education has been very clear that this will be found within our current budget and that there are ways that we can make it work. This is a very important thing to do. We do have a large Education budget, but to have education be accessible for every single child in this province means that we need to take this responsibility on. It is for us as government and as legislators to make sure that we can figure out how to do this, to make sure that every kid has a fair shot in this world.

I'm very happy to be able to represent the Elk Island public board and the Elk Island Catholic board and the Battle River school board in this Legislature and to know that we have amazing partners in education in this province. It's with that that I want to say that I am incredibly supportive of this bill, and I hope that everybody else in this Legislature supports it. I know that the families and the school boards in my constituency of Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville are very, very, very happy to see this go forward.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I would like to adjourn the debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Government Motions

Member for Calgary-Hays

16. Mr. Mason moved:
Be it resolved that in accordance with section 28(3) of the Conflicts of Interest Act the Legislative Assembly concur in the report of the Ethics Commissioner concerning the Member for Calgary-Hays dated January 4, 2017, and that the member be required to apologize to the Assembly and pay a fine of $500.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm not happy about doing this, but . . .

Mr. Rodney: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Yes. What's your point of order?

Point of Order Sub Judice Rule

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, sir. I raise an issue regarding Standing Order 23(g)(i). Mr. Speaker, I'd like to speak briefly about this motion before it goes any further.

This issue is one with which we are all familiar. I believe that the matter being referred to in the motion is sub judice, so any discussion of the motion in this House will be a discussion of a sub judice matter and therefore subject to Standing Order 23(g)(ii). And I'll quote it. The "Member will be called to order by the Speaker . . ."

The Speaker: Hon. member, I'm sorry. What section were you quoting?

Mr. Rodney: It's 23(g)(ii).

A Member will be called to order by the Speaker if, in the Speaker's opinion, that Member

(g) refers to any matter pending in a court or before a judge for judicial determination . . .

And it states:

(ii) of a civil nature that has been set down for a trial or notice of motion filed, as in an injunction proceeding, until judgment or from the date of filing a notice of appeal until judgment by an appellate court, where there is probability of prejudice to any party but where there is any doubt as to prejudice, the rule should be in favour of the debate.

I also refer everyone in the Chamber and beyond to Standing Order 48.

Motion out of order

48 Whenever the Speaker is of the opinion that a motion offered to the Assembly is contrary to the Standing Orders or privileges of the Assembly, he or she shall apprise the Member or the Assembly, as the case may be, at the earliest opportunity and shall cite the Standing Order or authority applicable to the case.

My short comments, to clarify, and one more citation include the fact that the Member for Calgary-Hays is currently involved in a suit with the Ethics Commissioner, a suit which concerns the very report addressed in this motion, and the principle of sub judice as it applies exists to ensure that an action in court is not unfairly prejudiced by proceedings in this House.

I also quote from O'Brien and Bosc, House of Commons Procedure and Practice, 2000.

The [sub judice] convention exists to guarantee everyone a fair trial and to prevent any undue influence prejudicing a judicial decision or a report of a tribunal of inquiry.

Mr. Speaker, this is a cut-and-dried example of a sub judice matter, and as such, the motion should not be discussed here today. Further, I believe that ruling this matter as sub judice is also consistent with your previous rulings on these matters. So I trust you will agree that with not only this reasoning but with these standing orders and these precedents, this matter will not proceed.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I believe that the matter is in order. House of Commons Procedure and Practice states very clearly that

The interpretation of this [sub judice] convention is left to the Speaker since no "rule" exists to prevent Parliament from discussing a matter which is sub judice.

That's at page 627.

More critically, it further states:

The practice has evolved so that it is the Speaker who decides what jurisdiction the Chair has over matters sub judice. In 1977, the First Report of the Special Committee on the Rights and Immunities of Members recommended that the imposition of the convention should be done with discretion and, when there was any doubt in the mind of the Chair, a presumption should exist in favour of allowing debate and against the application of the convention. Since the presentation of the report, Speakers have followed these guidelines while using discretion.

Mr. Speaker, our own standing orders, namely Standing Order 23(g), similarly state that when there is any doubt as to prejudice, the rule should be decided in favour of the debate.

Mr. Speaker, you yourself have been guided by the presumption that debate should take place; for example, in allowing questions in question period relating to the PPA issue, stating on October 31, November 1, and November 2 that debate could proceed while cautioning the members to be mindful of the convention. Previous Speakers in this Chamber have been guided by the same principle.

With regard to the more fundamental principle of why debate should take place, it is very clear that establishing and enforcing rules governing the conduct of its members is a matter for the Legislature.

Beauchesne's notes that the most fundamental privilege of the House as a whole is to establish rules and procedures for itself and to enforce them.

House of Commons Procedure and Practice notes on page 61:

The rights and powers of the House as a collectivity may be categorized as follows.

And it goes on to list:

- the exclusive right to regulate its own internal affairs . . .
- the power to discipline, that is, the right to punish persons guilty of breaches of privilege or contempts.

On page 78 it further notes:

The Supreme Court has indicated that the following categories of privilege have been recognized to exist.

And it goes on to list:

- disciplinary authority over Members.

9:20

Mr. Speaker, it's within the purview of the Assembly to set out rules for the conduct of the members. The Assembly has chosen to do so by enacting legislation, namely the Conflicts of Interest Act, as well as by the creation of an independent office of the Assembly, being the Ethics Commissioner. So we believe that it is entirely appropriate to debate the matter.

Just a couple of further points I'd like to make, Mr. Speaker. In section 28(3) of the Conflicts of Interest Act it says:

If in the report from the Ethics Commissioner the Ethics Commissioner has found that a Member or former Minister has breached this Act and the Ethics Commissioner has recommended a sanction, the Legislative Assembly shall debate and vote on the report within 15 days after the tabling of the report, or any other period that is determined by a resolution of the Legislative Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, also, on pages 627 and 628 under sub judice in House of Commons Procedure and Practice it says:

The sub judice convention is first and foremost a voluntary exercise of restraint on the part of the House to protect an accused person, or other party to a court action or judicial inquiry, from any prejudicial effect of public discussion of the issue. Secondly, the convention also exists, as Speaker Fraser noted, "to maintain a separation and mutual respect between legislative and judicial branches of government."

It is my view, and I think this will be borne out, that the authority of the legislative branch of government over these matters is paramount and that it is not in keeping with the principle of separation of powers for the judiciary to be involved in this. I believe that that is what the outcome is going to be.

It goes on to say that as Speaker Sauvé explained, the sub judice convention has never stood in the way of the House considering a prima facie matter of privilege vital to the public interest or to the effective operation of the House and its Members.

Mr. Speaker, I'm not arguing that this is, in fact, a prima facie matter of privilege. I am however drawing a parallel to the exercise of discretion of the chair with respect to matters concerning the conduct of its members.

I'd argue, Mr. Speaker, with the greatest respect to the hon. Progressive Conservative House leader, that, in fact, this is well within the jurisdiction of the Assembly and that the principle of sub judice does not apply.

The Speaker: The House leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and speak on what I'm sure will be some significant debate this morning with respect to Government Motion 16 and, in particular, the point of order raised by the House leader of the third party.

Let me be clear this morning that while I will speak in favour of this point of order, I make no judgment on the actions of the Member for Calgary-Hays. Whether he did or did not, whether the Ethics Commissioner's ruling was correct or was not in many respects is not integral to what will be a lot of comments that I will quite likely make this morning on this particular issue.

