Times are tough right now. I think that over the last week and a bit we've heard a number of people talk about their realities growing up, raising children, and I think that that's more the norm than I would have thought, actually. I don't consider myself an expert at all on school fees. Actually, I've moved around a lot in my life. I've lived all over Canada and the United States as well. I can't even remember how many schools I went to, but I do recall being a little shocked at the cost of school fees when my son was young.

Now, as a single parent I was working. I'm pretty sure I was taking courses at the time as well. When my son was little, I decided I wanted to save for his postsecondary education because that was not something that had been done for me. As soon as he was born, of course, like many other Albertans, I set up an RESP, and the most that I could manage per month at the time was $25. It doesn't sound like a lot, but when you're struggling, it is a lot. When you're not earning much more than minimum wage, it is a lot. You still have to pay child care fees so that you can be gone from the home. You have to pay for bus passes and all of those things. Those school fees are taxing, and I never wanted to stop contributing to his postsecondary education. Fast-forward to today: my son has a fellowship at the University of Alberta. He is a doctor of paleontology, not the useful kind, we like to say. Sorry, honey. I love you.

You know, that was my reality. That truly was my reality. As I was looking for some information about this – I love history; maybe that's where he gets the whole paleontology thing; he likes to study old, dead things – I looked at some of the information from the previous party. [interjections] I'm not calling you dinosaurs. Maybe a trilobite, but that's about it.

You know, one of the things I read which was quite interesting was an article in the Globe and Mail from March 2012. The then Premier, who shall not be named in this House because that's our rule, said that school fees are a symptom of a larger problem and that that larger problem is funding uncertainty for school boards. The then Premier and the then party, many of whom are here this morning, said that they were going to solve this problem for families with transformative change. Voila, transformative change.

I think the reason I brought this up is that, you know, we tended to hear a lot of that. I worked in the human services sector, and often I heard about an unwillingness to augment services or about a willingness to detract from services or to move dollars around. It was about transformative change. But they never called it cutting. They called it – I can't even remember the word – reassigning or redeploying or whatever the word was. I don't know. When I take my dog for a haircut, I don't redeploy her hair.

You know, the reason that I'm bringing this up is that history will always teach us things. If I've learned anything from my paleontologist son, it is that history teaches us a great deal and that the Earth is older than 2,000 years old.

An Hon. Member: And it's round.

Ms Renaud: And it's round.

The reason that I'm bringing this up is that it's important to know that the previous government, although they talk about, "Oh, my gosh, the government side isn't doing enough and are not changing fast enough, and it's only 25 per cent; oh, my gosh, light my hair on fire," had decades to change this, and they did nothing. They did not change it. They made it worse.

They talk about valuing Alberta families. Really? A flat tax, school fees. [some applause] Yeah, you're clapping about that. So you can hear by the clapping sounds that it was okay that people struggled to raise a family, struggled to get their kids to school, struggled to feed their kids, clothe their kids, pay school fees, save for postsecondary education. That's okay. That's okay as long as it fits with their radical ideology.

The other interesting piece. Before, the two parties were quite separate, and, you know, soon they'll be dancing a lot closer together.

Mr. Coolahan: Slow dancing.

Ms Renaud: Not slow dancing.

When they were a little bit more separate, they took some shots. You know, I read some things from a Wildrose website that talked about: shame on the PCs for voting to keep school fees. That was October 2012. This is what it said: it's unfortunate that the PCs couldn't look beyond partisan politics. Imagine that. [interjection] Not really.

I just want to say, you know, that people will stand up. I'm pretty sure that when they go out and speak to their constituents, they hear from families that reducing school fees is a really, really good thing. They're not going to say that it's a bad thing.

Mrs. Pitt: It was our idea.

Ms Renaud: Well, you can take credit for it if you like, if that works for you.

What they will do is that they will not support a budget that spends this kind of money. They will not. They will not support it. They can say that they'll support it, but when it comes right down to it, they will not. They will stand up in this House. They will demand roads. They will demand more prosecutors. They will demand more hospitals. They will demand more home care, more mental health supports. They'll demand all kinds of things, schools in their ridings. But when it comes right down to it, when the rubber meets the road, they will not vote for it.

I just want to go back to saying that I am one of the people on this side of the House that is more than happy to support this. I am glad that we're taking a stand. It may not be perfect just yet – it's 25 per cent right now – but I have no doubt and I have complete faith that we'll get there.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I think I heard some laughing in the Chamber for a change.

Under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Westhead: Yes, Mr. Speaker. In her speech the member talked a little bit about the flat tax that the former Conservative government had in place, also something that the opposition members were applauding. It's certainly something that people have talked about in leadership races that are occurring in the province. I know that when I was campaigning in the 2015 election, we campaigned on a platform of bringing in a progressive income tax system. This was a pretty fundamental change for Alberta. And, look, here we are. Campaigning for that type of more fair, progressive income tax system, that every other province in Canada has, including the federal government, seems to be the most fair way that we can pay for the services that we all need based on our ability to pay.

So it's pretty shameful to hear the members in the third party applauding for a flat tax that disadvantaged the people at the lower end of the income scale, creating more inequality, creating hardships for women, who tend to be lower wage earners. You know, that's something that they would bring back in. A flat tax also advantages the people at the high end of the income scale big time. We know that those folks in the PC and the Wildrose, for that matter, like to cozy up to their millionaire friends. There's nothing wrong with being a millionaire, but they have to pay their fair share for the things that we all enjoy in our society.

I just wonder if the member might want to talk about that, or, if she'd like, something she also might like to talk about would be . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

I'm sorry. You were finishing your question?

Mr. Westhead: I'm still not done yet, Mr. Speaker.

I just wonder if she also might like to talk about the fact that she mentioned saving for postsecondary education for her children and about how saving on school fees would help parents nowadays also put money away for postsecondary training later on. Also, the fact that we froze tuitions: I wonder how that would help her as a family.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I for one was entirely grateful that we got rid of the flat tax. I will tell you that. I spent the majority of my life early on raising my kids. That's where I was. I was at the bottom section of the wage earners. Life is tough. You know, it's not always about . . . [interjection] What's that? It's not always about: pick yourself up by the bootstraps. Sometimes you need a little bit of help.

You know, I've been on a lot of sports teams, and I think the phrase that you're only as strong as your weakest player is very true. We have a responsibility to make sure that all Albertans have access to things that are vitally important, not just access but to feel included, to feel like: I'm not going to school knowing that I can't afford the things that other kids can afford, that I'm going to be singled out, and I'm going to feel bad. Our children, all of our children, have the right to be equal, and we need to do whatever we can to encourage that.

I'll tell you, you know, that it's not just women and it's not just single parents. It is also people with disabilities. This is a huge, huge portion of our population that we forget about. It's not just the person that you see on the commercial that happens to have Down syndrome. It is all kinds of people with all kinds of disabilities that are struggling, and they make up the group that are minimum wage earners. They are the people that are forced sometimes to be on assured income for the severely handicapped when, really, what they want to do is provide for their families. Can you imagine the struggle for them?

You know, there is a federal program, RDSP, much like RESPs or RSPs. It's for people with disabilities who want to establish some savings for when they're older, for when they retire or after 65. It's not that they're looking for a handout. They're looking for some help. They're looking for a hand up. They're looking for some equality.

I worked in the human services sector for a very long time when the third party was in power, and I'll tell you that every time the economy took a nosedive, we just braced ourselves for what kinds of atrocious cuts – and I remember the word now. It wasn't "cuts"; it was "realignments." I remember taking my dog for a hair realignment. You know, we just braced because that's where they came. They came for services that were not going to impact the people that they were beholden to. That was my impression.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, this was a platform commitment that I found really resonated with my voters. I have had a couple of people starting to ask me about it in my community, and I know they're all very happy to see that we are taking action to reduce school fees.

When I was out door-knocking in my community recently, I'd knock on the door and say: "Hello. My name is Trevor Horne. I'm your local MLA. Do you have any thoughts or concerns that you would like to share with me?" Usually their response was something like: "Well, I haven't really had a chance to think about it. You know, this is the first time I've seen an MLA on my doorstep. I don't know what to do with this." But recently they haven't.

Mr. Cooper: What have you been doing for two years?

Mr. Horne: I've been knocking on doors in my other communities.

Recently the response has been: thank you for reducing school fees. You know, Mr. Speaker, especially in these tough economic times, we know our families can really use that little bit extra.

We keep talking about September school fees and the bus fees and everything. You know, I reached out to my parents to see what they thought. I don't have kids of my own yet. I'm still pretty young. I have plenty of time to get on that. My parents reached out, and what they shared with me is that the schools always seemed to be asking for a little bit more, you know, whether it was a field trip or school supplies.

I remember that I had one music teacher who was a good music teacher, but she quite often liked to stage-manage quite a bit. It was an elementary school teacher, you know, stage-managing kindergarten students and grade 3 students. The day of a performance she would ask students to wear a specific colour or sometimes ask the boys to wear a tie. For many families this was the first time any of their students needed a tie, so that was an extra fee. That's an extra charge on their education. I know that for a lot of families this is really hard on them, and I am so happy to see that this government is taking steps to make education more accessible to our families.

Now, while I'm among the younger members in this House – I went through school, well, really, before I would have been allowed a laptop, let alone a cellphone. I know that now there are a lot of schools in my community and in communities across the province who are requiring students to bring their own devices, and now they're requiring smart devices. You know, it's not enough to have something capable of word processing; now you need a full iPad or a full laptop. For many families that's a lot to bear. We can talk about the cost: oh, well, one laptop; that's not too much. But when you have families of three or four kids, those costs add up, and especially in these economic times I know that that is very hard on them.

While I know that there was a larger commitment to go further, we have to start somewhere, and I'm glad to see that we are starting here. I would like to see, you know, more progress in the future, but I don't understand how anybody can't support this bill. This bill is something that is so important to our families. I have had teachers reach out to me and say that. You know, they'll talk to somebody, and without prompting, the first thing they say is: I am so happy we are reducing school fees.

Mrs. Pitt: We would have eliminated them.

Mr. Horne: That, Mr. Speaker, is enough reason, I believe, for every member in this House to support this bill.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Westhead: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Thank you. During the member's speech the Member for Airdrie chirped out that the Wildrose would have eliminated school fees altogether. It's great for them to say that, but we haven't seen a shadow budget or anything like that from them to prove any kind of movement on school fees or any other kind of social improvements, for that matter. I just wonder if the member who was doing his speech could tell us or just comment on how much the Wildrose has dropped the ball by not proposing any kind of solutions or ways that we could pay for school fees. I mean, if they've got a way to do that, I think they owe it to all Albertans to table a budget and show us their path forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would absolutely agree with my colleague from Banff-Cochrane. You know, I have never been in opposition – you know, maybe in 20, 30 years or if I jump federally, maybe, one day – and I can only imagine how easy it would be to make a platform commitment and then completely ignore it. We have people across the aisle in what are currently two parties. We'll see in a few weeks, I suppose. But, you know, we have one party that campaigned on health care levies, and I haven't seen them argue for that since. They also argued for several new taxes and for cuts to services, including to education, and a flat tax as well. [interjections]

Mr. Horne: We have another party who argued that, you know, they weren't going to bring in new taxes. They're now saying that there would be no changes to services, but somehow they're going to eliminate school fees. That would result in a direct cut to our schools. I fail to understand how these members can rationalize that. I don't see how that math adds up. So to answer the . . .

An Hon. Member: By realignment.

Mr. Horne: Perhaps by realignment. But where that money is coming from to be realigned is unclear to me.

Mr. Speaker, to answer the member's question, I don't think that it's possible for them to eliminate school fees and still protect the front-line services that they claim they would protect. This, to me, just doesn't connect.

Now, I know that the members keep saying: oh, well, you know, it's not our job to create a shadow budget. You know what? Mr. Speaker, I disagree. The job of an opposition is to show how they would do things differently, and thus far we have seen an independent member provide more opposition than either of the other two parties. I disagree with a lot of his proposals: you know, proposing a GST while simultaneously . . .

An Hon. Member: A PST.

Mr. Horne: A PST, rather. But he's at least provided us something.

The opposition has had two years now to provide a shadow budget. I haven't even heard the mention of a proposed shadow budget. The closest thing I have heard to a shadow budget goes back to the election, which was, on page 5: no new taxes, and we're going to protect our front-line services. I also note that when I last looked at page 5 of the Wildrose platform, I did not in fact see an elimination of school fees, which is curious to me. I also did not see a reduction in either the platform that the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays campaigned on or on page 5. That, to me, is interesting.

You know, if the two parties across the aisle are still so committed to not increasing taxes and balancing the budget, especially in two years, then the only logical conclusion I can come to is that . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak to Bill 1, An Act to Reduce School Fees. I appreciate the attention of government members. You might be a little surprised at the point which we will get to very shortly. As our caucus advocate for education I have a special interest in Bill 1, and I'd like to begin by – you heard it here first – applauding the efforts of this government to address school fees. I'm applauding you. You're not applauding that we're applauding? I'm shocked, but I've been shocked here many times, including this morning.

In all seriousness, Mr. Speaker, from first-hand experience I know that while school fees are always an issue for parents, during tougher economic times it's even more important. We need to ensure access for all Albertan families. That's beyond reproach.

There are other good, common-sense changes in this bill. School fees being required to be directed only towards what the fee is intended for is a good change. Sometimes these fees get lumped in with the total budget, and losing that connection with the intention of the fee reduces the incentive to innovate and reduce costs. So that's a good thing.

There are a few portions of this bill that I can support as an advocate for robust and diverse educational choice in Alberta. Now, part of this, Mr. Speaker, comes from being an Albertan parent. Part of it comes from being an educator, an administrator, from kindergarten to university, for over 14 years in three countries, and I'm humbled and honoured to have had that as a little part of my background, that I bring here to the Chamber.

I have experience enough to know that the devil is in the details. The first issue is one of the main issues with many of the bills that we see this government bringing forward, which is, of course, debt. The government is saying that eliminating the two types of fees that this bill addresses, instructional material fees and transportation fees for eligible students, will result in $54 million in savings for Alberta families. Of course, Mr. Speaker, that money has to come from somewhere to make up for the revenue being lost by the school boards, who have expressed great reservations about this. They've called us, and they've told us that.

Of course, we know that the money is coming from borrowing, from kicking the can down the road because every time the government makes another funding announcement while they're wallowing in red ink, it's not really a funding announcement.

Mr. Gottfried: It's a borrowing announcement.

Mr. Rodney: It's a borrowing announcement. Exactly.

I'm sure that government members may protest that point because in their announcement they say that $54 million is going to come from finding efficiencies and attrition, which is fascinating for those who've been paying attention because they've spent the last number of years trying their best to convince Albertans that every single dollar in the Education budget was absolutely crucial to maintaining teachers' jobs.

Well, Mr. Speaker, when they want to spend an additional $50 million, suddenly there are all these efficiencies available to be drawn from, which, of course, begs the question: how many teachers will have to lose their jobs because of this announcement? And I think we all know what the answer is. It's zero. No teachers will lose their jobs as a result of this announcement, right? As our caucus has been saying for the past few years, there is room in ministry budgets to reduce spending without impacting front-line services. We've always said that. So I'd like to thank the government for proving that point, that if the political will is there, we can absolutely maintain current levels of service without increasing spending.

But back to my original point. The fact that the government is announcing this while they are in the midst of the biggest spending spree in the history of this province is unbelievable. It's very important to point out that the money they're borrowing is coming from only one source. We all know who it is. It's Albertans, except it's not just Albertans today who will bear the cost of this government's promises. Basic economics and common sense prove that. It's the next generation and the next and maybe the next that will have to deal with the legacy the government is building now.

So when they borrow money to fund a reduction in school fees, let's be accurate, please. What's actually happening? Well, they're making the young students of today pay for any reduction in school fees. It's a shell game in which they appear to be taking school fees away, but it's simply a matter of removing lots of money from one pocket, keeping a whole bunch, putting a comparatively tiny amount back in the other pocket, and then expecting a pat on the back, a thank you, or perhaps a vote in return.

This may appear to be favourable to students and parents because suddenly there is some extra cash in the pocket for the year, except it does the opposite with interest. When our students graduate, they'll get a graduation gift from this NDP government.

Mr. Cooper: How much?

Mr. Rodney: Well, it's going to be a great, big helping of provincial debt, the number yet to be decided. We're at 25 per cent now. If it's 100, well, I guess you can multiply it by four.

The debt that was incurred, not just in this respect: we're talking $11 billion, $12 billion a year every year on behalf of the NDP, their years of mismanagement resulting from an inability to make tough choices. Even though I commend the government for their willingness to address the issue of school fees, I just wish, Mr. Speaker, that they were not doing it on the backs of our students.

There is a way to get this province to a fiscal position in which we can help families with access to education without mortgaging their children's future. That is why, referring to the member who was asking for ideas earlier, we had the Engage document last year, and that's why just this week we tabled our PC caucus plan for balanced budgets. That's how we can help them. If we're going to be moving the burden of school fees from parents to children, let's be accurate about it, at the very least.

Now, additionally I ask: wouldn't it be appropriate for this government to be more thorough in consultation before they bring forth legislation? School boards have been telling us that while they support the goal of this bill, reducing the overall burden of school fees, they still don't have the details on how this legislation is going to work and how it's going to affect them, and they wish they'd been talked to beforehand. It's only fair.

Mr. Speaker, these kinds of details should be consulted on. They should be developed in partnership with the school boards to ensure that these programs can be put in place effectively. I do hope that the government will be more conscientious about consulting before they bring forward legislation in the future as opposed to legislating and then consulting or something like that as an afterthought, which happens with just about everything the government has been doing, sadly.

Now, Mr. Speaker, with all that being said, I will be supporting this bill because I do believe in the importance of strong public funding for all of our forms of education, and I do believe in the need to reduce the burden on Alberta families with school-aged children, especially in these tough economic times.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Mason: Yes, under 29(2)(a). Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, the hon. member made reference to his perception that the government is averse to making tough decisions, so I wonder if the hon. member could give us a few examples of the tough decisions that his party would make if it was restored to office in this province.

Mr. Rodney: Well, the first thing that we would do is kill the carbon tax, of course, right? Okay? I can tell you and I remember fondly the day that . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. member, could I ask that you direct your comments through the chair and to the House?

Please listen to the answer. The question has been asked.

The hon. member.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I remember fondly, very fondly, the day, almost a year ago exactly now, when the hon. Government House Leader asked for an autographed copy of our Engage document, in which we had a multibillion-dollar challenge on a number of ideas on how a number of government departments could maintain all front-line services and decrease their costs at the same time. Now, I could use the next five minutes to go through that document, but I was happy to send over a copy to him, and I know that he read it, and I appreciate that.

It was also suggested in question period the other day by the hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway asking about the budget, which I believe is still on at 3 o'clock tomorrow, somewhat in jest that perhaps the government might want to take the document that we put forward just this week, the PC path to balanced budgets, because it's all in there. Rather than taking up extra time of the House to discuss that, I just encourage the hon. member and everyone, all Albertans, to take a look at the PC plan to balance budgets because there's very good stuff in there that, again, is for Albertans, and it's all about the opportunity to bring us back into balance and restore the Alberta advantage, that's been missing for two years.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to speak under 29(2)(a). I believe I actually stood up faster than the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, which is always an accomplishment. It's the working out at the gym with Dr. Bob.

My question for the Member for Calgary-Lougheed is that he had mentioned that, you know, for years he had said that fees should go where they are intended – and I agree – and that he supports this reduction. He also says that there has been room in ministry spending for years to have cutbacks. So my question to him is: why did he not do that when he was in government and when his party was in government, and why is it that this government had to make the decisions that he couldn't?

Mr. Rodney: I really appreciate the question. It's an opportunity to share the fact that a rather short time ago we had not only a heritage savings trust fund in multibillion dollars, the envy of literally every country in the free world, as well as a $17 billion sustainability fund, which, of course, is now gone, in addition to in-year savings that are documented – and they're on that newfangled interweb; take a look; it's all there – in-year savings that we experienced every year. We were in the best net asset position of any country, any jurisdiction of the free world.

I'll give you an example of my very first government bill, that happened in 2004 or '05.

The Speaker: Hon. member, look to me, please.

Mr. Rodney: Oh, right. Happy to speak to you about it. It's a great-news story, Mr. Speaker.

When I was on the strategic tourism and marketing commission, the first government bill that I brought forward was the hotel levy. You know what? It was upsetting when we had people coming in from other jurisdictions on – you know, it was 5 per cent they were charged extra, and I thought: okay; let's bring that down to 4. All the money that's raised would go to remarketing Alberta. The hotel and tourism industry was extremely pleased with that. Everyone who ever slept in a bed in a hotel was extremely pleased with that. I can tell you, sir, that it was a multibillion – that's how tourism has been funded year after year, and it fuels itself. It goes directly back.

Unfortunately, this government has decided to bleed off all sorts of millions of dollars from that remarketing, which blows my mind. It is extremely important . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Mr. Rodney: . . . especially, Mr. Speaker, at a time when these staycations are so popular because everybody loves Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak on Bill 1, An Act to Reduce School Fees. These fees have been around for many, many years, even way back when I was in high school. There were five of us, and at the start of the school year my parents, between school fees, bus fees, supply fees for the classes, and school supplies, had to fork out over $2,000 every September. That was a lot of money way back then. You know, $140 for textbook rentals: that was just totally absurd, whereas the public system charged nothing.

These fees are still around. There is a set of twins in Edmonton that I know of that were accepted in an Ivy League school. They had to postpone their full scholarships by six months till the mother, a single mother, had paid off their school fees because they weren't awarded their diplomas until the school fees were paid in full. That shouldn't happen.

There's a school in Red Deer where the children from grades 2 to 4 have to take swimming lessons. It's part of the PE class. They charge $35 per student, but then the kids have to come up with bathing suits. A lot of these children don't even own bathing suits. So the kids sit at school while the others participate in the swimming activities, and then they get ostracized and stigmatized, all because of a school fee.

Another one is skiing. I know of a school where grades 3 and 4 go skiing. So the parents have to come up with the money for the ski pass. It's for eight weeks, so eight ski passes. They have to come up with busing money and with ski rental. Parents can't afford it. The kids sit at school, and they, too, get stigmatized and ostracized. The fees have gotten just totally out of control.

I remember one year with my children I got a Kleenex fee: $2 a month to buy a box of Kleenex for the class. You know, it's the little things, the things that nickel and dime you. If you want to take chemistry, you have to pay for equipment rental and the chemicals you use. Biology: you have to pay for a frog to dissect a frog. Like, these kinds of things should be included in your education.

I've talked to many, many parents who are just appalled by the way they're being charged. One parent told me that she'd bought a set of pencil crayons for her daughter. She'd gone to the dollar store because that's what she could afford, and the teacher sent them home and said: they don't match the rest of the class's; you must get the same one as the rest of the class. So she paid a dollar for pencil crayons instead of the $6 for the other ones because she couldn't afford them, and the kid was made to bring them home because they weren't the right ones.

You know, parents struggle. They want what's best for their children. Reducing these fees is going to go a long way. Kids are being bused to schools because the schools in their area are full. I'm lucky. I've got a new school opening in Red Deer-South in September of '17, and that will relieve the pressure on some of the other schools, and these children won't have to be bused anymore.

Things were let slide too long, and they got too far. I just want to encourage everyone in the House to vote for this because our children deserve it, our children need it, and the parents welcome it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Cooper: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for recognizing me here in the Chamber this morning. I appreciate your willingness to be part of such an important debate.

I would just like to say a few words with respect to the comments from the Member for Red Deer-South. I appreciate the bill that's been tabled before the Chamber. I know that many of the words that she spoke this morning about being of assistance to parents and September being a stressful time of month and some of the challenges that come along with students not having the appropriate resources in order to attend activities at school are very, very valid and legitimate. I look forward to supporting the bill. You know, I think we could work to pass the bill quickly and ensure that we get on to the regulations just as fast as possible. I appreciate her comments and thank her for them and for being part of the government, that is taking some small steps to reduce school fees.

During the debate this morning I also heard some folks talking about a shadow budget and how the Wildrose may or may not be active in reducing school fees, and I just might like to ask the member if she is aware of any time in the NDP's history while they spent an extensive period of time in opposition – if she would be able to table any of their shadow budgets.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a) to the member.

Mr. Westhead: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The member talked very passionately about how much she cares for children in her speech, and I know that she's also very passionate about a complementary program to reducing school fees, which is the school nutrition program. In fact, she's got a motion on the Order Paper to that effect. I know that's something that's very close to her heart. If it's something that she feels comfortable speaking about, how she feels the nutrition program will complement the reduction in school fees, if that's something she'd like to talk about, I'd like to hear that from her if that's okay with her.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Children are near and dear to my heart. I have spent many years working in the schools either as a volunteer, an educational assistant, school librarian, and I've seen first-hand the struggles of children. If the parents can't afford the school fees, the children get ostracized not only because of the clothes they wear but for what they bring for lunch or what they don't bring for lunch, so the school nutrition program was something I was just totally thrilled about when it came.

I know of children who brought a carrot to school every day for a month because that's what they had. I was one of the parents who always put extra in the lunch because I was able to. Children, when they had to go to the office and ask for a cheese sandwich – it didn't always happen because the kids were embarrassed. If other kids in the class said, "You know, I've got an extra muffin. Would you like this muffin?" they would take it rather than go down to the office and ask for a sandwich.

That's why I'm bringing my motion forward. We have to think about the kids. The kids are our future, and if we don't look after them, what kind of a future can we look forward to?

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. member, 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Nielsen: Standing Order 29(2)(a), Mr. Speaker. I just want to thank my hon. colleague for her comments with regard to this bill moving forward. You know, like her, I don't necessarily share some of the youthfulness that some of my colleagues in the House here share, but I do happen to remember some of those times from the past. I was wondering if the hon. member might be willing to comment a little bit about: based on our experience from the past, when we used to have a flat tax and when we didn't have a progressive tax . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased and delighted to rise today in the House to support Bill 1, An Act to Reduce School Fees. I would like to share my personal story of when I came to Canada. When I came, my family was looking for work. I grew up in a low-income family and didn't have many financial resources available to support extra fees related to school. When I joined my high school and I was enrolled in different courses, I remember the day when I had to pick an art course that was most interesting to me. The most appealing course to me was photography. Photography is a course that is one of the very expensive courses just because you have to get a camera. You have to get the photographic paper and everything. There are many accessories that need to be bought to basically take that course.

When I went in, I was automatically enrolled based on the forms I submitted, but when I went to see my academic counsellor, I was hesitant to say, "Yes, I want that course." That hesitation was obvious on my face, a little bit of sadness. I was asked, "Why is that?" I told them that I'm afraid that I might not be able to afford the expenses associated with that course. The reply I got was: "If you want the course, if you want to learn it, we will take care of you.” Those were the magical words that changed my world view. That was the moment when I believed that when we have access to education, then how far we can get in our lives. When I heard those words and when I saw the financial assistance and the care and support that I got from the school, it helped me to realize how important it is to forward that care and support and how we can strengthen and build our communities. I was happily enrolled in that course. I had the honour of learning about photography, and I did very well in my school.

That change in the world view basically let me believe that anything is possible in the world and the world is a great place to live in. The possibilities are limitless. This short story, as you can see, changed my life in such a big way that today I’m standing in Alberta’s Legislative Assembly fighting for other children who do not have access to resources at schools or education just because they’re having some financial crisis or having some affordability issues. I’m so pleased to be part of the government that is standing up for the schoolkids, that is standing up for our future, that is standing up for our society to move our province forward.

It was a shocker for me when I learned that students have to pay a fee when they are enrolled in schools in different forms and it is causing a burden on their parents because when I was in school, my parents didn’t even know how I managed to sail through school without even asking them for a single penny.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly support this bill, and I’m very proud that our government is taking such great initiative. Thank you.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) to the hon. member?

Seeing and hearing none, does anyone else wish to speak to the matter?

I think the House is ready for closure on debate on the matter. I need a motion, don’t I? Member for Banff-Cochrane, you have a motion you’d like the House to consider?

Mr. Westhead: Yes, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Education I’d like to close debate on second reading of Bill 1.

[Motion carried; Bill 1 read a second time]

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, I think that caps the morning. A wonderful piece of legislation has been carried unanimously by this House.

I would like to thank all members for their support and move that we call it 12 o’clock and adjourn until 1:30 this afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 11:54 a.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, March 15, 2017

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a wonderful group of students and staff from Garneau elementary school. Garneau elementary is a school that believes education should be active and interactive. These fine young Albertans and their dedicated teachers have been able to tour this beautiful Legislature Building, a building that belongs to each and every one of them just as much as it belongs to those of us elected to be here. They got to see what it's like to be an MLA and learn first-hand how democracy works. They're seated in the gallery over there, and I invite all members of the Assembly to extend a warm welcome to these tremendously fabulous young students and teachers.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. Premier, I'd acknowledge that I have some bias; I have two grandsons that graduated from that school.

The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 30 students from Kensington school. It's a grade 5/6 class. They study social studies and local government, and they decided to come and see what actually is going on here. Jaelene McEwen is their teacher. I've worked with her for so long, and she does a wonderful job in teaching about democracy. As well, along with Jaelene there are chaperones Alba Lina Narvaez, Charlene Munro, and Tamara Bailey. If they could all stand, please, and receive the warm welcome of the Legislature.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and to all members of this Assembly a group of brilliant and talented grade 6 students from Virginia Park school. They're led by their teacher, Mrs. Shelley Hardie, and parents Nykolet Graham, Amber Rodriguez, Deanna Chou, and Kerri Gibson Loranger. There's a good reason that Virginia Park school is so beautiful: because it's filled wall to wall with art that the children there have created over many years. It's a core arts school, and it teaches enhanced visual arts, dance, drama, and music. I would ask these talented budding artists to please stand up and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there any other school groups?

The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a constituent from the great constituency of Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, Marla Zapach. Now, Marla actually hails from Nordegg, the jewel of the David Thompson highway. I know that members from all of the parties in the Assembly have enjoyed the area around Nordegg and know what a great place Marla comes from. She owns an ecotourism business in the area. She's also the president of the chamber of commerce in the area and works as an emergency responder with the volunteer fire department in the area. I'd like her to rise, if she could, and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Deputy Premier and Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We are pleased to declare March as Children's Wish Month this year in Alberta. Today I have the pleasure of introducing to you and through you two great kids, eight-year-old Mable Tooke, who is the superhero that many have gotten to know as Spider-Mable. Welcome back. You probably recall that she faced cancer with courage and bravery, and the Children's Wish Foundation granted her the wish to be a superhero for a day. We also have Jaxon Garner, who has joined us as well in the members' gallery. He is six years old. He loves camping with his family. Jaxon and his family were given the wish of a trailer and spent a lot of their time last summer enjoying the outdoors. Also with us today we have Kyla Martin and her colleagues with the Children's Wish Foundation and Jim Kapeluck, who is with the foundation board.

This month is all about celebrating these kids and the power of wishes. I want to say thank you to the Children's Wish Foundation for granting nearly 25,000 wishes, for helping lift their spirits, and for making life a little bit easier for these great kids and their families. I'd ask that Jaxon, Mable, and their families as well as the representatives from the Children's Wish Foundation please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly an amazing organization, that has a branch in my riding of Edmonton-Rutherford. Family Futures is a growing community organization that empowers families and truly improves the lives of everyday people in the province. Since our government is all about making life easier for Albertans, I wanted to recognize the efforts that they put in every day to assist families, with locations in Edmonton-Rutherford, Edmonton-Mill Woods, Edmonton-Ellerslie, and soon, I understand, opening up a very large new shop in Summerside. They are seeing hundreds of mothers, fathers, and children through their doors every month.

I wanted to take a second to give these hard-working folks a moment of well-deserved recognition as they are truly enhancing the lives of Albertans. Thank you for all the work that you do. I would welcome you to please stand as I call out your names – Charles Burns, Barbara Burns, Sue Hopgood, Chris Gidyk, and Shari-Lynne Gidyk of Family Futures Edmonton – to receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Lieutenant Chris Power, CD. If I could ask him to rise, please. Lieutenant Power was born in Mount Pearl, Newfoundland, and joined the Canadian armed forces in 1996. Throughout his career he has been posted in Nova Scotia, Ontario, and Alberta and has been deployed to Bosnia and Afghanistan. He is currently posted to the 3rd Canadian Division Support Group in Edmonton and now lives in Fort Saskatchewan, since November, with his wife, Jan, and their four children: Alex, Breagha, Cullen, and Rachel.

I'd like thank the lieutenant for his service to Canada and for the time that he spent with me touring the Legislature this afternoon. I know that he is going to be coming back with his children, and I look forward to him being able to visit the area where we recognize the women that trailblazed for his own daughters. If I could ask all members to please extend the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Carbon Levy Rebate Adjustment Notices

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are hearing outrageous stories from Albertans about their parents and grandparents having to refund the carbon tax rebates. Dreaded notices are coming from the Alberta climate leadership adjustment rebate demanding repayment after the death of a spouse.

The NDP government recently sent the carbon tax rebate to an 84-year-old grandmother, then sent a bill to her to pay half of it back. The amount was $25. Another senior on a fixed income had to refund $150. Why, Mr. Speaker? Their marital status had changed. It changed due to the unfortunate passing of their husbands. The government of Alberta demanded that these seniors, who are grieving the loss of their husbands, pay back some or all of the NDP carbon tax rebate because their spouses are no longer eligible.

This is appalling. The one bill for $25 is not only an insult to the family and to the memory of this gentleman, but the cost of recovering that amount exceeds the refund requested. The idiocy of this is mind boggling. For the other senior the $150 was not manageable on her fixed income, so her family had to pay the bill. On top of all of this, one funeral home added $10.25 to the funeral bill to cover the cost of the carbon tax for cremation.

What is this government doing to Albertans? There are so many reasons to scrap the NDP's carbon tax – the 9 million in tax dollars spent advertising it, the dramatic spikes to power and heating bills, increased prices of all goods and services across Alberta – but, Mr. Speaker, this takes the cake. As the one daughter said: the NDP are not for Alberta. Let's hope that someone, somewhere shows a bit more common sense.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Edmonton-McClung Meet Your Neighbour Campaign

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The 150th anniversary of Canada's Confederation should be a joyous time, yet I can't remember when a greater level of fear and suspicion permeated our public discourse or when the headlines of the day cast a longer shadow on so many lives. Six men shot dead in a mosque in Quebec City. Bomb threats against Jewish community centres. We face a global refugee crisis greater than any in a generation, yet some Canadian voices today demand that we close our doors entirely. I talk to people in Edmonton-McClung who feel scared, scared to do things they should be able to take for granted like registering their kids for daycare at the mosque or going to worship at the synagogue.

I grew up in an Alberta where you knew your neighbours, respected their differences, and opened your doors to them, sir. That is the Alberta I want my grandchildren to grow up to know. That sense of community and openness: it's one of the things that Albertans count on the most, one of the things that makes our lives better. Every MLA has a duty to protect that fundamental value of caring for one another. That means restoring connections between Albertans, between neighbours. I believe that starts right at home, right at the doorstep.

Here's how I will do that this spring and summer in Edmonton-McClung. In celebration of Canada's 150th anniversary I will invite each of our seven community leagues to join me in a meet your neighbour door-knocking campaign. Families, faith groups, youth groups, and more will meet at each community hall and then fan out to meet at least 150 new neighbours. Later in the summer we'll have a grand finale reception at my summer barbeque, where we'll join together to celebrate Canada's 150th anniversary.

I'm excited to think about the new connections between people that this campaign will generate. I hope this will encourage other hon. members to help counter the voices of division and fear surfacing in their own ridings, to help us all rediscover that welcoming sense of community that is found at the heart of Canada and our beloved province of Alberta.

Thank you, sir.

Progressive Conservative Budget Plan

Mr. Fraser: Yesterday our caucus delivered a plan for Alberta that would deliver a balanced budget in the 2019-20 fiscal year. This plan also made the commitment that we would not lay off any front-line workers. That means no nurses, no doctors, and no teachers would lose their jobs as we move towards balance.

Every member of this House ran for office because they wanted to do what was best for Albertans. While different members and different parties have different ideas on how to best serve the public interest, we should all acknowledge that in the end we are all working towards the goal of a better Alberta.

When we ask the government to show restraint on spending increases, when we ask them to rethink new taxes that they're introducing to an already hurting economy, we are not threatening cuts to thousands of front-line jobs. Despite government claims that we would target the livelihoods of nurses and teachers, our goal is actually to make sure that Albertans have the opportunity to succeed, whether they are male, whether they are female, gay, straight, religious, or atheist. That means protecting our health care and our education services, but it also means reducing the tax burden and debt for everyone.

That's why we released our balanced budget plan. We owe it to our constituents to show that there are more responsible, common-sense ways to manage tax dollars and that it doesn't mean we have to sacrifice essential services. The Progressive Conservative caucus is focused on solutions, on problems that Albertans face. While we may not all agree on how to get there, we hope all parties in this House will join us in that conversation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Resource Development in Peace River

Ms Jabbour: In October 2015 my constituency of Peace River was dealt an economic blow when Shell cancelled the Carmon Creek oil sands project. The opposition tried to blame our newly elected government for this even though Shell made it clear that the decision was based on low oil prices and pipeline uncertainty. Shell, in fact, supported our environmental and regulatory policies.

A few months later I toured Shell's Peace River operations, including the Carmon Creek site. It was sad to see this massive industrial project as a virtual ghost town, the empty state-of-the-art camp facility, the partially constructed 690 megawatt cogeneration plant. Our community, however, remained hopeful, and we are now finally seeing positive signs of recovery. The climate leadership plan has led to two new pipeline approvals, and companies are embracing opportunities to invest in renewable energy technology.

In November Baytex increased investment in Peace River by purchasing $65 million in heavy oil assets, with the goal of restarting shut-in production over the next few years. In February Kinetico purchased the Carmon Creek cogeneration plant, intending to repurpose the facility as a stand-alone power plant producing green energy and reducing emissions. A few days ago we learned that CNRL is acquiring Shell's assets in Peace River. As part of the agreement CNRL will continue to employ the 110 staff in Peace River and take over the Carmon Creek thermal oil sands assets and undeveloped leases.

These are positive opportunities for Peace River, a sign of investor confidence in economic recovery and growth in the north. However, instead of supporting things that will make life better for families in my constituency, the opposition has chosen to portray this as a negative statement against our government policies. Rather than offering encouragement and hope to Peace River families, the opposition is fearmongering and tearing down these signs of economic recovery.

In Peace River we are excited to see CNRL, Baytex, and Kinetico breathing new life into our economy. These Alberta-based companies will foster economic growth in our region, and with the help of our government's progressive and forward-looking policies, they will do this in a way that balances economic prosperity with environmental responsibility. This is good news.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Rajab Islamic Month

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Rajab is the seventh month of the Islamic calendar and a prelude to the sacred months of Sha'ban and Ramadan. Thus, it is the key to the opening of the months of goodness and blessings.

The term "Rajab" is derived from the word "Rajaba," which means to respect. This year the month of Rajab is anticipated to begin on March 30, depending on the moon sighting. It is the month of the birth of Imam Ali, alaihi salaam, the first imam of Shia Muslims and fourth caliph of Sunni Muslims. Imam Ali, alaihi salaam, was first cousin and son-in-law of Prophet Muhammad, peace be upon him. He was born on the 13th day of the month inside the house of Allah, the Kaaba in Mecca. To define the significance of this month, Prophet Muhammad, peace be upon him, said: "In Paradise there is a canal named Rajab. Its water is whiter than milk, cooler than ice and sweeter than honey. The one who observes even a single fast in Rajab, he/she will be entitled to drink its water."

Muslims celebrate this month grandly by hosting Koonday, the tablecloth dinner. The celebration is the time for Muslims to remember the blessings of Allah and Ahlul Bayt, the family of Prophet Muhammad, peace be upon him. It is one of the very significant months for Muslims to strengthen ties among the community with love, compassion, and peace. The month of Rajab is known for its superabundant favours and benefits, reverence and sanctity and is linked to almighty Allah. Therefore, it is a month when Muslims fast, seek forgiveness, and engage in charity acts.

I would like to wish Rajab Mubarak to everyone and to all Muslims. Thank you.

Energy Policies

Mr. MacIntyre: On Monday and Tuesday I, along with over 500 stakeholders in the electricity sector, attended the 23rd annual Independent Power Producers conference. There was a noticeable atmosphere of uneasiness amongst the participants. Why? Because this government has declared war on the technological neutrality of our free-market electricity system, a system that's mission was affordability and reliability, where the market was free to choose what is best based on very few constraints, and the fewer the constraints, the more affordable and efficient the system.

Why? Because the industrial component of the carbon tax is designed to decline steadily, and we won't have funds available to pay for a capacity market. Why? Because EDC estimates that this government's plan is going to cost Albertans between $20 billion and $30 billion.

Why? Because this government has no respect for the fact that Alberta built the only electricity system in North America where taxpayers are not saddled with utility debt. Why? Because the taxpayer and the ratepayer are still the same person, and the system only works when the government respects that.

Why? Because all this government learned from the architects of the Ontario plan, that are now on Alberta's payroll, is how to hide the cost of green energy policies, not their ineffectiveness at reducing greenhouse gas emissions nor the pain that high power prices and tax bills create for families whose care this government is charged with.

Why? Because this government is more concerned with the revenue they're collecting for their green slush fund than they are with incumbent renewables, renewables that for a decade have reduced greenhouse gas emissions without centrally planned dictates of a technologically illiterate and overzealous politburo.

Why? Because every time the NDP try to carelessly patch up the holes they put in this ship, they make two more.

Speaker's Ruling

Imputing Falsehoods against a Member

The Speaker: I'd like to use this opportunity to rule on a point of order that was raised yesterday by the Government House Leader concerning a remark that the Member for Calgary-Foothills made during Oral Question Period. During question period the Member for Calgary-Foothills referenced a comment that the Deputy Premier had made on Monday with respect to the Official Opposition. You can find the Member for Calgary-Foothills' remarks on page 252 of the Alberta Hansard for March 14, 2017, and the Deputy Premier's remark can be found at page 206 of Hansard for the 13th.

I deferred my ruling so that I could review Alberta Hansard and see the full context of what has been said over the past number of days. Hon. members, for the last number of sitting days certain statements and expressions have been added to questions and responses in question period and also made during debate. These comments have really had little to do with questions or responses or contributed to the debate. Instead, these remarks seem to be made mainly in an effort to elicit response from the other side. They seem to be deliberately provocative, and they have, clearly, repeatedly caused disorder.

I have ruled previously in the Assembly on language which, although not unparliamentary per se, nevertheless caused and does cause disorder. In those many instances I've cautioned members to avoid using intemperate language that was deliberately provocative. Members may find my rulings on page 1385 of the June 1, 2016, Alberta Hansard; page 1455 of the June 2, 2016, Hansard; and on page 782 of the December 2, 2015, Hansard.

I'd like to remind members, first of all, that while it is the job of the Speaker to maintain order and decorum, it is also the responsibility of each member to show a high degree of respect for their colleagues during all Assembly proceedings. "Respect" is certainly the watchword for members for their interactions in this Assembly.

In the instance we have before us, we have a reference to comments that were originally made by the Deputy Premier, remarks that were certainly intemperate. Indeed, there was a subsequent acknowledgement, however, that the remarks were not appropriate when the Deputy Premier unreservedly apologized and withdrew her comments, which may be found on page 235 of yesterday's Alberta Hansard.

I would note that typically in this Assembly when an apology is made and a comment is withdrawn, the effect of an apology and the withdrawal is honoured, and the Assembly moves on. By the same token, when an hon. member indicates that they never said what was attributed to them, members should also respect that.

Hon. members, I'm quite concerned about the deteriorating tone. Accordingly, I would like to thank the House leaders for agreeing to meet with me to discuss this decorum as well as other related issues. While there may not have been per se a point of order here in the exchange of remarks, it does little to improve the freedom of speech. Hon. members, it is our collective responsibility to address this matter as we move forward so that we can return to conducting the business that all Albertans expect of us and that they elected us to do.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Carbon Levy Rebate Adjustment Notices

Mr. Jean: This government is out of control. Most Albertans are already angry enough over this carbon tax, but the NDP had another trick up their sleeve. There are some Albertans who received a relatively small rebate for the cost of the carbon tax earlier this year. Tragically, they passed away. Now the taxman is chasing them down trying to recoup that money from grieving loved ones, not to mention the offence of grieving families seeing a carbon tax line item in the funeral expenses of their loved ones. Did no one on the government benches realize that this was going to happen?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the member opposite knows as a result of the Minister of Finance already responding to this issue, this is a matter that we believe should not have happened. We absolutely don't think that it was right; we don't think it was fair. It was a request that was made by the Canada Revenue Agency, who's administering the rebate. Our officials have already reached out to them, and we are in discussions with them to ask that it not happen anymore because we agree that it is not appropriate. It is not fair. We stand with Albertans. We want to make life better for them, not more confusing, particularly in those awful times, and we're going to take action.

Mr. Jean: Marie Casey received the so-called rebate in January. She died weeks later, but now this government is trying to claw back that hundred dollars from her estate while family members like Darlene Piche continue to grieve. She also got a bill for the carbon tax from the crematorium. It was for $10. You can try to downplay that cost, but you can't excuse the insult or insensitivity. The Finance minister and the Premier seem clueless that this could even happen in the first place. How did no one on the government benches provide direction to the CRA on this, and will someone be fired for the insensitivity and lack of judgment?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the member opposite listen to the answers to the questions because sometimes they get them, as they just did.

Now, first of all, to sort of correct the record, this was not a letter that was sent by our government. It was sent by the CRA, the Canada Revenue Agency, and we have taken action to have the matter corrected. We also agree with the member opposite that it was not appropriate; it was not fair. It was absolutely not what that family needed to see at that time. That is why we are going to do everything we can to make sure that the Canada Revenue Agency stops this practice, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Jean: It's less than three months into the implementation of the carbon tax. How could you possibly not know this would happen? Clawing back carbon tax money from grieving loved ones is more than what you've described, Premier. It's disgusting, it's shameful, and someone needs to be held to account. We've heard stories of widows, who have lost their husbands, having the CRA ask for more rebate money back. Daughters, sons, sisters, and brothers: they're all being chased down by the NDP government. And all the Finance minister can muster up is, and I quote: we will urge the CRA to stop it. Will anyone be held accountable for this, and if not, why won't they be?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, it really is difficult to have these conversations when the members opposite insist on moving forward with pieces of information that they know are not correct. The member opposite suggested that they're being chased down by the NDP government when they know full well that this is something that happened with the Canada Revenue Agency and that the NDP government is standing up for Albertans and speaking to the CRA to ask them to stop the practice. I would like the member opposite to acknowledge the information that he's just been given not once, not twice, but three times.

The Speaker: Second main question.

Mr. Jean: Did you hear that, Mr. Speaker? It sounds like a lot of excuses out there.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Mr. Jean: It's the eve of the NDP government's budget, and most Albertans are bracing for the impact of what bad news will be delivered tomorrow. The so-called shock absorber approach by the Finance minister is making a bad situation much worse. The real shock to the NDP government should be the 58 per cent of Albertans dissatisfied with their economic approach. What's the NDP's response to this? It's to say that the broad themes in Budget 2017 will be the same as 2016. To the Premier: why aren't you listening to the concerns of Albertans?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, it's really easy to throw stones when you don't offer up your own solutions. Thankfully, today the member opposite's caucus did walk forward with just a little bit of information when they said they would subject Albertans to, and I quote: a fiscal Dragon's Den. Think about that for a moment. The Wildrose want to turn Albertans' futures into a reality TV show. Who would run the gauntlet of their show? Children with special needs, long-term care patients, vulnerable children, parents, and students? Albertans deserve so much better.

Mr. Jean: For two years Albertans have buckled down to face the economic downturn as best as possible. They've made big sacrifices just so they can pay their bills and their mortgage. It's been a struggle. But for the NDP government it's: "Let the good times roll. Downturn? What downturn? Let's just rack up some more debt." The NDP ought to leave their offices every once in a while and talk to real Albertans. It would be important. They might actually hear some common sense for once. Why does the Premier think her government is above doing what all Albertans are doing around their kitchen table, finding savings?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, what Albertans don't want is to risk their future so that the Wildrose can be reality TV stars. That is not good governance. Our government is committed to making life better for Albertans by making their life more affordable, by stimulating job growth, and by protecting the very services that protect and serve the families of Alberta. This is what we ran on, this is what we committed to, and this is the direction that we will continue to move forward with.

Mr. Jean: Albertans are not expecting a miracle overnight that'll get us out of the red, but they do expect effort to work towards reducing the debt and to tackle the debt. They know that spending today will fall on the hands of future generations to pay off. The Finance minister talks of bending the curve, but we've seen no plan at all to get back to balance. When Wildrose puts forward common-sense ideas to reduce the deficit without cuts to front-line services, we get insults, tired and condescending talking points, and no substance. Will the Premier tell me just one serious idea to reduce Alberta's deficit? Just one.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the member opposite: when it comes to coming up with ideas to cut public spending, why is he even stopping at Dragons' Den? How about Survivor? [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Ms Notley: Tune in next week to see who the Wildrose kicks off the island. Will it be seniors? Will it be students? Will it be people in hospital? Who are they going to throw off the island? We are going to have Albertans' backs. We will protect them, not the folks over there. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, when I call for order, please become quiet.

The third main question.

Mr. Jean: Easy answer, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are going to throw the NDP government off the island next election.

Government Policies

Mr. Jean: Part of the plan to balance will need to include finding efficiencies within government departments. A manager managing a manager who reports to a director doesn't serve our system well. A bloated bureaucracy diverting funds away from front-line services, where they are needed most, doesn't help. When we spend $1,100 more per capita than Ontario on health care to get longer wait times, something needs to change. To the Premier: what specific actions is she going to direct her government to take to find cost savings without impacting front-line services? Just one example.

Ms Notley: As we've said before, Mr. Speaker, our government is committed to bringing down the deficit in a careful and prudent manner. We are not going to throw people under the bus in order to get to a balanced budget in a way that hurts our communities. The members opposite are talking about taking $2 billion out of operating. Do you know what that would do? That would eliminate all of AISH, and they wouldn't be done. They would then also have to cut all of our public security spending. That wouldn't even get them there. They have no ideas. They're throwing out numbers. It's magical thinking, and there is no solution as a result.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, this NDP government has a savings problem, a spending problem, and obviously a fearmongering problem. It's a boat with two large holes drilled in the side with only a thimble available to bail it out. It just won't work, and Albertans are looking desperately for their life vests. Albertans don't want tired talking points, blaming the world price of oil for the current situation we're in. They want action from this government. When will the Premier realize that she needs to listen to the majority of Albertans and get her government's finances in order?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, what Albertans are looking for from this government is a government that will work on creating and stimulating job growth. They want a government that has their back, that wants to make their life more affordable through things like a cut in student fees, something that the members opposite apparently don't support. You know what else? They want a government that will preserve those important public services that families rely on so that they can invest in their future and plan for greater prosperity in years to come. That's what they're looking for. They're not looking for slashing and burning from those folks.

Mr. Jean: Like I said, get out from under the dome.

Many of the reasons the NDP government is taking on further debt are the result of self-inflicted wounds. Taking energy companies to court over PPAs and accelerating the shutdown of coal rests squarely on this NDP government's shoulders. Not only do these ill-advised schemes cost our province more; they send a signal to investors that is not helpful. It's simply saying: don't do business in Alberta. Will the Premier show that she isn't completely out of touch with Albertans and the business community and drop the PPA lawsuit today?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, when it comes to investor certainty, one of the things that we heard from investors is that we needed to fix the broken electricity system. We needed to provide certainty to producers and to investors, both of which were waning because the system was broken. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Ms Notley: In addition, Mr. Speaker, we heard from consumers that they could not afford the wild price swings that the members opposite built into our electricity system. So, having Albertans' backs, we took action. We built a better system. It's going to attract investment, and it's going to be better for Albertans for decades to come.

The Speaker: The leader of the third party.

Cabinet Ministers' Participation in Debate

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, the NDP government shows disdain for Albertans in many ways. It talks down to them. It acts first and then only pretends to consult later. I could cite many examples, including the job-killing carbon tax and the coal phase-out, that totally disregards the very communities being devastated. As if this was not enough, the NDP regularly schedules cabinet meetings in the middle of Monday afternoons during the Assembly sitting. To the Premier: will you show some respect for this House and schedule your cabinet meetings when we're not sitting so that your ministers may attend?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, there's a lot of work that goes on when one is governing, but let me say this. We actually have 55 members in our caucus, all of whom are brilliant members of this Legislature, all of whom are able to move forward with debate on behalf of each of their constituents and to represent Albertans and to work on our project of making life more affordable and better for all Alberta families.

Mr. McIver: Okay. Well, the cabinet doesn't have to show up. I get it.

Mr. Speaker, given that rural Albertans in the agricultural sector are vital parts of our economy and given that Alberta's rural leaders will gather for the AAMD and C convention in Edmonton next week and given that these leaders need access and dialogue with senior members of this government – no cabinet meetings, in other words – so that, unlike the Bill 6 fiasco, they can talk to them, to the Premier: will you make sure your ministers are available for the AAMD and C so that you don't get booed out of the room again this year?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member opposite for asking me scheduling questions. Our members, our MLAs, and also our cabinet ministers have regularly attended AAMD and C meetings, AUMA meetings, and a number of other stakeholder meetings, and they have engaged thoughtfully and respectfully with the representatives from those organizations and many others, and I'm pleased to be able to tell the Assembly that they will continue to do that.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, since this session started, for the first questions the Deputy Premier in particular has made a point of not even trying to answer the questions but, rather, run out a string of insults. The Premier has called Albertans embarrassing cousins, told them to take the bus, told them to make better decisions, and the Deputy Premier showed up with a rhyme that starts with: "We're focused on hard hats. They're spending . . ." Well, you know the end of the . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member.

Mr. McIver: You know the end of the poem, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon member, please be seated. I just finished a caution asking that you be respectful. I would ask that you consider that advice about caution.

Mr. McIver: That's why I was going to say: we know the end of the poem. Mr. Speaker, I wasn't going to say it based on your remarks.

Premier, do you condone this characterization of Albertans by you and your Deputy Premier, and can we expect better from both of you in the future?

Mr. Cooper: Point of order.

The Speaker: Noted.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I reject the description that was offered by the member opposite in pretty much every way. But what I will say is that our government is committed to building a more inclusive, a more welcoming, a more diverse Alberta.

We are doing that in a number of ways. We're doing that by increasing the opportunities for women across our province, within our caucus, and within our cabinet. We are doing that by reaching out to members of all different religions and all different multicultural groups because they, too, need to be included. We are doing that by continuing to move forward by protecting minorities, who sometimes feel abused and put upon.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Provincial Budget Document Formats

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Transparency is the cornerstone of democracy. On January 3 of this year I sent a letter to the Minister of Finance requesting that he release all of the numbers from the upcoming budget in an open-data format so that all Albertans can more effectively engage in the democratic process. Now, given that the minister hasn't yet responded to my letter, I thought I might ask the question here now, today. To the Minister of Finance: will you release all of the data from the upcoming budget in an open electronic format and make it accessible to members of this Assembly, to the media and stakeholder groups, and to the public?

Mr. Ceci: You know, I know that the member opposite asked me that question right here, right in front of my desk, previously, a couple of weeks ago, and I explained to him that there will be some tables that will be released in an open-format basis but not all tables. Some of those tables can be manipulated, and it would be a bad thing to characterize the government's work in a manipulated form to Albertans. We don't want to share it that way. We'll share those that we're able to, for sure, but not everything.

Mr. Clark: Well, Mr. Speaker, that seems like a strange objection. It's like saying that we shouldn't have highways because some people might speed.

Again to the minister. I would like to know if you have any real, actual evidence that this information could be misused, or are you just worried that we'll use that information to prove to Albertans that there is a middle way that promotes Alberta innovation, actually balances the budget, and does so without front-line service cuts? It is possible, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. I'll just repeat that some information will be shared in an open-format basis, not all of the information. Certainly, there will be hard copies. There will be electronic stick copies of all of the budget. Albertans, if they want, can access that. It'll be on websites immediately after I start my speech as well, Mr. Speaker. Albertans will get the information they're looking for. We just don't want some to be potentially manipulated. I'm not saying by you, but I'm saying by others.

Mr. Clark: Well, it's funny that you mention the cost and the fact that you're going to release this in a printed version because today there was a report that said that each copy of the federal budget costs $102 to print. I'm curious. To the Minister of Finance again: what does it cost to print each copy of the provincial budget, and will you commit to saving money and trees by distributing open electronic versions of the budget?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. This might be a better question to the Minister of Environment and Parks. I didn't say how much those printed versions would cost. I don't know. I'll find out. But, you know, Albertans can go online immediately after I start my speech, and they can see the entire budget – in full it's thousands of pages – and read it then.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The famous author and playwright George Ryga, the pride of Richmond Park, once wrote about travelling across the Athabasca River on the new highway 813 bridge, one the community had long been asking for. Of course, that was in 1955. A lot of things have changed since the 1950s, and so has that bridge but not for the better. This bridge has seen better days. To the Minister of Transportation: when will my constituents finally see this bridge replaced?

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much to the hon. member for the question and for the work that he's done to bring this issue to my concern. You know, in the last year, Mr. Speaker, we've done quite a bit of patching on the south side of highway 813, but I agree that projects like replacing the aging bridge on highway 813 over the Athabasca River are important. It plays an important role in supporting the economy, in the agriculture and logging industries in northern Alberta. We've taken these concerns into account, hon. member, and we'll do our best to help.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that a new bridge would not only remove what has been a real impediment to economic development in our region and given that for decades now citizens have been demanding a bridge that is wider and not under constant repair, what has the government done to move this project forward?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We're aware that the municipality considers the project to be a very high priority. I've met with the local officials on the council on this matter, and we are committed to improving infrastructure because our government wants to make life better for Albertans, and part and parcel of that is making sure that we have the infrastructure that they need to support education, health care, and particularly to support economic development. We want to keep people safe; we want to make their lives better. That's what the government is committed to.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that our region's businesses, especially in the tourism, energy, forestry, and agriculture sectors, are very eager to see shovels in the ground for this project, can the minister provide a timeline for when we will see this bridge replaced?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker, for that question. While I can't provide a specific timeline for the hon. member, I can assure him that he will have to wait less time than under the previous government, which, I guess, was probably 60, 70 years. I'm sure the time until we can fix this problem will be significantly less than the amount of time taken by the previous government.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker . . . [applause] Thank you. I'll try to be nice today.

Alberta has not had a balanced budget since 2007. A decade ago George Bush was President, Maroon 5 topped the charts, and popped collars were an acceptable fashion choice for grown men. Since then the net financial assets of our province have collapsed by $50 billion. Successive Finance ministers and Premiers have all talked a game about balancing the budget but have never had a serious plan to get there. Will this Finance minister and Premier be any different when they table their budget tomorrow?

Mr. Ceci: I want to first say congratulations to the member opposite on the birth of his new daughter.

You know, Mr. Speaker, this government will continue to do the things we said we'll do all along. This government will act as a shock absorber. The Leader of the Official Opposition doesn't know what that means, I think. The shock absorber is all about protecting Albertans through this recession so they don't have to wear fewer services and send their children to larger classrooms and get into waiting rooms in hospitals that are horrendous for their needs. That's what we're going to continue to do.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Hon. member, I am appreciating a much more quiet, mellow person for the next little while.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Don't get used to it, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you very much, Minister, for the kind remarks.

On a completely unrelated topic, a hypothetical child born on March 11 at 10:04 p.m. would owe exactly $6,929.29 of provincial debt the moment they were born. Based on current borrowing projections, by the time they're old enough to vote that child will owe almost $50,000 of provincial debt. My question is simple. Does the minister believe this is fair to future generations?

Mr. Ceci: You know, this hypothetical child that we're talking about, Mr. Speaker: how did the hospital treat mom and child when they were there? Did they support them? We are doing that by supporting hospitals. This future child, when she goes to school, will she be in a classroom with 20 kids or 40 kids, like might happen over there? Families know we have their backs.

An Hon. Member: We missed you.

The Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Fildebrandt: I missed you, too, Minister.

Actually, the hospital was absolutely excellent.

Today Wildrose released our plan to balance the operating budget by 2019 and the total consolidated budget deficit by 2020. We proposed common-sense cost-cutting measures like a government-wide salary freeze to save $210 million, reducing the number of bureaucrats through attrition to save $312 million, and scrapping the carbon tax slush fund to save a very good $1.2 billion. Is this government willing to be reasonable, sit down with the Opposition, and consider adopting some of these measures to get us to a balanced budget?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, he talks cuts over there, but let me see. Conservative cuts are at odds with their spending requests. One request from that side was for a new hospital in Airdrie. Another request was for $250 million from the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View for five new intersections. One day they talk cuts. We also hear that they talk spend, spend, spend.

Mr. Fraser: Yesterday the PC caucus released our balanced budget. It's a plan that listens to the priorities of Albertans. It controls government spending without cutting any essential programs and protects every front-line job. When these common-sense alternatives were given to the Finance minister, though, he laughed it off and said: I won't be using any of those ideas. Minister, can you confirm your comments? Did you mean your budget won't consider modest spending and that you won't include a plan to pay back your out-of-control debt, or will it be a true NDP budget and none of the above?

Mr. Ceci: You know, I'll start out by saying: stay tuned. Be in this Legislature tomorrow at 3:15, and you'll hear the entire budget speech right from this very part.

The bigger question, I think, is: where is our economy going? Are we coming back? Do we see green shoots happening in our economy? I think the answer is starting to say yes to all of that. In the Grande Prairie Daily Herald-Tribune yesterday: "Future of Oil, Gas in Peace Country Positive." In the Globe and Mail on the weekend: "Oil-field Service Firms Seeing New Signs of Life." The actions of this government and the people of Alberta are . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

First supplemental.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Albertans have been loud and clear that they don't support the NDP carbon tax and given that our balanced budget includes the fact that we'll repeal that carbon tax, Minister, we can't fix your carbon tax today, so will you do the right thing now and at least put some of the revenue generated from this carbon tax towards paying off the skyrocketing debt that you're accumulating?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you. I think we've been clear all along that the carbon levy, as a result of the climate leadership plan, has achieved two pipelines in this province. Approval for two pipelines is a direct result that the carbon levy is going back in terms of rebates. It's going back in terms of innovations. It's going back in terms of diversifying our economy. Things like that are happening. The petrochemical diversification program is also happening. That all is taking place because of our work on the climate leadership plan.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that our caucus doesn't support the federally imposed carbon tax and given that the federal government will still hit Albertans with a $50 per tonne carbon tax in the near future, to the same minister: will you listen to Albertans when it comes to dealing with this heavy tax burden that they're about to face, and will you make the federal carbon tax revenue neutral and cut their personal taxes?

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much for the important question. You know, the member doesn't talk about the important work we've already done with small businesses in terms of cutting their taxes from 3 per cent to 2 per cent. We're making life affordable not only for small businesses but for Albertans. We're reducing by 25 per cent the school fees. We haven't brought in a health care premium like you guys would have brought in over there. We're also making sure that taxes are fair and equitable for Albertans and putting them at the midpoint for all of Canada.

Carbon Policies

Mr. Barnes: With the implementation of the NDP carbon tax, innovators in our junior oil and gas sector are worried, worried about their financial future and the jobs they create. On Monday I asked the minister if the government planned to give large subsidies to energy companies that lobbied for a carbon tax, so large that these companies won't actually be paying any carbon tax, leaving junior oil and gas companies to foot the entire bill. She provided no answer, evading the question. To the minister: did you mean to say yes but evaded the question just because you're too embarrassed to admit it?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're pleased to support energy companies in Alberta, all sizes. We are pleased, for example, that this week there was an announcement by an Alberta company investing in Alberta, doubling down not just as Albertans but doubling down on their investments in Alberta. It's disappointing that constantly on that side we're hearing about not support for Alberta companies but support for others. I have to say that on this side we are supporting Alberta business.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, protecting the 15 per cent of oil and gas companies that exchanged political cover with the NDP government for not having a carbon tax that would only be applied to their competitors does not build prosperity and fairness. Given that the climate leadership plan penalizes 85 per cent of the job creators in Alberta's largest industry with a crippling carbon tax and given that those carbon tax revenues are earmarked to be cycled back to subsidize their competitors, again to the Minister of Energy: when will this NDP government stop picking winners and losers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We work with all our companies on the carbon price, and we're working with them on innovation. Our companies are amazing innovators, and the carbon levy is going to help support that innovation. Again disappointed that the opposition doesn't believe in the innovation of Alberta industry and our Alberta energy people.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, we have industry fleeing for other jurisdictions, moving billions of dollars in investment capital and thousands of jobs, and an Energy minister that cannot tell Albertans when they can expect the results of a now long-overdue OSAG panel. Given the OSAG panel's obvious ties to investor confidence, again to the Minister of Energy: when can our oil sands industry and their investors expect the findings of the OSAG panel, and will the results be fair and equitable to all players in the industry?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, we're working with the companies on carbon pricing. We're working on lowering our emissions. Our companies are amazing innovators, and they continue to innovate. They're driving down costs. When I was in Houston last week, that's what we heard from Cenovus and from other companies, about how they have lowered their emissions while lowering their prices, and they're remaining competitive in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Adult Guardianship and Trusteeship

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week I spoke with a constituent who has had to navigate the overly complicated guardian/trustee process. This process is meant to help Albertans looking to take on guardianship roles for vulnerable loved ones. Families often have to pay for lawyers to navigate this process, and more and more people are requesting legal assistance. To the Minister of Justice: what will you do to fix this process and make it user friendly?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, of course, it's a fundamental commitment of this government to make sure that we're standing up for vulnerable Albertans and for all Albertans to make their lives a little bit easier. We're constantly reviewing all of our processes. As I understand, the process in question is subject to some recommendations from the Auditor General, so we're looking very closely at those and working very closely with them, and we will work with all Albertans to make sure that these processes meet their needs.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, given that guardians are forced to jump through many hoops – attend appointments, assessments, and verifications from professionals, professional associations, and law enforcement agencies – and given that the forms themselves are onerous, with two bundles, the first having up to 12 forms and the second bundle having up to five separate forms, how will this government work with families of vulnerable Albertans to navigate this process?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, of course, at the end of the day, what we have to understand is that the office of the public guardian and trustee is in place to make sure that vulnerable Albertans are taken care of. Sometimes that requires that those doing the caring submit to some screening checks to make sure that we're able to provide for those vulnerable individuals' care by people who are upstanding, good members of society who will take proper care of them, and sometimes we do need to have that oversight.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, given that the guardianship manual for the people to educate themselves is 63 pages with complicated language like the two-page section on the 54 acronyms the guardian is expected to know and given that guardians shouldn't have to use the two-page decoder just to read the government information package, will the minister commit to reviewing the information package for guardians seeking to help their loved ones?

Ms Ganley: Well, as we've said, Mr. Speaker, the office of the public guardian and trustee is fairly new to my ministry. Certainly, we are working with them on all sorts of processes as we speak. We will absolutely look at those forms to make sure that they are as legible as possible. As someone who once provided legal services to vulnerable Albertans, we know how important it is that they're able to access and understand that information.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Greenway.

NAIT Board of Governors Chair Appointment

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Thursday the Minister of Finance said in this House, "I'm not going to apologize for getting people on boards for what they know as opposed to who they know." Two days before that this government appointed Mr. Ray Martin, a former NDP MLA and former NDP leader, as the chair of the board of NAIT. This is the height of hypocrisy. To the Finance minister: can you tell Albertans, without smiling, that you're not embarrassed by this appointment? [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Mr. Schmidt: Mr. Speaker, Mr. Ray Martin is a great Albertan who has served this province very well for decades. I'm ashamed to hear the member opposite drag his name through the mud and suggest that Mr. Martin isn't appropriate. Mr. Martin has a solid track record of serving the community, and he will continue to do so as the chair of the board of NAIT.

Mr. Gill: Hypocrisy it is.

Given that on December 7 the minister said in this House about the ministry's new process for appointing members to ABCs, "We are working so that this is not just an insiders', old boys' club" and given that according to the new guidebook, the minister or an office rep of the Premier's office must sit in on the interview, and cabinet approves this appointment, to the Advanced Education minister now: was Mr. Martin appointed because of what he knew or because he's an insider with an NDP world view?

Mr. Schmidt: Well, Mr. Speaker, of course, as I said in my previous answer, Mr. Martin has a successful track record of serving this province very well. He's experienced in the field of education. He worked as a teacher. He's been a member of the Edmonton public school board for many years. He will continue to serve the people, with a mandate for improving education in this province, as the chair of the board of NAIT, and I'm very proud to have been part of making that appointment.

Mr. Gill: World view it is.

Given that on November 3 the Finance minister said, "We are resetting the appointment process for the [ABCs] so [they] will look more like Albertans and less like that side" and given that the NDP tried to turn Alberta into Cuba, with Ms Berman calling the shots on the oil sands and appointing a good party comrade to the head of the NAIT board, Minister, when you told Albertans that ABCs would look “less like that side,” did you mean that they would look more like your side?

Mr. Schmidt: Well, Mr. Speaker, in fact, our boards do look more like this side, in that we have appointed an equal number of women to many boards. In fact, the hon. member might be pleased to know that there are more women on the board of NAIT than there are on that entire side of the House, and we will continue to make those appointments to make sure that our boards look like Albertans and not like that side of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Reynolds-Alberta Museum

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituency of Wetaskiwin-Camrose is home to the award-winning Reynolds-Alberta Museum, a paradise of vintage automobiles, bicycles, agricultural implements, aircraft, and industrial equipment. However, this heritage is at stake due to a shortage of storage facilities. Given that my constituents advocated for Reynolds with the previous government with no success, to the Minister of Culture and Tourism: what is this government doing to protect Alberta's transportation and industrial heritage?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for that question. I want to also thank the member for his advocacy on this file. We know tourism makes life better for Albertans by attracting visitors and creating jobs. The Reynolds Museum is an important tourist attraction where all can learn about Alberta's transportation and industrial heritage. We are working on finding solutions to protect the existing artifacts, add to the collections, and of course celebrate Alberta's heritage. As you know, we are going to be releasing a new capital plan tomorrow, March 16, and more details will be made available.

Thank you.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Reynolds-Alberta Museum is not just a museum but also an internationally acclaimed restoration and conservation shop and one of only three fly-in museums in Canada, what is the Minister of Culture and Tourism doing to protect the Reynolds Museum?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Reynolds Museum is indeed a great cultural attraction, bringing visitors from around the world. I've had the pleasure, of course, of attending the air show and the opening of the new Stan Reynolds permanent display last year. We are making decisions in the best interests of Albertans. We are making life better for Albertans. Those decisions will be made public tomorrow, when we release the budget and the capital plan.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Reynolds is also an economic driver in my riding, what will the government do to help grow rural tourism in areas such as Wetaskiwin-Camrose?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With almost 39,000 visitors in 2016 the Reynolds Museum is a world-class destination. This is not only an economic driver for the community, but it's also helped to grow communities across the province. Last month I had the opportunity to attend the Growing Rural Tourism conference in the hon. member's constituency. We are always looking for ways of increasing visitation to the museums. We know that rural tourism is a key contributor to diversifying our economy, creating good jobs, and making Albertans' lives better.

Thank you.

Agricultural Concerns

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, last year was another tough one on Alberta farmers. Besides the uncertainty of the unpopular Bill 6 legislation, some had very wet conditions to deal with. Some areas of Alberta had declared agricultural disasters. Alberta has 1 million unharvested acres still laying in the field. Although insured through AFSC, many farms were concerned about paying bills as insurance payouts will not happen until spring. Why are farmers getting notices from AFSC that they'll be penalized for late payments on premiums when they still haven't been paid out from the same company for unharvested crops?

The Speaker: The Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Without a doubt last season was a little bit of a roller coaster. We started out dry, became wet. In some counties it never stopped raining, without a doubt. But I am happy to report that 90 per cent of unharvested acres have been inspected, and currently there are only two farmers that are waiting to be inspected for their payouts. I'm very happy with the work that our public servants are doing at AFSC. They're doing a bang-up job. They'll continue to do so.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Schneider: I can't comment.

Given that the farmers have limited options to deal with these crops: double disking, harrowing, perhaps burning, and given that Alberta crop business and development has advised clients to burn the cereal crops because of mycotoxins in the cereals and also because combining that crop could spread Fusarium through the entire field, minister: in light of the fire ban in Lamont county, has your department developed a plan with municipalities to deal with the destruction of these crops given the small timeline that farmers have before they have to start thinking about seeding?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We have been in conversation with Lamont county and other counties as well to ensure that counties have the tools they need to be able to help their farmers to get the crops off so they're able to sow this spring. I'm hoping as well for a dry spring because otherwise we're going to be in a very similar situation. So we're absolutely talking to the counties, looking for those options to ensure that our farmers can again be successful.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Schneider: Given that a controlled burn of these crops may be the best option for farmers to reduce the chance of disease, pestilence, and to control vermin and given that these farmers understand that the fires could have impact on the environment – I hope you're beginning to see where I'm headed here – to the minister: what assurances can you give to farmers that there will be no repercussions from your government should using controlled burns run afoul of your environmental vision?

2:40

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you, Member, for the most peculiar question. Interesting in some aspects, I suspect, but you know a crop – you know, many options. It could be a very viable option to be able to burn those crops to get their things in. No way does that fit into the climate leadership plan. I'd encourage the member to read the climate leadership plan, and I'd encourage him to point out where it actually talks about burning the crops. I don't believe that it does.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Oil Sands Investments

Mr. Gottfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Social licence can be an important consideration for industry, including energy producers and pipeliners, but as we are finding out, it is not the only consideration. As Shell stood with the Premier to accept carbon taxes, they also began their pullout from the oil sands, redirecting scarce capital to more business-friendly jurisdictions. I call that a hug and a shove. To the Minister of Energy: even with your CLAP and carbon tax Shell still chose to divest itself of oil sands assets. What are you doing specifically today to stem the flight of international capital?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I previously said, we were very pleased this week when I was in Houston to find out that a good Alberta company doubled down not just on Albertans but doubled down on their investments in Alberta also. When I spoke to the president, he also assured me that he was going to look for opportunities to upgrade in Alberta and invest more in Alberta. The opposition continues to mislead this House and indeed Albertans for their own political gain. That side of the House is fearmongering. This side of the House is supporting Alberta energy.

Mr. Gottfried: Mr. Speaker, given that Shell, Statoil, Total, and Marathon have recently divested themselves of billions in oil sands assets and given that we are thankful that CNRL, Athabasca, and others were able to acquire them at significant discounts and are happy to see Canadian companies increase their holdings – we still have grave concerns with four multinationals pulling out of the oil sands – again to the minister: has your government driven investor confidence down so far that the oil sands are now only to be considered as a regional investment opportunity?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On that side of the House earlier people cheered against us succeeding in getting a pipeline. We got not one, but we got two. You've criticized major companies before about investing in Alberta. We have Alberta companies investing in Alberta, and you criticize. We're focused on this side on making life better for Albertans. We're focused on helping our companies. We're proud for any company, Albertan or not, to invest in Alberta.

Mr. Cooper: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order noted.

Mr. Gottfried: Who needs an enemy when you have the NDP?

Mr. Speaker, given that the government continues to employ Tzeporah Berman against the wishes of the vast majority of Albertans and given that Ms Berman recently called upon Queen's University to divest of their oil sands assets, akin to what some schools have done with tobacco, and given, I'm sure you would agree, that this comparison is absurd, again to the minister: with your government driving out the multinationals and your friends trying to drive out equity investment of Canadians, who will be left to invest in Alberta when you are done?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, Albertans are investing in Albertans. The company this last week doubled down on their investment in Alberta, and they have confidence in Albertans. We, again, are growing tired of hearing the comments about bad deals and, frankly, not cheering for Albertans. That's not something we're doing. We are not going to stop till we get more investment in Alberta. With the pipelines we see shovels in the ground, something they continue to cheer against. Not on this side of the House.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Affordable and Seniors' Housing

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When I speak with housing advocates in my constituency, a significant issue that they raise is the state of Glenmore Manor. Given that the previous government failed to maintain this seniors' facility as needed and given that this government has announced approximately $18 million for capital maintenance, to the Minister of Seniors and Housing: what is the government doing to address these concerns?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Seniors built this province, and they deserve to age in community, close to family and friends, where they want to be. While the previous government neglected affordable housing, leaving seniors and facilities with over a billion dollars worth of repairs to be done, we are making life better for seniors by investing in affordable housing so seniors can retire in dignity. I can confirm that as part of the announcement in December 2016, Glenmore Manor is receiving more than $76,000 for a roof replacement.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister. Given that Alberta currently needs about $1 billion in repairs for seniors' affordable housing, to the same minister: how did this backlog happen, and what strategies is this government planning to alleviate these pressures?

Ms Sigurdson: It's true that the previous government made life harder for Albertans by not prioritizing affordable housing. As part of the previous budget I'm proud that our government is investing $1.2 billion during the next five years into building more homes. And let me say this. There are some in this Chamber who called for drastic cuts, in the billions of dollars. These cuts will only hurt seniors and Albertans who live in these facilities. It's clear that the opposition wants to cut investments in seniors and affordable housing, and our government is investing in housing to make life better for Albertans.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that seniors deserve to have a safe place to live and given the need to address affordable housing in Calgary, to the same minister: when will my constituents see movement on these matters?

Ms Sigurdson: I'm proud to say that this year more than $343,000 has been allocated for repairs in the Calgary-Glenmore riding. This will go towards fixing sidewalks and replacing roofs for affordable housing. Cedarbrae and Oakridge are examples of projects receiving funds.

Earlier today we announced $5.7 million for the planning of 14 affordable housing projects across this province. This includes Elbow Valley seniors' community, George C. King Tower replacement, and Southview 3 community housing. Again, Mr. Speaker, on this important issue our government is investing; the opposition wants to cut.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I just want to compliment you. You not only had a baby shower today, but you got to 15 questions.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just two quick tablings today. First, a Facebook post from Wildrose on Campus featuring their role model, the leader of the Wildrose opposition.

One other quick one is from the social media page the Rebel media heralding their invitation to the Wildrose on Campus event along with opposition Wildrose members. One big happy family.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today and only today I have five tablings on behalf of the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance. First, I rise to table the appropriate number of copies of the Automobile Insurance Rate Board's 2016 annual report for the year ended December 31, 2016. The 2016 annual report was prepared under the board's direction in accordance with section 601(1) of the Insurance Act and must be tabled in accordance with section 601(2) of the act.

Next, Mr. Speaker, I rise to table the requisite number of copies of the response to Motion for a Return 36 for the Member for Strathmore-Brooks regarding documents prepared for the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance in preparation for a meeting with rating agencies in Toronto on April 25, 2016.

Next, Mr. Speaker, I rise to table a response to Written Question 17: "What are the deliverables from the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance's trip from April 25 to 29, 2016, to Toronto and New York?" The international mission report for that trip is posted on the government of Alberta website, but I am pleased to table copies in this Chamber, which I think was included in that package there.

Fourthly, Mr. Speaker, I rise to table a response to the MLA for Calgary-Elbow's Written Question 15:

What has been the impact on Alberta's projected debt-servicing costs since the downgrade in the credit rating by Standard &

Poor's, and what has been the impact on the debt-servicing costs since the notice of a credit review by Moody's and by Dominion Bond Rating Service during the 2015-2016 fiscal year?

Finally, I rise to table the response to the MLA for Calgary-Elbow's Written Question 16:

What has been the impact on Alberta's provincial bond yields since the downgrade in the credit rating by Standard & Poor's, and what has been the impact on the debt-servicing costs since the notice of a credit review by Moody's and by Dominion Bond Rating Service during the 2015-2016 fiscal year?

Mr. Speaker, that concludes today's presentation on behalf of the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

The Speaker: The Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. One is a report on the Alberta Teachers' Association website that states that membership in the Alberta New Democratic Party automatically gets you a New Democratic Party of Canada membership.

And because the Member for Calgary-North West is so fond of guilt by association, I've got five copies of the Leap Manifesto, that she is now part of.

The Speaker: Member for Calgary-Hays, do you have something to table?

Mr. McIver: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased and proud to table five copies of the Progressive Conservative balanced budget plan, a model for this government.

The Speaker: Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I briefly have two tablings. The first is the letter I wrote to the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board on January 3 of this year requesting that all budget documents be provided in an open-data format and noting that it would be a big help to get the budget data in Excel format or similar. I sure hope that's possible for this budget.

My second tabling is a news article from CBC today, which shows that it will cost over $100 to print each copy of the federal budget, and I'm curious if our provincial budget will be the same.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have for tablings today the requisite number of copies of the outstanding Alberta Health motions for returns and written questions from the 29th Legislature, and in preparing these, I want to say thank you to the hard-working public servants who gathered this information so it could be put on the record.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, sir. I have two tablings if you will allow me. First, is a tabling, five copies, of the originating application for a judicial review dated March 2, 2017. This matter is between the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays and the office of the Ethics Commissioner.

The second tabling is five copies of the consent order. This is the Court of Queen's Bench order by Justice Jeffrey on the matter between the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays and the office of the Ethics Commissioner, set for a special hearing on January 12, 2018.

Thank you, sir.

The Speaker: Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Yeah. Mr. Speaker, I'm tabling a copy of the Stats Canada report that refers to the crime severity index, that I referred to in my speech on Monday, and the alarming rate that it's gone up. The people in my riding of Battle River-Wainwright are very concerned about it. Here are your five copies.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, did you have something?

Mr. Fildebrandt: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today on day 3 of 14 days of tablings about the Public Affairs Bureau. I rise with five requisite copies of a letter I wrote to the Government House Leader on March 9 quoting words of the Premier calling the Public Affairs Bureau political.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I think there were two points of order that were raised today. The Opposition House Leader.

Point of Clarification

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today on a point of order. In the Standing Orders it can be found in chapter 2, role of the Speaker, privilege, order and decorum. The Standing Order is 13(2): "The Speaker shall explain the reasons for any decision on the request of a Member."

Mr. Speaker, prior to question period you cautioned members of the Assembly about language that may create disorder. However, you ruled there was no point of order. And then during question period you interrupted the leader of the third party, which I'm more than happy to acknowledge is within your right. However, I am also just curious to know, under 13(2), some of the background behind your decision to do that in explaining your ruling.

One of the big concerns that I have, Mr. Speaker, is that if things that have been apologized for inside the Chamber are unable to be spoken about, then it would be my hope that the same requirement would be made of the government. For example, I apologized for something in this Chamber on March 7. It can be found in Alberta Hansard on page 68, where I apologized for statements that were made outside of this Chamber, that weren't made by me but, certainly, have been attributed to me and members of the opposition at length by many members of the government.

We have seen this in other circumstances where the government has chosen to use words like "climate change denier" and other inflammatory language towards the opposition. That, in fact, has been apologized for by the House.

So I'm hoping you can provide some clarity with respect to your ruling on how both sides of the House will be treated equally with respect to language that may or may not be used in the Chamber.

The Speaker: Are there any other individuals who'd like to speak to this point of order? The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Under 13(2) "The Speaker shall explain the reasons for any decision on the request of a Member." You know, I guess I just wanted to make one point with respect to what the Official Opposition House Leader had said because an apology made on behalf of people who are not members of the Assembly and are not present is not in any way covered. When we talk about apologies, it's by members for statements they have made in the House. In those cases, then, I certainly am of the view that the ruling was very much correct.

With respect to statements made by people outside the House, an apology does not have the same force and effect. It does not erase what was said. It is still a matter of public debate. So I would just draw that distinction to your attention.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The House leader for the third party.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, sometimes clichés don't make people happy when they hear them, but the fact of the matter is that they've stood the test of time. What's good for the goose is good for the gander is what I'm referring to.

The fact of the matter is that, Mr. Speaker, all we're looking for, I think every one of us in this Chamber, is a level playing field, that the same rules apply to all corners of this room. I mean, we could use the example of how an apology has been made by the party to my right about something that happened in a different city, that was with a group that wasn't even necessarily attributed to them, yet we still get tablings even today on that.

I think all we're asking for is consistency, Mr. Speaker. I know that you're supportive of that, and I guess we just need some clarity going forward on exactly what that's going to look like. Is it the same on this side as it is on that side?

The Speaker: Well, hon. members, as I said at the outset in my comments when I ruled on the point of order from yesterday, that responsibility not only rests with the chair; it also rests with each of you. You may recall in the particular session today that I, in fact, ruled against the point of order that was raised by the Government House Leader, which was very difficult. It's one of those decisions that needs to be made.

The point that I want to raise is that when the rules were applied, I just had finished a caution to the House about the particular matter that has caused considerable eruption in the House in the last couple of days. So when I heard the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays raising what I thought was anticipating the area, I interjected and cautioned, and I believe that's entirely within the role of the Speaker to maintain decorum. You will continue to see the application of the principle of equity and fairness. There are many, many times I have the sense that I'm doing a reasonable job here on your collective behalf when I receive notes from each side of the House sometimes criticizing a decision I've made.

That's my reason, to the hon. Opposition House Leader, and you will continue to see my best efforts directed at fairness in application.

The next point of order is also by the Opposition House Leader.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At approximately 1:45 during question period today the Minister of Energy used language that was: the opposition is misleading the House. There is a long, long, long line of precedent that would indicate that this language is unparliamentary. We're talking about Standing Order 23(h), (i), (j) for a citation: making allegations against another member. Under Speaker Carter on December 7, 1990: "is absolutely misleading" the House was ruled unparliamentary.

Let me just give you some more examples so you can be certain that that sort of language is likely to create disorder, that making allegations that the opposition is misleading the House is wildly inappropriate, and that the minister should know better.

On April 18, 2002, "misleading" was considered by Speaker Kowalski unparliamentary. "Misleading the House" was considered unparliamentary November 3, 2010, by Deputy Speaker Cao; April 23, 2009, by Speaker Kowalski; April 12, 2007, by Speaker Kowalski; June 21, 1990, by Deputy Speaker Schumacher; May 18, 1988, by Chair Gogo; April 1, 1987 – it wasn't an April Fool's joke that day, either – by Speaker Carter. Then continuing on with just "misled": February 12, 1998, by Speaker Kowalski.

I think you get the picture, Mr. Speaker, that making an allegation that the opposition is misleading the House is wildly inappropriate, should be withdrawn and apologized for, and we can all move on with what is a very, very nice day.

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't have the Blues, and I am not sure what exactly the language was. If the language was "misleading the House," then I would agree with my hon. colleague. If the language is "misleading the public," that's a different matter and not, in my view, covered by the rulings that have been cited.

I await your wisdom on this matter, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Do you have another point?

Mr. Cooper: Just to add, if I might, that a long list under "misleading Albertans and the public" is also included in unparliamentary language.

The Speaker: I, too, do not have the benefit of the Blues or the Hansard in this regard. If, in fact, the statement was as the member said, I want to suggest that the House leader talk to the member concerned and encourage them to reconsider if that is, in fact, correct. There may not be, actually, a point of order in this instance, but it seems to me that if it's true, given the precedents that the Opposition House Leader has identified, then there may well be, in fact, a need for the member to apologize.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2017

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation and Infrastructure.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board it's my pleasure to move second reading of Bill 4, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2017.

The supplementary amounts provided by this bill reflect the fiscal picture outlined in the third fiscal quarter update, released on February 23. These amounts are necessary for the government to conduct business and to fulfill its commitments for the current fiscal year.

To remind members, these estimates include roughly $1.6 billion in voted expense funding, roughly $125 million in voted capital expense transactions. These estimates provide additional authorization for the following departments, Mr. Speaker: Advanced Education, Agriculture and Forestry, Children's Services, Community and Social Services, Culture and Tourism, Economic Development and Trade, Education, Environment and Parks, Health, Indigenous Relations, Infrastructure, Justice and Solicitor General, Labour, Municipal Affairs, Seniors and Housing, Service Alberta, Transportation, and Treasury Board and Finance.

Mr. Speaker, as we discussed during Committee of Supply, the largest element of the supplementary supply is for the costs associated with the Wood Buffalo wildfire. This includes roughly $499 million for the wildfire response and roughly $240 million for the wildfire recovery. Once again I would like to emphasize my enduring respect for the courage demonstrated by first responders who battled this fire this past year. I would emphasize once again that this government and all Albertans have the backs of our fellow citizens who were affected by the wildfire.

On that note, Mr. Speaker, I respectfully urge my colleagues in this House to support this bill. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak on Bill 4, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2017. Here we have a case of the government running out of money and having to spend, spend, spend and needing more money. Actions like that will usually get an automatic no from the Wildrose. But we also have some very interesting jiggery-pokery going on in this bill, too. It seems like the government needs to move some money around from department to department and convert expenses to capital dollars and financial transactions.

Normally I wouldn't have a problem with transfers and conversions, but bear with me here. My shadow ministry, the Department of Environment and Parks, is transferring $135,000 from expenses to capital investment in the Department of Infrastructure. What could this mean? I'd say that it looks like green infrastructure. The Committee of Supply documents say that it is for a climate leadership plan deeper greening project. Perhaps the minister could elaborate more about the deeper greening project. Frankly, Mr. Speaker, I went online and tried to look on the government site to see what deeper greening was and on other sites, googling it, and nothing came up. I'm not quite sure what that one is, so I would appreciate some elaboration on that.

When I look at section 3(5) of Bill 4, there are more departments. There's money going from Environment's expense vote into capital investment in Advanced Education, $760,000; into Agriculture and Forestry, $104,000; $1.5 million to Health; $1 million to Transportation; $800,000 to Treasury Board and Finance. Seriously, Treasury Board and Finance? It needs green capital investment? Well, I guess that apparently they need perhaps a little bit more technology to administer the carbon tax consumer rebates because they have to take money back and forth.

Transportation needs $1 million in capital for the climate leadership plan light-emitting diode, or LED, highway lighting project. The word "project" gives me a sense that this might be a one-time pilot project as opposed to a permanent move to energy savings. The city of Edmonton has LED street lighting on Walterdale Hill, so go check them out sometime. I wonder if the city of Edmonton or the city of Calgary has already done a study and has the data that could be shared and help the government to save some money.

Health does not give too many details about their $1.5 million in green infrastructure from the climate leadership plan. If we could get some more details from the minister about this, I would really appreciate that, and that would be helpful.

Agriculture is using $104,000 for the energy efficient carbon neutral greenhouse infrastructure modelling project, and the Farm Stewardship Centre showcases a solar photovoltaic project.

Then Advanced Education is getting an additional $760,000 from the green slush fund for a power plant upgrade and connection at Mount Royal University. I hope the minister can please tell me when that ribbon-cutting will happen. My colleague the shadow minister of Advanced Education will have more to say on this project, and he'll have questions, I'm sure, too.

It all adds up to $4,299,000 in expense turning into capital, leaving Environment and going elsewhere. On one hand, it looks like a giant green slush fund that all other departments of government get to pilfer for their pet projects.

Mr. Mason: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Yes. Your point of order.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Mason: Well, Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j), I think all three, Mr. Speaker. He just said that this is a slush fund, which is fine – I'm sure they've got lots of quotes of me calling things slush funds when I was in opposition – but he talked about pilfering. Pilfering, whether the member realizes it or not, means theft, and if he's accusing government members of stealing, then he darn well better have some evidence, or he should apologize and withdraw the comment.

The Speaker: Hon. member, any comment?

Mr. Taylor: Yes. I apologize for using that word and withdraw it.

Debate Continued

Mr. Taylor: On the other hand, it looks like bureaucratic empire building. Yes, Environment and Parks is casting its tentacles into all the other government departments like a giant octopus. It is more like one giant expense in one department becoming capital in another. There is $7,674,000 at section 3(4) that is going to expense in departments. The tentacles grow deeper: $150,000 to Agriculture and Forestry, $9,000 to the Department of Culture and Tourism, $562,000 to the Department of Economic Development and Trade, $5,200,000 to the Department of Indigenous Relations, $500,000 to the Department of Seniors and Housing, $200,000 to the Department of Transportation, $1,053,000 to the Department of Treasury Board and Finance.

We are told in Committee of Supply that it's for more greening. For Agriculture it is for the Alberta energy efficient carbon neutral greenhouse infrastructure modelling project. For Culture and Tourism it is for the greenest building study. Excuse me? Why is Culture and Tourism doing something that Alberta Infrastructure might ask BOMA, the Building Owners and Managers Association, to undertake.

Economic Development and Trade is getting money to support the coal advisory panel. There are three members on the coal advisory panel that have already begun travelling to impacted communities, so part of the dollars are for them to engage in 10 facilitated discussions with stakeholders in the communities most affected by the retirement of coal-fired generation. I have to ask myself: why are we doing consultation now? Why didn't we have the consultation beforehand?

Mr. Rodney: Don't ask yourself; ask him.

Mr. Taylor: Okay. I'll ask the minister: why are we having the consultation now as opposed to before you announced that you were going to shut down these towns with their coal-fired generation?

Indigenous Relations helped themselves to the green money, too, so they could fund the climate leadership plan indigenous community support engagement study, the Alberta indigenous community energy program, the Alberta indigenous solar program, and the Lubicon Lake band green infrastructure assessment.

Seniors and Housing is getting money for the climate leadership plan green infrastructure initiative related to the facility of energy audit. When it comes to lowering operational expenses of publicly owned facilities, if you do an energy audit and find the wind drafts where the windows are leaking, the chimneys and the furnaces and all that and then incorporate the repairs into your regular maintenance program, eventually the government will save on operating costs. We're all about saving on operating costs. Believe me, I don't like any higher prices than you do, so we're all on board that way.

Now, Transportation is apparently going to use the climate leadership plan dollars from Environment to conduct an electric vehicle impact study and truck stop electrification technical and commercial feasibility study. Now, with Tesla and other automobile manufacturers putting electric cars on the road, electric recharging is critical. The Alberta Motor Association has a very good road map of all the charging stations in Alberta. What I don't understand is why we need to be hiring consultants for studies on things that private industry is already taking care of for us. Tesla has installed numerous charging stations all over Alberta for their vehicles, so why do we need a technical commercial feasibility study? Why not call up Tesla, sign an information-sharing agreement, call it a day, and save some taxpayer money?

Then we get into Treasury Board and Finance, where we finally find out that the cost to administer all those consumer rebate cheques is going to be $1,053,000 plus that $800,000 in capital for technology, almost $2 million, to help administer the carbon tax.

To summarize, there is over $7.6 million leaving Environment and Parks to other departments in expense to the green slush fund that you have for projects. There's another almost $4.3 million in expense leaving Environment and turning into capital in other departments. That's a total of $11.9 million in carbon tax related spending not in Environment and Parks. Mr. Speaker, the tentacles are spreading, and I look forward to seeing how entrenched they get with this Thursday's budget being finally finalized and figured out.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any other members who wish to speak to Bill 4? I think Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today to speak to Bill 4, supplementary supply. Now, let me tell you that sometimes I wish I could run my household the way that this government runs. I do. Let me be more specific. I wish I had the same opportunity that this government is taking, the ability to spend all my money and then go back for more, the ability to be carefree about the obscene amounts of debt and still have an appetite for spending left unquenched.

But, see, I've learned that that's not the way things are in real life, Mr. Speaker. In real life, in real, everyday Alberta life, when you run out of money, you run out of money, unless I've been wrong. I've been in the wrong line of work my whole life. Maybe people don't go to their boss and ask for a raise to tide them over for an additional two months before the next contract comes in. Maybe I'm in the wrong line of work.

Now, as the Member for Calgary-Foothills said just yesterday afternoon: this government is not the first government to be unable to pass a budget that doesn't require additional funds later. This isn't the first time government has come back to this House asking, even demanding, more money. This isn't the first time it's happened, but that doesn't make it right, Mr. Speaker. Something I tell my kids and I'm sure that members opposite tell their children, too: just because somebody else does it doesn't make it right; just because someone else thinks it's okay doesn't mean it's okay.

Now, you know, Mr. Speaker, Albertans have become very aware that this government has a huge spending problem. It's a problem. Unfortunately, it coincides with their addiction to taxes. It's an addiction.

Mr. Speaker, you've heard it before. That's because it's true. Albertans are struggling. They have a hard time making ends meet. Tens of thousands of people are out of work, and they're taking on debt that they don't know how they're going to repay, similar to this government.

A BNN article from December 14, only three months ago, said that the Canadian household debt-to-income ratio has risen to 166.9 per cent. That's crazy. One hundred and sixty-seven per cent, 66.9. Mr. Speaker, that's a record high, but it's certainly not a record to be proud of. A CBC article from last May said that the average debt of an Albertan is over $27,000. The Edmonton Sun reported just over a month ago that serious financial problems arose again last fall. That's a quote, Mr. Speaker. Consumer insolvencies increased over 26 per cent as of this past November, and bankruptcies were up even higher, with an increase of 28 and a half per cent.

Mr. Speaker, that's only consumer debt. It's only household debt. That hasn't even taken into account the debt that this government has plunged them into. That's another record that we are not proud of.

Now, I'm curious, you know, Mr. Speaker, to hear what the government has to say about their budget tomorrow afternoon. I'm curious, but I'm also nervous. I'm curious, but I'm also skeptical. I'm curious, but I'm also, quite frankly, scared. So are Albertans. The big question is: what's the new big red number? Will they budget for a full year without needing to come back to ask for more? I don't believe it. Will I be here again next year, prebudget, once again looking at a significant list of new spending items? Likely so.

Now, I know that I'll be here railing against unnecessary and extra spending. I mean, how can I not, when this government in its third-quarter update announced that their revenues were up? Revenues are up, yet we're still here. By how much? One point five billion dollars in revenue. Billion. That's a lot of money, Mr. Speaker. Yet we're here. This government has a spending problem. I think that's very crystal clear.

Now, they may have found $1.5 billion, but they spent an extra $2.6 billion. An extra $2.6 billion, Mr. Speaker. That's obscene. And it turns out that wasn't even enough because we're still here; $2.6 billion in extra spending, $1.5 billion in extra revenues, and we're still here. We're still here asking for more money just before the budget.

Now, confession, Mr. Speaker: I'm a fan of Gail Vaz-Oxlade, the no-holds-barred guru of financial management. I can distribute a copy. You know what she says all the time? You can't spend more than you make. That's it. Very simple. If you don't have the money, you can't spend the money. Well, guess what? We don't have the money. We don't have the money, yet this government continues to spend as if they've got a money tree in the back of the Legislature. I think this government thinks that there's a money tree behind this Legislature.

Mrs. Aheer: By the stairs.

Mrs. Pitt: Yep.

When I was six, I thought my parents had a money tree, but then I grew up and realized that money trees are not real. They're not real.

Now, there comes a point, Mr. Speaker, believe it or not, when you have to say: I'm sorry; I can't afford it. I'm sure many people in this Legislature who have children say that to them all the time. Albertans say it all the time. Much more often these days than they used to, they say: I don't have the money. Our charities are feeling that all the time. Their donors say: I'm sorry. To the thousands of Albertans that need the food bank: I'm sorry; I just can't afford it. That's the reality. Sometimes you have to say no. Sometimes you just don't have the money.

But if you're NDP, you just say: "Well, heck, we'll tax you more. No problem. You can't pay, we can't pay, but we're going to make it just that much harder for you to balance your budget. But, here, have a free light bulb." What an insult to Albertans. Oh, by the way, that light bulb cost you at least twice as much as if you would have gone to the store and got it yourself. The self-reliant Albertans that I know have no problem doing that. In fact, most of them already have. But this government doesn't even want you to screw it in yourself. They don't trust you to screw in your own light bulb, Mr. Speaker. They don't trust you to do it, so they've hired someone from outside of this province to come to your home and screw in your light bulbs. And they make you pay for it.

If you're NDP, you promise jobs, but you shut down coal and you chase out investment. If you're NDP, you promise a balanced budget, but that promise constantly gets pushed back and delayed for several years: we'll do it later. Procrastination doesn't get you much. If you're NDP, you promise lower personal taxes, but then you add a new tax on top of everything. If you're NDP, you use old information to hand out rebate cheques but announce that you'll take it back if that old information is wrong. Oops. If you're NDP, you rebate money to attempt to cover the increase in expenses, and then you pull it back when people are hurting and grieving. Shame on you. Shame on the NDP, Mr. Speaker, because that is not okay. It is not okay. People are hurting and this government . . .

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, point of order.

3:30

The Speaker: Hon. member, there's a point of order being raised. Is that right?

Point of Order Factual Accuracy

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I don't want to see disorder in this place. If the hon. member persists in saying that it is the NDP that is seeking the return of money from the rebates in the event of someone passing away or a change in marital circumstances, there will be because it's just not true. The Premier pointed out very clearly that this is a Canada Revenue Agency issue that we are striving to correct because we don't agree with the actions that the Canada Revenue Agency is taking. They were insensitive. This is not something that the government is doing, and if the hon. members opposite keep saying so, then not only does it cast aspersions, but it's completely unfounded, incorrect information, and it's bound to create disorder.

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader. Please proceed.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to a point of order. I'm not entirely sure of the citation that the minister is making. I guess we can make the assumption that it's 23, maybe "makes allegations against another Member."

First of all, I guess it would be advantageous for the Government House Leader to be able to be in the Chamber while perhaps the Member for Banff-Cochrane is making wild allegations against the opposition, which we've seen a lot in the last few days. A lot of the allegations he was making are as factual as the allegation that the Government House Leader is making about the comments that my hon. colleague from Airdrie is making.

Clearly, Mr. Speaker, what we have here is a matter of debate. If there's one thing that we can be certain of, it's that the province of Alberta directed the CRA to execute a program. At the end of the day the government of Alberta and in this case the NDP are responsible. The buck stops at the NDP. To say that they're not responsible for the actions is like to say they're not responsible for policing in the province because that's the RCMP's jurisdiction. Well, the contract is held by the government. The government sets out the framework. The NDP sets out the framework. The NDP sets out the parameters of programs. This is what a policy-making organization does. It's their policy. While they can accept that it's not right, it's still them that are at the end of the day responsible for that.

What we clearly have is a matter of debate. While I agree that the Government House Leader thinks it's unfortunate that this has happened – it is unfortunate. It's horrible. But it is the government's fault. They are the ones that are responsible for it. My hon. colleague is merely pointing out that that is what has happened. I think it's unfortunate that the Government House Leader would call a point of order on this.

The Speaker: I've been advised that in early experiences that have been pointed out to me, no more than one opposition party is to speak to a point of order. I don't know if that's correct. I'm going to in this instance say that unless there's something new, I think the Opposition House Leader has approved it.

Yet again there seems to be language and words being used in this place that address the point that I've said so many times and as recently as this afternoon. I can hear on the government side and at other times the phrase has been: Wildrose has said certain things. In this instance the tables are reversed. I don't have a Beauchesne, at least not with enough time here to check this in detail, but could I ask that the member please be cautious about the words that she's using. There has been a representation, but as has been pointed out by the Opposition House Leader, there have been other instances. I will in fact read this tonight in Beauchesne, but please exercise caution, as I've said so many times in here, and get moving on with the issue.

Please proceed.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was actually about to applaud the government in the next step before they got so offended by the truth in my speech, but I do apologize for causing something that might offend somebody. You know, that happens a lot these days.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it's no surprise that I will not be supporting Bill 4, nor will my colleagues, and that's not because there aren't some good things in here. I will applaud you for the additional funds for Crown prosecutors. I think that's a great use of taxpayer money. Certainly, I think taxpayers are asking for that use of funds. But, you know, generally when you look at the whole picture in Bill 4 and the significant amount of money being spent and given that there has been a surprise increase in revenues, quite a significant number, there is no scenario within what has been given in which I can support Bill 4. I implore all members in this House to also not support this bill.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Any questions under 29(2)(a) to the Member for Airdrie?

The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 4, the 2016-17 supplementary supply. You know, sometimes I have heard these bills called the lack of planning bills. Sometimes I've heard them called the overspending bills . . .

Mr. Mason: Does keeping the lights on come to mind?

Mr. Cooper: Keeping the lights on bills I think could refer to the interim supply bills.

But, you know, someday, hopefully, in the future, when I have the opportunity to sit in the Government House Leader's seat, I guess, if I've done a good job here and the outstanding people of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills return me to this Chamber – I had the opportunity to spend a lot of time with the folks in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills yesterday, and we were chatting about some of the comments that have been made in the Chamber and how they were feeling about those. I know that there are a lot of folks that are disappointed with the direction this government is going in. We saw that in the Mainstreet poll that was released yesterday, with close to 60 per cent of Albertans disappointed with the direction of the government and them managing the economy.

You know, tomorrow we're going to see quite likely the largest deficit in Alberta's history, of course since the last NDP budget. But you get the point, Mr. Speaker, that they're running up significant amounts of debt year over year over year.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

While I was with the outstanding people of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, as I said, you know, they expressed some concern around the language the government uses, whether it's calling them Chicken Little or other things. There is real concern about the economic realities that face Alberta. There's real concern about the amount of spending that this government is doing.

Thankfully, we've seen a modest increase in the oil price. Now, we've lost a lot of that over the last 10 days or so, but we've seen a very modest increase in the price of oil and, as such, a significant amount of new revenue. Some of that revenue certainly wasn't planned for by the government, and we saw that in the third-quarter update, this increase in revenue.

What we've also seen is the government's unquenchable thirst for spending. That's exactly what we see here in the supplementary supply bill, this government's refusal to do what they say they're going to do, which is – you know, I don't know how many times I've heard the Minister of Finance speak about bending the cost curve. Well, if he wanted to do that, he had the opportunity by sticking to the budget that they initially introduced last year, and we wouldn't need this supplementary supply. The government can't help themselves, Madam Speaker. We see time and time again this desire to spend beyond their means and make significant departures from the original budget that require us to be here today.

But, you know, one thing that grows tiresome is the government's accusation that spending in the Official Opposition's ridings – I heard the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud ask the Member for Airdrie: well, how do you like 24-hour care in your constituency? Madam Speaker, governing comes down to choices. The government would like you to think that spending in an opposition riding is more or less important than in a government riding and that the opposition also advocating, like I assume members of the government caucus do, for priority infrastructure projects across our province is somehow less reasonable than when they do it.

My point is not that it happens, that we advocate for infrastructure projects right across the province and, I might add, not just in our constituencies but in other areas. A perfect example of that is in central Alberta. It's unfortunate that the members for Red Deer have not been as vocal as some others, but the amount of spending on health in central Alberta is disproportionately less than the amount of population that is in that area. When members of this side or perhaps the members from Red Deer are advocating on their behalf, it is about choices that have to be made. Where the opposition continually is frustrated by this government is that they have no desire to acknowledge that just because the government spends a dollar doesn't mean it's a good dollar spent. There are literally millions and millions and hundreds and hundreds of millions of dollars that are spent by this government that could be better spent.

It is about priorities that this government has or should have when it comes to spending in one area or another. The only solution that this government speaks about is spending more. They make the assumption that every single dollar spent is well spent. Madam Speaker, it doesn't take a rocket scientist to know that that's not true, that the government wastes incredible amounts of money. I mean, just today the Member for Strathmore-Brooks highlighted significant areas of potential savings. The government says, "We're bending the cost curve," yet they come back to the House for billions of dollars of supplementary supply.

Madam Speaker, Albertans expect a level of responsibility when it comes to government spending. While the government continually makes choices to not listen to the overwhelming majority of Albertans when they say that they're getting it wrong on the economy, when they say that they're getting it wrong on debt and borrowing – I know that the people of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, the overwhelming majority of them, want me to come to the Chamber and advocate on their behalf because they understand the long-term ramifications of out-of-control spending. They understand that by the end of the NDP's reign we will be spending multiple billions of dollars a year on interest alone. Every time the government doesn't follow their own budget and they come back to this Assembly to add on to that pile of debt, there are consequences. The consequences aren't likely today, but they certainly will happen. It's unfortunate that the government is choosing to not acknowledge those but to only say: we're bending the curve.

The government has this habit of only pointing to spending like health care: well, the opposition must not want health care in their constituency. Or roads, as the House leader mentioned. Madam Speaker, when they make a statement like that, they imply that every dollar in health care is spent wisely, and I know that my colleague from Cypress-Medicine Hat, who spent a significant amount of time as a shadow minister for Health, identified millions of dollars of waste inside the health care system, yet the government refuses to acknowledge it. They say that the only thing the opposition wants is to eliminate all health care spending, to eliminate all front-line workers, to cut $9 billion out of the budget. Even today my colleague from Strathmore-Brooks highlighted how that isn't the case but how there are real, common-sense solutions to getting our province's spending back on track. In order to do that, it's very clear that we're going to need a Wildrose government to ensure that that spending is back on track, where we can ensure the future of our province is at the top of mind to government and not just the problems of today.

You know, when I think of the future of the province, Madam Speaker, I think of my children. I think of the children that attend our Assembly each day and come and observe what happens here. While I agree that having a well-funded education system is significantly important to the future of our province, putting the future of our education system at risk because of billions and billions and billions and billions of dollars that will be spent on interest will ultimately result in fewer dollars for the classroom, and that is a concern.

Madam Speaker, it's bills like supplementary supply, like interim supply, like the absolute train wreck of a budget that we're going to see tomorrow that will put our province on a track to a fiscal cliff that is not going to result in the long-term success of our province. As such, while there are some areas of spending inside this particular piece of legislation, the Finance minister himself acknowledged during the third-quarter update that some of the spending is not lawful because of the way that they had to end around some legislation that has been passed.

There should be no member of this Chamber that would like to support a piece of legislation like that, and that's exactly why I'll stand with many of my colleagues to vote against supplementary supply.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

I'll recognize the hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: I actually introduced this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: So you can't speak to it again.

Cortes-Vargas: Madam Speaker, I'd like to move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2017

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure on behalf of the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board to move second reading of Bill 5, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2017.

The Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2017, will provide funding authority to the offices of the Legislative Assembly and the government for the period of April 1, 2017, to May 31, 2017, inclusive. The approval of this act will provide funds needed to continue the business of the province while the Assembly takes the time necessary to prepare, present, review, and debate the government's 2017-18 budget plans.

Madam Speaker, this funding is important. It keeps things like our schools and our hospitals open. These are the key services that Albertans rely on, and I want to remind all members of the Assembly that the details of the government's plan will be made clear tomorrow when the budget is unveiled. Once the budget is released, I'm sure we will have a fulsome debate in estimates and in this Chamber on the government's fiscal and capital plan. In the intervening period I respectfully urge my colleagues in this House to support the bill and to provide the necessary interim supply for the benefit of all Albertans.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Do we have a speaker wishing to speak to this bill? The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's difficult to have substantive discussion on a bill that has so little information, really. When no commentary is provided, it's very hard to know what's going on. Here we are expected to vote on this money bill, interim supply, a bill that comes before us primarily because we are not prepared with a full budget in time to get the budget passed before the new fiscal year begins, a very large money bill that is about two months' worth of operations for the government, it looks like. It would be nice to get a little bit more detail.

I respect the Government House Leader's comments with regard to that more detail will be coming tomorrow when the budget is introduced, and we'll be able to have some fulsome debate about that. But I think that over time people in government, and that includes all members of this House, become numb to some of the dollar figures that we're talking about here. When the government spends $50 billion each year, the attitude becomes: "What's a few million dollars here? What's a few million dollars there?" Yet I quite often like to take it down to the level of the average Albertan or average Albertan families. When you think about Alberta families earning, say, $60,000 annually and they see their hard-earned money deducted as taxes on their pay stubs, then they pay GST, then they pay property taxes, and then they pay carbon taxes, with what's left over – it's a reminder that we really have to be careful how we spend their money. The government needs to remember who it's serving and how it's benefiting Albertans with each and every line item on the financial statements.

Yesterday I had some questions for the Labour minister with regard to a labour review that has been introduced on Monday, and $32.6 million in this interim supply estimates is for the Labour minister's department. Is some of this to pay for the government's labour review launch this week? We've been seeing a frightening volume of job losses in this province, Madam Speaker, and you would think that given the high unemployment rate and the rise in the number of families that are struggling to make ends meet, the NDP would be introducing policies that are enhancing investor confidence and encouraging people to start businesses and hire people. Instead, this government is coming out and saying that anything is on the table in their labour review in terms of our employment standards and our rules around unionization and collective bargaining. This government needs to get its priorities straight. At a time when we have limited resources at our disposal here and at a time when hundreds and thousands and even tens of thousands of people are unemployed, we need to be sure that we are spending this money in a way that will allow them to get back to work.

I also want to talk about the fact that this government isn't even trying to balance the budget until 2024. We get hints of green shoots and hints of bending the curve from the Finance minister but very little with respect to plans on how to reduce the bloated spending that is occurring at this time. And 2024: it's an arbitrary year in the future that is being tossed around so that right now the NDP can just spend, spend, and spend some more. It is as if this government realizes that they won't be re-elected and they won't be the government in power in 2024 so: "Who cares? Let's throw caution to the wind."

Over the last 10 years the Alberta government's spending has grown faster than inflation and population growth. Even a comment with regard to the throne speech, where it was pointed out that the previous government had up to 11 per cent increase in one fiscal year. In our third-quarter updates for this past fiscal year it looks like this government, at a time when we would think that we were looking for restraint in spending, is on a path to increase spending by just under 10 per cent, Madam Speaker.

Right now the economy is not its strongest, but it is not prudent to assume the situation won't get worse but in fact will get better so as to allow for the budget to be balanced in the years 2023 or 2024. I have yet to meet a person who can confidently and accurately predict the future. People can speculate, but they don't know what will happen, and it's very risky to gamble that we can take on billions of dollars in debt for several years and then expect the situation to change and make way for balanced budgets, especially without a change in an approach to our spending.

Budgets do not balance themselves. Madam Speaker, as a farmer I've been able over the years to be challenged with the reality of commodity price ups and downs and the reality that there are two lines on our cash flow. We have to recognize that we have income and we have expense, and in order to manage a business successfully, both of those line items have to be taken into consideration. The attitude that we're just going to continue to borrow, borrow, borrow and not be concerned about our bloated spending in this province will lead us, I believe, into a very difficult situation.

Budgets don't balance themselves, Madam Speaker, especially with this government's policies. I wouldn't be confident that the economic situation will soon be changing for the better enough to allow the budget to balance in 2023. For one thing, the government is not proudly supporting and defending this province's oil industry, which has been so beneficial to this province and contributed to its prosperity. It is about the ability to manage the fluctuation in the commodity price. It's critical for any entity to be able to recognize that income is not going to be continually going up, up, up but that there is a possibility that we're going to see fluctuations in commodity prices, and we need to be able to manage through that by controlling our spending and controlling our efficiencies, looking for effective ways of delivery of programs and efficient ways to deliver these programs, that all Albertans are counting on us to be able to deliver for the long term.

This government likes to point out the previous government's failure to balance a budget at $100 a barrel. I've heard that several times in the last couple weeks, where the government members will point to the third party and say: well, you couldn't balance the budget at $100 a barrel. But the fact is, Madam Speaker, that this government, this NDP government's budget would fail to balance at even $120 a barrel. So to be throwing stones at the previous government for not being able to balance at $100, then this government has to also take a look in the mirror and see that their budget would fail to balance at $120 a barrel.

The bloated public spending would require the personal income tax of every Albertan to almost double in order to come into balance. I do not believe that Albertans would see kindly to their personal income tax doubling in order to balance the books. The reality is that we have a $10.8 billion deficit, and in this province we take in a little over $11 billion of personal income tax to pay these operating costs, to keep the lights on and keep the operations going. I think Albertans are looking for government to find a way to do it more efficiently, more effectively and not be coming to them for more money.

It's about more than balanced budgets, Madam Speaker. Once you have a lot of debt, you need to do more than just match your revenue and your expenses. You need to have a plan to actually pay down that debt. This government's spending is not sustainable. The NDP love the word "sustainable," so they should practise what they preach when it comes to their budgeting.

Now that I've said all of this, allow me to ask a few questions just with regard to some of the details within interim supply that I would be seeking to have some clarification on. What percentage of the upcoming budget does the $32.6 million on page 2 represent? Is it essentially one-sixth of the upcoming budget? How much is the government's labour review going to cost? When we're taking money at this time to do a labour review, is it the wisest thing to do that at this time? Is it necessary spending? How much of this spending will actually go to projects that create jobs for Albertans, where we can see that money being spent here is actually going towards creating new jobs for Albertans? It's fine to do a labour review, but at this time is there going to be a significant increase in investor confidence to bring on these new jobs by doing the labour review?

Will the Labour ministry be focused on handing out taxpayer dollars to pay directly for jobs, or does this government agree that the goal should be an environment conducive to organic job creation? I believe that is the healthiest job creation that we can attain, and I believe that's a direction we should all be striving to accomplish.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: I'll recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Well, I do feel that I should stand and speak as an opposition member who recognizes the importance of some of the new policy that's been brought forward and the recognition, too, that in these challenging times it's been important to look at new ways of sustaining some of the services that people need more significantly than they have in the past.

I've repeatedly raised questions with the government, both privately and publicly, that there needs to be a rigorous independent review of some of what we're doing in our public services. I think there are significant savings that can be made and efficiencies that can be gained. But apart from that, we recognize that we're in a significant deficit and debt situation in this province. I would like to think that as mature legislators we would be willing to have an adult conversation about revenue, and that includes the PST.

Are we going to pass this all on to our children, or are we going to start paying our share now of getting this debt under control? To talk about a PST, a 2 per cent increase, for example – that would take us back to what we were paying for many years under the federal GST. A harmonized PST would take us to 7 per cent, which we paid long ago, and if we're serious about trying to address intergenerational equity and not dump a whole bunch more burden and debt and increased cost of living onto our children and our grandchildren, we have to start talking about a PST. There is just no other option.

I hesitate to say that. Politically, nobody wants to say the word. When we are charged with some of the most important decisions for the future of the province, if we can't talk about it here, where can we talk about it? Out in the media it's often used as a whip to whip parties that talk in terms of a responsible stewardship for the future. The reality is that over decades we have built up a massive infrastructure debt and deficit. Since the Klein cuts of the '90s we have a social deficit that has not been addressed. We have an environmental debt that we are now starting to address in terms of stronger legislation around environment and regulations around the environment.

Whether or not it's all as efficiently spent as we would all like it to be – and we admonish the government to look assiduously at every budget in the public sector and hold the line on new contracts. At the same time we have to as responsible adults have an adult conversation about revenue and about a reasonable tax. We're still the lowest taxed jurisdiction in the country, and we are adding very significant burdens onto future generations without even addressing the question of a PST. I find that really discouraging, frankly. I would hope that we can have an honest conversation about it, regardless of the fact that they may not be doing optimal management. We are going to be faced with a big debt in 2019. Let's talk about how we're going to at least start to make for some intergenerational equity and start paying some of our way.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? Go ahead.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Speaker. If I could, please, I'd just like to take a second and ask the hon. member a couple of things. The CBC a week or two ago again clearly pointed out Alberta's spending problem. The fact that our province spends $2,700 more per year per capita than any other province – and as we've seen our wait times slip and we've seen our infrastructure problems, I would challenge you to explain where we get the value for that extra money.

Then when it comes to the PST, I often wonder: what does the Alberta advantage mean to the average family? Alberta in a good year gets $8 billion, $9 billion, or $10 billion in royalties. Of course, no question that in the last couple of years it's been substantially lower, I think even in the $2 billion to $3 billion or $4 billion vicinity, but, hon. member, I don't think any other province comes anywhere close to that. Most provinces hardly get anything, if any. We make more in royalties than other provinces receive in PST. How does that correlate, in your thinking, with what the Alberta advantage would be for the people that live in Alberta?

Thank you.

Dr. Swann: Well, Madam Speaker, we're talking about apples and oranges. Most people in this province recognize that we have not saved our oil money for 30 years. Why is that? Why have we not saved it over 30 years? Under Peter Lougheed we were receiving 29 per cent royalties. In the last 15 years it's been about 7 to 9 per cent royalties, so either we're not bringing in enough money or we're not saving it in an appropriate fashion or both.

That doesn't address the question of the reality that we have been building debt and deficit for the last 25 years in this province. If we want the services, the schools, the hospitals, the roads, and the standard of living that we enjoy here, the real question, with respect, is: are you going to pass this on to your children, or are you going to start paying your share now? That's the question I think we have to ask.

When you get into power, we'll be asking you the same question. Can you maintain services and infrastructure with the budget you suggested? Impossible. Nobody believes that you're credible in talking about a balanced budget by 2017. It's just not credible. The numbers don't add up unless you make massive cuts to the services and the supports and the schools and the hospitals and the roads. It just doesn't add up, so let's get real about leaving a massive debt to our children and grandchildren: $40 billion, $50 billion, $60 billion is not going to be paid off in a few years. Let's face it.

The Speaker: Any other questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I'll recognize the hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Good afternoon, everybody. I know this is riveting – riveting – info. I know. I have two amazing sons. I'm sure you've all realized that by now. They are the centre of my world, and I would pretty much do anything for them. As a mom I've had to learn to set boundaries, and even more difficult I've had to learn to say no many, many, many times. I'm a tough mom. If you ever ask my kids, they'll certainly agree with you. Along with my husband, we've really, really worked hard to help our sons, who are 20 and 18, to be independent and self-starters, responsible with their money, how to invest, and reward for good behaviour. At least in my family those are really important things. I'm not tough to be mean or rude or cause them any grief or any harm or to take anything away from them. I mean, they're amazing young men, and granted I'm obviously biased because they're mine.

Mrs. Pitt: They're pretty great.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you.

I need to ensure, and so does my husband, that they have the opportunity to learn to be self-reliant, self-sufficient, and self-supporting, autonomous adults in the ability that they have. That is the amazing part. For every other parent in here, I'm sure that you can agree that that's the joy and the challenge of being a parent. Often it would be so much simpler, especially when we're talking about cleaning, especially when I have two boys and a husband, whom I love immensely – but they don't clean the way that I do. It would be simpler for me to say, "Okay, I'll do it," and be okay with that. "I'll do that for you." My sons are at home right now while I'm here, so they're cooking, they're cleaning, and they're taking care of picking up the dog poop, all that fun stuff, that is their responsibility. Nevertheless, it is their job, and they're responsible for that, and that is the fun part of their responsibilities within our house. And they work, and they go to school.

In my mind, I'm sure I could probably do it faster and neater and better, but the important aspect here is that it's their responsibility to do those things, and we're trying to enforce that with them at home. I really don't want to deprive them of having the opportunity to prove to themselves, their employers, and everybody else who is going to eventually look up to them that they are capable of doing these things. If they're wanting advances on their paycheques or anything like that, they have to ask for it, they have to prove why, and they have to understand how that's going to impact the paycheque at the end of the day, and they don't get extra just because they ask for it. Again, as a parent I could easily solve their problems for them, but I choose to help my young men develop the skills and understanding that they need to be self-governing adults.

Which brings me to interim supply, Madam Speaker. The government needs to learn, like my young men, how to spend within their means and present a budget on time to ensure that they are able to continue with the important business of governing the province. I expect this from my government, and so do Albertans. We thought in 2015 and again last year: they're a new government. Having never been in government, it would be very, very difficult for me to try and understand the absolute complexity and difficulty that comes along with this massive undertaking. However, we are at a new time and a new session, and I'm quite sure and quite confident that the government knows – well, they should know – what they're doing. I mean, in the business world there are consequences for this.

Again this year we see them asking for more money and an advance to tide them over until they get the budget together. Again, I say this with great humility. I mean, I understand that budgets may not always be prepared. But, please, some clarity. Please. What really bothers me about interim supply is that we're essentially writing a blank cheque to the government again. Personally, I'm not buying into this, and neither are Albertans. There's no information that is provided that will allow Albertans to understand what this money will be used for and who is going to be accountable for the expenditures. Accountability, please. We are asked to make decisions about humongous amounts of money without knowing exactly where that money will be spent.

So, Madam Speaker, because I view this government and the people in this House as my political family, I am going to request much more information. Yesterday I asked a few questions, and the answers that I received were not very clear, so if I could, I would like to ask for some clarity about the interim supply for the Education portfolio because I have some very real concerns about the expenses of $721.5 million and the capital investment of almost $303 million and the financial transactions of $3.2 million in the Education portion of the interim supply.

Firstly, I would like to know what the government means when they say stable funding? Stable funding in my opinion – and in reference especially to my question about Education, because the government set a budget last year, Madam Speaker, and now we're concerned about stable funding, but it's their own funding model. This is based on, if I'm to understand it, the budget from last year. So did the government not build stability and sustainability into their budget process? I mean, I guess mistakes happen, but this is becoming the norm. If this is the future of budgeting, Houston, we have a problem.

An Hon. Member: Edmonton, we have a problem.

Mrs. Aheer: Yeah.

Is the government not able, Madam Speaker, to prepare a sustainable budget that will take them across more than one year at a time? That's a stable funding model. The government continues to say that they want to make life better for Albertans, that there is a stable funding model. I'd like to see that.

The government also stated that there would be no disruption of funding under the Education capital plan and that stakeholders would not notice any difference and there would be no impact on the ability to provide services. I'm a little bit confused by that answer and would like some clarification.

In the interim supply bill the government is asking for an advance of almost $303 million for capital expenditures, but in supplementary supply last week they transferred $107 million from capital to operations. Maybe this just needs to be explained to me a little bit more clearly, but why would you transfer funds out of capital in one and then ask for an advance the next week? I don't know. It simply doesn't make sense to me. I love clarity, and if somebody can explain it to me, that would be wonderful.

Further, the government stated that the $302 million plus was for modernizations and completions. I need some clarity on that as well. My question is around whether or not the modernizations and completions are the ones from the previous government's plan, that this government is finishing, or if these are new projects. The reason that I need clarity on this is that the budget requirements between projects that have begun, those that were in the planning stage, and those that are shovel ready to start from scratch are vastly different. The government keeps announcing that they built new schools in 20 months. Wow. One can only assume that some were started before this government was elected.

An Hon. Member: No way.

Mrs. Aheer: I know. Just saying.

I would also like to know if these projects are on time and on budget. Again, are we talking about previous projects, modernizations, projects that are in the works, ones that are starting? Where are we? What do we mean by modernizations and completions, and what are those dollar figures, please?

I would also like to know whether $302 million is what we can expect for expenses month by month. Is this a recurring number across the year, or is this amount weighted more heavily for the spring? I mean, overall, the government is requesting – and I think this is correct – $7.2 billion, a huge sum of money, massive dollars, to run the province until they can come up with the budget. That's huge, and that amount is to keep the province running for two months. Am I understanding that correctly?

I have so many questions about this blank cheque that the government is requesting through this interim bill and how these dollars are going to be used. Albertans are asking how these dollars are going to be spent and used. The biggest questions, of course, are around the inability of the government to put together a fully informed, responsible fiscal plan that looks to reduce our deficit and get Albertans out of debt. Simply providing a blank cheque without accountability measures perpetuates the spending problem that this government struggles with. It doesn't provide a set of criteria against which the actions of the government may be measured, so we have no place to understand where the government is and where they're going.

Alberta has the highest – I repeat, and we've heard this again – per capita spending of the largest provinces in Canada. This is patchwork budgeting, at best. Many concerns could be hidden, so where's the transparency? Over the last 10 years spending has grown faster than inflation and population growth, and Albertans want an end to it.

At a time, Madam Speaker, when our economy is in shambles and thousands of Albertans are out of work and the government seems bent on making things worse, this interim budget reflects the NDP's inability to plan their budget timing properly, at the minimum. At the minimum. We can't get the budget in on time. I mean, don't Albertans deserve and shouldn't they expect real leadership not only on spending problems but the respect that they deserve on knowing that that budget will be presented when it should be presented, on time? These are just some of the questions that I have.

I mean, the government gives us grief, as they have today, for asking about spending dollars in our constituencies and on behalf of the province, but that's because we know that there are places where they can find efficiencies. This is in order to accommodate the actual needs of Albertans. We know the government is capable of doing this. We need to see action here.

Taxpayer dollars are not only relegated to the government. Every single person in this province – these are Albertans' dollars that we're responsible for here. We have a responsibility, when our constituencies bring issues forward, to ask and to request that the government look at our numbers, that we bring from this side, equally to those that come from that side. This isn't about slashing and spending; this is Albertans' money, their dollars.

If somebody asks me what's happening with their dollars and about infrastructure pieces, you can bet I'm going to ask about it. If there is a more efficient way that the government can spend those dollars to make sure that those services are provided, fantastic. But please do not berate me for doing my job and bringing concerns to this Legislature on behalf of my constituents when they have issues. They deserve to find out about their tax dollars.

I am very pleased, on one hand, to see that the interim budget is less than last year's, but I am extremely concerned, along with Albertans, that they're being asked to write a blank cheque without any information. What is more concerning to me is that I have not read or heard about any cost-saving measures from this government. If there was some way, Madam Speaker, that we could see that this interim supply is part of a complete fiscal plan that included cost savings and an approach to conservative economic strategies, I would be extremely inclined to support it.

These are tough times. We understand that. But tough times mean that governments need to be able to stand up on behalf of their people and say to them, "This is what we are doing for you," not through programs that tout ideas of light bulbs and other things that we've heard about but through real planning and thoughtful process that actually engages Albertans so they understand that the government has their best interests at heart.

This interim supply is part of the government's approach to leaving Albertans so far in debt that our grandchildren will be paying for it, as the Member for Calgary-Mountain View said, far, far, far into the future for decisions that are being made today.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), any questions or comments?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

Hon. Government House Leader, did you wish to close debate on this bill?

Mr. Mason: No. That's fine, Madam Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 5 read a second time]

Bill 2

An Act to Remove Barriers for Survivors of Sexual and Domestic Violence

[Adjourned debate March 9: Mr. Bilous]

The Deputy Speaker: Any hon. members wishing to speak to Bill 2? I will recognize Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Soon after I was elected in May of 2015 someone quite wise asked me what was important to me as an MLA. After thinking about it, I came up with three things that are important to me as an MLA and as a human being. I think Alberta should lead the world in energy innovation; I think that high-speed Internet connectivity should reach all people in Alberta, with a focus on rural and indigenous Albertans; and I think that women and girls should be able to walk alone, without fear.

Fear of harassment and fear of assault are real for many, many women and girls, and I wonder how much of the energy that we put into keeping ourselves safe could go into more productive pursuits like creating a more equitable society and collaborating to solve the big problems our world is facing. This is particularly important to me because I am a survivor of repeated sexual assaults as a child. Before I share my story, I want to caution anyone who may be sensitive that what I am sharing might trigger a reaction for them.

When I was five I went to spend a week with some family friends out of town. I was so excited to have so many sleepovers in a row with their daughter, who was around my age, and to explore a new town. I loved my life as a little kid. I was outgoing and bold and confident. I loved who I was and was probably annoying in my sheer joy about life. On the second or third night at my friend's house something woke me up in the dark. I remember feeling so afraid while my friend's older brother assaulted me. I didn't understand what was happening, and he told me that he would kill me if I said anything, and I believed him. He was a lot older and bigger than me. There was nothing I could do to save myself from what was happening. Overnight my confidence evaporated.

A few months later my family ended up moving to the same town as my abuser, and I continued to be abused at every opportunity he could find to assault me. I was an only child, and I found it very hard to make friends in my new town. I became the target of bullies in town. A group of older boys would tease me mercilessly. I was terrified of them. I would have done anything so that they wouldn't touch me. I never spoke up. I never talked back. I never defended myself to them because I knew the danger in provoking older boys.

The assaults continued off and on until I was about 12 and I fought back. Like many small-town Alberta kids, I spent a lot of time at the rink. I was a figure skater, and my dad coached a hockey team. My abuser ended up playing hockey for my dad, and I saw him far more than I wanted to. He cornered me at the rink one day when he thought he could get away with assaulting me again. I used my knee to forcefully stop what he was doing. He never touched me again.

The experience changed me. Like many survivors, I've sought help for PTSD, depression, and anxiety. The easy confidence of my childhood disappeared and was replaced with distrust and isolation. Other survivors can face challenges with substance abuse and suicide attempts. I commend everyone who has ever sought to heal from sexual assault and those who keep on keeping on every day, who haven't sought out support yet to help them overcome what happened to them.

I never shared what happened to me until after I had my own children. It wasn't until about 10 years ago that I even knew that I could still report what happened to me, and I figured it was my responsibility to report the assaults so that his name would be on record in case anyone else ever came forward.

The process of reporting was difficult. After giving my statement at home, I had to go to police headquarters and relate what happened to me to a man that I didn't know, in a small room, with a closed door. I was very grateful when that was over.

The case got transferred to the RCMP because the events took place in their jurisdiction. Again I had to sit in a small room with a closed door and tell a man I didn't know about what happened to me when I was a child. The case was investigated, but there were never any charges laid.

I was reminded of the experience recently when I read a Globe and Mail article by Robyn Doolittle. It's called Unfounded. If you want to read it, it's very good. I'll table some copies tomorrow. One in 5 sexual assault claims are dismissed as baseless. Many others never result in charges.

The experience left me feeling empty and alone. It felt like the police didn't believe me, and I need to tell everyone here that the most important thing that you can say to a survivor is: I believe you. We have trouble believing what happened to us ourselves. It's traumatizing, it's shocking, and it's so hard to process it.

I want to share some statistics on sexual assault and abuse that I researched in preparing to speak to this bill today. There are varying numbers, depending on where you look, but overall the story is that the number of assaults reported is very low in comparison to the number of assaults that occur. Of those reported, survivors are unlikely to see the perpetrator convicted or jailed.

The percentage of sexual assaults reported to the police is 6 per cent. The percentage of date rape sexual assaults reported is 1 to 2 per cent. The percentage of sexual assault reports that are false is 2 to 4 per cent. It doesn't happen very often. The percentage of all sexual abuse and sexual assault victims that are under the age of 17, like I was, is 60 per cent. The percentage of sex crimes victims that are women is 80 per cent. The percentage of disabled women that will be sexually assaulted during their lifetime is 83 per cent. The percentage of sexual assault victims that are boys under 16 is 15 per cent. The percentage of assailants that are friends or family of the victim is 80 per cent. It's someone that you know, very likely.

I thought pretty hard about sharing my experience today, and I thank you for being so kind to me. [Standing ovation] Thanks.

I am grateful to people like Sheldon Kennedy, who transformed his experience into an oasis of support for kids like me in Calgary with the Sheldon Kennedy Child Advocacy Centre; Sean McCann, a Canadian musician you probably know from Great Big Sea, who has recently shared his story of abuse and his struggle with alcoholism in order to give other people hope; Scottish MP Michelle Thomson, who heroically told her story as a survivor of sexual violence as a young woman in the U.K. House of Commons; and Elizabeth Halpin, who is the young woman who spoke at the announcement for Bill 2 and talked to the impact that this bill will have for victims if it passes.

Right now as the law stands, a survivor has to bring a civil case to court within two years. That's a very short time if you're in the process of putting your life back together, and it passes by very quickly. Healing takes time. It takes place over a lifetime. The more time we can give survivors to take care of their immediate needs and to grow stronger before considering a civil case, the better. With this legislation the time limit will be lifted for civil cases of either sexual or domestic violence.

I'm confident that everyone here wants to eradicate sexual assault and to hold perpetrators to account so that no one has to feel the fear and shame that go along with being a survivor ever again. We aren't there yet. The criminal justice system can't meet all of the need for being heard that survivors have. A time limit is the worst reason to not hold perpetrators accountable. This bill is an important step along the way, giving survivors the opportunity to have their voices heard in court and to clear the path to further healing.

Secrets grow in the dark. Let's shed light on this destructive problem.

I urge everyone to vote in favour of Bill 2. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), any questions or comments? The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I just wanted to commend the hon. member for her courageousness and her courage. That was just amazing. Again, I commend you.

The Deputy Speaker: Chestermere-Rocky View under 29(2)(a).

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. I'm beyond words. Thank you so much for the courage. I echo the words of my colleagues over here for sharing your story and shedding some very much-needed light. You're an inspiration to many, many young women who will be looking to this House to find out how to move forward. Because you're in such a public position, this must have been very difficult for you, and we certainly commend you for coming forward.

Thank you so much.

The Deputy Speaker: We still have a few minutes under 29(2)(a). Did you wish to comment, Red Deer-North?

Mrs. Schreiner: Yes. Thank you. I don't have a question; I just have a comment. I just want to thank you on behalf of all Albertans for having the courage to tell your story today. I know it was a hard story to tell, but thank you from the bottom of my heart.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd also like to thank you for sharing. I know the powerful words that you've shared today are going to be so impactful to so many people that are struggling with this very issue. It's going to give them the strength to come forward.

Thank you so much.

Cortes-Vargas: Madam Speaker, through you, I would like to not only commend the member for these comments but for her continual advocacy on this issue. She has been, as I've known her, an endless advocate for women and for women's rights and for ending sexual violence. That that passion comes from a very insightful place and a personal experience is something that I know many women share with her. Because of the statistics that she shared, we know that this is not only for you. It does take bravery to share a personal story, but it allows us to have that lens of personal experience, that diversity that having a caucus from different parts of life brings forward. How that translates into legislation is even bigger.

So for all of your contributions, not just your personal sharing, thank you so much.

The Deputy Speaker: I'll recognize Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I don't know how you could do what you just did, and like others, I want to thank you so much for sharing your story. It is going to have a huge impact, I trust, on people not just in Alberta but far beyond.

I wonder if the hon. member would like to make a comment. What specific advice would you have for someone who has been assaulted, male or female, any age? And what advice would you have for someone out there who might be thinking that they might want to assault someone, male or female? Those people need to hear very strong messages, too. Having been through it yourself, perhaps they will take it from you as to what to do and what not to do.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill, did you wish to respond?

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Thank you for the question. My advice to anyone who hasn't reported is to seek help, seek support for yourself. That's the most important thing to be able to get through any difficult situation in life. We all deserve support. There's no shame to be had. It's not because of what you wore or what you did or what you said. It was the choice of someone else.

And to anyone who has assaulted someone else or who feels that urge to assault someone else, I would say something similar. Seek support. There is help. You know that what you want to do is wrong, and the impact on other people's lives is devastating. It takes so much for survivors to get through what they've experienced, and it's a waste of time and energy that could be spent on much more productive, beautiful things.

The Deputy Speaker: The time allotted for 29(2)(a) has expired.

Other members wishing to speak to the bill? I'll recognize Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Again to the member: I'm so completely grateful.

This bill on so many levels is necessary. As you know, the younger of my two sons is special needs. When he was first diagnosed, when he was little, he was nonverbal. So many of the concerns that you have as a parent when your children are students and when they're in care are about making sure that they understand about the sanctity of their body and their mind and who they are, being able to speak up for themselves, being able to lay limitations and barriers to their comfort and what they're comfortable with. When they lack the ability to be verbal, that becomes a whole other side of things.

My son had the privilege of attending Renfrew special services in Calgary, and it was an amazing program. I volunteered excessively, probably, at that school simply because my son was nonverbal. There were so many children there, and they needed help with everything from being fed, sometimes, to toileting and many, many other things like that. There's a great opportunity for volunteering and tremendous human beings which, you know, 90 per cent of the world are, but there is also tremendous opportunity to abuse in that situation.

One of the things that this bill will help to bring forward and which is especially important is for victims who are in the minor age category, which is what the member went through. During those times of trauma, even when you are able to speak, when you have a voice, when you've been traumatized that badly and you are afraid and you respect the person that is traumatizing you or you're expected to respect that person who is traumatizing you – and there are all sorts of things within the way that we live our lives, culturally and everything, that can contribute to how a person is going to interpret the actions that are being put upon them at that time. Sometimes it won't be until you're older and have processed or maybe have seen another friend or somebody else who's gone through this before you actually realize what you endured and what you survived. It's absolutely imperative that that's in there.

When you add special needs into that and with those shocking statistics, it becomes even more imperative that we not only say out loud that we believe the victims of these horrific, horrific situations but also that we are understanding and listening and looking for the signs and the body language. Are there things that are happening as a result of that? Not everybody will have the verbal capacity to be able to explain what has happened to them.

There are many, many opportunities within this bill for people to be able to, hopefully, move forward, find ways to heal, find help, communities to surround them with supports. One of the things that I've realized, not only in being here but just in life, is that when you have the courage to stand up and say those things, whether that's in a place like this or to your family, it's quite amazing to me how many people and the support that rallies around you. But you don't realize that until sometimes within a legislative body like this, where we actually give that push to make it be okay to speak out loud and to get rid of the stigma. There shouldn't be any. These young people that have experienced these horrific things that have happened to them need to be able to know that the people that are representing them in government are going to be the first ones to stand up for them and are going to be the ones that help them with that healing process.

The extended time to be able to go after an assailant is equally as important as making sure that for people who have been traumatized all along the spectrum and the timelines, there is time also to be able to – sometimes identifying the person that has assaulted you is probably one of the hardest things that can happen. In situations where they are friends or children of friends that are part of your family or especially if it's family members, there are, in the mind of the person who has been victimized, huge consequences for bringing forward the name of a family member or a neighbour or anybody else because of all of the things that are combined with that. They realize very quickly that they're not the only one that's impacted by this, and the idea that they're not able to protect themselves for the sake of what's going on around them is just horrible.

So being able to extend that time, giving people the ability to – again, it might come through therapy. It might come through a relationship or a discussion with somebody else, where all of a sudden you're triggered to understanding what happened to you. You'll remember or sometimes be able to put together the pieces of who assaulted you and that it was inappropriate. These are highly, highly important pieces, and I'm so, again, grateful that this legislation will be put in place.

I would like to add one other little piece. This just adds to this bill. It has to do with another piece of legislation that I feel needs to go hand in hand with this, and that is part of that triage protocol that we've been talking about. In situations like this we have to make sure that when people come forward and have this amount of courage to stand up and literally tell intimate and horrific details of what has happened to them, not only are they supported by legislation that gives them the time and the ability to come forward with that legislation but that they're also supported within the justice system. Those two things have to go hand in hand.

We have one piece here that's very, very important to the civil part of this, but we also need to make sure that the processing of these situations is not as difficult as it is right now. Along with that, it's very important – and I would suggest that with this incredible legislation we're also heavily looking into the triage protocol to make sure that prosecutors are not being instructed to not take on difficult cases. These are difficult cases.

As the member said, being believed is part of it, but proving what happened to her is a whole other piece. She wasn't always believed by the people that she told. And then she was taken into tiny, little spaces with people she didn't know to have to tell her story over and over and over again, as if the trauma itself wasn't enough.

So, please, along with this legislation, if I could ask this Legislature to look at the triage protocol to make sure that cases like the member's and other people's are looked at and are prosecuted appropriately and that we are cutting through the red tape of this situation so that these victims find justice and we also make sure that we are sending a message to the perpetrators of these horrible offences that we will not stand down and that we are going to protect our citizens of this province.

Thank you.

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Are there any questions or comments with respect to the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing and hearing none, the Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Connolly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I want to commend the member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill for her incredible story. I luckily had the opportunity to spend some time with the Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill's daughter when I was in London, and I can tell the House and the member that I can sense the strength and the intelligence that the Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill instilled in her daughter. Unfortunately, I haven't met her son, but I believe that that's also instilled in both of her children.

I want to thank the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General for bringing forward this legislation. Since my colleague became the Solicitor General and Minister of Justice, she has worked tirelessly to help make Alberta's justice system fair for everyone. As we celebrated International Women's Day last week, I think it's important to recognize not only the work of my female colleagues but also highlight this important piece of legislation that makes life better for Albertans who are survivors of sexual assault and domestic violence and their families.

Let me just tell you what this legislation will do. The proposed amendments to the Limitations Act will remove limitations periods for the following civil claims: sexual assault; sexual misconduct involving a minor, intimate relationship, or dependent; and nonsexual assault involving a minor, intimate relationship, or dependent.

As the Limitations Act currently dictates, if a person wants to sue for assault, the action must be started within two years from when the person knows or should have known of the incident. This two-year limitation can create a difficult barrier to justice for survivors. Our priority as government is to move Alberta forward and make life better for Albertans. That means looking out for some of our most vulnerable. Currently almost every other common law jurisdiction in the country, excluding Prince Edward Island, has either removed or updated their limitation period on sexual assault cases, making civil action more accessible to those who need it.

Some of my colleagues might be wondering why anyone would choose civil action. The advocate for survivors and executive director of the Sexual Assault Centre of Edmonton does an excellent job of explaining why anyone would choose civil action to seek justice against their abusers. She states, and I quote: because the burden of proof is so high in the criminal justice system, a very small fraction of assault survivors will ever see the inside of a courtroom. For survivors to be able to pursue a civil claim at a time when they are ready to do so and where the burden of proof is significantly less onerous is a change that is truly representative of a government that gets it. When survivors are believed, listened to, and supported, they can reclaim the life they had before the assault, a life that they most definitely deserve to have again. End quote.

Even in 2017 there is a stigma attached to survivors of sexual assault and domestic violence. Many survivors feel ashamed. How could they let this happen, why didn't they fight back, why didn't they fight harder, and what could they have done differently? One thing is clear: sexual assault is always the abuser's fault, never the survivor's, period.

Some populations can feel even deeper shame. Men who experience assault are even less likely to report than their counterparts. Often they may need more time, and Bill 2 will give them that room to pursue action and move forward with dignity. The Alberta Association of Sexual Assault Services helps explain some of the myths surrounding sexual assault. Some wrongly believe that men cannot be sexually assaulted. According to AASAS, "Studies show that 10 to 20% of males (boys, youth, and adults) [will be] sexually violated" in their lifetime.

On the rare occasion when a sexual assault against a male gets reported, a victim is often labelled as gay or even blamed for what happened to them. We don't hear about male sexual assault because the men it happens to often choose to suffer its effects alone. Often the myths surrounding sexual assault silence survivors who may not fit the mould of what many believe someone who has been sexually assaulted looks like. They fall through the cracks.

When we talk about sexual assault and domestic violence, we often leave the LGBTQ-plus community out of the conversation. As an MLA and as a member of the LGBTQ-plus community it's imperative that I take the time to highlight LGBTQ-plus survivors of sexual assault and domestic violence. Many queer or gender-diverse survivors of sexual violence suffer in silence. They fear they will not be believed even though trans and gender-diverse Albertans are more likely to be sexually assaulted in their lifetime.

Unfortunately, in the past Alberta hasn't done as well as other provinces when recording rates of sexual violence, and therefore it can be difficult to understand the scope of violence here in Alberta. We know that according to the Canadian Centre for Policy Alternatives women in Albertan cities face higher rates of violence compared to women in other Canadian cities. Those rates of violence increase for trans women and gender-diverse Albertans who identify as queer, individuals with disabilities, individuals of colour, and indigenous women.

Beyond that, survivors from the LGBTQ-plus community are often excluded from dominant narratives of what sexual violence looks and feels like. This leads to a lack of institutional support and medical resources that address the unique experiences of those survivors. This, coupled with the intersections of race, class, ability, language, and immigration status, means that many individuals may not be able to access resources that are located in their communities or that address their lived experiences. Survivors have varied and unique experiences, and their healing and forms of redress will be as unique.

Many people also hold off from seeking justice from their abusers because of fear. With the current legislation there is nothing stopping abusers, who may know the law and know how to work the system, from using the Limitations Act to their advantage, to instill fear for years until they know they are in the clear.

There is a myth that sexual assault is usually committed by strangers, but in about 80 per cent of the cases the sexual assault survivor knows the offender. It doesn't take a lawyer to understand how an abuser could use tactics such as threats and stalking to keep a survivor they are close to from coming forward. That is why this legislation will also lift the limitations on sexual misconduct.

The point I'm trying to make, Mr. Speaker, is that when we remove barriers that prevent survivors of sexual assault and domestic violence from coming forward, we strengthen and empower them. We help vulnerable Albertans from all walks of life. This legislation not only brings us in line with most of the provinces; it propels us forward. With this legislation Alberta will be a leader in addressing sexual misconduct in intimate relationships.

I must also acknowledge the hard work and dedication of my fellow cosponsors for Bill 2, the Member for Calgary-Bow and the Member for Calgary-North West. Both of my colleagues have faced their own challenges as women in politics. Unfortunately, being a woman in public life, as about half of my colleagues will know – well, caucus colleagues and members of the other side as well – often leads to receiving online threats of violence, and frequently those threats are sexualized and based on their gender. While I have received threats based on my age and sexual orientation, they were nowhere near the level of vitriol and hate that many of my colleagues have received. The strength and commitments that I have seen from my colleagues in the face of rape and death threats is empowering. Even though my colleagues face these threats, they do not back down. They continue to fight every day to help make life better for Alberta's women.

That's why together we are cosponsoring this legislation. Every Albertan deserves to feel safe and respected in their communities, homes, schools, universities, workplaces, and even here in the Legislature. Through consultation with front-line workers, non-profit shelters, and women's organizations, we know that this is something that Albertans want. The minister is listening and taking action to address these concerns. Bill 2 will help ensure survivors of sexual and domestic violence are treated with dignity, compassion, and respect. I hope all members of the Legislature will support the bill.

Thank you.

5:00

The Speaker: Any questions or comments to the Member for Calgary-Hawkwood under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing and hearing none, I would recognize the Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Fitzpatrick: An Act to Remove Barriers for Survivors of Sexual and Domestic Violence: I would be remiss if I did not stand and speak to this bill, so I now stand in full support of the bill as a second step in this Legislature in addressing domestic and sexual violence.

I thank my colleague for her presentation on this bill and for her courage to stand up and tell her story. I can tell you from my personal experience that it takes an incredible strength to survive, and that is the first baby step in moving forward. To reach the point of seeking support is often after many, many incidents of abuse, sexual or nonsexual in nature, as the Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill said. It went on for years for her.

I, too, will advise you that what I am about to say may be a trigger moment for some in this Chamber. So now I'm going to ask you to help me with my presentation. I'm going to ask you to close your eyes. I want you to imagine that you are essentially alone. You have been isolated from your family, friends, and support systems. It feels like you're in a cold, bleak room. Someone tells you: "Do not move. Do not resist. Do not breath like that." If you don't obey, you know there will be dire consequences. You are being stripped naked both physically and emotionally, with no ability to stop what is happening. At this point, I ask you: how are you feeling? Are you afraid? Are you humiliated? Are you feeling shame? Do you feel sick? Do you have any ability to remove yourself from this situation?

Please open your eyes. If you really put yourself into this scenario through your imagination, you would feel your self-esteem being eroded and destroyed. You would feel the sense of being trapped. When this occurs to someone every day through actions just like this, actions that are aimed to break and control you, you lose control of everything around you.

How quickly can this happen? It is mind-boggling how quickly it can happen, and it doesn't matter how smart you are, what kind of family you come from, how much money you have. None of this matters anymore. The person you were is being destroyed.

I did seek help when the girls and I escaped. I had to. I had to deal with the stress I was feeling, the nightmares, the fear. I had to rebuild to grow into the person I am today. This is 35 years of support and growth. Physically, I seemed to be all right, until I wasn't. It took time to gradually learn the lessons, that I had been trapped in this hell, and they were as varied and as many as any other person caught in such a trap.

When my girls and I escaped, we left with what we could carry and the clothes on our backs. Had it not been for some family and friends who gave us support, we would have been at the mercy of whatever came our way.

I had an education. I had strength to do whatever I needed to do to protect my children, thank God. I never received a cent of support from my ex, so times were pretty tough. I had to draw on every ounce of inner strength that I had. The need to protect my children from both this harsh situation and the harsh realities of this world was almost unbearable. I worked hard. I scrimped and saved. I did things like buying material on sale and making clothes for the girls and myself because I didn't have the money for store-bought clothing. We lived on a very tight budget, and by the time I was able to get back on my feet and feel strong enough to pursue some financial support for the girls, it was too late.

How long do you think it would take you to regain your self-esteem, to actually acknowledge what had occurred, and to ask for help, ask for what should have been available for you and your family? How long, and how strong do you need to be to get back on your feet? By eliminating limitation periods, we are making the legal system more accessible to victims of sexual and domestic violence. Survivors need to become thrivers, and that takes time. Thrivers are those who have become empowered to come forward on their own terms and when they are ready, not when somebody else says that they are ready. This truly is not easy.

The judge who gave me a lecture on how expensive it would be to keep my ex in jail for the time that he had been sentenced was not respectful. He did not leave me with my dignity intact. I felt neither compassion nor respect. The decision to report sexual or domestic violence is deeply personal and can be extremely difficult.

It had taken me nine years to finally lay charges, and those charges were only on the last two incidents. He was charged with domestic violence. He was my husband, so they didn't charge him with rape. There was no rape kit or hospital examination despite the fact that he had raped me and that I had visible signs of that rape on me. There were some barriers every time I turned around. This bill will make some changes to that attitude.

I was surviving by doing the things I had to do to protect my daughters and myself. I was skilled. I was an educated adult. I was a parent, but I was a single parent. So when I applied for employment with the federal government, I was asked the normal questions for the position which I sought. I was also asked who would take care of my children if there were an accident or if they were sick while I was at work. I knew that if I said that I would leave and take care of my children, I would not get that job. I answered that by saying that I had family and friends who would support me, which I did, but I didn't answer that question because I would not have gotten that job. Have you ever been asked that question when you applied for a job? Did you every have to worry about finding someone to babysit your children ever? Do you have to worry about a supervisor making advances and threatening your livelihood if you're not compliant because he knows that you need the job?

Every Albertan deserves to feel safe and respected in their communities, their homes, and their workplaces. It took me 35 years to tell my story publicly. To do this was incredibly difficult. Barriers were everywhere. This bill will tear down some of those barriers. Our government is committed to ensuring survivors of sexual and domestic violence are treated with dignity, compassion, and respect.

I expect everyone in this Chamber, as several other members have said, to support this bill. Will you support this bill and be part of the solution, or will you be part of the problem?

The Speaker: Are there any questions or comments under 29(2)(a) to the Member for Lethbridge-East? The Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I mostly just have comments. I want to commend the member for giving all Albertans real insight into what it's like for victims of domestic violence and how trapped somebody can feel in those circumstances and to thank her for her candour and generosity in sharing with us and also for giving hope to people and focusing on thriving. I think that's really important for anyone who has survived any assault.

The Speaker: Are there any other members under 29(2)(a)?
The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 2, An Act to Remove Barriers for Survivors of Sexual and Domestic Violence. Before I begin, I'd just like to thank the Member for Lethbridge-East for her remarks as I have done in the past in this House when she has shared passionately and heartfully about what is a very horrific situation. I thank her for her bravery and her comments and the advocacy that she does on this very important issue that faces so many.

Mr. Speaker, it's so unfortunate that these horrific situations of sexual assault and domestic violence affect so many Albertans right across the province. As we know, 1 in 3 women will experience some form of sexual assault and sexual violence. You know, I wish that we lived in a place and in a society and in a world where it was zero. I think about my girls, and I think about my sisters, of which I have two. There is a very real possibility that of just those three, one of them will experience an absolutely life-changing event that's horrific.

Mr. Speaker, I want to be clear that I support Bill 2, that it's not just the government that is taking steps to pass legislation like Bill 2 but that it is certainly members of the opposition as well. There is a very cumulative desire to have Bill 2 enacted and to continue to make steps towards protecting victims of these most horrific crimes. I think that's an important point to make, that it is about making steps towards protecting victims.

Even after Bill 2 is passed here in this place, there will still be more work to do. We all have a responsibility to ensure that that work continues, whether it's around education, whether it's around providing additional resources, whether it's ensuring that we're doing what we can as individuals to make our society a safer place, whether it is speaking up publicly against sexual abuse and sexual violence and domestic violence. We all have a role to play, not just in legislation but day in and day out in speaking against those that would make light of these crimes, speaking out against those who would joke about this, speaking out against people who even make flippant remarks that are disparaging against women or disparaging against victims. We need to do our part in ensuring that women and victims of sexual abuse know that they will be believed, that they will be heard. We also need to make sure that we take proactive and swift steps to ensure that the judicial system is in a place where those individuals who have had crimes committed against them are assured that their case is being heard.

Members on this side of the House and others have advocated strongly over the last number of weeks to ensure that we have the resources in place, that those who come forward under circumstances – as you know, Mr. Speaker, many of these sort of crimes go unreported. It takes – you know, we've heard in the Chamber today that it often takes years and years and years to have the courage. We need to make sure that when that happens, those who are victims of sexual abuse, the vast majority of those being women, are supported through what is a very, very, very difficult time. So I'm proud to stand and speak in favour of Bill 2 and the steps that it takes to provide recourse for those women to extend the time for victims to file claims against those who have perpetrated the crimes.

It's important that we send messages from this Chamber that we believe that there is a desire, a societal desire, to ensure that we're doing as much as possible to ensure that these crimes aren't happening, that we encourage women who have been victims to come forward and to see justice served. I'm pleased that the government is taking this step. I am also pleased to see other legislation coming forward from other areas of the House that have to do with crimes predominantly against women in the form of Bill 202, which I know will be debated later in this session.

I am honoured to be able to support the government in this endeavour. I think it's something that we should all be doing, and I look forward to this bill becoming law and being part of that solution. It's not the end solution, but it's part of the solution, and I think we are all well served to ensure that women in our province and right across our country are treated with the dignity, the respect, the belief that they ought to be. I look forward to doing that through the rest of this debate as well.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any questions under 29(2)(a) for the Opposition House Leader?

Are there any other members who wish to speak to Bill 2? Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today and speak to Bill 2, the sexual and domestic violence limitation act. I've heard many stories as to why this is important. As many members on our government bench have shared, I would just like to take a moment partly because there was a comment that was made afterwards, after some of the personal sharing, that went to express: wow; I didn't know that so many people around me have experienced this. I feel like that's a common comment because there seems to be still, like, a stigmatization of shame in expressing the stories, that it's still difficult to do, and to some extent not be put into a box of whether you are a victim or not.

