Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that Bill 30, An Act to Protect the Health and Well-being of Working Albertans, be amended in schedule 2 in section 23(1) in the proposed section 56 by (a) in subsection (3) striking out "Subject to section 68(1)" and substituting "Subject to subsection 3.1 and section 68(1)" and (b) adding the following after subsection (3):

(3.1) In computing net earnings for the purposes of this Act, no regard may be taken of the aggregate gross annual earnings of the worker in excess of an amount prescribed by order of the Board.

(3.2) An order referred to in subsection (3.1) applies only in respect of an accident that occurs on or after the day specified in the order.

And by (c) striking out subsection 18.

Now, the WCB Review Panel recommended maintaining the insurable earning level as it is prescribed annually by the Workers' Compensation Board Board of Directors. The actual amount of the cap, currently $98,700, was adjusted over time to ensure that the earnings level covers 90 per cent of workers. Perhaps the cap could be higher than $98,700 to accommodate higher income workers like some workers in Fort McMurray, but no cap whatsoever is going too far. In fact, Manitoba is the only province that has actually taken off the cap, and that is with caveats as well.

What the WCB Review Panel recommended instead was that a special graduated benefit be introduced for injured workers whose earnings exceed the maximum insurable earnings level. It would give the injured worker an additional benefit for a period of time up to five years to allow them time to adjust to a new level of income in the long term. Now, this recommendation that the WCB review panel made would have covered 99 per cent of all workers under the WCB.

I guess the question is – the minister often says that we need to be able to get in line with the rest of Canada and other jurisdictions. In this situation we are the outlier, and the concern that I have about being the outlier in this is: is this system actually sustainable, and will it provide for those workers who desperately need this in the future? What they are doing in this situation is that they are actually providing help for those people who could be maybe making $500,000, half a million dollars, a year, 90 per cent of net earnings. These people a lot of times have the ability to get their own personal insurance, so I would have to say that this is actually an overreach and an overkill of what she's trying to accomplish with this bill.

With that, I hope that all members will support this amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. What happens now with the 90 per cent cap is that a worker gets injured and immediately, when they are no longer earning their employment income but are instead receiving the benefits from the WCB, for that 10 per cent of workers that the member opposite referred to there is a drop in salary and in many cases a significant drop in salary. Not only is the worker dealing with the injury, with the rehabilitation, with caring for their family if they perhaps were the sole breadwinner or partial to the family unit, it's an economic shock on top of the physical shock and on top of everything that's happening.

In reviewing all of the recommendations from the panel, we looked at this one quite closely. The panel had offered a solution that, while complicated to read and explain, essentially means that the workers who make over the maximum insurable earnings cap of $98,700, which is where it is today, would get a little bit more time but would still experience that earnings drop. So we have rejected the panel's claim because a worker who is injured deserves full compensation in our province.

We know that this applies to working people like those up in Fort McMurray. We know this can apply to nurses who are making more money than $98,700. We know this can apply to any number of people in industries. When someone has coverage through the Workers' Compensation Board, we believe that making sure that they are fully compensated in the case of an injury is what that worker deserves for having given up the right to sue and to make that case through the court systems.

So I will reject the member's amendment, having considered this very, very carefully and listened to the feedback from working Albertans of all stripes through the very robust consultation process that we undertook in the WCB review. But thank you to the member for putting it forward.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'll just speak very briefly on this in support of the amendment. One of the concerns I have with this bill is the entire removal of this cap. It would leave Alberta as the only province in Canada that does not have a cap of any kind. While I agree and acknowledge that the cap perhaps should move up, I believe there should be a cap. As it stands now and as I understand it, Alberta's current cap is the second highest in the country. Now, Alberta's wages are higher. Again, I think it's certainly fine to review and have a look at whether the cap is, in fact, appropriate – and I do think it should go up – but there should be one, and I think that there's some risk if we don't.

That's why I will be supporting this amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A11 lost]

The Chair: Any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to the bill? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today in Committee of the Whole to speak on Bill 30, An Act to Protect the Health and Well-being of Working Albertans. I rise specifically today to address a portion of this bill related to workplace harassment and to clarify earlier comments I made in this House during second reading.

To be clear, Madam Chair, harassment and bullying of any kind, especially when it's sexual in nature, is completely and totally unacceptable. I know that as a man I can't begin to comprehend what countless women in workplaces across Alberta and around the world have had to endure when it comes to this kind of heinous behaviour. My colleagues and I are in agreement that this simply cannot stand.

Madam Chair, during second reading of Bill 30 I spoke at length about many aspects of this rather large piece of legislation. Briefly, I addressed the issue of harassment. In my comments I highlighted the fact that this is an issue that industry associations have been working on for quite some time. My intent was, first, to highlight the fact that this government did not adequately consult with industry before drafting this bill. If they had, they would know that a lot of good work has been done on this front over the last number of years, and this legislation would acknowledge that.

Second, Madam Chair, my intent was to make it clear that while I take no issue with legislating workplace harassment policies and indeed feel that such legislation is necessary, it by no means is sufficient. In my experience, meaningful change on issues like this is driven from within the industry associations and their member companies to ensure that the training and tools that are necessary to assist in dealing with these situations appropriately as they arise are available. In that sense, simply writing out a law or forcing companies to draft a policy that sits in a binder on a shelf in the back of the shop is not enough.

At no time did I ever intend to argue that legislative workplace harassment policies were unnecessary or undesirable. But, Madam Chair, it has been brought to my attention that my words in this House can and have been interpreted in a different manner, and that is why I stand today to clarify and reaffirm my support for workplace harassment legislation.

I would also like to take this opportunity to address some personal experiences that I had with respect to this issue, experiences that have been well documented today outside this House and which I did not bring up when I made my lengthy second reading speech. Specifically, I am the owner of a safety consulting company, and some 10 years ago, when a female employee of mine was sexually harassed by another subcontractor hired by my client to work on the same job site, I'm sorry to say, Madam Chair, that my organization and I as its president at the time failed to handle that incredibly complex and difficult situation properly. As a result, we failed our employee.

Had I known what I know now, I would have done things differently. As they say, Madam Chair, hindsight is 20/20. I would have retained counsel for my employee to represent her interest and to make sure she knew what her rights in that situation were. Most importantly, I would have terminated my contract with my client when it became clear that they were not taking the situation seriously.

I am not here to make excuses or to relitigate events that transpired over a decade ago, but I do wish to put on the public record how deeply I regret not taking these actions and that my company regrets not taking those actions and standing up for an employee as much as we should have.

To be sure, there are parts of this massive piece of legislation that we have a problem with, but the harassment portion is certainly not one of them. I appreciate the opportunity to clarify the record and make it clear where I stand on this issue.

With that, Madam Chair, I would like to move that we rise and report progress.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 30. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Having heard the report, does the Assembly concur?

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Any opposed? So ordered.

Mr. Mason: Well, Madam Speaker, that's my cue, I suppose. I will move that we call it 6 o'clock and that the House rise until 7:30 this evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:55 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Tuesday, December 12, 2017

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Good evening. Please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 34

Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2017

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. On behalf of the Government House Leader I move second reading of Bill 34, the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2017.

Madam Speaker, this bill has been circulated to the opposition parties, and I believe there is consensus on all of the clauses of the bill. It is our hope that it can be passed, therefore, without debate in the House.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Are there any other members?

Mr. McIver: Well, the last thing I want to do is disappoint the hon. minister, but I would like to ask the House for unanimous consent for one-minute bells for the rest of the evening if that is acceptable to the members across the aisle. [interjection] Or for the remainder of Committee of the Whole. Pardon me. Yes. Sorry. For the remainder of Committee of the Whole, please.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, we're actually in second reading right now, so do you want one-minute bells for second reading?

Then when we enter Committee of the Whole, we'll have to have a new motion.

Mr. McIver: Yes, please. For the remainder of this bill, yes.

The Acting Speaker: So for the remainder of second reading.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak to second reading?

Seeing none, would the hon. minister like to close debate on second reading?

Ms Larivee: Sure. At this time I move that we close debate on second reading of Bill 34.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

[Motion carried; Bill 34 read a second time]

Bill 33 Electoral Divisions Act

Mr. Stier moved that the motion for second reading of Bill 33, Electoral Divisions Act, be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 33, Electoral Divisions Act, be not now read a second time because the Assembly is of the view that the descriptions of electoral divisions referenced in the bill and described in the DVD tabled as Sessional Paper 624/2017 do not adequately provide for the effective representation of rural Alberta.

[Adjourned debate on the amendment December 6: Mr. Barnes]

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members looking to speak to the reasoned amendment?

Seeing none, I will call the question on the reasoned amendment.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment RA1 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 7:33 p.m.]

[Motion on amendment RA1 lost]

The Acting Speaker: We are now back on Bill 33. Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Madam Speaker, I rise to request unanimous consent to waive Standing Order 32(3), which would eliminate the need for a 15-minute bell when we enter committee later this evening. I would request that we have one-minute bills for the remainder of the evening, as has already been granted, including the waiving of Standing Order 32(3).

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

Seeing none, would any member like to close debate?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I would like to call the committee to order.

Bill 30 An Act to Protect the Health and Well-being of Working Albertans

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would like to just recap really quickly the process that we've just gone through. Committee of the Whole was an opportunity that, according to this government, was when we could bring forward reasonable amendments that we could discuss here and we could debate. We could vet those ideas. I can assure you that the stakeholders that I talked to that were very concerned about this bill felt like this was the opportunity for us to be able to really have a fulsome debate about these points.

Unfortunately, we saw the same kind of debate process as we've seen in terms of consultation from this government. In fact, there were times where the minister wasn't even the one standing up to speak to these amendments, which was a slight to the people who actually brought forward the amendments, not myself, and to the people in the industries that actually had thought about it, had taken a look at it, and had felt that it would make this bill not as bad.

I am saddened that we were able to bring forward many good, reasonable amendments and this government was not even willing to debate and vet these bills. Most of the information that we got was terse at best and certainly not a fulsome debate, which is what I think the stakeholders deserved in this situation. We're once again seeing a pattern from this government, Madam Chair, that is very disconcerting and one that I think stakeholders will obviously take note of in the next election.

What I want to state is that one of the amendments I think was probably the best amendment that came forward. They were all great, but the last amendment that I brought forward, talking about how we are the only jurisdiction that is actually saying "No cap" – now, Manitoba said that they took off the cap, but they do have caveats to that, so we are actually outliers in this situation. We're outliers in Canada.

Now, I've heard many times this government say that they want to be able to bring us into line with the remainder of Canada, the way that the rest of Canada does. We're now in a situation where, by taking off the cap of the insurable earnings – when the cap was on, just so you know, $98,700 was one of the highest in Canada in terms of the caps. That's net. The gross amount would be, like, $140,000, which really took into consideration about 90 per cent of all of our workforce. Now we're in a situation where workers' compensation was developed and designed specifically for those people who, if something happened to them where there was no-fault insurance, they had the ability to be able to have something for themselves and for their families or for their loved ones. What we've seen here today by taking this off puts that in jeopardy, and I think it's extremely important for this government to recognize that they will have ownership to that.

Putting an organization that received a billion dollars from about 160,000 companies throughout Alberta to pay into workers' compensation – it was an arm's-length organization. This whole bill actually brings it so that there is a lot of tampering from the government and a lot of intervention where we didn't need to see it. When something is working as well as workers' compensation was working – and I'm not saying that they didn't have problems, but when it was working as well as it was, for them to interject themselves so resolutely and so deeply puts the sustainability of the system at peril. What I'm concerned about is that we are now in a situation where they had the ability to be able to make the tweaks that needed to happen, but they did not have to amputate rather than just a strategic surgery.

Now we're in a situation where the review panel recommended that there was a special graduated benefit that would have actually brought all workers, 99 per cent of all the workers under the – you know, it would have worked for 99 per cent of the workers. We're now in a situation where the sustainability of this organization, this insurance organization, could be at risk, and I wish that the government would reconsider the path that they're following. Think about the people who are benefiting from workers' compensation. These are the people who we're supposed to be fighting for at this point.

What's happened now is that we're in a situation where they have taken the cap off – no other jurisdiction in Canada has done that – and we're now in a situation where we're putting in jeopardy the very system that is designed to help those people who are potentially at risk, those people who don't make a lot of money. What I don't understand is that they constantly say that we try to help protect our big businesses and our rich friends, but this part, by taking off the cap, really speaks to them helping only the rich, those people who don't need it. They have their personal – they usually have their own insurance. They have their own ability to cushion the blow. Yet the only reason why I can see a cap coming off is to help them. This is very disconcerting, and I think that they need to really reconsider this.

I'll just finish with this, Madam Chair, and that is that they have said that the process that we have in this House is to have an opportunity where the bill comes forward, we vet the bill, we get it out, the actual written bill, to our stakeholders, and then they have an opportunity to be able to comment on it. We will probably see this thing go through in fewer than seven days. How can a 200-page bill that's written in legalese really be digested that quickly and then be able to bring forward reasonable comments from stakeholders? It's impossible to do. Now, what we're going to have is that they've gotten themselves into another situation where they refused the process of getting fulsome discussion and the proper consultation. I don't know what they're hiding. I don't know what they're so worried about hearing from Albertans if they really believe they're on the right track, and this minister has said this many times.

If they are on the right track – and I will give them this. There were many parts to this bill that I was very excited about them bringing forward, and I've spoken to those things. I've said: look, we need to make sure that we protect those people that need to be protected. The OH and S components in here: I'm glad that they did bring these forward. But this was an omnibus bill, and because it's an omnibus bill, I have a really difficult time supporting all of the component parts in here that are going to be so detrimental to the very workers that we're supposed to be championing, one such being the cap being taken off.

Madam Chair, as much as we tried on this side of the House to be able to bring forward reasonable amendments, we're now in a situation where they have rejected all of our amendments, which came from stakeholders and people who had a vested interest in this, that would be affecting them. We're now in a situation where they have been completely disenfranchised, disenfranchised from the opportunity of being able to give their say on how this bill will be affecting them and for having all members of this House to be able to take a look at it.

I'm disappointed that that's happened, but I will say that I will not be voting in favour of this Committee of the Whole reading.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Any other members wishing to speak to Bill 30? The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'll be very brief. I just wanted to stand up and support the arguments of my hon. colleague the Official Opposition critic on this file for all the good reasons that he explained.

I happened to talk on this last night, too, and our Premier was in the House. She was trying to take one of my comments out of context and asked for me to apologize to Albertans. If my comments from a movie and the dialogue hurt any feelings of any Albertan workers, I want to sincerely, unconditionally, unreservedly apologize to them and withdraw my comments. I hope that the Premier does the same thing. She should do the right thing. For all those comments she made against Albertans, I hope that she would do the same thing, the honourable thing.

Madam Chair, like my colleagues here, I'm not going to support this bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to Bill 30?

Ms Fitzpatrick: Madam Chair, I feel compelled to rise and speak in support of this bill, and I'd like to speak directly to the need for this legislation. I would like to speak my lived experience as a former union representative. I will begin by saying that the number of staff who met with me about being harassed and bullied by management and co-workers was astounding. As a union rep I had two responsibilities. The first was to listen to the concerns and, if a formal complaint or grievance was made, to investigate and take the appropriate action.

Now, as to the need for the legislation, many employers have harassment policies; for example, the federal government, where I worked for over 30 years. As an employer they had a harassment policy since at least the early '90s. However, harassment policies don't carry the same weight as a legislative change. The policy is nothing more than the paper it is written on unless the employer and employees abide by that policy. My experience with the Correctional Service of Canada, CSC, showed me that even when one employee admits to having harassed another staffperson or there is concrete evidence that harassment or bullying has occurred, many federal departments, including CSC, have done nothing.

I will cite just one case. I've got many, but I'll just cite one. This case happened almost two years ago at a local federal institution. Two officers during a shift had a dialogue on the internal telephone network about a female staff member working on their shift. The conversation, which lasted over 45 minutes, was about how they would allow inmates full access to this female staff member should an incident occur in the institution, and they would watch. These recorded statements were stating that they would put her life and her safety at risk. You depend on the people you work with to cover your back if you're working in a jail.

At the same time another incident had occurred elsewhere in the institution, and both staff were called but to no avail because the lines were busy. So the institutional management listened to the recording to see why the phones were busy and the two staff members didn't respond to the call. Management became aware of this and the risk to the female staff member. They did not even notify her of the threat that was posed to her for almost two months. She became aware of the incident through gossip at the institution, at which time management did cough up and allowed her to hear the tape. She withdrew her services under part II of the Canada Labour Code. She remained off work without pay for almost a year and a half and is still off work. The other two staff involved remained on duty and continued to be paid.

It wasn't until she hired a lawyer and went public that CSC finally took action against the staff involved, including the managers, who were aware of the situation and failed to take action despite there being a policy on harassment and bullying.

A similar situation occurred at another institution in B.C. Both of those situations are public knowledge and have been reported on one of the national media sites. There are many, many more cases like that even though there is a national policy.

On November 27 I spoke in this House about the prevention of violence, specifically family violence, and it's worth reiterating this with respect to supporting this bill.

The 16 days present an opportunity to change the conversation, change attitudes, and change behaviours to prevent gender violence.

We all have a responsibility to stop gender-based violence. I asked if conversations are respectful and valuing, or are they demeaning and condescending? Do your words and actions empower or diminish? Do you use your privilege to make another feel less than? Do you understand the importance of consent? Do you laugh when a friend makes a derogatory comment, or do you challenge the behaviour [of the person doing that]?

Change actually begins with each of us. Actions speak louder than words. I see a leader as someone who lives those things not just in words but in actions. I am asking everybody in this House to do the same thing.

I can't even tell you how important this bill is. There were so many times when I had somebody in my office, in tears, ready to quit their job, their livelihood because they just couldn't live through what was going on. If there was legislation in place, it would have made a difference. There would have been consequences and direction about what should happen if this behaviour continued.

I stand in full support of this bill, and I ask everybody to stand and support this bill as well. Despite any misgivings you may have, this bill makes a difference to everybody who is working in Alberta. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill?
Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[The remaining clauses of Bill 30 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 32 An Act to Strengthen and Protect Democracy in Alberta

The Deputy Chair: Are there any members wishing to speak to Bill 32? Comments, questions, or amendments? The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise this evening to offer an amendment to Bill 32, An Act to Strengthen and Protect Democracy in Alberta. It has a number of different clauses to it, as people will see. I am particularly happy to see one section, that I will read in as soon as I pass this along to the chair and wait for it to be recorded.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, your amendment will be referred to as A1.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Madam Chair. There are a number of sections to this amendment. I won't read them all, but I will take the liberty as Minister of Indigenous Relations to speak to part C, which is adding the following after section 52:

Location of polling places on Indian reserves and Métis settlements

52.1(1) In preparation for an election, the Chief Electoral Officer shall consult with the council of each Indian band and with the settlement council and settlement administrator of each Métis settlement to determine whether a suitable building located on the Indian reserve or Métis settlement may be used as a polling place for electors who are residents on the Indian reserve or Métis settlement.

I won't read any more of it.

I'd just like to take this opportunity to talk about how important it is and how proud I am to stand here to again take a moment to recognize that, indeed, indigenous people are Albertans and will be treated as such by this government.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A1? The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you. As many of us in this House have now seen, the Chief Electoral Officer has raised some concerns with the current bill.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, if I could just interrupt.

Hon. minister, I believe that your amendment is currently not in order. It needs to have a signature on it, so you just have to sign it.

My apologies, hon. Member for St. Albert. If you could please continue.

Ms Renaud: Thank you. As I said, as many of us in this House have now seen, the Chief Electoral Officer has raised some concerns with the current bill. I want to be clear that we recognize the importance of involving key stakeholders as we develop policy, and government officials were in contact with the Chief Electoral Officer throughout the preparation of the bill. That being said, all Albertans are entitled to an equal opportunity to read final drafts of government bills after they are introduced in the House. There is also a process to make any necessary amendments to bills, and that's what we're doing right now. We've carefully considered the Chief Electoral Officer's latest feedback, and I'm proposing amendments to address his points. All of these amendments have been discussed with the Chief Electoral Officer to ensure that they are workable.

We recognize that some of the concerns raised by the CEO involve the use of vote tabulators. We considered vote tabulators very carefully. We had to weigh the potential cost and risks with the potential benefit. Unfortunately, we felt that a potential cost of $4.4 million was too much to pay for machines that perform a function we already have a tried-and-true way of doing, which is counting ballots. We recognize that vote tabulators may help save on staffing costs for Elections Alberta, but in the end any savings may still be undermined if for any reason the vote tabulators don't function as intended. We made the decision not to include vote tabulators in the bill to reduce the overall costs of our proposed amendments while also helping to enhance the integrity and fairness of our elections.

Part A. The first amendment I'm putting forward has to do with our proposal to allow voters to vote at any advance polling station or special mobile poll even if it's outside their electoral division. As the CEO has written, Elections Alberta may have trouble reporting the official results in a timely manner if they have to send ballots from other parts of the province to the appropriate electoral division to be counted. The CEO also mentioned that vote tabulators would have allowed a ballot to be printed on demand and that this would help ensure that people who are voting outside of their normal electoral division could receive a ballot that reflects the candidates in the appropriate riding.

The amendment I'm proposing would enable the CEO to make a directive about the handling of ballots from advance polls and special mobile polls. This would give the CEO the authority he needs to outline procedures related to the form and printing of the vote-anywhere ballots and to the delivery and counting of those ballots. When people vote in their regular electoral division, their ballots can be counted as they always have, but when people vote outside of their regular electoral division, those ballots may be transferred to a central location to be counted. This will help ensure that the vote-anywhere ballots are properly provided for and that they can be counted more quickly and that the results are available faster.

The CEO also mentioned that voter assist terminals would not be able to function as intended if Elections Alberta cannot use them in conjunction with vote tabulators. Voter assist terminals work by marking a ballot that is then counted by a vote tabulator. In other words, there are no voter assist terminals that can function as intended without also requiring the use of a vote tabulator. This amendment would enable vote tabulators to be used only in conjunction with voter assist terminals. Voter assist terminals will enable those needing assistance at the polls to vote with greater dignity and greater privacy. All Albertans have that right, and I would encourage all members to support this amendment.

Parts B and C, polls on reserves. The next two amendments are meant to help ensure accessibility for indigenous communities. Part B will clarify that in section 52.1, which is the subject of part C, the same definitions will apply as are currently in section 21(8). In section 21(8) council, Indian band, settlement administrator, and settlement council are all defined. Part C would include a statutory requirement for Elections Alberta to reach out to First Nations and Métis communities and speak with them about the possibility of having a polling place on their land.

As I've already touched on, one of the major goals of this bill is to make voting easier and more accessible. Some indigenous communities are remote, and we want to make sure that they have access to a poll should they wish to vote. Polling places would only be set up on First Nations, on reserves, or in Métis communities if the appropriate community leaders agree to allow Elections Alberta to do so.

Part D, official results. The next amendment I'm proposing will allow Elections Alberta the time they need to report on the official results of an election. Rather than shortening the time period from 10 days to seven days, this proposed amendment would maintain the 10-day rule. This amendment will address the CEO's concerns and ensure that Elections Alberta has enough time to announce the official results of an election.

Part E, advance polling days. The next part of the amendment I am proposing will address the CEO's concern about the time needed to distribute where-to-vote cards. This amendment would ensure that advance polls take place on the Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, and Saturday before an election day. We had hoped to give voters two Fridays and two Saturdays of advance voting days, but this will not leave enough time for Elections Alberta to distribute their where-to-vote cards. There will still be a fifth advance polling day in addition to the existing four, and this will allow voters more opportunities to exercise their democratic right. This will also leave enough time for Elections Alberta to distribute their where-to-vote cards.

Part F, special ballots. The next amendment I am proposing is also the result of feedback from the Chief Electoral Officer. This amendment will allow the CEO greater flexibility in assigning duties of his staff. The current act requires either the returning officer or the election clerk to handle special ballots, but at the request of Elections Alberta the CEO would now be able to designate other people as well. This amendment would also save time by the returning officer, the election clerk, or a person designated by the CEO to place special ballots in a special ballot box sooner rather than having to wait until election night. This change is intended to help Elections Alberta count the special ballots faster come election night.

Part G, results of recount. I'm proposing another minor amendment that has been requested by Elections Alberta. This amendment will maintain the status quo and ensure that returning officers are responsible for reporting election results even in the event of a recount. The bill had shifted this responsibility to the CEO, and we're proposing to reverse that at the request of Elections Alberta.

Part H, transitional. The next amendment that I'm proposing will allow the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices to begin the hiring process for the new election commissioner position as soon as the bill receives royal assent. When the bill receives royal assent, the standing committee will invite applications for the election officer position, and they will make a recommendation to the Legislative Assembly on their preferred applicant.

Finally, amendment I, coming into force. In follow-up to the previous amendment, this simple amendment will clarify that section 142.1 will come into force on royal assent. Section 142.1 allows the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices to begin the hiring process for the new election commissioner position as soon as the bill receives royal assent.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to the amendment. I have a number of questions with respect to the amendment. It's my hope that I can ask a couple of them and that we can just quickly address some of the challenges. I think that for the purposes of our discussion I'll just highlight some of my ongoing frustrations with the legislative process here inside the Chamber.

As you know, Madam Chair, the Official Opposition had asked that this particular piece of legislation be referred to a standing committee so that we could hear from the Chief Electoral Officer specifically about some of his challenges and concerns. Now, I think it's fantastic that the Member for St. Albert and some others on that side of the House have taken the opportunity to call the Chief Electoral Officer finally and have him provide some feedback. We see that in the results of this amendment.

Now, having said that, it's very, very unfortunate that everyone else inside the Chamber hasn't had the opportunity to have a discussion with the Chief Electoral Officer to find out if this is, in fact, exactly what he was hoping for or if this is another government interpretation of what he may or may not have said. As you know, Madam Chair, it's now 8:15, and you may or may not know that the Chief Electoral Officer's office is currently closed, so what's going to happen this evening is that the government is going to ask the opposition to just blindly trust that what they've included in here is exactly what the Chief Electoral Officer has asked for. It is difficult to be in touch with the Chief Electoral Officer at this point in time given that we only received this amendment mere moments ago.

Now, I wouldn't want to misrepresent, and I would be happy to thank the minister. Her office did reach out to mine about an hour and a half ago, perhaps two hours – I don't know the exact timing that it took place – and shared this particular amendment with me and members of the Official Opposition, so I do appreciate that gesture. Unfortunately, the challenge still remains the same. At 6:30 the Chief Electoral Officer was also unavailable for me to correspond with him about whether or not these changes satisfied many of his concerns that he wrote in his letter, that, you will be aware, highlighted the fact that he hadn't been asked to provide input with respect to policy direction on Bill 32.

With that said, I heard the hon. member speak about vote tabulators and the fact that it would cost $4 million but that the Chief Electoral Officer has spoken at length about why vote tabulators may be a real positive for us. I understand that they're currently being used in Calgary-Lougheed as the Leg. Offices Committee had approved that decision by the Chief Electoral Officer.

I might just double-check with the minister what the difference in cost between – with respect to enumeration. The Chief Electoral Officer has spoken at length about the high cost of door-to-door enumeration, and I'm curious to know the difference between that and what he recommends and the $4 million that she referred to in her speech, whether or not those numbers would be close to each other, and then I have a number of other questions.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. minister responsible for democratic renewal.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you very much to the member opposite for the questions around these pieces. You're absolutely correct. My colleague did refer to tabulators as a $4.4 million expense. But I would also stress that tabulators do the counting of ballots, something that we know currently works from the manual perspective, without introducing machinery or things that are connected to the Internet into our election process. So there is that other aspect to it.

That being said, you asked me for the cost for a full enumeration, and that has been estimated by the Chief Electoral Officer to be $11.1 million, so I will give you that answer.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Minister. Chair, thank you. I also know that the Chief Electoral Officer has said that if we didn't do a door-to-door enumeration and used the equally as effective and exponentially safer version that he has recommended, there would be approximately, say, a $5 million to $6 million saving in that, and perhaps that would have, then, been a good use of those resources, to use vote tabulators, as he has suggested otherwise. Now, I'm sure that I'll have the opportunity to propose an amendment around this very reasonable solution, and I hope that at that time the minister will be able to support it.

While I do appreciate this particular amendment, section 6 in part A of the amendment I do have some concerns about, significantly changing the way that we count ballots. Traditionally, as you'll know, Chair, those ballots are sent back to the electoral district to be counted or would be if it wasn't for this amendment. So the government is making a change where we'll have essentially a mass manual counting centre at the head office or the headquarters of the Chief Electoral Officer. I'm wondering if the minister knows what the additional costs may be for that mass centralized counting centre, where they will count all of the vote-anywhere ballots, and if that will actually take place – and I may have to apologize. It may be included here in the amendment; however, I haven't had the opportunity to read each clause. As you know, Madam Chair, it was just introduced minutes ago. But would those ballots, then, be counted on election day, or would they be counted at the close of the advance polls?