I do think, though, that what is important is around this issue of the role of the Assembly in this discussion this morning and, in particular, at present the discussion around this principle of sub judice. One of the things that needs to be established, I believe, Mr. Speaker, is your ability to determine whether or not the debate should continue, as has been clearly laid out by the Government House Leader and the House leader of the third party on this particular point about where there is doubt, the Speaker should rule in favour of the debate.

One of the challenges, I think, that you're going to face this morning is the fact that the territory that we are wading into provides you with little precedent, particularly inside this Chamber. There's little precedent where the Ethics Commissioner has ruled against a member of the Chamber and that, subsequently, a civil case has been proceeded with. So it's going to be very difficult for you, Mr. Speaker, to determine that doubt because one thing that you won't be able to know is whether or not this conversation this morning will prejudice the ruling that is well-established before the courts. You run the risk of wading into territory that hasn't been waded into prior, and you will make a decision this morning that could affect a lot of rulings in the future.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, around this issue of sub judice you yourself on November 1 rose in the Chamber and said these words:

I feel the need to once again remind the House about the [issue of the] sub judice principle. I wish to remind you of Standing Order 23(g), also known as the sub judice rule, which governs statements made in this Assembly about legal proceedings before the courts. Members should not be engaging in debate or asking questions which may [prejudice] a civil proceeding "that has been set down for a trial or notice of motion filed, as in an injunction proceeding."

Let me say again that I understand that an application was filed in July of this year by the government of Alberta seeking a declaration with respect to several power purchase agreements. It's extremely challenging for me to make a determination on whether statements made in this Assembly might [prejudice] those proceedings without knowing all of the particulars of the case.

Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that that case remains the same this morning. It is impossible for you to know all the particulars of the case that is before the courts and a member of this Assembly and the Ethics Commissioner.

You went on to say that you must rely on members and ministers who have greater knowledge of the effects to answer.

You also referenced Beauchesne's page 153, where it says:

Members are expected to refrain from discussing matters that are before the courts or tribunals which are courts of record. The purpose of this sub judice convention is to protect the parties in a case awaiting or undergoing trial and persons who stand to be affected by the outcome of a judicial inquiry.

In this particular case I think we need to take into consideration both of those people, the member of this Chamber and the Ethics Commissioner, who is a well-respected officer of the Assembly, and we need to ensure that both of those individuals are respected.

It is a voluntary restraint imposed by the House upon itself in the interest of justice and fair play.

It goes on on page 153 to say:

The convention applies to motions, references in debates, questions and supplementary questions, but does not apply to bills.

Mr. Speaker, it's very clear that sub judice should apply to this government motion that has been moved by the Government House Leader.

The Special Committee on the Rights and Immunities of Members recommended that the responsibility of the Speaker during the question period should be minimal as regards the sub judice convention.

Though you on a number of occasions did interrupt question period to remind members of this particular sub judice ruling.

In 509, on page 153 of Beauchesne's, it says:

However, the Speaker should remain the final arbiter in the matter but should exercise discretion only in exceptional cases.

Mr. Speaker, I think what is before you is, in fact, an exceptional case because of the fact that the Chamber hasn't had to deal with this, because of the fact that the circumstances are very unique, with a fine being applied. Again, the content of the ruling is not necessarily as important as the process around this ruling, and perhaps we will have some time to debate the content of the ruling as well.

This is an exceptional circumstance. Clearly, the decision rests with you, but I think it's interesting that even on November 1 the Premier spoke specifically to her concern about sub judice when she said with respect to the detail of debate that was around the PPA agreements at that time:

Having said that, I think that, generally speaking, the matter is getting into a level of detail that is more appropriately reserved for the attention of the courts. This is not the appropriate forum for that detail.

She went on in a subsequent question to say:

Generally speaking, getting into the kinds of details that they're talking about is not appropriate for this forum, and what we are going to do is stand up for consumers.

But what didn't happen was debate on power purchase agreements.

Mr. Speaker, I would submit to you that today is your opportunity to rule in favour of sub judice to prevent the possibility that we would prejudice the Ethics Commissioner or, in this case, the Member for Calgary-Hays. In fact, on October 31 you also referred to this issue of sub judice and issued caution. While I can appreciate that it is clear in the conflict-of-interest legislation that the Assembly has a role to play in this motion, while it's clear that the Assembly has a role to play in the discipline of members, it is also clear that the sub judice rule should apply to a case of this nature, and I encourage you to rule in favour of reserving debate for a time that is much more appropriate.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for giving me an opportunity to speak. You know, this is a very unique situation that you are in, that this Assembly is in, and I can tell you, from my experience, in my opinion, that we are talking about fundamental rights. We are talking about fundamental rights of freedom of speech, and we are talking about fundamental rights of due process.

An Hon. Member: And democracy.

Mr. Ellis: And democracy. Absolutely.

This matter is before the courts. There is a court date set for January 12, 2018. We are more than happy to table later on in the day, when appropriate, the appropriate documents also verifying that the court date is set for January 12, 2018.

Now, I must say that a few points have come to mind during a couple of the speakers, one, as I mentioned earlier, regarding freedom of speech. I think that if we look at article 9 of the English Bill of Rights, which starts in 1689, it states that "the freedom of speech and debates or proceedings in Parliament ought not to be impeached or questioned in any court or place out of Parliament." It is important that this starts, regarding freedom, as far back as the 1600s. This member has a right to represent his constituents. This member has a right to speak on issues. I can tell you that if we go down this road, there are many people that could be presumed, on both sides of this House, to be in conflict on many, many issues.

I would also like to say – sorry, I'm just looking at my notes here – that it would be appropriate to hear this motion only once the right to appeal has been exhausted by the courts. Separation and mutual respect between the judicial and legislative branches of government is overstepped if the matter is debated prior to the appeal being heard, and I think that it is also important to note that the balance of convenience favours adjourning this until after the court has ruled on this very, very important issue.

In conclusion, you know, I certainly thank you for the opportunity to speak. I do not believe that, without hearing what the courts have to say, this Assembly should be, in my opinion, overreaching and essentially possibly convicting somebody or finding a person held responsible without democracy, without due process, and without an actual trial. I think that is wrong.

I thank you for your time, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, let me begin by saying that everything that I do and say in this chair underlines to me the importance of my responsibility to this House, and this particularly is a matter where I take additional responsibility and appreciate the importance of that because it's in respect of one of our hon. members. In anticipation that this matter may arise this morning, I did in fact do some research on this matter, in fact in some depth. Allow me to share it with the House.

The matter before the Assembly is consideration of the Ethics Commissioner's report dated January 4, 2017, concerning the Member for Calgary-Hays. The motion reads as follows:

Be it resolved that in accordance with section 28(3) of the Conflicts of Interest Act the Legislative Assembly concur in the report of the Ethics Commissioner concerning the Member for Calgary-Hays dated January 4, 2017, and that the member be required to apologize to the Assembly and pay a fine of $500.

I would note that the procedure that is in place concerning the handling of these types of reports is set out in section 28(3) of the Conflicts of Interest Act, which reads as follows:

(3) If in the report from the Ethics Commissioner the Ethics Commissioner has found that a Member or former Minister has breached this Act and the Ethics Commissioner has recommended a sanction, the Legislative Assembly shall debate and vote on the report within 15 days after the tabling of the report, or any other period that is determined by a resolution of the Legislative Assembly.