Because of that I want to continue on that course and share a bit about my own story, Mr. Speaker. Of course, when we look at something like this, we're looking at how to reduce barriers. The reason I want to share my own story is because we also need to understand the limitations of the things that we move forward and the people that it may not reach.

Mr. Speaker, I myself have been a victim of sexual assault. I had this experience at five years old. I know that an act like this would not help a person in my position because, like many other immigrants, that experience did not happen in Canada. So you go into the barriers faced by folks that have experienced this, but when you add to it immigration and when you add to it different kinds of experiences, it complicates it. It's hard to understand that we can reduce barriers but that there still is going to be a level of discrepancy depending on what your background is. I think that that's part of the theory as well when studying gender theory and intersectionality and the effects that having a different background and being an immigrant could have on your impact to address the issues that come up. It's quite complicated.

Mr. Speaker, just to explain a little bit about my own story, one of the things that I'm proud that this bill reflects is the taking away of the limitation of time. I know for myself, having experienced that throughout my childhood and having it be very much like a lot of the statistics that say that it's a family member and it's someone that you know and someone that should be there to protect you, knowing that that's something that occurs regularly, it's something that we need to talk about. It's something that we continuously need to address and go further than just addressing the voices of those who were affected but also those who are committed to stop these acts and not be a part of them. Making sure that we develop a wellness curriculum that talks about healthy relationships is critically important in developing this change.

I know for myself there had been many times in telling my story where some of the responses I got were: well, that must also explain why you're gay. I think there's an element of stereotypes that happen for victims that they continuously experience when they share these stories. At the end of the day, it goes into blaming everybody except the perpetrator.

Because it happened to me as a child and it happened to me by a family member, I've even heard someone blame my mother for not protecting me. You know what? To so many extents I take issue with that because my mother is the very reason that I believe in resiliency, and there's no way that any experience that I'll have will bring me down. Mr. Speaker, it speaks to a culture, a culture of blame and stigmatizing everybody but the perpetrator. You know, the sole person responsible for what I experienced is the man himself. That is something that I want to continue to elevate.

You go into the experiences and say: "Well, why didn't this person catch it? Why didn't this person say it? Why didn't you speak up at a certain point?" And that brings me back to the limitation. Speaking up requires supports. It requires knowing that people, as the member said, will believe you, that people will not fault you for perhaps waiting. So when we look at something like a time limitation, it really doesn't take into account the experience of the person that has been victimized in this situation. And if that's the most important part, then that's the part that needs to be prioritized.

In order to speak up – I remember the very first day that I had to talk about it. I didn't actually talk about it. I had a letter that had been written by the perpetrator about the situation that happened. That day it was the letter that I just handed to my mother, and I ran away from home. As the wise woman she is, she never pressured me to do anything or to talk about anything else faster than I could, but she told me one thing: whenever I do want to talk about it, she'll be there; whatever I need she would provide. If that meant taking clothes to my friend's house, where I was staying, that's where she would go.

The Speaker: Take your time, hon. member. You have supporters in this room.

Cortes-Vargas: Mr. Speaker, telling my mom was hard enough. Having to explain it to other people and having to hear the responses that are given – even though I know a lot of people go into, "Oh, that should have never happened," even within those comments those things that I've already mentioned, "Oh, well, why didn't someone catch it?" or later on, "Is that why you're gay?" come in – makes it extremely complicated to want to speak up because it is easy for people to attribute other factors to the story that you're telling, and then it's hard to control the narrative in which it's portrayed.

Mr. Speaker, removing this limitation isn't just a recognition of their experience, but it is something essential to respecting people's dignity and worth and making sure that it is up to them, that it is their choice as to when they do it, depending on their personal situation and, at the end of the day, knowing that no matter how much time has passed, what has been made wrong can never be made right.

We had a run in Strathcona county that talked about creating allies for asking for consent.

You know, even if it had only been one day, it would have changed the course of my life. Those kinds of situations forever change the way you interact in relationships. They change the way that you experience even sleeping, Mr. Speaker. It changes a lot of things about you. Chemically speaking, your brain changes as well as your capacity to interpret the world around you and risk assessments. In all of that, it complicates your capacity to speak up. It complicates all of that, so that element is extremely important.

You know, I wish that I had spoken up, but I can't change the past, and I know that I spoke up at the time that I needed to. Mr. Speaker, I know that at the end of the day, the more we talk about this and the more that people stand up and say, "Not only do I know what the effects are because I've heard these stories," but when they stand up and say, "I will be committed to learning about what a healthy relationship entails and what consent means," you know, those are the kinds of changes that really make substantial differences. For me, developing healthy relationships then became a big pillar of my life.

You know, for many reasons being part of the LGBTQ community is complicated, but one of the strengths that I have studied in being part of the LGBTQ community is that because a lot of societal expectations no longer apply to you, you get this freedom to redefine and re-create roles. Because, you know, you have two women in a female same-sex relationship, you get to redefine these things, and you get to talk about things that in heterosexual relationships might just be assumed or might just be a gender role that is kind of placed. These things are continuously negotiated, and that is one of the many strengths of same-sex relationships and one of them that has been documented in many cases. Part of the benefit of that is actually being able to talk about personal boundaries, about how to deal with certain situations, because none of that is assumed.

Also, I wanted to talk both about my experience as an immigrant in experiencing this, because of the legal complications that it implies, but also about, being part of the queer community, how tired I am of that comment. You know, just for the record I have pictures from when I was four years old holding hands with women. Like, you know, I really don't like the song, but I was kind of Born This Way. The comments sometimes are tiring about GSAs, that we're creating a culture where we're cultivating someone turning gay or that having a cookie could make you that way. It's just exhausting because it just isn't possible, in my mind. I didn't choose this, I didn't choose those experiences, but what I do get to choose is what I do in regard to society's way of interpreting these circumstances.

Mr. Speaker, I may not do it right all the time, but I'm committed to being an advocate and to listening to how we can make things better. I know that one of the things that can do that is by telling a story, and while I'm not okay with telling a whole bunch of my own personal story, I will say that in a lot of ways it changed me. It was really painful to experience, and it was a terrifying experience, you know, that exercise of closing your eyes and experiencing those things and the feeling of being trapped. I think many people can identify with that that have gone through that experience. You don't know what to do. Again, it's about fighting the stigma of: "Why didn't you fight back? Why didn't you stop it? Why did you let it reoccur?" It was not my choice. It shall never be regarded as my choice. The only person responsible is the perpetrator. I refused to the end, and I reject that premise.

You know, one of the things I'm most proud of our government for is our capacity to bring into the Legislature people from diverse backgrounds. It's something that people talk about as being important, but the ability to accomplish it takes a lot of commitment. It takes more than just talking about being open. It takes the commitment of going out there and sometimes convincing people to step down to make space for others. It's hard to do, Mr. Speaker, and the reason that someone should choose to do that and make that commitment is because we see legislation like this, legislation that dramatically changes the tone and tenor of a justice system that for many years was a place that people associated as not understanding them. Many victims feel that their voice isn't being represented there. The fact that you have eyes viewing pieces of legislation that have experienced this provides a different form of decision-making and provides a more informed way to move forward than if you didn't.

Thank you. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Are there any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for her comments. They are extremely heartfelt and wise. I might say that in my life I don't always get it right as well, but I, too, am learning. Hopefully, we continue to learn together. I just wanted to say thank you and also offer you the opportunity to conclude your remarks if you had any that were remaining.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you. You know, I'd just say: let's continue this work, because it's great. It's so important. Let's just keep doing what we're doing. I'm so happy to be surrounded by so many colleagues across the way and beside me. Whenever I don't have the strength to do something myself, I know who I can fall back on.

The Speaker: Calgary-Mountain View under 29(2)(a).

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, hon. member, for sharing your story. It's very important for all of us, especially those in the public systems that are supposed to be caring for people going through these challenging times. I think of the justice system, I also think of the social services system, and I also think of the health care system, where people are supposed to be prepared and trained and able to meaningfully help in the transition back to health and recovery, posttraumatic support, whatever. Tell us about your experience with the public services in Alberta and how they have met or not met your needs, if you chose to use them.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you. Yes, I'd actually like to speak about an organization from my community, Saffron, the sexual assault centre of Strathcona county. I'm just going to say that it was one of the places I reached out to.

I think the complication, especially in our situation, was money. It was the cost associated with reaching out for those supports. There was part of it in developing a conversation and being able to talk about it that I had to go through, and accessing those supports was helpful that way. But timing was an issue for me. If I wasn't open to talking about it, I wouldn't be okay with getting the supports at that time. Sometimes it was the people that I had to discuss it with, if they didn't completely understand the lens through which I saw things culturally. You know, being part of the Spanish culture, the way of discussing difficult situations works a little bit differently. Having that cultural understanding sometimes makes that difference as well.

It's difficult to access those kinds of supports. I know that I started working with Multicultural Health Brokers in Edmonton because they actually do a lot of culturally sensitive work with community members, using brokers to assist in gathering those supports and building cultural sensitivity in the people delivering that support as well. That made a difference in a lot of ways.

I know that throughout it becomes a process. I might not be that old, but going through years of reaching out to different psychologists and things like that, it really came down to cost at the end of the day, the difficulty to continuously see the supports through. There were different points in my life where I was more open to receiving those supports than others. When I was, it wasn't necessarily in alignment to when I had the money or benefits to do that.

I was an educational assistant. I had three jobs when I was working through school, Mr. Speaker, and I didn't have benefits, so that was one of the times that I would have been okay, actually, going to see a psychologist, but I just didn't have the money to. The reason I was working three jobs was because it was really expensive to go to school. I had things to pay for. My parents were immigrants. They weren't able to save for my education, right? In those kinds of situations it's very complicated, which is, again, why I stand with this government in all of the investment in supports to the front-line services and to the administration that it takes to deliver those services in an effective way. It is very complicated to execute those things.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, if you might allow the Speaker to make a personal observation, let me say to all of you that it is a privilege on all sides of the House to be in a situation like this. As a father of four daughters and 11 grandchildren one thinks about these issues very, very much.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise in support of Bill 2, An Act to Remove Barriers for Survivors of Sexual and Domestic Violence. I want to begin by just saying that I really do appreciate the stories that have been told today. I think it's fairly well known that no matter what kind of trauma we experience, when we're able to tell our stories, there's healing in the telling. I guess, especially for today, my prayer for those who have shared their stories would be that today, in fact, would be a day of ongoing healing and wholeness and discovering the inner beauty within.

Any time we think about creating a law, I think it sometimes helps to think a little bit about: why would we enact such a law? I've been sitting here thinking it through a little bit, and I just offer a few comments in that regard. You could ask the question: is the objective or is the end deterrence or restraint so that it doesn't happen again, so that others are protected? Of course, we would all hope and wish that that would be the case, and in some way it probably is part of the benefit of enacting this kind of a law, but there are also lots of studies out there that indicate that law doesn't necessarily really deter behaviour that's criminal or inappropriate.

Most of the legal philosophers that write on it that I've been able to read ultimately end up talking about the need for inner and personal restraint. While I realize that in our society some of the spiritual values of inner restraint and personal self-control and control of the passions are maybe not very popular, the reality is that maybe in our society we need to hear a little bit more about that because social or legal restraint often isn't as effective as we might wish that it would be.

We could also imagine that maybe the desire by enacting such a law would be justice for those who have been unjustly treated. While I think that maybe there is an element of justice there, on the other hand I also have this deep sort of feeling that any kind of legal action doesn't really ultimately create justice for the kinds of abuses that we're talking about. I don't know that there is real justice that can somehow restore everything and make it as if it didn't happen and it's all of a sudden all right again. So while justice has a part of it, I guess I struggle that that's even possible in these kinds of cases in this world.

Some might want to say that we enact these kinds of laws out of vengeance. I don't think that's the spirit of what this is about, and I think we all realize that vengeance often destroys ourselves more than the other person anyway. This kind of a law isn't about vengeance. That's just more destruction.

I guess where I end up in the end is that maybe enacting a law like this, which takes away barriers, in effect will give a glimmer of hope, and maybe it will become a means by which those who have experienced this kind of injustice and all the rest of it will in fact be able to find it as part of their journey to wholeness. I guess that would be my biggest wish to see out of this kind of a law, that it would be a means, an aid, an opening of a pathway to inner healing, to the wholeness of the soul, to be able to move on and to grow and to be truly beautiful people because of what we enact here today.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Bill 4 Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2017 (continued)

The Speaker: Hon. members, in accordance with Standing Order 64(3) the chair is required to put the question to the House on every appropriation bill on the Order Paper for second reading.

[Motion carried; Bill 4 read a second time]

Mr. Mason: If we've concluded the business of the day, Mr. Speaker, then I will move that we . . .

Mr. Cooper: We can vote on Bill 2 if you want.

Mr. Mason: Pardon me?

Mr. Cooper: We can vote on Bill 2 if you want.

Mr. Mason: I know. I think there are some members that would still like to speak to that.

So, Madam Speaker . . . [interjections] Well, we do it the other way all the time, so it's only fair. It's only fair, Mr. Speaker. But I'm sorry.

The Speaker: No, you're not.

Mr. Mason: The Speaker has tremendous insight.

I think we've made wonderful progress. The government will keep running. Things will carry on. I'll move that we call it 6 o'clock, Mr. Speaker, and adjourn until 9 o'clock tomorrow morning.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:47 p.m.]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Good morning.

Let us reflect. As we conclude our work for the week, let us think on the work that has been accomplished, and let us focus on the many tasks that lie ahead of us.

Please be seated.

Bill 3

Voluntary Blood Donations Act

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, before we begin consideration of the bill, I've had a request to revert to introduction of guests. I need unanimous consent.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am incredibly pleased to introduce to you and through you today to the Assembly the mayor of Lethbridge, Chris Spearman.

I would also like to introduce to you two passionate advocates on PDD, Chris and Ben Rowley, who are my guests at the budget this afternoon. If you would please give the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

Second Reading

Bill 3

Voluntary Blood Donations Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today to move second reading of Bill 3, the Voluntary Blood Donations Act. This legislation will ban paying individuals for blood donations. Additionally, it will support an integrated and co-ordinated national blood supply. I introduce my support because blood is both life sustaining and instrumental to providing the level of care Canada is renowned for. As a long-time blood donor it is gratifying knowing that lives are saved by this tremendous gift, and that is what it is: a gift. I began donating blood when I was a 23-year-old student at NAIT. I was a starving student, and my initial attraction, ironically, was the free cookies. Within a couple of months I received my donor card and began my lifelong commitment to being a blood donor. With conviction this is a principle I have bestowed within my family because I recognize that the gift of life is precious and cannot be bought and cannot be sold.

Madam Speaker, this new act will create a barrier to the establishment of private, pay-for-plasma clinics in Alberta that render sustaining life a profitable business. We often hear of the miracles that happen when Albertans receive the gift of life through organ donations, and I support that voluntary blood donation remain just that: voluntary. For nearly two decades Canada's blood donations system has been successfully operated and managed by Canadian Blood Services.

Madam Speaker, on June 8, 2015, I had the pleasure of representing our government at the Red Deer location for National Blood Donor Week. While recognizing the almost 70,000 Albertans who donate blood, I also had the pleasure of recognizing a local blood donor, Ron Regehr, for sharing what matters most. Ron had been donating blood since he was 17 years old, and many years had gone past. We shared our conviction and dedication by donating blood together.

Paying donors is not a practice that is supported in the current system. Potentially it can lead to a disconnected and fragmented national blood system. Our current system through Canadian Blood Services is regulated as a biologics manufacturer of Health Canada and is primarily funded by the provincial and territorial ministries of Health. As such, it is a not-for-profit charitable organization in alignment with the recommendations of the 1997 Krever report.

Allowing private plasma clinics to set up operations in Alberta will only erode the voluntary whole blood donor base operated by Canadian Blood Services. In 2008 the government of Canada legislated National Blood Donor Week to recognize and celebrate blood donors across the country for their life-saving contributions. It is benchmarked to remind Canadians about the importance of donating blood and the ongoing need for new donors, hence the paramount importance of Bill 3.

Recently a private plasma collection clinic was established in Saskatchewan. Currently this clinic is collecting and stockpiling plasma until they can find a buyer. This is not good news for our country as private clinics can sell the plasma to the highest bidder anywhere in the world. As a result, Canada's much-needed plasma will leave our country, denying its life-gifting properties for Canadians and Albertans who need it.

That is why we are proposing in this legislation to ban private donations here in Alberta. The proposed legislation will ban payment to an individual donor, ban payment for blood donations advertising, exempt Canadian Blood Services so that they can continue with their current practices and any further activities, provide an exemption for blood given solely for the purpose of research, and provide for inspection and enforcement controls.

Madam Speaker, our province will not be the first province to ban the practice of paying for blood products. Currently Ontario and Quebec have already banned paid blood donations as well. By supporting the national blood system operated by Canadian Blood Services, we can ensure that whole blood as well as plasma is available to those who are in need. Our proposed legislation will prevent private blood collection industries from opening in Alberta. I stand behind Alberta banning paying for blood donations and creating a barrier to the establishment of private pay-for-plasma clinics in our province. This will guarantee that our blood remains in Canada and is used to benefit Canadian patients.

Donating blood should not be looked at as a business venture. It is a valuable public resource that saves lives every day. Therefore, banning paid blood donations will ensure Albertans and Canadians have life-gifting access to the blood they need in a safe and well co-ordinated manner. Our proposed legislation incorporates stiff penalties and enforcement measures. It will allow for inspectors to issue compliance orders, and it outlines clear penalties for individuals and corporations who violate the act.

We have heard people say that Canada is already using plasma, and I want to respond to that directly. It is true. Canada is not able to meet our demands for plasma products at this time. Canadian Blood Services needs purchased plasma products from the international market to meet the demand for plasma markets in Canada. While we cannot control the actions of other countries, that does not mean we should simply accept that there are no other options to a paid system. Currently we do not have the ability to manufacture the majority of plasma products here in Canada.

For reference, plasma is the yellow-coloured liquid that makes up over half of our total blood volume. Plasma is obtained from either a regular whole donation or through a fractionation process. Plasma is the invaluable product that can be used to treat patients who are bleeding severely or require help to clot their blood. Plasma is also used to manufacture drugs that treat fluid loss in burn patients, transplant recipients, and trauma patients; to treat immune disorders and severe infections; and to treat bleeding disorders such as hemophilia.

We simply do not have the infrastructure to manufacture these products in Alberta or Canada. As a result, Canadian Blood Services has recognized this risk and is taking active steps to address it. They have developed plans to increase Canada's plasma product self-sufficiency to 50 per cent by the year 2024. Their plan is to expand existing blood collection sites, open new plasma collection sites, and recruit additional plasma donors. They have proven to be a valuable asset in Canada's national blood supply system.

We want to ensure that this legislation does not limit Canadian Blood Services' ability to continue to manage the national blood system, and for this reason, they will be exempt. This exemption will enable Canadian Blood Services to continue providing nonmonetary incentives and appreciation items to their invaluable gift-giving donors as well as not preventing them from considering paying donors for blood or plasma if it is absolutely necessary in the future or in emergency situations.

Madam Speaker, much thought and deliberation has gone into developing this legislation. These amendments are the best way for Alberta to protect the integrity of our publicly funded voluntary blood donor system. I wish to take the opportunity to encourage my colleagues to not only give blood but to support Bill 3, the Voluntary Blood Donations Act, and I look forward to hearing the debate.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I'd like to confirm that you are moving second reading on behalf of the Minister of Health.

Mrs. Schreiner: Yes.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm here to speak about Bill 3, Voluntary Blood Donations Act. Quote:

No person shall, either directly or indirectly,

- (a) provide payment to any individual in return for the collection of blood ... or
- (b) offer to provide payment to any individual in return for the collection of blood.

At first glance this seems reasonable. We're Canadians. We believe in the free and equal access to health care. We don't believe in harvesting organs from prisoners. We rely on people donating organs voluntarily, usually upon their premature death. We are offended by anyone profiting in the financial sense from any person's hardships from their position of desperate need. When we talk about Canadian values, this is probably the epitome of our values. Someone who needs blood: they need it to survive, and Canadians will gladly provide this valuable product freely with the understanding that the person using it needs it to live. They need it to live so that they can take care of their loved ones or be loved by their families or so they can contribute to our society. Whatever their reason for living, it is not ours to judge, only that they be given the opportunity to live. It's the most precious thing we have, life.

I've given blood personally and professionally as a paramedic. A woman who suffered a traumatic birth: she needed blood. A man who suffered major injuries with multiple traumas to his body: he needed blood. Surgical patients that I've attended to: they needed blood. Blood carries the oxygen in our bodies, it contains the platelets that help us heal, and it helps to remove the CO₂ that causes the acidosis in our bodies.

The underlying concern for this legislation is to ensure that there is no competition for blood, including collection, as here in Canada we seem to struggle keeping up to our demand. We are forced to buy these blood-based pharmaceuticals from American companies. These are products that our fellow Canadians need to live.

There is a hypocrisy in our Canadian society. It is the ability to buffer ourselves from ethically questionable methods, cultures, and societal norms that occur in other countries and saying: we would never to that. Yet we will buy a product that we need from other countries who may acquire it through the very means that repulse us. We are fine with paying American companies for this exact product, who collect it by compensating donors.

I believe Alberta spends at the current quote approximately $200 million a year to these companies. That said, Saskatchewan and Manitoba currently allow for the free market in this regard, and they haven't demonstrated any issues. They do provide for an interesting hypothesis, though. By allowing it in their provinces, they can monitor it. They can influence it to ensure that it fits their ethics and ensure their own supply instead of relying on international companies.

If we are lacking in our domestic blood supply, the first solution, before legislation, that we should be trying to do is simply promotion and advertising. We need to raise awareness. It's what we politicians do. Let us encourage everyone, all Albertans, all Canadians to go out and donate blood. This government spent $10 million on carbon tax advertising. Can you imagine if you spent that money on something useful instead of your propaganda to sell your tax? Can you imagine the kind of advertising that Canadian Blood Services could have accomplished with that money? If social media is as powerful as they say, the people in this House can influence every Albertan to donate blood. The media in the gallery can write about the need to donate. They can do stories on someone who's benefited from a blood donation. Let's work together to raise this awareness and need, and let's get people donating.

The issue is that we can't celebrate the movement for only a moment like we do with so many other special days. We have to continuously remind people to donate blood because, quite honestly, people hate needles. Taking blood is an invasive procedure. People faint, they get nauseated, it hurts, and it's uncomfortable: these are the pitfalls of such a procedure, and they sometimes discourage folks from donating blood.

Let's talk about the other aspects of this product. What is it used for? Processed plasma products: the medical industry uses this human product to create pharmaceutical products, especially but not limited to albumin. So that you all understand, albumin is a transport carrier; drugs adhere and bond to albumin, and it gets transported throughout the body. Clotting factors – that's our healing – and immunoglobulins, which are our antibodies: these products created from this fluid from the human body are used in turn for the benefit of humans, to help us heal. Period. Let us be clear on this. This product, that is actively replenished in our bodies, is used to our benefit after it has been harvested by the medical industry.

Let's talk about this medical industry that uses this product. Let's talk about this sector that plays a major role in Canada's economic performance. This major employer, this key contributor to our economy involves equipment, supplies, medical devices, and pharmaceuticals. It's a sector that employs thousands, not just technical people, not just administrators, not just doctors, nurses, paramedics, and lab techs but scientists and researchers and mathematicians and computer programmers and engineers.

Let's talk about Alberta's future. Let's talk about the diversification of an economy. Here is a suggestion for this NDP government by this Wildrose opposition. If Albertans are looking to how we diversify our economy, how to break away from our natural resource based economy, then health is the key.

Health is what we deem to be a part of our Canadian identity. Health is the epitome of helping people, which is what we Canadians do. It's also our biggest expenditure.

The benefits of this sector are obvious, but more importantly we can provide it at a very high quality, and we have the educational base to support this industry. We have the educational institutions to develop the talent. We can develop biological physicians and lab technicians and the surgeons and the biochemists and the mathematical biologists and the bioinformatics people and the immunologists and the chemists and the physiologists and the neuroscientists.

We have a building code that reflects the strong standards of engineering associated with our high standards in health. We desire a high standard of cleanliness and hygiene. We measure the very air that permeates through these facilities. We have the rules and regulations, the standards of practice that ensure safe, high-quality environments.

Our workforce is educated in procedure and process. We follow guidelines that ensure isolation and sterility and hygiene. We have a high level of education. We're highly literate, with exceptional problem-solving capabilities.

Madam Speaker, we need to facilitate an environment that supports health innovation, an environment for health-related companies to develop and produce and distribute their life-saving products.

Bo Cooper, a friend and former colleague of mine, had acute lymphoblastic leukemia, and his experimental treatment trial was only available in the U.S. They had it 99 per cent beat. He still died, but he was so close. There's a young man in my constituency. He's 26 years old with a two-year-old daughter. A few years ago he was in an accident and became paralyzed, lost the use of his legs. This poor young man is trying to raise money to fund a procedure that uses stem cells and epidural stimulation to voluntarily move his legs. This procedure alone will cost him $125,000 in Bangkok, Thailand. This poor young man is doing a Hail Mary, anything to walk.

I think we can do more to develop our research and development in health. Let us encourage an industry to blossom in our province, an industry that will beat all the things that ail us. Let's supplement what we have in our medical industry and plant a seed that could flourish in our province. This seed is allowing the pharmaceutical industry access to a product that we voluntarily give. What we grow could follow the lead of great Canadians, great innovators like Dr. Norman Bethune and Sir Frederick Banting.

When this government decided to do a royalty review, you shattered the confidence of an entire sector. I ask that this government send a message to the biomedical industry that we support industries that support health. I'm asking this government to stop sending money to American companies. I'm asking Albertans to not be hypocritical about this. I'm asking for the members of this Legislature to reconsider this bill. I'm asking the hon. members of this House to repeal this bill and send a message that you are saying yes to the biomedical industry.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: I'll recognize the hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane, followed by Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. "My name is the Member for Banff-Cochrane, and I'm here to ask for $1,000 in exchange for 20 per cent of my plasma." That is how the Wildrose would have us do things here in Alberta, pitching essential services on a Dragons' Den style reality TV show, where nurses are pitted against teachers, special-needs children are . . .

Mr. Rodney: Point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: A point of order has been raised.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

Mr. Rodney: I'm not too sure how many times this is going to happen, in which the hon. – and I'll say "honourable" – Member for Banff-Cochrane . . . [interjections] Through the chair, right? Right.

Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j): making allegations against a member, false or unavowed motives, abusive or insulting language. We don't need the Blues. We all heard it. It just happened here. Madam Speaker, I'm asking you to rule on this because this is a terrible trend, please. Check my tweets from this morning about our Health minister. We need to be respectful and have an exchange of ideas that is for the betterment of Albertans and not about party politics, especially when it comes to things like the very lives, health, and quality of life of Albertans.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm not sure if it's a concentrated campaign on this particular member, the Member for Banff-Cochrane, but he had earlier in the week a similar situation where every time he got to speak, someone called a point of order. They were found to not be points of order, I think, four times in a row. This is another time – I think we're counting number 5 now – where this is again not a point of order. He's standing up, giving his opinion, and he barely started on that opinion when he already got a point of order. Now I'm sure that you'll rule that this is not a point of order yet again, but I for one am getting tired of this concentrated campaign against this particular member, and I wish it to stop.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's unfortunate that the member stood up before the hon. member got to "sewer rats," but we'll carry on from here. The question I have is that the member constantly gets up to speak to bills, but he never speaks to the topic at hand. He uses . . .

An Hon. Member: He was talking about plasma.

Mr. Hanson: He never even mentioned plasma.

Mr. Westhead: I did so.

Some Hon. Members: It was the first sentence.

Mr. Hanson: Selling his plasma. [interjections]
Through the chair, please.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills has the floor, please.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. What we would ask is that when members – I've got a speech here on this issue. The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo spoke quite eloquently, stuck to the matter at hand. That's all we're asking, that if we're going to have a debate on blood plasma and the sale of blood plasma in Canada or the purchasing of blood plasma in Canada, let's stick to the issue and have a debate on that issue. If you want to throw insults back and forth, we can do that in question period.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader has spoken. Did you wish to add something?

Mr. Westhead: Yes. May I add to the point of order, Madam Speaker?

The Deputy Speaker: Go ahead.

Mr. Westhead: Madam Speaker, here in the Legislature what we're here to do is have an exchange of ideas, and those ideas should be subject to scrutiny.

An Hon. Member: Subject to standing orders.

Mr. Nixon: Subject to standing orders. Exactly.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, please.

Mr. Westhead: These ideas are subject to standing orders, Madam Speaker, and what I was simply doing is describing what the Wildrose said yesterday about how they would plan to vet essential public services against one another in a Dragons' Den style reality TV show. They said it themselves. So here I am trying to talk about plasma, how important it is to Albertans, an essential service, and I'm criticizing the ideas that the Wildrose has. I think they should allow me the opportunity to speak on behalf of my constituents.

Mr. Yao: You work in the health industry.

Mr. Westhead: Exactly. I work in the health industry, and I know why this is important.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members. Hon. members, I don't want to see this morning deteriorate into another back and forth of points of order and insults being thrown across the aisle. I'm not going to find a point of order in this particular one, but I will caution the member – and I know this is not the first time; as pointed out by the Deputy Government House Leader, this will be the fifth time – to please be aware of relevance. We're speaking to this bill.

Please, all hon. members, be aware of the terminology that you use. We do not need to inflame each other. Let's be constructive here. Thank you.

Go ahead.

Debate Continued

Mr. Westhead: Madam Speaker, you know, the Wildrose can dish it out, but they can't take it. [interjections] Here we are talking about paid plasma donation . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Banff-Cochrane has the floor.

Mr. Westhead: Madam Speaker, plasma is too precious to be left up to the free market. That's the point I'm trying to make. If the members would stop interrupting, they might actually listen and learn from someone who's experienced in this field. I've thought about this long and hard, and I prepared what I was going to say today. These folks over here don't like to hear the truth, and they want to silence me because they know that what I have to say isn't helpful for their cause.

Madam Speaker, when we try to vet ideas against one another on things like Dragons' Den, there are winners and losers. They talk about picking winners and losers all the time. You know who shouldn't be losers? People in surgery that are undergoing emergency surgery. But these folks are opposed to the idea that we should allow people to voluntarily give their blood.

The Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo talked in his speech about how we give blood freely and voluntarily, and on the other hand he then argued about how we should pay people to give blood, so he's talking out of both sides of his mouth. He's opposing the bill – and this is a trend in the Wildrose. They let evidence get away from them. They turn away from evidence.

Madam Speaker, he mentioned what the situation is in Saskatchewan and how Saskatchewan has moved to paid plasma donations. [interjections] You know, they're chirping over there about evidence and laughing about evidence, and that doesn't surprise me. I mean, look at what they said about climate change. The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake said: show me the evidence. Well, the evidence is out there. You just have to look, hon. members. I think you need to do your jobs on behalf of your constituents and look at the evidence because what you're saying is absolutely wrong, and it's going to put Albertans at risk. It's going to put Albertans at risk.

I'd like to read at length from a CBC article, published just this past December, about the situation in Saskatchewan. The title of the article, Madam Speaker, is Canadian Blood Services Says Paid Plasma Clinics Are Harming Voluntary Donations. While these people over there idolize Saskatchewan, that has a provincial sales tax, health care premiums, and much higher taxes than we do here in Alberta – they're looking to Saskatchewan as a model. But I can tell you – and I'll read from the article to illustrate here – that what the Wildrose is proposing is dangerous for Albertans.

So let's have a listen to what the CBC had to say when they interviewed the experts in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Nixon: There's a good source.

Mr. Westhead: Well, you know, the hon. members on the other side question the CBC. This is our national broadcaster, Madam Speaker. I know that they prefer to listen to Rebel media. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Banff-Cochrane has the floor, and the hon. member will table the article once he's read it.

Go ahead.

Mr. Westhead: Absolutely, Madam Speaker. I'd be happy to table the article.

You know, on the other side they prefer Rebel media for their news, and on this . . .

Mr. Nixon: Point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: A point of order has been raised. The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Nixon: We were just here, Madam Speaker. I think you were pretty clear about trying to keep the decorum and not using . . .

Mrs. Littlewood: Are you saying that that was insulting?

Mr. Nixon: Thanks to the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville. I've really enjoyed hearing her during the point of order. But I'm trying to talk to the Speaker.

Mrs. Littlewood: You're welcome.

Mr. Nixon: You were very clear about keeping the decorum and not making comments that would deteriorate it. The Speaker was very clear yesterday. This member continues to do that.

With that said, Madam Speaker, the member knows full well that he does not know which is the preferred media of anybody in the House. So it's just a silly argument, and he should maybe continue with some of the important things that he's trying to talk about.

The Deputy Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I find this quite perplexing, when the very member that stood up on that point of order just told the member that the CBC was not a good news source and then stood up, saying that you can't tell where an individual gets their news from. Very perplexing, very confusing.

Ms McLean: It's a matter of fact.

Mr. Carlier: That it is.

What it isn't is a point of order. Madam Speaker, this is a continuing campaign against this particular member. I wish it to stop, and I encourage you to not now tell the member that somehow, in any shape or form, he incited this. I don't believe in any shape or form that that's what happened. So one thing this is not is a point of order, and it's taking away from the work this Assembly should be doing.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Rodney: The Deputy Government House Leader, I think, as well as the Opposition House Leader, the third-party House leader, and every member in this House wants this to stop, as you've just said, and that will happen if we abide by these rules. We've referred to Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j) on a number of occasions. There was an allegation made. That was clear. That's (h). And (i): "false or unavowed motives." Why would he say that? It's (j): "abusive or insulting language." I will commend this member for the one statement that he made earlier. It was a good point. It was made in the third person. It made the point very well. It did not contravene any of these standing orders, including 23(h), (i), and (j). I would like to hear the rest of the speech. I would like to hear it according to the standing orders. They're there for a reason, so that people won't be interrupted on either side of the House.

I once again refer to the fact that this morning I wrote a rather complimentary tweet about the Health minister and the abuse she's received. I don't want him to receive abuse, but I can tell you that the world is watching. Please be respectful, and people will respect you.

Mr. Westhead: Just briefly on the point of order, Madam Speaker. We here in this Chamber are allowed to express opinions on the matter of debate. The fact that I think that their preferred news source is Rebel media is bolstered by the fact that they appear at rallies sponsored by this news organization. It's just my opinion, so I think they should allow me to express my opinion. That's all I'm asking for.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, I'm not going to call this a point of order, but, again, I did hear inflammatory comments from both sides. Please tone it down. Keep things to the bill at hand, and let's be conscious of the words that we use so that we are respectful. Please continue.

Debate Continued

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Madam Speaker. What I was getting to is talking about Canadian Blood Services. You know, I respect that this is a news article from CBC, which some members may not appreciate, but in the article they interview CBS, Canadian Blood Services, experts. So that's what I'm trying to get at.

Here we go.

The head of Canadian Blood Services . . . says the agency plans to open dozens more collection facilities in the coming years amid signs it is losing volunteer donors to a for-profit clinic that pays people to give plasma.

Canadian Plasma Resources, a private operator that gives gift cards to plasma donors, opened a collection facility in Saskatoon in February.

Although the national blood agency said in April that paying donors for plasma was an option, it has now ruled that out. Then they go on to describe what plasma is.

The CEO of Canadian Blood Services is quoted as saying:

"There's marked confusion as to who is operating in the Saskatoon market," . . . Donor numbers have also dropped in that city.

"We've begun to see some early impacts of having this private, for-profit enterprise operate in our jurisdiction."

The CEO goes on to say:

"It is early evidence, but it's certainly consistent with what other countries are seeing when you see large-scale ramp-up of the paid plasma industry side by side with the blood industry.

"We in Canada are at risk, if we don't collect more of our own plasma, that we're not going to be able to access the global supply of these plasma drugs," . . .

"We have to collect more plasma, control it, and keep it in Canada for Canadian patients, which the private industry is not obligated to do. They will sell it to the highest bidder."

Madam Speaker, that was the point that I was trying to make about Dragons' Den.

Demand for pharmaceuticals derived from plasma is increasing by up to 10 per cent a year in Canada . . . There's similar growth in the U.S., Australia and Europe, and it's anticipated China and India will clamour for more, too.

I'll skip to the part where it talks about undercutting volunteers.

Michael Decter was an adviser to the Krever Commission into the tainted blood scandal, and is a former deputy health minister in Ontario.

He is quoted as saying:

"As an economist I'm not surprised that once you allow paid plasma donation in, it's going to undercut the volunteer sector," . . . He's delighted with the change in direction at CBS.

That change in direction from CBS is a move against paying donors for plasma.

He says about CBS:

"It's a Christmas gift that they've come to their senses and they're going to try to collect more blood on a voluntary basis from Canadians."

Madam Speaker, I'm really proud of our Health minister. I think our Health minister is the best Health Minister Alberta has ever had. She is generous, she's kind, she's caring, and she listens to the people of Alberta. She restored the cuts that the PCs were proposing to make in the 2015 election, and she has done an admirable job with the board of AHS. She's worked collaboratively with them. She's also worked collaboratively with the doctors and saved Albertans $500 million. That's what I call leadership. Our Health minister is working so hard every day that, you know, I don't know how she does it. She has to keep all of these things in her head. She's got a massive portfolio. She's also the Deputy Premier.

Madam Speaker, this is the kind of leadership that Albertans deserve.

Mrs. Littlewood: She visits everybody's hospitals.

Mr. Westhead: She visits everybody's hospitals.

Madam Speaker, I want to talk a little bit about my personal experience as an operating room nurse. Earlier I talked a bit about how things like plasma are too precious to be left up to the devices of the free market. Albertans want to know that these types of products are there for them when they need it. I've had first-hand experience.

I respect the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo as a first responder. I can't imagine the things that he's seen. You know, I could never do that. I've seen a lot of things in the operating room, but I have a lot of respect for that member and for all first responders.

Madam Speaker, by the time people get to the operating room, they may have lost a lot of blood, and they expect the plasma to be there when they need it. I know that by banning paid donations, it'll ensure that we have a secure supply. We've seen in other jurisdictions where they have a profit-driven motive for people to sell their plasma that it depletes the donor base. [interjections] Well, you know, the members on the other side are disputing the evidence that I just read about, the Saskatoon experiment. It's an experiment. We're seeing the results of this experiment because it's new. We have to look at other jurisdictions that have gone through this.

I don't think we should leave our blood donor base up to an experiment, a wild, crazy idea from the folks over there, who don't even want to replace front-line workers when they quit, Madam Speaker. This is dangerous. The Wildrose can't be trusted with our health system. They want to send people to other provinces and to the U.S., and now they're talking about having people paid for their donations. We see in Saskatchewan that this is not working. It's not working. The CEO of Canadian Blood Services says that this is not working. That's why we are moving to ban paid donations. And it fits the evidence. That's what we need to make decisions on: evidence.

For example, I'll talk about one particular instance, that I recall, in the operating room. A gentleman was skiing in the winter – well, of course, in the winter – and he fell on his ski pole, Madam Speaker. It went into his abdomen. It didn't penetrate his abdomen, but he had a really hard blunt-trauma incident. I don't know which facility he was skiing at. You know, the closest one, maybe, would be Nakiska. So think about the transport after he's been found and airlifted out of there, travelling to the Foothills medical centre. Then he has to go through emergency to be assessed. Oftentimes they have a CT scan to see what kinds of internal injuries they have, and then the trauma surgeons.

We kind of get called all of a sudden. It's like: okay; there's a patient coming to the operating room. If you were on your lunch break, you know, now you've got to go back to work. And we are proud of that, Madam Speaker. I'm not trying to disrespect other units, but in other units nurses would often, when they'd go on their breaks, leave the unit to try to get away from things. And I totally respect that. I did that, too. In the operating room – I'm not trying to say that operating room nurses are any better – we would make sure that we sat in the lunchroom that's close to the emergency operating room so that if there was an emergency, we could go back immediately, because we knew that things happened quickly.

That was the case in this situation, Madam Speaker. The gentleman came in. He was actually talking to us. He was alert, oriented, everything. He just seemed fine. So we put him to sleep. As soon as we put him to sleep, his blood pressure started to crash, and things happened really quickly.

If I remember correctly, I think this was actually one of my first trauma emergencies. I was feeling a bit confident, so I sent my fellow circulating nurse for her break. I'm, like: oh, I've got it under control. And that was a big mistake. As soon as the surgeons cut into the gentleman's abdomen, the blood hit the ceiling. He had so much internal bleeding and there was so much pressure inside his abdomen that there was blood everywhere. You know, I might've had to change my scrubs after that. It was a pretty traumatic moment. I called some help back right away because what you need right away is sponges. But you know what? Another thing you need right away, Madam Speaker, is plasma. We needed plasma for that patient.

I hesitate to consider what it would have been like if we had a paid plasma donation system. What if we left it up to the free market? What if people were more interested in selling their blood for profit? And I can't necessarily blame those people. They might be in a tough situation that they need the cash, and I get that, but that's why we're doing things like increasing the Alberta child benefit system to expand supports for low-income families. That's why we're reducing school fees for low-income families and, well, all families, for that matter. Madam Speaker, there are other ways that we can look after people that may be financially motivated to sell their blood products. This is too much of a precious thing to leave up to chance.

Albertans, when they're doing any kind of activity, want to know that there's a system there that is going to protect them and support them, and things like our public health care system . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) comes into effect. Five minutes of questions and comments. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to get up on 29(2)(a). I have some questions and comments for my colleague the hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane, who I think made some very passionate points. As somebody who's a fellow skier, I hope to never fall on my ski pole because that sounds terrible. You know, I thank you for the work that you and other medical professionals do throughout the province to help those who have unexpected trauma incidents and who, I'm sure, get very fine care from the nurses and doctors in our health care system.

You just sort of talked at length about, you know, how selling to the highest bidder would be a problem versus our current system.

You also spoke about some logical inconsistencies that the opposition often puts forward. Since you had a bit of an interrupted speech due to various points of order – I think some of them related in an “I can dish but cannot take” sort of way – I was wondering if you could sort of draw a line through your argument of how selling to the highest bidder, Saskatchewan’s risky ideological experiment that they’ve been doing, hurts Albertans, how it doesn’t help everyday Albertans, and how the logical inconsistencies of what the opposition had been proposing also do not help everyday Albertans. I’m just wondering if you can give us a quick summary there just to sort of draw the line since you were a bit interrupted during your presentation.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you very much to the Member for Calgary-Currie for those insightful comments and the question. I’ll talk a little bit more about the Saskatchewan experiment, Madam Speaker. I’ll just read a little bit more from this article here because as I was listening to the member, I was kind of looking at this a bit further. This is a great article, actually. I encourage all members to read it once I table it this afternoon. It’s got a lot of quotes from experts, and that’s why I like this article. You know, sometimes news is some opinion mixed in with quotes, and this has a lot of quotes from experts.

I believe this is, again, the CEO for Canadian Blood Services that was quoted as saying: right now what’s happening is that the private companies are actually putting Saskatchewan at a deficit supply. He continues on: they’re not helping us become more self-sufficient, so we’re very happy that Canadian Blood Services is speaking out, but the government of Saskatchewan and our federal government have to listen.

They have to listen, Madam Speaker. That’s a key point. And what this government is doing is listening to people like Canadian Blood Services’ experts. They’re listening to people like front-line workers and doctors and nurses who know about this, who live this every day. Like I said earlier, this isn’t something that we can put up to chance. The free market works great for certain things. Like, when I want to go buy a car, it makes sense for me to shop around, look for the best deal I can find, and compare and contrast. That is a perfect example of the free market, and I support that a hundred per cent.

But things like health care – you know, we see instances in the United States where they have a profit-motivated system. People go bankrupt when they can’t afford that. They get cancer, and they lose their house, Madam Speaker, because they can’t afford to pay their bills. That’s not what it means to be Canadian. In Canada we look out for one another, and we do that in a fair way by paying taxes.

I may not know people who go into the health care system, but I know as a Canadian that it’s part of my duty to support people when they’re down. That’s why we have a social safety net in Canada. Here in Alberta we are an important part of that social safety net. I’m proud that on this side of the House we are supporting a publicly funded and publicly delivered health care system because that’s proven evidence and how you get results and how you take care of people.

Madam Speaker, I’m really proud to support the Health minister in this, and I’m really proud of our government for moving to ban plasma donations for profit. You know, I was listening to the Bill 2 debate . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Madam Speaker, thank you. It’s my pleasure to rise to speak today on Bill 3 with regard to voluntary blood donation. I want to give a little bit of personal history first. My father in 1988 was diagnosed with chronic lymphocytic leukemia. He succumbed to this illness some six years later. In the latter stages of the treatment for this disease he received several blood transfusions at the W.W. Cross cancer centre.

I’ve been a blood donor since I was in my teenage years. I first donated blood when I was a student at University of Alberta, and my motivation was that we wanted to beat the engineers, as ag students, and we did. The ag students always had a competition with the engineers. I had been a blood donor consistently up until about 20 years ago. This is after my dad had passed, and one of the reasons I always wanted to give blood is that I wanted to give back into the system that had supported my father. I got a letter from what at that point in time was Red Cross – it was before Canadian Blood Services was on the scene – telling me that there had been a false positive on a blood sample that I had provided for hepatitis B and that, therefore, I was asked not to donate blood anymore.

I will tell you that that is one of the saddest letters that I’ve ever received in my life. I fought the letter. In fact, I offered to have additional testing done. I wanted to stay on the donor list. But I was told that I wasn’t allowed to, and I haven’t been able to give blood since that time. That’s a source of great sadness to me, Madam Speaker, because I believe that it is important that, wherever possible, we provide this to other people in our society. I feel the same way about, for example, organ donation. I’ve signed my organ donor card, and I supported our government’s bill last Legislature to set up an organ and donor registry.

Madam Speaker, that’s my personal history. I want to make it very clear that I support voluntary blood donation. But I also want to say a few other things that have to be very clear in this debate, and that is that there are an awful lot of myths being perpetuated in this debate. Unfortunately, we are having the debate inflamed by some real rhetoric, and I have to say that’s on both sides. It’s unfortunate, bringing in issues that are completely unrelated to the debate at hand.

We’re talking here about plasma donations for the purpose of manufacturing plasma protein products. We’re not talking about plasma donations for transfusion. We need to be very clear on that. We’re not talking about blood donations. These are voluntary and will continue to be voluntary in Canada. In fact, in most countries there are voluntary and paid donor systems that run parallel to each other. In most of those countries the voluntary donor rate is, in fact, higher than our voluntary donor rate here in Canada. So to suggest somehow that this will be a negative or that this will somehow affect our voluntary donor base is not borne out by the evidence in other jurisdictions.

Now, the Saskatchewan example was brought forward. Well, that clinic has been operating for approximately a year. Maybe let’s look at the Manitoba example, where in Winnipeg there has been a paid-for plasma collection centre operating for 30 years, and Canadian Blood Services states on multiple occasions that it has not affected its voluntary donor base in any way.

Madam Speaker, I think it’s important that when we discuss an important issue like this, we do not cloud the issue with things that are not exactly true. Donations of plasma for plasma protein product development and manufacture are completely different from donations that are being used, for example, in the operating room for medical emergencies.

The problem is that Canada does not currently have enough donors of plasma to produce these products for our domestic needs, and we must purchase them from other countries, mostly from the U.S., and those countries pay their donors. In fact, there is not a single jurisdiction in the world, anywhere, that can meet its needs for plasma protein products from a purely voluntary donor base.

Nowhere. So to suggest that somehow, magically, we will be able to do it here in Canada by offering better cookies or better soup or a more enhanced donor program is preposterous. What Canadian Blood Services wants to do is to get $100 million to build out a system that will still only collect enough plasma for 50 per cent of Canada's needs and only do that in eight years.

In the meantime there is a private company, which I know is something that is a little uncomfortable for some people, that's prepared to invest in jobs and prepared to invest in laboratory facilities for the processing of these materials because right now in Canada we don't have that.

Canadian Blood Services has failed Canadians, quite frankly. Our donor rates are falling. Our number of collection centres in rural Alberta and rural areas in general is decreasing. Canadian Blood Services is making it harder, not easier, to donate, and now, out of the blue, when all of a sudden there's some pressure from the private sector, they come up with this scheme as to how they're going to improve things. Now, look, I don't mean to be negative on Canadian Blood Services, but they have not done the job for Canadians, and they, quite frankly, need a bit of a wake-up call.

Madam Speaker, I think one of the biggest things that bothers me about this is the basic hypocrisy of this, and it's been talked about before. We don't like the idea of paying donors. We think that it's somehow dirty to pay donors, and it's been one of those sort of Canadian-American things for as long as I remember. You know, we could always sort of puff up our chests as Canadians and say: "Well, you know, we don't have to pay our donors; we have voluntary donations. Those Americans. They have to pay their donors." It gives us a bias against something, but the reality – and that's what we have to deal with – is that we cannot collect sufficient plasma for the needs.

Now, there are two main objections to this. One is that the payment will somehow impact voluntary donations. Well, I'm quoting here from a national round-table on plasma donations. This was held in 2013, and I'll table this document, but I will just quote from page 2 of the document.

Payment by a private company for plasma donations has never and will never have any impact on Canada's voluntary system for collecting blood for transfusion... This is a completely voluntary system and will remain so. Private companies in Canada do not collect blood or plasma for transfusion.

That's a critical thing to understand and to remember.

So the security of the supply, despite what, perhaps, the chair of Canadian Blood Services – and I'm going to suggest that he's got a bit of a vested interest in this. Regardless of what he says has been the limited time in operation of the Saskatoon clinic, I will tell you that the Winnipeg clinic has been operating for 30 years. Other clinics in other countries have been operating for years. Both the chair of Canadian Blood Services and Health Canada four years ago made this unequivocal statement that it will not affect the voluntary donor system.

I'll quote from this report.

The payment of plasma donors... for the purposes of creating pharmaceutically derived plasma products does not represent a change in practice for Canada. Private, for profit plasma collection has existed in Manitoba for several decades.

And I might point out: in Manitoba under primarily NDP governments.

Now, the other thing that is important is safety. Well, of course, we're very concerned about the safety of our blood supply in Canada, especially after what we went through in the '80s with the tainted blood scandal, where some 32,000 Canadians received blood that was infected with one or another virus, either the HIV virus or one of the hepatitis viruses. It then gave birth to the Krever inquiry.

I know that the government says, "Well, this is consistent with the Krever inquiry," which was published in 1997. That inquiry is now 20 years old, and for that inquiry to say that we should rely on a purely voluntary basis is perhaps something that may have been realistic – maybe – in 1997, but with the burgeoning growth in demand for plasma protein products, it is simply impossible to meet that demand on a purely voluntary donor basis. No country has been able to do it, and I think we are fooling ourselves that somehow in Canada we can pretend we're going to go from 17 per cent to 100 per cent. Even Canadian Blood Services says that with a government infusion of $100 million they hope to get to 50 per cent. Madam Speaker, that's the first myth.

The second myth is that somehow donations from private donors or from paid-for donors are somehow less safe. Let's put that myth to bed right now. There is absolutely zero – zero – evidence that donations from paid donors have any different safety profile than volunteer donors. In fact, that whole process is governed by Health Canada. We have one of the strongest and most stringent systems in place – that's why I'm no longer a blood donor – and those stringent systems are in place largely as a reaction to what happened in the '80s. Safety is not an issue. What is an issue is saying, you know, that CBS is so successful. CBS provides a service, but quite frankly we should all have some issues with the services Canadian Blood Services provides us, and its ever-shrinking donor base is because they are making it harder for people to donate, not easier.

Now, Madam Speaker, another important group that I have spoken with – I've taken some time to speak to them – is donors. I spoke earlier this week to a gentleman who donates and has made over 300 donations of plasma, of platelets, and of blood, and he speaks very proudly of his contribution to our system. He is concerned about how we would implement this. Certainly, it has to be implemented with care. I'm not pretending that this is something that could be done easily. I'm not pretending that this is something that could be done without at least some level of monitoring, but to pretend that we can go on purchasing annually some $200 million worth of plasma protein products and other products from paid donors while we ban the practice here is the height of hypocrisy, the absolute height of hypocrisy. The only way morally and ethically we can stand on this would be to say that we will ban it here and that we will not accept plasma protein products from any jurisdiction that pays their donors. That's the only way we could take the moral high ground on this.

But I would say that then we have some other people, as the member said, we have to listen to. We have other people we need to answer to. We need to answer to, for example, five patient organizations that advocate for paid-for plasma donation: the Canadian Immunodeficiencies Patient Organization, the Canadian Hemophilia Society, the Canadian Organization for Rare Disorders, Hereditary Angioedema Canada, and the Network of Rare Blood Disorder Organizations. These patient organizations all advocate for paid-for plasma donation here in Canada so that the plasma can be collected and eventually processed here in Canada. That's the plan of the company that is being criticized here. They want to develop a made-in-Canada plasma industry.

Let's not ignore the advances that are being made in biomedical technology. Let's not ignore the fact that treatments have evolved. We have to move forward. We cannot be applying the systems and the procedures from the 1980s and 1990s. Our world is changing. To continue to spend hundreds of millions of dollars paid to profitable United States pharmaceutical corporations: I don't think those folks are your friends. You're paying 200 million taxpayer dollars annually to profitable U.S. pharmaceutical corporations whereas those dollars could stay here in Canada, could stay in Alberta if we get over this situation and recognize that there is a fundamental difference between plasma and blood donations for transfusion and plasma and blood donations for processing.

You know, I've also talked to other Health ministers. Specifically, the Health minister for Saskatchewan, obviously, supports this. But the Health minister for British Columbia, who is a former colleague of mine, a veterinarian, supports paid-for plasma donations as long as it is sufficiently regulated by Health Canada and by the Health department in his province. He has the utmost confidence that that can and will be done. But to ignore . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: I would just like to make a very quick comment, with a follow-up question. I certainly appreciated all of the research done, the personal expertise and experience. I know that the member has more to offer this Chamber and all Albertans, and I wonder if he would continue his remarks. I'd like to hear the end of his speech.

Dr. Starke: I thank the hon. member for the opportunity. You know, I really feel very strongly about this. I recognize that we have some biases, that we have some biases against the idea of paying people to donate blood, to donate plasma, to donate organs. I get that. I have a bias against it, too. But here's the thing, folks. If we ban this, all we are doing is pushing the problem somewhere else and trying to pretend that somehow we're better than others because we've banned it. That's just something that, to me, is unacceptable. If we're going to ban it, then we should make another statement, that we will not purchase products from paid donors, derived from paid donors. But if we do that, we are depriving Albertans of life-saving medical treatments.

So think about that. I think that that is a fundamental question. Now, is it an easy question to answer? No, it isn't. But we need to set aside sometimes as legislators, Madam Speaker, some of our pre-existing biases and learn about the broader context of things. For example, a plasma donation takes 90 minutes to make, not the roughly 20 minutes of a typical blood sample, and plasma donors are asked to donate weekly. It's because of those onerous requirements that voluntary plasma donors, for the huge amount of plasma that is required, are very hard to build up into that donor base. That is why plasma donors are paid. Like I say, it's a situation that recognizes the reality of what it takes to make these donations. Once again, I will point out that in other jurisdictions that have paid donations – Germany, Austria, the U.S. – their voluntary donation level, those rates, are in fact higher than Canada's.

You know, to suggest that somehow this will eat into our system that we use for transfusions, for both blood and plasma transfusion, is simply not true, and to say it and to repeat it is to simply try to create fear in Albertans, in Canadians, and that is wrong. It is wrong to do that. As legislators we should be seeking the truth, and we should be making our decisions based on those truths and getting over our personal biases.

Again, I have a personal bias in favour of voluntary donation, but in this particular case, in order to provide for the huge growth in demand for these life-saving products, where no other jurisdiction in the world has been able to provide the need through purely voluntary donations, we need to at least look at allowing paid-for plasma donations. To not allow it in Alberta, Madam Speaker, in my view, is hypocritical and is something that, you know, we should not stand for here in this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Any further questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and ask a couple of questions and make a few comments towards the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, a former high school colleague of mine. I'm always pleased to engage in debate with him because his opinions are usually considered and followed up with evidence.

One of the things that he did say during his comments and discussion of this debate with respect to providing blood products to Canadians and Albertans is that he is in favour of a voluntary system and supporting a voluntary system of blood donation and that that would be his preference, but he's suggesting that we've failed to do so, that Canadian Blood Services has failed to meet the demand. I think that that's what we all lament, that Canadian Blood Services has not come up to meet the challenge of supplying the Canadian demand or need for blood products. I think that a critical question we should be asking ourselves is why and whether we should be giving up on Canadian Blood Services as the route or channel through which we should be seeking to fulfill Canadian demands.

I'm not fine, either, with buying blood products to the tune of $200 million a year. That's the figure that was quoted by the member most recently.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Time has expired for that standing order.

I will recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I believe that many of us, when we ran for office, ran because we have particular values and principles that we believe in. For me personally, I have to say that when it comes to this issue, it has to do with a very important principle that I will maintain till my dying days, and that is that life and even the gift of life should not be turned into a commodity.

You know, having come from another part of the world where you see these practices being implemented – perhaps they're not regulated the same way that we would do it here; that's a given – you see the negative side of people who are low income resorting to donating because they're trying to make ends meet. I ask people in this House: is that the kind of Alberta that we want to have here, where low-income people are selling their blood plasma because they're trying to make ends meet, make it to the end of the month? That's what's happening in other places in the world. Now, I hope that that would never be the case here, and that's why I stand up strongly to support Bill 3, the Voluntary Blood Donations Act.

This act will create a barrier to the establishment of private pay-for-plasma clinics in Alberta. Our government-proposed legislation will prevent private blood collection industries from opening up in Alberta. I want to say that our province will not be the first province to ban the practice of paying for blood products. Ontario and Quebec have already banned paid blood donations as well, so we wouldn't be the first within Canada to do so.

Now, for me, at the end of the day, this is about a private, for-profit setting up a parallel system to compete for donors within our public system. That's something that we have to be very careful about. You know, the proposed legislation that we're bringing forward will ban payment to an individual donor, ban payment for blood donations advertising, exempt Canadian Blood Services so that they can continue with their current practices and any future activities, provide an exemption for blood given solely for the purpose of research, and provide for inspection and enforcement powers. Banning paid blood donations will ensure that Albertans and Canadians have access to the blood that they need in a safe and well co-ordinated manner.

The Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville talked about how our government is hypocritical. [interjections] Pardon me. There you go. Vermilion-Lloydminster. The hon. member from across the way – sorry – talked about how it would be hypocritical, and I want to address that.

It's correct that currently approximately 80 per cent of the Canadian supply of plasma products is manufactured from the plasma-paid donors and primarily from the U.S.A. Less than 20 per cent of the plasma products used by Canadians is made from Canadian plasma that is collected from volunteer donors via Canadian Blood Services. One of the questions that we need to ask ourselves before we go to a private, for-profit setting of a parallel system, I would think, is: okay; well, how can we better support Canadian Blood Services and the work that they're doing so that we can meet the needs? Canadian Blood Services plans to increase Canada's plasma products self-sufficiency to 50 per cent by 2024 by expanding existing blood collection sites, opening new plasma collection sites, and recruiting additional plasma donors.

I want to go back to some of the examples that the hon. member from across the way was making, saying that Manitoba has been doing this for a while. Studies show that in countries where not-for-profit and for-profit blood collection organizations co-exist, it negatively impacts the voluntary donor base. Where paid-for plasma clinics exist, concerns have been raised that our national voluntary program may be impacted as donors may choose to donate where they will receive compensation. Not only that, over the past year, since Canadian Plasma Resources opened in Saskatoon, Canadian Blood Services observed a double-digit decline in Saskatoon donors between the ages of 17 and 24. So we've got to ask ourselves – okay; we have some data that says this, and we have other data that says the contrary, but the more research you do, it demonstrates that by having a parallel system, it actually drives down voluntary blood donors.

An Hon. Member: Germany. United States.

Loyola: There are other jurisdictions where it might be, but we're also seeing in some jurisdictions where it actually drives down voluntary blood donors. You know, the member across the way is saying that I'm telling falsehoods, when I'm actually saying: no; this is research that has demonstrated that this is what the case is.

Now, the other thing that we need to consider is that a private company collecting plasma would sell to the highest bidder on the international market, and there's no guarantee that that would come back to help Canadians. It's something that we have to be open to and acknowledge. I mean, that's the way that the free-market system works, right?

I'm sure that there's much more that could be said, but I want to go back to the important premise of which I started on, and that is that the gift of life should not be a commodity. That's the real reason why I'm standing up to speak in favour of this bill. I would encourage all members of this House, based on that principle alone, that we should vote this bill through.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It was a pleasure listening to the hon. member go on about, you know, his passion for this issue. I think one thing that was very interesting was that he, you know, drew a very nice line going through the facts. For the Canadian experience in Saskatchewan he quoted at length from their experience there on how by having paid plasma, it reduced the amount of donors to Canadian Blood Services.

I think he brought up some very excellent points about how when you have paid donors there's no guarantee that that plasma ends up back in the Canadian health care system. You know, I could really see how that would in fact increase the costs for our health care system as we are suddenly going to be bidding against the world for our plasma. I don't see how that would help us. I don't see how that would help the citizens of Alberta who rely on us to be good stewards of the public purse.

We also heard from a previous speaker as well, from Banff-Cochrane, who spoke at length on the same subject about the experience specifically in Saskatchewan from experts there who came to the same conclusion. I know there have been some comments that perhaps this may partially work in other countries, but the Canadian experience shows that it would negatively affect us.

The hon. member, as mentioned, is a passionate advocate and very true in his convictions that things like blood donation and plasma should be for the public benefit and not for the profit of companies. I was wondering if he would like to expand or elaborate any further on that or if he had any further words he didn't have a chance to say before time ran out.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I think that it's really important that we look at what's happening in other jurisdictions across the country, especially because we will get a better sense of how Canadians are interacting with the system. Now, we talked about Winnipeg. We've also talked about Saskatchewan. We talked about lower donations as a result of a parallel private system. I'll go back to my comments regarding Canadian Blood Services and looking into ways that we can help Canadian Blood Services reach the goals that it has and the goals that we have in common for the Canadian population so that we can work towards self-sufficiency in order to secure domestic blood products not only for today but for future generations to come.

I know that everybody in this House has their particular values. They have their particular principles. They have their way of looking at the world, but I need to stay true to my particular way of looking at the world and those principles. Blood should never be a commodity.

Again, I point to other places in the world, nondeveloped countries, where not only are individuals going and giving their blood for money but they're even going and giving organs for money. Now, I know that the members across the way would never want to see that happen here – would never want to see that happen here – and we have a good system whereby those who want to donate their organs to others can do so.

I encourage and I want to take this opportunity to all those who may be watching us: please make sure to sign up to be an organ donor, and please tell your family as well.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'd just like to start by saying that I've been a volunteer blood donor for years. My wife and I both go at every opportunity. Unfortunately, out in the rural areas the clinic only comes in about twice a year. We'd like to donate a lot more often, but we just can't seem to get there.

For starters, the federal government, through Health Canada, is ultimately responsible for regulating the safety of Canada's blood supply. That's a great thing; however, provinces and territories are responsible for distribution of the blood supply. Furthermore, the provinces and territories can decide to either allow or disallow payment for donors of blood or plasma. While we know that there is a problem with ensuring there's enough domestic supply of plasma here in Alberta and in Canada and the problem has to be fixed, limiting paid plasma collection in Alberta is not the answer.

All this bill ensures is that the U.S. paid plasma industry continues to thrive. The fact of the matter is that Canadian Blood Services provides almost 75 per cent of our plasma supply here in Canada for pharmaceutical use purchased from paid donors in the United States. Three-quarters of the plasma for Canadian pharmaceuticals is from paid U.S. donors. While the goal is admirable, to have a completely voluntary donor pool for blood and blood products, the mechanisms to achieve that goal are simply not introduced in this bill. Collecting enough plasma to be self-sufficient under a volunteer model is neither operationally nor economically feasible. In fact, in order to collect enough plasma from voluntary Canadian donors, there would need to be a 300 per cent increase in donors.

This is not about collecting blood or plasma for direct transfusion, as was brought forward by the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster. The blood we collect is for direct transfusion, and it will continue to be done through a publicly run, voluntary donor system. I will continue to donate blood on a volunteer basis even if there is a paid clinic to go to. I will continue to go. This is about collecting plasma required to manufacture pharmaceutical products, besides the fact that the U.S., Germany, and Australia, who are all countries with paid plasma programs, have some of the highest numbers of voluntary blood donations in the world.

Currently different provinces are taking different approaches to this complex issue. We've heard that Saskatchewan, Manitoba, British Columbia, and New Brunswick are allowing for-profit plasma donation clinics while Ontario and Quebec have outright banned these clinics. We have a Canadian company – that's right; a Canadian company – that is looking to expand, and they have stated that they intend to open 10 plasma collection centres. It would be great to have them here in Alberta. After they have secured their supply, they intend to build a facility, which would also be great to have here in Alberta, to transform the plasma into the pharmaceutical products so many Canadians need to live. They have a made-in-Canada and could be made-in-Alberta approach to our problem. Madam Speaker, they will increase the competition in the international plasma market, and competition is good. It can help lower the cost.

Quality isn't the question as there are no differences in safety from paid or unpaid plasma because every donor is treated the same through strict regulations, and it will be under the guidelines of the Canada Health Act.

I repeat that this is not about collecting blood or plasma for direct transfusion. That is and will continue to be done through a publicly run, voluntary donor system. What this is about is collecting the plasma required to manufacture pharmaceutical products, and the need for these products just keeps on growing. This is a fantastic opportunity for Canada and Alberta to diversify our economy, bring in high-paid, highly skilled jobs. B.C., Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and New Brunswick all welcome the development of a domestic plasma industry. They will welcome investment. We are going to lose an opportunity here. In fact, even the former NDP government in Manitoba was supportive of the domestic plasma industry. If this bill passes, this Canadian company simply will not invest in Alberta. Just another company that will not invest in Alberta.

I have a few questions for the government. First of all, how does this government plan on increasing the number of blood donation volunteers by 300 per cent? That's going to take a lot of advertising. What are the costs associated with only using voluntary plasma donors to fulfill our needs? If there's a market that can lead to an increased supply of plasma, why are we putting up barriers?

The cost for Canadian Blood Services to purchase plasma protein products internationally is very high and rising dramatically. We should carefully weigh the arguments to be sure that we're getting the best deal for Canadian taxpayers and Alberta taxpayers.

I would urge all my fellow colleagues to vote against this bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I will call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to add to the debate on this bill, the consideration of banning the purchase of plasma here in the province of Alberta, moving to a system where we would allow payment for plasma donations. We've been listening to a lot of arguments here so far this morning from members on both sides of the House.

I did hear some members in the Opposition who were putting forward the idea that by allowing paid plasma donations, provinces can then better monitor and control the supply rather than relying on foreign countries. Now, I don't see how paid plasma donations would in any way actually increase control or supply because currently there is no shortage of plasma in the Canadian market. We have the plasma that we need to be able to treat patients. Hospitals are not running out, so the supply is present; it's currently there. In fact, Canada at times has some surplus plasma, left over after whole blood is broken down into its various components.

Now, yes, currently we do lack a facility in Canada to process that plasma, so that surplus plasma that is generated in Canada is sent to the U.S. to be made into plasma products, which are then imported back into the country, but as members have noted, currently the remainder of the plasma that we need for the Canadian market is in fact purchased under contract from the U.S. pharmaceutical firms. I agree, Madam Speaker, that this is not ideal. You know, I'm in favour of moving away from dependence on plasma from outside of Canada, much as I'm in favour of moving away from dependence on oil from outside of Canada. Indeed, I would far rather see Canadian products used in the Canadian market. However, moving to paid donations in Canada does not address that issue.

Now, we just heard a member who was standing and talking about saving costs. The CEO of Canadian Plasma Resources, the gentleman who is running the company that is collecting paid plasma currently in some other Canadian jurisdictions, said: we are not going to be substantially cheaper, but we will be able to compete with U.S. plasma. We are not going to be able to be substantially cheaper. The CEO of the company himself has said that he cannot provide any significant cost savings for what he is proposing. So that negates that argument from the opposition because the price, Madam Speaker, is not based on a shortage of plasma. It is instead set by the international pharmaceutical companies who control their supply of raw plasma through networks of paid plasma clinics throughout the U.S. They choose to collect more or less, as they feel that they need it, so there will be no savings in terms of cost.

Currently not one drop of the plasma being collected by CPR is going to help anyone in Canada or elsewhere. That plasma is currently being stockpiled until they feel they have enough to offer for sale. Once they have collected that critical mass, there is no guarantee that that plasma will be sold here in Canada. There is no contract in place. There is no legislation. There is no regulation. It is a free market company which has the right to sell that plasma to whatever jurisdiction it feels will give it the best price.

I agree with what some of the members have said here this morning, that we do need to find ways to increase our own supply of plasma here in Canada, absolutely, but I am not comfortable with placing that in the hands of a private corporation who has no regulation and no requirement to put Canadians first, to put Albertans first, frankly. This is a company who can simply choose to do what they wish. Now, I would like to believe in their good intentions, but the private market does not exist for the purpose of always protecting people. That is why we have government regulation. That is why there are some things that we keep within the public sphere, just as in Canada we currently prohibit the sale of blood, organs, tissue, sperm, eggs, and embryos, and that is why Quebec and Ontario have both chosen to ban paid plasma in Canada.

Only a handful of countries currently permit people to sell their plasma. Yes, the U.S. is one, a few countries in Europe. But the World Health Organization and, in fact, the European Union maintain that voluntary blood donation, voluntary plasma donation is the preferable course to take. That's why I believe, Madam Speaker, that this is a prudent move on behalf of our government to protect the public, to set a reasonable precedent, to follow what has generally been the precedent in Canada, to not create financial products out of things that are essential for people's health and safety, specifically biological products.

Canadian Blood Services indeed recognizes that this is a problem. You know, we owe very much to Canadian Blood Services for safekeeping our voluntary blood supply, for providing so much for individuals for many, many years, Madam Speaker. Indeed, we recognize that on this front there is still work to be done, absolutely, but I would far, far rather see there be public discussion, public investment, and public control over improving this system than to simply hand it off into the hands of private industry. Now, I recognize that that is generally a preference of some members across the aisle for many, many aspects of services and other aspects that Albertans depend on. Fair enough. We're each entitled, I suppose, to our ideology, risky as it may be in whatever respect.

That said, my personal belief is that we should be working with Canadian Blood Services to build a better public system for the collection of plasma here in Alberta and indeed across Canada. I would be very happy to see a national discussion regarding how we can work together as provinces to improve the collection of plasma here in our country through voluntary means and build proper protections into our system to ensure that people are not being exploited, that those who are in need are not having to sell their very bodily fluids to try to support themselves, as we have seen happen in some jurisdictions.

Now, I appreciate what the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster noted, that in fact it is a more arduous process to donate plasma. It takes more time. Fair enough. That's something we need to consider and we need to take into account in how we can provide through the public system better incentives for people to participate. Certainly part of that, Madam Speaker, I think is going to be education because, frankly, until this issue came up as an issue of debate in some other jurisdictions, I personally was not aware of the issues that there are in the plasma system. I think that probably goes for a large portion of the public. So, if anything, I think this debate that we're having here in the Legislature is very beneficial in that we have the opportunity now to raise more public awareness about this important need.

Certainly for myself, I think I will look into the opportunity and see if there is some way that I may be able to make a donation of plasma. I've had some challenges in the past because of some medications that I've been on, but I'm willing to look into that, and I think many members of the public would be, too, if they had a better understanding of that need. Frankly, Madam Speaker, I believe that we accomplish much more when we come together as a public. We accomplish much more, and we have much greater strength than when we simply always say: we will leave that to the market.

There are things that the market does very well, Madam Speaker. I believe absolutely that there are many, many, many products that are best served by the market, but when we are talking about people, real individuals with real needs, there are public services that should remain public. It's my opinion that one of those things is the collection and provision of blood and plasma products. I'm very happy that the Minister of Health has brought forward this bill. I think it's timely. I think it's appropriate. It gives us an opportunity to have a very important discussion, to follow in the footsteps of other jurisdictions, as I said, like Ontario and Quebec, who have seen fit to ban this practice and to show leadership as a province.

That is what Alberta does, Madam Speaker. We've shown leadership on many, many issues in the nearly two years since our government came into place. I'm proud of that work that we've done. Likewise, I am proud to stand by this principle and this decision to ensure that the blood we collect remains in Canada, and if there is need, then to work towards developing more of a biomedical industry here to support that, something to fractionate and create the plasma products here that we are currently buying from the U.S. Then, by all means, I say: let us have that discussion. That is a public good, that is something where we should come together, then, as public governments with the government of Canada and sit down and talk about how we can best support the Canadian people. I don't believe that something this important and this essential should simply be handed off to private industry, particularly when, as I noted, they can offer no significant cost savings.

I thank the minister, Madam Speaker, for bringing this bill forward. I thank her for her leadership in helping ensure that Alberta will protect the public, will protect our constituents, and work with Canadian Blood Services to develop a better public blood and plasma collection system.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? Calgary-Hawkwood.

Connolly: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. To be honest, to begin with, I'm not a big fan of Canadian Blood Services. I'm not allowed to give blood because I've had sex within the past 12 months, and as a man who has sex with men, I am... [interjection] Yes. Thank you. However, I'm not allowed to give blood. As an openly gay man who has sex with men, I am not allowed to give blood. So that is why I'm not a big fan of Canadian Blood Services.

I've never been able to give blood because, even before that, I think I had to be abstinent for seven years or something along those lines or three years. It was a very long time. Now it's one year, which is still a long time because I don't plan to be abstinent for a full year just to give blood. Not that I'm trying to be kind of – what is the word? – selfish. That was the word that I was looking for.

I know that in Saskatchewan they are stockpiling plasma and looking for the highest bidder, which, for myself as an Albertan and as a Canadian, I am kind of worried about. If I am in need of blood or in need of plasma and there's a large stockpile in Saskatchewan but they don't want to sell to Alberta health care because we're not paying the same premium price that possibly someone in the States is giving, I find that dangerous, and I don't want that in Alberta. I don't want us to have to be worried about having large amounts of plasma available but not being able to access it because we don't have the money to pay for it.

I don't believe that the lowest paid individuals in our province should have to give blood in order to receive money to pay for groceries. I just don't think that that is a normal thing that society should have to do in order to live. I don't think that donations for pay is a good idea. So I'd like to ask the member perhaps to expand on what he was saying about paid donations and why he doesn't think it's a good idea.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, thank you to the member for his comments and his questions. Madam Speaker, I represent a significant number of individuals in the Edmonton-Centre constituency who are part of Edmonton's LGBTQ-plus communities, and certainly that is something that I've heard from some of them as well, you know, for gay men who are in the course of their normal lives, as so many of us are, sexually active are not able to donate blood. That, indeed, is a problem.

That is something that I would call on Canadian Blood Services to address because, indeed, if we want to expand our base of donors, if we want to expand the number of people who are able to take part in the system and donate blood or plasma or some of these other things which we do need, then we should be making that as open as possible and looking to remove some of these traditional stereotypes about communities who are very civic minded and would love to have the opportunity to engage. Certainly, that's one area I think we need to look at addressing – I mean, that Canadian Blood Services does, and I hope that we can call on them to continue to look at that.

In regard to what the member was saying about stockpiling, I noted that when I was speaking, that indeed that's currently the situation. CPR is in fact stockpiling the plasma that they currently have, waiting until they feel they have a critical mass, which they then feel gives them enough to begin to operate and go to market.

That's part of my concern, Madam Speaker. Certainly, I respect that in the case of private industry, you know, when they make an investment – they invest in real estate; they invest in stock; they invest in other things – it's reasonable for them to decide how to dispose of that so that they get their best return. They may choose to sit on that for extended periods of time in order to improve their return or for other reasons, business reasons. I respect that. That's part of our market and that's part of our industry.

But that is not something that we need in our health care or in our health products. What needs to come first, Madam Speaker, is the public good. Now, that's not in any way to necessarily impugn CPR. I don't know them personally, and I don't know their intent. But that, in itself, is part of issue. We don't know, and we have no control. When it comes to things like our blood supply, our plasma supply . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Under 29(2)(a)?

The Deputy Speaker: No.

Mr. Dach: Speaking to the bill. Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak to Bill 3 and discuss our blood supply system in the country. We all, as hon. members in this House, lament the fact that our blood supply does not meet the need that we have for blood products in this country. But I think the real hypocrisy that would befall us is not to oppose the private supply of plasma products but would be to actually cave in and to buy these blood products from foreign suppliers on a continuing, ongoing basis without giving real consideration as to why we're in the situation we are in today.

I've alluded in previous remarks that I made in the House that other members have talked about the $200 million a year that we spend in this province on purchasing blood products from foreign sources to supply our needs here in the province. I'm not fine with this at all. It was mentioned by other members in the House as well that CBS, if given a $100 million infusion of capital, would then be able, over time, to supply up to 50 per cent of Canada's needs for blood products. So if you extrapolate those figures and if you take the $200 million a year that we spend in Alberta buying blood products from foreign sources and suppose that that represents about 10 per cent of the cost that all Canadian provinces and territories, including the federal government, are spending on purchasing foreign blood supply products, that would give you a number of about $2 billion a year that we're spending on bringing plasma products into the country.

If CBS says that they're able to expand our blood supply up to 50 per cent with an expenditure of $100 million, it seems to me that if we spend a fraction of what we're spending right now on blood products to bolster the needs of CBS, we could very easily afford to have the CBS supply blood products right across the country in relatively short order, eliminating the need to go abroad and continue buying blood products and expending the kinds of dollars that we're doing right now, which seems to me to be about $2 billion a year, which is a scary amount of money.

I think there have been efforts made in other health areas in Canada that demonstrate very well how a concerted education effort can channel the results that we want to health outcomes that we need. For example, in recent decades we've really focused on the reduction of smoking in Canada. What happened was that education was focused on young people, and it's young people now who are very effectively getting their parents to quit smoking.

That's the type of angle that I'd like to see us take and have CBS take and inculcate a real social responsibility upon all people in this country, starting with an education system to encourage people to see the real value in giving blood and not to give up on the voluntary system of blood donation that we have in this country.

It's a system that, I think, is too easily blamed for failing. We should be looking at reasons why CBS has failed to supply the demand here in Canada that is found to be supplied with foreign blood products and paid-for blood products. That, to me, calls out for a real examination of what CBS has been up to and why we've fallen to this point where CBS isn't living up to its mandate, in my opinion.

Many people across this country really, really depend upon CBS, and I think it's incumbent upon us to invest the dollars necessary from that pot of money that we're now shipping out of the country to spend on foreign blood products to make sure that our voluntary system of blood supply is maintained, improved, and perhaps becomes an example for the rest of the world of how to have a voluntary blood supply, satisfy your national needs not only in transfusion but in plasma products requirements.

We know that we don't have the infrastructure to manufacture these products in Alberta or Canada. CBS has actually recognized this risk and is taking steps to address it. It seems to me they really should be bolstered in that effort with capital that is now being spent on buying foreign blood products. They've developed plans to increase Canada's plasma product self-sufficiency to 50 per cent by 2024. Imagine how much more quickly that goal could be achieved if indeed some of the money we now ship outside of the country would be redirected towards that effort.

They're looking to expand existing blood collection sites, open new plasma collection sites, and recruit additional plasma donors. Well, Madam Speaker, what I'd suggest they do is to start right here in this House, this Legislature, this Assembly by at least twice a year holding a blood donor clinic on our grounds and having us challenge each other as members of the Assembly to see who gives the most blood. I was really, actually kind of shocked to learn that there wasn't a blood donation clinic regularly here at the Assembly – and this is something I'd really like to see – in an effort to raise awareness amongst us of the value of our blood donation system and how the voluntary system can really be used effectively, to challenge each other to serve the needs of Canadians in supplying our own blood products, whether it be for transfusion or for plasma development.

With that, I'll conclude my remarks.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

The hon. Member for Red Deer-North to close debate on behalf of the Minister of Health.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd like to take a moment to thank all the members on both sides of the House for participating in the debate today. I would like to reiterate that a lot of thought has gone into developing this legislation. These amendments are the best way for Alberta to protect the integrity of our publicly funded voluntary blood donor system.

For almost 20 years Canadian Blood Services has been successful in ensuring that Canadians have blood products when they need them, and I thank them for that. And I thank Canadian Blood Services for developing plans to increase Canada's plasma product self-sufficiency to 50 per cent by 2024 and for looking into expanding existing blood collection sites, opening new plasma collection sites, and looking into recruiting additional plasma donors.

With that, Madam Speaker, I would like to again remind all in the House today to please consider donating blood when you can, and I would like to close debate on Bill 3, the Voluntary Blood Donations Act.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 3 read a second time]

Bill 2

An Act to Remove Barriers for Survivors of Sexual and Domestic Violence

[Debate adjourned March 15: Mr. Orr speaking]

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I want to rise to speak to Bill 2, the sexual and domestic violence limitations act, which is an incredibly important bill to me and to all of those people that I've previously worked with over the years on issues surrounding domestic violence.

I was incredibly moved by members of our own caucus who shared their personal stories. As we all know, it's always challenging to get up and talk about your issues in this House. What is more challenging is to get up and talk about a personal experience that has affected you so profoundly and to be able to do it in a way that not only gets your message across but – to do it without becoming too emotional is a difficult thing to do, and it's a hard road to walk. For my female colleagues who shared their experiences in the past, I have so much admiration.

In a previous government, when I was associate minister of family and community safety and responsible for domestic violence supports, I was often asked the question when I did interviews: why don't women come forward and talk about what's happened to them? Why do they wait so long? Why do they go back to situations where they had previously been abused? Oftentimes people would express puzzlement that that was the case. It really speaks to a lack of understanding about the experience of domestic violence, what women go through, you know, long-term domestic violence, where you have been subjected to it year after year after year. I think a lot of people don't realize how it wears away your very sense of humanity.

For all those women who can turn around later to put their lives back together and to stand up and, as in the case of my female colleagues, become advocates for this, to me it's just an amazing thing. I am so grateful that they are using their voices in such a powerful way. And I'm so grateful to this government because for those people who don't have the courage, the strength initially to get up and to say those things and need to rely on other people to build that courage and need time to process what's happened to them, this bill becomes very important.

Oftentimes when we go through difficult times, we feel like we don't have the courage, and we need that support from our wonderful groups, our families, our support networks to help us get through and to a place where we can stand up and ask for justice to be served. Sometimes that can take two months, and sometimes that can take 10 years. Whether it is an attack or whether it is sustained, long-term sexual violence, you need to be able to have that time to process what's happened to you and to be able to come forward when you feel that you are in a safe enough place to do it. Sometimes that can take a very long time.

One of the things that I think can be a huge challenge is when a survivor feels worried about whether anyone is going to believe them. That's often a problem. When women come forward and talk about their experiences, quite often they're met with: "Well, why didn't you do this? Why didn't you leave? Why didn't you do that? You know, how can we believe you?" It still happens to this very day. It happens with all kinds of abuse, Madam Speaker.

We'd like to think that we are a progressive province. We have a progressive government, which is amazing, and I'm so proud to be a part of it, proud to be able to actually stand up and cosponsor a bill like this because it's so important. At the same time, there are still people in the province who believe that when someone goes through something like this, they still have to prove to the world that it happened, and that can be a very challenging thing.

You know, survivors need the kinds of supports that they haven't gotten enough of in this province so far, and we're acknowledging that with this bill and saying that they need more supports. They need to know that someone has their back when they are ready to come forward and talk about what they've been through, and I think it's wonderful that this government is saying that, is giving out that very message: we have your backs when you're ready to come forward and when you're ready to tell your story.

Alberta's legal system cannot impose deadlines on survivors. We can say it, but now we're actually putting it into law. One of the most rewarding things we can do as legislators in this House is to craft the kind of legislation that makes lives better for Albertans, and this is one of those pieces. This is one of those pieces that we can look at where we can actually say, not only across our province, not only across our country but in the world, that we have a piece of legislation that ensures that this province in Canada is progressive, thoughtful, compassionate, and considerate of the lives of people who have suffered sexual and domestic violence.

You know, many of us had heard from survivors about their inability to take action because of a deadline, the struggles they've experienced, whether it's mental health struggles or physical health struggles. When we know that we have the ability to remove these barriers, what we're saying to people is that we're taking some of the pressure off them – and that's really important – so that they have the ability to heal in their own time and to come to terms with what's happened in their lives and then to move forward and take action when they're ready to.

Debra Tomlinson is the chief executive officer of the Association of Alberta Sexual Assault Services. She is a wonderful woman that I was very lucky to work with in my previous role in family and community safety. She has said that it's time to lift the veil of silence for survivors. She is absolutely right. That's exactly what this bill does.

Mary Jane James, the executive director of the Sexual Assault Centre of Edmonton, said that when survivors are believed, when they're listened to, when they can reclaim the kind of life they had before their assault, they can most definitely reclaim a life that they deserve to have. That is incredibly important, and that's what this piece of legislation does.

There are people who will come forward as a result of this legislation and talk about their experiences and find closure. One of the things that I think is so incredibly important is that when they do that, they will begin to live a quality of life that they didn't have before, a quality of life they didn't have before this piece of legislation.

In closing, I would just like to say how proud I am that Bill 2 is going forward, that it speaks to so many people who need that helping hand. When the NDP talks about making lives better for Albertans, this piece of legislation is exactly that. It says: we are here behind you, and we want you to know that this government believes in you and believes that you deserve to be happy and that you deserve to have the kind of life that is free from sexual or domestic violence. That's why I'm very proud to cosponsor this bill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to speak on Bill 2 this morning. I certainly appreciated the comments from the hon. Member for Calgary-North West and acknowledge the work that she did in her capacity as a former associate minister of family and community safety, and I appreciate that work that was done.

I will say, Madam Speaker, that this is a piece of legislation that I, too, am very much behind and very much in support of. This is the kind of thing that needs to be done in order to address a number of different concerns in the large and complex issue relating to domestic violence. You know, I do commend the government for bringing this forward, and I certainly hope that it has the intended results it was designed to have.

What I want to talk about a little bit today – and I'm hoping that you will allow me a certain degree of latitude – is that while this is a good measure, as was the measure that was introduced by the Member for Calgary-Bow with regard to the breaking of residential tenancy leases, these are, unfortunately, measures that deal with the after-effects or at least deal with a response to an issue, a response to a problem. You know, once again borrowing on my medical background, I like to try to address root causes of problems. I like to try to drill down to: why did this get to this situation in the first place? As something that I'm not sure all members are aware of – I think that at some level many members may be aware of this intuitively – I'm going to bring forward some evidence and some results from some research that was done right here in Alberta, some outstanding research that was done right here in Alberta, that talks about the link between domestic violence and animal abuse.

The reason I talk about it in this context, Madam Speaker, is because if we can do a better job of recognizing the early stages of those who are at risk of becoming abusers, of those who potentially have a proclivity for domestic abuse, then perhaps we can address it at an earlier stage. Perhaps we can address these problems at an earlier stage.

I'm going to be quoting from a document which was published in 2013. It's entitled The Cruelty Connection: The Relationships between Animal Cruelty, Child Abuse and Domestic Violence. It was published by our very own Alberta SPCA. What is alarming, Madam Speaker, is some of the statistics that were found in the study that was done. Some 59 per cent of abused women delayed leaving their home, where abuse was occurring, because of concern for their animals. Some 36 per cent of abused women with animals reported that their abuser had threatened or harmed their animals. Some 85 per cent of the threats against those animals were carried out. Further, 85 per cent of the women with both children and animals reported that the children witnessed the threat or the harm to the animal, and in 50 per cent of those cases it was the child's own pet that was threatened or harmed.

What makes these statistics even more shocking and more disturbing is that those numbers are tracked in other jurisdictions, and the numbers in Alberta are actually higher than what they are in other jurisdictions. The link between animal abuse and domestic violence is becoming increasingly recognized and increasingly acted upon, but I think that in Alberta we have a tremendous opportunity to expand on that.

Last spring, Madam Speaker, I attended a weekend-long seminar on animal forensics. Now, that's part of my requirement to keep up my veterinary licence, which I have kept up. They say that in politics you should always have a backup plan. I have maintained my veterinary licence, and I'm required to do 30 hours of continuing veterinary medical education every year, so I signed up for this plan. Actually, it was my wife, who's also a veterinarian, who encouraged us to both sign up. We said that it would be a wonderful weekend away in Calgary.

I will tell you that it was perhaps one of the most difficult periods of continuing veterinary education that I've ever attended. The stories of animal abuse and the investigations by one of the world leaders in animal forensics that were presented there were disgusting. They were just absolutely heart-wrenching, the sorts of things that had happened to animals, and what makes it worse is that for most abusers it is a very small step to then do the same to another human being. You know, there was a comment made at the end of one of our days when we were feeling particularly beat up. Our lecturer said to us, "You know, now we all need to go home and watch a Disney movie" because it was that disturbing. I will tell you that it was one of the most difficult things that I went through.

Recognizing this link I think is important, but what is more important is what we can do about it. What's encouraging is that, at least in the city of Calgary, there is co-operative work being done between the Calgary Police Service, the Calgary Humane Society, and the Calgary shelters for women. That's encouraging. For example, one of the problems we have is that most shelters in our province won't accept animals, so if you're in an abusive situation and are trying to escape and your dog or your cat is also being abused, you can take your kids but you can't take your dog or your cat. For a lot of people, as I've said, for 59 per cent, that delays their departure from that abusive situation, and that's a problem.

You know, even more heart-wrenching in some ways than the statistics I've quoted are some of the quotes from the survivors that told their stories. For example: "I had called 911 before, but I was too scared to leave. I didn't know what was going to happen to the dogs . . . so I just sucked it up and kept going on." Another quote: "The animals were a big part of why I didn't leave for a shelter, a really big part. I was their caretaker, they depended on me and supported me and I didn't want to let them down." Finally: "I went back to get the cats and they'd all been poisoned."

Madam Speaker, the link between animal abuse and domestic violence is so profound, in fact, that it can be traced back in the history of some of the most heinous criminals that we have seen, and that, too, is documented here in this document. For example, David Berkowitz, the Son of Sam, who admitted to 13 charges of murder or attempted murder, had previously abused his neighbour's Labrador retriever, claiming that the dog was possessed and compelled to kill. Jeffrey Dahmer, who confessed to killing and dismembering 17 men and boys, as a child had impaled frogs, decapitated dogs, and staked cats to trees in his backyard.

Those are things that should have been noticed. Those are things that should have been recognized. Clearly, this is an individual that needs help, and one has to wonder, if help had been provided, if an intervention had been placed at a more appropriate time, if an intervention had been put in place, whether that, in fact, would have made a difference. You know, I guess it's hard to say after the fact.

Finally, Ted Bundy, which I think is a name that we all remember for terrorizing college campuses in the 1970s after killing three women at Florida State University. He's suspected of killing many, many more. During his childhood he witnessed his father's brutality toward animals, and he himself tortured animals. Madam Speaker, you know, it's sometimes been said that if you can do something to an animal that's mean or harmful or abusive, in your mind you don't recognize the separation between doing that to a human being.

I would only encourage our government – and I've spoken to some members about this – to look into some of what is going on in the city of Calgary and see if we can't expand it further across our province, expand the working relationship between animal shelters and animal welfare organizations, our police services, our social service agencies. I think we have to work with animal welfare agencies and our animal shelters so that we can set up some form of co-operative agreement so that women and families fleeing domestic abuse situations can know that they can take their pets with them when they're fleeing that situation and that that pet will then be cared for. If it's not in the shelter, which I think is the ideal situation, – let's remember that pets provide a critical support to people that are going through really difficult times – at the very least let's make sure that those pets could be housed, whether it be at nearby veterinary clinics or foster homes or by some other means.

In a very effective public service campaign in the United States that showed a woman who obviously had been abused and then in the other half of the poster showed a picture of a dog that also had been injured, the caption beneath said: she won't go back to save her toaster. But women do go back, and women put themselves at risk in order to save their pets. Recognizing and understanding how profound that linkage is, I think, is an important thing that we need to recognize and acknowledge in Alberta.

I think that one of the things we can be – I mean, it was talked about here in the course of the last debate, but this is no different. Where we can be leaders is in recognizing that things don't exist in silos and that if we work together across different jurisdictions and across different fields of expertise and fields of responsibility, in fact, we can do something that is beneficial for Albertans right across the board but especially to try to address and recognize and, hopefully, provide some intervention that is helpful before someone becomes an abuser. I mean, ultimately, that would be our goal. Ultimately, it would be to recognize that what is going on here in someone's young life has the potential of spiralling into something much more grisly, much more heinous as they get older.

Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to support Bill 2. I think this is a good piece of legislation. I'm glad that the government is bringing it forward, but I would encourage this government to go further. As opposed to, you know, looking at ways to remedy a situation that has already existed, I would encourage this government, whether it's the minister of social services, whether it's the Solicitor General and Minister of Justice, whether it's the Health minister, for that matter, to work with authorities that have expertise in this area to recognize this vital link between animal abuse and domestic violence, to recognize it for what it is, and to recognize that we can make a meaningful difference in our society if we take steps to address these problems in their infancy, before they spiral out of control.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West under Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Ms Jansen: I want to thank the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster. We have spoken, of course, about this very topic in the past, and I appreciate so much his compassion in this area. You know, this is where, when we drop the partisanship and the name calling, we can work together and actually do great things.

The member actually said something that I thought was quite interesting. I think it's really important for us to first of all consider what he said very seriously, to look at the fact that these markers are out there, to understand that the police know that these markers are out there, and we have the ability to use this as a tool to identify victims in situations where there is a potential to go in and offer help but also to ensure that people who want to leave situations of domestic violence aren't prevented from doing so because they're worried about the vulnerability of their animals.

I want to ask the member. You mentioned briefly the idea of perhaps housing pets at veterinary clinics, and I'm wondering if as a veterinarian there is the potential to have a conversation with veterinarians across the province and find out if there is the ability to have a level of co-operation in ensuring some short-term care so that victims of domestic violence can leave and know that they have access to their pet even if the shelter they're in won't accept the pet.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Starke: Well, Madam Speaker, thank you. Thank you to the hon. member for the question. In fact, in some communities that's already happening, which is certainly encouraging. After my wife and I attended this seminar last year, we actually called on the clinic that we used to be involved with and encouraged them to make that offer to our shelter in Lloydminster.

You know, the one thing, of course, that we have to really worry about is that abusers are nefarious people, and if we put, for example, these animals in a shelter, quite often shelters are run by volunteers, and if the abuser knows that that's the arrangement, the abuser can sometimes go in and say, "Oh, you know, that's my dog; I'll take him home now; he must have been a stray" or whatever, and they have to have very careful training to know about the security that would be required.

You know, I absolutely agree that we can develop networks, whether it's through veterinarians – and I think the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association would be very open to this. And not only that, whether it be in private homes, in safe houses, if you will – I mean, it sounds incredible to even say that – but temporary foster homes where these pets could be housed. Again, I would really encourage our network of women's shelters, whether they are primary- or secondary-level shelters, to consider providing for housing of pets because, again, the separation is one of the things that is an issue, and even if we house them in foster homes or in veterinary clinics, these pets are not only not with the people who care for them, but the pets care back for the people. That support travels, of course, both ways, so I think that ideally we'd want these pets to be housed in the shelters, but if that's not indeed possible, then we should look for alternative arrangements and make that well known so that women and children who are in these situations can know that they can leave safely and that their animals will be cared for. That's certainly something that I would like to see in Alberta. I think that would be a very positive development.

The Deputy Speaker: Further questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any further speakers to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Just a few comments, Madam Speaker. Thank you. I very much appreciate this bill, long overdue. The statute of limitations has obviously been arbitrary and inappropriate in a number of cases. Child abuse, clearly, has been relieved of that statute of limitations, and this is certainly another area that should be relieved of it.

I would say that in the medical profession one of the gaps, I think, in our training for physicians is to ask every woman, especially women that come into emergency rooms, if they feel safe at home. There's kind of a reluctance, it seems, to go there, and it would open up the door in a lot of cases for women who are reluctant to speak or who feel in danger but are unwilling to actually share the true cause of their bruise or their injury or their indication of threat. That's an important initiative that's gone through emergency rooms across Alberta. I hope it's being followed. Even our EMS colleagues could probably be helping by raising that question if it is unclear how an injury occurred and simply asking the woman or the man, if he's been abused, whether he or she feels safe at home.

The other issue that I will be raising later in the Legislature is whether this bill actually covers harassment. It doesn't appear to cover workplace harassment, and I hope I'll be bringing forward an amendment at some point to ask that that be included. I'm thinking obviously, or perhaps not obviously, of the Calgary Police Service concerns around women in the workplace and harassment. Many of them could not make their appeal to the Human Rights Commission because they were longer than two years since the incident. In fact, it's my understanding that none of them were within the two-year statute of limitations. So I would like to make sure that this bill covers harassment in the workplace.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any further speakers to the bill?

Anybody to close debate?

All right. Then we will just proceed to the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 2 read a second time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Madam Speaker. After getting rid of some pent-up energy this morning, we had a very good debate. I enjoyed the debate on both sides of the House, but now I would ask that same House to adjourn for the morning and reconvene at 1:30 this afternoon.

The Deputy Speaker: Just before I call that question, I would like to echo that. Thank you very much to all members of the House for the decorum this morning. I think we had a very wonderful debate. I enjoyed it. Let's continue on with this mood for this afternoon. It would be wonderful. I know the Speaker would appreciate it as well.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 11:27 a.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, March 16, 2017

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly His Excellency Mizanur Rahman, high commissioner for Bangladesh. Accompanying him is Mr. Dewan Mahmudul Haque, first secretary at the high commission. Alberta shares a historic national relationship with Bangladesh as members of the Commonwealth. This has helped spur important ties in areas such as trade. There is excellent potential to continue to build on our relationship as both of our economies grow and diversify. Two areas where Alberta and Bangladesh may find further opportunities to collaborate are in energy and agriculture.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta is the energy and environmental leader the world needs for the 21st century. Effective nutrition and a healthy population are also goals that we share. Beyond trade, Alberta and Bangladesh have an important social relationship. Numerous Bangladeshi undergraduate and graduate students have chosen our universities to pursue their education in professions like engineering, sciences, medicine, and law.

Mr. Speaker, with a distinguished career in the Bangladesh foreign service that has included work in Bosnia-Herzegovina, Egypt, Netherlands, and Poland, the high commissioner brings a wealth of experience to his posting here in Canada. I now ask the high commissioner to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome, Your Excellency. Welcome.

Introduction of Guests

Ms McKittrick: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased today to introduce to you and through you a wonderful school in my riding, Woodbridge Farms elementary school. The students are really keen on democracy and on us changing daylight saving time. The students are with their teachers: Mr. Garth Baker, Ms Antonia Triska, Ms Judy Andrekson, and Mrs. Sarita D'Lima. I would ask all the students to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this House 22 students from Duffield school, one of the wonderful communities in the beautiful riding of Stony Plain. My guests will not be joining us at this moment; they'll be here a little bit later. So I would appreciate it if all members of this House would extend a warm traditional welcome to them now.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour today to rise and introduce to you and through you 63 students from Woodhaven middle school. The students are accompanied by their teachers, Miss Jayna Butler and Mrs. Cleo Eddy, along with their chaperones: Mrs. Melissa MacDonald, Mr. Ray Mottershed-Yee, Mrs. Tammy Paulson, Mr. Verne Depeel, and Mrs. Jen Shymko. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other school groups here today?

Seeing and hearing none, the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is with great pleasure that I introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly some very special guests: Mr. Adam North Peigan and his wife, Lena Wildman, accompanied by 20 survivors of the '60s scoop. Mr. North Peigan has been tirelessly lobbying all levels of government, seeking an official apology for their part in this dark hour of our history. I would like to ask my special guests to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real privilege today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Angel Sumka, Mark Dorsey, Nicole Kraft, and Tina Guillette. Together they are the Alberta Sex Positive Education & Community Centre, an organization that does important work on promoting sex-positive values but, more importantly, consent. They are currently working on getting some new, larger accommodations for their community centre in Edmonton. I would now like to invite them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you and good afternoon, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you Mr. Brett Bowers. Mr. Bowers is the principal at large at Morinville Christian School and oversees the home education of 1,000 home ed students and for their families across Alberta. May I please ask that Brett Bowers stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Connolly: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you three amazing LGBTQ-plus advocates from Calgary. I ask them to rise as I say their names: Amelia Marie Newbert, Ace Peace, and his mother, Lindsay Peace. Ace, who is now 16 years old and one of the coolest teenagers I know, came out as trans in 2015 and was put on the wait-list for the Metta clinic soon after. The treatment that he received at the clinic saved his life. Amelia and Lindsay and Ace are advocating with the Skipping Stone Foundation for increased support to the Metta clinic as it currently only operates one half-day per month and has a wait-list of just under three years. I would like to thank Ace, Amelia, and Lindsay for their advocacy and contribution to Alberta and the LGBTQ-plus community. I would now ask that they receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. First, I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House the love of my life for over 30 years, the mother of our five children, my wife, Barb.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, I introduce to you and through you to all members of the House two school friends from over 30 years ago that my wife and I were able to reconnect with today. One friend, Gloria Kapeller, is here as part of the thousands of children that were involved in the '60s scoop. Also, Connie Hilton is accompanying her on this day, and I'd like to give them the warm welcome of all.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two friends of mine from my constituency, from the great town of Rimbey, the home of Martha and Henry, or our hon. Premier Ralph Klein's Martha and Henry, for sure. My good friend His Worship Rick Pankiw is the mayor of the town of Rimbey, and with him today is Lori Hillis. I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce, in your gallery today, to you and through you to all members of the House the love of my life for 29 years, the mother of our three boys, my wife, Frances. With Frances is our good friend, a hard, hard worker from Medicine Hat improving the culture of our community, one of our Speaker's good friends and my and my wife's good friend, Sandra Moore. Please rise and accept the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Cathy Heron, who is currently a city councillor in St. Albert and also a board member of the AUMA. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While I have the opportunity, I would like to introduce to the House someone who has already been here many, many times as part of the gallery, my husband, Jeremy Johnston. He does a lot of work for us and for me behind the scenes, and I just wanted to recognize him in the gallery today. If we could extend the traditional warm welcome.

Thank you.

Members' Statements

Employment Fair in Northeast Edmonton

Ms Sweet: Mr. Speaker, it is well known that the most important part of getting into the workforce is getting started, but there are many people that are uncertain of how to get started or, in many cases, how to get started again. That is why in March 2016 I organized the Working in Your Community Employment Information Fair for those residents of Edmonton-Manning and the northeast of the city that are looking for their first job, whether they are about to enter the workforce as young adults or as new Canadians or looking to transfer into a new career.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to say that this event returned to the northeast for the second time this year. This year I had the good fortune of partnering with the city of Edmonton's 1,000 families initiative, Clareview Multicultural Centre, and BGS Career & Corporate Development to deliver programs and breakout sessions to job seekers from Edmonton-Manning and beyond. They were able to help them build their resumé, develop their interview skills, and inform businesses and aspiring entrepreneurs of grants and programs available from the government of Alberta to support and start their business.

I'm also proud to tell you that we had the participation of Women Building Futures and North West Refining, who partnered to encourage women to engage in the construction industry; Alberta forestry products, with the session about transferring skills from the oil and gas industry into the forestry industry; and EPCOR, who presented an overview of the services and programs they provide.

Mr. Speaker, the face of the northeast of Edmonton and of Alberta as a whole is changing, with many people from around the world now calling this home. Therefore, this year also included two sessions on cultural expectations, one for job seekers and one for employers.

Mr. Speaker, by coming together for this annual event, I hope to encourage a beginning in our community, I hope to encourage progress in our community by keeping together, and I hope to encourage and successfully develop a community of us working together.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

'60s Scoop in Alberta

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. From the '60s through early '90s our country and provinces entered into a deplorable joint venture that, in hindsight, can only be seen as scandalous. Through a federal program implemented by the provinces through our child welfare systems, an estimated 20,000 First Nations, Métis, and Inuit children were removed from their families and their communities against their will. At the time it was estimated that in Alberta 40 to 50 per cent of children in government care were aboriginal, and most were scooped without any parental consent, many to be adopted out across the continent and some even overseas. The policy has been referred to as the '60s scoop.

When I first heard about this, I thought it was something from our distant past, perhaps a part of our dark colonial history. Sadly, this was not the case. This went on until the early '90s. Many of the people responsible are now enjoying their retirement while the children who were scooped from their communities try to come to terms with what happened to them and their families. Sadly, many couldn't come to terms with the horrors they faced and have taken their own lives.

Joining me today are 22 people who were victims of the '60s scoop. They want an apology from this government for Alberta's role in this atrocity. They approached me knowing they would get results after numerous attempts at communication with this government over the last two years had failed them. Manitoba has issued an apology. The Saskatchewan government has committed to an apology. Why the hesitation here in Alberta?

The government has promised open consultation and increased respect for indigenous communities. Sadly, as we can see from this, their lack of action on this request, and from their dismal response to the kinship care issue, these issues seem to get only lip service. This government is all smoke and no fire. The government needs to stand up and acknowledge the mistakes and offer an apology to the victims of the '60s scoop, both living and deceased.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Parliamentary Debate and Public Discourse

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have observed with growing dismay the deterioration of civility in our political debate both inside and outside of this august Chamber. We see it nearly every day in question period, which some will dismiss as the thrust and parry of political theatre, but this week, particularly on Monday afternoon and earlier this morning, it became even more pervasive during our regular debates.

It is not something we should be proud of. When we stop listening to each other, when we stop being honourable members, we all do Albertans a disservice. But just as the deliberate use of over-the-top rhetoric is a problem, an attempt to inflame those with whom we disagree instead of finding some common middle ground and then working from that point, we entrench ourselves in nonproductive hyperpartisanship.

There are, of course, rare occasions where we agree and put partisan politics aside. Recent examples include government Bill 2 or the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake's Bill 202. These are good pieces of legislation. I applaud members on both sides of the Assembly for supporting them. These instances of collaboration instead of confrontation are refreshing, but sadly they are all too rare.

I know that it is popular or perhaps good politics to dredge up the past, but the reality is that we need to face today's problems today. Alberta has had no shortage of challenges that demand our energy and diligence, not acrimony and dissent. It's small wonder that people here in Alberta and around the world are becoming disenchanted and more disengaged in the political process.

Now, in a few hours this government will introduce its third budget. I will make a bold prediction that one side of the Assembly will see it as bold and brilliant and visionary, and the other side will see it as short-sighted and catastrophic. The reality is that both assessments are wrong. Just as our job as legislators is to go through this, we must go through this legislation, this budget, with the diligence that Albertans expect. Albertans expect and deserve nothing less.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Rural Internet and Cellphone Coverage

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak to an issue which has a great deal of significance for many rural parts of our province. As our government has made clear, our province suffers from a critical infrastructure deficit, but it's not only physical infrastructure which is lacking in many areas. We suffer from a lack of high-speed Internet, access to the SuperNet, and mobile reception. This causes a number of disadvantages economically and in our daily lives. Access to information and communications is particularly vital for Albertans living in rural areas because for many this is the best way to access services.

I have personally experienced these issues and have heard from many constituents with similar concerns. They have reported an inability to secure constant speeds, traffic filtering, and disconnections from many of the major service providers. There are numerous large areas where it's nearly impossible to even secure mobile services.

Decisions by the previous government have left us with contracts that don't serve rural Albertans. We know that Albertans deserve better. It is important that Albertans have quality, affordable access to the Internet, and I am proud to stand with a government that is making life better and more affordable for Albertans. I'm happy to hear that our government is reviewing their vision for SuperNet and rural broadband to ensure that Albertans have quality, affordable access to the Internet.

I wish to advocate on behalf of my constituents to help facilitate improved access to the fibre grid, the information infrastructure, and wireless communications technology for all rural areas.

Thank you.

Student Assessment

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Concerned teachers, parents, and students have been contacting me and raising concerns about a significant issue, grade inflation in Alberta's K to 12 schools. In 2016 96 per cent of students province-wide were given a passing grade in math 30-1 by their teachers, but only 71 per cent of students who took the math exam passed. That 25 per cent gap clearly shows that what's getting passing grade in the classroom and on standardized tests isn't adding up. To the minister: what exactly is your government doing to ensure that students don't fall behind?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much for the question. You know, our government has been investing in education to make life better for students and for families, particularly focusing on both curriculum and assessment, which I believe go hand in hand. For example, this spring, in June, for the grade 12 diplomas, I have added a written section to help buttress the assessment so that it is in line with the curriculum and what teachers are teaching in the classroom.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. Well, grade inflation can have serious effects on the outcomes of students. Large discrepancies between classroom marks and diploma exam marks may affect whether students are ready for and accepted into postsecondary studies. We want to prepare our students for success. But when you look at the numbers, the discrepancy for most grade 12 classes is growing when you measure it over the past eight years. To the minister: what are you doing to address the problem? What tools are you giving school boards, and how do you plan to reverse this trend?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I mean, this is a very good question. The very first thing that you must make sure is that you're investing in teachers in the classroom to make sure that there are adequate class sizes there. It's what we've done to fund for enrolment over the last couple of budgets. The next one is coming up very soon, and I can't wait to show you how we're going to do that again.

You know, it's important to note that the standards that we have in our classrooms are very high. The professionalism of our teachers is very high as well. We seek to improve that every day. This is a worthwhile study, and we will go back always and continually reassess how we approach this.

Mrs. Aheer: Well, that's good to hear, but we've heard before that the head of the ATA feels that classroom marks alone should reflect students' abilities and that standardized testing is not necessary.

We've also seen a reduction in the weighting of diploma exam marks from 50 to 30 per cent in the final grade. There have been many serious and valid concerns raised that this may result in postsecondary institutions looking only at diploma exam grades. To the minister: have you consulted with students, parents, and teachers about the possibility of returning to the weighting of 50 per cent in diploma exams?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The choice to move from 50 to 30 per cent was to put us in line with the rest of the country. The standard that is used for diploma exams and the weighting that is used for diploma exams: certainly, we've used that information. It's a very good way by which we can see where our students are going. We analyze that information very closely.

But, Mr. Speaker, let me tell you a little story. Last year we had a terrible fire in Fort McMurray. The kids had a choice of whether or not to write the diploma exams. Postsecondary institutions across the country and around the world accepted the classroom marks because they know that the standard of our teachers is that high.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

'60s Scoop in Alberta

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. An estimated 20,000 First Nations, Métis, and Inuit children were scooped from their families and communities against their will between the '60s and early '90s. The devastation to families and their communities is still felt today as the survivors struggle with what it meant to be part of the '60s scoop. Minister, Premier, put yourself in their place. How would you feel if the province came in and took your children?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Let me just say that I agree completely with the member opposite. The '60s scoop is a tragedy. It's a tragedy that deprived indigenous children, particularly in Alberta, of the connection to their community and to their family, that would have made their lives so much better. We know that, so we will continue to work with survivors and a range of indigenous leaders to listen to their concerns. For some of the members who are here, we look forward to working with them as well as other indigenous leaders across the province on how we can move forward with respect to making an apology soon.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Mr. North Peigan has been in contact with the minister and the Premier on numerous occasions over the last few years and given that he has come to me in pure frustration with the lack of response he has received from this government and since this government is so proud of its track record on repairing the relationships with First Nations, Métis, and Inuit communities, why has the minister refused to give an apology to the victims of the '60s scoop?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. This is, of course, a very serious issue, that we are deeply concerned about. As a social worker for 35 years in this province I've been aware of this issue and have advocated in a number of ways for us to move on this. We definitely feel that this is a serious mark against our province and our government over the last 40 years, and we are more than prepared to work with the communities. I have in fact met with Mr. North Peigan and will continue to try to find people to work with.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that other provinces have recognized the injustice done to First Nations, Métis, and Inuit communities through the '60s scoop and have offered formal apologies and considering that there were many young people that were not able to cope with these tragedies such as a young man from Fort Chip who had 28 placements over a 13-year period, starting at age four, before he committed suicide in 1984 at age 17, Mr. Minister, Madam Premier, when will you issue an official apology to the victims of the '60s scoop, both living and deceased?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We feel that it's very important that we work with the community and elders and other members of the community who can help us design a process to move forward on that is really respectful and truly an apology and isn't just simply about checking off a box so that we can say that we have done it. An apology absolutely has to have depth to it, and we are working on creating that depth so that we can move forward on this much-deserved apology.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Energy Policies

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, the NDP government has implemented several harmful policies in our largest job-creation sector: higher business taxes, an ill-advised royalty review, a massive carbon tax, and a cap on our oil sands. Last summer the AER doubled the liability-management ratio, requiring companies to hold twice as many assets as liabilities, destroying transactional liquidity in our energy sector. One columnist wrote, and I quote: it's like the AER brought a gun to a knife fight. What has the minister done to help producers recover from this poor decision, that was only intended to be temporary?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We continue to work with our federal government on this. Our plan would create jobs and tackle a long-standing environmental issue that we've inherited. Previous governments sat back and admired the problems, and we're not going to.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, again, in a time of economic uncertainty the last thing that any industry needs is risky new policies that damage their confidence in government. The NDP carbon tax asks 85 per cent of our energy producers to subsidize the largest players, who made backroom deals to exempt themselves from this same bad policy. This is unfair to small and mid-sized operators, who have their own bills to pay. The backroom deals that this government signed are harming real families, who need to put food on their table. Why is this government making the same kind of harmful backroom deals . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member
The Minister of Environment.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is again shocking to me that the members of the Wildrose would drag the reputation of our largest employers through the mud as they have, the largest employers in their own leader's riding. It is utterly shameful that the Wildrose would want to slam the door on a plan that brings the environment and the economy together, that results in two pipeline approvals, and that moves this province forward. We are creating jobs. We're taking care of the environment. We're working with industry, not against them, as the Wildrose would do.

Mr. Barnes: This government is no friend of oil and gas companies. That might be the worst-kept secret in the world. As I speak, we're watching a situation unfold where Lexon is closing up shop in part due to this government's policies. Recently we saw Shell shift $8 billion of capital out of Alberta and into jurisdictions with more stability; namely, the United States, where there is no carbon tax at all. Even Venezuela is more attractive to Shell so long as the NDP are in charge here. This is a disaster. How many companies, how much investment, how many jobs have to go before this NDP government . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, let me be clear. Alberta is the energy and environmental leader the world needs for the 21st century. Last week an Alberta homegrown company doubled its assets and production capacity. This side of the House cheered for CNRL. That side of the House criticized CNRL, dragged their name through the mud. What I want to know for the record is: when did you start to hate Alberta oil and gas companies? [interjections]

The Speaker: It's a beautiful day outside, folks.
The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been a full year since the NDP government released their $11 billion deficit budget, and since then the tax burden on Albertans has grown every day. The cost of living has actually gone up with the NDP while Albertans are unemployed in troubling economic times. To the Premier: as your government continues to set historic records on taxing and spending, will you admit what Albertans already know, that the jobs plan was a failure and has made the tax burden worse for Alberta families?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, I do find it interesting that the member opposite, who comes from a caucus that could not balance the budget when oil was at $90 a barrel, is now complaining about the size of deficits with this government. You know, it was interesting that they did at least, unlike their friends over there, introduce a shadow budget, which was lovely. The problem is that it took less time to debunk the PC budget than it did for their leader to file a suit with the Ethics Commissioner. That's because their budget has more holes in it than the Kananaskis golf course. [interjections] The reality is that we're standing up for Albertans in tough times . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
First supplemental. [interjections]
Order, please.

Mr. Rodney: Stop blaming, and start governing. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Mr. Rodney: If budget town halls were open to all Albertans instead of just the NDP . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, just wait a minute.
Let's quiet down, folks.
Stop the clock for just a moment.
Start again, please.

Mr. Rodney: Stop blaming. Start governing.

If budget town halls were open to all Albertans instead of just NDP buddies, you would know exactly what Albertans think. Now, since the last budget, we've seen the NDP cause real pain with policies like the carbon tax and then demanding rebate cheques back from grieving families. It suggests the NDP wants to take credit for dishing out cash but ignores the fact that this money already belongs to the taxpayer. To the Premier: will you begin to actually help Alberta families by taking real action on lowering tax burdens instead of taking a lot of money out of one of their pockets and giving just a little bit back in the other?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, the member opposite is suggesting that we follow their lead, but the problem is that they're talking about taking over $4 billion out of operating expenses in one year. They want to cut Culture and Tourism by $50 million. They want to take – here's the best one – $600 million out of Advanced Education. So when Albertans are looking for support during economic tough times, these guys want to close the doors of our universities to struggling families. We won't do that.

Mr. Rodney: Now back to reality. We don't need to wait until 3 o'clock to know that a typical NDP budget includes out-of-control spending, with credit downgrades to follow. To the Premier, who's currently reviewing collective bargaining in which the public-sector wage increases remain steady while the average wage of Albertans has decreased: will you further increase the tax burden on Albertans by handing over a better deal to union comrades while Albertans struggle? In other words, will you put union families above other Alberta families? Please say no.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, as we've said many times before, our government respects the negotiated contracts, and we will negotiate with them with respect when those contracts come up. You know what we did do? We went into those insider deals for CEOs of agencies, boards, and commissions, and we passed legislation so that nobody could earn $800,000 a year under their watch. We rolled those salaries back because that's what standing up for Albertans looks like.

Gravel Road Upgrading

Ms Fitzpatrick: Mr. Speaker, many of my constituents in Lethbridge-East travel west for some peaceful recreation. We are close to the Castle area, known for its biodiversity and cultural and historical significance for indigenous people. Given that 11 kilometres of highway 774 are unpaved and in poor condition, to the Minister of Transportation: what has this government done to improve this highway?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. I think this government has done an amazing thing in making the Castle wilderness a provincial park. We know, having made it a provincial park and the wonderful job that's been done by the Minister of Environment and Parks on that file, that more people will be wanting to access that park, so we're going to be taking steps to make sure that they can.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this highway is heavily used by tourists and Albertans supporting our vibrant tourist and recreation economy, to the same minister: what are the government's plans for paving gravel roads in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Well, thanks very much, Mr. Speaker and to the hon. member for the question. You know, the government has no specific policy about paving every bit of gravel road in this province. We already have far more paved roads per capita in Alberta than any other province in Canada. However, there are a number of places where it could definitely benefit Albertans to travel safely and to visit the wonderful spaces that we have in our province such as the provincial park in the Castle.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Alberta's tourism and camping season is fast approaching and that this would be the ideal time to pave highway 774, does the government have a timeline for when Albertans can expect to see this important road paved?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the member for the question. Maintaining the safety of our highways is a critical priority. Making sure that people can travel safely and conveniently to important places like the Castle and many other points in our province is a critical priority. All I can say to the hon. member is that she needs to stay tuned. We want to support the wonderful development that the Minister of Environment and Parks has been working on to provide wonderful recreation activities and natural areas to the people of southern Alberta.

Electric Power System

Mr. MacIntyre: Well, the NDP raised taxes on power companies and then claimed that they didn't read the contracts, so now Albertans are being dinged big time, paying for any financial losses associated with the Balancing Pool carrying PPAs and the wholesale power market. Well, the Balancing Pool is losing money, Mr. Speaker, every month, and it's only recovering its fuel costs and carbon costs from its offers into the power market, not its fixed costs. To the Minister of Energy: have estimates of those losses and taxpayer exposure, which are expected to continue for four more years, been included in your budget?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, it's been a tough economy, and we're standing up for Albertans. We've taken action to remove the volatility from a system that we inherited. We are protecting Albertans from power prices that spike, which is how the system was built. The opposition would want us to have our families pay more and do nothing about that, but we are picking our side, and we are picking our side on the side of Albertans.

The Speaker: I hope you'll notice the lovely tie that the Government House Leader is wearing today.

Mr. MacIntyre: Given that we have about 1,400 megawatts of existing wind generation, whose owners are telling me that they're now at risk in a capacity market as these renewables traditionally are not considered to provide capacity, how will the Minister of Energy protect the legacy renewables built over the past several decades that now face a new market system prejudiced against them?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are protecting Albertans. We're offering stable and more affordable prices, we're moving from harmful coal to clean power, and we're moving to a capacity market because we heard from industry and we heard from experts that this was the way to go. Again, the opposition would have us continue to have high prices for Albertans and punish families, continue with coal, and ignore the advice that we've gotten from experts in the industry and in Alberta.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you. I don't believe the minister heard me the first time. Given that we have about 1,400 megawatts of existing wind generation, whose owners are telling me that it's now at risk in a capacity market as these renewables traditionally are not considered to provide capacity, how will the Minister of Energy protect the legacy renewables built over the past several decades that now face a new market system prejudiced against them?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, we worked with the AESO, we worked with industry, we worked with experts in the industry to develop a capacity market because the system we inherited is broken. It relies on volatility, and it is harmful to Alberta families. We are siding with Alberta families; they are not. I do not need people from the other side mansplaining to me about electricity.

An Hon. Member: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order noted.

Mr. Nixon: Point of order.

The Speaker: Two points of order. [interjections] Hon. members, please stop.

The Member for Calgary-West.

Police Street Checks

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just before the House rose for Christmas, I asked the Justice minister for a second time about the police practice of randomly checking citizens and asking them for identification, a practice known as carding. Based on her response on December 7, I believe the minister and I may have a different interpretation about how the Charter applies to carding. To the Justice minister, with all due respect: can you please advise this House and Albertans if you believe that police are allowed to detain and demand identification from citizens without reasonable suspicion?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we've been working very closely with communities on this particular file. It is absolutely not the case that people are required to provide information to the police. In fact, the thing we're consulting with communities and police about is whether police need to say in every instance: you are not required to provide this information. The police are permitted to have conversations with people. They are permitted to ask for information. People are permitted to volunteer that information if they want to, but they're also permitted to walk away.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that when I asked the Justice minister for her opinion on Ontario's new carding regulations, she referred to different policing concerns in Alberta and Ontario and given that community groups in Ontario and Alberta have expressed the same issues about carding being a form of racial and socioeconomic profiling, again to the minister: what are the different policing concerns in Ontario and Alberta, specifically in regard to carding?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, of course, we're aware of significant community concerns around this practice. That's why we've been working with the communities as well as working with the police. In Ontario, certainly, they took the path of just dropping something in. We think that there's a lot of common area. Ultimately, different community groups want to ensure that the police are there for them, that they feel safe and respected, and the police want to ensure that all communities feel that way about them. That's why everybody is willing to come together and willing to work together on moving this issue forward, and that's exactly what we're going to do.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Justice minister stated in December that we need a made-in-Alberta solution and given that the issue of carding relates specifically to the Charter and this government has a track record of failing to grasp the essence of the Charter and given that section 9 of the Charter and related Supreme Court rulings guard against arbitrary detention for all Canadians, to the same minister: why do we need a different model for Albertans when the Charter applies equally to all citizens of Canada, when all peace officers simply need to do is abide by the reasonable suspicion standard as set by the Supreme Court of Canada?

Ms Ganley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not really sure where the member opposite got his law degree, but I might suggest he goes back to school. Certainly, it's the case that people are allowed to engage in conversations with the police if they're interested. As I've already stated, they absolutely have the right to walk away. We are working to ensure that there is a guideline around the practice of interacting with citizens in the community. When we take action on this issue, we will be only the second province in the country to do so. That's why we're moving forward. That's why we're working with communities, to put Alberta out front instead of behind, where those folks left it.

Mr. Rodney: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order noted. [interjections]
Order, please.

Health Care Wait Times

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, I was approached by a young constituent who has experienced some very bad wait times, resulting in chronic pain. She's only 36 years old. From detection to surgery was 27 months, at which point, when she was in that surgery, they said that she was beyond repair and that she would need a hip replacement, but she's too young, she's too low priority, and she'll have to wait 10 years before they consider her for that. To the Minister of Health. The earlier you get a diagnosis, the better chance you have at a good outcome. Will the minister look at this issue and look at the full cost to Albertans for these long wait times?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. As I've said in this House before and to the member personally, I'm happy to take contact information to be able to follow up and to make sure that we can facilitate as much as we can within – obviously, I'm not in a position to make decisions about somebody's medical care, but I am here to make sure that we have improvements in the system so that those who are the physicians and who are the experts on the front lines can make those decisions. That's one of the reasons why we restored $800 million to health care that was planned to be cut under former Conservative governments. We know that both parties who are here want to see deep cuts. That would only make wait times worse. We're here to make them better and to help Alberta families.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, this issue affects the lives of my friends, my family, my constituents, and all Albertans. The average wait time for a hip replacement in Calgary is 42 weeks, yet the wait time for the same surgery in Edmonton is 36 weeks. That's a six-week difference. To the Minister of Health: why are there such major discrepancies for wait times in regions and centres given that they're all managed under the same umbrella, with the same guidelines and protocols, with the same access to the same specialists and consultants?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question and for also acknowledging, as I share with him, concerns that in the past there have certainly been decisions that I don't believe created the best opportunities for all Albertans to have access. That's one of the reasons why we have as a government made it a priority to make sure that we protect health care, to make sure that we're moving forward in aligning resources, to make sure that Albertans do get the best possible care. Some say that during these tough times the answer is to cut, to privatize, and to make things more expensive. Our government looks at things differently. We look at things by wanting to stand up for Alberta families, make life more affordable, and make their lives better by addressing things like these wait times, that should improve.

Mr. Yao: Given that these unreasonably long wait times can lead to the deterioration of health that results in increased costs and strains on the health care system and given that we already spend more per capita on health care than both Saskatchewan and B.C., who both have shorter wait times for surgeries, and given that more money isn't always the solution, to the Minister of Health: what actions has your department taken to address this critical issue? You can identify the issues, but how are you addressing it?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you for the opportunity to do so, Mr. Speaker. For example, we're looking at ways to make sure that we triage the resources that we do have to find ways to make sure that they meet the needs of those who need them most. I have great news in terms of general surgery wait times. In the first year we were in government, the wait times for general surgery went down 20 per cent, a 21 per cent decrease for internal medicine, a 14 per cent decrease for specialists focusing on ears, noses, and throats. This is about making sure that we're aligning the resources. I have to tell you, that I get that they don't want to put more money into the system, but if you took billions of dollars – they're saying at least $2.6 billion, a number that I heard most recently – out of the system, it would get a lot worse. You can't have it both ways.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Service Alberta Postage Use

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This NDP government was proud of their feeble efforts to control costs by ending a long-standing reminder to vehicle owners that their registration and licences needed to be renewed. Last March this minister promised Albertans that she would save $3 million in printing and postage. This month the minister said that it would only be $300,000. To the minister: is it $3 million, or is it $300,000? Can you please clarify?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and for the question. I have, frankly, no idea where the member opposite is getting his numbers from. I have said time and time again that we found $3 million per year in savings by moving to electronic renewal reminders. Registry agents, our partners in this effort, have taken an active and proactive role in reminding drivers when their licence and registration needs to be renewed. There are free services online. There are free services in the form of stickers on the back of your licence plate, that day by day Albertans can check.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Cyr: That's a shame. There's no answer. [interjections]

The Speaker: Move along, folks.

Mr. Cyr: Given that I am being flooded with complaints from local business owners, citizens, and registries who are frustrated with this government's continued downloading of costs and the costs associated with producing licence renewal notices and given the lack of understanding Alberta Justice has had regarding fines for failure to renew licences and that it appears the justification for ending direct mail-out reminders has evaporated, to the minister. The NDP government was able to find $10 million to advertise for its carbon tax, yet it couldn't take . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Ms McLean: Again, Mr. Speaker, I don't know where the member opposite is getting his information from. It's certainly not me. It's certainly not the government services that are funding all of the registry services that Albertans access. On this particular file he clearly doesn't have the facts. He is clearly really off base on this. Frankly, I don't even know how to address the question because he didn't ask anything very clearly at all and the entire basis of his question was completely off base. I'm happy to have a conversation with the member opposite and to educate him a little bit on the issue.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister. [interjections]
Hon. members.
Please proceed.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that you've spent $870,000 in postage left over from the 2015-2016 budget and your full budget for 2016-2017 and now you're begging the House for a handout of $900,000 to make it to the end of the month and that this questions the competency of your strategic planning from your financial services department and given that a few days ago during debate on supplementary supply the minister threatened that a lack of funds for postage would cause our most vulnerable Albertans to miss out on critical support payments, can the minister promise a full review of the postage use within Service Alberta to avoid this clear negligence happening within her ministry?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. Again, I would like to reiterate to the member opposite that that was a reprofiling of funds, not new funds for postage. Again, a deeper understanding of how the ministry works would edify the member across the way, letting him know that, in fact, Service Alberta charges other ministries back for postage used by them. The member opposite's proposal was to reduce our budget to $1,000. Frankly, I don't know how he would expect us to mail out cheques to vulnerable Albertans with $1,000 postage, but I'd really love to hear that proposal.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Parks Canada Film Permit Denial

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently the studio behind the upcoming film Hard Powder sought to film in and around Banff and Jasper; however, Parks Canada denied them a permit largely because a character in the movie, a gang leader, is indigenous. Now, the actor involved, Canadian icon Tom Jackson, reviewed the script and wrote to Parks Canada indicating that he did not believe that the script was disrespectful. To the Culture and Tourism minister. Parks Canada has directly interfered with the film industry in Alberta. What assurances have you sought or received from the federal government that this will not happen again?

The Speaker: The minister of culture.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We know that the film industry does generate good jobs in our province and diversifies our economy. This project that the member is referring to is under federal jurisdiction, so they do have a process that they have to go through. We will continue supporting the industry in this province. I invite the member to also follow up with the federal contacts from within the federal parks who can actually provide the permits that are necessary for this project.

Thank you.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Dr. Starke: With respect, Minister, that's your job.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this film would have added to a long list of movies that have been shot in Alberta, that make free-marketing opportunities for Alberta tourism, and given that the film's producer stated that the crew intended to spend some $5 million in Banff and Jasper over the course of the shoot, boosting local industry, employing Alberta film crews, and showcasing Alberta to the world, again to this minister: were you aware of this issue, and if so, why have you allowed Parks Canada to take millions of dollars away from both our film industry and our tourism industry?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Again, this particular project is not within the jurisdiction that I can do anything about. What we have done is that we continue to provide the support to an industry that we know provides good-paying jobs to our province, making lives better for Albertans. That's exactly what we'll continue to do.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, thank you. Given that rural municipal stakeholders would like to discuss this issue along with a litany of other concerns about supports for tourism and cultural industries in rural Alberta with the minister and given that the AAMD and C meeting is exactly the forum where this discussion should take place, again to the minister: will you commit to attending the ministerial forum at AAMD and C to hear this and other concerns from rural leaders, or will you be skipping it for the second time in a row?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of culture.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can assure the former minister, who at the time, well, had not really provided the kind of leadership that we have seen these days in our province when it comes to culture and tourism, that every day I come to work, I come to make sure that we're supporting the people of this province with good-paying jobs, ensuring that we're supporting culture and tourism. It's something that this government has done, that I personally have done, and that I will continue to do going forward.

Thank you.

Strathcona Community Hospital

Ms McKittrick: Mr. Speaker, the residents of Sherwood Park were curious about the services that would be offered in the newly built Strathcona county community hospital. The former government had promised a full-service hospital but had not delivered. Residents raised concerns about the potential lack of in-patient beds. However, I now hear only great things about the hospital, its staff, and emergency services. To the Minister of Health: what other services are now available at the hospital?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you to the member for her important question. The services that are included at the facility are 24/7 emergency care, ambulatory care, CT scans as well as diagnostic lab and imaging, primary care, family medicine, and allied health supports, including a physical therapist, psychologist, speech language therapy, and rehabilitation services, Mr. Speaker. These are the kinds of front-line services that Albertans count on that certainly do make their lives better.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the Minister of Health. Given that I have met with the leadership of the hospital and have been impressed with the forward-thinking ways that they provide follow-up care, could the minister please elaborate on those innovative services, that I don't think exist in any other hospitals?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for her question. I had the honour of touring this facility very early in my time as Health minister alongside both MLAs for the county, and I have to say that the work that's happening there is fantastic. One of the standout community partnerships that's at play there is the work with Castle foundation, which is for child and adolescent family mental health. It's connected to the hospital. The families and the facility are able to work in partnership to make sure that they have those supports that surround the students. I'm proud that our government has supported Castle with $17 million to further complete a number of initiatives and this mental health unit as well and work in partnership to surround those families with the services that they rely on so desperately.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hear stories all the time from constituents about how great the hospital is and especially how great it is to go to the emergency department and not have to wait for a very, very long time. I was wondering if I could ask the Minister of Health: how do the wait times at the Strathcona county community hospital emergency department compare to the other hospitals in the region?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Of course, emergency wait times are some of the times when we are most concerned about making sure that we get access to those front-line health care professionals, and we take these matters very seriously, not just at her community hospital but at all hospitals. That's one of the reasons why we've been tracking these, making sure that they're available to the public. You can call 811 or check the AHS website at any time to find the wait times. I have to say that the wait time news at Strathcona county hospital is very good. Often it's the shortest wait time in the Edmonton zone, about an hour shorter than the next closest wait time. I encourage members to choose an opportunity to explore their facility if it will meet their health needs.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Agricultural Insurance Payments

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last fall the county of Brazeau declared an agricultural disaster when 70 per cent of the crops were left unharvested in the field. Now I have local farmers coming to me concerned that they will not receive their AFSC insurance payout in time for them to plan for and physically get in a crop this spring. Many believe that they will need that payout by April 15 if they are to put in a crop. Will the minister ensure that farmers across Alberta will receive their insurance payouts in time to put in a crop this spring?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I understand the hardships that the farmers have gone through last year with the early snow. I live in a county just next door to Brazeau, and I understand absolutely what's going on there. I have good news there. The AFSC has already paid out the vast majority of payments that are needed. If the member has particular constituents that are still waiting and have some concerns, I encourage them to get hold of me.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Minister. Given that many farmers have purchased insurance through AFSC with the understanding that the insurance payouts would be made in time to cover losses and to continue to farm and given that so many are concerned they will not receive their insurance money in time to put in a crop and given that many believe that they are already battling the elements and they don't need to battle the government, too, why would a farmer in my riding continue to purchase crop insurance through AFSC when it does not work for them?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. The fact is that the AFSC suite of programs is well subscribed to by producers right across the province. They recognize the value that those products have. This government will continue and I will continue to support those Alberta farmers, as AFSC does, and look forward to having the good work that they continue to do. It is also true, as I said earlier, that AFSC has paid out the vast majority of those claims. If a member has constituents that are concerned, I encourage them to get hold of me.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that farmers and ranchers whose cattle became infected by TB were compensated in a timely fashion and that they were able to continue their operations largely uninterrupted and given that other Albertans have suffered devastating losses from emergencies and received compensation without losing business or income and since farmers in the Brazeau county are facing a very real crisis if they do not receive their insurance monies in time to get a crop, will these hard-working Albertan farmers be able to access AgriRecovery and carry on their operations this spring?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I already have said, the AFSC has done a great job. Inspectors were out. They were working extra hours to make sure that those counties that had the early snow last year, the high-moisture content, were getting their claims in. I understand that there are only two farmers that have yet to be assessed, and the vast majority of those payments are out. You know, we're still early in the year. There's still snow out there. If these producers are concerned about getting their payments before seeding is started, I encourage them to get hold of the AFSC office or my office.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Trampoline Safety

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In January a young man from Spruce Grove sustained a very serious spinal cord injury while using equipment at a local trampoline park. The media attention that this incident attracted revealed that every day in Alberta an average of four children land in emergency rooms as a result of trampoline-related injuries. Anything that sends 1,400 Alberta children to hospital each year is surely worth our attention. To the Minister of Health: what action have you taken to address the growing issue of trampoline safety in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Of course, any time the life of anyone is impacted through an accident that could have been prevented, I think we do owe it to look at ways that we might be able to support those families after the circumstance but also consider ways that we might be able to work to provide either education or opportunities for people to be informed about ways that they could change and reduce risk. I'd be happy to follow up with the member opposite if he would like to schedule a meeting to receive some more information from him and other organizations that he thinks might be worth pursuing further conversations with.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the latest serious injury occurred at a specialized recreation facility and given that there's currently no legislation governing these facilities, nor are there any regulatory requirements for staff training, minimum supervision levels, or even basic safety protocols, to the minister: can you tell the House and all Albertans how your government plans to address these inadequacies?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The short answer is in partnership, in partnership with members from the other side who want to work with us as well as with members from the community. Once again, I'm very pleased to be able to find ways that we can improve lives for Alberta families, whether it's finding ways to increase safety for their children, for themselves, or for the workers, who I'm sure were also traumatized by the incident. I think this is something worth us having further conversations on.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the majority of these injuries sustained by Alberta children do not happen in these facilities but, rather, on backyard trampolines and given that injuries include everything from sprains and broken bones to spinal cord and traumatic head injuries and even death, to the same minister: do you see any merit in developing provincial regulations to govern safety as it relates to backyard trampolines?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Certainly, I spent many a summer on trampolines, as a child mostly, and continue to watch children enjoy them throughout our communities. I think it's important that we do provide opportunities for them to engage in that activity, but I am open to recommendations and look forward to considering options in partnership with all members of this House if it comes to that point. Obviously, education is one piece, and I think that it's important for us to have opportunities in public forums like this today to talk about some of the risks that are involved. So thank you to the member for the question.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Drinking Water Quality in Indigenous Communities

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that a disproportionate number of indigenous communities are currently under a boil-water advisory, to the Minister of Indigenous Relations: how is this government working to provide clean water to these communities regardless of the jurisdictional boundaries?

The Speaker: The Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. I also want to acknowledge your ongoing support and work in the indigenous community and your advocacy. As we committed to in the throne speech, our government is working with First Nations and the federal government in a tripartite relationship to address this very critical need for access to clean drinking water and fulfilling our commitment to the United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples. We look forward to learning more about that later today.

Thank you.

2:40

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that First Nations across Alberta like the Alexander First Nation in the wonderful constituency of Spruce Grove-St. Albert deserve to have the same access to clean water as any other Canadian, to the same minister: has this government spoken to the federal Minister of Indigenous and Northern Affairs about this important issue?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I very much appreciate this question. I have indeed spent quite a bit of time with the federal minister, perhaps a dozen times over the last year, and most recently spoke with Minister Bennett at the fifth national indigenous summit, that was held in Toronto last week, and have obtained a commitment from her and she from me to work together to resolve this critical issue and to move forward in working with all of the First Nations in this province and to do what we all expect, and that is to provide clean drinking water for citizens of this province.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. The problem of clean drinking water on reserves has gone on for far too long. When will indigenous communities finally see progress and drinkable water on their reserves?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I have indicated before, we've been working with all of the parties involved in a tripartite relationship, which is, frankly, quite new for this province, to actually work with everyone together. We are very proud of the fact that we are moving forward on this, and I encourage everyone to pay special attention to the budget today so that we can speak about this more in the future.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Northern Hills.

Buffalo Rubbing Stone School Opening

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last May I dedicated a member's statement to the buffalo rubbing stone landmark in Calgary-Northern Hills and the school it inspired. Prior to the opening of Buffalo Rubbing Stone school students attended Panorama Hills school and Alex Munro school in Huntington Hills. Attendance at both schools exceeded capacity. Cathy Turner, future principal of Buffalo Rubbing Stone school, was already working in these schools to meet students and build relationships with teachers.

On September 26, 2016, Buffalo Rubbing Stone school opened for the first time to give families a sneak peek at their new school. Principal Turner said that her favourite moments were watching the parents and kids, because it was their school, and everyone was so excited. As Principal Turner pointed out, when cities sprawl, we need schools in the outskirt neighbourhoods. After Buffalo Rubbing Stone school opened, 11 bus routes were cancelled, with students now able to walk or bike to their own neighbourhood school. Class sizes at all three area schools were reduced to an average of 22 students per class.

Buffalo Rubbing Stone school officially opened February 9, 2017, and the opening ceremonies were attended by hundreds of children and their parents along with Calgary board of education superintendent of schools David Stevenson; Calgary board area director Darlene Unruh; two Calgary board trustees, Lynn Ferguson and Joy Bowen-Eyre; and Elder Randy Bottle, or Saa'kokoto in Blackfoot. During the ceremony Elder Bottle spoke of the importance of the buffalo rubbing stone and its location in the Blackfoot territory and the herd of majestic bison that once roamed the area. Elder Bottle described how the Blackfoot regarded the bison as the ruler of the plains and a source of food and life for Nitsitapi peoples.

After Elder Bottle's inspiring speech, the kindergarten students showed a video they had made about their expectations for the new school, but in a disappointed tone they said: there ain't no buffalo here. Although the herds of bison have vanished . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Immigrants in Rural Alberta

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is important to tell and celebrate the rural Alberta immigrant story. It's a positive story for central and rural Alberta, that has brought economic vitality, rich cultural diversity, and remembrance of our own immigrant roots.

First, let me mention the many Dutch immigrants in Lacombe-Ponoka. They own the majority of the dairy and chicken farms as well as greenhouses and field farms. In my past work as a rural pastor I personally welcomed around 100 new immigrants into our small country community. Many of these were Filipinos who were asked by employers to come, and they came at a time when there were no available Canadians to fill the jobs. The majority of rural immigrant workers are skilled or semiskilled and so are not just temporary. They came, wrote trade certification exams, received permanent resident status, brought their families, and today are contributing members of Alberta society.

Rural employers sought families because they value family and sought long-term commitment from stable employees. Families were helped with housing, furniture, ESL, trade-ticket preparation, immigration, and cultural adaptation. Learning the Canadian rules of driving was one of the challenges. In return, employers got committed, skilled workers with good work ethics and personal morality.

The locals in the peaceful countryside have welcomed their new inhabitants. They work hard. They bought homes, even started businesses, and are strong contributors to our local economy. Employers paid the cost for workers. Churches, through private sponsorship, have brought refugees, providing homes, cars, and community all by donation. Individuals, like a 23-year-old Lacombe resident, donated one year of a house rent-free to a Syrian family. I believe Lacombe will soon have five refugee families, four Syrian and one Eritrean. Most immigrants to rural areas have chosen to stay. They feel welcome, and affordability is better than in urban areas.

Our immigrants are first-class people making a first-class contribution. That is why I celebrate them.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of a document to which I referred during debate this morning titled Canadian Blood Services Says Paid Plasma Clinics Are Harming Voluntary Donations.

The Speaker: The Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Yes, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. First I table the requisite number of copies of the monograph from Health Canada entitled Round Table Discussion on Payment of Plasma Donors in Canada – Summary Report.

My second tabling is the requisite five copies of a document I referred to during debate on Bill 2, entitled The Cruelty Connection: The Relationships between Animal Cruelty, Child Abuse and Domestic Violence.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have five copies of an article I referred to yesterday when I was speaking in support of Bill 2. It is from the February 3 edition of the Globe and Mail, an article by Robyn Doolittle called Unfounded: Why Police Dismiss 1 in 5 Sexual Assault Claims as Baseless.

The Speaker: The Minister of Infrastructure and of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table five copies of the spring 2017 budget main estimates schedule that was developed in consultation with House leaders as per Standing Order 59.01(3).

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two documents to table. The first one is regarding inventories for resale of postage. The Minister of Service Alberta can dispute my qualities as an accountant, but she can't actually dispute the facts.

The fact is that this next one I will be tabling is that Service Alberta had . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, we talked about editorializing. Get to the point.

Mr. Cyr: I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker. Service Alberta had proudly announced that they'd save 41,000 trees, and I guess they stayed the execution to 2016-2017.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Ms Ganley, Minister of Justice and Solicitor General, responses to questions raised by Mr. Cyr, hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake; Mr. Clark, hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow; Mr. Orr, hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka; Mr. Hinkley, hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose; and Mr. Eilis, hon. Member for Calgary-West, on the May 2, 2016, Ministry of Justice and Solicitor General main estimates debate.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

The Speaker: Hon. members, there was a point of order that was raised yesterday that I said I would review, and I'd like to address that item now.

A point of order was raised yesterday by the Official Opposition House Leader with respect to a statement that the Minister of Energy made during Oral Question Period. I've had the chance to now review Alberta Hansard to determine what the minister said. In the minister's response to a question posed by the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek she said, "The opposition continues to mislead this House and indeed Albertans for their own political gain." The minister's remarks can be found on page 303 of Alberta Hansard from March 15, 2017.

The Official Opposition House Leader in his arguments referenced a number of rulings made in this Assembly in which he argues that it was concluded that "mislead" and its various grammatical forms is unparliamentary. These arguments are found on pages 305 and 306 of yesterday's Alberta Hansard.

I would note for members that the entire phrase uttered by the Minister of Energy was: "The opposition continues to mislead this House." Hon. members, there are, in fact, a number of rulings on the terms "mislead," "misleading" and so on. Members may refer to Speaker Kowalski's rulings on April 12, 2011, found on pages 607 to 608 of the Alberta Hansard for that day, on June 4, 2008, on page 1212, and on April 26, 2005, on pages 1035 to 1036.

More relevant to the point of order before us now, on February 22, 1995, Speaker Schumacher encountered a very similar situation. In his ruling Speaker Schumacher indicated that the member against whom a point of order was raised did not use "mislead" in relation to an individual member of the Assembly. Instead, the member used the expression "in the corporate sense by accusing the government and not any particular member of the government of misleading the Assembly." Speaker Schumacher concluded that because of the context in which the word was used, he could not find the expression unparliamentary. This ruling is found on page 125 of the Alberta Hansard for that day.

On April 7, 2005, Speaker Kowalski ruled on the use of the term "misled." Quoting from the first edition of the House of Commons Procedure and Practice he stated: "Expressions which are considered unparliamentary when applied to an individual Member have not always been considered so when applied 'in a generic sense' or to a party.” The entire ruling can be found on page 624 of the Alberta Hansard for that day.

In the instance before the Assembly now, the same observation made by my predecessors may also be made here. The Minister of Energy referenced the opposition and not a member in her response to the question. Therefore, in this particular case, as in the instances I have cited, I find no point of order.

I believe there were three other points of order today. The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Point of Order Language Creating Disorder

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is in reference to section 23(j), when a member “uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder.”

I don’t have the benefit of the Blues in front of me, Mr. Speaker, but I believe that the language that was used was something along the lines of: I don’t need a member from the opposition mansplaining the electric system to me. I would have to say that this clearly caused disorder and is insulting. When the Minister of Education speaks in a condescending tone to me, should I also call it mansplaining?

I do not believe in any way that this is helpful or constructive in this House. I would request that the Minister of Energy withdraw her comment and apologize to the member.

The Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is not a point of order. I can tell you a couple of different things. Number one, I will read the dictionary definition of mansplaining. “To comment on or explain something to a woman in a condescending, overconfident, and often inaccurate or oversimplified manner.” I’m doing this for the benefit of all the men in this room. The Energy minister felt that the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake was talking to her in a very condescending manner, explaining things that in her role as the Minister of Energy she’s very well briefed on.

I do want to mention that mansplaining is not an unparliamentary word either here in Alberta or in Ottawa. I want to point out the fact that in the Hansard of the House of Commons, actually, the MP for Lakeland, Shannon Stubbs, used the term “mansplain,” for which there was no point of order in Ottawa.

Therefore, this is no point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Well, hon. members, I can tell you that I have certainly learned and heard a lot of words in this House that I’ve never heard before. I also relearned – I knew this, but it came back to me when I was dealing with the point of order that I dealt with just now – that, in fact, in 2012 this House agreed that the catalogue of words that were not acceptable in this Assembly would no longer be maintained. I heard a couple of questions and exchanges today about saving trees. I suspect that may have been one of the reasons why they determined that the list was not necessary, because many, many, many trees may have been destroyed as a result of the dialogue in this room. There seems to be a desire also to set down this list of words, and then they can be used to say: well, you can’t say that, you can’t say that. It’s almost an impossible task, it seems to me.

I can only judge in this particular instance on the basis that – and I do have the Blues – the statement was: “I do not need people from the other side mansplaining to me about electricity.” This may well not be a formal point of order, but I would say to the hon. minister that it did have a reaction on the opposite side. I would ask that in the future you avoid this because it’s quite obvious that that particular matter caused considerable disruption in the House.

The second point of order, I think, was raised by the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Point of Order Insulting Language

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to the second point of order today, where at approximately 2:16, mere moments after my colleague from Chestermere-Rocky View raised a point of order, that you have so appropriately dealt with, the minister of the environment very clearly across the bow called my colleague a snowflake.

I would just like to provide some context around the word “snowflake.” While I recognize, Mr. Speaker, that there may have been people who have used this sort of language not fully understanding all of the context, I’d like to provide some for you today and then encourage all members of this Chamber – all members of this Chamber – to refrain from doing so in the future. In Missouri in the early 1860s a “snowflake” was a person who was opposed to the abolition of slavery, the implication of the name being that such people valued white people over black people. The “snowflake” hoped slavery would survive in the country’s civil war, and there were contrasts with two other groups. Now I recognize that this language, the word “snowflake,” has been used in various forms throughout time, but the origins of “snowflake” are certainly not positive.

What we’re seeing, Mr. Speaker, is that this cabinet is putting together a string of insults directed at the opposition. We saw one that was apologized for earlier this week. We’ve seen “Chicken Little,” we’ve seen “xenophobes,” and now today we see “snowflake.” I would hope that the minister would be pleased to withdraw and apologize for the comment. We can all move forward. I hope that in the future members of the government will refrain from hurling insults at the opposition, which sometimes can be viewed as hurling insults at Albertans.

The Speaker: Before I allow the Deputy Government House Leader to speak, I want to remind members that we have a very important event to deal with at 3:15, and we are now past 3 o’clock.

How long would your comments be, hon. member?

Mr. Bilous: Not too long, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: It might be really short. If you could make it, it might solve this matter.

Mr. Bilous: Yes. I appreciate that, Mr. Speaker. However, when I was still teaching and I said to my students “I’ll be brief,” they all knew that meant 10 to 15 minutes.

I just want to begin by saying, Mr. Speaker, that I do appreciate what the Opposition House Leader is saying. I want to begin by mentioning that I believe both sides of the House have had numerous incidents of saying things that maybe they want to take back, words that may have caused disorder in this House. I don’t think anyone believes that only one side is guilty of this, so I would like to remind the opposition that when they make similar types of comments that cause disorder on this side of the House, it is also equally applicable to causing disorder and causing Albertans to be unhappy.

Now, having said that, on behalf of the Minister of Environment and Parks I would like to apologize to the member and the opposition for that comment and would like it withdrawn.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Let me remind you yet again – you don't want to hear this – that the responsibility rests, yes, with this chair but also individually with each of you.

In order to allow adequate time to prepare for the Budget Address by the hon. President of Treasury Board – I'm sorry. I should have been more clear.

Go ahead.

Point of Order Language Creating Disorder

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I trust we can deal with this extremely expeditiously. I rise in reference to section 23.

A Member will be called to order by the Speaker if, in the Speaker's opinion, that Member . . .

- (j) uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder.

For the sake of time I will not quote from (h) and (i).

The hon. Member for Calgary-West, with extensive formal training and teaching experience in his previous profession, in which he's very respected, in addition to years of real-life experience and expertise, did extensive research with a lawyer who is an expert in constitutional law. He asked an extremely important question of the Justice minister. Instead of answering the question, the minister made a personal attack. First, she said that she didn't know where he got his law degree from, which begs the question: will the minister only answer to lawyers? Her job is to answer questions of duly elected MLAs, who ask questions on behalf of Albertans, and that's exactly what the hon. member was in the process of doing before this happened.

It got worse at that moment, Mr. Speaker. The minister went on to tell the hon. member: I think he needs to go back to school. Now, this is insulting not only to the member but to all members of this House and, by extension, all Albertans, especially those who deserve an answer to this question, including all those who are extremely concerned about racism. We've had comments from the government on how important that is this week alone.

Mr. Speaker, this is not the first time this type of insult has been hurled from the NDP benches to our side of the House. You can ask the hon. Member from Calgary-Greenway all about that if he chooses to rise. Other references this morning – we had a meeting on decorum in this House.

The Speaker: Hon. member, we're dealing with the specific point.

Mr. Rodney: Yes, I am.

This afternoon the member . . .

The Speaker: In light of the time, just get to this example because I think there might be . . .

Mr. Rodney: I am in the process, sir. I need . . .

The Speaker: Sir, wait. You must listen. I think there is an expeditious way of dealing with it if you could get to it. Please finish.

Mr. Rodney: Yes. That's what I'm doing, sir.

This afternoon the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster made a member's statement calling for an increase in respect in this Chamber and beyond. Yesterday I tweeted the following: the minister was wrong in her comment . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice, could you speak to this and expedite this matter, please?

Please be seated, sir.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, emotions are running somewhat high in the House at this time. As a lawyer I obviously have deep feelings about the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I feel very strongly that it's a deep and important thing, and I felt that perhaps the member was incorrect in his statement. It was inappropriate to take that a step further, as I did do. Obviously, I am required to answer to everyone in this House. I have a great deal of respect for the Member for Calgary-West and his commitment to serving the people of Alberta. I apologize and withdraw the comment.

The Speaker: And thus, hon. member, because of the time factor, that's why I gave the minister the opportunity.

Accordingly, to prepare for the Budget Address by the hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance, let us recess until 3:15, and I trust that 3:15 will still accomplish the task.

[The Assembly adjourned from 3:06 p.m. to 3:18 p.m.]

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order!

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Orders of the Day Transmittal of Estimates

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, I have received certain messages from Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, which I now transmit to you.

The Speaker: Please rise. The Lieutenant Governor transmits estimates of certain sums required by the offices of the Legislative Assembly for the service of the province for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2018, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

The Lieutenant Governor transmits estimates of certain sums required by the government for the service of the province for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2018, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

Please be seated.

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, I wish to table the 2017-18 offices of the Legislative Assembly estimates as well as the 2017-18 government estimates. In addition, Mr. Speaker, I also wish to table the 2017-2020 government of Alberta strategic plan and the Budget 2017 ministry business plans.

Government Motions

Budget Address

13. Mr. Ceci moved:
Be it resolved that the Assembly approve in general the business plans and fiscal policies of the government.

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I now wish to table the government's Budget 2017 fiscal plan and move Government Motion 13.

The Speaker: Please proceed.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Before I begin, I want to acknowledge that we are on Treaty 6 land.

I am pleased to present Budget 2017. Budget 2017 is about making life better for everyday Albertans. Jobs, affordability, protecting the services that families count on: these are Albertans' priorities. These are your government's priorities.

Let me begin by thanking Albertans for their input. I traveled from one end of this province to the other listening to their thoughts on this budget. So did my colleagues. Here's what we heard. Families want us to help create and protect jobs. Families want our government to keep investing in long overdue repairs and modernizations of our schools and hospitals, and they want us to keep improving our roads and highways. They want us to make things more affordable and bring the deficit down thoughtfully and prudently. Budget 2017 is aimed squarely at addressing those priorities. As a result, Alberta will recover from this downturn with a stronger, more resilient economy. Alberta will recover with good schools and hospitals because this time Alberta families have a government that is in their corner. On this side of the House we are going to stay in their corner.

Mr. Speaker, when the oil price shock hit our economy, Albertans were faced with a choice. Some said and still say that government should make deep cuts to public services such as health care and education. Some wanted to implement a health care tax that would have hurt families who could least afford it. Families would have been forced to pay more and get less with longer health care waitlists, overcrowded emergency rooms, much bigger class sizes, and lost jobs. That's why our government made a different choice. We stayed focused, and we are executing a plan to diversify our economy and help families through the downturn.

We're not out of the woods yet – far from it – but there are hopeful economic signs, what I refer to as green shoots. This year we expect our economy to grow by 2.6 per cent, the highest in Canada. That estimate is more conservative than some such as the Conference Board of Canada's, that predicts economic growth of 2.8 per cent. Either way, it's clear. Alberta's economy is set to grow. Our energy industry is on a more solid footing, drilling is increasing, with twice the number of rigs active compared to this time last year, and jobs are starting to come back: 19,000 since last July. Of course, the global economy remains volatile. Energy prices have stayed lower for longer. At the same time our population continues to grow. These factors have combined to put additional pressures on our social services.

Budget 2017 reflects that reality. Our commitment to have the backs of Albertans through these tough times remains unwavering, as is our commitment to continue to bring down the deficit thoughtfully and prudently. This year we are forecasting our deficit to decline to $10.3 billion, half a billion dollars less than last year's budget deficit. Growth in government spending remains well below many of the increases of past governments. We are keeping spending growth lower than the combined rate of inflation and population growth. Our debt-to-GDP ratio is the lowest among provinces.

Bringing the deficit down requires us to consistently bring down the growth in government spending. We froze management salaries for agencies, boards, and commissions and launched a review of salary rates. A few weeks ago our government cut the salaries of some of the highest-paid CEOs at government agencies and got rid of golf club memberships and other perks that were accepted practice in the past. That one step will save nearly $16 million a year.

We are also bringing down the rate of health spending growth while protecting patient care. We engaged Alberta's doctors in constructive discussions and signed a new agreement that saves up to $500 million over two years. We amalgamated or cut 26 agencies, boards, and commissions. We froze salaries for politicians, political staff, and management in the civil service. We reduced salaries and supplies last year to the tune of $121 million. We streamlined programs such as Alberta Innovates and community partnership grants and suspended other nonessential programs. As a result, we found more than half a billion dollars of in-year savings and decreases in ministry expenses over the last two years, and we will continue to find more savings this year.