[Mr. Sucha in the chair]

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Member. You're not going to see that spelled out. What we've done with these amendments is essentially given the CEO the authority to make sure that he as the administrator is able to run the election in an efficient way, in a manner that he sees fit. In part A section 6 is amended under (a)(1.1)(a)(i)(C). That is where the Chief Electoral Officer is able to make a directive "providing for the counting of votes" and the process therein. As my colleague mentioned and I will state again, we worked with the Chief Electoral Officer to make sure he had the flexibility in the drafting of these amendments so that he would be able to administer and run the election efficiently. What we've done with the amendments is given him the ability to determine what that looks like.

The challenge we are solving here: without his ability to provide for the counting of votes, we would have been receiving all of the advance votes at Elections Alberta and then sending them out to the respective districts so that they could be counted there, and the amount of time that would take would be potentially too long. So now they can receive them at Elections Alberta, and through this process, as you referred to, the Chief Electoral Officer would be able to provide for the counting of advance votes at Elections Alberta.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you. Listen, I, as you know, have spoken glowingly about the Chief Electoral Officer, and I have all of the faith in the world – well, maybe that's a bit of an overstatement. I have a significant amount of faith and confidence in the Chief Electoral Officer, but to be clear, we are turning over how thousands and thousands and thousands – like, for example, in Calgary-Lougheed there were 3,500 people that voted in the advance polls, and advance polls are becoming more and more popular all across the province. Now we're going to have vote-anywhere advance polls, and while I think that it is a net positive, we are essentially making significant changes to the legislative process and then giving the Chief Electoral Officer virtually no oversight or guidance or direction with a pretty core fundamental of our democracy, which is counting the votes, the most important poll of all, and offering him the opportunity to do it in whatever way he sees fit.

While I appreciate the Chief Electoral Officer – certainly, the current one has done a fantastic job and will continue to do one – I must admit that I do like a little bit more certainty in the democratic process, something that we have all become very, very accustomed to. It's important to us. You know, we have no idea how scrutineering is going to work, who may or may not be allowed there. I'm not saying that there is anything untoward happening by any stretch of the imagination, but I do have some reservations about this particular clause in not fully knowing how the ballots will be counted.

Mr. Chair, I think that comes back down to the way the government has decided to legislate, the way that the government has decided to not refer things to committee. I'm certain that the Chief Electoral Officer probably could have provided us with reasonable answers, solutions, and then we could have an amendment that would have alleviated the concerns of not just me, but presumably some Albertans are concerned about this particular clause.

Now, no Albertans – not no Albertans. There are probably dozens of people watching online this evening, and now they have a sense that there may be a concern. Tens and tens of people, Mr. Chair. Now, they may have some concerns about this particular clause, but we didn't go to committee, which would have been a really good idea. We could have heard from the Chief Electoral Officer.

But let me proceed. Unfortunately, we don't have all night. Well, we do, but I think that we can continue on in some of the other areas of this particular amendment, this multipage amendment coming from the government.

I'd just like to speak briefly to changing the advance polling days to the Tuesday-Wednesday and then the Thursday-Friday-Saturday of the following week. While I think that having five days of advance polls does make sense, I find it interesting that this particular clause would have never been needed if the government had just gone and, say, asked the Chief Electoral Officer if they would have been able to do the very important task of getting where-to-vote-cards mailed to Albertans prior to the first day of advance polling, which was an issue that I raised in my very first remarks with respect to Bill 32 at second reading.

I just would like to remind the government that perhaps it would be important to double-check with the Chief Electoral Officer before making significant reforms to this particular piece of legislation, or if the government's past track record is any indication of their future track record, there's a good chance that we're going to be coming back to fix some of their mistakes in this particular piece of legislation anyway, so we might want to double-check with him prior to that.

The last question I have – I believe it'll be the last question, anyway, on this particular amendment and on balance, as far as I can tell. There's more good than negative in this particular case, so while I think it's unlikely that I will find it within me to support Bill 32, I will be quite likely happy to support this particular amendment.

The question, though, that I have is with respect to part H of the amendment, the transitional section, when it speaks to the elections commissioner.

I hope to move an amendment a little bit later on in the evening, so I might just send this particular amendment to the table while I speak here. Perhaps the table officer would be able to quickly review it while I ask this question and to determine if the amendment in the future would be in order or out of order given that we are amending a section of this particular legislation as a result of part H, the transitional section, and that the amendment I hope to move a little bit later is around the elections commissioner. So whether we might be changing or closing this section of the act or not, we'll take it from there.

In fact, I may need to have one of my colleagues – I know that the Member for Calgary-Hays has a couple of questions as well, so perhaps it would be helpful if he would rise and ask a couple of those prior to us proceeding on a vote on this particular amendment. Again, it accentuates the point about why we should be doing this at committee, not in the Assembly, on short notice at 8:30 at night while we try to get pieces of legislation across the line for all Albertans.

With respect to part H, Minister, my question really surrounds what happens to third-party advertisers. I know that you'll know that the Alberta Federation of Labour is one of those third-party advertisers. Let's just say that they wanted to engage in some advertising or hold an event or sell memberships. Who knows what they might like to do between now and when the independent election commissioner is appointed? Who answers questions for third-party advertisers? As you'll know, Minister, there is a significant amount of discretion inside Bill 32 that will ultimately be determined by the elections commissioner, and the elections commissioner will be the judge, jury, and disciplinarian on a wide range of sections in this legislation.

Between now and whenever that might happen – as you've noted here on the transition, when it receives royal assent, the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices shall invite folks to apply for the elections commissioner. Let me tell you, I have some things to say about whether or not we're on the right path with the elections commissioner, but in the meantime this bill might not receive royal assent for four weeks, eight weeks, depending on when the government gets around to it. I know the Lieutenant Governor has a very busy schedule, so she may or may not be able to provide royal assent in an expeditious manner. Then the committee will need to strike a search committee, people will need to apply, there will be deadlines and so on and so forth. It's going to take some time, maybe up to six months or longer. What happens between now and then? How will third-party advertisers have any certainty about whether or not they're going to be in breach of the legislation?

The Acting Chair: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, and thank you to the member for the question. I think that's very important. My advice to third-party advertisers would be that upon royal assent they can no longer do the work of political parties. They can no longer sell memberships. They can no longer gather lists of names to be used for political purposes and passed to a political party. They can no longer fund raise directly for a political party and funnel money in that way.

What they can do: the legislation, which will come into force on royal assent, will give them some clear guidelines that if they are a third party or involved in advertising, they can register with Elections Alberta. They can continue their activities because we are not restricting their free speech through these amendments. Now, if they have questions, what do they do? They can talk to the Chief Electoral Officer, who will continue to be our Chief Electoral Officer throughout this process and will be able to answer questions.

The guidelines that have been put in place have essentially two forms. Third parties, essentially, cannot do the work of political parties. That is something they are prohibited from. Apart from that, there is the requirement that they register with Elections Alberta, and they need to disclose their donors for the activities that they are undertaking when they are engaged in political advertising.

I look forward to future questions. Thank you.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Chair, and thank you to the minister for her answer. I just have a bit of a concern, then, because in many respects we are creating some significant grey area for third-party advertisers, including those that want to engage in the political process. While I certainly can appreciate that they are unable to do the work of political parties – and I think that this, you know, is a step in the right direction – I think that we probably could have been well served to do that at the special ethics committee. This particular piece of legislation speaks about what third-party advertisers can and cannot do – I can't remember the section off the top of my head; I am just taking a quick peek here – with respect to third-party advertisers' ability to, say, hold a meeting where there is a significant benefit to a political party or to a candidate, a nominated candidate.

Let's just say, for example, that the Alberta Federation of Labour would like to hold a meeting that would be a Q and A with the hon. minister of environment: come and meet the minister and ask all of the questions you have. This third-party advertiser, in this case the Alberta Federation of Labour, promotes this widely amongst their members. You'll know that the minister of environment is widely respected around the province of Alberta, and many people might want to come and hear her.

An Hon. Member: Tens of people.

Mr. Cooper: Maybe tens and tens of people. I don't know.

Let's just say that there are tons and tons of members of the Alberta Federation of Labour. A case could be made that there's significant benefit to her as a registered nominated contestant between now and when the independent election commissioner might be appointed. Well, a case could be made that that particular third-party advertiser is, in fact, in breach of the legislation, whether or not they wanted to or intended to be or they didn't.

My concern, through you, Mr. Chair, to the minister, is that the Chief Electoral Officer, as it very clearly states in the legislation, isn't responsible for providing decisions around third-party advertisers because it is at the direction of the elections commissioner. So between now and then that presents significant concerns to third parties. I mean, I don't know if it does because I just received the amendment now, but I can imagine that that is a concern that the ATA or other third-party advertisers may have with respect to perhaps inviting the Education minister to a forum.

The only person who can actually provide advice with respect to the legislation – Mr. Chair, through you to the minister, you'll know that the fine is up to $5,000, not a small amount of money. I know that all of those third-party advertisers, particularly the ATA, likely take the expenditure of members' dollars very seriously, and they wouldn't want to be in a position where they were in contravention of the law.

I appreciate your thoughts around: well, just ask the Chief Electoral Officer. Is that really the only path forward or the best-case scenario given the fact that he's actually not the disciplinarian once this piece of legislation comes into effect?

The Acting Chair: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much. What we've done with the rules that have been outlined in Bill 32 is really make sure that some of the guidelines are clear for third parties. In Bill 32 there are clear qualifications about what is a restricted event.

Now, until such time as the elections commissioner is in place, the Chief Electoral Officer is a resource available to all Albertans, where we can ask questions. In the case of a third-party advertiser they would be able to talk to the Chief Electoral Officer about their event and whether or not that event might be a good idea.

Mr. Cooper: Just for clarification's sake, then, and then I think we can move on: would you agree that the legislation requires that the independent election commissioner is, in fact, the one who will determine whether or not there has been a breach in the legislation and not the Chief Electoral Officer and that, as such, that presents a problem between now and whenever the independent election commissioner is actually appointed?

The Acting Chair: The Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you. The CEO is going to be able to provide advice. Once appointed, it is the election commissioner who is going to be the one to investigate complaints, take enforcement action, recommend prosecutions, or any number of other tasks that we have assigned to the election commissioner, but the Chief Electoral Officer is going to be able to work with third parties to provide advice in the meantime.

The Acting Chair: The Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you. So I am correct in saying that the Chief Electoral Officer could provide advice that would be not agreed to or in line with what the independent election commissioner may say upon appointment. As such, even though they asked the Chief Electoral Officer, they still could be in contravention of the legislation and wouldn't know that until the elections commissioner is appointed.

Through you, Mr. Chair, to the minister: this is a significant problem, one that you need to consider and one that, frankly, needs a solution so that you can provide clarity to all third-party advertisers. I am of the opinion that this stifles their ability to engage in political discourse during this transition period, and I don't think that's good for anybody. I don't think that it's good for members on that side of the House and I don't think it's good for members on this side of the House when we are, essentially, passing legislation that only creates a grey area as to what third-party advertisers can and cannot do.

I know that the minister disagrees because of what she has said with respect to the clear direction that they've provided, and I agree. With respect to selling memberships, they can't. With respect to fundraising, they can't. With respect to sharing the political party information that they gather for political purposes, they can't. It's clear. But there are many, many, many, many activities that a third-party advertiser may engage in that they would like the advice of the judge, jury, and disciplinarian on. What the minister is proposing in this amendment and in Bill 32 is the exact opposite of that. I think that the minister should reconsider. I think that the minister in this case – and don't misunderstand me. There are other things in the amendment, particularly with respect to voter assist terminals and some of the things that have been highlighted, that are a net positive, but this sort of grey area that the minister has created is not a positive.

The Acting Chair: I'd caution members not to use names.

Ms Gray: Thank you for the new pun.

I would like to clear up this grey area. What I have been saying is that the CEO will be available to answer questions. If you go to page 104 of Bill 32, section 142, it is clear that prior to the election commissioner being appointed, the references in the sections of the new Election Act to the election commissioner "shall be read as a reference to the Chief Electoral Officer." Essentially, between now and the appointment of the new election commissioner the Chief Electoral Officer will be the one enforcing this act.

Mr. Cooper: Well, to the minister: thank you for the clarification. I appreciate that. It certainly did create some grey area over the last 20 minutes or so. Well, we pointed in one direction, and now we have another, which, I can't reiterate enough, is a good reason that this should have been sent to committee. But if in fact the Chief Electoral Officer can do the job between now and when there's one appointed, I hesitate – I'm curious to know exactly what the point is of an additional legislative officer, but we can move to that later.

I know that some of my colleagues have some additional questions, so I will hope that they can take those.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd like to discuss the amendment, part C, the location of polling places on Indian reserves and Métis settlements. One of my questions is: is it already a practice to have polling stations on reserves and Métis settlements? One of my other questions is: by putting this into the legislation, does this now allow us to put that in there? Another question. Right now we're asking permission from the settlements and the reserves, from the councils. Are we setting precedents now that we need to ask other municipalities for permission to be able to hold polling stations? Another question I have is: if a reserve or settlement is remote and they deny access to the settlement or reserve, what solution is there to allow those Albertans to be able to vote? If the minister could answer some of those questions, I would really appreciate it.

Thank you.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much for asking questions about this very important section regarding location of polling places on Indian reserves and Métis settlements. First off, I'll start with the last question you asked. If there will not be a plan for a polling station in a remote location, we have enhanced the special ballot process, and that can be taken advantage of by all Albertans. What we've done to improve that process is allow people to request special ballots ahead of writ drop because there was a certain percentage of special ballots that were not being returned in time to be properly counted. That continues to be an option for all Albertans if they are not able to get to a polling place.

We felt it was very important to make sure that as we were preparing to work with the Chief Electoral Officer in making sure that there are adequate polling locations on reserves and Métis settlements, there was consultation with the band or with the local settlement administration for each settlement as we go forward, to make sure that they are consulted because we need to find suitable building locations and suitable technology set-ups. There needs to be power, there needs to be Internet connection and so on. There needs to be collaboration between the Chief Electoral Officer and any polling location, and that process is used now, where the Chief Electoral Officer will contact school boards to work with them prior to putting a polling place in a school, for example. Going forward, because we are allowing more advance and mobile poll locations, they will be reaching out to universities, as an example. But there needs to be adequate resources for there to be a polling station.

The Chief Electoral Officer cannot unilaterally decide that there will be voting in X place because there needs to be co-operation, so through part C we are essentially enshrining that there needs to be a strong effort to make sure that we are reaching out to our First Nation and Métis peoples, that we are connecting with reserves and, where possible, placing polling locations to suit the populations that are there.

I hope that addressed your questions.

The Acting Chair: Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you. One of my questions was on how the process works. I do know that in my own constituency I've got three reserves and two settlements, and I truly want them to participate in the election process. The way I understood it was that the CEO would book a facility on that site, and then they would hold that as a polling station. Now are we creating an extra level or an extra layer that potentially could prevent my First Nations and Métis constituents that want to vote but can't because suddenly, say, a council decides that they don't want to participate? My question is – again, this is where I want clarity on this – are we adding an extra level of barriers for these important people within my constituency to vote? That's my question.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Minister for Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you very much. I'd like to thank the member for a very thoughtful question. I think that it is an important thing for us to be concerned about. The circumstances are such that, particularly with regard to First Nations communities, they are truly sovereign on their land, and we can't simply make a decision to do something on the reserve without the permission of the band and the band council. It's the nature of the reality of the jurisdictional divide between the province and federally, so it needed to be worded in such a way that we were making sure that we were acknowledging the jurisdiction of the band council to make decisions for things that occur on their land.

As a result, you know, we worded it in such a way that we will have the CEO have a conversation with the band council. I would hope and I would imagine – all of my conversations with the band councils are that they want to be participants in the election – that they will simply turn it over to the CEO to find a space on the council. But it was a way of acknowledging and reflecting the reality of who has authority on that land.

Thank you.

Mr. Cyr: I understand and I completely agree that we need to respect First Nations reserves and also settlement land.

Now, this moves on to the next question. If we are treating the reserves and the settlements in this fashion, are we now going to be starting a precedent that we need to ask every town or city to be able to put polling stations? I think that's a reasonable question because I can see that we're doing it here, and I think that it's important to establish that. I would like to understand what sets this apart from the others.

The Acting Chair: The Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you very much.

I appreciate you following up with your concerns. We're not setting a precedent because towns and councils do not own the land around them. It continues to remain part of the province of Alberta, but there is a very different status on-reserve. It is not, in fact, Alberta land. It is federal land that they are on, and the jurisdiction for responsibility of what happens on the land remains with the band and the council, so it is already in law a different situation than anywhere else off-reserve in this province. We're just simply acknowledging a reality that we cope with and we deal with all the time.

In terms of our concerns, you know, as the province of Alberta we have found that very frustrating, as I know many other governments have. Of course, we want First Nations to be full participants in our democracy, in our economy and so on, and it has from time to time frustrated us that we couldn't simply do things on-reserve that we would like to do throughout the rest of the province.

That jurisdictional divide has been a problem, and I think it's been a very negative problem in terms of assisting people on-reserve, but we also cannot just simply pretend that it does not exist. This honours the law. It respects and honours the integrity of the sovereignty of the bands on their own land yet at the same time provides for them to be full participants in the democratic process here in the province of Alberta. It's not a process we have to worry about anywhere else in the province because the issue of whose land it is and who has sovereignty on that land only exists in that one unique situation.

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Okay. I can see where the thought process for the minister is coming from when it comes to our First Nations. But is it not true that land is also held by the province? I hear your discussion point here, sir, that says that towns and cities are different, and I would fully agree when a reserve is involved with this. I don't mean to actually in any way, shape, or form say that we shouldn't be consulting with these groups to ensure that they get out there and are active. How is a settlement different from a town or city when it comes to this, sir?

Mr. Feehan: Thank you very much for the question. You know, it is more of a concern in this situation, as you pointed out, because the land on settlements continues to remain in the province of Alberta. It's not considered federal land at this point. However, there have been recent decisions, particularly the Daniels decision, that recognize that the Métis people are indigenous people or aboriginal, as it says under the section of the act. As a result, we know that moving forward the federal government will be making new decisions about the treatment of indigenous land as presently occupied by Métis people. They are in the process right now of signing framework agreements with both the Métis Nation of Alberta and the Métis settlements, and we anticipate that they will be moving in this direction.

In this case I think you're identifying that we are seeking to honour our relationship with the indigenous people who are Métis in this province in a way that is somewhat anticipatory of the direction that we'll be moving in in the future. I don't believe that this will be problematic in terms of setting a precedent anywhere else in the province. I appreciate the concern, however. I think that we can be fairly confident that because the lands have been set aside uniquely for the Métis people and they have a unique government that only Métis people can vote for on that settlement, they indeed represent the Métis people on the settlements in a manner which is very similar to or akin to the nature of the relationship on-reserve.

I think that it's sort of good for us to acknowledge our new relationship with the indigenous people of this province, to respect that in our lives, and to signal that in the province of Alberta we are going to take to heart the commitment to adopt the United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples, which includes Métis people, and we will act on that as if it were law. That's essentially what, you know, the federal government has agreed to do most recently, just even last week, and what we as a province here in Alberta had indicated we would do some time ago, when we first formed the government in this province. It's consistent with the desires of the people of this province, the desires of the government to move forward, and the desires of the people who will be affected by that; that is, the Métis people in this province.

I do appreciate your concern. I know that you have a great respect for the people in your community and, of course, throughout the province, and I'm sure you will, you know, want to work with us to ensure that the indigenous people in this province become full participants in this great democracy that you and I share and have benefited from by being here today.

Thank you.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, sir, for your answer. You mentioned the Daniels case. I think that we had a lot of Métis people within Canada celebrating that case.

Looking at this legislation, part C, can I then move to the conclusion that you are anticipating to transfer our settlement land to the federal government? That is what it sounds like you are anticipating with this legislation, sir.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you very much for the question. I think that would be presumptive to think that that would indeed happen. It is a possibility that if the federal government at some point along the way follows through on some of their at this point mused about notions of setting aside land for Métis people in very much the same way that they have done for First Nations people in this province, then I suppose at some point in the future that is true. I would hate for that to go on the record at this time because there have been no consultations on that. There have been no discussions explicitly on that. It is something that we anticipate could possibly be an event in the future but one that I would not want to codify in Hansard or anywhere in the law in this province.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Let me say that in looking at this amendment, which has arrived here to us at the eleventh hour, more of it seems good than anything else. I will say that.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

An Hon. Member: It's only 9 o'clock.

Mr. McIver: The hon. minister is questioning the time zone we're in, I suppose.

But, Madam Chair, you know what? I have to say that this amendment, if it's the result of finally talking to the Chief Electoral Officer, really draws attention to the fact that our side of the House has been talking for days now about how the Chief Electoral Officer should have been consulted along the way. The government has been insisting that the officer was, and now they've kind of admitted that what they've been saying isn't, in fact, what's been the actual situation since a late-in-the-game consultation has led to this amendment. I will put that on record because it really speaks to who can be believed around here.

On a more positive note, even though I don't think Bill 32 can be saved, this amendment may well improve Bill 32. I'm particularly fond of the sections for locations of polling places on Indian reserves and Métis settlements. I see that as, in my view, a positive step and one that we should encourage. Surely, on the committee for the children in care panel, with members from all sides of the House, they will know that I've often asked the question, "Are the children in care more Albertan or more Canadian?" which, of course, simply means that if they are indeed Albertans, then perhaps they should be treated like Albertans, with all the rights and privileges everybody else gets, and this seems like a consideration of a similar way of looking at them, saying: "Let's bring them, as much as we can, more closely, more completely into the electoral process. Let's make sure they're welcome. Let's make it easy." This appears to be a step in the right direction.

However, some of the discussion has been around who owns the land and the fact that the reserves in particular are federal land instead of provincial land. Of course, on the reserves part of the rights that they have there is to allow people on the reserves or not allow nonaboriginal people on the reserves when they choose to. To the minister: have you considered the possibility of any complications?

Again, let me be clear. I'm very much in favour of having polling stations on the reserves, but what, for example, if there's a particular candidate – it doesn't matter which party because it's the same for all parties here – and they have a hard time getting their scrutineer to the polling station because they can't get on the reserve land? There are a number of legitimate reasons why that could crop up. I just wanted to ask the minister whether in any way the minister has considered these possible eventualities, or perhaps the minister has actually gone past what I'm musing about and indeed has an answer. Either way, I would be pleased if I could hear some comment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you. I appreciate the question that has been raised by the Member for Calgary-Hays. I am concerned, though, that we not begin to characterize the relationship with our friends and our country mates on the reserves as somehow acting in a way to exclude people from their communities. In a way, that would be problematic in this case. I appreciate the concern. I guess there is some potential that something could happen, but it's not based on any experience that we have, and while I guess I could not rule it out ultimately, because there is some power to limit who comes onto reserves and who doesn't, there has not been even a single incident in the past that would make me concerned that there has been a model of rejecting people entering on reserves for these kinds of purposes.

In fact, in my time of working with reserves, initially as a social worker some 30 years ago and now as minister, I have seen such an incredible welcomeness and openness on the reserves in this province and people welcomed on for multiple reasons. I think that we need to really stand on our experience of the relationship with the community and acknowledge their extreme kindness to us from the day we settlers came to this country to the present. You know, I would just ask us to fall back on the relationship as the way to provide ourselves some comfort in this situation.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: You know, I want to say to the minister how much I appreciate that, and I, too, have had nothing but positive experiences. Nonetheless, in light of planning for all eventualities, I thought the question was worth asking.

I will just close by reiterating that I think the idea of offering First Nations reserves and Métis settlements the opportunity to have polling stations is a positive one and one that I surely support.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just want to rise and speak again to section H of the legislation and more about the election commissioner. Unfortunately, because the government has chosen to move this amendment, it has limited the opposition's ability to make any other changes to the independent office of the election commissioner. I had intended on speaking at some length about some of the challenges around the election commissioner. In fact, I had hoped to be able to move an amendment that would take the election commissioner and make them responsible to the Chief Electoral Officer because, in fact, the independent office of the election commissioner is going to create significant amounts of duplication of what the Chief Electoral Officer can already do and perform.

We're going to see a significant amount of increased costs with respect to the independent election commissioner, and there's no reason why we can't have the election commissioner inside the office of the Chief Electoral Officer. I know that this government likes to speak at length about how they do things in Manitoba, and so much of Manitoba has been infiltrated by the NDP world view there. One of the things that they have in Manitoba is an independent elections commissioner. But, interestingly enough, Madam Chair, the independent elections commissioner doesn't actually function as an independent office of the Legislature, as we've seen this government propose in this bill. So I had really hoped to be able to move an amendment that would take the election commissioner and put them inside the office of the Chief Electoral Officer.

One of the reasons why I had hoped to do that is the significant amount of cost savings that would have been realized in that. You'll know, Madam Chair, that independent officers of the Legislative Assembly are expensive. The Elections Alberta office alone ranges from $7 million to $30 million a year, depending on where we are in the election cycle. The office of the Public Interest Commissioner is $1.2 million alone. The office of the Ombudsman: $3.2 million. The office of the Auditor General: $26 million. The office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner: $6.7 million. The office of the Child and Youth Advocate: $15 million. Unfortunately, I don't know that I have the Ethics Commissioner's here with me this evening, but you can see that there are significant costs that are going to be associated with the independent office of the election commissioner. I wondered if the minister might briefly just let us know exactly what the costs of this commissioner are going to be.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. minister of democratic renewal.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Before we talk about costs, I'd like to address the member's concern that this is going to be duplication. I can tell you fairly clearly that the Chief Electoral Officer, who's responsible for administering the election, running an election, is going to be doing very different things from our election commissioner, who is going to be doing investigations and working on the complaints that essentially, if I were to imagine what this might look like six months from now, probably involve concerns around dark money, that people are concerned is seeping into our electoral system. And those special investigations will have a very different focus than somebody, the Chief Electoral Officer, who is concerned with and focused on administering and getting ready for the 2019 election, dealing with new boundaries, assuming the boundaries amendment act passes this session, and dealing with all of the processes gearing up to the 2019 election, so two offices doing very different work.

The member opposite also talked about Manitoba. We did look at what Manitoba was doing, but we also looked across the country in all jurisdictions, and one of the key areas that we found that had a model that we decided to emulate was the federal government. The federal government has had a separate office for their elections commissioner, someone who could do investigations and, not only that, someone who could request or hire special investigators in specific situations, people with expertise, to look into a particular type of concern. It was the federal model that we, in fact, chose to model our updates on, making sure that we could have that information and that set-up in a way that would respond to the concerns that we've been hearing from Albertans.

What I've been hearing from Albertans, in Mill Woods and across the province when I'm travelling in other communities, is the concern that parties are looking for loopholes or looking for gaps in the system to be able to bring in dark money, whether that be out-of-province or corporate money, and connecting that directly to parties. That was why it was so important for us to put in anticollusion mechanisms, why it was so important for us to really reconsider, through the amendments to the Election Act, how we could make sure that we are getting dark money out of our politics, that we are making sure that politics will remain with Albertans, and that people will be able to know who is trying to influence them, who is trying to sway their opinion on any given matter.

Now, we had to balance those issues, very clearly, with freedom of communication, freedom of speech, freedom of association. We saw a private member's bill brought forward with a very different model, one that specifically defined what a PAC is, one that specifically banned corporate and union donations to that PAC. I appreciate the work that the other party did on that private member's bill, but we could not, in good conscience, do something that narrow and that specific, because by defining “PAC,” you’re leaving room for somebody to shift and to change what they are just enough not to fit that definition anymore. By banning corporate and union donations to those entities, you are impeding free speech, and despite what I’ve heard some people say on CBC lately, the Supreme Court has ruled on freedom of speech for unions and for corporations, and it would not have stood. Making sure that we separate out some of those items was important to us.

In looking into setting up the election commissioner and a separate office, to us reviewing the Manitoba model and the federal model seemed to be the best use of resources and the best way for us to meet the demands of Albertans who wanted to get big money out of politics, who wanted to know who was paying to influence their opinion, who wanted to be involved in those items. Madam Chair, I will follow up on the exact cost of that office just shortly.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Chair. You know, I find it interesting that the minister talks about getting dark money out of politics. Listen, I think it’s a good cause. She talks about out-of-province money. Just two days ago in the House the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills tabled a document of those who’ve been donating to the Alberta Federation of Labour’s third-party advertiser group – you might call them a PAC as well – including a union from Burnaby, British Columbia, making donations to such an organization that is spending significant amounts of resources supporting the NDP. They like to talk about dark money, and perhaps they should talk to some of their colleagues over at some of the large unions as well with respect to over half a million dollars being donated just this year alone to that PAC.