The objective underlying the sub judice rule is to ensure that the legislative and the judicial branches of government are distinct and separate and that parties to a legal proceeding are not prejudiced by comments made in the Assembly. Whenever there is doubt as to prejudice, it is the role of the Speaker to rule in favour of debate. I note that the procedure for addressing a report from the Ethics Commissioner is set out in statute, but what is important to emphasize is that it strikes at the very core of the internal proceedings of the Legislative Assembly and discipline of its members, which are part of the inherent privileges of the Assembly and are matters for determination in the legislative branch, not in a legal proceeding.

Although I'm reluctant to cite at length from case law authority on this point as this is not a court of law, I would point out that it is well established that one of the categories of privilege is that the Assembly retains its disciplinary authority over its members, and this is a part of the Assembly's corporate privileges, the right to regulate its internal affairs free from interference.

This has been acknowledged by the Supreme Court of Canada on several occasions, most recently in the 2005 decision in Canada's House of Commons versus Vaid, 1 SCR 667, at paragraph 10. This principle is also set out on page 185 of Joseph Maingot's Parliamentary Privilege in Canada, second edition, where the case of Bradlaugh versus Gossett, 1884, 12 QBD 271, is cited.

The House of Commons has the exclusive power of interpreting the statute, so far as the regulation of its own proceedings within its own walls is concerned; and that, even if that interpretation should be erroneous, the Court has no power to interfere with it directly or indirectly, pages 280 to 281.

In other words, the power to discipline is necessary to the functioning of the Assembly, and it is part of its inherent privileges. The fact that there is no procedure set out in legislation does not imply that the Assembly has delegated nor has it surrendered these privileges to the jurisdiction of the court.

I would also cite paragraph 510 of Beauchesne's, where it is noted that the sub judice principle has never stood in the way of the House considering "a matter vital to the public interest or to the effective operation of the House" and its members.

In conclusion, I find there is no point of order, nor do I find that the sub judice rule should inhibit discussion on the government motion that is before the Assembly. The debate on the matter shall now proceed.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If I heard you correctly, you just ruled that the debate will go ahead, and as I will be the subject of the debate, I think it could be argued that I have an interest, so I will, interestingly enough, excuse myself so that I'm not accused of having an interest in this debate.

The Speaker: Please proceed.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just want to indicate for hon. members – well, I guess, first, I appreciate very much the ruling that the legislative branch is independent of and fully equal to the judicial branch and that we do not wait for the judicial branch to rule on whether it has jurisdiction but, rather, clearly assert that the legislative branch has jurisdiction. You've done that, and I think it was a very strong defence of our doctrine of separation of powers, which is fundamental to the parliamentary system under which we operate.

Now, I guess that if it was just my personal choice, I would just have the Ethics Commissioner deal with the issue, but the legislation, as I indicated earlier, requires a motion of the Assembly to concur in the recommendation on the matter. As I indicated, section 28(3) says, "The Legislative Assembly shall debate and vote on the report within 15 days after the tabling of the report, or any other period that is determined by a resolution of the Legislative Assembly." It's therefore required that there be a motion and a debate and a vote with respect to the recommendation of the Ethics Commissioner.

It's fair to say and I think the Official Opposition House Leader has commented that we are breaking new ground in this matter. But I think that we depend very much in this Chamber on the work of our independent officers, from the Auditor General to the Child and Youth Advocate to the Ethics Commissioner, and they play a critical role in regulating our democratic process. I think it's a point that's worth repeating before reviewing the specific facts of the case before us.

In November 2016 a complaint was made to the Ethics Commissioner against the Member for Calgary-Hays. The complaint noted that the member had made statements in the House regarding electrical utilities despite his direct associate, his spouse, being the sole shareholder and director of Brighter Futures Energy Inc., a competitive retailer in the energy market.

The Ethics Commissioner investigated the matter and on January 4, 2017, issued a ruling. The ruling found that the member contravened section 3 of the Conflicts of Interest Act when he asked a question during question period. The commissioner further states that the member was trying to influence the Crown to drop both of these policies.

If he succeeded, it would protect his wife's company and if he failed there could be detrimental effect on her business.

The commissioner concludes:

Therefore, as a result of asking the question, in a manner which tried to influence [the] Crown, [the member] was in breach of s. 3 of the Conflicts of Interest Act as he sought to influence the Crown's decision to implement (or prevent) certain policies, the unintended result of which, had he succeeded, would further the private interest of his direct associate.

Mr. Speaker, the commissioner concluded that the member contravened the act, and we agree with that ruling.

According to the act the commissioner does not set out penalties herself; rather, she makes recommendations to the Assembly. Her recommendation in this case is as follows:

Given the small size of the interest and the probability [that the member] was more interested in scoring political points than worried about his wife's business, it is my recommendation that an apology to the Legislative Assembly by [the member] and a fine of $500 is the appropriate penalty for this breach of the Act.

Had there been a more direct interest that was evident in the investigation and a greater interest, Mr. Speaker, it's important to say that the penalty could have been very much more severe.

The Ethics Commissioner is an independent officer who was put in place by this Assembly. Her mandate includes investigating and making rules on behalf of all members under the Conflicts of Interest Act, which is an act of this Legislature, Mr. Speaker. She's investigated this case and found in no uncertain terms that the member was in breach of the act. Therefore, we're supporting the recommendation of the Ethics Commissioner and the penalty that she has recommended, as required by the Conflicts of Interest Act and within the time frame set out by the act.

I think it would be important to deal with this now. Mr. Speaker, I urge members to support the recommendation of the Ethics Commissioner in this matter, put it to rest, and get back to the business for which we were sent here.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to propose an amendment, that has been stamped by Parliamentary Counsel. It's an amendment to the motion. Would you like me to read it now, or would you like it circulated first, sir?

9:50

The Speaker: Please circulate it.

Mr. Rodney: I will take my chair until you ask me to proceed, sir.

If you like, I could read the first part – it takes a few seconds – after which we could read the amended motion as it would read.

The Speaker: Please proceed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you. I move that Government Motion 16 be amended as follows: (a) by striking out “concur in” and substituting “receive”; (b) by adding “the Assembly defer its decision on the recommendation” before “that the member be required to apologize”; and (c) by adding “until such time as the Court of Queen’s Bench has given a ruling with respect to the judicial review filed by the Member for Calgary-Hays on February 23, 2017” after “$500.”

In other words, colleagues and those watching beyond:

Be it resolved that in accordance with section 28(3) of the Conflicts of Interest Act the Legislative Assembly receive the report of the Ethics Commissioner concerning the Member for Calgary-Hays dated January 4, 2017, and the Assembly defer its decision on the recommendation that the member be required to apologize to the Assembly and pay a fine of $500 until such time as the Court of Queen’s Bench has given a ruling with respect to the judicial review filed by the Member for Calgary-Hays on February 23, 2017.

It’s a matter of process, sir.

I propose this amendment, Mr. Speaker, because I believe that the work that we do in this House is of real importance and real value, and we have a number of conventions in this House, including those cited today, that assist us in making the most effective use of our time. I heard the Government House Leader say: let’s proceed, and let’s get on with the business of the day. Now, we all know that there are only a finite number of days. There are only so many sitting days available to us as legislators. Let us all be reminded that our first duty during that time is indeed the well-being of Albertans.