As important as it is to cut waste and reduce the growth of government spending, it is critical that through this downturn we remain focused on supporting families. That starts with creating and supporting good jobs. In last year's budget we launched the Alberta jobs plan, aimed at diversifying our economy and creating good jobs. The jobs plan is built on four key pillars: first, investing in infrastructure; next, supporting families and communities; then diversifying our energy industry; and last, diversifying our economy and supporting Alberta businesses. The jobs plan is doing its work. The economy is stabilizing, and jobs are beginning to return. Now is not the time to let our steady hand waiver.

As our economy recovers, we'll continue to bring down the deficit to balance, and we will do so without sacrificing the supports and services families need. We will remain focused on these fundamental priorities and help all Albertans weather this storm. That's our focus. That's our plan. This year we will continue to build on the jobs plan to make life better for everyday families.

Mr. Speaker, our kids deserve schools that are modern, safe, and equipped to prepare them for a great future. Right now we're dealing with issues of overcrowding and buildings that have been allowed to fall into disrepair. In some schools there's water damage and obsolete heating systems. In others roofs sag and the cold winter winds seep through aging window frames. That's not right. The decision to fix those issues for our kids shouldn't be dependent on oil price decisions made half a world away. Our kids deserve better, much better.

Mr. Speaker, Budget 2017 includes funding for 24 new and modernized schools. From Airdrie to Bonnyville, Banff to Drayton Valley, Lethbridge to Grande Prairie, and in many, many more communities across Alberta our government is building and modernizing schools, improving the things that make a real difference in the lives of Alberta families. Calgary will see five new schools approved, and Edmonton will see four, with design work to be done on a fifth. Not only will these new schools help our kids get a better education, but because of our government's reductions to a range of mandatory school fees, it will cost less for parents to send their kids to a great public school.

We will also invest in new health care facilities. When we took office, glaring infrastructure issues in health care needed fixing. Here's an example. There's a bus in Lac La Biche where people have been forced for years to get their dialysis treatment. The bus doesn't move, which is odd for a bus. The reason this dialysis bus doesn't move: the wheels have literally come off. It just sits there, in a parking lot, up on blocks. Sometimes the power in the bus goes because the electricity link between the bus and the hospital isn't all that great, and when it's really cold out, dialysis care gets cancelled altogether. Families in the area have said for years that this is no way to be treated. They shouldn't have to trudge out into the cold, then climb up on a bus with no wheels. Mr. Speaker, we agree with those families. It isn't right.

The fact that it remained this way through the last oil boom is an insult to rural Albertans. Patients deserve better, and that's why we are fixing this problem, with construction work on a proper new dialysis unit beginning this month. When our loved ones are sick, they deserve to be treated as close to home as possible, and they deserve to be treated with dignity and respect.

Mr. Speaker, Budget 2017 moves forward on much-needed repairs, renovations, and modernizations of health facilities across the province and builds new hospitals that are long overdue.

In our first budget we ended all the dithering over the obvious need for a new cancer centre in Calgary. Families in Calgary and southern Alberta need that new facility, not a fresh round of excuses for why now is not the time. Construction continues this year on that crucial new facility.

In the same way that the cancer building in Calgary can't wait, this year we will move forward on necessary health infrastructure in Edmonton. Despite significant population growth in Alberta's capital a new hospital hasn't been built in Edmonton for more than a generation. Families can't wait any longer. The need is there, and it's growing. As a result of planning started last year, this year we are dedicating additional funds to get a new hospital built in Edmonton; $400 million will be dedicated over the next four years to help turn those plans into reality.

While that new hospital is being built, we will invest in necessary upgrades and modernizations to the Misericordia community hospital to make sure it is able to handle more patients and care for them properly. This year new funding will be dedicated towards the Misericordia, including funds to build a modern new emergency department. Again, this work is long overdue and can't wait any longer.

While we tackle those urgent needs, we will continue to upgrade and increase public long-term care spaces, making further progress towards our commitment to build 2,000 long-term care beds across the province. In Calgary we will get to work on a new and much-needed long-term care facility. This facility will have 200 beds and will be designed to make sure people with complex care needs such as Alzheimer's and dementia get the safest, best care possible. At the Norwood Capital Care facility in Edmonton work will begin on new and renovated space to accommodate 350 enhanced long-term care beds, offering patients and families a broad range of support programs and services.

Necessary investments will also be made to better support child and adolescent mental health services at the Royal Alexandra hospital and the Glenrose rehabilitation hospital campus. These investments will create safer and healthier environments for patients, their families, and staff.

And after years of on-again, off-again funding promises, followed by the wildfire, work on the Willow Square long-term care facility in Fort McMurray is back on track and will continue this year.

In addition to these necessary investments in hospitals and long-term care homes, we are going to keep renovating and expanding hospitals, health centres, care homes, and health infrastructure across Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, just as our modern and highly industrialized province needs great schools and hospitals to help families thrive, so too does it need highways and bridges to get people and goods where they need to be efficiently and safely. Budget 2017 will put more Albertans to work through necessary investments in our highways, bridges, and public transit.

Families in Fort Saskatchewan have been clear that the current highways and bridges in the area don't have enough capacity. The area has grown substantially over the last couple of decades, and more needs to be done to ease traffic congestion and help get people where they need to be. For this reason, we are going to twin the highway 15 bridge, which is the only river crossing in the area. Planning and design work will begin this year. This investment will reduce travel times in the area and improve routes between Fort Saskatchewan, Edmonton, and the Industrial Heartland.

As well, together with the federal government and the city of Edmonton we have committed to a historic agreement to transform the Yellowhead highway through Edmonton, making sure this essential route is faster, safer, and able to support future growth and increased industry traffic.

We are also partnering with the city of Calgary to make sure that Deerfoot Trail is able to accommodate new and growing communities in the south, with a new interchange to be built in the southeast at 212 Avenue.

We will continue to work to improve public transit across the province. Also, this year we look forward to working with both the cities of Calgary and Edmonton to further develop their LRT projects.

In Alberta's north we will continue to make sure families and industry have the infrastructure they need to get around as safely and efficiently as possible. Last year we funded a new bridge in Peace River, an essential project to connect residents to schools and hospitals and connect critical transportation routes for industry in the area. The tender for this new bridge work will be awarded this year. Also this year, to improve life for families and to make sure loggers, oil sands workers, and agricultural producers have safe and efficient routes, we are going to replace the highway 813 bridge near Athabasca.

To make life better for indigenous communities, this year we are partnering with the federal government to make sure every household on a First Nation in Alberta has access to a clean and reliable source of drinking water. For Alberta's part we will invest $100 million to integrate existing drinking water systems with federally supported water systems. By building these links between communities, we can end the long-standing and shameful number of boil-water advisories on First Nations and make important progress towards fulfilling our commitment to the United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples.

In Red Deer we will rectify the community's long-standing concerns regarding the lack of appropriate courtroom space. Court space is so tight in Red Deer that some proceedings have been forced to take place in a local hotel. Community leaders have been clear that building a proper new courthouse is a major priority for their area. The previous government failed to act on this urgent and well-known priority. We won't repeat that mistake. This year we are going to get to work on building a new courthouse in Red Deer.

Another long-standing issue that cannot wait any longer to be fixed is the need for a new Provincial Operations Centre, or POC. During the Wood Buffalo wildfires, flooding in southern Alberta, and wildfires in Slave Lake Albertans saw first-hand how critical the POC is. It's a 24/7 hub of life-saving emergency management and disaster response. The women and men who staff our POC have done an amazing job managing in the aging and confined space from which they currently operate, but they need a better-designed, modern new space to manage future incidents and disasters. This year we'll improve our ability to respond to major emergencies and disasters by getting to work on a new and badly needed Provincial Operations Centre.

Mr. Speaker, Budget 2017 also puts Albertans to work building and renovating affordable homes for seniors and families. All Albertans need this basic level of security in their lives, the security of knowing they have a roof over their heads, a warm place to sleep, study, and build a better life for themselves and the people they love. While some may use economic downturns as an excuse to gut public services and turn their backs on families who need help the most, we won't. Budget 2017 builds badly needed affordable homes for Alberta seniors and families and continues to make long overdue repairs to existing housing.

Historically this is an area of the budget that has been starved for resources, which meant some units got really run down. There were units that were forced to close altogether because the foundations were so badly cracked. Others have leaky roofs, windows that won't open, and aging and unreliable heating systems. Families deserve better. Homes should be safe and comfortable. This year we will continue to build and modernize affordable homes and seniors' lodges in cities and towns across the province, from Clairmont to Fort Macleod, from Cold Lake to Canmore. Some of these communities will see new housing facilities built to replace old units while others will see expansions and renovations to make them better and safer for seniors and families.

Work that will get the green light this year includes at least 50 units of a seniors' lodge in Barrhead, 64 units of community housing in Leduc, 144 seniors' lodge units in Sherwood Park, and 132 affordable housing spaces in Banff. In the Londonderry community of Edmonton 220 affordable mixed-income units will be built while 24 units of supportive housing will be built in Calgary for people struggling with substance use. Affordable housing, help for families who need it most, and more good jobs: another key way Budget 2017 helps make life better.

Mr. Speaker, the approval of the Trans Mountain pipeline along with the approval of line 3 is helping to recharge investment in our oil and gas industry. The failures of previous governments to get new pipelines approved to Canada's coast set our province back. We lost revenue. We lost jobs. We lost investment. Investors the world over were starting to think Alberta and Canada couldn't get their act together. Working families shouldn't have to choose between making a good living and protecting the environment for our kids and future generations. Getting a Canadian pipeline built to a Canadian coast is the best way for our world-class energy producers to sell our resources at world-class prices. That's exactly what we want, a better deal for our industry and the stability of our economy.

As was said in the throne speech, we won't celebrate until the first drop of oil leaves the Canadian coast from a new pipeline. Our work is far from done. That's why our government will continue to work respectfully and collaboratively with indigenous communities, provinces, and the federal government to do what previous federal and provincial governments couldn't: get a new pipeline built to the coast and break the landlock that's held Alberta back.

Mr. Speaker, while we diversify our energy markets, we need to do more to diversify our entire economy. Last year we launched the petrochemical diversification program, which leverages $500 million in royalty credits to support nearly $6 billion in new private investment in Alberta.

We will take further steps to diversify and strengthen other parts of our economy. Business leaders and innovators have told us that access to capital is key. That's why we extended capital to Alberta companies through ATB Financial and AIMCo. Through AIMCo $185 million in new investments in Alberta business have been made, and ATB Financial has provided more than $795 million in loans to nearly 3,500 small and mid-sized Alberta businesses.

In addition to expanding access to capital, new tax credits are helping to drive new investments in Alberta. The capital investment tax credit and the Alberta investor tax credit are in full operation and helping Alberta businesses grow and create jobs. Our government also cut taxes on small businesses by a third. We now have the second-lowest small-business tax rate in Canada. This year we will continue to identify opportunities to help drive innovation and create jobs, especially in the areas of clean technology, health innovation, and value-added agriculture.

The Alberta small-brewery grant program is creating jobs and driving new investments. This year we are going to build on the success of our craft brewing program and work to model a similar program for Alberta's craft distillers. We'll also make more money available through the aboriginal business investment fund to help indigenous businesses and job creators grow and thrive. Taken together, these grants, credits, and investments in Alberta businesses create good jobs, help to strengthen and diversify our economy, and set our province's future on a stronger, more stable footing.

Mr. Speaker, Budget 2017 maintains Alberta's huge tax advantage over all Canadian provinces. We have no sales tax, no payroll tax. The previous government wanted to saddle Albertans with an expensive health care tax. That would have meant thousands of dollars in new and unavoidable charges for families. We immediately scrapped that bad idea. Alberta has an $8.7 billion tax advantage over British Columbia, a $9 billion tax advantage over Saskatchewan, and a $13.4 billion tax advantage over Ontario. Alberta is and always will be a great place to do business and raise a family.

But affordability doesn't begin and end with taxes. We have to do more by addressing the day-to-day costs that hit Albertans the hardest. Back home in Calgary, when I'm chatting with my neighbours and constituents, they tell me that school fees are way too high. For years families have said that enough is enough, yet school fees continued to grow. The previous government stood by and watched as costs for parents piled up every September. Mr. Speaker, that's just not right. By the start of the next school year school fees for families will be cut by 25 per cent. We will cover the cost of these reduced school fees entirely through efficiencies to be found from within the existing provincial budget.

Starting this fall, no Alberta family will be required to pay for textbooks, workbooks, printing, and paper costs incurred by their schools. We will also reduce fees charged to students who ride the bus more than 2.4 kilometres to their designated school. We believe families will save more than $50 million. For a family in Calgary with three kids, this change could save them over $1,000 every fall. Budget 2017 makes this possible. It will also make a university and college education more affordable for Alberta students. This year's budget increases support scholarships, provide more grants, expand funds for apprenticeship training, and make student loans more accessible.

Mr. Speaker, this year our government will help families improve the energy efficiency of their homes and save money. Earlier this month we invited Albertans to go online and sign up to have an energy efficiency technician come to their home and install a range of new energy efficient items from smart thermostats to high-efficiency lighting. The demand surpassed everyone's expectation. In the first 24 hours following the launch of Energy Efficiency Alberta's website, nearly 17,000 households signed up. That's grown to almost 70,000 households. We are now expecting that over 100,000 households will sign up this year. As a result, we will expand the availability of this hugely popular program to help meet this pent-up demand for energy efficiency in Alberta's households.

New programs, rebates, and incentives are on their way for homeowners, renters, municipalities, businesses, and nonprofits. Electricity rates will be capped this year to protect Albertans from the volatile price swings they saw under the previous government. We will expand our ban of door-to-door energy sales to better protect Albertans from scams, fraud, and bad deals.

Mr. Speaker, we are also helping families who need help the most. Every person in this House can agree that no child should go to school hungry or without the essentials, like a warm coat when it's cold outside. The Alberta child benefit program is one of the most significant antipoverty measures introduced by our government, perhaps one of the most significant in a generation. Budget 2017 continues this benefit, which provides support to Alberta's most vulnerable families and hundreds of thousands of Alberta's children.

Mr. Speaker, Budget 2017 also helps families by keeping our commitment to provide long-term, stable funding for health care. Our health care system must meet the needs of our changing population. This year new investments will be made to better provide health care options in the community, improve home care, and expand mental health services. One in five Albertans is affected by mental health issues, and it is estimated that over 10 per cent of Albertans will need substance use treatment at some point in their lives. Mental health and substance use is the first key area we are focusing on to make community-based health care better for Alberta's families. This includes better co-ordination of services among hospitals, treatment facilities, and the community and ensuring Albertans can get the services they need as close to home as possible.

The same goes for home care. New funding this year will focus on making it safer and more sustainable for seniors to live healthy, independent lives. This will reduce pressures on our hospitals and long-term care facilities while making sure that we are doing everything we can to help seniors remain exactly where they want to be: in their homes.

Just as we are providing stable funding for health care, we are doing the same for education. Mr. Speaker, education is one of the most important investments we can make in our future. In a fast-changing world we owe it to every young Albertan to give them the tools they need to realize their dreams. We are fulfilling our commitment to fund enrolment growth, maintain a stable teacher workforce, and cut fees to make life more affordable. Alberta's kids deserve no less.

Once they graduate from high school, we are making sure that there is a place for them in Alberta's colleges, institutes, and universities. These institutions of learning provide our province with extraordinary economic advantages. They are turning research into new companies and new jobs. They are attracting some of the best talent from around the world, and they contribute to our rich cultural fabric. Most of all, they provide Albertans an opportunity to get a world-class postsecondary education right here at home. Budget 2017 provides for a base operating grant increase to institutions of 2 per cent per year. Providing stable postsecondary funding allows us to increase student loans and freeze tuitions.

Mr. Speaker, we said that we were going to do more to help Alberta's youngest and most vulnerable kids, and that's exactly what Budget 2017 does. This year we'll continue to address long-standing problems in the child intervention system, and we will increase support for front-line workers.

This budget will also take steps to address the historical underfunding of our justice system. Albertans deserve a strong and effective justice system, one they can be confident is keeping their families and communities safe. Building on our over 25 per cent increase in legal aid funding, this year we're addressing long-standing backlogs and staffing pressures by investing new money in Crown prosecution and other areas of our justice system, helping to fulfill the Supreme Court's Jordan decision.

Mr. Speaker, whether it's protecting public services, creating and supporting good jobs, making life more affordable, or bringing down the deficit, Budget 2017 is about staying in the corner of everyday families and making sure we all emerge from this downturn stronger.

The other evening I took a walk through my neighbourhood in Calgary. It's a good neighbourhood: good schools, hockey rinks lit up in the winter, soccer fields bustling in the summer. When there's a big snowstorm, it's the kind of neighbourhood where you can always count on someone coming out of their warm house to help someone whose car got stuck, and in exchange for the help, the only thing anyone ever asks is for that good deed to be paid forward to someone else who needs a hand.

Mr. Speaker, we're all here to do good by our neighbours, our constituents, and each and every one of our fellow Albertans. When someone is out of work or wants to improve their skills, we want to help them by making sure training for a new job is available and affordable.

When a parent flicks that light on beside their child's bed and opens up their favourite bedtime book, we want to help them by making their electricity more affordable. And when that same parent sends their kids off to school, we want to help them by reducing the hundreds and hundreds of dollars in school fees they're forced to pay.

If one of our kids gets hurt on one of those hockey rinks or soccer fields, we want to make sure there's a hospital close by that's well staffed and gets their kids fixed up fast. If a loved one develops Alzheimer's, we want to do everything in our power to make sure they get care that's specialized, highly professional, and that treats them each and every moment with dignity and respect.

While some believe an economic downturn means government should cut and run from things like that, we don't. An economic downturn does not mean that our aging grandparents should get second-class health care. An economic downturn does not mean that people who already make the least should make even less. An economic downturn is not a reason to cram as many kids as possible into a classroom.

As our government has from the beginning, we will maintain our focus on making life better. Budget 2017 builds on that commitment, creating and supporting new jobs, making life more affordable, and protecting the public services Alberta families need. In focusing on making life better for families, it secures a better future for our province.

This budget helps patients get better care. This budget helps parents who want to know their kids are getting the best education possible. This budget makes sure every child, no matter the struggles they face, can have a good meal before school and a warm coat on a cold day.

This budget builds hospitals, schools, affordable homes, and better highways. This budget keeps taxes on families the lowest in Canada, and it makes life more affordable for families across Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, Budget 2017 helps people, and in doing so, it makes life better for Alberta families.

Thank you.

4:00

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. House Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While there will be much debate about the budget, today is not that day, so I would like to move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. Finance minister and President of Treasury Board for his Budget Address.

I will now move that we adjourn the Assembly until 1:30 p.m. on Monday.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:01 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 29th Legislature - 3rd Session (2017)

Activity to Thursday, March 16, 2017

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. [The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Bonjour. Good day. Would you please bow your heads.

Let us reflect or pray, each in our own way. Let us acknowledge the value of human diversity and the importance of all cultures in our country, particularly on this International Francophonie Day. Let us celebrate the riches that the French language and culture have brought to our country and to our province.

Hon. members, ladies and gentlemen, we will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Mr. Robert Clark.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
Il sait porter la croix!
Ton histoire est une épopée
Des plus brillants exploits.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a great friend of mine and a great friend to Alberta, Jason Kenney. On this day it's important to note that he's fluently bilingual, which is an upgrade. Jason was elected leader of our PC Party on the weekend, and he is in your gallery today. I ask him to rise and receive the usual warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you the students, staff, and parents from Delburne school, located on the eastern side of the magnificent riding of Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. We have instructor Derk Unterschultz accompanied by parents James Guynup, Beverly Christensen, Sharleen Klein, and Alison Southworth. If the students, staff, and parents would please rise and accept the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Merci, M. le Président. C'est un grand plaisir pour moi de vous présenter aujourd'hui, à vous et à tous les membres de cette Assemblée, des représentants de la communauté francophone de l'Alberta qui sont avec nous aujourd'hui pour célébrer la Journée Internationale de la Francophonie, le 19ième Rendez-vous de la Francophonie: 40 élèves de l'école Maurice-Lavallée, une école francophone ici à Edmonton, ainsi que leur directrice, Mme Kim St. André-Brady, l'enseignante Chantal Grégoire, et Yic Camara, travailleur en établissement. J'offre à nos invités mes meilleurs vœux pour une agréable célébration, et je leur demande de se lever afin de recevoir l'accueil chaleureux et traditionnel de cette Assemblée.

Merci.

[Translation] In the gallery today are 40 students; the school principal, Kim St. André-Brady; their teacher, Chantal Grégoire; and Yic Camara, settlement officer from l'école Maurice-Lavallée. [As submitted]

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Merci, M. le Président. C'est avec fierté que je me lève à la Chambre aujourd'hui, le jour de la Francophonie, pour introduire 37 étudiants de l'école Earl Buxton elementary. The students are accompanied by their teachers, Mr. Tony Foote and Mrs. Julie Serbinek, along with their chaperone, Dr. Samina Ali. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly representatives from Alberta's French-speaking community who are here today in celebration of Les Rendez-vous de la Francophonie and International Francophonie Day. They are Mr. Leo Piquette, former member of the NDP caucus and Member of the Legislative Assembly for Athabasca-Lac La Biche from 1986 to 1989; Ms Audrey Poitras, president of the Métis Nation of Alberta; Mr. Jean Johnson, president of the Association canadienne-française de l'Alberta; Victoria Wishart, president of the Alberta branch of Canadian Parents for French; Mr. Dicky Dikamba, executive director of Canadian Volunteers United in Action; Ms Aminata Diallo, president of the Calgary Guinean association; and Evelynne Kemajou, co-ordinator of the Portail de l'Immigrant Association de l'Alberta. I would ask them to please receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Miranda: Mr. Speaker, I would also like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the wonderful staff of the Francophone Secretariat who are here today: Cindie LeBlanc, Antonine Bergeron, Rhéal Poirier, Denise Lavallée, and Martin Bouchard. I would ask them to please receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of our Assembly the Professional Association of Resident Physicians of Alberta. With them today is Dr. Hilary Kornder. She is vice-president, leadership and education, on the executive board of the association. I was pleased to meet with her as well as many of her colleagues. Today marks the 10th anniversary of the Resident Physicians in the Legislature event. This year they are advocating specifically for increased awareness of advanced care planning and goals of care designation. They urge all Albertans to discuss this with their primary care providers as well as their families. I ask that the staff and team members from PARA who are here today please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Connolly: Merci, M. le Président. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Alphonse Ahola Ndem, Audrey Poitras, Dulari Prithipaul, Emmanuel Mulumba, and Pierre-Yves Mocquais. I introduce them today to mark International Francophonie Day and to thank them for their invaluable contribution to the community and to Alberta. I invite them now to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

It's also my pleasure to introduce today the MP for Rimouski-Neigette-Témiscouata-Les Basques, Guy Caron. I invite him to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Marie Gaudet. Marie is a proud descendant of one of the first Acadian families to come to North America. She has never forgotten her roots and is always happy to promote the French language and culture in all of its glorious diversity. I would like to thank Marie for her contribution to Sherwood Park and invite her to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly two councillors from Rocky View county. Liz Breakey and Margaret Bahcheli are in Edmonton for the AAMD and C conference. They are two of the most hard-working councillors I've had the privilege of meeting. I'm honoured to call them both colleagues and friends and to work together with them to serve rural Albertans. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very happy to rise today to introduce two people in the public gallery from the great constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford. David Ealey was an issues manager in the communications branch of Alberta environment and sustainable resource development and developed a role of providing support and mentorship to young students coming into that program. He continues to do this now that he's no longer working for the department. Today he's brought one of his mentees with him, Zvonimir Rac. Zvonimir is currently studying public relations at MacEwan University. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other guests today? The Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the House three devoted Albertans and tireless members of the unity campaign: Mr.

Tyler Shandro, Mr. Dan Heath, and Mr. Dan Williams. If I may just add, Tyler is a respected lawyer in the city of Calgary. He's a member of the Calgary Police Commission. He is the president of the Calgary-West constituency association. He is a beloved husband and father and a personal friend. If we could please give them the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Or Children's Services.

The Speaker: I'll try that one.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your indulgence, I would like to introduce three individuals today. It is my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly three members of the Ministerial Panel on Child Intervention. I ask my guests to rise as I call their name. Dr. Peter Choate holds a PhD in addictions and a master of social work. He is an assistant professor of social work at Mount Royal University and a continuing education instructor at the University of Calgary. Bruce MacLaurin holds a master of social work and is a member of the University of Calgary's Faculty of Social Work. He teaches classes on child maltreatment, social work evaluation, and research social work policy related to child and family issues at both the undergraduate and graduate levels. Dr. Patti LaBoucane-Benson has a PhD in human ecology, focusing on aboriginal family and community resilience. Dr. LaBoucane-Benson has worked for Native Counselling Services of Alberta for 21 years and is currently the director of research, training, and communication, providing leadership for research teams undertaking community-based applied research. Dr. LaBoucane-Benson is a proud Métis member in this province as well.

Mr. Speaker, these individuals bring to the table decades of experience working to make lives better for Alberta's children. Their thoughtfulness and caring perspectives contribute greatly to the panel's work. I ask all members to give them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any other guests? Lethbridge-East.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Merci, M. le Président. C'est un grand plaisir pour moi de vous présenter aujourd'hui my two daughters, Selena and Michelle Carter, who are in the gallery. They both are incredible supports to me, and Selena is a constituent. Please give them the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Journée Internationale de la Francophonie

Miranda: Merci, M. le Président. Je suis heureux de me lever en Chambre aujourd'hui et de prendre la parole à l'occasion de la Journée Internationale de la Francophonie. Aujourd'hui, de concert avec les 80 autres états et gouvernements membres de l'Organisation Internationale de la Francophonie, nous célébrons la langue française et les cultures francophones ici en Alberta, partout au Canada et aussi à travers le monde.

À mon arrivée au Canada, je ne parlais ni l'anglais ni le français, mais je me suis engagé à adopter mon nouveau pays, et cela signifiait apprendre les deux langues officielles. Même si ma langue maternelle est l'espagnol, je suis fier de me considérer franco-albertain au cœur, et je suis très fier de partager cette fière tradition linguistique et notre héritage dans notre province.

L'Alberta a fait de grandes avancées pour reconnaître les contributions des Albertains d'expression française et des communautés francophones. Il y a presque 30 ans aujourd'hui que dans cette Chambre Leo Piquette, alors Député d'Athabasca-Lac La Biche, s'est levé pour poser une question en français. Sa question a été rapidement interrompue, mais son audace a néanmoins suscité un débat sur les droits linguistiques des francophones en Alberta.

Les années quatre-vingt et quatre-vingt-dix ont été des décennies importantes pour les droits linguistiques au Canada et en Alberta. Par exemple, à la suite de l'adoption de la Charte canadienne des droits et libertés en 1982, les francophones ont le droit de bénéficier d'une éducation en français langue première financée par la province de même qu'à une gouvernance scolaire francophone.

Aujourd'hui l'Alberta peut se féliciter de compter sur l'un des plus solides programmes de français langue première et de français langue seconde au pays. Un étudiant albertain sur trois est inscrit à un programme en français.

Je voudrais souligner que Leo Piquette a également participé à la promotion de l'éducation francophone dans le cadre de ce mouvement. Plus récemment il a vu son fils, mon honorable ami le député provincial d'Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater, poursuivre son œuvre politique. Les efforts de M. Piquette père se faisaient au nom des communautés francophones, et ils ont rappelé aux Albertains que la diversité, peu importe son origine, a toujours été une réalité dans notre province. Reconnaître et célébrer les langues officielles du Canada et toute notre diversité rend aujourd'hui notre société plus forte et plus riche, ce qui rend la vie meilleure pour tous les Albertains.

Aujourd'hui, que ses membres soient des Franco-Albertains de plusieurs générations, des Québécois, des Acadiens, des descendants métis, ou des nouveaux arrivants en provenance de tous les coins du monde, la population francophone de l'Alberta prospère et continue de croître. Le français demeure la deuxième langue la plus parlée, après l'anglais, et est parlé par plus de 238,000 Albertains.

En tant que ministre responsable du Secrétariat francophone, je suis fier de travailler côte-à-côte avec cette communauté plurielle et dynamique sur une panoplie d'enjeux et d'opportunités. Dans cette optique nous pouvons mentionner le fait que l'Alberta est l'une des deux provinces canadiennes qui n'a pas de politique de services en français. Pour remédier à la situation, nous avons entrepris des consultations communautaires à la fin de l'année dernière, et pour la première fois le gouvernement de l'Alberta poursuit l'élaboration d'une politique en matière de francophonie visant à améliorer l'accès aux services gouvernementaux en français. L'objectif de cette politique est de renforcer l'avantage concurrentiel de l'Alberta, de renforcer nos relations avec la communauté francophone et de tirer parti du financement offert par le gouvernement fédéral.

Au cours du mois de mars Les Rendez-vous de la Francophonie ont offert un important éventail de manifestations culturelles aux communautés d'expression française et ce afin de présenter et de célébrer leur patrimoine. Par exemple, le 3 mars, pour la première fois dans l'histoire de la province, notre gouvernement a procédé au lever du drapeau franco-albertain sur les terrains de la Législature ici à Edmonton et sur ceux du Centre McDougall à Calgary.

M. le Président, j'encourage tous les Albertains d'apprendre davantage au sujet de l'histoire et des contributions de notre Francophonie à bâtir cette province afin de reconnaître tout ce que cette communauté importante, vibrante et culturellement en santé apporte à notre quotidien et de célébrer l'Alberta en français en l'honneur de la Journée Internationale de la Francophonie.

Je vous remercie.

[Translation] Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today on International Francophonie Day. Today, along with the 80 other member states and governments of the International Organization of la Francophonie, we celebrate the French language and francophone cultures here in Alberta, across Canada, and around the world.

When I arrived in Canada, I could not speak English or French, but I was committed to adopting my new country, and that meant learning the two official languages. Even though my mother tongue is Spanish, I am proud to consider myself Franco-Albertan in my heart, and I am very proud to share this great linguistic tradition and heritage in our province.

Alberta has come a long way in recognizing the contributions of French-speaking Albertans and francophone communities. It was almost 30 years ago today that in this very Chamber Leo Piquette, then the MLA for Athabasca-Lac La Biche, rose to ask a question in French. His question was cut short, but his effort nevertheless touched off a debate on language rights for francophones in Alberta.

The '80s and '90s were important decades for language rights in Canada and in Alberta. For example, as a result of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms in 1982, francophones have the right to publicly funded French first-language education and the right to francophone governance. Today Alberta can pride itself on having one of the strongest French first-language and French as a second language education programs in the country. One in three students in Alberta is enrolled in a French-language program.

I should point out that Leo Piquette was also involved in championing francophone education as part of this movement. More recently he has seen his son Colin carry on his legacy in provincial politics as the Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater. While the elder Mr. Piquette's efforts were on behalf of francophone communities, they reminded Albertans that diversity of all types has always been a fact of life in our society. Recognizing and celebrating the official languages of Canada and this diversity makes our society stronger and richer today, which, in turn, makes life better for all Albertans.

Today, whether its members are Franco-Albertans of several generations, Québécois, Acadians, Métis descendants, or newcomers to Alberta from all corners of the world, Alberta's French-speaking population is thriving and continues to grow. French remains the second most spoken language after English and is spoken by more than 238,000 Albertans.

As minister responsible for the Francophone Secretariat I am proud to work with this diverse and vibrant community on wide-ranging issues and opportunities. Among those is the fact that Alberta remains one of two provinces in Canada without a French-language services policy. To remedy this, we undertook community consultations late last year, and for the first time the Alberta government is moving forward in developing a French policy to help improve access to government services in French. The aim is to enhance Alberta's competitive advantage, strengthen our relationship with the francophone community, and leverage Alberta's fair share of francophone funding from the federal government.

The month of March has seen an exciting array of cultural events called Les Rendez-vous de la Francophonie, an opportunity for French-speaking communities throughout the province to showcase and celebrate their heritage. For example, on March 3 our government, for the first time in the province's history, raised the Franco-Albertan flag on the Legislature Grounds here in Edmonton and in front of McDougall Centre in Calgary. It has flown in these places of honour for the entire month of March. It is an important recognition of the historic presence of French culture and language in our province.

Mr. Speaker, I encourage Albertans to learn more about the history and contribution of our Francophonie to the building of this province to recognize all that this important, vibrant, and culturally alive community brings to our way of life and to celebrate Alberta en français in honour of the Journée Internationale de la Francophonie, International Francophonie Day.

Thank you. [As submitted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Aujourd'hui c'est la Journée Internationale de la Francophonie, où nous célébrons notre patrimoine canadien-français. C'est un patrimoine qui ne serait pas le même sans nos frères et nos sœurs français.

French was the first of the European languages spoken in our great province. Many of our communities were named by French missionaries, including Lacombe, Lac La Biche, Bonnyville, Legal, and many others. These towns were established in part to entrench French language and culture in the west. Today French is the mother tongue of over 80,000 Albertans. While approximately 238,000 speak the language, more than 390,000 Albertans are French descendants. This puts Alberta as the third-largest francophone population in Canada.

Le 22 mars commence la célébration des Rendez-vous de la Francophonie, qui met l'accent sur les contributions que les francophones ont apporté à leurs communautés.

The official flag of the Alberta francophone community includes Albertan and francophone symbolism and combines the delicate but resilient wild rose with the light and life of the fleur-de-lys.

J'encourage tout le monde à participer à des événements dans leur communauté pour honorer et célébrer notre patrimoine francophone. Je suis fière de pouvoir parler cette belle langue, d'avoir cela dans mon patrimoine et de pouvoir le transmettre à mes beaux enfants.

Je vous remercie.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker. I would request unanimous consent of the House to allow the leader or designate of the third party and the other independent members to respond to the ministerial statement.

The Speaker: The leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, members. It's an honour to rise today on behalf of the Progressive Conservative caucus to acknowledge International Francophonie Day and the contributions from the francophone community to our province and indeed all of Canada. From St. Paul and Bonnyville to Beaumont and many other communities across this great province Alberta francophones have helped build this province for hundreds of years.

The Progressive Conservative caucus understands that our province thrives best when we work closely with all communities like the francophones in Alberta to add to our cultural mosaic, although they are at the core of our cultural mosaic. That is why the previous government was proud to establish the Francophone Secretariat to act as a liaison between the provincial government and the community. Since 1999 the role of the Francophone Secretariat has been to advocate for grant funding, public education, and vital information for the French community.

Moving forward, this caucus will encourage the provincial government to continue supporting this important initiative. Even centuries after French explorers made the voyage to what is now Alberta, the community continues to grow, and we are seeing an increase in our bilingual population. Over 81,000 Albertans speak French as their mother tongue, and nearly 240,000 are bilingual. As world-wide markets continue to become more globalized, it's critical to fund bilingual programs and train our province's future leaders to represent Alberta on a global scale.

Mr. Speaker, on International Francophonie Day we're proud to look back on the contribution made by Alberta's French community to our culture and economy that has truly helped build our province, but we also look forward to this continued partnership that we all benefit from.

M. le Président, au nom du Parti Progressiste-Conservateur je suis tellement fier de vous dire: vive la Francophonie Albertaine.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Merci, M. le Président. C'est mon honneur de me lever aujourd'hui, la Journée Internationale de la Francophonie, which we celebrate every March 20 in commemoration of the 1979 Nîmes convention, where French-speaking states aligned their mutual interests. The Organisation Internationale de la Francophonie brings together 84 member states and governments from five continents, representing approximately 1 billion inhabitants, including 274 million francophones.

Now, francophones first came to Alberta in the 1780s as part of the fur trade. Today francophones are descendants from the Québécois, Acadians, and, of course, the Métis peoples. They have passed down their identity, their culture, and their language through the generations, and Alberta is much stronger for it. Many people don't know that until the 1870s, French was the primary European language spoken here in Alberta. Today the contribution of francophone Albertans remains strong, with approximately 85,000 Albertans claiming French as their first language and a further 240,000 being bilingual. Well, perhaps that's 240,000 and a half, as you will soon find out that my French is not quite good enough to be considered fully bilingual. But my daughters are taking French immersion in Alberta's tremendous public school system, and they have taught me a great deal. Alberta's francophone community is remarkably diverse, with over 10,000 newcomers of francophone descent from Africa, Asia, and the Middle East who call Alberta home.

Mais étant que la Francophonie est une mode de vie, c'est une culture distincte et une identité. C'est une famille et une aide composée que nous sommes comme des Canadiens et des Albertains et la nation de Métis. Elles sont des parties importantes de l'Alberta, et nous sommes les meilleurs pour cela.

Merci beaucoup.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I would request unanimous consent of the House to continue with the Routine until its completion.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Jean: The Premier says that her budget provides a steady hand. Well, here's what a steady hand from an NDP government looks like: a slumping economy; a $10.3 billion deficit; $71 billion in provincial debt, where every single household in Alberta owes $60,000; and, to top it all off, a carbon tax in the midst of one of the deepest economic downturns our province has ever seen that just keeps getting things more and more expensive. How is strangling growth, taxing families, and plummeting our province into debt a steady hand?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Let me just say that our government refuses to sacrifice our children's future by forcing them into overcrowded classrooms, so we are funding enrolment, and we are building 24 new schools. We refuse to leave seniors who need care to languish on waiting lists, so we're funding health care, and we're building a new long-term care centre in Calgary. I refuse to hold our economy hostage by letting infrastructure crumble, so we're building a new bridge to Fort Saskatchewan and putting people to work while we do that. We're building our province. They want to tear it down.

Mr. Jean: The fact is that this Premier and her cabinet are living in a fantasy world. In their world raising people's heating and gas bills and making Alberta less competitive is good for Albertans, and in their world Alberta can drive our balance sheet off a cliff with zero consequences. But that's not reality. Moody's and DBRS are warning that this NDP budget will lead to more credit downgrades. That means billions more being siphoned away from hospitals and schools, that are so important to Albertans, so that the NDP can pay back the big banks. Does no one over there realize that this is a budget crisis?

Ms Notley: Well, speaking of billions, Mr. Speaker, here's what the opposition proposes to do. They promise to cut $10 billion in funding from hospitals, schools, and roads. Why do they want to do that? So they can pay for tax giveaways at the very top. That means no new hospital in Edmonton, no cancer centre in Calgary, and no new schools. The opposition wants Albertans to set their sights lower. Our government wants to help Albertans move forward and do even better.

Mr. Jean: None of that is true, Mr. Speaker. But this is true: "I believe that this 15 per cent limit will not be breached." That was, of course, the Finance minister just a year and a half ago. Now Alberta is set to hit a 20 per cent ratio. Once debt free, soon we will have a higher debt burden than British Columbia. It means $2.3 billion in annual interest payments that is not going to hire teachers or nurses as we need but to big banks. With more downgrades it will make it even more difficult for things to get back to balance. Why can't the Premier admit her government has a spending problem?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, on this side of the House we're building up Alberta. We're building up Alberta. On that side of the House they want to tear Alberta down. What they want to do is raise tuition fees, raise school fees, raise energy bills. You know, if they're so concerned about our finances, why is it that they want to give $600 million in giveaways to people who are struggling on $300,000 a year or more?

The Speaker: Second main question.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, here is how a credit downgrade works. It makes it more expensive to borrow. That means higher interest payments for everybody. That's money that doesn't even go to paying off the debt but just to keeping creditors happy. It hurts the ability for our province to tell the world that we are open for business and that we are a safe place to invest. That's what Alberta should be about. But it means fewer jobs, fewer services, and higher taxes for Albertans. This is shameful. When will the Premier clue in and get us off this budget meltdown?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, here is how cutting $2 billion out of our operating expenses works. It means eliminating the whole child protection ministry. It means cutting the entire seniors ministry. It means getting rid of the Justice department. It is time for a realistic evaluation of what Alberta needs to go forward. We are a government that is supporting Alberta families, and we are proud to do that.

Mr. Jean: Well, here are a few easy ideas on how to save money and support Albertans. How about using the private sector to do linen services in Alberta instead of the government? The government can go ahead and cut the carbon tax – that would help – and the billions in green slush money that she wants to spend, billions and billions. Finally, how about not wasting billions on a job-killing coal shutdown and suing Alberta power companies? That not only saves taxpayers money, but instead of destroying communities in the province, it will actually save jobs. These ideas would help the budget and create jobs. What a concept. Why won't the Premier do any of them as we ask?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, what we are doing is investing in Alberta and investing in Albertans and investing in Alberta jobs. We are doing it through an ambitious capital plan, which is going to build the Calgary cancer centre, something that they would cut; build a new hospital in Edmonton, something that they would cut; build 24 new schools across the province, something that they wouldn't do. As a result of that, Albertans have paid for that year after year after year. The time for that kind of backward thinking is over. We are moving Albertans forward.

Mr. Jean: The fact is that the NDP jobs plan has been a total disaster; 81,000 full net jobs – it's ridiculous, Mr. Speaker – have disappeared since this government took power. Household incomes last year plummeted by thousands of dollars, and this budget is just one more of the same failed policies. We should be doing better right now, but we're not. NDP policies are strangling Alberta's potential, growth is almost nonexistent, and the budget is bathed in red ink. The Premier's plan has failed Albertans. When will she start to get some common sense and change course? Go in a different direction, Premier.

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know that Albertans are struggling because of the drop in the international price of oil. We know that it is not something we can control, but what we can control is how we respond to that crisis. So we've invested in Alberta, and since June 19,000 new jobs have been created in Alberta. We will continue to support Albertans because we have their backs. [interjections]

The Speaker: Folks.

I could try and give the requests in French, but that would be very painful for you, so let's keep it down because that's the next station I'll go to.

The third main question.

Mr. Jean: Merci. When a family sits down to pay their bills, they look at how much money they have coming in and how much they need to go back out for bills, their mortgage, and other expenses. Alberta families understand that when times are tough, they need to find a way to shave down expenses where they can. Well, by the time the NDP are done, they will have increased spending in Alberta by $9 billion annually. How on earth is this bending the curve and showing some restraint?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I reject the numbers that the member opposite is putting forward, but what I will say is that we will not make drastic, unthought-out, dramatic cuts that will hurt Albertans. We are going to make life better for Alberta families. We are focusing on creating jobs, we are focusing on making life more affordable, and we are focusing on protecting those important public services that support Albertans day in and day out because, as I've said before, we have Albertans' backs.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, the Premier is not the only one that's rejecting the numbers; Albertans are, too, and the NDP should get spending under control.

Although the NDP tried to stuff it away in their budget, the fact is that taxes are still going up this year big time. The carbon tax has already raised the cost of gas, fuel, and groceries, and with the NDP it's going to go up another 50 per cent this year and continue to increase until it costs a typical household $2,500 or more per year. Why is the government misleading Albertans by claiming that there are no tax hikes in this year's budget?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, as you know, what that plan actually did is that it succeeded in getting Alberta something that the fellows over there could not make happen for over a decade. Our climate leadership plan is entirely related to how we got not one but two pipelines approved, the very pipelines that are going to bring jobs back to Alberta and put those families back to work.

Mr. Jean: The NDP keep showing how out of touch they are with families across this great province. Bringing in a carbon tax isn't affordable. Raising the price of that carbon tax definitely isn't making life more affordable for Albertans, and running a government that has raised taxes, capped growth on our oil sands, and mortgaged future generations at dangerous levels of borrowing isn't helping either. These policies are very bad news for Albertans and Albertans long term. When will the Premier finally give them a break?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll tell you what makes life more affordable for Albertans: dropping their school fees by 25 per cent, freezing tuition rates, and putting a cap on energy prices. Each one of those things the folks over there would have rejected and would undo. Albertans don't want that. They want to stick with our affordability.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

School Fees

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, the NDP has profiled their incompetence once more in the form of Bill 1, where they're actually legislating their failure to deliver on an election promise, as they will reduce school fees not by 100 per cent as promised but only 25. They claim they have found efficiencies in the Ministry of Education. I have not yet found in the budget any funds to make the school boards whole once they can no longer collect these fees. To the Minister of Education: why are you penalizing school boards, who will now have to cut in other areas, disadvantaging the very children you claim to help in order to make cheap political points?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, it is true that we are only reducing school fees by 25 per cent, but that's because year after year after year after year, 44 years, the previous government allowed Alberta to develop the highest school fees in the country. They ignored people saying that school fees were out of control. They thought it made perfect sense to make hard-working families pay more for their public education. Our government took action. Our government said: no more. I think Albertans are probably pretty happy about that.

Mr. McIver: No answer for school boards, as expected.

Mr. Speaker, according to the NDP any discussion by previous governments around efficiency they have said meant laying off teachers and nurses. Now they claim to have found efficiencies. They can't have it both ways. I would like to ask the minister to give the real story. How many teachers or essential personnel will you be laying off, or if no layoffs, what will you be forcing school boards to shortchange Alberta kids by?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was so proud to table Bill 1. Certainly, the hon. member can choose to not, you know, vote for that same Bill 1 if he wants to, but if passed, it will put real reductions in school fees, which will help school boards and parents as well because it is a perennial problem that school boards have these fees. They tried their best over the years, but they did not have long-term, stable funding from the government. Now they do. Now we're working together to make life better for Albertans.

Mr. McIver: Oh, Mr. Speaker, we'll support the decrease. It's still a broken promise, and they still haven't answered the question, so I will ask it a third time. To the minister: isn't it time to tell Alberta school boards the truth for a change? Since you're not really making them whole from the fees they can no longer collect, what services will Alberta children now have to do without so that the NDP can have one good media day at children's expense?

Mr. Eggen: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, it's not just about media days and so forth; it's about making life better for regular Albertans, and that's what we have been doing day in and day out, and school boards have been behind this. Parent groups have been behind it as well. Albertans know that the school fees were too darn high. We're here to clean it up because – you know what? – there was a big mess to clean up after this previous government not funding long-term, stable funding for education. Now we're doing so, and I'm pretty darn proud of that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Mental Health Patient Advocate

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Mental Health Patient Advocate's office was established in 1995 to protect patients' rights and improve the mental health system. Since 1990 the advocate's work has increased exponentially, but the resources have not. In fact, it went from being an independent office with its own budget to recently being rolled into the Alberta Health Advocate's office and sharing its funds. To the Minister of Health: if the government truly values mental health and rejects stigma and protects patients' rights, why does it keep shortchanging the mental health advocate's office?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I look forward to having an opportunity to engage in full budget discussions. One of the things that I'm so proud to make sure that everyone knows is that we've more than tripled the investment to make sure that addictions and mental health are addressed properly as we move forward. I'm incredibly proud of that. It's my understanding that at a specific point in time following the floods in southern Alberta that office was created, but there have been considerations of how best to serve the people, and I look forward to having opportunities to continue that dialogue with hon. members.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In her previous annual report the advocate said:

The past year posed challenges to fulfill our legislative mandate in a timely manner . . . largely due to the loss of a position along with the Government . . . restraint measures. It had a direct impact on the number of Albertans we served and the comprehensiveness of our investigations.

As a result, the office was unable to conduct a single formal investigation of a patient complaint. To the minister: do you not see that chronic underfunding of this important office is causing it to fail to live up to its mandate?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Just to follow up on a piece of the earlier question, funding for the mental health advocate in Budget 2017 is consistent with last year. In fact, the advocate has been appointed on an interim basis during the recruitment process for a new person to fill that role. Our government is very committed to ensuring that Albertans are able to access the mental health supports that they need, regardless of where they live in our province. To that end, we've committed more than $5.6 million in new operating funds towards implementing the recommendations of the mental health review in addition to the funding that has been included to address the substance use crisis in our province.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, the truth is that the mental health advocate speaks for mental health patients who are not happy with the way that the system is working. Mergers seem to be the rage these days. Now even the NDP is getting into the act. When Carol Robertson Baker finished her term as mental health advocate, the government didn't replace her; instead, the Minister of Health has simply merged the mental health and the Health Advocate, as I indicated. Apparently the government has no intention of empowering this office, which is odd given the increased complexity and the increased volume of cases we are now dealing with, especially with the opiate crisis. Clearly, the advocate needs independence and an increased budget . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to reiterate my answer from the last question. Currently the mental health advocate role is being combined with the Health Advocate on an interim basis. We are in the process of an open recruiting process, and we look forward to hiring a new person for that role. Frankly, we know that that is an important role within the system, and we continue to look for other ways that we can expand access to all Albertans. You know what? The only way that we can get there is by continuing to work together to increase funding for mental health.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Calgary-Hawkwood.

Health Services for Transgender and Gender-diverse Albertans

Connolly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Metta clinic in Calgary was created as a pilot project in 2014 to provide trans and gender-diverse youth in the Calgary area with comprehensive health care and provide the care that these youth need in order to live happy, healthy lives. Since its creation wait-list times have risen from nine months to nearly three years. To the Associate Minister of Health: what are you doing to ensure that our youth have access to these invaluable services?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for this question. This past January I had the opportunity to meet with the member as well as Lindsay Peace and her son Ace. Ace came out as transgender at the age of 14, and their family had made use of the medical services available at the Metta clinic. As they shared their story, they described the clinic as a supportive and vital resource. The clinic's mandate is to provide multidisciplinary assessment and consultation to transgendered youth in Calgary and in southern Alberta, with specialists from psychiatry, adolescent medicine, and endocrinology being brought together to find an allied and co-ordinated approach to care for transgendered youth.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Connolly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the wait times for the Metta clinic continue to rise and given that the continued operation of the clinic is essential to ensure trans and gender-diverse youth are kept safe and healthy, to the same minister: what is the government doing to ensure the Metta clinic moves from a pilot program to a permanent program?

The Speaker: The associate minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government is committed to the very critical services provided by the Metta clinic. Since its opening the Metta clinic has seen more than 60 patients and has received over 200 referrals. We know that these services save lives and that timely access is critical to youth, particularly as they approach puberty. I've asked AHS to bring forward options for improving access to these kinds of services, and we expect their recommendations on the next step to be brought forward later this spring. Outside of the clinic, we're also looking to expand service for transgendered youth depending on their needs, including service through family physicians, endocrinologists, and mental health services.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Connolly: Given that many trans and gender-diverse people have difficulty accessing health care due to transphobia and misinformation within the health care system and given that trans and gender-diverse individuals often need more medical attention in their lifetime than their cis counterparts, what is the minister doing to help educate doctors and nurses within the health care system about LGBTQ-plus issues?

The Speaker: The associate minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the very important question. Albertans from the LGBTQ-plus community deserve to have access to care in safe, inclusive, and respectful settings. Our government is working to make life better by including protection for transgender Albertans through changes to the Human Rights Act. Additionally, we're attending to this at every level, from the front line to policy. Alberta Health offers regular training for its staff on LGBTQ-plus issues, and we're continually looking for ways to be more inclusive and supportive, working with our partners such as the College of Physicians & Surgeons, who've recently launched new training programs in this area.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, we all know the guy: the rich kid who was given a brand new car and a credit card before he had to work for any of it. To him, wealth was something inherited or taken, not something that had to be worked for or earned. Soon he maxes out the credit card, and someone else has to pay. That guy now has Alberta's credit card, and on the spending bender he intends to triple Alberta's debt to $71 billion in just two years. The first step to recovery is admitting that you have a problem. Will the Finance minister admit that he's a spendaholic?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, our government works very hard every day to put Albertans back to work. We're committed to putting businesses back in business and Albertans back to work. People with jobs pay taxes, and people who pay taxes can afford health care and education. The reckless cuts of billions of dollars proposed by this opposition will jeopardize the economic recovery before it even has a chance to get started.

Mr. Fildebrandt: The Minister of Finance should stand and answer for himself, Mr. Speaker.

Last week the Wildrose laid out our plan to cut taxes, reduce spending, and balance the budget. When the government released their budget last week, I said that not only do the NDP not have a credible plan to balance the budget; they have no intention of ever balancing the budget. When asked about this on the radio, the minister said: well, they don't have any plan either. Does the minister admit that he has NDP: no darn plan?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, quite frankly, it's the Wildrose that is proposing reckless cuts that would jeopardize our economic recovery before it even has a chance to take root, putting thousands of Albertans out of work and jeopardizing our health care, our education, the hiring of police officers, teachers, nurses, doctors. That party over there would cut that, and it would hurt Alberta, Albertans, and hurt our economy.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Rats.

When the NDP repealed . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, there are no preambles on supplementals.

Mr. Fildebrandt: When the NDP repealed their own meagre debt cap of 15 per cent of GDP, we warned that this would lead to a credit downgrade. The NDP claimed that we were being Chicken Little. Well, the sky might not be falling, but our credit rating sure is. To date we have had four credit downgrades. Moody's and DBRS have now issued new warnings that the NDP's budget could risk yet another credit downgrade. Will the minister pick up the scissors, cut up the credit card, and go to credit counselling, or does he need an intervention?

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I assume that the hon. member is not happy with the answer, and that's why he said "rats." I sure hope that that's the case.

But I want to tell the hon. member that the best way to build the economy in this province is not to lay off hundreds and thousands of teachers, nurses, police officers. The best way to rebuild this economy is to stimulate it, to put people back to work and help our businesses be successful, something that that party doesn't want.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Government Spending and Job Creation

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year at this time this NDP government unveiled Budget 2016. They called it the Alberta jobs plan, and it came with $11 billion of debt. The Finance minister introduced it with these words. "Above all, the Alberta jobs plan . . . creates thousands of jobs." Back then Alberta's unemployment rate was 7.4 per cent; today it's 8.3 per cent. So much for job creation. To the Finance minister: why did the Alberta jobs plan fail to create any jobs?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll take this opportunity to inform the hon. member that our jobs plan is working. If we look, since July over 19,000 full-time jobs have been created. The Conference Board of Canada, the TD Bank, and numerous banks have forecast that Alberta is set to grow at a rate higher than any province across the country, a rate of 2.7 per cent for this year and for next year. And you know why? We've got two pipelines and an infrastructure program through our capital budget that are going to help put thousands of Albertans . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Gill: Only the NDP would take 10 jobs away and get two back.

Given that last year's ironically named Alberta jobs plan racked up $11 billion in debt and that the result of all their spending was a further spike in unemployment and that Budget 2017 racks up at a minimum another $10.3 billion in debt and given that more than 200,000 Albertans are seeking work, 24,000 more than last year at this very time, including devastating unemployment in Calgary and other communities, Minister, what is your specific target for Alberta's unemployment rate a year from now? The real number.

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I want to say that our government recognizes the impact of the sustained drop in the world price of oil and the impact it's having on Alberta businesses and Alberta families. That is exactly why we introduced the Alberta jobs plan, exactly why we are investing in infrastructure, where both opposition parties would cut. It's not just about cutting schools and roads and bridges; it's about the tens of thousands of Albertans that they would put out of work, making the problem worse. We are making life better for Alberta families, and we're going to continue to do that.

Mr. Gill: Lots of excuses for this fail, Minister.

Given that the Premier and her ministers keep insisting that, quote, they have the backs of Albertans, unquote, and given that through this government's inability to curtail spending, Albertans will by the end of the NDP's only term carry well over $70 billion worth of debt on their backs, Premier, just how strong are the backs of Albertans? Do you think they can carry $100 billion, $150 billion, $200 billion? Is there even a limit?

The Speaker: I want to remind hon. members: no preambles on supplementary questions. This last time you did two of them.

The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We know that Alberta families deserve a government that's got their back, and that's exactly why we've put in caps to make sure that electricity rates don't continue to hit the roof like they did under that party. That's why we put in a freeze on tuition, because under the former government it kept going higher and higher and higher. We know the opposition wants to jack up fees and make life more expensive for Alberta families. We're standing with them, and we are honouring the contracts that those guys negotiated, that now they want us to break. I have to say that their criticism is pretty rich.

Health Care Wait Times in Central Alberta

Mr. Orr: Mr. Speaker, compared to everywhere else in Alberta, surgery cancellations in central Alberta are incredibly high. Red Deer hospital has triple the cancellations compared to the second-worst hospital. Red Deer had 325 cancellations, almost 10 times as many as the third-place hospital, and thousands of times higher than most others. Central region cancellations make up almost half of the total surgeries postponed in the entire province. We have asked for outcomes to change. The minister accuses us of asking for more money. What will the minister do to actually fix surgical outcomes in central Alberta?

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I've had the opportunity to visit the Red Deer hospital, and I have to say that I commend the staff for their diligent work in making sure that they are taking care of patients and patient needs first. I want to remind everyone that during construction at the hospital last year, there was a flood that impacted emergency rooms and required some of those surgeries to be moved elsewhere, and that's because nothing is going to stand between patient safety and this government. We're always going to make sure that we have the backs of Alberta families, and we're working to make their lives better. Members opposite want us to bring forward deep, rash cuts. We're not going to do that. We're going to make sure that we're working thoughtfully, finding efficiencies, protecting Alberta families, and addressing wait times across the province.

Mr. Orr: Given that we have asked for a report that would immediately act to reduce surgical wait times for patients who are suffering and given that no explanation has been granted as to why central Alberta health outcomes are so far below the rest of the province – those who are having life-altering surgeries postponed are not having their days brightened by free light bulbs – if the government cannot tell us how they are going to fix the problem, can the minister at least tell us what metrics they are examining to identify the problem with surgical wait times in central Alberta?

Ms Hoffman: I get that the members opposite like to spend their time watching movies, Mr. Speaker, and identifying matrixes and matrices and where they want to land on those, but where we want to land is on moving Alberta families forward and having their backs. That's why we are building eight new youth detox beds right in Red Deer. That's why we've added a new, state-of-the-art MRI in Red Deer. That's why we're investing $9.7 million in the extension of the obstetrics unit in Red Deer. The members opposite want to cut all of that. We're not going to let that happen. We're standing up for all Albertans, including the people living in Red Deer.

Mr. Orr: Given that wait times in other parts of the health care system are also failing, such as the requirement that seniors be placed in continuing care facilities within 30 days – recent data reveals that the 30-day limitation is being exceeded – it would seem that this is a systemic problem. The NDP have had two years to create solutions, yet we see a continuing downward spiral in placing seniors within the 30-day period. What is the NDP doing to ensure that seniors are in fact placed in care within the 30-day limit?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the opportunity to highlight the fact that we are on track to meet our 2,000-bed commitment to make sure that Albertans can age in communities throughout our province. Thank you so much for the opportunity to highlight that we're investing in 550 long-term care beds in Budget 2017 alone. Thank you so much for giving me the opportunity to highlight that we know that the members opposite have no intention of investing in health and education. All they can say is: cut, cut, cut. Instead, Albertans have elected a government that's got their back, that's going to stand up for their right to age in community and have a quality of life, unlike the members opposite.

Castle Parks Management Plan

Mr. Stier: Mr. Speaker, when the minister announced the creation of the Castle provincial park and the wildland provincial park in 2015, there wasn't any open, public consultation and the announcement was poorly communicated. Fast forward to January 2017 and the release of the parks' new draft management plan: again, no open, public consultation other than a heavily weighted survey. Minister, why didn't you consult with the general public before implementing these drastic changes?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, in the intervening 16 months between the announcement of the creation of the park and the release of the draft plan in January we spoke with ranchers, we spoke with municipalities, we spoke with those involved in the enforcement community, we spoke with the off-highway vehicle community, and we spoke with campers, hikers, fishermen, hunters, and others. We came to a draft management plan. Now, we are very proud that we are moving forward with protection of headwaters for southern Alberta. We are proud that we are moving forward with high-quality outdoor experiences for all Albertans to be able . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Stier: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure that that's totally true.

Given that the September 2015 announcement included random camping as an allowable permitted use but the 2017 announcement pulled out the rug and overturned that promise, to the minister: where, beyond a few so-called rustic group spots, will all the hundreds of random campers who want to experience the beauty of southern Alberta now go?

Ms Phillips: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member had also listened to his own constituents, the grazing lease holders, the municipalities in his constituency, he would have heard that there are many, many instances where due to the actions of the previous government unregulated, improperly enforced use of the land was conflicting with those trying to make a livelihood; that is, the grazing lease holders. We have responded, and we will proceed thoughtfully and carefully and actually invest in that area, unlike the previous government.

Mr. Stier: Mr. Speaker, once again this government is failing to consult on its decisions.

Given that the 2015 announcement included a promise that OHVs would maintain their access to approved trails and given that the January 2017 announcement revealed a new plan to phase out OHV use entirely and given that on March 10 the government disclosed a new new plan for OHV users to move to the Porcupine Hills, will the minister admit she made a mistake when she tried to bulldoze ahead with this ill-conceived plan before consulting the people first?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, what we have heard over many months was that years of inaction on enforcement and cuts, in fact, to the enforcement budgets by the PCs have left a number of conflicts on the landscape. They have left a situation where hunters did not have the access that they once did, where families could not fish in ways they used to be able to. We have a situation where we have a decline in our fish populations. We have a number of species at risk in that area. We are listening to municipalities, who would like us to increase enforcement and increase our planning. We are listening to grazing lease holders. We are listening to the Alberta Beef Producers and . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Emergency Medical Service Funding

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, the government has been very critical of the opposition in this House, saying that we would cut front-line services if we were allowed to exercise some spending restraint. Of course, this is false. Our caucus values the important work that is done by front-line staff. However, it appears that this government is less genuine in their commitment to front-line health staff as their budget cuts funding for emergency medical services by $17 million. Minister, why was the funding cut for such a crucial front-line health service?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the opportunity to clarify the record. There are a number of areas where there have been ambulances that have been paid off in the province, so amortization. It's good. Ambulances are paid in full, and that's good news. There are a number of other areas where AHS believes they can see some efficiencies. I want to make it very clear to the member opposite and to all members that I've made it very clear that this cannot happen at the impact of front lines, so we're making sure that we're protecting front-line workers, who, in turn, protect all Albertans.

Mr. Fraser: Given the work that this government has done on the Health Professions Act for EMS, the work that I've praised this government for undertaking, and given that some of the progress made under this act will be threatened if there is a lack of resources for EMS, to the same minister: how can the minister provide any assurance that this cut won't affect resources for EMS and the paramedics dealing with posttraumatic stress syndrome and other complications stemming from the already out-of-control call volume?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much. I want to thank the member for bringing up some of the very good work that's been done in the past, including what we did around moving Quarry Park to make sure that we're able to find those efficiencies, Mr. Speaker. I have to say that I show up to work every day working to make life better for Alberta families, and that's one of the reasons why we've made it very clear to AHS that we will not see contractions to the front lines and to the work that's being done diligently to make sure that EMS is there where and when Albertans need it. I know members opposite are pushing for billions of dollars in cuts in areas that would impact the front lines. We're not going to do that. We're going to make sure that we stand up for Alberta families and that we improve wait times.

Mr. Fraser: Given that emergency medical service is such a crucial front-line service and that when you add in the fentanyl crisis, weekly code reds in our major cities, high call acuity, and rising PTSD claims for paramedics that are already being pushed to the brink – cutting $17 million from their budget would axe 11 ambulances and their staff – Minister, you can't possibly believe that this is in alignment with Alberta's priorities, or can you?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much for the question. Again, I just want to reiterate that I asked: how exactly are we going to make sure that this doesn't impact Albertans and the care that they require? The response, I have to say, was very assuring. It was around making sure that those ambulances were paid off and finding other efficiencies like we have through the dispatch in Quarry Park, Mr. Speaker. So this is good news.

I also want to provide my assurances to everyone who works in an ambulance as well as to the member opposite that I made it very clear that these savings, if they are achievable, cannot be achieved on the backs of front-line workers, including dispatchers and those who are working in ambulances. AHS believes that there is some more additional room, but they have assured me that they will not impact the front lines.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

GenA Youth Employment Program

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, everyone. Alberta's youth workers have a history of facing high barriers in the workforce, especially during difficult economic times. Given that youth today are facing higher unemployment and given that the long-term effects of lost wages negatively impact their future earnings, to the Minister of Labour: what is the government doing to help youth in this province secure good jobs?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We have heard from young Albertans that they do need support getting into the workplace, and that's why we were pleased to announce a two-year pilot project with GenA and Prospect Human Services. This is a project that will help young Albertans have success in the job market and help employers connect with the best and the brightest. This follows our successful STEP program, that we reinstated after it was cancelled by the previous government.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very happy to hear about the GenA program specifically targeting young Albertans.

Given that lost wages have economic impacts on many levels, to the same minister: how many young Albertans have benefited from this strategy, and how many more will stay in or enter the workforce through this program?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This program launched only last month and already has helped nearly a hundred young workers find or retain a job. GenA will help more than 1,200 young Albertans get that all-important first job. It will connect 200 employers with talented young prospective employees. As GenA client Aaron Peecheemow recently said: "The GenA Employment Placement Specialist (EPS) was essential in helping me with my current unemployment situation. The EPS was invaluable in helping to fine-tune my resume and find work. Needless to say, I got the job."

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Labour: given that social media and technology have changed how youth communicate, how will your ministry ensure that young Albertans are aware of this program?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. By partnering with Prospect Human Services on GenA, we're working with a successful organization that has a track record of getting young people into the workforce. Albertans in the Calgary or Edmonton regions between the ages of 18 to 30 are able to get career guidance and placement assistance through this program. That being said, I would encourage all members of this House to point their constituents to this important tool. More information is available at gena.works.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

2:40 Energy Industry Reclamation Costs

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Lately there has been a lot in the news about the problems of orphaned wells in Alberta. The orphan well fund is funded by oil companies, as it should be. Lately there have been hints by both federal and provincial governments for programs which would basically amount to a taxpayer subsidy of the oil companies. To the Minister of Energy: what programs are you contemplating, and will tax-paying Albertans be footing that bill?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. We continue to work with the federal government on this. Our plan is to create jobs and tackle a long-standing environmental problem. Previous governments did not tackle this and sat back and admired the problem. Our current plan is to work with industry, work with the federal government, and come up with a plan that's going to fix this problem.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It sounds like another cost to Albertan taxpayers.

Given that last week the minister refused to provide Albertans with an answer about why she hasn't done anything about the doubling of the liability management ratio that the AER imposed in June 2016 as a stopgap measure and given also that this measure reduces asset liquidity and thereby contributes to the problem of orphaned wells, to the Minister of Energy: why haven't you accomplished anything on this important file? It's been nearly a year.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Again, thank you for the question. As I mentioned before, we are working with industry and we're working with our federal partners to do a holistic plan for this issue, that has been left for a long time. Traditionally we've had a polluter-pay or duty-to-reclaim policy, and we're continuing with that. Our plan is going to make life better for Albertans by creating more jobs and also in tackling this environmental problem.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Given that Alberta has some measure of an orphan well fund and given that the government is pushing forth renewables projects with little thought of ramifications and given that the government has voted down our amendment to create an equivalent reclamation fund for these projects, again to the minister: who will be saddled with the reclamation costs should these renewables projects fail, as they have in so many other places in the world?

Ms Phillips: Well, Mr. Speaker, renewable projects are quite different from subsurface access. Certainly, they are located on private land, for starters, and are arrangements between the private landowners and the companies.

But it is very interesting to me that the members opposite, in the Wildrose in particular, talk down renewables investors at every available opportunity. They want to slam the door on all of those jobs throughout southern Alberta, certainly, and throughout all of Alberta, and that's not our approach on this side of the House. You know, Mr. Speaker, as the MLA for Lethbridge-West I'll take those jobs.

The Speaker: Hon. minister, thank you.
Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Canola Industry Development

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The canola industry continues to be an innovative powerhouse. The industry has been increasing its value-added production for decades. Alberta now exports not only raw canola but also ready-for-the-shelf products such as canola oil. Alberta's canola industry has made innovations in production of not only value-added foods but also health care, nutraceutical products as well as biolubricants, biodiesel, and bioplastics. To the minister of agriculture: how are you helping the canola industry to further its efforts in value-added production in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. There's been a recent announcement from Richardson in Lethbridge to expand their production there. The Cargill plant in Camrose – it's been open for a while – has room to expand there. Too early to tell yet, but there is going to be an opportunity for a new plant even in Olds. There are hopefully going to be shovels in the ground this year.

So the canola industry does look good. It's robust. I'm happy to say that the markets around the world are also expanding: in the United Arab Emirates, India, China, South Korea, around the world. The canola industry looks good for this province, and I encourage those producers to put that in their rotation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that China is concerned about blackleg and has again threatened to slash dockage to levels of 1 per cent and given that China and Canada have been in talks for a long time to come up with a mutually agreeable trade deal and given that there's huge growth potential for canola exports to China, to the minister: can you please update this House on your progress in discussions with the federal minister of agriculture?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and again to the member for the question. Last November the federal government – the federal agriculture minister, the Prime Minister – had an opportunity to talk to the Chinese government. They were able to stay the concerns that he had around blackleg. It's been stayed till, I believe, the year 2020, but those conversations continue on what more we can do to ensure that that situation doesn't arise again and making sure that China and the rest of the world enjoy our good products, including canola and canola oil.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that at the end of 2016 Alberta canola had committed $3.46 million towards 28 active research projects and given that every dollar was matched by $3.24 million from research partners and given that these important projects further strengthen and diversify this important Alberta industry, to the minister: how does the government plan to strengthen and support the good work that the canola councils are doing?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I for one am very proud of what the canola producers in Alberta have done. They've made great strides with the product: being able to have higher production on the same number of acres, being able to have it more resistant to all these other, different kinds of chemicals, being able to market their product around the world. I'm very happy to be able to support them in their efforts in trade and research as they continue to grow their industry.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: In 30 seconds we will begin Members' Statements.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Progressive Conservative Party Convention

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the MLA for Calgary-North West I was elected to this Assembly as a moderate, centrist Albertan. The events on the weekend are a clear reminder that my decision to sit in the NDP caucus was the right one.

My former party was disappearing in the wake of a hostile takeover and, with it, everything that was important to me. An increasing number of Albertans now feel politically homeless as a once strong party decided that power was much more important than principle. We have seen one incident after another, from campaign operatives charged with assault to fines for breaking campaign rules and candidates leaving due to harassment and intimidation. Add to that a campaign with no actual policy, and we can see that this exercise was all about winning.

The new Conservative leader bragged about endorsements from individuals who called for a coup d'état and others who pronounced that a woman's place was in the kitchen making sandwiches for the boys. Unite-the-right delegates booed at the convention when the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster cautioned that such a merger would only lead to more bozo eruptions from supporters who believe feminism is a cancer and that members of the LGBT community belong in a lake of fire.

I've heard from many Albertans who say that that kind of thinking belongs in the past. They are concerned about the values of a leader whose voting record clearly demonstrates a lack of respect for human rights. So, Mr. Speaker, I have found my new home in a caucus that embraces a modern, pragmatic approach and vision for Alberta, who knows that diversity is a strength and won't tell you what your Canadian values need to be.

Castle Parks Management Plan

Mr. Stier: Mr. Speaker, the Castle region is arguably the most picturesque location in all of Canada. The region has been blessed with immense natural resources, including coal and timber, but its greatest resource is the people who call the Castle home. They are hard working and straight shooting. When you say you're going to do something, they trust you'll do it. Go to any local A&W, and you're as likely to see a sightseeing tour sealed with a handshake as you are a cup of coffee.

So when the environment minister suddenly announced in 2015 that the government would be designating a large portion of the Castle as a provincial park, Albertans had questions. What about OHV access? Would random camping continue to be allowed? "Don't worry; trust us," the government said. "The department will be conducting thorough consultations." Remember, the government's own permitted-use document released in 2015 committed to maintaining OHV and random camping.

Fast-forward to January 2017 and that same government's release of the new Castle draft management plan. It suddenly ended access to random camping. It suddenly restricted permitted uses, including a complete phase-out of OHVs. There were no general public notices or consultations on either topic. The only general public consultation meeting that was held, however, was organized at Bellevue by the local OHV and fish and game associations.

Then came the public rally in Lethbridge. Another one was held in Calgary, and another is being scheduled here in Edmonton. Reluctantly, the minister finally took action, extending the consultation period, maintaining current OHV access this year, and committing to holding, finally, some open meetings. All of this mistrust and ill will could easily have been avoided had the minister just been open and transparent before decisions were made.

Wildrose will continue to monitor this issue. But once again the minister broke Albertans' trust, and the saddest part is that this government doesn't seem willing or interested in repairing it. I hope the government will change their ways, actually, and commit to open consultations. But with all the stakeholders . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Social Democracy

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, my father, who would have been 110 years old this year, could have easily provided insights into what I call the rise and surprise of social democracy. At the age of 10, 100 years ago, he arrived at the port of Shanghai, after being forced to flee Russia, as a refugee with little more than the clothes on his back, the eldest of five children, with his mother, a widow of the revolution. Some 32 years later, in 1949, a similar fate beset him at the hands of Maoist revolutionaries, and once again he was forced to seek refuge from political and economic upheaval, again escaping with little more than a handful of prized family possessions.

Mr. Speaker, as we in Alberta drift further into the abyss of social democracy, I cannot help but be reminded of his fate. Indeed, I reflect today on the rise and surprise of social democratic dogma, something little known to Albertans after 44 years of free enterprise, prosperity, and pride in the Alberta advantage. With great sacrifice and fortitude my father ended up as a landed immigrant on the shores of Canada and found refuge, safe haven, and hope right here in Alberta, where I had the privilege of being born.

Mr. Speaker, I'm saddened to hear many long-time Albertans tell me what they might do and what they will recommend to their children to do if we suffer the misfortune of a second NDP term. I hear constantly at the doors of constituents in Calgary-Fish Creek – their words, not mine – “I am an economic refugee from one or another NDP province of the past.” I do not relish that, with many Albertans, we may one day utter the same words with sadness in our hearts as we watch our province drown in yet another, very different sea of red, or perhaps in this case orange, irresponsible ink.

Sadly, I wonder what my father, with his experience and infinite wisdom, would be saying to me were he with us today. I'm afraid he would caution me and his grandchildren to beware of the . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, thank you. Your time is up.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Parents Empowering Parents

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very happy to speak today about an event in my constituency of Edmonton-Mill Creek. I recently instituted a monthly town hall in order to better hear constituents' thoughts and concerns. My second town hall was focused on the organization Parents Empowering Parents, also known as PEP. The Parents Empowering Parents Society, which was created by parents for parents, provides education, innovative programming, support, and hope for individuals and families dealing with or concerned about substance abuse and addiction. This organization is committed to improving effective, accessible treatment and positive outcomes for substance abuse and addiction.

For parents, Mr. Speaker, these are vital concerns. Many families are profoundly affected by having children struggling with addictions. Some of the needs of the parents that my town hall identified were to create clear paths from detox to treatment to recovery, with enough spaces or beds to ensure that addicted individuals get the treatment and supports they need when they need them; to create access and support for treatment in our health and mental health care systems, which are both needed to provide help to these children and youth; to listen to parents and provide parents the ability to make decisions on behalf of their children and, at times, adult children to ensure that they get the treatment and support they need; more recovery facilities to provide faster access and longer periods of recovery where needed as one size does not fit all; to educate the public about addictions to change the culture; to recognize the value of groups like PEP and other NGOs as means of filling the gaps in the addiction treatment system.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Francophonie in Alberta

Ms McKittrick: Thank you. On this International Francophonie Day I want to first of all thank you, Mr. Speaker, the Clerk, and staff of the Legislative Assembly for the initiatives that have recognized and promoted the use of French in the Assembly. From the first day of the 29th Assembly the national anthem was sung in its bilingual version. The use of French in members' statements and speeches has been facilitated, and a number of members have used bilingual school introductions to introduce their immersion or francophone schools. We have come a long way since former Member for Athabasca-Lac La Biche M. Leo Piquette was told by the Speaker not to speak French.

Merci. En tant que francophone j'ai eu le plaisir d'apercevoir l'ampleur de la Francophonie à travers le monde. J'ai enseigné le français à l'Alliance française en Thaïlande, pour la province du Québec dans un camp de réfugiés, parlé en français en Amérique latine, en Asie, en Afrique, et au Moyen-Orient. Aujourd'hui nous célébrons la vitalité de la Francophonie et son importance à travers le monde pour le commerce, la littérature et sa diversité culturelle.

Un exemple de la vitalité de la Francophonie en Alberta est le nombre de nouvelles écoles francophones dans la province. Une de ces nouvelles écoles se trouve dans ma circonscription, l'école Claudette-et-Denis-Tardif. La sénatrice Claudette Tardif et son mari, Denis, ont travaillé pendant des longues années avec la communauté francophone pour développer des services en français, des écoles francophones et le Campus Saint-Jean.

Moi-même, je connais bien l'importance d'étudier en français, car si je parle français maintenant, il est grâce au fait que j'ai pu étudier en français.

J'aimerais alors remercier tous les francophones qui ont travaillé pour assurer la vitalité maintenant présente dans notre communauté.

Merci.

[Translation] As a francophone I had the opportunity to see the reach of Francophonie throughout the world. I taught French at the Alliance Française in Thailand, for the province of Quebec, in a refugee camp. I have spoken French in Latin America, Asia, Africa, and the Middle East. Today we are celebrating the vitality of Francophonie and its importance throughout the world for business, literature, and for its cultural diversity.

An example of the vitality of the Francophonie in Alberta is the number of francophone school boards, schools throughout the province. One of these new schools is in my riding, the Claudette-et-Denis-Tardif school. Senator Tardif and her husband, Denis, have worked for many years with the French community to develop services in French, francophone schools, and Campus Saint-Jean.

I know full well the importance of schooling in French because my ability to speak French now is because I had the opportunity to study in French for a large part of my K to 12 schooling.

I would like to thank all francophones who have worked tirelessly to ensure the vitality of our community, that has been demonstrated throughout this month.

Thank you. [As submitted]

Government and Opposition Policies

Mr. Fildebrandt: Nearly two years ago myself and 20 other members of the Wildrose caucus were elected to represent common-sense conservative Alberta values. When I ran, I told my constituents that if I was elected, I would always put Alberta first: Alberta first before myself and Alberta first before my party. Since the NDP came to power, they have undertaken a radical and forced remake of Alberta's economy, character, and culture. In increasing numbers Albertans are demanding that conservative forces in Alberta put Alberta first, before themselves and before their parties, to save this province.

In the coming months I'm optimistic that we will find a way to heal old wounds, to make new friends, and to lay the foundation of a coming common-sense revolution: a common-sense revolution that will peel the ideological claws of government out of our school curricula, a common-sense revolution that will end a tax on rural Alberta like Bill 6, a common-sense revolution that will repeal lock, stock, and barrel the carbon tax, a common-sense revolution that will cut taxes and regulation to make Alberta the roaring economy of North America, a common-sense revolution that would not commit the moral crime of saddling our children with a crushing debt but that will instead balance the budget and make us paid in full once again.

The NDP have sown the wind, and now they will reap the whirlwind. When we unite Albertans behind a single powerful force, we will not merely defeat them; we will erase the legacy of socialism from Alberta forever. In its place we will build a new Alberta advantage that will stand the test of time.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Private Bills I request leave to present the following petitions that have been received for private bills under Standing Order 98(2):

- (1) the petition of Bruce Libin, Yannai Segal, and Lorne Paperny of the city of Calgary for the Calgary Jewish Centre Amendment Act, 2017, and
- (2) the petition of Paula Jean Anderson of Red Deer county for the Paula Jean Anderson Adoption Termination Act.

Thank you.

Statement by the Speaker

Tabling Documents

The Speaker: Hon. members, if I could just remind each of you again. I'm not sure that everybody heard it the first time, but I want to remind you about the good judgment that you use on a go-forward basis. I'm going to just read a ruling by Speaker Schumacher in 1995, and I'm only paraphrasing components of it.

The tabling should consist merely of a brief almost mechanical description of the document being tabled. Members should resist the urge to embellish, expound upon, decorate, editorialize about, emphasize, ruminate, extrapolate, annotate.

He said at the time:

I think members get the general impression of what the Chair is getting at in regard to their tablings. A member may always follow up on a tabling during question period.

That was intended for all of the House, not just the member who is about to speak.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table five copies of a recent article from the Calgary Herald on a new study from the Canadian Energy Research Institute indicating that the energy industry anticipates that they can reduce emissions intensities by as much as 80 per cent a barrel while also lowering supply costs by up to 46 per cent while still maintaining an increase of up to 5.5 million barrels within the next two decades under the emissions cap.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I promised the residents of Alberta, doctors who are practising that I'd be happy to table a document. It's called Advance Care Planning Goals of Care: Conversations Matter. The reason I'm tabling this is because about 60 per cent of Albertans surveyed said that they support having an advanced care conversation with their family members. Only about 20 per cent actually said that they'd done it. This is a very simple guide that I promised the doctors I'd be proud to table and urge all members and constituents to consider discussing with their families.

Thank you.

Ms McKittrick: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to table the requisite five copies of an article in response to statements in the House. This article, from the Globe and Mail on March 11, explains that the recent increase in support for the development of the oil sands is due to the effects of the climate leadership plan of the government.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the requisite number of copies of an article from the Edmonton Journal on March 15 titled Wildrose Party Calls for "Fiscal Dragon's Den" to Find Savings in Government Books.

The Speaker: Any others? Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I just want to remind you – I'm not sure if all of the members heard it at the time, so just in case you might have missed it...

Mr. Fildebrandt: It was a most excellent ruling, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Absolutely.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you. I have two tablings. I'd like to table the requisite number of copies of the 2017 Wildrose caucus prebudget recommendations.

And I'd like to table the requisite number of copies of a letter I wrote to the hon. Government House Leader on March 9 citing statements from his caucus on the Public Affairs Bureau. Day 4 of 14.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the Hon. Ms Hoffman, Deputy Premier and Minister of Health, pursuant to the Alberta Health Act the Alberta Health Advocate and Seniors Advocate 2015-16 annual report; pursuant to the Mental Health Act the Mental Health Patient Advocate 2015-16 annual report; pursuant to the Health Professions Act the Alberta College and Association of Chiropractors 2015-16 annual report, Alberta College of Occupational Therapists 2015-16 annual report, Alberta College of Optometrists 2015 annual report, Alberta Dental Association and College 2015 annual report, College and Association of Respiratory Therapists of Alberta annual report 2016, College of Alberta Dental Assistants annual report 2015-16, College of Alberta Psychologists annual report 2015-16, College of Podiatric Physicians of Alberta 2014-15 annual report, College of Registered Psychiatric Nurses of Alberta annual report 2016; pursuant to the Health Disciplines Act the Health Disciplines Board annual report 2014, Health Disciplines Board 2015 annual report.

The Speaker: Hon members, I just would like to compliment the House. I hope it's a pattern for the future. There were no points of order today.

Statement by the Speaker

Mr. Speaker's MLA for a Day Program

The Speaker: I would like to make a brief announcement to each of you, fellow members of the Assembly. As you know, the Legislative Assembly is holding Mr. Speaker's MLA for a Day, which will be held May 7 to 9, 2017, at the Alberta Legislature. There is only one week left to apply to the program. This is an opportunity for high school students from all corners of our province, all of our constituencies to learn about what we do here, and we want them to learn the right things about what we do here. Please remind your high schools that this three-day program is fully supported by the Legislative Assembly Office, so there is no cost to the students. Transportation and accommodation details will be arranged by our visitor services office. The application form is available on the Assembly website until March 24.

I urge you to support MLA for a Day by promoting students' participation from your constituency and also through your personal involvement in the program. I must tell you that the students I met last year as well as the various MLAs were really appreciative of that, and I want to encourage all 87 members to encourage their young students to participate.

Orders of the Day

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 202

Protecting Victims of Non-consensual Distribution of Intimate Images Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise and move second reading of Bill 202, Protecting Victims of Non-consensual Distribution of Intimate Images Act.

I am pleased to bring this act to the Legislature for debate today because I believe that the cyberbullying protections in Alberta have not kept up with the challenging technological environment that schoolchildren and indeed all Albertans face. Schoolchildren today face a very different environment growing up than many of the members here faced when they were younger. Today many, maybe even most people have a camera phone that is constantly connected to the Internet whereas even as recently as 10 years ago this just wasn't the case.

We've seen recently some high-profile, tragic cases where nonconsensual distribution of intimate images of young women were shared in Canada, with very devastating consequences. In both Amanda Todd's case and Rehtaeh Parsons' case the nonconsensual sharing of intimate images was a key contributor in their decision to end their own lives.

Mr. Speaker, the facts of these cases are tragic and horrific. Allow me to talk about Amanda's case. When Amanda was only 13 or 14 years old, she began chatting online on a video chat to meet new people. A stranger convinced her to bare her breasts online, and an intimate image was captured. It was just that easy. This individual later blackmailed Amanda into giving him a show. That show was also recorded, and the police informed Amanda and her family that they had found the video circulating on the Internet. Amanda wrote online, in a video released shortly after her death, that this discovery was devastating for her, and the fact that she had been sexually exploited online led to anxiety, depression, and a panic disorder.

Amanda changed schools, but this individual made a new Facebook profile featuring her breasts as his new profile. Then he began contacting her new classmates. Amanda changed schools a second time, where things briefly improved for her. However, one of her peers began to contact her and even goaded other students into harassing her at school. A group of students assaulted Amanda while other students filmed the event. This led Amanda to her first suicide attempt, which she attempted by drinking bleach. Amanda survived, but the harassment at the school continued. Amanda attended counselling and had antidepressants prescribed, but the wounds she had suffered were too deep, Mr. Speaker. Amanda Todd ended her life on October 10, 2012.

Simply put, this is not and should not ever be accepted as an outcome for this country. I am pleased to note, Mr. Speaker, that the man who began this malicious pursuit of this terrible torment of Amanda was sentenced last week in the Netherlands to 10 years and 243 days in jail for exploiting Amanda and other young women. This man may also be extradited to Canada, where he may face further charges. While I am pleased to hear about this sentence, it is far better that we prevent such acts from happening in the first place.

Particularly in response to this case the federal government passed Bill C-13, which amended the Criminal Code to create the new offence of nonconsensual distribution of intimate images along with other, related things such as the recovery of expenses, the forfeiture of property used in the commission of an offence, and the restriction of computer use by the offender. C-13 was a start in the right direction in regard to updating the laws to prevent such tragedies from happening in the future.

The bill I have presented here, Bill 202, will build on where Bill C-13 left off at the provincial level. This bill does two simple things. The first thing this bill does is to create tort law which protects not just children but all Albertans against nonconsensual sharing of intimate images. Even though adults may consent to their intimate images being shared by someone they trust, that person who received said image would then in turn be prohibited from distributing that image to other people without the consent of the person in the image. If the receiver of that picture were to violate this, they would be eligible to be sued under tort law, and this action could be brought without proof of damage. What that means in plain English, Mr. Speaker, is that the victims do not have to prove that they have suffered a financial loss in order to sue the distributor of the image for damages.

In addition, under section 7 courts may impose other conditions such as no-contact orders, restricting the Internet, and other such injunctions that courts can and sometimes do approve. Lastly, if the distributor were to post this intimate image online on a paywall or some such thing where they charge for viewing a video or an image, the profits shall be awarded to the plaintiff. Doing this will remove some of the incentive for this type of behaviour should this bill become law.

The second main portion of this bill is aimed at protecting children when an intimate image is shared of a child. This will provide children with firm protection in their schools to safeguard them from perpetrators. In the past, Mr. Speaker, in the cases of Amanda Todd and Rehtaeh Parsons, students within these girls' respective schools disseminated nonconsensual intimate images of these girls. This is not acceptable behaviour, and we should ensure that we all take on an individual responsibility to teach our children these things. However, as a parent well knows, kids don't always do what they're taught.

That is why this legislation proposes that school principals who become aware of one student sharing another student's image have not only the right but the obligation to suspend the student that is sharing the image. Spelling this out in such concrete terms will ensure that sanctions and punishments are fairly, consistently, and evenly applied to students throughout Alberta. This legislation will avoid a scenario where students in one school are punished more or less harshly than those in another school. It also gives school principals a clear tool to suspend students on explicit grounds through legislative authority to carry out their duties in administering discipline for this clear breach of privacy. School trustees will still retain authority to hear appeals on suspensions from the students and their parents.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, we here at the Wildrose believe that this bill will update our legislation so that those who are victimized by online exploitation have recourse in provincial courts. It will also clarify that this is a form of bullying and that students should face strong consequences for encouraging this behaviour. If one student torments another, the bullied student should not have to face the tormentor at school day to day. My hope is that this bill puts the rights and health of victims first and will lead to the reduction in the number of students who have to face this situation. I hope all members on this side and the members in the other parties will join me in supporting this very important piece of legislation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. member, could I ask you to read into the record that you're moving second reading of Bill 202.

Mr. Cyr: That is correct.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my absolute pleasure to rise today. This will come, I think, as no surprise to members opposite since we have been working with them – and this is very similar to legislation proposed by the NDP government in Manitoba a couple of years ago – that I am rising to support this legislation. I think the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake has done a fantastic job in setting this up. I want to thank him for his dedication to this issue and his willingness to work with us and with our colleagues in Education to make sure that this would fit with our overall scheme, I think, of legislation. The bill will create a cause of action, which is, I think, really very important.

You know, times are not, I suppose, as they were when I was growing up here in Alberta. Young people have access and the ability to send images immediately, and that puts them in a position where one wrong decision could essentially punish them for the rest of their lives. I think everyone in this House knows that that's not right. I think that many people here who have children or grandchildren, you know, would fear to have such an image of their loved one distributed, and I think putting this in place will really help to signal our support for both young people and adults who might find themselves in this position.

I think this legislation, Mr. Speaker, does a really good job of putting blame where it belongs: that is to say, on someone who is bullying or harassing or someone who is circulating intimate images of another person without their consent. It puts the blame on that individual, not on the victim, who has had the picture taken for whatever reason, and I think that that's a really critical piece of this. You know, a lot of young women and men are taught to be ashamed, and I think that that's wrong. It's not the fault of the young person that the image got out. It's the fault of the person who is using this to bully and to harass and to try to make the individual feel small. I think this is a fantastic bill. It goes a long way to supporting those individuals.

Mr. Speaker, I'd just like to one more time thank the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake for bringing this matter forward. I think it's something that's really important. I know he had acted as my critic for a number of years, and we've had a very good relationship through that time, so I'd like to thank him generally for his service in the House.

Thanks.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise in this House to speak to Bill 202, Protecting Victims of Non-consensual Distribution of Intimate Images Act, put forward by my hon. colleague from Bonnyville-Cold Lake. I'm so encouraged by the work that he's done in putting this bill together, and he should be very proud of the work that he's put forward and the discussions that stem from what has been presented here today.

Mr. Speaker, the sad thing about this bill is that it's actually necessary to even pass it. The world has changed so much that sharing of intimate images without consent has gotten completely out of control. In preparation for this debate, I looked up some information on the Internet. I don't know if you know this, but what I found is that 1 in 25 people – 1 in 25 – are victims of revenge porn. That means that we could expect three MLAs in this room to be a victim as well. We could expect roughly one victim in every classroom, two or three children on every school bus. Alberta has over 165,000 small businesses, businesses that employ fewer than a hundred people. That's four people in every one of those businesses. That's over half a million people. Every single one of those victims and potential victims is one too many.

What's even worse is that 1 in 10 women have been threatened with that possibility. Let's revisit some of those numbers I gave earlier, Mr. Speaker. That would be the equivalent of nine members of this Chamber being threatened, at least two in every classroom, seven on a large school bus, and over one and a half million in small businesses right across Alberta. That doesn't even take into account the medium or large businesses, where I'm sure we'd see an increase in those numbers. We need to do whatever we can to try and stop this hurtful and damaging practice.

I'd like to read for you a few comments that I found from victims of nonconsensual image sharing. I'll quote for you some comments made by a victim in an article that she wrote for the Guardian, which was published on November 19, 2013. It's somewhat lengthy, so sit tight, but it's very important for us to hear about the trauma that this woman endured. This began in February 2010. I will start.

For over a year thereafter, even though the auctions were down, and I blocked Joey's email addresses and phone numbers, I oscillated between panic and persistent anxiety. I would wake up at 3 am and check my email, my Facebook page, eBay, then Google my name, a ritual I performed three times before I could settle back down. In September 2011, I was thrown into panic again after I read an anonymous email alerting me to an online profile that featured nude pictures of me.

I Googled my name, and there I was, on a porn website. The profile included my full name, the city and the state where I live, the name of the college where I teach and the campus... My stomach hurt. I held my breath and printed every page of comments, all seventeen of them.

Afraid to be in public, I raced home and called the Maryland state police and the Baltimore division of the FBI. I left messages explaining what happened. Then I called my therapist who was treating me for symptoms of post-traumatic stress disorder for the past year and cancelled my session. I was too scared to leave my house. She insisted I go on medical leave from work.

... I sunk into despair so deep that I felt nothing. Because of the permanence of the internet, and lack of legislation, this torture was never going to end. I seriously contemplated ending my life. I would have been successful if it weren't for three things, my dog needed to be let out, my mom called, and the pills I took weren't fatal.

This is heartbreaking, Mr. Speaker. This is just one person's story, one of thousands. Even after reading those words, I cannot begin to imagine the depths of pain that are experienced by such victims. Such cruel actions affect one's work life, family life, social life, and, of course, one's personal life and well-being. They are left trying to pick up the pieces after such hateful actions have been taken, most often by someone who they were once in a close, intimate relationship with but sometimes by someone who has hacked into their computer or somehow gained access to their images.

This bill seeks to create tort law to protect all Albertans regardless of age or gender from the vicious acts of others. There is likely nothing that will completely fix and heal the pain caused when someone is betrayed by the nonconsensual sharing of intimate images, but this bill does take a strong step forward towards helping someone repair their life and their public image. It could help a victim move forward on the path to recovery and regaining control of their life, and it holds the perpetrator responsible.

This bill also seeks to protect children, Mr. Speaker, from school bullies intent on making life difficult. This bill carefully balances the needs of students, teachers, and schools to take appropriate action. It would be so difficult for a child or youth to attend school after having their privacy so completely breached. It would be even more difficult to have to sit in the same classroom as that person who shared those images. This bill amends the Education Act so that it is very clear that the sharing of someone's private images is considered bullying under the School Act and that is an offence that will likely result in the offender being suspended or expelled. This is great news.

Before I finish, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to go back to the Guardian article that I referenced earlier so I can quote from it further. Earlier I read some of the writer's comments about the panic and the pain she felt and how she felt so out of control in her own life. This brave woman has gone on to become a force in the fight to protect victims.

This is to punish offenders of nonconsensual image sharing in order that the victims may achieve some level of peace. She wrote:

Since I don't have that peace, I still face some of the fears I did the day I first brought my case to law enforcement, but I have embraced my role as the voice for those who have yet not found their voices. And I will speak up.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that every member in this Chamber will speak up for victims of nonconsensual sharing, victims of revenge porn by supporting this bill. I thank my hon. colleague again, and I urge all members to support this bill as well.

Thank you.

Ms McKittrick: Mr. Speaker, I will be speaking in English this time, in case anybody was wondering.

I, too, would first of all like to thank the hon. member for putting forth this bill. I know that he's a caring person and that he has put much thought into how to stop the victimization of persons due to the nonconsensual distribution of intimate images, so thank you.

This issue is one that has been on the minds of many in our communities, mine included. Many have wondered how to stop the victimization of young people these days, when young people are glued to their phones and exchange photos through a number of apps and websites. I have a couple of young persons in my life, and I know how addicted young people are to taking pictures and just without thinking sending them out and not understanding the consequence of the picture. I'm lucky because I have one son who's a teacher, and through his education at the university he's been cautioned against doing that, but most young people have not.

In these days of immediate diffusion of images this bill will make people think as to the damage their action might cause and the consequence to themselves, and I think this is really, really important. I also know that those involved in the education of young persons – teachers, principals, and youth workers – and those who work with those fleeing domestic violence and anyone involved in counselling will welcome this law.

This proposed Bill 202 fits nicely with the intent of Bill 2, introduced by the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General, and is consistent with our government's commitment to supporting survivors of sexual violence. I also appreciate the member's co-operation with the government in terms of his approach to the legislation because I think this bill is going to be consistent with other legislation which the government has brought forth. Thank you.

Bill 202 actually does a number of things. It creates a tort, a specific ground for a civil lawsuit, to make it easier for survivors of nonconsensual sharing of intimate images to sue the person who distributed the images. In some cases this type of behaviour may be called revenge porn, and I think it's so sad that this is the kind of thing that is happening in our society. It also sets out that punishment in schools can result from a student distributing pornography. These are good steps that should give pause to people who might consider the extreme violation of trust that occurs when someone distributes intimate images without someone's permission. These types of violations of privacy and trust often make survivors feel unsafe in their work, schools, and communities.

This bill also largely follows a bill that the Manitoba NDP passed in 2015, and I'm assuming that the hon. member consulted that bill before drafting his. The bill uses similar language, bringing in clear grounds for a lawsuit based on the nonconsensual distribution of intimate images. It also follows in the steps of federal legislation, which makes it a criminal offence to distribute these images without consent. So far only one person has been sentenced to jail time under the federal act.

Albertans need to feel safe and comfortable in their work, schools, homes, and communities, and this bill will go a long way towards making that happen. The distribution of intimate images can have devastating effects on individuals. This has been particularly true for youth and members of communities that have historically been marginalized, and we all know some of the names of the victims. I really don't want to repeat their names because I think their names have been told so often. I'm so glad that today we're going to be doing something in this Legislative Assembly to stop this kind of victimization, young people taken advantage of by others to the extent that they feel so uncomfortable, so devastated that they took their own lives. I'm sure those victims, that we well know, are not the only ones who did so, except we never did talk about them or they weren't known to the public or died without telling anyone why they were committing those acts.

Anything we can do to help prevent this type of devastating tragedy from striking another person or family is a positive move, and I know that this bill will go some ways towards helping to comfort survivors of this type of behaviour and discourage others from those terrible violations of trust and privacy. I think this whole issue of discouraging others is going to be the most important consequence of this bill because as we speak about it, hopefully many will hear us and will know that there are consequences for this kind of behaviour.

Where an image is shared by someone under 18, the bill protects parents from a lawsuit unless the parents themselves were somehow complicit in the sharing of the image. I think this is really, really important.

It also allows the court to issue a publication ban on identifying information, and this should provide some comfort to those coming forward after such a blatant violation of their privacy that seeking justice will not result in further loss of privacy. I know that this is something that's really important. Any time someone has been victimized, every time their name is said publicly, it really very often revictimizes them.

It also creates some explicit power for schools and school boards to discipline students involved in the sharing of these images. I think it's going to really strengthen the role of teachers, principals, and school boards to take action when they see this is happening. They should protect youth and send a clear message to the young people that sharing these images is not acceptable. It is bullying, and there will be consequences.

I would like to end, Mr. Speaker, by saying that I'm so glad that the hon. member drew a low number on the bill roster, that you were so lucky that this bill could come forward so that as an Assembly we have the opportunity to vote on this and to support the hon. member in making this bill law.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to say that when we were elected here, it never occurred to me that any of us would be receiving some of the feedback that we get through Twitter and the trolling that happens on there. It's small by comparison to what some of these folks have gone through, but even then your heart rate starts to go faster when you know that that person who usually trolls you on your Twitter feed is going to attack. These are small by comparison to what we're speaking to. It is, then, my privilege to speak to this bill. It's of critical importance. I would like to applaud my colleague and friend the MLA for Bonnyville-Cold Lake for tabling this bill and shining a much-needed light on this issue. His attention to a truly frightening form of bullying is unbelievably important.

Up until recently it seemed that while this form of digital harassment was regrettable, it was not ultimately punishable. Cyberbullying harassment has been sort of a subcategory of bullying, and it requires extra attention. But it's much more. It is a form of harassment that can follow a person, and it follows them and exploits them across the world. There's no protection from a predator who chooses to use this technology as the medium to betray intimacies, to get revenge for a breakup, or just to display an intimate image that was taken without the victim's knowledge or consent. It is absolutely critical, Mr. Speaker, that we change this reality to one that protects and that protects those who may be victimized by having intimate pictures splayed across the cyberworld. I think we need to provide clear consequences for those who abuse the privilege of privacy.

In discussing this issue with family, I had a family member who told me that when she was going to school in the 1970s, even then they would make rules about what pictures could be taken at social events and what would be done with those pictures and destroying negatives and all of that kind of thing. With the way that the world has changed – and there are so many more people, people of all ages, that are at much greater risk in so many ways, Mr. Speaker – the one thing that has stayed the same is that in the heat of the moment people do not always use a lot of common sense when they're more concerned about things like popularity or notoriety or they're experiencing jealousy or anger or frustration. When these images are sent around online or digitally, there are humongous, humongous implications.

My colleague eloquently spoke of the horrifying victimization of Amanda Todd that led to her suicide. We've heard and read about the horrifying rape of Rehtaeh Parsons and the sharing of those horrific images, that caused so much devastation and trauma. The thing we need to realize, Mr. Speaker, is that these images are quite often taken with the expectation of privacy and absolutely can be taken without the knowledge or consent of the person.

We know that it is a frequent occurrence for people, especially youth, to be targeted by stalkers on the Internet. The PREVNet site, which is Canada's authority on research and resources for bullying prevention, actually describes this type of cyberbullying.

Unlike other forms of bullying, the harassment, humiliation, intimidation and threatening of others through cyberbullying occurs 24 hours a day. It is relentless... [It is] aggressive, reaching kids at the dinner table while [they're] sitting with their parents, or in the privacy of their bedroom. There is no safe zone.

Bill C-13, Protecting Canadians from Online Crime Act, amended the federal Criminal Code to provide for a new offence, the nonconsensual distribution of intimate images, with some accompanying provisions. This federal legislation changed the Criminal Code, and Bill 202 now allows the victim to seek damages from the person responsible.

In the Education Act I am pleased to see that the definition of bullying is expanded to include "the distribution of an intimate image of another person knowing that the person depicted in the image did not consent to the distribution, or being reckless as to whether or not that person consented to the distribution." It is absolutely important, Mr. Speaker, that students understand that they are accountable for their actions if they choose to distribute pictures without consent and that they can face suspension and perhaps even be put on the list of behaviours for which a student may be expelled.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is about protecting victims. The importance of including amendments to the School Act and the Education Act is that we have an opportunity to actually increase awareness in the youth in our schools of the seriousness of distributing intimate images without consent. I hope it will continue the conversations around creating and maintaining safe and caring schools, specifically in the digital environment.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I really hope it raises awareness of the pervasiveness of the dangers of cyberbullying by actually describing clearly specific actions that are offences under the law. This is something that all Albertans are concerned about. This bill will mean that victims – victims – can now seek damages, and that will make it clear that this behaviour in schools will mean consequences for students who engage in this insidious form of bullying and harassment.

We've all said this a few times, but I'll repeat it. We live in a new world. We live in a world where there is no limit to the reach of predatory behaviour, and this behaviour would flash images of personal information across the world in seconds. To my colleague I would like to say that I fully support this bill, which may prevent further victimization and, just as importantly, may spark conversations in our schools, Mr. Speaker, about cyberbullying through invading a person's privacy and distributing it digitally and how that will not be tolerated.

Merci.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to rise and speak to Bill 202, the Protecting Victims of Non-consensual Distribution of Intimate Images Act. Let me be very clear. Bill 202 is a good bill. It's a bill that emphasizes how absolutely unacceptable it is to exploit someone's right to privacy. It's a bill that talks about absolutely how wrong it is to take someone's trust and harm them that way. Bill 202, I find, ties in very nicely not only with Bill 2, as some of our members here today have already spoken about, but also with last session, when I moved Motion 507. I moved a motion on increasing the awareness of cyberbullying in schools, and I think that what the hon. member has crafted here ties in very nicely with that, and it's something that I can support because it's something that all students need to be aware of and supported with.

Mr. Speaker, what Bill 202 addresses is when we have students who break the trust of other people. What that means is that Bill 202 allows us to not only address the issues as they arise, but I think that it will allow us to increase education and awareness of these types of issues in schools because we know this type of scenario: perhaps you share an intimate image with your significant other, and six months later, 12 months later, a year later, two years later – you don't know when – that image may become shared through some means that you weren't expecting.

Mr. Speaker, I think that it's very important that when we talk about these issues, we also talk about things like consent-based education, that we talk about things around educating people as to what is and what isn't okay for you to do with your partner. When do you need to ask for consent? What does consent mean? What does yes mean? What does no mean? I think these are questions that we really do need to be raising awareness in schools about. They're questions that we really do need to be educating our students about. It's one thing to say: if you break this law, if you do the wrong thing, we're going to punish you. Let me be very clear that it's absolutely the right thing that we should be doing. If people share non-consensual images through the Internet, through other mediums, whatever it is, we should absolutely be protecting those victims.

[Ms Woollard in the chair]

But on top of that, we also need to be educating the people who are doing that sharing. We need to be educating people who are breaking that trust and that privacy. If they don't know why they shouldn't be doing this, if they don't understand what the concept of consent is, then we have failed in our duty as educators, and we have failed in our duty to be able to inform people on how to move forward with this.

Madam Speaker, I think that Bill 202 is a very good initiative. Bill 202 is something that should be applauded in this House. It's something that we can work together on. I'm very happy that the member across was so open and collaborative with the government in moving forward with this so that it could have all the components, I think, that make a good bill.

Madam Speaker, I'm very interested in the pieces that do amend the School Act in this bill. I think that the pieces that amend the School Act and give the ability for administration and for teachers and principals to move very quickly to react to cases where intimate images are shared is very important. I think that being able to move swiftly allows us to catch these instances immediately and allows us to protect the privacy of individuals and protect those victims as quickly as possible.

I won't get into any of the details of some of the tragedies we've heard about, Madam Speaker. I won't get into the details of any of the instances and examples because I think hon. members here already have done a very good job of explaining it, and I don't think that we need to keep bringing this back. But I think that what we do need to talk about is how these victims and these people who have been subjected to sexual harassment – and it really is that. It's sexual harassment. It's sexual assault. It's an absolute core violation of these people's rights.

[The Speaker in the chair]

When government and administration and teachers and schools aren't able to react, when people aren't able to move quickly enough, and when we sort of leave our most vulnerable – the people who have been exploited, the people who have been hurt – out to dry because we didn't have the framework in place, I think that is where you have the opportunity to do the most harm. By being able to support our victims, by being able to move forward and say, "We are here for you; we are ready to help you; what do you need?" by being able to do those types of things, Mr. Speaker, it is very valuable. It allows us to help our victims more.

Mr. Speaker, the very specific objectives of Bill 202 – creating the grounds for things like a civil lawsuit, setting the framework for immediate suspension or other types of school supports for our victims – I think are a step that moves us in the right direction. It's a step that moves us in the right direction, and I think it's something that all members of this House can support and can applaud. The fact is that the distribution of these images will have devastating effects on individuals. It will violate and make survivors feel unsafe in just their everyday environment.

Mr. Speaker, just imagine for one second that, perhaps with a significant other, you were to share an intimate image. You took that image in your home, and you shared that with somebody through whatever medium you would like. But just imagine that now every single time you look at that mirror that you took the image through, that every single time you look at that computer that you sent that image through, that Facebook account, whatever it is – they pop up in your newsfeed. Imagine being brought back to the pain. Imagine being brought back to the instance and suddenly remembering that your trust and your hope and everything that you believed in in that second and all those feelings and those emotions are right back to the forefront, because that's the reality of what happens when this type of crime goes unpunished. That's the reality of what happens when this type of crime isn't addressed effectively.

I strongly believe, Mr. Speaker, that for every single Albertan, whether you are young, whether you are less young, whether you are in school or not in school, you deserve a safe space for yourself, whether that is in your work, in your school, in your home. Wherever that is, you should be able to feel safe. You should be able to feel as though you have nothing to be afraid of. Because you made a decision to share an intimate image, because you made a decision to trust somebody else, that feeling of safety shouldn't be compromised. You shouldn't lose your ability to be trusting, you shouldn't lose your ability to be safe, and you shouldn't lose your ability to care because somebody violated your trust and somebody violated your safety.

I think that as members of the Legislature and as people who sit in this House, as people who proclaim being honourable members, we have an obligation to help prevent this type of devastating tragedy. We have an obligation to help support and comfort survivors and discourage this type of behaviour and discourage this type of violation. Mr. Speaker, I think that this bill is a good bill. It uses good language, it's very clear, and it makes it very simple to know that distributing an intimate image without consent is the wrong thing.

Mr. Speaker, I'm very excited that we're able to work together with the opposition on this bill, but I do have one concern around some of what came up around the press release for this bill. I did have a concern around the headline that warned that a picture lasts forever. Now, this is certainly true, and the warning is actually very appropriate for youth. I think it's something that was drilled into my head when I was younger and in school, and it was something that we've heard over and over again. I think the focus of the bill itself is right, and I think the contents of the bill itself are right. My concerns around this headline are that I think that it doesn't do what we need to be doing with empowering survivors. It doesn't do what we need to be doing with educating people on consent-based education and consent-based work.

I think I'm running out of time here, Mr. Speaker, and I will leave it at that. I would gladly support this bill, and I'm excited that I think we're going to be able to pass this with members opposite.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, am happy to support and speak to private member's Bill 202, Protecting Victims of Non-consensual Distribution of Intimate Images Act. As other speakers have said, this bill certainly does fit well with government Bill 2. It provides additional tools for victims, creating grounds for a civil lawsuit, and sets out punishment in schools for those who distribute images without consent. This bill creates powers for schools and school boards to discipline students engaged in this activity while protecting parents who are not involved from lawsuits.

This bill correctly seeks to avoid and prevent victim blaming as it is not about the photo or the reason the photo was originally taken, but it's about the distribution of the photo without consent. I think we can all agree that revenge porn is about public shaming, creating mental anguish, causing harm, and violating a person's sense of privacy and well-being. This is about stopping, punishing, and preventing extreme violations of trust and privacy.

I would like to note that this private member's bill does follow a bill created by the Manitoba NDP in 2015. You know, Mr. Speaker, I have to give kudos to the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake for bringing forward this very progressive bill that is squarely focused on people, protecting people, preventing abuse and hardship. I didn't hear from this member directly, but I think I heard a story that some of the inspiration for this came as a result of a discussion with his young daughter. I think that is a beautiful story, so I'd like to thank him.

In preparation for this bill I did some research on the topic and was a little surprised at how widespread this type of abuse is. In a paper written by Samantha Bates of Simon Fraser University, I learned a number of disturbing facts, and I just want to give you a little snippet. Her paper is called "Stripped": An Analysis of Revenge Porn Victims' Lives after Victimization. She noted that the first revenge porn website was created in 2010 by someone named Hunter Moore. She also noted that during a three-month period in 2011 the revenge porn website received 10,000 photo submissions, and the website's owner received advertising revenue of approximately $30,000 per month. Although this particular website has since shut down, more continue to pop up in its place.

It always astounds me how adults who themselves behave like bullies online act shocked when young people follow suit. We in this House need to set an example. Manage your social media pages. Act, or you condone and normalize this behaviour. This sets the stage for further abuse and more harmful abuse. Just rampant, even on the Twitter feeds related to this House, we see every day, probably every hour, name calling – disgusting name calling – and body shaming.

You know, I was particularly disturbed at – I can understand that some people were offended by some of the statements made in this House, and I was happy that there was a heartfelt apology, but what stunned me was just how for days and days and days the feeds were filled with the most disgusting body shaming of the person that chose to make that statement. It was all over pages that are supposed to be managed by the opposition parties, and they were not. It wasn't taken down. There wasn't a statement released. There wasn't any sort of intervention to stop it. I think that we have a responsibility to be role models. We have a responsibility to stop online bullying.

This past Sunday I attended an event, actually just yesterday, in St. Albert called Beautiful Me. I think this is about their fifth or sixth year of hosting this event. I wasn't entirely sure what to expect. It was held at Bellerose composite high school. They had different stations set out, and it was for young people who are typically marginalized, whether it is young people that struggle with a mental illness such as an eating disorder or a personality disorder of some kind, young people that have disabilities. There were some young women there that were obviously pregnant and were about to be young moms. There were people that had been bullied in school.

There was a collection of young people there, and they got to go through these stations. They had their hair done, they had makeup done, and they had professional photographs done. They got to write out some information about what made them beautiful, not beautiful just on the outside but on the inside. At one of the last stations they got to sit in a small group and have conversations with a couple of people. I did attend the event and sort of saw the stations, and then I found myself in the room listening to some stories. I'd like to share with you a couple of those stories.

One of the first stories that I heard was about a woman. She talked about her life as a youngster growing up in the Maritimes, and she was surrounded by a really, really dysfunctional home. She grew up in poverty. She had one of her parents who was abusive and had substance abuse problems. As a result, there was a lot of acting out and a lot of issues for her. She found herself at the age of 17 pregnant with her first child. Fast-forward to yesterday, and at age 39 she's a mother of five and a grandmother of I think it was three.

However, you know, she had a rough time as a young mom, but she made some choices years back to turn things around. She went to school. She had a job. She started being an engaged parent and mom, took care of things. She was clean and sober. She moved her family to Fort McMurray to start a new life, from the Maritimes to Fort McMurray.

Things were not going too badly until one of her young daughters started to have trouble at school. She saw her daughter at age 12 struggling with a black depression, just a deep depression, that she had not seen before. She didn't know what to do. She tried all kinds of things. One day after a really bad day she decided to look into her daughter's social media accounts, and what she found astounded her. She found messages on social media accounts and online from people in her school that were just tormenting her. They were making fun of how she looked, how she sounded, how she dressed. They were telling her to harm herself, to kill herself, that she was worthless, and it just went on and on and on. I can't tell you her whole story. She certainly did try to get help for her daughter and tried to stop the online abuse, but it didn't stop. She found her daughter at age 13 – she had died by suicide. She ended her life at age 13.

The second story is of a young woman who was at the event yesterday. She laughed because she said that the first time she went, she was one of those tough girls that said: you know, this isn't going to do anything for me. It turned out that she is a bit of a poster girl for that now, and she is actually mentoring young girls. She told her story. She talked about being in junior high and also looking a little bit different than the other kids. She was maybe taller. She was going through a little bit of a goth stage, she said, and she started to be tormented by bullies online as well. After the online bullying, it sort of spread into everyday life at school, that they, too, were telling her to kill herself, to cut herself, that she wasn't worth anything, that she was ugly, she was fat, she was useless. Her life was hell.

She actually took the advice she was given by those bullies, and she started to cut herself. She didn't think that her parents noticed. There would be blood on the sheets and things in the morning, but she didn't think that her parents would notice until one day the abuse got too bad. She said that it was like a movie – it sort of freaked her out a little bit – and all of the abuse that she had received, a lot of it online and on social media, just sort of started playing itself like a movie, so she picked up a knife. She went to cut, but that particular time she cut deeper than she ever had before, and the bleeding was profuse. Luckily, her mom was in the next room. She screamed. Her mom took her to the hospital. She was stitched up, she was cleaned up, and that was the first day that she was ever able to speak to a professional about her mental illness and about some of the bullying that was going on. But what happened after that is . . . [Ms Renaud's speaking time expired]

Thanks.

The Speaker: The Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak to this very important bill, and I'd also like to thank the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake for putting this forward. You know, I think that this bill also fits very well with our Bill 2 to make life better and remove the limitations for reporting sexual and domestic violence. When we have these kinds of complementary bills, that work with one another to support everyday Albertans, this is what we mean when we say that we're making life better for Albertans. I think investing in our children, investing in women and girls is something that we can be really proud of and also be really proud of working with our opposition colleagues across the floor to make things better for people.

I was listening to the Bill 2 debates the other day, and I was blown away by the stories that were shared here, Mr. Speaker. I think that all the members in here would agree with me that the courage of the members who spoke on that bill and shared their personal stories – it was profoundly moving. It takes a lot of courage to do that and share your own personal stories.

I also thought it was interesting. The Member for Calgary-Lougheed asked a really good question, I thought, as well. You know, again, this is where we have great people in the opposition who are putting a lot of thought into this. The question he asked – I think it was to the Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill – was not only just “what's your advice to people who may be victims?” but also “what's your advice to people who are thinking about committing these kinds of crimes; how do we help those people and stop this from happening in the first place?” This bill is great for protecting potential victims. If we can avoid having people put into these difficult situations in the first place, then we can avoid a lot of other negative outcomes.

I know that in the Bill 2 debates some members were talking about how being abused at any age is terrible, especially at such a young age. It changes your body and your brain, and even though you survive and move on – I know that the Member for Lethbridge-East talked about survivors and thrivers. People who've been affected by this: it takes time for them to come around, to be able to feel that they can speak out about this. But at some point in time we need to be there for them and give them the supports so that they feel that they have support from the government and that they know that when they come forward, they will have justice and things will be better for them.

I also think about my niece. I've got a four-year-old niece in Toronto. My sister and my brother-in-law are fantastic parents, and I know they do everything that they can for my niece to ensure that she's safe. But I also think about, you know, when my sister and I grew up, we didn't have cellphones and these digital recording devices. Parents nowadays face a very different kind of environment, where everybody's got at least one camera on them at all times. There's so much more possibility, I suppose, just having access to the device. It's right there. And people can sometimes act without thinking and do something that they would otherwise regret. You know, when I was growing up, we didn't have these kinds of devices.

I want to share a story of my own, and by no means do I think my story – my story pales in comparison with those that have been told before, but it's my story, so I'd like to tell a little bit about that. When I was in high school, I was really good friends with a buddy, and we had a falling-out, but we'd see each other often at parties and that kind of thing. And, like I say, we didn't have these kinds of devices back then, but we had, you know, those big cameras that you put on your shoulder, that you needed to plug into the wall like those old camcorders. We were at a party one night and, you know – we were in high school – drinking too much and having too much fun, and I had too much to drink, so I was being sick at my friend's house. It was terribly embarrassing. I mean, when you're that young and you've only had a few drinks on different occasions, it's hard to know what your limit is. Mr. Speaker, I figured out what my limit was that day.

That was a big mistake, but here's what happened. My ex-friend took the big video camera and filmed me being sick. I actually had been sick on my friend's kitchen floor, and I got some paper towels to try to clean it up, but it appeared as though I was swimming in my own sickness. I was trying to be responsible, even though I had had too much to drink, and clean up after myself, and this friend who wasn't a friend came in and took advantage of my vulnerability. You know, even though we weren't friends, it's kind of a bullying scenario. Then, subsequently, what he would do with that video was have screenings at high school during lunch. It was pretty embarrassing. Like, everybody knew what I had done.

I was ashamed of myself, but that's what kids do, right? You know, we learn and we move on. But I hesitate to think, too, what – and I know my situation wasn't about pornography. I know the bill is more about pornography, but I'm just trying to use an analogy that when people violate your trust, it's hard to know how to trust people again. That's why when I think about my niece, I think about bills like this and how great it is that we've got people who are thinking about our children and our women and girls and protecting them.

What else, Mr. Speaker? I think that by supporting this bill, we're sending a very clear message that these kinds of extreme violations of trust and privacy are completely unacceptable, that this isn't something that we tolerate.

I think maybe part of the problem is that it's difficult for people to talk about this in public. We heard some very powerful stories, like I said, during the Bill 2 debate, and it's difficult for people to come forward and talk about that. So I'm really proud that we can put our political differences aside and talk about this very difficult issue. I think, you know, it's been said here before, but Albertans deserve to feel safe and comfortable in their schools and in their homes and in their communities.

You know, oftentimes we hear about abuse when children are very young, and they may not even know that this has happened to them. They may not understand the consequences and that this is something that could affect them for their entire life. I think that having legislation like this to protect kids so that they don't get into these situations, and we tell the perpetrators that society will not accept this – there is help available for these people. The Member for Calgary-Lougheed said: how do you prevent this? Well, we also need to help people who may be suffering from mental illness or addictions who might be tempted to perpetrate these kinds of crimes, so having a social safety net, having supports available for people who may be, like I say, tempted to perpetrate these kinds of acts.

I found an article online just the other day that really resonated with me, and I think it's very similar to what we've been talking about. I'll table the article tomorrow, Mr. Speaker. The article is from Wired magazine online and the title is Why There's No 'Silver Bullet' for Ridding the Web of Revenge Porn. Sure enough, I'm sure there's no silver bullet. While this bill is very good, there is more that we can do and more that needs to be done, but this is an excellent first start. So I'm really proud to support this. But I'd like to just read this to you. Because I don't have any personal experience with the topic of this bill, I wanted to look at other examples that are out there. [Mr. Westhead's speaking time expired]

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and speak to Bill 202, Protecting Victims of Non-consensual Distribution of Intimate Images Act. I would like to extend my heartfelt appreciation to my honourable colleague for Bonnyville-Cold Lake for working so hard and bringing this important and, in my humble opinion, historic bill. Thank you very much, sir.

I believe that this is an area that needs to be addressed by the Legislatures of the entire country, all the provinces and the territories, so that we can stop this kind of bullying and we can stop this kind of behaviour to protect our children. I'm proud that Alberta is taking a step, and it seems like all parties are supporting it, which is, you know, great news.

Listening to all my colleagues, I remember that when we were growing up – you know, I'm older than a few of my colleagues here – we didn't have these digital cameras and these iPads.

Mrs. Pitt: Did you have a computer?

Mr. Gill: No. There was no power in India – right? – so it wouldn't work even if we had one.

On a serious note, like, we didn't have that technology. The children of my era weren't threatened by who's recording it or who's sharing it. Now once we put anything on the Internet, there's no way you can delete it and stuff like that because it changes hands so quickly.

You know, with this technology the world has changed so much. Everybody has cameras and iPhones and all those digital devices. Every household has it. It seems like every child has it. I know that my kids have all the iPads and stuff like that, which sometimes I think I should take back from them. But sometimes I have to bribe them because I'm never home.

Mr. Rodney: You're busy working.

Mr. Gill: Yeah.

You know, there are fewer and fewer things in this day and age that we can protect from the world, like, when it comes to privacy. As I said, with digital media and social media it's so quick, especially all those trolls on Twitter and Facebook and all those social media things. People just change, they alter, they share, and we can never recover those things, especially when these images are targeting children. That's just sad. I mean, no children should be exposed to bullying when it comes to the sharing of these kinds of images. If somebody is sharing these images with or without consent, somebody is breaking that trust.

One thing that we can all agree on is that images of an intimate nature deserve the expectation of privacy, whether these images are taken with consent or without consent. Again, if they're shared against the wishes of the victim, it's a breach of trust with each other.

We've heard the stories about the young girl Amanda Todd. This happens all the time. I've seen it on TV, in newspapers. Perhaps it's even been with someone that we know, the devastating toll that the sharing of these images can take. Relentless cyberbullying leads to serious, long-lasting emotional scars. I believe that if we can somehow pass this legislation in this House, it will prevent these kinds of horrendous crimes against these vulnerable children.

I want to thank all members of the House and especially, once again, my colleague from Bonnyville-Cold Lake for bringing this forward. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to all members of this House for supporting this great cause.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to join in the congratulations of my colleagues to the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake for presenting this private member's bill, Bill 202, Protecting Victims of Non-consensual Distribution of Intimate Images Act.

I rise, really, to speak as a father, an uncle, a brother, a husband, also on behalf of colleagues who've been subjected to this sort of thing as well as, actually, students. During my 40 years of working at the university, I've seen students damaged by similar things. It's obvious that it's only over the last perhaps 10 years that the technology has existed that's described in this bill.

You know, it affects – it isn't just young girls. I think that's an important point that we've got to make here. These are intimate images of any gender. It can affect young women. It can affect young men. It can affect people that are transitioning. The key thing is: is it an intimate image, and has there been consent?

Now, I think that's something that I want to spend a little bit of time talking about, but before I do that, I actually want to congratulate the spirit of this debate. Once again we are actually working together to try to craft something that is going to be useful. It's similar to the spirit that was shown, for instance, on the bill that I spoke to about education for vaccination in the last sittings. I congratulated all of us, and I hoped that that spirit might be inoculated into the House, and I think it has been. I like seeing this collegiality and co-operation.

You know, it's also been evident in the discussion of Bill 1. I mean, there's some carping about the fact that we can't spend as much money as we'd like to spend and actually don't have to raise taxes as much as the opposition would to accomplish the same thing, but I think that in general we're in agreement that cutting school fees is a good thing, and all of us are working together. Similarly, with Bill 2; that's an act that all of us agree on. There may be some fine details in it that cause us some discussion, but we are working together. This is a good use of our time as members here to discuss this private member's bill.

I want to turn to the point about consent. I think it deserves a lot of discussion. You know, it isn't just consent for the transmission of intimate images that I want to talk about here. The concept of consent, particularly in the sexual relations context, is vital. There's been evidence just over the last couple of weeks that there are judges that don't really understand that concept very well and that need to be educated about what true consent is or when a person is unable to actually give that consent.

It's one of the things that I congratulate the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake on. In the bill it says:

A person who distributes an intimate image of another person knowing that the person depicted in the image did not consent to the distribution, or is reckless as to whether or not that person consented to the distribution, commits a tort against that other person.

That sort of language needs to be applied to other situations of consent. I think that if it were, there would be a lot of victims of this sort of behaviour that would actually see justice.

In that case that I'm referring to, where a judge thought that an inebriated woman could give consent, that woman has not seen justice and will never see justice and will live with that for the rest of her life, suffering from posttraumatic stress disorder, I'm sure, and shame in the community and all these other things. So I really congratulate the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake for putting that kind of language in this act.

I'm going to comment on consent from another point of view. I'm not sure why we have to go to these lengths, actually, to do this. I've been practising medicine for 40 years, and for 40 years if I wanted to take a picture of somebody's parts, I had to get a signed consent. I didn't have to be taught that. That's common sense. I mean, the Member for Strathmore-Brooks was talking about common sense in the budget. This is common sense on consent. If you take somebody's image and you want to use it, as I would use it, for instance, to teach about the medical problem or to document it in the medical file, I know that I have to get written consent for that and that I have to be able to produce that consent if I'm asked for it. I think that's really what the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake is talking about.

Similarly, I've been doing clinical trials in hematology and medical oncology for 30 years. There's a thing called good clinical practice rules for that. The number one rule in good clinical practice is that you have to get an informed consent, informed consent meaning that the patient that signs that consent actually has been told about the benefits and risks of this treatment, and I have to document that the patient has actually understood that information and that the consent was not obtained by any form of coercion. For instance, I could not say to that patient: if you don't sign up for this trial, you're not going to get this treatment. That's forbidden in good clinical practice in clinical trials. I realize that, you know, in the Member for Banff-Cochrane's experience it might have been difficult to get an informed consent from him for the video there.

Anyway, yesterday I was at a fantastic event at the Boyle McCauley community centre. It was called the inner-city roast beef dinner. I was there with my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Centre. There were Edmonton Eskimos there. There were actually some Conservative Party of Canada, CPC, MPs there. We were happy to have our pictures taken. But, actually, I noticed that some of the attendees of this dinner actually had red dots applied on their coats. I overheard somebody say: well, that means that your image will not be taken by the TV cameras. So the professional videographers know about informed consent. Even when we're taking pictures of schoolchildren down here on the steps, some of them have FOIP waivers that mean that they don't actually go in the pictures. So this idea about consent for image use I think is very prevalent.

The other one that's really been striking to me is that I was the medical director of the blood transfusion service for many years. I actually had to testify before the Krever commission because Justice Krever made a lot of inquiries into the blood transfusion system of the '80s. You know, everybody thinks about the HIV and hepatitis C and hepatitis B infections that, unfortunately, happened in the '80s and early '90s. It was a very evocative time. Justice Krever did opine that there were things that the blood system needed to be doing to protect Canadians from those infections. But he also made a very important observation: up until that time one did not have to consent for blood transfusion.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to have the opportunity to stand today to speak to such a thoughtful and timely private member's bill. As many others have, I'd like to echo my thanks to the member across the aisle for bringing forward this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity to get a bachelor of arts in professional communications. As part of that study one of my favourite portions of what I studied with that was the history of communications technology. That started all the way back from when we first moved as a human species from an oral culture to a written culture and looked at the implications of what making that kind of change does. The fascinating thing when you study the evolution of communications technology is that it doesn't just change what we do as individuals. It changes every aspect of how our society functions.

A change from traditionally having communicated mainly orally to all of a sudden communicating in writing meant a drastic change in how we communicated information. All of a sudden we didn't have to tell things in stories or in rhyme or other things like that that made it easier to remember. Suddenly we could communicate in different ways, in briefer ways. We could tell stories in different ways. Information could travel so much further. All of a sudden we found that, you know, people could share thoughts and ideas over great distances. Suddenly people could communicate more, so far-flung groups became closer and more connected. You see that as time goes on. You see that as other things evolve. Over time that evolution of technology, that communications technology, happens faster and faster. The interesting thing, Mr. Speaker, is that you can never predict the result that a new technology is going to have until it's too late to actually remove that technology, until it's become so ingrained in our society that it can no longer actually be removed.

That's the interesting thing when we sort of come up to our present day, when we have technology that's moving so fast, so quickly. Certainly, with the evolution now of the smart phone and a camera built into every device, all of a sudden then we had a new technology that came in. It was adopted very quickly, and we were all very excited about it, but we didn't know the full ramifications of embracing that technology and it becoming ubiquitous in society until we reached a point where it's too late to put that genie back in the bottle.

Certainly, having this technology and having these opportunities confers a lot of benefits on us as a society. Certainly, for us as politicians the opportunity to be able to very quickly access social media, to snap a picture and send it out to thousands of people, to immediately be able to communicate is an amazing thing.

Mr. Fildebrandt: I might not agree with that.

Mr. Shepherd: At times we may regret that we've done so, indeed.

At the same time, you know, it's opened up a whole new area of intimacy in relationships. The ability to text, to send photos quickly, to be able to go back and forth, and to be able to share things. It's a great thing in many respects, but we certainly recognize that with it now has come new opportunities for abuse. That's a challenging thing because, again, Mr. Speaker, we cannot put this toothpaste back in the tube. It's out there, it's part of our lives, and we have to deal with the challenges and the possible consequences that can come from the use or misuse of this technology.

As I said, this is an incredibly timely bill from the member to give us the opportunity to address one of the issues that has come up. It's a combination, Mr. Speaker, as others have noted, of things that have always happened to some extent. We've always had bullying. We've always had, sadly, abuse. Frankly, that is what this comes down to. When we have people who are sharing these kinds of images nonconsensually, without permission, to attack another person, it comes down to control, whether someone is trying to control another person by blackmailing them over images that they may hold or whether it's someone that's angry and acting out of anger and rage and for revenge because they've lost control over another individual over whom they felt the right to have that control. This is a very smart and prudent step that allows us to move forward to ensure that that kind of abuse is not allowed to continue, that there are strict consequences for when it occurs, and that allows for immediate and important action.

Mr. Speaker, we've heard a lot of talk today about the need for better understanding and better education, and that's another great benefit of this bill coming forward, the opportunity that we have to stand here today and have this debate in the Legislature; the media that this will generate; the opportunity that this is going to give to schools to educate students, to parents to have the kind of conversation that the member had with his daughter, that sparked this bill. It's an opportunity for us to raise awareness and through that to educate our young people about what healthy relationships should be.

Mr. Speaker, as others have noted, far too often currently we see that our young men and women do not always have a healthy understanding of relationships, and particularly our young men do not always have a clear understanding of the kind of relationships they should be having with women, of how they should treat them, and of having a broad and inclusive view, frankly, a feminist view, understanding how to properly support women, not to exploit them, not to abuse them, not to try to take advantage of them or control them but to treat them as equals.

We've seen this time and again through social media, through recent things that have occurred. We've seen this. I don't bring it up in any way to get into partisan discussion or to bash one party or another, but we've seen the kinds of toxic world views that some young men in our society hold. Where they come from is that we're not setting better examples ourselves as leaders or as individuals, or they're not having the opportunity to have proper mentors who teach them how to respect women and build healthy relationships.

It's incredibly important that we have this bill, Mr. Speaker, to address the fact that we know that that occurs, that we know that this kind of misogyny, this kind of abuse is out there. Certainly, it does not happen only to women, but in a survey by the Cyber Civil Rights Initiative they did find that 90 per cent of victims who reported to that survey were women; 93 per cent said that they suffered significant emotional distress due to being a victim of this sort of abuse; 49 per cent reported having been harassed or stalked by individuals who saw the illicit material. So as others have noted, this is not something that merely stays in cyberspace. It has very real impacts on women, the others that suffer this abuse or this form of harassment. It affects them emotionally, psychologically, can leave very deep scars and damage and can lead to real-world threats on their life. So it's entirely reasonable and appropriate to consider this bill.

I understand that as of last summer about 34 states in the U.S. had brought forward laws against nonconsensual sharing of images and revenge porn, most of those outlawing the dissemination of intimate images when there is a lack of consent. Of course, we heard that there was a similar bill that was passed by the former NDP government in Manitoba, and this aligns with the federal government's bill, Protecting Canadians from Online Crime Act.

I particularly appreciate that the member took steps to give schools an opportunity and a route by which they can deal with this because, as I said, Mr. Speaker, it's incredibly important that we use this not just as a tool for punishment but as an opportunity for education. Certainly, we've seen in the cases that have been noted, Rehtaeh Parsons and others, that we had young people who did not seem to fully comprehend the scope and the effect of their actions. So perhaps by schools having the ability to take direct and swift action to address these problems before they spread out further in the community, before we have students that have had to endure months or years of shame, by being able to act quickly, set an example for other students and help them understand, help them, frankly, build empathy – that's one of the most difficult things I found when I was reading coverage of some of these stories: young men who were involved in the nonconsensual sharing of these images did not understand the impact that they had.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my deep pleasure to rise today to support Bill 202, Protecting Victims of Non-consensual Distribution of Intimate Images Act. First of all, I would like to thank the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake for bringing forward such an amazing bill. I'm very much amazed to listen to the story of how it came out after the conversation with his daughter, and I would personally like to write a note to her thanking her for this discussion on this.

I would like to begin by defining a few terms which are used very commonly and very often, but as a reminder I would still like to use the dictionary to define those terms; for example, the term “private.” When we talk about that something is private, it means that it’s protected from view or disturbance by others. When we talk about that something is safe, that means that it’s free from harm’s reach. This bill is basically providing assurance to an individual in society that through the use of media or through any other means, you are protected and you are safe where you are in society.

With this bill I would like to share a story. Throughout the time I was in school, in university, I have seen multiple situations where people have been targeted and their photos have been taken without their consent and shared on campus or anywhere among their families or friends. I have seen the consequences afterwards because these people will not be able to even show their face to their friends or even feel safe to step outside their homes. It’s a rejection, Mr. Speaker, that they experience. When we talk about inclusion, when we talk about justice, when we talk about peace, those ideologies or the steps that we take to promote those concepts – this particular situation, when the individual is not feeling safe stepping outside their house or home just because they’re exposed through technology, is basically not fair to that individual.

Also, research has shown that when somebody faces rejection, it activates the same pathways in the brain that are activated when we have a physical injury or when we have physical pain. Basically, the extent of the pain the person experiences at the time of rejection is actually no less than physical pain. Usually the treatment is the same: taking painkillers. So you can imagine that how much of an emotional impact that person is having is equivalent to physical injury.

When we talk about a situation like this, basically we are strengthening our community by basically allowing that person to sue the other individual who is using the images of the individual without consent. As an individual we have a right to make a choice. We have the freedom of choice as individuals in terms of what we agree to and what we do not agree to. Exposing the individual’s privacy or something that would damage or harm the image of that individual without their consent is basically a big damage to our society.

I would like to also mention that it’s a big social issue because when we are talking about strengthening our communities, the fundamental underlying concept behind building relationships and strengthening communities is trust. When privacy is breached, the trust is gone. And when the trust is gone, then how can we even move forward to ensure that we celebrate, you know, inclusivity, strong relationships? The fundamental concept that begins with one individual: when that does not exist, how can we build a bigger picture on that? We need to start with one individual, as we are talking about in this particular situation, which may sound a little minor. We’re targeting one individual and their consent for their photos to be used on social media or anywhere, but the importance of this concept in a bigger picture is so much, and it’s so significant that it’s oftentimes underestimated.

I’m very proud to say that I am Canadian. I belong to a nation where I enjoy freedom, where I enjoy safety, where I feel protected. This bill is actually in alignment with the federal government’s Protecting Canadians from Online Crime Act. Basically, it is already something we have got on the federal level, and Alberta taking this initiative and discussing this in the Alberta Legislative Assembly makes me super proud, I would say. We are talking about the safety of our citizens in the province of Alberta as well as in the great nation of Canada.

Also, my other concern is that when we talk about the sharing of those images without consent, the problem is that oftentimes those images are edited. The era we are living in right now, through technology everything is possible. So when images are shared, they’re oftentimes edited and are not even true to portray that specific individual. It’s a very serious issue in our society. The consequences to that are – basically, it’s a false portrayal of that individual in the first place. That’s one thing that is not fair to that individual. Secondly, it is being shared with everybody and conveying wrong messages. It’s a target on that individual psychologically, physically, emotionally. By all means, it’s a target on that individual, and any type of target on an individual is basically a breach of safety and privacy.

Therefore, with great happiness and with great pride I would like to strongly support this bill. I’m very grateful to have this discussion ongoing in Alberta’s Legislative Assembly today. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It’s my absolute pleasure to stand and speak in support of Bill 202, Protecting Victims of Non-consensual Distribution of Intimate Images Act. I don’t have much time, but I don’t need much time because it’s a great bill. It’s something that continues to send the message that we are supporting victims of sexual violence and sexual exploitation and that we want to make sure that the message is focused on that we’re not blaming someone for an image being shared, but we’re ensuring that the blame is rightly being put at the feet of the person who has actually shared that image without a person’s consent. That’s something that we need to continue to talk about: how we address consent through education in our province.

Unfortunately, when we have young people that are experiencing this new technology, we don’t have the legislation that can keep up with the decisions that they make. They have not developed the skills of being able to see what the effects of their decision-making are, those consequences. So it’s a good thing that we make sure that we can start talking about this more now and make sure that there are also rules in place to deter those that would do it.

It is something that disproportionately affects women. Ninety per cent of those that are affected, that have this done, that have revenge porn done, are women. As the Member for Edmonton-Centre was saying, 93 per cent of these people experience significant emotional distress, and as many as 51 per cent contemplate suicide. It’s that shame factor, that is still incredibly prevalent in today’s society, that makes this sort of sharing still so powerful even though we would hope that it would not be.

So it’s my absolute happiness that this bill has come forward from the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, and I know that I have total support on this side of the House. Thank you.

The Speaker: If there are no other members who wish to speak to the bill, I would go to the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake to close debate.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is very much an honour to be able to stand in front of my caucus, the government side’s caucus, and the other caucuses and to hear their support for a bill that I’ve put forward. As mentioned, I do need to make sure that people understand that whenever we put a piece of legislation forward, it is important that we are going out to the different groups and ensuring that it’s the best piece of legislation that we can bring forward.

I do believe that cyberbullying is an unfortunate by-product of our technology moving forward. It is something that needs to be dealt with, and I believe that the bill that I'm going to be putting forward, Bill 202, will take a small part of some of the cyberbullying and give a second thought, if you will, to whether or not people want to pursue this terrible bane for all of our province and Albertans. For myself, I think that this is truly a nonpartisan bill that I'm bringing forward because we all have a loved one that potentially could be impacted with revenge porn. The fact is that when we're looking at moving forward, how is it that something so powerful can have so little legislation involved with it?

I do have to make sure that I acknowledge that the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Education did both sit down with me and gave me the opportunity to discuss my idea on these bills. I also have to thank the NDP caucus whip for also hearing the idea being brought forward and taking that idea to the caucus and being able to make sure that if there were contributions they wanted to make to this bill, they were able to. I'd like to thank the third party, and, well, the independent parties, if you will, independent members, for their support as well for this bill being brought forward.

The fact is that the idea was something that my youngest daughter had brought forward in a discussion that I had because this is something that I was concerned that some day she might have to deal with. I mean, this is something that, I think, is an unbelievable thing that you have to talk about with your daughter. She's 11 years old. I can't believe that I needed to have that conversation, and there are several other conversations. I think we all can acknowledge that she is going to be exposed to technology. The fact that we all have a cellphone that's available to us that can take high-quality pictures at any time and distribute them in a second is a powerful tool that can many times be used in a good way, but it also can be used against mainly our young women and our women of Alberta.

Legislation like this, I believe, brings accountability to both the youth and the adults within Alberta. We need to make sure that we all are able to hold those accountable that share these pictures because it's all of our responsibility to make sure that, in the end, our most vulnerable circumstances, which is when our privacy is breached, are protected. It doesn't matter whether you're a man or a woman. What matters is that privacy that we expect from our loved ones, whether they're our friends, our parents, our uncles, our aunts, our cousins, our best friends, or just a person that we know. All these people need to accept that taking a picture that is shared with them and putting it out for the rest of the world to see without your permission is wrong.

Now, I'm hoping that if there is some improvement that needs to be done to this bill, because I do believe that working together in all parties to ensure that this piece of legislation moves forward, that we have a good, strong . . . [Mr. Cyr's speaking time expired].

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 202 read a second time]

The Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to seek unanimous consent to move directly to private members' motions at this time.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Motions Other than Government Motions

Surgical and Diagnostic Wait Times

501. Mr. Jean moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to complete and make public within 120 days of the passage of this motion a report relating to surgical and diagnostic wait times that identifies the following: barriers causing excessive wait times; estimated costs of wait times in terms of factors including but not limited to lost productivity, health deterioration, and opioid addiction; and cost-effective solutions including those used in other provinces to reduce wait times within the limits of the Canada Health Act.

[Debate adjourned March 13: Mr. Smith speaking]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on Motion 501 to speak in favour of it. Motion 501 calls on the government to complete a report within 120 days of the passage of this motion that will look at surgical and diagnostic wait times.

We know that we do, on both sides of this House, support the concept of a universal public system of health care. The problem, however, is that sometimes that public system of health care does not provide timely access. It's important for us to identify the barriers that cause excessive wait times, it's important for us to estimate the costs of those wait times, and it's important for us to propose and evaluate cost-effective ways of dealing with these wait times. It's important for us to look at the best practices across this country and across the provinces and see what we can do about creating a more efficient system.

Now, Mr. Speaker, Albertans wait approximately three weeks longer than the national average for treatment, and Albertans wait at times five weeks longer to go from a specialist to treatment than, say, the citizens of Saskatchewan, our neighbours to the east. It's important for us to address the concept of wait times. Wait times mean that patients continue in their suffering. We know that access to wait times is not access to health care, so if we truly care about serving the needs of our fellow Albertans and improving our health care system, it's going to be important for us to address wait times.

Wait times mean that sometimes you can have a great deal of pain as you're dealing with whatever affliction it is that you're facing. Hip replacements can take 209 days for 90 per cent of the patients in this province. A knee replacement can be 224 days, Mr. Speaker, for 90 per cent of the patients that need a knee replacement. Those are 209 days and 224 days when they're in a great deal of pain. I was just talking to a friend of mine in my church on Sunday who's been dealing with knee pain. She is going to have to wait a significant amount of time before she can have anything dealt with.

If we just take a look at the cost that that means to our society, where people are incapable of working, incapable of taking care of their family because of the problems that they are dealing with, this is a serious thing. I think it's important for us to take Motion 501 and to apply the time necessary to study this to identify those barriers. Why is it that we take longer in this province to access appropriate health care?

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

5:00

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who would like to speak to Motion 501? The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to speak to Motion 501, put forward by my hon. colleague the Leader of the Official Opposition. In just a few short words there is so much offered by the Leader of the Opposition on ways that we can identify issues and challenges inside the system. I know and you'll know that he is passionate – passionate – about making a positive impact on not just our province but our health care system as well. He has provided some comments earlier in the debate. As well, I'm sure he's looking forward to closing debate around just this very, very important issue.

This motion alone certainly isn't going to solve all of the problems within the context of our system. It's certainly not going to solve all the problems at AHS, but you know, Mr. Speaker, that knowledge is power. This is an opportunity for the government to provide that information. While I appreciate – and we've heard from the Minister of Health some comments earlier that much of this information is available, but what . . . [Mr. Cooper's speaking time expired] Oh, that's too bad.

The Speaker: The hon. member to close debate.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that all Albertans, all Canadians, for that matter, that have had a loved one, a member of their family in the health care system in Alberta or the rest of Canada are very concerned. First of all, they know that we have one of the greatest health care systems in the world as far as 90 per cent of the issues, but it's the 10 per cent. Many of the issues fall through the cracks because we're not paying attention or we don't have alternative options for those people.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that I'm very disappointed, first of all, that if the members of the government don't support this motion, it's for political reasons. I don't think that's helpful because this motion simply asks for some basic research on how to reduce our terrible wait times and show Albertans the evidence of what they find. We know, notwithstanding that we spend a lot more money than any other major province in Canada, that we have some of the worst outcomes of all the provinces except for Atlantic Canada. In fact, for wait times in particular, Saskatchewan has less than half of the number of days of wait time that we do for most regularly known procedures: knee surgeries, hip transplants, those types of things. It's 90 and 95 days compared to over 200 and 220 days in Alberta in some cases.

There's no reason why this government shouldn't support this, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are suffering needlessly, and we know that other jurisdictions in Canada, other constitutional obligations that are in other provinces similar to ours have better wait times, in fact, half the amount of wait times that we do as far as real data goes. I think that what we need to do is to have this government focus on the question of how to do wait times better and why other provinces are getting better outcomes.

I believe this NDP government is more worried about other issues related to health care than they are actual outcomes. I know that we have to focus on technology. We have to focus on finding improvements in our health care system, but truly, Mr. Speaker, right now, today, with what we know is going on in the rest of the country, we also know that we can do a lot better than what we're doing. We know that other jurisdictions get better results, and they get it for less money, so it's not an issue of money. Even though this particular part of our system, health care, takes up over 40 per cent of our budget – some say as much as 50 per cent of our budget – the truth is that other provinces spend less and get better results.

These wait times that we currently have are unacceptable. Waiting causes more complications, Mr. Speaker. I mentioned last time in my speech how it costs people not just money but how it costs people and Albertans productivity, in particular family members. In the long run this means that we're going to have more problems, that we'll have less of a quality of life, and that we will have more family members supporting those people that our health system let fall through the cracks.

Even when you consider addictions, Mr. Speaker, whether it be for a month of painkillers or three months or six months of painkillers, the situation is – being on painkillers for that long, as we know, does cause long-term complications, sometimes addiction to these painkillers, including fentanyl and other things. I would suggest that the less time we have people on wait-lists, the better off not just their quality of life is but the future ramifications of trying times and helping those people that can't help themselves.

There's a situation, Mr. Speaker, that frankly means that we're losing the opportunity. Today we had an opportunity, for instance, to make sure that this particular motion would pass with all-party support. I know the opposition parties are supporting me on this motion. I think the government could have come forward and said: "Yes, we will do this. We will come back to Albertans with the report indicating exactly why it's taking longer in Alberta to see a doctor, why it's taking longer in Alberta to get a surgery or to see a specialist than it is in other provinces, and why it's taking sometimes twice as long in Alberta as it does in other provinces."

Again, many of these people in other jurisdictions are paying out of their pocket at clinics in B.C. or Quebec or even in the United States, and I don't think that's what the government wants. I don't think the government wants Albertans to go to other jurisdictions. I don't think they want us to go to B.C. or Saskatchewan or the United States.

I think that what they want is a better solution here in Alberta for Albertans, one that actually responds to Albertans and clearly understands, through a number of studies of empirical evidence much like I'm suggesting here, that we can do better, Mr. Speaker. I don't think that waiting lists are just so that rich people can get by and go and find their own opportunities. I think waiting lists are clearly something that is in the way of good productivity and good health care. To have an operation today doesn't cost any more than having an operation in six months, and that's why I think we need to clear the backlog and get to the real details of why we are taking so much longer to fulfill the needs of our citizens than other jurisdictions in Canada are doing.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'm hoping that the government will change their mind, that they'll come forward and support us on this. We'll see what happens. The tinkering that this government is doing with health care is not going to help and solve the long-term ramifications of the system itself.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Good morning.

Let us reflect. May we always remember that our strengths outweigh our weaknesses and that by effectively collaborating and co-operating, we can have positive outcomes that will benefit all Albertans.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 4

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2017

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's my pleasure to rise and say a few words about Bill 4, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2017. The supplementary amounts provided by this bill reflect the fiscal picture outlined in the third-quarter fiscal update, released on February 23, which is likewise reflected in the forecast provided by Budget 2016. These amounts are necessary for the government to conduct business and fulfill its commitments for the current fiscal year. When passed, this bill will authorize approximately $1.6 billion in voted expense funding and $125 million in voted capital financial transactions for the government.

As the Minister of Finance previously mentioned in this Chamber, the single largest amount reflected in this bill is for the Fort McMurray wildfire disaster. I know that all members in this Chamber have a great deal of admiration and respect for the first responders who battled that terrible fire, and I know that all members of this Chamber have supported and will continue to support all Albertans who were affected by this disaster. At this time let me commit once again that this government and all Albertans have the backs of those who were affected by the fire then, today, and into the future.

Madam Chair, I know we have already had a good debate on these supplementary estimates during Committee of Supply and again during second reading. At this point let me just add a few additional comments.

In addition to the Wood Buffalo wildfire, this bill will provide authorization for additional monies and transfers for the following 18 departments: Advanced Education, Agriculture and Forestry, Children's Services, Community and Social Services, Culture and Tourism, Economic Development and Trade, Education, Environment and Parks, Health, Indigenous Relations, Infrastructure, Justice and Solicitor General, my favourite of Labour, Municipal Affairs, Seniors and Housing, Service Alberta, Transportation, and Treasury Board and Finance.

In previous debates on this supplementary supply there was one point raised which deserves further elaboration. As was discussed in second reading, there are transfers between Environment and Parks and other ministries' budgets to align accountabilities for each ministry's role in the climate leadership plan. I want to be crystal clear for the benefit of all members in this House that these are transfers and not increases in overall spending.

As I wrap up my remarks, let me acknowledge what we all know. This was a challenging year for our province. Faced with the worst recession in a generation, this government made a choice to protect the core public services that Albertans rely on, invest in infrastructure, and continue to work to diversify the economy. As our economy turns the corner and returns to a position of growth, adding 19,000 jobs since July 2016, our government is squarely focused on making life better for Albertans. Whether that's keeping tuition frozen, reducing school fees, or capping electricity rates, this government has the backs of Albertans and will continue to have their backs into the future.

On that note, Madam Chair, I urge all of my colleagues in the Assembly to support this supplementary supply bill and provide the government with the necessary spending authority to protect front-line services and pay for the Wood Buffalo wildfire.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there any other questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thanks, Madam Chair. How are you? It's good to be here today. My thoughts on Bill 4 – are we on Bill 4? I didn't know I was on the speakers list. I'm actually going to yield the floor.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak briefly to the bill to oppose it not because the government is preparing itself to establish systems and keep the government running, to keep things running smoothly – I think that's valuable – but I oppose it simply because it's a proxy for the entire budget, which I cannot support. That's my challenge with it. The point of interim is to keep the government running until the budget is passed. If I might use an analogy, this engine needs to be throttled back. An engine that overrevs very quickly self-destructs, and I would suggest that our government needs to be spending less, not racing ahead and just continuing to spend at the same pace it has been. It would be valuable for us to throttle back a little bit.

The truth is that the amount here reflects, really, the amount needed for the total budget, and that's where my challenge with it really is. It perpetuates an endless spending problem that we have currently. We are here this year and last year advancing the highest deficits that Alberta has ever had and the highest per capita deficits in modern Canadian history of any province. There is a sense of which we need to throttle this engine back a little bit, not just keep racing ahead, not just keep pouring more fuel into an engine that's already overrevving and headed for a significant self-destructive event.

There needs to be some care expressed here in terms of how much we're spending. We just plain are spending the highest amount per capita of any province in Canada. Over the last 10 years spending has increased much more than inflation and population rates, so really we're experiencing expansionary budgets here. These are not budgets that keep up with the cost of living, that keep up with population growth. These are expansionary budgets, where government is taking to itself the freedom to spend more on a percentage basis than is needed, and in a time of economic difficulty at least holding the line would be wise. There's no need to follow the government's fearmongering and say that somebody else would maybe cut it and cast the province into chaos. At least holding the line would be the responsible thing to do. That would be the correct thing to do.

Alberta needs leadership on our spending problem. We have an addiction to spending as a people and as a government that we have not yet come to terms with, and we need to somehow get some help with that. There's so little accountability that some might say that there's no accountability on this spending spree. There are few program parameters that rein it in, and we just need to find some way to cut back some of our expenses, to cut back some of the misused spending, some of the excessive spending, and just act responsibly.

This is not a responsible budget. The media and the people have been extremely clear about that. They have been speaking to us over and over again that they wish that the government would be cutting back some. I have numbers and numbers of young people who have come to me and are very frustrated and say: "What are we going to do? We're going to be paying for somebody else's debt for decades to come." They're not happy as young people to be seeing a government that's spending their future today, so we need to cut back on spending. This interim supply does not indicate that. The government has increased taxes. It's increased costs in many different ways.

The Chair: Hon. member, I think you might be speaking to the next bill, Bill 5. We're on supplementary supply, not interim supply.

Mr. Orr: Supplementary supply. Yes.

The Chair: The bill that we're on is the supplementary supply, and that's what you're speaking to?

Mr. Orr: Yeah.

The Chair: Okay.

10:10

Mr. Orr: Thank you.

I speak to it this way because, quite frankly, supplementary supply is just, as I said, a proxy for the rest of the budget that's coming. It keeps the government going for a while. [interjection] Oh, I'm sorry. Supplementary. Interim. You're right. I will pass. Forgive me.

The Chair: All right. Are there any other hon. members wishing to speak to the supplementary supply bill, Bill 4? Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's great to see how many people on the other side of the House are so excited to see me today. I generally get that reaction.

I am, of course, rising to speak to supplementary supply. I do appreciate the opportunity. Madam Chair, it's kind of interesting because we're discussing supplementary supply after we've now seen the government's budget, which was read last week in this Chamber, a budget which was, quite frankly, horrendous. One of the interesting things, having had an opportunity to go back home this weekend to Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre and speak to people who have now seen the budget – there's a lot of shock, a lot of fear, certainly, to see what this government has brought forward. I mean, the largest debts in our history, massive deficits, no ability at all, no sign at all of attempting to control spending. This is primarily what we're hearing back home over the weekend.

The reason I bring that up when we're talking about supplementary supply is that for me a real important question is: should we expect another supplementary supply bill this time next year? Is the government going to have to do the same thing despite already projecting a $71 billion or $72 billion debt by the time the next election comes? That's with the projections that the government has put forward for oil, which most analyses say are not realistic, so we could be seeing significantly more debt.

These are all things, of course, that I'm hearing in Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. I expect that you're probably hearing the same in your constituencies, people deeply worried about this government's inability to get control of spending. We spend – and we often talk about it here – significantly more than our province to the west per capita, and we do not see significantly more services inside our province. I don't think anybody could put forward that argument. So the concern we have as we see these types of bills coming forward is that this government will not take steps to get our spending problem under control. Despite repeatedly being asked to show the plan on how they can do that, despite the opposition coming forward with many realistic options that we can get spending under control, we still do not see anything from the government.

In fact, they laugh when we talk about it, but I don't think laughing about borrowing against our children's future upwards of $71 billion, $72 billion, $100 billion, wherever it's going to end up – I mean, as a father I find that scary. To me it's one of the largest intergenerational thefts that we've ever seen in this province, and I find that extremely troubling, particularly because this government is showing no sign, no appetite, no ideas on how to get our spending problem under control. We have a spending problem. Now, you don't have to be a business owner, though many of us are, and you don't have to be a farmer, which is, of course, a business, to be able to know that if you continue to spend more money than you're bringing in, you're eventually going to have a problem. How much debt can the province of Alberta take?

You know, this weekend when I was back home, I spent some time in Rimbey at their Fish and Game Association annual banquet, and some of the main topics that you would hear, when you would talk to people as we went through, were concerns over the money bills that this government is bringing forward, concerns that this government does not recognize that they're spending the good people of Alberta's money. The debt load is going to probably cause, maybe, credit downgrades again. We've already seen a credit downgrade under this government's tender. It's going to cause interest payments that are the equivalent of five, six, or seven government departments. That's a lot of hospitals. That is a lot of hospitals. But the government continues just to want to spend money, throw it in the black hole, and not get control.

That goes to the core of this bill and why there's a problem. The government is not showing the ability to manage the province. At its core managing our money and our finances is probably one of the most important jobs if not the most important job and role of government in our province. With $71 billion worth of debt by their own projections – it probably will be significantly more because they're projecting a higher oil price than most people think is reasonable – to me, Madam Chair, that shows that this government is not doing their most important job, which is managing the finances of Albertans.

I've said before that if I go home on the weekend and my spouse informs me that she's now borrowing money at unprecedented levels for our household to pay for our electricity bill, that would probably be my first sign that I have a spending problem within my household. If it was within my business, if my accountant said to me, "You're spending more money than you're bringing in," that again would be the first sign that I have a problem within my business, and I would need to restructure.

We have been warning this government about this since they started, and the government has continued blindly down the path of spending Albertans' money with no plan of getting the fiscal house in order, with no plan of dealing with the areas where we see a tremendous amount of spending.

Now, I do want to point out that there are some things within this supplementary supply that we support. Firstly, it is protecting front-line workers, something that is a big priority for the Wildrose Party. You know, we saw within my constituency last year an attempt to fire front-line nurses by the NDP government and Alberta Health Services. Luckily, we were able to convince them to back off from that, and I appreciate that by the government. Again, we're seeing signs that they don't actually support front-line workers, but this is a priority for us. Smaller classroom sizes. We definitely want to see those affected by the floods in 2013 finally helped all the way. Long-term care and affordable senior care: very important. Increased resources for our justice system, something this side of the House has been advocating for for a long time. We're seeing criminals literally being able to walk away after being criminally charged because of this government's incompetence. Often the government will mislead people about what is going on with that, but it is this government's incompetence.