I find some significant concern in this edition of the independent office of the Legislature. Members on that side of the House, including Edmonton-Centre and Calgary-North West, have spoken about the costs, spoken against seniors’ advocates, disability advocates being independent officers of the Legislature, and now they want to make the elections commissioner an independent officer of the Legislature. I think it’s very disappointing.

There is a risk that Albertans will be confused about whether or not they need to contact the Chief Electoral Officer or the independent elections commissioner. Certainly, the office of the Chief Electoral Officer does this exact work now. We could have had significant savings by expanding the office. In fact, the amendment that I intended to propose didn’t remove an independent elections commissioner but more reflected the Manitoba model and put that inside the office of the Chief Electoral Officer. The minister references the federal model, but I think that it’s interesting because even that isn’t, in fact, an independent office of Parliament. It reports directly to Justice, I believe, or otherwise. You know, Madam Chair, I have significant concerns about the elections commissioner being an independent office of the Legislature. I think we already have a well-established independent office of the Legislature that does a fantastic job in the form of the Chief Electoral Officer.

I get a little apprehensive when the government is essentially going to be appointing who that person is. Although it will be done through the Legislative Offices Committee, as we see in section H of the amendment, the challenge is that that selection committee will almost certainly be weighted in the favour of NDP members of the Assembly.

There are a lot of concerns. I’m very disappointed that I’m unable to move this amendment that would bring the elections commissioner into the office of the Legislature, but there is significant work to still be done this evening, so I think it may be best if we move on and address some of the other significant concerns in Bill 32.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A1?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Deputy Chair: We are now back on the original bill. Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. I wish to propose an amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. member, your amendment will be referred to as A2. Please proceed.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. The amendment before the Assembly this evening is as follows: section 2(a) is amended by striking out clause (iv) and substituting the following. The long and the short of the amendment – and there’s been significant debate around this particular clause – is with respect to residency and requirements for voting in elections here in Alberta. The amendment amends the section which removes the mandatory six-month residency period. This amendment changes the requirement from having to reside in Alberta on the day of the election to being a resident for 30 days.

Madam Chair, I think the intent of encouraging voter engagement is a very important intent. Here on this side of the House we also want to encourage those to engage in the electoral process wherever possible. Now, having said that, I believe that a six months’ residency requirement is, in fact, too long. I know that during the last provincial election I had numerous constituents in the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills come to the office and speak about some of their concerns, that they’d love to be able to vote in the upcoming election; however, they had only been here for three months or four months. They had expressed some concern about whether or not half a year was really reasonable for them to have to wait to vote here in the province of Alberta.

I fully acknowledge that six months is, in fact, too long for people to have to wait. But I also believe that 30 days is significantly more reasonable, and requiring zero residency, as in that you can move to the province of Alberta on the day of the election and still be able to vote – now, I certainly acknowledge that there are requirements with respect to valid Alberta ID or that someone would vouch for you and be on the voter list. It is possible to vote without that ID, but obviously the easiest path forward would be to have some form of Alberta ID.

But this particular clause, Madam Chair – and I know that I’ve had the opportunity to speak with a number of constituents in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, and my office has received significant feedback from Albertans, and it’s important. At the end of the day, that’s what we’re for, to represent those constituents, and I am certain that all members of the Assembly have received some feedback around residency requirements. Thirty days is a reasonable amount of time. It means that on the day that the writ dropped, you are also already in the province of Alberta and you have been able to follow along in the election process, get a real sense of the direction, also that you are in fact intending on continuing to be an Alberta resident, or certainly you've made some commitment to do that.

We do have significant concerns with respect to no residency requirement. I will acknowledge that there are other provinces that have moved towards this, but I think that it is very important that we do what is best in Alberta for Albertans by Albertans, and that is exactly what we have the opportunity to do here this evening, to provide Albertans some sense of certainty.

You know, I will be the first to acknowledge that the Chief Electoral Officer has said that this is difficult to enforce. But we shouldn't legislate; we should allow honest people to continue to be honest. I recognize that someone could also not be honest about 30 days, and it would be difficult to enforce. But lots of legislation is difficult to enforce, and we shouldn't not have things in place to protect our democracy because it might be difficult to catch someone doing the wrong thing. We ought to provide Albertans the best opportunity to be honest and also provide Albertans other assurances that there are some protections around the democratic process, particularly with respect to residency here in the province.

I won't belabour the point too long this evening as I know that at the other portions of the legislative process we have spoken about this particular requirement. I encourage all members of the Assembly to consider what I would suggest is a very reasonable compromise and still does a number of things that the minister has tried to do in terms of encouraging voter turnout.

It also has addressed some of the issues that I know the Chief Electoral Officer has had, not fully but certainly some of them, with respect to information sharing between Elections Alberta and Elections Canada. With a 30-day limit it provides them the opportunity to share information freely and openly. I know that six months didn't.

Certainly, this is reasonable. I encourage folks to support it and provide Albertans what they have been contacting my office and asking for; that is, some assurances that those who are voting in Alberta elections are actually Albertans and are here legitimately, want to stay, and want to be part of our process as well as have met some very basic requirements to ensure that our democracy is protected.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2? The hon. minister responsible for democratic renewal.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much. I appreciate that the member opposite has taken the time to make sure he's accurately describing both his amendment and also the change that our government has put forward. I'm not surprised to hear that he has had a lot of contact in his constituency office given the inaccurate social media shareables that have been out there on this issue, making it hard to gauge this issue given that misinformation was deliberately put out, confusing people on this issue.

We are not changing the ID requirements in that process. Rather, we are following a recommendation from the Chief Electoral Officer, which I appreciate the member opposite acknowledges. I understand that you've spoken with him. The year 2014 was the first time, I believe, that the CEO brought this forward. It was discussed at length at a committee of the Legislature, and at that time the decision was made to shorten the six-month window. But the CEO was asking for its removal. Other jurisdictions have removed it. The CEO repeated his recommendation in 2015 to the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee.

When someone moves to Alberta and puts down their roots here, they should be able to vote in our elections. Putting up barriers creates voter disenfranchisement, and I do not want to be a part of that. When someone becomes a new Canadian citizen, they can vote the very next day, but if someone moves from B.C., they can't. That doesn't make sense to me. I want to make sure that people who move to Alberta, who live in Alberta, who make it their primary residence, which is how the legislation is worded – that is what they are looking for, the ordinary residence of the person – will be able to vote in our elections.

For those reasons, I will not be accepting the amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Chair. I do want to take the chance to speak on this amendment. I think it's a very reasonable amendment, 30 days. I know the government itself, even though they won't admit now, have considered this, too, that maybe that would be reasonable, you know, to have a 30-day window. Of course, now they've dug in their heels. They're probably not going to change.

I want to point out a couple of things that have been said about this in this very House. Now, the Member for Edmonton-Centre got up and said something along these lines here:

It reminds me of some of the ridiculous claims we've heard from south of the border about phantom suggestions of mass voter fraud.

Another thing he said was:

If this, Madam Speaker, is a mass conspiracy for voter fraud, it's a [expletive] of an inefficient one.

Of course, later on we heard from the Member for Calgary-Elbow. He said:

But to attempt to deceive Albertans to think that somehow we're going to be overrun by hordes of Saskatchewanians and British Columbians and people from Prince Edward Island . . .

He goes on to say:

So to suggest that this is going to lead to widespread voter fraud, frankly, smacks of the kind of untruths that we see coming out of the United States right now . . .

Then he goes on to say:

There was not widespread voter fraud in the United States, and there will not be widespread voter fraud in this province.

9:30

Madam Chair, when I look at these comments on this very issue, I guess the only thing that they're concerned about is massive voter fraud. But you know what, Madam Chair? I'm concerned about voter fraud, period. I guess it appears from these comments that these people are only worried if it's massive. Well, I think we should be concerned about any voter fraud at all, and to suggest that, you know, if it's widespread, it's different than if it's isolated – I guess that's okay, then, if it's just some isolated voter fraud.

Now, if we look at the Member for Little Bow in a past election: won by 10 votes.

Mr. Cooper: Whoa. How many? Landslide. Landslide, Little Bow.

Mr. Loewen: Ten votes is all it would have taken to make a difference in that election. Actually, 11, I guess. So, Madam Chair, I don't see that there's a problem with the 30 days.

Now, the Member for Calgary-Elbow actually made a very bold statement, I thought. He said, "We will not have people who are fraudulently or illegitimately voting because of this bill. It simply will not happen.” Well, I hope he’s willing to stake his political career on that because that’s a pretty bold statement, I would say.

Madam Chair, now, one thing that was brought forward is the issue of vouching. Of course, if somebody doesn’t have any ID to prove where they live or anything, then somebody that’s from the constituency that can prove where they live can vouch on behalf of somebody else that can’t. Of course, the way the law is written now, you could only vouch for one person in an election year. On April 20, 2010, the Premier brought forward an amendment to Bill 7, the Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2010. In this amendment it says, “be amended in section 31 in the proposed section 95 by striking out subsection (4). Subsection (4) states: ‘No elector shall vouch for more than one elector at an election.’” So the Premier at one time wanted to strike out the restriction to vouch for only one person per electoral year.

So, Madam Chair, I think we see some issues here. I think that this is a reasonable amendment. Thirty days isn’t a long time. I think we can see that the idea of vouching is not a bad idea. I think it helps in a lot of situations to increase voter opportunity. But it does offer an opportunity for the possibility of voter fraud, especially when you remove this requirement of six months and bring it to nothing. It’s not even a day. It just doesn’t exist anymore. I guess it’s one second; as soon as you show up in Alberta and you can have somebody vouch for you, then I guess you can be eligible to vote.

I know they talk about residency, Madam Chair, but, you know, as long as somebody is willing to show up and say that they plan on living here, then I guess they can change their mind after the election, whatever the case. This is a reasonable amendment. We should support this amendment. Like I say, I’m concerned about voter fraud, period, not just mass voter fraud.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the moment just to offer a few remarks quickly before we go ahead and, I assume, probably, vote on the question for this particular amendment. I did just want to note that when we are weighing these sorts of questions, as was in fact weighed in a court case, which the Chief Electoral Officer did reference in terms of the removal of the six-month residency requirement, what we are looking at is the likelihood of there being damage from making that decision. Looking at weighing whether allowing someone as much access as possible to their constitutional right to cast a vote versus the possibility of public harm due to an incident of something such as voter fraud: that is a very careful consideration to make. In general the principle under the rule of law is to err on the side of freedom and try to ensure the protection of someone’s rights. In this case that court ruling was that it was more important to protect that individual right than it was likely that that was going to cause severe harm.

The member that just spoke spoke about his concern about any voter fraud, and indeed that’s fair enough. But again, Madam Chair, to remind the House, there is no more likelihood of voter fraud under the legislation that we are proposing than there is under the current rules. Absolutely none. Someone is still perfectly capable right now, if they wish, of vouching for someone and saying that they are indeed a resident when they in fact are not. Somebody is perfectly capable of making that lie, making that misrepresentation under the legislation as it currently stands. Removing the six-month residency does not increase the likelihood of that occurring.

I respect the member’s opinion. I certainly respect the desire to protect the position that they’ve put forward as a party, but I cannot support this amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are now back on the original bill. The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. I have an amendment. I feel like Gary Bettman. There’s been a trade.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, if you can just wait until I see the amendment.

Mr. Cooper: I would love to wait until you’ve seen the amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, your amendment will be referred to as A3. Please go ahead.

Mr. Cooper: Why, thank you. A3, my favourite amendment. Well, Madam Chair, we just heard the minister speak about how she’s listened to the Chief Electoral Officer with respect to residency requirements and it’s something that he had asked for. While I personally disagree with going to zero requirements, I believe that it was a very reasonable amendment. The minister has said that she’s been listening to the Chief Electoral Officer all along. Well, his letter did indicate something different than that.

I thought that I would bring before the minister an opportunity to listen to the Chief Electoral Officer again. I don’t know why she, through you to the minister, wouldn’t want to listen to the Chief Electoral Officer. This amendment specifically will eliminate the requirement for a door-to-door enumeration. Madam Chair, I think that it's important. There are a number of reasons why we ought to go ahead and pass this particular amendment, particularly because the Chief Electoral Officer has provided significant feedback and communication around just how ineffective door-to-door enumeration has become, how costly door-to-door enumeration has become, and, perhaps most importantly to the Minister of Labour, the significant concern that the CEO has expressed about the safety of sending out enumerators on a door-to-door as well as a rural basis. There has certainly been significant discussion about crime in rural and central Alberta, and there is a significant concern around this particular risk. I know that the Minister of Labour will know that any worker is able to refuse unsafe work, and the Chief Electoral Officer has expressed significant concerns around the safety of enumerators, but not just the safety; he's also identified that the vast majority of individuals in his role, in the form of Chief Electoral Officers, are moving away from door-to-door enumeration and towards targeted and specific enumeration as well as mail-outs.

The Chief Electoral Officer quite recently, in fact on the 1st of December, spoke at length about the full cost of door-to-door enumeration being approximately $11 million. Eleven million dollars. "As detailed in our 2014 budget submission, door-to-door enumeration" – I'm quoting from the meeting of December 1 – "is no longer effective in updating the register of electors." I'll stop there because the good news, Madam Chair, is that the minister responsible for democratic renewal knows better than the Chief Electoral Officer, who says that it's not effective, because I can't imagine her making a recommendation to spend $11 million on something that she doesn't actually believe is the most effective use of those resources. Now, the Chief Electoral Officer has said that it isn't, but clearly she believes differently and knows better than the guy who's responsible for delivering this particular task.

I will continue to quote from that meeting now.

As previously reported by the former Chief Electoral Officer in his enumeration report, returning officers have expressed difficulty in recruiting staff. Fifteen per cent of the staff hired quit during the enumeration process. There were 336 polling subdivisions that went unenumerated. We experienced the loss of electors' personal information.

That's a problem.

There were three polling subdivisions where elector information was lost.

Kind of an important bit of information to keep track of if you're collecting people's personal information, that was in the custody of those enumerators after it was lost.

We had a high volume of Workers' Compensation Board claims, so slip-and-fall accidents, dog bites, and physical threats from electors at the door. There is also a high number of Albertans who refuse to open the door or are not home. Albertans are concerned about their safety, and this concern has grown over the last seven years. We've listened to discussions in . . .

Oh. This is a wonderful quote from him.

. . . the Legislature this week specifically about the safety in rural Alberta, and I share similar concerns about the safety of sending enumerators across the province.

Imagine. I know that the government doesn't like to talk about rural crime and that the government doesn't like to have emergency debates on very important issues, but the Chief Electoral Officer pays attention to what's happening in the Legislature, and he knows that there are significant safety concerns in sending enumerators out across the province. But, Madam Chair, I am fearful that the minister responsible for democratic renewal will choose to continue on the path of not listening to the Chief Electoral Officer and, as such, not accept this particular amendment, that would not require a full door-to-door enumeration.

I'll quote again from the meeting of December 1.

No jurisdiction in Canada performs a full door-to-door enumeration because of the concerns mentioned in the previous slide and due to the establishment of a permanent register of electors that is updated on a monthly basis from public data sources. The last two jurisdictions to do full enumerations were Saskatchewan and Manitoba.

Manitoba's last enumeration was in 2016, so five years after our last door to door, and the Chief Electoral Officer from Manitoba has stated . . .

I know they love Manitoba over there.

. . . in her report that 60 per cent of returning officers experienced difficulty . . . 39 per cent of enumerators found it difficult . . . to perform the task.

I could go on and on, but I think the point is very clear – very clear – the clearest point I've made all night, perhaps. The Chief Electoral Officer has significant concerns about the safety and well-being of those who might be performing this. It is a drastic, classic overexpenditure on something that everyone has walked away from in every other jurisdiction across the nation, yet this minister knows better than everyone else, it would appear. Spending $11 million on something that is not going to get us results is profoundly disappointing. I hope that the minister will reconsider and accept this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A3? The hon. minister responsible for democratic renewal.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Madam Chair, and thank you to my colleague both for this amendment as well as for reflecting for the record the concerns and thoughts of the Chief Electoral Officer on this item. I would like to draw attention to essentially what I am attempting to do, what we are attempting to do as a government with Bill 32, An Act to Strengthen and Protect Democracy in Alberta, and that is that we are looking to encourage voter participation. We are looking to see a higher voter turnout in the 2019 election. We want Albertans to be engaged in our democracy, and we've implemented a number of measures to reduce barriers to allow Albertans to be able to engage.

In this case, door-to-door enumeration – that personal touch of someone coming to your home to remind you of the electoral process, to remind you of your ability to vote in an election, to confirm your information, to compile that voters list to make sure that there is accurate voter information, and to encourage people to vote – is something that I think may help with voter participation. One hasn't been done in Alberta since 2011. We have not been doing door-to-door enumeration for quite some time. The opportunity to talk to the voters, to let them know of their rights to vote, to engage on that may have value.

Now, I am a former programmer, Madam Chair. I love technology. But database trawling and doing the online digital updates could be missing that interpersonal touch of telling someone, "There's an election coming up, and here's how you get onto the voters list or off the voters list," and working with them to that effect. Door-to-door enumeration is something which, I would remark, might be the most convenient way for an elector to get onto the list because someone comes to their door to engage them rather than them having to go to a website to sign up or to be tracked through some other digital update. In my opinion, I think that door-to-door enumeration and making sure that we have a final update of our voters list, given the huge amount of change in Alberta since 2011, people moving here, people moving within Alberta – let's do one last door-to-door enumeration and update the list and assess at that point, on a go-forward basis, whether door-to-door enumeration has value or not.

These are the reasons why we have included a door-to-door enumeration. We want quality lists. More than that, we want Albertans to know about the upcoming election and how they can get onto the voters list and their ability to participate in our democracy. Making sure that we have good voter information and encourage participation is paramount to me. That is why so many of the pieces of Bill 32 are focused on voter participation and encouraging people to be part of the democratic process.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A3?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on amendment A3 as proposed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are now back on the bill. Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Why, thank you. I have an amendment to propose.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member. Your amendment will be referred to as A4.

Please go ahead.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, thank you, thank you, Madam Chair. I propose an amendment. There has been much, much, much discussion about getting big money out of politics. I have had the opportunity to speak at length about the importance of getting big money out of politics. I've also highlighted the fact that there's no bigger money in politics than government money and their continual desire and unquenchable thirst for making announcements during elections, by-elections and advertising government programs during all of that time.

I would like to thank the minister for putting some restrictions on government advertising during elections and by-elections. However, in Bill 32 the government has proposed a number of exemptions that, you might say, Madam Chair, you could drive a government announcement through. This particular amendment proposes to strike out a number of the clauses that provide exemptions for government advertising.

[Mr. Sucha in the chair]

Now, I will be the first to acknowledge, Mr. Chair, that there is important work of the government that needs to proceed during elections and by-elections, particularly with respect to public safety, particularly with respect to health and other major issues that may be before Albertans. On issues of public health and safety I fully agree that the government should continue to be able to advertise when necessary during a by-election or a general election. I also continue to agree that during an election or by-election governments should be able to advertise with respect to procurement or other advertisements required by law.

Unfortunately, within the Bill 32 legislation the government has chosen to include clauses that will allow announcements during by-elections that may specifically have a larger impact on the constituency that is in the middle of a by-election. An example that

I have been given by members of the ministry is that the government would still be able to make an announcement with respect to the ring road in Calgary even though there was a by-election going on in Calgary-Lougheed because it affects all of the city and not specifically the constituency.

Mr. McIver: You could drive an announcement through that.

Mr. Cooper: You could drive a government announcement right around the ring road of Calgary that would have a significant impact or could potentially on the by-election happening in the Calgary area. It is a big ring road.

It's a big loophole. This amendment would remove that loophole, tighten up some of the restrictions around making government announcements. In fact, there's no reason to announce a school anywhere in the province during a by-election. Those sorts of announcements can wait 28 days. The only reason is that it is a significant benefit to government when making an announcement during a by-election. This amendment removes those giant, giant holes that are left before us.

I encourage the member, if she's serious about getting big money out of politics, that will include government advertising during by-elections – I appreciate the efforts that she's made thus far. Unfortunately, they leave significant discretion for the government to still continue to abuse this particular clause. I encourage her to tighten up the loopholes. Let's move forward, make sure that we're actually doing what we say, and that is to strengthen democracy here in the province of Alberta and get big money, the darkest money of all, government money, out of by-elections.

An Hon. Member: Grey, grey.

Mr. Cooper: Grey money.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much to the member for this amendment. We need to make sure that the government is able to communicate to people on significant issues even during a by-election.

Now, we have put in place that during a by-election we will prohibit the advertising and the communication of things that disproportionately impact that area. In the example of the Calgary-Lougheed by-election we would think that it would be a bad idea to announce schools in the middle of a by-election in the by-election riding. We got that idea from reviewing some past behaviour, making sure that we do not – and those people are sitting across the way now. You could talk to your colleagues about these events. Making sure that we are putting some good constraints on government advertising communications is necessary because we have seen some terrible behaviour in Alberta in our not-so-recent past, and that is what we have done.

But discontinuing publications or advertisements required for ongoing programs, departments, or provincial corporations is too much. Discontinuing that is too much. Keep in mind that we are talking about provincial corporations. That includes things like ATB, who does economic impact updates on a regular basis. I do not think that those should stop because there is a by-election, and that is why we have put these exemptions in here.

As well, I would not want to see our budget delayed because a by-election was called. I've just startled our Minister of Finance. I apologize for that, Joe.

We're making sure that if a by-election needs to be called during the operation of the Legislative Assembly, we are able to continue to work because we cannot predict when these things will be called. And sometimes people demand that a by-election must be called immediately or else democracy is forever broken. Immediately. Now. Call it now. When that happens, we don't want that to have to impact the government planning and what is happening.

Making sure that we are able to balance those opportunities is what we've done, so I'm really proud that we have fulfilled our commitment, one that we made from the very beginning, to put some serious restrictions on government advertising. As the minister responsible for democratic renewal this has been very important to me, and we have that in front of us now.

I appreciate the members opposite and their amendment, but I will not be supporting it.

The Acting Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A4?

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Westhead: Mr. Chair, point of order. I believe there's a member on the opposite side that may not have voted in the past division.

The Acting Chair: Sorry. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, you didn't have a recorded vote for this amendment.

Mr. Hanson: I was voting for the amendment. Sorry.

The Acting Chair: Oh, you're voting for it?

Mr. Hanson: I never stood up in time, I guess.

The Acting Chair: All right. Just to indicate to all members, you have to stand during the divisions, standing votes.

As clarification for the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, you said you were voting in favour?

Mr. Hanson: Yes, Mr. Chair, I was voting in favour.

The Acting Chair: Okay. So we'll cite that as 11 in favour.

I'll move on to the next topic item. The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: I have an amendment.

The Acting Chair: Okay. This will be referred to as amendment A5.

Carry on, Member.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I have an amendment to propose, and I believe, much to the chagrin of all members in the Chamber, I am sure, this will be my last amendment. [interjections] I, too, am sad.

My last amendment for this evening, barring any significant change – and there always could be that. This particular amendment is with respect to the election commissioner. While I expressed some major disappointment earlier about the role of the election commissioner and the fact that I felt that he or she should be within the purview of the Chief Electoral Officer, unfortunately, that was unable to be moved. But I do think that there needs to be some certainty around the election commissioner's ability to respond to third-party advertisers or nomination contestants. As we all know, there is a significant list of folks who are affected by this particular piece of legislation and how they interact or how they don't interact and those that want to engage in third-party advertising or advertising of a political nature.

As has been established by the minister, the election commissioner will rule on a number and a wide range of sections of the legislation, and they are solely responsible to do that. The fines for not following the legislation are up to $5,000, which is fair, reasonable. This is a serious matter. We want third parties to be held to account to make sure that they are in fact following the legislation.

There are some matters where a third-party advertiser might like to ask the opinion of the election commissioner, but there's no actual requirement on the election commission to respond. Now, good practice would obviously indicate that the election commission would like to respond, but in the course of a general election, which we all know is only 28 days, a third-party advertiser might ask at the beginning of the election and they may not hear a response from the election commissioner for quite some time.

There is a significant number of areas where the election commissioner may be required to provide feedback, so I felt that it would be reasonable, particularly reasonable, to put some parameters on which the commissioner would be required to respond. This amendment asks that the election commissioner would respond within 14 days of a request, and it's reasonable that the election commissioner would do that. We also would never want to be in a situation where the election commissioner, for whatever reason, would choose not to respond. There are potentially some very complex decisions to be made about whether or not they have done that. It would essentially provide a preruling as to whether or not a particular event or advertisement would be considered to be in contravention of the legislation.

I think putting some sense of guidelines on what will be expected of this particular independent office of the Legislature is reasonable and also will provide third-party advertisers with some sense that they will be able to get the guidance and direction that they need. With that said, I encourage the minister to recommend to her colleagues, as I know that that's the only way things get done over there, to support this amendment.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I think that in the case of this new office and officer, applying restrictions at this point is premature. There will be opportunities to work with the new officer through the legislative committee that he or she will be reporting to, so in this case I am not in favour of this amendment.

That being said, the reason we are creating an election commissioner is precisely for the situation that the member opposite describes, which is in the middle of a busy election, a short period of time, being able to respond effectively and quickly, when the Chief Electoral Officer is busy administering an election. It is completely fair because that is such a huge task. Having an election commissioner who will be able to respond to third-party advertisers, to political parties, and to potentially investigate things within, well, hopefully very soon after they are reported: that is what we want to be able to see happen, and that is why we are moving forward with plans for an election commissioner.

Thank you to the member for the question. This is probably going to be a very good question to ask the election commissioner as he presents his first annual report to the standing committee, how he was able to respond to requests and what tools and resources he may need and whether that is more legislation or how that can be addressed.

I will not be supporting this amendment. Thank you.

The Acting Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A5?

Seeing and hearing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A5 lost]

The Acting Chair: We are back on Bill 32. The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I have an amendment.

An Hon. Member: Hooray.

Mr. Clark: Hooray.

The Acting Chair: That will be referred to as amendment A6. Please carry on, hon. member.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I move that Bill 32, An Act to Strengthen and Protect Democracy in Alberta, be amended in section 70, in the proposed section 125.1, (a) in subsection (2) by adding the following after clause (a):

(a.1) facilities on Indian reserves;

(a.2) facilities on Metis settlements; and (b) in subsection (4)(a) by adding "(a.1), (a.2)," after "(a)".

Mr. Chair, this has the effect of listing specifically where special mobile polls are to be considered. Section (2) is: "Facilities at which a special mobile poll may be established include the following." It's important that we specify indigenous reserves and Métis settlements as a specific area within this bill as I know this government and, I hope, all members are committed to reconciliation. This is one of those small, symbolic but, I think, very important points in terms of ensuring that we make elections free, fair, and accessible. Our country has a very sad and, frankly, shameful history when it comes to voting status for indigenous people. Indigenous people did not have the right to vote until 1960, which is absolutely shocking and simply wrong.

So it is very important that we ensure that remote areas – often indigenous and Métis settlements are, obviously, very remote – have the opportunity for a special poll. It's interesting, of course, that voter turnout tends to be very low on First Nations and Métis settlements, on average, in 2015, 20 per cent lower than the Canadian average. The more people who vote, the more engaged they are. It is, of course, the democratic right of everyone in this country to access voting. Special polls are one way of doing that. If the chief and councils ask for a special mobile poll, I think it's important that we accommodate them and make it easier to vote, not harder. I have had some conversations with government on this, and I am encouraged that perhaps they will in fact support this. I would obviously like very much to see that support.

I also want to just very briefly, as I conclude my remarks here, thank Parliamentary Counsel for some quick work this evening in fixing up this amendment for us and renumbering it here at the last minute. Of course, I also would be remiss if I didn't mention my very capable staff, who proposed this idea. Thank you to each of them for the work that you've done to move this amendment forward.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair, and thank you to the member for this amendment. As you stated, yes, we are committed to reconciliation, and we've already moved an amendment this evening that specifically addresses Indian reserves and Métis settlements.

As such, I think this is good, and I'd like to recommend that we accept my colleague's amendment.

The Acting Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A6?

Seeing and hearing none, I'll call the question.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 33 and Bill 34. The committee reports the following bills with some amendments: Bill 30 and Bill 32. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official record of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? All in favour, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Acting Speaker: All opposed, please say no. So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 30 An Act to Protect the Health and Well-being of Working Albertans

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour and minister responsible for democratic renewal.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It is a privilege to be able to rise today to move third reading of Bill 32, An Act to Strengthen and Protect Democracy in Alberta.

I'm not going to speak for very long.

An Hon. Member: Bill 30.