I would argue that to debate Government Motion 16 without judicial guidance as to the scope of section 3 of the Conflicts of Interest Act in relation to parliamentary privilege would constitute a gross dereliction of our duty as Alberta legislators. There are few of us in this House with the requisite legal expertise, and I would venture to submit that no member of this House considers themselves an expert in parliamentary law, so to debate this motion before us without a ruling on the scope of section 3 of the Conflicts of Interest Act is completely counterproductive at this time.

We should not hold ourselves above the courts but, rather, return to this motion – we’re not pushing it away; we’re saying that we should return to this motion – once those with the relevant judicial expertise have had their opportunity to weigh in. To do otherwise would suggest that the motion before us, Mr. Speaker, is less concerned with the substance of the issue and more concerned with political theatre, that I know Albertans are much less interested in. I implore this House to exercise its better judgment and allow the courts to deal with this issue in due time.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we will refer to the amendment as A1.

The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, you know, it’s pretty clear that the amendment seeks to accomplish the very same thing that the Progressive Conservative opposition just attempted to do with their point of order, and your ruling on that was quite clear.

You know, the hon. member says: well, we’re no experts in parliamentary law in this place. Well, I beg to differ. We don’t interpret legislation, but we have the authority from the people to actually draft, pass, and amend legislation. We don’t just interpret the laws in this place; we make the laws. We’ve been elected, and we get our mandate from the citizens of Alberta to do that. Moreover, we have received advice and you have received advice, Mr. Speaker, from the very expert in parliamentary law, which is our own Parliamentary Counsel. I would argue that they are the pre-eminent experts in parliamentary law. That is very clear.

The hon. member talks about deferring to judicial – I apologize. I don’t want to misquote him: basically, we should let the higher judicial authority make a ruling before we proceed on that matter. Mr. Speaker, that illustrates a serious lack of understanding of the doctrine of separation of powers in our system between the judiciary, the legislative, and the administrative. Now, in the American Constitution that is explicitly stated, but in the British parliamentary tradition, of which we are a part, it is part and parcel of the living, breathing Constitution that we have, and it’s a long-established principle.

The hon. Member for Calgary-West quoted from the English Bill of Rights of the 1600s, which precisely illustrated this point. I don’t know if he knew that he was actually supporting the argument that we’re making and that you made in your ruling, but it is very clear that parliament exercises an equal relationship and a separate relationship to the judiciary. We have rules against interfering in the judiciary’s role, and there are rules against them interfering in parliament’s role or the Legislative Assembly’s role. You clearly articulated that, Mr. Speaker. It’s not just a matter of waiting for the superior courts to make a ruling but, rather, standing and saying: “We are equal levels of government, and this is our jurisdiction. We are clearly, constitutionally mandated to exercise this jurisdiction, and we need to do that.”

The suggestion that we should pass this amendment is simply flying in the face, Mr. Speaker, of your ruling and a thousand years of constitutional tradition in the British parliamentary system, and we will not have it.

The Speaker: Speaking to amendment A1, the Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, sir. I would like to expand on, certainly, what I spoke of earlier and amendment A1, which I am in support of. With respect to Mr. McIver – sorry; the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays. My apologies. Of course, the conflict-of-interest vote and debate under the Conflicts of Interest Act was likely, I believe, tabled on March 6, 2017. On February 23, 2017, the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays did file for judicial review of the decision of the Ethics Commissioner, which was given on January 4, 2017.

The Ethics Commissioner found that the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays was in breach of section 3 of the Conflicts of Interest Act for a question he asked in question period. Of course, section 3 of the Conflicts of Interest Act states:

A Member breaches this Act if the Member uses the Member’s office or powers to influence or to seek to influence a decision to be made by or on behalf of the Crown to further a private interest of the Member, a person directly associated with the Member or the Member’s minor child or to improperly further another person’s private interest.

Nowhere in the Conflicts of Interest Act does it state that section 3 displaces parliamentary privilege, nor does the Hansard from the passing of section 3 of the Conflicts of Interest Act in 2007 indicate such intent either.

There is no question that the parliamentary privileges as exist in the United Kingdom extend to the Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. To the point that I had made earlier, which I do thank the hon. Government House Leader for bringing up again, the most fundamental privilege dwelling from article 9 of the English Bill of Rights 1689 states that “the freedom of speech and debates or proceedings in Parliament ought not to be impeached or questioned in any court or place out of Parliament.” I agree with that. The limit in scope of any parliamentary privilege is judicable by the court, and the court is the only body who can decide the scope of privilege.

The issue we have in this case is the decision of the Ethics Commissioner infringing upon the parliamentary privilege of freedom of speech. There exists no precedent for the Ethics Commissioner to impeach or question a member of the Assembly’s question posed during question period by way of report or investigation under the Conflicts of Interest Act. Note that the inherent privilege of freedom of speech forms part of the Constitution Act of 1867. Therefore, legislation like the Conflicts of Interest Act cannot infringe on that privilege.

In this case the Ethics Commissioner has interpreted section 3 of the Conflicts of Interest Act to extend to question period. She has done so under the proposition that the term “influence” includes questions in question period and that the term “the Crown” includes the majority party sitting in the Assembly during that period. Such an interpretation is not constitutional and goes beyond the pale. The resulting ability of the Ethics Commissioner to silence a member of the Assembly on an issue and therefore silence the entire populace of the electoral district of the member represents the said issue.

Section 28(3) of the Conflicts of Interest Act allows for an adjournment of a debate and vote regarding the tabling of the report of the investigation to any other period that is determined by a resolution of the Legislative Assembly. I would argue that there’s no haste here and that we could let the courts decide the privilege, the privilege of the Ethics Commissioner and also the privilege of the member of the Assembly, which would include every one of us.

This has an impact that affects not just Alberta but Canada if not the Commonwealth. This is a huge issue. Who has privilege? Is it the Ethics Commissioner, or is it a member of the Assembly? I think that this is something that is so huge and has such an impact that we cannot be debating it in this Legislature at this time without having an answer from the Court of Queen’s Bench on January 12, 2018, which would assist us. This is not, to me, an issue between the Member for Calgary-Hays and the Ethics Commissioner. This is about our fundamental freedom of speech and the ability to represent our constituents on all issues. We as opposition have a right, that goes back to the 1800s, to hold the government accountable, and we can’t do that if we are limited by the scope.

We have people here that are teachers. Well, you won’t be allowed to speak on issues involving teachers. We have social workers who won’t be allowed to speak on issues regarding social work. Labour. This is huge. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

Mr. Ellis: This is not about a $500 fine. This is not about a slap on the wrist. This is about our fundamental right of freedom of speech. I have a right to question this government on behalf of the people of Calgary-West, as does every single one of the people sitting on this side. That’s what this is about. All this amendment is saying is: please allow this to extend past January 12, and then we can have more information. As I indicated previously in this House, information is power. It allows us to make better informed decisions. Why would we not do this? We cannot, essentially, convict somebody without knowing the facts, without knowing the scope, without knowing all of the evidence involved here. I think that is what is truly, truly important here.

For that reason, I do support this amendment. I encourage every single member to support this amendment if you believe in freedom of speech.

The Speaker: All right. Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a) to the member?

The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: You’re not under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Cooper: Correct. On amendment A1, please, sir.

I rise to speak in favour of the amendment. I think that there have been a lot of comments made this morning about our role and the role of the courts. Let me be clear. I agree with the Government House Leader that it is our role to make legislation. But in the context of the Westminster parliamentary system, we are often good partners, neither one subservient to the other. While we certainly write legislation and make legislation, it is often interpreted by the courts, and when the courts interpret that legislation, it sometimes requires adjustments for elected bodies. We’ve seen that time and time again.