We, of course, want the government to keep operating. Often when you talk about this, the government will say: "Hey, the opposition doesn't want the government to keep operating. That's why they want to vote against these bills." That's not true. We're not saying that we don't want to spend any money. We recognize that the province of Alberta has to spend money. We want Albertans to have the services that they need, but we don't want to keep spending more money than B.C. per capita with no increase in services to the people of Alberta.

You know, we often talk about how bloated our government is. Nothing – nothing – could prepare the people of Alberta for what they saw last week with this budget. We will be more bloated than we ever have been before, with no hope of this government taking the steps to fix it.

Now, I could tell you that this side of the House in a little over two years, when they're sitting on that side of the House, will take the steps to fix it once and for all. We will stand with Albertans. We will make sure they have the essential services they need, but we will work with our system to make it affordable, to make sure that it's cost-effective, to make sure that we can afford it, because that's how you would run a business. That's how you would run a household. The idea that you would continue to spend more money than other provinces, continue to push to have the largest debt that we've ever had in our history, continue to push deficits without getting spending under control: to just spend, spend, spend is fundamentally wrong.

Now, I talked about the interest payments, Madam Chair. Rocky Mountain House and Sundre are in dire need of a hospital. If you go to either of those communities, their infrastructure is crumbling. Reports have shown that those hospitals should have been replaced a long time ago. I could tell you that the interest payments that this government is going to create can buy a lot of hospitals across this province, can employ a lot of nurses. But, instead, they're going to continue to borrow so that we do not have the resources to be able to run the province.

For central Alberta, where I am from, the statistics that have come out about surgery cancellations out of Red Deer, for the communities that I represent and that many of my colleagues represent, are appalling – appalling – thousands and thousands more than for any other jurisdiction in the province. If somebody has a heart attack right now in any of my communities, they are, like, 70-some per cent more likely to die because central Alberta is not getting the care they need. But we still have the largest debt in our history, the largest deficits. We keep spending money, but we're not getting our people the services.

If the government had a plan that actually showed that our bridges would be fixed and our roads would be working and actually had a plan on how to spend that money, then maybe you could justify spending more money than B.C., but we're getting less than them. Instead, all we are getting – all we are getting – is an enormous amount of debt, putting a tremendous amount of burden on our children and our grandchildren, and this government has no plan. The people of Alberta see through it. They know that this government has no plan. If they had a plan, they would rise and show us how they truly intend to get the deficit under control, how they intend to pay down our debt in the future so that we don't have to spend billions and billions a year on interest and so we can get the money into people's hands that we need to.

Instead, I think this government, the NDP government, will continue to mislead Albertans, as they always have, will continue to spend their money with no accountability, will continue to create an enormous debt problem, that generations to come are going to have to fix. That is why I intend to vote against this bill, and I encourage all of my colleagues to vote against this bill. I certainly hope – hope – that one day the members across the way, before their time is up, will do the right thing for the people of Alberta and stop putting their expensive ideological agenda on the great people of Alberta.

The Chair: Any other questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm happy to rise on this bill, the supplementary supply bill of this government. I just think it needs to be said that if ever there was a testament that this government is out of control, this is it. When they've got a supplementary supply of $1.6 billion with – what? – 14 days left in the fiscal year, they didn't miss by a little bit; this government missed by a ton. They can't shoot straight. If you look in the supplementary estimates across the number of ministries that require more money to finish the year, one can only draw the conclusion that almost nobody got it right.

You know, I appreciate that government is big and that it's complex. Even if there were three or four ministries that had very good reasons – something was a surprise, or somebody missed their budget by a little bit – one could say: "All right. Well, this is within the reasonable scale of what a reasonable government might require in order to finish the year." But with this crew, Madam Chair, almost every ministry is requiring a lot more money to finish this year, which really speaks to the fact, unfortunately for Alberta, that the current government has no idea what they're doing, and they're not very good at doing it. That's just the fact that's obvious here today.

Now, the previous speaker talked about some of the things that I'm concerned about: the fact that they're taking $1.6 billion more to finish the year, which will land them at a $10.8 billion deficit this year; no plan to pay penny one of it back any time in the next 10 years; no plan to balance the budget, certainly, in this term and according to the Finance minister probably not till the end of the next term; no plan to protect our children.

Now, the government should care about Albertans, but if they can't care about themselves and the hard-working people whose jobs they're taking away now and killing by driving out investment in jobs and business, perhaps they should actually care about Alberta's children. I know that many of the members on the other side have children and grandchildren, and I'm sure they do care about their children. I guess that at this point I would ask them to not support this because they care about their children and grandchildren. With the path that they're going, all of their kids are going to be paying for 2017 light bulbs when they start working and trying to raise a family and trying to put a down payment together for their first home, and thanks to this NDP government that is going to be harder because of them than it was before this government.

It's really quite disturbing, you know, when you think about it, the strain that they're putting on the young people of the future. Right now there are kids in elementary school who are innocently going to school and learning the things that they need to learn from their teachers, and unfortunately they are in most cases blissfully unaware that the government of Alberta is going to make the rest of their life harder because of the irresponsible way in which they are managing the money that is entrusted to them by Albertans.

You know what? When you think about it, I don't know how they sleep at night over there, Madam Chair. I really don't. They could actually redeem themselves to a certain degree if they were to vote against this supplementary supply bill, but if they are going to support this with all of the other policies, mistakes, three jobless job plans in a row, they really don't have any good reason that they could give Albertans why Albertans should let them borrow another $1.6 billion on their behalf, which is why I won't be supporting this. I would recommend that all members of the House don't support this because this is bad for Alberta, it's bad for adults in Alberta today, and it's particularly bad for Alberta's children.

The Chair: Any other questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise just for a couple of minutes to speak about my opposition to the need for supplementary supply. I find it so disingenuous and so irresponsible that the government talks about bending the cost curve, reducing the accelerated spending increases from 6 and a half per cent, way, way past population growth and inflation, to some side of 4 per cent or 3 and a half, depending on the department. But then, as the hon. colleague before me just pointed out, when you are so far over budget, it just renders all that talk meaningless.

Say what you want, you know, but it's actions that count, and we've seen from this government consistently in two years almost 10 per cent in spending increases year over year at the same time that Albertans are taking 20, 30, 40 per cent reductions in their payroll and at the same time that unemployment is the highest it's ever been. I think the numbers support that our GDP actually dropped 2 and a half per cent last year, and that's a real misnomer because GDP also includes government spending, which is going up like crazy. So how much is the actual private side of our economy dropping?

Again, I see so often how the government doesn't try to get value for tax dollars, hard-earned tax dollars. My Wildrose colleagues and I have talked at great length about our desire to have cut school fees more, about our desire to push hard-earned tax dollars right to the front lines to ensure that teaching assistants, teachers, nurses, allied professionals, social workers are there where Albertans need them. I guess that when I look at, you know, $1.2 billion in interest next year, $2.3 billion in interest coming from the Alberta taxpayer in just two years, I'm very, very fearful as to where those cuts will have to come from, and I'm also fearful, with that extra spending, that interest, about how much business, how much investment it scares away.

I've seen estimates that up to $256 billion have already been driven out of Alberta because of our high spending, because of our taxation increase. You know, that's a big number. That's hard to get your head around. When I was at a community supper on Friday and was talking to one of my friends whose two sons, late 20s, are both almost in their second year of not working, looking for work, that's when that number drives home.

I want to talk about a couple of specifics, a couple of ideas where we can save some money. I believe that parts of this supplementary supply and going forward, of course, are the tremendous costs of the Fort McMurray wildfire. Again, a shout-out to our front-line workers – our fire departments, our people up there – that did an absolutely stellar job. [some applause] Thank you. It's not only them; it's Albertans too. When you hear about 10,000 Edmontonians and more thousands of Albertans opening their homes and their wallets and their time to help all people, that's what Alberta is, that's what Alberta is made of, and that's obviously something that we build on. So the fire, the great cost of the fire.

It makes me think of the Cypress Hills, the highest elevation, the same elevation as Banff. I believe it's the highest elevation in all of Canada east of the Rockies. Up until about 1985 we used to have local grazing, local people who took care of how many cattle to put in and keep the grass down. That made sense because up until about 1850 about a million buffalo a year used to roll through the Cypress Hills and eat that down. Now we have a government bureaucracy that hasn't taken care of ensuring that that grass is eaten, ensuring that the deadfall is properly picked up. There's even a report out, Madam Chair, that with a forest fire in the Cypress Hills, every single one of those 400 cabins could be gone in 20 minutes. This is absolutely something that – God forbid, hopefully, we're not talking about this in two years or 10 years, about how we had to put money into supplementary supply to cover that or to cover a similar emergency somewhere in the province.

Government, you have two years left of your mandate. This is a serious problem. It's a problem that locals used to take care of, where locals would ensure that the grass and the deadfall were at a more acceptable level. So I caution you that there are all kinds of those things in our province that are being left undone. Please do not leave them undone so that we're talking about it again in a year or 10.

Another suggestion I want to leave with you is local decision-making. I had the good fortune to have a tour of our hospital addition in Medicine Hat about three or four weeks ago. I'm very, very grateful to the taxpayers of Alberta for providing this for us. But when you look at the history, it's hard not to chuckle a bit. Originally promised at $450 million, then $400 million, then $200 million, it started at $220 million and now is some side of $60 million over budget – over budget – we think. We're waiting. It was supposed to open in October. It still hasn't opened. There's no date as to when it might. It's needed in our community. We service a hundred thousand Albertans in that area.

It's hard to be too critical because it looks like Alberta Health and Alberta Infrastructure got the addition right. I mean, it looks like it's going to be a fantastic facility. But when it's already at least $40 million over budget and when I'm talking to locals who are saying to me, "If they just would have listened when I tried to say: do this instead; do this while we're doing this; send me a copy of the plans and a copy of the description as to how it's going to be built, and I can show you how we can save money long term" – the government had a deaf ear and a blind eye. Madam Chair, local decision-making involving our good local people will get us way more value, will save us money. Government, in the brief few minutes I have, I ask you to try to do that for us wherever you can.

As many speakers before me have said, you know, a 9.9 per cent spending increase with little regard for actually trying to stay within our budgets is just not acceptable. It's not acceptable for the mother of the two 20-year-olds I had supper with on Friday, who can't find work because so many people have been scared out of this province and from creating jobs and investment. It's not acceptable for that six- or eight- or 10-year-old, who's born owing tens of thousands of dollars before they even begin. As I've stood up in this House and said many times, interest only goes to rich people and rich corporations, and it's going to cost all of us services but especially the next generation.

Madam Chair, I'll be voting against the bill at this point, and I'd ask all my colleagues to do the same.

The Chair: Any other questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill?

Are you ready for the question?

[The clauses of Bill 4 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Bill 5 Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2017

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments? The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Madam Chair. On behalf of the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance thank you for the opportunity to rise and say a few words in Committee of the Whole on the 2017-18 interim supply estimates for the offices of the Legislative Assembly and the government. Let me remind the members that when passed, these interim supply estimates will authorize approximate spending of $30 million for the Legislative Assembly, $7.8 billion in expense funding, $936 million in capital investment funding, $149 million in financial transactions funding for the government, and $241 million for the transfer from the lottery fund to the general revenue fund.

As the Minister of Finance mentioned previously, these interim supply estimates provide funding authorization that will allow the normal business of the province to continue while the Assembly takes the necessary time to review, debate, and approve the government's budget plans for the 2017-18 fiscal year. Madam Chair, the amounts in these interim supply estimates will provide the government and the Legislative Assembly with two months of funding. Providing two months of funding is the prudent approach. It provides sufficient time to fully debate the budget, that was tabled on Thursday, and therefore allows the Assembly the necessary time to do its work.

Madam Chair, for the benefit of the Assembly let me once again remind members about how government arrives at the requested amounts that we are here to debate. Treasury Board and Finance works with officials from across government to forecast the requirements of each department based on their expected costs, commitments, and the timing of payments that need to be made during the months of April and May 2017. Oftentimes, as part of the regular course of business, payments to certain providers are required at the beginning of the fiscal year. For example, in the case of Advanced Education certain payments are made to postsecondary institutions up front, at the beginning of the fiscal year. Likewise, in the case of Agriculture and Forestry certain payments are made up front to the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation.

As budget information has now been tabled in this Chamber in the form of the fiscal and strategic plans, ministry business plans, and government estimates, members can now have a clear line of sight into the government's fiscal plan. I would like to remind all members that the government's budget and the spending priorities for all ministries will be debated for over 70 hours in estimates in the coming days and weeks. Therefore, I would encourage all members to prepare for those estimates, when the relevant minister and their officials will be available to answer questions in significant detail.

Finally, Madam Chair, let me remind all members that a full appropriation act will, as part of the regular course of business, come to this House once the estimates process is complete. On that note, I urge all members of this Assembly to support the interim supply bill so that we can keep our schools and hospitals open as we progress through the proper debate on Budget 2017.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'll be happy to speak to Bill 5, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2017. I think I have the right one. It's really difficult to have a meaningful conversation on a bill that's basically a blank cheque and simply perpetuates the ever-expanding budget that we see year to year from this government. It's too bad that we can't actually figure out a way to produce power from our expanding budget. It would be a great way to produce some green power. Lots of energy there.

Basically, it's a bill that allows the government to continue to pay the bills until a budget is approved, and I understand that. In fact, when responding to this bill, the Government House Leader said that this funding is important as it keeps the lights on in our schools and our hospitals. I don't think anybody here wants to see anything shut down for two months while we wait for the budget to pass, so I agree that these are important issues. The government has the ability to plan ahead, though, so we could have actually come in in February and, you know, cut out a month of this budget just by starting the House early and getting things going that way.

Basically, the bill allows the government to keep the lights on. But don't worry. The Minister of Environment and Parks has a supercool plan that will not only give you light bulbs but also install them for you. Maybe that's part of the plan here. I don't know about you, Madam Chair, but most constituents I talk to know how to change a light bulb, and they're able to do it at a much lower cost than what the Ontario company this NDP government has hired to do the job will charge back to the government.

I'll give you an example. I had a call from a lady, one of my constituents. She was quite excited about this program, and she said: "You know, I've got 34 light bulbs in my house. If I call in here, they're going to come in and change these." So I talked to her a little bit about it, and I said, "At the current rate that they want to charge, it would come to, just for the light bulbs alone, $816 plus the travel and installation to have this company come out and do it." I mean, they're not going to do this for nothing, so we're probably looking at somewhere in the order of $1,500 to $1,600 just to get her light bulbs changed. I suggested to her – her husband is an oil field worker. He's fully capable of running a drilling rig, so he can probably install a couple of light bulbs. I said: you know, you can go to Costco. I looked up some pricing for her: the local co-op, six LED bulbs, $19.99. So for a total of $113 and a little bit of downtime on a Saturday her husband can save our province $1,200, $1,400. That's how Albertans save money, Madam Chair.

This bill is just another example of this government on the wrong track and not understanding how to time their budget properly. I know there are a lot of Albertans that are disappointed with the direction this government is taking. Over the last 10 years spending has grown at a faster rate than inflation and population growth. You know, like I said, if we could harness that expansion energy and produce some power from it, it would be awesome. Unfortunately, this government is more concerned with continuing on their current track of spend now and spend later as well.

It's very clear that this government has a serious spending problem, and this is simply a Band-Aid to get them through. This is the equivalent of paying your mortgage with your credit card and hoping your paycheque comes in before the minimum payment is due.

An Hon. Member: Yeah. Well said.

Mr. Hanson: Well, that's how a budget is. For anybody that actually understands finance, it makes sense.

That's not how most Albertans budget. Why is this how this NDP government chooses to budget our hard-earned tax dollars? How much of the money requested for this bill will have to be borrowed? It would be nice to have an answer to that, just some details. You know, I look at it, and all we have are line items. There have been some announcements recently, especially with the AAMD and C, that are going on right now. They're announcing projects and all that. It would be nice if we could have an update to this interim supply to just see how much of this stuff was actually budgeted for and where the money is going. It's not really too late to get some details on this. We do have until the end of May. I think we could probably see some line item additions in here.

Basically, on this side of the House we know that budgets don't balance themselves. I'd like to urge all my hon. colleagues to join me in voting against this bill because all it is – it just basically gives a blank cheque. It doesn't address any of the spending issues. It doesn't address any cost-saving measures at all. There's nothing in here that's going to help the budget in the future or deficits or the borrowing. I encourage my fellow members to vote against the interim supply.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

[The clauses of Bill 5 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Bill 3 Voluntary Blood Donations Act

The Chair: Questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Okay. Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today to address the bill before the House, the Voluntary Blood Donations Act. I'm astounded by the sheer ignorance of the bill compared to the realities of blood donation. Blood donations, of course, are a matter of life and death, and we should be pursuing every avenue available to secure a healthy, safe supply for Albertans in need and, in addition to ensuring this supply, to develop a supply for vital pharmaceutical resources. We do collect enough blood under our voluntary system in Canada for transfusion needs, but we do not – we do not – collect enough for plasma protein products. These products also save lives.

Canadian Blood Services, the agency tasked with the procurement and distribution of blood products, purchases plasma protein products like IVIG, albumin, and various coagulation factors from the United States and Europe. Madam Chair, I'll say it again. Canadian Blood Services purchases plasma protein products.

In 2012 Canadian Blood Services and Héma-Québec purchased $630 million of plasma products from the United States and Europe – $630 million in 2012 – only to increase in 2013 to $670 million of plasma protein products purchased from the United States and Europe. Madam Chair, every year these numbers increase, year after year. Of course, the reason that we are forced to purchase these products is because the current voluntary system has resulted in a shortage.

Canada's volunteer-only donation system does not have the donor base to support our demand. When I say this, I want to give a shout-out to Medicine Hat. In Medicine Hat the Canadian Blood Services show up about every two months. It is very, very well supported. It is supported by our citizens, supported by our media personnel, so many of whom volunteer their time and come out and spread the word through their media. I know so many people that, when I talk to them, have donated for the 60th time or the 80th time. It's overwhelming. It's fantastic. [interjection] You're up there? Forty-eight? Good for you. Thank you.

Madam Chair, I bring this up for a couple of reasons. Here we have a lot of good Albertans doing all they can when they can. It's a sacrifice to give blood, but a large number of us are overwhelmed by our desire to help fellow Albertans, fellow Canadians, and fellow human beings. It takes time. It means a day or so of a different diet and maybe a lighter exercise period that day. It's a sacrifice. Again, there are a lot of volunteers and a lot of people doing it, but we are not meeting our need. Over the last decade the Canadian Blood Services has seen a rise of 6 to 8 per cent each year in the usage of IVIG, one of the plasma products. As a matter of fact, Canada is already the largest per capita user of IVIG in the world.

What is also interesting to me is that the proponents of banning the purchase of blood often cite things like safety reasons, ignoring the fact that even if we were not purchasing blood from Albertans, we are still inevitably and obviously purchasing blood from countries that allow paid plasma donations. I think that in Alberta alone Alberta Health Services and Alberta Health spent $200 million last year on the purchase of plasma products from the United States, where they pay people to donate blood. In fact, no country in the world has been able to meet their need for plasma with a solely volunteer model. No country in the world has been able to do this according to a joint March 2013 presentation by Health Canada and Canadian Blood Services. This was announced or talked about at a round-table discussion addressing the topic.

Madam Chair, yet another concern often cited by opponents of the platelet/plasma donation model is that paying donors will decrease the number of individuals who voluntarily donate blood. Only about 3 per cent of eligible Canadians donate blood now publicly, and that's in spite of all the publicity, all the strong efforts by volunteers, all the strong efforts by those that have time and are healthy and have the ability to do it. We just can't meet our needs, and we are paying citizens of other countries to do this for us.

According to a 2014 projection by the CEO of Canadian Plasma Resources, Dr. Barzin Bahardoust quoted: before the end of the decade we will be spending over a billion dollars a year on plasma protein products as a country. We will be sending a billion dollars, a billion Canadian dollars, out of Canada to the United States and Europe, where they pay blood donors. The CEO went on to quote exactly that: this money will all go outside the country.

Madam Chair, by maintaining the voluntary system while offering tax receipts or a cash incentive, all Canadians regardless of income level are incentivized to donate blood more proactively. These procedures are harmless, and they save lives. There is no ethical consideration more important, there is nothing more important than ensuring that life-saving treatments are available to sick children or adults.

Canadian Blood Services has said in the past that it is possible to maintain both systems, noting that "the experiences of other countries suggest both paid and voluntary plasma donation can safely coexist." My guess, Madam Chair, is that it may actually raise the amount of voluntary blood donations as more Canadians get involved as the awareness level rises. How good would that be if we can pull our share in the world?

Now we are being asked to support a plan that would see Canadian Blood Services reach 50 per cent of our pharmaceutical needs by 2024, but that is a very slow rate of progress. Other provinces are opening the door to another avenue for collecting plasma products, and we should keep that door open in Alberta, too. Madam Chair, I want to say that again. Other provinces are opening the door to another avenue for collecting plasma products, and we should keep that door open in Alberta, too.

I believe the NDP is doing right now what we've seen consistently for two years. Of course, we're hearing about private companies that want to set this up in an effort to increase our supply and help Canadians. Here we have a government slamming the door on some innovation, slamming the door on increasing supply from Albertans and Canadians. But not really. It doesn't preclude Canadian Blood Services from doing it. It doesn't preclude B.C. or Saskatchewan or Ontario or Nova Scotia or anywhere else in Canada paying for blood collection. Again, I think the number was $200 million last year of our hard-earned tax dollars that left the jurisdiction and went to Montana, to Texas, to Louisiana, wherever the states are that pay for it, that pay Americans for blood collection.

I'm against this bill, Madam Chair. Again, we're being hypocritical, we're being ideological, we're getting in the way of a solution, and kids, old people, and Albertans are going to suffer. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm here to rise on the NDP's bill that essentially declares that Canadian blood is dirtier than American blood. [interjections] It's what the bill says.

When you think about it, the bill attempts to head off anybody collecting blood except for the Canadian Blood Services, but in fact blood comes into this country now from other places, where it is purchased. So what this bill does, very simply, is say that you can buy the blood somewhere else but not here. So I don't know how the government can argue that their bill declares that Albertans' blood is dirtier than the blood of people from outside of Alberta. That's offensive, and I will not be supporting this bill.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Madam Chair. The intent of the bill is good from the government's side. We recognize what they're trying to provide. They're trying to ensure that our Canadian Blood Services has an adequate supply of blood because we need blood to live. As Canadians we will all give that voluntarily. There is no doubt about that. But that needs to be addressed not just through one week a year when Canadian Blood Services promotes their blood collection. That has to be steady year-round. We have to continue to provide that blood.

One aspect that this bill misses on that I hope this government will consider is the aspect about the biomedical industry and diversification of our economy. When we're looking at getting off oil, when we're looking at alternatives, the medical industry is a huge facet of our culture that we don't necessarily emphasize, and it is where we can diversify our industry. The biomedical industry invests in research, which has generated so many new discoveries over the years. These discoveries improve our health. They extend our lives, and they raise our standard of living. The measures that we use in health, like morbidity and mortality, have decreased. They've vastly improved because of the biomedical industry. We're less likely to succumb to many of the scourges of the past. Victims of disease live fuller, better lives, and they live better lives due to improved methods of treatment.

The medical industry is not just the pharmaceutical industry. It is the biotech, it is the medical device, and it's also the diagnostic sector. They all feed off the biomedical industry, and the end results are just simply benefits to mankind, to humankind. Vaccinations: the government side strongly believes in vaccinations. That's where vaccinations were discovered and come from, the biomedical industry. If we want to resolve something in our human bodies, we need samples from our bodies. We need those tissues so that we can do those tests and do that research to better our lives and eliminate disease.

There have been some high-profile cases over the last couple of years of people that had to go to the United States for testing or for their treatments, whether it was Bo Cooper, that you folks heard me talk about, or Haley Chisholm, who was down south. We as Canadians benefit from the biomedical industry, and it is an industry that we need to support.

I'd like to read a short excerpt from a letter written by Kevin Chief, Manitoba's former NDP minister of jobs and economy, to Dr. Barzin Bahardoust, the CEO of Canadian Plasma Resources.

Manitoba is very supportive of establishing new businesses in the life sciences sector. Thank you for sharing your business plans with us. I can confirm at this time that there is no legislation in Manitoba that would prohibit private plasma collection, and there are no plans to enact such legislation.

The Government of Manitoba would be prepared to fully assess and evaluate this opportunity should Canadian Plasma Resources decide to open plasma collection centres in Manitoba.

As you can see, the concept of plasma collection centres is not diametrically opposed to NDP views. The former NDP government in Manitoba was very supportive and very much saw the benefits of this, the benefits of creating new jobs and the economic diversification.

As such, I'd like to rise today and introduce some amendments to this bill. I will give these to the pages to be distributed. May I read while she distributes?

The Chair: Just give it a second till I've seen the original.

Mr. Yao: Certainly.

Again, it is about the diversification of our economy. If we're looking for a path to take to get off oil, the medical industry is key. We have the educational base. We have great colleges, universities, even high schools which help train us so that we are that educated workforce that the medical industry needs, so that we can create those scientists and those folks that develop and create these life-saving measures. They're the ones who create these vaccinations. They're the ones who create these medications, and a lot of these things require human products in order to be developed. That's why I'm imploring this government to consider that, and that is what my amendment is.

I move that Bill 3, Voluntary Blood Donations Act, be amended as follows. Section 2(3) is amended by striking out "or" at the end of clause (a) and adding the following after clause (a):

(a.1) with respect to an organization that collects blood for the purpose of biomedical or pharmaceutical production, or and section 4(1) is amended by adding the following after clause (b):

(c) any business premises of the facility that uses blood for biomedical or pharmaceutical production.

Again, I'm just asking that we allow companies that will produce these life-saving measures to operate here in Alberta and that they have the ability to collect it and that we also ensure that they are under our regulations and that they are inspected by our people to ensure that they have the highest quality and that we are not susceptible to any diseases that have affected us in the past due to poor blood collection.

It's also, again, by ensuring that we're maintaining this here in Alberta, that we can monitor it and look at it, and if we see something that is unethical, we can influence that to make it better and allow that certain things don't happen.

These are things that we need to live. Bo Cooper had to go down to the United States to get a treatment. They were so close to being successful, 99 per cent close. Why aren't we developing these solutions, these innovations, these treatments here in Canada? We need to grow that industry, and that's the biomedical industry. So I'm asking the folks in this House, especially on the government side, to consider this amendment to this bill. It is a worthy amendment. It's fair, and I ask that you truly, truly consider it.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Any hon. members to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Madam Chair. Thank you for the amendment. At this point I think that it is probably something that is unnecessary in the bill. One of the reasons behind that is because the collection of plasma to the distribution of finished plasma products to patients – the system's purpose is to provide blood and plasma products to patients who need it – is best carried out by Canadian Blood Services. The role for private industry is and under this legislation will continue to be fractionation, turning plasma into life-sustaining and life-saving plasma products.

CBS currently contracts this service out as there are no domestically located or owned fractionators in Canada. CBS has vetted the fractionators it uses very carefully, and the contracts they have with them ensure that the plasma we bring is batch-made into plasma products to be distributed back to Canadians by CBS. This legislation has absolutely no bearing on the ability for private companies to bring their investments to Alberta, where we have a very bright workforce with a great deal of experience working with chemical processes, and in fact we hope they will consider Alberta. I believe CBS would be very excited by the option to fractionate domestically, but at this time there is no option to do so, so we will not be supporting this at this time.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays on amendment A1.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. Having listened to the government-side member speak, it's clear that the NDP is trying to declare Alberta a job-free zone. This amendment is clearly designed to allow for jobs and business to operate here in Alberta to create economic activity and a good living for Alberta men and women to make to support themselves and their families. You know what? You would think a government that's had three failed jobs plans in a row might actually accept it when somebody throws them a bone of an amendment that will actually create some jobs here, but apparently they are that tone deaf.

Well, I'll be supporting this. I sincerely hope the government does, but based on what the government-side member just said, I don't have a lot of hope.

The Chair: Any other speakers to amendment A1?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A1 lost]

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Chair: We're back on the main bill. Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill?

Mr. Yao: Madam Chair, it's really disappointing and unfortunate that the government side doesn't support alternate industries and health, doesn't support innovation, doesn't support the science of health, doesn't support diversification of our economy. It is truly, truly disappointing. With that in mind, I recognize that they're in their ideological state and aren't really thinking straight. But with that, I hope that after reviewing this for the next few years and monitoring it and identifying what the issues truly are about our blood collection that they would reconsider some of the aspects of this bill and reconsider the diversification of an economy, the building of an industry, the development of our health, the development of our own vaccinations and our own cures and investing in science to alleviate all that ails us.

With that, I'm moving that Bill 3, the Voluntary Blood Donations Act be amended after section 11, so I'd like to submit another amendment, please. You know, Madam Chair, as it currently stands the Canadian Blood Services isn't even close to meeting our current demand for blood plasma for pharmaceutical production. The CBS has only just begun a process that, if the provinces agree, would bring us to only about half of our consumption by 2024. This is very slow progress, and the NDP is closing the doors on other options and is not moving us in the right direction.

With that, I move that the Voluntary Blood Donations Act be amended by adding the following after section 11:

Continuation by Legislative Assembly

(12) This Act expires on April 1, 2020, unless the Assembly adopts a resolution on or before April 1, 2019, that this Act be continued.

I'm asking for this sunset clause to re-evaluate our system and re-evaluate what will happen over the next few years, to see if we are reaching our goals and if not, to identify different ways of achieving those goals and rethinking our processes and looking to provinces like Saskatchewan and Manitoba to truly understand whether what they are doing is so malicious and so dangerous to people that they're promoting a negative lifestyle that is contrary to our Canadian beliefs and strengths.

The sunset clause would mean that we could reconsider this act so that, again, if there is not good progress made that we should reconsider and try to invite more industry into our province.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to amendment A2? The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Madam Chair. The sunset clause is completely unnecessary. Legislation is regularly reviewed as a matter of course. Once CBS has been bolstered, there should be no need for this. And if this act needs revisiting in the future, that can be considered at that time.

I would encourage members not to support this amendment.

The Chair: Any other speakers to amendment A2?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: Back on the bill. Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Yes. Good morning, Madam Chair, and thank you. I have an amendment that I would like to propose. I'll hand it to the pages, and I'll wait before getting into it, before reading it into the record.

Madam Chair, I want to preface my comments by talking a little bit about the distinction between plasma donations for further pharmaceutical processing and plasma and blood donations for transfusion purposes. Now, I know that this was probably covered to a certain extent in the previous debate, two amendments ago, but I do want to make it very, very clear that I understand the trepidation that some members have with regard to paying, you know, essentially for something that the human body produces. That is something that has been foreign to what we do in Canada. It blurs the line that even gets to the point where you might consider paying for things that would go beyond plasma and blood – for example, paying for organs or tissues – that can also be donated by live donors.

I understand that level of discomfort. But at the same time, Madam Chair, I think it's critically important that we understand that when people say, "well, lives are at stake," and "this is about life," and "this is about the very essence of life," that that's exactly true. The very essence of life is the blood that flows through our veins, and that is a very, very valuable thing. I risk calling it or even suggesting that it should be a commercial commodity. I can very clearly understand why that makes some members uncomfortable. It makes me uncomfortable to a certain extent as well.

You know, I will point out that I'm the only person in this Chamber that, I would say, has done blood transfusions on four different species out there. I can tell you that when you do that . . . [interjections] You laugh. You laugh, but the thing of it is that what you're doing is taking from a donor an amount of blood, that in your professional judgment you feel will not sufficiently weaken that donor, to provide it to a recipient that is in need of either the red cells themselves, the plasma, or the platelets, the clotting factors. There's something in that blood. And sometimes it's more than one thing that is in that blood that is available.

Now, before I get into the amendment, I will share with you a little bit that as a veterinarian – veterinarians typically own large dogs. One of the reasons we tend to own large dogs in preference to small dogs is because it is the veterinarian's dog that is most commonly the blood donor in most veterinary clinics. I have had in my career three large-breed dogs – an Airedale terrier, a golden retriever, and a Bernese mountain dog – and all of them have been frequent blood donors. I like to think that they're voluntary. But in many cases it was a situation where, quite simply, there was a need for a patient. That blood would be taken from the donor. In this case I'm talking about my own dog. I'm putting my own dog's life at a certain degree of minimal risk in order to provide something that is vitally important to a recipient patient. So that is something that is relatively, you know, quite profound.

I'll share with you another anecdote of how profound that is. About 30 years ago I had another patient – in this case it was a horse, a mare – that had received a very serious cut to a digital artery in the back of one of her pasterns. That's the part of the foot that's below the fetlock. If you don't know what the fetlock is, I'll get you an anatomy book.

The digital artery normally is not something that when severed puts a horse's life at risk, but this particular horse had been grazing on sweet clover. Some of that sweet clover hay had been mouldy, and it contained a substance called coumarin. Coumarin is related to the coumarin that we use as a blood thinner, as an anticoagulant in human medicine. Because of that, this patient's blood was not clotting. This mare, this 1,100-pound animal, was bleeding to death before our eyes. I fashioned up a situation where we found another horse that was a suitable donor. We took a rather large volume of blood, some three litres of blood, from that patient and transfused the mare in question and saved her life.

The owner of that horse is actually here in Edmonton today – he's the reeve of one of our nearby counties in east-central Alberta – and he has never forgotten that episode that we did. Every time I see him now, even 30 years later, he reminds me of the time we performed a blood transfusion on his horse in the middle of a pasture in order to save her life. So I understand, I think, full well how profound blood transfusion is.

You know, I have to say that as I look across the way and I see the hon. members opposite busily engrossed in their laptops, no doubt reading things that are extremely relevant to this debate, it is a little bit frustrating that when you try to add perspective to something that is being brought up in debate, you're not entirely sure whether those hon. members are in fact paying attention to what's going on. But that's quite all right. It's quite all right, Madam Chair. I suppose if members are on duty, they can choose to use that time in any way that they wish. [interjections]

Madam Chair, if I might continue having the floor. What we are dealing with here is something that I understand just exactly how important it is, so at this point I would like to move forward by proposing the following amendment. I move that Bill 3, the Voluntary Blood Donations Act, be amended in section 2(3) by striking out "or" at the end of clause (a), by adding "or" at the end of clause (b) and by adding the following after clause (b):

- (c) with respect to plasma collected for the purposes of further processing.

Madam Chair, the effect of this amendment is to recognize the separation in donor streams between a voluntary donor base and a paid donor base and that a voluntary donor base, as we have in Canada right now, is providing the blood for transfusion purposes, the plasma for transfusion purposes that we require but is nowhere near providing the necessary plasma that we require for Alberta's and Canada's needs for plasma protein products for further processing. It recognizes that in order to do so in every other country in the world, they have had to go to a paid-for-plasma arrangement.

Again, I understand that for members that may be uncomfortable, but the reality of it is that medical innovation has moved forward sufficiently that we are now at a point where that is something that is possible, that is something that can be done because of the innovations and advances, and that the amount of plasma products that are required is growing at a rate of approximately 10 per cent per year. That necessitates having a large donor pool, and there has been no country in the world that has been able to establish the necessary donor pool to provide those plasma products without actually paying donors.

Now, I know that one of the biggest concerns – and it has been expressed here – is that if we start paying plasma donors, it will affect the voluntary donor stream. Health Canada has itself refuted that. Health Canada in its conclusion has stated: "There is no evidence that paying plasma donors compromises the safety or weakens a country's volunteer blood donor system." There is no evidence. In fact, Madam Chair, we can look at some of the largest countries that do have a significant paid donor base, and their voluntary donor rate is significantly higher than Canada's.

For example, in Germany, which has had a paid donor industry for some time, their volunteer blood donor rate per thousand people is 58.1 – 5.8 per cent of people are regular donors – in Austria that number is 57.5, and in the U.S.A. that number is 56.9. These are all countries that have paid donor systems in order to provide the necessary material that's required for plasma protein products. Canada's rate, by comparison, is only 36.6, barely half of what these other countries are. In the U.K., in fact, it's even lower. That's another country that has a purely voluntary donor base. So to suggest that, by necessity, it is going to reduce the number of voluntary donors is simply not borne out in the experience of these other nations.

To further suggest that Canadian Blood Services, through the investment of a huge amount of money and expansion of donor facilities – you know, this is curious because Canadian Blood Services in the last number of years has in fact reduced the opportunity for people to donate blood – could now turn around and reverse course and suddenly expand the means by which they could donate, have suggested a program whereby $100 million would be invested nationwide to get us to 50 per cent, this still would not solve the problem of a lack of plasma material. To me, when we have a private company, when we have a company that is prepared, without government assistance, to develop a form of economic diversification, to invest in our economy, to create jobs, I cannot understand why we would be opposed to that when there is ample evidence that it will not compromise the safety of the blood supply and when there is ample evidence that it will not compromise our voluntary pool.

The reason for this amendment, Madam Chair, is to recognize that there are parallel streams and that these parallel streams can in fact operate without affecting each other in terms of safety and security of supply. What it does is that it removes us from what I mentioned in debate on second reading, and that is the base hypocrisy of sourcing these products from other nations that are prepared to pay donors, that, in fact, have to pay donors – because there is no country in the world that has been able to do it on a voluntary basis solely – that we are prepared to pay those countries and indirectly pay those donors and make profitable American corporations more profitable by making those purchases.

It seems to me that there is a base hypocrisy to doing that when we could be doing that within our own borders but doing it recognizing that it requires us to shift what we perhaps have as preconceived notions. One of the preconceived notions is that blood transfusions and blood products are products that should never be paid for.

You know, I shared the story during debate on second reading that if I was still eligible to give blood, I would gladly give blood, and I would do it on a regular basis. The fact that I could be paid for it wouldn't change that. I would still give blood. But I've also explained why I'm no longer eligible to do that.

One of the realities that we have in Canada, that is also a challenge, is that there are a number of things that are being done culturally that are reducing our donor pool: getting a tattoo, getting a piercing, if you lived in the U.K. in the '90s. These are all things that eliminate you from the donor pool, in some cases for a limited period of time, but nonetheless they eliminate you from the donor pool.

Madam Chair, that is what we are discussing. We are discussing preserving our voluntary donor pool yet at the same time allowing for an industry that could develop in Canada. It has been developed well in other countries, and we make use of that from other countries. In my view, if we refuse to allow for paid donations, the only way we can take the moral high ground on this is to refuse to buy any plasma protein products derived from paid donors, to make that statement that we will not buy plasma protein products that are derived from paid donors because we don't allow paid donors in our jurisdiction.

But then you'd have some people to answer to. You'd have to answer to the families of patients that require these products. Because they do require these products. They're dependent on these products just as are people who are dependent on whole blood products or people who have suffered injuries or, like my father, someone who required many blood transfusions as he was fighting cancer in the end stages of his life.

Madam Chair, I'm doing this and I'm moving this amendment in an effort to try to get people to get past an obstacle or get past an obstruction, you know, in terms of their thinking. Again, I want to make it clear that I understand that. I do understand the base objection. I get it. I absolutely get it. But at the same time, our job as legislators is to consider the greater good of the people that we are serving and consider the greater good of some of the patients that require these products and consider how this affects our overall economy.

I know that there are people that have an objection to generating an income from illness. You know, they think that that's somehow not moral or not ethical. As someone who spent close to 30 years in veterinary practice, I will tell you that I never felt morally or ethically conflicted because I earned a living by providing a service to patients that were ill. I don't have an issue with that, and I think if you asked our physicians, if you asked nurses, if you asked people that work in our medical system, they will tell you that they are not conflicted with that. So to suggest that there are no dollars involved in medical care is just not recognizing reality.

We don't do these things for free. In fact, I think one of the great weaknesses in our system today is the notion that there is no connection between the cost of providing our health care services – and the Health minister will know this very well. The fact is that nobody really knows what it costs to get an MRI, to get a CT scan, to get a full battery of blood tests, which is now becoming very common when you go to the doctor.

I mean, I had a very unusual situation not too long ago – well, it's a little longer ago now because I've been retired for a few years – where I had a nurse bring in a patient, a dog. We did X-rays. We did full blood work. We did a number of other tests on this dog. And when she came to pick up the dog, you know, I presented her with her dog and a $450 bill. She was furious. She was furious with me. I said, "Well, we discussed all of these costs beforehand." The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park had a motion with regard to that. We had discussed it. There was approval. She knew what the costs were going to be. She said, "I had no idea that this stuff was all so expensive," and I said: "Well, you're a nurse. You work in our medical system. You know, what do you think it costs when it's done on humans?" She said: "It's all free. It's all free. It doesn't cost anything."

That's a problem, when there's a disconnect with the fact that there is a cost to provide these services, that there is a cost to install and monitor a CT scan. There is a cost involved in doing that. I'm not suggesting for a moment that we should take veterinary medicine and superimpose it on human medicine. Good heavens, that's not the headline I want in the Edmonton Journal tomorrow. But, Madam Chair, I want to indicate, though, that unfortunately we have separated ourselves from an understanding that there's a significant cost in providing these services. That, I think, is one of the issues that is also a challenge.

I'm sure the Health minister is well aware of this challenge that people don't really understand that, you know, during a course of, for example, a pregnancy one ultrasound – that's a really good form of prenatal care. In some cases maybe two or three might be necessary, but to get six or seven in order to have a prenatal photo album and scrapbook at taxpayer cost: that's going a little overboard. But that is happening in our system, and it's wrong because it can't be justified medically. Madam Chair, I'm urging members to try to get – and I get it. Like I say, I fully get it because, I mean, I've got some of that in the back of my mind, too, but we have to get over this notion that there can't be any dollars involved in the system.

I will take my seat. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Just to clarify: is this questions or comments or is this full debate?

The Chair: This is on amendment A3.

Ms Hoffman: Full debate on the amendment?

The Chair: Yes.

Ms Hoffman: Sorry. Thank you for the clarification.

I just want to start by saying that absolutely there are times when members in this Chamber on both sides – I think right now about half the members on the other side have technology open. I respect them. I respect that they're doing their work, and I imagine that they are doing research and using that to further their education. I have to say, Madam Chair, that I find comments that try to speculate as to what people's behaviours are in this House disrespectful to both sides of this House. I think it's important that we have the tools available to us to do our jobs, and I want that on the record, Madam Chair.

I also want to tell the member opposite how much I appreciate his sharing of stories and his experience in making sure that he provided quality care to animals over many years. Those stories about blood transfusions in the field are beautiful stories, and I expect that that horse was happy to give of his or her blood without having to be paid for it, Madam Chair, because blood is just too precious to go to the highest bidder. A horse shouldn't stand in a field and say, "Okay. Now who's going to give me the most for this pint of blood?" just like a human shouldn't be doing that.

I'm very proud of the system that we have here in Canada that is rooted in the beliefs as ruled by the Krever commission that blood is just too precious to go to the highest bidder. Blood is just too important to put a price on in the international market. Blood is just too important to say that. There is a cost to medicine, but there is no cost to me in going and giving a blood donation.

It's true that the limits that the member opposite referred to as to some of the reasons why people can't donate blood are absolutely true. So is travel to certain jurisdictions in the world, so is loving somebody of the same sex and having sex with that person sometimes a limitation to being able to donate blood. He is absolutely right that there is an important opportunity for education. I think there's also an important opportunity for science to keep moving forward because blood is so necessary for so many people, and the demands for blood products continue to grow, Madam Chair.

I also want to clarify exactly what this amendment is intending to do, in my reading of it, and that's to put a massive loophole in to undermine the whole intention of the legislation. The intention of the legislation is to protect Canadian blood for Canadians, to protect the voluntary system, to say that this is something we are proud of and we are going to continue to build, and the intent of this amendment is to undermine that, Madam Chair. With that in mind and with the very simple value that we should be finding ways to remove barriers and support one another in giving something that takes us usually less than an hour if it's whole blood donations – it takes slightly more if you're donating plasma, and you can do it more frequently.

I have to say that another reason why you might not be able to donate blood – my mom donated I think it was 99 times at the point in which she was diagnosed with cancer and had chemo. When she had chemo, she could no longer donate blood, but she donated 99 times, mostly plasma, actually, because she could do it so frequently as a retired person, and she is so proud she did that. There are so many families who rely on their friends and their neighbours – and they don't even know them – to be donating these essential products to save lives. I love hearing people say that, you know, a monetary payment wouldn't change their motives about donating or not. That's excellent. But saying that there is no evidence that payment does undermine the voluntary system just isn't true.

We don't have to look very far to see what's happening in Saskatchewan. It has been a trial project for a year, Madam Chair, and, yes, it's plasma that has the paid donations, and, yes, donating plasma has absolutely led to reduced donations in the plasma market of the voluntary system as well as in the whole blood donations. Let me tell you a couple of stories about why. Regularly there are mobile blood clinics that go to places like postsecondary institutions. I know that when I was at Concordia here in Edmonton, we arranged for one once a year to come and set up in the student centre, and people could donate blood very easily. The same thing happens in other jurisdictions.

What's been happening in some of the places in Saskatchewan is that those organizations that have regularly had a relationship with Canadian Blood Services in allowing mobile blood donor clinics to come to their university, their workplace, their church have been approached by the private, for-profit company. The company has gone there and has provided what people think is a very similar service, and they're actually getting paid for it or maybe the church is getting a donation. What's happening, Madam Chair, is that that blood is not staying within the Canadian markets. We don't even know where it's going right now. It has the ability to go to the highest payer anywhere in the world, and as a result, just in this last year there has been a 14 per cent reduction in the blood that Canadian Blood Services has collected in Saskatchewan. That's one very clear example.

Also, when they're calling through their regular donors and saying, "Hey. You're eligible to come in and donate again," people are regularly saying, "Oh, but I just donated last week" because, honestly, people don't necessarily take the time to read and distinguish between who they're donating to and for what purpose. And this is about making sure that we make it easier, Madam Chair, to donate to Canadian Blood Services, make it easier for people to know that when they see a sign saying, "Your donation could save up to five lives" or "This bench has enough room to provide services for five people," people understand that that's Canadian people, that's Canadian Blood Services, and it's a voluntary system.

Madam Chair, of course, it is far less expensive to have blood and plasma products through the voluntary system within your own nation. CBS has a very, I think, tangible plan that they are proposing on how to expand that opportunity and to get us to that 50 per cent mark while demand continues to grow. It is absolutely heading in the right direction, and I am not willing for us to close the doors where we need it to purchase extra products, and that's why we do have the exemption in the legislation for Canadian Blood Services to do that purchasing just like they do today, usually from the U.S. markets, which, yes, I know are regularly paid donors. We need to make sure that the Canadian blood supply is able to meet its needs as much through voluntary as possible. That's why I don't want to undermine our Canadian voluntary system by bringing in competition into this province but also by creating opportunities for CBS to be able to meet the demands that they have so that every patient gets the products they need throughout the country.

I just want to say, Madam Chair, that we've had an opportunity to look at other jurisdictions. We'll be the third one to bring in this legislation or something similar should we move forward on this path. Ontario was the first, and we were able to look at their legislation, take the very best pieces, and make sure that we're implementing it in a way that will protect Canadian supply, protect Canadian donors, protect CBS, and enable them to still give things like a pin for recognition and provide a bowl of soup or a cookie after you've donated to make sure that you're well nourished and able to get back on the road. I think that our blood is, once again, just too important to be sold to the highest bidder no matter where they live.

Again, I think that's fantastic that that horse's life was saved. I think it's great to have donors and recipients. I was in Beaverlodge recently and talking to a woman who worked in emergency for many years, and she talked about how there were regularly instances where one of their physicians would hook himself up to the patient in the middle of surgery because he was a universal donor and they would do that. Obviously, we have a much higher standard than we did a hundred years ago when we did these blood transfusions on-site. I imagine that everyone wants to make sure that we're moving forward in that way.

The best way to provide strong integrity and a consistent supply is by supporting the Canadian Blood Services, not undermining them, Madam Chair, and that's why I'm so proud to bring forward this bill to provide that support to an integrated Canadian system that keeps all of us with peace of mind and assurances that if something happens, we're in good hands, that our blood will not be sold on the international markets, and that we're finding ways to strengthen opportunities for Canadian donations within the voluntary system instead of undermining them.

Again, given that I read this amendment as an intent to undermine the intention of the bill, to create a massive loophole for private, for-profit opportunities right here in the province when we're trying to make sure that we are working to support Albertans, support the blood supply, bend the cost curve, Madam Chair, I just can't in good conscience vote for this amendment. I will be opposing it and encourage my colleagues to consider doing so as well.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Hon. members, pursuant to Standing Order 4(3) the Committee of the Whole must now rise and report progress.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 4 and Bill 5. The committee also reports progress on the following bill: Bill 3. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? Say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? Say no. So ordered.
The hon. Deputy Government Whip.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Just considering the time, I move that we call it 12 o'clock and adjourn for lunch and reconvene at 1:30 this afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 11:57 a.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon.
Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to stand today and introduce to you and through you a group of 49 grade 6 students from Ashmont elementary school along with teachers and chaperones Mrs. Kam, Ms Warholik, Ms Kuryliw, Mrs. Podloski, Mrs. Guinup, and Mrs. Weimeier. If I could get all of you to please stand. Congratulations on your new school that will be opening up, hopefully, in the fall.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Welcome.
The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to introduce to you and through you on behalf of the Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater Thorhild central school. The students are accompanied by their teacher, Miss Jess Sereda, along with their chaperones, Mrs. Nicole Howard and Mrs. Christina Gabbey. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.
Hon. members, are there any other school groups today?
Seeing and hearing none, the Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour and privilege to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly April Steele. April is a nurse practitioner, a passionate advocate for health care in Alberta, and a long-time colleague of mine from my days as a public health nurse. April joins us today from my beautiful constituency of Lesser Slave Lake. I thank April for coming all this way to be with us today and ask her to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.
The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. It's an honour to rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Julia Vandersluis and Sonja Durinck. Julia, one of my incredibly dedicated constituency staff, has been a wonderful asset to my office and the Edmonton-Meadowlark constituency as a whole. Sonja is a strong advocate for continued improvements to our public health care system and for patients living with a rare or ultra-rare disease. I will speak more about Sonja in my member's statement today. I'd ask them both to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms McKittrick: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly members from the Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'is in Strathcona county. They are Bijan Aidun, George Collins, Shirin Ghobad, Jeremy Martin, Mary Martin, Betty Putters, Selam Somani, Parvaneh Tashakor, Rostam Tashakor, and Janice Yu. I'm pleased that they've come here today on this very important day for the Baha'i. I will be speaking later on in my member's statement about Nowruz. I would like to ask this group to please rise to receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.
The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have the pleasure of introducing to you and through you several dietitians from communities in and around Edmonton. March has been declared dietitian month by our government, and earlier today our guests were in the lower rotunda sharing some of their information and expertise. The advice and information that dietitians provide is tailored to the needs and values of their clients and communities, and they help clients manage conditions such as diabetes, heart disease, and cancer. I would ask that Karen Boyd, regional executive director with Dietitians of Canada; Doug Cook, registrar with the College of Dietitians of Alberta; and the other dietitians joining us today please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.
The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a privilege to rise and introduce to you and through you to all the members of the Assembly Sandra Azocar and Trevor Zimmerman. They are my guests from Friends of Medicare. Sandra is the executive director, and Trevor Zimmerman is in communications. I would ask them to now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Welcome.
The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly the first lady of Banff-Cochrane, my amazing wife, Marcella. We first met at Nipissing University, where we dissected rats in the neuroscience research lab together, and that was how the romance began. She is my rock, the smartest person I know, and bears the burden of snuggling our two fur babies while I'm away at the Legislature. I'd like to ask her to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Legislature.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today is International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination. On this day 57 years ago 69 people were shot to death by police at a peaceful demonstration in Sharpeville, South Africa. They were killed for protesting the legal systemic racism known as apartheid.

On January 29 of this year six men were shot dead as they attended evening prayers at a mosque in Quebec. At a vigil the next night I stood with our Premier, MLAs, and community leaders as well as thousands of Albertans who came out on that freezing night. We stood together as members of one community and one race to remember those six individuals whose lives were cut short by a cold-blooded act, fueled by hatred against their religious beliefs. Since then, Mr. Speaker, we have learned a lot about hate, and let's call it hate because that's, quite simply, what it is, hate.

This year's theme for this day is Racial Profiling and Incitement to Hatred, Including in the Context of Migration. We know that there are people who can't accept that we are all inherently equal regardless of where we were born, the colour of our skin, our religious beliefs and regardless of our choices. When we think back to those killed in South Africa, those killed in Quebec, or those who are killed every day in acts of hate, we must never forget them nor their struggles for equality and to be treated with basic human decency. At the same time we must not forget all those who allowed or enabled those tragedies to happen, those who encouraged and benefited from a system that allowed them to flourish on the backs of others.

Today is more than a day to condemn racism. We need to look at our own words, our own actions and ask ourselves whether we serve those we have the privilege to represent. I know that many of us here today have seen discrimination or witnessed hatred in our communities in some form, and I know, Mr. Speaker, that all members of this House agree that no one should be discriminated against, no one should be hated for where they were born or the colour of their skin or the way they sound.

Lately, Mr. Speaker, those who weaponize hate seem to be getting stronger, louder, and more effective. It's deeply troubling when people around us promote voices that claim that the Quebec mosque shooting was a hoax, an inside job, a controversial subject with a shifting narrative. These are voices that claim that the problem with the mass murder of Muslims is that the facts just aren't clear enough. I'm not sure what Albertans should take away from that. They give a megaphone to the voices of hate in our communities and amplify them. Those standing with such hate-mongers must not forget that they are not only accomplices to these hate forces, but they are also motivating others to do the same.

Mr. Speaker, I have personally experienced discrimination, and I have lived through hate. I know what it's like to be judged based on where I was born, the faith I was raised in, the colour of my skin, how I sound, how I don't wear my emotions on my sleeve and the like. For me, as with many Albertans, discrimination and hate are very real parts of our lives. For many of us it comes in the form of Islamophobia which is used to promote hatred and for the political profiling of Islam and its followers. For others it comes in the form of anti-Semitism or anti-indigenous sentiment or antiturban sentiment. Few of us have escaped racial slurs, jokes, or the racism of lowered expectations.

Mr. Speaker, it is something that tears us apart every day individually and as a society. Hatred and discrimination do not make our communities and our province safer. I know full well where I stand and who I stand for, and I hope that all members of this House will stand with me in condemning all forms of hate and discrimination, including Islamophobia.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [Standing ovation]

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, it's my honour today to rise and address the House on International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination and, of course, to reaffirm my profound commitment to racial equality and religious freedoms in Canada and across the world. I'm so privileged to represent the riding of Fort McMurray-Conklin. It's a diverse riding. It's young, hard working, and very ethnically diverse. In fact, at Syncrude itself I've been told that some 87 different languages are spoken at the plant site on any given day.

When you come to Fort McMurray, you'll see people of all races and religions pursuing a better life for themselves and their families. In fact, Mr. Speaker, you'll find many houses of worship right across Fort McMurray. That lends confidence to what we are doing in Fort McMurray as being accepting to all people, as we must be in Alberta and in Canada. I myself have a large aboriginal family in northern Alberta, living in three different communities. Our communities across Alberta, our provinces, and our country are testaments to the strength of inclusion, and we must use days like today to spread our message of success as a peaceful, multicultural nation.

What happened in Quebec, as the minister has said, is inexcusable. While we face many issues within our country and even in politics, still one thing is clear. Racism and hate have no place in this country. Racism hurts us, Mr. Speaker. Racism divides us. It destroys us. It destroys families, and it creates more problems than it will ever, ever solve. Racism holds us back from realizing our full potential as a nation. I want to take this opportunity to condemn racism in any form, whether it's on Canadian soil or internationally across the world.

We know that there are parts of the world that are riddled with death and despair because of racism. We see what's happening in many parts of the world, and we all sympathize with those nations and especially with those people. We pray for these people, and we pray for these places. We vow never to fall into that dark trap. We must always remember why we left that place. As we prepare to celebrate 150 years of Confederation, we must also remember the plight of all those who came before us and who struggled under the heavy weight of racism.

Mr. Speaker, we must also celebrate our leadership as a nation, a nation of peace and inclusion, and what we provide to the world as an example, an example of success, an example of inclusion, an example of where racism is not tolerated and hate has no place in the nation. We are truly here in Canada and in Alberta a beacon of hope, a beacon of hope for the world, and we must continue to pursue that path, the path of what is right, what is true, and what is just for all people. We are a nation who believes in the promise of this mighty land. May we be together in this forever.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Oh, yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would move that the House grant unanimous consent to the leader of the third party and to the two independent members to respond to the ministerial statement.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, colleagues, for the opportunity. I rise today on behalf of the Progressive Conservative caucus to recognize International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination. Today is an incredibly important day to acknowledge the efforts made to eliminate all forms of racial discrimination and to continue those efforts because while we have made progress on eliminating racism in Alberta, we have so much more work to do.

This year's theme for International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination is Racial Profiling and Incitement to Hatred. I'm proud of our PC caucus and our commitment to ending racial profiling, particularly when it comes to efforts to end the act of police carding. Police carding, or the act of IDing community members solely based on their race or socioeconomic background, is against our fundamental rights under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Members of this caucus have worked closely with ethnic community groups and police services to educate the public about their rights regarding police carding and to help build bridges between law enforcement and Alberta's ethnic communities.

As the world of global politics becomes more polarized, our PC caucus continues to cut through the rhetoric and work towards tangible solutions. When it comes to ending racial discrimination, there are no party colours in this House, I believe, and we are proud to work with all members of this House to protect the rights of marginalized Albertans. It cannot be emphasized enough that the work being done to end racism in Alberta is vital to our province. As Nelson Mandela once said: to deny people their basic human rights is to challenge their basic humanity.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the PC caucus I'm proud to continue fighting for humanity and against racial discrimination with all members of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Liberal caucus I'm very pleased to stand in observance of today's international day against racial discrimination. It's taken on increasing relevance in light of recent events here in Alberta and around the world. Unfortunately, there are still too many examples of hatred and discrimination based on race and religion. Just last week police in Calgary were called to investigate anti-Semitic, anti-Islamic graffiti in an off-leash park. And a recent attack in Quebec in the mosque has demonstrated that hatred has a cost, a cost that is paid in human lives. That is why we take a stand today to support and promote the Albertan and Canadian values of mutual respect, inclusion, and diversity. We must be clear that such hatred is not acceptable.

I'd also like to take the opportunity to call our attention to more subtle forms of racial discrimination, particularly against indigenous people. Already burdened with the long and destructive legacy of residential schools and racism, that we have only just begun to address, First Nations people continue to struggle with racial discrimination and stigma that robs them of opportunity, contributes to isolation, mental illness, suicide rates five times the average, and violence. I acknowledge the leadership of this provincial government and the federal government in this regard.

A recent Maclean's article compared aboriginal Canadians to African Americans and found that aboriginal Canadians were in a worse state on almost every metric, from median income to incarceration rate to life expectancy. We cannot be complacent about this racial discrimination happening beneath our noses, Mr. Speaker. So I stand with the members of this Assembly in condemning any and all forms of discrimination. All people among us are worthy and have the right to live free of discrimination. Clearly, we must do more individually and collectively to put these fine words into action with policies and funding every day.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise to speak to the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, which is observed annually on the anniversary of the Sharpeville massacre in 1960, where police opened fire and killed 69 people at a peaceful demonstration against apartheid.

The theme this year is Racial Profiling and Incitement to Hatred. Every person around the world and in our province should be able to live their lives without discrimination, and they are entitled to full protection of their human rights. Unfortunately, in many parts of the world and even in our own province that is not true. Discriminatory practices, sadly, are widespread, including racial and ethnic profiling with the intent to incite hatred and violence. We have seen recent hateful acts in our own country like the shooting at the Islamic Cultural Centre in Sainte-Foy, Quebec.

In Alberta our diversity is a source of strength and pride. We condemn racism, hate, and xenophobia in all its forms, including those which we may find close to home. While I am proud of the vast, vast majority of Albertans' openness and acceptance of all people, the rise in intolerance in our province must be addressed. Indigenous people continue to face systemic exclusion and outright racism; vandalism of mosques, synagogues, and other places of worship continues; and online hatred is on the rise. Alberta is a remarkable place to call home, but it's up to all of us to ensure that it is safe and open for all, and that is what today is all about.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Budget 2017

Mr. Jean: The NDP has a spending problem. Rating agencies call the budget a disappointment. I call it a disaster. B.C. has a half a million more residents than Alberta does, yet according to DBRS rating agency B.C. will spend a full $7 billion less this year than this NDP government. Because Alberta's three-year increases in this budget outpace B.C. by $4 billion, by 2019 it's going to be much, much worse. B.C. is making efforts to control their expenses while this Premier and her cabinet and the NDP just can't seem to spend enough. What will it take for this Premier to finally admit that she has a spending problem and look to our provincial friends next door?

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, the Wildrose would have more credibility on this fiscal issue if they weren't proposing a $1.2 billion tax giveaway to those at the top. That's the choice that they have made. They would pay for it by cutting front-line services to families. So let me ask the Leader of the Opposition the question he ducked yesterday. If you're so concerned about our finances, why are you proposing over $600 million in tax giveaways to Albertans struggling to make ends meet on $300,000 a year?

Mr. Jean: It's time for the NDP to do a reality check, Mr. Speaker. Billions spent on killing coal jobs, free light bulbs for Albertans, and socialist-style laundry services that help their friends: it's a huge problem, a $71 billion huge problem. That's how much the NDP expect to rack up by the time Albertans get a chance to kick them out of office. By then we'll have more debt per capita than Saskatchewan, B.C., Manitoba . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Mr. Jean: . . . and most of the Maritimes. This NDP government is racing Ontario for the first-place prize of the most subsovereign debt on the planet after Ontario. To the Premier: how will it take . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the member work a little bit harder on getting his facts correct. Nonetheless, I will say this. Overall the math is not hard. Make Alberta families pay more and get less: that's the Wildrose plan. Wildrose is also planning to give a $600 million tax break to the most profitable corporations. That's what they want to do. They want Albertans to pay for that giveaway by having fewer services, higher school fees, spiralling tuition. That's not standing up for Albertans, and that's not the way this government is going to govern.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, we would need to see record world oil prices in order to see a balanced budget from these folks, and even then I would suggest that it's never going to happen. We're already on track to spend $2.3 billion every year on debt servicing alone, and it's clear that interest rates are only going one way, and that's up. This Premier won't cut spending, she won't freeze salaries, and she won't address the problem. There is a real problem, and no government in history has taxed itself and spent its way back to prosperity. Why is the Premier jeopardizing public services of future generations by ignoring the problem right now, that she has created?

Ms Notley: You know, Mr. Speaker, the members opposite want Albertans to believe they can do everything: massive tax giveaways to those at the top, cutting billions from public services without it impacting any front-line services, and then balancing the budget in a couple of years – and you know what else? – getting Elvis to play the Saddledome sometime next year. But here is the bottom line. Wildrose people want Albertans to buy in to their reckless agenda, but that isn't investing in Alberta's future. We are investing in Alberta's future.

The Speaker: Second main question.

Mr. Jean: A future of high payments, Mr. Speaker, because of interest rates.

Albertans are seeing their taxes go up at a time when they can least afford it. While many families are already feeling the pinch of the carbon tax raising the cost of gas, groceries, and everything else, this year's budget confirmed that the NDP are increasing that carbon tax by 50 per cent, Mr. Speaker, and it'll go up again the year after that and again and again and again. Albertans didn't ask for this tax – they didn't campaign on this tax – and they don't want to see it continue to climb. Why won't the Premier listen to the people of Alberta and scrap the tax?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, here's the thing. Here's what we can do. We can reverse the approval of two pipelines, and then we can ask the government of Canada to come in and make decisions about our climate change policy. But that's not what Albertans want. Albertans voted for a government that would take climate change seriously. We were very clear about that in the election. That's exactly what we're doing. In addition, we got two pipelines – two pipelines – compared to zero over there.

Mr. Jean: Today the Premier said that Albertans could rest assured that there won't be a PST introduced because during the election she, quote, specifically said that it would not be. End quote. Well, pardon me if I'm a little skeptical, if Albertans are still a bit wary as well because this Premier's taxation plans are just not the way she says they are. She didn't campaign on a carbon tax, then she brought in a carbon tax. Mr. Speaker, Albertans will see the debt continue to climb, and they know this is the work of this Premier, who also didn't campaign on a $3 billion carbon tax, that Alberta families are now paying more for everything than they ever have. Why on earth would Albertans take you at your word in relation . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Thank you.

Hon. members, I have not heard it personally, so I'm at somewhat of a disadvantage. I have got the earphone with me today. If there is anyone saying things like "Don't tell the truth," I want to encourage you to no longer say that and to respect each hon. member.

The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that the member opposite appears to be looking longingly to the east, to a regime that is poised to increase a consumption tax on voters, who were not told about it in the election. However, what we ran on was increasing affordability for Albertans, and that's exactly what we delivered in this budget. Cutting school fees, freezing tuition, capping electricity prices: these are the things that make things more affordable for Albertans, and we are proud of them.

Mr. Jean: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm glad to see the Premier is looking around, because if she did, she'd see the warning signs in her own budget about her government's spending problem. That's right. The fiscal plan clearly spells out that rising interest rates coupled with the NDP's debt load will make borrowing and refinancing of debt more expensive. Future generations of Albertans will be saddled with paying off this debt that you're borrowing today, and it comes at a cost. Every single dollar going to debt is a dollar taken away from Alberta's front-line services. That's deplorable. Will the Premier acknowledge her plan is only doing long-term damage to our province?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, I know that the Leader of the Opposition loves celebrating and talking down Alberta every time, every opportunity that they get. But let me quote some other folks. The mayor of Fort Saskatchewan: this budget is very good news for the prosperity of Alberta's Industrial Heartland. Or the chair of the Edmonton school board: we are pleased that this government is continuing to make education a priority. Or the mayor of Strathcona county: "This [budget] is good news for our community." If the member spent less time fighting for his job and more time talking to Albertans, he would know that they . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Third main question.

Federal Equalization and Transfer Payments

Mr. Jean: There's no doubt about it, Mr. Speaker. The equalization system has ripped Albertans off for years. Albertans don't like it, but the NDP don't even want to move an inch. There's an easy solution to fix this. We'll send Ottawa the message that Albertans want to be treated fairly, like the rest of Canada, after sending hundreds of billions of dollars out of province. A strong mandate from Albertans through a referendum would force Ottawa to the negotiating table. Yes, it would, Madam Premier. Does the Premier believe that this is a good idea, a referendum? Yes or no?

Ms Notley: You know, Mr. Speaker, the member opposite was in Ottawa for years and years when they were in government, and his new BFF was in cabinet in Ottawa for years and years when they were in government, and they came together and with the former PC government in this Legislature. They made no changes to the equalization formula, no changes at all, so it's a little bit rich that this is a priority for them now. We're going to focus on our work here at home, and we're going to support Alberta families and carry on with our agenda to make life better for Albertans.

Mr. Jean: I wasn't there at that time, for renegotiation, Mr. Speaker.

Albertans send $24 billion more to Ottawa than we receive back in transfers or services every year. Twenty-four billion dollars, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are tired of being treated like pushovers. They want solutions from this Premier. The courts have been clear on this matter. If a province comes forward in a referendum with a definitive majority to renegotiate equalization, Ottawa would have to meet with them. Yes, that's right, Madam Premier. You have that opportunity. It's simple. It's easy. It could be held during municipal elections and would send a strong message to the rest of Canada. Will the Premier put this forward at this fall's municipal election? Yes or no?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, when it comes to giving spending power over to Ottawa, what we won't do is give them spending power over our climate change leadership plan. We're going to develop that plan right here, not hand it over to Ottawa the way the folks over there want to. As I've said before, the member opposite was part of a government that fundamentally ignored this issue for a decade, and he just has no credibility on raising it now. And you know what? We are going to focus on the job that we can do here in Alberta. That's what we were elected to do.

Mr. Jean: So that is, Mr. Speaker, a no, that the NDP government won't stand up for Albertans. I understand.

Ottawa is trying to force Alberta to have a carbon tax. They're killing coal jobs and also benefiting from a generous equalization program. That's just not going to cut it anymore, Mr. Speaker. Peter Lougheed, a great Premier, was right to challenge the national energy program in the 1980s through a reference case. Alberta can do the same thing, asking why Ottawa feels it's entitled to include our nonrenewable resources when it collects equalization. They shouldn't be able to do that. This move would have the support of Albertans. Will the Premier give Albertans a chance for a fair shake in equalization? Yes or no?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that it's a little premature for the member opposite to start trying to wrap himself in the cloak of Premier Lougheed. Give him another three or four months on it. You know what else? The fact of the matter is that for the last few months or years that the member has been the Leader of the Official Opposition, they've engaged in a strategy of yelling at Ottawa, yelling at people out east, yelling at people out west. You know what? Our government engages in constructive, mature, sophisticated engagement, and you know what happened as a result of that? Two pipelines. Two pipelines, Mr. Speaker, and we're going to keep at it.

The Speaker: The leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, two pipelines won't save this government.

Mr. McIver: The Finance minister took his smoke-and-mirrors show called Budget 2017 to the Calgary Chamber yesterday. The business community was not impressed. They called the budget a disappointment – and that was polite – $10.8 billion in red ink this year, $10.3 billion next year, no plan to balance. Not good. To the Premier: since it is business that creates jobs and wealth, not government, will you listen to the business community, or are you and your government tone deaf to these experts, who create the dollars you spend and who are left to pay back the obscene debt load you are creating?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, in fact, I have a great deal of respect for business leaders across this province, and that's why last year the minister of economic development moved very aggressively to support business. We cut small-business tax by one-third. We introduced a capital investment tax credit. We introduced an investment tax credit. We made capital available to help them with business development. We work closely with the business community. We will continue to do that as we focus on our job of creating jobs for all Albertans.

Mr. McIver: And they wiped out all that goodwill with the carbon tax.

Mr. Speaker, the government is recklessly spending with no regard to the warnings from businesses, working Albertan families, and now even credit-rating agencies. After last year's budget credit-rating agencies put Alberta under review and then came back with downgrades. When this happens, it's more expensive for government to operate, and debt servicing in Alberta will soon exceed the cost of running Children's Services. To the Premier: since you say that you do good things with the money you take from Albertans, wouldn't it be a good idea to control debt-servicing costs and, as a result, maybe have some more money to spend on services?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, speaking of businesses, let me quote the CIBC: Alberta will have one of the lowest debt burdens among Canadian provinces and a significant tax advantage. But you know what? Let me quote a few other people because there are other people in the province of Alberta. The chair of the Edmonton Catholic school board: this new provincial budget again demonstrates that education remains a priority for this government. The mayor of Red Deer: a new Red Deer courthouse helps respond to the pressures on our local judicial system through access to timely justice. Our job is to serve all Albertans, and that's what we're going to do.

Mr. McIver: And they've gone from a debt to GDP of 3.2 to well over 10 and getting worse. They're killing the advantages the Premier is talking about.

Budget 2017 is heading towards a staggering $71 billion in debt by 2019-20. This will take our children and grandchildren decades to pay off. To the Premier. Think of Alberta's children. Is it fair to ask kids in elementary school today to pay for 27 light bulbs and operating costs when they're trying to start a home and start a family 10 or 20 years from now? Is that fair?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to ask the member some questions about what he thinks is fair. His budget proposed taking $4 billion of operating money out of our budget. He talks about children. That would mean cutting the Children's Services ministry eight times. Eight times. That is ridiculous. You know, let me talk about one thing that one other Albertan said, someone who is getting home care as a result of our changes to the budget: it's really important for us to be able to stay at home, next to our neighbours, with our son and be able to keep the family together; it keeps me healthier. That's what . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Hon. members, as we move forward, just using that as an illustration, when we go past speaker 5, no preambles. The example of the last member may be what you don't want to do in terms of preamble. But since you're in the first five, you get away with it.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Why, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Now, common sense says to hope for the best but prepare for the worst. This government is hoping for the best and hoping for even better. The Alberta Party's shadow budget uses a realistic oil price forecast but still balances within four years without cutting front-line public services. If the government's forecast is off by only $2 a barrel, they are in deep trouble. To the Premier: how does an overly optimistic oil price forecast make life better . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, when the member opposite says that he can cut what he is cutting without affecting front-line services, he hasn't actually been in the room, going over the budget. I think that's the important thing to remember. The other thing to remember is that we've talked about balancing the budget by '23-24, but that is based on every risk adjustment going completely south, so it is the most conservative estimate possible. It takes into account the most conservative oil price projections over years and years and years. We're very confident that we've taken a cautious, careful approach, and Albertans . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Clark: If this is a cautious plan, I would hate to see a reckless plan, Mr. Speaker.

Now, our plan budgets $500 million every year for disaster recovery and still balances in four years without cutting front-line public services. The government, on the other hand, budgets less than half that for disaster relief even though their budget is well below the 10-year average of what disaster relief costs this province. To the Premier: how does that make life better for Albertans?

2:10

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The way our budget makes life better for Albertans – and thank you so much to the member opposite for asking that question – is that we're cutting school fees by 25 per cent, we're putting a cap on electricity fees, we are freezing tuition, we're investing more in home care. Just today we announced 24 new schools being built for our growing communities across the province. We're ensuring that water for First Nations across the province will finally be drinkable. That is how we are making life better for Albertans.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Party shadow budget prioritizes shovel-ready capital projects. The government, on the other hand, keeps announcing and reannouncing projects they can't build. How do we know that? Because last year they promised to build $1.2 billion worth of projects they didn't deliver, and the year before that it was $1.3 billion. To the Premier: how do misleading announcements make life better for Albertans?

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the hon. member should know that last year this government moved out over a billion dollars more in spending on important infrastructure programs than the year before. We actually increased the number that we were able to get in the ground and get built because we want to improve lives for Alberta families. We want to give them the roads, the hospitals, the schools, the courthouses that they need in order to have the best possible life here in our province. We're doing that every day. We're working really hard to make sure that we make life better for Albertans.

Home-care Services

Dr. Turner: Mr. Speaker, enhancing community-based health care means that more people can live at home in their community, enjoying the support of family and friends and saving greatly on health care costs. Given that the government recently announced a $200 million increase to home care, bringing the total funding to over $2 billion in 2017-18, to the Minister of Health: in the last fiscal year how many Albertans have benefited from publicly funded home care, and were there any fees?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much to the member for the important question and for sharing some time with me in his constituency yesterday with one of his constituents, Jaye Fredrickson, who absolutely is able to continue living at home with her family. Being a mom, having a son who was only 16 years old when she was diagnosed with ALS, not only does it make her life better being able to stay at home, but it makes her son's life better, too. I have to say that her dedication, her determination, and her positive spirit are an inspiration to all, and we are very proud to increase those opportunities for Albertans throughout our province.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that many of my constituents, like Jaye, have complex medical needs that often require acute-care admissions, to the same minister: can Albertans receive such services at home?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and again to the member for the question. I am very proud of the variety of expertise that we're able to have dispatched into people's homes to support them right where they're living, including respite care, bathing and personal care, medication administration, physical therapy, and mental and social supports. Some members of this House want to see cuts that would absolutely impact these kinds of services and making sure that Albertans can get care when and where they need it. This government was elected to make life better for Albertans. We're proud to do this, and increasing investment in home care is one of the ways we're doing that.

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order.

Dr. Turner: Thank you to the minister for that very helpful information.

To the same minister: what do we expect to see as a rate of increase in the use of publicly funded home care in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last year 116,000 Albertans accessed home care throughout our province. We've been able to increase that throughout the year so that by the end of the year we saw a 20 per cent increase over how it started at the beginning of the year. I know that we continue to have an aging population throughout our province. Speaking personally, nine years ago, when my dad was diagnosed with terminal cancer, he wanted to stay at home. We knew that, and we were able to access those supports, including nurses and having a doctor come to visit. It absolutely enabled us to make sure that we could provide the very best transition for him and for our entire family.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Alberta Hospital Edmonton

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our office has received information about closures at Alberta Hospital Edmonton that is very concerning. The Minister of Health has made the unilateral decision to shut down 20 beds at the hospital next month. This decision was made without consulting doctors or front-line workers, who are completely against it. This is not in the best interests of the extremely vulnerable patients who need these spaces. Why is the Health minister closing down these beds against the best advice of those who deal with the most vulnerable?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, I hazard to say this, but I expect that the member has misinformation. This is the kind of thing that we're getting used to hearing regularly from members on the opposite side of the House. They like to throw mud in this Chamber and at members of this House. I'd be happy to provide opportunities for people to raise concerns in an appropriate venue using facts. The assertion that was made by the member opposite is absolutely inconsistent with the facts.

The Speaker: The first supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We can table the documents.

Given that these 20 critical spaces are being closed to fund new emergency beds at the Royal Alexandra hospital and since that will result in these acutely mentally ill, suicidal, and agitated patients being housed in an already overcrowded emergency room or perhaps even finding themselves on the street with no supports, can the minister explain why she is closing these beds when, if she listened to the advice of experts, she would know that these transitional beds are desperately needed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I absolutely work with experts each and every day to make sure that we have the best care so that all Albertans have access to the right care in the right place at the right time. I'll be happy to follow up on the assertions made by the member opposite, but I can assure you that this government is putting investment into front lines, including enhancing mental health and addiction supports, to make sure that we have more supports for Albertans, not fewer, unlike the members opposite who keep pushing for deep cuts, which would result in exactly the things that the member opposite is accusing us of. However, we are providing stable, consistent, and appropriate growth in the areas of health to make sure that we have the backs of Alberta families and make their lives better.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Minister of Health received a letter from the doctors involved asking her to reconsider this disastrous decision and since the doctors have critical experience and information that should inform a decision like this, including a strong desire to ensure that the needs of patients are met, will the minister stop her heavy-handed decision to close the beds until she has consulted with the front-line staff, and will she consider other alternatives that don't leave vulnerable Albertans and their families without the critical supports that they need to address their mental health needs?

Ms Hoffman: Again I need to reinforce that the language that the member opposite is using is completely inflated and does not represent the facts of the experience, Mr. Speaker. I have to say that I will be happy to discuss this with him and others.

In terms of the work that we are doing to make sure that we're supporting patients, there are opportunities for certain programs to be aligned to make sure that people have the best access possible. We're going to keep working with patients, their families, and health experts to make sure that we move forward in a way that supports all patients and makes life better for Albertans.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, your volume is escalating. I can't hear to identify the other people, but I'm hearing yours.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Oil Price Forecasts

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's budget is no surprise, with ever-increasing spending and borrowing buoyed by unrealistic oil price projections. U of C economist Dr. Trevor Tombe points out that west Texas intermediate futures will remain stagnant through 2020 at around $50 per barrel, yet the government is projecting WTI prices of $55, $59, and $68 per barrel in that same period. To the Minister of Finance: even with your risk adjustment what will the additional debt burden be if oil prices match market predictions and not your questionable thumbnailing?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. As the Premier has already indicated today, the approach that the government has taken is prudent and conservative with respect to predicting oil prices. Moreover, Mr. Speaker, risk adjustments have been built into the budget. I think the hon. member is just trying to sow fear and distrust, but I think that this government is right on track. Our budget is going to make life better for Alberta families in a thousand ways.

2:20

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, given that even with risk adjustments Albertans will be $3.5 billion further in the hole than budgeted if oil prices remain at $50 per barrel and given that overprojecting the price of oil by $5, $9, and $18 represents a significant risk to Alberta's finances and given that Don Braid opened his budget column with "The NDP had better be right, or this province is screwed," again to the minister: have you overinflated oil prices to mask the fact that your spending is even more out of control than the irresponsible billions presented in red ink last week?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, no.

Mr. Gotfried: Always great to get a straight answer.

Mr. Speaker, given that we continuously hear this government state that they are getting off the oil roller coaster . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, again, no preamble comments at the front end, please. Keep going.

Mr. Gotfried: . . . and given that in his Maclean's column Dr. Tombe stated that "the government's projection for gradually declining deficits is entirely driven by rising future oil prices," again to the minister. Either there are additional revenue sources that Dr. Tombe has missed or your government has been spinning a line that is demonstrably false. Which is it?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, neither. I happened to read the article by Dr. Tombe, and one of the things that he makes very clear is that the opposition's claims that doom-day is around the corner as a result of the government's budget are completely false. [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet.

Renewable Energy Site Reclamation

Mr. MacIntyre: Mr. Speaker, yesterday in the House the environment minister incorrectly told Albertans that renewable projects don't need a decommissioning plan for bankruptcy because "renewable projects are quite different from subsurface access . . . and are arrangements between the private landowners and the companies." A news flash to the minister: when a company owes its creditors more than it's worth, the creditors don't leave any money for necessary cleanup and reclamation. When will the government stop this recklessness and get real about protecting Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, reclamation plans are part of the process and part of the negotiation with landowners as these projects move forward in order to deliver an expanded property tax base to municipalities, revenue to landowners and to farmers, allowing people to stay in rural communities and allowing those communities to thrive because they create jobs and income. Those jobs and income: the Wildrose would slam the door on those opportunities, slam the door on the opportunity to diversify the economy and to ensure that rural communities can thrive . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. MacIntyre: Renewables sites are like oil and gas leases, with rights-of-way, easements, access roads, rents to property owners, setbacks, creditors, yet this government seems to think that they're immune to failure, and given that this government is pursuing a rapid-fire renewables strategy requiring thousands of these sites to be dependent on government handouts, which will not be sustained, will this government take lessons already learned from our energy industry and protect landowners and taxpayers from the risks of insolvency?

Ms Phillips: Mr. Speaker, the Wildrose has consistently taken the position that they're going to talk down new investment in this province, billions of dollars of new investment, thousands of new jobs, thousands of new dollars into the pockets of landowners, farmers, municipalities, and so on that benefit from these projects. The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake went so far as to call renewables companies "hogs to the trough" in this Chamber. They are slamming the door on diversification, slamming the door on new developments in this province, and it is shameful.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. MacIntyre: The average two-megawatt turbine is a hundred metres tall, requires 60 truckloads of concrete, 50 tonnes of rebar, and a foundation about 20 feet deep. Given that the contracts for renewables are lease agreements on prime farmland and given that the soil restoration will be left to someone should these companies fail, to the minister. After a hundred years of energy exploration Albertans expect industry to respect our province's legacy and return sites to pristine conditions. Will this government demand that renewables companies act equally responsibly?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, in the approvals process there are reclamations and other requirements, including wildlife directives and other siting requirements. This is standard within the approvals process. Now, what is not standard is a group of people in this Chamber who dare to stand in their place and refuse new opportunities for Albertans to make a living. Albertans in southern Alberta, in northern Alberta are all looking for these opportunities, and the Wildrose has rejected all of them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Capital Projects in Central and Rural Alberta

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans just can't keep up with the constant infrastructure priority changes. With this NDP government promises made can be promises changed, and it seems like central and rural Alberta are going to be out of luck again. Another session and conditions are getting increasingly worse. At the Wainwright hospital pipes have burst, floors have been flooded, and 35-year-old backup generators are at risk of failing in an emergency. Why do projects that were once on the priority list, like the Wainwright hospital, disappear completely?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Of course, it's important to us to make sure that we have appropriate investments throughout the province. That's one of the reasons why I'm so proud that we increased the infrastructure maintenance plan money that we have in our budget substantially over the last two years. For decades, since the deep cuts of the 1990s, we've seen investment in these important facilities that Albertans rely on languish, and on this side of the House we're not going to cut deeper. We're going to make sure that we're investing in facilities like the Wainwright hospital to make sure that they have opportunities to be there for generations to come.

Mr. Taylor: I still wonder why that priority list project was dropped.

Since health care infrastructure . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, again, no comments at the front end. Keep going.

Mr. Taylor: Since health care infrastructure in Alberta has not kept pace with the rest of the province and given that central Albertans are not able to access the care they need close to home, which we all know is a cause for longer wait times for the entire province, to the Minister of Infrastructure: why play these political games with central and rural Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, I don't think anything could be further from the truth. We're not playing political games here. What we're doing is investing to make life better for Albertans throughout the province, from one end to the other.

Now, just recently, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member has driven by Red Deer, he may have seen an infrastructure project under construction there. It's the Gaetz Avenue bypass. If he goes a little bit further north, he'll see construction that's taking place at Red Deer College. There are investments in the hospital in Red Deer. And by the way . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Taylor: Since we can see that the new capital priority for the NDP government is Edmonton and Calgary and is purely politically motivated and that even though thousands of dollars, if not millions, have already been spent on documentation proving that central Alberta has worse infrastructure and has been neglected for years, this government continually gives central Albertans and doctors many reasons or excuses why they cannot attain the priority list. What is the real reason for not supporting central Alberta? Will you give us the plain truth, please?

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, just to finish my last thought: by the way, the Minister of Justice has just announced a new courthouse for Red Deer. So whether it's justice, health care, schools, road infrastructure, central Alberta is well supported. And I might just also mention that we've approved a major new facility for the Reynolds Museum in Wetaskiwin. That may not be central enough for the hon. member, but the list goes on and on and on.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During his budget speech the Finance minister stated, "We are keeping spending growth lower than the combined rate of inflation and population." But in his analysis Dr. Trevor Tombe noted that in the four years covered by the budget, total government spending rises by an average of 4.3 per cent while population growth plus inflation is actually 3.4 per cent. To the Premier: I am sure that the Finance minister did not mean to misspeak during his Budget Address, so would you like to take this opportunity to correct your numbers for the record?

2:30

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, this government is focused on making sure that the budget supports Albertans and supports jobs in the private sector. As well, we are just coming out of a recession, and I think the opposition's radical agenda of cuts would jeopardize that recovery before it even got under way. You know, I can't be lectured by a party that has a billion-dollar mistake in their budget preparation.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that it's important to be accurate and that a recent Mainstreet poll indicated that over half of Albertans believe the NDP's plan to return to balanced budgets by 2024 is too slow and that almost a quarter of Albertans indicated that their first priority for the NDP – this is Albertans – was to reduce spending to lower the deficit and given that the NDP did not address either of these concerns in this budget, to the Premier: since you missed the mark again this year, will you rethink your prebudget consultation efforts so your fiscal decisions might have a chance of accurately representing the wishes of Albertans maybe next time?

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to correct the hon. member. This government is focused, and this government was elected and has a mandate in order to protect the important public services that the previous government was going to cut. We have reversed their cuts to health care, which were massive. We've made sure that there are teachers in schools so that class sizes don't balloon. We've cancelled their health care premium tax, that they wanted to impose.

Speaking of polls, Mr. Speaker, I might also mention that polls showed before the last election that that party was going to win another term. They didn't. Thank you.

Mr. Rodney: Given that it's important to stop blaming and start governing and that despite repeated warnings about impending credit downgrades, the NDP has once again made absolutely no effort to constrain spending to any responsible level and given that Albertans have been pleading for this government to finally show some leadership by making good, forward-looking fiscal decisions just as Albertans do at home and at work, why is the NDP government handcuffing future generations and governments with reckless spending decisions? Do they realize that the hard choices they are skipping right now will not save their government in May of 2019?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll just give one concrete example of something that we're doing in order to bring down spending in this province. The previous government appointed all sorts of friends and insiders to the various government boards and agencies. They were paid, in some cases, massive salaries, hundreds of thousands of dollars a year. They got free golf memberships. [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, we've done away with that. That kind of waste and that kind of financial largesse for the friends of the previous government has ended under this government because we're standing up for Alberta taxpayers. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members and ministers.
Edmonton-McClung.

Affordable Housing

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the lack, once again, of leadership under the previous government there has not been a significant investment in seniors' and affordable housing in decades. I hear regularly from my constituents in Edmonton-McClung that there is an urgent need to create new spaces and renovate existing buildings. To the Minister of Seniors and Housing: how is the government addressing the deficit in affordable housing in the city of Edmonton?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the important question. In a tough economy everyday Albertans deserve a government that makes life better. Budget 2017 will be a continuation of our $1.2 billion investment in seniors and affordable housing. The city of Edmonton will see projects like Londonderry move into construction, putting Albertans to work. Youngstown and Strathcona Place redevelopments also received planning dollars.

But let's talk about what the opposition would do. They would cut hospitals and affordable housing to pay for tax giveaways to their friends at the top.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Oftentimes projects are announced and span a couple of years before completion. Given that the provincial affordable housing strategy is intended to guide the investments in affordable housing, can the minister update the House on the ongoing projects across this province and how these fit with the provincial affordable housing strategy?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much. The previous government overpromised and underdelivered. Our government is building affordable housing. There are over 40 seniors' and affordable housing projects currently in the works. Budget 2017 will see new projects in Leduc, Calgary, Banff, Barrhead, and many more. Building affordable housing fits with our provincial affordable housing strategy, expected to be launched shortly. While this side of the House has a strategy to build affordable housing, the other strategy the opposition has is to cut funding to long-term affordable housing and seniors.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that my constituents are also concerned about affordable home ownership, to the same minister: what is the government doing to support low-income Albertans, particularly newcomers to Canada hoping to own a home?

Ms Sigurdson: Alberta is one of the first provinces to partner with Habitat for Humanity to make home ownership possible for low-income Albertans. Our government is proud to invest $4.1 million to help fund 75 new affordable homes for families in Edmonton. Budget 2017 will invest to build 250 homes through Habitat for Humanity across this province. This summer we're taking part in the Carter work project, where President Jimmy Carter himself will help to build homes in the neighbourhood of Laurel. Mr. Speaker, again, on this side of the House we're working to make life better. On the other side they're . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Grain Disease Prevention

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Farmers in my constituency are getting increasingly worried. Not only has the 2016 cereal crop deteriorated over winter, but disease threatens this year's crop. Significant levels of toxicity and Fusarium were evident in fall-harvested cereal grains. Spring-threshed grains will possibly have little salvage value and increase the risk of disease spread. Can the minister give farmers assurance that he has been in consultation with his department officials and AFSC, and have they come up with a disease prevention plan that will lead to a successful 2017 crop?

The Speaker: The Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. There are a lot of pests and other diseases on the landscape out there. Weeds come into the landscape as well. In the southeast corner there was a new weed introduced a few years ago. Absolutely, the department is on top of this. We have the responsibility to make sure that all pests in the fields are controlled one way or the other. That work continues with all our public servants, AFSC, and our research people to make sure that we do what we can to support farmers.

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, given that farmers are receiving mixed messages on the best path forward and given that AFSC insurance expects the crop to be harvested yet industry experts are concerned with the potential disease risk that this will have for the 2017 crop and given that these producers are asking whether they should thresh, burn, bale, disk, or whatever and given that there is an increased risk of disease for the 2017 crop with spring threshing, does the minister have a plan to deal with this disease risk, and when will producers know what that plan is?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The options vary, and the options will vary depending on the conditions: geographic conditions, climate conditions, weather conditions, spring conditions, whatever that might be, including even certain bylaws in the county. So I would recommend and hope that all producers out there will contact the AFSC office. Also, they can phone 310.FARM to talk about existing programs before they take any action. I really encourage them to do so to make sure that everything is in place.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, given that there have been farmers from constituencies all over northern Alberta calling our offices for answers and given that these farmers need certainty from the department of agriculture on how to proceed and given that this is not about minimizing the insurance liability to AFSC but the potential disease risk for the industry and the 2017 crop – Minister, producers need certainty in order to ensure the success of this year's crop – will this minister ensure that his department has a disease prevention plan that will get released in a timely manner?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Other things to take into consideration are wildlife damage, grade loss when the crops are left out. A lot of things must be considered, including those options. The farmers have options to consider. Again, I very much encourage them to contact their local AFSC office for those conditions. It's going to vary from condition to condition, field to field, site to site. There's not going to be one solution for everything.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Bail Process Review

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two years ago Constable Wynn was killed by a dangerous criminal who was out on bail. Since then I've been asking the minister to ensure that Crown prosecutors rather than police handle bail hearings. The minister, however, waited for a review of the bail-hearing system. When it finished, almost a year ago, the number one recommendation was that prosecutors preside over bail hearings, but the minister insisted on initiating a court ruling. Well, she recently got it, and Chief Justice Wittmann upheld the need for Crown prosecutors to handle bail hearings. To the minister: when is the life-saving measure finally going to occur?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We know how critical our bail system is to ensuring both the rights and the fundamental safety of Albertans. That's why we took the step of doing a bail review, a process that this government undertook, which came forward with recommendations. There was a difference of opinion amongst our police partners in terms of how to best move forward, so we went to the court, and we asked for their opinion. We've gotten their answer back, and they have told us to have those forces in place by August 8. We will have them in place before then. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that you've been forced to implement this critically important, life-saving measure two years after I first recommended it and one year after the Alberta bail review recommended it – now, I know that I'm just one of those uneducated Albertans – and given that we have had this unnecessary delay, which put the public safety at risk for two years, Minister, can you please tell Albertans what the cost was of obtaining this unnecessary court ruling?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We're very proud of having launched the bail review and doing something about a system that that government set up. It ran along under that government, unlike every other province in the country, for a number of years. This government took office, and we examined it, and we are moving forward on making the necessary changes to ensure that all Albertans can be safe.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Chief Justice Wittmann, in his decision ordering that Crown prosecutors handle bail hearings, provided the government with a deadline, of course, of August 8 of this year and given that the Justice ministry has shown resistance to proactively implementing the Alberta bail review's number one recommendation, which is now a year old, just to reconfirm: Minister, will the Crown under your leadership, as you previously stated, for sure meet the court's August 8 deadline? Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very proud to rise once again in this House and say that we are taking care of a situation that the last government ignored. We have launched the bail review, we went to the court, we got the opinion, and we are going to move forward with the changes that are necessary.

Mr. Speaker, while I have some extra time, I'd also like to talk about the fact that we're ensuring that the right information gets into the right hands in terms of bail, the most important thing in ensuring that Albertans are safe. We're very proud of the work we're doing, and we think it'll make lives better for all Albertans.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 30 seconds we'll continue with statements.

Members' Statements

Nowruz

Ms McKittrick: Mr. Speaker, this day is not only the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, but it is also Nowruz, celebrated by people from western Asia, central Asia, the Caucasus Mountains, the Black Sea area, and the Balkans. Nowruz is also celebrated by people of the Baha'i and Zoroastrian faiths.

It has been a joy in my life to be introduced to many faiths and beliefs and to participate in celebrating important festivals. About 15 years ago I helped a hospital develop a religious and spiritual care department, and I had the opportunity to obtain a deeper understanding of many faiths and religious beliefs.

In Sherwood Park we have a Baha'i community, and I introduced some members to this Assembly earlier on. Nowruz is the traditional festival of spring, which starts at the exact moment of the vernal equinox. Traditions vary, depending on country of origin and faith, but like most celebrations it involves food and visits with families and friends. Of relevance, I think, to the hon. members of this Assembly is the belief that whatever a person does on Nowruz will affect the rest of the year. If a person is warm and kind to their relatives, friends, and neighbours on Nowruz, then the new year will be a good one. On the other hand, if there are fights and disagreements, the year will be a bad one. So let's make sure that today we all have a good year.

The Baha'i faith has been present in Canada since 1898. It is based on the teaching of Baha'ullah, who taught that there is only one God, that there is only one human family, and that all major religions represent unfolding chapters in God's teaching for humankind. Baha'is undertake various community-building initiatives aimed at empowering the residents of their communities to take charge of their own spiritual, social, and intellectual development. Members of the Sherwood Park Baha'i congregation are very involved in the Strathcona County Diversity Committee, for example.

I encourage all members of the Assembly to help me wish . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Bill 202

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Before anything else, I'm a father. That means taking a lifetime vow to love, cherish, and protect another human being. I take every opportunity to teach my children about right and wrong choices. But in a world that is changing so fast, I often find myself learning more from them than they are learning from me.

Kids today are growing up in a different world than we did, and this new digital world has brought a host of new challenges. It's up to us to keep pace with the rate of change online and protect our kids from a new breed of criminals. Bill 202 does just that. It tackles an issue that affects too many girls and women; that is, revenge porn. We've all heard the stories of Amanda Todd, Rehtaeh Parsons. This issue is killing our kids, and it's only getting worse.

I got the idea for Bill 202 from a conversation with my oldest daughter. She explained to me how damaging this issue was for young girls. One poor decision can be a life sentence. We were all kids once. Kids all make mistakes. We can all probably look back at things we used to do and say: oh, boy, that was sure dangerous. Things are different now. One mistake means a lifetime of consequences. Let's not sugar-coat this: those who distribute intimate images online without consent are criminals.

Let's be a leader in this, not a follower. Alberta was one of the last provinces to mandate seat belt laws. We were also one of the last provinces to ban indoor smoking. Bill 202 will send a very powerful message to online predators.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Government and Opposition Policies

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've been in Alberta for 16 years now, and during that time I have been inspired by the enterprising and caring spirit of Albertans. I've also been a member of this Legislature for a year, and I've observed that the NDP's ideological agenda is out of sync with our great province. This government is hurtling us towards fiscal and cultural ruin. Something else I've noticed over the past year is that our PC caucus and our colleagues in the Wildrose caucus are in sync with Albertans and with each other.

That's why I am so pleased that the PC Party took a big and a positive step last weekend towards forging a strong, united alternative to this accidental government. Together let's offer Alberta a government that is fiscally conservative yet helps citizens who are less fortunate, supports and fights on behalf of all industry for they are all critical to our economic success, and holds taxes in check because that's the Alberta way, Mr. Speaker.

Most of all, Albertans need a government that reflects their values, Albertan values. They don't need a government which imposes dogma that is profoundly wrong. In just a few short years this NDP government has eroded the strong foundation that Albertans have spent the last century building. It is destroying our proud culture because it's too arrogant to care to understand it. That's why I'm urging all free-enterprise Albertans to join together under this big tent. Let us focus on what unites us and not on what divides us. We must free ourselves from this incompetent, socialist, mean-spirited, arrogant government for the sake of all Albertans, and we will do so at the earliest opportunity.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Rare Disease Awareness

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today I had the opportunity to introduce a wonderful constituent of Edmonton-Meadowlark, Sonja Durinck. I would like to share with this Assembly a little bit about Sonja and the work that she has done to raise awareness of the health challenges faced by those with a rare disease.

Sonja was diagnosed in 2011 with not just one ultra-rare disease but two. Sonja's condition went undiagnosed for a period of more than 20 years. As a result, Sonja faces life-threatening challenges as she is adrenal insufficient and steroid dependent. Despite these daily challenges Sonja remains a very active community member and is determined to do what she can to help improve the lives of others.

Sonja is a patient expert and ambassador with the Canadian Organization for Rare Disorders, a board member on various national and international organizations, and a founding member of both the Alberta Pituitary Patient Society and the Canadian Pituitary Patient Network, among her many other accomplishments. She has done an incredible job bringing awareness and recognition of the unique challenges that come with having a rare disease.

Rare Disease Day is recognized on February 28 or on February 29 in the years that this rare date does occur. This day raises awareness of the millions of Canadians directly affected by over 6,000 rare diseases and disorders. On this year's Rare Disease Day Sonja organized for the city of Edmonton to light up the High Level Bridge in recognition of the day. She is also building awareness of national Cushing's syndrome awareness day, that will take place on April 8.

I would like to thank Sonja and others like her who maintain not only their strength to battle their condition but the dedication to improving the way we understand and treat these conditions. I am committed to being a partner and advocate in support of all Albertans to have access to the diagnostic and treatment services that they need. I am proud to be a member of a caucus that is committed to supporting the public health care system in this province.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On this day, March 21, 1960, police killed 69 people at a peaceful demonstration in Sharpeville, South Africa, protesting apartheid. Proclaiming this day in 1966, the UN General Assembly called to redouble its efforts to eliminate all forms of racial discrimination.

Mr. Speaker, my experience is that this discrimination continues to lurk and manifests itself in subtle but insidious ways even today. One of my earliest memories in Canada as a child was watching other children ride their bikes in front of my home, yelling at my older brother as we played in the front yard to: go home, you dirty Chilean. These children, from my brother's school, had racialized him for being different and not yet being able to speak the language fluently. The behaviour of these children was learned, their actions a product of the predominant attitude of the time to racialize those who are foreign, which, unfortunately, continues to occur to this day.

Mr. Speaker, my hope for today is that this message reach every Albertan. I request them to have a heart-to-heart with their family members and discuss the importance of ridding our society, communities, and homes of the ugly reality of racial discrimination. I request that they pledge to condemn acts of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia, and related intolerance against refugees and migrants and, most importantly, those nations that originally welcomed us here to their territory: First Nations, Métis, and Inuit.

We must decolonize ourselves and, throughout this process of action and reflection, focus and learn to treat one another with dignity and respect. I remind us all that our children are watching, just like those children that rode their bikes in front of my home all those years ago. It is important that we each be committed to counter the attitudes and behaviours related to racial discrimination, particularly those regarding hate crimes, hate speech, and racial violence. Let us be the example future generations require. On this International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Local HERO Air Ambulance Service in Wood Buffalo

Mr. Yao: Good afternoon. It is a pleasure to rise today to highlight a local event that I had the pleasure of attending. It was a fundraiser for the Local HERO Foundation in Fort McMurray. It was an East Coast Lobster Party featuring world-renowned Canadian chef Michael Smith, and it was an absolutely fantastic evening that raised money to help keep HERO 1 in the air and save lives in our region. This money will help cover fuel, maintenance, and operations of our helicopter.

HERO is Wood Buffalo's regional rotary air ambulance program. The region, 65,000 square kilometres, is one of the largest in Alberta and Canada, with communities like Janvier and Conklin being over an hour away by ground. Industry has a large presence around Fort McMurray, with thousands of men and women working in outlying, isolated, and difficult-to-access areas. Though the characteristics of the region dictate the need for a rotary air ambulance, we could not afford STARS. Their proposal to our community was simply too expensive.

In my previous life as an emergency responder I can tell you how this service was so important to the quality of patient care throughout northeastern Alberta. The Local HERO Foundation exists to promote and deliver 24-hour, seven-days-a-week emergency helicopter services to respond to motor vehicle collisions, workplace accidents, and medical emergencies. Time-sensitive issues like trauma, strokes, and cardiac issues could be resolved much quicker than if they were two hours away. They could be accessed in far less time, and it helped improve patient outcomes.

Phoenix Heli-Flight has provided this service to Wood Buffalo since their inception 26 years ago. They are able to operate in conjunction with the Fort McMurray fire department, the local emergency services, with amazing paramedics and EMTs. They are able to operate based on industry contributions of 22 per cent, our local municipality's contribution of 50 per cent, and AHS currently pays a fee for service. As good fiscal conservatives this organization has been able to provide an excellent service for our region.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I would move for unanimous consent to continue the Routine until its completion.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, sir. Mr. Speaker, I rise to table five copies of a letter from the minister of jobs and the economy from Manitoba's former NDP government which I quoted this morning, in which it demonstrates that they do support the life sciences sector in their province. They weren't hypocrites.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I proudly rise to table five copies of the Alberta Party shadow budget Pathway to Prosperity, our detailed fiscal plan 2017 through 2021, which shows that it is, in fact, possible to balance the budget within four years without cutting front-line public services Albertans rely on.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any other tablings? Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the appropriate number of copies of Dr. Trevor Tombe's March 18 Maclean's article titled Alberta Needs to Be Honest with Itself about the Budget.

Further, I table five copies of Don Braid's March 16 Calgary Herald article titled A Budget that Gambles with Alberta's Future.

Thank you.

3:00

The Speaker: Hon. members, any other tablings?

I rise to table five copies of a letter from the House leader of the Progressive Conservative caucus dated March 20, 2017, stating that there are no changes to the PC caucus appointments and that the Member for Calgary-Hays will remain as PC caucus opposition leader.

Hon. Government House Leader, I think you had a point of order.

Point of Order

Parliamentary Language

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today in question period during an answer that was being given by the hon. Deputy Premier and Minister of Health, the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo at 2:15 yelled out: lies. It's not the first time, but I want to just review previous Speakers' rulings with respect to that. In terms of the word "liar" there was May 8, 2000; March 15, 1995; February 22, 1995; May 23, 1990; July 21, 1989; November 22, 1983; and then "lies," "lying" and so on, November 21, 2013; April 18, 2000.

Mr. Speaker, there are at least 20 citations in the past of previous Speakers' rulings with respect to this matter. This is unacceptable. The hon. member knows that this is unacceptable in this House. It is perhaps the most egregious word that can be spoken in this place, and it is never acceptable. I would ask that you rule that the hon. member is out of order and ask him to stand and apologize and withdraw those comments.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The opposition deputy House leader.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I agree with the Government House Leader that the word "lies" is unacceptable language in the House, so we will apologize and withdraw.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Orders of the Day

Government Motions

Provincial Fiscal Policies

13. Mr. Ceci moved:
Be it resolved that the Assembly approve in general the business plans and fiscal policies of the government.

[Adjourned debate March 16: Mr. Cooper]

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the opportunity today to speak, of course, about the budget and have a response in relation to the budget. Obviously, I'm disappointed. I was hoping for something different, and I think most Albertans were hoping for something different. It's unfortunate that we see this particular direction from the NDP. It's just a spend, spend, spend budget.

You know, I understand that when times get tough, sometimes people think that they just can run out and spend a lot of money and it will make them feel better. But it doesn't make any of the people that work for this money feel any better. In fact, Mr. Speaker, the money that this government is spending is earned by the people of Alberta. They work very hard for it. So when they throw money around left and right and don't look for any efficiencies whatsoever, I think most Albertans are very disappointed with that.

I have to say, though, that although I was disappointed, I wasn't really that surprised. Even though we all know that Albertans are struggling right now and Albertans are having a tough time no matter where you go in the province, I wasn't surprised because I've worked with NDP governments before, and this NDP government is very similar to other NDP governments that I've had the opportunity to see. It's very ideological. It is blindfolded as it makes decisions because it doesn't make them on the basis of the facts that surround the circumstances.

What I mean by that is that right now we have a situation where we have a record number of Albertans, a hundred thousand Albertans, that are applying and trying to find the opportunity from the federal government to receive unemployment insurance. A hundred thousand, Mr. Speaker. Now, that's a record for Alberta, and it's very troubling. There's another hundred thousand people that are just out of work. We've lost 80,000 full-time jobs since the NDP came to power, over 20,000 just in January.

And what's the response? Spending more money without looking around to see what's going on. What's going on, Mr. Speaker, is that there are no taxes being paid because businesses are not making any profits. That's why corporate taxes are down. Of course, businesses can't pay taxes because there are no profits to pay taxes on.

It's the same with Albertans. The average Albertan family: their income went down $3,500, 3.5 per cent. Now, that $3,500 is just as a result of a change in the employment situation in Alberta. That's $3,500 that comes out of the average Albertan family's pocket, not earned anymore. That's taken out of their pocket, Mr. Speaker. They don't have the opportunity to spend that like they did the year before.

In fact, if you take the carbon tax – and I know I've talked a lot about the carbon tax. I talk about it because as I travel the province, people really don't like the carbon tax. This carbon tax takes another thousand dollars out of people's pocket, but this time it goes to the government. It doesn't just disappear – well, it does disappear, but it disappears into the general revenues of the government, big slush funds, green slush funds. Mr. Speaker, I know you're concerned because $2,000, $3,000 is a lot of money for you. In fact, I'd suggest that it's a lot of money for all Albertans except for those Albertans that obviously have control of the public purse.

That's why I'm so disappointed. How can you explain the situation of having net financial assets of about $20 billion when this government started – and that was less than two years ago when we had $20 billion of net financial assets – and today we're about $10 billion in the hole? Ten billion dollars in the hole in less than two years. I know that $20 billion is a lot of money. Twenty billion dollars would pay for a lot of hospitals, pay for a lot of schools, hire a lot of front-line workers. But, Mr. Speaker, that's not the most troubling part. The most troubling part is that we're going to be in a net $35 billion hole by the time the 2019 election rolls around. And, yes, that does equate to $71 billion in debt, and there will be payments on that debt.

Since I was speaking about the $3,500 that we don't have anymore and the thousand dollars of the carbon tax that goes into the government slush funds, we also need to talk about that $71 billion in debt because that means another $1,800 to $2,000 in interest payments that Albertans will have to pay. And, yes, that is another $1,800 out of their pocket, on the table. But this time it doesn't go like the first $3,500 that just disappears because of bad NDP policies. It's not like the thousand dollars of carbon tax that goes into the government coffers and gets to be spent on slush funds. This money – Mr. Speaker, you're going to be so happy to hear it – this $1,800 on that $71 billion of debt goes to big banks. To big banks. That's right: big banks.

As I've said in this place before, I can't imagine anybody I'd rather give my money less to than big banks except for NDP governments. I don't think these big banks are going to provide schools for us. They're not going to provide teachers or nurses or front-line workers. They're not going to build any of that great infrastructure or bridges that we need. They're just going to take that money and give that money to their shareholders in New York or Beijing or Europe or wherever. That's money gone, Mr. Speaker.

So when you take $3,500 from the average Alberta family, then another thousand that goes to the government, then another $1,800 that goes to interest payments, that's a lot of money. That's a lot of money, Mr. Speaker. We're talking serious percentages. Where they had the choice before of paying for their children's hockey or ballet, they can't do that anymore. They can't pay for that summer holiday that they were going to take and build their family up after a hard year of work, after they've had an aunt or an uncle laid off, and maybe somebody has moved into their home because they can't afford to live on their own. I know that's what's happening because I see it happening. And the idea that this government would blow our savings and then run up a credit card debt of $45 billion in just four years is nothing short of hysterically bad news.

Now, I will give this government a little slack because we know that they did take over at a time when Alberta was already the biggest, largest spending government in Canada. We have seen that the previous government was able to balance the books from time to time because they would have a surplus in oil, they would have a royalty year like they did two years ago, three years ago of over $10 billion, the biggest royalty year we ever had. But I don't think we're going to see those for a little while, Mr. Speaker.

That's why I would implore this government to be more particular about its fiscal prudence, about making sure that all of those things we need, whether it's a good justice system, where we keep criminals in jail and make sure that they see judges that throw them in jail, not just get out of going to trial because we don't have enough resources put in it by this government – justice is important. Until you are a victim of our justice system – and I do mean victim – you don't understand how important it is. Notwithstanding that we spend more money than almost any place in Canada on our justice system, we still don't have the results of other jurisdictions.

Even building schools, Mr. Speaker. I do applaud this government for some of their capital initiatives. I always said when I took this job that I would point out the good things but I would certainly point out the bad things, the things this government is doing wrong. They did build some schools. I know it took a long time for the previous government to get to the point where they would, but I'm glad to see that this government, this NDP government, took that file and moved forward with it. I think it's important.

I'm just really hoping that they don't follow the example of other NDP governments in Ontario, Nova Scotia, B.C. because we've seen time and time again NDP governments that are not effective with capital investment. They don't look for the return on investment. They just take the money and shovel it out as fast as they can into the economy. That's not the right way to do it, Mr. Speaker.

We need someone that manages our economy properly, and that means managing the pennies because the dollars take care of themselves. Manage the pennies, Mr. Speaker? I would just be happy if they managed the $100 million cheques that go out. This is a government that just increases spending every year, increasing spending now at a time when we have less revenues, less people, and we should as a result have less demand on our infrastructure and on our services.

Not every NDP government has spent inefficiently. I'm going to talk just briefly about Roy Romanow's government in Saskatchewan. Now, Mr. Speaker, when they got elected, they actually came in and they cut government spending by 15 per cent. Wow. I know, anybody standing in this Chamber would have fallen down on their chair recognizing that an NDP government looked for savings, but they did.

I would suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that that's why that government had successive success at re-election. Notwithstanding the cut, notwithstanding they looked for efficiencies in the services, the people in Saskatchewan actually rewarded them and they said: well, you did a good job, so we're going to keep re-electing you. They did lose their way, and that's why finally they were ejected from government, but they did spend some time in government even after looking for those savings.

I think most Albertans agree that there is no excuse for why we can't find savings in what we're doing today because, obviously, we have less money coming in. When Albertans are sitting around their kitchen tables and they're saying, "Okay; we have less money for Johnny or Sally; we have less money for that holiday or that vacation; we have less money for that new vehicle; we have to put it off another year," I think Albertans expect their government to do the same. I think this year the Finance minister should have gone out and got a new set of soles for his shoes or reconditioned them, not got a new pair because right now, Mr. Speaker, Albertans can't afford a new pair.

What we can afford is to lift the hard-working men and women up in this province and make sure they have jobs, and if not jobs, then make sure they have training, that they have access to education, that we get our schools and our universities and our colleges and our trade schools actively participating in recruiting unemployed people into their programs and get them retrained and educated today.

These are initiatives that have been tried by other governments, and that's why I said in question period today: please, Premier, please, NDP government, look around. Every government in Canada manages their government better than we do fiscally. They get a better return on investment than we get on just about any service we provide to Albertans, including health care. Better outcomes, better wait times, and less cost. They do, Mr. Speaker.

That's why I'm saying to this government to look around, go to Saskatchewan, pick up a phone and make a phone call, talk to British Columbia. My goodness gracious, talk to Manitoba. Actually, we would just ask that they talk to anybody outside of this dome because they have dome disease, Mr. Speaker. They don't leave here. They need to go and speak to the average Albertan in the places that their policies are affecting the most – Forestburg, Hanna, Grande Cache – places around this province that are seeing investor confidence drain, that are seeing businesses close down, houses close down because people are moving out of their homes and banks are taking them over.

I met a couple in Grande Cache when I was there just last time, and that couple, Mr. Speaker, were living in their car. I mentioned this once before in this place. They moved out of their house. They lost their house three days before, and they were living in their car.

An Hon. Member: Unbelievable.

Mr. Jean: It is unbelievable that in a place like Alberta, when we're so rich in resources, where we have the amount of food that anybody wants to eat, we hope, have shelters around the province, the riches, the wealth, yet we have families living in their cars, losing their homes, losing their jobs, and losing hope.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what do we see when we travel the province? Well, we see a 30 per cent vacancy rate in downtown Calgary in those big, beautiful office towers. We see an unemployment rate in Calgary of 10 per cent, more or less, the highest unemployment rate of any city in Canada, and what's the response from this NDP government? Let's cap our oil sands. Let's make sure we have a cap on it so nobody wants to invest any further in Alberta and bring jobs to Alberta. Or let's bring in a carbon tax.

I know you're going to not believe it, Mr. Speaker, but I'm probably going to be talking about carbon tax for a long time. That's because it's so unpopular, and I've heard from working families shocked – absolutely shocked – to see their gas bill, and I know this because they send me their gas bills. If you look at my Facebook feed, I put them up on there. They send me their gas bills, and there's a 40 per cent increase. A 40 per cent increase. Most people can't even afford to balance their books today, and this government is imposing regulations and policy to change their gas bill by 40 per cent.

They say that they're making life better. I don't think they are. I think they're making life worse for a lot of people. I've talked to small-business people. They're seeing their costs skyrocket, whether it's delivery of product, whether it's their employees. It's not a good environment to be in business in, and it is as a result of the policies this government has brought in.

The clear direction I'm getting from across Alberta is this, and this is the best indication. The clear indication that I'm getting, the clear direction I'm getting from the majority of members of the Wildrose Party, the majority of the members of the PC Party, and the majority of Albertans is: "Unite. Get rid of these guys as quickly as possible. Let's just find a silver bullet and get rid of them." That's what's going on. Any option, just not this option.

They want them gone, and I think part of that reason is because they don't see them out around the province. They don't see them in Calgary, Mr. Speaker. They don't see them in any small town in Alberta. Many of the MLAs have moved out of their constituencies. I know that I have heard that from many people, that they don't show up in their constituencies. Now, I will tell you: I don't think that's the way to represent people, and I do believe that when politicians lose the ability to talk to their constituents, they lose the moral authority to govern. That's why they need to stay in touch with the people, and that's why I continue to implore them to go out and do that.

Now, I recognize that Albertans want a party that's uncompromising and that's an accountable and ethical government, and I'm hoping that we receive that privilege, Mr. Speaker, sometime because we can't see a situation where people, Albertans, politicians are using politics for their own personal gain. I do believe that these politicians would be well informed if they would go out and talk to people and to see how they feel, to talk to the everyday Albertan, to reach out to them and speak to them about the justice system and how they feel about the justice system or how they feel about the increase in taxes or how they feel about the increase in regulations, how they feel about the carbon tax, the accelerated shutdown of coal, the cap on the oil sands. All of these things are significant. All of these things affect the people of Alberta. All of these things can be reversed.

Mr. Speaker, I do ask that this government consider talking to Albertans, because if they do have that opportunity and they see what's going on with the health care system, the education system, our justice system and talk to everyday Albertans that know they want to see something different, I think these fine folks would actually go in that other direction if they just had the opportunity to listen.

I have talked about this budget a bit, Mr. Speaker – and I'm not going to take any more of your time – but all I can tell you is that the government was extremely disappointing to me personally, to see this come forward. It's not a good budget. It's not one that is going in the right direction. It's actually a budget that sees an increase in spending, not a decline. At a time when we see fewer revenues, the first thing any government should do is do no further harm and make sure they get their finances in order, and I implore this government to consider that as they possibly go around Alberta and talk to the people of Alberta and get the authority to continue to govern the people of Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any others wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Nixon: I enjoyed the Leader of the Opposition's speech, and I think he actually probably does have a couple more comments he would like to quickly make. I also suspect he would like to move to adjourn debate.

Mr. Jean: You know what, Mr. Speaker? I don't know how he did that. It was like he read my mind, but . . .

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

The Speaker: A point of order is raised.

Mr. Mason: I withdraw the point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Jean: Yes, Mr. Speaker, and I appreciate that opportunity. As the House leader was about to say, I would move to adjourn debate.
Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this is where some of the confusion was. In fact, under 29(2)(a) you cannot adjourn the . . .

Mr. Jean: Unless there's unanimous consent.

The Speaker: I'm not sure about that even.
Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's great to rise to discuss the budget. I think the Leader of the Official Opposition did a really good job of articulating how I feel about it. I know that I and my constituents are quite shocked by how far this government is willing to go.

The Speaker: You're adjourning?

Mr. Nixon: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. I do have the floor right now. With that said, I would move to adjourn debate.

The Speaker: Yes, hon. member, you have the floor. I'm aware of that. There's no need for you to point that out to me.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Member for Calgary-Hays

16. Mr. Mason moved:
Be it resolved that in accordance with section 28(3) of the Conflicts of Interest Act the Legislative Assembly concur in the report of the Ethics Commissioner concerning the Member for Calgary-Hays dated January 4, 2017, and that the member be required to apologize to the Assembly and pay a fine of $500.

Mr. Rodney moved that the motion be amended as follows:

- (a) by striking out "concur in" and substituting "receive";
- (b) by adding "the Assembly defer its decision on the recommendation" before "that the Member be required to apologize";
- (c) by adding "until such time as the Court of Queen's Bench has given a ruling with respect to the judicial review filed by the Member for Calgary-Hays on February 23, 2017" after "$500".

[Adjourned debate on amendment March 16: Cortes-Vargas]

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to recuse myself from this debate.

The Speaker: Are there any other members who wish to speak to Motion 16? It's on amendment A1. Anyone wishing to speak to amendment A1?

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Speaker: I believe we are now back on the original motion.
On the original motion?

Mr. Hanson: Yes.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, I wasn't going to speak to this, but the more I look at it, this motion actually kind of bothers me a little bit. Basically, what you're asking me and what this motion is asking all of us to do is to mete out a punishment to a person while his case is in appeal, before he's had his day in court, not for voting on a bill or promoting a bill, simply for asking a question in the House. That really troubles me because the implication for this, you know, could be very, very far reaching and set a precedent here that could affect all of us. For instance, does it mean that a teacher that's sitting as an MLA can't ask a question about education or the education system? Is that what it means? Does it mean that a doctor that is a practising doctor can't ask questions about the remuneration of doctors? I mean, we've had talks about that in the House. Does that mean that a doctor would have to recuse himself from discussion or from asking a question on health care?

Social workers: are they not allowed to talk about issues that affect their profession? We're going to be talking about labour laws in Alberta, and I know that a lot of the members opposite are probably past union representatives or maybe still hold memberships in unions. Is that going to mean that you can't be open in the discussion and ask questions on it?

What is the punishment here? We're looking at a $500 fine and an apology. We seem to be in an all-fired-up rush to pass judgment before the man has had his day in court. I don't see what the rush is. It's a simple matter of waiting one more year, until next spring.

If he's found guilty by a judge – like, we're not judges. We don't have that right here. Let's leave it up to the judge. If he agrees with the Ethics Commissioner, then so be it. We'll mete out the punishment here in the House. That's our privilege. But what if not? What if we, you know, drag him up, slap him on the wrist, make him apologize and pay the $500 fine, and then next January he's found innocent? How are you going to feel then? Put yourself in that place. It could happen to any one of you, to any one of us here. There are people here who have businesses on the side that have been very successful in life. Does that mean that they have to recuse themselves from question period because they're asking a question about the economy that could affect their livelihoods? This is ridiculous.

I ask all the members here: put yourself in the shoes of the hon. member that sits here accused, that has not had his appeal date in court, and vote against this motion because it could affect all of you at one time or another. Believe me, if there's an opportunity to call you on it, you're going to get called on it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Any questions under 29(2)(a) to the member?

Seeing and hearing none, are there any other individual members who would like to speak? Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. It's the first chance that I've had to rise on this motion, and I will be brief. I think the last speaker articulated some of the concerns I have with the specific issue of whether or not the hon. member in question should have a fine or something levied against him. Really, it's not even up for debate at this stage. We live in a society that strongly believes in innocent until proven guilty. This is before the courts. For the government to proceed to use this, in my view, for political purposes without allowing the situation to play itself out and while doing so to force members of this Assembly to have to cast a vote with regard to another hon. member without knowing the end facts on something that's before the court is, I think, fundamentally wrong and, quite frankly, insulting.

You know, Mr. Speaker, one of the things that many people that I speak to back home find most shocking is how often opposition members are asked by this government to vote on legislation and items without adequate time to consult with their constituents or to consult with experts that are involved. If you talk to Members of Parliament, they are often shocked and appalled at the process that we have here in Alberta, how fast legislation can move through. It's the same thing.

You know, it's one thing when the government is attempting to use the process of the Assembly to move through legislation at breakneck speed without adequately consulting Albertans; it's another thing to ask hon. members to vote on something as serious as this with regard to one of their colleagues without allowing the process to play itself out.

It's fundamentally wrong, and I think that the government should reconsider it. If they don't, I will of course cast my vote against it, not because of anything that – you know, I haven't had time to determine whether or not it's valid, but I do know that something is before the court. It's fundamentally wrong and insulting that the government would continue with this.

The Speaker: Any others who wish to speak under 29(2)(a) to the member?

Seeing and hearing none, the Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

3:30

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hold on, hon. member. I'm advised that you have spoken to the motion originally.

Mr. Rodney: Sir, I actually made an amendment. I didn't speak to the motion.

The Speaker: You spoke to the motion and then introduced the amendment. That's how you did it. So I'm advised that you are out of order in speaking.

Are there any other members who wish to speak to the original motion?

Mr. Rodney: Clarification, please.

The Speaker: Clarification?

Mr. Rodney: Simply that I went straight to the amendment. I did not debate the motion on purpose.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. I'm just getting the standing orders confirmed.

Hon. member, I stand by the ruling. Under Debate on Amendment, Standing Order 20(1), you are out of order.

The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: To close debate, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: To close debate? Adjourn?

Mr. Mason: To close debate.

The Speaker: Okay. You can sit down.

The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, I just want to kind of reiterate what's already been said about this. This is something that's before the courts. The government, when we're asking questions in question period, often say: "This is before the courts, so we can't answer that question. We can't discuss that issue. We can't do anything about this because this is before the courts."

Mr. Speaker, I think it's only reasonable that the same rules apply at all times. This is before the court, and here we are coming up with a decision on a punishment for something that's before the court. I mean, it doesn't even make sense. I think the only proper thing to do would be to withdraw the motion, let the court finish, let a decision be made, and then we can go ahead based on whatever the court decides. But to do this before the court has decided, I think, is not a reasonable expectation of what we should be doing in this House. This isn't what's in the best interests of the time of this House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. member, under 29(2)(a)? I'm sorry. Yes, you. Thank you.

Mr. Rodney: To the point of the last speaker, I appreciate his comments. Specifically, again, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is for comments and questions. I wonder if he could consider clarifying a few important points for the House. This motion indeed refers to section 28(3) of the Conflicts of Interest Act. I'm sure he's aware that it actually states:

If in the report from the Ethics Commissioner the Ethics Commissioner has found that a Member or former Minister has breached this Act and the Ethics Commissioner has recommended a sanction, the Legislative Assembly shall debate and vote on the report within 15 days after the tabling of the report . . .

But it goes on:

... or any other period that is determined by a resolution of the Legislative Assembly.

So I'm guessing that this member is recommending, as I've heard from other members on this side of the House, that this would indeed occur at an appropriate date, which would of course be after the date it is heard in January.

Mr. Loewen: Sensible.

Mr. Rodney: It's only sensible. Thank you, Member.

So the first question is: why would the government motion be worded in a way that it would show unfair bias in favour of accepting the report that would seem to unfairly prejudice the debate in the House?

Now, we go back to section 28(3). Since the report has been tabled, we could have exercised the option to pass a resolution to debate and vote on this later.

I think there's a substantial argument – perhaps the hon. member would agree – that we should not pass this today because what the motion is proposing is that we punish a member of this Assembly for, really, doing his job and for exercising his use of free speech in the House. Does that not send a very chilling effect through everyone's bones in this Assembly? Does it not warn us all that there could be an extremely dangerous precedent for us all? And I don't mean just us here in this Chamber. I mean Legislatures and Parliaments around the world in the Commonwealth. This has not happened before in history.

Members come from almost every walk of life in this Chamber. I've seen it for four separate elections. I've admired the experience and expertise that so many people have brought to this Chamber. It makes for better debate and better policies when people are not afraid to speak. I am extremely concerned. I wonder if the member shares the concern that people will be afraid to speak up if this motion passes.

We could go through our seating plan, Mr. Speaker. No matter what a person's experience or expertise is, if they have experience or expertise in a field that is related to any ministry or they have a family member who does or they have any topic to discuss from which they have a personal, professional, or political background, will they be silenced from now on? That is a very serious question that needs to be asked in good time.

Would the member agree that the tradition of being able to speak freely on the floor of the Legislature is one of the primary privileges of this Assembly? Would he quote Beauchesne's, section 25? It is "the least questioned and the most fundamental right of the [member] ... on the floor of the House and in committee" as well. It's been upheld, Mr. Speaker, time and time again that a member not face sanctions for what's been said on the floor of the House. It's one of the key parliamentary privileges, and to abrogate that privilege should require far more than simply what's been stated here today, which is a government motion slid in at 3-something on this particular day.

This is the substance of the suit that has been brought forward by the Member for Calgary-Hays, to decide what context and to what extent the Conflicts of Interest Act can limit the parliamentary privilege of free speech. This is serious, serious stuff. It's a matter that we should allow the court to decide before we debate this further even today. Until then we have a duty to maintain and uphold the ability of members to speak freely in this House and be passionate advocates for their constituents. That's why we got elected.

I therefore ask members of this House to perhaps join this member and me and others to vote against this motion or potentially risk sacrificing the parliamentary privilege of free speech, which is an extremely dangerous precedent on a go-forward basis.

I just wonder if this member has anything else that he would like to say with respect to any of these points, whether it's related to Beauchesne's or previous rulings in this jurisdiction or others around the world.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if I might seek unanimous consent to revert to introductions for a moment. We've had some very important guests come into the gallery.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests (reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just glanced up in the gallery and saw a whole bunch of familiar faces that have arrived out of the blue. I do know them all, but I won't name them all in the interest of time. I see officials, both elected and staff, from the town of Rocky Mountain House, the village of Caroline, and, of course, the beautiful Clearwater county here in the Assembly watching a little bit of an interesting debate. I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome to all of you. I hope that maybe you could share with the House at some point in the future how collegiality is practised in a very constructive fashion on your various councils. Welcome.

The Speaker: Are there any other members who wish to speak to the motion? The Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I won't take too long. Since my election in 2012 and moving along here for the past number of years, I've seen several things that have come across this Assembly that have been fairly concerning, but this one stands out in my memory as being one of the most unusual and one that is very controversial. It would seem that it has a lot to do with the Conflicts of Interest Act, and it seems to have an awful lot to do with our basic roles and responsibilities as elected officials.

It is surprising to me that we're dealing with a matter that's before us like this when it is, as the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed has mentioned, before the courts. I agree with all the points that were raised by the Member for Calgary-Lougheed during the questions he was posing to the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, so I would like to add my name to the list of the names of those who have been speaking against this motion for the past several minutes in respect to this situation.

I would encourage all those in the House this afternoon to give this very serious thought before they vote on this matter today. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Are there any questions or comments under 29(2)(a) to the hon. member?

Seeing and hearing none, the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's an interesting question, one that I think we've been wrestling with for some time. I compare it, to some extent, to the issues that I would face, for example, as a physician – my wife is a physician – if I were to rise in the House and try to influence this House in relation to negotiations with physicians. I think I'm aware enough and I think I'm mature enough to recognize that there might be a perceived problem there.

We as a Legislature have identified and appointed officers of this Legislature to be watchdogs over us to ensure that we follow due process, that we recognize conflicts of interest, and that in many cases if there are issues to be passed on, we pass them on to a fellow party member, a caucus member, to address the issue rather than place ourselves in a conflict of interest. I've looked at a little bit of the literature. A similar occurrence has occurred in B.C. It was referred to the courts in B.C., and the B.C. courts sent it back to the Legislature, saying: this is a matter for the Legislature to decide.

I think it's fairly straightforward that when there's a pecuniary interest, when someone in our own family or ourselves are going to benefit from pressing on a certain issue, there is a conflict of interest. I think we do a disservice to this Legislature if we don't honour the appointments that we've made to those official independent officers – independent officers – who try to, you know, keep this august body accountable and ethical and act in the public interest to even in this mild way say: this is not an appropriate action in this particular case.

I don't doubt that the member was not aware and did not think about the possibility, but I will be supporting this motion, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Any questions for the hon. member under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Yes. I'd just like to clarify that the hon. member understands that the member wasn't voting on a motion, wasn't voting on a bill, that he was simply asking a question in the House.

Dr. Swann: I think it was very clear from Hansard that he was trying to influence the decision on the bill. That's the position that the Ethics Commissioner took, that he was trying to influence, through his influence as the leader of the party and through his particular position in this House, the decision of the government. Whether it was in the form of a question or it was actually in the form of an assertion, it was clear to many of us.

I defer to the Ethics Commissioner. I actually believe that she is acting in good conscience and acting on behalf of all of us to try and make sure that our reputation in the public is not tainted, that our reputation is upheld as honourable members that are acting strictly in the interests of the public. I stand by what I understood to be the Hansard remarks and the good office of the Ethics Commissioner, who I think is acting in the best interests of all of us in the final analysis.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), hon. member?

Mr. Rodney: Yes, please, and thanks. I appreciate that the member has spent almost exactly the same amount of time as I have in this House, and it's the first time both you and I have had anything like this in front of us, so I'd ask the hon. member: since the constitutional question has been raised and the Justice minister has been served, why do you think it's appropriate that this would be raised at this point? Would it not be prudent for rulings of other bodies to be decided so that this is done in the correct order? Why would it not be adjourned until after the court decides on a constitutional matter? Do you think the Legislature does not have jurisdiction to interpret the Constitution or decide about the scope of its own privilege? That's for the courts. What are your comments on this topic, again, that will affect every member not only in this Chamber but in other Legislatures, the Parliament in Ottawa, and the Commonwealth beyond?

Dr. Swann: Well, I think this is the essential question that we're wrestling with, and none of us have dealt with this before. I guess what I'm saying is that based on what I have read and what I have seen in B.C., the B.C. court punted it right back to the Legislature, saying: "These are your rules. You should be able to interpret your rules, and you should honour the commitments that you've made through your appointed independent officers." I'm no expert on constitutional law. That's why we have an Ethics Commissioner. That's why we have courts, and ultimately I guess the courts can still overrule this decision readily if they choose to. I don't think we prejudice the court in any way. We vote, and we make our decisions here. If the courts decide that we are in error, then so be it, but the evidence from B.C. is that they want nothing to do with conflicts of interest related to the Legislature.

The Speaker: Any other questions or comments under 29(2)(a) to the Member for Calgary-Mountain View?

Seeing and hearing none, are there any other members that wish to speak to the motion?

Seeing and hearing none, the Government House Leader to close.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, yes. Thank you very much. I want to go over a few things here, and I want to respond to a few things that have been said. I want to go back to the ruling of the Ethics Commissioner, which was issued on January 4 of this year, to quote some of the sections of her report.

[The member] contravened s. 3 of the Conflicts of Interest Act when he asked [a question] . . . during question period . . .

[The member] was trying to influence the Crown to drop both of these policies. If he succeeded, it would protect his wife's company and if he failed there could be detrimental effect on her business . . .

Therefore, as a result of asking the question, in a manner which tried to influence the Crown, [the member] was in breach of s. 3 of the Conflicts of Interest Act as he sought to influence the Crown's decision to implement (or prevent) certain policies, the unintended result of which, had he succeeded, would further the private interest of his direct associate, in this case his wife.

Given the small size of the interest and the probability [the member] was more interested in scoring political points than worried about his wife's business, it is my recommendation that an apology to the Legislative Assembly by [the member] and a fine of $500 is the appropriate penalty for this breach of the Act.

Now, in response to this report, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member at the time made the following statements. These are some quotes from that statement:

I respect and accept the Ethics Commissioner's findings regarding the conflict of interest that occurred during debate on Alberta's electricity market.

While the investigation clearly shows that my actions in the Legislative Assembly were not intended to protect my wife's business, there could have been unintended consequences and as such, I was in violation of the Act.

He went on to say:

I fully accept responsibility for my actions and going forward, I will continue to not participate in any question period activity, debate or vote in relation to Alberta's electricity utility industry until such a time that the Ethics Commissioner gives me permission to do so.

Mr. Speaker, we brought this forward in compliance with the Conflicts of Interest Act, which does require the Assembly to move and vote upon any findings or sanctions against a member in the Ethics Commissioner's report.

Now, to deal with a couple of points that have been raised again, I will again reiterate that in our system, the British parliamentary system, or the Westminster system, there is a division of powers that has been recognized by the courts. This is made more explicit in the American Constitution, but it comes from the British system, where it's a well-developed system that divides authority between the legislative branch, the executive branch, and the judicial branch, Mr. Speaker. Each has authority within its own realm, and the courts have repeatedly refused to take jurisdiction in matters that are clearly within the Legislative Assembly's prerogative, and we believe that that is, by far and away, the most likely matter.

Now, the question of the principle of sub judice has been raised. You've ruled, Mr. Speaker, with respect to that, that it does not apply in this case. We are not talking about an external court case where we might influence a court. We're talking about something within our own area of jurisdiction, where the courts are very unlikely to intervene.

The last point that I'd like to make is that this in no way takes away the hon. member's recourse to the courts should he choose to. If he's dissatisfied with the process, if he's dissatisfied with the Ethics Commissioner's report, he still has recourse to the courts. Now, I suspect that the courts will not take jurisdiction in those matters, but we are in no way removing the rights of a member to take this forward to the courts if he chooses.

Mr. Speaker, I think we're acting within the law, within our area of responsibility, and our obligations as a legislative body to treat these matters in a very serious fashion. Not my favourite thing to do, but I think that it is exactly what has to be done, what our obligation and our responsibility are. So I'd urge hon. members to vote in favour of the motion to support the recommendations of the Ethics Commissioner in this matter.

[The voice vote indicated that Government Motion 16 carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 3:53 p.m.]

[Fifteen minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[The Speaker in the chair]

For the motion:

Babcock	Gray	Miller
Bilous	Horne	Miranda
Carlier	Jansen	Piquette
Carson	Kleinstauber	Rosendahl
Connolly	Larivee	Sabir
Coolahan	Littlewood	Schreiner
Dach	Loyola	Sigurdson
Drever	Mason	Sucha
Eggen	McCuaig-Boyd	Swann
Feehan	McKittrick	Turner
Fitzpatrick	McLean	Westhead
Goehring	McPherson

Against the motion:

Anderson, W.	Hunter	Rodney
Ellis	MacIntyre	Starke
Gotfried	Nixon	Stier
Hanson	Panda
Totals:	For – 35	Against – 11

[Government Motion 16 carried]

Mr. Rodney: Mr. Speaker, a point of privilege.

The Speaker: Hon. member, you're rising on a point of privilege, as I understand it. Is that correct?

Privilege

Obstructing a Member in Performance of Duty

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do indeed rise on a point of privilege with regard to the passing of Government Motion 16. As I alluded to in my earlier remarks on this motion, the privilege of members of the Legislature to speak freely on this House floor is one of the most securely held privileges afforded to members. I refer, as my first citation, to Erskine May, 24th edition, page 203:

Parliamentary privilege is the sum of certain rights enjoyed by each House collectively as a constituent part of the High Court of Parliament; and by the Members of each House individually, without which they could not discharge their functions, and which exceed those possessed by other bodies or individuals.

Further, from the same page:

Certain rights and immunities such as freedom from arrest or freedom of speech belong primarily to individual Members of each House and exist because the House cannot perform its functions without unimpeded use of the services of its Members.

I would argue, with the greatest respect, Mr. Speaker, that Motion 16 as debated and passed in this House constitutes a direct breach of the privilege of free speech in this House. Many points of privilege have been argued in this House, but the charge of infringing on the privilege of free speech is indeed very dire. I recognize that, and I trust that you also are aware of the gravity of the precedent you are setting.

To quote directly from Beauchesne's, the second citation is section 75. It reads:

The privilege of freedom of speech is both the least questioned and the most fundamental right of the Member of Parliament on the floor of the House and in committee.

Now, the reason that the privilege of freedom of speech is so fundamental is that it deals directly with the ability of the member to perform their duties. If a member is precluded from speaking on the issues that affect his or her constituents, then that member is being obstructed in discharging the duties that they were elected to do.

Leaving aside the issue of whether or not the members opposite believe that the question asked by the Member for Calgary-Hays was unethical, he enjoys, as every single one of us does, the privilege to speak in this House about issues that matter to our constituents.

As citation 3, Mr. Speaker, page 222 of Erskine May states:

Subject to the rules of order in debate, a Member may state whatever he thinks fit in debate, however offensive it may be to the feelings, or injurious to the character, of individuals; and he is protected by parliamentary privilege from any action for defamation, as well as from any other question or molestation.

I would argue that the motion and debate here today were clearly in contravention of exactly this. A further quotation from the same page:

The Speaker having claimed and statutory recognition having been granted to the privilege of . . . speech, it becomes the duty of each Member to refrain from any course of action prejudicial to the privilege which he enjoys.

Mr. Speaker, I seriously question whether what transpired in this House just now and last week with regard to Motion 16 could be interpreted as anything other than prejudicial to the privilege of free speech.

I would like to be respectful of the members' time, so I will end my references there. I will simply say that I believe we have demonstrated a prima facie case of breach of privilege, and I urge you, encourage you, implore you, and thank you for making the prudent ruling here to protect and preserve the privileges of every one of the members of this House, Legislatures, and parliaments here and around the world within the Commonwealth.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member from the third party has raised a question of privilege, which is, of course, a very serious matter. I was unaware that this point of privilege was coming forward. I would respectfully request time to prepare my response and, with the greatest of respect, ask that we be allowed to reply to this point of privilege tomorrow.

The Speaker: Hon. members, points of privilege are always very, very serious in this House, and for the particular point of privilege being raised today, I too would like to have some time to look at the issues. I want to also reflect upon the rulings that I granted earlier with respect to this subject matter, so I would like to defer the matter to a future date. We will bring the matter back for discussion, and at that time other members may wish to make some points with respect to the matter as well.

I think that for today I would leave that matter there and move on.

Ministry of Education Main Estimates

17. Mr. Mason moved:

Be it resolved that, notwithstanding Standing Order 52.01(1)(a), the 2017-18 main estimates for the Ministry of Education be considered by the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Normally this would be considered by another standing committee, but when we looked at the workload for estimates of the various committees, we found that it was considerably imbalanced. In order to provide a more equal workload and to allow the estimates to proceed more efficiently, we are requesting that the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future be tasked with hearing the estimates of the Ministry of Education.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, anyone wish to speak to Motion 17?

[Government Motion 17 carried]

4:20 Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 3

Voluntary Blood Donations Act

The Deputy Chair: We are currently on amendment A3. Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered in respect to this? The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to this amendment a second time and perhaps address some of the concerns that were raised this morning by the hon. Health minister. I'll start by apologizing to the members opposite for suggesting that in some way their perusing of their laptop computers was not related to debate. There is certainly every possibility that that's exactly what they were doing, and I should not have made the assumption that they were not engaged in that very worthwhile activity, so we'll set that aside for starters.

But I will say, Madam Chair, that while the Health minister seemed to be bemused by my sharing of stories and other members opposite suggested that, you know, perhaps donors in my veterinary practice were not financially compensated and that therefore neither should be extended, in point of fact what we are talking about here is indeed very serious.

I would like to say that I'm very proud of our system and proud of Canadian Blood Services, the work they do, but I think, actually, that Canadian Blood Services has some significant shortcomings that need to be addressed. While we like to say, you know, that our systems that we have here in our country are always working particularly well, I think that when we look at the statistics and we look at the donor rates of Canada compared to other nations, we in fact are not doing nearly as well.

In the case of Canadian Blood Services I feel that at least part of the reason for that is that they are not making it easier for people to donate. In fact, they're making it harder for people to donate. Canadian Blood Services used to make it very convenient for people. They would do donor days in rural areas. I know that they would regularly come to communities in my constituency, usually two or three times a year, with a mobile blood donation clinic. That was a day that, quite frankly, a lot of people from our community would get together on, and they would go out to donate. Those are hardly held anymore. To donate now, it is required for people to make an appointment and then travel down to the Canadian Blood Services office in Edmonton. This isn't always convenient, and this isn't always easy for people. I think some of this contributes to the reduction in the number of donors.

I also want to talk a little bit about the Krever commission and Justice Krever's inquiry that was initiated in 1993 on the heels of the worst public health disaster that we've ever had in our nation. That was, of course, the tainted blood scandal of the '80s, in which some 32,000 Canadians were inadvertently affected or infected by blood that had one or more viral agents in it. The main concern, of course, was HIV but also viruses such as hepatitis. In the aftermath of that very, very serious public health disaster, essentially, for Canada, the largest one of its kind in our history, Justice Krever was asked to look into our blood system.

It was at that time one of the recommendations was that the responsibility for the collection and distribution of blood and blood products be removed from the Canadian Red Cross and turned over to Canadian Blood Services. Of course, the Krever commission also made the recommendation, which has been documented and has been referenced a number of times, about having a completely voluntary system, that we have a system that is entirely reliant on volunteers.

One of the things, though, that we have to recognize is that the Krever commission and its recommendations are 20 years old. Those recommendations came down in 1997, when, in fact, the processing of plasma for plasma protein products and the treatment of a number of conditions with these plasma protein products were indeed just in the stage of developing. It was in its infancy, and the possibility for attaining self-sufficiency in plasma products would have been much higher at the time of the Krever commission.

In point of fact, though, as the demand has grown and as we continue to see a need for more and more plasma so that we can have plasma protein products for the treatment of a variety of different conditions, it is certainly determined that more and more plasma is required and that having a purely voluntary system is simply not providing an adequate volume of plasma to meet our needs. Indeed, if we look right across the world, there is not a single jurisdiction where there is a sufficient volume of plasma collected on a purely voluntary basis in order to provide that.

You know, the Health minister did reference that one of the reasons for that and, I think, one of the things that is very important that people understand is that plasma donations are different from donating blood. Donating blood is a relatively short process that can happen in approximately 20 minutes, donating a unit of blood. In fact, sometimes the registration and the answering of the questionnaire that is part and parcel of a blood donation takes longer than the actual donation time itself. The other thing that is important in regard to donating blood is that donation takes only 20 minutes, but it can only be done in the case of men every 56 days, every eight weeks, as a maximum frequency and for women every 84 days, every 12 weeks, as a maximum frequency.

Plasma donations are quite different. A plasma donation takes an hour and a half, and that is because a plasma donation involves a situation where the blood is taken, the red cells are then separated from the plasma, and then the red cells are returned back to the donor. This also allows the donor to donate more often, up to once a week. In fact, the plasma that is lost is regenerated by the body in something that's quite incredible, a matter of about 24 hours. These are some of the things that I think we have to consider.

There's one other thing that I've hesitated to raise, but I do think it has to be addressed, and that is the motivation that is claimed by the folks that are moving this. The motivation behind this is the safety of the blood supply. I think I've pointed out that the safety of the blood supply is not impacted whatsoever, whether you have paid donors or voluntary donors. Plasma products specifically are processed to such an extent that there has never been a documented case of a disease being transmitted as a result of a plasma donation that came from a paid donor. There's not a single case of that, and Health Canada as well as Canadian Blood Services both agreed at the round-table that was done in 2013 that safety is not an issue. So we can set that one aside.

The second reason that is often given is the effect it will have on the donor base, and the Health minister referenced a decrease in donors in Saskatoon after the opening of that paid plasma centre. That's one year of data. That's one year of data in one specific instance, and somehow we're to take that as being more significant and more telling than 30 years of operation of the paid plasma donation centre in Winnipeg or the experience that has been seen in countries like Germany and Austria and the United States, where they do have parallel paid plasma situations.

While I agree that we should watch what is happening with the Saskatoon clinic very carefully, I think we should also drill down and look at those numbers a little bit more carefully. Can we attribute the entire decrease in the number of donations to that one single factor, opening that plasma resource collection centre? Could there potentially be other reasons? I think that needs to be looked at before we simply point to one situation with only a one-year track record and determine, therefore, that we shouldn't be embarking on this.

You know, I'd also point out that the Health minister mentioned that we wouldn't be the first province to do this. Ontario banned payment for blood and plasma donations relatively recently, in just the last couple of years. The Quebec ban on payment for blood and plasma donations has been going on. Actually, they passed their law approximately, I think it was, about 25 years ago. Quebec has had a long-standing ban on this. That's fine. Those provinces can make those decisions.

But I would point out that the province of Saskatchewan has approved this. The province of Manitoba has a long-standing approval of payment for plasma donors. The province of British Columbia has no opposition to this, and the Health minister of the province of British Columbia has indicated very clearly that there is no specific problem in his mind with paid-for plasma donations. The province of New Brunswick has similarly said that they do not have an issue, and the federal government has said that they will leave this up to the provinces because Health Canada does not have an issue from a safety standpoint with regard to payment of plasma donors. You know, we can bring out and say that, well, other jurisdictions are doing this. Well, thus far at least in Canada, that I'm aware of, only the provinces of Quebec and Ontario have banned paid-for blood and plasma donations.

The other issue that I'd like to raise – and I'd like, actually, to hear some responses to whether this is an issue or not – is that Canadian Blood Services is a union shop. Canadian Blood Services: the employees there are employed by CUPE. In fact, at the announcement that was made by the Health minister last week, the CUPE rep from Canadian Blood Services was on hand for the announcement.

Now, again, I've said in this Chamber before that I don't have a specific objection to labour unions. Labour unions have an important role to play in terms of representing the interests and representing collectively the needs of workers. I was once a labour union member, when I worked at the packing house in Edmonton as a student, and I think I also shared with the group that a labour union helped pay for a good deal of my education. So I have no reason to have an axe to grind with labour unions. But I do have an issue when jobs are being specifically protected and shielded in a union situation and when private-sector, non-unionized workers are being specifically, you know, prevented from entering a market in order to preserve and protect union jobs. I don't think that's right.

If, in fact, this is strictly, as the hon. member's office has repeatedly stated, because of a strong feeling that they should not have payment for blood products, I say, you know, that's fine. I think from a moral, ethical standpoint that's a hard position to take when you are taking blood products from paid donors in other jurisdictions and you know full well that they are paid donations and you know full well that even if we ramp up to a high extent the donations through Canadian Blood Services and that all of a sudden after a period of contracting and having fewer donor centres, they have now suddenly more donor centres – even after that and after an investment of $100 million taxpayer dollars, you're going to have 50 per cent of the required plasma and still need to buy the other 50 per cent. I need to know whether members can stand up in the House and with absolutely, you know, clear statements say that this is not to protect CUPE union jobs at Canadian Blood Services.

If that's the case, well, that's fine. But I have to say that the past track record of this government doesn't necessarily indicate that's true. I would reference the decision made to invest $200 million in a unionized laundry service for Alberta Health Services rather than continue to allow a private contractor to do it.

So, Madam Chair, I think that it is critically important that we take a very clear look at this. I'm going to say again and to those who are listening who have a philosophical or a specific objection to payment for blood and blood products that I understand that. The purpose of this amendment is that for blood and plasma that is going to be used for transfusion, used in our own jurisdiction here, it would continue to be based on purely voluntary donations. It is my view that we could continue to have a sufficient voluntary donor base to meet the need.

But I have a problem when we have a situation where we have the potential to have a whole new industry employing people, diversifying our economy, and have new jobs created, have new investment, and, specifically, have plasma that is collected, processed, and the products produced here in Canada. That's not being done currently. Instead, we're taking taxpayers' dollars and paying highly profitable American pharmaceutical corporations, big pharma, which I know for a lot of people is something that they're not particularly keen on supporting, and we're taking taxpayers' dollars to keep big pharma profitable.

You know, the other thing that was talked about by the Health minister was that these products shouldn't be sold to the highest bidder. Well, in point of fact, Canada is one of the highest bidders right now because of our demand for plasma products and the fact that we simply don't have very many plasma products because we don't have the processing facilities here. If we're ever going to have the processing facilities here, if we're ever going to be in a situation where we can have Canadian plasma from Canadian donors, whether they're paid or voluntary, but Canadian plasma from Canadian donors, used to treat Canadian patients, that has been processed in a Canadian facility, the only way we're going to do that is if we have sufficient plasma that is collected.

I do not have a level of faith in Canadian Blood Services, given their past track record, that they will be able to build up the voluntary donor base to allow that to happen. Part of that is borne out by the experience in other countries. Canadian Blood Services, as I stated this morning, has only achieved roughly half the donor rate as other nations that have a paid and a voluntary parallel system. So to somehow now make the leap of faith that Canadian Blood Services is going to be able to do what no other nation has been able to do, what no other country, no other blood service anywhere in the world has been able to do, and make Canada self-sufficient in plasma donations for all purposes – you'll forgive me if I'm a bit skeptical about that.

In my view, it would make sense to do what many other provinces have done – B.C., Saskatchewan, Manitoba, New Brunswick, and it's being considered for other provinces – to not shut down plasma donations that can then be used for Canadian patients, that can then be processed in Canadian facilities, which are yet to be built. I recognize that, but once those facilities are built, we will then have that opportunity here locally. I think that's something we shouldn't just shut down in its tracks. In fact, that's something that we should at least allow for. This amendment does that. This amendment at the same time preserves and recognizes the voluntary system for both transfusions of plasma and for blood.

For that reason, Madam Chair, I would encourage members of the Assembly to support this amendment to this bill.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member. Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A3?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are now back on the original bill. Are there any members wishing to speak?

The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm very disappointed in the government side. I am disappointed that they do not desire to diversify our economy here in Alberta. I am disappointed that they have no support for the biomedical industry. I am disappointed that the Health minister has denied so many people from getting medications and other treatments that are only available in the United States and that given the opportunity to possibly do something to attract these very industries that can provide these life-saving adjuncts and medications, they still say no.

This is bigger than plasma. This is bigger than blood. We are talking about stem cells and so many other things. Stem cells alone are demonstrating to be a huge, huge breakthrough in medical therapies and treatments, and it would be so great to see an industry here in Alberta, where we would be the ones trying to solve all these ailments that impair us.

Madam Chair, I'm also disappointed in the government's comments about, you know, the fee-for-service aspect. I couldn't help but notice in this legislation that there is one group that is possibly allowed to do pay for service, and that is Canadian Blood Services. They're totally exempt from this. In my mind there are concerns about that.

But recognizing that oversight, we also have to recognize that there are other oversights in this, and that is that at the heart of this we don't want the people who are actually donating these fluids – the blood, the plasma – to be victims in all this.

With that, I would like to move an amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member. Your amendment will be referred to as A4. If you can just wait till I have the original, and then please go ahead.

Mr. Yao: You know, it's interesting to note that provinces like Ontario and Quebec, that have banned payment for these products, made these rules a long time ago, over 20 years ago, when the report was released. Technology has changed. We are doing more. We have mapped out the genome. We've been experimenting more and more with even manipulating viruses into helping the body and to killing these cancers and whatnot. A member from across the way even pointed out that they still have old stereotypes of people, and that is why he cannot donate blood. These are ancient stereotypes that just don't exist, and it's unfortunate. We need to make sure that the donors in this case aren't affected in a negative fashion.

I move that Bill 3, the Voluntary Blood Donations Act, be amended in section 7 by adding the following after subsection (5):

(6) For greater clarity, an individual from whom blood is collected by an individual or corporation that contravenes section 2 is not guilty of an offence under this Act.

To clarify, we currently will fine companies that pay or offer to pay for these products from people. We also have to make sure that the people themselves aren't fined and penalized for this.

With that, I ask the government side to consider this and ensure that the people who are donating aren't held guilty under the law.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak to amendment A4 as proposed by the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo? The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would like to thank the member for bringing forth this amendment. You know, I think that his dedication to clarity is important. To be clear, the phrasing of this legislation already indicates that the prohibition and subsequent punishment would not fall to the individuals who are motivated to accept payment for their plasma but rather to the entity that would seek to buy it. Though this amendment is a little redundant, we understand that it is in keeping with the spirit of the bill, and I would encourage all my colleagues in the House to vote in support of this.

I would however like to remind the member that there is no domestically owned or operated fractionation in Canada at this time, and the legislation, as we've stated numerous times today, has absolutely no bearing on the ability for a private company to come to Alberta, as we encourage them to do.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A4?

Seeing none, we'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A4 carried]

The Deputy Chair: We are now back on the original bill. Are there any members wishing to speak to the bill?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

[The remaining clauses of Bill 3 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 1

An Act to Reduce School Fees

The Deputy Chair: Are there any members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's an honour to stand up and support this very important bill. I know we had some really important discussions a few days ago. Like I said before – I think it bears repeating – this is something that I hear all the time from parents. Every September they're thinking: how am I going to pay this bill? When people have large families, the bills add up very quickly. You know, sometimes families are wondering, when they have to buy back-to-school clothing. They may have gone on a summer vacation, so money can be tight around that time of year. This government is devoted to making life more affordable for Albertans by lowering their school fees.

Everybody has a right to a public education. One of the most fair ways that we can ensure all our children get the best possible education is through a fair taxation system. We obviously have to be very prudent and careful with taxes, and I'm proud to say that Alberta has the lowest taxes in Canada. We have a nearly $9 billion tax advantage over the next lowest taxed province. The folks on the opposite side will idolize Saskatchewan, but we just heard today, or I read it in the news, that the Premier there is quoted as saying that people aren't going to like the Saskatchewan budget. I'm paraphrasing, but those were roughly his words. They're also contemplating increasing their provincial sales tax there, Madam Chair.

When provinces go through difficult times, there are multiple approaches that governments can take. We've seen the approach that the third party took when they were in government. They downloaded those costs to families. They sort of hid them in a way. One of the reasons that we ended up with school fees in the first place is because, despite their best intentions – like, school boards have done an admirable job dealing with the situation that they were given by the previous government. But part of the problem was that there was no sustainable or predictable funding for school boards, so school boards were kind of forced into a position where with the flat tax, that the Conservatives had, it gave tax breaks to their wealthy friends but downloaded those costs to families.

This is something I hear they may be planning to do again with the flat tax. Instead of lowering school fees for hard-working families, they'd rather give tax cuts to profitable corporations. Madam Chair, this was something that we ran on as one of our election platforms, bringing in a fair corporate tax and also bringing in a fair progressive tax. You know, we were up front with Albertans about this, and I don't apologize for that. I think we deserve a fair taxation system. Like I said earlier, we obviously need to be careful about that. We need to maintain an advantage here in Alberta, and we've done that, so that's something that we can be proud of.

I guess what I'm trying to get at is that the money to pay for schools has to come from somewhere, and the way that the former Conservative government kind of managed to hide those things and make it look like they had artificially low taxes was by kind of taxing people on the other end and not calling it a tax. They called it a school fee.

You know, I don't have kids, but I think I deserve to pay my fair share of transportation costs and material costs because I know that it gets us a better kind of society, where kids grow up to get good jobs. I know that investing in our children's education is one of the most important investments a government can make in their province, and I'm proud of that, Madam Chair. I think it's something that we've done a really good job in. It's about setting your priorities. I would rather help make life more affordable for all Albertans by acting to reduce school fees and by having a fair taxation system.

We know that when kids get a good education, they grow up and tend to get good jobs, and when people have good jobs, they tend to be more healthy, so they tend to use the health care system less and rely on other social supports less. Socioeconomic status is highly linked to health outcomes. I've heard various figures, but the one I recall is that for every dollar we invest in public education, we save $7 down the road on avoided costs to do with social security, health care, crime, all these kinds of things. You know, we refer to things as investments, and I think that's a good way to look at it because, sure, it costs us money, but it also avoids costing us money down the road.