Ms Gray: Oh, Bill 30 – thank you; the other bill – An Act to Protect the Health and Well-being of Working Albertans, which is also very important and I'm also very proud of.

I'm not going to speak for very long, Madam Speaker. I really just want to highlight that this bill is a huge leap forward, updating occupational health and safety and enshrining the three rights for workers: making sure that harassment is defined and included in OH and S, making sure that responsibilities for all workplace parties are clearly defined, and on the WCB side making sure that we have a sustainable system that provides the supports that Alberta's workers need, provides the rehabilitation that they need. With the changes on the OHS and the WCB side this bill is really going to make a difference for working Albertans.

I'm very proud of the work that went into this. I want to say thank you to the team that helped to draft this bill and worked on it as well as all Albertans who took places in some very large consultations to get us to this point.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm very pleased to speak to Bill 30 in third reading.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise this evening to speak to this third reading of Bill 30, An Act to Protect the Health and Well-being of Working Albertans. It's important to begin by saying that this bill includes several provisions that will live up to its title of protecting Albertans, Alberta's workforce.

First and foremost, harassment, bullying, intimidation, or assault of any kind, be it physical or verbal, are completely unacceptable. I echo the Member for Lethbridge-East's sentiment on this issue and thank her for speaking so passionately about this issue. That goes for the workplace or anywhere else, for that matter. Harassment has many faces, and they are all ugly. As members of this House we should strive to set the standard for comprehensive legislation against workplace harassment.

Second, this bill protects a worker's right to refuse unsafe work conditions without fear of reprisal from an employer or supervisor. Years ago the most junior employees on a work site were sometimes thrown into the most precarious situations. That is unacceptable. Often these employees had the least experience, but they were the least likely to complain to a supervisor for fear of losing their jobs. This bill aims to protect those workers, and I applaud that.

Third, I want to recognize how important it is to ensure our province has an OH and S and WCB system that is current. It's been over 15 years since we looked at this legislation, and it's vital that our province stay on top of evolving trends. This includes studying and reporting on a constant basis how we can make the workplace a better environment to be in while also protecting the rights of those who may have tragically been injured while doing their job.

These provisions and others lead me to believe that the hearts of members on the other side of this House are in the right place. Unfortunately, the execution of this bill overall falls short of what we would expect to be in the best interests of the province and its workforce. Now, Madam Speaker, I've spoken at length on this bill, both in Committee of the Whole and second reading, so I hope I don't sound like a broken record, skipping and repeating myself ad nauseam. But the strength of Alberta's workforce and, by association, our economy are too important to concede ground on this bill.

The most glaring deficiency with Bill 30 is the lack of public consultation. I can already see the eyes roll on the other side, but the government did not adequately discuss this massive piece of legislation with representatives from the employees' and employers' sides. I've heard the numbers: 1,300 completed surveys, eight town halls and meetings, 90 written submissions from industry, and the list goes on. However, I must remind the government that that is only half the job.

I've made a point in my life of not putting all my financial eggs in one basket. Because of that I've worked in several different fields, construction being one of them. I can tell you that when we took on a project, we always finished it. Imagine building a house and not putting on a roof. Imagine taking a cab and then getting dropped off two-thirds of the way to your destination. So I ask, through you, Madam Speaker: why is it okay in government that we only work in half measures?

This bill was introduced last week. How can the government expect that we fully consult stakeholders after the bill is introduced in a matter of a week? It's impossible. Most people don't take notice of these kinds of massive changes until the media reports on it. That's when the letters and calls start flooding in, but by this time it's too late. Those concerns directed at the government fall on deaf ears, and the fact that this government didn't even approve a single amendment proposed by the opposition proves that.

Madam Speaker, a letter was sent to the minister and MLAs from the Alberta Road Builders & Heavy Construction Association that expressed concern over the speed at which this piece of legislation was introduced and moved through the legislative process. An excerpt from the letter reads:

We are concerned at the speed at which Bill 30, introduced on November 27, 2017, is moving through the Legislature and request time for a full costing analysis to be done by the department before the bill proceeds to third reading.

Like many other industry associations ARHCA represents countless businesses. The minister may think that these are faceless organizations, but they are not. They employ real workers who go home each night to spouses, children, brothers, and sisters. Where is the concern for their jobs?

Had a full economic impact study been completed, the government would have learned how this bill will adversely affect small and medium-sized businesses and larger businesses as well, Madam Speaker. Large corporations are robust enough to absorb these costs, but one industry association told me that of the hundreds of businesses they represent, fewer than 10 per cent could even be considered large. The rest are at serious risk of layoffs and reduced employment hours as many parts of this bill take effect almost immediately in the new year. Had an economic impact study been carried out, the government would have realized the mistake of removing the maximum insurable earnings on WCB claims. From the government's perspective, I can see that the intention here is to certify that injured workers will be made almost entirely whole, but then there are those pesky unintended consequences.

In this case it's like a domino effect, which has the potential of risking recovery. One, remove the maximum insurable earnings cap. Two, WCB premiums increase to reflect the new cost of insuring workers. Three, employers have less capital to invest in their business and pay workers. Four, business is downsized, and workers get laid off. Five, fewer jobs become available in Alberta. Six, Alberta becomes less attractive for investment. Seven, tax revenues diminish, as we are seeing happen right now, resulting in social programs and services in jeopardy. Eight, people move away from Alberta, and the spiral continues downward.

In conclusion, I will end by saying that the members opposite have fine-tuned the skill of creating unintended consequences. If that is how they wish to be remembered, then so be it. But in good conscience I cannot support this bill if its unintended consequences could cause Albertans to lose their jobs.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to third reading?
The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. You know, in the summer of 1992 I worked for a marble and tile company. I was very young at the time, spry. But the comment from the hon. member before, saying that the newest workers were given the most precarious jobs: that was absolutely true in my case. I'll never forget being on the corner of 4th Avenue and 5th Street S.W. in Calgary climbing a rickety scaffolding, carrying 500 pounds of granite.

An Hon. Member: Come on.

An Hon. Member: By yourself?

Mr. Clark: Okay. With another guy, but with one arm. In the other arm I had seven bags of cement. Yeah. [interjections] It was an easy day, yeah. It was a huge slab of granite. I will acknowledge that there was another person there to help me do it. But I recall that that was not probably the single safest thing I've ever done. No fall protection. I'm pretty sure that I was wearing steel-toed boots, but that's about it. I was a lot fitter at the end of that summer than I was when I started, let me tell you.

You know, I compare that to, maybe, five years ago, when I was working in IT in the oil and gas industry, sitting in a boardroom on the 30-somethingth floor of a tall office tower in downtown Calgary. Yes, I could barely carry my laptop at that point. But at the start of that meeting we would do a safety moment. We would do a safety moment at the beginning of that meeting in a cloistered office far away from the oil sands plant of the customer that I was working at. That tells you a lot about the change, the evolution of safety culture over the last couple of decades, and I think this bill is in keeping with that broad evolution. It reflects the changes that we've seen, that a safety culture is a far more important thing now than it was in the past.

That's a very important thing to note. Responsible companies will have a strong safety culture, and that's an important thing, but there is a role for legislation. There is a role for legislation to ensure that that safety culture is not the only thing that we rely on and that, in fact, workers have recourse should they find themselves in unsafe situations. So, certainly, a lot of aspects of this bill I support.

We did try to amend it to make it even better, especially as it relates to vulnerable workers and to ease the burden on not-for-profits, to allow them some flexibility in, perhaps, pooling of resources on the administrative side to comply with some aspects of this bill. Very important, of course, that not-for-profits, as all companies or organizations, should be expected to comply with the health and safety standards and WCB regulations but to perhaps, given their limited administrative resources, pool some resources. It's unfortunate that we were not able to convince the government to pass that.

Also, education and alternative sentencing as it relates to vulnerable workers. We would have liked to have seen that as well as measures on the code of conduct provisions and making sure that that is reviewed on a regular basis.

I'm very pleased to see the change as it relates to psychological injuries, posttraumatic stress, and I think I would be remiss if I didn't note the importance of the bullying and antiharassment provisions of this act. Industry, of course, has a role in that, but there is a very important role for legislation and very clear rules that people know. There must be legal recourse if they are abused on the job or fired for being sexually harassed. It's not acceptable. At no time has it ever been acceptable. It's certainly not acceptable now, and it's good to know that this bill is in place to strengthen those protections even further.

While we do certainly have some questions and some concerns about this bill, the Alberta Party caucus will be supporting it at third reading. Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak – oh, 29(2)(a). My apologies.

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today in support of Bill 30, An Act to Protect the Health and Well-being of Working Albertans. Alberta's Occupational Health and Safety Act is important legislation. Hard-working Albertans know that health and safety can affect their lives and the lives of their colleagues and families. I believe Albertans and their families should have faith that they come home safe from a long day at work. That doesn't always happen.

Last year more than 44,000 workers were injured on the job, and 144 workers never made it home. That is unacceptable. It is a heartbreaking tragedy. In 2015, which is our most recent data, a study placed Alberta at number 2 in the country for workplace fatalities per million when it comes to our working population. Bill 30 seeks to change that record.

What makes workplace incidents even more tragic is that most are preventable. Preventing accidents and near misses is done with public awareness, training, proper precautions like using PPE, and effective enforcement of up-to-date legislation. Bill 30 will create a responsive system that can adapt to changing hazards to better prevent illnesses, injuries, and support workers' return to work. Bill 30 does this, first, by clarifying roles and responsibilities of everyone in the workplace, employers and workers alike, to ensure everybody's health and safety. Bill 30 enshrines workers' rights: the right to know about workplace hazards, the right to participate in workplace health and safety committees, and the right to refuse unsafe work.

People want to know that they are being listened to and that they have been heard. When an employee feels protected and respected, morale goes up and both performance and profitability increase. This mentality and its effects contribute to a strong economy. Our economy doesn't exist without workers, and this bill protects workers. Bill 30 will make it mandatory to promote a strong health and safety culture in our workplaces. All of these changes do more than bring occupational health and safety laws into the present; they also bring Alberta's workplace rights and protections on par with the rest of Canada. This in turn will make it easier and cheaper for employers to do business across the country.

Madam Speaker, a strong system of workplace health and safety programs saves lives. The changes in Bill 30, An Act to Protect the Health and Well-being of Working Albertans, are long overdue and deserve our full support. They are based on thorough reviews and extensive public input. They will better protect workers from injury and illness and will also better support workers if they do get hurt on the job. Bill 30 means a WCB system that's more fair, accessible, and better supports workers and their families. As legislators we have an obligation to make it happen and protect our fellow Albertans. Alberta's workers deserve these changes, and I will be voting in favour of this bill and encourage all in the House to support it.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Bill 32

An Act to Strengthen and Protect Democracy in Alberta

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm very excited to speak to third reading of Bill 32, An Act to Strengthen and Protect Democracy in Alberta.

This bill is going to make voting easier and more accessible for Albertans. This bill is going to get dark money out of our political system and increase the transparency for all Albertans through the creation of a new election commissioner and by making sure that third parties have reasonable restrictions and rules so that Albertans will know what's happening in their democracy. I'm very proud of Bill 32, An Act to Strengthen and Protect Democracy in Alberta, and the positive changes that it brings for Albertans.

I'd like to thank all those who contributed to this bill and to the debate that has happened in this Legislature. It's been a pleasure to work on this piece of legislation.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 32, An Act to Strengthen and Protect Democracy in Alberta. I might just say that it's sort of a rubbish title. The fact of the matter is that there is so much about this legislation that really has missed the mark – has missed the mark – which is why I would use such strong language about the title.

Madam Speaker, much has been said not just this evening but over the past number of days as we're well and truly into, you know, extending the session and discussing this particular piece of legislation, that really hasn't accomplished all the goals that the government had set out to achieve. We've spoken at length about some of those concerns with respect to residency requirements. We've spoken at length on some concerns about the lack of consultation with the Chief Electoral Officer. We saw earlier this evening some movement around that particular area and, finally, the government listening to some of his concerns.

I highlighted at some length in Committee of the Whole the significant challenges around enumeration. The government seemingly likes to pick and choose all sorts of different things, and in this case the Chief Electoral Officer has very, very, very clearly laid out a case both for tabulators as well as, very clearly, a case against a door-to-door enumeration and highlighted a lot of concerns, including safety of workers, something that I was under the impression this government was in favour of. When the Chief Electoral Officer says, "I have safety concerns about a door-to-door enumeration; I have significant concerns around the fact that every other province and jurisdiction in this great land of ours has gone away from a door-to-door enumeration," the minister says: "No. Don't confuse me with the facts. I've already made up my mind. We want to spend 11 million bucks on something that's not going to provide the types of results that we say it is."

The Chief Electoral Officer has said that it is going to put workers at risk, which is exactly – the Chief Electoral Officer has said that he has significant safety concerns around this, yet the government has chosen to go in the exact opposite direction, spending to the tune of $5 million more and getting worse results. It's exactly what this government continues to do in multiple areas of their tenure here in this Assembly, to go in the exact opposite direction, including tabulators, vote tabulators, where they could have saved $5 million on enumeration and then delivered on something that the Chief Electoral Officer actually asked for, which was good enough for the by-election in Calgary-Lougheed, probably would have been good enough for the general election. But this particular minister has chosen not to heed the advice of the Chief Electoral Officer and to go in the exact opposite direction, Madam Speaker, and it should be concerning to every member of the Assembly.

While I will acknowledge that there are some sections in the legislation that have moved our democracy in the right direction – I believe a number of the regulations around third-party advertisers have certainly added value and clarity to the roles and responsibilities of third-party advertisers, and I fully support those. I think we made some good progress this evening on providing more access to democracy at a wide range of locations here in our province with respect to First Nation and Métis settlements. I think we've made some positive progress with respect to voter terminals that will allow more individuals to vote. I think this is a real step in the right direction. I think we've made some positive progress around mobile polls.

But, on balance, there are major, major, major challenges with Bill 32. The Official Opposition made some significant commitments and some significant contributions to the debate this evening, much of which were not heeded by the government. So it is exactly for those reasons that I encourage all of my colleagues on this side of the House to vote against Bill 32, an act that, in fact, will not, to the fullest extent that was required, strengthen and protect democracy in Alberta. In fact, the Chief Electoral Officer had concerns about degrading the services that voters will come to expect.

With that, I encourage all members of the Assembly to vote against Bill 32.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. You know, in many ways, this bill would not have been necessary. Certainly, most of it would not have been necessary had this government allowed the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee to do its work back at the outset, back in 2015-16.

Unfortunately, that committee was allowed to fizzle out before we had a real opportunity to tackle the challenge of third-party advertisers or PACs, so this legislation is required to try to undo some of the damage that was done through the unintended consequences or the lack of oversight that this government has allowed to happen as it relates to third-party advertisers, as it relates to PACs. It was an opportunity to really address overhauling Alberta's electoral system, both the Election Act itself as well as the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act, and to put in place a new model, a new framework that would last for a generation.

What I genuinely worry about is that should this government find itself out of power after the next election and should our friends in the Official Opposition somehow find themselves in government, we've set ourselves up now for this whipsaw of governments just putting election laws in place that benefit them and don't benefit all Albertans. Should that happen, I'll be sitting here, perhaps with a few more friends next time, and talking about the UCP stacking the deck. You know, the NDP really did try to stack the deck in their initial changes to election law, and unfortunately they've realized that that was perhaps detrimental to – let's be generous – the entire province or perhaps their own election prospects.

So here we are with Bill 32. The fact that the Chief Electoral Officer was not adequately consulted in preparation for this bill and the fact that we have three or four pages of wide-ranging amendments presented tonight to try to fix some of the problems that would have been created had the bill been passed in its original form, I think, are telling. It's unfortunate that the government didn't take the time to sit down with the Chief Electoral Officer or perhaps even use something like the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee to do that work, which we were meant to do.

Having said that, it is the job of those of us in opposition not just to oppose the government but to propose alternatives and ones that we – and I will give the minister responsible for democratic renewal credit and appreciate very much her acceptance of our amendment to specifically enumerate Métis settlements and reservations as locations that should be considered for special ballots and polling. I think it's very important that we make democracy accessible to every single citizen of our province and most especially those who have in the past not had as much access to democracy as they should have, specifically indigenous people in the province of Alberta. So I'm certainly very proud that we have seen that.

The last point I would like to make is that I hope there are some measurable outcomes that we're able to see from the government, especially higher voter turnouts by underrepresented peoples. There are some things in this legislation that I would hope would increase voter turnout and participation by marginalized people, and we will be certainly looking for that.

One final point, Madam Speaker, that I would just like to make once again. If I'm being generous, the unfortunate characterization of the change to the residency period that we've seen from Jason Kenney – if I'm not being generous, I would call it dog-whistle politics – is appealing to our basest instincts, certainly not my basest instincts but the basest instincts of some of those in our society who would seek to divide rather than unite. This is a change that is brought about by a court ruling from Ontario. It has to do not with ensuring that people can simply fly into Alberta on a Monday and vote on a Tuesday; it has to do with reflecting the reality that the six-month residency period that we have in place, that other provinces are going away from, that other provinces have already gone away from, is simply not enabling access to democracy.

I'm certainly not happy with every aspect of this bill, but some of the debate that we've seen, both within and outside the House on some aspects of this bill and particularly on the residency portion of that, has been I hope not a foreshadowing of what we're about to see in the next election. I fear it may be. But I think that when we see that, it's incumbent and important for all of us to call it out, and I've done so.

With that, Madam Speaker, I will vote in favour of Bill 32. Thank you for the opportunity to make these comments.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Are there any other members wishing to speak?

Seeing none, hon. Minister of Children's Services, would you like to close debate?

Ms Larivee: Sure. I will close debate.

[Motion carried; Bill 34 read a third time]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Speaker. At this point I'd like to request unanimous consent that notwithstanding Standing Order 39 the Assembly proceed to consideration of Government Motion 38.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Government Motions

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Committee Membership Changes

38. Ms Larivee moved on behalf of Mr. Mason:
Be it resolved that the membership of the Assembly's committees be replaced as follows:
- A. on the Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund that Ms McPherson replace Mr. Taylor;
 - B. on the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices that Mrs. Aheer replace Mr. Nixon;
 - C. on the Standing Committee on Private Bills that Mr. Orr replace Mr. Fraser, Ms Kazim replace Ms McPherson as chair, and Mr. Taylor replace Ms McPherson;

- D. on the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing that Mr. Nixon replace Mr. Ellis, Ms Miller replace Ms McPherson, Mrs. Pitt replace Mr. Schneider, and Mr. Gotfried replace Dr. Starke;
- E. on the Standing Committee on Public Accounts that Mr. Hunter replace Mr. Fraser, Mr. Nielsen replace Ms Goehring, and Mr. Carson replace Mr. Westhead;
- F. on the Special Standing Committee on Members' Services that Mrs. Pitt replace Mr. Orr;
- G. on the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future that Mr. Clark replace Mr. Gill, Mrs. Littlewood replace Ms McPherson, and Dr. Starke replace Mr. Panda;
- H. on the Standing Committee on Families and Communities that Mr. Ellis replace Mrs. Aheer, Ms Renaud replace Ms Jansen, and Ms McPherson be appointed to the vacant position;
- I. on the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship that Ms McPherson replace Mr. Clark, Mr. Drysdale replace Mr. Hunter as deputy chair, and Mr. Fraser replace Mr. Hunter.

Ms Larivee: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. By way of explanation to the House I can indicate that this motion is being made due to a number of changes to the makeup of this Chamber that have taken place since these committees were struck and were populated with members at the commencement of the spring sitting. The changes are being made based on consultation with all parties and with independent members. I can assure the House that attempts were made to accommodate all requests from members although that was not possible in every case.

In particular, I understand that the Member for Calgary-Elbow has raised a number of concerns with regard to the motion as it appears on the Order Paper. First, he has raised an issue regarding the balance between his own duties and those of his seatmate, the Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill. I can indicate that my colleague the hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane will be presenting an amendment which should address that concern.

Second, I understand that the member also wants additional representation on more committees. This is an issue that he first raised in this Chamber on June 16, 2015, in the context of the Public Accounts Committee, and his concerns today relate to the Members' Services Committee.

As was indicated by the Government House Leader at that time, it's not always possible to accommodate every request. We believe this motion strikes the right balance between the needs of the government caucus, the Official Opposition, the Alberta Party caucus, and independents. Additionally, I do know that a subcommittee of the Members' Services Committee has been struck to review various matters and that their mandate includes looking at official party status and what that means.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak?

Mr. Clark: I have plenty to say. I look forward to the hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane moving the amendment. As it stands now, my hon. colleague from Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill has three committee assignments and I have one, and much as I would like very much to off-load more of the work to her than to myself, I think that we should have some equity in our committee assignments. So I look forward to ensuring that in fact I am placed on the heritage savings committee instead of my colleague from Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

I will say, though, that being now a caucus of two, in 1997 a great deal of precedent was established as it relates to official party status, and that was established by a two-member caucus of the NDP. They were able to do that because they had a seat at the Members' Services Committee and were able to move motions and vote in Members' Services. As it stands now, these committee assignments do not reflect our standing as third party in the House, and we do not have standing on Members' Services, which is a great disappointment. I think, frankly, it does not serve democracy well.

I would also note that in 2001 the two-member NDP had a seat and a vote on Members' Services. That caucus included the now Government House Leader. In 2008 there was a two-member caucus, which included the now Premier and now Government House Leader, that had a vote on Members' Services at the time. I will say again, Madam Speaker, that I am profoundly disappointed that the Alberta Party caucus has not been afforded the opportunity to have a seat on Members' Services. But rest assured that we will continue to attend Members' Services meetings. We will continue to pay very close attention to the goings-on of that committee as well as any subcommittees that are struck and ensure that the minority interests of members in this Assembly continue to be reflected and preserved.

It's something that I would encourage, that the government remember where they came from, remember that one day they may perhaps find themselves back in the same situation that they were in the past, and I would certainly hope that they don't establish precedent that would disadvantage them at some point in the future. Even so, it really should not be about whether it's in the direct interest of one party over another; it should be what's in the best interest of governing our province. I think that democracy would demand that a party that has two members would have a seat on Members' Services. I would encourage the government and hope that as you bring this amendment, I'll be happily surprised that you will add the Alberta Party caucus to Members' Services and, again, remind you where you came from and that you may find yourselves back here one day.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd like to move an amendment.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, if you could just wait until the table has the original and I have a copy, please.

Mr. Westhead: Absolutely.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, your amendment will be referred to as A1. Please proceed.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you. For the benefit of those who haven't received it yet, I'll read it. I'm to move that Government Motion 38 be amended in part A by striking out "Ms McPherson" and substituting "Mr. Clark."

Just to refresh everyone's memory, part A of Government Motion 38 deals with the Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund, so the effect of this amendment would be to have Mr. Clark replace Mr. Taylor in that respect.

That's about all I have to say, and I look forward to any further discussion.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A1?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Acting Speaker: We are now on the original motion. Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As you'll know, there's nothing that I enjoy more than speaking on a procedural motion here in the Chamber. Some people like real things in life, and I like this. I just can't miss an opportunity to rise and speak to Government Motion 38 as amended, and I'd just like to highlight a couple of things very briefly with respect to the former independent member from Calgary-Elbow as well as the former leader of the Alberta Party.

While I appreciate some of his concern with respect to two-member caucuses inside the Chamber, there are certainly other bodies of work and precedent that require four members to be a party here in the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. The times when there were two, I think one of the particular times he refers to in 2010, I believe, they were recognized as a party and then not. The previous time there was very little other opposition, so there were some requirements, if you will, to recognize two-member caucuses as parties.

I would just like to highlight something very specifically about the Official Opposition now and what is, in fact, the largest Official Opposition since 1993, the same year that he has referenced in his remarks. This particular motion that is before us now is actually going to see the Official Opposition lose total percentage of representation on these particular committees. While I can appreciate the Member for Calgary-Elbow's comments about the special things that he would like for a two-member caucus, the reality is that, as the Government House Leader has mentioned, not all caucuses get what they want all of the time. In fact, we are seeing a significant reduction in total numbers. As you know, Madam Speaker, the Official Opposition has increased to the largest Official Opposition, yet on no committee have we seen an increase in representation with respect to total percentages.

I just thought it would be prudent to highlight that there are certainly some concerns with this motion. There are some concerns with the makeup of committees.

In light of the hour I will leave my comments at that.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, would the hon. Deputy Government House Leader like to close?

Ms Larivee: Sure. I would like to close debate. Thank you.

[Government Motion 38 as amended carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Having made incredible progress this evening, which I think we are all very thankful for, I would like to move at this time that we adjourn until 9 a.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 11:35 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good morning, hon. members.

There are many individuals in our province and some of our members who are in Hanukkah, and we wish happy Hanukkah to them.

Also, if you would bow your heads and reflect on the following Christian prayer.

I heard the bells on Christmas day
Their old familiar carols play,
And wild and sweet the words repeat
Of peace on earth, good will to men . . .

And in despair I bowed my head:
“There is no peace on earth,” I said,
“For hate is strong and mocks the song
Of peace on earth, good will to men.”

Then pealed the bells more loud and deep:

“God is not dead, nor doth He sleep;
The wrong shall fail, the right prevail,
With peace on earth, good will to men” [and women].

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Child and Youth Advocate

37. Mr. S. Anderson moved on behalf of Mr. Mason:
Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly concur in the December 2017 report of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices, Sessional Paper 640/2017, and recommend to the Lieutenant Governor in Council that the Child and Youth Advocate, Mr. Del Graff, be reappointed for a term to expire on March 31, 2020.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To provide some context, I can indicate that on December 1 the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices met and unanimously approved reappointing Del Graff as Child and Youth Advocate for a two-year term ending March 31, 2020. As members know, the office of the Child and Youth Advocate and, indeed, the child intervention system as a whole is undergoing significant change, including as a consequence of Bill 18 from this spring as well as the minister's child intervention panel. With this reappointment the office is assured of steady leadership during this period.

Thank you.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, if I may say a few words in response to the appointment of Del Graff as Child and Youth Advocate, the United Conservative Party is pleased to see the appointment of Del Graff into the role of the Child and Youth Advocate officially. Del Graff has worked tirelessly in that role and has exceeded his capacity to be able to offer investigative and advocacy services to marginalized youth in our province. As the scope of his work and his office has changed, we know that Del Graff will certainly rise to the challenge and do a great job moving forward, as he has in the past.

We congratulate him, and we look forward to working with him in the future.

The Speaker: Are there any other members who wish to speak to Government Motion 37?

The hon. minister to close debate.

Mr. S. Anderson: I close debate. Thanks.

[Government Motion 37 carried]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Good morning, everyone. I would like to call the committee to order.

Bill 31

A Better Deal for Consumers and Businesses Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered in respect to this bill? The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to rise and speak in Committee of the Whole on Bill 31. One of our government's key priorities is making life better and more affordable by protecting Albertans' pocketbooks. That's why we're proposing to strengthen consumer protections. Since July we have been consulting with Albertans through an online survey, public open houses, and targeted engagement with industry stakeholders. This bill represents the culmination of this effort.

Before we begin, I would like to briefly highlight some of the issues for the committee. I want to start by speaking about the proposed amendments to the Veterinary Profession Act. We know that veterinarians are trusted professionals that Albertans look to to provide quality care for their pets. At the same time, over the past several months we heard from ordinary Albertans who told us that they want to be better informed when looking for veterinary services for their pets. We also met with the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association and other veterinary industry stakeholders, including clinics, and we heard feedback and concerns.

The new measures that we are proposing would require disclosure of all fees before administering any veterinary services or treatments for household pets except those fees exempted in regulation and require customer approval prior to administering veterinary services unless exempted in regulation; for example, in the case of emergencies. Currently ABVMA's bylaws speak to informed consent but do not explicitly state that this includes the disclosure of fees in that process.

We are also proposing to enable advertising of fees, something that veterinarians in Alberta are prevented from doing currently. This would give Albertans similar transparency measures as are available in Ontario and British Columbia. We look forward to working with the veterinary community in the development of regulations for Bill 31 if it is passed.

Now, Madam Chair, I would turn to the wider provisions of Bill 31. We are proposing to rename the Fair Trading Act to the consumer protection act and add a plain language preamble.

As well, we are mandating the creation of a consumer bill of rights to better inform Albertans of the protections under this legislation.

Section 6.1 will prohibit unilateral changes to ongoing contracts without the consent of the consumer.

We'll also address the use of mandatory arbitration clauses and agreements. Section 16 of the act will prohibit suppliers from enforcing or attempting to enforce these clauses or agreements and make clear that they're of no legal effect in Alberta. Ontario and Quebec already have prohibited such clauses.