In fact, you’ll remember, Mr. Speaker, that Bill 7 from 2015 was a Supreme Court ruling that spurred action by Assemblies around some labour legislation. The government rose at length and spoke about the importance of that ruling. And now we hear the Government House Leader, while I appreciate his comments and while I agree we aren’t subservient of each other, essentially saying: “Don’t worry about the courts. You know, we’re here to do our own thing.”

We can’t have it both ways, and that’s a good thing. We need to be responsible to our Assembly. We need to be responsible to the people of Alberta, and we also need to be responsible and be responsive to the courts. Here we have a situation where we already know that the courts are going to make a ruling on a piece of legislation that is before them. The hon. Member for Calgary-West certainly laid out a number of reasons that make this case precedent setting. Certainly, there are going to be large and lengthy discussions around parliamentary privilege and whether or not those have been curtailed through the Ethics Commissioner’s ruling.

It’s not a matter of whether or not this should be dealt with; it’s a matter of when it should be dealt with. There is a very reasonable chance that we’re going to make a decision and that then the courts will rule, which will require an adjustment by the Assembly that may in fact result in an apology from the Assembly to the member. All that the motion states is: let’s take time and do this.

You know, unless the government is planning on calling an early election, this is not going to affect the outcome of the next election because it’s going to be dealt with in the early part of next year. While I appreciate the need for expediency and while I appreciate the need to respect the recommendations of an independent office of the Legislature in the form of the Ethics Commissioner, particularly because, as she noted and as the Government House Leader noted today, there is an element of politics at play – and the Ethics Commissioner makes the accusation that the member was trying to score political points. Well, often Ethics Commissioner rulings in the court of political opinion are equally as important as the actual Ethics Commissioner's rulings. But the court of public opinion is much further away than January 2018, when this particular case would be heard, and when the ruling from that may require an adjustment of the Assembly.

One of the other interesting things to note, Mr. Speaker, is that the Government House Leader clearly laid out that the Assembly has a role to play in this decision. And, in fact in your ruling on sub judice and while we will likely agree to disagree, you also pointed out the important role that the Assembly has to play in this decision. But I think that if we look at the Conflicts of Interest Act in section 28, around the tabling of the report, it does not provide very clear guidance on what the government motion should say. It's the Government House Leader and cabinet in this case and, I can assume, the Premier's office and others who may have provided commentary on what the motion should read, and in their wisdom they chose, without much consultation I might add, to write the motion as it appears on the Order Paper.

Knowing that this particular case was before the courts, knowing it is of a precedent-setting nature, knowing the Assembly may have to respond to the decision of the courts, they could have just as easily written the motion keeping in mind all of those factors. But I would suggest to you that they, too, have a political opportunity here and political grounds to be made and that it's possible that the motion is equally about scoring political points for the government as it is about the Ethics Commissioner's ruling.

If we were primarily interested in good governance, if we were primarily interested in ensuring that we're making the right decision – and, again, let me be clear. I am not providing personal comment on whether or not the Member for Calgary-Hays was correct or incorrect. I think it's possible some of my colleagues – when we likely get back to debating the main motion, by all accounts it sounds like the Government House Leader isn't going to allow any of his team to change their position. When we get back to debating the main motion, it's quite possible that some of my colleagues will raise some concerns about the Ethics Commissioner's ruling as laid out in 28(3) of the Conflicts of Interest Act, that speaks specifically to debating the report.

The Speaker: Hon. member, the section you just noted?

Mr. Cooper: Section 28(3).

But it appears to me that the government is equally interested in scoring political points and not just getting to the best solution for all members of the Assembly because if they were, accepting a reasonable amendment like waiting till after the court has their opportunity to speak as well – again, let me be clear. It's not because we are subservient to the court but because we are partners in this process of democracy. We write the rules. They interpret the rules. When they interpret them, if we need to adjust, that is a requirement of us. It's not like we're saying that at this point in the morning the Ethics Commissioner got it wrong although I think that there are some folks inside the Chamber who don't agree with the Ethics Commissioner's ruling. We're merely saying that the process that we follow is critically important due to the precedent-setting nature of the process.

So, Mr. Speaker, I encourage members of the Assembly to consider the words of the Member for Calgary-West because of some of the implications that the ruling has and the fact that the court hasn't had its opportunity to speak. Because of the implications that it has around privilege – one of the things that I'm very passionate about, you know, that gets me excited in the morning, is parliamentary privilege, and there are literally tens and tens of people across this province that share that excitement with me. The fact of the matter is that the courts are going to be required to rule on privilege, and it has a significant impact on the future of debate in this Chamber. Providing us with time to make the best available decision is certainly the best available option that the Chamber has before it, and I would encourage all members of the Assembly to do the same.

The Speaker: Anyone under 29(2)(a) to the hon. member?

Seeing and hearing none, the Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will speak to the amendment, and I very much appreciate the opportunity to do so. As I often try to do in this House, I'm going to try my absolute best to take the politics out of this. That may not be possible, but I'm absolutely going to strive for that. I do sincerely hope that the government's side and all members present here as well as, of course, the hon. Government House Leader do reconsider this. I do believe there is a middle ground here and there is an opportunity to allow the courts to decide, in no way diminishing the independence of this Assembly.

I do want to reiterate the point made by the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, the Opposition House Leader, in the point of order initially. I in no way take a position one way or the other about the Ethics Commissioner's ruling and in no way question either her authority or expertise in making that ruling. This is not specifically about her ruling one way or the other.

What we have here, though, is an opportunity through this amendment to meet the requirements of section 28(3) of the Conflicts of Interest Act and be consistent with the ruling, Mr. Speaker, that you made this morning and allow the courts to make a ruling. All of those things are possible.

I will start with section 28(3). I imagine it's been referred to and read into the record previously, but I will do it again. In addition to the 15-day window for tabling the report, the last words of section 28(3) are as follows: "or any other period that is determined by a resolution of the Legislative Assembly." We as an Assembly, as members of this Chamber, have the opportunity by the law set out in 28(3) and, of course, respecting the principle of independence of the Assembly as a self-governing body to meet both of those tests. We have that opportunity.

Mr. Speaker, you were correct this morning in your ruling that there is nothing requiring us by precedent or law to defer debate on this Government Motion 16, but equally there is nothing preventing us as a self-governing Chamber from choosing to do so. We will be consistent with your ruling, we will be consistent with what section 28(3) says, and we will allow the courts to make a ruling.

I would ask the government side: what is the downside in doing that? If the courts concur with the Ethics Commissioner and uphold her ruling, then at that time the Chamber can apply what is currently Government Motion 16, pass the sanctions on the hon. member, and go on about our business. If, however, the courts find against the Ethics Commissioner and with the Member for Calgary-Hays, then we know that fact and we can proceed accordingly.

We have an opportunity here to allow the courts to make a ruling. We know the date. It is not that far into the future. We will be consistent, Mr. Speaker, with your ruling, we will be consistent with parliamentary procedure and practice, we will be consistent with the independence of a self-governing body, and we will allow ourselves to know the outcome. So I would genuinely and sincerely urge the government side to reconsider this matter and to support this amendment to allow the member his day in court. I think that is a fundamental principle that we all in this Assembly ought to be upholding, but in no way does that abdicate our independence from the courts. It just simply allows us to choose what we do as an Assembly, which is absolutely consistent with the principles of independence.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any questions to the hon. member under 29(2)(a)?