It's kind of like, you know, when you're thinking about making a financial investment. You could buy a GIC that has a low interest rate, or you could pay off your mortgage, that may have a higher interest rate. Sometimes people think: well, I'm going to buy a GIC; it's a sure thing. But on the other side, if you think about a mortgage, you're going to owe that interest on the mortgage anyway, so you might as well pay down the mortgage to save. You actually get a higher return. It's kind of counterintuitive thinking.

Mrs. Aheer: That's a budget. It's a good idea.

Mr. Westhead: Yeah. Thank you. It is. Providing free financial advice here in the Legislature. I appreciate that. I'm not a financial adviser, but I do know about, you know, making wise investments in terms of: should you pay your mortgage down, or should you buy a GIC that has a lower interest rate than a mortgage?

You know, school fees are only one element of a good investment in our education system. Another good investment is ensuring that we're funding for student enrolment to make sure that children have teachers in their classrooms. When we build these new schools, it costs money to build the schools – that's for sure – but they're something we need anyway. Alberta is a growing province, and when we build the schools, it's not enough just to have a building; you have to have people to run the buildings: janitors, principals, administration staff, educational support staff. These aren't optional things, Madam Chair. These are things that Alberta needs.

Even folks on the opposite side know that. They're good people, too. They know that they want to invest in education. I think everyone agrees on that. That's not what's in disagreement. It's a disagreement of sort of, I suppose: when do you pay the bill? My preference and I think the preference – I'd hazard a guess – of folks on this side is that because we need these things now, it makes sense to create jobs by building the schools. We know that there's an unemployment situation in our province, and by investing in infrastructure, it creates good jobs for folks.

Another thing that's really interesting in this kind of economy that we find ourselves in is that the bids for these construction projects are coming in much lower than we expected. If I recall correctly, I think the Minister of Education said that it was something around 10 per cent lower in terms of how low the bids are coming in. I can't recall that number precisely, but I think it's a countercyclical way of ensuring that we're investing in our province, creating jobs, building the things we need, and saving money all at the same time. It's a question of: when do you build these things?

I guess I'd be interested to hear from the folks in the opposition about their plan because they agree we need schools, that kids need teachers. But it's confusing for me, Madam Chair, the contradiction that I see. If you want to lower taxes, cut the spending, and build the schools all at the same time, those things seem to me a little bit – like, on all three of those things, low taxes, cutting funding for operations, and building schools, I'd like to learn from the opposite members how they could do those three things all at the same time. It seems a bit mutually exclusive to me.

When we have a crash in the price of oil that's affected our bottom line in the province, it doesn't mean that people don't still need health care and that people don't need education. When someone needs surgery, they don't want to be told: I'm sorry, but we don't have nurses for you because the oil price is low, so we've closed the hospitals for the day. It probably won't happen, but I guess the question for the members on the other side is: how do you replace a $10 billion structural deficit when the revenue system collapses?

I think the way we need to deal with that is through diversifying our economy. The Minister of Economic Development and Trade has done a remarkable job in terms of going overseas to find new markets. There's an export program that he's developed. Not only that, but the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry has also undertaken trade missions abroad where he's trying to help diversify the markets for agricultural products. There are different ways that governments can react to price shocks in the economy. We've said it before, and I think it also deserves repeating: we're trying to act as a shock absorber to our economy.

In Saskatchewan they have yet to release the details of their budget, but I think it's going to be an interesting kind of tale of two provinces. Sure, our economies are similar but different. Obviously, Alberta's economy is quite a bit bigger, but a lot of our revenue is based on nonrenewable resources. The Saskatchewan government is going to take a certain approach and we're going to take a certain approach, and we can kind of see how those different approaches play out in the different provinces. It's going to be a good case study to see how things happen in Saskatchewan and how things happen here in Alberta.

I guess one other point I'd like to make before I conclude, Madam Chair, is that I think – sorry. I lost my train of thought. In Saskatchewan they're trying to deal with things differently. They've talked about a PST increase, but that also puts the burden on people who can least afford it. I think there are other ways that we can look at managing this kind of environment that we're in.

I'm really proud of the Minister of Education for the initiative that it took for him to work very closely with all the different school boards to find where it makes sense to lower these school fees because of the haphazard way that the PCs left the province and with the school boards taking various approaches. It was no small task for the minister to kind of find out how best to do that, so I applaud the minister for taking that action.

Well, I thank everyone for hearing me out this afternoon. I really look forward to hearing members on all sides of the House talk about the different approaches that we can take to address the situation and how, you know, the other side might do things differently. They had a plan to eliminate school fees entirely – and that's commendable – but we've yet to see any kind of plan on how that's going to happen, so perhaps they can enlighten us as to what they would have done differently.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I have to say to the member across the way, Banff-Cochrane, that one of the things you said was that our children are a good investment. Actually, they are the investment. I couldn't agree with you more. I believe with all my heart that "investment" doesn't even begin to explain the necessity to make sure that our children have the education that they need, that the teachers have the supports that they need, that we have these buildings to hold our children as they go to school. I one hundred per cent agree with what the member said.

I would also like to say that just because a person doesn't have children doesn't necessarily mean that they don't have an excellent opinion and a perception about what should happen with education in this province. We need all voices and all thoughts on this to make sure that we're able to move the dial on what needs to happen with education, and that means that there are going to be a lot of different voices at the table. It's very, very necessary.

Yesterday we saw some amazing, tremendous actually, collaboration between the government and the opposition on my colleague's Bill 202, regarding the nonconsensual pictures. That was just fantastic. Education is like that, too. It shouldn't be politicized. I think that's happened in the past. When it comes to our kids, I just think we need to get back to the basics of what it is that we're trying to accomplish here.

As you can probably tell and as I've said very, very vocally and publicly, I support this bill, so I'm hoping that that trend will continue today and in the future because I'd like to bring forward some questions regarding the bill, an Act to Reduce School Fees. Like I said, I've been extremely public about how glad I was to see this government following through with their election promise – even though it's not the full 50 per cent, it's a start – on mandatory school fees. Quite frankly, I mean, within the Wildrose we would love to see that go even further. As you know, we campaigned on that, to eliminate mandatory school fees altogether. That's one of our policies and one that we would intend to fulfill given the privilege of sitting where you are right now, as government, in the not-too-distant future.

As I said before, Bill 1 is a great start, and on behalf of Albertans – like all of us, I have the amazing opportunity to reach out and speak to people and get their feedback. So I'm hoping that some of the questions that I'm asking will stimulate these conversations to keep the momentum going on something that's a good start. The first question that I have is around the efficiencies that have been found. The Member for Banff-Cochrane was mentioning, you know, that you have to decide where your investments are going to be. We're talking about $54 million in efficiencies that have been found to fund the reduction in school fees. In light of an economic downturn and even with the green shoots of optimism that our Minister of Finance put forward, I would like to know and I'm sure Albertans would love to know: where have the efficiencies come from?

I think this is a great opportunity for the government to shed some light on that and share with all of us how that happened. As we all know, it's easy to say those words and hope that no one asks any questions on how you get from point A to point B, but I'm asking. I would love to understand where those efficiencies came from. It's a big chunk of change. So congratulations, but we'd love to understand it because as we go forward, a lot of this will shake out in the wash. There are other questions around that, too, as to how those dollars are going to be spent.

If we're looking at school boards – and the member previous, who spoke on this, talked about how school boards had done a pretty good job and that they need stable funding. The school boards are concerned that they might actually be tasked with finding these efficiencies. Are they going to be seeing funding reductions to other programs in order to compensate for this? This is a question that – I've received quite a few about that.

I have to say to the Minister of Education that I'm so happy to see a bill enacted that attempts to follow the government mandate of making life better for Albertans – it's great, and this shows that – and that, if enacted, will take the appropriate steps to reduce some costs for families. I just wish that the legislation, this reduction in school fees, could have its maximum impact at a time when families need it the most. Unfortunately, as we all know, this is just going to make a very small dent in that. So while the bill is a small step in the right direction, let's not pat ourselves on the back too quickly. Albertans have wanted, as you know – and the minister would know this – these reductions for a long, long time. Even though this is a small reduction, given the current economic situation we very much appreciate the effort to start the process.

Madam Chair, the Minister of Economic Development and Trade only yesterday was talking about the potential for growth in this province. In addition, the government loves to tell us over and over and over again about the two pipelines that they take credit for and how this will obviously bring much-needed prosperity to our province. But, I mean, we actually need to see this critical infrastructure get in the ground and get built. So let's make sure that that happens. We can talk about the two pipelines, but let's get that going first because, obviously, with increased prosperity and with the efficiencies that the government has miraculously found, the monies to fund the reductions in the school fees at this time, I would hope that with increased prosperity and increased efficiencies, we can expect additional reductions to the school fees in the near future.

I mean, I can only assume that the government found the $9 million to promote the climate leadership action plan. And the government is able to somehow find $2.3 billion to basically give away to big banks for debt servicing. The member that just spoke previously talked about other governments downloading onto the taxpayer. Well – hello? – welcome to the world of downloading. That's not acceptable. That could be anywhere from $3,500 and up for a family. Plus, the government chooses to lose billions of dollars through the PPA debacle. That is not acceptable either.

[Mr. Sucha in the chair]

I would love to see the monies to fully fund education and not have families needing to foot the bill through school fees. Mr. Chair, imagine for a moment what those billions of dollars would have meant to the education system. Alberta families have entrusted this government with their hard-earned dollars. This is a tremendous, tremendous amount of trust, and unfortunately we've seen the government lose the trust of the people who elected them. Teachers have contacted me with concerns that their classroom supports are going to be cut or that new supports will not be funded as a result of the efficiencies. We are already seeing a shortage of resources to meet a huge array of students' learning needs across the province, and we want to be sure that our students are not going to suffer.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

Other questions that I've heard include: is this reduction in school fees sustainable? Will school boards and parents be able to count on these lower fees for years to come? We have a start. It's getting going. We know that that's working. We know that this is happening. Are we going to be able to continue the process? It's one thing to start it right now, but are we going to be able to sustain that? More importantly, many, many people are concerned about what will be cut as a result of the reduced funding to these programs. This is again the question that comes. I would love to have some answers to these questions, to make sure that those reductions are coming through appropriately.

Another concern is that there's no clear definition of the basic instructional fees. So what we're wondering is if the fees associated with the future ready initiative such as fees related to learning outside of the classroom – field trips, technology, and a whole variety of the CTS courses and options – will be covered. If the government is committed to this idea of future ready and has a vision of preparing our students for the 21st century, these pieces of their education, I would assume, would be considered basic instructional fees and be partially refunded as well.

There have been a few other questions that have come through as well. Probably one of the biggest, one of the more prominent questions that has come through is the impact of the carbon tax on Albertans generally, of course, and on school boards specifically and how that will change the potential impact of the reduction in school fees. I've asked the question before. Was that taken into consideration in that 25 per cent? Is it considered a 25 per cent reduction in school fees when transportation is included in that? Is that technically the way that that breaks down? If we're talking about mandatory school fees, I think transportation is a different piece. Nevertheless, I would like to be able to assure Albertans that not only is it going to be sustainable but that the government has taken into consideration the fact that the carbon tax will have a direct impact on the amount of money that is going to actually impact the parents and the students.

While the government is using this bill to partially meet the promise to reduce mandatory school fees for parents, the government started this year by raising the cost of education in this province through the carbon tax. It will cost school boards tens of millions of dollars every single year, and that's money that will eventually come off the backs of parents and students. We estimate that when the carbon tax is fully implemented, at $50 per tonne, school boards could have an increase of nearly $30 million per year. And busing fees as well as the cost for heat and electricity for schools will continue to climb as a direct result of the carbon tax.

It seems that through this bill the government is trying to apply a bandage to a gaping wound. On one hand you're increasing taxes and, on the other hand, insufficiently paying parents back by reducing some of the school fees. It just doesn't make a dent compared to the damage that's already been caused by other policies. If you had not placed such an onerous tax on the school boards, that ultimately will fall to the families to cover, then the impact of this reduction in school fees may have provided significant supports to families, especially now.

We have questions about the transportation fees as well. How will the transportation change, and for whom? Given that transportation costs will be increasing as a result of the carbon tax, some of the questions we have fielded from school boards include: will there be a benefit to the boards that have reduced their transportation fees already? There are already school boards that take care of this. They've already found efficiencies within their own systems where they're able to cover the transportation fees. Will all boards benefit or just those that have significant cost overruns on their transportation budget, and how is that being determined?

What happens when a school of choice actually is the only option available to meet a specific set of student learning needs? Is that going to be considered, then, a designated school or not? How are we going to determine that? I imagine that will be in some of the regulations and decisions coming forward. Will parents still bear the transportation cost to meet their child's special learning needs? I realize that there are going to be some discussions coming up about special needs and transportation. I think these are very, very important discussions, but we need to understand the dollars and cents. We need to make sure and be able to provide some clarity for families going forward that they will actually have a say in this and actually be provided for appropriately. Madam Chair, these are just some of the questions that we have been hearing from Albertans in response to this bill.

I have one additional concern. There is little or no specific detail in the bill. The government is asking us to vote on this bill, yet all the consultations with stakeholders and developing the entire set of regulations, that will provide substance to this bill, will actually happen after the bill goes through the legislative process. This is a continual pattern with this government with legislation. We're voting on a piece of legislation, but we actually have no idea of the outcomes. I'm just not completely comfortable with that. I don't think Albertans are comfortable with that. I think it would be great if the government could offer some clarity on the direction that this is going. I mean, again, I support the bill, obviously, but there's a ton of space here that things could move in a direction that may not be helpful.

We have seen how the consultation process has not worked well for the government in the past 20 months or so. So while I would love to think that the government will engage in a robust conversation with education stakeholders, including parents, I'm not so confident that this authentic discussion will help to formulate the regulations. We need to make sure that the government is providing equity across the province with respect to either the transportation or the instructional fees.

On the positive side, this is a cost savings to Alberta, $54 million, starting the fall of 2017. These transportation changes will impact 140,000 children and their families, and the school fee changes will impact 590,000 children and their families.

I'm just hoping that the minister and the government are open to continued collaboration. I've heard that the door is open, so I fully intend to make use of that and to make sure that we continue to collaborate on this to make sure that the direction goes in a way that we can collaboratively go together and make sure that we're reaching out to all these families and school boards.

So while I still have questions and concerns, I do support this bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the hon. member for her questions. There were quite a few in there, you know, but I did write them down the first time, so I think that between the two we can have an exchange of information that helps to clarify Bill 1, An Act to Reduce School Fees, here in the province of Alberta. The title sort of really captures it very well. We're not eliminating school fees in the province of Alberta, but it's an act to reduce school fees and also to get a handle on the school fee landscape across the province.

For many years school boards were trying very hard to build their budgets and to deliver the high quality of education for which we have a very strong reputation across the country and around the world. But with the absence of long-term funding guarantees, the capacity to plan on long-term funding, school boards did what they could, and you ended up with this very uneven landscape of school fees across the province. So this is an act to reduce school fees, but really it's an act to rationalize the school fees situation here in the province of Alberta, too.

I mean, that's obviously going to be a process, and it's a process that I look forward to working on with everybody. It's a way, you know, not dissimilar to curriculum reform, where you open the doors and you allow people to give you the information of individual circumstances and individual schools and school boards and districts, and then we start to build something that's equitable and sustainable and actually has a meaningful reduction to the pocketbooks of Alberta families with children.

I believe that we have made a very, you know, significant stride here in difficult economic circumstances. Finding $54 million is not easy at the best of times, so this is a reach into basic instructional fees and a reach into some of the busing circumstances that we see in the province as well. I won't pretend that it is an all-inclusive sort of reach into either of those categories, but it's certainly, I think, a strategic way of doing so.

From the beginning I had always said that we were canvassing all of our school boards and looking for some things in common that we could reduce school fees on. Basic instructional fees: I mean, there are lots of definitions of that out there in the province, but we have, by collecting information, looked for some common grounds between the 61 school boards that we are targeting in this particular bill. Those definitions seem to be common.

Yes, there are quite wide variations in what people do charge in this category. I do recognize that, but part of the way by which we can sort of clean up the situation, as I've been saying, is by saying: okay; we're going to have a category of fees that we eliminate, and then over time, over the next number of years, we look for a better way to tackle it and perhaps a better way to fund as well over time. I mean, these will all be discussions that we'll have.

I'm just going to try some of these questions that the hon. member did put forward and see if I can answer them to her satisfaction. The first one: do all school boards benefit from this, or is it just some? All children with families in school in the 61 school boards will benefit as instructional supplies and material fees are charged by all boards. All boards with the exception of two will benefit as they charged fees in the reporting category that we used for the funding in the 2017-18 school year. We will have discussions with those other two boards to ensure that they have some flow of income for another initiative. Those two school boards in northern Alberta had made some provision to eliminate these instructional supply and material fees before, so we are doing so to make sure that they're not left out.

You know, of course, in the long-term, three-year plan we have put aside $45 million over the next two years for the school fee strategy, but we just felt as a caucus and as a government that we needed to get started on this sooner rather than later because, of course, it'll take a while to sort through many of these other categories of fees. Plus, for parents and guardians and people who are putting up the money every fall, it is onerous. I mean, you have circumstances where people are paying hundreds of dollars or, if you have two or three kids, even more, a thousand more dollars, to school fees in the fall, so we thought we could get going on this a year sooner than we had planned. I feel really good about that choice, and I think that we've hit a chord, judging from the comments from all members, that we probably have done the right thing at the right time.

There are about 15 boards that are charging a fee for eligible transported students, about 140,000 students altogether, so it's these boards who will receive some funding to offset this revenue. Again, this is a start. It's not like we're eliminating school bus fees, but it's looking at a category that seemed, Madam Chair, most obvious to both myself and our department and those that I explained it to. That is a category of students that are travelling by bus to their eligible school. Of course, when I thought of the basic principle of, you know, public education, we don't have barriers to that basic education. Well, I thought that instructional supply and materials are very basic, and getting to that school, if you need to take a bus with the 2.4 kilometre designation, again, is an obvious thing that you need to get to school to learn.

Using that measuring stick, I think we hit it looking for the most kids, 660,000 kids, with the instructional supply and materials and with the eligible bus category, which will positively affect about 140,000 kids, too. Again, it's a start. I think it's quite a clever start, and we will carry on with that in close discussion with the public, with school boards, parents, teachers, and here in the Assembly Chamber.

Another question I heard, just looking through here – oh, you had the one, of course, on the efficiencies to pay for the bill. Will we see ongoing costs to cover the bill? We review our programming every year to see how our funds are best allocated. As we said, this is about a $54 million savings for families. Now, it's important, Madam Chair, to always note that our education budget cycle is different from the government because we go September to September and the government goes March to March. So this year to pay for An Act to Reduce School Fees is a $31.5 million responsibility. From that source of funding we in Alberta Education found efficiencies to the amount of about $15 million, which include staff attrition and hiring restraints, a reduction in department travel and related costs, a reduction in supply costs, and review of existing grants and contracts with Education partners.

These reductions do not affect funding to school boards, so we are not passing those reductions on to school boards. This is very important information to repeat over and over again because there have been some people, I know, saying that this will be a cut to the classroom teachers and that they'll have to lay off people. That's not true, Madam Chair. We are making these reductions in Alberta Education through the Department of Education. It was not an easy process, but of course the results, as we can all see, everybody likes quite a lot.

We also have one grant reduction, and this is a $5.6 million grant reduction to the credit enrolment unit cap. For all of us who may not know what that was or what it is, it is the method by which we fund high school credits. Probably everybody here went to high school, I'm guessing. You have credits for high school courses: five credits and three credits and so forth. Some people spend many years in high school, as I heard someone point out. That's great. Good for you. Anyway, the current boards – the enrolment unit cap that people were having allowed high school students to take up to 60 credits per year, but we saw that the average, Madam Chair, was about 37. I believe I moved it to 45, so that amounted to a savings of $5.6 million in our annualized budget, that is a grant reduction.

Now, it should be noted, Madam Chair, that this reduction – there's also a phenomenon or an evolution of funding for high schools. High schools are moving away from the credits and to what we call high school redesign. It's been a very successful program. In fact, we've reached a point now where we have more high schools in high school redesign than we have using the strict credit system. So for all of those schools, you know, they don't see, really, a reduction at all, and then spread over the rest of the school system we see about a $5.6 million reduction there. It is a reduction in grants. I mean, I had to look very carefully at each of the grants that we do provide for annualized funding for schools, and I found that this would be a place where we could go. That's where we found that.

Then the other $10.9 million are from savings from other ministries and then reallocated to Education, so you see other efficiencies coming through from various ministries across the GOA. This is the means by which we could finance this through Treasury Board and direct it back to parents – right? – and to reduce school fees.

The future fiscal plan already allocates, Madam Chair, $45 million annually for the reduction of fees, but, you know, we will obviously work to find the rest on an ongoing basis, which is perhaps the answer to the second question in regard to: is this a one-time thing, or is it moving forward? Yes, it is the new normal for school fees here in the province of Alberta, and it's part of our initiative over time to further reduce school fees and to rationalize the system in general. We all know that school fees were too high – right? – and this will be an ongoing budget line in Education and across the government of Alberta. It's not something that just comes and goes and flashes in the pan, not at all. In fact, if anything, it's the signalling of working even more on school fees to reduce schools fees here in the province of Alberta.

I mean, that's great. That's good news for people with kids. You know, it's a responsibility that we have. At various times we have children going through school, and we all sort of pitch in together in order to make sure that our kids get the best education and that it's affordable. This downloading of school fees onto Alberta families over the last number of years – a decade, for sure; it's been quite marked, probably, for the last 20 years – the gradual increase in school fees have not been acceptable to the pocketbooks of Alberta families.

But I think, you know, in regard to ideology – right? – that we have public schools, and public schools are a place where regardless of your ability to pay, you get the very highest quality of education possible. I mean, I confess here now, Madam Chair, that I am ideological, and I believe that publicly funded education must be of the very highest quality in the province of Alberta and that all students will have access to that public education regardless of their ability to pay.

It sounds like not such a scary ideology, really. I mean, it's quite practical. I can see many beneficiaries of that ideology play out here, with the high quality of education and learnedness of our caucus and of members opposite as well.

An Hon. Member: Exhibit A.

Mr. Eggen: Yeah. Perhaps I'm exhibit A. I was in public school, of course, K to 12. There wasn't even a kindergarten when I went to school. There was just 1 to 12.

An Hon. Member: Dinosaurs.

Mr. Eggen: Yeah. We were fighting dinosaurs in the morning, and then – you know, that was kindergarten, I guess.

Anyway, let's stay on topic, shall we? The basic instructional fee. We defined it as including textbooks, workbooks, printing and paper costs, and so forth.

In regard to these other fees, you know, the member, obviously a fine product of public education as well, asked a very succinct question: what are we doing, then, with all of these future ready initiatives and dual credit programming and so forth? We are pushing in that direction, and we know that there's a definite benefit in that direction, but we do incur extra costs as a result. Yes, we will look at those things as we move forward, but it's not cheap, by any means.

I think that every time we weigh an individual fee, we have to look at, of course: is it essential to the instruction of that particular course and is it essential to the education of that person within the boundaries of what we consider public education as well? I mean, we don't want to build a school fee system that obstructs schools and school boards from charging some extra fees for services that parents might want to have for their kids like field trips or specialized sports programs and things like that. A good, balanced public education doesn't preclude those things from being offered, but I think we have to be very careful to not overstep people's expectations as to whether we pay for some of those fees as well.

Another question at the tip of many people's tongues – I think it came out a little bit wrong in the media for a little while there, and we corrected it, but let me correct it again – is that this is not eliminating lunchroom fees at this time either. An Act to Reduce School Fees does not cover lunchroom fees. I know that, again, there's lots of room for improvement in rationalizing lunchroom fees across the province. We have quite wide variations in what is charged for lunchroom fees. Some schools don't charge them at all, and some people charge a lot. You know, we need to obviously direct our attention to that as well, Madam Chair. But Bill 1, An Act to Reduce School Fees, here in the spring of 2017 does not address the school lunchroom fee situation, save to say that it does address the direction not in terms of reduction but of us making a proper analysis of those school fees and how they are charged, including lunchroom fees, around the province.

Other issues or questions that the hon. member asked. She asked about the carbon levy and its effect on school boards and families. I mean, it's all good fun to have numbers and throw them around, but I think we should be very careful with those things. You know, I've asked all of our school boards to give us an estimation of what that carbon line in their budgets will be, so we will put that information out. It will be their assessments; it won't be mine. As we get that, then let's use those numbers because – I won't even say the number you said, but . . .

Mrs. Aheer: Thirty million.

Mr. Eggen: Yeah. Right. Okay. It's not really that at all. I mean, we don't know. We'll see when it comes out through the system.

But part of the climate leadership initiative is to ensure that there's universality in the way that we attack this, and on a very practical level what better place for us to start on the education process – indeed, our own children probably could educate many of us on these issues better than the other way around – than in our schools, right? It's the perfect place for a climate leadership strategy to reside.

Also, of course, what better place to start to make practical reductions in the use of energy in the province of Alberta than in those public institutions where we pay those energy bills, right? Obviously, schools, with their lights and their heat and their buses and so forth: what a great place to aim that and to look for efficiencies and to reduce those bills, because we end up paying those bills anyway, right? We might as well use some of those funds to attack that. You know, you save money. I mean, I'm all for reducing GHGs and so forth, but I'm definitely for saving public monies and reducing the bills that school boards have to pay, so it's a good place for it to be.

Thanks.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Carson: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure to rise today to speak to Bill 1, An Act to Reduce School Fees. In 2015 our government campaigned on making life more affordable for families. Reducing school fees was an important part of that platform, and I'm happy to see, with Bill 1, that we are doing exactly that. By reducing instructional materials and busing fees, we will save Alberta households $54 million, which represents around a 25 per cent reduction in the overall cost of sending a child to school, which will affect about 600,000 students.

I can tell you, Madam Chair, that during the 2015 election I had the opportunity to meet with thousands of constituents in Edmonton-Meadowlark. Since then I have met with thousands more – on their doorsteps, in their homes, at local events – to hear more about their priorities, and I can tell you that the majority of them are and have been for a very long time concerned with the rising cost of school fees.

Madam Chair, though I don't have any children myself yet, I know first-hand the impact that school fees have on families in our community. I was raised by a single mother until about the age of 10, and I will add that she was very, very young. To put it into perspective for the House, she turned 40 this year. I know she made a lot of sacrifices along the way to give me a good quality of life, but there were many times when she had to make tough decisions when it came to budgeting, especially as she put herself through university as I went through the K to 12 education system.

When we talk about reducing the cost of education for Alberta families, we need to remember the incredibly diverse circumstances that families in our province face. Consider the cost to a new Canadian, a single mother or father, a parent with disabilities, the caregiver of a child with disabilities, or a large family that has struggled through the economic downturn. Each story is different, but the importance of ensuring our kids are in those classrooms stays the same.

Of course, Bill 1 is not the first initiative put forward by the government to make life easier for Albertans when it comes to education. We've seen pilot projects for school nutrition programs roll out. We've seen tuition freezes for three years in a row now and a commitment to do it again next year thanks to our government. Most importantly, we saw stable funding for population growth across our province. Though these initiatives might not sound like front-page news to the Assembly, I have seen the impact that they have had on my community.

When a constituent comes through my office concerned about the supports that they are getting in the classroom, I can't help but imagine how much worse it may have been under our social conservative opposition parties. We heard the Member for Calgary-Hays stand up in this Legislature and tell us that we are not doing enough, that in two years of our mandate this government has not done enough. Well, Madam Chair, where was he over the last many decades when our infrastructure for our classrooms was crumbling and the cost of inflation on our students and our families continued to rise? I didn't hear them complaining then. He was in this government making those decisions. We heard their stance during the last election, Madam Chair: cut front-line staff, support market modifiers for postsecondary students, increase something like 57 taxes, including a health care levy that would go into general revenue.

The fact is that it looks like someone on that side of the House might be stepping down to force a by-election, which will cost our system upwards of hundreds of thousands of dollars – that is money taken away from our classrooms, Madam Chair – not to mention that the opposition parties are hoping to replace one of their members with an ex-MP who also stepped down, forcing a by-election. After that happens, they will merge and ride into the sunset. I look forward to it.

My point here, Madam Chair, is that while the opposition fights over who is the natural-born leader of our province to lead their united social conservative party into the sunset, we as a government, as a social democratic government, are moving to make life better for Albertans. Since the introduction of this bill I've been having discussions with families in Edmonton-Meadowlark and across this province, and I've heard some of them talking that they may save upwards of $1,000 per year, depending on the size of their family. I am very proud of our Education minister moving to make these changes, among many other changes that we've seen so far, and of the conversations that will continue into the future about making life more affordable for Albertans. I just would like to thank him for bringing this legislation forward, thank my colleagues for the continued discussions that we have about making life more affordable for Albertans.

I stand here to support Bill 1, and I would encourage all of my colleagues to do so as well.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Connolly: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. To start, the minister talked briefly about credits, and most people will receive about 35 credits per year. Myself, because I was in drama and band and French immersion, I usually received approximately 51 credits, the one extra credit being from psychology because that's three credits per term, which adds up to six credits. I would actually be kind of depressed that I wouldn't be getting those extra six credits. However, I understand the need to find good places where we can reserve money so we can do things like Bill 1.

Now, I am very proud of Bill 1. Bill 1 is great for teachers, and it's great for students, and it's fantastic for all the parents who live in my riding as well. When I was running for election, I heard from many families asking me . . . [interjections] I know there's a lot of noise coming from the other side, but I'll try to speak a bit louder while they try to have their little side conversations.

I was very proud to stand on the doorsteps and talk to families in my constituency of Calgary-Hawkwood about reducing school fees. That was top of mind for many parents, young parents in my riding who have always had trouble paying those bills.

To be quite honest, my family could have greatly benefited from having a reduction in school fees. In 1996 – I'm going to date myself – I was two years old, and my parents got divorced. I see the Clerk just holding his head in his hands. I know. I am fairly young. However, in 1996 my parents did get divorced. For me, I didn't notice. I was two years old. I was going to preschool at the time. I have two older siblings, who were both going to school. For my mom, who was a teacher who recently separated – and her mother, my grandmother, died later that year – it was very difficult to pay those school fees.

As a teacher my mom took a large pay cut because of the cuts by Ralph Klein. Because of those cuts, she was worried about putting food on the table. She was worried about clothing us and feeding us and then had these school fees right in September, when all of us were trying to go to school. I didn't know any different because, again: two. My sister was telling me that it was very emotional. She remembers my mother crying, trying to figure out how she was going to pay these school fees, how she was going to feed and clothe us while trying to go through a divorce. That's an incredible hardship to go through.

As a teacher she felt she needed to pay those school fees. She felt like if she signed the form saying that she couldn't afford those school fees, it was going to reflect poorly on her and therefore reflect poorly on Alberta Education. She didn't want to do that even though it would have greatly helped us. I wouldn't say that she was too proud to do it, but in the long run she was probably embarrassed because she didn't want to do that. She didn't want what the opposition calls a handout even though it's not a handout. It's more of a hand up. Those school fees are very burdensome. They are very difficult to pay. That's why I'm so proud of Bill 1, which will finally reduce school fees at least 25 per cent for the majority of Albertans.

[Mr. Sucha in the chair]

Being a public servant and going to schools with kids who are in classrooms of over 40 kids – when I was in high school, in my English class, if every child showed up, there weren't enough chairs. Somebody had to either stand or sit on the ground, and that was directly because of the cuts from the previous government. That was directly from the cuts from the '90s and early 2000s that they put in place, cutting salaries of teachers, and then, on top of that, cutting resources for schools, cutting resources for hospitals and nurses. Almost every public service in this province took a cut just because they wanted to balance the budget for no other reason than to be able to hold up a sign that said: we balanced the budget. Balancing the budget means nothing if you have crumbling infrastructure, if you have crumbling schools, and if your classrooms are too large to even be able to teach all the children that are in those schools.

I am so proud to be part of a government that is careful about schools, that is making sure that all schools are funded equally, making sure that all schools are funded properly, making sure that hospitals are not crumbling, making sure we're not destroying hospitals. That's also another important thing, destroying things that we desperately need. I don't see why there was a reason to destroy the Calgary General hospital. It's a little bit off topic. Sorry. I'm just kind of going off. But destroying the Calgary General hospital is kind of a giant metaphor for what the Klein government did to my family and to many Albertans.

That's something I never want to see in this province again. I ran to make sure that Alberta Education was fully funded; to make sure that when children go to school, they feel safe and cared for; to make sure that teachers feel respected by their government; and to make sure that teachers have enough resources to teach students. These aren't people that go to work just for an extra paycheque.

They go to work because they care about the students. They go to work because they really want to make this province a better place, and that was the way they could do it. Cutting teachers, cutting resources for schools: that is something that I will never want to do as an MLA, and I never plan on doing that as an MLA.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

Now, the previous government had a huge culture of disrespecting students and teachers. I remember that back when I was in high school, Madam Chair, I received a letter from the then Education minister, which was Thomas Lukaszuk, and he sent this to every student in the province. It said: if you have any ideas on how to improve Alberta Education, on how to help us move forward, please send them; either e-mail us or phone us or tweet us, and we'd be happy to receive those ideas. Then I, being a budding grade 11 or 12 student – I don't know exactly which year it was now – decided to tweet then Minister Lukaszuk and tell him exactly what I thought would be great for Alberta Education. [interjection] I know the Member for Calgary-Lougheed just yelled out "names." However, because he is a previous member, not a current member, I'm allowed to use his name.

I received that letter from Minister Lukaszuk and sent out about five tweets saying what we needed to do to improve Alberta Education. I put things like repeal Bill 44, which made it a human rights violation for teachers to talk about sexual orientation, sexuality, or religion in the classrooms without having written permission from a parent, which, really, was homophobic and discriminatory against LGBTQ-plus Albertans. On top of that, I said to add resources for schools, to build more schools so that when I went to school, I didn't have to sit in a classroom with 40 other kids, with people sitting on the floor. And then I said a bunch of other things.

Then he replied to me: that was a large number of tweets; did you save time for homework? It just showed how that government did not care about students and did not actually care about the ideas of youth. He was politically posturing, saying, "We care about education; we care about what you have to say," but in reality he just wanted to send a letter to say that he's the Minister of Education. I could not stand that, and that is why I ran in politics.

I ran in politics so that I could put bills forward like Bill 1, support Bill 1 because that is what we need in this province. We need more things like Bill 1. We need to help parents. We need to help teachers and nurses and students and all Albertans, help them have a real education, whether it be advanced education or K to 12 education. It's very important that we actually put these bills forward, that we give a hand up to these parents, and make sure that these students and these schools are not treated the same way that they were treated by the previous government.

Thank you, Madam Chair. I'll have my seat now.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just wanted to clarify a couple of things for the previous speaker from Calgary-Hawkwood, talking about the credits grant reduction. This was the only grant reduction that we did utilize in Education to pay for this Bill 1. It's a reduction of credits. Currently school boards could account for one student getting 60 credits in a year, so we've reduced it to 45, okay? The average I saw across the province, including summer school, was 37, so I thought 45 was still pretty good because I know myself as a teacher that it's pretty rare for students to achieve that many credits. You can be taking some extraordinary programming, which can help. Sometimes people take summer school, and that tops it up, but with 45 I still think we can probably cover it off in a reasonable way. So I just wanted to clarify that.

Also, you know, when we were talking about specific questions about funding and buses, I had a question in regard to transportation service obligations – right? – so school boards that might choose to use municipal transit as their mode of transportation. It does not change the definition of eligible students, taking your school of choice that might be further away, but that is not covered by this, Madam Chair. I know that this is a bit of a sensitive topic, but again we're working within the parameters of a certain expenditure, a not insignificant expenditure of about $54 million. But if you start to sort of branch that circle out, let's say, for people picking a school of choice – let's say that you're going across town to take German immersion or something like that – then, no, that is not covered under this bill. Again, we need to have clarity on that.

I know that there's lots of room for us to carry on with building more school fee reform, but that's where we're at now. I think we've taken a good stab at it. It doesn't cover all busing. It doesn't cover all school fees. But, then, that would have been quite a bit more money, and I think we all know that that's not something in large supply at this juncture for the government of Alberta and for parents, too, for that matter.

I just wanted to try to clarify those two pieces, and I certainly welcome more specific questions. You know, in a way Committee of the Whole is one of the best parts of the legislative process because you can have a discussion with people, and you can also sit in different chairs, so that gives you a different angle on our jobs as well.

Thank you, Madam Chair, for that, and I . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, I hesitate to interrupt, but pursuant to Standing Order 4(3) I must now ask the committee to rise and report Bill 3 with some amendments and report progress on Bill 1.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill with some amendments: Bill 3. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 1. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Does the Assembly concur in this report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: All those opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. With a view to the hour and the wonderful progress that has been made this afternoon, I would move that we advance the clock to 6 o'clock – this is not daylight savings time; I'm just saying – and adjourn until 1:30 tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:57 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

If everyone would just bow their heads and reflect or pray, each in your own way. Hon. members, in light of the tragic events unfolding as we speak at the House of Commons in London, U.K., let us take a moment to recognize the bravery and the diligence of the first responders and public servants as well as to offer our deepest sympathies to all those who have and will continue to be affected by this terrible incident. Let us in this Legislative Assembly never forget that it is the first responders who are on the front lines and who risk their lives so that we can exercise our right to speak freely in this Chamber and in this precinct.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly grade 6 students from the Covenant Canadian Reformed School. The students are accompanied by their teacher, Corlisa Pietersma, and chaperones Leo Knol, Judith Dejong, Mona Jissink, Marion Schepers, Michelle Peters, Jessica Peters, Gloria Werkman, and Karen Breukelman. I'm honoured to have them all watching question period here today and delighted that the students are learning more about the Legislature and about how democracy works. I would ask them all to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you students from John A. McDougall school here in Edmonton-Centre. The students are accompanied by their teachers Mr. Evan S. Asmussen, Ms Veronica Chong, and Ms Silvia Choe. I'd invite them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other school groups today?

Seeing and hearing none, the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you April and Chris MacKinnon from the wonderful constituency of Edmonton-Castle Downs. April is a student of the government of Canada program at Algonquin College. She is joined today by her husband, Master Warrant Officer Chris MacKinnon, ETQMS, of the second battalion, PPCLI, based out of Manitoba. He has dedicated 23 years to the Canadian Forces. As a provincial government liaison to the Canadian Forces I want to thank you both for your dedication and service. I would now ask my guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like everyone to give a warm welcome to a very familiar face who certainly attends our gallery, Mr. Les Landry and his wonderful service dog Annie. They are absolutely wonderful examples of passion and dedication in advocacy. Mr. Landry is the president of Respect the Service Dog, an organization raising awareness of service dogs in Alberta, and Annie is a dedicated companion. Mr. Landry is certainly a credit to the perseverance and remarkable attitude of an Alberta advocate. Thank you, Mr. Landry.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you one of my very important constituents, Page Moniz. She is also my constituency assistant and has spent tireless hours helping to organize our Working in Your Community job fair as well as ensuring that all the constituents in Edmonton-Manning are feeling heard and have the information that they need. I would just ask that she please rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Avery Anna Roberge-Eadie and Andriy Krugliak. Last November two of our pages, Avery and Andriy, and I had the opportunity to go to Victoria for the eighth Commonwealth Youth Parliament. I will be speaking about this more in my member's statement later. I just had the incredible privilege of being there to witness them in the B.C. Legislature. I would ask that my guests please rise, stand, and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all in this Assembly a friend of mine. One of the absolute joys for those of us that are beginning to show our years is the joy of long friendships. Mr. Bill Parsons and I have known each other since junior high. We have played together as kids, we've prayed together in church, we've attended the same university, we've led the same youth groups, we've attended each other's weddings, and we've helped raise each other's children. That is the value of long friendship. It makes me happy today to ask Bill to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly the reeve and councillors of the MD of Taber, home of the best corn in the world: Brian Brewin, Tom Machacek, Merrill Harris, Bob Wallace, Dwight Tolton. And the staff: Jack Dunsmore, Craig Pittman, and Jeremy Wickson. If you could rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there any other guests today, hon. members? The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Yeah. Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Today I have 35 NAIT television and film arts students. They are here together with their instructor, Lamya Asiff. They are here to see the proceedings today, and I hope we can all give them a warm, traditional legislative welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly today a friend of mine and a constituent from Grande Prairie-Wapiti, a lifelong farmer and agricultural producer who in past years has served on the Northern Alberta Development Council, Andre Harpe. I think his term is up, and I believe he's in town for his last supper tonight with NADC. If he can stand and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce three outstanding folks from the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. They are fine public servants, that serve their constituents well. I see Rolly Ashdown in the gallery as well as Greg Boehlke and, I believe, Richard Barss. If they would rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Crime Prevention

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are losing their sense of security. As this downturn continues, we're hearing more and more heartbreaking stories of crime, especially in rural communities. In Cold Lake vehicle thefts soared by 80 per cent last year. Grande Prairie was just named the most dangerous city in the country by Stats Canada. In Amisk, a village of just a few hundred people, the ATB was robbed twice in one week. In Airdrie our local CIBC was recently robbed as well, and in Red Deer a carjacking left an innocent man dead. Every day it's something new. The downturn has brought with it a disturbing rise in crime. In the most recent crime severity index Alberta reported an 18 per cent increase, the most of any province.

To make matters worse, victims are watching in disbelief as this government stays trials for those accused of everything from sexual assault to murder. Today on behalf of those victims and their families the Wildrose caucus has launched the Alberta Crime Task Force, saying: enough is enough. The task force will travel around the province, speak directly with Albertans affected by crime, and supply a report complete with recommendations on how best to tackle this crisis. We are also making a survey available online at crimetaskforce.ca so all Albertans can have their voices heard.

Albertans know the justice system is failing them. The government's plan to triage violent crimes is reckless, and Albertans reject it. But as this issue affects all of our constituents, I believe there is room for all of us to work together and find solutions. Recently we saw this government follow a recommendation from the opposition and commit to adding more court resources. This task force will provide a series of new recommendations to this government, recommendations that come straight from Albertans. I hope this government takes those recommendations seriously and takes this opportunity to help us keep Albertans safe.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Response to Anti-Muslim and Anti-Semitic Incidents

Connolly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Sunday I had the pleasure of attending the Al-Salam Centre's first Visit Our Mosque event, organized by the Muslim Association of Canada's Calgary chapter. The Al-Salam Centre opened their doors to their new space just about 100 paces from my office in Ranchlands in September, and I can't tell you how proud I am to have this new space in my constituency. It was wonderful to see so many people from our community and across Calgary come out and show their support, learn more about the Muslim faith, and take part in prayer. Visit Our Mosque events are an important show of solidarity for the Muslim community in the face of Islamophobia.

Unfortunately, earlier this month somebody in Ranchlands spread anti-Muslim and anti-Semitic graffiti in one of our parks. When I spoke at the mosque, I reiterated what had been said to me over and over again by members of our community, that these actions do not represent the people of Ranchlands. Those small-minded and bigoted people who carried out these attacks on the Muslim and Jewish communities do not represent those who live in Ranchlands, and our community will not stand for it.

We have seen an increase in attacks on the Muslim and Jewish communities in these past few months and years. It's the job of every single Albertan, both here in the Legislature and outside, to stop this hate from spreading. When we see graffiti, we must erase it; when we hear Islamophobic or anti-Semitic discourse, we must confront it; and when we see our friends and neighbours being attacked for their race or beliefs, we must protect and support them.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Parliamentary Debate

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The role we play as legislators is an important one. We're the direct conduit for the people we represent into this House. We champion their voices and their concerns, and we should be doing that with great humility. Our constituents' voices should not be reduced to a headline or a hash tag. We should treat their voices with reverence and respect because each voice is a child in need, a mother out of work, a father who can't make ends meet, a grandparent receiving palliative care.

Mr. Speaker, as we debate in this House, the best way to validate those voices is with solutions and answers. We would be wise to stop the semantics and the grandstanding because they are watching. The mother out of work doesn't care what the party name is. The father who can't make ends meet is focused on food on the table today, not what happened in the last 44 years. The child in need will recoil from the yelling that often takes place in this House and will more likely respond to a thoughtful, respectful dialogue and a tempered tongue. The grandparent in palliative care recognizes wisdom and compassion, not hyped-up rhetoric.

I'm not preaching to others, Mr. Speaker. These are the thoughts I put to myself each and every day as I prepare myself to go to work. I can only control what I say and what I do. To quote a friend, a young man wise beyond his years, Manmeet Bhullar: be better.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I will continue to come to this House with an open heart and an open mind, seeking knowledge which, hopefully, gains me the wisdom to best serve Albertans.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Commonwealth Youth Parliament

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This last November I had the incredible opportunity of attending the eighth Commonwealth Youth Parliament, held in Victoria, British Columbia, as a Canadian delegate representing Alberta's Legislature alongside Avery Anna Roberge-Eadie and Andriy Krugliak. Under the watchful eye of Speaker Linda Reid 67 youth from across the world divided into government and opposition parties, where each was required to defend their own positions on issues just like those here at home: climate change, natural resource development, trade policy, and the issue of private versus public delivery of services. At times, partly due to my own encouragement of desk pounding and a bit of heckling, it sounded a bit like home, too.

As a mentor to the youth in the opposition caucus alongside B.C. MLA Jodie Wickens and New South Wales MP Adam Marshall we assisted in speech writing, House business, and debate, teaching our young parliamentarians how to tell their own stories but, most importantly, how to tell the stories of others.

My heart burst, though, Mr. Speaker, when I witnessed our own Avery and Andriy each stand in the B.C. Legislature and share stories of Alberta. They told B.C. and the world about our incredible landscape of mountains, lakes, and great plains; about our resource-driven and dependent economy; our shared values of hard work; and our continued history of progressive social policy, being one of the first provinces where women won the right to vote and recently protecting gender identity and gender expression as human rights. Andriy and Avery are the new face of politics.

Secretary-General Akbar Khan of the Parliamentary Association shared a few words worth repeating, that democracy demands active and involved citizens of all ages taking action to make societies a better place, that young people are increasingly active on political issues that affect them, and how Parliaments must adapt to be more accessible and transparent to all citizens, including actively engaging young people.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

LED Light Bulbs and Energy Efficiency

Mr. Hinkley: Mr. Speaker, in this Assembly the poor light bulb has become a symbol for criticism. Well, let me try to illuminate some things for the opposition.

Contrary to this belief, the lowly light-emitting diode may be one of the bright ideas of the future. It is actually a compliment because it is an example of a superior idea, modern technology, cost savings, durability, and excellent performance. This technology is going to put money right back into the pockets of Alberta families. The LED bulbs can be six to seven times more energy efficient than conventional, incandescent lights. Unlike incandescent light bulbs, which release 90 per cent of their energy as heat, the LEDs use energy far more efficiently. LEDs can be used in a wide range of applications because of their unique characteristics: compact size, ease of maintenance, resistance to breakage, and the ability to focus the light in a single direction.

Mr. Speaker, this government's energy efficiency program is about helping families in Alberta save money at the end of the month. If the average Alberta family takes advantage of this program, they will save $112 on their power bill. This government has also made it easier for families and businesses to install solar panels, and we will move forward with the energy efficiency report's recommendations on programs like helping Albertans buy more efficient and energy-saving appliances.

Meanwhile, the opposition wants to remove our electricity rate cap, so families will go back to the days of price spikes and volatile power bills. We are going to keep moving forward to help families save money.

It's not just light bulbs. This government is going to help families identify opportunities to lower their bills by installing efficient faucets, efficient power bars, and programmable thermostats. Over 70,000 Alberta families are voting with their online clicks. This government is making life more affordable for Albertans.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Public Service Compensation

Mr. Jean: If the NDP doesn't change course soon, Alberta will have the highest debt in all of western Canada. It means more credit downgrades, higher interest rates for government borrowing, more tax hikes, of course, for Alberta families, and all that puts the sustainability of core programs at risk for Albertans. Alberta simply must get control of the cost of salaries across every sector of government. Telling the public sector that they're not getting a wage increase right now isn't unreasonable. It's actually common sense. We need to freeze spending now. Why won't the Premier and her cabinet just admit it?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, we are committed to working with our colleagues in the public service in a respectful way, that respects the contract they have, that respects labour legislation, and, quite frankly, that respects the demands of the Supreme Court of Canada. Grandstanding like the member opposite wants to do is only actually going to end up costing taxpayers more. That isn't good because, as you've probably heard, our government is committed to making life more affordable for Albertans, not less; and we're committed to making life better for Albertans, not worse. That's why we're on this side of the House.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, Alberta has some of the best public-sector workers in the world. They know and understand that when 80,000 full-time jobs in Alberta have disappeared in the private sector, when our finances have fallen off a cliff, we can't afford to pay for a raise. They get that. Saskatchewan is asking for a pay cut, and now Manitoba has just introduced legislation for a wage freeze. Meanwhile this NDP government is planning to spend billions and billions more for each of the next three years. It's ridiculous. Going deeper into debt and deficit now for public-sector raises simply jeopardizes the sustainability of the public sector in the very near future.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that the member opposite is far more interested in doing things like giving $600 million in tax giveaways to the folks in Alberta who are struggling to make ends meet on $300,000 a year; however, that's not our focus. When it comes to dealing with the public servants, who work very hard for the people of Alberta, we will deal with them with respect. Bargaining is commencing. We will engage with them at the bargaining table, which is exactly the right place for us to do that.

Mr. Jean: While life in government has never been so good, times have never been as tough as they are today out in the real world. Mr. Speaker, Enbridge today announced they were shedding another thousand jobs. Job losses, massive wage cuts, tax hikes, hours cut, businesses in Alberta are closing their doors, and the price of everything is going up under the NDP carbon tax. There's no more money left. This is about protecting the front lines for years to come for Alberta families. Will the Premier ensure that Albertans are not paying for further public-sector wage increases, and if not, why not?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, I think the member opposite really has to stop with the fearmongering. As I'm sure he knows, the vast majority of the jobs that he's referring to from Enbridge are actually being cut in Texas, not in Alberta, and it is not helpful to try and scare Albertans with that kind of misinformation. Albertans deserve better from their public officials on these kinds of issues.

Mr. Speaker, we are committed to engaging in a respectful way with our public servants. The member opposite knows full well that management salaries have been frozen, that grid increases have been frozen, and that, unlike his BFF over there, we also significantly brought down the outrageous corporate CEO ...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
Second main question.

Energy Efficiency Rebate Program Contract

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, I've been accused of fearmongering before, and that's not what is happening here. But I will tell you that other people are talking about it, too. Rating agencies, chambers of commerce, and Albertans in general know this NDP budget is a disaster. It increases taxes, increases debt, and has no path to balance and provides no hope whatsoever of sustainable provincial finances. They're literally spending billions of dollars to destroy Alberta jobs. They've shut our coal industry down, and now they're threatening homegrown energy efficiency businesses with their ridiculous deal to have an Ontario company give away free light bulbs. Why is the Premier spending so much money to destroy Alberta businesses?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Notley: Well, again with the fearmongering, Mr. Speaker, and the member opposite not taking the time to get the facts; for instance, on the issue of the successful applicant to work with our energy efficiency program, the Alberta bids on that particular program were three times that of the successful bidder. You don't need to have a game show to figure out what's in the best interest of Albertans. You don't need a Dragon's Den. You just make the right choice, and that's what we did.

Mr. Jean: The government has decided they should just cut the knees of everybody who is already in energy efficiency practices in Alberta. End quote. That's the CEO of AIM Energy Pros, David Gray. The NDP are destroying his business model, and he's not alone. It's obvious that this particular deal was a sweetheart contract for an Ontario company, and the NDP keeps promising that there's no cap to this boondoggle. We don't even know how bad it could get, Mr. Speaker. Will the Premier release the request for proposal specifically designed for Ontario Ecofitt, and if she won't, why won't she show Albertans?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, thank you to the member opposite for the opportunity to reinforce the answer I just gave in my last question. The matter is public. The Alberta bids were three times that of the successful bidder. That, to me, is a good decision on the part of Alberta taxpayers. Moreover, that Ontario company has announced that it's going to move its western Canada headquarters to Alberta and that it will be moving forward to hire Albertans, and it will do so at less cost to taxpayers than the other bids. It makes good sense, and I don't understand what the member opposite is opposed to.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, this is NDP policy: spend money to destroy Alberta jobs. If they've got nothing to hide, show Albertans.

Here's an idea as well, Mr. Speaker. Instead of taking people's money to help Ontario businesses, how about keeping the money in people's pockets in the first place? What about that? The fact is that the Premier is taxing Alberta families by billions of new dollars so she can ask an Ontario company to install light bulbs in people's homes here in Alberta. How on earth does she expect any local businesses to survive when she's subsidizing an Ontario company to install free light bulbs for Albertans? Ridiculous.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think I've answered that question not once but twice, but what I will say once again is that our government is committed to affordability for Albertans. Unlike the members opposite we are focused on reducing school fees, we are focused on freezing tuition, we are focused on capping electricity rates, and we are focused on helping Albertans reduce their electricity costs by finding more efficiencies. All of this makes life better for Albertans: exactly what we promised we would do.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Alberta Hospital Edmonton

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I asked the Minister of Health why she is closing down beds at Alberta Hospital Edmonton. She replied, "The assertion that was made by the member opposite is absolutely inconsistent with the facts." Yet I have documents outlining the planned closure and a request from the physicians and multidisciplinary teams for the minister to engage in meaningful dialogue with them before taking this recklessly misguided step. Is the minister closing these ALC beds? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll be happy to table Hansard for the member opposite. He made all sorts of assertions that this was something that I was doing, that I was kicking people onto the streets. Nothing could be further from the truth. We are making sure that these people who are in these facilities have opportunities to be transitioned into both the community as well as the Royal Alex hospital downtown. We are absolutely open to meeting with the staff if requested and with others to make sure that the space and the beds that are there at Alberta Hospital Edmonton will be there for the long term to serve the people of Alberta.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Health minister said yesterday that she works "with experts each and every day" to ensure that "Albertans have access to the right care in the right place at the right time,” but she won’t explain why a decision to move such an important mental health facility to an emergency ward was made without consultation with experts. The psychiatrists say that she has not consulted with them and that this decision is part of a disastrous trend of dismantling Alberta Hospital Edmonton. Why is the minister ignoring the front-line experts?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I understand that they have concerns because under 44 years of Conservative reign in this province there was no support for Alberta Hospital Edmonton and regularly it was attacked. But I have to tell you that as long as there’s an NDP government . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Hold the clock.

Keep it down.

Start the clock again.

Continue.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As long as there’s an NDP government in Alberta, there will be Alberta Hospital Edmonton, and we are making sure that we support Alberta Hospital Edmonton, support community options, and support the Royal Alex hospital. That’s why we’re expanding services in this province, not making drastic cuts like the members opposite keep asking us to.

The Speaker: Second supplemental. [interjections]

Hold it down.

2:00

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that there has been an erosion of trust between physicians and AHS management and given that physicians claim to fear retribution from AHS, including anxiety around contract renewals that they advocate for patients, and since a student was publicly reprimanded by a member of AHS management for voicing their concerns, will this minister lead by example and improve the work climate at AHS?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I can’t help but point out some of the irony between this first set of questions and their questions now. They’re asking us to treat public servants with respect. We want to treat them with respect. That’s why we are offering opportunities to meet in person. That’s why we sit down at the table and have respectful negotiations and dialogue. I am more than happy to. I meet with doctors across this province every day, and I am honoured to continue that. Absolutely, members of the health profession have every right and responsibility to be advocating for their patients.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Economic Indicators

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When this NDP government came into office, the debt-to-GDP ratio was an enviable 3.2 per cent, but even before the next election it will be 19.5 per cent, worse than B.C. and Saskatchewan, and further increasing at a rate of 4 per cent per year. At the rate this government is going, Alberta’s ratio will be the worst in Canada within one decade. So to the Minister of Finance: do you really think it’s a good idea to be boasting about such a massive failure?

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much for the question. Mr. Speaker, you know, nothing could be further from the truth, of course. This year it will be 13.4 per cent; 13.4 per cent at the end of this term is right in the low part of all provinces. All provinces far outstrip us in terms of debt to GDP. We’ll continue to have great fundamentals in this province. We’ll continue to have low taxes in this province all because this side of the House cares about making life more affordable for Albertans everywhere.

Mr. Rodney: Even after the incredible damage that this government has wreaked on the Alberta economy and way of life, the NDP are fond of boasting about Alberta’s projected economic growth of 2.4 per cent for 2017, which, by the way, is a far cry from Alberta continuously leading the country prior to the NDP taking office. We had growth rates of 3.9 per cent in both 2012, 2013 and 4 per cent in 2014. While the NDP has been in government, the economic growth rate has been negative 4 per cent in 2015, negative 2.4 per cent in 2016. The constriction of the Alberta economy is the opposite of a success, so again to the Minister of Finance: is it a good idea to be boasting about this?

Mr. Ceci: Has the hon. member not been part of life for the last two years? Do you not know that we’ve had a recession in this province? We didn’t cause that recession; world oil prices caused that recession. This year we’re going to lead the country in GDP growth at 2.6 per cent. Alberta is coming back, Mr. Speaker. They’re just in a fantasy, thinking that we on this side caused it. That’s not true.

Mr. Rodney: Back to reality. It’s called making a bad situation worse.

The Finance minister also regularly boasts about the NDP’s so-called job-creation strategy, but the facts tell a completely different story. Alberta’s unemployment rate, Mr. Speaker, over the two years with the NDP government has been 6 per cent in 2015, 8 per cent in 2016, and a forecast of 8.4 per cent for 2017, and this is with 6,000 new FTEs created in government during that time. For the years prior the unemployment rate was 4.6 per cent in 2012, 4.7 per cent in both 2013 and 2014. To the Minister of Finance: do you really think it is such a great idea to be boasting about this other massive failure?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Ceci: You know, Mr. Speaker, I will get up each and every time and proclaim how good Alberta is. I will get up and stand up for this province. That side seems to think that if they talk about the negative things going on, somehow we’re going to fold our tent and go away. We’re not. We’re going to stand up for Alberta, for Alberta jobs, for Alberta people.

The Speaker: Calgary-Mountain View.

Mental Health Patient Advocate

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Monday I raised concerns about how each year the Mental Health Patient Advocate office’s work increases but the resources do not. The 2015-16 annual report yesterday revealed a significant increase in caseload, yet it was only able to initiate one formal investigation in all of last year. Same staff count as 1990. The associate minister recognized the importance of the Mental Health Patient Advocate’s role but pointed out that funding in Budget 2017 will stay the same. Why isn’t the minister backing up her words with action?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the hon. member for the question. As we discussed on Monday, the Mental Health Patient Advocate is a very important position, and we are actively recruiting to fill that role. We also need to make sure that we're improving access to mental health supports for Albertans so that we can help diminish some of that caseload work by making sure that we've got services available to Albertans when and where they need them. I am proud to say that Budget 2017 is delivering on that promise.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, this is about funding for the mental health advocate.

The commitment to new funding to implement the mental health review is promising. Unfortunately, it doesn't address the Mental Health Patient Advocate's inability to do formal investigations for people calling for help. Since 1990 the number of people has tripled, the number of issues has quadrupled, and investigations continue to take more time due to complexity. Why is the government allowing this situation to continue by not properly resourcing the advocate's office?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. As I said, we are very proud of the work that the mental health advocate has been able to do on behalf of Albertans, and we will continue to support that role and that office. We are also ensuring that we are able to expand access to services, working in the community and with mental health practitioners both inside and outside of Alberta Health Services as well as partners within the community. That is one way that we're working to make life better for Albertans.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, we're not talking about Albertans in this case. We're talking about a mental health advocate that has no resources to do her job.

One of the most interesting items in the 2015-16 annual report is the fact that the mental health advocate's office did not use its entire budget last year. It seems odd given the advocate's 2015 remarks that there was a critical lack of resources. I understand that approval is required to fill vacant positions and get additional staff even if the funds are available. To the minister: did the government impose last year a hiring and spending restraint on the advocate's office, and if so, why?

The Speaker: The associate minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Our government has implemented hiring restraint measures across government, ensuring that when positions become vacant, they are being filled when they are critical to the role and to the work of government, including implementing our mandate. A huge part of our mandate is ensuring that Albertans have access to the mental health supports that they need. It is a reality that recruitment takes time and that for these important positions we want to make sure that we are filling them with the right person so that we are able to help make life better for Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Independent Postsecondary Institution Funding

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our province deals with many inconsistencies in funding of independent academic institutions. These colleges and universities receive block funding that does not require any achievement in enrolment. In fact, some even see declines in numbers. To the Minister of Advanced Education: why do we see these differences in funding?

Mr. Schmidt: Well, Mr. Speaker, we inherited this system from the previous government, and we're committed to making it better. Campus Alberta grants are not purely enrolment based for any institution, be they independent or not. A review of this funding model is under way, and the member can look forward to recommendations later this year. I'd like all members of this Assembly to know that this government is protecting and improving postsecondary education and all the things that make life better for Albertans, and a better funding model will help to achieve this.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that St. Mary's University in Calgary-Shaw has a lower amount of funding per student compared to many other postsecondary institutions in the province, to the same minister: how is this government going to address this going forward?

Mr. Schmidt: Well, firstly, Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for being such a tireless advocate for his constituency. For independent schools like St. Mary's the operating grants go only to programs which are approved by government. Within these programs the funding per-student number is higher than it would be for the school overall. Budget 2017 for the third year in a row gives a 2 per cent increase to all postsecondary institutions, including St. Mary's. Our government is committed to stable and predictable funding for all of our institutions. As I said, the member can look forward to the results of the funding review that will be completed later this fall.

2:10

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the government is looking into long-term funding sustainability of postsecondary education in Alberta, to the same minister: will independent postsecondaries have a voice in the conversation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I assure the member that independent academic institutions like St. Mary's have been and will have a voice in these important conversations. St. Mary's in particular has played a significant role in our postsecondary system, and I'm proud of the work that they're doing in many areas such as their indigenous partnerships and initiatives. They've also been a great partner in this funding conversation, and I look forward to continuing to work together to make our system more affordable, accessible, and high quality for all of the students in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Labour Legislation Review

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Historically Alberta has had a strong economy, with workers travelling from other jurisdictions to take the opportunity of our well-paying jobs. Data from the federal government shows that our province has fewer work stoppages and lost days of work relative to the rest of Canada, but this government claims a need to undertake a review of our Labour Relations Code, risking our labour peace. Will the minister please explain to Albertans what is wrong with our current labour relations laws that warrants a review while Albertans need jobs and a stable economy? Is this review just to appease organized labour?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Standing up for families means making sure that Albertans have access to fair and family-friendly workplaces. We have workplace legislation in this province that has not been updated in decades. Making sure that Albertans are able to take advantage of things like bereavement leave or being able to take a day off to attend a funeral, items that other Canadians have, is something that I want to talk to Albertans about. This is an important conversation to have because having workplace legislation decades out of date is not reasonable.

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, given that this government has mandated Andrew Sims to assist the Labour ministry in carrying out this review and given that Mr. Sims already carried out an extensive review of our labour laws – his report was published in 2014 – and given that stakeholders asked the government not to implement the recommendations contained within that report, will the minister please explain why they are hiring Mr. Sims, a recent large donor to the NDP, to write another report? What will be different this time, and how is the minister ensuring Mr. Sims will return an independent report?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very proud to have Mr. Andrew Sims assisting us. This is a very important labour lawyer in the Alberta labour relations community, that the previous government also relied on for information. In 2014 he reviewed the construction section of the Labour Relations Code, not the entire Labour Relations Code. We have asked him to take a targeted review because it's important that Albertans are able to trust and rely that we have workplace legislation that will work for themselves and their families.

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, given that this government's online survey to solicit feedback from the public is only on the employment standards portion of this labour review and not on labour relations and given that the decisions made about these laws have the potential to disrupt labour peace in this province and given that this review has employers and workers worried about what this review means for their futures, will the minister please tell us the criteria to receive an invitation to engage with Mr. Sims on these important matters, and what is she doing to ensure that the whole review process is fair and transparent?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta businesses deserve laws that help them attract the best and the brightest. Our legislation is out of date and out of practice with other jurisdictions. We need to make sure that Albertans are engaged in this process, and I invite all Albertans to come to the website to fill out the information, the survey, or to provide their thoughts on labour legislation. We will be contacting stakeholders and setting up meetings, and I will be making sure that all of the information submitted to the review is taken into account. It is puzzling to me that the opposition does not want us to engage in a consultation with Albertans. Then again, this is the opposition that would roll back minimum wage.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Provincial Fiscal Position

Mr. Fraser: When this NDP government came into power, they inherited a financial position that was the envy of jurisdictions around the world. Over the first few years of their term we've seen this once strong position rapidly decline into nothing short of financial chaos. For example, this government gleefully accepted a $6.5 billion contingency fund, which they have since drained completely to spend on day-to-day activities of this administration. Minister, why does the budget state that the forecast year-end figure for the contingency fund will be $2.3 billion, only for it to be drained once again this year?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. Those are monies that will be borrowed for operational purposes and drawn down during the course of the year. You know, the PC balanced budget plan: I just want to take a minute to talk about the $5.8 billion in cuts that you would propose to happen in one year. Those reckless cuts would make so much happen in Alberta that would hurt families. Your math is wrong. Your ideas are wrong. People don't want $5 billion in cuts. They want stable services, they want investments across our economy, and they want stability.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Fraser: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that another thing that this government gleefully accepted was a very low level of debt that was accumulated under previous Progressive Conservative governments and given that the NDP government set a goal of not exceeding a debt-to-GDP ratio of 15 per cent and almost immediately broke that goal by borrowing even more, Minister, is your government prepared to put another GDP percentage limit in place, or are you afraid you're going to break that one, too?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think I stood up here a few minutes ago and said that we'll continue to have one of the lowest debt-to-GDP ratios of all provinces in Canada. I also said that the $5.8 billion in cuts would mean that the whole Advanced Education budget would have to go. Additionally, your cuts would mean that health care would have to be severely taken back. You have $1.5 billion in cuts. Do you really think that's possible? I don't think so. Other notable cuts would mean that the whole Culture and Tourism ministry would have to go, Economic Development and Trade would have to go. All of these things would have to go.

Mr. Speaker, theirs don't add up. They would make . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister. Thank you. We are on the second supplemental, I believe.

Mr. Fraser: Given that this government is borrowing a total of $2.8 billion more to pay for operating costs than they are spending on capital projects and given that borrowing to keep the lights on without funding efficiencies won't help pay for the critical infrastructure Albertans need, Minister, spending more time and money adding zeroes to debt I don't think jibes with Albertans and their priorities. Do you?

Mr. Ceci: What we know in these tough economic times is that Albertans want the security of knowing their government is investing in job creation, their government has stable services and programs like education and health care, and their government cares about doing the things they need on a daily basis for today and the future. That's what this side of the House is concerned with. That side of the House is just concerned with putting down Albertans, doing things that would further make life difficult for Albertans by cutting billions and billions out of a current budget today. That's not good business sense for this province nor Albertans' future.

An Hon. Member: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order noted.

The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Crime Prevention

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are losing their sense of security. Day after day we're hearing new heartbreaking stories about violent crimes, especially in rural communities. Alberta's crime severity index ballooned by 18 per cent since 2015, the most in the country. Today Wildrose launched the Alberta Crime Task Force on behalf of victims and their families. We're saying that enough is enough. The task force will complete a report and provide this government with recommendations to protect Albertans. Will this government implement our recommendations and help us keep Albertans safe?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's obviously critical to every Albertan and every Alberta family that they live in safe communities. That's one of the main goals of my ministry, and we work very hard at it. We're willing to listen to ideas from absolutely anywhere. I had the opportunity to meet recently with experts on this issue and to meet with the new deputy commissioner of the RCMP. I'm convinced he will work very hard on this issue. I think we're going to continue to follow expert advice on this matter.

2:20

Mrs. Pitt: That's disappointing.

Mr. Speaker, this government recently embraced the opposition's call to add more court resources, and we're very grateful for that. But given that small communities like Amisk are seeing a startling increase in crime, including the local ATB being robbed twice in just one week, and given that the Justice minister failed to attend a meeting in Amisk on this issue of rural crime, why is this government reacting instead of leading and leaving it up to the opposition to fight for those affected by the rise in violent crime?

Ms Ganley: Mr. Speaker, pretty much everything in that preamble there was incorrect. To begin with, the Leader of the Official Opposition came out immediately, before we injected these resources, and said specifically, "It's not a resource problem; let's study the issue" and proposed a bill to do just that. We took action. We injected resources because that is the right course of action.

With respect to the folks in Amisk department officials have already reached out to them and met with them. Unfortunately, you know, with 20 minutes' notice, I was unable to make that meeting. But we are happy to meet with them in the future and to work with all communities to ensure that all Albertans feel safe.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, this government has failed in protecting victims, and Albertans know that. Given that they've been triaging cases of violent crime, staying more than 200 criminal charges for alleged criminals accused of everything from sexual assault and first degree murder, will this government act like a leader instead of a follower, restore some faith in our justice system, and amend the ridiculous triage policy?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, this government has been taking concrete action. When the Jordan decision came down into a system that had been backlogged over decades, we took immediate action. We had two choices. We could either let serious and violent crimes be stayed by the court for being over the time frame, or we could take action to triage those matters to ensure that serious and violent crimes were prioritized and to protect the safety of all Albertans. That's exactly what we did. We injected resources when the opposition said that we should cut. We are taking real action. They have nothing but talk. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. [interjections] Order. Thank you.

The Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo

Emergency Medical Services

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A code red was called last week in Calgary. Icy conditions caused ambulance calls to double on Thursday morning. According to the president of the Health Sciences Association of Alberta, Calgary regularly experiences ambulance shortages. To alleviate these code reds, out-of-town EMS units are often utilized within our larger centres. Can you explain how this code red affects patient care in the surrounding areas, whose ambulances helped support Calgary during this most recent event?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We know that when you call 911, nothing is more important than knowing that help is on the way and that first responders are going to be there as quickly as possible to support you, and it's important to us. The 5,500 paramedics that we have in the province are responding to about 500,000 calls each and every year. We're committed to making sure that we work to support the front lines, making sure that any reductions to budgets that AHS thinks they can achieve will not impact the front lines. That's why we're working to make sure that life is getting better for Alberta families.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, despite Health's best attempts EMS response times still haven't improved. In fact, this government increased response time thresholds. Ambulances are still stuck at hospitals waiting for patient hand-offs, and we continue to have code reds despite utilizing out-of-town ambulances in our metropolitan cities. How well do you know your file, Minister of Health? How many times were code reds called last year?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A great deal of information is available online. We try to be very open and transparent about challenges that are happening in the system. But I also want to reinforce that while 32 per cent growth has happened since 2011, EMS response times have remained steady. I think that's important for us to know. It is important for us to make them even shorter, though, and that's one of the reasons why we're standing up for stable health care funding and investment, not reckless and extreme cuts like the members opposite are proposing.

Mr. Yao: It's unfortunate that you don't know your file.

Yesterday the Minister of Health stated that reductions to ambulance services would not affect front-line workers, that the cost savings were available due to the fact that we paid off our ambulances. Given that ambulances and emergency medical equipment require regular maintenance and replacement, is it the minister's plan to leave our EMS services with an infrastructure debt?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I know what it's like to inherit an infrastructure deficit because for decades under Conservative governments in this province we saw cut after cut and we saw the increase in delayed infrastructure maintenance happen throughout the province. Absolutely, I'm committed to making sure that we're investing and making sure that we're maintaining and catching up with the backlog that we've seen. I think it's good news that we have ambulances that are paid in full. I wish the members opposite would support Albertans, support us in finding ways to make sure that we can have strong public health care instead of always arguing for us to privatize it.

Affordable Housing

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, developing initiatives and strategies to move individuals through the housing continuum from affordable housing to market rental and attainable home ownership is an integral part of any modern housing strategy. This government has been dragging its feet on delivering an affordable housing strategy. Worse, the minister has sown frustration and nervousness as she continually hints at rent controls and openly sets aside partnering with the private sector. To the Minister of Seniors and Housing: when will the affordable housing strategy be released, and will it contain any innovative initiatives to move hard-working Albertans through the housing continuum?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, our government is dedicated to making sure people have the affordable housing they need in this province. That's why we invested $1.2 billion in our capital plan. There are over 40 projects under way currently and more to come. Investment in maintenance was long overdue because that government did not invest and units had to be closed, so people do not have the homes they need. Our government, rest assured, is investing right now.

Mr. Gotfried: Interesting given that there are no RFPs out there.

Mr. Speaker, given that I personally championed attainable home ownership, developing one of Alberta's first CMHC-approved programs almost 10 years ago, and given that this program was a tremendous success because it avoided creating ghettos, assisted hard-working families in purchasing their first home, and despite this government's distaste created an effective public-private nonprofit partnership, again to the minister: given that private builders are ready and willing to collaborate with this government to deliver high-quality, affordable, and attainable homes, why do you continue with your stated predisposition for public ownership?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We're very proud to work with our housing management bodies all across this province who are dedicated to supporting people in their communities. We have over a hundred housing management bodies who are doing excellent work across the province. Just to speak about the provincial affordable housing strategy, we had extensive consultation. That report will be available in the spring – the member will be hearing about it soon – and we're very proud of the work we're doing on that.

Mr. Gotfried: Spring has sprung, Mr. Speaker.

Given that the ministry's business plan contains no performance measures tied to delivering cost-effective affordable housing units and given the fact that leveraging money for the greatest benefit is an essential part of building all forms of social housing and given that the business plan contains no reference to the private sector, consistent with the minister's stated preference that social housing be built and operated by government, again to the minister: why are you ignoring evidence and advice from sector leaders by completely excluding the private sector from your business plan?

Ms Sigurdson: In tough economic times everyday Albertans deserve a government that makes life better, and we're supporting people to have homes to live in here. We inherited 15,000 families on wait-lists for affordable housing in this province. We're changing that completely by investing $1.2 billion in our capital plan, and we're very proud of our work that we're doing with our housing management bodies, who are serving vulnerable Albertans very well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Student Enrolment and School Construction

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituency of Edmonton-South West is filled with young families that are worried about the future of their children because of growing enrolment pressures. Given the increasing demand for enrolment in schools across this province, to the Minister of Education: what is the government doing to ensure that schools are equipped to handle this growth in demand?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we're doing a great deal to deal with growth across the province. Announced through Budget 2017 for a third year in a row our government is funding for enrolment growth, which is around 1.8 per cent. That means 12,000 students have a place to go, have a teacher in front of them, and extra supports in the classroom. In the last three years we have put $973 million more into that, in operating, than the previous government was going to do before they lost the election.

2:30

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that enrolment pressures mean that we need more schools for our children, to the same minister again: what is the minister doing to ensure that we are building enough schools for every child and enough space?

Mr. Eggen: Well, just yesterday our government announced that we have 26 new school projects across the province. We're providing funding for eight new schools, modernizations and building other schools and replacements as well. These projects will address the many growth areas across the province, revitalizing old schools in rural areas, in suburban areas, and in urban areas, a very, very proud program, Mr. Speaker. We're building these schools because we know that one of the most important investments you can make for the future is to make sure that education is strong in Alberta.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, given that existing high schools around my constituency are currently at capacity and filling up more and more every day, with the pressure coming from elementary and junior high schools, to the same minister: will the Minister of Education commit to building a new high school for the communities of Edmonton-South West?

Mr. Eggen: Well, certainly, Mr. Speaker, I have demands from all over the province in regard to building new schools. We see continued growth, which I think is a strong indication of people making investment in Alberta, raising their families in Alberta and so forth. Under due consideration based on enrolment, based on need, based on geography, we have the deliberations over schools. Twenty-six school projects in these economic times: I think that's something we can be really, really proud of.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

New School Construction in Rocky View County

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Right now the Rocky View school division is out of room for students and the school boards desperately need additional schools. The community has a school that is on the government's list but is still unfunded. The NDP government's reason for not moving forward on our school build is that our municipalities do not have serviced school sites ready. We heard that the site plan is ready, and residents expected a school built. To the minister: can you please explain to the Chestermere-Rocky View constituents what constitutes site ready?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we have to make decisions across the province based on site readiness and based on enrolment and so forth. I must say as well that Rocky View in general received two new schools in the announcement that we had yesterday. I recognize the need for said school that the hon. member was mentioning. We are certainly deliberating over those things. Because of our long-term investment in building infrastructure and investing in schools, at least the people in Chestermere-Rocky View will know that they will be satisfied in a very short time.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. Given that Chestermere has grown by 34 per cent since 2011 and that 30 per cent of our residents are under the age of 20 and given that you have just said that we have funded for growth and enrolment and given that Chestermere schools take in kids from all surrounding areas and that our rural communities don't have very many alternatives – we can't just bus them to another school – when will Chestermere-Rocky View see our K to 9 school built? And what are the two schools?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we see these growth pressures in many areas such as Chestermere and Airdrie, in suburban Edmonton and Leduc and so forth, so we are meeting these needs over time. It's difficult because I know that the previous Conservative government had built up a huge backlog of infrastructure, that we are now satisfying and building towards. You can only do that by making investments and planning. You can't do that by cutting budgets. You can't build schools out of the air. We're building them with concrete and bricks and mortar and putting teachers in the schools.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. Given that East Lake school can no longer support any more portables and is still overcrowded and given that Rainbow Creek needs four more portables and received one, leaving that school completely overcrowded as well, and since these are just examples from my riding – overcrowded schools and lack of spaces is a systemic problem, Minister – can you please clarify to school boards what the criteria is to have their priorities end up on your funded list? And what are the two schools?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The schools that will be built in the Rocky View school district area: one is Catholic and one is public. You can get the list, and I would be glad to show you. We announced it yesterday.

News flash: you can't build schools and put teachers in them and then advocate for cuts at the same time. So before you hitch your wagon, I would suggest that you hitch your wagon to some kind of neo-conservative brave new world. I would suggest that maybe you think about teachers and schools properly, categorically, and not . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Access to Information

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the few tools the opposition has to hold the government to account is our ability to access information through FOIP requests. Any delay in accessing information under this act can be seen as an affront to democracy. Unfortunately, our office has experienced a number of significant delays, including directly from Executive Council. To the Premier: are your staff interfering in the FOIP process to prevent unflattering information from being released to the public?

Ms Hoffman: No way, Mr. Speaker. We inherited a system that was chronically underfunded. We've inherited an opposition that likes to call for deep cuts. This government is putting our money where our mouth is, including staffing FOIP offices at a level that will enable us to get far closer to achieving the guidelines outlined in the legislation than the Official Opposition would have us do. They call for cuts. They call for increased access. We're putting our money where it belongs, which is in making sure that we have the good services, including FOIP officers, to be able to meet the demand of increased requests.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Information and Privacy Commissioner recently concluded that FOIP requests made to PAB and Executive Council were taking an average of 50 days to process and given that these lengthy delays only serve to keep the opposition parties, the media, and everyday hard-working Albertans in the dark about the inner workings of the government, Premier: seriously, how do you account for these delays? Come on.

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have about a decade of experience in filing FOIP requests, so this is a very fun question to answer. There were times where I had to wait in excess of a year, under the former government, to get my FOIP back. We are very proud of the progress we're making. We're working in collaboration with the public service and with all applicants, no matter who those applicants are, whether they're members of the public, the media, or other parties within this Legislature. We'll continue to make sure that we staff offices appropriately even when the members opposite are asking every day for us to cut billions of dollars. We're making sure that we put resources to make sure that we have transparency and make life better.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Gill: Let me try again. Given that Alberta's Information and Privacy Commissioner said that the freedom of information in government departments is, quote, fast approaching a crisis, unquote, and that Commissioner Clayton also said, and I quote, I hate to hear that FOIP is not being taken seriously, unquote, Premier: why is your government interfering with FOIP, and what are you trying to hide from Albertans?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Nice try, Member. I have to say that in 2015, when we took office, FOIP requests were taking 12 to 15 months under that former government. Now we've got them down to three to six months at Executive Council. That's significant progress. Is it far enough? No. We want to go further. We want to achieve the timelines outlined in the legislation, and that's why we're continuing to make sure that we're allocating resources properly. But the assertions by the member opposite couldn't be further from reality. We've cut the wait times significantly from when your party was in power.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Housing for Persons with Complex Needs

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since my election I've had social workers and front-line staff approach me with concerns about the quality of housing available to individuals with complex needs. They tell me about substandard living conditions, a lack of proper supports. Indeed, some of the sites they've identified have had multiple suites condemned as unfit for human habitation. It seems clear to me that some needs of our society shouldn't be abandoned to the market, as previous governments have done. To the Minister of Community and Social Services: how is our government taking responsibility to ensure individuals with complex challenges can access safe, dignified, supportive places to live?

The Speaker: The Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government is protecting and improving things that make a difference. We believe that everyone deserves to live with dignity and have opportunities to thrive. We provided $13 million in Budget '15-16 for housing projects that support individuals with complex needs, and this includes projects across this province. We will continue to ensure that the supports Albertans need are in place, and we won't make reckless cuts that will make life harder for Albertans.

Thank you.

2:40

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that wraparound support services are essential to housing individuals who are chronically homeless due to physical or other mental health issues, developmental disabilities, substance use, or combinations of all and given that these individuals are going without essential services like bathing because the only place they can afford to live is deemed unsafe for workers, what steps is the minister taking to increase support for wraparound services and new affordable housing projects?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government is ensuring that individuals with complex needs facing homelessness have a safe place to call home. That is why in this year's budget we will be increasing funding for homeless and outreach support by $6 million, for a total of $187 million. This means we are strengthening the wraparound supports offered through the housing first program throughout this province. We know that housing first reduces the use of the corrections and health systems. Just compare the $100,000 cost per person in the use of these systems versus $40,000 through housing first initiatives.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, given that support services are only part of the equation and that there must also be investment in both maintenance to keep existing housing dignified and inhabitable as well as in constructing new housing for those in need, to the Minister of Seniors and Housing: what concrete investments is the government making to ensure my constituents can get the supports they need in safety and dignity?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The previous government did not prioritize affordable housing, and that's why so many units are in disrepair. We are proud to be investing $57 million in making sure that this affordable housing maintenance is taken care of. For Edmonton-Centre, the riding will receive approximately $602,000 for repairs at facilities like Renfrew apartments and Kiwanis Place Lodge. While we're making life better for Albertans, the opposition would make life harder by cutting from these programs.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 30 seconds we'll deal with Members' Statements.

Members' Statements

Energy Policies

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, I will not be told by members on the NDP government side that I do not support our energy industry, members too cowardly to admit to Albertans that their toxic carbon tax forces the juniors to subsidize their competition.

Let me tell you what not supporting Alberta's energy industry looks like. This NDP government has come in and fostered division in a once united industry. This NDP government's managed decline of our key industry by capping the oil sands will leave Alberta's youth unemployed. This NDP government plays favorites and enacts harmful consequences for any company that dares not beat their drum while chanting favorably about the NDP's destructive, anti-Albertan world view. This NDP government attends international gala conferences on the dime of hard-working Albertans, only to sell out and apologize to the people that besmirch and demonize our industry.

This NDP government cowers in shame and apologizes to a federal government that wants to vilify our energy producers for meeting the needs of people seeking a better quality of life, a federal government too blinded by its misguided focus to recognize the immense number of their beloved social programs that would cease to exist without Alberta footing the bill for Quebec and Ontario through obscene equalization payments.

Alberta's energy industry is the most innovative, environmentally responsible, and socially generous in the entire world. This didn't happen because of social engineering, Mr. Speaker. It happened because of Albertans working in every level of industry, fighting tirelessly to protect and build up our province's legacy. These hard-working Albertans do not deserve a government that implements reckless policy after reckless policy, driving away investors. Those Albertans deserve a government that will enact policies that give all energy companies a level playing field.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In accordance with Standing Order 99 the Standing Committee on Private Bills has reviewed the petitions that were presented on Monday, March 20, 2017, in record time. As chair of the committee I can advise the Assembly that the petitions comply with standing orders 90 to 94.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-MacLeod.

Bill 204 Protection of Property Rights Statutes Amendment Act, 2017

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise and request leave to introduce Bill 204, Protection of Property Rights Statutes Amendment Act, 2017.

I'd like to begin by thanking Parliamentary Counsel once again. Without their assistance, this bill would not have been possible, so thank you very much.

This bill is a culmination of many years of advocacy, dating back to 2009, when the Alberta Land Stewardship Act was introduced. That legislation limited property rights without notice or adequate compensation. Bill 204 proposes to correct this through amending the Alberta Land Stewardship Act and the Responsible Energy Development Act to ensure Albertans will again have the right to a fair hearing if their rights are affected and have recourse to the courts when their lands or interests are affected by a regional plan.

Another vital issue, though, that this bill now addresses is the loophole in the Land Titles Act that allows an individual to obtain title and ownership of land through something called adverse possession. Bill 204 will repeal section 74 of the Land Titles Act, finally ending adverse possession in Alberta. This change has been a very long time in coming. I'm proud to be introducing this bill, that addresses these long-standing grievances.

In closing, I look forward to discussing this bill with my colleagues on all sides of the House and ultimately winning their support for this important piece of legislation. Thank you very much.

[Motion carried; Bill 204 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table two documents. The first is the requisite number of copies of a petition presented to me by constituents concerned about upcoming legal changes that may impact age-restricted condominiums.

The second is the requisite number of copies of the letters from the doctors at the Alberta Hospital Edmonton about the closing down of 20 alternative-level care beds.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a couple of tablings if I may. The first is a tabling with the appropriate number of copies from the Alberta Mental Health Patient Advocate annual report 2014-15, that I cited in question period on Monday and today, in which that advocate stated that lack of funding "had a direct impact on the number of Albertans . . . served and the comprehensiveness of our investigations" and that "the inability to conduct formal investigations were largely due to lack of resources." Thank you.

Another tabling, Mr. Speaker, is the appropriate number of copies of the executive summary of the farm worker insurance study by Alberta agriculture and rural development, which shows (a) income loss from injury and death in Alberta farm workers, (b) a comparison of costs between commercial insurance and WCB coverage, and (c) a summary of uninsured farm worker economics. Overall the report recommended under the former PC government WCB coverage for farm workers.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of a letter I wrote to the Government House Leader. In that letter to the Government House Leader I quote a statement from the Minister of Education decrying the Public Affairs Bureau as political.

2:50

The Speaker: I believe, hon. members, we're at points of order. I received a note. I understand that the Opposition House Leader withdraws the point of order.

In addition, there was a point of privilege raised yesterday, and there was a request by the government to speak to the matter. I'd recognize the Deputy Government House Leader.

Privilege

Obstructing a Member in Performance of Duty

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Matters of privilege are, obviously, very serious, and we feel that they ought not be raised lightly. Unfortunately, I think that that is exactly what is happening here. The opposition are trying to revive a debate on a matter that has been dealt with by this House. This is clearly not a matter of privilege. Let's be clear about what it is. It's the latest tactic being used by the opposition to try to justify the unjustifiable, that being that the Member for Calgary-Hays has been found to be in violation of the Conflicts of Interest Act. For the first time ever the Ethics Commissioner has recommended a penalty be levied under the act, yet they want him to be off the hook or to delay the matter significantly.

In making my argument, I'll be referring to a number of citations that also came up last week when the members tried their first line of delay in arguing that the matter should be considered sub judice.

To summarize, Mr. Speaker, the members opposite refer to the Member for Calgary-Hays' privilege, but they ignore the fundamental privilege of the Assembly in setting and enforcing rules governing the conduct of its members. May's Parliamentary Practice on page 75 defines parliamentary privilege as "the sum of the peculiar rights enjoyed by each House collectively as a constituent part of the High Court of Parliament, and by Members of each House individually." Beauchesne's is very clear that "the most fundamental privilege of the House as a whole is to establish rules of procedure for itself and to enforce them." It's very clear that the House as a collective body has collective privileges as well as the power to enforce those rules.

In some cases these powers could lead to far more significant discipline than what is being contemplated here. In Parliamentary Privilege in Canada Maingot asserts that the privilege of control over its own affairs and proceedings is one of the most significant attributes of an independent legislative institution, further stating:

The right to regulate its own internal affairs and procedures free from interference includes:

1. The right to enforce discipline on Members of the House of Commons by suspension, commitment, and expulsion.

Maingot further expands on the collective rights of the House as follows.

The corporate or collective privileges of the Senate and of the House of Commons are the power to punish for contempt . . . the right to regulate its own constitution; the right to regulate its own internal affairs free from interference, which includes the right to discipline its own Members; the right to institute inquiries and call for witnesses . . . and the right to settle its own code of procedure.

So, Mr. Speaker, it is very clear that the Assembly has the power to set and to enforce rules, and that is exactly what has happened here.

The Assembly in its wisdom passed legislation, namely the Conflicts of Interest Act, to govern specifically conflicts of interest. The act provides statutory authority for an independent officer of the Assembly, the Ethics Commissioner, to investigate matters, make rulings, and recommend penalties to the Assembly. The Ethics Commissioner investigated an allegation against the Member for Calgary-Hays, found the member in breach, and recommended a sanction.

What the member is suggesting is that the one and only time that such a power has ever been used, we should ignore them. Mr. Speaker, this doesn't just go to the fundamental privilege of the House but to the public's faith in us and our ability to be held accountable through the rules that we pass ourselves. The Assembly has now passed a motion to concur in the recommendation as it is a fundamental right and privilege of this Assembly.

With regard to the general principle of freedom of speech the members ought to know that freedom of speech is not unlimited, particularly for those of us who have duties flowing from the powers vested in us as members.

In Parliamentary Privilege in Canada, page 14, it is noted that the rights of members are subject to the procedures of the House.

While it will be seen that the Member enjoys all the immunity necessary to perform his parliamentary work, this privilege or right, such as freedom of speech, is nevertheless subject to the practices and procedures of the House.

Maingot further discusses freedom of speech on page 180 and states:

Since Article 9 of the Bill of Rights, 1689 prohibits the questioning of the proceedings of Parliament in any place outside Parliament, those participating in its proceedings, principally the Members but also witnesses, petitioners and others, are protected against any outside interference for what they say or do within. These persons are also subject to the disciplinary powers of the House for their conduct during the proceedings.

We all know that the right to free speech in the Assembly is not unlimited. Chapter 18 of Erskine May notes a number of limits that the House may impose on the contents of speeches. To name the most obvious examples, we all know that members are not supposed to use unparliamentary language, nor are members allowed to knowingly mislead the House. Further, there are provisions within the standing orders such as Standing Order 21 on time allocation, which on occasion can be used to limit debate.

With regard to potential conflicts of interest House of Commons Procedure and Practice, by O'Brien and Bosc, explicitly discusses the practice whereby members ought not to participate in matters where there may be a private interest. They state on page 128:

Members are required to disclose a private interest in a matter before the House or a committee and to refrain from participating in debate or voting on the question . . . If the Commissioner concludes that the Member has deliberately contravened the conflict of interest guidelines set down in the Code, the Commissioner may recommend appropriate sanctions. The Member is then subject to the disciplinary powers of the House, if the House chooses to take action.

Mr. Speaker, anyone who watches debate regularly in the House will have seen time to time members recusing themselves from participation in particular debate, often on recommendation of the Ethics Commissioner. In fact, in the caucus of the member who raised this matter, the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster recused himself from debating a bill that would have had a pecuniary interest for his spouse. That took place on December 5, 2016, and can be found on page 2295 of Hansard.

On this point it is worth remembering that the initial reaction from the Member for Calgary-Hays when the Ethics Commissioner ruled that he had been in violation was to accept the ruling. He immediately issued a statement which included the following:

I fully accept responsibility for my actions and going forward, I will continue to not participate in any question period activity, debate or vote in relation to Alberta's electric utility industry until such a time that the Ethics Commissioner gives me permission to do so.

While he may have received some advice in the interim about delaying this matter, clearly he didn't believe at the time that this was a fundamental betrayal of his rights and privileges as a member.

Lastly, I will point out that Standing Order 15, which governs matters of privilege, requires that these be brought forward at the earliest opportunity. I don't believe that has been the case here since the matter was subject to significant debate prior to the adoption of Motion 16 yesterday.

I would note that the members opposite made the exact same points in speaking to the motion as they are now raising in the matter of privilege. The House heard the arguments and passed the motion nonetheless.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition? House leaders?

Thank you, hon. members. As I said yesterday, this kind of matter is probably one of the most intense and sensitive issues that we may be discussing. I will be deliberating, reviewing the decisions that I've made as well as others in this House as well as other sources, and that will be brought forward after I've had an opportunity to do that.

Orders of the Day

Government Motions

Provincial Fiscal Policies

13. Mr. Ceci moved:
Be it resolved that the Assembly approve in general the business plans and fiscal policies of the government.

[Adjourned debate March 21: Mr. Nixon]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. “The problem with socialism is that you eventually run out of other people’s money.” Margaret Thatcher spoke those words in her crusade to undo the malaise and decline that took root in Britain after the Second World War. What she said can be broken down into two parts. Eventually you run out of other people’s money: the implication here is that for some time you can run on other people’s money. An economy that is already prosperous can be plundered through taxes and other forms of wealth redistribution to support a socialist program for a time. As a century of social experiments, most recently Venezuela, have demonstrated, this ends in tears.

You can also run on other people’s money for a time generationally; that is, this generation can borrow from the next generation. But when it comes to finances, the sins of the father are the sins of the son. The father who borrows money in his son’s name can enjoy short-lived prosperity for a time, but eventually he runs out of his son’s money. And the funny thing about when socialists run out of other people’s money is that they are never the ones who have to pay it back.

NDP governments in Ontario and in Manitoba and in British Columbia have run out of other people’s money, and it is always someone else who has to clean up their mess. Cleaning up this mess, the mess from virtually any NDP government in this country, is almost always painful. Right now the NDP are sowing the seeds of a debt crisis in this province that, if not wrestled under control, will see our debt levels not only become an unfair burden on future generations but have very real impact on the quality of life of Albertans very soon.

During the election the NDP placed solemn hand over heavy heart and swore to Albertans that they could be trusted with the provincial credit card. They promised Albertans that they would balance the budget by 2018, but as we know, math is hard. Whoever wrote the NDP platform had a minor billion-dollar rounding error. We were told: “But, no worry; we’ll get ’er done by 2019. It’s just a billion dollars. It’s still good.” Just months after the NDP were elected, they dropped the 2019 date and punted it to 2020 and then 2021 and then 2022 and then 2023 and then 2024.

In the 2016 budget the NDP dropped any balanced budget date altogether. They paid lip service to a theoretical concept of a balanced budget but told us to just trust them. But in this budget, 2017-18, they have abdicated all pretenses whatsoever to modest, even theoretical fiscal responsibility. They denounce now even the concept of a balanced budget as some sort of right-wing, maniacal plot to abolish government whatsoever and return mankind to a state of nature. If Thomas Hobbes was alive today, he would surely describe the NDP’s term in government as nasty, brutish, and short. But while short this government may be, our deficits will not be.

We have run deficits in Alberta since 2007, even at times when oil exceeded $100 a barrel. No matter how high our revenues have been, our expenditures have outpaced them for a decade. And instead of moving towards a balanced budget, as the NDP promised Albertans they would, they have taken Alberta into the largest deficit in our history, a record nominal deficit of $10 billion last year, matched only once in our history, this year. We have gone from paid in full and money in the bank only a decade ago to a crushing debt of at least $71 billion by the next election, and that is under the best-case scenario.

To date this government has been unreliable at best in its revenue projections. In order to contain the debt at $71 billion – and I say: contain – by 2019, oil prices must reach at least $68 a barrel, pipelines must not only be under construction but must be actively pumping oil to market, and GDP growth must exceed 6 per cent. All members of this House agree that each of these variables is desirable, and we hope for them, but hope is not a plan. In fact, “hope” is probably being too charitable, Mr. Speaker. “Pray” is probably a more apt term. If our prayers for this trifecta of economic growth are not answered or if the NDP exceed projected spending in any of these upcoming years, then our debt will exceed $71 billion.

We have no good reason whatsoever to believe the NDP when they say that they can stick to a budget. This is the third NDP budget, and every single year to date they have exceeded by billions of dollars their budgeted spending limits. In fact, the Minister of Finance admitted in this House just a few weeks ago that he broke his own law, the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act. He broke the law when he illegally and hypocritically spent $1.1 billion not authorized by this Legislature. That $1.1 billion was spent on one of the most wasteful and useless expenditures in the history of this province, the phase-out of clean-coal energy and the wiping out of several old and proud Alberta communities.

By the time the NDP came to power, our financial accountability and responsibility legislation had already been badly watered down and damaged, but the NDP did away with them altogether and repealed outright the fiscal accountability act. In its place they introduced the aforementioned Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act, an act which they are now in direct contravention of. The act originally contained a pledge from this government to never exceed a ratio of 15 per cent of debt to GDP. That 15 per cent limit was far higher than reasonable for Alberta to begin with, but the NDP pledged that this was something they would never exceed.

During estimates that year I personally questioned the Minister of Finance about this, and he solemnly pledged that he would never exceed it. When I pointed this out, that his revenue projections were too rosy and that I believed he would exceed his 15 per cent of debt to GDP, he said that I was wrong and just fearmongering. But just six months later they meekly crawled back into this Legislature to repeal their own 15 per cent debt-to-GDP debt ceiling. This government simply cannot be trusted to stick to their commitments. They simply cannot be trusted to stick to a budget.

We also warned that the reckless fiscal policy of this government would seriously jeopardize Alberta’s credit rating. Whenever we did that, however, the NDP accused us of being Chicken Little. But while the sky is not falling, our credit rating is. Just one day after the NDP repealed their already flaccid 15 per cent debt ceiling, our credit rating was downgraded. The minister did nothing, at least of substance. He did travel to Toronto to meet with credit-rating agencies and tell them that we’re still good for the money, and after meeting with him the credit-rating agencies responded by downgrading our debt even further. Such confidence the minister inspired in our lenders.

Now, less than 24 hours after the release of this budget, both Moody’s and DBRS are warning that they may yet again reduce our credit rating. When our credit rating goes down, it becomes even more expensive to borrow money. A poor credit rating burns taxpayers' dollars uselessly. A better credit rating saves taxpayers' money and allows more dollars to actually accomplish something.

The minister needs to make our credit rating go up, but all signs of this budget point to more debt, more credit downgrades, and more taxpayers' money wasted on useless interest payments. They are reckless with taxpayers' money, they are careless with spending, they are limitless in their appetite to tax, and they are immorally jeopardizing our future by forcing our children to pay for the present.

The Finance minister is like a teenager who's just been given a brand new car and credit card by his rich mom and dad. He's quickly maxing out the credit card because he knows that someone else is going to pay for it. When families or businesses take on too much debt, there are real consequences. They themselves are responsible when the repo man comes or when creditors require significant changes to our lifestyles. They themselves must live with the consequences of financial irresponsibility. But not so politicians. When they spend other people's money irresponsibly, someone else has to live with the consequences. Taxpayers suffer as they see their tax bill go up. People who rely upon social services suffer as program spending is crowded out to pay for the increased cost of debt servicing, which in Alberta is about to reach $2.3 billion a year, the equivalent of the departments of Energy, Justice, and Environment and Parks combined.

Everyone suffers but the politician himself, who got slapped on the back for being so generous with other people's money. The very worst that could befall that politician is that people wise up to what he's doing and vote him out of office. The very worst that could befall that politician is that after spending everyone else's money, he has to get a job outside of government when the fiscal house of cards comes crashing down, and he leaves a mess for someone else to clean up, who will have to make the tough decisions.

The problem with socialism is that eventually you run out of other people's money. We are about to run out of other people's money, people of today and people of tomorrow. Those people are demanding change now. We plead with this Finance minister and this government to take this seriously and stop the madness before the wheels fall off. But if you do not, know that this will not end with the next election but with Alberta's next government taking apart piece by piece by piece the legacy of this budget and this government.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I'll recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to speak to the 2017-18 budget. I think a lot of what we are expressing in this House is degrees of comfort with debt and degrees of comfort with borrowing and degrees of comfort with protecting public services and infrastructure. What we have seen in the past at least 20 years, since I started paying attention, is a PC government that has not kept up with either infrastructure or human services needs. In fact, it has allowed those things to slip on the basis of balancing a bottom line that doesn't recognize environmental deficits, human deficits in access to services, care, housing and health care, and doesn't recognize that liabilities related to infrastructure don't go away if you don't spend the money.

During good times and bad we faced the same challenge in the previous 20 years at least, where we were not keeping up with some of those key elements of a civil society. We're now facing a true challenge for all of us, and I think a lot of what we're debating here is how quickly we should be moving on some of these deficits and how much we should be borrowing and indeed how we should be paying for it. The latter I'll leave to the end, but I think that's a crucial one that we still haven't come to grips with in a lot of respects.

If we have a difference of opinion on this side in the Liberal caucus, it's primarily around the pacing of change in this province and the lack of connection to what's happening on the ground and a recognition that small business is continuing to suffer. There's a recognition also that some of these new, dramatic changes, all of which I think had to be brought into place, including the carbon levy – how we can balance those things out in a thoughtful way and try to reduce the impact on everything from small business to nonprofit organizations and various services and generally low-income earners that are going to be adversely impacted by the knock-on effect of all the changes at once that are increasing the cost of living? Obviously, we can't wait for oil prices, and this is the perfect time for borrowing for infrastructure. This is a stimulus for our economy, and it's going to keep people employed. The question is how much and how we're going to pay it off.

Clearly, if we're looking at trying to both minimize our impact on future generations and budget appropriately, health care has to be a primary focus for our attention. It is by far the biggest expenditure of government, and it has grown by up to 8 per cent per year for the last decade, again leaving us in a position where the expectations are there, public expectations and professional expectations, that it's going to continue and that they're always going to have exactly what they need. The Minister of Health is in a very difficult position trying to balance the needs of people and the professional demands and the infrastructure demands, the technology demands, the growth of all these new technologies.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

But she has to make tough decisions, and I think some of the positive decisions that she's made are around the amending agreement with physicians, some of the drug cost issues that we've managed over the last few years to bring under some control. But there are a number of areas – and I'm a constant thorn in her side about prevention and early intervention and health promotion – which continue to get less and less relative to the population and cost-of-living increases.

We are gradually getting into the position where we are faced with a sickness care system. This is not a health care system anymore; it's a sickness care system. We spend virtually all of our money on managing people after they get sick and break down when there are tremendous studies showing evidence of reducing the incidence of mental illness, addictions, injuries, reducing the incidence of lifestyle diseases, heart disease, and cancer by working with families, especially high-risk families, those that often consume most of the health care system. In fact, as some of you may know, it's about 5 per cent of the population that consumes 50 per cent of our health resources because of their chronic, long-term, complicated illnesses. Many of those are seniors, but many of them simply are born with poor-functioning bodies and they need a lot of medical care in and out of hospital. If we focused more attention on some of those folks and managed them better, we would also reduce substantially some of the costs that we're dealing with.

It's disappointing not to see more significant changes in the health care system where we could substantially reduce, not tomorrow but in the years to come, the impacts on emergency departments, on EMS services, certainly on hospitalizations.

Alternate level of care beds is one that we've often talked about, spending somewhat over $75 million a year on people that shouldn't be in hospital at all and that could be saved by getting them into long-term care. To their credit, they're building some new long-term care beds, but we're way behind the curve on that and wasting a tremendous amount of money and increasing the suffering of people because they're not where they want to be and they're not in the best place, in a hospital where they can get other infections and are often neglected at the preference of other people who are sicker.

The lack of an integrated plan for mental health. I've harangued the government on this for some time, and it's been brought to maybe a peak with the opiate crisis. We see so many different organizations doing their own thing without an integration across them all to serve people with the social services they need, the housing, understanding and communications between police and health services and social services and even the education departments and First Nations, that need to have much more thoughtful and open communication. These people come in and out and in and out and in and out, and we know what they need, but we're simply not providing them with the integrated, co-ordinated care that they need.

I've raised this week the office of the mental health advocate, who is there to deal with people who feel that they've been harmed by the health system, harmed by the mental health treatment they've received, and need an advocate for them, just as the children's advocate speaks out on issues of children in care who have not been adequately treated. With a staff of 40 he is addressing the serious issues of children in care and trying to address some of the deficits in their care. Well, the mental health advocate has two staff and has had the same number of staff since 1990.

How is it possible that we have left this advocate to wither and those patients who have just given up on the mental health system because they've never been able to get accountability from either doctors who have not properly managed them or institutions that have not recognized their rights or other services within the mental health system that have violated them in one way or another? With only a single formal review last year and no formal review of a mental health complaint in 2015, you have to know that there's a serious problem there. That is not about budget saving. That's about violating basic rights of human beings.

While I'm talking about kind of the relationship between and a more integrated approach, some of you may know about the drug courts. Drug courts keep people with mental illness, addictions out of jail.

An Hon. Member: Right place.

Dr. Swann: Yeah. Right place, right time, right people.

Calgary can manage 25 people in the drug courts. There are hundreds of people that would benefit from being diverted from jail into the community for appropriate services, rehabilitation, treatment and get them on track to lead a productive life. Instead, they're being sent to jail, which is the very worst place for people with mental illness and addiction. So the drug court needs to be substantially strengthened with finances, and that would reduce the cost on the policing system, EMS, emergency. Again, a tremendous cost savings if we can move on with that.

We have taken a position on this side that the ideal in terms of plasma for this country would be to have our own sustainable supply of blood. So far in the 50-odd years – maybe it's longer – that we've had a blood service here, we have not been able to get to the point where we can manage more than 20 per cent of our own supply of plasma, so we're having to import it, recognizing that much of the imported blood has been from paid donors. My position is that the ideal would be to have all voluntary donors, all Canadian-made plasma and plasma products. It doesn't look like that's possible in the near term, maybe not at all, when you think about the fact that only 5 to 7 per cent of Canadians donate blood, and we need four times that much to sustain blood plus plasma products.

I've come to the position and our caucus has come to the position that, while it would be ideal, we have to start to recognize the health care system itself, the public funding for health cannot cover every possible service and product and support. In this case I'm willing to say, especially since we're importing paid plasma to the tune of 80 per cent today, that it's time for us to recognize that we will not get that in my lifetime. We need to start moving towards alternatives, ensuring that we have the best testing, the best, safest system possible and make sure that the people that we're working with have been properly screened before they're providing their donation.

The vaccination programs are still much below what they should be. We've heard from a number of the public health divisions that they're struggling with children getting only up to 60 or 70 per cent of their childhood vaccinations. We need to make those easier to get and more accessible for people. That also would reduce costs on the health care system, obviously.

I very much support the lowering of school fees and the recognition that in some cases families are not able to feed their kids appropriately because they are spending money on school fees. That's not an effective and appropriate issue. We can again find both savings and improved outcomes, but it's not clear to me whether we're borrowing for these savings. I think the challenge for us in this lowering of school fees is to recognize that there are all kinds of things that we should do, that we could do, and that we must do at some time, but piling this on top of so much other borrowing would not be, in my view, sustainable until we see a plan to repay.

I think that's part of what all of us are asking for on this side. Everything is possible with a credit card. The question is: how much are we going to start paying for ourselves? How much are we going to pass on to future generations? Will we have a heritage fund in the future? We're already down to what has been there for the last 30 years, about $15 billion to $16 billion. Thirty years. This is really a sad state to be in. Recognizing that oil prices have been low in the last few years, when are we going to get back to saving some of our nonrenewable resource revenue?

We do support the carbon levy, but we're not supportive of the way it's being implemented. It hasn't been clear how it's going to be disbursed. It hasn't been clear on what the limits are. There have been all kinds of promises for this carbon levy that would appear to exceed by far the $3 billion that we're expecting to bring in. Again, it's going to stimulate different lifestyles. I think consumers and producers need to pay for our carbon emissions. There's no question that all of us are responsible for the carbon and the climate change problem. The question, I guess, is how we manage it. Preferably, in our view, the carbon levy should be revenue neutral for Albertans so they can continue to stimulate the economy with their own revenue.

Now, to be fair, the government is giving rebates to 66 per cent of Albertans. In some cases it's a little bit hard to know where that's going, especially given that it's all based on last year's tax, and people may not be here following last year. But with all due respect, it's a reasonable – in fact, I think it's too generous.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), any members with questions or comments?

Seeing none, any others wishing to speak?

Ms Renaud: Madam Speaker, I'd move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 4

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2017

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my privilege to rise today on behalf of the Minister of Finance to move third reading of Bill 4, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2017.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to this bill? The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, this afternoon I rise to speak in opposition to Bill 4, the supplementary supply. My colleagues and I have been talking about this government and how it has a huge spending problem, and it has for almost a couple of years now. At every opportunity in this House they have repeatedly made ideological financial decisions for the entire province that really don't make much sense. No one would be allowed to spend the way the government does with their personal budget, and if they could, it wouldn't seem rational.

3:30

We've all heard the stories of what happens to people and their belongings when they don't care and run a bit too far into a deficit, maxing out credit cards, buying homes, big-ticket items that don't fit their budget. Eventually the interest and larger payments will make it tough in lean times ahead. All of a sudden the situation becomes dire, and the purchaser has to make a decision between paying the high payments and putting food on the table. This is when many have filed for bankruptcy, lost their homes, or, worse yet, lost their marriages. Any child dependent on their parents' income, unfortunately, will suffer the consequences of the parents' financial decisions.

We've all heard about situations like this, Madam Speaker, and they are heartbreaking. Unfortunately, we may have even questioned someone who has spent large amounts of money, income that he didn't have, and tried to warn others of the dangers. We've told them because we may have worried about the repercussions that that would have on their marriage and family. Sometimes there is little one can do when they see a loved one going down this path. We may warn them, of course, about the decision, but it's in their hands. They have that ultimate decision.

I believe that my colleagues and I have been warning this government for quite some time. I know we have been warning them about the spending problem that it has. We've offered many solutions. We've recently offered a proposal that lays out a sustainable three-part plan, the 2017 Pre-budget Recommendations, that would restore this province's fiscal health by paying down the deficit and paying off the debt and providing services that Albertans deserve.

They laughed. They scoffed and jeered at us, made false accusations regarding how we would cut and slash and how it would impact front-line workers. They have told Albertans that if we were making the decisions, we would have to cut jobs and lay off workers. Instead of looking at the problem together constructively, they somehow made the problem, that they are orchestrating, ours. I don't know how they've done it, but that's what they've done. Unfortunately, this problem will be here to stay for Albertans, and Albertans are going to say that they want us to clean up that mess because I don't think this government has any desire to clean up that mess.

We've heard them say that they would have a balanced budget by 2019. Now it's looking like '23 or '24. Madam Speaker, this government is recklessly unleashing on us a financial burden that the entire province and future generations will have to deal with for many years to come. You know, that's our children and our grandchildren that will be suffering the consequences of this debt.

Does that mean they hear our plea and caution? No, they haven't heard us. Instead of dealing with the economic crisis the rest of the province is now shouldering, they have decided to come to this House with their hands out for more. Bill 10 from last year, the Fiscal Statutes Amendment Act, 2016, was another one of those bills where they came with their hands out asking for more. In fact, the government has taken off the cap for how much can be borrowed. So there is no restraint. We're looking at $71 billion, but will it stop there? It doesn't have to.

I believe they've heard us. I think that some of them over there may even question this supplementary supply. They're thinking about it, and they silently think to themselves, but for the sake of the ideology they continue on headstrong, without a second thought, showing little or no respect for the many Albertans that have to pick up the tab.

Madam Speaker, this government's deficit has grown to $10.3 billion this year alone. The current fiscal year, that ends on March 31, will leave the province with a $10.8 billion deficit, and by the time they're done their term, they will have accumulated, again, like I said, over $70 billion in debt for Albertans to have to pay back. For this reason, I will not and I cannot support their ask for additional funds for supplementary supply.

The debt-loaded 2016-17 budget is sending the province into a series of deficits that will lead to the eventual downgrade of Alberta's credit rating. This is a situation that occurs when bond-rating agencies feel that future prospects for security have been weakened, and companies like Moody's have said that they are concerned. To support the government in this way would be extremely irresponsible, and I ask others who care about the future of this province to do the same and to oppose this bill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to this bill? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm rising today to speak to supplementary supply. This is not the first time this government has brought forward a supplementary supply bill unnecessarily. Many governments have done it in the past. Not all supplementary supply is wrong-headed, but it is a concept regularly abused in our legislative system.

Supplementary supply is used far too often as a means for governments to spend beyond what was budgeted at the beginning of the year. We desperately need this government to be able to live within the sums in budgets at the beginning of the year. The sums of money that it is budgeting at the beginning of the year are still recklessly high, but by the end of the year this government consistently comes in spending more, and then they come to this House and they ask forgiveness. They ask permission. It's essentially: act first and ask forgiveness later rather than asking for the authorization of this House, this Legislature, up front.

You know, if this was the first time this government came forward with a supplementary supply and it was for genuine emergencies and unforeseen expenses, perhaps we could have an easier time stomaching it. There are some commendable items in this bill, but it contains far too many extraordinary expenses for it to pass muster with the Official Opposition.

I'll start with some of the pros. There are not many pros I would normally say about this government, but there are a few positive measures in this supplementary supply for things that the Wildrose Official Opposition consider to be a priority. There are funds to support smaller class sizes. That's something that's positive. That's something that we needed to move forward on. There is funding for those affected by the 2013 floods in southern Alberta. There is long-term care and affordable supportive living funding for seniors and increased resources for the justice system.

This is something that the Member for Airdrie has spent a lot of time focusing on, that we have enough Crown prosecutors to actually meet the caseloads that come before our courts. The fact that people can commit serious crimes in this province and not even come to trial is an absolute disgrace. The Member for Airdrie, the Official Opposition shadow minister of Justice, has passionately worked on this file as has the Member for Calgary-West, the third party's Justice critic. They have passionately advocated for having enough resources for our Crown prosecutors to ensure that when people commit crimes in this province, they can actually have a court date. So that's positive.

This is very interesting. They managed to find money to reduce school fees by 25 per cent despite the government running on a commitment to abolish school fees. They ran in their campaign to abolish school fees, not cut them by 25 per cent. Now, this is a positive step in the right direction, but we have not heard from this government if they intend to go the whole way towards a hundred per cent, with 25 per cent as a step on the road to achieving that, or if the 25 per cent is just where they intend to go and maybe a hundred per cent if they find some loose change under the cushions. But loose change under the cushions they did find, and this is very interesting.

The government says that any efficiencies, any savings whatsoever found in government would be cataclysmic, that it would return us to a state of nature where mankind would live, where life would be "nasty, brutish, and short," to quote Thomas Hobbes. Finding efficiencies within government will result in some sort of libertarian dystopia if the opposition does it, but if the government manages to find any savings, well, that's just good management. You see, that is the hypocrisy of this government, Madam Speaker. That is the hypocrisy of a government that says that you can't do something when one party does it, but if another party does it, well, that's just fine. It's hypocritical in the extreme for a government to act that way.

Now, we do commend them for finding some savings. They say that they're paying for the reduction in school fees through finding efficiencies within the Department of Education. That's fantastic news. Now the government has admitted that you can find efficiencies within a department, that you can actually deliver the same services for less money, that that is at least theoretically possible. The government has now admitted that openly. I look forward to the government standing up after this. Maybe we can engage in some back-and-forth debate. I would encourage them to stand up and tell us in what other areas they think they can find savings within the government to save taxpayers' money, to deliver quality public services but at a cheaper price point. Because we know they can.

We are spending 20 per cent more per capita on the cost of government in this province than British Columbia is. That's British Columbia with a Liberal government. [interjection] By the standards of Liberals I'd say they're pretty good, though. But British Columbia with a Liberal government, Madam Speaker, who manages to provide a very high-quality level of public services but manages to do it at 20 cents less per dollar of government than Alberta. They have similar demographics to us. They have a similar standard of living. They have a similar size of population. Among our ability to compare ourselves to other jurisdictions in the country, they're probably the closest that we can compare to, yet they manage to provide government 20 cents on the dollar cheaper than Alberta does. So we know we can find savings and efficiencies within government. When the NDP say that they do it, they can do it. But when we say that we can do it, it's going to be just abolishing government, and we're going to be living in some sort of Ayn Rand nightmare.

Now, the Official Opposition has provided a detailed document on how we can get back to balance, how we can balance our budget, how we can save some money. I'm going to run members of this House through a few of those recommendations, that I hope they'll take heed of. We have proposed finding in year 1 of our fiscal plan $2.3 billion in operational savings alone. We believe that the government should – well, I'll run through some of that $2.3 billion, some food for thought for members of the government side. We can reduce the bureaucracy through attrition and save $312 million every single year. Seven to 10 per cent of Alberta's bureaucrats resign or retire every single year, and we currently have an unreasonably high managers-to-workers ratio. The Official Opposition believes that there is room for government departments and AHS to do more with less. Responsibility and authority if decentralized and reallocated to the front lines and if we only hire positions for the most essential front-line jobs: we can save $312 million every single year.

Now, when we define bureaucrats here, we are speaking about strictly the GOA, government of Alberta, employees, with exceptions for some front-line employees, those being corrections workers, Crown prosecutors. We are excluding those categories of employees when we talk about this. We're talking mostly about bona fide bureaucrats working in office towers and bureaucrats within Alberta Health Services. Within Alberta Health Services we're not talking about doctors or nurses. We're talking about people who move paper around. Many of those people are necessary. You need to have bureaucrats, but we don't need to have the number of bureaucrats that we do. By reducing the number, freeing it through attrition while allowing for essential hiring for certain positions, we can save $312 million.

If we freeze all other wages and salaries for government employees across the government, we can also save $210 million a year. Average weekly earnings for Albertans right now are down significantly, with unemployment rates the highest in the country. Alberta still has one of the most expensive and highly paid governments in the country, however. While the private sector suffers, the public sector has not seen any changes whatsoever. We will make it clear across the government that not one penny will go to increases for salaries until we get back to a balanced budget.

When we're going through tough times as a province, we need to do it together. All Albertans, every single one of us, needs to shoulder the burden, and it is unreasonable to expect that the private sector has to carry a hundred per cent of the burden by itself, without any help from government. Instead, right now we shelter government. We act as if we are still in boom times. We act as if oil was still $100 a barrel. We act as if we had a balanced budget. They're living in a fantasyland where the private sector carries the entire burden by itself. So freezing wages across the government will save us another $210 million.

Now, perhaps one of the stupidest things done by this government was to nationalize linen services. I can't think of a more boneheaded decision that this government could take than to say that it is unreasonable for the private sector to wash and press linens, that that is an essential role of the government. You know, I believe that government should do what the private sector cannot do reasonably by itself. One thing the private sector is very capable of doing, Madam Speaker, is washing clothes, changing light bulbs. These are things that, traditionally, free men and women have been able to do pretty well on their own for the existence of human history. We've managed to change our own light bulbs, we've managed to wash our own clothes, we've managed to press our own linens, but the government has seen fit to nationalize linens for our health care system.

This is an extremely expensive measure. It's not done to provide better services for Albertans; it's done purely to increase the power of NDP union bosses. It's done purely for political reasons, to increase the muscle of the AFL to be able to bully people around and buy political power in this province. It was done for purely political reasons. They have had to pay out a significant amount of money.

We believe we can save $60 million over 10 years if we reprivatize linen services in Alberta. How crazy is that as a phrase, to have to be able to say, "reprivatize linen services"? You know we're living in the twilight zone or an NDP government if that's something I actually have to say, that we have to reprivatize linen services in Alberta. Now, that is $60 million over 10 years. An internal analysis from AHS lists the buyout of this program at $200 million, a $200 million penalty for getting rid of private linen services. So if we were to scrap this boneheaded decision, we can save taxpayers $206 million this year alone. If there's one piece of low-hanging fruit that saves some taxpayers' money around here, that's probably it, Madam Speaker.

Now, if we were to get in year 1 from all the different spending decreases that we've listed, that would bring our overall operational expenses down, meaning we'd borrow less money, meaning that even in that first year we would save $45 million on interest payments alone. So by borrowing less money, we're going to have more money to be able to spend on actual government services and programs.

We're going to be spending under the NDP's plan $2.6 billion – $2.6 billion – every single year on debt interest payments alone. That could pay for the combined departments of Justice, Energy, Environment and Parks. Combined: $2.3 billion. Now, that's a lot of money to just completely waste.

It reminds me of, you know, when the Joker piled all of his money up in a big pyramid, and he sat at the top, and he just poured gasoline and lit it on fire. When he lit a big pyramid of money on fire, he just wanted to watch it burn. In fact, they probably got more use out of just watching the money burn than the NDP gets out of simply giving it to the banks. You know, I never thought I'd see the day when the NDP are the party of big banks, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) does come into effect. Are there any questions or comments? The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you so much, Madam Speaker and to the whip for granting me permission to have a moment to engage on this and to say that I am shocked by the comparison between building schools, building hospitals, maintaining public health care, public education, maintaining the current mix of private and public laundry service delivery in the province, maintaining these essential services that Albertans rely on so desperately – I am shocked at the comparison that having nurses in hospitals is the equivalent to lighting money on fire.

I am shocked by the comparison between staffing and doing the renovations, that have been long awaited, at the Strathmore hospital. For years and years and years they were promised by the previous government, and then those promises were broken. This government steps up, and we make good for the people of Strathmore-Brooks. We moved forward on the important renovations to their hospital: equated to lighting piles of money on fire, Madam Speaker.

I am shocked that the hard-working men and women who show up at those facilities to do the construction, to make sure that they're making life better for Alberta families, to make sure that they're putting food on the table for their own families are being referred to as the equivalent of lighting a pile of money on fire, Madam Speaker.

I am shocked that the commitment to build an overpass over Gaetz Avenue, a highway that many people in this Chamber drive on at least twice a week, is being seen as the equivalent of lighting a pile of money on fire, Madam Speaker.

I am shocked by the fact that the member opposite, who advocates regularly for us to spend more money in his own constituency, says that investing in communities and families throughout the province is the equivalent of lighting a pile of money on fire, Madam Speaker.

I am very disappointed that these are the kinds of remarks we're receiving from Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition this afternoon. I think that the people of Alberta deserve a government that is on their side, that is continuing to build and maintain the infrastructure that was neglected for so many years, with so many failed promises in the past, Madam Speaker. Probably what I'm shocked by most is that this rhetoric shocks me because I hear it regularly. I think that we deserve a little less rhetoric, a little more reality, and a little more faith in the working men and women of this province, who work alongside every one of us every day to make life better for Alberta families.

I guess my question – no. Those are comments. I don't even have a question, Madam Speaker. That's all I have to say.

The Deputy Speaker: Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. If the Minister of Health and Deputy Premier is asking for a little less rhetoric, perhaps she'll stop referring to dirty rodents around here.

Now, the Minister of Health and Deputy Premier is deliberately misinterpreting the debate in this House. She is deliberately not understanding what we're saying, as she so often does in question period. Now, when we talk about wasted money, lighting money on fire, we're talking about interest payments. You know what taxpayers get for interest payments, Madam Speaker? Nothing. You know what Albertans get for interest payments? Nothing. Two point three billion dollars – $2.3 billion – spent on interest payments: it only benefits one group of people, the bankers. Only the bankers benefit from this. The only people applauding this budget right now are bankers, who are rubbing their hands at the opportunity to be able to lend this government more money.

You know what? When this government talks about, you know, the dangers of payday loans, they really ought to consider their own bad borrowing habits right now. We're talking about a government that is practically a spending junkie. These guys – these guys – cannot get their borrowing under control. They're addicted to it, and that is why under this government's fiscal plan our debt is going to climb to a record $71 billion a year – $71 billion a year – under best-case circumstances.

To keep it at $71 billion and not any higher than that, oil must hit $68 a barrel. There need to be multiple pipelines, not just under construction, not just even built but actually pumping oil to international markets at that time. To meet our revenue projections, we also need 6 per cent of GDP growth, a very handsome level of economic growth. Now, those three things, the trifecta of economic growth: I hope those things come true.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I rise to request unanimous consent of the House to revert to introductions.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is my pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some very honoured guests who have joined us in the gallery today. I understand that the Chinese national team for gymnastics is watching us in the galleries and observing the great traditions that we hold here in the Assembly. [Remarks in Mandarin] If they'd please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Welcome.

Bill 5

Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2017

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's my privilege to rise today on behalf of the hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance and move third reading of Bill 5, Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2017.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any hon. members wishing to speak to this bill? The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Today I rise to oppose Bill 5, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2017. You know, I realize what the function of this bill is, and it's just to be able to keep the lights on and make the operation of government be able to continue past April 1. It's not that action that I oppose. What I'm opposed to is the lack of clarity in this bill.

Bill 5 is very much like a blank cheque that the government wants us to approve. If I was to agree with this bill, which I would not, I would in essence be saying to my constituents that I explicitly understand what the money is going to be spent on. Frankly, I don't know what the money is going to be spent on explicitly. There are only six measly pages in this Bill 5. We have four of them with some numbers on them, and it doesn't really help you a lot. It doesn't explain where the money is going to be spent specifically. This is what I would say is a job that's either done too quickly or is done to hide some facts: four pages from Health, Education, Advanced Education, all the way to Treasury Board and Finance and everything in between, including my shadow Ministry of Infrastructure. There are, frankly, no explanations, and that's simply not going to cut it.

Voting on something this vague wouldn't be fair to the people that I represent. I don't think anyone would want me to agree with the handouts of their hard-earned dollars without a decent explanation. They are simply asking for a handout, something that I'm not interested in agreeing to. The interim supply, obviously, does not have any savings in it, as far as I can tell, to at least counter the bloated spending. I cannot see any budget constraints or any wisdom used in the process. Is this a continuation of last year's budget, when the government was $10.8 billion in the hole, or is it based on this year's budget, where they're going to be $10.3 billion in the hole by the time we're done? I don't even know which one it's based on.

Last year and now this year we seem to be going through the same exercise, where the government holds its hand out and through supplementary supply blows past the promises made in the past. They can't seem to keep to a budget, and it's like they don't even care. I can see this government next year asking for another interim supply blank cheque just because they don't know how to keep their promises. They can't seem to rein in the spending. This government clearly has a spending problem, and my colleagues and I are not in favour of it. This so-called advance on a paycheque that provides no real details is lacking leadership. Albertans need real leadership, and sticking to a budget and being accountable with the money being spent is leadership that the Wildrose would provide.

Let's call this what it is. This is just an extension of a budget that should have been completed in a year's time. If the NDP were an employee, that would be like this NDP government basically asking for 14 months of paycheques for one year's work. Folks, that's an additional 20 per cent pay increase. I could possibly understand if this was the NDP's first budget and we knew they needed to take a bit more time to figure things out, but this is not the first budget. This is the third budget. It's the third time at the rodeo, and we haven't seen one delivered on time. Each time we have to have interim supply. Each and every time the government keeps asking for a blank cheque at the end with the interim supply. It's unbelievable.

My colleagues and I have many questions about what is contained in Bill 5, and we're being laughed at with our questions and not being taken seriously. We want to know if there will be grants that will be slid through because of lack of transparency. What will the money go towards? As a person that has run several businesses in the past, I have always wanted to know where my hard-earned money was going to go before I approved any of the bills that came across my desk. This goes against what I believe and what I suppose should be any logical businessperson's concept of running an efficient business.

I would ask the following questions, Madam Speaker, in a business transaction. What am I as a businessman buying when I'm purchasing something? How much am I paying? I suppose that with this I know how much the cost is, so I've got that one part out of here. But what am I getting in exchange for what I've just bought? What are the deliverables? What are the goods and the services? Are there satisfactory checks and balances? This is why I'm so concerned here. I don't think any of these questions, frankly, have been answered, let alone addressed.

There are too many unknowns here, and for those reasons I cannot support Bill 5. I would encourage all the members of this House to consider what I've said and vote against this bill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to Bill 5? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I want to thank the Member for Battle River-Wainwright for his comments. I think he gave a very good overview of the Official Opposition's concerns with this bill and interim supply.

I'll focus my remarks on one area in particular, though, contained in this bill, and that is the government's breaking of their own law, the government's own Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act. This act was brought in by this government themselves, when they repealed the Fiscal Responsibility Act. Now, the Fiscal Responsibility Act was introduced by Ralph Klein and Jim Dinning in the 1990s to try to prevent the kind of out-of-control, reckless spending that had taken place in the 1980s and early 1990s that led to the first big debt crisis in this province. I shouldn't say the first. We had had debt crises before under Premier Aberhart. But we had been facing a growing debt crisis in this province, a budget problem, and a large degree of unaccountability in our finances, and Ralph Klein and Jim Dinning imposed one of the strictest and most fulsome fiscal accountability laws in the country to keep government on track.

Over the last decade that piece of legislation was slowly watered down to allow for more borrowing, to allow more leniency for government to spend money that was not budgeted, and it had predictable consequences. By the time the NDP came to power, that piece of legislation had been severely weakened. But that was not good enough for the NDP; they had to outright kill it. So they repealed the Fiscal Responsibility Act in its entirety, and they replaced it with their own Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act. That act included a debt ratio of 15 per cent of debt to GDP and gave the government a generous 1 per cent grace room in going over budget on operational spending. If the government spent, let's just say, 100 units on operational spending, they were allowed to go up to 1 per cent beyond that without the authorization of this Legislature. That was intended mostly for emergencies and contingencies that would be unforeseen. One per cent: that's a fairly generous amount of room.

The other major part of that bill was a debt cap of 50 per cent of debt to GDP. As I spoke of earlier, that debt cap of 50 per cent of debt to GDP lasted about six months before this government repealed their very own debt cap. They gutted that part of their own legislation because they couldn't stick to it. We warned them that that debt cap was going to be exceeded, that their revenue projections were far too optimistic, and that we expected that they would exceed their spending estimates in budgets. And, sure enough, only six months after they introduced it, they repealed their own debt cap. We warned that that would happen. They said that we were fearmongers for it, but then they did it themselves very meekly.

They didn't send out any news releases about that. They send out new releases about every positive news story that they think they can get. I must have missed it somewhere – maybe my e-mail wasn't working that day – but I didn't get the news release when the government announced that they were repealing their own debt cap. But repeal it they did. They weren't very proud of it because they didn't like to talk about it, and they still don't like to talk about it.

I would encourage the Deputy Premier or a member on the government side to rise – the Member for Calgary-Currie likes to engage in these debates with me. He's actually pretty good at this stuff. I hope he'll get up. I think he will. He's a very, very good debater. I encourage the Member for Calgary-Currie to get up and engage on this issue and explain why the government repealed their own debt cap. He should stand up and defend the interests of his constituents in this House and why it was necessary to repeal their own debt cap.

That was one part of the government's own Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act that they gutted.

Now, the other major part, as I said, was the contingency that allows the government to spend 1 per cent over their budget. Shockingly, when the government released their third-quarter fiscal and economic update, they admitted that they broke their own law. They did that because they spent $1.1 billion – $1.1 billion – illegally on the early shutdown of coal, to buy out these coal companies. I want to just tell those coal companies: don't cash that cheque just yet. We need to keep Hanna alive. We need to keep Forestburg alive. We're going to save these communities and undo the destructive shutdown of coal that the NDP are doing right now.

The shutdown of coal is not just bad for those communities, trying to wipe them off the map, and it's not just bad for electricity prices in Alberta. It's also bad for taxpayers because taxpayers have to pony up $1.1 billion for the early shutdown of coal. That is money that is completely wasted. We may as well have just had a nice bonfire with it. At least, we could have heated the place without paying the carbon tax for a while. Instead, the government decided to spend $1.1 billion for the early phase-out of coal.

Now, that's not where it ends. That money was spent illegally. Illegally spent money. When normal people break the law, there's normally a consequence. If you speed and you get a ticket, you pay a fine. If a member across were to be very upset with me and hit me, they would get charged with assault, and there would be a criminal offence. There are consequences for breaking laws for normal people. But when politicians break their own laws, you know what the consequences are? Nothing. Nothing, Madam Speaker, when they break their own laws. All they had to do was admit that they broke their own laws, and the Finance minister under questioning did in fact admit that he broke his own laws. It's essentially like – you know, I figured out a trick when I was little kid that if my parents caught me doing something that I wasn't supposed to be doing, I would get in trouble, but if I did something bad and I just went and told them that I did it, at least for a few times I figured out that my parents would say: "I'm very glad you were honest with me, son. You're not going to be in trouble."

That's what the NDP have figured out here. They can break the law. They can break their own laws that they wrote and they passed. They can break their own laws and just say: well, I'm sorry, Albertans, that we broke the law, but I hope you'll be happy that we've been forthright with you that we broke that law. But they didn't send out a news release saying it because they weren't very proud of it. They put it in small print at the bottom of the third-quarter fiscal update, that they are in technical violation of the law. Well, a technical violation of the law is still a violation of the law, and it's not merely technical. They broke it because they spent $1.1 billion without the authority of this Legislature.

Now, the reason we have a Legislature right now in Alberta is the long parliamentary tradition of Westminster coming from England, which goes back over 500 years, and the fight between Parliament and King for control of the budget. You know, England fought civil wars over the right of Parliament to have ultimate spending authority, that the king, essentially the executive and cabinet, could not spend money without the direct authorization of Parliament. That is the very fundamental, most important role of Parliament, of Legislatures, that the government is not allowed to spend money not authorized by Parliament, and that is what this government has done. They have spent money not authorized by Parliament and not just some loose change found in the couch: $1.1 billion. For that $1.1 billion we get absolutely nothing in return. It's completely wasted money.

This is a disrespect of this Legislature. It is a disrespect of the history of this institution of a Westminster parliament that we have the sole discretion to authorize the government, the Crown, the cabinet acting on behalf of the Crown to spend public monies. They have done it without the authorization of this House. It is completely disrespectful to every member of this House that they would spend money without its authorization, and it is disrespectful to the traditions of this place and the traditions that came before us in Westminster.

Mr. Cooper: Haven't they been found in contempt over this?

Mr. Fildebrandt: This government has been found in contempt of this Legislature. They may actually be the only government ever found in contempt of this Legislature, Madam Speaker. Hopefully, they will be the last. It may be one of several times that they are found because they are acting illegally. They are breaking their own laws. We need at least one member of the government on the other side to stand up and explain clearly why they broke the law, why they saw it necessary to go around traditions that go back half a millennium, that are the very foundation of this institution, that gives parliament the unquestioned, supreme right to authorize spending for government. The government is not parliament. Those are two technically different things.

I would encourage the Deputy Premier or, even better, the Member for Calgary-Currie . . .

Ms Hoffman: Better?

Mr. Fildebrandt: I'm sorry, Deputy Premier. We haven't really got into it yet. The Member for Calgary-Currie and I have a bit of a tradition. Every year the Member for Calgary-Currie and I normally put a little money on the table to bet about how the budget is going to work out. You know, I've found that the Member for Calgary-Currie is a very healthy supplement to my salary. I have found our relationship to be most profitable and most enjoyable. He is an excellent debater. You know, I'll make a bet with him right now. I'm going to bet that the government is projecting a $71 billion debt by fiscal year 2019-20. I'll bet him 20 bucks right now, with 2 to 1 odds. I'll give him 2 to 1 odds that that debt will be bigger than $71 billion by the time that fiscal year concludes.

I'll close my debate on that.

An Hon. Member: Can I bet?

Mr. Fildebrandt: It's a standing offer to anyone who wants to take it, but it's particularly offered to the Member for Calgary-Currie, and if the Deputy Premier feels a little left out from that, I will offer her 2 to 1 odds as well.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Any other speakers to the bill under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Cooper: Right after 29(2)(a).

The Deputy Speaker: Okay. Go ahead, then, hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Cooper: It's okay. It's Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, and I actually only rise to request unanimous consent of the House to go to one-minute bells, please.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Deputy Speaker: Next speaker to the bill?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question? The hon. minister to close debate.

Ms Ganley: So closed, Madam Speaker.

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 2 An Act to Remove Barriers for Survivors of Sexual and Domestic Violence

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I look forward to tabling an amendment that I've raised privately with the minister and I hope will be favourable to just adding the scope to the bill and clarity to the bill.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A1.
Go ahead, hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Chair. I very much support the intent of this bill. I am slightly concerned that its protections may not be afforded to all survivors due to a technicality. Bill 2, An Act to Remove Barriers for Survivors of Sexual and Domestic Violence, currently covers survivors who are either a minor, in an intimate relationship with or dependent on the perpetrator at the time that the sexual misconduct or nonsexual assault occurred. It is the term "dependency" that concerns me.

A relationship with dependency might not be an accurate description of incidents where the survivor and the perpetrators are co-workers with the same level of seniority such as the recent high-profile case of female police officers who were affected in the Calgary Police Service after enduring years of harassment from colleagues. It's not clear if dependency applies to harassment or exploitation of an adult student by a university professor or a postsecondary instructor. It's unfortunate that the specific mention of co-workers was left out as it would give confidence, I think, and encourage people to come forward. Even though it may be implied, it's not explicit.

The bill cannot be amended at this time to include references to co-workers since that would involve altering the legislation, which is not under current consideration.

Consequently, I would like to propose an amendment aimed at reducing the bill's ambiguity by inserting an additional category of protection. I have the appropriate number of copies as circulated, and my amendment reads as follows. I move that Bill 2, An Act to Remove Barriers for Survivors of Sexual and Domestic Violence, be amended in section 3 in the proposed section 3.1(1) as follows: in clause (b) by striking out "or" at the end of subclause (ii), by adding "or" at the end of subclause (iii), and by adding the following after subclause (iii):

- (iv) the person who committed the misconduct was in a position of trust or authority in relation to the person with the claim.

The second part, (b), in clause (c) by striking out "or" at the end of subclause (ii), by adding "or" at the end of subclause (iii), and by adding the following subclause (iv):

- (iv) the person who committed the assault or battery was in a position of trust or authority in relation to the person with the claim.

Essentially, the amendment seeks to amend Bill 2 to ensure that its protections apply to a broader category of survivors; namely, that the person who committed the misconduct was in the position of trust or authority in relation to the person with the claim. A "position of trust or authority" is admittedly a general term, and that's exactly the point. My amendment seeks to ensure these limitations apply to a broader category of survivors.

Unfortunately, short of rewriting the entire proposed section 3.1, which I'm sure the government members would not support, my amendment cannot capture everything in terms of eliminating the limitation period for sexual harassment claims. Instead, it builds on the bill's original wording but doesn't radically alter it. Since the sexual misconduct section deals primarily with power differentials, this proposed bill is in line with the government's intent. Regrettably, it will not include situations where workplace sexual harassment occurs among relative equals, such as the situation in Calgary that I mentioned.

Again, I hope the government would consider bringing forward further legislation that would deal explicitly with workplace sexual harassment, but for now the government may wish to argue that what my amendment seeks to accomplish is already covered by subclause (iii), which deals with situations of dependency, as in financial, emotional, physical, or otherwise. However, this is far from certain in cases of workplace dynamics or adult educational settings, and I think we owe it to survivors to be as inclusive as possible.

I call on my colleagues to support the amendment to ensure that more survivors feel included under these important protections and will more readily come forward.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I rise to speak against the amendment in this case. We were very clear in selecting incredibly broad and inclusive language. This, in fact, puts Alberta, which was behind every other province in the country, out in front so that we have the most inclusive language of any province. As I've said several times, this will include sexual assault as well as sexual misconduct and assault in certain relationships.

The relationship that the member mentions, one of dependence, is quite broadly drafted. It includes financial dependence, emotional dependence, and it would definitely cover what he is proposing. I think we're pretty confident that the language we have chosen is inclusive of the same people that the member's amendment would include. We're confident that we'll be removing barriers for survivors of sexual and domestic violence and that we will be ahead compared to any other jurisdiction.

Because the amendment proposed is covered by the language in our act, there's some concern that accepting the amendment would create additional confusion for the courts. Courts have specific rules around if you've already included something and then you include a second provision trying to include a subset of the first thing you've included. It creates unnecessary confusion and can result in people that you didn't intend to exclude being excluded.

Madam Chair, I think it is important that we stick with the broad and inclusive language that we already have. I think that is pretty much all I have to say about that.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A1? Seeing none, I'll call the question:

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Chair: Any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'll just speak briefly and generally to the bill. I'm pleased to be able to speak to this, and I want to thank my colleagues on all sides of the House for being willing to support this bill.

It proposes amendments to the Limitations Act that would help survivors of sexual and domestic violence by allowing them the time they need to come forward and file a civil claim. Right now in Alberta, Madam Chair, as I've mentioned, if a person wants to sue for this type of assault, the action must be started within two years of the person knowing about the incident. There are provisions in the current legislation that suspend the limitation period in certain circumstances such as those involving minors and fraudulent concealment or disability, but we know that many survivors need more time.

It's time to do more to help protect those who have experienced sexual and domestic violence. As I just referenced, Bill 2 would remove the limitation period for sexual assault or other sexual misconduct and nonsexual assault involving a minor, intimate relationship, or a dependant. We recognize that survivors of sexual and domestic violence have a difficult journey ahead, and sometimes the decision to come forward can be exceptionally personal. Each survivor will have their own journey. Removing the limitation period empowers survivors to come forward on their own terms when they are ready.

Madam Chair, this is the message we received when we introduced the bill. Organizations that work with survivors told us that this opens one more door for survivors to come forward and provides one more option for a survivor's journey. This change in legislation gives survivors time to heal and allows them to hold perpetrators to account if and when they choose. The same message is what prompted us to draft the legislation in the first place. This is a change that Albertans have asked for, and we know it's the right thing to do.

Madam Chair, I'll just speak very briefly to the term "sexual misconduct." Removing the limitation period for claims stemming from sexual misconduct in intimate relationships would increase recourse for people who have endured a broad range of unwelcome behaviours. These behaviours would include but are not limited to sexual exploitation, sexual harassment, stalking, indecent exposure, voyeurism, or distributing sexually explicit photographs or videos without an individual's consent.

The provisions of the bill would apply retroactively, meaning that it would allow claims that stem from incidents which predate its coming into force. Applying these changes retroactively is consistent with other jurisdictions and aligns with the purpose of the bill, which is to recognize that survivors of sexual and domestic violence may need more time to come forward and no survivor should be limited by a legal deadline.

During second reading we heard from many of my colleagues who were brave enough to speak about their own experiences. I want to thank them for their courage. These many individual experiences highlight how each survivor has their own journey. They also illustrate how tragically prevalent these crimes are. I hope they will remind survivors out there that they are never alone. I would also like to thank the many agencies that work to support survivors on these journeys.

Madam Chair, every Albertan deserves to feel safe and respected in their communities, homes, and workplaces. One in 3 women and 1 in 6 men will experience sexual violence in their lifetime. We hope that this bill will make their lives a little bit better. I'm gratified by the support this bill has received so far, and I look forward to further discussion.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Madam Chair. I have an amendment I would like to pass out.

The Chair: This will be amendment A2.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today to introduce a very simple and clear amendment to extend the protection provided by this very important bill. I remember that we heard the personal and very touching statements by members on both sides of the House last week, you know, and it made me think: how can we work together in collaboration to make this bill stronger to help Albertans? The bill before us now removes the time limit to file an action for victims of sexual misconduct and domestic violence for three groups, which are minors, persons in an intimate relationship, and dependants.

This amendment adds protection for a fourth group; that is, disabled persons. This amendment recognizes that those vulnerable Albertans would also benefit from additional time to file a civil action against those who perpetuate sexual misconduct or domestic violence. Madam Chair, the existing Limitations Act pauses the clock for persons under disability for the period when they're disabled, but we should ensure that all individuals who are victimized when they are disabled or victims who later become disabled, perhaps due to the misconduct or domestic violence itself, have full opportunity to this act.

This amendment would change section 3 of the current bill. I would move that Bill 2, An Act to Remove Barriers for Survivors of Sexual and Domestic Violence, be amended in section 3, in the proposed section 3.1(1), as follows, that (a) in clause (b) by striking out "or" at the end of subclause (ii), by adding "or" at the end of subclause (iii), and by adding the following after subclause (iii):

(iv) the person with the claim was a person under disability. And the second part, (b), in clause (c) by striking out “or” at the end of subclause (ii), by adding “or” to the end of subclause (iii), and by adding the following after subclause (iii):

(iv) the person with the claim was a person under disability.

I hope that all members of this House see why this simple amendment to this bill can go a long way to protecting a person with a disability. I want to congratulate the hon. Minister of Justice for drafting this bill and working very hard, especially working with all the different agencies to protect vulnerable Albertans. I think that by adding this fourth group it would strengthen this bill, and I hope all members of this House would support this amendment.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Connolly: Well, thank you very much, Madam Chair. I’d like to thank the member for this amendment. I’d also like to thank the member for working very closely with our government and with the Minister of Justice and her office as well to create this amendment, which, in our view, really does help in a way. The way the bill is worded now, chances are that this situation would be already under the bill. However, it really more kind of brings it all in if the individual comes out of a guardianship situation, for instance. As it sits right now, it does already help those who are under guardianship or have someone above them if they are being attacked by that person.

I’d really like to thank the member for this amendment. I’d suggest that all members of the Assembly vote for this amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. It’s a pleasure to rise and speak in favour of amendment A2 by my colleague from the third party. I’d just like to thank him for that. I would also just like to extend some thanks to the government side. It’s always nice when we can see a good idea for a good idea and that the source of that idea isn’t necessarily a stumbling block to good governance. When the government does the right thing, I’m not afraid to acknowledge that and say thank you.

I’ll be encouraging all of my colleagues on this side of the House to support this. It’s important in this process of supporting Bill 2, supporting those who are victims of sexual abuse and domestic violence, that we do everything that we can to ensure that all who need to be protected are protected, certainly if only in clarifying the legislation, which I think is our responsibility, to have the best piece of legislation the first to pass this Legislature as opposed to having to come back and create clarity in the future.

I appreciate the amendment. I look forward to supporting it and thank the government for doing the same.

5:00

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gottfried: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today to speak in support of my hon. colleague’s amendment to Bill 2, An Act to Remove Barriers for Survivors of Sexual and Domestic Violence. Bill 2 is an exceptional piece of legislation which I’m sure will garner support from all sides of this House, and I’m very pleased to note that that appears to be the case. Further, the debate around this bill has been very emotional, and I’ve been inspired by the strength of many members who have chosen to share their personal experiences, under, I’m sure, very difficult circumstances to do so, with sexual and domestic violence.

Madam Chair, these crimes are repugnant, and I feel this debate was strengthened and grounded by these personal stories. I’d like to share as well that I have someone close to me who also suffered abuse in the past and had, you know, a brave opportunity to come forward with that, but it would have not been allowed under this previous legislation. My wife’s family also has a cousin who is physically disabled and living in affordable housing, supported by AISH. It is a very mixed residence, and there are people there that have had many different challenges in their lives before, and we worry about her safety because of her naïveté and some of the protected environment that she’s grown up in. She’s 63 years old but is in a position of vulnerability, I would say, in many cases, and we worry about her and watch closely over her. It’s very heart-warming for me to see the acceptance of an amendment here, again, where we have the opportunity to strengthen legislation through collaboration and co-operation. I think that’s a very positive thing.

Any additional avenues for justice, whether they be civil or criminal, that we can provide to victims of these horrific acts is something we should all support. That’s why I’m proud to support this amendment from the Member for Calgary-Greenway and to thank him for his thoughtfulness in bringing this forward. Persons living with a disability are often very reliant on those who help care for them, whether that be a health care or community supports professional, friend, or family member. As repulsive, Madam Chair, as this may seem, it is often these people, that are close to the victims, in positions of power that sometimes use this reliance and their vulnerability to perpetrate sexual and physical abuse. This abuse can often continue without being reported because of their vulnerability and of the power that a caregiver or worker, that is ostensibly supporting them and providing services to them as a disabled individual over time, especially if that individual has a diminished mental or even physical capacity that may mean that they are further dependent.

By extending the indefinite timeline to disabled Albertans who wish to file a civil claim when they are victims of domestic or sexual violence, we’re ensuring that this vulnerable group has additional avenues to seek civil justice and restitution without limitations to time, which I think is extremely important because sometimes people take time to come grips with their ability to have the strength to come forward and challenge those who have perpetrated this on them.

In closing, I feel that this is a friendly amendment. I applaud the Member for Calgary-Greenway and the Minister of Justice for working closely and collaborating on this. This bill is for all Albertans. My understanding is that the minister has been well consulted and included in the development of this amendment as well, and I’m glad to hear some members of the other side also speaking in favour of this.

For these reasons, I will be supporting this amendment, and I encourage all members of this House to do the same. Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2?

Seeing none, I’ll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A2 carried]

The Chair: Any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to Bill 2? The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Drever: Thank you, Madam Chair. I’m just so happy to stand here today and support Bill 2, An Act to Remove Barriers for Survivors of Sexual and Domestic Violence. Back in 2015 my private member’s bill, Bill 204, Residential Tenancies (Safer Spaces for Victims of Domestic Violence) Amendment Act, 2015, passed in this House unanimously. The reason I chose to do my private member's bill on helping victims of domestic violence is because I'm passionate on ending violence against women and girls. In preparing that bill, I spoke to dozens of survivors as well as people who work with them. I heard wrenching stories as well as stories of hope, but one thing that came through in every single one was that people do not and cannot come forward until they are ready. But today Alberta law doesn't fully recognize that fact. Instead, the Limitations Act creates barriers for women and victims, for anyone who endured sexual or domestic assault. It sets an artificial calendar with a strict two-year deadline. It is out of touch with the reality that so many face.

In fact, it saddens me to say that Alberta has one of the highest rates of domestic violence in Canada. I hope that we can all agree that Alberta's laws should protect people from sexual assault and domestic violence, but now the Limitations Act protects not those who suffer from those assaults but their attackers. A civil suit is more than just restitution, even though that restitution can be important. It's about accountability, and it can be about closure. We want our civil justice system in Alberta to support people in their healing, not to turn them away because that healing hasn't happened quickly enough. Thinking back to my consultations for my private member's bill, there were words that came up again and again – dignity, respect, and compassion – things everyone deserves to find in our justice system and nobody more so than people who have survived sexual assault or intimate partner violence.

Let's talk for a moment about domestic violence. For many women who are in abusive relationships, it can be hard to leave an abusive partner, and statistics say that it can take up to seven times for someone to leave their abusive partner. It can also be really hard to report this violence, let alone take that partner to court, especially if the alternative is homelessness or poverty. For immigrant women or women facing other issues, the obstacles can be even more daunting. For them to finally find the courage and the resources to leave and then come forward is a momentous step, and it can be empowering. It can be a tremendous relief, but it's often very difficult.

It's also important to note that violence doesn't discriminate. It can affect everyone and anyone, but the reality is that women are far more targeted, and this includes trans women, disabled women, women of colour, and women of all faiths. The last thing our justice system should tell them is: sorry; time is up.

I would like to take a moment to talk about a staggering reality for many indigenous women. Indigenous women face life-threatening gender-based violence and disproportionately experience violent crimes because of hatred and racism. By better understanding the severity of these issues, we can better work towards breaking down the cycle of violence. Statistics Canada reported that indigenous women are more likely to experience more severe and potentially life-threatening forms of domestic and family violence than nonindigenous women. For example, 54 per cent of indigenous women reported severe forms of family violence such as being beaten, being choked, having a gun or knife used against them, or being sexually assaulted versus 37 per cent of nonindigenous women. Indigenous women 15 years and older are three to five times more likely to experience violence than nonindigenous women, and rates of spousal assault against indigenous women are more than three times higher than those against nonindigenous women.

In Calgary alone there are 16,000 domestic calls and complaints every year. That doesn't count the women who will never report it, who will endure pain and violence in fear and silence.

Let me say this, Madam Chair. Apart from a bill's legal impact, conversations that help to reduce stigma encourage more people to come forward. They want to tell Albertans everywhere: if you know of violence – sorry. I just want to say that throughout my consultation something that came up over and over again was that if someone was witnessing violence, it is important to report it. If you are the person who is experiencing violence, it is so important to report it because it can be the difference between life or death. I know that it is a scary thing to report violence, but if it's someone you love or even if it's someone you don't know, you could save their life. I just wanted to put that on record.

One person sharing their story can make a difference for hundreds, even thousands of people. I focused on domestic violence, but that applies to sexual assault just as much, which is why I've been so moved by my colleagues who have come forward in this debate to tell their own stories of survival. I hope that they know what it's meant for survivors of assault across Alberta and beyond. Maybe that's how this bill will have its most important impact. Yes, the changes we're making will help people seek the restitution they deserve. This bill will hold the perpetrators of assault responsible not only criminally but for the human impact of their crimes. More than all of that, it will make it possible for many more people to come forward through the legal system and tell their stories, and not just from this point forward. By making these changes retroactive, we're saying that nobody's stories should be erased by time and that no perpetrator of assault should be able to hide behind the calendar of years gone by.

We're ensuring that survivors can sue to recoup the cost of pain and suffering and also the very tangible costs of everything from lost wages to counselling. This bill tells every Albertan who has faced this kind of violence: we stand with you and we have your back. I'm so proud to be part of a government that has this as a priority. Albertans have waited for too long for this change to come, and I'm proud that it's our government that has finally taken this action, that's been needed for far too long.

This issue is very close to my heart – as many of you know, my sister was recently murdered, and I wish that she would have had this chance – and the hearts of everyone who has experienced this kind of violence in their lives. I want to thank the Solicitor General and the cosponsors for bringing this piece of legislation forward, and I encourage everyone to vote for it.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Carson: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. It's an honour to rise today in support of Bill 2, An Act to Remove Barriers for Survivors of Sexual and Domestic Violence, and it was a privilege to join our Minister of Justice and Solicitor General along with the Minister of Status of Women for the announcement of Bill 2 at the Sexual Assault Centre of Edmonton in my community of Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Over the last two years I've had the incredible honour of building a relationship with SACE. Through this relationship I've been given the opportunity to learn so much from those who work in the community to assist and support survivors of sexual violence here in Alberta. This experience has taught me to examine my own myths and assumptions about sexual violence. Sexual assault is not barred by income level, gender, ability, sexual orientation, ethnicity, culture, or spiritual belief. Anyone can be affected, so sexual and domestic violence is an issue that affects all Albertans.

There are many false beliefs regarding sexual violence, but by definition, in the simplest terms it is any forced sexual contact without the expressed and voluntary consent of the receiving individual. Sexual assault is a crime, and at its foundation it is an act of power and control. Therefore, as responders, if our goal is to dismantle the systems that hinder survivors, we must approach the issue through these same terms. What power do we have as a government to empower and support survivors? How can we remove barriers to ensure that survivors are able to come forward on their own terms?

I stand in support of the proposed amendments to the Limitations Act to remove the existing limitation period for civil actions for sexual assault; for misconduct of a sexual nature for dependants, minors, and those in intimate relationships; and for nonsexual assault for dependants, minors, and those in intimate relationships. It is our duty as legislators and representatives of all Albertans to provide individuals with the best possible opportunities for success and empowerment by creating safe spaces. We can do this as a government by eliminating barriers and making the legal system more accessible.

It is my belief that every Albertan has the right to feel safe, protected, and respected in their communities, and this should be reflected in our legislation. Currently all common-law jurisdictions across Canada, excluding only Alberta and P.E.I., have removed or amended the limitations period for sexual assault cases. It is time that Alberta catch up with the other provinces of Canada and demonstrate our support for the dignity of survivors of sexual and domestic violence by amending the Limitations Act. Supporting this amendment would put Alberta ahead of what other provinces have currently enacted by eliminating deadlines for people who are victims of family violence, minors, dependants, and intimate partners.

Overcoming sexual and domestic violence is a uniquely private, exceedingly difficult, and deeply personal experience, and it affects each survivor differently. By removing arbitrary timelines for reporting, we place the power back in the hands of the individual and recognize that each survivor will take a different path to healing. Furthermore, having a limitation on reporting only helps to perpetuate myths around the statistics and prevalence of sexual violence in Alberta. Cultural attitudes enforced by false myths and ideas around sexual violence enable those who are the abusers, thereby creating a social environment where survivors are silenced and criticized for what someone else has done to them. We need to respect that it may take time for survivors to come forward about their experiences. We need to support survivors by opening doors for empowerment, not closing them.

I want to thank everyone in this Assembly who has so far shown support for this bill, especially those members who have stood up and shared their own stories of sexual and domestic violence. I am so proud to stand with you in this House, and I know that Albertans are watching and so proud, and I know that it will help them along their own journeys. Thank you very much.

Finally, I would also like to thank Mary Jane James and the entire board of the Sexual Assault Centre of Edmonton as well as the Association of Alberta Sexual Assault Services, the YWCA, and everyone else in our province who works to support survivors of domestic and sexual assault every day.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure to rise. I'd just like to very briefly rise and thank the Member for Calgary-Bow for her kind and passionate words on this very important issue. It was a pleasure to see her back in the House earlier this week. On behalf of all of our colleagues here on this side of the House and, certainly, the Wildrose caucus I'd like to pass along our condolences. She has been in our thoughts and prayers, and it's just wonderful to have her back.