Online reviews of businesses are more prevalent than ever. Our bill will add two new sections to the act to make clear that businesses cannot stop consumers from writing and posting reviews. Consumers who file complaints in good faith or issue a negative review would be afforded a new right of defence against lawsuits, and businesses would no longer be able to prevent consumers from posting online reviews or intimidate consumers into withdrawing any negative reviews or complaints.

Our bill will also prohibit the use of bots and prohibit anyone from knowingly selling or facilitating a sale of bot-purchased tickets. Given the unfairness of bots generally, the bill will also require primary sellers to carry out reasonable diligence to identify and cancel any bot-purchased tickets. The bill will also give a ticket purchaser or business a right of action in court when they have suffered a loss due to bots. The bill will require resellers, also referred to as secondary sellers, to provide a full refund in certain circumstances such as where the event is cancelled, the ticket is invalid or unusable, or the ticket was purchased by a bot.

Aside from a house, a car is likely the biggest purchase that most Albertans will make, and that's why we are proposing changes that will increase transparency and Albertans' confidence when buying or repairing a car. Our bill will require automotive businesses to disclose key vehicle information to consumers, use a standard bill of sale, provide a warranty for repairs, provide a written estimate of work on request for repairs, and not carry out repair work unless the consumer has provided authorization.

Madam Chair, I'd also like to briefly speak to the proposed changes to AMVIC. Our bill will further advance the Alberta Motor Vehicle Industry Council's mandate and make it more responsive to the public interest, as envisioned in the Cuff report. If passed, the act will give greater public oversight of how AMVIC operates by transitioning it to a public agency. That means the government will have greater oversight of AMVIC's board, governance, and its bylaws. It also means that the AMVIC board will be subject to the same rules of transparency and accountability as the rest of Alberta's ABCs.

Currently the AMVIC board is a 13-member board of directors that includes seven industry appointees and up to six public-at-large representatives appointed by the minister. The intention of the proposed changes will shift the composition of the board to six industry appointees and six public-at-large representatives, with the minister appointing the board chair. The public members and the chair would be appointed through the existing open and transparent appointment process for all of Alberta's ABCs. As a result, I want to assure everyone that the auto industry will still maintain its voice on AMVIC while making AMVIC more responsive to consumer concerns.

Further, under the proposed changes the compensation fund will still exist, but these new provisions will allow the minister to work with the AMVIC board to address the existing issues related to appeals from claim decisions and notices.

I certainly want to recognize and do appreciate AMVIC's efforts to address the recommendations stemming from the 2016 independent review of their governance and operations by George Cuff. I also want to be clear that AMVIC will continue to play an important role in the auto sector, to the benefit of both consumers and businesses. I am committed to working closely with AMVIC and its board to successfully implement the spirit of the remaining Cuff report recommendations, and the proposed changes will lay this foundation.

Payday loans are not the only form of high-cost borrowing, Madam Chair. Rent-to-own arrangements and vehicle title loans and other high-interest loans can raise many of the same issues as payday loans. This bill will regulate all lending that happens at a rate of 32 per cent or higher per year and will require that these businesses be licensed. In addition, these businesses will be required to disclose information about the credit being provided and have sufficient signage to warn consumers about the risks of relying on high-cost credit.

In summary, Madam Chair, this bill addresses a broad array of consumer issues and contains smart consumer protection proposals. This bill also aims to better protect the majority of honest businesses in Alberta by levelling the playing field.

I look forward to the debate on the bill, answering questions, and providing further explanations so that all members of this House have adequate information to support this bill.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. It is disappointing to hear the minister saying that she had consulted with veterinarians and AMVIC, the industry, but I will say that in the spirit of working with the minister, I'd like to move an amendment that I believe and my caucus believes fills a gap that is left within this bill.

The gap specifically is the fact that a person can own the software for doing these bot sales, but they are not allowed to use it. That seems strange. Why would we allow them to own something that clearly is not good for Alberta? A good example would be that you're not allowed to create commercial pills, yet we allowed commercial pill presses to be owned by Albertans. What my amendment is planning on doing is to make it so that people can't own the bot software as well.

The Deputy Chair: This amendment will be referred to as amendment A1.

If you could please go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. As I was explaining before, this is filling a gap. I would encourage every member of the House to vote for this. I think that it's a reasonable amendment, and it shows that opposition and government can work together to strengthen legislation.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A1? The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Madam Chair, and I thank the member opposite for bringing this forward. This is clearly an amendment that I think is very well intended and brought forward with the intent to strengthen the legislation, so I certainly appreciate the member's intention on this and also the research that, I'm sure, he engaged in in order to bring this forward. That being said, it was really important to me and to our government from a policy perspective that all of the items that are found in this legislation are items that are enforceable. Enforcement certainly requires detection, which is why we have focused the bill in the way that we have.

Certainly, the policy proposals respecting ticket sales in this bill are intended to address secondary sellers that purchase a large quantity of tickets to engage in the business of secondary sales, so we've referenced the use of bots to address this activity. Individuals who use bots with the intent to engage in secondary selling may procure bots, but they also often build them for the purpose of circumventing security measures, so it's not always through purchase. However, an individual can purchase a bot in order to acquire tickets.

Part of our concern here, Madam Chair, is that an individual can also purchase a bot in order to acquire a ticket for personal use. Given that this provision is not something that we've had the opportunity to consult on – the prevalence of bots being used to acquire tickets for personal use is not something that there is information available to the House on at this point – the extent to which this occurs, acquiring a ticket for secondary sales versus acquiring for personal use, is unclear to this House. Certainly, while this amendment would catch individuals who use bots to acquire tickets for secondary sale use, it would also catch them using it for personal use, which goes beyond the policy intent of these sections.

Additionally, Madam Chair, as I alluded to when I began, enforcement is difficult without detection, and there are no mechanisms in place to detect the procurement of bots. Through our consultations with the companies who are ultimately responsible for the due diligence portions that this would apply to, they have the ability to detect when bots are used. Primary ticket sellers have the technology and have invested quite a bit of capital to ensure that they can detect the use of bots to purchase tickets, which allows us from our side to be able to engage in enforcement. However, our consultations have shown that there are no mechanisms in place that exist to detect the procurement of bots, so while I agree with intention of the amendment, it is equally important to me that all of the sections in the legislation are something that I can practically effect, that are tangible, and that we have an avenue to be able to meaningfully address.

While I would love for this to be a reality, it unfortunately is not given the state of technology at this time, so for that reason I'm going to have to vote against this amendment. Certainly, Madam Chair, I do not want to suggest to Albertans that we can do something that we cannot actually effect or do and have a portion of the legislation that is not something that we can effect and that would suggest to the public that we could do more than could be done on this issue given the issues around detection. So I would encourage members to, unfortunately, vote against this amendment due to practicalities of the situation. But I thank the member for bringing it forward.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Before I move on to the next speaker, we have a request for unanimous consent to revert to introductions.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Chair: I will call on the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill to do introductions.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Chair. Katie Soles is a highly regarded consultation and engagement professional known for her process design and facilitating contentious and complex issues, and she's helped unlock the best thinking groups across Canada and United States. Nominated and shortlisted for several awards, she is often called upon to design and deliver events and consultations whose outcomes demand significant shifts in behaviours and philosophies. She might be useful here. She's known for her skill with a wide range of stakeholders, from kids to councillors, bohemians to businesspeople, artists to athletes, those seeking empowerment and the powerful. And she also has a fierce fashion sense. Katie, if you could please stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Chair: Welcome.

Bill 31

A Better Deal for Consumers and Businesses Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment A1? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm disappointed to hear that we're not going to be moving this forward. Largely, I will say that, unfortunately, when it comes to this part of the bill, a lot of it is unenforceable, so one of the few things that we can put forward is that it is at least something we can do in Alberta, saying that it's not okay for owning this software. I'm very disappointed to hear that the minister is not accepting this.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member. Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment A1?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are now back on the main bill. The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Madam Chair. I have an amendment that I would like to put to the House, please. I will wait until members have had a chance to have the amendment distributed to them before speaking to it, but it should probably come as no surprise to anyone that my amendment deals specifically with the veterinary portions of this bill and deals with something that – certainly, I as a member of the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association have received literally hundreds of e-mails over the last two weeks on this topic. I know, speaking to my colleagues on both sides of the House, I believe just about every member if not every member of the House has received some form of communication from a member of our association. Thus far, at least, in those communications I have yet to hear from a single veterinary colleague who is in favour of the changes that are contained within Bill 31. Not a single one.

Bill 31 creates a significant problem for us, so, Madam Chair, what I'm moving today is that Bill 31 be amended such that section 2 be struck from the bill.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member. Your amendment will be referred to as A2. Please go ahead.

Dr. Starke: Thank you very much. You know, it's difficult to know where to start with this, Madam Chair, because this bill and the changes within it will result in changes to our profession that are so profound that I'm not even sure that everybody really understands just how significant they will be. You know, when you're not necessarily a part of a profession, when you're not necessarily involved with it, I think it's probably hard to really grasp what the effects might be and what the consequences might be. When I read some of the letters from my colleagues, both registered veterinary technicians and veterinarians, and I see the passion that they describe for their careers, for the work that they do, for their clients, for their patients, I'm reminded of what it is about veterinary medicine that I first found special when I decided to become a veterinarian 45 years ago. It's something that I feel very, very strongly about, clearly.

I'm desperately proud of my profession. I think I communicate that, as I've also communicated that I, actually, have been retired. I saw my last patient in my hospital on December 31, 2011. Since that time I've only put my stethoscope back on once, and that was in May 2016, when I spent several hours volunteering to examine pets that had been evacuated from Fort McMurray from the wildfires. I was proud to be part of a veterinary team that donated hundreds and hundreds of hours to that effort. My contribution by comparison was small. I worked with a team of veterinary technologists from the Fish Creek clinic that had been there around the clock for three days. They had arrived there on the weekend, and they'd spent the entire weekend and Monday and Tuesday, and they were taking turns going back to their hotel room to rest. So I was very proud of my profession.

With specific regard, Madam Chair, to the bill and why I believe that the entire section on the Veterinary Profession Act should be deleted, I believe this because in order for this to be workable for the veterinary profession and for the animal-owning public in Alberta, there has to be a strong and productive working relationship between this government and the profession. I will say that Bill 31 and the way that it has been handled by the minister has destroyed that relationship irrevocably. It is damaged to the extent that, if this is proceeded with, our profession will suffer damage to an extent that I don't think anyone can even really imagine.

But, you know, last Tuesday the minister – on December 5, on page 2265 of Hansard, I quote the minister:

Our legislation is supported by a small-business owner, for example, the owner of Sandy Lane auto. It's supported by the Alberta Motor Association, which is very trusted in Alberta. They've said, "We believe all Albertans should have confidence in the service they're receiving." You know, they've got a long history of standards that make them experts, really, on the voice of this. I would encourage the members opposite to listen to the experts.

That's what the minister said last Tuesday, to listen to the experts. Well, I'm going to say exactly the same thing. I would encourage the members opposite to listen to the experts as well. Now, if you're stating that veterinarians aren't experts in this field, I would invite you to stand up and say that. But I would suggest to you, and in fact the minister has said in her letter, that veterinarians are trusted professionals. Sounds like they're experts. Veterinarians are trusted professionals. I would think that the over 300 emails that I have received – and I don't know how many have gone to the minister's office – would indicate that a large number of veterinarians and registered veterinary technologists indicate that Bill 31 is problematic.

But don't just listen to veterinarians. Why don't we listen to a lawyer? Mr. James Casey is a lawyer, a specialist in labour relations law. He is a Queen's Counsel. He graduated from the University of Alberta's Faculty of Law. He is a partner at Field Law. Actually, I got most of this information, interestingly, from the Labour department website, where Mr. Casey is listed on the website as being an expert on labour relations. I'll just give you some of his credentials because it's, like, a page long.

Jim is a sought-after speaker and author on labour and employment law topics and taught labour law at the University of Alberta as a sessional lecturer. Jim is the author of many labour and employment publications and is the editor of Remedies in Labour Employment, and Human Rights which has been cited by the Supreme Court of Canada. Jim also acts as legal counsel to many professional regulatory organizations. He founded the Firm's Professional Regulatory Group and is the author of one of the leading texts in the area, The Regulation of Professions in Canada, which has been cited by the Supreme Court of Canada and many other Courts.

I read that, Madam Chair, to establish that Mr. Casey is indeed an expert. Mr. Casey has been retained by the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association to take a look at Bill 31. He has provided them with a preliminary opinion. In this opinion, amongst other things, it says, and I quote:

Part 5.1 of Bill 31 over-rides the AVMA's advertising rules that were democratically adopted by its members and creates a specialized regime for disclosure/consent that applies in certain circumstances. This was all done with very minimal discussion with the AVMA and without any reasonable advance notice that legislation was under active consideration. There was no crisis that needed to be addressed. Considering all the circumstances, I conclude that Bill 31 dramatically undermines self-governance for the profession of veterinary medicine and should be a matter of grave concern, not only to the AVMA but to all self-governing professions in Alberta.

That is from the Canadian legal expert on self-regulating professions. That's his opinion. It's not my opinion. It's not a veterinarian's opinion. It's from a lawyer who's an expert on self-regulating professions, and he's right here in Edmonton.

You know, it is stunning to me how this can proceed, and it seems that it's also quite surprising to Mr. Casey. I'd like to quote further from his brief.

In her letter of November 2, 2017 the ... Minister for Service Alberta and Status of Women made an express commitment to the ABVMA that should the Government of Alberta determine this is an area of focus, then "... further consultation and engagement with industry stakeholders would be necessary to develop the details of any potential legislative or regulatory amendments."

The letter was copied to the Minister of Labour.

What consultation and engagement with industry stakeholders took place about potential legislative and regulatory amendments? There was no "heads-up" during meetings with officials that legislation was under active consideration. Instead, the matter was presumably kept secret so that the ABVMA could not rally opposition until it was too late.

Based on how matters unfolded, I conclude that the ABVMA is entirely justified in feeling that it was "blindsided" by the legislation. In my 30 years of experience with self-governing professions and legislation, I have found that the best public policy is developed through robust dialogue between government and professional regulatory body about the details about potential legislative initiatives. The approach by the government with respect to engagement with the ABVMA on Bill 31 falls far, far short of what we have come to expect in Alberta.

Madam Chair, that is why veterinarians are concerned, and their concerns have been confirmed by, as I said, a gentleman who is an expert.

But let's look at another reason why veterinarians do not trust the minister. On that same day on page 2265 the minister said:

Then the next piece is with respect to giving permission to veterinarians to advertise or post their fees. Now, this is a simple matter of transparency. I think that the value of transparency is something that we can all get behind.

Well, I would agree.

Now, in my two hands I'm holding two documents. One is a document that was presented at a meeting with the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association, the only one that was held, on October 26, and at that meeting some results of the survey were shared. In my other hand I hold a copy of a document that, while it looks similar, is in fact different because this is what was shared publicly with a member of our association and forwarded on to me.

Now, what's different? Let me read you a paragraph.

Veterinary billing. From the consumer protection survey results, out of the 15 issues that were consulted on, the issue of veterinary billing ranked number 13 in importance. The top four issues of concern for Albertans were the consumer bill of rights, automotive sector issues, ticket sales, and truth in pricing.

That paragraph that I just read was not in the document that was discussed with the veterinarians. How can you call that transparency when you use two different versions of a document, one that's been edited for presentation to the veterinarians that very clearly shows that the issues that are perceived to be so burning in the minds of so many Albertans are in fact way, way, way down the list?

You know, the other thing that's missing from the document that we shared with the veterinarians is this. Interesting how it was edited out, too.

Some respondents who commented on this issue expressed that the government's priorities should be elsewhere. Surely, the government has a higher priority than vet service fees. How about addressing the much higher costs of centralizing all AHS lab testing into a government-run laboratory?

That was deleted. That was conveniently left off the version that was submitted and discussed with the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association. How on earth are you supposed to build a relationship of trust that ensures that the best interests of both the public and the profession are being garnered when you're not being told all the information, when information is being deliberately withheld?

Madam Chair, that is why I am moving to strike all sections relating to the Veterinary Profession Act, and I'm going to encourage this government to go back to the drawing board. We'd like to go back to the drawing board with the Minister of Labour, who's actually responsible for the veterinary profession, not the Minister of Service Alberta.

From the relationship we had with her – and I talked about this yesterday – this was the consultation leading up to Bill 13, this stack of documents, with no fewer than 12 separate communications back and forth between the minister and the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association, including the exchange of four copies of the draft bill. And this, by contrast, is the sum total of the consultations and the documentation on Bill 31. It's not even comparable, Madam Chair, and Bill 31 is far more profound in terms of how the association operates, how the profession will conduct its responsibilities, and how it will discharge them to the people of Alberta.

Bill 13 was certainly important, but really what it did was that it formalized what was already in place, a close working relationship between the registered veterinary technologists and the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association, and we're glad to have it. It was a great piece of legislation, and there was a great deal of trust built up between the association and this minister. We'd like to go back to this minister. If there are problems, perceived or real, with the way veterinarians are handling things, we are interested in self-improvement. We want to work with this government in making things better, but we don't believe that a self-regulating profession should have dictated to it how to do it by government, by cabinet, by a group of individuals who, while well meaning, do not know or understand the veterinary profession. They simply do not.

Madam Chair, I'm moving this amendment because I do want to improve my profession. I absolutely do. This bill will not do that. This bill will cause more problems than the perceived ones that are there, and it won't solve the perceived ones that are there. Billing, making things more affordable: Ontario advertises fees. I just went on the Ontario Veterinary Medical Association website, and their published total for an annual veterinary cost for a dog in Ontario, where they advertise fees, is $406. I went onto our association and checked our fee guide. If you total the same procedures, in our fee guide the total is $359.80, roughly $50 less than Ontario. But they can advertise, and we don't. Not that we can't. We don't because we've chosen not to – we've chosen not to – and as a self-regulating profession we should be able to retain that right because of the damage that it creates to the profession when advertising is allowed. I've stated that at every stage of debate, and I continue to stand by it.

The Ontario and B.C. associations and several jurisdictions in the United States that allow the advertising of veterinary fees have seen the deterioration of care, and they have seen the deterioration of the collaborative work that needs to be done between veterinarians and veterinary practices. It will damage the veterinary profession in Alberta. I would say, without, I think, too much fear of contradiction, that veterinarians are trusted professionals. If we weren't trusted, why would we have a 93 per cent trust rating in Alberta according to a 2016 survey? I won't even give the number for politicians, pollsters, or lawyers, but I will tell you that the number for veterinarians is always within the top five. We are a trusted profession, and if there is 7 per cent of the population that doesn't trust us, we'll work on that, and we're happy to work on that.

All I'm saying to my colleagues on both sides of the House: do not vote in favour of this bill. Vote to remove these clauses from this bill because, I can tell you as I stand here, they will damage the veterinary profession. They absolutely will damage the profession, and they will not result in a solution to the perceived problems that are talked about in this survey. They will not. I can absolutely tell you that with absolute certainty.

You know, the minister is well intentioned. I really think she wants to make things better for Albertans and for pet owners, but the way to do that is to work with the association, not against it. The way to do that is to consult and collaborate and bounce ideas back and forth, not blindsides them with a bill with zero effective consultation. That's not how you make things better for Albertans.

Madam Chair, these sections are deeply offensive to veterinarians, but what is even more offensive is the way that veterinarians have been dealt with throughout the course of this debate. Many of my colleagues have received a form letter from the minister, or a form letter written by the minister's department that was then signed by a number of the members across that in most cases didn't even address what they had talked about in their letter. Veterinarians, justifiably, I think, feel just a little bit slighted by this government, but it's not beyond hope. It's not beyond hope.

Get rid of these amendments. Vote in favour of my amendment to remove the sections of the Veterinary Profession Act from this bill, and in my view you have a chance – a chance – to win back the trust of the veterinary profession in Alberta. But if these go through, that trust has been shattered, and I can tell you, from having treated some patients and having them be tearfully presented to me in my veterinary clinic, sometimes when things are shattered, you just can't put the pieces back together again. It's sad – it's really sad – when that happens, but that's what we're dealing with here.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2? The hon. Minister of Service Alberta, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Madam Chair. I thank the member for his passion and dedication to his industry, that he is certainly vested in and cares deeply about. We know that veterinarians are trusted professionals and that Albertans look to them to provide quality care for their pets. We met with the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association and other veterinary industry stakeholders: the Alberta Veterinary Technologist Association and the Western College of Veterinary Medicine. We met with them in person and had telephone conferences with them and department officials from both Labour and Service Alberta on October 27, November 10, November 28. Then we met with various vet clinic owners on September 22, November 23, and November 26.

Madam Chair, certainly, we had in-depth conversations with them. We heard their concerns, but I think that there are some important things to point out here. First of all, as I've mentioned in my speaking notes, the provisions of this legislation are not dissimilar to what we find in other jurisdictions in Canada where self-regulating professions of all kinds are alive and well. This is also not dissimilar to other professions. For example, in Canada lawyers are permitted to advertise and are required to disclose their fees.

Additionally, Madam Chair, when we look to medical professionals in private, non publicly funded situations, we can look, certainly, very easily to our neighbours to the south for what that looks like in terms of advertising. The doctors in the United States, that are providing all kinds of care, including surgical services to humans, are advertising their fees and are permitted to do so, and I don't think anyone in this House would suggest that those doctors are not also trusted professionals as people are putting their very lives in the care of those medical professionals.

Certainly, these changes are very much in line with other professions, similar other professions in similar circumstances, and in line with other Canadian jurisdictions, Madam Chair, where self-regulating professions of all kinds are alive and well. It is within the purview of governments across Canada to set the scope for the associations that are self-regulating. Again, this is not dissimilar to what has been done in B.C. and Ontario.

We certainly did consult. We met with them. We had telephone conferences. We met with them in terms of their availability as well. Over several months we heard from ordinary Albertans as well, who told us that they want to be informed when they're looking for veterinary services for their pets. Madam Chair, we heard from average Albertans. We heard that they want to be informed when they're making these decisions.

A woman here in Alberta, Davida Marantz, got an unwelcome surprise when she got out of the hospital in 2014 and went to pick up her beloved sheltie named Libby from friends. The dog, while in her friend's care, needed $4,800 in dental surgery while the Edmonton senior was in hospital care, an amount she felt obligated to pay back to her friends. She said that they were so generous in taking care of her pet and doing a really fine job that there was no way she would leave them with the bill. When she checked around at other clinics, feeling that that $4,800 was very high, she found that the quotes that she could get were for thousands of dollars less. She is certainly in favour of transparency because she feels that this will help Albertans to get a sense of what they're in for.

Another woman came forward and told us her story. She took her cat in because it had swallowed a sewing needle, Madam Chair, during her spring cleaning. The animal was taken in and given an X-ray, and she wasn't told the cost of that X-ray before it was done. They just took their pet to the veterinarian nearest to their home. They were then told that it would be an additional $1,200 to $1,500 to repair the pet. She said: I can't afford that to operate on the pet. I imagine that an operation was required. They said: If you give us $400, we'll do the surgery, and we'll take your cat. She said that they paid the money, and they never saw their cat again. She said to me, in speaking with her, that she didn't know what happened to the cat at the end of the day, and she said that it was an absolutely wretched experience. She remembers sitting in her car crying, thinking: I just paid someone to take my cat away. She's glad that the government is making sure that veterinarians will have to make it clear how much the care will cost. As mentioned, certainly, disclosure is required by the association, but that does not expressly include fees, so she applauds this, stating: there's going to be more information up front about costs, and I think that will be hugely beneficial.

Kath Oltsher is the cofounder of Zoe's Animal Rescue in Edmonton. She also likes the proposed guidelines. The animal rescue that she is involved with takes in unwanted animals and attempts to help those with low incomes pay for the cost of veterinary care. She says that she's had positive experiences with veterinarians who provide services to the shelter, and she doesn't want the profession to think that the changes are meant to be adversarial. Neither do we, Madam Chair. She says: it does come like we're coming after you, but I don't know how else to make a change happen. I think that is important. We've heard impassioned pleas from Albertans who want to be informed, who want to know what the cost is going to be. Many of these are vulnerable Albertans with low incomes who rely on their pets for companionship. At the end of the day, Madam Chair, these individuals don't know who to turn to, don't know who to talk to. Like with any medical professional they deal with, they don't have the knowledge and expertise to know what is required to heal their pet, so they are left with very little information, reliant on one individual without being able to compare effectively.

Now, I appreciate the member, you know, bringing forward what the posted costs are in Ontario. He graciously informed us of what the costs are in the fee guide that is provided to veterinarians in Alberta, but that fee guide is not publicly accessible. It's a guide for veterinarians by veterinarians. It's not assistive to the public. That's what we're doing here, being assistive to the public.

Madam Chair, with that, this proposed legislation will help Albertans, will help pet owners find high-quality care for their pet. I've heard the member opposite speak passionately about how veterinarians provide quality care, take their ethical standards to the highest of their concerns and provide high-quality care. I have no doubt and I have every confidence that even with the ability to post their prices, they won't bring their ethics into disrepute. They will keep their own ethics at a high standard, as we expect them to and as their regulator expects them to do, regardless of whether or not they are now enabled to post fees despite the fact that they're not required to do so.

With that, Madam Chair, these changes are not out of the ordinary for the country. They are not out of the ordinary with respect to other professions, and they are something that Albertans have expressed they are very, very pleased for change in in terms of their interactions with veterinarians. While I appreciate that this may be a difficult adjustment, certainly this is something that will help many Albertans. So many Albertans are pet owners. There are over a million pet owners in this province. I cannot support the member's amendment, though I do thank him for continuing to be an advocate for the profession of which he is a member.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

I will now call on the Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster for bringing forward this very sensible amendment. Bill 31 has been brought forward quite quickly, without enough consultation with the veterinary profession.

Registered veterinarians and veterinary technicians of the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association take the privilege and the responsibility of self-regulation very seriously. Their current bylaws consider it unprofessional conduct to not obtain informed consent from a pet owner prior to performing any procedures. Part of this consent also includes divulging the expected cost of the procedure to the client. This can be seen as providing the public with more information and clarity when choosing their provider of veterinarian services.

We have observed similar changes put into effect in British Columbia and Ontario. Not only does allowing advertising of price not clarify the situation for clients, it can actually make it more complicated. In many cases a price is advertised for a service, but at the time of invoicing hidden charges are added on. In both Ontario and British Columbia complaints to the veterinary regulatory bodies increased substantially after rules similar to Bill 31 were introduced.

The best patient care is not achieved by price shopping, especially when, as mentioned, the prices often do not match what the final invoice totals, but by long-term patient/client-veterinarian relationships. As seen in other provinces, the advertising of prices will only tempt clients to seek seemingly less costly solutions, which very often are not, at the expense of their pet's health. Let's allow stakeholder input, especially from the hard-working, dedicated veterinarians of Alberta.

Section 2(2) replicates an existing bylaw already enforced by the ABVMA that upholds a universal requirement for health care providers to obtain informed consent, a vital part of which is fee disclosure, before proceeding with any procedures or treatments. The proposed amendments to the Veterinary Profession Act constitute an overreach and an intrusion into the veterinary profession's ability to self-regulate and were made without enough consultation with the ABVMA. To amend the VPA without consultation amounts to overreach. Just because other jurisdictions are doing it, it doesn't necessarily follow that it's right for Alberta. There appears to be a disconnect between Service Alberta and the ABVMA.

This amendment makes sense as Bill 31 is addressing a problem that doesn't seem to exist. I urge all members of the Assembly to support this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I have to say that the opposition came up with a similar amendment, and the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster has brought forward a sensible amendment. This is a sensible amendment.

Now, I don't want to go over the points that he's brought up because I've already brought up a lot of those, but they're fine points. What I would like to do is touch on the one letter that was sent to veterinarians that the hon. member had brought forward. We had tabled this letter before, so it's been tabled in the House. It's just a short part here. This is from the Minister of Service Alberta to veterinarians that are writing her office.

We know veterinarians are trusted professionals, and Albertans look to them to provide quality care for their pets. During consultations on wider consumer protection proposals, we met with the ABVMA and other veterinary industry stakeholders and we heard their feedback and concerns. However, we also heard from ordinary Albertans who told us they want to be better informed when looking for veterinary services for their pets.

I can't believe we're sending that letter to our veterinarians. I can't believe, seeing that veterinarians are writing the minister saying, "We haven't been consulted," that you're actually correcting them with a letter saying that they have been consulted. That's truly unbelievable. I think that is very disingenuous of the government in this case in point, which is why this amendment is so important. Actually, to be honest with you, the fact that we had requested this whole piece of legislation go to committee was another thing that was disappointing to see this government didn't move forward on.

I would like to quote from an article that Emma Graney had written, Alberta Bans Ticket Bots under Sweeping Consumer Protection Bill. This was done on November 29, 2017. Now, you're going to find that, I would say, 96 per cent of this article is about other things that are in this bill, and a little tacked on at the very end says, "veterinary services." It's literally two sentences.