Are there any other members who wish to speak to amendment A1?

Mr. Gill: Yes. I would like to speak to this amendment, and thank you for giving me the opportunity. Mr. Speaker, the majority of us know that I was born in India.

An Hon. Member: Were you?

Mr. Gill: Yes. It wasn't Scotland, actually. It was India.

But on a serious note, sir, we do not have freedom of speech. We do on paper; we do not. It only belongs to the elite. It's very suppressed. It's called the biggest democracy, India, but it's not really. It is not. It's controlled by a very few, the top. So for challenging the democracy here, challenging the freedom of speech here for people, I think we're going down a very dangerous road. As the members from Calgary-Elbow, Calgary-West, and the member from the Official Opposition said: let the court decide, and we can wait. You know, support this amendment. Let the court take its course. Like, we don't need to stop the process, control the process.

I want to warn all the members of this House. If we go down this road, it would open a lot of big cans of worms for the government, too, when we start talking about conflicts of interest. I'm sure that every member in this House knows what I'm talking about. I think we should support this amendment, wait for the court decision, and then we can come back to this debate.

That's all, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat. Under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Barnes: No.

The Speaker: Proceed.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to rise and voice my support for the motion. I've been sitting here for about an hour, an hour and a half, listening to the debate, trying to get my head around the sides of this issue. Although Calgary-Elbow stood up and said that he didn't want to talk about politics, it appears to me that, clearly, it is only about politics at this point. It's clearly been mentioned by the Opposition House Leader and by Calgary-West that the courts can still continue, that the Legislature can still have its role after the court decision. As mentioned by the Opposition House Leader, it may avoid the government having to go through the embarrassment of an apology. But here we are charging ahead, anyway.

We've been talking about how this isn't around what the Ethics Commissioner's decision was. Of course, not having the benefits of the Blues, I absolutely believe that I heard the Government House Leader say: we agree with that ruling. A presupposition. We've had opportunities to have discretion exercised, and here we are moving along, moving along to where, as the Member for Calgary-Greenway just adequately said, we are about to open a can of worms and some different issues around the ruling. That greatly concerns me. One of the things I've heard many members say is: how do we do what's best for Albertans? How do we balance the opportunity for open debate versus when we should be held back because of potential conflicts? Absolutely both worthy causes.

This, to me, is not only precedent setting, Mr. Speaker, where it can reverberate through other Canadian jurisdictions, other Commonwealth jurisdictions, as prior speakers have mentioned, but when we're all responsible to represent our constituents, the 4.1 million Albertans, open debate is the crux of the matter, where we need to hear all the good ideas. We need to hear all of what our constituents are thinking. We're in a situation now where conflicts may prevent that. As I said two or three minutes ago, lots of times that is absolutely necessary, that is absolutely the best thing for the protection of Albertans, but I am sitting here wondering why the government, as the third-party House leader mentioned right at the start, won't let this continue to where judicial experts will be about to voice their opinion in January of 2018 with the Member for Calgary-Hays' full and legal and due process right to an appeal.

So, Mr. Speaker, I absolutely believe at this point in time that if we lose this amendment, if we don't support this amendment, we are saying that we are more in favour of erring on the side of shutting down open debate in this House from all 87 of us than we are from a full opportunity for the 87 of us to hear from all 4.1 million Albertans to make Alberta the best we can.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I absolutely will be supporting this amendment. I will absolutely be supporting that we continue to ask the government to take politics out of this. Defer it till after the courts have their chance. Defer it to where we can make the best decision for Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler. You have a question under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Strankman: Yes, sir.

The Speaker: Please proceed.

Mr. Strankman: Yes. To the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, Mr. Speaker, he and I have had a valuable experience in our exploratory roles as representatives of our constituency, but we also experienced a situation where members of the Legislature decided and took it upon themselves to exercise their own rights that we have within this Chamber to cross the floor to the government of the time. As you may recognize, many of those members did not receive the future endorsement of their electorate and took those positions. He and also the Member for Livingstone-Macleod and myself did take the message from our electorate. I'd like the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat to further explain the power of the electorate and his considerations of his representation of those people.

Mr. Barnes: Yeah. Thank you to my colleague from Drumheller-Stettler for that. Boy, what an amazing three days and two months that was, and what a message sent by Albertans. You know, it reminded me of two things. First of all, our responsibility to our constituents, to the next generation to ensure that we don't overstep our power, to ensure we use our best abilities to listen to our constituents and engage with them with the extra knowledge that we have from this place and from, you know, quality staffers and information that we do get to ensure that Alberta remains and becomes the leader in Canada that we all want it to be. But then it reminded me that, you know, there are always unintended consequences with what we're doing in here.

This maybe seems like a small thing. It's ratifying a decision that maybe some of us agree with, some of us don't. But I don't think it is a small thing, Mr. Speaker. I think this is a matter of limiting the ability for the 87 of us to have open debate. And, yes, again, it has to be limited by where we have conflicts, but let's not influence an individual member's opportunity for his full and complete due process. The individual is as important, but let's not limit what is best for Albertans out there. As my hon. colleague mentioned, sometimes the nature and the breadth of these things spill over to the point where, thankfully, Albertans get the last say every four years. You know, maybe this will become a big issue of the government playing politics rather than strengthening the House of the people of Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Gotfried: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Please proceed.

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, I've listened with interest to the members' comments about the responsibilities we bring to the House, but I think, you know, on top of that, we also bring a lot of expertise to this House. We have nurses. We have teachers. We have doctors, social workers, technical experts of various sorts, transit workers, marketing executives, ranchers, farmers, airline employees, and more. We all bring expertise to this House, and I think our constituents expect us to use that expertise in this House. For us to address that opportunity to bring that expertise here, we need to have latitude, to not be found in conflict of interest on everything that we comment on because of our background, because of our experience, because of people we know or people we're connected with.

Those are the bridges that we build in our lives, and I'd like to think that torching bridges behind ourselves is not a good thing to do. In fact, that's why we're elected, to bring those bridges with us: the bridges to people, the bridges to organizations, the bridges to companies, the bridges to real Albertans.

It concerns me, when we are allowed to bring that expertise to our roles here, that it could be undermined. That, Mr. Speaker, is really at the heart of the issue that I think we're dealing with today. Are we allowed to bring that expertise to this House? I would argue that that expertise – I'm not sure. We have a few lawyers in the House, but I don't think we have any judges in the House. I think that this is an opportunity . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, thank you. I think your time has lapsed.

Are there any other comments with respect to amendment A1? The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to move to adjourn debate on the amendment.

Mr. Cooper: Can I just double-check, Mr. Speaker, exactly the process here? We're just adjourning debate on the amendment? We will return to debate on the amendment following that?

Mr. Mason: It is the intent, Mr. Speaker, to adjourn debate on this motion. If we have to adjourn debate separately on the amendment – I'm not sure. I'd like a little guidance on how we do this.

The Speaker: As I understand it, we're adjourning debate at this point and juncture.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Ombudsman and Public Interest Commissioner Appointments

14. Mr. Mason moved:
Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly concur in the March 2017 report of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices, sessional paper 15/2017, and recommend to the Lieutenant Governor in Council that the following persons be appointed on an acting basis for the period beginning April 16, 2017, until such time as a replacement for the Ombudsman and Public Interest Commissioner is appointed:
- (a) Mr. Joe Loran as Acting Ombudsman;
 - (b) Mr. Ted Miles as Acting Public Interest Commissioner.