5:20

The Chair: Any other questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The remaining clauses of Bill 2 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Mr. Westhead: I move that the committee rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill with some amendments: Bill 2. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The Acting Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Considering the significant progress we've made today, I rise to request unanimous consent of the House to adjourn until 1:30 tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:22 p.m.]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us reflect. As we finish our work for the week and prepare to return to our home constituencies, let us reflect on the positive things we have accomplished this week, and let us continue to always seek opportunities to make life better for the families and communities we serve.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two classes from beautiful Guthrie school, the grade 5/6 and grade 6. They are accompanied by Mrs. Colleen Tremblay and Mrs. Janet Quaghebeur, the teachers, and by parent volunteers Mr. Dave Parlin and Mrs. Cher Sherwood. Would the students and attendants please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you a group of grade 6 students from the more-than-extraordinary constituency of Edmonton-Glenora. These students go to Glenora elementary school and are joined by their teacher, Ms Craven. These students are hard working and smart. I had the honour of visiting them in October. We were at the celebration of the 75th anniversary of their school and the building and opening of their new playground, which is far more accessible than the traditional ones. I want to ask now that Ms Craven as well as the supervisors, Miss Leard and Mr. Kluthe, please rise with the students and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I actually have two introductions this afternoon. The first introduction is on behalf of you. I rise to introduce the Alberta Girls' Parliament group, who will be joining us in the members' gallery at 2 p.m. The group consists of 47 youth and nine adults and is led by Mrs. Shannen Hoffman. The girls are here today to see the interworking of the Legislative Assembly and to expand their knowledge of the parliamentary system. Please give them the warm welcome of this Assembly.

For my second introduction it's a privilege to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the Alberta Hindi Parishad. Their organization was founded in 1985 and continues to provide regular classes to teach Hindi. I would like them to now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other school groups to be introduced?

The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly representatives from Festival Place in Strathcona county: Her Worship Roxanne Carr, the outstanding mayor of Strathcona county; Gavin Farmer, the executive director of Festival Place, the place to be to watch musical acts; Charles Rees, board member of the Festival Place foundation; and Ted Barris, award-winning author and military historian. Mr. Barris will lead a presentation tomorrow night at Festival Place to recognize the 100th anniversary of the Battle of Vimy Ridge, Canada's most celebrated military victory, a pivotal moment in the formation of Canada's nationhood. I believe Mr. Barris is also doing a presentation at the Federal building tonight. I would ask them to stand to receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's an honour to rise today to introduce to all members of the Assembly Mikhayla Patterson. Mikhayla is a first-year Grant MacEwan social work student who is completing her practicum in the Edmonton-Meadowlark constituency office. She has been an incredible asset to our community. Mikhayla is joined today by her classmates: Renée Hébert-Tomalty, Jennifer Nicole Burbach, Louise Speakman, Jessica Silva, and Kevyn Hernandez. I'd ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly three friends of mine who also happen to be constituents: Daniel Grynke, his daughter Wendy Lotholz, and Wendy's husband, Randy Lotholz. Daniel raised his family on a farm in the Vega area, just north of the town of Barrhead, and Wendy and Randy are currently farming in the southern part of the county of Barrhead. I would ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's an honour and a privilege to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Denise Walton. Denise is a first-year social work student at MacEwan University who has been volunteering in the Spruce Grove-St. Albert constituency office since last fall. Denise is passionate about helping others and is looking forward to a great career offering support to those in need. If Denise could rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a privilege to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly the Indian Students' Association of the University of Alberta. INDSA started small in 1991 and has grown to include hundreds of students and alumni. They preserve, nurture, and extend the cultural traditions and colours of India within the university. I would like them to now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a privilege to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the Alberta Gujarati Association. The AGA is one of the largest cultural organizations in western Canada, with thousands of Gujarati-speaking members. I had the privilege of attending their Navaratri celebration in October. I'd like to welcome their treasurer, Nipam Kotia, and the rest of the new executive. I'd like them now to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I have two introductions for you this afternoon. First, it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly executive members of the Council of India Societies of Edmonton from my home constituency of Edmonton-Mill Woods: Krishan Chawla, Mrinal Mandal, Amar Bhasin, Dhirubhai Laowa, Pramod Kumar, and Ashok Sharma. The Council of India Societies of Edmonton is a not-for-profit organization representing and supporting Indo-Canadians throughout the capital region. I thank them for joining us today and ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

For my second introduction, Madam Speaker, it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Raeleen Minchuk. As a child Raeleen often visited her father, who was a construction contractor, when he was working, but it wasn't until 2014, at age 36, that Raeleen was diagnosed with mesothelioma, a deadly form of cancer caused by early exposure to asbestos at her father's workplace. The doctors told her she had months to live, but Raeleen is a fighter. Faced with this diagnosis, Raeleen and her son Tyce moved from Saskatchewan to Alberta for treatment at Calgary's Foothills hospital and the Tom Baker cancer centre. Since then she has undergone numerous surgeries, impacting every major organ in her abdomen, to fight this cancer and extend her life. Raeleen is using the time she has left to raise awareness of the dangers of asbestos so that no Canadian has to go through what she and her family have gone through. I want to thank her for her passionate advocacy and for allowing me to share some of her story today. I now ask Raeleen and her guests to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly. [Standing ovation]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a privilege to rise and introduce to you and through you the members of the Hindu Society of Alberta. Congratulations on their 50th anniversary. Fifty years ago they were the first East Indian association in western Canada. I would now like them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Today I have the pleasure of introducing to you and through you members of the Edmonton Epilepsy Association. The province has declared March 26 Epilepsy Awareness Day. The purple ribbon is dedicated to spreading awareness about epilepsy and supporting people living with epilepsy. I'd ask that Gary Sampley, executive director of the Edmonton Epilepsy Association; Cheryl Renzenbrink, president of the association; and their association delegation please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other guests? The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise with pleasure today to introduce to you and through you a constituent of mine, Adrienne Webb. Adrienne is a community activist and a fighter for increased access to service dogs in the province of Alberta, and she's the secretary of Respect the Service Dog. She's been diligently working with my office in Edmonton-Rutherford and others in Edmonton in order to see a brighter future for those who need access to certified service animals. Alongside her today is her service dog, Jellybean. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Serenity and the Child Intervention System

Mr. Sucha: Thank you Madam Speaker. This morning I was devastated when I saw the front page of the Edmonton Journal. I, like many Albertans, will never forget the first time I heard Serenity's story. I'll never forget the outrage that I felt that our system did not protect this little girl. I will never forget the passion I witnessed in this Assembly from all members.

Serenity's mother shared these photos because she doesn't want her daughter to be forgotten, and, Madam Speaker, I will not forget her. As many of my colleagues know, I am a father of three wonderful children, and as a parent these photos are particularly hard for me to see. It's up to all of us to work together and protect children we have a shared responsibility to care for.

For the past two months I have been a member of the Ministerial Panel on Child Intervention, and it may be one of the most important jobs I have in this Assembly. As we focus on strengthening the Alberta child death review process, I am reminded of how important it is that we make sure this system does what it is intended to do, that it serves not only as a reminder of those children we have lost but as a call to action to improve our system in whatever way we can to prevent further tragic losses. It is a call to all members of this House to be united in our commitment to address poverty and historical injustices and to ensure families have the supports they need.

As we've seen an OCYA investigation into Serenity and heard various internal reviews into this case, it is clear that our system can and must be improved, and while we feel many things when we see these photos and hear these stories, we must never feel hopeless or helpless because we have work to do, all of us.

Madam Speaker, I ask all members of the Assembly to stay committed to working together to make these changes to our child intervention system that have been needed for so long.

Thank you.

Electric Power Prices

Mr. Hunter: Madam Speaker, in Charles Dickens' story we read of Ebenezer Scrooge, who meets three ghosts: the ghosts of Christmas past, Christmas present, and Christmas future. An article in the Financial Post reminded me of the part where Scrooge meets the ghost of Christmas future. We have an opportunity to look into our future through the lens of Ontario's actions, and it's scary stuff indeed.

It once boasted one of the continent's lowest electricity rates. One business had their electricity bill double from last year, to over $49,000. On January 1 Ontario brought in cap and trade, an environmental initiative that hikes energy costs for businesses that burn natural gas or fuel. Manufacturers in Ontario spent money switching their plants to electricity from natural gas in order to access the government grants. Now electricity is so outrageously expensive that manufacturers are wondering how they can keep their doors open.

Mississippi and Ohio, to name a few states, are actively calling manufacturers from Ontario in an attempt to lure them south. And why not? Mississippi's power rates are about one-third of those of Ontario. The city of Toronto's statistics show that it has lost 20 per cent of its manufacturing jobs in the past decade. Twenty per cent, Madam Speaker. Every power bill in Ontario comes with a global adjustment charge that eats up over 50 per cent of the bill. Included in the charge are Ontario's payments to solar and wind energy makers at far more than the market rate. Even the cost of replacing light bulbs with LEDs are in there and – you guessed it – Ecofitt is right there at the trough.

Why would this government follow in the footsteps of that failed Ontario model? Madam Speaker, I am hearing everywhere I go that Albertans are happy that conservatives are working to get together because Albertans are so ready to send this destructive NDP government packing in the next election.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Women's Reproductive Rights

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Madam Speaker. In the mid-90s I made one of the toughest decisions of my life. I was pregnant and did what thousands of Canadian women have done before me. I made the decision to have an abortion.

The morning I went to the Royal Alexandra hospital I was so lost and confused by the signage because there wasn't any. I was intimidated by the amount of security. It was over quickly, and at the same time it wasn't. My life went on; the stigma remained. It's important to talk about the stigma because even though women in this country have won hard-fought reproductive rights, those rights are still overshadowed by partisan misinformation. Dog-whistle politics.

It was only in 1969 that birth control and abortion were decriminalized. Until 1988 abortions were illegal. Chants of, "Lock her up" were real. Federal law dictates legality; however, the provinces set health care policy and influence access. We continue to see worrisome signals that women's reproductive rights are being questioned by those hungry for power.

Certain politicians hide behind spin on this subject, but we see their voting records. We are told not to talk about it, not to reopen debate. They say it is just an attempt to hijack the conversation. No. These are not lifestyle decisions. These are heart-wrenching and life-and-death decisions in many cases made by a woman and her doctor.

I chose to share my experience on social media, and so many women reached out to me after that. Not one regretted the decision. They were just afraid of abuse, so they keep their secrets. There is no shame in expressing and exercising our rights over our bodies.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Federal Budget

Mr. Jean: Now, I know that the Premier has been busy auditioning for the job of Leader of the Opposition in Saskatchewan, but yesterday Ottawa delivered another kick in the teeth to our energy sector here in Alberta. Even if she knows that Albertans are going to vote her out after the next election, instead of rubber-stamping Ottawa's massive tax increases that include jacking up taxes for Alberta's oil and gas industry, she could maybe stick up for our province for once. How could she possibly say that Ottawa's budget was good news for Alberta?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. In fact, with respect to the tax changes in the oil and gas sector that the member is talking about, what we've indicated is that we are studying the matter, and we are going to be doing more advocacy on them because the bad news with respect to those is scheduled to start in about 2020. In the meantime this year, though, we got $30 million as a result of advocacy by this government in order to support orphan well reclamation. That came from working with members in the oil and gas sector, asking what it was they needed and what we could do to help, and we did that.

Mr. Jean: Wow, Madam Speaker. Can you imagine? Thirty million dollars: that's about the same amount as the GST on our new carbon tax that we send to Ottawa every year.

This is serious. Eighty-one thousand full-time jobs have been lost under the NDP's watch, and the Premier was completely silent yesterday. It's embarrassing. It sends a bad signal; it puts us at a further disadvantage to the United States: that's Tim McMillan from CAPP, and he's right. This will hurt our small oil and gas producers right here in Alberta and, ultimately, Albertans. I'll translate for the Premier. That means fewer jobs for Albertans, less investment in our province as capital flees to the United States. What does she have to say to the men and women in this province who will now lose work?

Ms Notley: Madam Speaker, what I can say is that our government has been hard at work standing up for our oil and gas sector and standing up for the people who work in it. I've been doing that, first of all, by ensuring that we can make real progress on the orphan well file in order to get people back to work right away. As well, what we've done is we've worked with the federal government to get approval on two pipelines – two pipelines – tens of thousands of jobs. That's the kind of work that we are doing each and every day.

Mr. Jean: Wow. We get approval, and Bombardier gets $400 million.

What Alberta got yesterday was absolutely peanuts. It is barely more money than the GST Ottawa is getting on the NDP's new carbon tax. Albertans send $24 billion more to Ottawa than we get back in transfers just about every single year. What do Albertans get for this generosity? Well, our Premier is endorsing Ottawa's plans for crippling carbon taxes, $2,500 per household, Madam Speaker, and now tax hikes to our oil and gas sector while we have record unemployment. Who does she care about more, the Prime Minister's office or Albertans?

Ms Notley: Madam Speaker, let me be perfectly clear. I care about Albertans, and that is why I chose not to stand in the corner and yell at Ottawa. I chose instead to work with Ottawa in order to get Albertans two pipelines – two pipelines – which are absolutely fundamental to the economic growth and prosperity of this province, and that is what we will continue to do.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition. Second main question.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Mr. Jean: Talk is cheap, Madam Speaker. If the NDP ever had time to get back to governing in Alberta, here are some things they should actually start worrying about. Alberta will now have the highest business taxes in western Canada at the end of this year. The carbon tax is going up by 50 per cent this year and is only making things much more expensive for all Albertans in every facet of life. The U.S. has no carbon tax and is cutting their business taxes big time. That's less capital, less investment, and less jobs here in Alberta. Does the Premier even realize that this is a problem for the people of Alberta?

Ms Notley: Madam Speaker, what we know is what a tax on everything actually looks like. Thanks to the platform of the conservative party that was just released yesterday to the east of us, we now know that it looks like a 6 per cent tax on every bit of construction done in the province. You know what that does? It pulls money out of the economy, and it kills jobs, and that's the plan that the folks over there will not come clean with Albertans on.

Mr. Jean: Madam Speaker, why won't our own Premier focus on Alberta instead of some other province across Canada?

Alberta is quickly becoming the fiscal basket case of Canada. The NDP will have increased the size of government in Alberta by $9 billion when it's all said and done. Nine billion dollars. If the Premier wants to compare budget plans, the NDP's looks a lot like Ontario's, a carbon copy I might add, crippling levels of debt, taxation, and green experiments. It's been a disaster in Ontario, and it will not work in Alberta. Debt means less for programs, higher taxes, and a weaker economy. Why doesn't the Premier get it?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Madam Speaker, yesterday the Saskatchewan government popped the opposition's balloon and released the Wildrose conservative platform. You know what? There's huge taxes on everything from job-creating construction to children's clothes, a 6 per cent tax increase, massive cuts to education, and taxes. And you know why? All so that they can give a tax break to the top 10 per cent of people living in that province. That's their plan, and I would like them to tell Albertans why they should support that.

Mr. Jean: I've never heard anything more hypocritical than what I've heard from the Premier over the last 24 hours. She's brought in a carbon tax that literally takes billions of dollars out of the pockets of hard-working Albertans every single year. Heating bills and gas prices at the pump will go up. Madam Speaker, her policies have helped destroy jobs and businesses, big and small. Coal workers, farmers, ranchers, energy workers in Alberta: all out of work as a result of their policies. How, then, can the Premier have the nerve to actually suggest that her policies are helping families in Alberta, with her record? It's disgusting.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. You know, when the price of oil internationally went down, we had two choices. Two choices. We could stand up for Albertans. We could have their backs. We could support job creation. We could ensure more affordability for those families who are struggling, and we could support important public services. Or we could adopt the Wildrose conservative plan. We could jack prices and taxes up for everybody. We could slash education and health care. We could do that all so that we could give a tax break to the top 10 per cent of the citizens. You know what? We chose the first option, and that's what Albertans voted for.

The Deputy Speaker: Third main question. Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Serenity and the Child Intervention System

Mr. Nixon: Let me quote Serenity's mom: reports can be hidden by the government; these pictures can't. The pictures she refers to show a dying 4-year-old girl emaciated with welts, cuts, and deep bruises that extended down the length of her leg. Madam Speaker, I will keep standing in this House and asking for answers and justice for Serenity and her family. I will keep asking until someone is held accountable and until Albertans get answers. Will the Premier tell Albertans when the people responsible for this heinous crime will be held accountable for raping, starving, and beating this precious little girl to death?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Speaker. When I first heard the story of Serenity, my heart was completely broken. When I saw those pictures in the paper, same thing. My heart was broken all over again. Clearly, everyone in this House was outraged by what happened. It was not okay. Her death in 2014 identified major issues in our system, and that is why our Premier ensured that there was a Minister of Children's Services. That's why every member of this House committed to getting it right, and I'm thankful for the participation of all members of this House and commitment to the ministerial panel.

Mr. Nixon: Albertans are demanding criminal charges, but we also need answers from the ministry. Policies were broken when Serenity was placed in a home without all the adult residents undergoing a criminal record check. Warnings were expressed about Serenity's well-being, and we now know that no one followed up. A panel discussing policy is not helpful if the policies aren't followed. Will the minister tell us if anyone ever gets punished for ignoring policies, and if not, how in the world her panel's work is going to make a difference?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Once again, it was completely unacceptable, the outcome that happened for Serenity. Her story has touched all of us. Clearly, her death in 2014 showed us that the system was completely broken. There were clearly systemic challenges. Our staff did not have the support they needed to take care of Alberta's children. I'm committing to make sure they have every support that they need to do the work that needs to be done, that they are so committed to do, which is to ensure the safety and well-being of the children that they are responsible for.

Mr. Nixon: This minister has a responsibility to tell Albertans what happened and to make sure it never happens again. On March 14 the minister told the Member from Calgary-West: "Absolutely we are reviewing Serenity's death. Absolutely." Madam Speaker, there is no evidence that such a review is under way. Will the minister please confirm who exactly "we" is referring to, and will she tell Albertans what she – what she – is doing to stop this sort of situation from ever happening again?

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The reason that we know about what happened to Serenity – and I'm so very thankful to the Child and Youth Advocate for the report that he did as an independent officer of the Legislature. Also, the statutory director continues to do the internal review that's expected in terms of all these situations. Everyone was touched by that, including all of the committed staff of Children's Services. We continue to ensure and move forward along with the Child and Youth Advocate, along with the panel, along with all of those interested to ensure . . .

Mr. McIver: Madam Speaker, like my colleague who sits on the children in care panel with me, I felt shock, anger, and profound sadness over what happened to Serenity, as detailed in Paula Simon's column. On the panel Serenity's case has been raised and each time immediately shut down by the chair under orders from the minister. Hiding the problem is no way to find a solution. To the Premier: will you instruct your Minister of Children's Services to allow questions related to Serenity's case to be asked and answered so we can work together to avoid a recurrence?

Ms Notley: Madam Speaker, the member opposite knows that when he first proposed the committee, we sat down, and we talked about the mandate of the committee. It, of course, grew out of a collective concern, a collective shock about the tragedy of Serenity's circumstances and the need for all of us to work together on the solutions rather than trying to politicize and score political points and not make progress. We desperately want to try to make progress. The member opposite knows that the matter is being investigated by the RCMP. The member opposite knows that the matter is being investigated internally. The member opposite knows that the matter is being . . .

Mr. McIver: That was a difficult, difficult refusal to hear, Madam Speaker.

Serenity died not because established protocols are flawed, although they are, but because those protocols were not followed. In other words, one or more employees made a fatal error in judgment. Nobody wants a witch hunt, but I think it's important to ask the Premier how she thinks anything will change if we can't publicly examine what happened in the year up to Serenity's death. To the Premier: is the person or persons who made the errors in judgment contributing to Serenity's abuse and death still making judgments affecting children in care, and if so, why?

Ms Notley: Madam Speaker, as I was in the process of saying – the notion that the member opposite wants us to simply look at what happened after Serenity's death is troubling. In fact, if we're going to get to the fundamental issues that are going to solve this, we need to look at them holistically. We made a decision with respect to all the members of the committee to focus first on coming up with a better death review process, to get that done, and then to go into the larger considerations of the issues we need to manage, all of which would involve an opportunity to discuss the details of not only Serenity's tragedy but a lot of them. But we need to take time to do it carefully.

Mr. McIver: Again a refusal to say that the people who were responsible for Serenity are still not in charge of children.

According to the column child workers removed Serenity from a foster home where they were thriving and placed her with relatives who did not receive kinship care training. A woeful job was done on background checks on the adults living in the residence, and reports of potential mistreatment were not investigated, but that was given full legal custody. I know that working with kids in care is tough, but in light of the irresponsible actions around Serenity's death under your leadership, Premier, have there been or will there ever be any consequences at all for Serenity?

Ms Notley: Well, Madam Speaker, to be clear, the RCMP have the file. They are investigating it. They are speaking with the Crown, and they will tell us what their recommendations are. It is not our job to direct the RCMP, nor is it our job to direct the Crown in terms of how they dispense with cases. I mean, this happened a year and a half before the last election, so the member opposite needs to understand that what we have to do together is to fix the system and not focus on trying to score political points. That is what the committee is trying to do.

The Deputy Speaker: Just a reminder, hon. members, that for the next set of questions there will be no preambles on supplementaries.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Northern Hills.

Tourism Promotion

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Last year tourism was a big contributor to the Alberta economy. As a Calgarian this is great news, given that many of my constituents work in the tourism industry and at the Calgary airport as airline agents, ground staff, CATSA, CBSA, commissary, and cargo, and then there are those that work around the neighbouring hotels. To the Minister of Culture and Tourism: how is Budget 2017 supporting the tourism industry in Calgary?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Miranda: Thank you, Madam Speaker. We know that tourism makes life better for Albertans by creating good jobs and diversifying our economy. I'm very proud to say that Budget 2017 provides $60.8 million in funding support to further grow Alberta's tourism destinations for domestic and international travellers. This includes getting ready for our inaugural direct flight from Mexico City to Calgary, which is scheduled by Aeromexico for June of this year. It also includes investments in world-class tourism infrastructure such as the Calgary Zoo as well as capital investments in Calgary's WinSport and other places around the city. We're very proud of the work that we've done.

The Deputy Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As a former airline professional I think that the new direct flight from Mexico City to Calgary by Aeromexico is great news not only for the airline industry but for Alberta tourism as well. To the same minister: what effect will the newly scheduled flight have on my constituents working or seeking opportunities in Calgary?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Miranda: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm proud to say that as a former airline professional myself I, too, am very excited by this new flight. These flights will make life better for Albertans by boosting tourism in addition to creating investment, trade, and cultural opportunities for Albertans between our two countries. The new Aeromexico flight from Calgary to Mexico City is estimated to create about 300 new jobs and generate $46 million in economic output for this province, something I'm very, very proud to do.

The Deputy Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Given Alberta's diverse landscape are there any potential areas that you are looking at as new tourism hot spots outside the already sought-after mountain parks?

Miranda: Madam Speaker, we continue to make strategic investments and work with industry stakeholders to grow tourism destinations across the province and make life better for all Albertans. Our focus will be placed on agritourism, cultural attractions, indigenous tourism development, and outdoor and nature-based tourism opportunities. We'll also continue to work with Travel Alberta and the tourism industry to encourage visitors to travel beyond the mountain parks and discover all the beautiful, hidden gems that our province has to offer.

Thank you.

Budget 2017

Mr. Fildebrandt: The problem with socialism is that eventually you run out of other people's money. When a government runs deficits, it eventually has to pay the piper. To fix the problem, we can either rip off the Band-Aid, or we can peel it off slowly, prolonging the pain, potentially reopening the wound. We are entering our 10th consecutive year of deficits, and the minister has no credible plan to balance the budget within the next decade. Is the minister knowingly ignoring the deficit with an expectation that he won't be here in two years?

Mr. Ceci: Well, thank you very much for the question. Madam Speaker, you know, the deficit is an issue for us, of course. We're prudently and thoughtfully working to bring that down, and we're doing that because that's in the best interest of Albertans. If we want to see the problems that are created when you quickly pull down a deficit, look east, because the people of Saskatchewan are going to be suffering. Even Gainer the Gopher is not safe in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Fildebrandt: And rats are not safe either, Madam Speaker.

Given that the minister was not feeling very much love from the opposition, he went to meet with the Calgary Chamber of commerce on Monday, but there wasn't very much love there either. They said that they were disappointed with this government's . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, that sounds like a preamble to me. Could you please get to the question?

Mr. Fildebrandt: Madam, I said "given."

They said that they were disappointed with this government for failing to take any action. Given that the Calgary Chamber of commerce didn't like this budget and Calgarians don't like this budget and this government is out of touch with Calgarians, has the NDP written off Calgary already?

2:10

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much again for the question. Madam Speaker, you know, I did have a conversation with the president of the Calgary Chamber of commerce, and that person said that he's been rough on every government forever. He talked about being challenging to the Prentice government. He talked about the same thing with the Redford government, so we're no different. We're working. We've got the backs of Albertans. We are protecting services. We are working to bring down the deficit thoughtfully and prudently. That is in the best interest of Albertans and Calgarians.

Mr. Fildebrandt: They are no different than the Redford government, Madam Speaker.

Given, Madam Speaker, that this government has a lousy record of meeting its budget targets and that under this budget our debt is set to reach an incredible $71 billion by 2019 in the best-case scenario and given that this scenario requires oil to be at least $68 a barrel and GDP growth over 6 per cent and given that the minister is so keen to gamble with Alberta's future, let's make a bet. I'll give the minister 2 to 1 odds on 20 bucks that by 2019 the debt will exceed $71 billion.

Mr. Mason: Point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Point of order noted.

Mr. Ceci: Madam Speaker, I think that I'm always generous with money, but it's my own money that I'm generous with, never taxpayers' money. Although I do have some friends who would say that there's no truth to the first statement, they would say there's plenty of truth to the second statement.

Dr. Cooke Extended Care Centre in Lloydminster

Dr. Starke: Madam Speaker, long-term care is a major concern for people across Alberta. The residents of Lloydminster were very pleased when the new Lloydminster extended care centre opened in 2015, so they noted with some interest and puzzlement that $6 million has been allocated for that facility over the next three years in the Health ministry's five-year capital plan. They asked me: why is $6 million being spent on a brand new facility? Can the Health minister confirm for the citizens of Lloydminster what the $6 million in the capital plan is being spent on?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'd be very happy to get the specific details. Often what happens with contracts when a new facility is being built is that there are holdovers based on money being held back for finalizations to be done to achieve the contract conditions, so sometimes there are out-years where the contractor still needs to provide services to ensure that everything has met the criteria. I'd be happy to follow up with the specific details about the new Dr. Cooke in the community of Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, Madam Speaker, it's not, in fact, the new Dr. Cooke. It's the old Dr. Cooke that they're talking about. The fate of that extended care centre, specifically the central and south wings, has been a major concern of the citizens of Lloydminster for some time. Given that the minister visited Lloydminster in July 2015 and indicated that no final decision would be made on the old Dr. Cooke without fulsome community consultation and given that that consultation has not yet happened, to the minister: when will you conduct the fulsome community consultation that you promised the citizens of Lloydminster nearly two years ago?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. The member is right that in my very first summer as Health minister I took it upon myself to visit the community and, alongside the member opposite, met with a number of people from the community. He is right in his iteration of the facts of that day. As a result, I've had the CEO of Alberta Health Services and my deputy minister both go and visit Lloydminster and meet with a number of individuals, and they are working on a further engagement plan. Absolutely, I signed up for this job to do things with community, and we look forward to working with them.

Dr. Starke: Well, Madam Speaker, we're certainly looking forward to that.

Given that the CEO of AHS as well as the deputy minister, as the minister just said, visited Lloydminster last October and given that those meetings were very short and occurred with only a very small, hand-selected group of local individuals and given that the community still does not feel that the government has done the proper consultation with regard to the Dr. Cooke, to the minister: can you confirm whether the $6 million will be used for repurposing the Dr. Cooke extended care centre, or is the money there to pay for some other course of action?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker and to the member for the question. I have followed up with both of the officials that were identified and said that I believe we need to have further consultation with the community. I can tell you, though, that when I had a chance to tour that facility alongside the member opposite, it certainly didn't appear to be the kind of place that would have longevity or a quality of life moving forward for residents if it were to continue as a long-term care facility. We want to make sure that they can get into the bathroom in a wheelchair, that staff can use a lift and take care of the patients in the facility. Certainly, this old facility is past its best-before date, but we're going to work with the community to figure out the best path as we move forward, and I invite the member opposite to help us with that.

Job Creation and Unemployment

Mr. Panda: Madam Speaker, last year the Minister of Economic Development and Trade introduced his 100,000 jobs plan for Alberta. Albertans were excited for this plan until we all found out what it actually meant. Now, a year later, Alberta has shed 81,000 jobs, well on the way to his goal of killing 100,000 jobs. How soon does the minister plan to reach his goal of killing 100,000 jobs, and why did the Premier give him this goal?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much for the question, Madam Speaker. You know, with regard to the challenging times that Alberta is in, the government is making life better for Albertans by continuing to invest in capital, by continuing to diversify our economy. We are supporting new capital coming to the fore by the Alberta investor tax credit, which is offering opportunities for tax credits for investment that will help diversify our economy. As well, once those companies have that money, they're going to be able to get some additional tax credits to buy capital so that they can diversify their capital needs.

Thank you.

Mr. Panda: Given that the NDP talking points accused the opposition of slashing and burning while they're the ones slashing and burning the economy with the carbon tax, increases to corporate and personal taxes, suing power companies, and shutting down clean coal mines and given that the 100,000 job-killing plan is not telling the private businesses to hire the masses of unemployed Albertans that need to get back to work, what is the minister's target for killing jobs next year? Why is he standing in the way of creating jobs?

Mr. Ceci: This side of the House is standing with Albertans, Madam Speaker. We are ensuring that there's an opportunity to invest across this province, and two pipelines will draw that money into this province for investment. We're also protecting services while Albertans are challenged. We have their back. That side would cut many programs and services just like Saskatchewan talks about. I want to say that with regard to investment it's starting to turn around: 2.6 per cent GDP growth in this province; 0.8 per cent in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Panda: Given that under the NDP 4,000 jobs were lost at Precision Drilling, 1,700 lost at Suncor, 14,000 jobs lost at Husky, 1,000 more lost at Shell, TransCanada, Cenovus and just yesterday, Madam Speaker, a thousand jobs were lost at Enbridge and . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, to the question, please.

Mr. Panda: . . . given that there is the NDP fantasy and there is the hard economic reality, Calgarians and Albertans want to know: when will this government end their 100,000 job-killing plan?

Mr. Ceci: Madam Speaker, it just amazes me. The other side doesn't seem to understand that there's been a two-year recession brought on by the drop in world oil prices. That was not a plan from this side. That had been occurring before we got to office. We've been working to invest in this province, to diversify our economy, and to support Albertans. Why won't they support Albertans?

High-risk Offenders

Mr. Cooper: Last week repeat child sex offender Curtis Poburan was released into Edmonton for the fourth time, and the Edmonton Police Service has rightly warned Albertans that he's a high risk and a danger to society. Minister, Albertans have the right to know: if dangerous and violent pedophiles like Curtis Poburan reoffend, will backlogged courtrooms and failed NDP policies triage him out of facing a judge?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. As the member is well aware, court backlogs that had built up over a long time were the case when we came into government. The Jordan decision came down, and it represented a marked change in the law. We had two options. We could ensure that people, exactly like the person referenced by the member opposite, saw their trial in a timely manner by focusing on serious and violent matters with our triage protocol and by investing resources that the other side wouldn't have invested, or we could have let the decision just take its course on its own.

Thank you.

Mr. Cooper: Given that the Alberta Justice website shows 85 high-risk offenders in Alberta, with 48 of those here in the Edmonton area, and given that victims who have suffered at the hands of those criminals are now forced to live in communities with those who have preyed upon them, Minister, who is responsible for monitoring high-risk offenders, and who is answerable when they reoffend?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. We're actually very proud that here in Alberta our Crown prosecution system brings more of these dangerous and violent offender applications because those give us the ability to hold people in jail for longer. They give us the ability to monitor violent offenders when they are released by the system. So I'm very pleased that we make those applications, and I'm very proud of the job that our Crown does and that we do throughout our ministry to make sure that we're monitoring these offenders.

Mr. Cooper: Given that the tracking of dangerous offenders is critical to the safety and peace of mind of Alberta victims and since we've seen a steep increase in the rate of violent crimes in our province, what is the NDP doing to put the right tools into the hands of law enforcement officers like ankle bracelets to ensure criminals that need to be tracked will be tracked?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I am very proud of the work that this government has done since coming into office to ensure that our justice system is used in a proportionate way to ensure that the justice system can focus on the most serious and violent offenders. In order to ensure that, we need to do things like invest in mental health supports. We need to do things like invest in social housing. Those things take people out of the system who don't belong there and allow us to focus on serious and violent offenders. And they would cut them.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mountain Pine Beetle Control

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Alberta's forest producers are working to stop the spread of mountain pine beetle. These producers are making concerted efforts to harvest affected timber first and through innovative processes make use of the trees that have been infested with the beetle. If not stopped, the pine beetle could destroy our forests and threaten the environment and economy. To the minister of forestry: to what extent are you supporting the efforts of the forest industry against the mountain pine beetle?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Madam Speaker and to the member for the question. Our government remains committed to the control of the mountain pine beetle. The member is right. The mountain pine beetle is prevalent still within the province. There are approximately 10 contractors that do work throughout the winter in taking out infected trees. That is our most effective form of control. This year, by the end of this month, they will have taken out and harvested about 90,000 trees, again, the most effective form of control that we have.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Given that the mountain pine beetle is threatening many forests in Jasper national park and given that these parks, although they are in Alberta, are managed under the direction of the federal government, to the minister: to what extent are you working with your federal counterpart to create a strategy for the pine beetle in the national parks of Alberta?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Madam Speaker and to the member for the question. There's a bit of a good story, bad story here. The infestation that was happening in the Whitecourt-Grande Prairie area is actually about a 35 per cent decrease in what it had been, so our efforts there have been successful. As well, Mother Nature has played a role there. The bad story of that – the member is absolutely right – is that the infestation in the Hinton-Edson area has gotten worse. Depending on what area you are in, it's one to four times as bad as it had been. So we're going to be concentrating our efforts to control the mountain pine beetle in that area in particular. As for the mountain pine beetles coming out of the national park, I'm afraid they have come out. They're infesting that area now.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Given that last year Alberta suffered devastating fires in Fort McMurray and given that the damage from the pine beetles leaves forests extremely vulnerable to fires and given that the national parks are not clearing out trees infested with the beetle, so these large areas are just matches waiting to be struck, to the minister: how are you ensuring the safety of Albertans in areas like Hinton when the beetle-damaged trees in Jasper national park could fuel another Fort McMurray fire?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Madam Speaker and to the member for the important question. My understanding is that there's a new superintendent in Jasper national park that is looking at this issue a little more seriously than perhaps another supervisor of the park had. Our staff continues to work with the staff of Jasper national park to see what more can be done. At the same time as a department what we do have control over is the control of the infestation in the Hinton-Edson area. Like I said before, we're going to concentrate our efforts there over the coming years as we see that infestation as amongst the worst in the province.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Support for Seniors

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Families in Edmonton-Castle Downs rely on the seniors' facilities to provide the space and support that their loved ones require, so it is no surprise that a significant concern raised by the constituents is the wait times to get into these facilities. Given that Edmonton is currently in a seniors' facility deficit, to the Minister of Seniors and Housing: what approaches has this government taken to ensure that seniors are supported and have accessible, safe, and affordable housing options?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Seniors built this province, and they deserve to retire in dignity. That's why our government is investing $1.2 billion over five years in the seniors' lodges and affordable housing. I'm proud to say that over 40 projects are currently on the go. Our government is investing in seniors. The opposition wants reckless cuts. We are making life better. They are making life worse for seniors.

The Deputy Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Another concern among my constituents is programs that are offered to independent seniors. To the same minister: what supports are available for seniors wanting to stay in their communities, especially those who are single or widowed?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you. Seniors want to age in a community close to family and friends, and our government supports this. I'm so proud that Budget 2017 is protecting and improving seniors' programs like the Alberta seniors' benefit. We also increased funding to the seniors' home adaptation repair program, a program that supports seniors with $40,000 in low-interest home equity loans. Madam Speaker, when we introduced this program to support seniors, the opposition voted against it. Our government is protecting programs for seniors. They want to cut them.

The Deputy Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Given that information about these programs and services is most easily accessed online and given that not everyone has access to computers, to the same minister: how is the government ensuring that information remains accessible to all Albertans?

Ms Sigurdson: Every Albertan receives an information package through the mail that provides full details of seniors' programs before they reach 65. The updated information guide will be available in July 2017. But, Madam Speaker, I want to tell you what the seniors' information package would look like if it were the opposition's. It would be much thinner than ours because they would be recklessly cutting programs. We're investing in seniors in this province. They would be cutting. We're building seniors' housing. They'd be cutting that.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Job Creation and Unemployment (continued)

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Speaker. For the past quarter century Alberta's unemployment rate has not exceeded the national average, but all that went out the window when the NDP came to power. Now our unemployment rate sits at a daunting 8.3 per cent. On Monday the Economic Development and Trade minister said, "Our jobs plan is working." To the Premier: with more than 80,000 jobs lost, 100,000 on EI, and an unemployment rate that exceeds the national average, do you really think that your plan is working?

2:30

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Let me tell you about the Wildrose plan. The Wildrose plan is to cut $9 billion from construction, which would mean construction jobs were lost in this province instead of supported and moving forward. The Wildrose plan is to cut operating funding, billions of dollars, which would mean that public sector, health care, education, all of these jobs as well as the services that families count on day in and day out would be lost. Our jobs plan is working. We're continuing to add more jobs and stimulate areas of the economy so that Alberta families know that their government is here and that we have their backs.

The Deputy Speaker: I may be mistaken, but I thought I heard someone on this side say: tell the truth. I'm hoping I was mistaken.

Mr. Barnes: Madam Speaker, given that employment is on the rise in energy-dependent provinces like B.C., Saskatchewan, and Manitoba and given that both Saskatchewan and Manitoba managed to keep their deficits below a billion dollars while B.C. is set to deliver its fifth straight balanced budget, does the Premier think that maybe, just maybe, her bad policies and not oil prices are to blame for the fact that under this NDP government's watch Alberta has fallen completely off the rails?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. The Wildrose cannot be trusted to support Alberta families. They're working to make life more expensive. They want us to cut minimum wage. They want us to jack up tuition for postsecondary institutions. They want us to pretend that we don't care. They don't want to move forward with child care. On this side of the House we've got Albertans' backs. We're making sure that even though the price of oil has dropped, we're not turning our backs on Alberta families. We're finding ways to make their life more affordable, not worse, as the members opposite keep lobbying for every day in this House. Enough is enough.

Mr. Barnes: Madam Speaker, we want Albertans back to work. This government has one plan: hope and pray for oil prices and GDP to go up. Meanwhile Albertans are suffering. Given that in February the number of people seeking employment dropped by 14,000 people and given that ATB Financial now advertises to assist Albertans facing hard times and notes this fall . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member, to the question, please.

Mr. Barnes: . . . indicates that those in search of work are starting to feel discouraged, is this NDP government ashamed that under their gross mismanagement of this province Albertans have lost hope?

Ms Hoffman: Madam Speaker, Albertans are strong. Albertans are resilient. Albertans are building a better country one day at a time. That's why we are supporting those young Albertans by hiring teachers to go into their classrooms. That's why we're supporting aging Albertans by making sure that we build 2,000 long-term care and dementia spaces so that they have somewhere to age with dignity. That's why we're increasing home care supports so that people can live at home in a respectful, dignified manner. If you want to talk about what's happening in some of those other provinces, bring it on, but I have to say that we're proud to have Albertans' backs.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Youth Transitioning Out of Care

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Madam Speaker. All Albertans know about Serenity's tragedy, and recently the office of the Child and Youth Advocate reviewed the tragic case of Peter, who was murdered nine months after child intervention involvement had ended. Quoting from the report, "Peter asked for help many times; and, many times he voiced his anxiety about reaching adulthood without a plan, alone and struggling with addictions." To the Minister of Children's Services: since those leaving the child welfare system are vulnerable and require resources, what specific initiatives are you undertaking to address the gaps in services found during transition?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. The death of that young man was a tragic loss. It shows a number of things, including the impact of inter-generational trauma on our indigenous peoples and reminds us of the need to work towards reconciliation. It also talks to us about the importance of building caring relationships with the young people that we work with. It is so critical that we ensure that we are able to support them as they move to young adults. You know, moving to adulthood is hard for anyone, but for these kids it is a mountainous challenge, and I commit to working with them.

Mr. Rodney: Given that the report highlights the horrors that this young man experienced, including the loss of his parents and grandparents before he was 15, his brother's fatal overdose when he was 17 and given the fact that he often did not have a stable, safe place to go and given that the previous report from December 2015 also called for the ministry to ensure that young people within the system who have experienced trauma are adequately assessed and offered proper resources, again to the minister: what is your government doing today to improve outcomes for children in care who have experienced traumatic events so that what happened with Peter just never happens to anyone else ever again?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Unfortunately, that series of traumatic events is the real life of many youth that I talk to in my own riding. What happens to these children, what happens to many of our indigenous youth is so traumatic, and they absolutely need support. We've begun implementing changes to better recognize and address the long-term impacts of grief, trauma, and loss on the youth that we support, and we will continue to work with the Child and Youth Advocate to strengthen the ways that we support Alberta's children and youth.

Mr. Rodney: Given that many stakeholders have called upon the government to give the office of the Child and Youth Advocate greater teeth in having their recommendations acted upon in a concrete manner by the government and given that following recommendations from the office in a serious and expedient manner would improve the system for all children, again to the minister. It is too late for Peter, but it's not too late for other children in transition. Are you considering expanding the powers of the Child and Youth Advocate to ensure that all recommendations are addressed and acted upon in a timely and meaningful manner?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Certainly, in the report the advocate noted that transition policies were in place. However, every young person faces different challenges, and we need to recognize their unique circumstances. I met with the Child and Youth Advocate just this morning and had an incredibly productive meeting as we committed to working collaboratively together in full recognition of the fact that we both desperately want the same thing, and that is to improve the outcomes for Alberta's children in care. I commit to working as closely as I can with him to make sure that that happens.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Rockyview General Hospital

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Residents in my constituency of Calgary-Glenmore often raise concerns about the state of nearby hospital facilities, which can be congested with lengthy wait times. Given that the government has also earmarked $600 million over the next four years for infrastructure maintenance on existing health facilities, what improvements can my constituents expect to see at the Rockyview general hospital?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Madam Speaker and to the member for the question and for her advocacy. You know, the folks on the other side like to raise the alarm about deficits, but I never hear their concerns about the serious infrastructure deficits left to our province's buildings and infrastructure. That's what massive cuts do. They leave our hospitals to crumble. That's not what we believe in on this side. We are investing $143 million this year alone in infrastructure upgrades to help facilities. That means new floors, improved security systems, and an updated electricity generator for the Rockyview. That's not flashy, but it's critical to keeping our health facilities running and making life better for Albertans.

The Deputy Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Kazim: Thank you, hon. minister, and thank you, Madam Speaker. Given that we know Calgary is facing a high rate of mental health crises, to the Associate Minister of Health: what resources are available for people needing mental health interventions and supports at the Rockyview hospital?

Ms Payne: Mental health is a top priority for our government, and we are improving the entire health care system to ensure that people have the supports they need in their communities. We are opening a new mental health assessment unit at the Rockyview general hospital to better help mental health patients get the timely care they need. This unit will get people out of the ER and into beds. Then, when they are ready, this unit will help connect people to Rockyview's excellent mental health day programs, community services, and social supports. We believe that the health of Albertans should be central, and we're working to put patients, not systems, first. That's part of our commitment to making life better for Albertans.

The Deputy Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Given that much of the hospital investment in Calgary is going to our world-class cancer centres and to further research, can the Associate Minister of Health please elaborate on how this funding will support work on preventing and treating diseases like ovarian cancer?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

2:40

Ms Payne: Thank you, Madam Speaker. We know that Alberta is home to world-class research in health and medicine, and this government is proud to support that work. Budget 2017 allocates $25 million for cancer research and prevention, which includes innovative clinical trials targeting ovarian cancer through the Tom Baker centre in Calgary and the Cross Cancer Institute in Edmonton. This work will help detect ovarian cancer sooner and get people into improved treatments faster. I look forward to keeping the member updated as this work progresses and as we continue to make those investments to make life better for Albertans.

Truth and Reconciliation Art Project

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Madam Speaker. After the election my constituency office was left with bare walls. As Spruce Grove-St. Albert contains several high schools, we began to co-ordinate with their art programs to host student artwork. This relationship has provided the office with ever-updating artwork and the students with a great opportunity for public exposure.

In December we hosted one particular art project. The students of the Spruce Grove composite high school did an art project on the Truth and Reconciliation Commission. In this mixed-media project students endeavoured to express what they learned of the realities of the boarding schools. The artwork represents the students' understanding of what truth and reconciliation means to them and a gesture of respect. After hosting this project into January, the project was moved to the Spruce Grove library. Following a blessing and a smudging several students voluntarily came forward to discuss their pieces, the inspiration, and their thoughts on the process.

Madam Speaker, there were a few threads that wove through each of the student's presentations. Images of butterflies having their wings shorn off, of the differences in one boy from the time he entered the school in traditional garments and the time when he left the school, and of the schools themselves were present in many of the pieces. The students spoke about the destruction of indigenous identity, about the challenges of being forced to redefine yourself down to your name, and about the years lost to families as a result of the residential schools.

Madam Speaker, I recently had a conversation with one elder, who said: we are very good at talking about the truth, but we have a lot of work to do towards reconciliation.

Madam Speaker, as we all work through the recommendations of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission and work to implement the United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples, it is important to remember that truth needs to be paired with reconciliation. The first steps are uncomfortable, and they are often painful, but projects like this provide a template for that first conversation.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Challenge in the Rockies Hockey Tournament

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Today I'm delighted to rise to talk about the fourth annual Challenge in the Rockies. This fun hockey event takes place in Hinton and Jasper from March 29 to April 2. It's the result of a vision to host an event that continues to enhance youth sport experience and raise funds for future programming.

This affair is a testament to the dedication of the organizers and the more than 200 volunteers who support the athletes, families, and coaches participating in venues in both Hinton and Jasper. It involves over five days of hockey, with 34 teams from novice to midget, and more than 500 players in more than 90 games. Girls and boys aged four to 18 face off on the ice with a focus on physical literacy and staying active. Games are played strictly for the love of the sport. The Saturday evening game features four Oilers alumni along with six celebrities, including the Hanson brothers, and others celebrating the 40th anniversary of the classic movie Slap Shot.

Proceeds from the challenge go to supporting minor sport and recreation across West Yellowhead. As 1,500 people converge in the area, book more than 2,000 hotel rooms, and support local businesses, they will bring thousands of dollars into the local economy.

I would like to thank the organizers, volunteers, and more than 25 sponsors that make this event possible.

Please come on out to West Yellowhead and join us at the Challenge in the Rockies, from March 29 to April 2. I look forward to seeing you there.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Violence against Women and Girls

Drever: Thank you, Madam Speaker. On March 8 world-wide communities came together to celebrate the accomplishments of the struggle for equality. Millions marked International Women's Day sharing stories of accomplishments and of hope.

This year that struggle for safety and equality rubbed raw. Only a month ago my family and I lost my dear sister, Victoria, and it was a pain like no other. I know nothing can change what happened to her, but I vowed for her and for my nieces that I would do anything in my power to end violence against women and girls.

Madam Speaker, half of Canadian women have suffered at least one act of physical or sexual violence since the age of 16, and over a quarter have been assaulted by a spouse. Every six days a woman in Canada is killed in domestic violence. In the 66 days that we will sit here in this Chamber, 11 women will die.

Our government has taken action on the work to end gender-based violence, and I'm proud that my private member's bill, the Residential Tenancies (Safer Spaces for Victims of Domestic Violence) Amendment Act, 2015, became law. I have been flooded with messages of gratitude from women leaving violence. Since then 134 Albertans have been able to escape their perpetrators without financial penalty. And the work continues. Our government has introduced Bill 2, an act to eliminate limitation periods for launching a civil claim related to sexual or domestic violence. Survivors should feel empowered to come forward on their own terms when they are ready.

Madam Speaker, our government will continue to work to make change. We will continue to work to make the lives of Albertans better. We will continue to work to support those living with trauma. This is our government, a government for all Albertans.

Thank you.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I have two tablings. The first is five copies of a document entitled Taxation Habit Bad for Health. It reminds us that "taxes are the arterial sclerosis of the economy."

Also, I have a tabling of five copies of a letter from a member of the Hotshots curling league. They're concerned about the AGLC's enforcement of the 50-50 rules, and they're requesting that the law allow for draws under $500 to be exempt.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I have the appropriate number of copies to table of a letter received from The Association of Alberta Public Charter Schools expressing their concerns about being excluded in Bill 1 despite the fact that they are public schools.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other tablings today?

Hon. members, we had a point of order raised during question period. The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Madam Speaker, I was going to raise a point of order with respect to the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks' use of preambles, but it seemed to be somewhat widespread today, and I think you've dealt with it a couple of times. So I will withdraw the point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: All right. I appreciate you withdrawing the point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: I would like to offer a little bit of clarification, however, on preambles with the use of “given.” It doesn’t give you blanket permission to just string together a bunch of unrelated comments simply because you’ve said “given” in between them. I’d encourage you, hon. members, to please keep your supplementals relevant to the first question.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 3

Voluntary Blood Donations Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It’s my pleasure to move third reading of Bill 3, the Voluntary Blood Donations Act, on behalf of the Minister of Health.

Bill 3 has certainly caused lively debate, and I’m very pleased with the support that it is getting. It’s clear to me that we can all agree that our public blood supply is an important topic that many of you are passionate about.

Bill 3 will ensure that our voluntary donor base does not become eroded. The legislation will ban payment to an individual donor, ban paid blood donation advertising, exempt Canadian Blood Services so they can continue with their current practices and any future activities, provide an exemption for blood given solely for the purpose of research, and provide for inspection and enforcement.

I acknowledge that there are some concerns raised by the opposition, and I would like to respond to a couple; for instance, the funding that Alberta provides for the collection and manufacturing of plasma. In 2016-17 Alberta Health budgeted approximately $200 million for transfusable blood, fresh plasma, and plasma for manufactured products. Nearly 60 per cent, or $120 million, of that line will be spent on finished plasma products made from plasma collected both domestically and abroad. This funding helped ensure that Canadian Blood Services could collect voluntary donations of plasma and ensured that there was an adequate supply of plasma in Alberta to meet the demand for transfusions.

In 2015-16 Alberta also spent $111 million on plasma for manufactured products. This plasma was manufactured into drugs that treat fluid loss in burn patients, transplant recipients, and trauma patients. It treats immune disorders and severe infections, and it also treats bleeding disorders such as hemophilia. We don’t currently have the infrastructure to manufacture these products in Alberta or in Canada. Plasma is a perishable product, and if it’s not used or manufactured in a timely manner, it may go to waste, and we can’t allow that to happen.

The system that Canadian Blood Services has established helps ensure that we have the blood, plasma, and drugs manufactured from plasma that we need when we need them. They do this in part by purchasing plasma products from the international market to meet the Canadian demand. This is why the legislation helps to protect Canadian Blood Services’ ability to continue to manage the national blood system, and for this reason they will be exempt.

The ban on paid donations will help ensure that Alberta patients have secure and reliable access to donated blood when they need it. I need to emphasize, Madam Speaker, that donating blood cannot be viewed as a business venture. We cannot allow our system to be driven by individuals who are only donating to receive a payment. This is not how we protect our vulnerable population and not how we should ensure that products are available to those Albertans who need them when they need them.

Private businesses that pay for donations are looking to sell their product to the highest bidder. This may cause our blood and plasma to go to another country that offers more money for it. Bill 3 will help us support a national blood supply by preventing private clinics that pay their donors for blood donations from setting up in the province.

The legislation will also help prevent Alberta’s voluntary blood donor pool, that Canadian Blood Services relies upon, from being depleted. Supporting our national blood system, operated by Canadian Blood Services, helps ensure we can maintain a sufficient supply of blood and blood products in Canada. A blood donation system based on payment can lead to a disconnected and fragmented national blood system. In addition, financially motivated donors may choose to donate to a private clinic. This may in turn lead to a depleted blood supply as individuals choose private plasma collection clinics instead of donating to the voluntary clinics.

This legislation brings Alberta in line with Ontario and Quebec. These provinces have already banned paid blood donation to protect the voluntary donation system.

It is important to recognize that the World Health Organization also encourages countries to support voluntary blood donation systems. The organization has indicated that this system presents the safest, most reliable source of donation and does not exploit vulnerable populations.

Our blood supply is one of the most important resources we have. Donating blood should not be looked at as a way for Albertans to make money. It’s a valuable public resource that saves lives every day. This legislation is intended to make sure paid donations do not erode the voluntary donation base needed by Canadian Blood Services. With Bill 3 our government will work closely with Canadian Blood Services to ensure Albertans continue to have secure access to this resource when and where it’s needed. We support the voluntary blood donation system.

I’d also just like to add a few quotes from some research from the Ontario Legislature. I’d like to quote Christine Elliott, health critic for the Ontario Conservatives and two-time leadership candidate and wife of the late Jim Flaherty. Elliott said that blood is a public resource. This value must guide the blood supply system, as voluntary donors are doing it for the benefit of other persons in Canada and not for any other motivations. For this reason, profits should not be made from donated blood, and the operator of the blood system should act as a trustee of this valuable public resource.

This is from the Ontario Hansard, March 24, 2014, at 16:40.

The Ontario bill went on to pass unanimously, with PCs, Liberals, and New Democrats all in agreement. Later that year the Ontario PCs went on to campaign unsuccessfully on the promise to abolish 100,000 public-sector jobs. So the notion that the Ontario bill they voted for, or our Alberta bill, is simply a favour to the unions is absurd on its face.

I would like to add my voice to all of the people that have gone before me and encourage every member of this House to support the Voluntary Blood Donations Act. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to speak on Bill 3 in third reading. You know, really, this boils down to one question and one question very clearly, and that is: should we pay Canadians for donating plasma, or should we continue to pay for plasma products derived from paid American donors, full stop? That is the question at hand here. To bring in other issues is to really cloud that fundamental question.

One of the things that concerns me in this – and we heard it in the speech that was just made – is that there is a concern about two factors. One is – and I'll use the term – “cannibalizing” the volunteer base. The second is risk of viral transmission. Well, let's put the second one to bed right away. In 25 years of collecting plasma and processing it for use in patient care, there has not been a single case of viral transmission due to a plasma transfusion, and that is with the use of a paid or processed plasma product. The safety is ensured by Health Canada, and after what we went through in the '80s, we have one of the most stringent systems in the world. It's one we should be proud of. That is what safeguards patients, and those standards apply whether we are talking about blood products that are collected from voluntary donors or from paid donors. There is no difference in the standard. So to suggest in any way that deriving products from paid donors is in any way more risky than deriving products from voluntary donors is simply false.

The Krever commission 20 years ago recommended going primarily with voluntary blood donors, but it also recognized that a lot of the problems we faced in the '80s were due to problems in the organizations that were doing the blood collection, not in the factor of whether we're using voluntary or paid-for donors. I know there are organizations that are very concerned and are still holding to the recommendations of the Krever inquiry report, a 20-year-old report from a time when plasma use and the use of plasma protein products, processed plasma, was in its infancy. Since that time that use is burgeoning. It's growing by double digits every year. So let's put that one to bed right away.

The second objection is the one about how it would affect the voluntary donor base. You know, at face value, if you were to walk into a coffee shop and say, “If we started paying people for plasma donations, do you think it would affect the voluntary donor base?” people might say: “Well, yeah. Why would I volunteer if I could get paid for it?” But there's a problem. There's a difference between donating plasma for the purpose of plasma protein products and donating blood or plasma for transfusion purposes.

When you donate blood, you can only do it once every eight weeks if you're a man, once every 12 weeks if you're a woman, and it takes about 20 minutes. If you're donating plasma, it takes 90 minutes, and you do it once a week. Because of those requirements, there is not a single country in the world that has been able to establish a self-sufficiency in plasma supply on a purely voluntary donor basis. Nowhere. It's just simply because of the difference in donation between plasma and blood.

You know, a lot of people aren't aware of that. A lot of people aren't aware that we're purchasing 70 per cent of the plasma products we need in Canada from out of the country, from donors who generally are paid. You know, it also ignores the fact – and we've heard a few times the statistics, one year old, from the facility that is now open in Saskatoon. That's fine, and that should continue to be monitored. But against that one single piece of evidence that it might affect the voluntary donor pool, we have 30 years of evidence in Manitoba, in Winnipeg, where there's been a paid-for plasma collection centre for 30 years, and both Canadian Blood Services and Health Canada have said that it does not affect their voluntary donor pool.

In addition, we have the evidence from countries like Germany, Austria, and the United States, where they have parallel voluntary and paid-for donor pools, and their voluntary donor rates are nearly double the Canadian donor rate of 3.6 per 100 people. Their voluntary donor rates run in the 5.7 and 5.6 ranges, yet they also have a paid-for system. The idea that you're somehow going to affect your paid-for system is simply not borne out by the evidence. Other countries have proven that.

Why would you be against this? Well, I'm going to put a very fine point on this right now. This government is protecting its union friends, full stop. They are protecting union jobs in CUPE at Canadian Blood Services, full stop. They are protecting Canadian Blood Services, which is a closed union shop, and they are trying to stop any development of any competition to Canadian Blood Services. That's the motivation here. That's who they're trying to protect. Instead of providing for plasma that could be collected and processed in a whole new biomedical – call it an industry. I thought you were in favour of diversifying the economy. I thought you were in favour of new jobs. I thought you were in favour of investment. You want to shut these all down. That is what you want by doing this.

Now, Canadian Blood Services say that they have a plan, that they have a plan to invest 100 million taxpayer dollars to take their current system from 20 per cent all the way up to 50 per cent of the required supply. Even with an investment of 100 million taxpayer dollars, they still wouldn't get us to where we need to be. We would still need to purchase additional supplies.

It ignores the reality that there is no country in the world that has achieved plasma self-sufficiency. To suggest somehow that Canada would be able to overcome that hurdle because of some factor that has yet to be identified by the proponents of this bill is simply not true. The people we should be listening to, Madam Speaker, are patients, patients that depend on these plasma products.

I would like to quote from an editorial by Durhane Wong-Rieger, who was formerly the president of the Canadian Hemophilia Society. This is what she said.

One of the most important things I learned from my four years as president of the Canadian Hemophilia Society during the public inquiry was that fear, prejudice and politics could trump science and reason in blood-related decisions.

This is a government that always says that they want to rely on science. This is a government that says that it wants to rely on the data. Well, it should look at the data surrounding blood transfusion and plasma transfusion specifically when we're dealing with patients.

I'd like to furthermore quote from the same letter:

Patients with rare disorders, as well as many others, rely on plasma-derived products... On the one hand, Canada can continue to rely on products made with plasma from paid American donors. Most of our patients whose lives literally depend on these products already know and have no concerns that the donors are paid. On the other hand, if Canada were successful in setting up paid plasma donor clinics, not only might we have greater security of supply but we would be contributing to a worldwide need for safe plasma.

But, no, Madam Speaker. This government wants to shut that down. This government wants to keep those evil blood brokers out of Alberta. It's okay for them to set up in B.C. and it's okay for them to set up in Saskatchewan and Manitoba and New Brunswick because all of those provinces have welcomed this because they were forward thinking and they understand that this is a way to diversify the economy.

They keep on pointing to Ontario and to Quebec. Well, the law in Quebec is nearly 30 years old, and Héma-Québec – that's the blood service in the province of Quebec; it's not Canadian Blood Services – is desperately looking for ways to increase their plasma donor pool. They are looking at spending millions and millions of dollars in advertising to try to build up that pool because they cannot monetarily compensate donors. Doesn't it just make more sense to compensate the donors and not pay all those dollars to advertising firms?

Madam Speaker, that is the issue. We've got five specific patient groups who have come out – and there are others – but specifically the Canadian Immunodeficiencies Patient Organization, CIPO. In their brief they comment:

Not allowing paid plasma donations in Canada will encourage Canada's overreliance on the US for plasma. We are concerned that only three of some 30 plasma-derived products used by Canadians are manufactured in whole or in part by plasma collected from unpaid donors by [Canadian Blood Services] and Héma-Québec.

That, indeed, Madam Speaker, is the challenge we have. To simply walk away and to simply say no to the investment of $400 million; to 2,000 jobs that include nurses, laboratory technicians, medical professionals; to not recognize what British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and New Brunswick have already recognized, that this is a medical reality and that the need for these products is only increasing, is to stick our proverbial heads in the sand, which, by the way, ostriches don't do, and ignore reality. It is to ignore the reality that the need for these products will only grow.

You know, in 2013 there was a national round-table on blood products and what should be done with regard to paid plasma transfusions, and one of the conclusions of that round-table, coming out of Justice Krever's recommendation, was that Canada should have an open blood system but that it should consult with the public before changing the voluntary system. Because it is a public policy issue that impacts all Canadians, there was a recommendation for a cross-country public consultation, and patients that use plasma products were identified as a key stakeholder group that must be consulted on this issue as they are the ones that are familiar with the safety issues and they are the most concerned with security of supply.

I ask the minister: were they consulted? Did you talk to this key stakeholder group? My bet is that you talked to the folks that you had at your press conference; yes, the president of CUPE from Canadian Blood Services, who was on the podium with you that day.

That is the crux of the argument, Madam Speaker. It is: who are you speaking for? Are you speaking for patients? No, you're not. The patients are very clearly saying that they want to see paid-for plasma donations in Canada. That is very clear. Are you speaking for unemployed Albertans, who could be employed in these operations, who could work in these plasma collection centres? Very clearly, you aren't because you're saying no to this potential source of economic diversification. You are speaking for your union friends, and that is it. It is time to speak and to broaden your perspective beyond just keeping your friends in the unions happy. That is your job in here when you come into this Chamber. You have a duty to all Albertans, and that duty extends beyond your friends in the unions. That is what needs to be done in terms of the decision-making here.

There is overwhelming evidence, Madam Speaker, unbiased scientific evidence, that shows that paid plasma donations are safe, that paid plasma donations do not cannibalize the voluntary donor supply, and that paid plasma donations would provide a source of economic benefit to our province and to Canada in general and would help secure our safety and security of Canadian supply from Canadian donors. But these folks want to shut that down.

Madam Speaker, in my view, Bill 3, which will close off that opportunity because Canadian Plasma Resources has said very clearly that they will go elsewhere, to where they are, in fact, welcome to set up, is one more example of how this government chases away the entrepreneur, the investor, the people who actually want to come to Alberta. Despite what they will tell you, that is what they are doing here. It is shameful, and I'm opposed to Bill 3.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: I'll recognize the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Bill 3, the Voluntary Blood Donations Act, is not just about promoting volunteerism and blood donations. It's the linchpin that will discourage the biomedical industry from developing life-saving drugs and adjuncts here in Alberta. The health industry promotes economic and health benefits. This is an industry that provides more than 11 per cent of Canada's GDP. Health is a major employer. Over 45,000 Canadians are employed in pharmaceutical, medical equipment, and medical supply manufacturing alone. Directly or indirectly this sector influences the careers of thousands of Canadians, all highly educated and who qualify as well-paid folks who pay taxes. They purchase goods and technology and services from every sector in our economy, helping to drive our economy. This sector is a major foundation of science and technological research. Advancements in the life sciences sector result in improved health for everybody.

Madam Speaker, did you know that at the beginning of the 20th century the average life expectancy was 50 years? In 1961 we could expect to live to 71 years, in 2006 to 80 years. In the span of a century we've gained 30 years of life for the average person. Some of this is due to benefits that come from more education and increased income, but more importantly it's the result of research and innovation that was translated into health care services and treatments.

We are a country that has been shifting the basis of our workforce. We are diversifying beyond the natural resource sector, where we fished and we farmed and we harvested trees and we mined oil and gold and diamonds, to one that is leading to more knowledge-based work, with science and technology as the base.

Canada produces great innovators in health. Pabulum, the infant food, was initially developed by three Canadians to prevent and treat rickets. It is now helping hundreds of millions of children across the world. T-cell receptors and the gene that produces them was discovered by Canadians. Understanding how T cells work helped us develop drugs that fight infection, autoimmune disorders, cancer, and posttransplant rejection. Cancer patients receive radiation treatments from cobalt-based units as opposed to using radium. This allowed an affordable treatment that could penetrate deep tumors in the body, another Canadian contribution to health.

Stem cells. Stem cells are the master cells of the human body. It was a Canadian and Scottish research collaboration that was able to generate stem cells more easily from the human body. This process allows for the person's own cells to replace cells that cause devastating diseases like Alzheimer's, Parkinson's, and diabetes. This research continues on, but it was innovation here that has enabled this research to progress. Need I mention Sir Frederick Banting, who helped develop insulin? Prior to this innovation diabetes meant certain death for children.

This is an industry that uses scientists, people from many disciplines like biochemistry, molecular biology, genetics, cellular biology, and medicinal chemistry. Of interest to note: each aspect of this industry requires human samples as the base to develop these innovations.

This bill isn't just about stopping greedy companies from paying for human products from disadvantaged citizens; it's a precursor to stopping any access to voluntary donors for biomedical companies, which, in turn, use these products to create medicines and for other life-saving measures. This is a sector that relies on human tissues to create solutions to disease.

Why does this NDP government hate science? Why does this NDP government not support industry that creates breakthroughs in medicine and diagnosis and treatment of disease? Why does this government not support the biosciences sector? Why does this NDP government choose to take the moral high ground yet choose to buy products from the United States, that collects and processes these things in the very same manner to which this government objects? Why does this NDP government choose to support international companies? Actually, on that point, we shouldn't be surprised. They're supporting an Ontario company over Alberta companies to buy light bulbs. Why does this government choose to exempt one organization from paying for this human product?

Is this government obtuse, or are they ignorant? Their superficial view demonstrates a lack of consultation, especially with patient advocacy groups that rely on medications and treatments born of these questionably ethical methods, groups like the Canadian Immunodeficiencies Patient Organization and the Canadian Hemophilia Society.

I'm pleading with this government to consider diversification of our economy instead of pursuing ideological beliefs. I am pleading with this government to reconsider this bill. If this government is simply trying to protect a few union jobs, that would be unfortunate because you're sending a message that will discourage an entire industry from blossoming here in Alberta, and that's the real crime here. This is an NDP government choosing ideology over practicality and reality. Keep your blinders on, NDP. Keep Albertans down. Keep your reliance on out-of-province solutions.

Let this vote on this bill be about the true issue here. Madam Speaker, to vote no to this bill is to say yes to the diversification of our economy. To say yes to this bill is simply hypocritical, narrow minded, and short sighted.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Dr. Turner: Well, first of all, I'm surprised that the member opposite would actually call this side of the House a word that starts with "I." I think it's actually unparliamentary. I take a great deal of umbrage at that, and I hope that he thinks better of it in future debate.

An Hon. Member: Did he call us intellectual?

Dr. Turner: He didn't call us intellectual.

An Hon. Member: Oh. Sorry. I missed it.

Dr. Turner: Right.

The other thing I take umbrage at is being called unscientific. How many of us on this side have actually studied science in high school or taken courses at university or even studied to be a nurse or studied to be a doctor or a psychologist? I think maybe only the bus driver on this side hasn't taken the course. I think this sort of debate really debases the collegial atmosphere that we're supposed to be enjoying in this. As I said, Madam Speaker, I really resent it. I do want to get back to my comments, though, on the gist of what was being said.

3:20

The collection of blood plasma by a private corporation goes against all of the precepts of the blood system that's been built up. Actually, Dr. Norman Bethune, who was a hero of both the Spanish war and the Second World War in China, was the originator, a Canadian who actually established the first mobile blood transfusion unit. I'm proud to say that I'm a graduate of the same medical school that he taught at. So we have a long tradition here in Canada of a voluntary blood transfusion service that is dependent upon the altruistic commitment of something like 50,000 Albertans a year as well as probably – I think it translates into half a million Canadians a year giving blood. What this bill attempts to do is to protect that voluntary blood system, and we should all be working together.

Now, there's a lot of vilification in some of the comments that were being made about the CBS and what a horrible organization it is. Remember that the CBS is a totality of 10 different provinces as well as three territories, that have come together to organize a voluntary blood system. As was said, Héma-Québec is separate. Otherwise, there is a common blood system that is actually run by the provinces. The province of Alberta has a seat on the board of Canadian Blood Services, and it is that board that determines the policies, not the unions, not the citizens of Alberta. The board of Canadian Blood Services determines the policies, and they have been charged with collecting sufficient red cells, platelets, plasma for transfusion as well as plasma for fractionation.

Again, that last point is what is being missed on the other side. We don't have a plasma fractionation plant in Canada, and we haven't had one since the late '80s, when Connaught labs closed, because it is not economic given the size of our economy to have that. We have depended for over 20 years on getting plasma fractionation elsewhere.

The exception to that is in Manitoba, which has been mentioned. Manitoba has a phenomenal private plasma collection system. It is called the Rh institute, and it was created by the Bowman brothers in Manitoba. It's actually owned by a company called Cangene now, and the so-called paid donors actually are women. There's a group of women who have become heavily immunized against the Rh factor that actually would donate except that they're paid for their time to come in and donate. That is a source of the Rh factor that prevents Rh disease. That's the disease where if a woman is Rh negative and has a baby that is Rh positive, that baby will die unless they get the Rh treatment.

The Deputy Speaker: We no longer have any time left under 29(2)(a). My apologies.

I'll recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow, followed by Stony Plain.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. This bill is one I've really struggled with. I want to be clear that my instinct when I first saw the bill was to support it because I would like to be part of a province that has a voluntary system that meets all of our needs, that supports the principles of public health care, that supports the principles of accessibility and safety. These are things that I hold dear.

But as I looked deeper into this issue, starting with the premise that blood is sacred, that it is precious, far too precious or sacred to be bought or sold, that we ought to ensure that voluntary donations meet our needs – well, we've heard from previous speakers and through debate on this bill that that simply isn't true. In fact, it's hypocritical for us to say that we will never rely on paid donations for anything because we do. We rely on at least 80 per cent of our plasma supply coming from paid donors in the United States. So I asked myself: what's the difference?

I'm going to try hard not to make this too ideological an issue, and what I try to do on most occasions is to rely on the evidence. I've spent a lot of time doing research on this, and I want to acknowledge and recognize and thank the library staff here at the Legislative Assembly, who've done remarkable work on very short notice to find some journal articles for me. Val Footz and staff are remarkable. I want to acknowledge them.

I want to look at the impact, firstly, of incentives on what should be an altruistic transaction in the case of blood donation. What is the impact of incentives on altruism? I found that there's a long-held principle, dating back to the 1970s, that monetary incentives may crowd out altruistic donors because, ironically, altruistic donors will stop donating if there's a cash reward involved, which is, you'd think, counterintuitive. But people get what, believe it or not, the academic literature calls, quote, a warm glow from an altruistic activity. If that is replaced by a cold, monetary transaction, people who are motivated by intrinsic reward and that warm glow will stop doing it. Are we simply going to crowd out and displace voluntary donors by paying people? That is a principle called motivational crowd out. That is something from economics literature.

There was an article written in 2013 called Not All Incentives Wash Out the Warm Glow: The Case of Blood Donation Revisited. I want to quote a couple of lines from that. One of the most interesting points from this is that the intrinsic motivation that comes from giving may just simply go unnoticed if payment is offered. It's not that people do not feel that intrinsic motivation, but it's just not something that's noticed or recorded in the academic literature. What they found – I think this is an important point – is that there's "no evidence of potential crowding out when non-monetary rewards are involved," things like a lapel pin or a pen or a T-shirt or something like that.

So then we think, "Aha; that means that so long as we allow for nonmonetary rewards, people will continue to volunteer and donate altruistically," which is the way it works now, which this bill doesn't prevent. We think: "Okay. That's good, then. We can support Bill 3 in its current form. That would be fine." But not so fast because that refers, in this particular research, to whole blood donation, not to plasma donation.

Then we move on to finding: how can we reconcile that? Is it possible, then, to have a voluntary blood donation system alongside a paid plasma donation system? I did some further research into that, and it turns out that it is possible. One of the ways we can do that is to make the rewards optional. Now, I equate this, although the scale and the impact of these two things are very, very different, to when you bring your own shopping bags to the grocery store. They'll say: would you like a 5-cent bag credit, or would you like that to go to charity? Well, you can take the money, or you can feel good about yourself, and you can give that to charity. What if we had a system in Alberta where plasma donation was potentially rewarded through a monetary incentive or you had the option of saying, "No; I'd rather donate my portion of that incentive to charity?"

Unfortunately, Bill 3 prevents us from ever going down that path. We will never know in Alberta if maybe this parallel system, where we allow incentive for those who are rewarded extrinsically, who will do something that is rewarded through financial gain, alongside people who are rewarded intrinsically, who do it out of the goodness of their heart because they want that warm glow of knowing they did the right thing – how will we ever know that that may in fact increase the number of plasma donations? Now, as I think has been brought up in this debate on this bill – and if it hasn't, I'll bring it up – plasma donation is both more intrusive and takes longer, and it can be done more frequently than whole blood donations.

Allowing that incentive for some to donate, creating an external incentive is important.

3:30

There's an article which I'll refer to, When Extrinsic Incentives Displace Intrinsic Motivation: Designing Legal Carrots and Sticks to Confront the Challenge of Motivational Crowding-out. I would be lying to you if I told you I read all 68 pages of this article, but there are some very, very interesting and, I think, important elements that I have just indicated there.

Another option that this particular article talks about is simply providing information about the nature of the task. In the case of plasma donation, that may address the concern. For example, as I've just said, a plasma donation is inherently a different thing than a whole blood donation. It takes longer. You have a needle in your arm for a longer period of time. It can take up to two hours, but that's a substantial impact. If we tell people, "You can donate plasma. It will take longer. It might be a little more uncomfortable, but in exchange for that we're willing to pay you," people may say, "Oh, I see. I'm getting paid because there's more involved. I feel okay about that." So people who feel intrinsically motivated to give blood because it's the right thing to do will not be put off by the fact that they may get paid for plasma donation. What if we paid people for plasma donation but not whole blood donation?

There is some evidence, then, that I found further on in that same article that shows that it is possible – and I won't quote the specific article, but that basically makes the point I have just made there – to have those two side by side. So if we have that option to retain financial incentives, we can – oh, sorry. Another point I want to make before I get to safety. I do want to address safety because I know that's a very important point.

If we pass Bill 3, we do not have an option to provide a financial incentive in a time of high need. What if there is a financial incentive at times of holidays, where there's a time of high demand but a time of low supply, one of those holidays being the Christmas season? What if people needed a few extra dollars at Christmas to get themselves through that season and they were able to accept that reward or that incentive at that time only because perhaps that was the only time that reward or incentive was offered? It's not always offered, but it's only offered in times when we really need it. That helps smooth out the ups and downs of the supply and demand for blood and blood products. But under Bill 3 we're no longer able to do that. That is not an option, so we continue to procure plasma and plasma products from paid sources in the United States.

Let's talk about safety. When I looked at the evidence about safety as to whether or not paid donations impact blood safety, the simple answer is that in the 21st century it does not. We've heard from previous speakers about that fact. There was a 2008 German study that showed voluntary and paid donations are in fact the same in terms of safety, which is primarily because of modern testing methods and screening methods which keep our blood and plasma systems safe.

As a result of all of those reasons, Madam Speaker, I will vote against Bill 3 because I think it's important we retain the option at least to provide incentives to donate plasma. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Stony Plain, followed by Calgary-Hays.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Madam Speaker. When I was a nurse working in acute care, we saw people every day who may be in need of a blood transfusion. I never had to fear that the blood my patient needed wouldn't be there when I went down to the blood bank, and I never had to tell a family that we couldn't save their loved one because we didn't have access to blood products needed, thanks to the CBS.

Blood transfusion is a core service within our health care system, and individuals who donate their blood provide a unique contribution to the health and survival of others. Protecting our voluntary blood donation system is paramount. Albertans will have secure and reliable access to donated blood when they need it most under this proposed legislation. This bill will also prevent Alberta's voluntary blood donor pool, which Canadian Blood Services relies on, from being depleted. This bill will create a barrier to the establishment of private pay-for-plasma clinics and ensures they will not operate that business in this province.

Every country faces an ongoing challenge to collect sufficient blood from donors to meet national requirements. The donation of blood by voluntary, unpaid blood donors is recognized as being crucial for the sustainability of national blood supplies, as shown in Saskatchewan, where CBS reported a 14 per cent drop in overall donors in the first year that the paid CPR clinic was open, which especially impacted the youngest generation of donors.

Internationally there are systems based on replacement donation by family and friends of patients requiring transfusion, which are rarely able to meet clinical demands for their blood. The World Health Organization and the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies aim to support national blood donor programs in building a stable base of the best possible blood donors to ensure sufficiency and sustainability of national blood supplies.

Part of the strategy to accomplish this goal is the formation of the foundation for the establishment of World Blood Donor Day, jointly sponsored by the WHO, the IFRC, the International Federation of Blood Donor Organizations, and the International Society of Blood Transfusion. That day is now celebrated each year throughout the world on June 14 to raise awareness of the importance of blood donation and recognize the contribution of voluntary, unpaid blood donors in saving lives and improving health. Analysis shows that countries with voluntary blood donation instead of just paid have a higher proportion of regular blood donors and that this has been maintained over a number of years.

Further, in countries where the percentage of voluntary blood donations has risen, there has also been an upward trend in the percentage of regular blood donations. This shows that voluntary blood donors are more likely to donate on a regular basis than any other type of donor. A panel of voluntary donors who donate blood regularly enables blood collection to be planned systematically to meet the requirements for blood by blood groups and components. This enables the blood transfusion service to maintain a constant and reliable supply of blood when required in every clinical setting practising transfusion. One paid donor equals exactly one fewer potential voluntary donor.

In systems based on voluntary blood donation, patients have improved access to safe blood transfusion in routine and emergency situations, without which their survival or quality of life may be threatened. The blood and blood products they receive carry a low risk of infection that may further compromise their health. They're not placed under pressure to find blood donors in order to receive treatment and feel a sense of being cared for by others who they will never meet. In turn, this may motivate the spirit of generosity and a desire for reciprocal volunteering in the future. Madam Speaker, you know that we all see that a little bit when we go to Tim Hortons in the morning and we do a pay-it-forward. It's the same kind of feeling you get, just a little bigger.

Voluntary donors are recognized to be motivated by altruism and the desire to help others. As could be the case in a paid plasma scenario, donors are not there because they need the money; therefore, they have no reason to withhold any information about their lifestyles or medical conditions that may make them unsuitable to donate. They are not placed under pressure by hospital staff, family members, or the community to donate blood, and they entrust their blood donations to be used as needed rather than for specific patients. The only reward that they receive is personal satisfaction, self-esteem, and pride.

In well-organized blood donor programs, voluntary donors, in particular regular donors, are well informed about the donation selection criteria. If they aren't eligible to donate right now, they're more likely to make the decision themselves to postpone their donation. That reduces the need for temporary or permanent deferrals. Blood donation is the gift of life that cannot be valued in monetary terms. The commercialization of blood donation is in breach of the fundamental principle of altruism, which voluntary blood donation enshrines.

Voluntary blood donors themselves benefit from health education and encouragement to maintain healthy lifestyles as well as regular health checks and referral for medical care if needed. Provided that they receive good donor care when they donate blood, they often feel personal satisfaction, which provides a sense of social engagement and belonging that is recognized and valued by the community.

Voluntary blood donors serve as effective donor educators, recruiters, and health promoters. I know that the first time I went and donated blood, I was taken by a friend of mine who was a regular donor. Studies have shown that the influence of active blood donors is one of the most effective strategies for donor recruitment. Voluntary donors also play a valuable role as active agents in health promotion. They help us build healthy communities through their influence among their peers and their families. Even donors who are no longer able to donate due to age or medical conditions can still play an important role in promoting voluntary blood donation in their families, workplaces, and communities. In my constituency of Stony Plain there is a family in which three generations are actively donating blood. The matriarch, Mrs. Hennig, has donated well over 800 times in her life. As she says: there is so much blood needed, and we can give the gift of life; it's gold, liquid gold for people who are in jeopardy of dying.

The commitment and support of the government for an effective national blood program is a prerequisite for the achievement of 100 per cent voluntary blood donation. The community must have confidence in its blood transfusion service. Without trust in its integrity and efficiency and the safety of its procedures, few people would choose to donate their blood. This trust is earned over a long period of time but can be undermined very quickly, resulting in a negative effect on the loyalty and continuing support of individual blood donors, the community, and partner organizations. Canadian Blood Services has earned our trust. Alberta has a long and proud history of support for the blood system. Donating blood is a valuable public resource that should not be a business. Donating blood saves lives.

This is what it comes down to, Madam Speaker. We know that for-profit, paid blood donation drives out voluntary donation, and that's why this bill is so important. It's about protecting our blood supply. Voluntary donation means that when you or someone you love needs blood the most, it'll be there. Voluntary donation means that you know that blood or blood products will be there for you in satisfactory amounts. Voluntary donation saves lives, and it helps to build a culture of trust and community.

I'd like to also mention, Madam Speaker, that, as we've stated numerous times in this debate, this legislation has absolutely no bearing on the ability for private businesses to come into Alberta and be part of the fractionation process or further processing. It will not stop that. We encourage that. I would remind the members opposite also that we did consult with patients. BloodWatch, which is the advocate and watchdog comprised of patients and survivors from the '80s who support the Krever report's firm stance that blood and plasma collection remain public, have implored all members of this House to please support this bill.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you once again, Madam Speaker, and thank you to my colleague for a very reasoned presentation on the importance of a voluntary blood donation system. I'm very impressed with that discussion. It was one of the things that Justice Horace Krever said in his report. I would actually commend the reading of that report to this Legislature. It's actually three volumes, but his commendation of the voluntary blood transfusion system that we have here in Canada was one of the most important recommendations that he made.

He made that recommendation because at the time – and he was looking at the blood system from 30 years ago – the blood system had been under a great deal of stress because of the appearance of new viruses like the human immunodeficiency virus as well as hepatitis C, which had previously been called non-A, non-B. The blood system had been dealing with hepatitis B, and it's interesting that the blood system is still dealing with problems with infection with hepatitis B. With all of the technology that there is in the system now, the most common blood-transmitted viral infection is hepatitis B. It's hepatitis B, actually, that we want to be most vigilant about in terms of preventing.

A person is at risk for carrying hepatitis B for lots of different reasons, but one of those reasons could be substance abuse. As we all know, substance abuse is prevalent in populations that are vulnerable, that may be affected by poverty or may be affected by mental health issues. It's exactly those populations that might be attracted to a paid plasma donation system. These are populations living in inner-city parts of our larger cities. They are populations that are perhaps transitioning from a First Nations environment to the urban environment, any population that's severely affected by poverty. Then when you compound this problem with the inducement of a payment for donation, there's a real concern.

I do want to tell an anecdote that came up at the Krever commission, and it's often thrown up in the face of us so-called left-wingers because it was Governor Bill Clinton of Arkansas that actually organized a form of paid plasma donation in the prisons of Arkansas and actually sold the plasma that he collected. There are some analogies to what is going on. I don't want to make those analogies too close, but there are some analogies to that, to the blood brokers who then basically said: oh, this blood is very safe, and you can go ahead and use it. In fact, many Canadian hemophiliacs and other persons dependent upon plasma products got infected in the 1980s, and I've never actually forgiven Bill Clinton for that. In fact, if I'd had the opportunity, I would have abstained from voting for him largely because of that even though he is a good left-winger. So Justice Krever was very clear that we need to be vigilant in terms of protecting our blood supply.

Another comment that I want to make – and it was mentioned in my colleague's comments – is that we do not have a plasma-fractionation industry here in Canada. The plasma that's being collected by this private company is currently in storage, and it's going to be sold to the highest bidder. That plasma isn't necessarily going to help Canadians become more self-sufficient in our plasma-fractionation products. I think that what we need to do – and it's actually up to all of us that are involved in the system – is look at how much of these plasma fractionation products... [A timer sounded] Sorry.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I've been trying to listen carefully to the comments here, and this is what I've heard: that through Bill Clinton blood came from the U.S. that was paid for, and it wasn't very good, or it wasn't safe. What this bill will end up if it goes through, that the government has put on the table – it will virtually guarantee that a lot of blood that comes into the system will come from the United States because that's where it comes from now. This will block Albertans' ability to replace some or all of that blood that comes from the United States with blood that's here in Alberta.

So what conclusions could one draw other than the fact that the NDP government seems to think Albertans' blood isn't as good as Americans' blood, because they're really only saying that everybody can get paid to give blood except Albertans. They must consider Albertans and their blood to be inferior in some way to the rest of the world, not much of an advertisement for someone who is governing Albertans and probably has a pipe dream of being re-elected by them one day.

Madam Speaker, it just does not stand up to scrutiny. You know what? The good doctor that just finished speaking really made the case for me that you cannot say that Albertans' blood is less safe than what we're getting from the United States right now. In fact, as my learned colleague from Vermillion-Lloydminster pointed out to the House, there haven't been any examples of a problem with blood that is known, so if you look at that – and I think even my friend, the doctor from Calgary-Mountain View, agrees – this kind of indicates that Albertans' blood isn't as good as what we're getting now, because that is what the government is saying. What else could they be saying? What other conclusion could you draw when the government says: we'll take anybody's blood in the world except Albertans. That's essentially what this legislation says.

In fact, at the very least it says: Albertans can't give blood that we need but Americans can. Somehow this government has decided that blood that comes from the United States is of a superior quality, safety, and content from that which Albertans have flowing through their veins. I reject that, Madam Speaker. I completely reject that.

Further, the government-side members, unfortunately, are twisting themselves into pretzels to try to make excuses for what this really is. The hon. member who's a nurse spoke a couple speakers ago and said that every donation that's paid for is one less donation that's donated. She said that we know that, when, in fact, it's been demonstrated here that we actually know exactly the opposite, and the hon. member knows that, too. Again, my learned colleague from Vermillion-Lloydminster quoted a whole bunch of research that indicates that. Unfortunately, Madam Speaker, my friends on the government side are making it up. So you have to ask yourself why they are creating statements that they know are not true on this topic. They absolutely know it.

You know what? The other thing that this does for a government that has had three failed jobs plans in a row – you would think, when they've got an opportunity knocking on the door for someone to provide investment and jobs here in Alberta, that they would be rolling out the red carpet or the orange carpet if they prefer and saying: come to Alberta. They should be rolling out the orange carpet to people that want to get in the blood business, rolling out the carpet and saying: please bring in that $400 million worth of investment; please bring in those 2,000 jobs. That'll be 1,999 more than their jobs plans have produced in the last two years. They should be saying: come in.

The government should be saying: we are so confident in our incredible ability to administer things that we'll make sure that when you're doing this business, we'll inspect you and make sure that you are as safe or safer than the blood that's coming in from the United States today. Yet, Madam Speaker, this particular government caucus has chosen to say none of those things. You know what? They are talking about things that – they're trying to raise bogeymen about hep B and hep C. We should be afraid of hepatitis B and C and all those things. I agree with that, but for some reason it's not to be feared from the United States, yet it's to be feared from Albertans.

It's just the way this legislation is written. It's what it's done. All it is meant to do is lock Albertans out from the ability to get paid for giving their blood. It's meant to lock Albertans out of a couple thousand full-time jobs, not the part-time jobs that are replacing the full-time jobs that were in Alberta before we had this NDP government.

When you think about this, Madam Speaker, when all the other arguments that my friends on the government side are making are self-defeating, even with what they say themselves – they've said things that prove their arguments aren't true – what's left? What's left is protecting their big-money friends that are in the business now. They want to maintain a monopoly for those who actually pull the chain of this government and that this government dances to the tune of. That is what this legislation is about. It's His Master's Voice from, you know, the old record player company. They've heard their master's voice.

Mr. Mason: RCA.

Mr. McIver: RCA. Thank you, hon. Government House Leader.

You know when the dog is listening in to his master's voice? That is what this government has heard. They've heard their master's voice, and their master says: "Keep us in the monopoly of the blood business. Don't allow new jobs into Alberta because that will hurt our monopoly. Don't allow new investment into Alberta because that will hurt our monopoly. Tell Albertans their blood is dirtier than Americans' because otherwise that will hurt our monopoly." That is what this government is doing with this legislation, and that is why I will boldly and proudly vote against it.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a) if I may.

The Deputy Speaker: Under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Mason: I was listening intently to the last member but also to the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster when he was speaking. He talked about the American system, and one of the things he said, which I found interesting, is that notwithstanding that they have this for-profit collection system in the United States, they also have a parallel voluntary donation system and that they have a higher rate of participation in the voluntary system than we do in Canada. I thought that was interesting.

Then he went on to argue, as did the hon. leader of the third party, that this is an attempt by the government to simply create or protect union jobs. But if the American model was implemented, then it would seem to me that it doesn't threaten the Canadian Blood Services if, in fact, it's quite possible to go ahead. But the opposition is making this real leap of logic, Madam Speaker, that the only motivation here is not to protect the voluntary blood system in our country but to protect union jobs. Clearly, it's the case that if we had the American system, the union jobs or the Canadian Blood Services voluntary system would not be threatened. Can the hon. member explain that contradiction and how he reached this far-out conclusion that the only motivation left for this legislation was to protect union jobs at the expense of the interests of the public?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member. Well, the hon. member seems to be making an argument that if we had paid blood donations, you would actually also have more voluntary blood donation, like the U.S. That's what he has just suggested. [interjection] That's what he just said. But that's not my argument; that's the hon. member's argument. If that was true, that would be another good reason to vote against this legislation. If having a paid system would actually create more voluntary blood donors, well, wouldn't that be terrific?

While the hon. member suggested that that may be the case – we'll call it his claim and not mine; I don't know that that's true – that's just one more reason to vote against this legislation, one more reason to vote against maintaining a monopoly forever and ever, one more reason to say no to this legislation and say yes to investment in Alberta, to say yes to jobs in Alberta, to say yes to the opportunity of expanding some industry in biology that could spring out of the knowledge that the additional professionals here in the blood business may have. It may spring into some other industry having to do with biology. Actually, I appreciate the Government House Leader making my case for me, that that's just one more reason to vote against this legislation. It doesn't add up.

The only thing, Madam Speaker, that adds up is that this legislation is purely and for no other reason designed to maintain the monopoly of the government's big-money friends, the master's voice, whom they hear constantly. The master's voice who tells them what legislation to put forward and what legislation not to put forward is the only thing that's left. In fact, what should be troubling for those on the government side is that their own arguments have debunked their reasons for supporting this legislation. There's not much more to say.

They have talked about how unsafe the blood is that potentially could be out of the United States, yet they don't want the blood from Alberta. They've said that having a paid system could actually spur more people to give voluntarily. I don't know whether it will or not. That was a suggestion that I just heard from the Government House Leader. It's a pretty interesting one, but one I could neither support nor go against. It's the first time I've heard that theory.

Madam Speaker, all the reasons that the government-side members have given when they've stood in this House to support this legislation, if you follow the logic through in a very simple and direct way, it's actually an argument to not support this legislation. So with the lack of logic and with the lack of support by science, the lack of support by everything else, it doesn't add up.

4:00

The Deputy Speaker: The time has expired for 29(2)(a).

Are there any further speakers to the bill?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for St. Albert on behalf of the Minister of Health to close debate.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Madam Speaker. While it's been a pleasure discussing this very important bill and listening to story-time from across the floor, it is my pleasure to close debate on the Voluntary Blood Donations Act.

Thank you.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion for third reading carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 4:01 p.m.]

[Fifteen minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

Totals: For – 37 Against – 9

[Motion carried; Bill 3 read a third time]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, pursuant to Standing Order 19(1)(c) the Assembly must vote on the motion for consideration of Her Honour the Honourable Lieutenant Governor's speech.

Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Ms Jansen moved, seconded by Ms Miller, that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois Mitchell, CM, AOE, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Motion carried]

Government Motions

Address in Reply to Speech from the Throne

11. Mr. Mason moved:

Be it resolved that the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne be engrossed and presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor by such members of the Assembly as are members of Executive Council.

The Deputy Speaker: This is a debatable motion if any hon. members wish to speak to it. The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. I'll be brief. I will just say, Madam Speaker, that my concern with the Speech from the Throne – of course, I hold the Lieutenant Governor in the highest of personal regard and professional regard and every other form of regard that I can muster. Let me be clear about that.

4:20

I have to say that when you look at some of the main titles of the Speech from the Throne – Working to Make Life Better for Families, Building New Pipelines, and Creating and Supporting Jobs – unfortunately, the government hasn't really lived up to these things, particularly when you look at all the new burdens that they're going to put on families with taxes: personal, corporate, and carbon taxes. While the new pipelines that have been approved are a wonderful thing but done by the federal government, the fact is that at the same time a pipeline previously approved, the Northern Gateway, was killed under this government's watch. There are just too many things in the Speech from the Throne, Madam Chair, that do not live up to Albertans' reasonable expectations.

With that, I will cease talking, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wishing to speak? Seeing none, the hon. Government House Leader to close debate.

Mr. Mason: One thing I just wanted to mention in closing: for those members that are curious, the definition of "engross" is to produce a legal document in its final or definitive form.

Having defined what we are doing, I am happy to close debate, Madam Speaker.

[Government Motion 11 carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you. In view of the hour and the momentous progress that we have made and the fact that we are all about to return to our constituencies to re-engage with our voters, with our citizens, I will move that we call it 4:30 and adjourn for the day, Madam Speaker, and wish everyone a great constituency week.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:22 p.m. to Monday, April 3, at 1:30 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 29th Legislature - 3rd Session (2017)

Activity to Thursday, March 23, 2017

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 1 to 200 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 201 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

* An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at 780.427.2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned chapter number until the conclusion of the Fall Sitings.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, April 3, 2017

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us reflect and pray, each in our own way. Let us remember those who have served our province in earlier years and who have now passed on. As current MLAs it is important that we learn from the experience of those who went before us. Let it offer guidance in order to help establish better public policy for the benefit of all Albertans.

Hon. members, as is our custom, we pay tribute to members and former members of the Assembly who have passed away since we last met. With our admiration and respect there is gratitude to members of the families who shared the burden of public office and public service.

Mr. Leonard Wendelin Mitzel
February 18, 1946, to March 19, 2017

The Speaker: Leonard (Len) Wendelin Mitzel was with us from February 18, 1946, to March 19, 2017. Mr. Len Mitzel served Albertans for many years in many ways. His first foray into public office was as a councillor and then reeve for the county of Forty Mile. Mr. Mitzel then served two terms as the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat from 2004 until 2012. During his second term he served as Deputy Chair of Committees, 2008 to 2011, and parliamentary assistant for Transportation, 2011 to 2012.

Mr. Mitzel remained an active voice for southeastern Alberta, promoting area businesses and tourism, developing water usage strategies, and mentoring participation in local government. Mr. Mitzel's dedication to southeastern Alberta continued to the very end, with his last major contribution to the region coming in this past year with the opening of a short-line railway to help farmers move their products to market. I personally knew Mr. Mitzel and saw in real terms his contribution to the community.

In a moment of silent reflection I ask you to remember Mr. Mitzel as you may have known him.

Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, we will now be led in the singing of the national anthem by Mr. Robert Clark. I would invite all to participate in the language of their choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
Il sait porter la croix!
Ton histoire est une épopée
Des plus brillants exploits.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Thank you. Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, with our admiration, respect, and gratitude to the members of the family who shared the burden of public office and public service, today I would like to welcome members of the Mitzel family who are present in the Speaker's gallery. Please rise as I call your name and remain standing until all have been introduced: Lara Mitzel-Smith, daughter of Mr. Mitzel; Karra Smith, granddaughter of Mr. Mitzel; Dixie Houghton, family friend of Mr. Mitzel; Terry Toth, family friend of Mr. Mitzel; and Laurie Toth, family friend of Mr. Mitzel. Welcome. We're pleased you can be with us today.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to the members of this House a school that resides in my riding. I have to say that St. Dominic school is a fair representative of what we have for schoolkids because, I will tell you, the questions they asked me downstairs were incredibly thoughtful. I'm glad to hear that they liked our mock Legislature. I would like to welcome the teachers and the chaperones – if they could stand first, please – Chantel, Benoit, Liz, Cindy, Erica, Trevor, Jessica, and Kyla. Thank you for bringing these children to the House. We really thank you for it. Now, if the rest of the kids can stand, we can acknowledge you through the House and welcome you to this great Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there any other school groups, hon. members?
The Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to rise today to introduce to you and through you Betty Henderson, Nelson Modin, and his wife, Hazel Modin. They are proud family members of Alice Modin. Betty is her daughter, and Nelson is her son. In 1985 Alice Modin campaigned for Alberta's first Seniors' Day, which paved the way for the now province-wide Seniors' Week. In honour of her contribution to Alberta the minister's seniors' service awards will now include the Alice Modin award to annually recognize a senior who provides outstanding service to their community. Alice's contributions were felt both locally and across the province, and it is my honour to have her family here today. I would ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two representatives from Strathcona county Economic Development and Tourism, Shane Olson, acting director, and Sean McRitchie, manager of industrial development. Through their department Shane and Sean strive to support a strong, diversified, and resilient economy while balancing social responsibility and environmental stewardship. I would ask my guests to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

1:40

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and to the rest of the House the newly elected executive and the interim executive director of the Council of Alberta University Students, or CAUS. CAUS represents over 100,000 undergraduate students from the universities of Alberta, Calgary, Lethbridge, Mount Royal, and MacEwan. They're in Edmonton this week for their annual advocacy week, meeting with MLAs and their staff to advocate on issues of fairness and transparency in the postsecondary system. I ask them to rise as I say their names and be warmly welcomed by the House: Hailey Babb, Branden Cave, Reed Larsen, Stephanie Nedoshytko, Conner Peta, Parvin Sedighi, Shubir Shaikh, Whitney Hunter, Camilo Gil, and Josh McKeown. Let's give them the warm welcome of the Legislature.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to introduce to you and through you Shifrah Gadamsetti and Dexter Bruneau. Shifrah is the current president of the Students' Association of Mount Royal University. She graduated from MRU with a degree in nursing and is now a practising RN. She decided to continue her education at MRU and is pursuing a degree in sociology with a minor in women's studies. One of her biggest projects this year is to push for a campus sexual assault policy, which I think is very important. Dexter is the current vice-president external of the Students' Association of Mount Royal University as well as the chair of the Council of Alberta University Students, CAUS. He will be graduating this spring with a degree in criminal justice, honours. One of Dexter's biggest projects this year is the execution of SAMRU's Student Connect event. I ask that my guests please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Chris and Laura Grant. Both are avid cyclists, as you know I am, and work to promote safe cycling in the community. Together they created Alberta Bike Swap, a safe place to buy, sell, and donate bikes across the province. The next event is in Edmonton on May 13 at Northlands, and I'd ask members to look at the Alberta Bike Swap website to find details. Chris and Laura are positive, empowering community builders who believe in labours of love, who inspire those around them, and who have worked very hard to keep cyclists safe in our communities. I would ask them to stand to receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Labour and minister responsible for democratic renewal.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some of the province's best field hockey players from the Edmonton region: Brien Murphy, Robin Virk and his father, Harsohail Parmar and his parents. They are here to celebrate players who've been selected to join Canada's men's junior developmental squad. I'd also like to recognize Canada's men's field hockey team as they have advanced to the world league semifinals after a top-two finish at world league round 2 in Trinidad and Tobago.

I'd like to add that Field Hockey Alberta is hosting a try-it event in my wonderful constituency of Edmonton-Mill Woods tomorrow for anyone who wants to get out and get a little active in the evening.

I thank everyone for joining us today and now ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some leaders and coaches in the sport of field hockey in our great province. Field hockey is the second most played sport in the world, played in 112 countries. In Alberta the sport is flourishing, with junior programs, provincial teams, and school programs popping up across the province. Recently Field Hockey Canada announced the men's junior development squad as it begins the journey to the 2020 world junior cup. Today we are joined by Peadar O'Riain, president of the field hockey association of Alberta; Burgundy Biletski, women's indoor national team 2005, 2007, and 2014 and executive director of Field Hockey Alberta; Jagdish Singh Dhaliwal, head coach King's XI hockey club; and Dilpal Singh Seehra, coach of Hawks Hockey Academy in Calgary. I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour and pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly also field hockey players from Calgary who have been named to the 2017 junior development squad. First, from Kings XI field hockey club I welcome Avi Dhaliwal, Shazab Shahzad, Parmvir Sidhu, Tanveer Singh Kullar, Harjot Dhaliwal, Jaskarn Dhaliwal. Second, from Hawks Field Hockey Academy I welcome Dildeep Seehra and Tanvir Kang. I hope all members will join me in congratulating them all on this tremendous accomplishment. Joining them is also my constituency manager, Roop Rai. I now ask all my guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

Vriend Decision Anniversary and LGBTQ Rights

Connolly: Mr. Speaker, yesterday was the 19th anniversary of the Supreme Court of Canada's Vriend decision, which marks a crucial moment for human rights and equality in Alberta. Delwin Vriend worked for years as a chemistry instructor. He also happened to be gay. He was fired from his job solely because he was gay. For seven years Mr. Vriend fought for his rights, taking his case all the way to the Supreme Court of Canada. The court found that our Charter of Rights and Freedoms protects everyone from workplace discrimination, no matter their sexual orientation. As a result, the court ordered that sexual orientation be read into Alberta's human rights legislation. It was a victory for Delwin Vriend and for us all as it expanded the legal human rights protection of every Albertan.

Mr. Speaker, some in our province denounced the decision. The PCs contemplated using the Constitution's notwithstanding clause so that discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation would be legal. Thankfully, wiser heads prevailed. But not everyone welcomed that. As an MP Jason Kenney spoke out constantly against the Vriend decision. In Parliament he stated the usual excuse that the human rights of LGBTQ-plus Canadians should be lower on the roster than others. He smeared the decision-making of the highest judiciary in the country.

But he went further than simply slamming the equal rights of all. Mr. Kenney said that protecting the human rights of LGBTQ-plus people, quote, opens the window for a provincial, populist party with conservative values. He called for a new party with far-right, anti-LGBTQ ideology. I wonder where Albertans have seen that before, Mr. Speaker.

I am proud that 19 years later, this government protects the human rights of all Albertans regardless of their identity. I am also ecstatically proud that those social conservative voices of the 1990s are not in government today. Let us celebrate how far we've come as a province and a country, when everyone can fully participate rather than be cast aside.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Okotoks Water Supply

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. An urgent issue affecting residents of Okotoks that has been brought up and postponed time and time again due to this government's inefficiency is the challenge of the devastating water shortage in the community. Since 2015 municipal representatives and I have urged this government to collaborate to fix the shortage of water that has been precipitated by the rapid and dramatic growth this community has seen in the past decade. We've sent letters and even brought the critical nature of this issue up in this House last year.

The prebudget water pipeline proposal that was required was sent to the Premier, the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Municipal Affairs, and the Minister of Transportation. This project has been shovel ready now for several years, and due to the inactivity and denial from this government our community is unable to move forward with this critical infrastructure project, resulting in the inability to attract investors and encourage established businesses, in essence stifling community growth.

This government has been aware that since 2002 the town of Okotoks has taken very aggressive environmental action pertaining to the conservation and the management of their water resources. They also now, due to the town's effort, have been recognized by various agencies and associations. Just recently Okotoks town management received a 2015 FCM sustainable communities award.

But it seems that these environmental stewards have not been recognized for their efforts and have had barriers presented to them each and every time they've met with this government. This government has been playing games by changing the rules and have not recognized this community for their efforts to comply with this government's wish list.

This government has received sufficient funding from their federal counterparts for exactly these types of water projects, but more accurately there is still about $60 million that has not been allocated from the federal clean water, waste water fund. This government is obligated to provide Okotoks with the resources they not only deserve but they desperately need. Do the right thing.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Government Policies

Mr. Jean: It was another busy week for the Premier, pitting herself as the leading opponent to the most pro oil and gas jurisdiction in Canada. If the Premier is so concerned about Saskatchewan sending letters, here's some free advice she can – can consider. Sorry, Mr. Speaker. This is just so shocking, given she has seen Albertans – actually, she had over 81,000 jobs. I just can't get it out. She should try some things. Here are some recommendations: stop attacking energy and agriculture; stop the labour review; stop, reverse, and repeal the NDP tax increases; stop shutting down coal; and stop suing Alberta power companies. Now, does the Premier think any of these might be good ideas to stop my stuttering and to stop Alberta shedding jobs?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What I do think is a good idea is that as Premier of the province I'm going to promote Alberta. I'm going to stand up for Alberta. I'm going to stand up for why Alberta is a place people should come to, for the fact that we have the lowest taxes in the country, by $8.7 billion compared to the next closest jurisdiction, and for the fact that Calgary is a great place to grow and start and build a business and that people shouldn't be leaving them. You know what? My minister of economic development is not in Saskatchewan learning lessons from somebody trying to steal jobs from Alberta. That's right.

An Hon. Member: Point of order.

Mr. Jean: Well, it sure would be nice, Mr. Speaker, to see the Premier get as angry about Quebec attacking the pipelines we need as she does about the Saskatchewan budget. It would be helpful, indeed.

Alberta now saw another multinational actually leave Alberta and wave goodbye to our province. ConocoPhillips now sees the United States as a better place to invest than Alberta is. The fact is that under this Premier we've lost thousands of head office jobs in Calgary, and 30 per cent of downtown Calgary is vacant, Mr. Speaker. How can the Premier not understand that her policies have had a direct hand in pushing businesses out of Alberta and into other jurisdictions?

Ms Notley: Well, again, you know, Mr. Speaker, the member opposite seems very, very interested in cheerleading for Alberta's demise, and I really believe that that ought to stop. Now, the fact of the matter is that we've had two excellent homegrown companies expand their investment in the oil sands on behalf of all Albertans. I'm so proud of that, and I'm very happy to be able to work with them as we move forward in building a responsible, sustainable, modern, progressive oil and gas industry that can compete for years to come throughout the world.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, just wait. You haven't seen anything yet. They're only two years into their mandate, and she should be more worried about other places than just Saskatchewan. Like it or not, the United States is our number one competitor and has no carbon tax, is building lots of pipelines, and is stripping down costly, inefficient regulations for energy companies. Now, we are talking about tens of billions of dollars of investment that is either leaving Alberta or is simply not coming our way and should be. Does the Premier not believe this is a serious problem, or will she just keep taxing and regulating Alberta businesses out of existence?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, the consolidation and reorganization within the oil sands that the member opposite is Chicken Little-ing over right now is actually something that makes the business more efficient and more productive over the long haul. Let me just quote from the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers, what they believe about the deal that the member opposite is so worried about: this deal signals a strong, long-term view of the value of Canada's oil and natural gas assets; among our competitors for global oil supply Canada leads in energy security, regulatory stringency, and environmental protection.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
Second main question.

Power Purchase Arrangements and the Balancing Pool

Mr. Jean: One way that this Premier likes to try and get rid of a problem is just to pile up debt. We've seen that, Mr. Speaker. There's no better example than the absolute debacle of their boneheaded policies with our electricity grid. Before the NDP the Balancing Pool had a $700 million surplus. Now because of the NDP and their mismanagement it is set to cost Albertans over $4 billion. Yes, $4 billion. That's more than what the NDP plans to scoop up from the carbon tax. How many more billions of dollars of debt will this Premier borrow to pay for her costly and failed electricity experiments?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, as is rather usual with the member opposite, he's taken a number and then grown it by – I don't know – 400 or 500 per cent, whatever he pulled out of the hat at that particular time. In terms of the work that we've done with the Balancing Pool, if we had not acted, average families would be forced to pay charges as high as $8.40 per month, and we kept those charges to 67 cents per month. That's because our government is focused on ensuring affordability for Albertans, predictability for Albertans, standing up for Albertans, and having their backs when the members opposite go ahead and sign a bad deal that throws Albertans under the bus.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Jean: Let me explain to the Premier and her cabinet why it's their fault. They raised taxes on power producers without any consultation. NDP mistakes mean that instead of getting big rebates from the Balancing Pool, Albertans are now on the hook for borrowing billions of dollars for electricity losses as a result of the NDP government's decision. This NDP government keeps trying to mislead Albertans that their green experiments won't hurt Albertans. Well, they are wrong. They're clearly wrong. I'll ask again: how many billions of dollars of debt will Albertans have to pay for over the next decade because of NDP negligence?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, it seems the members opposite really cannot restrain themselves from mansplaining to members on the other side, I gotta tell you. Let me just go over there and say to them that the fact of the matter is that a deal was signed, and it was a bad deal. It was a bad deal for Alberta consumers and for Alberta taxpayers. Those folks over there want to stand up to defend that bad deal, and they want to make sure that Albertans pay billions of dollars as a result of that bad deal. What our government did is that we said: "You know what? We were elected by Albertans. We were elected to represent consumers. We were elected to represent investors."

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, this is a multibillion-dollar screw-up that will cost Albertans big time for years and years. In November the Premier said that she was reasonably close to reaching a deal with Calgary-owned Enmax after trying to rip up their 16-year-old contract. It's been crickets since then, and the Premier wonders why she has a hard time getting any investment to Alberta. Well, will the Premier tell Albertans why her government is still suing Calgary-owned Enmax and how much this court case is going to cost Albertans suing Enmax to sue other Albertans?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, we were very pleased as part of the work that we did last fall to be able to enter into agreements with three of the four power companies that were impacted by the matter that the member opposite identifies. As well, we're continuing to work to support and protect consumers. That's why we put a cap on electricity prices, and that's why we are moving forward to ensure that Alberta consumers are protected. We will not apologize for that.

The Speaker: Third main question.

Mr. Jean: Let's be clear, Mr. Speaker. A cap equals higher taxes.

AIMCo Governance

Mr. Jean: There are few files as important to Alberta's financial future and security as AIMCo, but under the NDP's watch they are slowly eroding AIMCo's arm's-length independence from this government. Previously individuals appointed to AIMCo's board had to have proven expertise in investment management, finance, accounting and law, or experience as an executive or director in a senior publicly traded company. Why did the Premier repeal these excellent requirements to oversee a fund worth over $80 billion, $90 billion?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the member opposite ought to probably judge us by our actions. For instance, we've recently appointed to AIMCo Mr. Ken Kroner, who was previously a managing director of a fund that managed more than $4 trillion in assets – I'm pretty sure that meets the criteria the member opposite is talking about – and Phyllis Clark, formerly the vice-president and CFO of the University of Alberta and currently on the board of the Bank of Canada. These are the kinds of folks that we think will make sure that they can make the right decisions on behalf of the people of Alberta, who we've asked them to work for, with their independent judgement.

Mr. Jean: It isn't just the fact that the NDP has chosen to get rid of two key sections of AIMCo's regulations; it's about how they actually went about doing it, Mr. Speaker. In fact, the AIMCo CEO told the legislative committee that "these recent changes to the AIMCo regulation actually did come as a surprise to us and, frankly, not a welcome surprise." This isn't conjecture. He is the person ultimately responsible for AIMCo. Will the Premier listen to the valid concerns that have been raised and bring back these rules, which actually protected Albertans and Albertans' money?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I will listen to the concerns, and in fact I'll quote them back to the member opposite. I quote from that person:

I would not sit here and look this group in the eye if [I] were being compromised in terms of our independence in investment decision-making ... it is a line that this government has not crossed. I would be the first to tell you if they [ever] did.

Mr. Jean: Well, here's your opportunity to do so. Newly obtained FOIP documents show just how in over its head the NDP is with AIMCo. They reveal ongoing political interference into AIMCo and political staff ignoring warnings from AIMCo's employees about major mishandling of sensitive files. This is terrible, Mr. Speaker. When the Premier's staff attempt to tell AIMCo employees how to do their jobs, they jeopardize the independence of this corporation. Will the Premier commit to putting an end to her spin doctors interfering in AIMCo's business? Yes or no?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, it is absolutely appropriate for the government of Alberta to consult with its agencies, boards, and commissions on things that they communicate, and that's exactly what we did and what we will continue to do.

But on the issue of investment integrity let me just say again to the member the following: "I would not sit here and look this group in the eye if we were being compromised in terms of our independence in investment decision-making." That is from the chair of AIMCo answering questions of the members opposite. They just don't like the answers, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. We just heard the NDP textbook: five bad quotes, and they only read the one good one that they can find.

Investment in Alberta and Job Creation

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, our future prosperity is based on confidence. Investors risk their capital when they have confidence of a reasonable chance of return on their investment, called profit, which is not a four-letter word. Investors once flocked to our province to invest in the oil sands, and with this confidence came billions of dollars and thousands of jobs. Well, the multinationals have spoken with their feet by leaving. To the Premier. ConocoPhillips is the most recent of the departed, with their vote of nonconfidence in you and your government. When will you reverse your course on these policies that . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I've already identified, I think it's fair to say that CNRL and Cenovus, two excellent Alberta-based companies, have a great deal of confidence in the oil and gas sector, and I'm very proud that they have more confidence than the members opposite, who seem to revel in cheerleading this notion of telling a sad story. But you know what? That's not how you attract investment to Alberta. Thankfully, we're the ones that are doing just that.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. The companies the Premier named earned most of their money when we didn't have a socialist government in Alberta.

I believe that reality escapes all of us, but it does on a regular basis escape this government. To the Premier. You talk about job creation with all your grant programs and subsidies, but why don't you reduce impediments to job creation and let the free market do what it did so very well before you and your ministers were getting in the way of creating jobs and investment in Alberta?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that our government is working very carefully, very aggressively, and with a tremendous amount of energy on stimulating the economy, growing the number of jobs, and having Albertans' backs at this difficult time. We are not going to make a bad situation worse. We are going to reverse the previous trends, and what we are going to do is have Albertans' backs. We're going to support their families, we're going to support their pocketbook, and we're going to support job creation. That's why Alberta is the fastest growing economy in the country this year.

Mr. McIver: After killing the economy for two straight years, it's no wonder it's getting up off the mat right now, and no thanks to you, Premier.

This government has been overburdening industry with regulations and taxes and then turning around to offer grants and incentives to undo the damage that their taxes have caused to industry and caused to homeowners. To the Premier: with the crisis of confidence in an NDP Alberta as a place to invest, will you commit to taking a look at the challenges that both businesses and families are facing under your increasing tax burden, increasing regulation, increasing bad policy? Will you actually think about Albertans for once?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure the member opposite must have missed the survey that came out that talked about how small businesses actually have an increase in confidence just right now. So that's good news. The other thing is the Conference Board of Canada suggesting that Alberta will lead the growth throughout the whole country in 2017, and the TD Bank actually said that as a result of the budget that we tabled just a couple of weeks ago, Alberta will grow and lead the rest of the country because we are stimulating the economy. That's what we're doing to grow the economy.

Saskatchewan's Fiscal Policies

Mr. Fildebrandt: When Saskatchewan released its budget, our Premier hastily called a news conference to prophesy of the woes that will befall our eastern neighbours if, God forbid, they ever balance the budget. She warned of the calamity that would befall Gainer the Gopher if the government didn't operate money-losing bus companies anymore. But when the federal government released its budget . . .

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

Mr. Fildebrandt: . . . with $372 million for Bombardier, $200 million for Ford, and nothing but equalization rip-offs for Alberta, silence. Let me ask the Premier: what's more important for Alberta, Saskatchewan's budget or the federal budget?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. You know, we had a choice in this province, of course. We were going to support Albertans, we were going to make sure that investments occurred across this province, and we are going to diversify our economy. Now, Saskatchewan has taken the opposite approach. They are cutting back programs and services. They are making it tougher for their citizens. We're not doing that. We've got the backs of Albertans. They're leaving their citizens to drift.

Mr. Fildebrandt: April Fool's Day is over, Mr. Speaker.

Brad Wall has been undoing the legacy of the NDP in his province for a decade, building a Saskatchewan advantage. Since the NDP launched their attack on free enterprise two years ago, our comparative Alberta advantage has declined. But Saskatchewan is only able to woo Alberta businesses because of the less than welcoming business environment created by the NDP. Rather than complain about businesses potentially moving to Saskatchewan, why doesn't this government focus on making sure that businesses want to stay in Alberta?

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much for the question. You know, this province is focused on supporting Alberta companies and Albertans. In Saskatchewan they're taking a different approach. They're making it far tougher. TD Economics said that our budget is going to have a stimulative effect and impact on Alberta. Theirs is going to have restrictions. They're not stimulating their economy. We're doing those things that will put us in better shape when we come out of this recession, and we are, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Saskatchewan is right to build their own competitive advantage but has exceeded that in offering subsidies that we believe may be in violation of the New West Partnership. The partnership should be respected by all provinces, but the NDP have twice lost in court for violations of internal trade law when they imposed tariffs on out-of-province beers. Now they provide direct subsidies to brewers strikingly similar to the kind they are accusing Saskatchewan of proposing. Does this government's repeated violation of the partnership help to justify what Saskatchewan is doing? [interjections]

2:10

The Speaker: Order.

Mr. Ceci: First, with regard to the injunction regarding beer, that's before the courts, so that's not really something that's subject to discussion here. [interjections]

I want to tell you other things Saskatchewan is doing. [interjections]

The Speaker: Please stop the clock. I cannot hear the minister speaking. Stop the clock. [interjections] Hon. members.

Start the clock.

Please proceed.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, the recent budget in Saskatchewan had the impact of raising about a 6 per cent tax increase on construction projects there. If that doesn't stop projects, I don't know what will. You know, they're not growing jobs in Saskatchewan. We're growing jobs in this province. We've come back 20,000 jobs since . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Hon. members, spring has sprung. Let's all try and keep it down. Handle your energy a little more constructively.

Gay-straight Alliances in Schools

Cortes-Vargas: The new leader of the Conservatives has stated that his preference is to take away the privacy of students given that he wants to immediately notify parents if their child enrolls in a GSA. Outing them could be devastating when forming a healthy identity. Albertans are worried about this far-right ideology that could negatively define these groups moving forward. To the Minister of Education: how will this government assure LGBTQ-plus students that their hard-fought GSA will continue to be a compassionate and safe space for them?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you so much for the question. I have made it clear that schools in Alberta must obey the law. The law ensures that students have the right to feel safe and welcome in school and that they have the right to form gay-straight alliances and name them as such. As minister I have been working with school boards, encouraged by the progress we've made. We know that there's more work to be done, but certainly the vast majority of Albertans are on the side of our children.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me be very clear. GSAs save lives.

Given that LGBTQ-plus students are at higher risk for suicidal ideation and are more likely to experience youth homelessness, to the same minister: what does the evidence show about the impacts of GSAs in schools?

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, we know that GSAs provide safe spaces for students to talk through experiences and to find support from their peers. We know as well that GSAs provide leadership opportunities and reduce homophobic and transphobic discrimination in schools. Unlike the leader of the Conservative opposition, our government does not out students. We support students in GSAs, and we're going to keep it that way.

Mr. Rodney: Point of order.

The Speaker: I think there was a point of order that was made.

Your second supplemental.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that in Alberta in over 2,000 schools there are only about 150 GSAs and given that this kind of archaic discussion perpetuates the shame for kids that come out bravely, this is disgraceful. To the same minister: what kind of resources are available to Albertan students looking to form GSAs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our ministry has already shared several resources with school authorities to provide supports in creating safe and caring learning environments for LGBTQ students. There will be more coming forward in the coming weeks. Students can reach out directly to the staff in our ministry at studentsupport@gov.ab.ca.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Alberta Hospital Edmonton

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Wildrose have received another letter from a psychiatrist at Alberta Hospital Edmonton rebutting the arguments that there will be 37 new mental health beds to compensate for the closures at the hospital. According to the front-line workers 12 of those beds are reopening after renovations, and the 15 transitional beds are not an adequate level of care for those currently in specialized beds. In total, 20 beds are being closed down, with no new beds suitable for those vulnerable patients. Will the Health minister listen to the front-line workers and reverse this decision?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have to update the member. He's acting with outdated information. The letter he received, I believe, was dated March 22. I did meet with the front-line physicians, including the president of the Medical Association at the site on March 24. On the 31st we also had subsequent conversations. We're going to keep working with them in making sure that they're working with Alberta Health Services as opposed to proposing deep, $9 billion cuts and operational cuts on the other side of the House. We know what would happen with health care under the members opposite.

Mr. Smith: The minister previously stated that she'd provide transitional beds in the community and at the Royal Alex. The front-line workers dispute that, saying: to propose that transitional placements in the community provide the same level of care as the ALC unit and are therefore interchangeable is a gross misjudgment and can lead to tragic outcomes. Given that the psychiatrists have extended an invitation to meet with the minister and to date have received no response up until now, can the minister tell us if she is willing to reverse the call that she has made?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I tried to help the member catch up in the first answer. We did meet on the 24th at the facility itself. This isn't how AHS is going to align their resources, but I've made it very clear that as long as there's an NDP government in Alberta, there will be Alberta Hospital Edmonton.

We know what's going to happen if the members opposite get their hands on health care. They're proposing deep, deep cuts. We saw what happened under others who had a deep ideology of cuts. Deep cuts, brutal cuts: we know that's all that the members opposite are proposing. We're standing up for front-line health care. I'm happy to engage with those health care providers, and I've done so. Time to catch up.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister maintains that she wants to treat staff at Alberta hospitals with respect and since she's responsible for the staff at AHS and given that the psychiatrists at the hospital state that a sickening culture of staff intimidation at AHS management requires that those of us who chose to advocate for our vulnerable patients remain anonymous and since the minister has stated that health professionals have every right and responsibility to advocate for their patients, when will this minister match her rhetoric with actions to promote a collaborative work environment dedicated to first-class patient care?

Ms Hoffman: So anonymous, Mr. Speaker, that we sat down and had a face-to-face meeting. I have to say that the member opposite is very wrong with his assertions that he's making today. We are proud to support health care in all parts of our province, including Alberta Hospital Edmonton. Guess what? We're putting our money where our mouth is not only in our own ridings but in the members opposite's ridings as well. Which facilities do they want us to cut? Important investments that we're making in the Strathmore hospital, the Brooks hospital, Ponoka? The list goes on. Enough is enough, you guys. Stop talking out of both sides of your mouth. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm not able to determine who particularly it was, but we're all hon. members. I heard someone say a couple of times: tell the truth. [interjections] Excuse me. I want to caution all of you that if there is anybody saying that, I'm expecting as hon. members that you will no longer say that.

The Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Pulse Crops and Soil Health

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Growing pulse crops is good for soil health. Peas, lentils, beans, and chickpeas are not only highly nutritious but are also a profitable crop for farmers who grow them. Many consumers in the U.S. and Canada are unfamiliar with the great taste, nutrition, and versatility of pulses. Pulse Canada has been working with the media to generate attention for pulses and increase demand. To the minister of agriculture: what are you doing to support Alberta pulse crops' market development?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and the hon. member for the question. Just to update him and the House, I was very recently on a trade mission to India. We were able to promote the good crops that pulses are. At the same time we were able to advocate for an issue they had around fumigation. I'd like the member to know and the House to know that the federal government has now negotiated a three-month deal on that operation, so we don't have to worry about the fumigation issue going forward. But I continue promoting pulses as the good crops that they are for all Albertans and for the world.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that farmers can benefit agronomically as well as economically from bringing lentils into their crop rotation and given that the biggest winner in the practice is the environment because legume crops like lentils can fix nitrogen and given that this can reduce nitrogen fertilizer application and further reduce farmers' carbon footprint, to the minister: how are you encouraging farmers to rotate lentils into their crops?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and the member for the question. He's absolutely right. The more pulses can grow, the more we can get nitrogen into the soil. I'm happy to work with Alberta Canola on their plan of continuing to grow that crop. It's a fact that Canada is the second-largest producer of pulses in the world. Alberta is one of the world's largest producers of yellow and green peas. That's a market that continues to grow, as our market continues to grow. We're very happy to promote that for our producers and for the health of all Albertans.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that farmers want to grow healthy and high-yielding crops and given that it is increasingly important for farmers to know more and more about their soil so that they continue to grow them and given that what's grown in the soil has received decades of research but what's actually in the soil and how to improve soil health has much yet to be discovered, to the minister: how are you working to help farmers better understand soil biological function so they can have the knowledge and information to improve it?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and the member for the question. I've had the opportunity to talk to many farmers across the province. One young farmer in particular really stuck out at a Hutterite colony. His interest and knowledge of soil science was magnificent. I think there at the farmer level they're very interested in the health of their soil as it would contribute to the health of their crops. We continue to work with department people and producers across the province on continuing that healthy soil so they can continue with healthy crops.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Education Ministry Online Student Resources

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What the Department of Education provides is access to online resources for students, which is extremely important. Over the past couple of weeks we've seen several instances where content linked to the Alberta Education website is clearly inappropriate for students, containing graphic and sexual content. Yes, kids can find anything on the Internet, but Alberta Education shouldn't play a part by condoning inappropriate content. Does this minister recognize that this is a problem, and will he apologize to parents?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Yes, I believe that the member is talking about an incident that took place a few weeks ago, and at the very moment that we found this link, which was several steps removed, we had the people take it down. It's very important that we are working with our schools and our school board and our ministry together. Online is a very important way by which we communicate information, and we have to make sure that the integrity is intact.

Thank you.

Mrs. Aheer: I agree about the integrity. There have actually been more links since.

When it comes to our kids, resources that Alberta Education approves matter. Given that the NDP government pulled down the link from the Facebook page with the content that was not appropriate for students, with articles about sexual positions and other explicit material, and given that there are still links to the material that no parent would say is appropriate for kids, especially elementary school-age children, through the Alberta Education website, will the minister tell parents whose fault this is, why no one is monitoring this, and who is going to be held accountable?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, as I said, the incident that was initially brought up we dealt with immediately. I believe it was a link to a link, and then it was an open-forum community sort of thing. Certainly, we have worked to address this, and if the hon. member has any other specific issues, she should make sure that she brings it to our attention because we can deal with it.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. Providing supports to all students is imperative, but giving students access to explicit content is wrong. The minister knows it, and – believe me – parents know it. Given the mandate for the education system to promote safe and caring spaces and given that we have seen that no changes have been made to ensure that Alberta Education monitors the site so that it does contain links with appropriate content, will the minister please tell Albertans when this will be fixed, and if it won't be fixed, why not?

The Speaker: The minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, as I had outlined in my first two replies, we dealt with this in an expeditious manner, and we will. If I can get information from the individual member, I would be happy to pursue that as well. You know, we work hard to make sure that we provide a safe and caring environment for all of our students, including having gay-straight alliances in our schools and not talking about outing students in those same very vulnerable situations. So I think we've got some pretty solid ground to stand on, and we're proud of the work that we do in education.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Postsecondary Institutions' Capital Funding

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I address this question to the Minister of Advanced Education. A few weeks ago, during discussions regarding supplementary budget, I inquired as to the financing of a power plant upgrade at a public institution and why for this capital project the funds were coming from the environment ministry. For the record can you elaborate as to why the environment ministry is funding capital projects for public institutions and not from Infrastructure as per their mandate?

The Speaker: The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe the member opposite is referring to upgrades in energy efficiency measures undertaken at Mount Royal University, efficiency measures that we're proud to make investments in as the government of Alberta. Of course, the members opposite want to bury their heads in the sand when it comes to dealing with climate change. They refuse to do anything about it. Our government is taking action, and our public institutions are leading the way, showing Albertans how to deal with improving energy efficiency in dealing with climate change.

Mr. W. Anderson: Oh, boy. Given that the funds are coming from environment line item Climate Change and Emissions Management Fund and since this project is merely an upgrade and not some nebulous green project, again, why is the environment ministry funding capital projects for public institutions?

The Speaker: The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the money is going to improving energy efficiency and reducing greenhouse gas emissions at our universities. I find it odd that the members opposite are working themselves into a swivet over investing money in green infrastructure and energy efficiency. That just shows the people of Alberta that they are opposed to taking action on climate change, they are opposed to energy efficiency measures, and that, given the chance, they would destroy everything this government is doing.

Mr. W. Anderson: I won't say anything about the truth. Given that it seems that Environment is now responsible for funding public institutions' capital projects and not Infrastructure, as per its mandate, is the carbon tax slush fund simply meant to provide money to backstop this government's mismanagement of their capital projects, and can this or any minister explain to the taxpayers of Alberta why this is so and come clean about the wealth transfer tax grab?

Mr. Schmidt: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, whether or not you believe that the climate is changing due to human impacts on the planet . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet.

Mr. Schmidt: . . . I think we should all agree that investing in energy efficiency is good for everybody, Mr. Speaker. Those energy efficiency measures will save the taxpayers of Alberta millions of dollars over the next few years. The member opposite should hang his head in shame the next time he lectures us on being financially responsible.

The Speaker: Please, do we have representatives of universities here today? Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Finance Minister's Attendance at Heritage Fund Committee Meetings

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At the March 8 meeting of the Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund the chair, at the request of the members, said that he would send the minister a direct invitation to attend the next meeting, and given that the committee chair and the Finance minister can co-ordinate schedules to determine a day that works for both the committee and the minister, to the committee chair: will you commit today to schedule the next committee meeting on a date that allows the minister to be present?

2:30

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's being scheduled right now, so we will try and do that. There's a standing . . .

An Hon. Member: Yes or no?

Mr. Coolahan: It's possible. It's possible.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Chair. Given that at the March 8 meeting of the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Committee members were so confused about conflicting messages from Treasury Board and AIMCo that they requested that the minister attend their next meeting and given that we have just heard that the committee chair may co-ordinate an acceptable meeting date with the minister in good faith, to the Minister of Finance: will you commit to attending the next meeting of the Standing Committee on Alberta's Heritage Savings Trust Fund?

Mr. Ceci: You know, Mr. Speaker, I want to just clarify. There is no confusion at all. I just want to say that the standing committee heard from Mr. Uebelein, who said: "I do want to reinforce that at present our independence in investment decision-making, as I think I reassure you at every quarterly meeting, has not been encumbered in any way." There's no confusion between administration at Treasury Board and AIMCo.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky . . . [interjections] I'm trying to make another point to another member.

The volume is getting excessive at times, hon. member. I'd ask that you contain it.

Second supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that whether the minister will commit to attending a meeting is really a yes or no answer and given that this is my third try for an answer to a very direct and important question for all Albertans, Minister of Finance, will you or will you not attend the next heritage trust fund committee meeting?

Mr. Ceci: You know, Mr. Speaker, all Albertans get it, that there is no confusion. The only ones who are confused are that side of the House. I've stood up and said that Mr. Uebelein believes . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Thank you.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you. I've stood up several times and said that Mr. Uebelein is not concerned about any independence being taken away from them. The government of Alberta supports AIMCo at every turn, Mr. Speaker. [interjections]

The Speaker: Member for Calgary-Hays, keep your volume down.

Mr. McIver: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Health Services for Migrant Workers and Children

Loyola: Mr. Speaker, this government has shown a strong commitment to protecting the rights of all Albertans regardless of where they come from. However, residents in my constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie have raised concerns for the health and wellness of Canadian-born children of migrant undocumented parents. Given that access to health care is a fundamental human right, to the Minister of Health: what coverage is available for these Canadian-born children?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the very important question. As of January 2016 our government extended full Alberta health insurance coverage to include Canadian-born children of migrant workers. We understand Alberta residency guidelines, and we want to make sure that these young Albertans, who were born in the province, are properly insured and that their parents don't have to worry about their health care. It's important to us that we make their lives better.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister has confirmed that these children are covered by Alberta health care, what steps can be taken to ensure that migrant undocumented workers are aware of this coverage?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for his advocacy on this matter and his engagement with those who share those very concerns. Recognizing that language and cultural barriers can be a significant issue, we continue to develop information in multiple languages and support translation services throughout the Alberta health care system. Some people call these important services in the public service bureaucrats. We call them important service providers, and we're going to make sure that we continue to provide supports for Alberta families who speak a variety of languages because it's important to us that they have access to the services that they deserve.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that refugee and migrant families are some of the most disadvantaged people in our province, with a wide range of concerns, what other steps are being taken to ensure that they are connected to comprehensive community health supports?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, some of the largest populations of migrants and newcomers are in Edmonton and Calgary. In Edmonton we have the East Edmonton health centre, which works with these populations to make sure that they get comprehensive supports, including social services and ongoing health management as well as education related to health care. In Calgary we have the Mosaic refugee health clinic, which is a significant resource for particularly low-income, high-risk families who are new to Canada. We're working to expand these services throughout Alberta in ways that are accessible, including supporting 211, which is a partnership with Alberta Health Services as well as the Canadian Mental Health Association.

The Speaker: The Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Resource Industries in Northeastern Alberta

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you know, Alberta's economy has been suffering from an economic downturn, and this is especially true of communities in northeastern Alberta who are heavily reliant on the natural resource sector. In other communities the NDP economic diversification plan has resulted in the entire shutdown of the coal industry, meaning thousands of jobs being cut. Albertans in my riding and northeastern Alberta are concerned that a similar fate might happen to them. To the Minister of Economic Development and Trade: what is your plan to make sure that this doesn't happen to the Bonnyville-Cold Lake constituency?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This government is working respectfully with coal communities. I know this one was asked about in terms of a specific one, but I can tell you that the process we're using is to work with local officials and the federal government to transition these plants and keep them working. We're keeping those working. We're going to assist those coal communities. We've made some forays into the current ones that are there and will continue to work with them. There's nothing different in how we're going to work with the one that he's talking about than with the ones we're already working with.

Mr. Cyr: That's distressing to hear.

Given that certain agricultural crops such as hemp, lentils, and pulse crops have been developed in northeastern Alberta and given that the Alberta Biomaterials Development Centre can produce one tonne of hemp straw per hour, which is insufficient for Alberta's current hemp fibre industry, to the minister of economic development: what are you doing to attract private, large-scale processing capacity for hemp feedstock and other crops within northeastern Alberta?

The Speaker: The Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Hemp is fast becoming a very important crop for Alberta. We have approximately 20,000 acres or so in production now. There is room to grow in that not only as food, which many of us enjoy, but also for the stocks themselves for fibre. It's a plant that's been grown for thousands of years and has been very successful in many parts of the world. I think that now it's right for Alberta to take advantage of that market world-wide.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that rental vacancy rates in Cold Lake have skyrocketed to an overall vacancy rate of 26.2 per cent, which is a stark comparison to the national vacancy rate of 3.7 per cent, and given that several new plants and expansions to existing oil and gas plants have been announced by several different companies, which assuredly means housing will be needed, to the Minister of Energy: do you have a plan to encourage oil companies to work together with community leaders to hire locals and to ensure that nonlocal workers will be placed in the communities they serve instead of forcing them into . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We continue to work with all communities in our oil and gas industry, but where they are housed is the choice of where the project is and what company it is. As we go forward, we will always work with our companies to make life better for Albertans and make life better for industry.

Energy Exploration Incentives

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, when the federal government released their budget, I know that many Albertans were hoping that we'd see some help from Ottawa with our struggling economy or, at the very least, nothing to hurt us further. I and many other Albertans, especially in our vital energy industry, were therefore alarmed to discover that the federal government was ending the Canadian exploration expense, an important tool for junior energy companies to raise capital. To the Energy minister: were you consulted on this change, and if so, did you try to do anything to stop it?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The day we heard about that, I was actually in Calgary speaking to EPAC. I did express some dismay about that change, but I also asked them to work with us and help us support their thoughts about that tax to the federal government, and we are doing that work right now.

Mr. Fraser: Given that the Canadian exploration expense has been replaced with the Canadian development expense, which spreads the tax incentives out over many years as opposed to providing an up-front benefit, and given that junior energy companies don't have access to the large capital reserves available to larger players and rely on the Canadian exploration expense to fund exploration of new assets, to the same minister: does your government have any estimates on how much damage this change will cause to our economy and what it will cost small and medium-sized energy companies?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I mentioned, I have reached out to groups such as the companies that are represented by EPAC, and I have asked them to help me assess what the impact is of that tax. As I know more about what that impact is,

I will be working with them and their members to express that to the federal government.

Mr. Fraser: Given that the majority of energy juniors operating in Alberta are started and operated by Albertans and given that the growth of these junior energy companies is a vital part of the economic recovery in this province and given that the removal of the Canadian exploration expense will seriously limit the ability of companies to expand and succeed, Minister, I'm glad to hear that you're standing up for these companies. How much more are you going to help them out? Because they are struggling.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We absolutely know that those junior companies are critical to the whole oil and gas industry. They are the ones that do the early exploration, and they bring a lot of growth and value to our province. As I mentioned, it's continuing work. I'll have more to report in the days to come.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 30 seconds we'll continue with Members' Statements.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Grande Prairie-Wapiti Constituency

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to share with the House some of the great things in my constituency of Grande Prairie-Wapiti. There are many successful Alberta-based businesses thriving in the Grande Prairie area, run by and employing Albertans. There are two microbreweries, the Grain Bin Brewing Company and the GP Brewing Company, who are using locally sourced barley and local spring water in their production.

The Evergreen centre for resource excellence was originally developed in 2009 as a collaborative effort between industry and government. They continue to focus on solving environmental issues in an economically sustainable way. The Evergreen centre provides an educational and training facility for environmental best-management practices.

The Grande Prairie Regional College is celebrating their 50th anniversary this year. GPRC is invested in indigenous education and has signed a protocol agreement to build on the college's commitment to indigenous students and communities in northwestern Alberta.

The National Bee Diagnostic Centre is the result of a partnership with GPRC research and innovation, Alberta Agriculture, and Agri-Food Canada. The diagnostic centre is the first comprehensive lab in Canada to provide a full array of diagnostic services for honeybee pests, pathogens, and parasites.

Weyerhaeuser has again been named the 2017 world's most ethical company by the Ethisphere Institute, a global leader in defining and advancing the standards of ethical business practices.

The Norbord mill in Grande Prairie recently celebrated 20 years of success. Norbord Inc. is the leading global manufacturer of wood-based panels and is the world's largest producer of oriented strandboard, and it employs almost 200 people in Grande Prairie alone.

That, Mr. Speaker, is just the tip of the iceberg, but there are lots of great things happening in Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Postsecondary Education Funding

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Before I was elected to serve as the MLA for Calgary-Bow, I was a student at Mount Royal University working towards a bachelor of arts in sociology. Having the opportunity to attend postsecondary exposed me to a whole new world of critical thinking. Through this critical thinking I found my voice in activism.

During my time in university there was a lot of discussion and anxiety among students around increasingly unaffordable tuition fees and massive cuts that the previous government made. Those cuts resulted in the loss of nursing enrolment of one-third, an engineering program, a disability transfer program, and a performing arts program. It meant larger classroom sizes and higher instructional fees. This burden on students made postsecondary less accessible.

The loss of accessibility and affordability of university programs resonated with many students at MRU, and something had to be done. Shortly after this news surfaced, many students and faculty came together in solidarity to rally against these deep cuts. Over 300 people marched to former Premier Redford's constituency office, which was conveniently across the street from campus. When we arrived at her office, we discovered that she was not there to talk to us. It was like our voice didn't matter, and that felt discouraging.

I fundamentally believe that everyone benefits from a society that has equitable access to affordable education. Students exercised their voice and elected a government on that principle. It is why we have extended our tuition freeze for a third year, introduced new awards for indigenous students, doubled the amount of available funds for the Alberta low-income grant, made apprentices eligible for student aid, and made it easier for all students to access student aid.

I am so proud of the role that our government is playing in making the lives of Albertans better. It is good to know that students and faculty will no longer have to face these deep cuts.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Red Deer Courthouse

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Central Alberta has seen incredible growth in recent years. Since the Red Deer courthouse was built, in the early '80s, the city's population has almost doubled. As a result, space in the current courthouse is limited. Red Deer pressed the previous government for several years to recognize that our region is in dire need of a new courthouse, but the provincial government was silent until now.

Thankfully, with Budget 2017 our government did more than just recognize the need. While we are still finalizing the total cost, we are committed to investing $97 million over the next four years for a new Red Deer justice centre. Mr. Speaker, this new justice centre is desperately needed. It will increase the number of courtrooms from seven to 12, but it will also go beyond providing more courtrooms. The new Red Deer justice centre will also be a place where people can go for justice outside as well as inside court. That's because there will also be a resolution services wing, which will help Albertans resolve disputes faster. It'll provide more access to a variety of services like education, assessment, dispute resolution, mediation, and other alternatives to court.

Mr. Speaker, Red Deer's new justice centre is just one of several measures by our government to address pressures in Alberta's justice system. We're hiring more Crown prosecutors and court staff, we're appointing judges and working with Ottawa to do the same, we've introduced legislation into the House that, if passed, will increase access to the legal system for survivors of sexual and domestic violence, and we've increased legal aid funding so people who cannot afford a lawyer can still have one. Together these and other measures are helping to ensure that Albertans have access to a fair and innovative justice system.

Mr. Speaker, I'm proud to be part of a government that takes concrete – literally concrete – action on issues that will make life better for Albertans.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Autism Spectrum Disorder

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak about world autism day, which took place yesterday across the country. Autism spectrum disorder is the name of a group of developmental disorders which includes a wide range of symptoms, skills, and levels of disability. Yesterday groups from all over Alberta gathered to raise awareness for those affected and their families, who provide them with much-needed love and support these very able individuals.

One group in my riding, called Rednecks with a Cause, threw a fantastic, sold-out dinner dance and auction, which raised monies which will directly benefit families of the community and provide support and help to identify individuals affected. I'm so proud of my Redneck community. To all of the volunteers who put this on, thank you. To all of the generous donors who attended, thank you. I definitely agree with the organizers of this that this was not a benchmark for success but a true phenomenon which touches people of all backgrounds.

I hope that more people will take time to learn how someone with autism thinks and experiences their surroundings. These are people with different thought processes. Let's change the discussion from pity to joy, from tolerance to acceptance. Let's embrace neurodiversity and get to know some of these truly amazing individuals. There have been some truly amazing people with autism – for instance, Mozart and Einstein were believed to be on the spectrum – and the world is a better place to have these unique individuals.

I thank Rednecks with a Cause for their hard work and their kindness and for helping people in my community of Bonnyville-Cold Lake who are living with the autism spectrum disorder.

Thank you.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As required by the Statutes Repeal Act, I rise to table the requisite number of copies of the unproclaimed legislation that is more than five years old. Legislation on this list will automatically be repealed on December 31, 2017, unless proclaimed before that date or the Legislative Assembly adopts a resolution that it not be repealed.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll table the appropriate number of copies of a request from a constituent of Edmonton-

Glenora for a plan to save the provincial royal museum based on the study of significance, that I'm presenting here, from the historic resource management program and that it be protected from demolition.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and, with your indulgence, do three tablings today. First, I would like to table the requisite number of copies of the survey results, that I put forward, showing that 27,000 Albertans support ending the time change.

Mr. Speaker, second, I would like to table 950 pages of online feedback I have received in support of having one time year-round. I'll hold off on those ones.

Finally, the third doc that I would like to table, Mr. Speaker: I have the requisite number of copies of 644 pages of e-mails that I have received in support of Bill 203 and ending the time change.

Thank you.

The Speaker: I can see that we're going to have to recruit more pages.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Connolly: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and table five copies of a member's statement given by Jason Kenney, where he smeared the decision-making power of the Supreme Court of Canada regarding the Vriend decision.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I rise to table five copies of the report by Paul Fraser, QC, Acting Ethics Commissioner, into allegations involving the hon. Alison Redford, dated March 29, 2017, pursuant to section 25(12) of the Conflicts of Interest Act.

I'm sorry. Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite five copies of a letter I wrote to the Government House Leader referencing things that he said in regard to the Public Affairs Bureau being a partisan government body of the previous government. I wrote a letter to the minister that I'm tabling today on the sixth day of fantastic PAB tablings.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the Hon. Mr. S. Anderson, Minister of Municipal Affairs, responses to questions raised by Mr. Stier, hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, and Mr. Clark, hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow, on March 8, 2017, 2016-17 supplementary supply estimates debate; also, responses to questions raised by Mr. Gotfried, hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, on March 9, 2017, 2016-17 supplementary supply estimates debate.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I think we had two points of order today. The first one, I believe, was by the Government House Leader.

Point of Order Rotation of Questions

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I don't need to take very much time with respect to this matter. During question period today, when it was the MLA for Calgary-Elbow's turn to ask a question, the minister or the Member – I'm confused about titles today – for Strathmore-Brooks stood up. Now, I know that the trading of questions has been historically permitted in the Assembly, but I would ask that House leaders be notified of those kinds of changes in advance.

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise. I didn't catch the citation from the Government House Leader, so I'm not entirely sure if it's a point of order, but I'm happy to speak to it. There certainly was a trade that took place earlier today. While we did take the time to inform the Speaker's office, in the future I will endeavour to ensure that the Government House Leader is informed as well.

The Speaker: I'm sure there's no snacking in the House, is there? No.

There was communication to our office, but thank you. I think the onus is on members to let the Government House Leader know.

The second is a point of order by the Member for Calgary-Hays, I believe. Is that correct?

Point of Order

Allegations against a Member

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I cite from the standing orders, 23(h), (i), (j), and (l). Now, I don't have the Blues in front of me, so I'll paraphrase as best I can, but (h) is making allegations of another member, (i) is "imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member," (j) is using "language of a nature likely to create disorder," and (l) is, of course, "introduces any matter in debate that offends the practices and precedents of the Assembly."

Now, if I heard it correctly, Mr. Speaker, I think an hon. member accused me in the one question of being not in favour of GSAs and wanting to out gay kids. For those watching, I certainly was in this Legislature and voted in favour of Bill 10, which was introduced by our government before the last election. Also, I certainly do not have the opinion attributed to me of wanting to out gay kids. It's not been my position, and I don't expect it will ever be my position. So for that reason I hope that you will hold the point of order and ask the member to withdraw the remarks.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I don't have the Blues, and I didn't hear that particular reference. What I did hear was the hon. member referring to the new leader of the Progressive Conservative Party and his advocacy in favour of informing parents when a student requests to join a gay-straight alliance. That was characterized as akin to outing the students.

3:00

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is the view of many people who are experts in this field and others that this particular proposition on the part of the new leader of the Progressive Conservative Party, Mr. Kenney, is extraordinarily damaging and will undo the good that GSAs do. I want to just indicate that gay-straight alliances are student-led clubs that aim to make the school community a safer place for all students regardless of their sexual orientation. Their members include lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, queer, or questioning, LGBTQ, youth and their straight allies.

I just want to quote from this author from the University of British Columbia.

"We know that LGBTQ students are at higher risk for suicide, in part because they are more often targeted for bullying and discrimination," says [the author of the study]. "But heterosexual students can also be the target of homophobic bullying. When policies and supportive programs like GSAs are in place long enough to change the environment of the school, it's better for students' mental health, no matter what their orientation."

The Speaker: Government House Leader, to the procedural question, not the substance of debate.

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure what the hon. member is referring to. As I said, I didn't hear the reference to him. I heard references to his new leader clearly taking a position that's very, very harmful and undermines the efforts to protect gay and lesbian students in our schools. If the reference was to the hon. member and his position, I take him at his word that he has been supportive of this bill in the past even though his new leader is committed to repealing it.

I don't believe there's a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The House leader of the third party.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's good to hear that the hon. Government House Leader indeed understands that if it was in reference to our hon. caucus leader, then (h), (i), and (j) would apply.

Now, a seldom utilized standing order is (l), to which our hon. caucus leader has referred, and since it is not often utilized, I'll simply repeat it.

23 A Member will be called to order by the Speaker if, in the Speaker's opinion, that Member . . .

(l) introduces any matter in debate that offends the practices and precedents of the Assembly.

One of the practices and precedents of this Assembly, of course, as you know very, very well, Mr. Speaker, is that those who are outside of this House and, therefore, cannot defend themselves should not be referred to. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Mr. Rodney: Now, there have been a number of misquotations utilized both . . . [interjections] Excuse me?

The Speaker: Please.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you.

. . . in this Chamber and on social media, so I shall read a short statement that refers directly, Mr. Speaker, to this allegation.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I drew this to the attention of the Government House Leader as well. It's not the substance of the discussion. I think the point is what was said and whether it was aimed, as I understand the Member for Calgary-Hays, at a particular member. So please stick to that subject matter and not stuff outside the House.

Mr. Rodney: Yes. That's exactly what this is: a very few sentences that will set the record straight.

The Speaker: I hope they are, because you know what? I'm going to can it real fast if it's not.

Mr. Rodney: I wouldn't waste your time. I promise you that.

"Some are falsely claiming that I want to force schools to 'out' children to their parents. This simply is not true."

The Speaker: Hon. member, I'm going to rule your comment out of order. Please be seated.

I do have a copy of the Blues. "The new leader of the Conservatives has stated that his preference is to take away the privacy of students." This was the particular statement that hon. members had referenced. The exchange did not impute motives in connection with a specific member; it may have, perhaps, to someone outside this House.

Clearly, it may not be a point of order. However, to the hon. member, I think you had a good suspicion of what that particular comment might have caused.

Cortes-Vargas: It offended me, too, Mr. Speaker. It's hurtful, and it offended me.

The Speaker: Please don't exchange dialogue with me, hon. member.

I would caution all of you that these kinds of comments are not constructive to good public policy and democracy. There is a freedom of speech option that exists in this House. It's more than an option; it's a rule. It's not without conditions attached to it. Therefore, while this may not officially be a point of order, I want to caution you yet again about the comments that you make here and the uproar that it sometimes causes in this Assembly.

Privilege

Obstructing a Member in Performance of Duty

The Speaker: Hon. members, I want to rule on a point of privilege. [interjections] Hon. members, are we ready to go?

I'm prepared to rule on the question of privilege that was raised by the third party House leader on March 21, 2017, as set out on pages 420 and 421 of the Alberta Hansard for that day. I note that the hon. member raised this matter immediately following the vote on Government Motion 16. Given that the purported question of privilege relates to the passage of this motion, I find that the member raised the matter at the earliest opportunity. Therefore, the notice requirement for the purpose of Standing Order 15 has been met, in particular Standing Order 15(6), which specifically provides for this situation.

Government Motion 16 provides for concurrence in a report from the Ethics Commissioner concerning recommended sanctions for a breach of the Conflicts of Interest Act involving the Member for Calgary-Hays. As I noted on March 15, 2017, when ruling on a point of order as to whether this was sub judice, this motion is the next step in a process set out in section 28(3) of that act. As I indicated in my ruling, the Assembly has delegated the investigation of matters concerning conflicts of interest to the Ethics Commissioner. This is a part of the Assembly's inherent privileges relating to its internal proceedings and the conduct and discipline of members.

The third party House leader is essentially arguing that the Assembly's motion is violating one of the member's privileges, namely freedom of speech. However, I would say that the essence of the member's argument pertains to the findings of the Ethics Commissioner rather than the sanctions that she recommended. In other words, I would say that the argument is that the finding that the Member for Calgary-Hays was in breach of the act for asking a question during question period violates his freedom of speech.

On this point I agree with the Deputy Government House Leader's argument that rights of members are subject to the procedures of the Assembly, as noted on pages 13 and 14 of Maingot's Parliamentary Privilege in Canada, second edition.

While it will be seen that the Member enjoys all the immunity necessary to perform his [particular] parliamentary work, this privilege or right, such as freedom of speech, is nevertheless subject to the practices and procedures of the House.

A similar statement can be found in section 77 of Beauchesne's, sixth edition, which reads as follows:

Freedom of speech does not mean that Members have an unlimited or unrestrained right to speak on every issue. The rules of the House impose limits on the participation of Members and it is the duty of the Speaker to restrain those who abuse the rules.

I cannot imagine how the passage of a motion that deals with a matter relating to the internal proceedings of this Assembly and discipline of its members would constitute a prima facie question of privilege. There have been rulings in this Assembly on similar matters where members have raised questions of privilege relating to decisions that the Assembly has taken pursuant to its own rules.

For instance, the most recent ruling on this point occurred on December 1, 2011, and I would refer members to page 1590 of Alberta Hansard, where the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood argued that a government motion concerning evening sittings violated his privileges. Speaker Kowalski found that there was no prima facie question of privilege and noted that he could not imagine how sittings of the Assembly or the standing orders violated members' privileges.

A similar argument was raised in 1996 concerning a government motion establishing subcommittees of supply. Again, the Speaker concluded that there was no prima facie question of privilege. I'd like to quote from Speaker Schumacher's ruling on February 26, 1996, at page 224 of Alberta Hansard, where he stated:

In this instance, if the Chair were to find that a prima facie question of privilege existed or that a contempt had been committed, the Chair would in effect have to find that the Standing Orders violated the privileges of the members. To make such a finding could cast doubt upon the House's ability to control its own proceedings, which the Chair is not about to do.

This Assembly has made a decision on a motion following a debate that has been conducted according to its own rules, in which all members were able to participate. For the reasons stated earlier, I find that there is no prima facie question of privilege. This concludes the matter.

The Member for Calgary-Hays.

Member's Apology

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to respond to the requirement of Government Motion 16, which accepts the January 4, 2017, report of the Ethics Commissioner and upholds both her ruling and her proposed sanctions for words I spoke in this House on November 22, 2016. I have no choice but to accept that Government Motion 16 has passed, and I am required to apologize to the Assembly. I must say that if I thought at any point, at the time that I said it, that it was wrong, I certainly would not have said those words.

Mr. Speaker, subsequently I retained independent counsel to find out what indeed I had done wrong and have sought to have this matter adjudicated to the Court of Queen's Bench. At a preliminary hearing held recently in Calgary, a judge in that court found my complaint to be such that the judge ordered a hearing on the matter, which is scheduled for January of 2018. I can only guess that if my complaint had not been worthy of a hearing, I wouldn't be getting one, and I would have accepted that judgment, knowing that I had indeed said something offside in this House.

But the judge did not throw my complaint out, and we await a decision on whether my privilege as a Member of this Legislative Assembly and by extension the privilege of every Member of this Legislative Assembly to speak freely on the floor of this House is subordinate to the Conflicts of Interest Act, an interesting question indeed, one that not only impacts members of this Assembly but elected members of Assemblies and parliaments across Canada and the Commonwealth. I regret that it has come to this, where a sitting government would attempt to limit the privilege of an opposition member to speak freely in the Assembly.

As my colleague the Member for Calgary-Lougheed pointed out, Beauchesne's section 75 states: "The privilege of freedom of speech is both the least questioned and the most fundamental right of the Member of Parliament on the floor of the House and in committee." It appears, Mr. Speaker, that this may not be the case in Calgary any longer, and that really is an affront to this democratic institution and, in my opinion, to democracy itself. The fact that I'm being censored for raising an issue of importance not only to my constituents but to all Albertans is deeply concerning and all because the government could not handle answering tough questions on their own policies.

Mr. Speaker, it is sad. It is sad that the Premier can no longer do her job and have any involvement in upcoming labour negotiations with the public sector because her husband . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I do hope that you keep your conversation related to the point of privilege matter.

Mr. McIver: It is sad indeed, Mr. Speaker. It is sad that the Premier can no longer do her job and have any involvement . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member.

Mr. McIver: Would you like me to start again, Mr. Speaker?

The Speaker: No. I would like you to deal with the matter of privilege and speak to the motion.

Mr. McIver: I believe that I'm required to do this, Mr. Speaker, and I'm fulfilling the requirements.

Mr. Speaker, it is sad. It is sad that the Premier can no longer do her job and have any involvement in upcoming labour negotiations with the public sector because her husband earns his living as a union executive. It is sad that the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General will have to resign her position because her husband is a police officer with the Calgary Police Service, because given the Ethics Commissioner's ruling how could she not be in conflict by making decisions that directly impact the Calgary Police Service, the one that employs her husband?

If the occupations and ways in which our spouses earn their living bears directly on what we as members can say in this House, it surely comes to . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, do you have any closing arguments with respect to the action that has been approved by this Assembly?

Mr. McIver: I am delivering them right now, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: No. You're using it as an opportunity, hon. member, to speak to other members of this Assembly and not to the substance of the matter before us today. If that's what you choose to continue to do, I am fearful that I'm going to need to rule you out of order for speaking in reference to other members. Speak to the matter of the point of order, not to the other members of this Legislature on matters that you believe might have something to do with this.

Do you have any other comments you'd like to make on the motion as approved by the Assembly other than those comments with respect to other members of the Assembly?

Mr. McIver: I will continue but only with your permission, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: If you have words with respect to the motion approved by the Assembly, then absolutely, but if you are continuing to make references to other individuals of this House and their family members, I would . . . [interjections]

Hon. member, could you abide by my request and speak to the motion. If you have something that you'd like to say with respect to the motion approved by the Assembly with respect to your actions, please proceed. I would ask that you stick to that subject matter, though, please.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. All of my words have been about the ruling, and all of my words from now on will continue to be about the ruling.

If the occupations and ways in which our spouses earn their living bears directly on what we as members can say in this House, it surely comes to bear on the work ministers of the Crown do as well. They manage large portfolios and wield tremendous power. How can Albertans trust that they are not using it to further their interests and, by extension, their own interests if it has been decided that my wife's very small business precludes me from asking questions on a topic related to that industry? If it sounds ridiculous, Mr. Speaker, that's because it is, but sadly that's where we find ourselves today.

What a shame it is for the government to seek to limit my ability to do my job as the representative for Calgary-Hays and a member of the Progressive Conservative Party, and in so doing, they also move to limit the ability of each member of the Assembly to do her or his job. The precedent they seek to set will also limit the ability of each and every elected representative in the Commonwealth to do their jobs. How, Mr. Speaker, does this serve the public interest? How are these government members doing right by Albertans?

Beyond this, Mr. Speaker, I'm also sorry that the government has seen fit in this case to appoint itself judge, jury, and executioner on a matter that is indeed before the courts. As my colleague from Calgary-Lougheed also pointed out in his remarks, it is not our job to evaluate the scope of section 3 of the Conflicts of Interest Act, especially not when the very question is before the courts. The idea that this government would rather score a win today than wait for the judge's decision speaks to how much the political discourse in the province has devolved since the last election.