Any veterinarian procedures will require approval from pet owners. Vets will also have to disclose all fees for treatment (unless it's an emergency procedure), but they'll also be able to advertise their fees.

It doesn't say that they're pretty much destroying a self-regulating body there.

I think is something that needs to be put out in the public because right now it is making our veterinarians look like criminals, when we can consistently see in the last three years that for over 3,000 of the veterinarians that are reported within the province, we had no more than 30 to 35 complaints within the year: "Holy cow. This seems to be an epidemic. These guys are rampantly going out there. They're going out there to harm consumers." Well, that's clearly not the case.

This is disappointing that we are moving down this route. I fully support my colleague from Vermilion-Lloydminster with the amendment to say: let's strike this. If the government chooses to come back and consult and bring forward legislation after they've consulted with the industry and not send them a letter that says, "We consulted with you," then at least they can have some feeling that they've been able to be heard, that their voices have been heard.

Madam Chair, I think that this is a very reasonable amendment. I think that we all need to take it seriously. I believe we all have veterinarians that are either within our constituencies or near our constituencies. We all have deep respect for them.

I can tell you that I had a long conversation with one of my local veterinarians, a wonderful woman. She was very concerned. I told her: I will ensure your voice is heard. And you know what? I believe that through this amendment we can make that happen.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2? The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I do want to say a few things about some of the comments that the minister made. I'd like to also thank very much the Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill and the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake for their supportive comments with regard to this amendment.

Madam Chair, it seems that we almost seem to be doing this in this discussion. In every speech that I have given thus far on this issue, I have pointed out that British Columbia and Ontario have gone down this road, and it has caused a great deal of harm to their profession, to the people who own animals in their jurisdictions, thereby also to the animals. The reason I say that is because we have veterinarians in Alberta that have practised in those jurisdictions. We have people that have practised in B.C., we have people that have practised in Ontario, and they've experienced it themselves. They know, and they don't want that to be visited upon us in here in Alberta.

The other thing we have in the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association is veterinarians who have served on the council and served as president of the Canadian Veterinary Medical Association, and as such they have interaction with their provincial colleagues from all the provinces in Canada. The thing that those members have told me again and again is that the folks from B.C. and the folks from Ontario do not feel that the advertising of fees has any benefit whatsoever. Now, I'm not sure if the minister consulted with the Ontario Veterinary Medical Association or the British Columbia veterinary medical association to find out, you know, what the history of those were. I'd be very interested in hearing if she did.

By way of interest, because the Member for Edmonton-South West, when I asked him these questions last night, was unable to give me an answer, but perhaps the minister can, I'd be very curious to know when you met with the Western College of Veterinary Medicine and who was there and what was discussed. I'd love to know when you met with the Alberta Veterinary Technologist Association because I have a letter here from the president of that association, who writes:

I have been [a registered veterinary technologist] for 20 years and have seen a lot of changes in that time. All of the practices that I've worked at have had clients sign consent forms (which include estimates) before carrying out procedures.

Why would you not meet with the president of the association if you're going to have a meeting with the association? Did you meet with some other envoys or liaison people from the association? I'd be very interested to hear the details of that meeting.

[Mr. Sucha in the chair]

If it was a separate meeting from the meeting with the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association, I guess I'm a little curious as to why that happened because, of course, since May of 2016 veterinary technologists have been incorporated into our association. We are equals, and it's been good for our association. I think it's been good for animal health care. I, for one, am absolutely gratified by the support that our profession has received from our colleagues who are registered veterinary technologists. They are professionals. They work extremely hard.

Perhaps one of the sad things is that, contrary maybe to what some people believe about the veterinary profession, the veterinary profession has, in fact, on average, the lowest salary of any profession in the health care field, less than doctors – way less than doctors – less than dentists, less than optometrists. Way less. The reason for that is that there are economic realities that we deal with. We know what the minister is talking about with regard to the capacity for people to pay. We deal with that, Mr. Chair, every day in our day-to-day practice. We know all about that, and we can provide advice to this government with regard to how you can go about, you know, regulating things and making things better for all Albertans.

Now, the cases that the minister cites are absolutely, you know, very unfortunate circumstances. I guess the question that I would have is that we have a disciplinary process. We have a complaints process. Were either of those cases brought to the ABVMA for adjudication by the association? We have a process in place. It is a very robust process. It is one that we treat with a great deal of respect, and we take it very seriously. As I said before, I've sat on the hearing tribunals before. While I haven't had very much to do on those, when a case does come up, we make sure that we're taking care of the public interest. We take that responsibility seriously.

Even in the discussion and the way that this bill has been presented, our profession has already been damaged. This bill has already caused damage in our profession. I'm quoting from a registered veterinary technologist who wrote me and said:

Bill 31 is asking us to do something that we, already, require of ourselves and is giving the public the impression that we need to be told to do this.

That's with regard to informed consent.

I have seen people's shocked comments to articles on Bill 31 about how sneaky vets must be to do things without consent. This is untrue, and extremely hurtful.

I really don't know why it is that the minister feels that she needs to suggest that our profession is doing something that's unprofessional. That's very disturbing to me, and it's disturbing to my colleagues. To suggest that we don't currently require consent is wrong. It is simply wrong.

With regard to fee disclosure I can tell you that fees are disclosed. They need to be disclosed to the clients before the procedure is started because if it's done afterwards, I can tell you that you have a lot harder time collecting that fee. Veterinarians always disclose the fees ahead of time, especially if it's a larger, more major procedure. But with regard to fee disclosure in every practice that I know, if there's a phone call from a client who wants to know the fees, we're happy to provide it.

Mr. Chair, I'd also like to hear from the minister an explanation as to why two different sets of documents were presented, one to the general public and one to the Veterinary Medical Association. I would very much like to hear her comments on how that engenders trust with the profession when an altered document is presented to the profession at a meeting with them, yet a different document with some very critical additional sentences is presented to the general public. I'd really love to hear an answer to that.

You know, Mr. Chair, perhaps some of the most compelling arguments on this have come from my colleagues; for example, from a doctor who is a former president of the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association and also a past director of the animal health division of Alberta agriculture. He said:

I... was responsible for the government's role in administering the Veterinary Profession Act and its predecessors. I was involved in the rewriting and revising of several Acts and regulations including the Veterinary Profession Act.

I do not understand why you...

I'm talking to the minister.

... wish to undermine the responsibility of the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association in the governance of Veterinary Medicine in Alberta. You may be setting precedent for making arbitrary changes to the acts relating to other professions in Alberta.

We heard that in the legal opinion of Mr. Casey.

Another e-mail, this from a past president of the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association and the Alberta representative to the Canadian Veterinary Medical Association. In this case he's writing to one of my colleagues, an MLA on the government side:

With all due respect, it appears to me very clear that your own party has been actively misleading its MLA's. Certainly if you were briefed that there was consultation and negotiation and compromise in development of the amendments to the veterinary profession act that are contemplated to be pushed through with Bill 31, you and your colleagues were indeed misled.

If that's what you've been told, you've been misled.

I have been watching debate in the legislature on this point, and I must say that the minister who is pushing for these changes (not the minister responsible for the veterinary professions act, a fact which I find very curious) tends to obfuscate the issues rather than clarify them, in my opinion.

He goes on to say:

It appears to me that someone in the halls of power is doing what they can to make changes to the [VPA] by manufacturing a problem that is not real, and not realizing that the effect of these changes will almost certainly reduce the caliber of veterinary services to the public of Alberta. The minister speaking for the proposed changes suggested that she had heard from "regular Albertans" on this issue. If she is referring to the service Alberta questionnaire that was used, I encourage you to have a look at it. With your background and awareness of the factors required to have a meaningful questionnaire you will see right away that the survey was very poorly done, with questions that were so leading that the use of the results would border on shameful, unless they are relied on only in total ignorance.

And then this one might have some interest to you from a political standpoint. This is from the same writer.

When the NDP was voted in I had anticipated some changes to the positive. Now I see brute use of power even in the absence of need is not something that was limited to the previous government – despite what we were told when the NDP was seeking a mandate to govern. As a member of the public of Alberta (I.e. also a "regular Albertan") I am so disappointed to see the government of Alberta so keen to ignore and sideline a professional group that has acted in the best interest of Albertans for decades. I know for a fact that the ABVMA is always eager to participate with government – we have not had so many unanswered requests for a chance to collaborate with government as during the period leading up to tabling Bill 31 ... I fear that your government is not being forthcoming with what they are doing, and this to a degree that they are misleading their own MLA's. For that I am deeply disappointed and for me this whole affair has me very likely changing my allegiance from the NDP to some group that deserves a chance to govern in a more transparent and collaborative way.

From a veterinarian in central Alberta: "Should this bill pass, the ABVMA will continue to be ignored, with decisions on standards and delivery of veterinary care being made by people outside of the profession, which will demolish the respect given to veterinarians as medical professionals."

I guess, on that note, Mr. Chair, I turn to my colleagues. You have a vote on this, and you have a chance right now to remove these clauses from the bill that are so harmful to the veterinary profession. I will state again that these clauses will not solve the perceived problems. The perceived problems will only be successfully solved if the government and the veterinary profession are working together. If they're not working together, I'm sorry; you just simply won't get a good solution to the perceived problems.

If there is a problem, then I would suggest that you turn to the Minister of Labour and have the Minister of Labour and her officials, who worked very closely with the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association on Bill 13, address the problem. Then those problems have a much better chance and likelihood of being addressed effectively. But if you continue on this path, you will then be left with a shattered glass, one that cannot hold any sense of trust, and you won't be able to accomplish what you're trying to do. So not only will you do no good; you will do a tremendous amount of harm.

Now, none of you are veterinarians. This is perhaps the only bill in the five and a half years that I've been here, other than Bill 13, that is very directly involving my profession. With most of the other bills we discuss, we're not directly involved with what's going on, not necessarily, but with this one we are. With this one we are, and I'm telling you – and I'm trying to be as persuasive as I can – that veterinarians know what the risks are in this motion and in this bill. Veterinarians have tried to explain that in many, many different ways, and I've got a lot more quotes.

Ultimately, it lies in your hands what decision is made. I guess I'd just ask you: if you vote for this, if you vote to keep Bill 31 as it sits, with these changes to the Veterinary Profession Act, are you going to be okay with what happens to the veterinary profession afterwards? Are you okay with that? Are you okay if we see the same deterioration in the collaborative nature of our profession that has been seen in British Columbia and in Ontario? Are you okay with that? Are you okay with situations where it's harder to get an exchange of medical records? That has happened in B.C. and Ontario.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

I would suggest that you don't want to see that. I would suggest that the best way to deal with the perceived problems that may exist is through a co-operative relationship, working with the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association, through the Ministry of Labour, to whom we are responsible, and that that is the true way to develop a better system of veterinary care for all Albertans.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are now back on the bill. Are there any other members wishing to speak?

Dr. Starke: Three members rose for a division.

The Deputy Chair: Sorry. My apologies. A division has been called.

Some Hon. Members: Only two.

The Deputy Chair: There were only two? We'll have to move on.

Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Madam Chair. I have an amendment for the House. I'm pleased to continue debate on Bill 31, A Better Deal for Consumers and Businesses Act. This bill will be creating strong new protections for Albertans who buy tickets, to ensure that they have a fair shot at seeing their favourite team or performers. To that end, I would like to propose a House amendment to Bill 31. This amendment respects the requirement in section 57.3(4) for primary ticket sellers to exercise reasonable diligence in determining if tickets have been purchased by bots and to cancel those tickets.

This amendment will introduce a regulation-making power to allow us to exempt certain primary sellers from the requirement in section 57.3(4). On further reflection we've determined that this may be necessary for smaller primary sellers like theatres and concert halls that sell tickets on their own website but that don't necessarily have the technology to determine if bots are buying their tickets nor the wherewithal to be able to procure that technology. Since these smaller ticket sellers may not be able to comply with this requirement, this amendment will allow us to exempt them in regulation upon further consultation.

We'll do this by amending section 1(10) of the bill to add clause (b.1) to section 57.6, that reads:

(b.1) respecting the exemption of a primary seller or a class of primary sellers from the application of all or part of section 57.3(4).

The second part of this amendment will make section 57.3(4) an offence. It was always our intention to make this provision an offence, but it was inadvertently omitted from the bill in drafting. This amendment will simply remedy that omission by amending subsection (21) in the proposed section 161(e.1) by striking out "57.3(1) and (3)" and substituting "57.3(1), (3) and (4)."

Thank you.

10:20

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister. Your amendment will be referred to as A3.

Are there any members wishing to speak to amendment A3?

Mr. Cyr: I'd just like to note that because we're rushing through this so fast, we're now having government amending government bills. If this had gone to a committee, like we had first requested, this would have been caught in the committee process. Very disappointing to see that we've got the government amending the bill.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A3?

Seeing none, we'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A3 carried]

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Yes. Madam Chair, I too see that there are some significant struggles when it comes to the fact that we are including AMVIC within this legislation. I'd like to move an amendment, and I will wait for the chair to receive it before I continue.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Your amendment will be referred to as A4. Please proceed.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. The amendment is striking out subsections (15), (16), and (17).

I'd like to state for the record here that it's very disappointing to see that we have the minister moving AMVIC within the government's authority. The fact is that we had George Cuff do up a report in December 2016, a year ago, on how to address some of the concerns that consumers, the government, and the opposition even had with AMVIC. They came forward with 23 recommendations, and the minister accepted all 23 of the recommendations.

Now, what's going on here is that we need to recognize that the government moved an expensive piece of a review on to AMVIC, and then what they did was to more or less disregard the report that was done. Now we see them being rolled into government. This is very disappointing. I believe what we should have seen was that if Bill 31 had moved to committee, we might have been able to discuss how to best deal with the concerns the minister may have with AMVIC.

Now I'd like to read a few things from the Cuff report because I believe that this is important. I did table this report for the Assembly, so please keep that in mind. In the Cuff report, page 218, 8.10:

While this comprehensive Review has focused largely on issues which were brought to our attention in the course of our study, we would be remiss if we did not point [out the] very important "bottom line": there is a need for AMVIC as a delegated regulatory organization functioning on behalf of consumers and industry alike. The fact that it has this two-fold audience means that it will always experience some degree of friction and perhaps strife. Very few people appreciate being regulated by someone else or something else. And yet, this regulation is needed so that [the] society is afforded protection from abuses by those who have difficulty living up to an acceptable standard.

The role of Government is that of oversight and protection of the well-being of . . . society. It does this in a multitude of ways: through laws, regulations, management oversight, checks and balances and through delegating some of that responsibility to others along with the clout/authority to operate and the responsibility to report and account for decisions made.

It is our view that AMVIC, with the enhancements noted, has the ability and capacity to fulfill its role.

This minister is choosing to ignore the very independent review that was put forward.

This is one thing that we continue to hear in this House. Let's talk about the boundaries commission. We say: well, it was an independent commission that did it; therefore, we need to give this an important focus, and then we need to accept it out of hand. Yet when we do this review – we've spent lots of Alberta's taxpayers' money on this review – the government doesn't like what they see, so they wait a year and do what they want anyway. It's very disappointing.

I think that the government should consider accepting this amendment. Then what happens, if the government chooses to continue down this road, is: put it forward to committee.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A4? The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Madam Chair, and I certainly thank the member for his work, as always. However, I certainly will not be supporting this amendment.

Madam Chair, the prior critic for the Service Alberta portfolio certainly had some comments when the last changes were made to the Fair Trading Act in 2016, that permitted us to be able to get the investigation done by Mr. Cuff. He stated – and this was in Hansard – at that time:

While Wildrose is committed to the principles of the free market, we know that the key to successful industry is consumer confidence and trust.

And I would agree with the prior critic there.

Consumers deserve to know that they are protected by a properly functioning regulatory body, and we believe the proposed legislation does just that. Albertans understand that the former government used this government's agencies, boards, and commissions to reward their friends and donors. It was wrong then, and it's still wrong today.

I agree, certainly, with the member's comments at that time, when he was a member of the Wildrose Party. Perhaps things have changed since they have amalgamated with the Conservatives, who, as the member stated at that time, used the agencies, boards, and commissions to reward their friends and donors.

That being said, I will continue with what he had to say.

Wildrose will continue to watch these organizations closely to ensure that such practices do not continue under government's watch.

I also agree with those comments, and that's why I continue to watch the situation, read very thoroughly Mr. Cuff's report, met with Mr. Cuff in relation to the report, and discussed it with him at length.

The prior critic also said, on May 5, 2016:

Wildrose has long had concerns with the operation of AMVIC, and it's now our hope that following the passage of this bill, the minister will act quickly to conduct a review of the Alberta Motor Vehicle Industry Council.

We did that. We acted quickly.

We do hope this measure allows AMVIC to function more effectively for the consumers it was created to protect.

So I'm happy to stand with both members in government and my opposition colleagues in full support of this bill.

He then also went on to make further comments in response to the Cuff report once it was issued. He stated:

We are disappointed the recommendations released today does not take more decisive action for consumers or taxpayers . . .

Albertans paid for that fund through a levy on car sales. It is supposed to be there to protect consumers from illegal activity but it obviously isn't working . . .

When Albertans are getting defrauded by licensed businesses they should have access to the fund, but the rules are so restrictive that AMVIC is stockpiling cash rather than compensating consumers.

Again, I agree with the former critic for Service Alberta on all of those comments, but it seems to me that since the amalgamation with the UCP the tone has changed.

Regardless, however, of that shift in position, it is the government's responsibility to ensure that consumers are protected, which the prior critic agreed with, and we want to do that, Madam Chair. On review of the Cuff report, I agreed it was clear that in the scope of the structure of AMVIC, the current structure, simply the recommendations which were done within the context of that structure, how to make things better in that context, would not be able to give the decisive action for consumers or taxpayers that the prior critic was disappointed the recommendations did not address. I agreed with him. So I have taken more decisive action, and I would have hoped that that Wildrose perspective that previously existed would still be there. Unfortunately, it is clear to me that in the amalgamation some things have changed.

But, Madam Chair, I digress. I would now like to talk about what this does do. AMVIC's role is to protect the interests of the consumer and to ensure integrity in the automotive industry. Upon passing the proposed changes, it will ensure stronger public oversight of AMVIC by transitioning from an industry-controlled to a public member controlled board. One of the recommendations of the Cuff report was to change the makeup of that board to do just this. It would mean that AMVIC would be subject to the wider rules for ABCs. Transparency: also within the spirit of Mr. Cuff's recommendations and which is good for the public and which, I will remind my new critic, the prior critic certainly was in favour of.

It will also enable the minister responsible to set the composition of AMVIC, which, again, was one of the recommendations in the Cuff report. It will regulate the appointment of specific roles. Again, one of the recommendations in the Cuff report was that the board chair have specific duties and tasks assigned and a greater role. It will also establish governance rules: conduct of board meetings, decision-making by the board.

The proposed improvements to AMVIC operations will benefit consumers and businesses in the auto sector. Consumers will have greater confidence that rights are protected by AMVIC and respected by industry. Business will benefit from enhanced regulatory oversight in ensuring a level playing field. We've heard from industry that there is a broken relationship between them and the current state of AMVIC. We are going to be actively repairing that. Businesses will benefit from responsible operations throughout the industry and from consistency from the regulator.

AMVIC board members agree with this approach, and they have stated as much. Bill Burnett, the current chair of the AMVIC Board of Directors, stated:

I am very excited about the announcement of Bill 31, A Better Deal for Consumers and Businesses Act. It is a very important step to support AMVIC's mandate of consumer protection in Alberta. Thank you to the Government of Alberta for their leadership and commitment to consumer protection in Alberta.

Madam Chair, not only are these changes supported by the previous comments of my prior critic from the prior Wildrose, but they are also supported by the very chair of the AMVIC board.

Madam Chair, I absolutely cannot support this amendment. I want to make stronger protections in this area. I want to ensure that the regulator is acting well, that it is trusted by the public, and so does the AMVIC board, and so did, at least, the prior critic for Service Alberta and the prior Wildrose party.

Madam Chair, I want to ensure that the compensation fund works for Albertans. These changes will allow us to ensure that that is the case. So we will not be supporting this amendment. I encourage all members to vote against it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A4?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are now back on the bill. Are there any other comments, questions, or amendments? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today to propose an amendment to Bill 31, A Better Deal for Consumers and Businesses Act, and I'll wait for the amendment to circulate before proceeding.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, do you happen to have the original with you?

Ms McPherson: I do, yes.

The Deputy Chair: We'll trade.

Ms McPherson: Sorry. It's my first amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member. Your amendment will be referred to as A5. Please continue.

Ms McPherson: Okay. Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to move that Bill 31, A Better Deal for Consumers and Businesses Act, be amended in section 1(8) in the proposed section 6.1(4) by adding "for a period of no less than 180 days from the date of the consumer's request" after "or make it accessible online."

Bill 31 proposes to add protections for consumers who sign agreements to receive services, including a requirement that suppliers make copies of agreements available to consumers in written or electronic format. Having the option to receive and provide contracts online is a great idea. It can save paper, it can make things more searchable, and it can be great for access on mobile devices.

One of the challenges people experience: when suppliers send us an e-mail about new or updated contracts, it is with the URL of some website without the actual contract or agreement as an attachment. When the e-mail is fresh, the link to the contract on the website works, but how about a few weeks later, when the company has redesigned its website, rebranded, merged, or otherwise changed how it provides information to consumers? Our amendment to section 1(8) on page 5 of Bill 31 would require that if a supplier provides a consumer with an e-mailed or texted link to a copy of a contract on a website, the supplier must ensure that the contract is available at that link for a reasonable period of time after the consumer receives the link. We've suggested approximately six months after the consumer has requested the contract, but we're open to other time periods as well.

This amendment is a practical action that we can take in this House to make the bill work better for Alberta's many consumers. I'd love to have a constructive conversation about the idea and how we can work together to make it better. I'm certainly open to any suggestions that other hon. members may be able to provide. I'd ask that we all vote in favour of this common-sense amendment to make lives better for Albertans.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A5?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[Motion on amendment A5 carried]

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

10:40

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I have an amendment that I will provide to the pages.

Madam Chair, now that the Chamber has decided that the Veterinary Profession Act should come under the purview of this, I'm going to try to become somewhat more surgical in my approach. As opposed to trying to cut the cancer out entirely, I'll now try to remove as much of this cancer as can be removed and at least apply some judicious chemotherapy to what's left. What we're going to do here is that we're going to discuss a little bit about the process of self-regulation and self-governance.

Now, earlier during debate I read out a couple of quotes from Mr. James Casey, who is a world authority on self-regulating professional bodies in Canada and world-wide. He has literally written the book on self-regulation. Mr. Casey has provided his opinion that this bill is a massive overreach that is unprecedented in our province, a massive overreach into the affairs of a self-regulating profession which, as I've stated in the House before, has been doing this for 111 years. Our province was less than one year old when the first veterinary professions act was passed, and that veterinary professions act provided for self-regulation of the veterinary profession.

What was interesting, though, was that the earliest veterinary professions act and all of the ones that came after, let's say, had a clause that indicated that the Lieutenant Governor in Council, in other words cabinet, had the final approving authority on any changes to the act. Now, that's really important. The veterinary association cannot change its regulations, its bylaws, or anything in the Veterinary Profession Act without cabinet approval. So cabinet has always had the final say on things involving the veterinary profession.

I don't have a problem with that. I think that's actually good. But what is interesting is that that is a greater degree of control than a number of other professions in Alberta have. A lot of the other self-regulating professions don't have that check and balance. If they make a change to their regulation or their bylaws, it's just changed. They don't have to get cabinet approval, but we do, and I'm okay with that. I'm okay with that. I'm okay with a body of elected officials taking a look at it.

Where I have a problem and where I have a problem in Bill 31 is with what Bill 31 does in terms of self-regulating professions, specifically, obviously, the veterinary profession. I refer to page 25 of the bill, under Regulations, section 48.3(1), and I'll read it slowly.

The Lieutenant Governor in Council, after consultation with the Council, may make regulations respecting fees and authorization for veterinary medicine, including, without limitation, regulations.

Then it goes on to (a) through (h) on the scope of what those regulations could entail.

Now, what exactly does all that mean? Well, the Lieutenant Governor in Council is cabinet. The 21 individuals who have been appointed to Executive Council are cabinet, and when this bill passes, it will be cabinet that will have the power to make regulations for the veterinary profession. Cabinet will have that power.

What will that power include? Well, that power will include regulations respecting fees and authorization for veterinary medicine. Cabinet will have the power to decide the fees of the veterinary association. That is an unbelievable level of power and interference with a private business. If cabinet decides that the current fee for an examination of a dog, which is $89.50 in the fee guide – but in polling six veterinary clinics from across Alberta, the range was $76.50 to $85. Not a single one charges as much as the fee guide. A member of cabinet, for example my friend the hon. Government House Leader, says: "That's unreasonable. Veterinarians aren't that smart, and $89 is just gouging the public. That should be worth 22 bucks." He could say that. He would have the power to say that.

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

The Deputy Chair: A point of order has been called.

Point of Order Allegations against a Member

Mr. Mason: Perhaps the hon. member would like to clarify that he is speaking hypothetically and not attempt to put words in my mouth.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Dr. Starke: Well, Madam Chair, I'm happy to do that for my friend the Government House Leader. I would never suppose to put words in his mouth. I think that'd be impossible, and it'd also be kind of pointless because he has lots of words in his own mouth, and there'd be hardly any room.

Debate Continued

Dr. Starke: Madam Chair, what I am saying is that cabinet would have the power to make the decision as to what fee should be charged if this were to pass, and fees could be set at a level that is unreasonably low and would render veterinary practices unprofitable, or they could be set at a level that is unreasonably high and mean that there could be no access to veterinary services by the general public.

The people that I think understand best what sort of fees are appropriate are the people who own the businesses that provide the service. I guess my question is: what's next? If you're going to regulate the fees of veterinarians, what's next on the agenda?

My amendment, Madam Chair, is actually a fairly simple one. I won't read through all of it because it's not really necessary to read through all of it. I move that Bill 31, A Better Deal for Consumers and Businesses Act, be amended in section 2(2) by striking out the proposed section 48.3 and substituting the following:

Regulations

And here's the key difference.

48.3(1) The Council may make regulations . . .

Then it goes (a) through (h), which is the same wording as in the bill. Then, finally:

(2) A regulation under subsection (1) does not come into force unless it has been approved by the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

So the exact wording that is in the bill remains. All of the powers that were to be given to cabinet remain, and cabinet will still have the final say on all of those regulations. But the concern that we have as a profession – and it is a concern that has been heightened since the totally inadequate consultation that went on with regard to this bill – is that the current bill says: “The Lieutenant Governor in Council, after consultation with the Council.” Now, that council is the council of the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association. After consultation they have all these powers.

We're also quite concerned with the insertion of the phrase “including, without limitation.” If that's in the bill, this cabinet has power to write in any regulation it wants. That, to me, is a level of control being handed over to an albeit well-meaning group of people that I'm sure want to do what's best for Alberta but a group of people that I'm not sure always necessarily understand the nuances of running a veterinary practice and why a practice has to be profitable, why a practice has to replace its equipment – and medical equipment is very expensive, veterinary equipment specifically so – and why we have to do things like pay our staff at a level that is commensurate with their experience and allows them to have a good living.

Madam Chair, this is the concern that we as veterinarians have. We do not want to see our association be the first, possibly, in a line of professional organizations to lose its power to self-regulate, but that's what this bill does. Make no mistake. This bill writes in that we lose the power of self-regulation, and that's something that veterinarians really don't want to lose. We feel that we have discharged the responsibility, the privilege of self-regulation in very good faith. And, in my opinion at least, if we are trusted professionals, we haven't done anything to deserve having that privilege taken away from us.

So I'm moving this amendment to suggest that the normal course of events for the making of regulations is where the ABVMA council in consultation with the membership as a whole comes up with a regulation, has those changes to the regulations ratified at an AGM of the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association, and then those regulations are approved by cabinet, which is what has always been in place. If we come up with something that cabinet doesn't like, well, they have the power to turn it down and say: go back to the drawing board. They still have the final say. We're not taking that out of here.

But I have a problem when the course of events and how things are done and have been done for 111 years are suddenly reversed by this government, by this minister without demonstrating that it will be better for the general public of Alberta, for the animals of Alberta, or for veterinarians. That has not been shown to me, that putting it in the hands of cabinet will result in an improvement.