The Speaker: Having heard the motion by the Government House Leader, Motion 14, does anyone wish to speak to the motion?

[Government Motion 14 carried]

Committee Membership Changes

15. Mr. Mason moved:
Be it resolved that the following changes to:
- A. the Standing Committee on Public Accounts be approved: that Mr. Dach replace Mr. S. Anderson as deputy chair; that Mrs. Littlewood replace Mr. S. Anderson;
 - B. the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future be approved: that Ms McPherson replace Mr. S. Anderson.

[Government Motion 15 carried]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 1 An Act to Reduce School Fees (continued)

[Adjourned debate March 15: Mrs. Littlewood]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Northern Hills.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak to Bill 1, An Act to Reduce School Fees. Our government campaigned on a platform to make life better for Alberta families. During the 2015 election campaign among these major commitments was a pledge to reduce the burden of school fees on Alberta families. In fact, on page 14 of the 2015 election platform, titled Alberta's NDP: Leadership for What Matters, you'll find under point (4.3) where it says: "We'll reduce school fees for essential services such as lunch supervision and bussing."

Mr. Speaker, I would like to also point out that I was also a candidate in the 2012 election, and I recall again campaigning on the reduction of school fees at that time. I have to say that any time I mentioned the NDP plan to reduce school fees in both the 2012 and 2015 election campaigns, it was warmly received at the door. People told me how difficult it was to budget for children to go back to school in the fall with all the school supplies they had to worry about like textbooks, workbooks, papers, boxes of Kleenex tissues, among other things.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that it's a pleasure to speak to Bill 1 at second reading. This bill goes through a series of amendments, and the creation of new school fees regulations will focus on two specific types of school fees and busing fees for eligible students travelling to their designated schools.

Over the weekend, while door-knocking and discussing Bill 1 with parents, I spoke to a single mother with two children in Calgary-Northern Hills and talked about how this bill might help reduce their fees paid. She told me that the big one was the fees paid in June, costing about $600 for two students, covering lunch hour supervision, and that a further one paid in September cost about $200 for instructional materials. She said that any reduction in these fees would help big time. In total for the 2017-18 school year we expect that families will save more than $50 million annually as a result of this government-funded reduction in school fees for instructional supplies and busing.

I also had the opportunity to speak to my school board trustees. A trustee for the Calgary board of education, the CBE, said that the school board was very happy for parents and families. However, she recognized that there might be some specific details that may need to be addressed as the bill moves forward. For example, some concerns were raised regarding bus transportation to designated high schools. Since there are not any CBE high schools in Calgary-Northern Hills, students need to take buses to other designated high schools in the city. In this case students do not travel with a yellow school bus but rather on Calgary Transit designated buses. There was some question about how the school bus fees would be reduced in these cases.

There were also some concerns about the necessity of supplemental class fees for specific classes. For example, in carpentry class students have the opportunity to pay for additional high-quality wood, and the supplemental class fee paid is the difference between whether students make a Muskoka chair or a birdhouse. Mr. Speaker, in the case of fashion class these supplemental fees are the difference of whether a student makes a tailored suit or a pillowcase. It is important to distinguish the difference in these fees because students are more engaged in their learning when they can further their interests and they can delve deeper into their passions through these specific courses.

When I discussed this bill with a trustee of the Calgary Catholic school district, the CCSD, she said that the board was pleased with the lessening of the financial burden that fees placed on parents. She said that boards have long advocated for predictable and sustainable funding that covers the cost of delivering quality education and that fees are charged on a cost-recovery basis. However, some concerns raised were about the school board's ability to provide programs of choice such as French immersion, fine arts, special-needs programs that allow fuller and richer educational opportunities for students. There were also concerns about fees for textbooks. For example, high schools have textbook rentals. Should these fees continue to be charged? But both trustees were optimistic and happy to collaborate with government and work through this bill and regulations.

In conclusion, we know that parents are struggling to pay school fees throughout the province. In Calgary many families did their homework and chose communities to live in where it was expected that new schools would be built – this is the case for many families in Calgary-Northern Hills – however, a lack of funding commitments from the previous government led to delays with school construction, and many parents have been left to arrange transportation for their children to the inner city.

But it's more than the inconvenience of having to spend an hour a day travelling to and from their designated school because those families are also charged $335 in fees per child per year. That transportation charge is over and above the fee for instructional supplies and materials which is also charged to students, which can exceed more than $130 for junior high. For a senior high school student the ISM is more than $150 with the CBE. Nearly every school board charges fees on instructional supplies and materials, and removing these fees will lead to immediate savings for parents of nearly 600,000 Alberta students.

Mr. Speaker, the residents of Calgary-Northern Hills have told me consistently about educational fees since the moment I met them at the doorsteps in 2015. I'll be supporting Bill 1 at second reading, and I encourage others to do the same.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any questions under 29(2)(a)?

The Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Hinkley: Yes. Good morning, Mr. Speaker. Thank you. I also would like to rise to speak on Bill 1, An Act to Reduce School Fees. I am voting in favour of this and encourage everybody else to do so as well.

Part of this act is that it's simply making life more affordable for Alberta families, and this is just to show that we are taking action and showing that we do care about families and their pocketbooks and how they're balancing their budgets. During tough economic times this is one way we can help Albertans.

Also, on the very principle of this, the right to publicly funded education, we have to ask ourselves: is this a right that we support, or is it not? If we do support publicly funded education, we should not be charging extra fees. This is an Alberta value. It's unacceptable that we think that children – our kids, our grandkids – cannot have a publicly funded education simply because we are putting up financial barriers to this. The relief that we can provide helps us and helps parents know that their children will have access to education. Again, we get back to the principle of: what value is education? It is the tool for our future economic prosperity as well as our social prosperity. The one small action of reducing fees can have a major impact on students, families, and their financial well-being now and in the future.

This act is looking at certain types of school fees, and right now we are looking at supplies and material fees as well as reducing fees for those students who are travelling to their designated schools. This is important. Why do we even have buses for children in their designated areas? Could it be that there is simply an insufficient number of schools across the province, that we actually have a deficit in infrastructure of school buildings? While previous governments may have said that they balanced their budget, they balanced it on the backs of students. They did that by not building schools where population and student numbers merited that.

I look at my own family, where my grandsons could not go to their designated school, and their parents, my son and daughter-in-law, had to pay over $300 a year extra for each child to go to a school that was not in their designated area because there was no school in that area. The fact that this bill is addressing part of that issue is of significance to me, and I think it will be of significance to other parents who are also concerned about busing in growing communities.

Now, this particular cut, even though it's only 25 per cent, represents $50 million. You think about that: $50 million that parents are taking out of their pockets and paying for free education. Something's not working there. It's also going to affect over 600 students by cutting these fees, so it's an act that will have a major impact across Alberta.

Now, there are those who suggest that we cut 100 per cent of the fees right now, and that would save Alberta families $200 million. I think that eventually we will be moving toward that. This act does not restrict us from this. It is the first step in doing that. But we also have to, during these times when we're trying to balance our budget, look at: if the parents don't pay that $200 million, where is it going to come from? It's going to have to come from taxpayers. We do not want to put an additional burden on taxpayers as well at this time, so we will move prudently. We will move cautiously and make reductions as we can, as the budget is available for us. I really support the bill for that, that it's not just a big leap from here to there; it is going slowly but steadily.