To be clear, partisanship has its place, but the extent to which this government has blurred the line between their role as government and their role as NDP MLAs is a real disappointment. In fact, if the previous government, Mr. Speaker, had even tried to pull this stunt, the NDP opposition would have been all over us for censorship and abuse of power, and they would have been right in that case.

Because I take my job as the MLA for Calgary-Hays and Progressive Conservative member very seriously, I'm standing in this House today to meet my obligation, as I am required to do, but it's also the government that owes an apology to all Albertans for attempting to subvert the efforts of opposition members to hold them accountable for their actions and policies. They owe an apology to the judiciary in our province for presuming to do the job of an independent and impartial court and to every member of assemblies and parliaments in the Commonwealth for attempting to set a precedent that could limit the most sacred of parliamentary privileges, that of freedom of speech, a precedent that could be used by other governments to limit opposition's ability to be effective.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I now make my official apology to this House. I am sorry for the words that I said.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Orders of the Day

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 203

Alberta Standard Time Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and move second reading of Bill 203, the Alberta Standard Time Act.

Since 1972 Albertans have been changing their clocks twice a year in accordance with the Daylight Saving Time Act. But Alberta is not the Alberta that existed 45 years ago, and Albertans have told me that they want one time. While the practice of changing their clocks may come easily to some, to many others it really does not. Let me be clear: these Albertans experience adverse effects due to this time change.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is about supporting Albertans and making their lives better. I've heard from tens of thousands of Albertans who have strong opinions regarding the practice of changing their clocks. Many of my colleagues in this House echo that daylight saving time is a topic of real concern for their constituents. These concerns are present and real. Just a few short weeks ago Albertans across the province were feeling the effects of losing an hour. This bill will address those concerns and establish a consistent, year-round time for Albertans that will provide stability for families, parents, employers, and working Albertans.

This bill is an example of the real and practical changes that I believe can help Albertans, because with this bill I'm working to make life better for all Albertans and to ensure that their concerns, from individuals to businesses, are reflected by not only addressing daylight saving time but by also crafting a bill based on what Albertans have told me. The bottom line, Mr. Speaker, is that this bill is about addressing Albertans' concerns, and it's about making a difference that every single Albertan will feel.

Under the current Daylight Saving Time Act Albertans are paying through increases in road accidents, workplace injuries, destabilizing the family's routine, and through our agriculture partners, who see decreases in production. To address these concerns, Bill 203 will repeal the Daylight Saving Time Act and establish a year-round Alberta standard time, Coordinated Universal Time minus six hours. It creates a made-in-Alberta time zone, and as mentioned, this will provide stability for families, communities, and businesses.

Both prior to and since the bill's introduction I've received much positive feedback. I certainly continue to welcome any and all input on this bill as we continue to debate it today in the House. My goal is to address the concerns of Albertans regarding daylight saving time through a bill that's reflective of the needs and desires of the population. We've engaged well over 30,000 people in my office and through our survey, Mr. Speaker, and I tabled those documents for you today. It's been wonderful to hear the perspectives on how this bill can help impact individuals' lives. I've spoken to constituents directly. I've spoken to them in my office, in town halls. In fact, I've been stopped on the street by people who simply must tell me that daylight saving time must go. The staff in my office have received and responded to well over a thousand e-mails and phone calls. In fact, we received over 700 phone calls in one day regarding this bill, and we're still hearing from hundreds of Albertans every week.

This is an issue that Albertans are passionate about. The consultations I have done have been extremely positive, and we continue to hear voices and perspectives. The message is clear. This is a much-needed change. It's something that will impact our families. Seventy-three per cent of Albertans agree that it's time for one time.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this is an issue that's been raised before. There have been two petitions tabled in the Legislature over the last few years. Ruby Kassian from Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville tabled a petition in 2015 and was one of the very strong voices on abolishing daylight saving time. We also heard from another petition last year. This is something that we hear not only from the cities, not only from the rural areas; this is something that we are hearing across the province.

It's something that will make life better for industries whose livelihood is dependent on things like animals, who don't read a clock but are regulated only by the setting and rising of the sun. It's something that will make life better for families and parents, who struggle to maintain a schedule with their children following the twice-yearly shift. It's something that will make life better for shift workers like nurses and postal workers, who will no longer have to add another hour to their already strenuous shifts, and it will make life better for seniors, who need to follow very strict schedules for their medications and their personal health, Mr. Speaker. These are only some of the voices that we are most familiar with.

There are impacts on many whom we may have never considered and for whom this change or ceasing of change will make life better. It will make life better for Albertans and caregivers of Albertans who are battling Alzheimer's. We heard through consultation that this disease is one that doesn't just involve memory loss but also deep bouts of anxiety, anxiety that can be triggered and magnified by the setting sun through a syndrome known as sundowning. For these patients their anxiety worsens in the fall and accelerates dramatically as the clocks fall back.

Now, as one of the respondents who contacted us stated, caregivers know this change is coming, and it adds to an already extremely stressful situation, Mr. Speaker, for both themselves and for their patients and their patients' families. This human perspective concerning the effects of the loss of evening light resonated with us, and I realized the positive impact that this bill could have on the lives of so many others. As a caregiver reminded me, abolishing daylight saving time will not cure Alzheimer's, but it will certainly make life easier for the sufferers and their caregivers. All members of this Legislature, I hope, can agree that improving the things that make a difference in the lives of every single individual should be at the forefront of this Assembly.

It's going to make life better, Mr. Speaker, for working Albertans. We actually were reached out to by assistant business manager Scott Crichton of IBEW local 424. In a written statement he said:

IBEW Local 424 supports MLA Thomas Dang's private member's bill on time change. It will be good for our workers, many of whom work in isolated conditions, and will no longer have the hassle of re-setting their clocks. This bill is a positive step forward for the province of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, during our consultation we were also made aware of the impacts that daylight saving time has on our health care system. We heard from one of the managers of medical equipment at a local hospital about the impact that DST has on the work being done to care for Albertans. Many of the life-support devices, including defibrillators and dialysis machines, have integrated clocks in their systems that require manual resetting and changing to accommodate the time change. Now, this is very costly in human power, but more than that, it can take weeks to locate every single piece of equipment and make the necessary changes throughout an entire hospital. This can result in errors being made on patient charting records and legal documents, that are so important to ensure that we have a continuum of care for our patients. All of this incorrect data happens simply because of DST.

What this means is that we have an opportunity today, Mr. Speaker. We have an opportunity in this Assembly to make a difference in the lives of Albertans and improve patient care by voting in favour of this bill. It's something that I am proud to be able to vote on today.

Mr. Speaker, in considering this bill, I conducted a survey from February 15 to March 4 of this year with nearly 26,000 respondents, with 82 per cent indicating that they wanted to do away with DST. The tabling of this bill is in direct response to what Albertans told us. The crafting of this bill comes directly from what I heard from Albertans. We asked Albertans what life after daylight saving time should be like. We asked them what they wanted to see moving forward. We not only asked people if they felt that it was time to end this change, but I also asked them: when did they value their daylight hours most? The results were overwhelmingly clear. When asked whether they preferred more light in the morning or the evening, two-thirds of Albertans chose the evening. Almost 60 per cent of Albertans chose the evening as well for the wintertime. So Albertans value their evening hours in the sun.

I'm proud that Alberta standard time and the Alberta Standard Time Act are going to reflect that. Alberta standard time is a time zone that Albertans are already familiar with. It's the time that we have right now, Mr. Speaker. It's the time that we have for the majority of the year already, and it's a time that resonates with Albertans. I'm proud that I chose a time that works for us, and it's a time that I believe reflects the will of the people we were elected to represent. This bill will improve the lives of Albertans by creating a consistent, year-round time for all of Alberta. What I heard is that it's time we had one time.

I look forward to hearing the debate from all members of this Assembly, and I really do hope that we are able to move forward on this important legislation. Thank you.

3:30

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak about Bill 203, the Alberta Standard Time Act. This bill is certainly evoking some interesting debate on whether or not we should spring forward and fall back.

A little bit of history could add some context to this debate. In 1898 George Hudson, frustrated with the duties of normal work hours and the lack of sunlight hours in his summer evenings, created a time system which rolls the clock forward one hour in the summer months. The idea is that instead of having an hour of sun before everyone gets up, the sun sets later so that in summer people can enjoy evening sunlight. The clock then reverts from DST back to standard time in the winter by rolling it back one hour to what is known as standard time. In Alberta and most of Canada on the second Sunday of every March we set our clocks forward one hour, and then on the first Sunday of November we go back.

This is a debate that has long been waged within Alberta. Daylight saving time took two referendums to originally put in place. The first took place in the 1967 Alberta general election in a province-wide plebiscite, which was defeated by a slim margin, with 51.25 per cent voting against it. The second referendum took place in the 1971 general election, when Alberta's voters also voted for a province-wide plebiscite, but this time it passed with a wide margin of 61.37 per cent of the vote.

This debate will affect everyone, and I have been surprised by the number of people who have stopped me on the street just to give me their thoughts on daylight saving time. I've heard from many for and a few against, but one thing is clear. Albertans need to have their say. Some like the advantages of early winter mornings and late summer evenings under the current system. Others hate the time change, and there's a debate over whether we should stay on daylight saving or standard time if we stop changing the clocks. History can teach us some very good lessons if we're willing to listen and learn from the past. Decisions of this magnitude must be taken to the people. We must listen to all stakeholders.

Recently the Edmonton Oilers and the Calgary Flames management officials all came out against Alberta standard time. Bob Nicholson, vice-chairman and CEO of the Oilers Entertainment Group, recently gave an interview in Calgary on this bill. I'd like to read some of his quotes to the House.

Quote: I've had some discussions with the Calgary Flames, and they are in agreement with us. We are very concerned with the possible shift away from daylight saving time. There are a few key things. One is that our fans enjoy 7 p.m. games. It's great for our fans to allow families to get to the game, and doubleheaders are a big part of hockey now with television contracts. They're working well. The audience likes it, and for us they would be like 9 o'clock and 9:30 games. They'd get over after midnight. We just can't do that to our fans. And it's not just the fans in the arena; it's the television audience. Television is tough enough without adding that to it. There are a lot of things that you have to look at when it comes to switching schedules for everyone. We're going to find out the proper way to have a discussion with the government to make sure we understand their points of view, but I want to discuss our point of view, which is why it's better to get up twice a year and change the clocks. Unquote.

Mr. Speaker, this is only the start of the list of stakeholders becoming concerned about what exactly time change means to them. What concerns me more than the hockey teams' expressed concerns is that we haven't heard from a number of industries either way. It tells me we need more time. I believe that more conversations need to take place, and as legislators we need to think about whether this is a discussion that we should make unilaterally. This was brought into Alberta in its form with two plebiscites, and this is something that may need to happen again.

I know that I'm not the only one that has some concern about overturning a referendum by people without another referendum. I look forward to hearing what the other members have to say on this debate, and I'll listen closely, very closely, on how the bill debate unfolds. But I want the House to consider whether this should go to committee for further study and ultimately be decided in a referendum since that is how it was brought in.

I commend the Member for Edmonton-South West for bringing in this bill. I do believe that it brings passion and a lot of discussion, and I think that this is something that the House can always use.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my absolute pleasure to stand and speak about this bill given that it is something that has been an active topic of conversation in my constituency since the day I was elected. Previously there was a signature-gathering petition that was undertaken by Ruby Kassian, who the member referenced, where she got almost 3,000 signatures in the area of Vegreville. Given that Vegreville is a town of 6,000, that is quite an overwhelming response from the people around there in support of it.

I think, as the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake mentioned, it is partly about starting a conversation in the wider public sphere. He is absolutely right. It's something that has been enacted for 45 years, and over that time the province and the people have gone through incredible changes. Innovations and technology that have changed the way that we conduct our lives have made a world where we are integrated with each other unlike ever before. One of the things that we see in talking with our agricultural sector is how our supply chain managed industries, dairy and poultry, are affected by this. If someone is working in this industry, they know how sensitive livestock are to changes. I had the opportunity of conducting a town hall with the Member for Edmonton-South West, and that was something that we heard. A gentleman who had a dairy operation was saying that it takes a month for him to slowly change the routine of his animals to make sure that the productivity of them in terms of milk production was not substantively affected.

What we are talking about is a bill that would make life better for Albertans from across the province. I know that my colleague from Edmonton-South West also spoke at length on how these changes are practical. They're practical and beneficial, something that would help families and communities and our Alberta businesses.

I just want to reiterate that many Albertans struggle through these yearly time changes. Working in health care, where I used to work, in long-term care, there were seniors that took medication four, sometimes five times a day, so if you're talking about moving a medication by an hour, that is actually quite substantial for that person.

I'm familiar with a drug that I had to administer to people that lived in long-term care homes. If someone had osteoporosis, they would be put onto calcium, and once a week they took a medication an hour before breakfast, so I had to make sure that I was in this person's room and administering this medication that would take the calcium that they are prescribed every day and actually bond it to their bones. One of the things that people that take this medication will tell you is that they actually feel a pain in their chest after they take this medication because the first place that your bones take the calcium out of your system and apply it is in your sternum. So an hour's change of medication in a seasonal change twice a year is something that people are quite affected by.

My constituents have absolutely expressed a lot of concerns with this. They're concerned that when we see changes to the time, there are increases in car accidents, that when we see a change in time, there is an increase to heart attacks, and there is research to show corollary evidence of this.

This is something that I think probably all members of this Assembly have actually heard from their constituents on. I think it's something that, because it is a nonpartisan issue, is an opportunity for us to engage on this and create change in a bipartisan way. Having a year-round time would be a practical change for this province. It's quite timely. I know that I had many constituents reach out to my office that were hoping for this bill to actually get passed before this year's time change that we just had. Unfortunately, we were not able to circumvent that. However, I think that, going forward, we can look at how to best implement it for the province.

The member has gone through extensive consultation, and I've had my own discussions with many people from all municipalities and all counties: Vegreville, Chipman, Mundare, Lamont, Fort Saskatchewan, Andrew, Tofield, Bruderheim, the counties of Minburn, Lamont, Beaver, and Strathcona. Every single municipality that I represent has come or sent me e-mails and phone calls and talked to me in the community about this, wanting the change, to have one single time zone.

Of course, I think it would be prudent to continue to listen to Albertans' feedback on this. I think it is absolutely prudent to discuss this more as we have this under our advice in the House. I know that this is something where we have heard from tens of thousands of people. I know that we saw stacks of that feedback tabled by the Member for Edmonton-South West just earlier today. The message is loud and clear, that Albertans want to see an end to daylight saving. Whether that means that we stay on the time that it is now or that we fall back and then stay there, people want to have one time year-round.

It's something that would help support our agriculture industry, as I stated earlier, and it's something that teachers, with their students, have also spoken to us about, that they notice a change in their students when they have to deal with a very fatigued child in their class for a week after. This is something that has also been discussed in quite reputable magazines. Forbes on March 11, 2017, discussed that there was a study done by Jennifer Welsh and Sarah Kramer of Business Insider, and they estimate that it costs $2 billion just to change the clocks. Fortune magazine from March 12, 2016, had a study that they referred to from SleepBetter that estimates the cost to the United States being $434 million in lost productivity. I think it's very interesting to discuss this from all angles. I know that it has not been discussed as a money bill, but it has incredible implications, when it comes to the costs, to actually implement this change.

I think the jury is still out. I think we still need to discuss which time zone people want to go with, and I find it very interesting that people have very personal interests which time zone they want to go to. If they have more ties or more integration with Saskatchewan, they definitely want to have a time closer to that, and when they have ties or land or other property or family in B.C., they want to go to a time that's closer to B.C. time. Given the issues that have been raised because of discussing these issues, such as one of our most important Canadian stakeholders, our hockey here in Canada, I think that it behooves us to make sure that we continue to discuss this more.

With that, I will just say that I am incredibly supportive of this bill, and I know that the majority of my constituents are also supportive of this bill. I hope to hear more conversation on the topic as we go forward.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise on Bill 203. It's not too often we have bills that are both interesting and have agreement across party lines, and I think that we may be in one of those circumstances. I know that not all members will be agreed upon it, but this is a genuinely nonideological and nonpartisan issue, that will either unite us or disunite us depending on what hockey teams we go for and our own, personal daily routines.

We would be creating an Alberta standard time or, effectively, a permanent daylight saving time, and if you'll excuse the indulgence, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to dub it Dang-light saving time.

I want to commend the Member for Edmonton-South West for bringing this bill forward. It has sparked an incredible amount of debate across the province. It is, admittedly, perhaps not the most important issue we have before us, but it is still important, and it certainly has grabbed the attention of a lot of people. I've had a lot of constituents come up to me. Normally they're either supportive or angry about one thing or another, but a lot of people have come up to give me their personal two cents about this.

This morning on my Facebook page between 10:30 and 11 I just asked constituents to share their thoughts with me about what they think about this, and I'll read a few. I have, let's say, cut out some of the less productive comments that have appeared. I just wanted to share a smattering of them. I do mean this. These are the nicest ones I found. I don't mean these as digs at government members. I genuinely support this bill.

Carmen Stopanski says, "Get rid of it! It may be the one and only thing the dippers suggest that I agree with."

"This might be the only [time] the NDP have got [it] right. Please vote for this and get rid of Daylight Savings time. The more we can be like Brad Wall and Saskatchewan, the better." Now, I know that's not the intention of the Member for Edmonton-South West. It's not his intention to be more like Brad Wall, but we appreciate the sentiment.

Dustin McCombe says:

Leave it the way it is. I don't think people fully understand the way it works. All they want is their convenience. Saskatchewan isn't really on Central time. Power bills both at home, and [in] the cities ... go up in the winter. It won't be light out until mid morning. That [won't] save energy at all. It'll wreak havoc [upon the] people who go to BC in the winter to work, or play with the 2 hour time difference. Dumbest idea ever.

That's obviously not a supportive constituent.

Bobby SP says, "Consider voting in favour of daylight savings time. So, we can have the same time year round. I don't see any value in switching times ... it's a hindrance. One issue I agree with the NDP [on]."

Lou Williams says:

Brilliant idea. I live in both Calgary and Foam Lake [Saskatchewan], and have always liked the [idea of] no time change in [Saskatchewan]. Vote for it, it will be [the] only chance to support something the NDP [does bring] forward before they lose the next election!

I am trying to be nice, Mr. Speaker. I mean this genuinely.

Brock Warkentin – I think he might be from the Grande Prairie area – says, "Loving how the time is right now, leave it and never touch it again."

Lois Eagles says:

Finally ONE thing the NDP is doing right! Get rid of [the] time change and stick with the same time as [Saskatchewan].

As a parent – I am SO sick of the time change agony for kids! [As] an employee – driving an hour to work after [the] time change [sucks].

I'll leave it there. These are among the more polite responses I've received for parliamentary consumption, Mr. Speaker.

3:50

Now, while I'm broadly supportive of the bill, my main concern, that I've had expressed to me, is from Canucks fans who are very concerned about having to stay up very late on weeknights watching Canucks games. Obviously, we're going to have to hear from that very important stakeholder group, as we move forward, about how we can address concerns of our Canucks fans. Nonetheless, I think it is still broadly the right way to go.

I broadly support this. I would say that it would be advantageous to put this bill to a committee for proper study. While I broadly support it, I don't think that myself or anybody except for perhaps the Member for Edmonton-South West considers themselves an expert on the topic of daylight savings time and springing forward and falling back. I'd like to hear from expert witnesses about the best path forward for this. Is this truly the way we want to go?

Again, this is something I will vote for in second reading. I broadly support it, but this is exactly the kind of bill that we should have some expert witness on to determine if it is, in fact, the right way. I can be convinced either way.

I want to again commend the Member for Edmonton-South West for bringing this forward. I think it's a great way to go. Dang for PM.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I just wanted you to be aware that infants, when they're hungry, don't care whether it's one time or the other.

Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm really excited to stand up and speak about this bill that we have up here today, Bill 203, Alberta Standard Time Act. Now, I'm going to reflect first on a story about when I did like the time change, which was when I was 19, and I was a student in Ottawa. I was at the bar, and 2 o'clock came, and then we rolled back an hour, and I got to stay out there longer. Then I sadly realized that I had to work an 11 a.m. shift – and that was not good either – the next day. I only really liked that for a few hours.

Then fast-forward to two years later, when I had a new baby in my arms, and it was very wonky about when it wanted to be fed after we changed the time zone. I changed my tune very, very quickly there, Mr. Speaker.

I want to thank the Member for Strathmore-Brooks for some of the comments that he made about having experts, people from within the industry speaking about this.

I'm going to reflect back to speak about what I know, which is being a manager in the service industry. Now, it's always funny to look back, because I refer to my father, who still calls businesses before he goes out because back when we implemented the time change, a lot of businesses were actually closed on Sundays. That's not the case anymore. Businesses are open all the time. They're open on New Year's Day now. Even businesses are open on Christmas. You can go to Shoppers Drug Mart and get a bag of potato chips on Christmas Day. So the relevance of this really changes remarkably.

I managed a restaurant, and we were open on Sundays. We did a Sunday brunch service. I recall the challenges that we used to face both when we rolled back the time and then when we sprung forward. Actually, I want to thank my colleagues from the restaurant industry. I spent some of my time over constituency week reaching out to them and asking them about the implications that have been happening because I've been away from the industry for about two years now. Actually, credit some of them that they did notice that it did create a lot of challenges. What I actually sought out is – I spoke to one of my colleagues from Milestones at Market Mall.

If I can throw this in there: if you want a really good eggs Benedict that's made with fresh hollandaise sauce daily, go to Milestones at Market Mall. Apparently, they had a really good manager there at one point, too.

With that being said, I took a look at about three years worth of data from them. They kindly allowed me to look at their logbook notes, and I want to make sure that I don't divulge too many trade secrets from those. With that being said, I looked at both October and November, when we rolled back, to see if there were any implications. Actually, there was no change, really, to their revenue sales because since they added the extra hour, people were coming in a bit more sporadically, but revenue-wise there wasn't much change.

However, productivitywise they dealt with some challenges because people were sort of off-kilter when it came to their time.

However, when I looked at the March season, when they lost the hour, I was actually quite surprised to see that there was an impact. Depending on the year, it was a decline in sales compared to the previous week and the following week of anywhere between $300 to $1,000 in net revenue. I reflect that as being only one business. I would suggest that that may have occurred because their people were sort of off-kilter with their time, so they were skipping a meal, or they weren't going out for dinner.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Realistically, it had an implication for our business, and I can only envision what implications it has for other businesses. I recall, having worked at a different branch restaurant, seeing a decline in our intake of guests during that time, not to mention that when we lost the hour, we would always deal with issues of staff showing up late. In fact, in the logbook notes I noticed that that was an issue. We also dealt with people who were quite grumpy, so our comps were actually higher on that day. So when I reflect back, it actually had a negative impact on our business operations. Now, I can't speak in relation to all the other retail sectors that are out there, but I can speak to how it impacted the restaurant industry, and it was quite negative for us.

With that being said, because I can only speak to this one field, I firmly believe that we do need to have further discussion with a lot of other businesses. I think it's actually quite prudent that we parallel what's happening in Saskatchewan. If you look at it IT-wise – now, I'm not going to encourage a business I've invested in to come to Alberta. However, I think that when we parallel what they see in Saskatchewan, if you look at adopting your IT software, there wouldn't be many challenges that you'd have. It would actually be lower cost.

A lot of businesses here in Alberta do work with eastern seaboard businesses, so the closer we can be to the time zones you see in Ontario or New York, the better because sometimes you have a lot of employees that end up having to go into downtown Calgary early in the morning because they have to be doing a lot of work in conference calls, especially because we can Skype now and go live via video conferencing. They do a lot of work with these partners, so being closer to them because they are business partners and trade partners would be very prudent as well.

Now, I reflect back to when this started getting lively, when the Member for Edmonton-South West originally proposed this, back in December. I remember visiting a Silvera seniors' complex in Shawnessy, and the number of seniors that came to me to talk about how we should eliminate daylight savings time and eliminate the time change was remarkable. I had a senior tell me that she threw away her clock because she didn't know how to change it. I had quite a few of the nursing aides who talked about the challenges they had with regulating medications and the fact that it really threw them off-kilter, and it was a big challenge for many of the people working within that sector. You know, that's speaking in relation to what the Member for Edmonton-South West spoke about, the challenges that we see within health care.

You know, when I have interacted with some of the people within the farming community in the last little while, they don't really see the relevance either. I've heard comments around: the cow doesn't know what time it is, so it only really changes what's going to go on with us.

At the end of the day, it was something we implemented a little while back, and maybe it made sense at that time, but when I start hearing from constituents, it's quite overwhelming where they sit on this side of the spectrum.

Now, I've heard the comments in relation to what we heard with some of the hockey teams here. At first, when I heard it from the Edmonton Oilers, I started dismissing it because: the Oilers. However, they did reference the Calgary Flames, so I started listening a bit more. With that being said, you know, that's one of the voices that was being heard.

I do commend the Member for Edmonton-South East – sorry; South West. My apologies. I live sort of in the east end of Calgary, so the east is a lot nicer. Either way, I commend him for the outreach that he's done to really try to get a lot of perspectives at the table here. I think, you know, the more we can open up this dialogue and discussion, the better to really inform ourselves.

This will have implications on our industry. Being the first province to do this and to eliminate our time change could have a lot of ramifications down the line. I think a lot of other provinces right now are watching very closely. I would not be surprised if some of the U.S. states that we do a lot of work with are watching this quite closely, and if we were to be the first to move forward with this, they would follow suit. So if we do it, we need to make sure that we get it right.

Now, with that being said, one of the things that I made sure I did leading up to this was reach out to constituents through our newsletters, and I asked them to provide me with feedback. I do that with many different issues every single month to really get some of the comments that are coming from constituents in my riding. I was overwhelmed with how many people reached out to us. I have not had a single issue that I have received more feedback on than this one. I think it really speaks volumes to the fact that this is extraordinarily important to Albertans, that they take this quite seriously, and I think they're going to take quite a bit of pride in this once we've moved through this bill.

With that being said, you know, I reflect back to being a parent myself and the challenges that I have getting my kids synced up to the right time and the challenges I have getting them off to bed. It's a quality of life thing. While it may seem like it's something small, even the little things sometimes make a big difference in people's lives.

You know, I appreciate the member for bringing this bill forward to really try to make life better for all Albertans. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: I'll recognize the hon. Member for Airdrie, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Mrs. Pitt: Wonderful. Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak to Bill 203. I'd like to thank the hon. member for bringing this bill forward. This has created a flurry of activity in my office. It's such a great conversation piece to have with constituents of mine. Our local media have appreciated the discussion as well. So we've had a good time with this. The people of Airdrie are certainly interested in Bill 203 and the intent and purpose and the outcome of what this is supposed to bring. In fact, I could actually honestly say that at this point I've had one correspondence with a constituent that doesn't think this is a good idea. One. It's sort of like it hit the nail on the head bang on. I would probably have a big problem in my constituency of Airdrie should I vote against this bill.

The discussion is great. The reasons here, you know, I think we've all heard before. I've even heard the comment that the cows don't care what time it is. But you know what? This is actually truly important, I think, to a lot of people. When you turn on the news on the day that the time has changed, whichever way it's changed, we see an increase in the number of motor vehicle accidents. The emergency rooms will report higher numbers as well for sure. I think there's a safety component that is being addressed by this piece of legislation, which I hope will be proclaimed before the fallback time. That would be really great because we can just get this thing over and done with and be good. I know that, certainly, the people of Airdrie want to see that as well. And that's actually what I've heard a lot from the feedback, too: "Yes. Let's vote for this. Let's get it done, and let's move on."

So I'm relaying the message from the constituents of Airdrie to this Assembly, and I urge my colleagues to vote for this piece of legislation. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Edmonton-McClung.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the member for raising this issue, that seems to have captured a lot of attention in Alberta, though not in my constituency. Calgary-Mountain View seems to be fairly quiet about this issue. I assume that, like many, they are enjoying the long evenings that come with daylight saving time and time with children and time with family activities afterwards.

The bill proposes to shift and be consistent with Saskatchewan Central Time year-round, ending the practice of putting clocks forward by one hour in the spring and turning them back an hour in the fall. This would preserve the province's long summer evenings but would result in much later sunrises and darker mornings in the winter and would put us out of sync with the west coast by two hours instead of one hour. It stipulates that Alberta standard time will be the only time used or observed in Alberta.

We actually had a resolution before our spring policy convention with the Alberta Liberal Party, and it was narrowly defeated, to say in brief. What I may say is that because of the mixed response and the, really, lack of interest in my constituency about changing the daylight saving time, we will probably oppose the bill and suggest that we push this to committee for a full discussion there and more consultation with Albertans.

There are values, I gather, that daylight saving time actually consumes more energy in Alberta, more electricity, more fossil fuels, and that, to me, should suggest that we may want to change it. But on the other hand, there is more daylight time, and people are more active, so they're healthier and doing more things outdoors, and there's good family time and stress relief time. So I'm kind of torn myself. I think I could probably live with either. I've lived with daylight saving time for many years, and I could probably live without it, but it's not a big enough issue in my constituency to get too concerned about.

There is some evidence that heart attacks and strokes and car accidents in some ways go along with daylight saving time, and there are these pros and cons. But if we switched, I guess, the other reflection we've had in our caucus is that we would want it synchronized, as it is today, with many of the northwest United States, which are also on this, even the southwest United States: Wyoming, Arizona, New Mexico, Montana, Idaho, and Colorado.

It's a mixed bag. I guess what I would say from this side is that without a referral or a hoist, I don't think we could support it as it is. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak to the proposed Bill 203, the daylight saving time bill. I do agree that there should be a full airing of expert views in a forum that satisfies Albertans with respect to proposed amendments to daylight saving time that Bill 203 contemplates.

I know that in my constituency I've asked individuals about this almost every time that I come into contact with them, and they overwhelmingly, particularly the younger people with families, are really supportive of this change and really not liking changing their clocks twice a year and finding it quite disruptive.

On the other side of the fence, I've had two individuals with whom I've had contact with for decades, long-time friends and associates, who found it fit to actually text me saying: now, this is personal. They were really quite upset about it. On either side of the fence people have passion on this issue, but the overwhelming majority that I've run into in my constituency are definitely supportive of Bill 203.

I think I'm in support of measures which would make sure that all Albertans are happy with the legislation that we end up finally supporting in terms of investigating all avenues of concern with respect to it. That may be from industry. I think agriculture has generally expressed themselves in favour, but there may be airline industries, restaurants, or other industries which have schedules that are affected by the daylight saving time changes, that they would like to express that themselves.

I think it's incumbent on us that we do hear all those views while there's an opportunity to do so, before the legislation is finally passed. Notwithstanding the huge outpouring of responses that we had from Albertans on the surveys and also the good attendance at meetings that were held here in the Federal building, one of which I attended, I still think that many individuals consider that an airing of expert opinion might be worth while to ensure that there are no sour grapes at the end of the day.

I agree with the Member for Airdrie that the overwhelming response from Albertans is to go ahead and do this and get the change made and move on, but I think in a final analysis we should make sure that no voices have been unheard and that we consider with respect those that do oppose it for one reason or another. I think the opportunity for those voices to be heard in a forum that may go deeper than an online survey would be something to consider.

With those remarks, I'll let it be known that I'm kind of agnostic personally on the matter, but I think the overwhelming majority of people in the province have expressed themselves quite clearly that they are tired of changing their clocks twice a year.

I know that I'm probably one of the people in this House who is in a minority as far as having experienced the implementation of daylight saving time in 1972. I do remember enjoying the longer summer hours after that was implemented. I do remember enjoying, I guess, being able to shovel the sidewalks in the morning with my brother in the darkness because it didn't seem quite as early as we continued to keep our sidewalks clear on a corner lot that I lived on. If you wanted your porridge, you got the sidewalks shovelled. If you didn't get them done, you're going hungry until they get done. We shovelled away in the darkness, but we certainly enjoyed the long summer evenings. I know that when our family finally got a boat and we took it out water-skiing, my brothers and sisters and I certainly enjoyed the calm waters in the late hours and the glass on the lake to learn and hone our water-skiing skills those long summer evenings. Campers especially, I think, in Alberta enjoy those long summer evenings. So while I may have told you earlier that I'm agnostic on the idea, there certainly are some benefits to the daylight saving time or the Central Time that this bill proposes to potentially adopt that appeal very much to me.

It actually kind of surprised me when I heard from constituents in conversation that without hesitation, especially those that had family members and children, they would tell me right now: let's not bother changing the clocks anymore. I was more than surprised at how disruptive it was to them and how quickly they cast their vote in favour of not changing the clocks. I must say that my kids have long since left the house. They're in their thirties now and producing grandchildren, so I haven't had my house disrupted by clock changes in a long time. That, I guess, I needed to be reminded of. Those are the individuals that I've spoken to who have really gone on to say most quickly that they really would like us to do away with the process of changing the clocks every fall and every spring.

I'm not really overly concerned about the difference in time between us and British Columbia. In the winter it will be a couple of hours, but I think that's not an overly strong objection. That's my personal view on it. However, the thing I'm most looking forward to personally is the long summer evenings, which I think we've come to value and enjoy and appreciate. If it is decided that we'll adopt the Central Time, Saskatchewan time, and call it Alberta standard time, then I'll continue to enjoy those summer evenings.

One thing I know that I was concerned about was that we would end up calling it Central Time or Saskatchewan time, and I'm happy to see that the proposal is to call it Alberta standard time. It is an Alberta time zone that we're contemplating here. I know we'll kind of lose the historical Mountain Standard Time designation that we had, but in order to be clear that we're adopting a time zone that's different from Mountain Standard Time, which is a time zone that runs sort of vertically north-south into the States, we'll be adopting Alberta standard time, which has a year-long, nonchanging designation. That designation will be published in all kinds of schedules globally and identified specifically as a time zone that Albertans will follow year-round without changing.

Therefore, we will become known as one of those jurisdictions in North America and globally which have decided to adjust their thinking with respect to daylight saving time and changing their clocks twice a year and probably will become, as others have mentioned in this House, a leader in adopting these changes. I certainly can see the debate branching out beyond our borders and into other western economic jurisdictions and perhaps even Europe when they hear from their public how unpopular the practice of changing their clocks twice a year is. We once again will be seen as a very forward-thinking jurisdiction. Even people from, I'm sure, jurisdictions like Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills seem to agree with those from Airdrie that changing the clocks twice a year is an unnecessary burden and a practice they would prefer to do away with.

Now, with those remarks, I'll listen to others with interest as they add to this debate and, hopefully, decide that we'll allow all Albertans to express themselves fully and completely, and when the decision is finally made, we'll be able to put the issue to bed with everybody being happy campers.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm happy to rise. I intend to move a motion which will refer this matter to the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future because I think there are a number of interests at play here. Not all of them are, you know, going in the same direction, and it's important that we make sure that all points of view are heard and that the impact or potential impact of these changes be fully canvassed with everyone so that we are fully informed on this matter. I think there's been some really good debate on this, and I know that out there people are quite seized by the issue in many respects and very, very, very interested in it.

Obviously, everyone has an opinion on the matter. I know that the sponsor of the bill undertook extensive consultation before bringing it forward, and I expect that we've all been hearing from our constituents about it. There have been a number of concerns expressed as well by different organizations, for example both NHL teams here in the province, so I think that that consultation is a good thing. It's been very good so far, but I believe also that it should continue.

For that reason, Madam Speaker, I would like to move the following amendment, that the motion for second reading of Bill 203, Alberta Standard Time Act, be amended by deleting all of the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 203, Alberta Standard Time Act, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future in accordance with Standing Order 74.2 and that the committee report the bill back to the Assembly on or before October 4, 2017.

Madam Speaker, I have the requisite number of copies of this amendment, which has been approved by Parliamentary Counsel, and I would ask that the extremely efficient pages could now distribute it.

Thank you very much.

4:20

The Deputy Speaker: This referral amendment is debatable. Are there any hon. members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you. It's my pleasure to rise, Madam Speaker, and speak to the amendment. I might just like to point out a very brief couple of items. I know that you will know that I have spent some time in this House encouraging the government to refer pieces of legislation to committee. In fact, I have done it north of 25 times. I will find out the exact number because I know that members are riveted to know how many times it's actually happened. I will rise and speak in support of such a motion. I think that any time we can make the best use of making good decisions, not just fast decisions but good decisions – I do find it a little interesting that the Government House Leader has spoken at length about not referring pieces of legislation to standing committees and the need for the business of the House to proceed. I look forward to using some of his quotes from this afternoon in the very, very near future with respect to consultation and the importance of getting it right. Without the benefit of the Blues I wouldn't want to misquote him, but I do look forward to that.

You know, in the name of how things happen around this place, I think that it's interesting that a member of cabinet might come back to actively participate and encourage private members to perhaps go in one direction or another. I know that in the past he may have been a little excited about these sorts of things, but one thing I will say is that the Government House Leader is a good, good parliamentarian. He has taught me a lot, so I look forward to continuing to learn how to do these sorts of things, about having a change of heart, when I, too, am in government.

It's great to be able to support the motion. In all seriousness, I think that getting it right is very important. I perhaps look forward to moving a motion at committee, and maybe we'll make this Daylight saving time. There are lots of options available to us at committee, and I know that the best opportunity for the best idea to win takes place at committee and not necessarily here in the confines of the House.

I look forward to supporting the amendment. I encourage all members of the Assembly to do the same, and hopefully we can move expeditiously.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I just want to rise today and thank all members who spoke both to the main motion and who've spoken to this referral amendment. I do believe my team did amazing work and pulled long hours to ensure that we did have as thorough a consultation as I possibly could. We heard from tens of thousands of people through my office and through the survey, and that's why we did have, after the bill was tabled, an ongoing consultation form that we put back up on our website. I do believe in hearing from Albertans and that legislation is a living, growing process and that we should keep moving forward on this.

While I do believe that my team and I put in a great deal of work that I think does reflect Albertans and does reflect their will, if this is the will of the Assembly, if this is what the House requires so that we are able to move forward with this legislation – I'm encouraged to see that there's a due date for this referral. If this is what the House wills, then I'd be happy to work with the committee, with Alberta's Economic Future Committee, and ensure that this legislation is thoroughly consulted on, thoroughly fleshed out, and is the best possible legislation it can be.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment?

You can't speak to the amendment again.

Mr. Mason: Not to close?

The Deputy Speaker: No.

Mr. Mason: Oh, really.

The Deputy Speaker: Seeing no other members wishing to speak to the amendment, I will call the question.

[Motion on amendment carried]

Bill 204 Protection of Property Rights Statutes Amendment Act, 2017

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise this afternoon. For the official part of this little presentation I'm pleased to move second reading of Bill 204, the Protection of Property Rights Statutes Amendment Act, 2017.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Ladies and gentlemen, good afternoon. Thank you for being here this afternoon. Finally, we get to a topic that's near and dear to my heart and has been for several years. It is something that we actually brought forward for first reading in Bill 210 this fall, but that kind of disappeared with the change of session and so on and so forth. So we have brought that bill back, in essence, but we've also added in something that's vitally important in 204, and that is squatters' rights.

Let me just start, then, by saying that, you know, over the years since our party came into being, there were a number of things that took place that generated that. One of those was actually back in the 2008 and 2009 era, when the government of the day launched a series of bills that became quite controversial. This all stemmed from many years prior, when the same government had been feeling a lot of pressure from the environment side and the oil and gas side to make some changes. They wanted to therefore look at also land-use planning as being the crux of the situation, so they brought in a series of bills that would more or less give the government of the day power to make some decisions without necessarily having all of the different rights and concerns of landowners first in mind, it seemed.

They brought out bills 19, 24, 36, and 50 in those days. Bill 50 was eventually repealed, which was to do with the electricity power line grid. Bill 19 was the land assembly act, which actually was able to come along and set aside lands without a lot of rights as well when the government might need land for roads and so on and so forth. That one was done. Then Bill 24, which is still kind of on the books as a pore space one: that one is still kind of hanging around for carbon capture and storage. But the most controversial one was Bill 36, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, in short ALSA. ALSA had several sections in it that gave an awful lot of people around the rural area and the business world an awful lot of concern.

Really, what this all was about was that the government wanted to change how land-use planning was being done. They set about, around the '07-08 era, the new land-use policy document, which became the land-use framework. It set aside a whole new set of endeavours to control how land-use planning was done. They went ahead and they decided to cut the province of Alberta into seven regions. They were going to do regional plans, so it was a change to the regional planning model.

Regional planning had been done years and years before, but it didn't work out too well in those days. Over the period of time in the '80s and '90s we had municipalities working with themselves individually, as they almost are in many respects today, without a regional plan. So they decided to put in regional planning. That became a problem. People were having arguments, urban and rural, so eventually the government decided to run back to the regional planning model. Now, as we've seen in the past year and a half here in this Assembly, we have gone back to where municipalities are having to do their municipal development plans, their intermunicipal development plans, land-use bylaws and that to conform to these regional plans.

Within the context of Bill 36, though, which was the legislation that put the regional plans into legislation and gave them the power to do what they were doing, were several clauses that were quite controversial and that raised the ire of a lot of people out in the business world and the rural landowner world. Those clauses more or less said in many respects that the cabinet of the day, in creating these regional plans, could dictate to the local governments and municipalities how to plan. That caused a sense of angst with the municipalities because it kind of cut down on their autonomy, so the municipalities weren't too pleased with it. Moreover, the landowners were a little concerned about several clauses that were in there.

There were also clauses, at the same time, in the responsible energy act that gave them some problems. Basically, I'd just like to read out a few of these clauses to draw your attention to them. I only have a few minutes in this second reading process to address a lot of this. Section 11 talks about the ability of the government to amend or rescind existing rights, including development rights, resource extraction rights, mining rights, water licences, grazing leases, et cetera. Those are called statutory consents. Those are extremely important documents that people struggle to get through for their own business needs or to run the affairs of their farm properties or feedlots or dairy farms or what have you. Statutory consents are really important in oil and gas, of course, because that includes oil and gas leases. There are different kinds of things in forestry where we get statutory consents. So this act actually allowed the government to come along and amend or rescind those things.

Further, in some of the other clauses in the act they also eliminated the rights of the courts, the ability to make a claim against the government when some of the government decisions were handed down from the cabinet like that. They also limited the ability for the landowner or the business owner to seek compensation. So we're trying to clean that up.

I realize I've only got three and a half minutes now, Mr. Speaker, so I'm going to move along. We're looking at the responsible energy act, too. As I mentioned, the responsible energy act had at one time come along, in the first year, I believe, of when I was elected. They took out a lot of the red tape that was in the previous act that governed this, the Energy Resources Conservation Act, which allowed for notice to the landowner and the ability to have the right to speak at a hearing regarding oil and gas type operations on the property. What we're doing with this is that we're going to take some of the old, previous, proper notification rules that were in the Energy Resources Conservation Act and put that back into place. That would have been section 26 of that previous act. And we're amending the responsible energy act to include proper notification and those kinds of opportunities for landowners to go and have those hearings.

Further, and most importantly, I think, in addition to all of those things, we have now decided to go ahead and add into Bill 204 the issue of adverse possession. Many people, I believe, in this House were involved in a committee meeting earlier these past few months regarding property rights and adverse possession. This is a situation, Mr. Speaker, where – and I'll just read the legislation quickly.

When, during a period of 10 years (1), a person has been in exclusive, continuous, open or visible and notorious (2) actual possession or occupation of land of which he is not the registered owner and which is not Crown land (3) or municipal land (4), that person may apply to the courts to recover a judgment declaring that he is entitled to the exclusive right to use the land or that he is . . . in the exclusive possession of the land.

In other words, what this is basically saying is that he can apply and actually seek and gain title of the land if he and the original owner have not had some sort of an agreement or any interaction for a period of 10 years. This has been one of the most archaic rules that's been around in Canada. There are only two provinces, ours and Nova Scotia, I understand, that still have this rule in effect. There have been, unfortunately, some unfortunate situations, particularly in the south part of the country just lately, where land has actually had to change hands because of this old rule.

The motion that was made by our party during the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship regarding this was:

Be it resolved that the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship recommend that the government introduce legislation abolishing the common-law doctrine of adverse possession in Alberta and all statutory references supporting adverse possession in Alberta legislation.

That actually passed during that committee meeting. We thought it a great opportunity to bring it into this bill. It's a very important property right. It is a key piece of this legislation, and I would ask all members to have a look. Feel free to contact me if you need more information during the upcoming debates on this bill. It is extremely important to all Albertans. I know that the governing party in the past had supported this kind of stuff.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Any members who wish to speak to Bill 204? The Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to give my enthusiastic support to Bill 204, Protection of Property Rights Statutes Amendment Act, 2017. What this bill really does is that it paves the way to fix some of the more troublesome aspects of bills that were brought forth by previous governments that, I would say, had a direct and negative impact on property rights in Alberta.

Property rights, of course, refers to the rights of the landowner. I think you'll find that this particular point will be made several times throughout my speech. These rights are those basic rights to financial security and prosperity. They're the very foundation that landowners rely on. Landowners want to know when they make an investment to purchase land that that investment is protected and its value will not be adversely affected by others, including government at any level, without just compensation.

I cannot stress enough to everyone today that these landowners are the primary group most impacted by energy projects in Alberta. Remember that it is these projects, be they pipelines, well sites, or transmission lines, that primarily occur on private land. Now, sometimes they can happen on Crown land, but very rarely do energy companies actually own the land that the project occurs on. This is a very important distinction to make because as it turns out in Alberta, landowners have very little say when it comes to energy projects on their land or access to their land for the project. The fact is that the energy company can come and will get a right-of-entry order under the Surface Rights Act and force their way onto the land. What this bill does is try to fix this process that allows access and how land is accessed and appealed when possible damages and disagreements pop up.

We are really here today because in 2009 and 2010 the government of the day passed laws that attacked property rights and the rule of law. At that time the government saw rights and courts as obstacles to their planning and policy goals. Whether this was simply the bureaucracy run amok or not, the politicians of the day went along with it every step of the way. They brought in legislation that severely curtailed the property rights of Albertans through Bills 19, 24, 36, and 50. In addition, Bill 2 in 2012, the energy development act, lacked the adequate notification, hearing, and appeal rights for landowners. On top of that, they failed to address the issue of the law of adverse possession, known more commonly as squatters' rights. This made Alberta one of only two provinces not to repeal this outdated practice.

Now, fortunately, some of the more outrageous bills have been fixed or repealed. Bill 19, The Land Assembly Project Area Act, for instance, gave cabinet the power to freeze a person's land for an extended period of time without compensation. For instance, a farmer or landowner could not develop his own property or in any way change the land to suit his own needs, to suit his livelihood without the consent of the government. This basically devalued the land's worth. Thankfully, however, the bill was repealed in 2015 before it was ever used.

Now, Bill 50, the Electric Statutes Amendment Act, 2009, was used to force through a few energy projects, including Fort McMurray east and west. These are projects that we are still hearing landowners' complaints on today. These projects forced these builds through largely privately held land, and while some objections did manage to modify the proposed route, there was little recourse under existing law for landowners other than to make the best deal for compensation that they possibly could. Noncompliance, as mentioned earlier, was not an option, and right-of-entry orders were always a big stick that energy companies could wield. This particular bill, Bill 50, was also repealed, but the current projects were grandfathered in, and damage to property rights was done.

Mr. Speaker, that's not to say that these are the only ill-conceived pieces of legislation that tended to curtail property rights in Alberta. Not at all. There are still several others that simply need to be addressed. That is what Bill 204 seeks to address. As my colleague from Livingstone-Macleod stated when he introduced his bill: "[Bill 204] is a culmination of many years of advocacy, dating back to 2009, when the Alberta Land Stewardship Act was introduced."

As we know, that particular piece of legislation limited property rights without notice or adequate compensation. Bill 204 proposes to correct this by amending the Alberta Land Stewardship Act and the Responsible Energy Development Act to ensure Albertans will once more have the right to a fair hearing if their rights are affected and have the right of recourse to the courts where their lands or vested interests are affected by a regional plan.

Furthermore, this bill finally deals with squatters' rights, or adverse possession if you'd rather, by repealing Section 74 of the Land Titles Act and amending the act accordingly. Let me talk about adverse possession for a moment. Can you imagine losing your hard-earned titled land without recourse or compensation simply because someone else happened to occupy it for 10 years? Imagine that, a law that permits untitled occupants of land of 10 years or longer to take possession of that same land without a valid agreement with the original owner. It is simply unacceptable, and as several Albertan landowners have discovered to their dismay, this is the law of the land.

Now, it is important to remember that this isn't just a rural issue. Several of the precedents over adverse possession have occurred within an urban setting. This could just as easily be an issue over a poorly surveyed fence line or a garage that could conceivably be partly owned by your neighbour just because of an unfortunate oversight. Hopefully, with the help of every member of this Assembly we can make right a wrong in this province. While this will do little to correct past decisions, it will prevent this unjust law from penalizing future Alberta landowners. This really shouldn't be a hard sell in this House. After all, it was just months ago that the Wildrose motion on adverse possession was passed unanimously by all parties in committee. Property rights, Mr. Speaker, is not a partisan issue. On that I think we can all agree.

Now, I've looked back in Hansard and read numerous quotes from government members when they were in opposition. In fact, the now Minister of Infrastructure once remarked, "I find it ironic in a way that it's the New Democrat opposition that is standing up and has stood up from the beginning for the rights of property owners in this province."

A statement like that leaves me little doubt that he will be one of the staunchest advocates for what this bill is trying to accomplish. In fact, I have an entire document that the New Democratic Party published – it's called Your Land, Your Rights – that extols the premise that together we can change these laws that trample on important rights of citizens. This is powerful stuff, Mr. Speaker. I'd be happy to table this document if you'd like. But it is certainly nice to know that we have a bill here that seems to me is exactly what the New Democratic Party in Alberta fought so very hard to fix when they were in opposition. This should make for a very fulsome exchange of ideas as this bill progresses along.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to commend my colleague from the constituency of Livingstone-Macleod for his tireless work on this topic. I've been involved in many conversations with him, and he has long championed this fight, as have several of my other peers.

Mr. Speaker, this bill, Bill 204, speaks to fundamental rights that all Albertans deserve, and it is my sincere hope that all members of this House feel the same. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It truly is a pleasure and an honour to stand in regard to defending property rights. As many know, it has been part of my activist role, previous to attaining status in this Chamber, to defend property rights, not necessarily in regard to land but in regard to the ownership of the fruits of your own labour, and I think that relates to the NDP government, the NDP vision of the use of their own hands and their own achievement of wealth and attaining that by using their own labour.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to take a liberty here and relate an approximately 500-word column related to that that I created and presented in my community. It relates only to one portion of what the Member for Livingstone-Macleod talks about in his bill. [An electronic device sounded] Well, I guess I'm cut off.

It's entitled Eliminating Squatters' Rights, Bill 204. As I said, it relates to one portion of this bill.

Your rights to own property are not protected in the way most Albertans believe they should be. In recent years, we've seen flawed legislation come into effect that does not protect Albertans' rights to own property and that gives government sweeping powers to negatively affect landowners who get in the way of its centralized land-use plans.

In Alberta, a lesser known negative still exists known as adverse possession, or squatters' rights. In Alberta property law, squatters' rights allow individuals with no legal or moral right the ability to claim possession of another individual's property. This can be achieved simply by an individual who does not have title or ownership occupying or using a portion of land for a legally specified number of years. They can then claim legal use to that portion of property.

Currently, only Alberta and Nova Scotia have a law like this on the books. In 2014, the Alberta Property Rights Advocate recommended scrapping this law and just last February, a Wildrose motion on abolishing squatters' rights received all-party support from a Legislature committee. There is a strong will to get this done for Alberta landowners.

Recently, Wildrose Livingstone-Macleod MLA Pat Stier introduced the Protection of Property Rights Statutes Amendment Act, 2017, an enhanced Bill to protect property rights that would remove squatters' rights from Alberta law.

"It's high time we caught up to the rest of the country and abolished squatters' rights in this province," [the Member for Livingstone-Macleod] said. "This is the big issue that so many hardworking landowners have been waiting patiently to see fixed. It's time for the NDP to put its money where its mouth is and get this done for Alberta landowners."

Bill 204 would accomplish other good things for landowners like amending Bill 36, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act (ALSA), which has been categorized by legal experts as "draconian." The ministerial powers that exist within ALSA are so sweeping and all-powerful they've been dubbed the "Henry VIII clauses."

Under section 19.1 of ALSA, landowners impacted by regional planning saw their rights to seek legal remedy through the courts eliminated completely. If Bill 204 passes, this will no longer be the case.

If I could just ad lib, Mr. Speaker, my hat is off to the Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

4:50

Bill 204 will also protect the rights of statutory consents (such as forestry permits, intensive livestock operation licenses, oil and gas leases, and grazing leases) to recover financial or property losses through the courts should they be negatively impacted by regional planning decisions. The Bill also proposes amending the Responsible Energy Development Act to incorporate the rights from section 26 of the Energy Resources Conservation Act so that owners of private land will be properly notified of access requests, learn and challenge the facts supporting an energy resource application and be fully involved with the hearing.

[This government] used to support property rights and oppose Bill 36, but since they've been in power, we've been slow to see any effort to fix these issues in Alberta property law.

As the Wildrose Shadow Minister for Property and Surface Rights, I'm proud to support [my compatriot member's] Bill 204, and I urge [this government] to do right by landowners and support the Bill too.

Wildrose will continue to fight for property rights to ensure the future protection of Albertans' ability to create, maintain and accumulate their own earned wealth.

Mr. Speaker, it's primary to a free and democratic society for people to understand that property rights are not necessarily only about access to what some would know as the dirt. In this case we are talking primarily about access to physical property, where people operate their farms and ranches, forestry operations, and other such operations or explore for oil and such. Under our Westminster system we have a tiered system of physical property ownership such that the mineral rights underneath the ground are owned by the Crown, and they sell the rights to those energy resources to other companies. Then the access to those mineral rights is needed by the surface landowners, and this creates issues. The Member for Livingstone-Macleod knows full well and respects and understands that there are requirements needed for proper consultation and legal remedies in that regard.

Mr. Speaker, in this Chamber we've also talked about renewable resources and the access for those entities who are seeking facilities to develop renewable resources, whether they be by wind or solar. To date we do not have proper regulatory legislation for the development of those facilities, and the minister of environment has stated that those contracts would be held between the landowner and the developer for that property. There is a whole tier of issues that are about to be developed there and are happening in my constituency and other constituencies throughout the province that are going to cause great concern as we go forward without the government's proper regulatory issuance of legislation in that regard.

The primary subject, I guess, of our discussion today, though, is Bill 204, and I view that as the most important part of our discussion. I look forward to having the support of all members in the Chamber in the development and the passing of the private member's Bill 204.

With that, in closing, I'd like to say that with my activism in the past of defending property rights – and some people take it in a flippant manner. I do not because I had an opportunity to confer at one stage with the Prime Minister in this regard, and I was able to tell him, Mr. Speaker, that I was the only man in this Chamber who was able to go to jail before I came into the Legislature, many actually going to jail after or with their involvement with the Chamber. I'm proud to be able to say that, so I thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any other members who wish to speak to Bill 204? The Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Hinkley: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question first? If I speak now and we run out of time, will I be able to speak again in second reading?

The Speaker: You will have five minutes left.

Mr. Hinkley: At another time?

The Speaker: At another time.

Mr. Hinkley: Okay. Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise and speak to Bill 204, the Protection of Property Rights Statutes Amendment Act, 2017. I am proud to be part of a government and a caucus that has always stood up for landowners in Alberta and will continue to do so. We believe in property rights, including due process, proper notification, and fair compensation. We have made a commitment to address these issues, and that's what we are doing. It's important to Albertans, and it's important to our government. Our government has already begun working with stakeholders to make positive change on these important issues and is working to make Albertans' lives better by ensuring that the public has access to appropriate protections and avenues for resolution where issues arise involving private property. Bill 204 aims to address these important concerns.

I think the spirit of the bill is an important one. I would like to thank the Member for Livingstone-Macleod for bringing that forward. However, I am left with several questions about how it is currently drafted. In fact, Mr. Speaker, Bill 204 creates more questions than it addresses, so I am interested in hearing more from the member and my colleagues here in the House about these issues.

As I have said, Mr. Speaker, protecting landowners' rights is of great importance to our government and has long been an issue championed by members of our caucus. One of the key changes that Bill 204 proposes to create is to provide additional rights to compensation for any statutory consents that are affected, amended, or rescinded by a regional plan made under the Alberta Land Stewardship Act. In fact, Bill 204 would add a clause to the Alberta Land Stewardship Act which states:

Notwithstanding section 13, if a regional plan affects, amends or rescinds a statutory consent or the terms or conditions of a statutory consent, the holder of the statutory consent may bring a claim against the Crown ...

I want to repeat that part: "may bring a claim against the Crown."

... for any losses the holder may suffer as a result of any effect on or amendment or rescission of the statutory consent under a regional plan.

Again, I understand the intent of the member in putting forward this amendment, and we support that intent. However, I worry that this bill looks at the issue from only one perspective and misses some other important perspectives. Looking at an issue from all sides is what we do in this government and what we should do in this House as well.

As I understand it, Bill 204 also creates private compensation mandates for public goods such as water and Crown lands. Private compensation for public goods: I just have some questions about that. It's not that I'm opposing what is being said, but I do need some clarification. I think we can all agree that property rights are complex, and finding the balance between public good, private property owners' rights, and responsible development is key to addressing these issues.

There are currently over 86,000 active Crown mineral agreements in Alberta, and many of these may be potentially impacted by regional plans. If Bill 204 becomes law as it is currently drafted and if regional plans directly affect, amend, or rescind Crown mineral agreements, this could leave the government and Alberta taxpayers potentially liable for compensation. So I think we really need to look at that.

I want to provide one example here. Bill 204 proposes to change subsection 19.1(1)(a) of the ALSA to redefine “compensable taking” to mean “the diminution or abrogation of a property right, title or interest” – who wrote this a long time ago? – “directly resulting from a regional plan or an amendment to a regional plan.” This would create a new clause of action that is not currently recognized in the law. The potential implications to government in terms of compensation would be broad-reaching. This would broaden the scope of those who could be entitled to compensation. For example, with my understanding of the proposed changes, a mining firm whose coal extraction rights are impacted by a regional plan may qualify for compensation more easily following this amendment even if that firm would not have been entitled to compensation at common law.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt you, but the time limit for consideration of this business item at this time is concluded.

5:00 Motions Other than Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Electricity Rates

502. Dr. Swann moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to amend the regulated rate option regulation, Alta. reg. 262/2005, by replacing the regulated rate option with a new default rate for electricity that is to be calculated using a weighted average of the wholesale price of electricity.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and move Motion 502. Since becoming an MLA, one of my most frequent concerns, as raised by my constituents, is the high cost and volatility of electricity bills. The system did not seem to be delivering on the promise of low energy costs and reduced price volatility that was made when the market was deregulated. This NDP government is planning a series of measures in an attempt to deal with this. However, like other policies, I find they are ideologically based and are failing to take into consideration some of the price and volatility issues that Albertans are concerned about.

Albertans need a practical solution based on evidence, so I've decided to research this issue in depth. Motion 502 is the culmination of substantial consultation over two years with stakeholders in Alberta's electricity energy market. In particular, I'd like to thank Nick Jansen, an academic researcher, and Rob Spragins, who previously served as Alberta's Utilities Consumer Advocate. Both were instrumental in researching, drafting, and encouraging me to bring this motion forward today. I'd also like to thank my constituents and other Albertans who over the years took the time to write to me about these concerns.

Before going further into the rationale for the motion, perhaps it would be helpful to review the history of the deregulated energy market and the regulated rate option, the RRO. Since 2001 Albertans have been able to choose to receive their electricity either from a retailer that is regulated by the Alberta Utilities Commission, the AUC, or from a competitive retailer, in which case they would sign a contract for a set price for electricity such as a fixed price for a defined time period.

The regulated rate option was established to provide a default option for consumers who decide not to choose a competitive retail product. The regulated rate option does not ensure a single low rate.

Rather, rates change from month to month, depending on the price of power. In 2006 the regulated rate option was changed to encourage customers to switch from the regulated rate option to a competitive retail product and to foster the development of the competitive retail energy market. Section 11 of the regulated rate option regulation determines this rate based on the weighted average of forward contracts to a 120-day period prior to the month of consumption. This is called forward pricing.

The problem with using this method, as experience has clearly shown, is that it actually leads to higher electricity costs for consumers. In addition, now that the competitive market has been in operation for 11 years, it's time to revise this policy to something more in line with current market conditions. Something needs to be done in order to ensure that the default option for electricity is affordable, protects consumers, encourages industry participation, and reinforces proper market functioning.

My motion to change the regulated rate option calculation to use the weighted average monthly pool prices instead of the forward market for four months is aimed at doing just that. Motion 502 reads as follows:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to amend the regulated rate option regulation, Alta. reg. 262/2005, by replacing the regulated rate option with a new default rate for electricity that is to be calculated using a weighted average of the wholesale price of electricity.

Not unlike the electricity market itself, I understand how this motion may seem complicated at first glance. It was to me. But what it essentially seeks to do is to replace the current formula for calculating the regulated rate option with a new one that is based on the actual price of power.

There are numerous benefits to using the weighted average pool price. First of all, it's consistent with the original intent of the deregulated electricity market. Our electricity market was founded on the notion that markets provide consumers with choice and that truly competitive markets will result in lower prices than the regulated markets.

Under my proposed changes consumers would continue to have choice through competitive markets. Unlike attempts to reregulate the market, it preserves the integrity of the competitive retail market and may even make it more competitive. It also allows the equitable allocation of risk and reward to the stakeholders: the investors, the retailers, and the consumers. All can win. Furthermore, it achieves a significant reduction in the complexity and the cost associated with the regulatory approval of regulated rate option rates by the Alberta Utilities Commission.

Customers would also receive savings by receiving the flow-through weighted average wholesale rate. These savings will help to offset the increases in the cost of electricity distribution and transmission service, the power purchase agreement liability, and the high cost of living in Alberta. They could potentially be used for expenditures on energy efficiency upgrades, energy services, and helping to grow future-ready industries, clean tech.

Strategically it is also a good time to implement a change in the regulated rate option due to the current low level of pool prices relative to historic levels. These low pricing levels are expected to continue for the next three to four years, primarily because of the overcapacity of our generating supply. Any of the negative impacts of this proposal on vulnerable consumers could be readily offset through subsidies and rebates, as we've heard the government is prepared to do.

In addition to providing choice, strengthening the retail market, and passing on savings to consumers, the weighted average of monthly pool prices offers the most effective price signal possible. This means that the price paid by consumers will be the actual cost of power. Consumers may not understand that there is a significant cost premium built into the current regulated rate option which advances the price over four months. This new method of regulated rate option calculation will establish a price reference point by standardizing the default cost across Alberta. It would also facilitate comparability of nonenergy costs such as the distribution, administration, and return margins amongst different regulated retailers throughout Alberta. Consumers could then use this information to conduct a proper cost-benefit analysis of competitive retail options.

While I support the government's efforts to create a market for renewables and diversify our province's electricity generation very much, simply putting a price cap on the regulated rate option is not the answer. In fact, it could potentially cause serious problems down the line and discourage new investment. Consumers should always have a price reference based on the actual cost of electricity in order to make the most efficient and effective energy consumption and investment choices. If energy costs are deemed to be too high, the government has the option to utilize rebates and subsidies for those that need it, not across the board to all Albertans. It should never mask the price signal that would encourage people to do the right thing as far as finding energy efficiency and using less. Otherwise, we may end up in a situation like Ontario.

The price cap will not reduce the cost of electricity for consumers; it merely defers payment to a later date and to our future generations. If we don't pay our way now, somebody is going to have to pay it later. Also, it will undoubtedly have a negative impact on the viability of a competitive retail market by eliminating the incentive for consumers to sign the fixed-price contracts. It also has the potential to distort the price signal, which may cause consumers to make poor decisions regarding their energy purchases and investment.

More importantly, a price cap will actually increase the cost of power to regulated rate option customers. If the market price of energy exceeds 6.8 cents a kilowatt hour, the cap, retailers will be purchasing supply at a higher price and selling it at a lower price. The difference will still need to be paid by consumers. This difference would likely be put in a deferral account and repaid over a period of time. Regulated rate option retailers will incur a financing charge, which will result in an increase to the cost of the regulated rate option. Consumers will be under the false illusion that total energy costs are lower as a result of the price cap when, in fact, they will be higher due to the cost of financing the deferral account, another extra expense in electricity.

Another possible issue associated with a price cap is the possibility of unintended consequences. The regulated rate option price is extremely complicated and is probably only understood by a handful of people in Alberta. Because of the variability of pool prices and forward prices, there is a risk that the deferral account could run out of control, which could significantly increase the cost of the regulated rate option to consumers. If the government plans on using a price cap, it would make sense for it to adopt my proposal to change the regulated rate calculation as this would significantly reduce the deferral account risk and would help to achieve the government's ultimate goal, which is to protect consumers.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will take my seat and listen intently to what will undoubtedly be a shockingly current debate which will electrify the Assembly with positive and negative charges.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That'll be a tough one to follow. I'm honoured to rise and speak to Motion 502. I can't support it, but I'll give you the reasons why.

Changing the regulated rate option to a pool price flow mechanism, as the motion suggests, will not help electricity consumers. In fact, this change will expose Albertans to greater price swings than the ones they've already experienced under the existing system. We are working to make life more affordable for Albertan families. We need to keep electricity prices in check, but this motion would do the opposite. It would expose Albertans to even wilder electricity price swings than what we've already seen in the past, and we won't let that happen to Albertan families.

Now, I appreciate what the Member for Calgary-Mountain View is trying to do. Our electricity system is broken. It doesn't work for investors, it doesn't work for consumers, and we need to fix it. Price spikes are built into the energy market that we inherited from the previous government, and ratepayers have the scars to prove it. During the first half of this decade prices swung wildly, well above the price cap that we are implementing. They were over 7 cents most of the time, over 10 cents, over 12 cents, and sometimes over 15 cents. That system took Albertans on a roller coaster of electricity prices, and it wasn't a pleasant ride, and the government at the controls didn't want to let us off.

I think we're all open to finding ways to fix the broken system we inherited and to end that roller-coaster ride, but, Mr. Speaker, this motion won't help. We have done the analysis. There is no guarantee that following pool prices will result in lower costs. In fact, it would worsen the price volatility that was purposely built into the energy system we inherited. Our government will not expose consumers to great price volatility.

Instead, Mr. Speaker, we're doing the work necessary to get the electricity retail system and the broader generation system right to benefit consumers and investors, work like transitioning our electricity market system to a proven structure, one that is more attractive to investors and will provide Albertans with more stable, predictable electricity prices. As we do this work, we are protecting consumers and making life more affordable for Albertans.

For example, we are implementing a four-year price cap on electricity rates under the RRO, or regulated rate option. Beginning June 1, electricity consumers who are on the RRO can be assured that their electricity rates will not rise above 6.8 cents per kilowatt hour. This cap will protect Alberta families and entrepreneurs should electricity rates spike without warning, which we've become too accustomed to seeing in past years. This will make energy bills more predictable.

Albertans will no longer be subjected to the volatility of a broken system, a system where electricity rates have been a roller-coaster ride, constantly rising and falling from month to month. Albertans deserve more certainty in pricing and a more stable electricity system. That's why we're making changes, changes that will protect the pocketbooks of families and make life better for Albertans.

While we make the necessary reforms, our government will be looking at ways we can transition the RRO so that it offers greater stability and predictability to consumers. There are a number of options to consider, and we will work with experts to find the best fit for Albertans. In the meantime the price cap will keep electricity rates reasonable and protect Albertans from the unaffordable spikes of the past.

Mr. Speaker, we have done our homework. Amending the RRO in the way put forward by the Member for Calgary-Mountain View is not in the best interests of electricity consumers. It does not address the issue of price volatility. In fact, consumers would be exposed to prices that are even more volatile than the current RRO prices. They would not get more certainty with their monthly electricity bill; they would get less. This action will not protect electricity consumers, it will not make life better for Albertans, and for these reasons I cannot support the motion.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and speak to Motion 502. Just a little bit of a mention about the RRO to begin with. The RRO is offered to residential and small-business customers who consume less than 250,000 kilowatt hours a year. It is the rate that customers receive who have not chosen to enter into a contract with an electricity retail supplier.

This option was originally set up to ensure that consumers who had not selected a retail supplier would continue to receive electricity service. So if you are an RRO customer, you may choose to do nothing and remain on the RRO in the province. That rate will fluctuate monthly. Power fluctuates monthly as a blend of short-term purchases at the market price and long-term hedges, that are used to determine the RRO. Now, the consumer who does stay with an RRO can expect the amount that they pay per kilowatt hour to change every month. There are, however, numerous other options available to an electricity consumer – for example, a fixed price per kilowatt hour or even a flow-through market price – if they so choose. Those options are available to consumers. The RRO was intended to be a default rate for people who did not make such a choice.

The RRO for electricity fluctuates each month to reflect the changes in the wholesale electricity market using a process that was approved by the Alberta Utilities Commission. By far the biggest influence on the monthly rate is supply and demand. The rate also includes an electric energy charge, which is a fixed charge for costs related to the supply of electricity, and an administrative charge for billing, customer care, and administration.

It is the AUC's responsibility to review the RRO provider's energy charges to make sure that they are being passed along accurately to consumers. The AUC does not regulate the rates or the service of competitive retailers. Retailer charges include the energy commodity charges, calculated by multiplying the amount of electricity used in the billing period by the applicable rate per kilowatt hour, and nonenergy rates. Nonenergy rates are charges that recover the retailer's costs of billing consumers for electricity and providing customer service.

That's just a little background on the RRO and how it works.

Some of the things we need to take a look at here are that the prolonged low rates that we're currently experiencing cannot – cannot – be expected to stay low. When they rise – and they will rise due to this government's 30 by 2030 policy on coal phase-out – we're now going to be exposing customers to volatility on their bills. That cannot be avoided. The wholesale price is calculated hourly. If anything, this makes billing equally complicated for each hour of every day the actual pool price is a weighted average. Power distributors take energy from the Power Pool and pay the declared hourly pool price for the energy they buy.

This option that the hon. member is putting forward will not actually remove any of the complexities that are associated with calculating the appropriate rates. The AUC will still have to determine the related management and administrative costs that the hon. member cited as needing to be added to the bill. Wholesale prices, of course, will be calculated hourly.

Now, it's not that I'm opposed to discussing changes to the default rate. Not at all. The hon. member is correct in pointing out the very recent benefits to customers that elected to be on the more volatile flow-through rate, but at the same time I understand why the previous government introduced the RRO: to provide consumers with a hedge and less volatility. That's been a priority. As I see this motion before us, I'm not sure that that really will address that and accomplish what the hon. member thinks it will.

Some of the other issues that I have with the motion are that it appears to me that the member failed to use industry-accepted terms and language. In my opinion, by politicizing that language within this motion at the expense of accuracy, it makes the motion problematic.

We're left with a motion which has been brought forward with the best of intentions – I understand that – but frankly in its current form I think it needs help. It's convoluted, and as a result I cannot support it. I did read the hon. member's brief, that he provided to us, and I thank the hon. member for that brief. It was very thorough. But as I was reading through the brief, line by line by line, one thing I noticed was that the brief didn't really match the motion. They didn't seem to me to be necessarily congruent through and through. That was problematic. So although the brief sounds like the hon. member wants to change the default rate to the flow-through rate, it never explicitly states that.

At the end of the day, I cannot support the motion that's before us right now. I don't believe it will accomplish what was the hon. member's intent. I believe that as we go forward, this is not going to protect consumers from volatility, so I cannot support the motion as it is written right now.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the Member for Calgary-Mountain View for presenting this motion, and also thank you to my other colleagues who have spoken to this. Their presentations have actually pointed to the importance of this measure. I think it's vital that this Legislature actually spend some time considering all of these things.

From my perspective, the work that was done last fall – and many of us discussed this at the time – on Bill 34 has actually probably pre-empted much of what's in this motion. The Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2016, allows the Balancing Pool to borrow money from the province to manage its funding obligations. This change supports electricity costs remaining low and stable. The Balancing Pool at the present time gives consumers a credit of $1.95 on their monthly bills. Without Bill 34, the Balancing Pool would have had to apply a charge as large as $8.40 starting last January 1 and continuing until the end of 2020. By passing Bill 34, we've actually protected consumers from volatility, which I think is one of the main concerns of the Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

The old system, I will call it: I think it was a disastrous system, in which this was one of the few electricity markets in North America – I believe there was only one other jurisdiction that had a similar one. This is the thing that we needed to change into what's called a capacity market, which is what the rest of North America uses. In a capacity market we're actually going to be able to prevent those ups and downs. In the old system there were times when the spot market for electricity was very, very high, and there were times when the regulated rate option was actually up to 15 cents. Now, as has been said, the regulated rate option is much lower, but even if it goes higher, as some of the members have suggested, we've put a cap on that, and that cap is going to prevent consumers from being damaged. I mean, people are going to be able to predict what their electricity costs are.

They're also going to be encouraged through our other legislation to actually do some energy efficiency. I know that the opposition sometimes decries whether or not replacing fluorescent bulbs with LED light bulbs would be a good idea. I can tell you that I have done that in my constituency office already, and the people of Alberta are actually benefiting because my power bill to light my constituency office is a small fraction of what it was before those LED lights were installed. So we're already making some advances on that.

This sort of encouragement, I can tell you – it was a constituency week last week. I did four town halls last week. I actually ran out of the cards that I have to give to people about efficiencyalberta.ca. I would encourage all members here, if they've not registered their homes or their other properties, to go on that site and register so that we can get started on getting things like LED lights put in, programmable thermostats, the use of weatherstripping, appropriate furnaces, and other things. My constituents are very, very interested in reducing their carbon footprint, if you wish, or their greenhouse gas emission rate, and combined with Bill 34 and with the energy efficiency activities, we can actually help these constituents along.

Changing the regulated rate option to a price flow mechanism could expose consumers to wild price swings if prices were to spike in a particular month of high demand or during large generation outages. This has happened in the past, folks. We need to remember that history. There's no guarantee that following pool prices will result in lower costs in the future. Our government has stated that it's not going to expose consumers to this great volatility.

Instead, we're doing the right thing necessary to get the electricity retail system and the broader generation system right. We've announced a four-year, 6.8 cents per kilowatt hour cap on the RRO. This cap will protect consumers should electricity rates spike without warning. The price cap is just one of the many steps we're taking to create an electricity system that is more reliable, stable, affordable. I repeat "affordable," and that's a key thing. I mean, we could talk about that we should be paying as we go, but in fact if your electricity bills are so high that you can't afford to pay your rent or your food bills, I really wonder.

It's also attractive to investors. We know that the capacity market has attracted a lot of interest among a whole range of investors. That along with the renewables auction is going to be bringing stability to this province.

In summary, colleagues, I think that while the intent behind the motion is laudable, it is actually redundant. We should basically work together as a whole to make sure that the combination of Bill 34 as well as the energy efficiency measures and the renewables act can bring stability and affordability to the province.

The Speaker: Speaking to Motion 502, the hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would also like to thank the hon. member for bringing forward this motion. I do believe his intentions are honourable as well, and I also believe that it acknowledges the fact that, as my other colleague said, the old system needed some changes and that we are doing that.

Unfortunately, though, I don't think his motion accomplishes exactly what it sets out to do. In fact, it actually may have the opposite impact. In fact, as we've heard already, it might actually lead to more volatility in the price for consumers as it will fluctuate a great deal more than it would under a cap like we have put forward, which is 6.8 cents per kilowatt hour.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, and as we've heard a lot of people say as well, the generation, sale, and delivery of electricity: it is very complex, and so is the RRO very complex. There's a delicate balance between keeping consumer prices low and encouraging investment in electricity generation. This motion does not factor in this last piece. I think that's what's being omitted here, investment and generation. The statistics provided by the hon. member who put forward this motion ignore the fact that these businesses need to earn a return, and it ignores that the profit has to be built into the price that the consumer will pay.

While I appreciate that on the surface reducing the forward market to 30 days from 120 days would provide more accuracy on the actual price of electricity, it would actually likely be more expensive because when you do it over 120 days, it actually has time, on a weighted average, to level out to a more affordable rate for consumers.

5:30

In addition, Mr. Speaker, I mean, this government is moving towards greater stability and affordability of electricity for consumers, and it's creating a new competitive generation market through the capacity market for all the province's generators and other businesses who now want to get into generation. Unfortunately, this motion impedes what this government is trying to do and rather successfully, actually.

Renewable energy is anticipated to attract at least $10.5 billion in investment over the next 13 years or so. So we don't want to detract from this type of investment in the province, the type of investment that will create jobs and clean energy. You know, in spite of the opposition's fearmongering with Ontario references, the fact of the matter is that there is a lot of interest in renewable energy in this province right now.

I don't want to jeopardize this interest in renewable energy by supporting this motion. I do appreciate it being brought forward, but I will not be supporting it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any other members who wish to speak to Motion 502?

Seeing and hearing none, I will allow the Member for Calgary-Mountain View to close debate.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, thank you to all members for giving their views on this, a complex issue, to be sure. While I disagree fundamentally with the government on this and their unwillingness to allow some market mechanisms, some clear price signals – by all means, rebate and support people who can't afford particular price spikes. I think they're in fact undermining the very basis by which this is trying to provide not more stability – there will be some volatility – but lower prices overall. That's what the graph showed over the last 10 years. Albertans actually spent up to a billion dollars more over 10 years than they would have if they were on this altered regulated rate option.

There's been quite a bit of reaction since I proposed this back in January. There are concerns that this change will do little to protect consumers from volatility. This is where the motion works well with the other potential solutions. It ensures that consumers are paying the actual price of power, which is what new investors want to see. Consumers will still have the option to choose other retail products that can better manage price volatility. However, the Retail Market Review Committee report of 2012 which surveyed Alberta consumers found that the majority of Albertans were comfortable with price volatility as long as they got the lowest price. This regulated rate option would provide them with the lowest price by about $10 to $15 a month. That's why the main objective in my motion is to reduce the overall cost to consumers.

Using the weighted average wholesale price of electricity will result in lower overall prices and significant savings over the long term. Any of the negative impacts on energy producers, retailers, or vulnerable consumers can be offset through subsidies or rebates to those who need them. We don't need to be giving everybody in Alberta a free ride on electricity, only those who really need it, which I thought would have appealed to this government.

Others have said that the amount of savings would be insignificant. That's unfair to consumers. The implication is that savings of between $600 and $800 over the next four to five years is trivial. I'm sorry; the evidence speaks otherwise. The motion proposes a simple change that would be implemented over four to six months and would immediately start to generate savings for consumers.

Some have also called into question the potential for future price savings. Historic evidence indicates that there is a strong likelihood that there will be a positive differential between forward and pool prices. The Alberta Market Surveillance Administrator examined the historic relationship between the last forward price for a given month and the average price for that month between 2008 and 2016 and concluded, quote, forward prices still remain above pool prices in most months.

It's also been mentioned that customers already have an option by choosing a flow-through contract. This is true. However, these contracts constitute a relatively small portion of competitive retail contracts, which are primarily fixed-price contracts. The Market Surveillance Administrator retail statistics indicate that as of September 2016 46 per cent of residential customers had switched to competitive contracts, but most, 54 per cent, remained on the default, regulated rate option. So despite the availability of a flow-through product from competitive retailers, consumers have not chosen it. In fact, the majority of Albertans still are on the regulated rate option default product. My proposal would eliminate the flow-through contract option. However, it could potentially increase the demand for fixed-price contracts, and competitive retailers could see an increase in fixed-price contracts that would offset lost revenue and profits from the flow-through regulated rate option.

One of the key issues will be the impact of my proposal on the forward market. The forward market is used by some sellers of energy to hedge the price of electricity. A significant volume of forward contracts is related to the regulated rate option. Changing the regulated rate option calculation to the weighted average pool price might jeopardize the integrity of the forward market, causing it to lose its effectiveness as a mechanism for price hedging. However, energy buyers and sellers don't require the forward market for hedging, which can still be accomplished through negotiation.

Finally, the current regulated rate option regulation forces retailers to purchase contracts in the forward market. A long-standing concern has been that sellers can game the market and arbitrarily push up prices. My proposal would eliminate that.

In conclusion, Motion 502 is an evidence-based solution that strikes the right balance between protecting consumers and improving the functioning of our electricity market. For these reasons and many more, I will be voting in favour of this motion.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 502 lost]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think we've made some great progress this afternoon. Seeing the time, I move that we call it 6 o'clock and adjourn until 1:30 tomorrow.

The Speaker: The legislative policy committees will convene this evening and tomorrow morning for consideration of the main estimates. This evening Families and Communities will consider the estimates for Justice and Solicitor General in the Parkland Room, and Alberta's Economic Future will consider the estimates for Executive Council in the Rocky Mountain Room. Tomorrow morning Resource Stewardship will consider the estimates for Environment and Parks in the Rocky Mountain Room.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:38 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let's bow and reflect or pray, each in our own way. Allow us to recognize the important work we do in the Chamber. Let us be inspired by our constituents as well as by our fellow colleagues as collaboration and co-operation are the keys to assuring people of our success and that future generations of our province are successful.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure that I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly students, staff, and chaperones from the great school of C.W. Perry in Airdrie. Now, this is group 1 of 3 this week because there are so many grade 6 students coming out of this school. I'm not sure if everyone knows, but Airdrie and Rocky View schools are the fifth-largest school division outside of Calgary and Edmonton. That's why you're going to see so many kids here.

I'll start by introducing – and please rise as I call your names – Mrs. Pamela Burke, Ms. Krissa Donahue, Mr. Roel Suasini, and chaperones Mr. Jason Wiles; Mr. Brock Penner; Mrs. Melanie Mansfield, who's also a friend of mine; Mrs. Claire Barbieri; Mr. Dwayne Giesbrecht; Mrs. Tracy Minter; Tonya Leary; Crystal Adamo, a wonderful realtor from Airdrie; Linda Sefcik; Dawn Fallow; Mr. David Gerrard; and Tammy McTighe. Now I ask that the students rise as well and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you the parents and teachers and staff of Blessed Sacrament school in the awesome town of Wainwright. I feel really honoured to be able to introduce these people because, you know, I taught at Blessed Sacrament school back in the '90s. It's a great school, so I'm really pleased to be able to ask these people to rise when I call their names: Mrs. Hermanson, Mrs. Hedin, Miss McMann, Mrs. Cusack, Mr. Haun, and the students, too, please. Can you give a warm welcome to the students and staff of Blessed Sacrament school.

The Speaker: Your guests may not be here yet.

The hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions to make today. First, I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a class of inquisitive grade 6 students from Lendrum elementary school in the magnificent constituency of Edmonton-Riverview. They're accompanied today by their teacher, Crissy Andrews, and parent volunteer Violeta Stefanoska. I would ask that the students and their supervisors rise to receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms Sigurdson: It is also my honour to introduce to you and through you representatives of the Alberta Seniors Communities and Housing Association, or ASCHA. The association serves over 30,000 seniors, empowering them to have choice and lives of purpose where they're honoured, valued, and respected citizens of this province. In attendance today are President Raymond Swoneck, Executive Director Irene Martin-Lindsay, and a north region director, Wendy King. I ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other school groups today?

Mr. Schmidt: Mr. Speaker, I rise to introduce to you and through you to the entire Chamber the Council of Alberta University Students, or CAUS. Please stand and remain standing as I call your names: Dexter Bruneau, Carley Casebeer, Fahim Rahman, Mike Sandare, Stephan Guscott, Tristan Bray, Cam Howey, Cody Ciona, Shifrah Gadamssetti, Danika McConnell, and Josh McKeown. Most of this group have almost finished their tenures as CAUS executives, and I feel a great kinship with them as my first year or so as minister has run parallel to their year at CAUS. Together we've grappled with the issues that make a difference for Alberta students, issues like affordable tuition, mental health, and access to world-class education at world-class universities. Alberta students have been in good hands with their incredible leadership, and I know that this means that Alberta's future will be in good hands, too. Thank you. I ask that the Assembly give them the warm traditional greeting of this Chamber.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great privilege to introduce to you and through you several people who have travelled quite a long distance to join us here today for the introduction of some legislation that I'm looking forward to speaking on. I would like to introduce President Gerald Cunningham of the Metis Settlements General Council; Ken Noskey, past president of the Metis Settlements General Council, and Ken is also currently on the Northern Alberta Development Council; Rita Marten, director of education for the Athabasca Tribal Council and member of Mikisew Cree First Nation; Beth Ann Auger, who has been working hard to develop a school council for Mistassiniy school in Wabasca and is a member of the Bigstone Cree First Nation; and Lois Byers, who's the official trustee for Northland school division. I'd ask them all, please, to rise and to accept the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To you and through you I'm happy to introduce the staff of the Calgary-Currie constituency office, Signe Spence and Lizette Tejada. They are passionate about serving our constituents and have built many positive relationships in the community. They are here in Edmonton to help me with the consultations on my private member's bill. Without their help and dedication, I would not be able to serve the citizens of Calgary-Currie the way that they deserve to be served, which until 2015 has in fact not been the case. I ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. It's a privilege to be able to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Arif Khan from the Bangladesh Canada Association of Edmonton. They have been in operation since 1979, providing cultural and social events for Bangladeshi Edmontonians.

I would also like to introduce Mr. Sam Ghosh, president of the Edmonton Bengali Association, a nonprofit organization that organizes cultural events for Hindu Bengali people right here in Edmonton.

I would now ask that they both please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I have the honour of introducing guests who represent four different Bangladeshi organizations that are here in honour of Bengali New Year, which occurs on April 14. Representing the Bangladesh PressClub Centre of Alberta, Delwar Jahid, the president, and Asheque Chowdury, a visiting journalist. If they would please rise. Representing the Bangladesh Heritage and Ethnic Society of Alberta, Mohammad Bhuiyan, the president, and Ruhul Amin, the general secretary. Representing the Mahinur Jahid Memorial Foundation sports club and Bangladesh Heritage Museum, Ashan Ullah, the president; Anamur Rahman, the vice-president; and Mica Mohammad, member of the executive. Representing Asian News and Views publishing, Syfur Hasan, the editor, and Zulfiquer Ahmed, the assistant editor. I would ask them all, please, to rise now and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your indulgence I have three groups of introductions to make. Today along with my colleagues I was honoured to welcome leaders from Alberta's Bengali community to Edmonton to celebrate Bengali New Year. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this House representatives from three Bengali-Albertan organizations. First, from the Alberta Bengali society I welcome Mr. Halder, who's vice-president; Mr. Chanda, secretary; and Mr. Chowdhury, also secretary.

Second, from Amra Sabai of Calgary, a nonprofit cultural organization focused on hosting cultural events and social activities which provide exposure to Bengali heritage and tradition, I welcome Mr. Datta, who is president.

Third, from the Southern Alberta Heritage Language Association, an organization that represents a community language school teaching over 40 languages, I welcome Mr. Vinay Dey, who's president of that. I also want to add that Vinay Dey ran for the NDP in Calgary six times before I ran in 2015, so I thank him for his dedication, his contributions. Welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome. You're undecided whether or not you won or lost.

Also, hon. members, I hope that you help the Bengali community celebrate the new year by being joyous and constructive with each other over the next while here.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Bengali New Year

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm proud to represent the constituency of Edmonton-Mill Creek, which has one of the most prominent Bengali communities in Alberta. I'm honoured today to wish everyone Shubh Nav Varsh, which I probably mispronounced, which means Happy New Year. Bengali New Year, or Pohela Boishakh, is the first day of the Bengali calendar, celebrated on April 14 in Bangladesh and in many other South Asian countries.

Bengali New Year, a national holiday in Bangladesh, begins at dawn and continues with fairs, festivals, and singers performing traditional songs to welcome the new year. Traditionally businesses start the day with a new ledger, clearing out the old. Like other festivals of the region, the day is marked by visiting relatives, friends, neighbours, and people preparing special dishes for their guests. It's a tradition to enjoy a meal of fermented rice and hilsa fish on this day.

The festivities from the deep heartland of Bengal have now evolved to become vast events in the cities, especially in the capital, Dhaka, and other large cities, where festivals begin with people gathering under a large tree or on a bank of a lake or river to witness the sunrise. A huge part of the festivities in the capital is a vivid procession organized by the students and Faculty of Fine Art at the University of Dhaka, which has a different theme relevant to the country's culture and politics every year. Different cultural organizations and bands also perform on this occasion, and fairs celebrating Bengali culture are organized throughout the country.

Of all the major holidays celebrated in Bangladesh, only Pohela Boishakh comes without any pre-existing expectation. It's about celebrating the simpler, rural heartland roots of Bengal.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Labour Legislation Review

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, in a time of recession and layoffs the goal of government should be to do no more harm, but this government has been a disappointment for Albertans. Last year this government called its budget the Alberta jobs plan. The NDP at least pretended that their focus was on getting Albertans back to work even if they actually killed more jobs with their policies than they made. The coal phase-out, carbon tax, and increased minimum wage come to mind. There are many Albertans who have been without a stable job for a long time, but this government has already moved on much too soon.

No longer is the focus on jobs; it's about modernizing our labour laws. The laws are not inherently problematic because they have not been significantly changed in a long time. Our labour laws have served us well and provided a framework for a prosperous, peaceful province. With its labour review this government is being driven by ideology and allowing itself to be pushed around by organized labour.

This government will have a legislative committee review on the Alberta Standard Time Act, but it won't afford our labour laws the same due diligence. Ontario is taking at least two years to review its labour laws. This government wants to bulldoze through the process in five weeks, putting decades of labour peace at serious risk. This government is being deceitful by making it look like its review is a legitimate public consultation. In reality the public is only being surveyed for its opinions on the employment standards portion of this labour review. The big questions about union certification and collective bargaining are being done in a secretive, unaccountable manner.

I urge this government to push the brakes on its ideological agenda. I implore this government to commit to providing a stable economic climate for investment and to return their focus to getting Albertans back to work.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

AIMCo Governance and the Heritage Fund

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since the NDP took power, we've seen time and time again this government evoke the name of Peter Lougheed. We know the former PC Premier, a true visionary, set out a clear plan that helped lead to the Alberta advantage that our province was so well known for, well, until the NDP started driving the ship. As part of Lougheed's vision he created the Alberta heritage savings trust fund. This initiative has greatly benefited the province through investments in critical capital projects and medicine, protecting our environment, and the list goes on and on. But despite the proven track record for this trust fund, the NDP have other plans. We're seeing signs that the NDP are attempting to misuse the funds for political gain such as paying off their ridiculous debt.

Albertans have been concerned to see the interference permeate into AIMCo. First, the Finance minister meddled with the board appointments. Then the Premier's office attempted to influence media coverage on AIMCo. Now the latest reports reveal that there could be up to seven spots on AIMCo's board up for grabs.

Mr. Speaker, I want to warn this NDP government that Albertans are watching your next move. Do not stack the AIMCo board with comrades with an NDP world view. Do not misuse the heritage trust fund for your own political agenda. We know that the NDP have trouble listening to the priorities of Albertans, so I will remind them today. Albertans have been loud and clear in the past that the funds should be used to benefit future generations and focus on generating long-term investments. You would do well to hear these priorities.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Gay-straight Alliances in School

Ms Jansen: Mr. Speaker, let me set the scene: a warm September day, the beginning of a school year, a parent at home washing dishes, cleaning up around the house. A family dog is barking in the background. And then the phone rings. The caller ID says that it's the school. That's odd. I hope nothing is wrong. Dad picks up the phone. It's the school principal. "I'm calling to inform you that your daughter is a member of the model parliament."

"Model parliament? Well, that sounds interesting."

"Well, it's certainly concerning. We thought you needed to know that your child is associating with kids who are interested in politics."

"Well, is there something wrong with that?"

"Well, that's not for me to say. There might be. There might not be. It could be a passing phase. But it's possible that it might lead to your daughter becoming an elected official and associating with politicians. We thought you needed to know."

"Okay, then. Have a good day."

"You too. And let me assure you that if your daughter becomes involved in any other clubs, we will be the first to let you know."

Mr. Speaker, I know that sounds absurd, but the implication of Jason Kenney's position when he says that parents should be informed if their kids join a GSA, that there is something wrong with children associating with their peers in a gay-straight alliance club, shows how profoundly out of touch our Progressive Conservative leader is with Albertans' basic common sense and their basic common decency. Mr. Kenney has tied himself in knots trying to explain his position. But the simple fact remains: Mr. Kenney thinks there is something wrong with young people joining a GSA, and the core of his argument is that it's not okay for gay kids and straight kids to hang out together. It's absurd, but for young people it is a problem. They deserve better, and so does every single Albertan.

1:50

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Official Opposition leader.

AIMCo Governance

Mr. Jean: Another day and more news of mismanagement from the NDP. There's no doubt about it; the Premier and her Finance minister are meddling in our independent investment fund. Albertans know this government can't be trusted with a single penny of their money, but now the Premier is trying to interfere in how our pensions and heritage fund are actually managed. The fund is the result of decades of savings by Albertans, and the NDP, who only understand how to spend, want to get their hands on the billions of dollars that are invested in it. How can anyone trust this Premier to not drive our investments into the ground even further than she has?

Ms Notley: You know, Mr. Speaker, I answered this question yesterday. The fact of the matter is that the head of AIMCo has assured the members opposite repeatedly that our government is not doing what the member opposite suggests. That's really kind of the problem. I don't know exactly what else has to happen except for them to listen to the answer.

But, Mr. Speaker, what is true is that AIMCo actually had excellent investment returns last year. I think they were better than we expected, and that's because they're working just like we are to make life better for Albertans.

Mr. Jean: It's clear from new e-mails released to the Edmonton Sun that AIMCo, teachers, nurses, bureaucrats, municipal workers, and first responders are extremely worried about these choices that this Premier is making. It compromises the integrity of our investment fund. It shows that the Premier's office now sees AIMCo as a political tool and spin office as opposed to an independent branch of government to be respected. By the end of this month there will be seven vacancies on the AIMCo board. How can Albertans possibly trust this Premier to get any of these appointments right?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We have a process to bring appointments forward and get them done in a timely fashion so that the board of AIMCo will be fully staffed up. I'm not going to stand here and apologize for making the appointment process more open and transparent. All Albertans know that there are appointments available now on every agency, board, and commission. They know that they can put their name forward. Not all Albertans are going to be qualified. The best will get on the boards, and they will give back to Alberta and give their best.

Mr. Jean: Thank you for that answer, Premier.

The change to the appointment process should be immediately reversed. No politician in Alberta should have the power to interfere in AIMCo like this government now has the power to do. The fact is that this government brought in the biggest tax increase in Alberta's history without even campaigning on it. Last fall they tried to push AIMCo to publicly sponsor their ridiculous climate scheme. How can the Premier possibly expect anyone at all to believe that they won't abuse new appointments, with their government's record of broken trust with Albertans?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me begin by saying that the appointments to AIMCo have always been done by OIC. They've been done by OIC under this government, and they've been done by OIC by the new best friends of the Leader of the Opposition when they were in government. The difference is that we now advertise openly. We advertise to all Albertans, we tell all Albertans that we want them to be able to participate in the important boards and agencies that govern their lives, and we ensure that there is transparency in how that process goes forward.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Now we're all going to remember it's Bengali New Year, so we need to celebrate it together.

Second main question.

Executive Council Budget

Mr. Jean: While life in Alberta has never been harder, life in government under the NDP has never been better. The Premier's office continues to balloon this year: eight new staff, and her chief of staff is one of the best compensated in all of Canada. Actually, her chief of staff is better paid than the White House chief of staff. Meanwhile there are 100,000 Albertans on employment insurance, new carbon taxes on everything that Albertans pay, including on charities, families, and groceries. How can the Premier possibly justify this waste and excess while so many Albertans are suffering so much?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me begin by saying that the member opposite knows that the first statement that he made was patently untrue. It's clear on Hansard. He knows it, and he's misleading this House.

Mr. Cooper: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order noted.

Ms Notley: Secondly, he also knows that the person that he's talking about is paid in line with the general range of what people are paid and in fact less than previous chiefs of staff under their new best friend's previous regime. But you know what that staffperson doesn't get? A golf club membership. He doesn't get that. But you should talk to your new friends because they're really pleased with those kinds of plans.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Jean: Bad government in the past is no excuse for bad government now, Mr. Speaker. The truth is that Albertans expect leadership from the top. Instead, from the NDP they get bloated spending increases and wasteful spending. Here's one example. The Premier has somehow found nearly $10 million to try and shore up public support for her own reckless and dangerous policies like carbon taxes and record debt and record deficits. Albertans are sick and tired of it. They are tired of surprises from this NDP government. How much money does the Premier plan to spend this year promoting her own job-killing policies?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am very excited to move forward this year, carrying on with our government's agenda to make life better for Albertans. You know how we're going to do that? We're going to go on with our efforts to make life more affordable for Albertans rather than trying to take money out of their pockets, we're going to move forward with protecting those important public services that Albertans count on, and we're going to move forward with those major investments in infrastructure that help Alberta communities and create job after job after job.

Mr. Jean: So far two years and zero jobs, Mr. Speaker. Actually, minus 81,000.

Albertans think that every single penny going towards these ads is an entire waste of money. Two-thirds of Albertans think that they should be thrown in the trash heap. I agree with them. Even the Premier's own Public Affairs Bureau, which this NDP government has used to stuff with partisan insiders, has seen its lowest approval for government communications in nearly 20 years, Mr. Speaker, an impressive feat. Bloated salaries, ballooning costs for the Premier's office, and millions of dollars wasted on shameless self-promotion. Does the Premier really expect Albertans to believe there's no room to cut spending at the top?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, to hear the member opposite speak, you would almost think that Executive Council didn't introduce a budget that had them spending exactly the same amount of money that we were spending the year before. So no increases. You know, the member opposite – there's hyperbole, and then there's what they're doing, which is way beyond it. That doesn't help the debate. That doesn't help us get our work done here. That doesn't help us make life better for Albertans.

The Speaker: Third main question.

Labour Legislation Review

Mr. Jean: The NDP government has mastered the art of pretending to consult after they have already made up their minds. The most recent example is the review of our labour laws here in Alberta, which has been given five whole weeks for Albertans to provide feedback on what many are worried will be a major overhaul. A similar review in Ontario took two years, Mr. Speaker. Even a backbench bill on daylight saving time is being given more consideration than this review of our labour laws. Why is the Premier putting decades of labour peace in Alberta at risk by allowing very little time for feedback from Albertans?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, in fact, we are engaging with Albertans on these issues, and we have been since we've been elected. You know what? The last time the labour code was reviewed in Alberta, Rick Astley was in the top 10. You know, it is time for us to move forward, to modernize our labour laws, to bring Alberta into the 21st century when it comes to labour laws. We're going to do that in a balanced way that talks to people from both sides and moves the matter forward in a way that strengthens our economy and creates more jobs for Albertans.

Mr. Jean: Not only is the NDP government's labour consultation process far too short; it's also not asking the right questions. The public is only being solicited for its opinions on the employment standards portion of the review. Card check certification and rules around union dues aren't even up for public consideration. Will the Premier admit that the fix is in on this labour review and that they are trying to overhaul a labour system that has worked well in Alberta for many decades?

2:00

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, let us begin by acknowledging that there are multiple components of the labour code, which, to be clear, hasn't been really amended since the late '80s, that have actually been challenged under our Charter of Rights and Freedoms, so it's not actually working quite as well as they'd like everyone to believe. That being said, you know, our government has asked Andy Sims to engage in a fulsome, thoughtful engagement with employers and with unions, and that's because it's a very complex area and these are the folks that understand the issues. We're also looking at what's going on across the country, and we're going to make sure that we move forward.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Jean: Interesting answer, Mr. Speaker.

You don't have to take my word for that. The NDP minds are made up. Just look at the union notice put together by UFCW 401. It's no secret that they are close friends with the NDP, and their brief actually talks about eliminating secret ballots and replacing them with a card check and introducing sectoral bargaining that will remove differentiation between businesses in the same sector, ramifications of a serious nature. Why is the Premier refusing to listen to the serious concerns of workers and businesses in Alberta and pushing these labour measures in only five weeks for Albertans to have any feedback? It's ridiculous, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The member opposite is identifying one set of proposals that has come from one group, and in fact there are other proposals coming from other groups, which would be the exact opposite from that, and other proposals from a broad range of groups. That is evidence that we are in fact consulting with people and the people who understand the issues are getting a chance to make their representations. That's exactly what the consultation is for, so I thank the member for pointing out that it's working.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

AAMDC Convention Ministerial Forum Questions

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the NDP for not being booed at the spring AAMD and C meeting. One elected official there pointed out that their local seniors' home will have a $25,000 carbon tax bill this year. He was told not to load that cost on the bill of seniors. Sounds good. He asked the minister if he should bridge the gap by giving the seniors less food or less heat. The minister said, "we are in partnership," and hinted at a whole list of initiatives. These words won't keep seniors fed, and it won't keep them warm. To the Premier: can you offer rural Alberta a better answer for your carbon tax funding gap . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The minister of seniors.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We're very proud to have those partnerships with the housing management bodies across this province. We work very closely with them. We meet with them regularly. We increased their operating budgets by 2 per cent, and we've invested $57 million this year to support them to do energy efficiency upgrades. We're committed to supporting them and working very closely together.

Mr. McIver: The carbon tax takes away more than the minister gave.

Mr. Speaker, another elected official asked about policing in rural areas. Crime is up, and the response is too slow. At a double murder in Chipman this week it took RCMP over 40 minutes to respond. The Finance minister could only muster a comment about fine revenues going to municipalities, which is nice but a drop in the bucket. It doesn't answer the question. To the Premier: since your Justice minister was not there again to answer the question and your Finance minister didn't know the answer, can you put rural Albertans' minds at ease today and actually give them an answer on crime and police response in rural Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I actually had the opportunity to deliver an address that AAMD and C had asked for the very day before, and we were able to discuss a number of issues, including rural crime and the upcoming legalization of marijuana. That's actually all been working very, very well.

In terms of rural crime rates we absolutely are concerned. We do hear concerns from our municipal partners. We are working very closely with them, and the province continues to provide over half a billion dollars in funding to policing throughout the province.

Mr. McIver: Cat's got the Premier's tongue today.

Municipal leaders need assurances that solar farm operators will be required to remediate land if solar farms fail or when they're just old and need to be removed. The Energy minister made it clear that landowners are on their own, and in the minister's words: it's between the landowner and the company, not my problem. While I have no reason to disbelieve your minister, Premier, the answer given did not sit well. Does your government plan to create a requirement for land reclamation on solar projects, or will they get a pass?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I mentioned in the answer there, the renewables will be a contract between the landowner and the proponent, and there is information given to landowners for that on how to do the proper contract. Reclamation will be part of that, and that is what I said at the time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Mental Health Services for Postsecondary Students

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My questions are for the Advanced Education minister. Many of our postsecondary institutions have critically needed mental health services on campus. This government has said that it's committed to funding mental health but failed to increase the mental health budget, which now is shared between 26 institutions in Alberta. It chose to maintain status quo funding of $3.6 million, and the minister called this, quote, a placeholder item. He promised to say more about this in the future. With the Council of Alberta University Students in the gallery can the minister tell us when and how we'll see postsecondary institutions with adequate, stable mental health funding?

The Speaker: The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I want to thank the hon. member for his good work in supporting mental health work here in the province of Alberta. Of course, on this side of the House we're concerned about providing mental health supports for students as well, and the member, quite rightly, points out that we committed $3.6 million. We also struck an advisory panel that is looking at how we can better provide mental health supports for students on campus. Our department is in the process of reviewing those recommendations, and once we've reviewed those recommendations, we will decide how those recommendations will be implemented and how the money will be spent.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, when you get down to it, this amounts to about $14 per student per year, which does not stretch very far. However, not all postsecondary institutions receive the same amount. Last year, for example, the U of A received $1 million and the University of Calgary, $900,000. This is now going to be distributed between 26 institutions across the province. Can the minister tell us how the money is going to be allocated?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again the member, quite rightly, points out some of the inequities in the system that was established under the previous government, and we're of course committed to fixing those as best we can. That was one of the tasks that the mental health panel was given, and of course we're looking at its recommendations for how to better support the mental health programs that exist on campuses across the province so that students, whether they're going to school in Edmonton or Lethbridge or any other communities, have access to the mental health supports they need when they need them. We'll be working on that, and we'll have more to say about that in the future.

Dr. Swann: Well, I would like to see a little clearer indication of when, Mr. Minister.

The 2016 national college health assessment indicated that nearly two-thirds of Canadian students have feelings of loneliness, 13 per cent have considered suicide, and 2 per cent have actually attempted suicide on our campuses. It's getting worse. In the case of campus mental health funding, decisions are not just numbers; we're dealing literally with life and death. Given that the mental health budget was not increased and there's no indication of future commitments to allow planning, will the minister tell us which campus services we're going to cut: proactive care or crisis counselling?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, I'm very concerned about providing mental health supports, just as the member is opposite and just as the people on this side of the House are. As I said before, we've committed $3.6 million to providing further mental health supports, and we're working with our colleagues in Alberta Health to continue to identify resources that are available to provide mental health supports to students on campus. What won't help mental health is the radical cuts that the members opposite want to make. That will only make students' lives worse, and of course that's not what we – we are here to support our students.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Public Transit Funding for Edmonton

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Families in Edmonton-Meadowlark have long been asking for improved access to public transit throughout our city. I also know that the Capital Region Board has identified funding of the valley line LRT as a priority. To the Minister of Transportation: can you provide the House with details of the government's commitment to Edmonton's valley line LRT?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Well, thanks very much, Mr. Speaker, and thanks very much for the question. Transit funding is important. It helps improve the quality of life of people. It supports safe, affordable, accessible, and environmentally sustainable transportation options for people. We're proud to support Edmonton's valley LRT line. We've committed $424 million in funding for the line, $275 million is under GreenTRIP, and $150 million in provincial matching funds for the federal new building Canada fund. We're committed to assisting both our major cities with their LRT systems and transit throughout the province.

2:10

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As residents in west Edmonton require access to amenities across our city and with young families making decisions about settling into our community, can the minister please provide timelines for when we might see shovels in the ground for the west leg of the valley line LRT?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Our government has announced funding related to design and planning related to LRT expansion. We're working with the city of Edmonton to get a better sense of how much provincial support may be sought to complete the next phase and when this funding might be required. I understand that the city of Edmonton is in the process of finalizing various aspects of their expansions and refining their project costs. We are committed to supporting Edmonton, Calgary, and all municipalities with their transit needs. This government is in favour of making sure that people have environmentally sustainable mobility for all of their needs.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that accessible public transit is critical to the growth and sustainability of our province, to the same minister: can you detail some of the other investments that you've made throughout the city to provide improved transportation options for our residents?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. We've committed $216 million in 2016-17 for other transit projects, $72 million for GreenTRIP, $144 million in federal contributions under PTIF – and that includes funding the Metro Line from NAIT to Blatchford – funding for preliminary design of an extension to the Capital Line, safety improvements, and numerous renewal projects for buses and LRT stations. Unlike those on the other side, who would like to cut capital budgets by $4 billion, we're committed to improving the lives of Albertans.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

A good transportation system so that they can get to the Bangladesh party.

Energy Policies

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, Albertans are waiting for the NDP to take credit for AIMCo's recent acquisition of Savanna Energy's debt. The government compromised AIMCo's independence by admitting that a loan given to oil service company Calfrac was, quote, part of the NDP's climate leadership scheme. Albertans are worried about how socialist this government will go. AIMCo invests on behalf of Albertans. Does this government not understand that politicizing AIMCo puts Albertans at risk and only drives private investment away?

Mr. Ceci: You know, nothing could be further from the truth, of course. Mr. Speaker, we are involved with normal communications with AIMCo and other agencies, boards, and commissions all the time. When they're public-facing communications, we try and make sure that we're on the same page, and that's what we did.

Investment in this province: this province gets the most private-sector investment of any province in Canada. That's not at risk. We're not driving anything away. In fact, our economy will grow 2.8 per cent this year, if you listen to the Conference Board of Canada, and will lead the nation again next year. We're doing fine here. Those folks don't help.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, we know that political staff have been bullying AIMCo workers when they talk to the media. Maybe ATB has some independence left. Given that ATB just released a report showing that energy exports and private investment are down across the province from January to February and given that they're calling this a disappointment, with oil prices ticking up and energy exports trending down, is the Premier ready to quit blaming low oil prices and admit that her bad ideas are holding back our recovery and dragging down our economy?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Ceci: You know, maybe I'll put some facts on the table. While Alberta's exports declined 3.9 per cent in February, they're still up sharply so far this year, 26 per cent, Mr. Speaker, and year over year 37 per cent. Alberta's exports are highly volatile – we all know that – and highly influenced by changes in exchange rates and commodity prices. We're going to be doing fine if just that side would support Alberta for once instead of looking east to Saskatchewan.

The Speaker: The second supplemental.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government doesn't know good energy policy from bad. The Premier even declared the federal Liberal budget good news for Albertans. Given that Trudeau's overhaul of the Canadian exploration expense credit is just another kick in the teeth for Alberta's industry and given that CAPP president Tim McMillan said that this sends a bad signal, putting us at a disadvantage, can the Premier explain why she's once again putting the interests of Justin Trudeau before the interests of struggling Alberta businesses and families?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, you know, mature and adult conversations with our cousins to the far east in Ottawa is the work we're going to do. The other side would rather throw stones. The other side would rather sue. They've done that before. We're not doing that. In tough times we've got Albertans' backs. The opposition would make sure that the oil and gas roller coaster continued, that the boom-and-bust cycle continued. We're diversifying this province. They want to go back to the 1950s. We're going forward to the 21st and 22nd centuries.

AIMCo Investments

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, recent news articles highlight this government's interference in the independent operations of AIMCo. Notable was the director of the infamous out-of-province issues managers directing AIMCo executives to call the authors of the original exposé. Then political staff ironically directed AIMCo to massage public messaging in press releases and talking points to counter impressions that AIMCo's independence was compromised. To the Minister of Finance: can you please explain to Albertans how meddling in AIMCo's operations by the Premier's office preserves their independence?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I've stood up and said that there is no meddling with regard to the independence of AIMCo. The president and CEO of AIMCo has said the same thing to people at the heritage trust committee. I don't know how much clearer we can be. I'm going to be meeting later this afternoon with the chair and the president of AIMCo because we work together. That's what's expected. Albertans want their Crown agencies to work closely with government to make sure we all work in the best interests of Albertans.

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, given that if AIMCo is truly independent, decisions and investments should not be guided by the NDP world view, nor should political credit be taken, and given that the interference highlighted in the articles indicates that the NDP tried to spin an AIMCo investment that was used for debt refinancing as somehow diversifying the economy and creating jobs, to the Premier: if AIMCo is indeed independent, why are you reannouncing their deals, spinning them for political gain, and treating AIMCo as your own green slush fund?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, as I said, I'll be meeting later this afternoon with the president and the chair of AIMCo. [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet, please.

Mr. Ceci: We continue to have discussions about everything, Mr. Speaker, not about investment decisions so much because that's their operations ability. You know, it's more about: do AIMCo and the government align? Are we aligned? With regard to normal communications with government and public-serving agencies, we are aligned.

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, given that that's aligned with the NDP world view and given that the articles note that the minister of economic development was fully aware that Calfrac had not signed off on government news releases and given that the minister's lack of due diligence caused the unnecessary confusion, prompting the Premier's office's demands for a briefing out no later than first thing tomorrow morning and direct involvement in drafting a press release blaming AIMCo for providing flawed guidance, to the minister of economic development. We all make mistakes. Why did you make AIMCo executives take blame for yours?

2:20

Mr. Ceci: I want to assure this House that I have great confidence in the people at AIMCo. I have great confidence in the independent decisions they are making on investments at AIMCo. They are doing a great job for Albertans and bringing money back to the treasury that we use to address the programs and services. That side would cut programs and services. That side would leave Albertans adrift, just like the Premier of Saskatchewan is leaving his citizens adrift.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

FOIP Request Process

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In a letter dated April 23, 2014, the NDP House leader demanded an investigation into FOIP processes. He accused partisan press secretaries of reviewing outgoing releases, adding that timely access to freedom of information is absolutely critical to a functioning democracy. To the Minister of Service Alberta: are partisan political staffers interfering with FOIP, and why are processing times increasing under your watch?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Ms McLean: Thank you for the question, Mr. Speaker. Even though the number of information requests from Executive Council has tripled since 2015, we have been making a lot of progress in these processing times. In fact, the Privacy Commissioner highlighted that processing times are down from 12 to 15 months to just three to six months. We are making concerted efforts and putting resources on this issue, resources that the opposition is asking us to cut. They would prefer that we do not take openness and transparency as our number one priority.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are watching this government. Given that there are dozens of rulings in 2017 alone where the NDP government has been found guilty of violating FOIP laws and given that every time Wildrose has raised this issue with the Minister of Service Alberta, she has either flat out dismissed this as a problem or devolved into absolutely absurd personal attacks, telling members to either read a book or read about it, to the Premier: will Albertans wait to have a 2019 government that will bring forward transparency, accountability ...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Minister of Service Alberta.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I take openness and transparency very seriously. That is why our government has been proactive in posting all of our employees' salaries in ministers' offices and the Premier's office, something that the Conservatives did not do. We posted all sole-source contracts over $10,000 online, something the prior government didn't do. I won't be lectured on transparency by the Conservatives, who are known for their backroom dealing. [interjections]

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Keep it positive, folks.

Mr. Cyr: What I'd like are the FOIPs I requested.

Given that today the Wildrose caucus made a firm commitment to transparency in government by presenting a 10-point plan to address FOIP and given that this system according to the Privacy Commissioner is broken and needs serious and immediate attention, will the Premier ensure that her cabinet is doing its job and following the Wildrose's lead and implementing our 10-point plan and addressing the FOIP problems that are currently facing Alberta? [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, please.

Ms McLean: Mr. Speaker, I find it absolutely rich, coming from the opposition, that they would refer to questions they've asked me around FOIP when they have failed to actually ask me what I am doing about FOIP. I am happy to report that a number of the recommendations that the opposition has proposed are already in place and already being enacted, so I'm surprised they didn't do their due diligence.

I am also happy to report that on March 30, 2017, we received a letter from Jill Clayton, the Information and Privacy Commissioner, stating, "As I commented publicly, I am pleased by the initial steps taken ..."

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Unharvested 2016 Crops

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Many farmers in northern Alberta are facing a major decision, continuing to try to harvest last year's crop or destroying it so that they can get this year's crop in the ground. With mainly cereal crops in our area remaining, many farmers are finding crops contaminated with dead mice and deer feces, making even salvageable grain unusable. To the minister: what options are available through AFSC to declare these crops 100 per cent lost so that farmers can get on with it and get the 2017 crop in the ground and avoid another lost season?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. He's absolutely right. It's true that 90 per cent of the crops from last year are in the bin, but it's that 10 per cent that we are concerned with. I'm very proud of the public servants in AFSC for the good work they've done in being able to process those claims. The vast majority have been processed.

But that's only one side, Mr. Speaker. Those farmers, you know, get some support and financial support, but what they really want to do is put that seed in the ground and grow the crops for all Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that AFSC estimates that there are 975,000 acres of cropland still to be harvested and given that that doesn't take into consideration uninsured crops and given that that is roughly 6,100 quarter sections of land to be monitored by AFSC over the next four weeks, to the minister: how much manpower does AFSC have on the ground, and will farmers be held ransom waiting for an agent to declare their crops usable or a 100 per cent writeoff?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. I've been assured by AFSC that all their manpower is concentrating on the claims that are out there now. They've been doing a great job. There are only four claims that are still outstanding. I think you would agree that there have been great strides in that. I want to encourage all producers out there that before they pick any of the options that they have to get rid of the crops that are there now, they first contact their AFSC office or perhaps phone 310.FARM.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hanson: I must have gotten lucky because one phone call found me a person that hadn't been approached by AFSC yet.

Given that there are close to 1 million acres of cropland that may have to be burned off to allow access for the 2017 growing season and given that most municipalities rely on volunteer fire departments, that could be stretched to their limits covering fires across vast areas of cropland, to the minister: is there a plan in place to assist municipalities in co-ordinating and financing in the event that any of these fires get out of control, or am I just fearmongering?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, the member has talked about burning off those crops. That is only one option that could be available. We've already heard in this House and in the media that there are some counties that don't even allow burning. So it is options. Again, I encourage all producers out there to make sure they contact their AFSC office before they implement any of the options that are available to them and continue to do so. Again, I want to repeat that number they can phone, 310.FARM.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mental Health Services for Postsecondary Students (continued)

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In January 2013 the previous government committed $3 million over three years to university mental health initiatives across Alberta, and in 2014 this funding was extended to two more universities. This funding was set to expire in June 2016, and I applaud the minister for continuing the great work into this year. However, we've heard from students and postsecondary institutional leaders that they're concerned about long-term funding. To the minister: when will we see a renewed multiyear commitment to postsecondary mental health initiatives?

The Speaker: The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad to talk about the supports that our government is going to provide for students' mental health programs on campuses. The member quite rightly points out that we've committed $3.6 million. In my answer to the previous questions on this matter I also highlighted the fact that we're working with our colleagues at Health to identify more resources and supports that we can provide to students.

What won't help students is cutting $600 million from the budget of Advanced Education like the members opposite are proposing to do in their draft budget.

2:30

Mr. Rodney: Given that the students deserve answers as to when so they can plan and given that mental health issues are not issues that are exclusive to university campuses only despite the focus that these institutions receive and given that students at vocational schools, technical institutions, and colleges are also affected by the same stresses which impact the mental health of university students, again to the minister: what specific initiatives are you undertaking to expand on-campus mental health programs outside the university setting?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The mental health advisory panel that we struck has made its recommendations. They were given the task of looking at mental health supports not just on university campuses but on the campuses of all of our colleges and technical institutes as well. I look forward to reviewing those recommendations and implementing them.

Again, I think that the member opposite, when he's speaking to students, should tell them what impact the $600 million that they want to cut from Advanced Education budgets would have on mental health supports that are already existing.

Mr. Rodney: Given that although on-campus mental health supports have been increasing over the past four years and that when students experiencing mental health issues graduate from postsecondary, these issues do not magically disappear and given that we continue to hear that the transition away from campus-based mental health programs and supports can be very traumatic for those students who have come to rely on those resources, to the minister: what work are you doing with the Minister of Health to bridge the gap in services that can occur as students graduate from postsecondary?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the member raises an important issue with transitioning from a postsecondary world into the world of work. Our government is committed to supporting students in all of the difficulties that they face in making the transition, including supports for mental health. As I told the member in my previous answer, the mental health advisory panel has submitted its recommendations to the department, and in full course we will review those and implement them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

London Road Gateway Housing Project in Lethbridge

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Lethbridge Housing Authority has a long wait-list for affordable housing. Budget 2017 included funding for the London Road Gateway affordable housing project. Given that the city of Lethbridge has been waiting for this announcement for nearly seven years, can the minister tell us how this project was chosen and how many Lethbridge families will this move off the wait-list?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're pleased to follow through with our commitment to invest $1.2 billion over five years for affordable housing in this province. In Budget 2017 our capital plan reinforced this investment for building housing units and renovating existing ones, making life better for all Albertans. I understand that Lethbridge had experienced a strong demand for affordable housing, and that's why I'm pleased to say that the London Road Gateway project is approved to proceed and, once complete, will offer 14 new affordable housing units for the Lethbridge community.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the project has been on the city's radar for so long, can the minister tell us when the construction of the project is expected to start and when we can expect completion of the project?

Ms Sigurdson: The London Road Gateway project is expected to begin construction this year. The building will be complete and ready to move into by the fall of 2018. This project will provide more affordable housing for Lethbridge residents, and we're pleased to work with the Lethbridge Housing Authority and the city of Lethbridge to make this happen. Our government is protecting and improving the things that make a difference in the lives of Albertans, like having a safe and affordable place to call home.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that those living with disabilities often have a difficult time finding accessible and affordable housing and they deserve to live with dignity and with access to green space like everyone else, can the minister tell the Chamber how the London Road Gateway project will be accessible for those living with disabilities?

Ms Sigurdson: The London Road Gateway project will have three barrier-free studios that will be suitable for residents living with disabilities. The location is close to downtown, close to public transit, and close to the regional hospital. The project will also be built to LEED platinum requirements for energy efficiency, with larger windows for natural light and good air quality. As an infill project the London Road Gateway will be designed to fit within the character of the community, and I look forward to its completion.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Provincial Debt

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently the Premier has taken the tack of going after Saskatchewan for their budget. Let's look closer to home, shall we? The NDP will amass over $70 billion in debt in four short years. The recurring cost to Albertans in order to service that debt will be over $2 billion, which, incidentally, works out to a burden of over $1,200 added to every household in Alberta each year. To the Premier: does she not recognize that adding debt is tantamount to piling taxes onto the backs of future Albertans?

Mr. Ceci: You know, in tough economic times this government has the backs of Albertans so that we can get through this recession and into positive growth. The Saskatchewan budget was brought up. Should I just remind people that the Saskatchewan budget had huge tax increases on everything from children's clothing to construction, Mr. Speaker? We've kept taxes flat this year. We did not raise taxes. We are bringing in support for Albertans in every respect. You know, in Saskatchewan they had massive cuts to education, health care, and hundreds of millions of dollars are gone from their economy.

Mr. Hunter: A levy is a tax.

Given that some fairly competent bean counters told me that it will take a generation to pay off this government's reckless four-year spending spree and given that I have talked to university students who are happy about the government freezing their tuition but fear that jobs when they get out of school will not be there, to the Premier: what will those students think when they realize that it was you who sold their future by indenturing them to a staggering provincial debt with no jobs to help pay it off?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, this side cares about Albertans, both current Albertans and in the future, and what their lives are going to be like. We're prudently and thoughtfully taking down the deficit as we go forward but will not throw Albertans under the bus like that side would. I want you to know that the Conference Board of Canada said that the budget for Saskatchewan won't be stimulative to that province. We are doing things that stimulate our economy. Saskatchewan is doing the opposite thing, and they're going to suffer for it.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, given that the Premier says, quote, you're living in a fantasyland for believing you can balance the books without impacting front-line services or hiking taxes, end quote, every time any of the opposition parties propose cost-cutting measures for the NDP to get their spending under control, can the Premier square the circle and help Albertans understand the NDP world view on how the budget will balance by 2024? Or do budgets balance themselves, as her new BFF in Ottawa believes?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I said, we're thoughtfully working with Albertans and bringing the programs and services forward that they require. They require good health care. They require good education. We are doing everything in our power to make sure those are solid so that our economy continues to fire on all cylinders. Investment is coming back to this province. We have the highest weekly wage earnings of any province. Things are pretty good here. I just wish they would notice it and be cheerleaders for Alberta instead of Saskatchewan.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Age Discrimination and the Human Rights Act

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A January court ruling directing the province to include age in the Alberta Human Rights Act as prohibited grounds for discrimination could have repercussions for the population it is meant to protect unless the province takes action. Recognizing this, the court has given the province one year to deal with the unanticipated issues. Minister, how and when will you consult with Albertans about these upcoming legislative changes?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the very important question. As he quite rightly notes, there was a lawsuit filed, and the province agreed to include age in the legislation. We asked for some time to determine what the ramifications would be for a number of industries, including the insurance industry, and to determine, you know, what the impact might be on things like affordable housing projects designed specifically for seniors. When we have finished that analysis, we will have more to say.

Mr. Gill: Given that in Ontario age is already prohibited grounds for discrimination and, as a result, adults-only housing is no longer available in that province and given that the Alberta court ruling was prompted by a seniors' advocacy group which benefits the most from options for age-restricted accommodations, to the minister: what is Alberta's plan for dealing with the legal quandary of residents currently living in adults-only housing complexes?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the member quite rightly points out, there are concerns around the inclusion of age and adults-only buildings, particularly those that are aimed at vulnerable senior populations. You know, we will be working forward to consult with those groups. That is why we asked for that year, to take those things under advisement and to make sure that we're continuing to protect those populations.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the judge provided the province with a one-year delay in complying with the court ruling to allow the government time to introduce exemptions for unforeseen consequences and given that prohibiting age-restricted condominiums is one of those unforeseen circumstances, Minister, is your ministry considering exemptions that will continue to let Albertans choose adults-only housing or, at the very least, grandfather in the existing ones?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Once again, a very important question. This is, of course, one of the issues that we are working on considering. Going forward, we will be speaking to Albertans on this issue, and we will be ensuring that we are able to protect the private decisions of individuals in terms of where they live as well as buildings that may be specifically targeted at populations who may otherwise be vulnerable. Once again I'd like to thank the member for the important question.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 30 seconds we'll go to Members' Statements.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-East.

Refugee Rights

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today is Refugee Rights Day. In Canada Refugee Rights Day marks the anniversary of what is known as the Singh decision. In its 1985 decision the Supreme Court found that the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms protected the fundamental rights of refugee claimants. The court decided that the term "everyone" in the Human Rights Act included refugee claimants. The decision marked an important moment for refugee protection in Canada and provided the right of refugee claimants to have an oral hearing.

I meet refugees nearly every day in my job, some who are brand new to Canada and some who have been here for decades. What I think is important to remember about refugees is that they did not come to Canada by choice. They came here because they were fleeing war, violence, or persecution for religious or political reasons. They came here because to stay in their home country could have meant death.

I want to take the time today to address two incorrect perceptions that I often hear from Albertans, too often. The first is some version of the story that refugees in Canada are entitled to more resources than Canadian pensioners. This is false. Government-sponsored refugees receive a one-time settlement allowance, around $1,800, then approximately $700 a month for a year. A privately sponsored refugee gets nothing.

The second concern that I hear from Albertans is that refugees will continue to live off the system indefinitely, taking resources away from working Canadians. This is also false as within a year of coming to Canada, 80 per cent of adult refugees are working full-time. This is comparable to the nonrefugee population. If you take into account that the folks often have to take English classes, upgrade workplace skills, and pay back transportation loans, that statistic becomes even more impressive. I trust that all members of this House do everything that they can to dispel these inaccurate facts when they hear them.

Refugee rights are under attack around the world. While Canada is a leader in protecting the rights of refugees, we cannot take our support for refugees for granted. Racist, xenophobic, and Islamophobic messages surround us daily. It's imperative we call out these acts when we see them.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Battle River-Wainwright Constituency Events

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was a great weekend in Battle River-Wainwright. It was victorious for both the village of Irma and the Wainwright junior B Bisons hockey team. Because of the hard work and determined people in these communities, that's why we had such a great week.

First, I would like to acknowledge the committee, the village of Irma, and all who played a part in working tirelessly to put together a reasoned, responsible argument that ensured that the school of Irma met the criteria for a new school build. On Saturday the Irma school gymnasium expansion fundraiser was held, and I was honoured to have been part of that. The motto was Bigger is Better, and boy, from a town of 521 people they went big. About 450 people attended that fundraiser, that included a live band, a scrumptious banquet, a live and silent auction. By the end of the evening they had raised $212,000. That's big and impressive.

Another victory this past Sunday was for the Wainwright junior B Bisons. They also went big. The Wainwright junior B Bisons had their sights set on a provincial gold medal, and they met their ultimate goal, winning the gold medal in St. Paul on Sunday, April 2. During this gold medal game against the Cochrane Generals the two teams played a highly competitive and clean game. Schubada opened the scoring for the Bisons and got the Bisons out in front early. The Generals took the lead near the midway point of the period; however, McKinley would tie it back up in the final minute of the first period. At the end of the third period: tied at four. In the overtime period Mackay scored the final goal of the tournament to win the Bisons their first-ever provincial gold medal.

So to those who worked tirelessly for our new Irma school and to the parents and the coaches of the junior B Bisons, they're the real winners, not just because of how well they did but because of the hard work and determination that got them there.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I think there might be an opportunity for a good poem there as well.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Bill 6 Northland School Division Act

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to acknowledge that of course we are on the traditional territory of Treaty 6 as I rise today with great privilege to introduce the first reading of Bill 6, the Northland School Division Act.

This legislation will set us on a path to restoring a democratically elected board of trustees in Northland school division. Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of the House I would like to inform you that the division provides education to approximately 2,700 students in 23 schools spread across the northern half of our province. Ninety-five per cent of the students learning in Northland are First Nations or Métis, and the division has been without an elected board since 2010. We are changing that and taking an important step to improve student learning, attendance, and supports in the region.

I am joined in the Legislature today by Northland community leaders who helped to develop the important bill through an ongoing engagement process with some of my ministry officials who worked very hard over the last number of months and years to get the job done. I could not be more proud of our government for stepping up to improve education for our students in this unique region and for making life better for Albertans in the process.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 6 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

2:50 Bill Pr. 1 Calgary Jewish Centre Amendment Act, 2017

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being Bill Pr. 1, Calgary Jewish Centre Amendment Act, 2017.

I would like to table the bill as well.

[Motion carried; Bill Pr. 1 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Bill Pr. 2 Paula Jean Anderson Adoption Termination Act

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being Bill Pr. 2, Paula Jean Anderson Adoption Termination Act.

[Motion carried; Bill Pr. 2 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the privilege of tabling a letter I wrote to the Government House Leader on the 9th of March, 2017. It is from the current Premier, who was actually making a tabling on behalf of the now Government House Leader, where she tabled “copies of a memo from the acting manager . . . of the Public Affairs Bureau to bureau staff directing them to use overtly political messaging in all the supposedly nonpartisan government communications they produce.” This is a tabling of a tabling.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of a WCB advocate in Calgary I would like to table the requisite five copies of a document entitled Principles of Administrative Law, Jones and de Villars, fifth edition, Carswell, 2009.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’ve got two tablings. The first one is a letter that I had mentioned in question period from the hon. Minister of Transportation back when he was in opposition dated April 23, 2014, that refers to the Alberta government at the time possibly violating section 10(1) and section 11(1) of the FOIP Act.

The second tabling is the new 10-point plan that Wildrose has created and authored, which is working to fix the FOIP process.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I stand to table five copies of an article, referenced in question period today, in the Financial Post by Kevin Libin dated March 27, 2017, entitled Emails Show Rachel Notley’s NDP Meddling Further in the Running of Alberta’s Heritage Fund.

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order noted.

Hon. members, I am tabling five copies of a memo from the Clerk to the Member for Calgary-Hays concerning the receipt of $500 in conjunction with the passing of Government Motion 16.

I believe we have two points of order today. The first one was by the Opposition House Leader.

Point of Order Allegations against a Member

Mr. Cooper: Well, I thank you, Mr. Speaker. It’s a pleasure to rise today and speak to a point of order. Just for the Government House Leader’s reference and for yours I’ll be speaking specifically about Standing Order 23(h) and (i). At approximately 1:54 during question period today the Premier made an allegation against another member and she may have also imputed false motives to a member of the Assembly when she either said – well, I might add that I’m without the benefit of the Blues, Mr. Speaker – that “the member is misleading this House” or that “he’s misleading this House,” referring specifically to the Leader of the Official Opposition when he had just previously asked a question.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it wasn’t that long ago inside the Chamber when we had a fairly robust discussion around whether the word “misleading” was inappropriate use of language inside the Chamber, and I made a case that certainly it was. I laid out a number of Speakers’ rulings, and subsequently you didn’t entirely see the world as I did with respect to the use of the word “misleading.” On March 16 you ruled that the Energy minister wasn’t out of order when she said that the Official Opposition was misleading the House, but you went on to say in your ruling that if she had cited an individual – in fact, it says:

In the instance before the Assembly now, the same observation made by my predecessors [is] also . . . made here [today], which was this broad use of the word.

The Minister of Energy referenced the opposition and not a member in her response to the question.

Now, today we saw a very different circumstance. While I don't entirely see the world exactly as you, because I think it could lead to some abuse of the word "misleading" inside the Chamber, the Premier clearly has said that this member is "misleading this House." She has made allegations about what the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition was or wasn't doing, and I think it would be very reasonable and prudent for her to withdraw and apologize so that we can all move on with the estimates of the day.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to make a few comments with respect to this matter. Now, during question period today the Leader of the Official Opposition asked the Premier and made an allegation that the number of FTEs in Executive Council had increased by eight staff. The Premier responded that that was not true, that it had been discussed in the estimates, and that the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition knew it was not true.

I've got the Hansard Blues here from the Executive Council estimates last night, and it quotes the Leader of the Official Opposition saying:

Madam Premier, I'm also wondering, according to your fiscal plan it shows that you're estimating an additional eight staff for Executive Council. I have a few questions . . . if you don't mind. I'm wondering if you could tell what positions those are, what vacancies they're going to fill, how they affect the budget obviously.

It goes on, but these are the main questions.

The Premier responded that the number effectively – she says:

In fact, if you go back to estimates, and neither of us were here for obvious reasons . . .

She's referring to the previous year.

. . . in the last time that we had estimates, but at that estimates the Deputy Premier reported to your House leader that in fact the number effectively should have been 179 not 178 because the budget was printed as we were adding an FTE.

So the Leader of the Official Opposition says:

So seven instead of eight new employees?

The Premier says:

That's right, right there. So that was what happened there, and then in my office we've been doing some reorganizing. What has happened this time around is that we ended up reporting both the outcome of that reorganizing as well as the vacancies that have existed for a while that it is not our intention to fill. So it's not actually seven new positions. It's three new positions.

The Leader of the Official Opposition says:

Thank you, Premier.

And the Premier goes on to say:

And the other four will not be filled.

3:00

So, Mr. Speaker, it's clear from the record that during estimates the Leader of the Official Opposition asked about the number of positions in Executive Council, that the Premier provided the information, and that the hon. Official Opposition leader knew that there were not eight new positions. That was clarified and made very clear last night by the Premier. That's what the Premier was referring to, that she had discussed this with the Leader of the Opposition in estimates and that she had made it clear that there were not eight new positions. Yet that was what he was doing, repeating that number, that allegation, which he knew was not the case, in the House. The Premier then accused the member of misleading the House.

Mr. Speaker, it is my submission that the Leader of the Official Opposition did in fact provide information to the House that he knew not to be true, and that gave direct rise to the Premier's response. I know the rules of this place, more or less, after all the years that I've been here, and I am aware that misleading the House is a serious offence which requires a motion of privilege to be brought at the earliest opportunity against the member who may have misled the House. That is not my intention at this time. In not doing so, I also understand that the rules of this House are that one ought not accuse a member of misleading the House unless you're prepared to bring a point of privilege, but I don't believe there's any benefit to doing that at this point.

I believe that we've set the record straight. The Premier made a true statement; however, that statement is contrary to the rules. Therefore, on behalf of the hon. Premier I will apologize and withdraw her true statement.

The Speaker: Thank you, I think.

Mr. McIver: I thank the Government House Leader. He leaves out a couple of things, the possibility that the Leader of the Official Opposition may not have believed the answer that he got from the Premier last night or indeed believed that she was mistaken, but Beauchesne's section . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, the hon. Government House Leader has withdrawn the comment, and I've accepted that. I think the matter is closed.

I think we had a second point of order by the Government House Leader.

Point of Order

Referring to a Member by Name

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A timely reminder to the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek that one ought not use names even if one is reading from a document one is tabling.

The Speaker: Hon. member, that point was raised on both sides of the House today where names were used. I would remind all of the House to reinforce the statement made by the Government House Leader. It's not on one or the other; it is both.

Hon. members, the daily Routine is now concluded. Pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(5)(b) the House stands adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at 1:30.

The legislative policy committees will convene this afternoon and tomorrow morning for consideration of the main estimates. This afternoon Families and Communities will consider the estimates for Justice and Solicitor General in the Rocky Mountain Room. Tomorrow morning Resource Stewardship will consider the estimates for Environment and Parks in the Rocky Mountain Room, and Alberta's Economic Future will consider the estimates for Advanced Education in the Parkland Room.

[The Assembly adjourned at 3:05 p.m. pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(5)(b)]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray or reflect, each in our own way. Let us share a sense of pride for the work we do, particularly when we reach unanimous agreements in this Assembly. Let us acknowledge our responsibilities and our commitment to the communities we represent, to our province, and to our nation.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly the parents, staff, and students of C.W. Perry. This is the second of three groups from this school. There are almost 600 grade 6 students in the school. As I mentioned earlier, Airdrie is the fifth-largest school district in the province, just outside of Edmonton and Calgary, and we grow at an annual rate of about 5 per cent, which is about two schools every year needed to keep up with growth. I just should point out that we only got one in this year's budget. I would like to introduce first the teachers and then the parents. Please rise as I call your name: Ms Tracey Bishop, Mr. Steven Prediger, Mr. Carlin Olynky, Mrs. Heather Nikkel, Mrs. Regina Dollimount, Jonathan Wiersma, Miranda Harbourne. Will the students rise as well. Please receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am really thrilled today to introduce to you and through you Ridgeview central school students. These are truly an amazing group of young people. They travelled on the bus eight hours from La Crête to get here, and not one of them said: are we there yet? I would like to introduce Mr. Fred Kirby, Lana Halladay, Chris Fehr, Dorothy Unrau, Barry Neufeld, Andrew Doerksen, Willy Schellenberg, Willie Friesen, and a special mention to Henry Harder – he's the bus driver, and he's back at the hotel, resting up for the return home – and the rest of the class from Ridgeview school. Please stand and accept the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there any other school groups, hon. members?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly constituents of mine who are also family members of one of our current pages, Jordyn Reed. Seated in the Speaker's gallery are Tracey and Kelly Neufeld, Jordyn's parents, as well as her younger sister Kaeleigh. Tracey is a lab technician at J. Percy Page, and Kelly is an architectural technologist, who has designed many homes in and around Edmonton. Kaeleigh is interested in learning more about what Jordyn does here as a page, and they are here in the Speaker's gallery today to watch Jordyn in her role, a position she has held since the autumn of 2015. I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome. Welcome to you. We're particularly proud, all of us collectively, of the work that the pages do every day in this place. They're much more rational and competent than me. [interjection] I won't say anything else about the other members here in the House.

The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly two constituents of mine who are also here to watch Jordyn Reed in her role as a page. Sue and Rudy Neufeld, Jordyn's grandparents, are both retired. They enjoy skiing, square dancing, and travelling. Sue and Rudy are seated in the Speaker's gallery with Jordyn's other family members, and I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome, and thank you.

The Minister of Infrastructure and of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two people who have been instrumental in providing services to my constituents in Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood presents some very, very difficult cases from time to time.

Mr. Cooper: That's just you.

Mr. Mason: Besides me.

Both of these staff people have done an outstanding job. Donna Forbes is a part-time constituency assistant in my office. She is just completing her master's of social work degree at the University of Calgary and previously worked for six years in the Victoria, B.C., constituency offices of MLA Carole James and MP Denise Savoie.

Kali Gregg is studying social work at MacEwan University and has been a practicum student in my office since last September. She'll be going on to work on her bachelor's degree in social work this fall, and we all wish her the very best in her future pursuits.

I would ask them to please rise now and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome. You must be very patient people.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an absolute privilege today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this House two of my favourite people in the world: my beautiful mother, Lorraine McQuiggin, and my oldest son, Allan. I'm so excited that you're here with us today. My mom has just recently retired, so it's such an honour to have her join us. My son is a fourth-year generation insulator who's also an alumni of NAIT. Thank you both for all of your love and support. I would not be here without you.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Kelly Lynn Spafford, program manager for the community action for healthy relationships network. She is also an indefatigable community volunteer and a real asset to Athabasca and area. I would ask that she now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Tim Shum and Mr. Andrew Shum. Tim is a member of the Alberta public service, and Andrew is a registered nurse working for AHS. Tim and Andrew – if they may rise – are celebrating their adult interdependent partnership today. My new friends have chosen us to celebrate their day with. Please join me in giving Tim and Andrew the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly and a hearty congratulations on their new life together.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

Olds College Gala

Mr. Strankman: Recently it was my privilege to attend along with many of my Wildrose colleagues the Olds College gala. Every year members of our caucus proudly support this worthy agricultural event. One of the highlights of this gala is the live auction of a steer, cut and wrapped through the meat-cutting course offered by Olds College. My colleagues and I were fortunate enough to pool our resources together, winning the bid. We enjoyed our opportunity immensely.

The absolute peak of this evening had to be the generous donation of $16 million by Alberta entrepreneur, oil field industry leader, and dedicated philanthropist David P. Werklund and his partner, Sue Norman. This gift is historically unprecedented and is the largest ever personal donation to an Alberta college or technical institution. Their generosity begins with an initial $2 million cash donation, followed up by $4 million in a matching component. Finally, in order to ensure this great institution's sustainability, he has provided for $10 million as a gift from his estate. This donation will result in the creation of the Werklund agriculture institute, which will specialize in smart agriculture. This institute will engage students, researchers, and industry in smart and sustainable agriculture and agribusiness solutions.

Mr. Speaker, David Werklund is known on this side of the Chamber. David grew up in the same area as my colleague from Grande Prairie-Smoky. In fact, my colleague's family owns and operates farmland in the area David grew up in. David's ties to agriculture and the energy sector span many years and stretch across all of our beautiful province. In fact, his cousin farms just down the road from my farm.

I tried unsuccessfully to convince David and Sue to attend here today so that we could formally recognize and acknowledge this significant act of generosity, but true to form they quietly declined with a smile.

Government Achievements

Mr. Shepherd: Mr. Speaker, I'm proud to serve with a government that keeps its promises. In two years we've fulfilled 73 per cent of our 2015 election platform, with another 15 per cent in process: a royalty review within six months, with implementation in a year, leading to a 50 per cent increase in rig activity; increasing the minimum wage to $15 an hour by 2018; working to diversify our economy; banning corporate and union donations to political parties; extending the sunshine list to agencies, boards, and commissions; reversing cuts to health care, education, and children's support services; providing stable, predictable funding for health services, school boards, postsecondaries, and municipalities; repairing hospitals and seniors' facilities across Alberta; eliminating fee increases proposed by the third party, including a regressive health care levy; returning Alberta to a reasonable, progressive tax system.

We're funding schools for enrolment and building new ones where they're needed, not for political gain; freezing tuition; restoring the summer temporary employment program; reducing school fees for essential services and transportation; phasing in targeted school lunch programs for elementary students; investing in child care capped at $25 a day; improving the Alberta family employment tax credit and introducing the Alberta child benefit; creating a Ministry of Status of Women; reviewing employment standards to support family-friendly workplaces; creating more spaces in women's shelters.

We're also leading on climate change by crafting solutions with stakeholders, other provinces, and the federal government; phasing out coal-fired electricity; establishing an energy efficiency strategy and green retrofit program; protecting the Castle wildlife area; repealing the Aboriginal Consultation Levy Act; working with federal and indigenous governments to resolve land claims; ensuring that indigenous communities have access to safe, clean drinking water; improving representation of indigenous culture and history in our schools.

Meanwhile our opposition promises to cut billions out of infrastructure and public services, repeal the carbon levy that enabled crucial pipeline access to tidewater, and break both the letter and the spirit of legislation protecting LGBTQ students.

Mr. Speaker, I think I'll stand with our promises and our commitment to make life better for Albertans.

Government Policies

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, a segue to reality. Let me set the scene. A cold December in 2018 at the end of another long hard year, a cat is meowing in the background, and the family is gathered, fretting over the overdraft on their bank statement, their maxed-out credit card bill, and a foreclosure letter on their home of 23 years. Mother Raquel, a coal industry administrator, has been unemployed for over two years, and the family has been surviving on Father Joseph's modest salary of $45,000. Even with sacrifices and austerity household expenses for the family of five exceed $55,000 per year, and the kids have had to give up hockey, ringette, and dance. EI has run out, RRSPs are spent, RESPs are cashed in, and there is little equity left in the house. Normalcy has left this once vibrant home. The family is buried in unserviceable debt, and utilities have been cut off twice due to unpaid bills.

Then the phone rings. The caller ID says it's from Ontario.

"This is Ecofitt. I'm calling to inform you that we will be installing your free light bulbs next week."

"Free light bulbs? Well, that sounds interesting, but we won't be here."

"Well, that's unfortunate. Can we book another time?"

"We won't be here. We are facing eviction and bankruptcy. We will likely be at a shelter or maybe moving back to Saskatchewan, where we hope to find work and start over. We just can't survive here any longer with our expenses exceeding our income. We can't even afford to pay the interest anymore. We never thought it would come to this."

"So you won't be needing light bulbs and thermostats?"

"You're not listening to me. We won't have any lamps or even a furnace, let alone a home. They're of no use to me if I can't afford a roof over my head. They're of no use to me when I have to use my credit card to put food on the table. They're of no use to us when we can't even support our family."

Mr. Speaker, these are the stories we hear every day as a result of the decimation of the Alberta advantage.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Family and Gender-based Violence

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm proud to be part of a government that works hard to make life better for all Albertans. Recently we passed legislation that helps to address family violence by making it easier for victims to get out of leases to remove themselves from dangerous situations. This session we've also brought forward Bill 2. If passed, this bill would remove barriers for victims of domestic and sexual violence who want to pursue civil action.

So much of this work in combating family violence would not be possible without the expertise and dedication of nonprofit agencies. In Athabasca and surrounding regions the Athabasca and Area Prevention of Relationship Abuse Action Committee and their partners, Healthy Families Healthy Futures and Community Action for Healthy Relationships, play an absolutely critical role in this. These organizations have been essential in our community, providing support services to people struggling with relationship abuse, family violence, and gender-based violence. Their expertise is particularly valuable in rural areas, where it can be difficult to access these services and where there is a high demand.

Not only do these organizations provide outstanding front-line supports, but they contribute to the community through outreach and education. The events they hold to raise funds also raise awareness. I myself have been pleased, though it might be a strong word, to participate in the Walk a Mile in Her Shoes event in Athabasca, held annually. I was also honoured to be a sponsor and attend the first production ever of The Vagina Monologues in Athabasca, with all proceeds going to this organization. This was a spectacularly successful volunteer production and a complete sellout.

Our government is proud to support organizations such as these with stable grant funding. Unfortunately, despite the great work being done to address family violence and gender-based violence in our communities, it remains an ongoing and grave issue, and we will continue to work with them to make life better for those at risk from such violence.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Samuel W. Shaw Middle School

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Like all MLAs, I carry a strong amount of pride for all the schools in my riding, but I've been amazed by the work I have seen from a particular one, Samuel W. Shaw middle school.

Last fall I had the opportunity to attend the opening ceremonies of the 2016 Junior High Leadership Conference. With the theme Spark: Ignite. Kindle. Catch Fire, the school held a successful conference for over 500 student delegates and teacher advisers from all over the province. Congratulations to student executive directors Jim Qi, Jasper Hollings, McKenna Olson, Alex Sinik, Lianna Dennis, Anna Hambrook, and Christine Changoor, who helped bring this conference to a CBE school for the first time. A strong credit also needs to be given to the leadership group at Samuel Shaw school as it is no small feat to host such a large event.

Mr. Speaker, while I was leaving, I was proud to see a poster for its inaugural GSA, showing the strong leadership that the school has demonstrated.

Not to be outdone, last month Samuel Shaw held another successful drive through its Shave Your Lid for a Kid, that united people from all around the community, not just the school. Students and teachers shaved their heads, many inspired by people in their lives impacted by cancer, including Heather Farrell, who shaved her head in memory of a student who passed away two years ago. When it was all said and done, Samuel Shaw raised just over $19,000 towards Kids Cancer Care. Thank you to teacher Phill Noel, who enthusiastically put on this event.

Mr. Speaker, as I have said, I am proud of Samuel Shaw middle school in Calgary-Shaw as just one example of the goodwill of my constituents, who are, like this government, working to make life better for Albertans.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Labour Legislation Review

Mr. Jean: Yesterday I asked the Premier questions about the labour legislation review. Her answers were anything but forthcoming and certainly didn't provide comfort to concerned workers and business owners who are facing so much uncertainty in Alberta right now. Our economy is already hurting, and we've seen enough strife in the labour movement here. All signs point to the NDP hoping for more unionization as a result of this review. Does the Premier seriously think that more unionization will encourage investment and jobs in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms. Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I can certainly understand why people in Alberta would be concerned about issues of uncertainty given that the member opposite can't take a position or keep a position for more than three or four hours at a time. However, on this side we know exactly what we're doing, and what we are doing is engaging in a consultation on employment standards, family-friendly employment standards levels and labour legislation review, something that hasn't been reviewed since Roger Rabbit was in the theatres. What we are doing is moving forward to engage in a meaningful consultation . . .

An Hon. Member: Time.

Ms. Notley: . . . to modernize our labour legislation to actually . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Just to the House, remember that the time – I really rely on these people. They tell me when it's time, so there is no need to mention "time." It's being looked after here.

Mr. Jean: Albertans want stability on the jobs front, not more uncertainty.

Yesterday the Premier said that she'll look at other provinces and – what? – she'll pick from them her favourite labour practices to put in place here in Alberta. Well, that clearly opens the door for the elimination of secret ballot votes for union certification in favour of a union-friendly card-check process. Removing secret ballots would eliminate the workers' right to anonymously vote on whether to unionize away from union leader pressure. The Premier needs to be clear. Is she intending to do away with the secret ballot for certification? Yes or no?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, I did in fact answer this question yesterday, but I can understand that the member opposite might, because of his own experience, think that it's important to check positions every day to see if we still have the same position. But I will say that I still have the same position, and that position is that we are consulting with Albertans on this issue. We will review the outcome of that consultation, and then we will have a discussion on how we proceed to go forward in this Legislature if that should be the plan.

Mr. Jean: When she looks at labour legislation in other provinces, I hope the Premier realizes that half the country has already rejected card check in favour of secret ballots.

She could however learn from our neighbours on how to properly consult on these changes. After Bill 6, I think, she could use a lesson. In 2014 Ontario began reviewing labour legislation. Guess what? It's 2017, and they're still consulting, something unique for this government. In Alberta the NDP plan is to consult for a month on these changes. Since the Premier is looking across the country, will she now pump the brakes and allow two years, which is reasonable, for this labour review?

The Speaker: Thank you.

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, I understand that given the member opposite's demonstrated inability to reach and keep a decision, dithering is a way to go. However, that is not what we are going to do. What we are going to do is that we are going to consult. We're going to consult with parties on all sides, understanding that there are key issues that people are fully aware of and have been consulted on year after year after year even though no change has been made for decades. We are then going to move forward after fully considering all sides because that is what Albertans elected us to do.

Mr. Jean: So no consultation, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Second main question.

Carbon Levy Costs and Energy Efficiency Programs

Mr. Jean: Life under the carbon tax means higher costs for seniors' facilities, for social housing, and for other nonprofits. New documents from Wildrose show the repeated attempts late last year by housing management boards, town councillors, and nonprofits to find out how in the world they are supposed to deal with the rising costs of the carbon tax, a tax which will continue to actually cost Albertans more every single year under this NDP government. The answer from the minister: get more energy efficient. Come on. It's shameful. How is taking millions of dollars from seniors and homeless shelters doing anything but making life far worse for Albertans?

The Speaker: Thank you.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm sure the member opposite would be happy to know that a significant portion of people who received the rebate in January from the carbon levy was, in fact, seniors because in many cases seniors are lower and middle-income people. In fact, seniors are ahead of the game right now. Moreover, our minister is moving forward to work with businesses and nonprofits in terms of how they can especially focus on increasing their efficiency and reducing their energy use, and that will be good for all Albertans.

Mr. Jean: According to these documents seniors are being charged an extra $120 per year, Mr. Speaker, as a result just of the carbon tax. That number could rise to up to $300 under this NDP government's plan. What's the carbon tax paying for? Well, a sweetheart deal for an Ontario renewable company. Today the minister confirmed that Ecofitt wasn't the lowest bidder or even the second-lowest bidder for their free light bulb program. How unique. The disrespect this government shows for the hard-earned dollars of vulnerable seniors is shameful. Will the Premier explain to Albertans why the NDP ignored the best deals for the taxpayers and chose to go with . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the lowest bids were ones that were found to be incomplete. I'm not surprised that the Official Opposition, the Wildrose, would prefer that we move forward with no energy efficiency program given that they do not want to save Albertans $112 per year, which is what the direct install residential program will save Albertans. They do not want to create jobs. They want to fire those 70 people that have been hired to deliver that program, and they want to make sure that we're not helping Calgary move forward as we put the energy efficiency agency in that city.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Jean: I agree with an energy efficiency program, Mr. Speaker. I can't think of anything better than an efficiency program to get rid of the NDP.

The CEO of the Kerby Centre, a Calgary organization dedicated to helping older adults and seniors, has said that he expects that the carbon tax will be devastating to nonprofits in Alberta. Charities, nonprofits, and seniors' groups are struggling because of this Premier's carbon tax. Seniors need to be able to afford to pay for a roof over their heads. They're not interested in free light bulbs. Can the Premier please explain how taxing seniors to pay for inflated contracts for out-of-province energy companies helps to make life more affordable for our province's most vulnerable?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, just a few days ago the member opposite was tearing down our energy efficiency program, saying that he was absolutely opposed to it and absolutely opposed to the $112 a year that the average Albertan would save as a result of that. Now, apparently, he thinks that $112 per year is something that's really important, and we agree. The member opposite, again, changes his position more often than someone attending yoga classes in my riding. We just can't keep up. [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Order. Quiet, please.

Electric Power System

Mr. MacIntyre: On Monday the Premier made it clear that she doesn't know how much the PPA debacle is costing Albertans: well, direct borrowing for the Balancing Pool, $2 billion; $151 million from the PPA settlements gone; the 2016 balance that the Balancing Pool had to liquidate, $705 million, gone; an added consumer charge paid for by ratepayers, $260 million, and $1 billion plus in consumer credit, all gone. Why is this Premier pursuing a course that will cost Albertans over $4 billion?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that the members opposite would not necessarily be familiar with this, but sometimes when you are faced with a very difficult situation that you inherited, you have to make a series of tough decisions. Now, I appreciate that the member opposite is struggling a bit with the issue of decision-making. However, we are not. We knew that when we came in, we had an electricity system that was in the process of melting down and that we had to take action to protect consumers, to protect investors, to protect Alberta industry, and that's exactly what we did.

Mr. MacIntyre: Bad PPA policies will cost Albertans more than $4 billion. That is more revenue than the carbon tax is expected to generate.

The bad decisions that led us to this point started in the spring of 2015. Just weeks after being elected, the NDP made a decision without consultation to increase the carbon tax on Alberta's electricity generators, resulting in the mass cancellation of PPAs and this hefty $4 billion in losses. The cost benefit? Albertans would have saved money if the old heavy emitters carbon tax had never been touched. Why won't the Premier roll back this terrible policy?

2:00

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, our government's plan to move forward with pricing carbon in Alberta is directly linked to our successful acquisition of not one but two – two – pipelines, something that, as I've said before, the members opposite, when working together with their cousins in Ottawa, simply couldn't make happen. Sometimes change is tough, but that's what leadership looks like. We are leading the country, we are leading the continent in being a progressive, sustainable energy industry, and we will continue to do that.

Mr. MacIntyre: Killing communities is not leadership.

This NDP government just cannot get anything right on the electricity file. Today we found out the NDP's radical shift to the capacity market led to a credit downgrade for two Albertan job creators. DBRS has chosen to downgrade both Capital Power and TransAlta to a triple-B credit rating. In their reports they specifically cite NDP changes to wholesale power, coal phase-out, and the climate leadership plan. Why won't the Premier stop meddling in the electricity sector, stop hurting our job creators, and stop hurting Alberta families?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, what I will not do is stick my head in the sand and pretend that there is no problem when there is one. When we were elected, the electricity system was in the process of melting down. The only way to fix it would have been to allow price volatility to increase by 1,000 per cent. That would have been bad for industry, investors, coal companies, consumers, seniors' homes, food banks, everybody. We said no. We stood up for Albertans. We did the right thing.

The Speaker: Hon. members, did you know that today is Deep Dish Pizza Day?

The leader of the third party.

AIMCo Governance

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. AIMCo looks after $90 billion, including many Albertans' pension funds. This is a sacred trust to guarantee the retirement of thousands of hard-working civil servants who have built Alberta over decades. At the heritage fund meeting AIMCo president, Mr. Uebelein, in response to removal of sections 5 and 6 said, "We respectfully disagree that this is an improvement in our governance" and: we think our governance structure is good. He didn't like the changes. To the Premier: will you take that expert advice and reverse these changes in order to protect the retirement nest egg of thousands of Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Finance minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, on this side of the House we absolutely have great confidence in the professionals at AIMCo and respect their independence each and every day. The opposition is misleading Albertans, however.

An Hon. Member: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order noted.

Mr. Ceci: You know, pension plans set out their own broad parameters around the investments they want to occur, and AIMCo carries those things out. The CEO of AIMCo has said that he's assured members of this House repeatedly that there's no involvement with their independence. Their independence is intact. What else does the CEO need to do, to say to the opposition?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

First supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The board of AIMCo will require seven new members in the very near future. These will be the first appointed since the changes in regulation removing the requirement that appointees have in-depth financial knowledge. To the Premier. You stated in this House yesterday that the final decisions on board appointments will be made by cabinet. Can you assure this House and thousands of civil servants whose pensions are tied up in what they look after that the new appointees will have the strongest possible financial business acumen to ensure that their pension investment is not compromised?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I'm getting, I hope, better at answering this question. It's been posed to me many times. The openness and transparencies of ABCs is critically important. All Albertans need to have the opportunity to put their names forward for important ABCs. Only those that have the best credentials for boards like AIMCo will get appointed to those. We have appointed two people, Ken Kroner and Phyllis Clark, with exceptional credentials. They are on the board. I met with the CEO and the chair yesterday, talked about appointments, and they will be coming forward shortly.