Unless it can be proven to me that cabinet is a better safekeeper of the veterinary profession than the elected council of the veterinary profession, I can't support the bill that includes giving these wide-ranging, vague, and sweeping powers to cabinet. I can't, you know, approve that because, quite frankly, it's putting the control of the regulation of the profession in the hands of people that – although, again, they may be well-meaning, I just simply don't know that they have the information that is required in order to make the decisions to regulate our profession.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The amendment is referred to as A6.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[Motion on amendment A6 lost]

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I've heard the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, and, you know, I have to say that he's very passionate on this. Now we've heard that the government isn't willing to remove the legislation that is revolving around our veterinarians, and they're not willing to discuss the fact that they're taking on the regulation part of the veterinarians. If we know this is a route that we're taking, then it seems reasonable that we would give the veterinarians time to be able to work with government so that it doesn't actually have to reel like it has with this legislation coming forward, out of nowhere, blindsided if you will. So I would like to propose an amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member. Your amendment will be referred to as A7.

Please go ahead.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you. The amendment is: Mr. Cyr to move that Bill 31, a Better Deal for Consumers and Businesses Act, be amended in section 2(2) in the proposed section 48.3(3), by striking out “Proclamation” and substituting “January 1, 2020.”

What this is essentially doing is saying that when we vote on Bill 31, we are going to give some time to the veterinarians to be able to work with the minister and see where she's going. I believe that that is reasonable. I believe a two-year time frame is a reasonable amount of time that we can give the veterinarians across Alberta to be able to discuss where the minister would like to see this legislation or where she's taking this legislation.

I'd also like to point out that it doesn't seem to be a move that the government seems to really put into action when it comes to consultation. So what I am trying to do here is to give the minister the time that she needs to be able to actually consult with veterinarians. She needs that time. They need that time. The veterinarian association, the regulatory body, needs that time. They all need that time to come up with a working plan, not be dictated to.

I would encourage everybody to give the veterinarians the time that they need to be able to consult with the minister before we make massive changes to their industry without any input from them.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment A7? Seeing none, I will call the question.

[Motion on amendment A7 lost]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today to propose an amendment – and I'm going to be better at it this time – to Bill 31, A Better Deal for Consumers and Businesses Act. I will wait for that to circulate.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, your amendment will be referred to as A8. Please go ahead.

Ms McPherson: Thank you. I'd like to move that Bill 31, A Better Deal for Consumers and Businesses Act, be amended in section 1(8) in the proposed section 6.2 as follows: (a) in subsection (1) by striking out "a written notice of cancellation" and substituting "a notice of cancellation in same manner in which the consumer entered into the ongoing consumer transaction" and (b) in subsection (2) by striking out "sent" and substituting "provided."

Madam Chair, Bill 31 proposes to improve consumers' ability to cancel contracts for ongoing transactions if and when suppliers change those contracts. What we're proposing to do with this amendment to the proposed section 6.2 on page 6 of the bill is to enable a consumer to cancel the contract in at least the same way that they used to sign up for the contract.

Madam Chair, if a consumer signs up for a service online, they shouldn't be forced to go to a physical location to cancel the contract. A consumer who signed up by phone shouldn't be forced to look for and send a letter to a physical mailing address to cancel an ongoing service contract. If a vendor is confident enough to sign up a customer with a particular method, whether that's online, by phone, by text, or another method, the vendor should trust that method to allow a customer to cancel a subscription.

This amendment will make it easier for businesses that offer great customer service and suppliers who compete on the quality of their products and services to prevail. It also sends a clear message to suppliers who do not want to do business fairly and to suppliers who make it deliberately difficult for customers to walk away from bad service. Consumers deserve better.

This amendment is a practical action that we can take in this House to make this bill work better for Alberta consumers. I would ask that we all vote in favour of this common-sense amendment to make lives better for all of us.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment A8?

Seeing none, I will call the question on amendment A8 as proposed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

[Motion on amendment A8 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are now back on the original bill. Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I would like to move another amendment. I will wait for the chair to give me permission to speak.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, your amendment will be referred to as A9. Please go ahead.

11:00

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. The intent of this amendment is an actual problem that I as an accountant have run into in my career. What it is is that you put a corporation between illegal activity, if you will, and what happens is that the directors or those that are individuals associated with that corporation draw the money out of that corporation. Then what happens is that there's no recourse for individuals to be able to get back, say, the money that they're owed by the government in this legislation.

What I would like to do is move an amendment that any director, officer, employee or agent of a corporation who directed or authorized an activity that led to a contravention by the corporation of section 57.3(1) or (3) may be made a defendant to an action against the corporation under subsection (1) and on order of the Court may be made jointly and severally liable together with the corporation for an order of restitution of damages under subsection (2)(a) or (b).

I'm sorry that this is very, very technical, but I will tell you that what happens here is that if the government was to actually catch an individual doing this selling of tickets through these bots and then go for legal recourse against that individual, they would be prevented by the fact that there's a corporation between them. This is, unfortunately, a very common practice, and it's important that we need to recognize that people shouldn't be able to profit on other people's backs.

This is reasonable, and I encourage everyone to vote for this amendment because, in the end, I believe this strengthens the legislation. This is something we can work together on to ensure that profits that are illegally taken don't end up in the criminal's hands, if you will, but back into the victim's hands. We need to ensure that victims are able to have the legal recourse, and we need to be able to breach something called the corporate veil.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A9?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[Motion on amendment A9 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are now back on the original bill. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm getting better at it. I rise today to propose an amendment to Bill 31, A Better Deal for Consumers and Businesses Act. I'll wait for the amendment to circulate before proceeding.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, your amendment will be referred to as A10. Please go ahead.

Ms McPherson: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'd like to move that Bill 31, A Better Deal for Consumers and Businesses Act, be amended in section 1(10) in the proposed section 57.3 by adding the following after subsection (4): "A primary seller may retain a portion of the ticket price for a ticket cancelled under subsection (4)(b) for the purposes of off-setting administrative costs incurred by the primary seller to cancel that ticket."

Bill 31 proposes to reduce the burden on ticket vendors who are victimized by those who purchase tickets with bots. As members of this House and members of the public may already know, cancelling or refunding a credit or debit card transaction costs time and money for a legitimate ticket vendor who unwillingly sold tickets to an automated ticket-purchasing bot. Bots can buy hundreds or thousands of tickets at a time, all of which the ticket seller would have to cancel under this bill. Refunding card transactions also costs them money through higher merchant fees and commissions. The 2 to 3 per cent commissions charged by a vendor with few refunds and transaction disputes might rise to 4 or 5 per cent, raising costs for consumers, businesses, employees, or all.

We're proposing to allow the primary ticket seller to be able to recover their direct costs of cancelling those tickets so that the operators of the ticket bot would pay for the unnecessary costs they generate. This amendment to proposed section 57.3 on page 9 of the bill is a practical action that we can take in this House to make the bill work better for Alberta's many consumers and entrepreneurs. By requiring the ticket bot operators to pay, regular consumers won't be exposed to higher ticket prices due to costs that legitimate ticket sellers would incur when dealing with ticket bots that break the rules.

I would like all of us to vote in favour of this common-sense amendment to make life better for Alberta's legitimate ticket buyers and vendors. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A10?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[Motion on amendment A10 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are now back on the original bill. I will now recognize the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you very much, Madam Chair. I have an amendment. I'm sensing that some hon. members opposite are saying: "You know, why is he doing this? Why is he bothering with these amendments that we are consistently and repeatedly defeating? Isn't it obvious that we're going to defeat this one, too?" That may well happen, but it is the prerogative of every member of this Assembly to put on the public record statements that are important to that member or to groups that he represents or to constituents. I was very proud, when receiving input from my constituents, that I received input from both veterinarians as well as clients of veterinary clinics, and it had specific regard to the provisions on fee advertising.

Now, I know the minister has said a number of things about that, that fee advertising won't be a disaster, won't be a bad thing, that it's been done in other places, and that it hasn't been a problem. But, once again, Madam Chair, I think that it's important that we have the sort of perspective of someone who has sort of been, if you will, in the trenches.

I move that Bill 31, A Better Deal for Consumers and Businesses Act, be amended in section 2(2) by (a) striking out the proposed section 48.2 and (b) in the proposed section 48.3 by striking out clause (f) and (g).

The effect of these amendments, Madam Chair, is essentially to remove from the bill the allowance or the permission for veterinarians to advertise their fees. Now, I know the minister has stated why she thinks that that's a good idea, and I have countered with many, many arguments as to why it's not a good idea, why it does not serve the public interest, why it does not result in a decrease in fees, if that is indeed what the goal is here. The decrease in fees that, you know, one would ostensibly think would have happened in Ontario because they're allowed to advertise their fees: I just showed it didn't happen.

You know what was interesting, Madam Chair? I went and I polled six veterinary practices from all across Alberta. I asked them: if you were presented during regular hours with a dog with abdominal discomfort and you performed a physical examination on that dog and you decided to draw blood and do a complete blood cell count with a differential count, to run a full chemistry panel with electrolytes on that patient and then also take two abdominal X-rays, what would the charge to the client be? I also consulted our recommended 2017 ABVMA small-animal fee guide. The small-animal fee guide recommends a total fee for those procedures of $539.60 for what's being done, that basket of procedures: the examination, blood testing, and X-rays.

Then I polled my colleagues. My colleagues reported back to me, and the range of prices from these six clinics from all different parts of the province was, actually, to me surprisingly narrow. The lowest price was $435 and the highest price was $515, a total difference in price of roughly $80, on procedures that may seem standard but, in fact, require a fair bit of expertise. X-ray equipment is not cheap. X-ray equipment has to be certified and kept up on a regular basis.

Most veterinarians that I know have moved from what we used to do, and that was X-ray patients with film and have to run that film through dip tanks and hold it up to the light. Then if it wasn't quite the right positioning or if the animal had moved or something or it wasn't properly exposed, we had to do it all over again, and we had to expose ourselves to chemicals like developer and fixer. It was the way things used to be done.

Today the vast majority of veterinary practices in Alberta have digital radiography. They have a PAC system, where they can share these images with specialists in an instant and have those radiographs analyzed by a diagnostic imaging specialist anywhere in the world. It is incredible how far we've come, and we can share those images seamlessly and easily and I would suggest more easily than our medical counterparts in Alberta can.

The total charge that is recommended for that basket of procedures was $539. Now, for interest's sake, I said: well, how would that compare to what would be charged to a human walking into one of our health care facilities in Alberta? I went to the fee guide that is on the Alberta Health site, and let me tell you that if you want to try to interpret that fee guide, you have to either be a United Nations translator or maybe C-3PO, because I can tell you that it is such a convoluted set of codes and riders and additional things that could be added or subtracted. To the best of our ability, although we're not quite one hundred per cent sure, the charge of what that costs Alberta health care is somewhere between $404 and $1,785, a range of almost four times, whereas the veterinary range was about $80. From $400 to $1,700 in human medicine.

I'll tell you one other thing that I'm very proud of. Chances are pretty good that in most veterinary clinics in Alberta when you brought that dog in that needed a blood sample, that needed X-rays, you would have the answer from the veterinarian within the hour. Within the hour. When was the last time you went to your general practitioner, to your family doctor and he handed you a script or a requisition to go get bloodwork done, handed you another piece of paper and said, "Here; go to the radiology laboratory"? So you make an appointment and get your blood drawn. You make another appointment and go get your radiographs done. Then you have to make an appointment with your physician to have another appointment in order to discuss and consult on the results of the bloodwork and the X-rays.

In veterinary medicine, in most veterinary practices in Alberta, that is done on-site within the hour. I think that's pretty good medicine. I think that is a pretty high standard of care. In fact, I would stack up our standard of care against what is provided to the two-legged humans in this province any time. Any time. I'm not saying that the people who work in health care aren't professional. They are; no question about it. But in terms of getting a rapid turnaround and a rapid answer on a patient, we veterinarians do a pretty good job. I'll tell you that if it was on an emergency service and I was on call, we could turn that whole thing around in less than half an hour. That's how good our equipment is, and that's how efficient we've become in terms of being able to diagnose.

What all goes into fees? Well, a lot of things go into fees, not just the professional training of the veterinarian and the registered veterinary technologist. There's the lease on the building, the maintaining of inventory within the clinic. There's a lot of overhead, obviously, insurance and that sort of thing. But the reason why it is difficult to quote a specific price is that every patient is different, and we've had this discussion already. If you just state a flat price and advertise that, and then the patient comes in and it's: oh, my goodness.

Let's say, for example, you advertise that to spay a dog is $425, and then the dog comes in. It's eight years old, it's obese, it's had several litters of puppies, and it's a Rottweiler. That changes the procedure. Spaying an 80- or 90- or 100-pound obese Rottweiler that's had several litters of puppies and is maybe seven or eight years old is a whole different ball of wax from spaying a six-month-old Labrador retriever who's never had a heat cycle. They're two completely different things.

Yet the expectation here is that we're supposed to quote a flat price and put it up on the Internet. It's ridiculous. Animals are individuals. To suggest that we can, you know, say one price and then be held to that price, recognizing the vast differences in the patients we treat, is unreasonable, simply unreasonable.

You know, Madam Chair, I received a number of communications on this issue from my colleagues. One is from a veterinarian in Calgary, and she writes:

As a veterinarian I went to school for 8 years to obtain my professional degree. Our services require payment to pay for the equipment, the buildings we practice in, and the staff that we hire. Only by being able to have a fully stocked facility with highly trained employees can I provide quality health care. Perhaps you would trust a shady black-market option for your own health care if you had to pay for it but don't force us to lower our standards and not be able to pay our staff or ourselves in the interests of providing 'cheap' medicine. Cutting corners invariably leads to more problems long term both for us but mostly for the health of the patients we work so hard to help.

You know, Madam Chair, in that quote really lies part of the challenge that we have not just in veterinary medicine, but we have it in governing our province. We don't know what health care costs. Well, we know that it costs $20 billion and it costs roughly – what is it? – $157 million a day. But we don't know. When you go to the doctor and the doctor orders those blood tests, those X-rays, the ultrasound, whatever, we have no clue what the cost of that is. We have no idea. We're proud of the fact that we have, like, medicare. We have a system that means that you're not paying out of pocket for your own health care. I'm fully in favour of that. Trust me. I was actually surprised to hear the hon. minister sort of advocating – it sounded like she was advocating – the American style of health care, with the advertising that the doctors do in the States. Surely to goodness that's not what the NDP is advocating here. It sounded like it, but perhaps she can clarify.

The reason that some veterinary fees can seem high is because we are insulated from the true costs of our own health care. I had an incident once in practice, Madam Chair, where I did roughly what I just described: examination, CBC, chemistry, a couple of X-rays, and I think we did one other thing. The total bill was roughly around $500. I had gone over that with the owner, and she knew what the charges were. She came in to pick up the dog, and she says, "That is just so expensive." I said, "Well, did you not sort of understand what the quote was?" She said: "Oh, no. I understood the quote, and I'm okay, you know, that you kept to the quote. But that is so expensive." I said to her: "Well, you're a nurse. You're a nurse. What do you think this would cost in the human medical system?" She said: "Well, it's free. It's free. It doesn't cost anything."

Therein, Madam Chair, is one of our challenges not just as veterinarians but as a society. We don't know what our medical care costs us, and we don't know, when we're sent for yet another ultrasound or a repeat X-ray or we have diagnostic tests that we run again and again and again, how much that is actually costing the system. That's a problem. That's a problem.

Now, I have actually recommended that we at least go back to some kind of a system whereby – we don't mail out the statements like they used to. I actually kind of liked that system, but I understand that that's costly and that's another layer of bureaucracy that needs to do that. But why can't we access online our own medical chart and click on the dollar sign and say, "This is what you cost Alberta health care in the past year"? I think that would be extremely instructive. I think it would be very useful information. I tell you that it would sure help veterinarians because then people would realize the kind of absolute value they are getting at a veterinary hospital for services that in the human system would cost way, way more.

No, Madam Chair, advertising of fees, while it sounds like it would be a good deal for consumers, in the long run is not. You know, I've received many, many communications on this. This, for example, from a registered veterinary technologist:

We choose not to advertise, to eliminate clinics trying to battle with each other. By simply listing a price for a service, we are unable to advise our clients on what that price covers and whether that service is the best choice for that patient. We're not talking about buying a TV. There are a lot of factors that go into the treatment plan that cannot be listed on a billboard of fees. Our prices are not a secret. All a client needs to do is to call, and we will happily explain the costs and options.

That, Madam Chair, is why we simply don't put a price up on the Internet or publish a price schedule like a garage would, you know, in terms of this much for an oil change and this much for a brake job and that sort of thing. It's because our patients are living, breathing entities and each of them has to be dealt with on an individualized basis.

Madam Chair, again, my purpose here is not just to move what would be an amendment that would improve this bill, but my purpose here is to address something that I think is a very common misconception. In fact, a recent survey showed that 98 per cent of pet owners surveyed underestimated the lifetime medical costs of having a pet. Ninety-eight per cent. A large reason for that is because, again, we're insulated from what the medical costs are in the human medical system.

Madam Chair, I would ask for support for this amendment because I do think it removes one of the most egregious elements from within Bill 31. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A11?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[Motion on amendment A11 lost]

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Cyr: Okay. I'd like to move an amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, if you could wait till I have the original, then you can proceed. Your amendment will be referred to as A12. Please proceed.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. This amendment is around the high-cost credit businesses. I would see that it's reasonable to expect that these high-cost credit businesses have physical locations within Alberta.

I think this is fairly self-explanatory. I believe that in the end, with the ability to be able to have high-credit business options, you should have the ability to be able to speak with the people face to face if a concern is brought forward. So I would hope that everybody would vote for this because I think that it's an important amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A12?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[Motion on amendment A12 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are now back on the bill. Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I have an amendment, and I'll pass it to the pages. The original is on top there, and the rest are in there. Thank you.

Madam Chair, during the course of debate on this issue we've had some confusion creep into this vis-à-vis the scope of this bill. It specifically has to do with the scope of the species in question. Now, there's been some conflicting back and forth on this, and it's concerning to me, and it's concerning to a lot of my colleagues because, at the very least, they want clarification. Now, the bill states that it's domestic animals and those designated in regulation. I'll just find that here.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I just want to let you know that your amendment will be referred to as A13.

Dr. Starke: Thank you. I'll actually read it into the record here in a moment.

It's starting with 48.1(1)(a): "in respect of a domestic cat or dog or other specified type of domestic animal." Then it continues. You know, in various other sections there's this – and it's interesting because the minister, in one of the debates that we've had, said: well, the bill is very specific; it's dealing with household pets. Well, if that's the intent – and that's fine, that it would be limited to household pets – again, "household pets" is not a real strong term. I would say: let's bring it down to specific species because household pets can include a number of different species of birds, guinea pigs, ferrets, gerbils, hamsters, snakes, lizards, water spiders, you name it. There's a wide variety of species, and this bill is unclear.

Furthermore, the domestic animal thing. They said: well, not food-producing animals. I've had a lot of questions from horse owners saying: "Well, where does that leave horses? I mean, my horse is my pet. It doesn't happen to be in the house. It's not a household pet, but it is my pet."

The purpose of this amendment is to try to get some clarity with regard to exactly what animals are involved. I move that Bill 31, A Better Deal for Consumers and Businesses Act, be amended in section 2(2) as follows: (a) in the proposed section 48.1(1) by striking out "or other specified type of domestic animal"; (b) in the proposed 48.2 in subsection (2) by striking out "and prescribed types of domestic animals" and in subsection (3) by striking out "and other specified types of domestic animals;" (c) in the proposed section 48.3(1) by striking out clause (a), in clause (d) by striking out "and other types of domestic animals," and in clauses (f) and (g) by striking out "and specified types of domestic animals."

Now, Madam Chair, while some of our other amendments have fallen on the rocky shoals of government resistance, shall we say, this one should be easy because this one basically is putting the language into the bill that the minister says is in the bill or should be in the bill or was her intent to have in the bill, yet it's not what the bill says. There may be an argument: well, if the minister said it in the House, it's in Hansard, and Hansard's part of the public record, and therefore it's official. Well, I'll tell you that most veterinarians I know don't tote around copies of Hansard to know exactly which species are referred to in this bill. They might carry around a piece of the legislation, a copy of Bill 31, but they're not going to be toting around Hansard. So we need clarity on this. If the intent of the government is to restrict this bill only to dogs and cats, then say so. It's fairly simple and straightforward.

I'll give you yet another reason why it's important. Now, this is from a colleague of mine, and this colleague has got a very impressive list of qualifications. She holds a bachelor of science in agriculture, a doctor of veterinary medicine, a master's degree in avian health and medicine, and she is a diplomat on the American College of Poultry Veterinarians. She is also the director of national veterinary services and quality assurance for a large national food production company in Canada, and she's a member of the ABVMA. She writes:

As a food animal veterinarian working solely in the poultry industry, I am additionally concerned that the proposed amendments to the VPA are unclear in relation to food animals. Despite numerous industry standards in place for poultry, swine, cattle, and dairy industries, producers still occasionally switch between veterinarians to obtain either the answer or the medication they are seeking. Often this comes with food safety consequences the alternative veterinarian is not fully aware of due to lack of complete historical knowledge of the client.

One such example is the medication of poultry flocks for Salmonella Enteritidis and other Salmonella species, an action which can mask the true health status of a flock. While treatment can reduce the rate of bacterial shedding it can also increase the risk of antimicrobial resistance; furthermore, since treatment does not cease shedding it means Salmonella bacteria will remain a risk to food safety for as long as the flock remains in production. By promoting clients switching veterinarians, situations as these where food safety concerns are obscured or ineffectively dealt with will only increase the number, putting at risk the health of our consumers as well as our ability to meet regulatory standards for the export of livestock products.

The proposed amendments to the VPA within Bill 31 and the process taken to incorporate them are gravely concerning. I urge you to withdraw them as soon as possible to protect the integrity of self-governance in Alberta, the health of our patients, and the safety of our food supply.

You see, Madam Chair, the inclusion of a vague definition of which animals are actually involved in this bill creates concerns. It creates considerable concern because there's no real clarity as to whether we're talking about food-producing animals, domestic animals, or who it is that we're talking about.

Now, the minister has stated – and she stated publicly – that this is for household pets. Then let's have the bill language match what the minister's intent is. I cannot understand why you would leave the current language in place, which is vague and open ended and could result in inclusion of additional species, when the intent is to have it for dogs and cats. If that is the case, then the passage of this amendment, whatever it is now – A13 – would result in getting rid of that ambiguity and would result in clarity on this issue, which I think is extremely important that we have for the sake of not just the consuming public but also for the sake of the veterinary profession.

I would ask for support on the amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A13?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[Motion on amendment A13 lost]

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[The remaining clauses of Bill 31 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Madam Chair, I will move that the committee rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

Mr. Hinkley: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 31. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 31

A Better Deal for Consumers and Businesses Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise a final time to speak about Bill 31, A Better Deal for Consumers and Businesses Act. Over the past few weeks I've outlined the many ways this bill will help to protect Alberta consumers. Not only do these measures protect hard-working Albertans; these measures help promote a level playing field among businesses. They provide the government with the tools we need to ensure individual businesses do not get ahead by breaking the rules. This will lead to increased consumer confidence, which we know is good for businesses and the economy.

This is far from the end of the conversation, however. Many of our initiatives require well-crafted regulations to be fully effective. My ministry will keep these discussions going, continue consultation, and over the coming months make these stronger consumer protections a reality.

Madam Speaker, I'm proud of our government's record on consumer issues, from payday loans to condominiums. I'm pleased to move Bill 31 for a third time and add to this legacy.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to third reading? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Well, we're into third reading here, and it's disappointing to see that we've rushed this bill through the House so fast. We've requested that this bill be referred to committee and have our fine committees put to work so that they can actually improve this bill. I myself have moved several amendments on this bill on some of the areas of concern, both from industry and the fact that there's been a lack of clear consultation when it comes to Bill 31.

Now, it's upsetting to see that we have four big pieces of legislation moving through this House. I know that for myself – and I have to commend Parliamentary Counsel on their hard work. [some applause] Yes. Vermilion-Lloydminster is clapping on his desk, which he should because, I'll tell you, they worked darn hard, and they got those amendments ready for us. We threw a ton all at once, and this is the problem with rushing through so much legislation at the very end of a session. We are more or less ensuring that this legislation is going to be flawed, potentially, because of the fact that the opposition doesn't have the time to be able to go through these pieces of legislation in the detail that they need to. We don't have the time to be able to reach out to the stakeholders we need to.

A lot of this we had, more or less, the minister speaking on out in the public, saying that something was coming, but we weren't sure about all of these pieces. We hear about dark money or dirty money or shadow parties. We hear about how the boundaries commission put out a flawed report. We are hearing that there are some significant challenges when it comes to ensuring that Albertans have their voice inside of the Legislature. I guess that when we hear all of this, it's very disappointing that the government has done this.

I myself have spent a lot of time reading over the documents that stakeholders have been sending to my office, saying: "Please make sure you get this onto the record. In that way, when something does happen, we have the ability to go back and show the minister that we warned the minister about the fact that we weren't consulted on this."

Now, moving on, I'd like to talk about AMVIC. I will be the first to acknowledge that AMVIC has had its struggles. There's no delicate way of putting that. I myself was very disappointed with some of the things that were coming out, so I do understand that the minister wanted to more or less take AMVIC forward and say: this needs to get better; we need to get better at this.

The minister went out to an independent body, George B. Cuff & Associates Ltd. They are management consultants. This is what they do. This is the stuff that they are trained to review and go into. To hear from them that the Alberta Motor Vehicle Industry Council, AMVIC, has a purpose outside of the fact that government shouldn't be in control of it, that there should be protections put in place – it came up with that there should be an equal number of industry as well as public representatives appointed by the minister, with the chair being appointed by the minister.

Right now, if there is, let's say, a conflict between the public members appointed by the minister and the industry representatives, the government has the ability to more or less move the decision in the best course that the government sees fit. Again, it is very disappointing that we set up this structure and that as soon as all of these members were appointed by the minister, suddenly we've got the entire AMVIC moving towards government governance.

Now, moving on to veterinarians, I can say that AMVIC has had its issues – that's clear – but I have not seen or heard the same issues with our veterinarian community. If anything, I see them as of the highest calibre, some of the most trustworthy people within Alberta, people that I consider to be my friends. I think that all of us can say that when it comes to veterinarians, they are people within our communities that are the highest respected – the highest respected – so when we hear that the industry for both AMVIC and the profession of veterinarians have not been consulted on these moves that are in Bill 31, we need to ask: are we moving this stuff too fast? We need to make sure we get this right.

I moved reasonable – reasonable – amendments for both AMVIC and the veterinarians, trying to ensure that their voices are heard. To my disappointment – and I'm sure many of my colleagues were disappointed as well – the government voted against those reasonable amendments. The fact is that whenever we've got a profession that is under attack – and I believe that veterinarians specifically are for some reason being targeted by this government – that is disappointing.

They use old complaints. Now, the one complaint that I have heard being used in one of the newspaper articles was by a woman that was very unhappy with the price of a procedure provided by the veterinarians. When I sat with the veterinarians' association, they said that that specific individual did not put a complaint forward. How do we fix this when the complaints aren't moving forward? Is it just that she didn't feel comfortable, or is it just the fact that somehow we have to expect that with every profession, whether it is government regulated or industry regulated, there are going to be, I guess, some people unhappy with the services that they've gotten or with the prices that they've paid. I believe that that same individual would have had the same experience under a government-regulated board. The fact that she didn't feel that she potentially had the opportunity to speak out about this is distressing. But I will say that the examples the minister has given for justification against our veterinarian community are examples that will happen under government-regulated boards as well. These things do not go away.

If this is going to exist, it makes sense that – if this profession is working just fine, why are we using an iron fist on them? It makes no sense. It also doesn't make sense that we are actually telling people right now that the government has clearly consulted because they haven't. They haven't consulted with industry, either AMVIC or the veterinarians.

Now moving on to other parts of the bill, we see that some of this stuff actually is troublesome, and I actually applaud that the minister is trying to correct some of that. So not all of this bill is bad. That's why committee is so important.

I would hope that this Chamber votes this bill down and the minister comes back with something that is more palatable to everybody that's involved.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Yes, Madam Speaker. I would request complete support in the House, unanimous consent, for a one-minute bell on third reading of Bill 31.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker, very, very much. I guess this is our last opportunity to address this. I don't like using the term "kick at the cat" because veterinarians don't use that phrase.

Hon. Madam Speaker and my hon. colleagues, I do want to put into the public record a number of other statements that I've received from my colleagues. I think that perhaps everyone in the House has heard enough from me on this, and if that's the case, well, I'm sorry. But I do want to put into the public record some of the, again, hundreds of statements I've received from my colleagues, impassioned pleas to not go ahead with this poorly crafted, poorly consulted, and poorly executed piece of legislation, specifically with regard to the veterinary profession.