Now, some of the other fees that I'm glad will be looked at in the future are fees that are charged for lunchroom supervision. This is not one that's being looked at right now, but the fact that it is being reviewed is encouraging for parents, who know that another fee for things that they didn't have to pay for will be addressed in the future. Also in the future is technology. Part of the school fees are for textbooks, but we know that in the future technology will be the way that most students are going to be learning. This also has been indicated as something that we will address.

In fact, section 39.1(2) of the act allows for more or potentially more reductions in different kinds of fees. It defines what those fees are. Whether it's lunch hour supervision or technology, the minister will have the ability to make decisions on that. I'm encouraged by that subpoint within the act as well.

Now, since we tabled Bill 1 last week, we have seen tremendous support for this not only from the families of those kids that are paying but other families as well. There has been constant support from parents, from teachers, school trustees, and when we've been door-knocking in our constituencies, people are saying: "I'm glad you're finally addressing this. This was one of your promises, to address it." We have taken that step. In fact, one of the other validators of this is the president of the Alberta Schools Councils' Association. The Schools Councils' Association is made up of parents whose kids are in school. They are supporting this. Specifically here in Edmonton, both the public schools and the Catholic schools have supported it. That's good news, and I think we're on the right track.

I just want to maybe look at the Calgary situation, both the public education and the Catholic schools. When we look at the fees that we are going to be helping with – and this is certainly one of the most expensive examples – in the public elementary schools their reduction per child is going to be $660. For the elementary students that are attending the Calgary Catholic school district, their reduction is $465. Now, both of those are quite high. Imagine, with two or three children, what your fees would be in September.

I'm comparing these two because they're dramatically different. One is $660; the other is $465. So there may be students and families who say: well, we want to give our child the public education, but we're going to have to move them to the Catholic school because it's $200 less. So they're making a decision on where they will send that student just on the dollars, the cost, and we're saying that that should not be the reason why they're choosing a school. It should be based on the quality of education and not on which one is the cheapest or the least expensive.

When you look at the Calgary junior highs, both public and Catholic schools, the public schools charge $552 per student in fees, and the Catholic schools are charging $185, again a phenomenal difference. If I was a parent struggling with where I would send my child and I saw a bill of $550 or a bill of $185, I know where I would send my child, again, because of dollars and cents. We're saying that that should not be a factor in making that decision, so eliminate those fees.

Likewise, in high school, for a student to start in Calgary public, it's $487; Calgary Catholic, $305. Huge prices but again a difference, and it may influence where children will go.

Now, as an administrator – that was one of my previous careers before retirement and before being rehired; I was a school administrator – when we had to do our budgets every year, I actually counted on the parents contributing school fees so that I could balance my individual school budget. It was necessary for us to collect those fees from parents. It was necessary because there had been so many cuts in education ever since the '90s, when people bragged about having a balanced budget, but that had been downloaded onto schools, where we as principals had to tax our parents for supplies for their kids to come to our school because otherwise we would have a deficit at our school, and we were not allowed to. We had to balance the books.

So what did we do? We made the provincial government look good by having a balanced budget, but we taxed the parents for school fees. That was not fair. Why should I as a principal have to tax those parents? It was a problem for us to balance our books. I knew that in the small rural community that I was in at that time, in Smoky Lake, it was totally unfair to the parents of that community, but we had to do it.

Now, unfortunately, we would find that one-third to half of those parents did not pay their schools fees, so we had a huge problem. As many people have commented, the stigma of some families not being able to pay and some families paying those fees: not fair, not good community spirit, as far as I was concerned.

Now, we continued to have to change our fees and charge fees because the textbooks were always changing, the materials were always changing. One year it would be one subject, the next year another subject, but we always had to buy new textbooks. We did not want in our school some students having resources and other students not, so we did have to charge.

I am going to encourage all members of this Assembly to vote for Bill 1 as a very positive first step. Part of that is because I like the fact that the minister has found efficiencies within the Alberta Education department to pay for those. As an administrator I knew that if I didn't collect that money from the parents, I would have a deficit. Now I am reassured by the Minister of Education that that money will be coming in the allotment from the provincial government. So I'm happy that parents are not having to pay and I'm happy that I could have balanced my budget because the province is taking responsibility to make sure that public education is properly funded. This act goes a long way towards that.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any questions for the hon. member under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member talked about his previous experience as an administrator, as a principal, and working in a school. I know that he's got some first-hand experience of what it's like to be in a school. I just wonder if he might be interested in telling us a little bit more about his personal experience in the education system and all the experience that he brings with him to this position.

Mr. Hinkley: Well, I think I did allude that as an administrator every September we had to send out notices to parents that we would be charging school fees. I guess I was in education for over 30 years. It's just something you had to do for a long time. This is the first time in many, many years that there has been government support for that. I guess your question is partly: what authority would I have to speak on this subject? I guess it is because of my background as an administrator. All principals, all teachers are very familiar with these issues, and we're just extremely glad that the minister has recognized that teachers were not in support of school fees, and by doing this, it is going to be of great benefit to the parents.

Also, I guess, when I say that I was an administrator, one of our tasks was that we had to balance budgets, so we were accountants. I guess I learned in my small-business career as well how to balance the books. I've done the books for businesses. I do the books for the school. We would have to make budget projections. The thing that administrators do is to look at how to eliminate deficits, how to balance their budget. I guess I'm supporting this bill because it is one tool to help administrators, to make it easier in their job of balancing the books. Having the school fees cut and the provincial government providing equal support will go a long way in doing that.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Any other questions under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I did want to ask the member to add a little bit more precision to his answer because it is a question in my mind when we're talking about parents who were unable to pay. The member said, I think, that about 30 per cent of the parents, perhaps, wouldn't be able to pay the fees, leaving a deficit in the school's budget, and I'm still not certain exactly what consequences would result from that and how that deficit was actually made up, how it was addressed. Were programs cut? Were services cut? Were class sizes increased, or was there another way or a source of funds that you could request compensation from? Exactly what happened as a result of that hole in your budget?

Mr. Hinkley: Yeah. A very interesting question. That's right. We had to become very creative in solving those problems. When we realized we needed new textbooks, we just didn't get them. We had to use the old or do without.

We did end up cutting some programs as well, so that was another way. We cut programs. In Smoky Lake we did have a very strong parent council, who supported the school extremely well, and often when we would meet and they would ask what I needed, we would discuss, without naming names but very candidly, the fact that our budget could be short because we would not be able to collect all of the school fees. Our school council would do raffles. They did casinos. They did bingos. They provided us with that supplemental money. So the community spirit said: we recognize that for some families this is a hardship; it's a financial burden. The school council would come up with money to help us balance that budget. You know, sometimes there would be grumbling that if they weren't paying for school fees, that money that they raised could be for enrichment. It could be for field trips. It could be for other things.

I want to brag for just a second here about H.A. Kostach school in Smoky Lake. They have won the Archery Canada National Championships four years running. That school, even though it has just under 400 students, has the Canadian national archery champions. They have sent their students all over the world – to the United States, South Africa, and parts of Europe – to compete. The school council would help fund the travel of that archery group, but they lost the money to school fees.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to also rise and support Bill 1, An Act to Reduce School Fees. Our government does care about families, and we are really wanting to keep the dollars in the pockets of those families. We believe every student has a right to publicly funded education, and those fees should not be a barrier to kids getting a good start in life no matter the circumstances.