Mr. McIver: Those appointments were before the regulations changed, Mr. Speaker.

The Finance minister has been asked repeatedly if he would commit to attending the next committee meeting of the heritage savings trust fund to explain the removal of sections 5 and 6. Even the NDP Party committee chair said: "We could direct an invitation. Absolutely." I will table those quotes today. To the Premier. Since your minister has refused over and over again to confirm his willingness to attend for us, will you at least direct your minister to attend for the NDP members who have also expressed a desire to hear from the minister?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, I've answered the same question nine times in this House. I want to say that the changes to the openness and transparency for the appointment process are in the best interest of not only AIMCo but of every agency, board, and commission. We have got good people on that board. We are bringing forward and cabinet will approve new appointments to that board soon, and they will have all the board they need.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

School Fees in Charter Schools

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. When Bill 1 was announced, a government news release said, "Alberta parents will no longer have to pay school fees for instructional supplies or materials." As it turns out, this doesn't mean all parents. Rather, to borrow an Orwellian phrase, some parents are more equal than others. In particular, parents who have students in charter schools aren't getting a break on school fees. This is wrong since charter schools operate entirely within the public education system. Their parents should be entitled to the same school fee reductions. To the minister: why is the Minister of Education discriminating against charter school parents?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, by reducing school fees in An Act to Reduce School Fees, we're not eliminating them, but we are making important inroads to reduce school fees across the province. We had to make choices around elimination of different fees in different places. It was very difficult to find the money to in fact do this, you know, but it's worth it because we are putting money back into the pockets of parents when they need it the most. For the 61 school boards here in the province of Alberta that are publicly funded, that is exactly what we are doing.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, according to the government's Charter Schools Handbook, "A charter school is a public school that provides a basic education in a different . . . way." In fact, many charter schools serve marginalized, low-income, and special-needs students. The Association of Public Charter Schools is quite concerned by the decision to exclude them since they are full-fledged members of the public school community. End quote. However, the NDP didn't create charter schools, so perhaps they view them differently. To the minister: does the minister still consider charter schools public? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Charter schools are what they are. They are charter schools. The funding for the reduction of school fees, again, was not in its complete form but that, rather, we are looking to reduce school fees over time. So that is exactly what we are doing. I am very proud of the moves that we have made to reduce school fees, and I think that many Alberta families would concur.

Dr. Swann: Curious, Mr. Speaker, that the criterion was whether they were public or charter, so called, when it's socioeconomic status that would most benefit families. It's quite clear that the NDP government is singling out charter schools for different treatment, one that is more in line with private schools. That's certainly what Public Interest Alberta advocates in their recent media release that urged the government also "to phase out the public funding of private schools . . . and reallocate the money to fulfill its education-related campaign promises." Interestingly, this is exactly the scenario that Bill 1 sets up. If the minister is planning to defund charter schools, why isn't he telling the Legislature?

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, certainly, we are putting in money for enrolment and we've increased the enrolment funding for all schools, including charter schools and private schools, too. That is the bulk of where schools actually function. I made a choice – we all did – around reducing school fees for schools here in the province of Alberta. We have done so. I think it's a very proud decision to make to reduce school fees. It will put money back into the pockets of Alberta families and make life easier for Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Carbon Levy and Energy Efficiency Programs

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since the climate leadership plan was announced, one of the main questions I receive from my constituents is around the purpose of the carbon levy. The government projected that the levy would garner $9.6 billion in total over the levy's first five years. To the Minister of Environment and Parks: how are the funds from the new carbon levy being used?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, two-thirds of Albertans have received a rebate or will over the course of this year to ensure there is no unfair burden to household budgets. Small businesses will see a 33 per cent tax reduction to offset additional costs. That's a tax reduction on small businesses that was not supported by either right-wing party in this House. The carbon levy will also fund energy efficiency programs that will help Albertans lower their emissions, that will help ensure affordability of their bills. That makes life better for everyone even as it creates jobs.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

2:10

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the various incentives and programs announced by the government, to the same minister: how will Albertans benefit from efficiency programs? [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. minister. [interjections]
Quiet.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the previous government left Alberta as the only jurisdiction in North America without an energy efficiency program. For example, in our first phase of residential direct install the average family will save $112 per year. Up to 70 Albertans have already been hired to do this work. Those are good jobs that we're ensuring are reinvesting the carbon levy right back into our communities. We'll have more programs to announce in the coming weeks and months that will save families more money.

You know, it's very confusing to me that the other parties would pick . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: how will the carbon levy grow the economy in this province and get us off the resource roller coaster?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the climate leadership plan led to the approval of two pipelines. Trans Mountain will create 22,000 construction jobs and raise the price of oil. [interjections]

The Speaker: Stop the clock, please. Could we keep the volume down?

Mr. Fildebrandt: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order noted.

Keep the volume down.

Start the clock.

Ms Phillips: Of course, the pipeline approval for Trans Mountain will create 22,000 jobs. It will raise the price of oil by $3 per barrel.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the members opposite in both parties, the Leader of the Official Opposition and his new frenemy over there in the PCs, are looking for a made-in-Ottawa solution. I guess their time in Ottawa makes them feel like a plan imposed on us from the east would make better sense. We know that that's not what's good for Alberta families.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway. [interjections] Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Gill: Oh, my friend. Sorry; we kind of look the same. [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet. It was my error. Quiet, please.

Hon. member, proceed.

Oil Sands Emissions Cap

Mr. Panda: When the Premier announced her 100-megatonne cap on oil sands development, she was flanked by four major oil companies. Three of them are now buying up the rest of the oil sands operations. Foreign investors, including Shell, who once endorsed her plan, are waving good-bye to Alberta. Now that the big three control the market within the 100-megatonne cap, there is no room for new players. Can the Premier confirm or deny the market rumour that the big three got a sweetheart deal and will be the only ones who will be permitted to grow under the cap?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Phillips: Well, certainly, Mr. Speaker, the announcement of the climate leadership plan was supported by the oil sands industry and continues to be. I look forward in the supplementals to the members opposite detailing all the ways in which all of our biggest job creators in this province are doing their business wrong. I look forward to them detailing that in the supplementals, dragging their corporate reputations through the mud once again, and I look forward to hearing how they're going to talk Alberta down and hope that we do not succeed in this province. On this side of the House we're putting in place a system whereby our energy industry succeeds and is strong.

Mr. Panda: Given that during Bill 25 Wildrose predicted the cap would cause M and A in the oil sands and that support services jobs like HR and IT would be laid off and given that due to this government's misguided policies, companies are taking their business and moving to investment-friendly regimes like Saskatchewan and Texas, can the Premier explain to all the unemployed Calgarians why putting forward job-killing policies is the right thing to do?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I look forward once again to our right-wing friends over here detailing how Athabasca Oil, CNRL, Cenovus are conducting their business wrong, how they are, in fact, not right in how they are moving forward with making our energy industry strong. The Wildrose opposition should be cheering for these Canadian companies, who have expanded their operations in the oil sands not just with existing assets but with future development assets. Instead, they are talking down Alberta every chance they get, they're not supporting our energy industry, and they're slamming the door on the renewables. It's shameful.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, given that all the leases snatched by the big three will not be developed because of the risky policies of this government and given that the Crown sold off these leases for the benefit of royalties and jobs, which are now gone, knowing that the resources will not be developed in any timely manner, is the Premier now going to force the oil sands leaseholders to put their undeveloped leases back on the open market for sale, or will the Crown be forced to buy them back, and at what price?

Ms Phillips: Well, certainly, Mr. Speaker, I'm not surprised anymore. This is a side of the House that denies the science of climate change, that doesn't want to support our energy industry to take on the greatest challenge of our time. This is a side . . .

Mr. Panda: Point of order.

The Speaker: Could you please continue, hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, this is a side of the House that provides direct funds to films that call into question the science of climate change, propaganda films essentially. This is also a side of the House that disputes what people like the CEO of Canada's Oil Sands Innovation Alliance have said, who have praised moving forward with innovation and technology, saying that they are confident . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Calgary LRT Green Line Funding

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On December 6 I asked the minister about funding for Calgary's green line LRT, and I was told to go back to school. Well, I did go back to school and found out that in this year's budget there is still no provincial money for this project while the city and the federal government are both committing $1.53 billion each. To the minister: when will the province come onboard with its one-third share of the funding? Or do I need to go back to school again?

The Speaker: The Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government is very committed to supporting LRT development in both Edmonton and Calgary, unlike the opposition, that would cut billions of dollars out of the capital program of our government and make it unaffordable to support these LRT projects to go ahead with them. I've said all along – and we've supported with millions of dollars for planning for that line – that when that design is finalized and we have clear numbers and we get a formal request from the city of Calgary, we will give it very careful consideration.

Mr. Gill: It is ready. The city is ready, Minister.

Given that in this year's Budget Address the Finance minister said, "We look forward to working with both the cities of Calgary and Edmonton to further develop their LRT projects" and given that this government is dedicating $2.2 billion worth of carbon tax revenue to fund green infrastructure projects, especially low-emission public transit, Minister, since you won't commit to the funding, will you at least confirm that the green line LRT is the kind of project that is an ideal candidate for this kind of funding?

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's really interesting that the opposition doesn't want us to collect anything under the carbon levy, but they want us to commit it to LRT funding. Well, you can't have it both ways. This government is very, very committed to not only making responsible responses to climate change but to supporting our municipalities to build the LRT systems that they have and to support transit and other things that will reduce the carbon footprint of this government and of this province. The people of Alberta support that.

2:20

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Gill: The carbon tax is killing more revenue than it brings in.

Given that on June 22, 2015, in reply to the Member for Calgary-Hays, the minister said, "When I have a fuller view of the opinions and needs of the city of Calgary, we will be moving forward in due course" and given that Calgary has been hearing the same minister make the same statement for two years now and people are anxious for the jobs that will come with the $4.6 billion project, to the minister: will it take another two years for you to move forward, which, by the way, is 2019 and, by the way, is election year?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, you know, I stand by the previous statements that I've made. I'll remind the member that we announced in December of this past year close to $150 million to support the development of the green line. He's trying to forget that or wants to make sure that people forget it.

As I've said, when the project is finalized, when we get a formal request . . . [interjections] Mr. Speaker, if I might . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet.

I'll take care of them, hon. member. Please proceed.

Mr. Mason: He asks a question, but he doesn't want to hear the answer, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Yes, hon. member.

Mr. Mason: So if I may . . .

The Speaker: I'm going to give you 10 seconds to finish.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When the city of Calgary makes a request, we will give it careful consideration. They haven't done that. If the member expects me to respond to him and give him . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Workers' Compensation Board

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, rebates have been issued to employers in past years because of WCB surpluses. WCB policy stipulates refunds to be automatically triggered once the WCB funding ratio exceeds 128 per cent. Preliminary reports peg the fund at over 131 per cent. This government has been making it harder for businesses to grow and be profitable, especially during this economic downturn, making these rebates all the more important. Minister, will employers indeed be receiving a refund, as in past years, and when can they expect to receive these refunds?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We embarked on a review of the Workers' Compensation Board because it is so important that Albertans feel confident that WCB provides fair compensation as well as meaningful rehabilitation. The WCB manages its own funds and will make decisions of its own mind as to what to do with surpluses or other funds. At this point we are currently working with the WCB to make sure we have a system that works for both employers and workers.

Mr. van Dijken: Given that refunds provide an incentive for businesses to maintain safe practices and given that these rebates enable deserving employers with good safety records to focus on growing their businesses, creating jobs and investing in new and safer equipment, and given that the new board members of the WCB have now been appointed and given that the WCB already receives more than adequate funding to carry out its mandate, will the minister let us know if there are any possible justifications for the WCB to withhold refunds, and if so, what are they?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We are currently undergoing a review of the WCB so that we can ensure that there is adequate funding, to ensure that we are providing adequate services, to make sure that it is fiscally sustainable because the system had not been reviewed in over 15 years. That was irresponsible. We need to make sure that we have a system that is operating for workers and employers, and that review is currently ongoing.

Mr. van Dijken: Given that the Labour minister announced the review of the Workers' Compensation Board in March 2016 and given that this review examines WCB practices and policies and given that job creators in this province are hearing rumours that the WCB will be increasing premiums despite operating with massive surpluses, will the minister please tell us when the WCB review panel will publish its report, and what is she hearing? Are there any intentions of increasing WCB premiums? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Because it had been over 15 years since the last review, we appointed a three-person panel to take a serious look at the Workers' Compensation Board system. They have been meeting to review all aspects of workers' compensation policy, funding, et cetera. They are submitting their report to me in spring of this year. I'm looking forward to their recommendations. I do not yet know what their recommendations will be finalized as and therefore cannot speculate, but I do know that I'm looking forward to reviewing those recommendations.

Police Services Funding

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, crime is on the rise, and Albertans are worried about their homes, their businesses, and their families. They want assurances that when they call 911, the police will be there. Despite these facts the NDP's budget made no increase to municipal policing. Even worse, the minister told us that she has not even factored in the new carbon tax. Instead, she told police departments to apply for green efficiency grants. This government is scrimping on police funding. To the minister: are you suggesting a P3 approach, also known as a provincial Prius police force?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I told the member yesterday and will be happy to tell her again, this province provides over half a billion dollars in police funding. We transfer more money to municipalities to support policing than any of our western neighbours. We are incredibly glad that we didn't have to make the deep cuts called for over there that would have slashed that funding. [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, given that money spent on law enforcement should be directed straight to the front-line police officers and given that the government is going to provide millions of dollars solely for the purpose of making police officers and their mode of transportation more efficient, to the minister: is your intention to increase the cavalry? Where will the horses live?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I said in my previous answer, this province continues to provide over half a billion dollars in police funding. When the Conservatives in Ottawa, those guys' BFFs, cut the funding for ALERT, this government stepped in and provided that funding.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Considering that the minister hasn't done the math on their risky ideological carbon tax on everything and given that the biggest cost for police is actually the salaries paid to front-line staff and police officers and since the Premier told Albertans to deal with the carbon tax by taking a bus, is the minister expecting municipalities to pick up the tab for the obvious shortfalls, or can our men and women in blue expect bus passes for policing our communities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I've said before, we will continue to . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet down.

Ms Ganley: . . . provide over half a billion dollars to police in funding. That is something that would not have been possible under the opposition's plan to slash 10 per cent from my budget. That would have impacted the front lines directly. You know, we will continue to fund. They want to slash and burn. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Support for Persons Affected by Violent Crimes

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Tragically, on April 15, 2014, Kaiti Perras, Lawrence Hong, Jordan Segura, Josh Hunter, and Zackariah Rathwell were murdered by Matthew de Groot in the worst homicide in Calgary's history. Because Mr. de Groot was classified as not criminally responsible, a mental health review is convened periodically to assess him, and I know that the families of the victims intend to attend all of these panels on a go-forward basis. To the Minister of Justice. With great respect, these families are continually reliving this horrific incident. Have you met with them in person, and if so, what supports have you offered?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. minister.

2:30

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for a very important question. Of course, all families of victims of homicide are incredibly affected by the experience. That's why I've taken so much time to meet with victim support advocates, to meet with a support group for the families of murdered individuals. We know that this is a tragic and difficult circumstance for these people, and that's why we're moving forward with a review of victims of crime funding, to see what additional supports we can provide.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Rodney: Given that this horrific crime continues to have an impact on Calgary at large but, more specifically, on those who knew the victims as well as all of those who attended postsecondary institutions which the victims were studying at when they were murdered and given that the rights of the victims should always come first, again to the minister: what specific supports has your government put in place to assist with suffering and loss, which numerous Albertans continue to experience because of this horrible crime?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. The government provides an enormous amount of programming through the victims of crime fund that people have access to in order to seek the supports that they need. That victims of crime fund, as people will be well aware, has been reviewed by the Auditor General because of the increasing surplus over the last decade. We are moving forward to ensure that we're doing a gaps analysis, and we're moving forward to make sure that that money gets to where it's intended, to make sure that victims of crime are properly supported.

Mr. Rodney: Families and friends would love to see specifics.

Now, given that this case was presided over by a Court of Queen's Bench justice and is therefore a matter which is within the purview of a federal Minister of Justice and given that the structure of the mental health review panel means that families and friends of the victims must continually relive this tragic incident, something none of us want to see, again to the minister: have you contacted your federal counterpart about this case to advocate on behalf of the victims, families, and friends in order to reduce their suffering in every way possible?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the member will no doubt be aware, the government of Canada is looking at several fronts in terms of reviewing Criminal Code processes. They have acknowledged that this is a shared responsibility between the federal government and the provincial governments, which is great news because the previous government wouldn't do it. Moving forward, we have been having conversations about how to streamline this process and make it easier for everyone, including victims of crime as well as the public.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Hospitals in Edmonton

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that my constituents and all Albertans deserve the best for their health care and given that the previous government ignored Edmonton's hospital infrastructure for decades, to the Minister of Health: what is this government doing to deliver quality health care to Albertans in Edmonton?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. For decades Edmontonians saw the previous government ignore their needs when it came to ensuring that their hospitals were maintained and that new growth was addressed. That has come to an end. This government is working to make life better for Albertans living in the city of Edmonton and those who rely on the resources here by announcing a new hospital for the city of Edmonton, work at the Misericordia hospital for the emergency, and important investments at the Royal Alex as well, and I'm so proud to do that.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. Given that the quality of care in our hospitals is directly related to maintaining staffing in our hospitals and health care centres, to the same minister: what is the government doing to ensure we have sufficient staffing in all facilities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. One of our very first actions as a government was to reverse the reckless cuts that were proposed by the outgoing government. We are so proud to have the lines of men and women who work on the front lines to support our health care system and the families who require those important public services. The last thing Albertans need during a difficult economic downturn is to worry about whether or not a hospital is going to be in their neighbourhood when they have a case of emergency. We're proud to support the public and the public health care system in the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Budget 2017 announced $400 million for a new hospital in the Edmonton region, my constituents want to know: where will this hospital be, and what else can the minister tell us about these plans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I know the member's riding is full of new houses and young families that are in desperate need of expanded health care services throughout our city of Edmonton and in other parts of the city as well. We're continuing to consider a number of options for the new site, but I have to say that I'm so proud that after waiting decades – the last new hospital for the city of Edmonton was built in the 1980s. The children in the gallery probably can't even imagine what life was like in the '80s. But guess what? In the future their lives are going to be better because this government is working hard to make sure that we're making their lives better.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Coal Strategy

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the Environment and Parks business plan on page 66 under Key Strategies it says that the government is "phasing out emissions from coal-fired sources of electricity." That clearly says "phasing out emissions," not phasing out coal. To the minister: do you agree with that statement from your business plan? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's very clear that we are phasing out emissions from coal-fired electricity and working with the incumbent generators and the post-2030 plants. We are working with the federal government as well to ensure that if the companies decide to do a conversion, the regulatory environment is there to support that decision and a number of other initiatives. You know, the folks opposite would prefer that we spend $10 billion, at a minimum – $10 billion, at a minimum – to invest in risky and unproven CCS technology. That is not an ...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Loewen: Yeah, $10 billion sounds like the deficit for each of the last two years.

Given that metallurgical coal is used to make iron and steel and that Alberta is home to an immense deposit of high-quality, low-sulphur metallurgical coal and given that the government talks a lot about diversifying the economy and that metallurgical coal has the potential to do just that as it is exported, to the minister: is it your department's plan to phase out metallurgical coal or to stop any new metallurgical coal projects?

The Speaker: The minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The answer is no. [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet.

Mr. Loewen: Well, finally an answer after hundreds of questions.

If science shows that coal can be burned as clean as other alternatives like natural gas, biomass, et cetera, will you still pursue the complete elimination of coal-fired power?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, there's a difference between metallurgical coal and thermal coal, which is why I answered no to that previous question.

Now, it is true that there are some unproven technologies out there and some proven technologies that are extremely expensive, which, I suppose, is why our friends across the way would prefer that we spend $10 billion on phasing out coal emissions in order to improve Albertans' health and so on. That is not our approach. We are going to ensure that we are helping the generators of those post-2030 plants transition accordingly, Mr. Speaker. We're going to make sure that we create jobs ...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Fertilizer Management

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Effective fertilizer management does not only safeguard the environment but also protects farm productivity. Research is being done through funding by the Alberta Crop Industry Development Fund to look at crop rotation and fertilizer programs to reduce the production of nitrous oxide. Fertilizer management educated by this kind of research can greatly reduce emissions per bushel of crop. To the minister of agriculture: what program is your government offering farmers to adapt their management practices to reduce intensity of emissions?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I think, first off, we have to recognize the farmers and producers out there for the great work they are doing. The innovation often comes from the industry itself around varied application of not only fertilizers but other chemicals as well, that are seeing improvement and continued improvement in the farming industry right across Alberta, technology that's even exported around the world. I'm proud of our producers and farmers in this province for the innovation work that they are doing.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that farmers are seeking ways to maximize nitrogen uptake by their crops and given that this helps them ensure that they will get high yields and makes sure there is not excessive available nitrogen not taken up by the crops, to the minister: how are you collecting definitive data for farmers about new fertilizers so they can use it and ensure that these new technologies will work for their practices?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

2:40

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the previous answer I talked about the good work farmers are doing. I also want to talk about the good work that our researchers, both federally and provincially, are doing around this. We have two centres in Alberta, the Crop Diversification Centre North and the Crop Diversification Centre South, that are continuously doing work around fertilizers and crops, new and even emerging crops around that fertilizer, applications of it, the development of new ones, et cetera. I'm very proud of the work that our public servants are doing to help. They can do what we are doing, and that makes life better for all Albertans.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that an Alberta Crop Industry Development Fund study done on fertilizer technology and management led to the creation of the Alberta farm fertilizer information and recommendation manager, or AFFIRM, and given that this online tool helps producers apply the right amount of fertilizer while maximizing their yields and profits, to the minister: what are you doing to make more tools like AFFIRM available for farmers to be the best environmental stewards of their land?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member. The member has also acknowledged that good stewardship that the farmers are already doing, and he mentioned the manual, that it's not a static manual. Everything should be changing. As all technology changes, so does technology on farms change. There are some extremely interesting things and some very innovative things going out there now. Government will continue to support that innovation through various funding, both through Agriculture and Forestry and Economic Development and Trade, as we go forward in that great, wide, new frontier that farming is.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Members, 30 seconds for those who don't want to stay and enjoy this wonderful experience.

Members' Statements

Pipeline Opposition

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, the Manitoba NDP just passed a new party resolution called – surprise, surprise – Keep It in the Ground. The resolution opposes “the expansion and development of any new pipelines to transport tar sands oil through Manitoba.” This puts them squarely onside with their comrades in B.C. who oppose pipelines like Kinder Morgan. This evokes memories of when the federal NDP held a convention right here in Alberta and voted for the Leap Manifesto, the most radical anti-oil, anti-Alberta doctrine ever put forward in Canadian politics.

We all know the NDP is one big party. There is no B.C. NDP or Manitoba NDP; there is just the NDP. For some reason, however, the members opposite think they're different than their comrades in B.C. and Manitoba. My guess is that they're not basing that assessment on the Premier's hand-picking energy advisers at the oil sands advisory group. After all, Tzeporah Berman calls our oil sands the tar sands, and she compared Fort McMurray to Mordor.

Then we have Karen Mahon. She's campaigned against Kinder Morgan, but she's taking her activism to the next level. As the director of ForestEthics, Mahon is raising money to stop this project. In a letter dated March 26 she urged members to bog the pipeline down in lawsuits and kill it and the thousands of jobs it would have provided. She even moderated a panel last week on how – and I quote from her e-mail – resistance can stop pipelines. After the panel she released a how-to video on protesting and destroying pipelines. Mr. Speaker, an action a day.

The fact that decent, hard-working Albertans are subsidizing Mahon's activities is a disgrace, and this government should be ashamed. The Premier has had many opportunities to do the right thing and show Mahon the door, but she just laughs and shrugs it off. Albertans know this NDP government is working behind the scenes to stop . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Order. Excuse me. I've already said it once. Order, please.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In my question today I said that I would table the evidence of the NDP member asking for the minister to come to speak at the next committee meeting, and true to my word, I hope, that's what I'm doing.

The Speaker: The Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise on day 8 of fantastic Public Affairs Bureau tablings. I'm tabling a letter that I wrote on the 9th of March to the hon. Government House Leader. The title of the letter is "On March 21st 2013 [you] said." I have the five requisite copies.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table the appropriate number of copies of a news release from Public Interest Alberta from February 23 that I mentioned in my question, which urges the government to eliminate private school funding to pay for NDP election promises. I'll table a backgrounder also on private and charter schools from Public Interest Alberta, in which they say: charter schools "are really just private schools that are subsidized by taxpayers." They give reasons for eliminating their funding as well.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following document were deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Mr. S. Anderson, Minister of Municipal Affairs, pursuant to the Government Organization Act the Alberta Boilers Safety Association annual report 2016.

On behalf of the hon. Ms McLean, Minister of Service Alberta and Minister of Status of Women, a letter dated March 30, 2017, from Jill Clayton, Information and Privacy Commissioner, to Marcia Nelson, Deputy Minister of Executive Council, regarding investigation reports.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hope that you can understand that I don't have the Blues in front of me, but the hon. Finance minister used the word "misleading." Without going into too much detail, I will cite Beauchesne's, sixth edition, under section 489, where it's labelled as an unparliamentary word, and also on page 148 in section 490 it's an unparliamentary word. I think it's pretty obvious based on that alone that the hon. minister should apologize and withdraw those remarks.

I must say, Mr. Speaker, that it's particularly egregious since you warned about this just yesterday and the hon. Government House Leader had to withdraw a similar remark from the Premier just yesterday, yet he hasn't instructed his people to live up to your ruling.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's interesting to me that the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays knows what I have and have not instructed my caucus to do.

It's clear as well, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member was not really paying attention to the nuances of the ruling because in this particular case the reference was not to an individual member of the Assembly but to the opposition. I remember quite clearly that he talked about: the opposition is misleading. My recollection of the rulings that you've made and other Speakers have made make quite a distinction between accusing a specific member of misleading or, on the other hand, accusing the government or the opposition, in this case, of misleading.

It's pretty clear that there is a difference of opinion with respect to the facts. The hon. minister was suggesting that the opposition is attempting to mislead the public, something with which I concur. All you have to do is take a look at the various statements that they have made with respect to this and other issues to realize that what they're trying to get the public to believe and what the facts are are two quite different things in many cases.

With respect, Mr. Speaker, I don't believe that there is a point of order here.

2:50

The Speaker: The Official Opposition House Leader.

I wonder if he'd turn his chair around.

Thank you.

Let me be clear on what the Blues do say. "The opposition is misleading Albertans, however." That was the sentence. The point that the Government House Leader made is correct. It is always context in which one interprets the use of the words. In the instance yesterday there was a specific member that was identified and a specific phrase, in fact reinforced twice. That matter was withdrawn. In this instance it was to a general – so technically I don't believe it was a point of order.

However, how many times do you want to use the words "misleading," "context," "untrue," et cetera? It just, you know... [interjections] Hon. members, please don't interrupt when I'm speaking. Try and decide as a group amongst yourselves if this is productive use of time in this place. I'm sure you can go on and on forever about this, but you've heard me talk so many times about this, so I guess you have to share responsibility along with me. So not technically a point of order, but I would ask that all of the members be conscious of the way in which you use the words.

Second point, the Opposition House Leader, I think.

Point of Order Language Creating Disorder

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise to this point of order and speak directly to comments that were made by the Minister of Education when he used abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder, which, for those following along at home, is Standing Order 23(j). While I am certain that the comments that the Minister of Education made will not be recorded in the Blues as they certainly...

The Speaker: Hon. member, if I can just clarify the process: are you speaking to a point of order that might have been initially raised by the Member for Strathmore-Brooks?

Mr. Cooper: That's correct.

Mr. Mason: Can you say what time it was?

Mr. Cooper: Yeah. I'm getting there.

I'll be the first to admit that from time to time the temperature rises in the Chamber. Mr. Speaker, you will know that this is not a classroom, nor should it be one. This is a place where we battle for ideas that are important to Albertans. So from time to time the ire will get raised. While the minister may think the opposition are idiots, it would be wildly inappropriate of him to use that language in this Chamber. The minister certainly will know that that is what he said although it may not appear in Hansard, and I'm certain that it's not in the Blues. He knows, and he should withdraw and apologize for the language that he used.

The Speaker: Government House Leader, any comments?

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, I recognize that question period brings out all kinds of aspects of people's personalities and so on which may appear to people on the other side as strange or different or otherwise, you know, unexplainable. That probably goes on both sides. I think that maybe the minister had some of those thoughts about the activities of the Member for Calgary-Greenway when I was trying to answer his questions. I think he was rather excited. However, I don't think that his behaviour deserved to be called, as has been suggested, idiotic.

I know that the Official Opposition House Leader doesn't really expect people to admit to their errors, but I did receive a note from the Minister of Education, who had to be at another important meeting. He said: I think the Wildrose might have called a point of order on me when I called the Calgary-Greenway member an idiot; I'm sorry. On behalf of the Minister of Education, Mr. Speaker, I am authorized to offer an apology, and I do so and withdraw the comments. Calgary-Greenway is not an idiot.

The Speaker: It's withdrawn. I just wish that the temperature would stay at this level rather than the other levels it gets to.

Thank you to the member.

Opposition House Leader, I think we have point of order 3. Is that correct?

Point of Order Language Creating Disorder

Mr. Cooper: Yeah. On behalf of my colleague from Calgary-Foothills, again, language that's likely to create disorder. On numerous occasions inside this Chamber my hon. colleague from Calgary-Foothills, who is a very respected engineer outside of this place and is a passionate believer in science and is certainly not a climate change denier – during his question the minister of the environment made accusations about being a climate change denier. I know, Mr. Speaker, that you've spoken at length about the context. I know that you have specifically warned the minister of the environment about making such allegations directed towards the Member for Calgary-Foothills. I would suggest that it would be helpful for decorum in this House if she would refrain from using that language, making those allegations, just as you have also suggested, sir.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I did listen carefully to the exchange. You know, contrary to the previous rule about not naming a specific member and it not being an offence to talk about a group, government or opposition, as misleading – I think that this is kind of the opposite, where the minister was actually talking about specific members on the other side.

Now, the Wildrose has been at great pains to stand up and say: you can't call us as a group climate change deniers. What they really mean is: well, Mr. Speaker, you can't do that because some of us are not. However, the opposite of that is that some of them are, and in this particular case the minister was referring, I think, specifically to the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat's actions in funding a film or a video that denies climate change. On that basis she was referring, not using the term "climate change deniers," to some members on the opposite side who deny the science of climate change. As I recall, those were the words that she used. It's pretty evident that that's true. It ought not cause disorder.

I recognize that Calgary-Foothills has been at great pains to stand up and to clarify his position that he, unlike some of his colleagues, does not deny the science of climate change. I accept that. I believe clearly that that member has a scientific approach to this issue and is not a denier of human-caused climate change, as most of the scientists in the world and most serious and responsible political . . . [interjections] You see there, Mr. Speaker? They're arguing that most scientists in the world do not believe in human – so it's just evidence that, you know, if you just toss out a few little fish, there are going to be some dolphins that are going to jump out of the water, and they just can't help themselves.

It's pretty clear that there's a good bunch over there that, you know, have serious doubts about the scientific consensus about the impact on the planet, but that doesn't mean all of them do. In that respect I acknowledge that the Member for Calgary-Foothills does not deny the science of climate change, but others may do that. The minister was stating that, and I think that she was on very solid ground in doing so, so I do not believe that there is a point of order.

The Speaker: Well, what was said, which I believe was the matter on point, was: "This is a side of the House that denies the science of climate change, that doesn't want to support our energy industry to take on the greatest challenge of our time." That was the word. It is not in other situations technically a point of order.

Again to the same point, I'm not sure if it resonates with this Assembly or not, but how many times can we ask that members stay away from words like "misleading," "climate change"? That phrase has caused . . . [interjections] When do you want to change the place, folks? It's up to you. Do you want to discuss . . . [interjection] Please. Enough points of order. Excuse me. It's so much on my mind that it sticks with me.

Hon. members, the daily Routine is now concluded. Pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(5)(b) the House stands adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at 1:30.

The legislative policy committees will convene this afternoon and tomorrow morning for consideration of main estimates. This afternoon Families . . . [interjections] I know you are all very attentive. This afternoon Families and Communities will consider the estimates of Status of Women in the Rocky Mountain Room. Tomorrow morning Families and Communities will consider the estimates for Community and Social Services in the Rocky Mountain Room, and Resource Stewardship will consider the estimates of Transportation in the Parkland Room.

[The Assembly adjourned at 3:03 p.m. pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(5)(b)]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, April 6, 2017

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

If we could all bow our heads and pray or reflect, each in our own way. As we conclude our work for this week in this Assembly, allow us to return to our constituencies and be reminded of the powerful diversity that exists in our communities. These communities are home to various cultural, ethnic, and diverse people who give this province and our country its very unique and special identity. Let us embrace, recognize, celebrate, and show respect for them by finding ways in which we can agree in here.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a very distinguished visitor, the consul general of Israel, Galit Baram. She's accompanied by Stan Fedun, government relations officer at the consulate in Toronto. The consul general brings a wealth of international experience to her posting in Canada, including serving as counsellor for Public Affairs and Academic Affairs at the Israeli embassy in Washington, DC, counsellor for Economic Affairs in Cairo, and most recently as director for the Department for Palestinian Affairs and Regional Cooperation. Canada and Israel are long-time friends and also share a free trade agreement. Most Albertans would be surprised to know that Israel has significant reserves of oil and gas. Alberta, of course, has considerable experience in this field and welcomes opportunities for further collaboration. I'd like to thank the consul general for her visit to Alberta and ask her to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome to our Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and a pleasure to rise again for the third day in a row to introduce part 3 of the staff, students, and parents from C.W. Perry school in the wonderful and beautiful constituency of Airdrie, which is also part of the fifth-largest school district in the entire province, the Rocky View school division. I will introduce the teachers and then the chaperones. Please rise as I call your name: Mr. Rob Saipé, Ms Katelyn Dutton, Mr. Brian Jackson, Ms Stephanie Wilson, Miss Michelle De Cruz, and chaperones Mr. Rick Roberge, Mrs. Veronica Gutierrez, Mrs. Jenifer Landels, Mr. Gary Seabrook, Mrs. Erin Forsyth – she's a relation, maybe, to our former leader – Mrs. Jamillah Folkes, Mr. Michael Stormont, Mrs. Shelley Huebner, Mr. Shane Vincent, Mrs. Sarah Hughes, and Mrs. Andrea Van Sluys. Students please rise as well and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

I realize that the Member for Airdrie has filled the galleries with students today, but I do need to check: are there any other members who have classes with us today?

Seeing and hearing none, the hon. Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you today to all members of the Assembly Miss Mila Pesevic and Ms Brittney Vander Linden. Mila is a grade 6 student from Dunluce school in Edmonton, and she is studying the different roles in the Alberta Legislature. Today she is visiting to learn about the project she is doing on the Speaker of the House, and of course she wants to see us all on our very best behavior. She is accompanied by her teacher, Ms Brittney Vander Linden. Mila and Brittney are seated in your gallery, and I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly representatives from Strathcona county library, which is celebrating its 40th anniversary and the bookmobile's 35th. Today with us we have Sharon Siga, the CEO; Diana Balbar, the bookmobile manager; Sally Neal, communications specialist; and Leah Lewis, who is a member of the board. I would ask my guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Calgary-Bow.

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you a constituent of mine, Brian Crawford, and his mother, Venora Galon. Brian has been an off-leash ambassador since the beginning of 2013 and is a volunteer for Working Dogs Day, that is held in Calgary annually. May I say that I always look forward to this event. These talented dogs are vital in helping serve Albertans every day. His mother, Venora, lives here in Edmonton, and she is a corporate tax consultant and is also a volunteer for Working Dogs Day. I would ask my guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Labour and minister responsible for democratic renewal.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly members of the Alberta Common Ground Alliance, representing some of Alberta's leading companies with buried infrastructure. Every year thousands of buried facilities are accidentally damaged by digging activities, disrupting services or, worse, causing injury or death. Research shows that over $1 billion in damage is caused every year in Canada to buried infrastructure. April is national dig safe awareness month, and many hon. members are wearing the Dig Safe pin today and will be taking part in awareness activities. The alliance is working hard to keep Albertans safe by raising awareness. I'd like to personally remind Albertans to click before you dig for any projects affecting buried infrastructure even if it's as simple as putting a fence in your backyard. I thank the alliance for joining us and for their advocacy. If you would please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly Joe Sparling, president of the Postdoctoral Association of the University of Calgary and chair of the Canadian Association of Postdoctoral Scholars. Dr. Sparling holds a PhD in neuroscience from the University of British Columbia, researching treatments for spinal cord injuries. His postdoctoral work at the Hotchkiss Brain Institute at the University of Calgary is focused on understanding the nature of neurodegenerative diseases like Alzheimer's. I thank Dr. Sparling for his contributions to the academy and Alberta, and I ask him to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

School Nutrition Program

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has announced an expansion of its school nutrition program. It's a meal program that will help students get a healthy start to their day and help them focus on their learning. It's one way that this government is making lives better for Albertans, and I couldn't be prouder. This program will now be available to every school district in the province. That means students from every single corner of Alberta will now have fresh, nutritious meals and snacks. At some of the schools the kids themselves get to be involved in the preparation of the food.

Now, I'm so proud that this budget is funding this program's expansion, but I was shocked to learn that the Leader of the Opposition questioned the value of a wholesome nutrition program for kids. He seemed to doubt that kids ever go to school hungry. He didn't seem to understand that well-intentioned parents sometimes don't have the means to pack a healthy lunch for their kids. The Leader of the Opposition seemed to suggest we should cut this program. When the Wildrose says that Alberta can't afford school nutrition for kids, it shocks me, Mr. Speaker, because you can't balance a budget on the back of ham sandwiches and apple slices.

Mr. Speaker, I say that we can't afford a generation of kids who go through school hungry. I say that we can't afford to have kids worry about not bringing lunch rather than working on their class projects. And I say that we can't afford these heartless Wildrose and Conservatives who can't recognize after 44 years in power that there are hungry children in schools and we need to fix that. In a province like ours every single child deserves a shot at learning, with a full belly instead of a rumbling one, and I can't think of a better way to make lives better for children across Alberta.

Thank you.

Battle of Vimy Ridge

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The spirit of any great nation stems from great moments in their histories, moments that define them. Sadly, these moments are often conjured during war, where the true soul of a country is laid bare. For Canada no one need look any further than the Battle of Vimy Ridge to understand the defining spirit of what it means to be a Canadian.

In 1917, just 50 years removed from Confederation, our country was still considered by many of the world to be part of the British Empire. Far from home 100 years ago we had one of the greatest moments. We accomplished what had been deemed by many to be impossible, the capture of Vimy Ridge. The French and the British both had paid a terrible toll in previous attempts to capture the ridge. The ridge had become a symbol itself of the Great War, a symbol of death and despair.

Young, wide-eyed Canadians in their olive-green uniforms trained and trained for months in preparation for this battle. This was the first time all four divisions of the Canadian Corps would work together as one Canadian unit. On that cold Easter morning, in the face of enemy fire, snow, and sleet, we lost thousands. But our soldiers advanced, and they captured the ridge piece by piece. It was an absolutely stunning victory.

Our effort was celebrated the world over as a distinctly Canadian effort. No more was Canada just a dominion of the British Empire. At Vimy Ridge a nation, the nation of Canada, was truly born. So strongly had we distinguished ourselves that when the Treaty of Versailles was signed, ending the war, we weren't included with the British Empire; we stood proudly as Canada.

It's been 100 years this weekend since that great battle. We owe everything to these brave Canadians who stood for freedom, who fought for all of us.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Chronic Wasting Disease

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Chronic wasting disease, CWD, is a highly contagious, fatal, transmissible brain disease that threatens both wildlife and the entire agricultural sector. CWD spreads among cervids – deer, elk, moose, and caribou – and persists and remains infectious in the environment. An expert scientific panel years ago confirmed that CWD came to Alberta through captive elk imported from the U.S. in the '80s. It is a sister disease to BSE, or mad cow disease, which crippled the agriculture sector in the U.K. and seriously compromised our own beef industry for a decade.

CWD is vastly more difficult to contain than BSE because the infectious prions move readily between living animals and have repeatedly actually jumped species barriers. The 2016 Alberta government update indicated that "the geographic distribution of CWD continues to expand" and now includes the Milk River, Red Deer River, North Saskatchewan River and northeast Alberta.

CWD poses a significant threat on at least two levels. The first is biological. In addition to animal-to-animal transfer, it persists in the environment and can infect other cervids through the soil and infect root systems of the plants growing in CWD-infected soils. This jeopardizes wildlife ecosystems and hunting- and wildlife-based communities such as our First Nations, who depend on deer and elk for food.

The second threat is economic. With the science and biological threats now documented, it's only a matter of time before large markets such as Europe recognize CWD as a risk to their own wildlife, their landscapes, and their economies. This may result in a ban on North American agricultural products. Without immediate action to address these risks, repercussions are enormous. Only immediate, aggressive, and co-operative interprovincial control measures will mitigate this growing risk in both sectors. We need to remember the lessons from BSE and do something to get ahead of this.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

Urban Development in Calgary-Klein Constituency

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Urban development is a fine balance of creating density with livability, public transportation, and maintaining safe and enjoyable green space. In Calgary's greatest riding, Calgary-Klein, a four-tower development that could be home to nearly 2,000 people is being proposed on the site of a former nine-hole golf course.

Recently the affected community associations, Highland Park and Thorncliffe Greenview, as well as several community members throughout the area and the nonprofit group Calgary River Valleys held the Rally in the Valley. The Rally in the Valley highlighted the concerns that residents have in regard to the proposed development. This development will see the removal of nearly 600 mature trees of all varieties that are home to many species of birds. The area is also a thriving wetland that serves as a stormwater management solution for north-central Calgary. Confederation Creek also runs through the area but has been vaulted for many years. It, too, helps with moving rainwater from the area.

Mr. Speaker, I know the people of these communities, and they are not NIMBYists. They believe in densification and livable, vibrant communities. They just want it done right, and they don't believe that the project should have been approved before the regional water study was available. In Edmonton the buried Mill Creek was daylighted, and the same could be done for Confederation Creek. Instead, Confederation Creek is slated to be buried beneath tonnes of backfill, potentially increasing the risk of flooding.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, an opportunity is being missed where purposeful urban planning and conservation come together to create a development that truly adds to the city of Calgary. Ultimately, the development could have been more innovative and thoughtful, and the city of Calgary should have pushed for design excellence before approving the plan. Conservation and meaningful community engagement should not be an afterthought for development but an integral part of development. Rest assured that we haven't heard the last from these communities.

Thank you.

Strathcona County Library 40th Anniversary

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Strathcona county library is celebrating its 40th anniversary this year. My guests today are representatives from the library's initiatives that are made possible because of them. I am proud to be part of a government that is making life better by supporting these local initiatives. The library's tagline is Your Place for Literacy, Leisure and Learning. I have personally experienced all of that and more.

I immigrated to Canada from Colombia when I was six years old, and I have fond memories of going from school to the Strathcona county library in its then temporary location of many years. I had immigrant parents who had limited money, but they always provided me with opportunities, and walking into that library was just that, with every resource at your fingertips. I found the library to be a safe, welcoming place where I could gather information about my new home, and sometimes settling into a new community is hard. The library resources and services which were not otherwise available to me allowed me to explore a new way of life and new surroundings.

I know my appreciation of the library is not unique. So many people in our community use these services. To expand its reach and to provide services to rural communities, the bookmobile was established 35 years ago. The first bookmobile was converted from a donated school bus. In 2012 its unique design won an award for innovation in public service.

I stand here today to congratulate the organization and to thank them for the positive impact they've had on me and on our community.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Parental Choice in Education

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe the best decisions by government are made at the most local level by the people that are most directly affected, and I believe that the Charter of Rights and the Alberta Bill of Rights are trusted tools to be used to create a just society that lives in harmony. I believe that parents have the primary responsibility for making the key decisions in their minor children's lives, and while the government has the right to act and make laws, those actions and laws must represent the will of the people and respect their rights. A democratic government has the right to rule, but it is restricted by the rule of law and what would be considered reasonable in a free and democratic society.

I've been told by many Albertans that the actions of this government are very worrisome. This government supported an amendment that challenged the right of parents to a diversity of educational choice and then withdrew it under pressure from the opposition. This government used their power to deny 3,500 students and parents their school of choice, and it took the courts to force the government to address the issue in a reasonable, democratic fashion. The Minister of Education inserted himself into a locally developed course because he believed the course to be a throwback to the 1950s and therefore not what schools should be teaching modern young women. Not the minister's call. The government has threatened to defund and to deregulate two independent religious schools, and the minister has ordered schools not to inform parents under any circumstances if their children attend a GSA as if he believes the government is the guardian of those children.

While the government has a duty of protection, it cannot use that as an excuse to restrict parental authority and informed decision-making as outlined by the law. While the government has the responsibility to oversee education, it must respect the rights of parents, diversity of educational delivery, the right to equitable access to taxpayer funding for education, the right to freedom of religious belief, and the rule of law. This kind of balance, this restricted use of power, is the hallmark of democratic decision-making and one that I will defend on behalf of my constituents.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Public Service Contract Negotiations

Mr. Jean: Here is the state of Alberta today: 81,000 full-time jobs have disappeared since this government came into power; 100,000 Albertans are on unemployment insurance; and for those that have exhausted all other options, well, there are nearly 55,000 Albertans relying on income support. That's 20,000 more than just two years ago. This is what's going on outside of the dome here at the Legislature. People are suffering. Albertans are out of work and cannot afford more pay hikes and perks. Why, then, does the Premier refuse to take pay hikes off the table for the public sector?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I have said I don't know how many times now – a lot of times – our government is absolutely committed to negotiating in good faith with the good people who work hard for the people of Alberta in the best interests of Albertans and in the best interests of taxpayers. But in order to ensure that we do that well, we are also going to respect the collective bargaining process, and that is where we are going to do that job. We are not going to do it in this House with the member opposite screaming for people's heads. That gets us nowhere.

Mr. Jean: As of April 1 74 collective bargaining agreements ran out; 400 will be gone in 2017. In just two years public-sector compensation is already on course to go up by a billion dollars. A billion dollars. Alberta is on track to be $71 billion in debt. That means billions of dollars going towards billions of dollars of interest payments every single year instead of what we need them to go towards, sustaining the public service. This is simple. We don't have any more money left. We can't risk digging ourselves into even a deeper hole. Why doesn't the Premier agree with this?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think, you know, it's interesting when the member talks about what we have money for and what we don't have money for. The member opposite wants us to move forward aggressively on giving $600 million back to the wealthiest Albertans, who are struggling to make ends meet on $300,000 a year, and at the same time the member opposite needs six or seven weeks to figure out if he's in support of a mere $10 million program to feed hungry kids in school. There are choices that are being made, and I think we're making the right ones.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Jean: Average weekly earnings were nearly 4 per cent less at the end of January than when the NDP took power, Mr. Speaker. Four per cent. Life for Albertans outside of the cozy halls of this government has been brutal. I've looked families in the eyes who have lost everything, their jobs and their homes. Borrowing indefinitely with no plan to pay it back is simply wrong. It is the wrong move. We can protect jobs without driving our province further into debt. We can. Why can't the Premier just tell the public sector right now that there is no money left, freeze salaries?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the taxpayers of Alberta are really lucky . . .

Mr. Nixon: Point of order.

Ms Notley: . . . that we're in the process, that we're in the chair, and that we're the ones that are leading bargaining because if the member opposite were in charge, you know what would happen? The whole bargaining process would be sent to the courts, and we'd have the Supreme Court of Canada telling us to redo it five years from now, creating a whole bunch of confusion and uncertainty for Albertans, for their families, for investors, and everyone else. Thankfully, we understand the bargaining process even though they don't. We will respect it. We will do the best we can for Albertans, and that's what they elected us to do.

The Speaker: Second main question.

Crime Prevention and Law Enforcement

Mr. Jean: The most up-to-date crime statistics available in our province show that crime is on the rise in our big cities and in our rural areas all across Alberta. Albertans want to feel safe where they live. They want to know that when a crime is committed, the accused will see their day in court. I know the Justice minister has made progress with Crown appointments, and that is good news, but we know that that alone won't be enough. It's simply not going to be enough. What is the Premier doing to ensure that resources are properly allocated and that we reduce backlog in our courts as soon as possible?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, it's interesting. One question is a cut question; the next question is a spend question. It's really hard to kind of keep track of it all. Thankfully, though, we have a minister in this government, the minister in charge of Justice, who has been advocating very strongly to improve and to strengthen our system of justice to ensure that our communities are safe, that our rural communities are safe, that our courts are working better. She's done brilliant work, not yelling at the federal government but talking with the federal government, getting us judges that we've been waiting a decade for. All of this stuff is getting results for Alberta families and building security.

Mr. Jean: Actually, Mr. Speaker, it's about good management of money that doesn't belong to them; it belongs to the people of Alberta.

Recently the Justice minister talked about the importance of police spending more time on the streets and less time filling out paperwork. I think that's a good idea. I couldn't agree more. Efficient use of our existing resources is crucial to ensure that justice is actually served. We hear stories of communities trying to do what they can for law enforcement. They have now done that because of the cap on resources, Mr. Speaker. What specifically is the Premier doing to reduce red tape and time filling out paperwork so that our police can spend their time on the streets instead of filling out that paperwork?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to get up and talk about this. In the last session we passed a bill that made it the case that warrants won't be issued for minor criminal offences so that police are not spending their time on C-Train tickets but on more serious things. Also included in that bill was a portion that allowed them to do e-ticketing so that they don't have to fill out paperwork. In addition, our Crown prosecutors will be taking over bail as a result of a bail review we did, and that will put way more police officers back out on the streets. [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet.

Mr. Jean: I know there were many frustrated residents in Chipman last week after a double homicide took place. While the officers who responded to the call were able to apprehend a suspect – and I thank the RCMP for their hard work – there were serious concerns about the extended length of time it took for the officers to arrive on the scene. It diminished the feeling of safety in the community, Mr. Speaker, and I think all Albertans believe that it diminishes the feeling of security. What actions is the Premier taking to ensure that when an Albertan calls 911, help is on the way in a timely manner, especially when a violent crime is occurring?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, every Albertan deserves to feel that they live in a safe community. That's why we work very closely with the RCMP on such issues. Certainly, deployment is a matter within their jurisdiction, but one of the things that helps police the most is to ensure that they aren't spending a lot of their time at calls that are maybe not best placed with police. That's ensuring that people have access to housing. It's ensuring that people have access to education and hot lunches at that education. It also involves ensuring that they have access to the health care system. So we are making those investments to ensure that the police can be used for dangerous criminals.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Care Worker Safety

Mr. Nixon: Valerie Wolski was a 41-year-old care worker assigned to care for a developmentally disabled man. He had a history of aggression, especially towards females, and was a giant of a man. Pages of his file were hidden from Valerie's employer. Although it had taken several RCMP officers to previously subdue him, Valerie was left alone to supervise him. As a result, Valerie was strangled to death in 2011. It wasn't until February that the fatality inquiry was released. What has the minister done to ensure that what happened to Valerie will never happen again?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, the front-line workers that provide care for vulnerable individuals and disabled individuals in our province do an amazing job in supporting and protecting them. The sacrifices that they make should never mean that they aren't supported to do their job safely. These tragic, terrible events clearly highlight the importance of ensuring that we provide the safety to our staff.

You know, Mr. Speaker, in terms of supporting our care providers, we remain committed to their safety and well-being, and we remain committed to continuing to work through our ministry and with contract providers ...

2:00

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Nixon: What happened to Valerie wasn't a new problem. There was already a recommendation to mitigate the hazards of working alone. The judge wrote, "One is left to wonder whether [Valerie] would be alive today if the recommendations made ... back in 2008 had been followed." The ministry should be tracking and implementing the recommendations that come out of these expensive public fatality inquiries. Will the minister confirm that recommendations are being tracked, and if so, why can't even our judges find out whether her department is paying attention to these recommendations?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. Well, of course, the member opposite is absolutely right. Throughout the history of this process recommendations arising from fatality inquiries have not been tracked. That is why our government is moving forward to develop a database so that we can follow up on these recommendations, so we can track responses by both outside agencies and by government.

Mr. Nixon: The judge's fatality inquiry report rerecommended that at no time should a caseworker be assigned to a resident that the caseworker cannot physically manage, but just a few days after the report was released to the public, there was another serious attack on a caseworker at Elk Island youth ranch. Heather Vanderzee was alone and was almost murdered by two teenage boys. Will the minister please update us on the status of that rerecommendation and tell us what she is doing to make sure that our hard-working, compassionate care workers are protected and will not be killed at work?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It goes without saying that we should be doing everything we can to protect the workers who make the sacrifices to take care of Albertans. You know, after that terrible event we've certainly been working with the Elk Island youth ranch, had their licence on conditional status, and are working with day-to-day oversight with them. There are a number of investigations that looked into that. The RCMP are investigating. Certainly, internally we're doing a review of policy and licensing requirements, and we will act quickly on any findings because, absolutely, we need safety for our contracted staff and we remain committed to ensuring that happens.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. leader of the third party.

Job Creation

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For months this government has been spinning like tops, trying to convince Albertans that they have a handle on the economy. The Finance minister goes on about green shoots while more Albertans than ever need public income support programs to make ends meet. According to U of C public policy more than 50,000 Albertans are currently on income supports as of January, and the numbers are only climbing. To the Premier: since your income diversification and job creation plans have failed so miserably, what are you doing so that more Albertans than ever don't need income support?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much to the member for that important question because, of course, we do know that as a result of the drop in the price of oil and the recession that our province is just trying to come out of right now, people have lost their jobs and families have lost their incomes. One of the things that this government is doing is having their backs. That's something that wouldn't happen if $4 billion was taken out of our operating in one given year, which is exactly what the member opposite proposed to do when they introduced their draft budget. Thankfully, our government is in charge. We're doing everything we can to support Albertans, and we are continuing to work on job creation.

Mr. McIver: The government has Albertans' tax, not their backs.

While government handouts might be saving some Alberta families a few bucks here and there, what they really need are jobs: good-paying, full-time jobs, not the temporary and part-time jobs this government constantly settles for. U of C researchers say that the number of people relying on income assistance is as useful an indicator of economic health as GDP or unemployment data, and by all of these measures the NDP is failing miserably. To the Premier: what do you have to say to the tens of thousands of Albertans forced to rely on income assistance because your government has failed to create the jobs over three jobs programs that you promised? What are you going to do?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll direct the member to look at the Alberta jobs plan document, which is what our government is doing to help diversify the economy through a number of initiatives. We introduced two new historic tax credits, ones that the business community asked the previous government for for decades, which they failed to deliver on. It took a New Democrat government to listen to businesses, to come up with two tax credits that are going to help grow and diversify our economy.

Mr. McIver: The shiny magazine isn't getting people jobs, Mr. Speaker.

As we've said time and again, nobody blames the government for the price of oil. It's how they've responded that's made it so much worse for Albertans: several job creation plans that have created no jobs, an economic diversification strategy that is relying on the craft brewing industry to pull all of us out of the recession, reckless and irresponsible spending today at the expense of the prosperity of our children and grandchildren. We all like beer, Premier, but don't you think it's time that some of the other economy got some help from you? Albertans need help. They need jobs. They need economic opportunities.

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's why our government is doing things like investing $30 billion in infrastructure, creating 8,000 to 12,000 jobs a year. That's why our government is making capital available to small businesses and to entrepreneurs. That's why our government cut the small-business tax by one-third. Those are all things that we are doing to diversify the economy. You know what else we're doing? We're investing in renewable energy and becoming a North American destination for renewable energy infrastructure and investment. There's so much that we're doing. I'm very excited, and we'll keep at it.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For over 20 years I've worked with families and individuals accessing AISH, and there have been serious issues about this program, including accessibility, efficiency, and transparency. Given that the Auditor General raised these same concerns about long-lasting issues plaguing AISH, to the Minister of Community and Social Services: what action is this government taking to address these important concerns?

The Speaker: The Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. I'm proud to be part of a government that is making life better for more than 55,000 Albertans who rely on this important program. We inherited long-standing issues with this program, and we took action, and we publicly posted our plan that will help us improve this program. As well, I've also posted a video for those who rely on this support to understand this plan. We are making significant changes, and we hope that will make life better for many who rely on this.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the AG's report he raises concerns about accessibility of the AISH program. Given that people accessing this program are among the most vulnerable people in Alberta and that they rely on successful and timely access to AISH, what steps is the government taking to make sure that the AISH program is easier to access and use by Albertans who need it?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. We are absolutely committed to making sure that the program responds to the needs of Albertans. I am very proud that we are improving the accessibility by making the AISH application simpler, launching a new website with user-friendly information, and developing guides for Albertans who need help. We are also improving the appeal process and public reporting to ensure the program works for Albertans.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's great to hear that this government is taking action after so many years of neglect. To the same minister: when will these changes be implemented?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, again. We are committed to making significant changes to the AISH program to make it work better, and we plan to have all the work completed by December 2017. During the coming months ahead we will keep Albertans up to date on what is being done to improve this program. Most importantly, we will continue to listen to the people with disabilities to make sure that all of the provincial programs relating to disabilities work for their benefit.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Energy Efficiency Rebate Program Contract

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When asked if the bid package was designed specifically for their Ontario friends at Ecofitt, the environment minister was incensed, claiming the process was open and transparent, and, quote, they were the lowest cost provider, end quote. Well, it looks like this government has misled Albertans again. According to the same minister during estimates yesterday, Ecofitt was actually the third-lowest bid. To the Minister of Environment and Parks: was the government lying when it said that Ecofitt was the lowest cost, or did they mean to say it was the lowest cost from a company with an NDP world view?

2:10

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Just to reiterate what was said yesterday by the minister, there were a number of criteria, including the completeness of the package and the ability to deliver the full program, that were taken into consideration. In terms of the completeness of the package and the ability to fulfill, this was the lowest bid that met all of the criteria. But I want to say to the member who asked the question that in the city of Grande Prairie there are over a thousand people who have signed up for this program, and when people discredit it, they discredit those Albertans who are finding these programs useful and helping them save money and are choosing to sign up for it. I think that's really disrespectful to the people who gave that member his job.

Mr. Loewen: Given that the government lied and it's just the latest reason Albertans can't trust this government and given that the NDP is ripping millions of dollars away from charities and . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, you surprise me that you would, after all of the discussions we've had on this matter, so early on be so emphatic with that kind of comment. Before you move on any further, please reconsider the words that you're using in this House.

You have 20 seconds. [interjections]

Mr. Loewen: Given that the government misled . . .

The Speaker: Excuse me. I don't need comments from other members as well when I make a ruling. Please, hon. member.

Proceed. You have 20 seconds.

Mr. Loewen: Given that the government misled the people and it's just the latest reason Albertans can't trust this government and given that the NDP is ripping millions of dollars away from charities and families and destroying local energy efficiency businesses, all to the benefit of their friends in Ontario, that aren't even giving us the best deal, does the minister realize how insulting this is to Albertans? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to highlight some of the other good work that's happening in attracting businesses from across this country to set up offices in Calgary. The members opposite talk about the outrage at having vacancies in Calgary, and we're doing something to make sure that those are filled. We're attracting good investment to the province of Alberta. Let's talk about some other ridings represented by the Official Opposition. What about in Fort McMurray, where over 800 households have signed up for this very program? They're putting $112 back in their own pockets, and we're proud to be the government that's making that happen.

The Speaker: Your second supplemental.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you. Given that this was a pretty simple question and the government didn't tell the truth to Albertans when it was said that this was the lowest cost provider, did the minister know Ecofitt was not the lowest cost bid? If she did know, why did the government not tell Albertans the truth?

The Speaker: Hon. member, I would ask that you please withdraw the statement "did not tell the truth." Would you please withdraw the statement? Hon. member.

Mr. Loewen: I apologize for the way I said what I meant.

Thank you.

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, I'm proud of the work our government is doing to make sure that we're making life more affordable for Alberta families. That's why we're taking a made-in-Alberta solution. I know the members opposite are used to getting direction from Ottawa, but we're taking a made-in-Alberta solution. We're moving forward to make sure that Albertans can put money back in their own pockets, and Albertans are signing up for this program. In the city of Calgary alone over 37,000 households have signed up for this very program. We're proud to support these residents and residents in all parts of Alberta in making their lives more affordable.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Marijuana Legalization

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The federal government has said that it will introduce legislation to legalize marijuana in a few weeks, but over the past year it has made it clear that its legislation will leave much of the regulation and administration of recreational marijuana to the provinces. Ontario, Manitoba, and British Columbia have all been busy analyzing their policy options and even introducing stopgap legislation. To the minister: other than travelling to Colorado, what specific areas of policy work is your ministry working on?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. We'll probably have to take the answer offline since I won't get it out in 35 seconds. Some of the areas we've started working on have to do with who's going to handle retail, who's going to handle distribution. How do we best keep pot out of the hands of young people in our province? How do we continue to keep our roadways safe as legalization comes forward? Those are our sort of main areas of focus and priority, but we will have lots and lots to say about this.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister. Given that the Justice minister has admitted that there's an enormous amount of work that needs to be done in the province to prepare for recreational marijuana and given that provincially controlled issues include making decisions about, you know, where marijuana can be sold, the age of consumption, the sale of edibles, permitted places to smoke, allowing landlords to make rules governing grow ops, again to the minister – maybe I'll allow you to expand on this – will you please indicate your government's preferred direction on at least one of the above issues?

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we have been doing an enormous amount of policy work around this. As I've said, our primary areas of focus are ensuring that we keep marijuana out of the hands of children and ensuring that we're keeping our roadways safe. But a lot of this will turn on the consultation that we ultimately have with Albertans. We're going to be going out, as the Premier has said, to talk to them about age of consumption, about their safety concerns, about, you know, what they want to see protected in their neighbourhoods and in terms of their children. Certainly, some of those policy directions we have already, but some of them are certainly going to be waiting until we've spoken to Albertans.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Consultation is vital on this major cultural shift.

Given that roadside saliva testing is not yet available but provinces have the ability to set the same administrative rules for drug-impaired driving as they do for alcohol and given that Alberta has a successful zero tolerance rule in place for alcohol, that could be extended to marijuana, to the minister – let me just ask a very specific question – are you at least considering the same zero tolerance rules for novice drivers for marijuana that we currently have for alcohol?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the member quite rightly points out, Alberta can be incredibly proud of its administrative sanctions, which have reduced greatly the amount of impaired driving on our roads, and the government is certainly examining what we can do with respect to those sorts of administrative sanctions when it comes to marijuana-impaired driving. As the member has correctly pointed out, the challenge is that there is no sort of per se limit as of yet in terms of where impairment occurs, but we are examining all of our options.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Health Care Capital Funding in Central Alberta

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Health care professionals organized a public meeting in Red Deer on February 28. The room was packed as they presented information regarding health funding shortfalls within the regional capital plan. In fact, central Alberta makes up roughly 10 per cent of Alberta's population yet receives only 5 per cent of the capital funding. To the Health minister: what is being done to equalize the amount spent in central Alberta with other parts of the province?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. It's important that no matter where you live in this province, you get . . .

Mr. Cooper: Right health care.

Ms Hoffman: . . . the right care . . .

Mr. Cooper: Right place.

Ms Hoffman: . . . in the right place . . .

Mr. Cooper: Right time.

Ms Hoffman: . . . at the right time. Even the members opposite are starting to remember what my mantra is. I like that, Mr. Speaker.

That's one of the reasons why as soon as we were elected, we reversed the deep cuts that were coming under the former government, Mr. Speaker. That's one of the reasons why we're providing stable, predictable funding to the front lines. That's one of the reasons why we're investing, in the Red Deer hospital alone, $21 million to ensure that infrastructure upgrades are done in the Red Deer health facilities, that we require. I'm proud of that.

Mr. Strankman: Again, Mr. Speaker, given that rural residents are seeing resources unfairly directed towards cities and given that an unjust allocation of resources away from smaller centres and rural areas actually puts more strain on centralized facilities, increasing wait times and decreasing positive outcomes, to the Minister of Health: how can you justify the inequity of resource allocation per capita in the central region?

2:20

Ms Hoffman: Well, it's fun to imagine what types of investment would happen in the province of Alberta if the party that's asking the very question moved forward with their plan – thank goodness the voters didn't give them that opportunity – because they wanted to cut $9 billion, Mr. Speaker, just from infrastructure projects. That certainly would make sure that things were far worse not just in one part of the province but in every part of the province. I'm so proud that we're working in partnership, working with a number of community leaders in local ways to move forward on ensuring that we do get that right care throughout our entire province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that all Albertans deserve a high standard of health care and don't need governments picking projects for political reasons and given that this issue is affecting the lives of those in seven central Alberta constituencies, to the Minister of Health. In the central Alberta health region stats show a dramatic shortfall. Who is responsible for this unfair resource allocation?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you to the member for the question. Certainly, he does speak about inequities over many years; some might say 44 years. So next time he's dancing with his new best friends, I encourage him to ask them that very same question, Mr. Speaker. I have to say how proud I am to be part of a government that's making sure that we're putting investments into health care . . .

An Hon. Member: You can dance if you want to.

Ms Hoffman: . . . into education, into the front lines instead of moving forward with cuts that both opposition parties are pushing for, which would make life far worse. Instead, we have a government making life better for Alberta families.

The Speaker: I heard "dancing." I missed something in the event. [interjections] I don't know. National dance week.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the NDP. They have increased their support in Alberta by 160 per cent. They went from 1 per cent of the vote in the Medicine Hat by-election to an average of 2.6 – 2.6 – per cent of the vote in two recent Calgary by-elections. Clearly, the Minister of Finance is doing something right. Perhaps it's the $5 billion carbon tax, or perhaps it's the $10 billion deficit. Does the minister consider the level of Calgarian support for his party to be an endorsement of their fiscal plan?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, what we are doing on this side is we're making tough times better for Albertans. We're assisting Albertans by supporting them each and every day. We're not cutting back their programs and services, something that that side would do without blinking an eye. We are supporting Albertans. We'll continue to support Albertans. We'll continue to work for Alberta.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, asking this minister a question is like trying to nail Jell-O to a wall. I ask a question, and he gives a haiku about some irrelevant topic that nobody asked about.

Yesterday the Member for Calgary-West asked the minister three – three – times if he would appear before the heritage fund committee to address accusations of political meddling in AIMCo . . .

The Speaker: I think that's a preamble. What's the question, hon. member?

Mr. Fildebrandt: Given that three times the Jell-O just slid down the wall, I'll ask the minister real slow: will you or will you not appear before the committee?

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have been clear several times in this House that there is no interference, and if I went to the committee, I'd say the same thing there. There is no interference with regard to AIMCo. Their independence is assured. They invest their money for pension funds, and they do it at their own leisure. They do it, and they do a good job. They were able to get about a 9 per cent return on their investments. They're doing a job. They continue to invest independently.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I would respectfully ask that you contain the preambles. In fact, you already know that's not accepted, so please ask your question without the preamble. Please proceed. Thank you.

Mr. Fildebrandt: I smell a rat, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. member, there's no need for that comment.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, it's called question period, not answer period, for a reason.

When you're responsible for a $54 billion budget, Albertans expect real answers, not talking points written by some partisan out-of-province apparatchiks. Given that he refuses to answer questions about AIMCo, he refuses to answer questions about our credit downgrades, he refuses to answer questions about how . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, please. [interjections] Hon. ministers. The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Tourism Data Collection

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Whether you love the Fraser Institute or you hate it, it's hard to argue with their motto: If It Matters, Measure It. That's why it was so stunning last month in estimates when the tourism minister stated:

. . . it is not useful to do an economic impact assessment on an annual basis. The relatively small changes in overall tourism revenues on a year-to-year basis do not have a significant impact on economic measures such as jobs, companies supported, and taxes.

Wow.

Minister, if you measure what matters but you're not measuring tourism, are you saying that tourism doesn't matter?

The Speaker: The Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know that tourism makes life better for Albertans by bringing people to our province, creating good-paying jobs, and diversifying our economy. The issue that the member is raising is something that he himself is familiar with, an issue that we've had for a very long time, and that's that the methodology that's being used by Stats Canada is not the most reliable one. So we're looking for ways in order to increase the transparency and to find a way to measure all of these things in forms that we can actually use to make informed decisions.

Thank you.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that noted management guru Peter Drucker stated that what gets measured gets managed and given that managing the tourism industry demands measurement of economic activity, jobs created, businesses impacted, and tax revenues generated and given that the tourism minister is responsible for providing leadership and vision for Alberta's tourism industry and given that this tourism minister intends to fly the tourism flame in the fog, in the dark, with no chart, compass, altimeter, or instruments of any kind, to the minister: how are you going to provide strategic leadership to the tourism industry when you can't even be sure which direction it is headed?

Miranda: Mr. Speaker, speaking of flights, we can announce that we've just added a new flight from Mexico directly to Calgary in addition to the ones we have. Obviously, I know a thing or two about flights.

What I can tell the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, is that when we look at tourism, we know that it actually diversifies our economy. It supports good-paying jobs. We're very happy about what we've seen. We're going to continue doing what we're doing right now because it's actually working.

Thank you.

Dr. Starke: You say that it's working. You have no clue whether it is or not.

Given that this government is constantly telling Albertans how tourism is a key component of economic diversification – we just heard it – and given that Drs. Trevor Tombe and Robert Mansell of the U of C's School of Public Policy recently published a research paper entitled If It Matters, Measure it: Unpacking Diversification in Canada and given that the tourism minister has decided that measuring the impact of tourism is not useful, to the minister. You've stopped making measurements, you've stopped collecting data, yet you still claim that tourism is growing and diversifying the economy. You just did. Without any metrics, how are you going to prove it?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. minister.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. As I explained to the member during the estimates, we are looking at the methodology to actually determine the best way forward. There is no consensus between the different jurisdictions on how to measure tourism because somebody landing in Vancouver who makes their way to Calgary, for example, is counted as a tourist in Vancouver but not in Calgary because they're travelling by land. There are disparities in the way by which you measure these things, so we're trying to find a way to come up with a methodology that makes sense. However . . .

An Hon. Member: Time.

Miranda: . . . we're very proud of the work we're doing in this province to support good-paying jobs . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Point of order noted.

The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Gender Identity and Expression in Human Rights Act

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Ten years after a Supreme Court ruling the government finally amended the Alberta Human Rights Act by adding gender identity and gender expression. Recently we've heard the new leader of the third party, a supposed self-proclaimed human rights champion – he said that he would repeal all of the legislation our government has passed. To the Minister of Justice: how has this legislation impacted the lives of Albertans?

2:30

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I was very proud to be able to add gender identity and gender expression to the Human Rights Act. No Albertan should be discriminated against on the basis of who they are and who they choose to be, and no one should be denied basic services just based on who they are. We have heard from many stakeholders that this protection makes a huge difference in the lives of individual Albertans and it makes their lives better.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the new leader of the third party stated in an interview with Maclean's magazine that he found the idea of a woman wearing a niqab in public profoundly offensive, to the same minister: what is the government doing to protect Albertans and ensure that their rights are respected and preserved?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and again to the member for the question. The Alberta Human Rights Act specifically prohibits discrimination on several bases, including race, colour, ancestry, gender, and religious beliefs. It's no secret that the purpose of the act is to ensure that all Albertans are offered an equal opportunity to earn a living, a place to live, and to enjoy services that are available to the public. We're very proud to defend that record, and I think it should go without saying, but we expect everyone to respect the law.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that many Albertans are concerned regarding comments made about repealing all of the legislative changes made since 2015 and given that these changes protect the rights of the LGBTQ community, to the same minister: what impact would repealing this legislation have on Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This legislation was passed to empower transgender Albertans to confront stereotypes and discrimination, which we know still exist throughout society. Repealing the legislation would take Alberta back to the past. Our government is working towards a future, a future where life is better for all Albertans.

Veterans' Licence Plate Eligibility

Mr. Cooper: Outstanding constituent Neil Lowes has served his country for 35 years, including a short stint in the Canadian armed forces and a long and distinguished career with the RCMP. Mr. Lowes contacted me about being denied access to veterans' plates despite being available to retired RCMP officers in other provinces. To the Minister of Service Alberta: why won't your government show respect for the brave men and women of Alberta that have served our country, this small but important recognition of veteran plates?

The Speaker: The Minister of Service Alberta.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our department is actually very proud of our Support Our Troops plates. When the Support Our Troops plates were brought in, it was done in consultation with a number of community groups, including our legions, in order to determine which groups were going to be recognized. One of the issues around this plate is the identification of where funds from the plate would go to, and those funds go to support our troops. We're very proud of this plate and the funds that it provides to military officers who are retired or who are in tough times as a result of their service, so it does support the community.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, given that the executive director of the Royal Canadian Legion has written to the minister endorsing the use of veterans' plates by retired RCMP members and since retired officers are also advocating for the use of these plates, it seems to me that the only person who doesn't think this is a good idea is the Minister of Service Alberta. Why won't the minister respect the Royal Canadian Legion, respect the RCMP, and grant these retired members access to veterans' plates?

Ms McLean: Thank you again for the question. Mr. Speaker, the contract for our plates certainly allows us additional flexibility, and our department has been looking into additional plate options that we can provide to Albertans. I'm certainly happy to be doing that work, and we are going to continue to provide specialty plates to individuals across Alberta as our resources permit. I certainly have had my department have discussions with the Legion about this very issue, so we have followed up on it.

Thank you.

Mr. Cooper: Yes. Your department told them no.

Mr. Speaker, given that the retired RCMP members who have served abroad are entitled to these plates and given that retired RCMP members from other provinces have access to these plates, why did the minister write the Legion's executive director stating that the NDP had no plans to amend the regulations which prohibit Alberta's retired RCMP members from receiving this small but very important recognition?

Ms McLean: Mr. Speaker, certainly we receive a number of requests from the community to change a number of our regulations. Service Alberta, I'm happy to say, actually has the most laws and regulations of all of the departments, but, you know, we're very happy to have discussions with the individuals that the member is referring to to discuss what possible plans we can make going forward in order to ensure that we can have capacity within our legislative agenda to ensure that we can make changes that are important to Albertans and make life better for them.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Support for Unemployed Albertans

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the hypothetical family in my member's statement was struggling to make ends meet due to the failure of a variety of disastrous NDP policies. This morning Social Policy Trends was released by the U of C School of Public Policy, highlighting – guess what? – skyrocketing and troubling social assistance caseloads over the last two years. To the Minister of Labour: noting that the proposed PC budget increased Community and Social Services funding by $33 million, what specific initiatives is your government undertaking to assist Albertans in seeking gainful employment?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our government has been focused very concertedly on making sure that there are resources available for Albertans who are currently looking for work. Through the Ministry of Labour we have a number of workforce strategy programs as well as partnerships with the federal government for labour market development agreements to make sure that there are funds available to support those looking for training or retraining both through employers and through agencies set out to help unemployed Albertans.

Thank you.

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, it's not working. Given that the number of income support caseloads skyrocketed, reaching over 54,000 in January, with no signs of plateauing or even curve bending, and given that these numbers are especially troubling as a last resort after other supports such as EI run out and given that these already troubling numbers do not include AISH, to the Minister of Community and Social Services: what are you doing in support of struggling Alberta families to address this alarming crisis?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. Yes, the income support caseload has gone up, and what we have done is that we have added more money into it instead of cutting funding, as that side has proposed; $5.8 billion or $2.6 billion. That would have made the situation worse. We have increased funding for that. We have come out with a new Alberta child benefit. We came up with a new investment in FCSS. We came up with a $15 minimum wage. We are doing a number of things to help Albertans retrain, get back . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, given that the number of individuals exhausting EI and being forced to collect provincial income supports continues to increase rapidly month after month and given that the unemployment rate in January 2017 was 8.8 per cent, up from 7.5 per cent in January 2016, and given your flagship job-creation strategy, which was an integral part of your campaign platform, was cancelled after creating only one job, to the minister of economic development: you claim to be diversifying the economy and creating jobs, so how do you explain these damning statistics?

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll thank the member. What I will clarify for the member is that since last June 19,000 full-time jobs have been created in our province. I can tell you as well that the Conference Board of Canada, TD Bank, and a number of economists are all forecasting that Alberta will lead the country in growth this year and next year, more than any province, and you know why? Because the budget that we've tabled is stimulating the economy. It's creating jobs. It's diversifying the economy. It's protecting front lines. That government couldn't get it right, and this one would be a disaster.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

2:40

Rural Education

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Throughout rural Alberta school boards are facing unique challenges and are seeing growing gaps between urban school boards and rural school boards because economies of scale simply don't carry over to rural life. Given that some rural schools may be in a position where they'll be forced to close, to the Minister of Education: how is the government addressing equity in education funding for rural school boards?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks for the question. Our government certainly supports small and rural communities. Our funding takes into account that rural school authorities often need and have unique challenges. The equity opportunity grant, for example, and the small school by necessity grant are designed to help rural school boards overcome these challenges. These grants are approximately $113 million and $50 million per year respectively. Certainly, we're working hard to ensure the viability of small schools and rural schools. We know how important they are to the community, and we are investing in them.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

First supplemental.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's per-student funding model doesn't account for the basic costs of operating a school. Given that enrolment may fluctuate over a school's lifetime yet the cost to keep the lights on and the doors open remains fundamentally the same, to the same minister: how is the government working to ensure the long-term sustainability of our rural schools?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I mean, that's a very good question. School construction and modernization represents one of the most important investments that we can make in our children's futures and in the future of the province. That's why we've invested more than $1.9 billion today to support more than 200 school construction projects, and over half of these projects are located outside of our urban centres, projects like the new schools in Irma, Huntsville, the Camilla school replacement. These are projects that will be home to thousands of children over their lifespan and become important community centres for those communities.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Education: besides the names he has mentioned, what is the government doing now to support rural education?

Mr. Eggen: Well – and this is very important indeed – throughout Budget 2017, despite the significant economic challenges by the province, we are supporting our students by continuing to provide school authorities with stable funding. Alberta Education and, for example, Ag and Forestry have partnered together to fund a research report on the impact of schools in rural communities. A progress report was presented by a research team in 2016, Alberta Rural Education Symposium. The report is forthcoming. Our government is also providing rural transportation grants to the tune of about $141 million, which is almost 50 per cent of all of our transportation . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Hon. members, I have a request for unanimous consent to introduce a group who has arrived.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House a class from The King's University. This class is here to learn about climate change and how the government functions. I was pleased to hire one student from a similar class last summer, and I know that the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar and I share a great respect for the students of The King's University and their instructors. I would ask the class and their instructors, Dr. Michael DeMoor and Dr. John Hiemstra, to rise and receive the customary welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Cooper: I'd like a point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order. Okay

You have 20 seconds. We could clear those who wish to leave.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 34(3) I'm rising to advise the House that on the next available Monday written questions 1, 2, 7, 8, 9, and 10 will be accepted, and written questions 3, 4, 5, and 6 will be dealt with. Also on the next available Monday, Mr. Speaker, Motion for a Return 6 will be accepted, and motions for returns 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12 will be dealt with.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Bill 7

An Act to Enhance Post-secondary Academic Bargaining

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce Bill 7, An Act to Enhance Post-secondary Academic Bargaining.

Our government is committed to fair legislation that makes life better for hard-working Albertans, and we are committed to complying with the Supreme Court of Canada decision guaranteeing Canadian workers the right to strike. Bill 7 would modernize the labour relations model for the postsecondary sector so that labour rights at Alberta's universities and colleges are consistent with the rest of Alberta's public sector and with the postsecondary sector across Canada.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 7 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Bill 205

Advocate for Persons with Disabilities Act

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to request leave to introduce Bill 205, the Advocate for Persons with Disabilities Act.

Mr. Speaker, this bill would establish an advocate for persons with disabilities in Alberta with the power to represent the rights, interests, and viewpoints of persons with disabilities. Creating an advocate will make the lives of Albertans better. It will provide much-needed support to people with disabilities and their families in this province. I am pleased to say that this bill responds directly to concerns that I've heard for many years from the disability community.

I look very much forward to the discussion with my colleagues in this House, and I thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 205 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings, with your indulgence. The first is the latest report from a group of experts in North America from the Alliance for Public Wildlife: The Challenge of CWD.

The second is a reprint of a science article from Norway highlighting that Norway plans to exterminate a whole herd of reindeer to stop the fatal infectious brain disease.

Dr. Starke: Who will pull Santa's sleigh?

Dr. Swann: Not funny at all.

The third is actually a restaurateur in Calgary-Mountain View who has identified that the carbon tax is going to increase his costs by $10,000, local property tax increases have added to his losses, and the minimum wage increase has meant a total loss of about $40,000 per year from his restaurant business, The Main Dish, and Jason Zaran is the owner.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gottfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today with respect to the questions asked by our caucus leader and myself. One is an urgent media advisory from the University of Calgary School of Public Policy titled Increase in Social Assistance Caseloads in Alberta: Numbers Rocketing Upwards with No Sign of Plateau.

The second tabling is also from the University of Calgary School of Public Policy, titled Social Policy Trends: Income Support Caseloads in Alberta.

Thank you.

2:50

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the requisite number of copies to table of yet another paper from the School of Public Policy at the University of Calgary, by Dr. Trevor Tombe and Robert Mansell, which I referenced in my questions in question period. It's entitled If It Matters, Measure It: Unpacking Diversification in Canada.

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and table a letter written by the hon. Minister of Service Alberta and Status of Women to a Ms Tammy Wheeler, the executive director of Royal Canadian Legion Alberta-NWT Command, giving the legion an indication that the government would not be acting on what is a very, very reasonable request.

The Speaker: Well, hon. members, I believe we may have arrived now at the points of order. I came to work with a lunch kit in my hand and a song in my heart, but it has been an interesting day.

I think, Opposition House Leader, it was a point of order that the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre raised.

Point of Order Language Creating Disorder

Mr. Cooper: Yes. Thank you. On behalf of my colleague from the riding of Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre – oh, I'm speaking, for those of you following along at home, from Standing Order 23(j), language of an abusive nature likely to create disorder.

Mr. Speaker, it's a little unfortunate to have to rise two days in a row. I know that the language that was used by the Minister of Municipal Affairs is unlikely to be found in the Blues because it certainly wasn't directed at you. From time to time language across the bow, as you might say, does increase in a manner that isn't positive. Yesterday we saw the government calling the opposition idiots. Today the minister called us a bunch of morons. I don't think that either of these is parliamentary. I would ask if he would withdraw and apologize because that's certainly what members on this side of the House heard him say.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am informed by the Minister of Municipal Affairs that he did not say those words, so I don't know where the Official Opposition House Leader is getting it from.

The Speaker: Hon. members, as the Opposition House Leader has indicated, I did not hear the phrase, and I'm not, therefore, in a position to rule on it. I accept the hon. members at their word, but I would therefore move on.

Government House Leader, you have a point of order.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, it's been a busy day. In explanation for my short memory, this morning was my estimates, so I'm a little bit shell shocked, but that's fine. It all went fine.

The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky said the word "lie," Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Could you sit down, please?

Mr. Mason: Yeah. Sure.

The Speaker: I believe, if that's the matter that we're dealing with, I received an acknowledgement from the member, which, rightly or wrongly, I accepted. If it's the reference to the member for Calgary Wapiti, I accepted... [interjections] Grande Prairie-Wapiti. My apologies. Sorry. It's been a busy day. My apologies. For those who are listening, it was not Grande Prairie-Wapiti. Grande Prairie-Smoky. I accepted the apology from the member, and therefore I would respectfully like to suggest that we move on to the third point of order.

Point of Clarification

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. That being equal, I'm rising, then, on a point of order. The point of order that I am rising on is under Standing Order 13(2), "The Speaker shall explain the reasons for any decision on the request of a Member." It does happen to be on this particular point that we almost had a discussion with respect to the use of language inside the Chamber.

Last week, Mr. Speaker, you made a ruling in this House that words like "misled," in fact, if they weren't directed at one member of the Chamber, were not unparliamentary. My colleague from Grande Prairie certainly did not say that any member of the government had lied but only said that the government was lying or had lied. It is significantly different. The Minister of Energy had an opportunity to say that the opposition misled this House, which you ruled wasn't out of order. As such...

The Speaker: Hon. member, which point of order are you speaking to? Which matter?

Mr. Cooper: The point of order is under 13(2), where you required an apology from a member of the House, my colleague from Grande Prairie. You required an apology from him, yet there have been times when the government has used unparliamentary language in making an accusation against the opposition, saying that we misled the House, which is in our opinion unparliamentary, but because they said that all of the opposition misled the House, you ruled that it wasn't.

In this case my hon. colleague said that the government had lied to Albertans, which is virtually the same thing as misled, and you asked him for an apology, yet you didn't from the government side. So I'm just looking for some clarification on your ruling, on why you would make that ruling in this case and not in another.

The Speaker: I've determined that it's the same issue that you're talking about. The explanation is that – we have discussed this many times in this House – it's about context, the context in which words are used. The fact of the matter is that we've had a considerable waste of time, quite frankly, in my humble opinion, in the last three to four days about uses of various words in this House. In this situation I cautioned not only today but also two days before about using these words, and we saw the consequences of that in here.

So my explanation is exactly the same one that I've used in the past: you cannot continue to use those kinds of words, particularly once I've asked that they not be referred to. In fact, in this instance I did accept an apology, but as is apt occasionally in this place, sometimes there are conditional apologies that are offered. All of us ought to look to using sincere words when we do make such apologies.

I believe in the same way that I addressed the Government House Leader with respect to the explanation of the use of apologies, I would consider, with the ample information that we all know, the matter closed.

Are there any other points of order?

Point of Clarification

Mr. Cooper: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Because points of order aren't heard during question period, as you know, I raised this point of order at the end of question period. It is again with respect to a ruling that you made during question period and seeking some clarification so that we can ensure an orderly functioning of the House on an ongoing basis. I'm seeking clarification as to why you chose to withdraw a question or to not allow the question to be completed when my hon. colleague from Strathmore-Brooks was asking the Minister of Finance a question about whether or not he would be attending a committee. As you know, the standing orders allow for any member to seek some clarification from you, so that's what I intend to do.

Preambles, Mr. Speaker, inside the Chamber here in Alberta have been an issue of significant discussion over a long period of time. There has been a lot of precedent that has gone into the use of preambles and what indicates a preamble and what doesn't. As you know, I have advocated on behalf of the rules of the Assembly to have a much clearer rule as well as getting away from preambles; however, we have not arrived there yet.

As such, my hon. colleague from Strathmore-Brooks had on numerous occasions throughout his question – and I don't have the benefit of the Blues, but I believe written on his question here is, in fact, three times where he utilized the word “given,” which traditionally in this House has been accepted as the continuation of one question. That then allows a member and the opposition side of the House to do what we are here to do; that is, to hold the government to account. As such, he was engaging in utilizing language that has been traditionally accepted in this House. However, you, sir, chose to go in a different direction and removed both his opportunity to finish and the minister's opportunity to answer. I'm just looking for some clarification around how we will know when you will and when you will not be removing questions and potentially infringing on the speech of members here in the Assembly.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, it is very apparent to me that the Official Opposition is engaging in a campaign of testing the limits of the House. They repeatedly tried to provoke the government as well as yourself in question period today by using terms that they know are unparliamentary like “lie” and are attempting to challenge the role that the Speaker plays.

The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks started his supplementary question with the words “I smell a rat, Mr. Speaker.” Well, we let that slide. We easily could have raised a point of order. But it's clear that the opposition wants to make as many points of order as possible, trying to prove some sort of a point because they didn't like a ruling the other day. It's rather childish, and it's really beginning to affect the ability of this House to conduct the business of the public. We need to deal with it, and I think that you have been doing an excellent job today with respect to that.

I wanted to read from O'Brien and Bosc, page 497, Mr. Speaker. It says:

Presiding over the daily Question Period is regarded as one of the most onerous and difficult tasks undertaken by the Speaker.

I think you have probably plenty of sympathy from Speakers past, Mr. Speaker, around the Commonwealth.

The Speaker ensures that Question Period is conducted in a civil manner, that questions and answers do not lead to debate and that both sides of the House get to participate. As Speaker Fraser noted in The House of Commons at Work:

Question Period places heavy demands on the Speaker of the House. He must at all times remain keenly alert and attentive, keep a perceptive eye on the whole assembly, be aware of the mood of the House and be familiar with the national and international issues likely to be raised.

The Speaker: Government House Leader, you've gone on at some length. Brevity, please, to the point.

Mr. Mason: Yeah. Okay. I've skipped a bunch to get right to the point, Mr. Speaker.

In ruling a question out of order, the Chair may suggest that it be rephrased in order to make it acceptable to the House. Or, the Speaker may recognize another Member to pose the next question.

Mr. Speaker, it is my view that you're well within your authority given the attempts by the Member for Strathmore-Brooks to create disorder in the House.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Today the member frequently disregarded my interventions and requests in the use of his language. Particularly, the use of the phrase “I smell a rat” is quite significant and could in fact reflect on this House. It's entirely the Speaker's prerogative and, in fact, I would submit, responsibility to proceed to the next question given the kind of disregard that I saw today. For background I would cite page 169 of the House of Commons Procedure and Practice. If a member persists in refusing to obey the direction of the Speaker in the chair, he refuses to recognize. I did not name the member; however, to me, it was quite obvious that my responsibility was to address the particular comments that were made, that clearly had an impact on the tone of this House.

Might I say to you again, members, that maybe House leaders want to get together and see if you can find a better way of communicating with each other other than the language that's used.

Orders of the Day

Government Motions

Provincial Fiscal Policies

13. Mr. Ceci moved:

Be it resolved that the Assembly approve in general the business plans and fiscal policies of the government.

[Adjourned debate March 22: Ms Renaud]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: On the budget?

The Speaker: Government Motion 13.

Mr. McIver: Government Motion 13. Okay, here we go. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, indeed. The business plans and the budget. That's what I was looking for, Mr. Speaker. Thank you. I'll be brief because I have to get to the children in care committee continuation that occurs at 3:30 today, Mr. Speaker.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

Or Madam Speaker. I think I was right both times because they just switched. Usually I'm wrong both times, but we'll call that a happy circumstance.

Madam Speaker, it's my pleasure to rise to speak briefly on the government's budget and business plans. Sadly, Madam Speaker, I wish I had happier things to say about the government's budget and business plans, but, alas, they are not in the best interest of Albertans. They're not in the best interest of Albertans today, and they're not in the best interest of Albertans in the future.

Madam Speaker, yesterday in this House I think it was quite telling that the environment minister stood up during a couple or three of her answers and emphatically talked about $10 billion. The only thing she didn't do was bite her knuckle like that guy from Austin Powers when she said: $10 billion. To be clear, she didn't bite her knuckle like the guy from Austin Powers, but outside of that, it sounded just like that. And she was right in making the point that $10 billion is a lot of money. I agree with the environment minister that $10 billion is a lot of money. I think I can make that point without biting my knuckle either right now, Madam Speaker.

The fact is that that's what the government's deficit is this year and was last year, more than $10 billion. The environment minister, I think, gives all of us quite a lesson about what a negative path this government is going down, taking us into a $10 billion plus deficit every year, with no plans or promises from the Finance minister to even balance the budget for more than five years. I think it's about 2024.

Madam Speaker, the government I think reduced their deficit this year by one-tenth of a billion dollars. So using that math, at this rate it will take them 102 years to balance the budget. Then it will take them — oh, I don't know — 500 to a thousand more years to actually pay it all back after they're done that. I don't think anybody in this House thinks that's reasonable, yet that unreasonable path is exactly the one that this government is on on behalf of Albertans, and it's unconscionable.

What we do know from the government's numbers, not mine, is that in three or four years we're going to be in debt, that Albertans will be in debt courtesy of the NDP government $71 billion. Horrendous. Everybody in Alberta should be concerned about that, especially when we hear in recent weeks the Finance minister saying: well, Albertans shouldn't have to pay for that. Well, Madam Speaker, there's no one but Albertans to pay for that. No one is going to ride in and pay for it. This isn't like your first credit card when somebody helps you out if you get in trouble with it. No one is going to ride in and pay Albertans' debt, but the NDP government doesn't seem to have any concept or understanding or appreciation of that fact. They are just piling obligation after obligation onto today's children and grandchildren and, more immediately, Albertans that are out of work.

If there's anything that accentuated just what a bad job this government is doing and what a bad budget they've put forward, it's the University of Calgary's research, that was tabled by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek today, showing 55,000 people on income support, 20,000 more than a few months ago. That's not 20,000 more than when the previous government was here; 20,000 more than a year ago with this government.

As much as this government likes to say, "Oh, it's all the oil price; that's the only thing that's bad," the oil price has been low for the whole two years, and it's getting worse and worse and worse because this government is making it worse and worse and worse with every move they make. And the biggest moves they make to make it worse and worse and worse are the moves that they make with their annual budgets, driving Alberta into the ditch financially, laying huge burdens on our children and grandchildren.

Thirty years and 20 years and 10 years from now when children in Alberta who are today in elementary school are trying to get their first job after they're finished school, are maybe trying to get married, maybe trying to save up to buy their first house, they are going to be burdened with the yoke of a huge debt that they have to pay before they can raise dollar one for that down payment on that house. Why? Because they're going to be paying for light bulbs that this NDP government has bought in 2017. Disgraceful, despicable, unconscionable. I'm sure there are a lot more words. This government and these NDP MLAs are part of supporting a budget that is completely against the best interests of Alberta.

Now, the only good news that I can give you on this, Madam Speaker, is that at least in two Calgary ridings where there was a federal by-election this week, 97.4 per cent of people rejected the NDP. Why do I know that? Because only 2.6 per cent of them voted for the NDP. That's 2.6. You know what? That should be a lesson to these members. You know, I would advise the members who are not in cabinet that the next time you're in a caucus meeting, you might want to take your cabinet and your Premier behind the woodshed and tell them that they need to put Alberta on a better path. [interjections] They need to put Alberta on a better path.

I can see I'm under their skin because they're trying to take my time here, Madam Speaker. I'm sure they feel so passionately about it that they'll be happy to pop up and defend $71 billion in debt. They'll be willing to get on their feet and defend 55,000 people on income support, many of whom are there because of policies that their government has put in place and defends today and that will put more people on the unemployment line in the weeks and months and years to come. They are the cause, and Albertans know that. At least, all but 2.6 per cent of them seem to know it, as measured most accurately by an election that took place this week.

Madam Speaker, this is a very bad budget. This is a budget that destroys jobs instead of building them. This is a budget that drives investment out of Alberta instead of bringing it in. In fact, we've seen evidence of that, too. You know what? The NDP has largely killed international investment coming into Alberta. Not only have they made it harder to bring international investment in, but billions of dollars of international investment that were in Alberta have left in recent weeks. Shell oil: billions of dollars. [interjection] Yes. You know what? CNRL bought that. CNRL is a Canadian company, and they're fantastic, and I'm so grateful that they bailed Alberta out and partly bailed this NDP government out, but it doesn't change the fact that it cut off billions of dollars of international investment that used to be here and isn't here now.

Now, I'm probably talking to the six people that are watching on television because I'm not sure that the government members have any intent to appreciate what's good for Alberta. I guess we'll know that when they vote for this budget. That'll be all the evidence we need that there's no intention to vote for the betterment of Alberta because it's clear to all but 2.6 per cent of the people that this is bad for Alberta. It's as obvious as the day is long.

Madam Speaker, when I talk to Albertans, whether I'm in Edmonton or Calgary or anywhere else, what I still constantly get is angry support, and what I mean by that is that people grab me by the lapels and say: you better be ready to become government in two years because they've got to get rid of that government. It's not because they love me so much; it's because they have to get rid of the government they have today. They are disgusted by it. They know it's killing their economic future. They know that it's killing their future today. They know that they all have somebody that they love that has lost their job or will lose their job because of the policies of this government. They're driving businesses out of business. You know, 30 per cent of the towers in downtown Calgary are out of business.

The biggest export this government has is jobs to Houston from Calgary, high-paying jobs. They used to pay for the schools, they used to pay for the hospitals, they used to pay for the roads, and they used to pay for the social services because those high-paying jobs come with a big tax load as well. The jobs went out, the tax load went out, and the cupboards are becoming more bare every day as a result of this budget of this NDP government and the harm and damage that they are doing to Alberta. I believe it will take two, three decades to undo the damage, starting in 2019, that these people are doing.

Why do I think that? The analogy that I use is that if you give somebody a shoelace and give them 10 minutes to tie knots in it, it will take a lot more than 10 minutes to untie the knots in that shoelace. This government is tying so many knots in the shoelace that Alberta is depending upon that it is shameful. They are setting this province back decades before this province will have any chance of being back to the economic powerhouse that it was before they started their efforts to trash it in 2015.

Madam Speaker, I have to get to another committee. I know the government actually needs to hear more from me. It would do them some good. It would really do them some good if they actually heeded the good advice in the warnings that I'm giving them.

I'll say this in closing. Between now and 2019: tick-tock, tick-tock. There is very little time for this government to start making better decisions than the abysmal decisions they've made up until now, which is why I do not support this. Why do I not support this budget? Because I love Alberta, and I support Alberta.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak?

Mrs. Littlewood: Is there 29(2)(a)?

The Acting Speaker: Yes, there is. The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I always love to hear what the Member for Calgary-Hays has to say about budgets in this province. He asks if we support the spending and support the decisions that we're making in this budget, and I absolutely support the decisions that we're making in this budget.

I read something a while ago, and it talked about people that come into government with progressive points of view who believe in social safety nets, people that believe in investment, people that believe in taking care of each other. It said that the longer those people are in government, unfortunately they start to lose sight of the things that they were elected on. I think about that every day when I do this job. I think about the impacts that I make to every single person that needs help in this province.

I think about my mom, and I've talked about my mom a number of times in this House. Taking care of her since I was about 14 has not been easy, and I know that it's a story that a lot of people in Alberta share. So when I think about the things that we spend money on and that we have something coming forward in investing an extra $200 million in home care, I know that it makes an impact on real, everyday, hard-working Albertans that need support.

If I need to remember why I do this job and why I care about every single person in my community, I go to my mom's house and I do things that I don't love to do. I go into my mom's house and I clean her shower. I go into my mom's house, and she deals with incontinence at her age, and that's a tough thing to deal with. So I go in and I wash her floor, and that reminds me every single time why I care about doing what we are doing. Every time I go into her house and I see the medication that she gets home care to assist her with, that someone comes to her home twice a day to make sure that she has her antidepressants, that she has her medication that helps with hallucinations, I know that those things are not just my story. I know that those things affect people in every corner of this province.

Investment is something that is important, and to decry that investment is just such a shame. It tells me that there are people that have been doing this for too long and have become disconnected from the real struggle that people have in this province.

That's what I do. I think that it's important and incumbent on every one of us to do things every day that make us uncomfortable because it reminds us of how important it is. It reminds us why we ran. It reminds us of why it is so important to go out into our community and talk to people about what they are still struggling with.

I am so proud that we have a government that stands up for people like my mom, somebody who has been on disability for almost her entire life because she has struggled so hard with mental health. It makes me so proud to finally have a government that cares about that, that doesn't just do piecemeal work to allay the worst that happens that we see. In recent history, in the last 40 years, it's only when we have the worst outcry from the public that something is done.

I want to be proactive. I want to invest in things like home care and health care and continuing care and long-term care. I want to invest in making sure that we are looking at how AISH serves Albertans. I am so proud that I can go to my mom and I can tell her that we care about her and that we are doing something about it. We are not just talking about it, and we are not just making it a platform pledge or an election pledge. We are actually doing something about it.

Those people that come and help my mom: they are godsend because without them it is very difficult, being an MLA, to take care of my mom. With that support I can actually make a difference in her life, and I can make a difference in the lives of every hard-working Albertan in this province.

With that, I will conclude my remarks and just say that I am so proud of this budget. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Miller: Madam Speaker, I'd like to move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 1 An Act to Reduce School Fees

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Chair. I have an amendment that I'll circulate, and I will proceed when I hear from you.

The Deputy Chair: I just need the original, Member, and then you can go ahead.

Dr. Swann: My amendment reads as follows. I move that Bill 1, An Act to Reduce School Fees, be amended by striking out section 4.

Let me start by saying that I support the intent of the bill and what the bill does to make life more affordable for parents, guardians, and students in school. In fact, the Alberta Liberals believe the government should go even further by eliminating school fees altogether. However, I recognize that the government has chosen to take a step in that direction by reducing school fees.

I'd like also to point out that the government needs to find a more sustainable way to continue to reduce school fees other than, quote, finding efficiencies. There needs to be a funding plan that will continue to reduce fees over the long term, especially as our population grows and our education system becomes more costly. I expect the government may have an idea about where it wants to find these funds, and I will speak more about that in a moment.

When Bill 1 was announced, a government news release indicated: "If the bill is passed, Alberta parents will no longer have to pay school fees for instructional supplies or materials or for eligible students taking the bus to their designated schools." This was great news and well received by many if not all Albertans. But when people started to take a closer look, it turned out that the term "Alberta parents" did not mean that all parents will no longer have to pay school fees. In particular, those who have students in charter schools can expect to get a different treatment altogether. Why is that?

Well, let's take a look at what a charter school is. According to the government of Alberta's Charter Schools Handbook:

A charter school is a public school that provides a basic education in a different or enhanced way to improve student learning.

... In general, charter schools complement the educational services provided in the local public system. They represent an opportunity for successful educational practices to be recognized and adopted by other public schools for the benefit of more Albertans. Although types of charter schools vary ... they do have the following common characteristics.

Access – Charter schools cannot deny access [to any particular individual or group] ...

Choice – A charter school will provide enhanced or innovative delivery of public education to students. This means that parents and students have increased opportunity to choose an education that best serves [their child's] needs.

Curriculum – The curriculum delivered by charter schools will be structured around a basic education as defined by Alberta Education and described in the Programs of Study. Generally, education programs must meet the conditions outlined in section 39 of the School Act. This allows students to transfer to or from any public school with a minimum of disruption and to obtain a high school diploma ...

Funding – Charter schools are eligible for the same provincial funding per student as any other public school ...

Tuition Fees – Charter schools shall not charge tuition fees. However, they may charge parents for fees for instructional supplies or materials, as may all schools in the public education system.

It seems pretty clear to me, Madam Chair, from the government's own description that charter schools are, in fact, public schools. Again I ask: why the special treatment? Why are they not receiving a reduction in school fees?

I received a letter from the Association of Alberta Public Charter Schools in which they write:

As full-fledged members of the public school community, we find the decision to exclude us from Bill 1 An Act to Reduce School Fees quite concerning.

... This is an excerpt from this letter:

"In publications and the Minister's letter to parents ...

And this is from the government side.

... we read, 'Our government understands that times are tough for Alberta families and is working to make education more affordable. We believe that all students deserve access to a quality education in an Alberta school, and we are committed to reducing financial barriers such as school fees.'

Given this laudable and strong statement of support for Alberta families during tough times, we [in the charter school community] believe it may have been an oversight not to include those families who choose a public charter school for their child(ren)'s learning environment."

Now, here is where I would disagree. I don't believe this is an oversight at all. The association is likely being diplomatic in their language to the minister. It's quite clear to me that the government is intentionally singling out charter schools for different treatment. My question is: why? Why is it not being transparent about its intentions? It appears to me the government wants to draw a line in the sand with regard to funding. On one side are the public schools; on the other are private schools. Clearly, in this bill the government is lumping charter schools together with private schools.

Now, if anyone was curious about the motivations, they would need look no further than Public Interest Alberta's media release of February 23, 2017, in which they with 13 other organizations said, "[We] urge the provincial government to phase out the public funding of private schools ... over three years and reallocate the money to fulfill its education-related campaign promises." I think this is exactly the scenario the government is setting up with this bill, and if it is, they should be honest about it and not do it covertly through regulations. They should come right out with it and tell charter schools, their students, and parents that the government is going to reduce fees for everyone else, gradually raise fees for charter schools so that parents can get accustomed to paying more, and then slowly defund charter schools.

To be clear, Alberta Liberals believe public funds should go to support public education. Furthermore, we believe accredited private schools either need to be incorporated into the public system and be subject to all the same requirements or not receive public funding.

But charter schools are not private schools; they are public schools. In fact, many of these charter schools serve marginalized, low-income, and less abled students. They're providing an essential support for some of the most vulnerable people in the province. For example, Almadina School Society serves the lowest income families in Calgary. The Boyle Street Education Centre in Edmonton is the same. The Centre for Academic and Personal Excellence Institute serves special needs in Medicine Hat. These charter schools and others like them play a valuable role in society and Alberta education. They are not cherry-picking students. They are filling a need, a need that has been recognized and accepted by the government.

Limited resources. If the government has acknowledged that – and they have – then limited resources should surely be directed to the lowest socioeconomic status schools, whether charter or other public. If we're going to cherry-pick, let's cherry-pick those who are most vulnerable financially. This is a move to help families with affordability and access to education. Do not discriminate against those who are most vulnerable. It's against your principles. Do they not deserve the same treatment, especially given their vulnerability, many of them? Do the parents of their students not deserve the same reduction? When people see noncharter public schools not getting breaks, what does that do to enrolment?

The minister appears to be establishing one set of rules for those with school boards and a completely different set of rules for the charter schools. The Association of Alberta Public Charter Schools doesn't think this is right, and I don't believe that the government is being transparent on this matter. If the government wants to eliminate funding for charter schools, say so. Otherwise, the government should treat them like all other public schools and include them in the reduction of school fees.

This is why I'm proposing an amendment to strike out that section of Bill 1 and leave the original wording in the School Act. This would keep charter schools together with public schools, and any changes to the fees they can charge would be applied consistently across all public schools and to all parents, as was promised when the bill was announced.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak to amendment A1? The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Madam Chair. I do want to thank the member for the amendment. I think that there are some concerns that I have about this amendment. To be very clear, the government made a decision to invest over $50 million with An Act to Reduce School Fees. That's a first-step measure, right? We're moving in a direction that – this is something that affects the most number of students we possibly can. That's over 600,000 students that are going to be affected by this legislation. What this amendment would do is that it would create a situation where charter schools would no longer be able to charge fees – either they already have or need those funds – without necessarily having that funding recovered. That would create a situation where we could see detriments to student education.

I think that because of that, because this is a first step, as we move forward, the conversation will evolve and continue. This is An Act to Reduce School Fees, not to eliminate them. But as we move forward, there will be many more discussions to have. I look forward to those in this House, but right now I think that we should focus on this over $50 million that's going to support over 600,000 students. To maintain that quality of education for all students, I would encourage my colleagues to vote this down.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A1? Seeing none, are you ready for the question on the amendment?

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A1 lost]

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are now back on the original bill, Bill 1. Are there any members wishing to speak to the bill?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[The remaining clauses of Bill 1 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I move that we rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

Mr. Hinkley: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill: Bill 1. I wish to table copies of the amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? All those agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 6

Northland School Division Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce Bill 6 and to speak to it in second reading, the new Northland School Division Act. This is an important piece of legislation that was built in the communities of . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. minister, I'm sorry to interrupt. Are you moving second reading?

Mr. Eggen: Yeah. Oh, I'm sorry. I'm moving second reading.

The Acting Speaker: Go ahead.

Mr. Eggen: I'm sorry. Madam Speaker, I apologize. You know, sometimes these things slip by me.

Okay. Here we are. This important piece of legislation was built in the communities of our Northland schools, and it is, Madam Speaker, a very, very large community. I just want to give you . . .

Cortes-Vargas: Can you just say that and read it?

Mr. Eggen: Oh. I am moving second reading of Bill 6, Madam Speaker.

Connolly: I'm sorry; I missed it.

Mr. Eggen: You can read Hansard later.

All right. For those of you who are not familiar, the Northland School Division Act was first proclaimed in 1965, and it was, I believe, even previous to that, in 1960. At this time Métis schools in our province were run by a government organization, and many of the First Nation students in the area at the time were attending residential schools run by missions or were not able to access schools at all. The Northland school division was seen as a way to bring those students into the public education system and to improve educational outcomes for First Nations and Métis students and students living in remote northern communities.

The large geographic area that is Northland was established by the first act, and this area remains largely unchanged today. While Northland is made up of just 23 schools, we know that it is spread over an area that is just a little bit short of the size of Germany. So it's big, very big.

Now, we know that historically the governance model of Northland did shift, but for at least the last 30 years the division's corporate board was made up of 23 chairs, which were called local school board committees. In 2010 former Minister of Education Dave Hancock dissolved that board and put an official trustee in place. I have had a chance to discuss the circumstances with the former minister, and he has said to me that, among other things, the governance model that was previously in place was not working for students. It was much too large, and there was a blurring of lines on roles and responsibilities between the corporate board and the staff in Northland schools.

Cost was also an issue as we know that Northland was spending about $300 per student just on governance while some of our other school boards in the province, just to give some perspective, spend as little as $30 per student on governance.

Last year I made the decision to put a new official trustee in place by the name of Lois Byers. Her role and her work are largely focused on making her own position obsolete, the classic job where you end up working yourself out of a job. Ms Byers has been tasked with helping my department re-establish this elected board.

This Northland School Division Act sets out a path by which to do so. Through Bill 6 we will be moving the division to a ward structure that is typical of our 60 public Alberta school boards, but Northland will be a bit larger, with a composition of between seven and 11 trustees. This is a recognition of the very large size of the division, Madam Speaker. We will also replace the local school board committees with more traditional parent school councils, and we will enshrine a formal engagement process that will require routine discussions about education at the local level, the ward level, and the jurisdiction level.

The details of this act were developed through a series of consultations that go back several years, but the most important piece of that was a series of 24 engagement sessions that we held between last November and February of this year. First, we held pre-engagement discussions with community leaders and other influential representatives in Northland communities. We followed that up with a series of open houses that all members of the community could attend. Then we held one-on-one meetings between my department and some of those who attended the previous sessions. Together we reached more than 200 people through this process.

I also have personally contacted the Treaty 8 organization and had a good discussion with Grand Chief Rupert Meneen as well as Billy Joe Laboucan, chief of Lubicon Lake, and Chester Auger, education director for Bigstone Cree Nation. I've also met multiple times with Gerald Cunningham, president of the Metis Settlements General Council, and I was proud to have him stand by my side as we introduced Bill 6 here in the Legislature.

President Cunningham said on that day, and I quote: the Métis settlements are very inclusive when it comes to our governance and decision-making processes, so restoring a democratically elected board for Northland school division is a positive step towards giving our people a greater say in who makes decisions at the school board level. Unquote. Then he also went on to say, quote: because this system is a significant enough shift from the way Northland has been governed in the past, we are optimistic that it will allow for greater investment toward the success of our Métis settlement learners.

I was also joined in the Legislature media room by Beth Ann Auger, who had been working very diligently to set up a school council in Mistassiniy school in Wabasca. She grew up in a Northland school, and she described that over time the community had lost its way a bit. Some of the challenges with the governance structure of the division were removing the focus away from the students. One of the highlights of my time as minister was hearing her speak in favour of this act. It did move her to tears, Madam Speaker. Beth Ann and the other members of the Northland community know that this legislation is good, but it's only a start. It marks the first step to improving student attendance, achievement, and the quality of education being provided.

I have stated that I intend to put in more funding as well, Madam Speaker, and have support and resources for Northland once we have the new board in place. I will be working with my department to increase per-student funding, and this will give the new board the tools to make a real change in the division.

We know that we can do better, Madam Speaker. We can invest in improvements to our curriculum and introduce indigenous content, history, and perspectives at every grade level. As this House likely knows, we are also in the middle of a six-year development of new curriculum across six subjects, and we have numerous First Nations, Métis, and Inuit representatives involved in that work.

In Northland we can also work to improve their already impressive school nutrition program, which is available to every Northland student, and we can undertake much-needed modernization projects in Northland schools that were way, way overdue, Madam Speaker. There's lots and lots of work that just wasn't done for many, many years.

When I look back to Mistassiniy school, for example, where Beth Ann is working so hard on her school council, we know that the community was promised a modernization by the previous government, but that work had been stalled. Certainly, we can do much better – we have to do better – and it begins with the return to democratic elections in Northland this fall.

Should this bill be passed and then proclaimed, we will do another round of consultation almost immediately on the final ward boundaries for this fall's election so that we have those set by June 1. As I said, the act will set out that Northland will be represented by between seven and 11 trustees. The act also maintains the practice of having Albertans living both on-reserve and off-reserve be allowed to vote in Northland elections because we know that 95 per cent of Northland's 2,700 students are First Nations or Métis and that the entire community needs to have a say over local representation. Once the board is established, they will work both with myself as minister and our official trustee to set a new direction for the division.

Quite frankly, I can't wait to get started on this work, Madam Speaker. This legislation will protect and improve education for students in Northland, and I believe it will mark a start of our efforts to make life better for Alberta families with kids attending Northland schools.

I would ask for support from all members on both sides of the House for this legislation, and I thank you very much for your time this afternoon.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Madam Speaker. This is an issue that is very close to my heart because this is a school organization that is supposed to support schools and constituents in the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo. These are my constituents.

For over 50 years the school board has been in place, and for over 50 years it has not met the needs of the students. The epitome of this lack of support is the fact that the Red Earth Creek school left the Northland school division and joined the Peace River school division. The irony is that the Northland school division is headquartered in Peace River.

In 2016, last year, Madam Speaker, the chief and council from Janvier expressed interest in writing to the MLA for Fort McMurray-Conklin for Father R. Perin school to leave the Northland school division and join a local school board, whether separate or public, within the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo.

So we know that the board did not meet the needs of the students. There are very low levels of high school graduation and student achievement rates. There was also a very dismal attendance record. Kids simply did not go to school, and when they were there, not a lot happened. The board was fired in 2010, and there's been an appointed trustee ever since. What has changed? Nothing.

Now, I understand why this government would wish to reinvigorate the school division despite its history of failing to provide education to our indigenous and Métis peoples. I hope that this bill is a good start and forms a reset for the schools in the Northland school division, but we need to see changes on the ground and changes to outcomes for students. What I don't want to see is for us to simply throw additional funds at the problem, create a process for a new administration and a fresh mandate, with a couple of tweaked guidelines, and then forget about it: it's done; we have a board taking care of it.

I believe that this is a nonpartisan issue and that we all have a part to play in supporting education in our rural and indigenous areas. I believe that this bill presents us as legislators and representatives of the citizens, regardless of their bloodlines, to challenge, support, and work with the communities who are directly affected by this bill. I would like to see what is happening in other jurisdictions with similar issues across the country. While I'm not so sure that the ward system will be any more effective than the previous system, I do believe that we're on the right path by reinstating an elected school board.

I must emphasize that this just isn't the Ministry of Education that needs to focus on this. We need the Ministry of Indigenous Relations to also participate, and we also need the Ministry of Community and Social Services to contribute to this. As well, Her Majesty's Loyal Official Opposition is here, waiting to help assist our good ministers. The shadow minister of Indigenous Relations, the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, would like to assist not only as a part of his portfolio but also as someone whose constituents are affected by this bill. The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View, who is our shadow minister of Education, desires to ensure that these Albertans are fully supported with a comparable education. The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre greatly desires to help these Albertans as he understands their underlying concerns in this very complex issue. I am sure that the members for Peace River, Lesser Slave Lake, and, of course, the Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin and others will also want to participate in this as this is something that we can all contribute to in a positive fashion.

I would propose that this bill be used as an opportunity to open the channels of discussion with our indigenous partners, to challenge these communities with embracing a school division that can provide them with support that ensures a quality school. We need to challenge them to support these schools and these teachers and this process. We need to challenge them that they play a large role in the success of the school, that they're the ones who need to get their kids to school and that they're the ones who need to ensure that these kids are being properly supported to succeed in school.

It's the communities that need to ensure that their children attend and are respectful to teachers and need to instill in our youth the desire to learn. When it comes to success in our school system, there are multiple partners involved in ensuring this: the school boards who support the schools, the teachers and principals who facilitate that direct education, the students who attend these schools, and, most importantly, the parents and the community who must embrace, support, and encourage their children to succeed.

I ask this government that we not be the typical bureaucrats and politicians who throw money at a bill and then move on. This is an issue that will require direct support over a duration of years. My hope is that this government, this 29th Legislature will be the one that makes a true difference in the Northland school division and all of our indigenous brothers and sisters.

Thank you very much.

4:10

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm delighted to speak in favour of Bill 6. I have a long history with Northland school division. I have taught within the division. I worked as an educational psychologist within the division. I visited over half of the schools in the division through my time there.

I have been so interested in the process of getting the board back up and running. I knew about the appointed, you know, board member to run the school in 2010, when it happened, when the old board was dissolved. When I heard that it was up and running, I started on a process of seeing what people I still knew within the division and letting the Ministry of Education know some people throughout Northlands who would be good people to go to, good resource people.

One thing I found interesting is that so many of the people were still working within the division. This is a school division in which there are so many people that stay. They've got very deep roots in that division. They care what happens to the students. They are involved with the schools. These are parents, these are teachers, these are support workers and bus drivers and administrators of all kinds. They are totally invested in what is going on in their schools. This matters to them.

We all want what's best for the students in these schools, but it's not a simple solution. If it was a simple solution or it could have been changed simply, it could have been done years ago.

Walking into the schools, you have never seen such warm, caring, helpful places to be. There's a really, really good bunch of people at work here.

I'll just quickly read – I know I haven't got too much time, but I've got some more things to say. This is a little passage written by – you mentioned Beth Ann Auger from Mistassiniy school. Being as I taught in a neighbouring school, at St. Theresa school in Wabasca, I thought I'd read this. She said:

I completed grade 9 out in Mistassiniy school in the '60s, so that was a pretty long time ago, and it used to be a pretty good school, and we got some pretty good successes out of Northland. I went on to Grouard, then over to Athabasca, and then came to Edmonton to get a college program and went to work for the government. I moved back to my community after leaving for 44 years, intending to retire. That didn't work very well.

Then I started meetings at the PTA back at Mistassiniy. I realized that there were a lot of things that we could do there. My grandkids are all First Nation. They're going to be going through the school program from kindergarten through high school, and I want them all to attend university or college. I'm just so excited. I see this model coming up as a holistic approach to education. That's how I grew up, in a tiny little community with no roads, no water, no lights, and everybody knew each other. There's a lot of work to be done to bring all of that together, and this new model, this new act is going that direction.

I feel so blessed to be here today, to be able to speak about it and to be invited here. This is so overwhelming. It's touching, and I want to thank you for doing the work that you're doing.

That's one representative.

One other thing that I was noticing when I was preparing to come and speak to this bill is that when I went through the list of the people who are on the local school committees right now, so many of them are people that I knew through the years working there. These are people that care about what happened, and they are working towards the success of this division. This is important to people. This matters, and people will do what needs to be done to make it keep on working.

Okay. Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any members wishing to speak to the bill?

Seeing none – sorry. The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Mr. Horne: Yes. Thank you, Madam Speaker. I was waiting to see if any of the opposition wanted to jump in and get in on this conversation.

I am very, very excited to see this piece of legislation before us today. I know that you, Madam Speaker, and several members know that I myself am a member of the Métis nation, and I try to go to many of their events. This is something that I know is very important to many of the Métis people.

This is one of the largest jurisdictions that I know of in the province, the Northland school division, ranging effectively from Grande Cache all the way up to Fort Chip. That is truly a massive undertaking, to try to manage all of that. I can't imagine the challenges that that would pose. I think that there are many good steps in here towards that end, trying to balance that. You know, there's a slightly higher number of trustees than usual, and I think that that's a good measure to address the massive geography of the Northland school division.

I am aware that the government underwent several phases of consultation on this. I myself was unable to be there, unlike a few of our members, but I did hear about these consultations from many members of the community. They were really heartened to see the amount of dialogue there. Yeah. I know that there will be ongoing engagement, in particular on what the wards look like and the initial structures of the school board, that will then be under the school board's authority, but we have to make sure it's all set up first. We have to figure that out before the elections are held in the fall.

You know, this act: a big part of the reason why I'm so happy to see this is that it's really renewing the democratic processes for the families that are part of the Northland school division, and I think that is something that is very important to see, to see the levels of community engagement. I know that many of the schools had a council system, some of which continued even when the board itself was no longer in place, and I think that that really speaks to the demographics that make use of it. That community discussion based approach to governance is something that is very important to many First Nations and Métis peoples. I think it's good to see that that is still present in this bill going forward. I'm just really happy to see that there is a new level of democracy in there, with the community engagement piece automatically built in. I think that's a really good balance here.

I am happy to rise in support of this bill, and I hope all members of the Assembly rise and do the same. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Anybody wish to speak to 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, anybody wishing to speak to the bill?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 6 read a second time]

Cortes-Vargas: Madam Speaker, seeing the progress of the day, talking about the budget, two bills, I'd say that we move to call it 4:30 and come back on Monday at 1:30. I move to adjourn the House.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:20 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 29th Legislature - 3rd Session (2017)

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Hon. members, let us each in our own way pray and/or reflect. April 9 marked the 100th anniversary of the Battle of Vimy Ridge. If we as a province and as a nation want to know where we are going, it is important to know where we have been. Vimy Ridge is a part of where we have been. Vimy Ridge is one of those tragic events in our Canadian history that serves as a signpost for our future provincial, national, and global journey. We must never allow tragic events like Vimy Ridge, the Second World War, and, yes, the trouble and chaos of our current world to be erased from the minds of future generations. These events must serve as a constant reminder that when government leaders stop talking, people start dying. Lest we forget.

Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, we will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Mr. Robert Clark. I would invite all to participate in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
Il sait porter la croix!
Ton histoire est une épopée
Des plus brillants exploits.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 30 students from Muriel Martin school in the wonderful constituency of Spruce Grove-St. Albert. The students are accompanied today by their teachers Mrs. Jody Bialowas – I'm sorry if I've mispronounced that – and Mrs. Jacqueline Kelly. If they could all rise today and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleague the hon. Lori Sigurdson it is my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the grade 6 students from l'école Notre-Dame school.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I just would remind you that we don't quote the names. You intended, I think, to say "the minister."

Ms Larivee: Yes, I did. Thank you.

There are almost 40 of them here today with their teacher Ms Paulin Larochelle. I would ask that the students, their teacher, and their helpers all rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other children's groups to be introduced today?

Seeing and hearing none, I would recognize the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have two introductions. I rise today to introduce to you and through you members seated in your gallery representing the antecedent units from Alberta of the Canadian Expeditionary Force, who fought as one for the first time as Canadian Corps in the Battle of Vimy Ridge. They have come here today in recognition of the 100th anniversary of the Battle of Vimy Ridge and to receive the declaration our government made on April 9, 2017. Please rise as I say your unit's name: 41 Canadian Brigade Group; the South Alberta Light Horse regiment; the King's Own Calgary Regiment; 20th Field Artillery Regiment, Royal Canadian Artillery; 41 Combat Engineer Regiment, Royal Canadian Engineers; 41 Signal Regiment, Royal Canadian Corps of Signals; the Loyal Edmonton Regiment; the Calgary Highlanders; 41 Service Battalion; 1 Military Police Regiment. On behalf of all Albertans I thank you and the antecedent members of your regiment or corps for service given both in conflict and in peace. I would ask all members to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For my second introduction I rise today to introduce to you and through you Adriana A. Davies. She's a social historian whose achievements include being the executive director of the Alberta Museums Association and creating the Alberta Online Encyclopedia. She has been honoured with the Order of Canada, the Queen's Diamond Jubilee medal, the Alberta centennial medal, and others. It is a privilege to have her here today with us for the centenary of Vimy Ridge as she is also the editor of The Frontier of Patriotism: Alberta and the First World War, which is an in-depth look at Albertans' experience with the war, both on the battlefield and on the home front. I would ask that she please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very happy to rise and to introduce to you and through you to the whole Assembly a number of people from my ministry, beginning with Fran Hyndman, who is a team lead with the Alberta aboriginal internship program within the ministry. With her is a group of interns that have recently taken positions within the ministry. Today they are visiting our beautiful Legislature, and I want to take a few moments to recognize the hard work that these interns are about to dive into. I cannot stress enough the importance of the work that my Ministry of Indigenous Relations is doing to improve the lives of indigenous people in Alberta. I'm eager to have fresh faces taking on new roles within the ministry. If you could all rise as I read out your names: Paul Wilson, Gus Michalik, Kris Murray, Jessica Punko, Maddii Hoffmann, Fran Hyndman, Amanda Giang, Karen Delver, Trista Simpson, and Breanna Tardif. If we could all please provide them the warm reception of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. First, it is an honour to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly the president of the Alberta School Boards Association, Mary Martin. ASBA has as its membership all 61 public, separate, and francophone school boards in Alberta. Mary is a strong advocate for schools and students. We found many shared values when Municipal Affairs engaged with school boards on how we can amend the MGA to better support how schools are planned. This is one more way that our government will make a difference for schools and families, and I thank Mary for all the important input we heard from her as part of the MGA review. Mary is seated in the members' gallery, and I ask that she stand as you join me in giving her the warm welcome of the Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly 18 staff from the Department of Municipal Affairs. I won't name them all. On the day that I introduce an MGA amendment bill, it is my great pleasure to recognize some of these fine folks that have helped to make this happen. I'm very proud of how open and transparent the consultation on the MGA has been for Albertans, and much of this excellent work was done by these members of the major legislative projects and strategic planning branch and legal services. I believe they are here to see with their own eyes that the final bill we'll draw up of the MGA review is really, truly happening today. I ask this accomplished group of people seated in the members' gallery to stand as you join me in giving them the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my distinct privilege to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a remarkable young lady from Lethbridge. She is a soldier representing the Lethbridge 20th Independent Field Battery, Royal Canadian Artillery. She has served seven years, and she is a master bombardier. I met her for the first time at the Vimy Ridge Armoury on Saturday night at the 100th commemoration of the Battle of Vimy Ridge. The 20th battery was the first artillery battery raised in Alberta and participated in the battle of Vimy. There were 25 members that were recruited from Edmonton, 25 from Calgary, and the rest from the Lethbridge area, making it a truly Albertan unit. She is sitting in the public gallery. I would ask Master Bombardier Stacey Harris to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all the members of the Assembly the staff of Falcon Enterprises. Falcon Enterprises is an integral part of the Wainwright community that is a fully inclusive, community-based support service provider. They're under the provincial contract to provide support services in employment preparation, employment placement, community access supports, and specialized community supports. Please rise as I call out your names: Clive Switzer, Shannon Sherred, Sandy Lychak, and all the employees of Falcon Enterprises. Please join me in giving the traditional warm welcome to this group.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you the Alberta Students' Executive Council. We've got four members here today, and I ask that they please rise. Alberta Students' Executive Council, or ASEC, represents over a dozen postsecondary institutions that offer world-class learning environments across the province, providing Albertans education in everything from applied research to technical training, from sciences to fine arts, and from academic upgrading to green tech programs. The leaders here today are strong advocates of what matters to Alberta's students, and our government is with them on mental health supports, sustainability, and ensuring that every Albertan who wants a higher education can afford and access one no matter where they live. I ask that the members of the House please give the members of ASEC the traditional warm greeting.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all my colleagues in the House a caring Albertan, an Albertan who cares about all of our children, an Albertan who cares about our families and our communities and puts her considerable time and effort to make that happen. My wife and I still talk about how she helped us over 20 years ago. She is here today because she has made a button that clearly states to include parents because she advocates for supporting parental responsibility and parental involvement in our education system. If I could please ask Maureen Prince to rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly Dr. Derek Peddle from the Alberta Terrestrial Imaging Centre and the department of Geography at the University of Lethbridge. He is also a Newfoundlander who came up yesterday from Lethbridge so he could attend the world curling championship final game last night, in which another fantastic Newfoundlander, Brad Gushue, and his team were the victors. Dr. Peddle, would you please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Battle of Vimy Ridge

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One hundred years ago on April 9, 1917, a new word entered the language of Canadians. That word is Vimy. The Battle of Vimy Ridge, the capture of a German stronghold near Vimy, France, cost Canadians dearly: 3,598 lives lost and 7,000 wounded. Even still, Vimy Ridge was a bright spot in a war that had few of them. The numbers of dead and injured, unimaginable as they are, were far fewer than in other battles, including previous attempts at taking Vimy Ridge.

The battle on Easter Monday, 1917, brought together all four Canadian divisions in the war for the first time. The force that launched the attack at Vimy reflected the country. There were people from across the nation. There were immigrants and Canadians of many ethnic backgrounds. Many, such as indigenous Canadians and Asian Canadians, were fighting for their country at Vimy despite the fact that their country did not fully recognize their rights.

Albertans joined the war effort in great numbers, to a greater percentage than any other province; some 45,000 Albertans served overseas. There were Albertans at Vimy such as Lance Corporal Henry “Ducky” Norwest, a Métis marksman with Calgary’s 50th battalion, who was awarded the military medal for his actions at Vimy Ridge; and Lieutenant Joseph Stauffer, also with the 50th battalion, who was a member of this very Assembly when he died at Vimy trying to take Hill 145. He was buried where he fell.

While death was, as always, a feature of war at Vimy Ridge, many other things about the battle were different. In an embrace of new, state-of-the-art techniques soldiers received training and rehearsed on a life-sized mock-up of the battlefield. Instead of being thrown blindly into the maelstrom, they were each assigned roles, their movements planned to the minute. This made all the difference as the fighting went according to plan. Instead of the grinding, wearying months of the Battle of the Somme or Passchendaele, the main battle at Vimy Ridge was over in a day. Vimy Ridge was not the only Canadian victory of the war, but it captured the imagination of the public, and it seemed to say that Canada at last could stand on its own. It helped give Canada a seat at the table at war’s end and loosened the colonial bonds.

Looking back at the First World War, we are struck by the folly that caused it and the mind-boggling tragedy that defined it. We can be forgiven for thinking that there is nothing to celebrate about the war, but we cannot forget it. To forget it would be to forget the major historical events in the lives of our grandparents or great-grandparents. It would be to forget the mothers and fathers, siblings, relatives, spouses, and children of those gone to war, a whole society of Canadians who lived for years under the pain of separation and, all too often, bore the deafening silence of loss to the end of their days. It would be to forget some 3,000 Canadian women who served as nurses in overseas hospitals or here at home, who bravely shouldered the burden of misery as the injured and the dying were delivered to their hands for aid and comfort, and it would be to forget the tens of thousands of young men, many hardly more than boys, the pride and hope of their families, who joined the war effort out of patriotic duty and a sense of adventure, and who found themselves mired in the quicksand of history.

Mr. Speaker, today the soaring marble monument at Vimy Ridge stands at the site of a decisive victory. Let us not forget that it is dedicated to 11,285 Canadians who died in the First World War and have no known grave. April 9, 2017, has been declared the Battle of Vimy Ridge day in Alberta. Today we continue to remember them and all who serve today.

Thank you. [Standing ovation]

1:50

Mr. Jean: Both my son and my father served in the Canadian Corps. One hundred years ago the war to end all wars came at a great cost to Canadians. Over 61,000 lives were lost and 172,000 Canadians wounded, the fields of Belgium and France stained with the blood of young Canadians serving their country and their neighbours out of a profound sense of duty.

There were many tragedies during the war, but there was a battle that created one of the greatest moments in our country’s history. It became the founding battle of our nation. I had the chance five years ago to visit that sacred ground, Vimy Ridge. No one else could capture the ridge. Canada, still under the authority of the British Empire, was charged with the task. As Brigadier-General Alexander Ross said about the day: “It was Canada from the Atlantic to the Pacific on parade. I thought then, and I think today, that in those few minutes I witnessed the birth of a nation.”

It began early morning on a cold Easter Monday, with Canada’s four divisions, 100,000 strong, united for the very first time. The Canadians pounded the German lines through creeping barrage, with the infantry attacking above and under the trenches and in tunnels. After four days of fighting and more than 10,000 dead or wounded, Canada took the ridge. It brought out great stories of heroism and self-sacrifice. Four of our soldiers that day won the very highest award for bravery, the Victoria Cross. These men fought and died for our freedoms and brought our country one step closer to putting an end to this war.

Marked in the halls of remembrance and tombstones across western Europe, we find these words: “Greater love hath no [one] than this, to lay down [one’s] life for [one’s] friends.” Today we look back at these brave soldiers and say thank you. Thank you for our many freedoms, thank you for your sacrifice, thank you for fighting for us, and thank you for your great service. May we always – always – honour their sacrifice, lest we ever forget.

Thank you. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would request unanimous consent of the House to permit a response from the leader of the third party or his designate and from the two independent members.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The leader of the PC opposition.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It’s a great honour for me today to rise on behalf of the Progressive Conservative caucus to commemorate the 100-year anniversary of the Battle of Vimy Ridge. It’s so great to see the men and women in uniform here, half of which I’m honoured to call personal friends.

On April 9, 1917, the Canadian Corps led an attack on the German army in the Nord-Pas-de-Calais region of France in World War I. It was a battle that lasted for three days but saw all four divisions of the Canadian Expeditionary Force victorious. In this battle these brave soldiers displayed characteristics that Canada is now known for across the globe: commitment, determination, pride, and bravery. Four members of the Canadian Corps also received Victoria Crosses, including Private John George Pattison of the 50th battalion from Calgary.

This victory came with a heavy price. In the Battle of Vimy Ridge nearly 3,600 Canadians lost their lives and over 7,000 were wounded. We remember the brave Canadians who laid down their lives to protect the freedoms we enjoy today. We thank them for their ultimate sacrifice, and we will never forget.

Mr. Speaker, we are joined here today by a number of veterans and active members of our Canadian armed forces. They represent the army units from across Alberta that fought at Vimy Ridge 100 years ago. To the brave Canadian men and women defending our freedom, we are forever indebted to you. Your commitment to keeping the True North strong and free is an inspiration to us all. One hundred years later you continue to carry on the legacy of Vimy Ridge as you tirelessly defend our peace and freedom.

As author Larry Worthington wrote in Amid the Guns Below:

The battle of Vimy Ridge was a moment in Canadian history that we will always be proud of. A national spirit was born, and now to be British was not enough. We were Canadian and could do a good job of paddling our own canoe. Our country was born.

As I look up to the gallery today to see our armed forces, I can only say thank you for the great paddling you continue to do today on all our behalf. These words remain true today. May God bless you and all of those that served so bravely before you. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On this day a hundred years ago a great battle of triumph and tragedy was raging on Vimy Ridge. I'm honoured today to rise in this democratically elected Assembly to be able to speak freely about these brave men and women, about the survivors, their families, and pay tribute to the fallen. Indeed, this is one of the gifts these courageous warriors gave to all of us, not just freedom from oppression and tyranny but the freedom to exercise our rights of self-determination and recognition of our inalienable human rights.

The price they paid was high: an entire generation lost. Vimy Ridge remains the single bloodiest battle Canadians fought, with about 3,600 lives being laid down in the fields in France. It was a defining moment, both in terms of the Great War as well as the birthing of this great nation, Canada. It fills us with pride to remember the victory that was wrought on Vimy Ridge. It also reminds us of the preciousness of life, the duty of public service, and the eternal vigilance required to protect our rights and freedoms and the rule of law.

Finally, I'd be amiss if I did not speak about the unspeakable horror of war and the need for each of us to work always and everywhere to create the conditions for peace. The average age of Canadian soldiers in World War I was 26; the oldest, 80; the youngest reported, 10 years old. What they were to experience in those fields was unimaginable for these young minds. While many lives were lost at Vimy, many more were forever changed. Those who did not die had been surrounded by death and terror on a daily basis: unrelenting physical, emotional, and spiritual trauma.

When they returned home, they were enthusiastically welcomed by a truly grateful nation. But how could anyone who had not been there and experienced the devastation begin to understand the effect it would have on the survivors and their families? This was a time when knowledge of mental health and particularly the lasting impacts of trauma was in its infancy. To be a man often meant then and still means maintaining a bravado of strength, refusing to ask for help, and suffering in silence. Many if not all of those returning from the battlefield agonized under the torment of posttraumatic illness. Too often this led to mental illness, alcoholism, drug abuse, and family violence. Although the guns had gone quiet, there was still a war raging in their minds, reverberating through intimate family members, and a different peace that remained to be won.

Our understanding of this disorder has come a long way since, but there are many hills we have yet to climb together. More needs to be done to support our brave servicemen, women, and families who faced and are facing today the devastations of war. We need to end the stigma and make it clear that admitting mental illness does not make us weak. In fact, it takes great strength and bravery. Bravery comes in many forms.

Let us earnestly, then, work in this House and in our communities to preserve the peace through respectful discourse, reducing inequality, and justice for all, remembering the peace that was purchased at such a high price.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First World War veteran Reginald Roy said:

I became a Canadian on Vimy Ridge. We became a nation there in the eyes of the world. It cut across French and English, rich and poor, urban and rural. Vimy Ridge confirmed that we were as good as, if not better than, any European power.

Attacking together for the first time, four Canadian divisions stormed the ridge at 5:30 a.m. on April 9, 1917, and fought for three days until they were victorious.

The Canadian success at Vimy Ridge was a result of meticulous planning and rehearsals behind our own lines, including digging tunnels through no-man's-land into German territory. It was only recently, 2001, that stone carvings made by Canadians awaiting orders to commence the Vimy attack were discovered in these tunnels. They range from elaborately carved regimental banners bearing names like the Canadian Scottish 15th battalion and the 48th Highlanders to the names of soldiers, their wives, mothers, or girlfriends, or, in true Canadian style, even a tongue-in-cheek mailbox for mail bound from France to Toronto, Canada.

Now, this reminds us of the humanity of the people who served in the Canadian armed forces at Vimy Ridge, people like Private Joseph Goldie Fairholm, an Edmonton soldier whose diary includes details of the preparations for Vimy and of the battle's legacy. He wrote: "During this vacant space behind, we rehearsed the whole detail of our now famous Victory of Vimy Ridge. Even in the days after that battle, it appears the soldiers already knew the place it would hold in history." It was the preparation, military innovations, and disciplined execution of the Vimy battle plan that earned Canada the reputation for being a tenacious and trustworthy ally. We became a nation in the eyes of the world rather than simply a colony of Britain, but we know this victory came at a heavy cost: 3,598 Canadians were killed, and another 7,000 were wounded.

One of the Albertans to take part was Métis sharpshooter Henry Norwest from Fort Saskatchewan, who joined the Canadian Expeditionary Force in January 1915 and eventually fought with Calgary's 50th battalion. He was awarded a medal for his efforts to help Allied forces capture a significant point along Vimy Ridge. In his award citation officials said that he showed great bravery and saved a great many men's lives. But just three months before the end of the First World War Norwest himself became the target of a German sharpshooter, and the 33-year-old was killed in the Battle of Amiens. On his temporary grave marker one of his fellow soldiers wrote, "It must have been a damned good sniper that got Norwest." It was only very recently, in 2008, that the name Henry Norwest was added to the cenotaph at the Fort Saskatchewan Legion.

As we commemorate the great Canadians who helped secure victory at Vimy Ridge, I think of the Canadian men and women who serve our country today. They walk in the footsteps of the thousands of soldiers who have gone before them and honour our country every day with their bravery.

Thank you. [Standing ovation]

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Judge and Lawyer Training on Sexual Offences

Mr. Jean: Many Albertans have been surprised to learn that a lawyer or judge in Alberta that is involved in trials related to sexual offences does not need specific training on dealing with victims. In our province we have seen at least four instances where judges have had an outdated understanding of the law that has ruined confidence in our judicial system. It's why I will be bringing forward a motion on Thursday supporting training for judges and lawyers in the province if the House agrees. Does the Premier support the intent of this motion?

Ms Notley: Well, of course, Mr. Speaker, we absolutely support the intent. That's why our government has been working very hard to increase awareness of victims' rights and increase awareness around matters of domestic violence and sexual violence in our courts and in our justice system. The principle is certainly a very good one, and I anticipate that our minister will work very hard to make that principle real within the rules that we have in place.

Mr. Jean: Training judges and training lawyers would strengthen Albertans' trust in the judicial system and, hopefully, put an end to errors based on outdated myths and stereotypes related to sexual offences. These types of comments are what make sexual assault victims think twice about coming forward and reporting crime. We need to respect the independence of the judiciary, but we also need to ensure that we bring our courts into the 21st century immediately. Does the Premier agree that comments like those made by Justice Camp asking why a complainant didn't, quote, just keep her knees together, end quote, have no place whatsoever in Alberta courts?

Ms Notley: Of course, Mr. Speaker, I absolutely agree that that was inappropriate. That's why I was very proud of our Justice minister for, frankly, leading the efforts to ensure that that judge was reviewed by the appropriate body and had the appropriate consequences go his way. I thank our Justice minister for her leadership on that issue because, of course, all victims deserve to be treated with dignity in our courts, and it is about time that victims of domestic and sexual violence are treated with the dignity that they deserve.

Mr. Jean: Sexual assault continues to be chronically underreported in Canada, with about 90 per cent, Mr. Speaker, of victims never bringing their cases or complaints forward. When someone does bring forward the story of their assault, we need to ensure that they are not revictimized. Mistakes made because of an outdated understanding of the law are not acceptable. Will the Premier agree that trust in our judicial system will be strengthened if Albertans know that the legal system is trained to handle cases of sexual assault or misconduct in an appropriate manner?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have to do everything that we can do to ensure, as I said before, that survivors of sexual violence and domestic violence are treated with, exactly, compassion and with dignity and with respect in our judicial system, so of course we're going to do everything we can. I mean, the member opposite, of course, was part of the caucus of the cabinet that appointed this particular judge that's generating this conversation. I'm glad to see that they see the import of this issue now. We certainly do, and we'll continue . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
Second main question.

Job Creation

Mr. Jean: Sixty-three thousand Albertans have been unemployed for six months or longer. There are now over 55,000 Albertans relying on income support. While life for the public sector has never been better, there are tens of thousands of Albertans that are suffering right across this province. These are the women and men forgotten by the NDP as they introduce policies that strangle the ability for businesses to hire and for businesses to grow in Alberta. Carbon taxes, big pay and big perks for government insiders, and risky labour legislation won't help. Why can't the Premier just give Albertans a break now?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Twenty thousand full-time jobs: the most in Canada. Now, I know that the Leader of the Opposition thinks that tax breaks for high-income earners are the only way to create jobs, but yesterday's numbers or last week's numbers show that that's not true. What our government is doing is supporting Albertans, having their backs, helping them through these tough times, and working to create jobs each and every day, and it's starting to work.

Mr. Jean: Well, the backs they have, Mr. Speaker; let's listen. The public sector has bloomed, with 36,000 new positions since the NDP took power here in Alberta. Meanwhile over 35,000 Albertans have been unemployed for over a year, with big losses in the oil patch. These are families and an industry who are not being helped by policies from the NDP and their pals in Ottawa, policies that raise taxes on the oil and gas sector while protecting the pay and perks across the public sector. This is wrong. Our top industries continue to be pummeled with bad policies from this NDP government. When is it going to stop?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, to be clear, our government is very proud of the job numbers that were announced last week, the 20,000 full-time jobs created in Alberta, leading the country. And while we are working on job creation, we are also working to support families. I'm still waiting for the member opposite to finish his six-week deliberation on whether or not feeding hungry children in school is a good idea.

Mr. Jean: Surprisingly, our economy with labour reviews isn't helping at all, Premier.

While Ontario had a two-year consultation period for changes to their labour code, the NDP here in Alberta has given Albertans less than five weeks with something so important. It's clear to a growing number of businesses and Albertans that the NDP has already made up their minds, obviously. It's created a further climate of uncertainty at a time when businesses cannot afford it and Albertans are out of work. One policy pumped by NDP appointee and insider Gil McGowan is to scrap the workers' right to secret ballots. [interjections] I know they're laughing over there, Mr. Speaker, but this is serious. Is the Premier going to commit to this policy? Yes or no?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

2:10

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, if it's dithering for six weeks on whether feeding hungry children is important or dithering for two years on a piece of legislation that hasn't been amended for 29, both of those things create uncertainty. But you know what doesn't create uncertainty? Twenty thousand new jobs; two new pipelines; $30 billion in capital investment; ensuring that our schools and our hospitals are there for Albertans when they need them. This is what creates certainty, and this is what helps Albertans' lives get better.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Government Procurement Process

Mr. Panda: A new provincial trade deal is good news for Alberta, but the minister's plan to create the new Crown corporation for handing out infrastructure contracts is questionable. This means more spending and more taxes for Albertans. If the minister wants to create new Crown corporations to handle the work his government should be doing, he's going to have to explain himself. Premier: why can't the most expensive government in Canada award contracts in a way that is fast, fair, and affordable?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, there are many great mysteries in this place, and one of them is where that hon. member got the information that we're setting up a Crown corporation. We are working on improving our infrastructure and transportation tendering process so that we foster innovation, so that we give work to Alberta companies and Alberta workers, and so that we work to green the economy. Those are all positive things supported by private industry. Maybe in his next question he can answer where he gets this idea of this Crown corporation from.

Mr. Panda: Well, Mr. Speaker, Albertans are speculating what this government will do next. Albertans have seen how the NDP politicized its arm's-length agencies across the province with the hiring of the AIMCo board, the chairs of NAIT, and the chair of the U of A. When they talk about creating Crown corporations, which they might, we all know that that's the NDP's code for creating jobs for their friends. Will the minister give up on his dream to bring back the 1980s and drop this Crown corporation scheme if it is in the pipeline?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, there are a lot of things we might do, but if I can just suggest to the hon. member, it might be a good idea to ask a question about real government policy.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, the Globe and Mail reminds us the minister almost killed the new interprovincial trade deal he is celebrating by demanding a 20 per cent exemption for local public procurement contracts. I'm told that other provinces were so angered by his actions, they were prepared to build a trade firewall around Alberta. Instead, they gave Alberta four years to comply. With no free trade in beer, wine, and spirits in this agreement, was the minister purposely trying to sabotage this trade deal?

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud of the new Canadian free trade agreement and the fact that Alberta finally has a fair and balanced trade agreement with all provinces and territories across this country. Not only have we now levelled the playing field – for decades Alberta had the most open borders, yet it wasn't reciprocated across the country – but now Alberta businesses have the equal access to other provinces and territories that they've enjoyed for decades.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

AIMCo Governance

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, I remain troubled by the dark path this government is taking the pension funds of our civil servants on. Sections 5 and 6 of the AIMCo regulation were put in place to ensure that the rationale for making investment decisions would be based on sound expertise in financial matters. Pensions are no place for political cronyism. To the Premier. The people that have worked hard for this province want to know their retirement funds are being managed to provide a worry-free retirement. Will you do the right thing and reverse this dangerous decision that could threaten . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got to tell you that it is really rich to hear that coming from the member opposite. I remember a time when we had 5,000 public servants on the steps out there because of the retrograde changes they were trying to make to the very pension plans that they claim to be protecting right now. It is really quite rich coming from over there. You know what? We do have the backs of Albertans who have their money in that pension plan. We will make sure that it's invested well on their behalf, and we will make sure that the people that are running the board are appointed on the basis of their skill and their abilities and . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
First supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The current board was appointed by a former process that provided us with people with impeccable credentials on AIMCo. Simply put, this is a solution in search of a problem. This year there are seven new members coming up, and we're just told, "Trust me," by the NDP. To the Premier: before you endanger the retirement of government employees, what are you hiding, what is your real agenda, and why the need to repeal requirements to have qualified people making decisions on $90 billion?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, first of all, the member opposite is incorrect in his characterization of what has happened. What we have done is that we've made sure that our agencies, boards, and commissions are open to all Albertans, so all Albertans are welcome to apply. Of course, they will be appointed on the basis of their qualifications. I ask the member to look at the appointments coming forward, and I'm sure that he will agree that that's exactly what happens. Nobody is more committed to protecting defined benefit contribution pension plans for the people of this province than this government.

Mr. McIver: Regardless of what the Premier says, she has opened the door for unqualified people, and she needs to shut that door.

Along with the Member for Calgary-West I have repeatedly asked the Minister of Finance whether he would respond to requests by members of the Heritage Savings Trust Fund Committee to attend the next meeting and explain this bizarre move. He has never answered the question yet. To the Premier: will you direct your Minister of Finance to attend the next meeting of the heritage savings committee and explain?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, there's truly no need to do that because the Minister of Finance answered the question last week on Monday, and then he answered it again on Tuesday, and I believe he answered it again on Wednesday, and it's very possible that he answered it again on Thursday. [interjections] Now, I appreciate that the members opposite may have trouble hearing answers over all this yelling that they're doing right now, but the reality is that the answer has been given, and there is absolutely nothing to hide. We are completely focused on protecting the pension funds of Alberta workers, unlike all of the members opposite. [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Opioid Use Prevention and Mitigation

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Friday Alberta Health posted the first near quarter interim report on opioids, further detailing the devastating impact this epidemic is having. An issue as serious as this should have been accompanied by a greater public response. Instead, this government was busy making funding announcements. In the first six weeks of 2017 51 Albertans died from fentanyl-related overdoses, nearly twice as many as last year, yet this government still refuses to call this an emergency. To the associate minister: what will it take for you to call this an emergency?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. The interim numbers that were released last week by the chief medical officer of health confirmed what we've heard clearly from front-line health care workers and community agencies, that synthetic opioids remain a deadly threat to Albertans living with substance use, their families, and first responders. That's why we're multiplying our efforts and will spend up to $56 million over the next year to help Albertans get the treatment that they need to reduce the harm of substance use and to raise public awareness.

Dr. Swann: This minister has repeatedly told us that the government has already got enough resources to deal with the crisis. However, Albertans with mental health and addiction illnesses are not getting the supports they need to recover. Access to treatment clinics outside of our two largest cities is a major issue. I don't know of any clinics that are open evenings and weekends. We continue to see a piecemeal approach instead of a coherent strategy, one that involves government and nongovernment organizations, police, human services, and indigenous groups. To the minister: when will we see a comprehensive provincial opioid strategy aimed at getting ahead of this crisis?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our response to the opioid crisis is being led by the chief medical officer of health, something that the member opposite has supported. We're going to make sure that we have all of the tools available, but we believe fundamentally that this is a public health issue. What we will not do is subscribe to the discredited war-on-drugs approach that the Official Opposition supports. Certainly, access to opioid replacement therapy is a critical part of our government's response, and part of the money allocated in Budget 2017 is to expand the overall capacity and geographic reach of our clinical systems.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, it's clearly beyond the current chief medical officer.

Following the flood that ravaged southern Alberta in 2013, the previous government established the office of the chief addictions and mental health officer to provide psychological and social help to the flood victims. Later he began to focus on harm reduction issues, including fentanyl and opioids. Instead of supporting this expanded scope for the chief addictions and mental health officer, the minister eliminated the position. My question is now to the Health minister. In hindsight, this may have been a mistake. When will we see the reappointment of the chief addictions and mental health officer to lead this government's response?

The Speaker: The associate minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. As I noted earlier, our response to the crisis is being led by the chief medical officer of health, who's working very closely with experts in the field to ensure that our plan is heading in the right direction. What we are doing is that we have expanded the reach and scope of our naloxone kit program, which has expanded to more than a thousand registered sites across our province, without a prescription and at no cost to Albertans. We are expanding access to opioid dependency treatments across our province, making use of telehealth and other services to ensure . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, Associate Minister.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Alberta Hospital Edmonton

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Alberta Hospital is an important part of the Edmonton-Manning constituency and is a significant part of our mental health network, can the minister please speak to the plans that the government has for keeping Alberta Hospital open?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. I was pleased just a few short weeks ago to meet with a number of physicians at Alberta Hospital Edmonton in Edmonton-Manning with the member opposite, and we had a very good conversation. I confirmed to them then, as I will now and forevermore and in no uncertain terms, that as long as there is an NDP government in Alberta, there will be Alberta Hospital Edmonton.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that Alberta Hospital meets the needs of individuals transitioning to community, can the minister please tell Albertans what the government is doing to ensure that the current wards at Alberta Hospital are meeting the needs of Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much. Again, from the start mental health has been a priority for this government, and our priorities have been backed up with real action and real investments. We are looking at ways that we can use the facility at Alberta Hospital Edmonton to the best of its capabilities. The opposition's plan to cut $9 billion from capital and $2 billion from operations would certainly reduce the ability for us to be able to do that. That's why I'm so proud to be part of a government that's making life better for Alberta families, not far worse, which is the Official Opposition's plan.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that the hospital has identified the need for an ECT machine and has been promised that that machine will be returned to the site, can the minister please tell my constituents when this will be delivered and ready to be used?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We know that it's best to bring services to patients because they deserve to have the right care in the right place at the right time, and that's why we're so proud that this device is going to be coming back to Alberta Hospital Edmonton. We expect it to be up and working in the next few weeks. Certainly, in the month of May we'll be able to ensure that we reduce those transportation times and keep the service close to home. So May, and I'm proud of that.

Brewing Industry Trade Barriers

Mr. Fildebrandt: Last week governments signed on to the Canadian free trade agreement. This is a big step forward for Canada finally functioning as our founding fathers intended. Alas, there are still areas of trade not yet covered by this agreement, though. Chief among them is beer. Alberta's brewers face significant nontariff trade barriers, though, when selling to places like B.C. and Ontario, where governments continue to maintain a high level of direct control over the market. What is the government doing to break down trade barriers faced by Alberta's brewing industry?

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the very important question. Through the Canadian free trade agreement negotiations, that took us about two and a half years, there are a number of outstanding issues. One of them is alcohol and access to other markets. We know that Alberta brewers have faced a disadvantage and continue to when they're trying to sell their products into other provinces' markets. That is going to be addressed over the next 12 months through a round-table from all provinces and territories. We will continue to work hard to ensure that Alberta brewers have access to all Canadian markets.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Given, Mr. Speaker, that while other provinces have nontariff trade barriers, this government has introduced the most overtly protectionist beer tax in the country, which has resulted in multiple successful court challenges from breweries in other provinces, and given that, first, it was a full-blown tariff to be paid for by Alberta beer drinkers and that when the government lost in court it was a preferential subsidy, which fits the definition of a backdoor tariff, is the government . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member. Hon. member, please sit down when I stand.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Listen. First of all, the policy that the Minister of Finance brought forward levels the playing field for brewers in this province. As far as the small-brewers grant, I encourage the hon. member opposite to look at other provinces like Ontario which have had similar programs for many, many years. They are trade compliant as far as what we're doing. What I'd love to know is why the hon. member continues to advocate for Alberta subsidizing beers from other provinces. We want to work with Alberta brewers. We want a level playing field for brewers across the country, but we're going to stand up for Alberta brewers.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Given, Mr. Speaker, that when the minister introduced this beer tariff in 2015, we warned that it was unconstitutional and given that he lost in court, given that when the minister introduced the backdoor subsidy plan, we again warned that it was unconstitutional, given – given – that he scoffed until brewers took him to court again, until he may well lose again, given that the minister's protectionist policy is exposing Alberta's brewing industry to massive uncertainty – given, given – will the minister, if he loses in court again, finally respect free trade?

Speaker's Ruling Oral Question Period Practices

The Speaker: Hon. members, as hon. members I would hope that all of you, but particularly in this instance I would cite the member who just asked what I think might have been a question buried in there, would not use words like "given" in a way that is disrespectful. You were using it, in my opinion, in a sardonic tone, that somehow these various comments that you wanted him to reject needed to be prefaced by "given." To you, to all of you, don't take advantage of the phraseology by lightening and embellishing your comments without getting to the point and asking the policy question that I know you're very concerned about.

The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Much of the hon. member's preamble is actually incorrect. Alberta has and has always had the most open market for beer sales in Canada. What we've done is ensured that the same markup applies to all provinces. I want to inform the member that Alberta lists 7,475 beer products, including some from Saskatchewan. That is not reciprocated for Alberta brewers in other provinces. Unlike what the opposition is proposing, our government will continue to stand up for Alberta brewers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

AIMCo Governance (continued)

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When you invite a guest to dinner and that guest refuses to give you an answer, that could be construed as impolite, but I'm sure the Finance minister did not mean to be discourteous when he refused to RSVP the members of the heritage trust fund committee. To the minister: let me give you another chance. Will you attend the next meeting of the Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund?

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have stood up and repeatedly said that I'm in constant communication with the AIMCo chair and board of directors, and I'm also talking with the CEO at all points in time. So we'll continue to have good discussions with AIMCo. We'll continue to work on their behalf on this side of the government, and we will ensure that they have all they need to do the great job they do on behalf of Albertans.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this direct question has now been asked at least six times and the minister still will not answer and given that the committee chair has said this about accommodating the minister's schedule, that the meeting is "being scheduled right now, so we will try and do that," and given that because the minister refuses to answer questions about his attendance, we can only assume that he has decided not to attend, to the minister: will you please tell Albertans why you won't attend the next Heritage Savings Trust Fund Committee meeting?

Mr. Ceci: You know, the things that people are interested in, I think, are with regard to the appointments. Just last week there were interviews for board members. A number of interviews took place, so those decisions are being made right now in terms of the six or so appointments that need to come forward. I think members on the other side should judge this government on the quality of the appointments that will come forward soon.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Albertans are alarmed that the NDP is politically interfering with AIMCo and they fear that this meddling can lead anywhere and given that Albertans are concerned that this government views the $90 billion worth of pensions, endowments, and their heritage fund as easy pickings, will you promise, Minister, to Albertans today that you will not dip into the heritage trust fund or any other fund managed by AIMCo to cover up your gross financial mismanagement of our province?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.