From an ABVMA member and past president of the association:

Unfortunately, Honorable Minister, you have made a great error in overstepping your duties to alter legislation of a self-regulated profession without due care, consideration, and consultation with the very professionals that the legislation deals with. We kindly request that you remove any reference to changes to the Veterinary Profession Act in this bill. Obviously, if this goes ahead, future election polls will dictate our final say. It will reflect our feelings toward you and your cowardly approach to modifying legislation without the courage to meet face-to-face with the very professionals you are affecting. This will be our final say as to how you treated us.

From a veterinarian in Calgary, who runs a very large pet hospital in south Calgary:

The Bill being discussed was poorly researched with little to no consultation with [the] profession and will result in a negative impact on us and ultimately on our clients, their pets and their bottom line.

Veterinary medicine is not a job. Veterinary medicine is not a money making venture. It is a passion. My husband and I both work here and our kids grew up in the clinic.

So did my sons.

... This commitment is true of all of our staff! I cannot tell you the amount of time that my staff stays late, work extra shifts and give their heart and soul to their clients and their pets. All this overtime and above and beyond care is never billed to the client. This is a profession based [on] compassion and love of our clients [and our patients]. I told you yesterday, but it is 100% true that my clinic's reputation is based on word of mouth and trust ... it is not about fees. When I first meet a new client I am often on my knees getting to know their dog. Can you imagine the detriment that discussing fees first would have on this relationship? This negative conversation will downgrade the relationships between vets and their clients.

People choose their veterinarian for many reasons. They keep their veterinarian because they trust them. This Bill degrades client veterinary relationships and will ultimately do way more harm than good.

From a veterinarian in Edmonton:

This is a very important issue. In Bill 31, the Veterinary Profession is being lumped in with dishonest ticket scalpers, loan sharking outlets, and other dishonest scammers. Veterinarians are often rated as among the most highly trusted professions in many opinion polls, far above lawyers and politicians, yet your government has decided to use this Bill to launch an assault upon the Veterinary Profession in Alberta.

Albertans are taking note. Veterinarians serve millions of Albertans and the vast majority of our clients trust us implicitly. We work hard to earn and maintain this trust, and our clients know it and value it. Albertans will not forget your government's lack of fair consultation and how you treat hard working, highly trusted professionals.

This is weak, mis-informed and insulting legislation, and the government must withdraw it or amend it.

From a registered veterinary technologist in Edmonton:

Being that Albertans pay out-of-pocket for veterinary care for their pets, I do believe that it is important for them to be regulated independently. This allows veterinarians to truly practice medicine that is best for each unique situation, tailored to the pet, their owner and what they are willing and able to do for their pet. And veterinarians in turn support the community – every veterinary practice I've worked at has some form of emergency fund that is opened up for the clients who truly need it. Every practice has a [family pet who is taken in from someone] who was no longer able to care for the pet. And let's not forget what it truly means to be Albertan – Come Hell or High Water. Having lived through the flood in Calgary, I saw the enormous impact that veterinary clinics had on people's ability to survive through the flood. Knowing that their beloved pet was being safely cared for allowed them to worry about their own safety. The rescue efforts during the Fort McMurray fires are another example of the thousands of animals that were rescued and cared for by teams of volunteer veterinary medical professionals.

This is what Alberta means to me. This is what self-regulated veterinary medicine does for this province. I thought that the NDP understood this and that is why I voted for you in the last provincial election. Unfortunately, I am seriously regretting my decision. Your Government has tabled Bill 31 in the Legislature that is nothing short of insulting to the entire veterinary profession. I am severely disappointed in the way my profession has been misrepresented in the most appalling way. All the consultative processes have been thrown by the wayside. Veterinary medicine is not a consumer commodity; it is a medical field, filled with highly trained medical professionals who have dedicated their lives to be a voice for the voiceless. The Association (ABVMA) that we have elected to represent us has been completely shut out – the President of which is forced to sit in the gallery during sittings to learn what is being dictated to the profession. To be completely removed from what is supposed to be a two-way relationship is undemocratic. The proposed amendments to Bill 31 are insulting to my profession; they have come about in a way that is abusive to the very people who have devoted their lives to this profession and should be completely removed from Bill 31.

Madam Speaker, the final two quotes, one from a veterinarian in Calgary:

The changes that Bill 31 proposes show a complete lack of respect and understanding on the part of the current government of the veterinary profession. The proposed changes will deteriorate the high standards of care that the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association currently ensures, resulting in disastrous effects for business owners like myself and a deterioration of the human-animal bond and the commodification of care for animals. It's clear that the veterinary community in Alberta has lost trust in the current government over this issue, and I personally look forward to supporting a new government in 2019.

The final quote, and this is a personal one, Madam Speaker. In 2001, when I was living in Germany, I attended a veterinary orthopedics course. I met a young veterinarian at that course, and I found out that he was a graduate of the Karl Marx University in Leipzig. He was born in East Germany. In the fall of 1989 he was in his first year of veterinary school, and he participated in the Monday night demonstrations in Leipzig that eventually led to the fall of the Berlin Wall. He went to the Nikolai Kirche, and he grabbed a candle, and he participated in those. All of his classmates that participated were threatened with expulsion if they participated in those marches, and he said: no; this is too important. And in 1989, when the wall came down, this gentleman was there. This veterinary student was in Berlin when they opened up Checkpoint Charlie.

In 2003 I got a call from this veterinarian. He wanted to come to Canada, and I said: "I'll help you out. I'll see if I can find, you know, somebody that was looking for a veterinarian." He came to Canada. He has established his own practice in Grande Prairie. He's been very successful. He married a gal from northern Alberta.

He writes:

I was born and raised in East Germany and came to Canada in 2003. I was in Berlin the night they opened Checkpoint Charlie and the German reunification became a reality. My dream had always been to move to Canada and do what was never possible in East Germany – run my own Veterinary business.

I had watched my Dad struggle as an "employed veterinarian" in one of the biggest co-op's in East Germany. Already then, I had told myself I would like to go somewhere where honest, hard work pays off. Fast forward to Alberta, Canada December 2017. Here I am trying to understand why a provincial government is infiltrating and undermining my private business which I have worked so hard to build. No consultation with the ABVMA regarding this bill is bizarre and clearly indicates a government vindictive and attacking.

Madam Speaker, this doctor has now practised in Canada for 14 years, and I'm proud to call him my friend, I'm proud to call him a colleague, and I think he's made things better. But when I talked to him about this bill, he said: "That's exactly why I left East Germany, because the government, you know, couldn't and wouldn't stay out of people's business. What is happening? Why is this happening in this way?"

Madam Speaker, I'm opposed to this. I have been all along. I've been pretty consistent on that. I urge members to maybe finally now change your minds and vote this terrible piece of legislation down.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak?

Would the hon. minister like to close debate? No? Okay.

Hanukkah

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Tonight Jewish families across Alberta and Canada will gather at sundown to light the hanukiah, a powerful symbol of faith and freedom. It is a statement of the Jewish people's struggle for religious freedom and shines with courage, with conscience, with strength, in centuries-long struggle for religious tolerance. The eight-day holiday commemorates the rededication of the temple against oppression more than 2,000 years ago. This victory still resonates today as a great triumph of religious freedom over subjugation and, as signified by the lighting of the hanukiah, of light over darkness. This joyous time represents an opportunity to think about the importance of faith and tradition as well as reflect upon the exceptional contribution of the Jewish community to our great province. Tonight as we watch the lighting of the second candle of Hanukkah, we're reminded of the ancient story of Israel's courage and their courage to make the darkness bright. We see the heroic spirit of the Maccabees live on in Israel today, and we know that a better day is coming when this festival of freedom will be celebrated in a world free from terror, and we will always keep hope that that light of hope will keep burning. The UCP caucus wishes a happy Hanukkah [remarks in Hebrew] to all those celebrating in Alberta and all around the world.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Hanukkah

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize the Jewish tradition of Hanukkah. Yesterday at sundown families across Alberta celebrated the first day of Hanukkah through the lighting of the first candle of the menorah. The lighting of the candle represents the spread of light, wisdom, enlightenment, and faith throughout the world and is a demonstration of how every individual has the ability to change the world for the better.

Many cultures and religions brighten the darkest nights of the year with festivals of light, and the tradition of Hanukkah is one of the oldest. Hanukkah celebrates and commemorates the strength and perseverance of the Jewish people and their struggle for religious freedom. After the rededication of the temple in Jerusalem a one-day supply of oil lasted for eight days until new and ritually pure oil could be prepared for the temple menorah.

This year as we celebrate 150 years of Confederation, we have the special privilege of also celebrating the countless contributions of the Jewish people to Alberta and to Canada. We owe them a debt of gratitude for sharing their history, traditions, and culture with all of us and for their work as community builders and leaders.

As the MLA for Calgary-Glenmore I am proud to represent such a diverse and dedicated constituency that includes a very strong and proud Jewish community. I'm proud to join with them to mark the beginning of the festival of lights, and on behalf of my colleagues on both sides of this House I wish everyone celebrating a happy and peaceful Hanukkah. May the lights of the menorah shine upon all families of the Jewish faith this holiday season and brighten their prayers for peace.

Thank you.

Government Policies

Mr. Loewen: With apologies to Dr. Seuss' the Grinch.

Every Albertan down in Albertaville liked jobs and prosperity a lot,
But the Premier with her Leap Manifesto did not.
She talked of making life better, you see,
But she forgot overregulation is never the key.

She talked lots about having Albertans' backs,
But she never campaigned on her carbon tax,
Not to mention that large tax will increase by 50 per cent.
In January Albertans' pocketbooks will have a bigger dent.

Now, the NDP managed to increase surgery waits.
It was hard for hurting Albertans to wait for those dates.
Seven months or more wait for an MRI.
When the Health minister talked it was a pie in the sky.

Now, rural crime is going nowhere but up, up, up,
And Crown prosecutors are now looking at an empty cup.
Dippers talked about social license. Free pipelines for all,
But Kinder Morgan now has run into an NDP wall.

With the debt reaching over $90 billion, we fear,
And expected interest racking up at $3 billion a year,
Now the Dipper budgets credit agencies like this not,
So six credit downgrades is what we got.

They even reduced money to public schools
And called it an increase. No one was fooled.
Now rural crime is everywhere to and fro,
So the NDP responds by letting criminals go.

Now, when it comes to the NDP caribou plans,
MDs, counties, foresters, and oil are no fans.
All they've ever asked for is to be consulted,
But they continue to feel nothing but insulted.

Biologists just say the NDP have no species plans,
So how can they provide the feds with caribou range plans
When clearly we know that species interact?
Grizzlies and cougars eating caribou has an impact.

So before the feds get the caribou plans,
The people need to become very big fans.
That will take consultation, you know,
But with the NDP smoke they will blow.

Making life better is something they say,
But all indications point to higher costs each day.
Now, the Premier looked down from her lofty perch
Expecting to see Albertans left in a lurch.

Maybe prosperity, she thought, doesn't come in a bill.
Maybe prosperity in Alberta is hard to kill.
What happened then? Well the right did unite.
They chose a leader for Albertans they did . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Political Discourse

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a BA in professional communications, and in my studies I took a particular interest in political communications. It's a fascinating field that delves into human psychology, the evolution of technology, and how information can be shaped, transmitted, received, and taken in.

It was that study that led to my own increasing political engagement and eventually my run for office because I saw that the public and many people I knew felt disengaged and cynical, convinced that all politicians lie and everyday people have no hope of making a difference.

I ran to change that, to try and bring back some integrity to politics by helping people understand how our system works, how and why decisions are made, and how they themselves could get engaged. Now that I have the honour of standing here, I work every day to use my platform to do just that. That is why I'm committed to adamantly opposing the toxic environment being created by the Leader of the Official Opposition.

I recognize that political communications will always involve a certain amount of spin. Members will use hyperbole and exaggeration to frame their arguments, but we only have to look south to see the chaos and disorder created when elected officials take that behaviour to extremes. Since Jason Kenney's return to Alberta we've seen an exponential increase in the number of utterly inaccurate, disingenuous, and false claims infecting our political discourse to the point that our local media has felt the need to begin to call him out. It has been with great disappointment that I have seen members opposite follow that lead, spreading dangerously massaged and misleading information about GSAs, our electoral system, and even the written record of this House.

Mr. Speaker, to quote Charles Sykes, "Conservatives once recognized that politics was a means, not an end . . . that moral communities are 'fragile things, hard to build and easy to destroy.'" Power is not an end that justifies any means. That kind of attitude only serves to increase cynicism and drive our communities apart. Albertans deserve better. I'm committed to preserving the integrity of our political discourse, and I will continue to use my platform to call out those who abuse it. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Clarissa Stoffelsen

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the distinct pleasure of telling you about Clarissa Stoffelsen, chief warrant officer of the 2850 Grande Prairie army cadet corps. Clarissa was recently awarded the General Walsh commemorative sword, the highest prize in army cadets in Canada. To give you an idea of the significance of this honour, she was invited to Ottawa for Remembrance Day where she joined the vice-regal party at the National War Memorial and was a luncheon guest at the Governor General's residence.

Clarissa was chosen as Canada's top army cadet from hundreds of nominees based on her experience, determination, fitness, outstanding service record, and the highest level of personal discipline. Mr. Speaker, our community could not be more proud, and I hope all Albertans now feel the same way.

Let me tell you a bit more about Clarissa. She joined the cadet program at the age of 12. Over the next five years she worked hard to reach the highest rank in the corps, regimental sergeant major. She also excels academically and has an excellent record of community involvement. Clarissa has received many awards during her time as a cadet and has been rewarded with opportunities to travel to Chile, Europe, and the Yukon. She has one year left in cadets, and then she'll work towards a new objective, studying to become a doctor.

There's no doubt in my mind and I'm sure in all of yours now that I've told you about her that Clarissa will attain all of her life's goals as this cadet has already proven that she has the right stuff. She's the best of the best, Mr. Speaker.

Chilean Community in Alberta

Loyola: Mr. Speaker, today and every day my caucus colleagues and I stand with the Chilean community here in Alberta. Starting in 1975 Chilean refugees fled to Canada and other countries to escape the totalitarian and murderous military dictatorship in Chile. These families were torn apart by thousands of murders, tortures, and disappearances, but when they started new lives in safer places like here in Alberta, the process of healing began.

I spoke in this very House of the importance of upholding democracy and fighting for democratic principles while the members opposite belittled those very values. As I spoke of the Chilean dictatorship, a member opposite shouted at me and said that Pinochet's dictatorship was a success story. Mr. Speaker, Latin American Canadians from countries across this hemisphere know undemocratic governments and dictatorships far too well. For the opposition to ever think of joking about a dictatorship that resulted in the deaths of thousands is incredibly offensive. They undermine the Chilean community's ability to reconcile its past when they claim that a dictator was a success. They ought to know better, but belittling human rights appears to have become a pattern for them.

Canada is a wonderful place for people from all walks of life, and I'm grateful my family is here in Canada, living and respecting indigenous communities and their territory. I call on the opposition to apologize to the Chilean community here in Alberta. They need to withdraw their comments and educate themselves on the atrocities of the military dictatorship in Chile. They need to stand on the side of human rights, of peace, and, most importantly, of democracy.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite number of copies of a letter from the reeve of Wheatland county, which I will read into the record this afternoon in debate of Bill 33.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have the five copies of an OH and S alert issued by the United Nurses of Alberta entitled You Have the Right and Obligation to Refuse Unsafe Work! It also says, "What does this mean? . . . refusing to perform unsafe work is not only a right it is a legal requirement in Alberta." Unfortunately for this government, this was issued in 2009.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Regarding rural crime letters still coming in, I have one from Gordon here talking about the police response time of 45 minutes.

I have another one here from David talking about all the stolen vehicles just in his one community. It's just terrible.

I have another letter from Shauna pleading with the government to please do something to keep repeat offenders in prison.

Another one was anonymously sent. "Rural Crime is getting out of control." Eight residences were broken into in a two-kilometre circle around her farm just in the last year. These people are not feeling safe.

Another one, Marilyn, from my riding. This is regarding a home invasion. Again, criminals right back out on the street again. Of course, it's not an emergency.

This one was written to the Premier regarding the $55,000 in security systems that this business installed which was stolen from their business.

It's not an emergency, Mr. Speaker?

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Ministerial Panel on Child Intervention

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, over a year ago we had an emergency debate in this House about the tragic death of little Serenity in 2014. Albertans were horror stricken and heartbroken when they learned the details of Serenity's short life. They demanded action from this government to find out what happened and to ensure it never happens again. The government set up the Ministerial Panel on Child Intervention that was to submit a final report within six months. The child intervention panel has been meeting for about a year now, and Albertans are getting anxious. To the Premier: when will Albertans receive the child intervention panel's final report?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will take the House leader's questions today or, rather, perhaps the Minister of Children's Services will, but first I need to say how surprised and frankly disappointed I am that the member didn't reconsider his decision to stay in this position. Instead of defending a woman who came forward to him about sexual harassment, he fired her, and instead of holding the House leader accountable, the UCP leader rushed to his defence. We'll certainly be answering the questions asked by this member, but I think that Albertans deserve some clarity from the leader of this party and the House leader as well.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I have addressed that issue both in and outside this House. This caucus takes harassment very seriously. I took the harassment that was happening to my employee at the time very seriously as well. I was deeply concerned about that. My firm and I made some mistakes as we worked through the processes, as our client removed Ms Harrison from our site. We would have made some decisions differently with the benefit of hindsight and experience. We regret that and have apologized for that.

But this question was about the report from the child intervention panel, Mr. Speaker. I will ask it again. When can Albertans expect to see that report?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very thankful to all the members of the panel, who've spent many months deliberating the very complex situation around child intervention in this province. Of course, we were moved to do so after hearing the story of Serenity and many other stories over the years. Certainly, I'm very thankful for that work, and I know that they have done some great work, even just this morning, in terms of coming forward with some ideas on where they want to go with that. As they work to bring recommendations forward, I'll be happy to keep the House updated on what's happening.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, members from all parties have been attending meetings of the child intervention panel for almost a year. We all care deeply about the safety and well-being of children in our intervention system. This is not the first time in recent years we have had a panel or a round-table examining our child intervention system. Premier, what can you tell Albertans is different this time with this child intervention panel?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Without doubt, we want every child in Alberta to have a safe, healthy, and loving home because, truly, here in Alberta we take that seriously. We need to work together to take care of our families and our neighbours. That was the spirit with which we brought forward the panel, and certainly that was the spirit by which we responded to phase 1 of the panel's work, by bringing forward legislation as soon as possible after phase 1 was completed and the recommendations were submitted. We make that commitment as well, that as soon as the recommendations are received from the panel, we will be taking action and moving forward.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

1:50 Reporting of Child Abuse and Neglect

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Children's Services continues to state that she will do everything she needs to do to prevent child abuse to ensure a tragedy such as the one that occurred to little Serenity does not happen again. Premier, your government had a chance to do that with Bill 216, which has been before this House since December 5. You failed with this bill. Will you work with me and other members of this opposition to make it work as soon as possible for Serenity and her mom?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Like the member, I am very deeply committed to doing everything we possibly can to reduce child abuse in this province and to do everything we can to prevent a tragedy like what happened to Serenity. I certainly committed to Serenity's mother when she was here that I would work with the member in terms of achieving those goals and objectives. Again, I think that there were some challenges with Bill 216, but that does not mean that the commitment behind it to address these issues is not real. We had a meeting just last week, and I'm thankful for the...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

First supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Children's Services said in the House last week, "Our whole Legislature is committed to honouring the memory of Serenity by taking action to prevent child abuse." Premier, this is a good statement. I support it. The whole House supports it. You have said that you support it, but can you please tell us today what concrete changes you have implemented in the past 12 months that meet that goal?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, again, when tragedies happen, families deserve answers and families deserve action. That was why we established the Ministerial Panel on Child Intervention. We all want to do better for children and families. We unanimously passed Bill 18 so that Albertans know that when something happens to children in care, our government is taking action. We're exploring ways to address the disparity in on-reserve services. We increased funding to hire 60 new staff to support vulnerable kids, and we will keep taking action on that. I can't wait to get the recommendations from the panel and start working with my department to take action to make life better for children who are in care and families who continue to be challenged.

Mr. Ellis: I am also waiting for the recommendations.

This government has vowed that it is committed to preventing child abuse. Well, Premier, all of Alberta is watching because Serenity's sad case has touched the hearts of everyone. Her family has come here twice to quietly and respectfully urge this government to take action. Premier, when will Albertans see action from your government that truly, truly does honour Serenity's memory?

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Reporting suspected abuse and neglect is both a moral responsibility and a legal requirement that we all have. I would continue to urge Albertans that if they suspect that a child is being abused or neglected, they must call the child abuse hotline at 1.800.387.KIDS. Each situation and family is different, so while some of the signs might point to abuse, they might also mean that the family is facing other challenges. Regardless, Children's Services can help children and their families be supported and make a difference in whatever that family may face. Again, any suspicion of abuse or neglect: please, please report it so that we can provide the support needed to those families.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Federal and Provincial Finance Ministers' Meeting

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Finance minister chose to avoid answering whether he stood up for Alberta's small business in the recent meeting of finance ministers. Alberta small-business owners are concerned about the federal tax, and they want a provincial finance minister that will actually stand up for their concerns. They are concerned that they may have to make major changes to their existing business structures at the end of the year. They're concerned because it is already the busiest time of the year for the retail service industry. Again, did the government raise these concerns at the finance ministers' meetings or, for that matter, have they ever raised them at the federal government level?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, we have. Yes, we will continue to make sure that we prioritize the concerns that are brought forward from Alberta businesses. We're proud of our track record, and we're proud of the work we're doing to support them, including the fact that we have reduced small-business taxes by a third in this province. We'll keep working to make sure that Alberta continues to be the best place to work, start a business, and live.

Mrs. Aheer: We're hearing from small businesses, Mr. Speaker. They're very concerned. Yesterday the Finance minister claimed that he stood up on behalf of Albertans for important issues of equalization at the recent finance ministers' meetings. It's a welcome change from his past position where he was, quote, agnostic about equalization issues. It's important that this government seize the opportunity to correct existing imbalances in the government. To the Premier: did her Finance minister put forward a proposal for a new formula at these negotiations? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I can say unequivocally that our Finance minister went to that meeting and he stood up and fought for Alberta. That is quite unlike Jason Kenney when he was a member of the Harper government, who had multiple opportunities to fix the equalization formula for this country to benefit Alberta. Instead, the one change that he did make made it worse. It's hurt Alberta because it has cost us money.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's no secret that Albertans give more than they get when it comes to equalization. That's why it's important that there's a provincial government standing up for Albertans when it comes to federal-provincial discussion on this matter. That's why it was troubling when the Finance minister said last year that equalization was not something that the minister was focused on, but yesterday the minister claimed that he was taking steps to stand up for Albertans. Can the Premier or the Finance minister now update the Assembly on the next steps and how they plan to follow through with these promises?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member and members of this House that the Finance minister has put the financial position of this province relative to federal issues first and foremost, and I'll just give another example. The federal government began by saying that the proceeds from taxation on marijuana would be split 50-50 with all the costs coming to municipalities and to the provinces. Our Premier and our Finance minister stood up and fought for a much better formula. It's now 75-25 with a cap on federal . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Education Budget

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We recently learned that the Education minister ordered all Alberta school districts and education organizations to reduce costs. This goes directly against the government's repeated commitment to not reduce funding for programs that Albertans value most. This is the second time this week that we're learning about big cuts to critical programs from the media rather than from the government. To the Premier: how many other critical programs and services have been targeted for cuts?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Just to revisit what's happened over the last number of years, we've been very focused on making sure that we stop the deep cuts that were coming forward from the now Official Opposition. We made sure that we funded enrolment growth, and we made sure that those funds went towards school districts. We also worked to make sure that we reduced school fees in this province, and all of those things certainly wouldn't have happened under the opposition's watch. Now, in terms of local decision-making we respect the fact that we get the funds as close to the communities as possible, and we trust local decision-makers to do the best with those funds to meet the community's needs.

Ms McPherson: Mr. Speaker, school districts have been told to cut several items that help our education professionals become better at serving Alberta students. Conferences, travel, and professional membership fees are on the block. These opportunities allow our teachers and administrators to share and learn best practices with education professionals around the world. To the Premier: what is the dollar amount that the government expects to save by cutting Alberta's education professionals off at the knees in their ability to become better educators in the future?

Ms Hoffman: Well, Mr. Speaker, I know the member opposite is working at hyperbole, but that's exactly what that is. We've worked hard to make sure that we're getting funds into the classrooms. We're getting funds through the agreement that we had with the Alberta Teachers' Association classroom improvements funds. When I've gone to schools and asked "How are you investing some of those funds?", they've talked about very specific conferences that they've taken around literacy or numeracy or other items that are of particular interest to the students in their class. When I, of course, have met with school boards, some of them talk about the focus that they've really done around making sure that they have reasonable class sizes. These are all things that are only possible because this government brought in a budget that supports Alberta families and makes their lives better.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Ms McPherson: Mr. Speaker, it's unfair and lacking in compassion to present our educators with a lump of coal by demanding these cuts right before Christmas. There are definitely savings to be found by collaborating with educators rather than issuing a grinchy edict. To the Premier: how does the government hope to achieve compassionate cuts by surprising our educators with this last-minute rush to address costs?

Ms Hoffman: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that everyone knows that this government is deeply committed to ensuring that we have a very strong education system in this province, and we've shown that through all of our budgets. We've also shown all Albertans that we expect, now that we're out of the economic downturn and we're on a path of moving up, up, up, we want to do so while, of course, ensuring that we have thoughtful ways of addressing what might be some excess. That's why those letters were sent to school boards rather than dictates that said what they had to do. We want to work with them to make sure that we find efficiencies and make Alberta's classrooms even better.

2:00 Conversion Therapy Use in Alberta

Ms Goehring: Mr. Speaker, attempting to change or repair a person's sexual identity is a very dangerous practice. LGBTQ-plus youth that are subjected to this unscientific and unproven treatment often face lifelong consequences, including substance abuse issues, self-harming behaviours, and potential suicide. I have personally heard from numerous Albertans about the dangers of conversion therapy. To the Minister of Health: what steps is the government taking to ensure that no Albertan is subjected to this archaic and dangerous practice?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for her strong advocacy on this issue as well as many others. Our government unequivocally stands against conversion therapy. This harmful practice is incredibly detrimental to LGBTQ youth, and we refuse to support anything that could harm our most vulnerable Albertans. I'm deeply proud of the work we've done to support LGBTQ rights, including expanding human rights legislation. We know that there is more work to be done, and this continues to be a priority for our government.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Minister.

Mr. Speaker, I'm concerned that our LGBTQ-plus youth may be subjected to a practice that is not supported by health practitioners. To the same minister: what is your ministry hearing from stakeholders and health professionals about this practice?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We work very closely with a number of health professionals who engage in therapy, including psychiatrists, psychologists, and many others, social workers included. In every case these professional colleges were appalled at the practice of conversion therapy and have mechanisms to discipline any member who may be engaging in it. There is no billable service related to conversion therapy. We do not fund it in any way, and under this government we never will.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Ontario already has legislation in place banning conversion therapy, to the same minister: does this government plan to introduce legislation that would outlaw conversion therapy?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. The Ontario bill has made it illegal for any practitioner to bill Ontario Health for conversion therapy. I'm glad to say that Alberta Health in no way covers this practice. However, we are continuing to examine options to ensure that conversion therapy is not forced upon LGBTQ youth outside of the health care system. I appreciate the member's concern with this issue, and I look forward to working with her to protect all vulnerable Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Saskatchewan's Construction Site Ban on Alberta Licence Plates

Connolly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today marks a week since the province of Saskatchewan banned Alberta licence plates from bidding on highway construction projects. Given that our government gave the Saskatchewan government a week or we would take them to court, to the Minister of Transportation: what progress has been made in resolving this issue?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I can tell the House that after six days ministers from the Saskatchewan government finally returned our phone calls yesterday, and the minister of economic development and I asked them about this issue. They were not able to provide any concrete evidence to support their claims that Saskatchewan firms are being discriminated against in our province. They have retroactively changed open tenders to restrict Alberta-plated vehicles, and we think this is unacceptable. As a result, we've demanded that they kill that ban and do so . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Connolly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Alberta has a strong commitment to the New West trade partnership and to its other interprovincial and international trade agreements and given that, as the Premier has demonstrated on the pipeline file, we know that ultimately we see best results when we work through the systems available, to the same minister: how is this government working to resolve this issue through the courts or through other means?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've spoken with our legal teams and have a trade challenge prepared through the New West Partnership agreement. We're ready to file first thing tomorrow morning. I want to be very clear that we would rather resolve this issue through conversations as opposed to through the courts, but we are left with no choice given the government of Saskatchewan's stubborn position. Once this issue is resolved – and we will win – I hope that the western provinces can work together to further enhance trade to compete internationally.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Connolly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that ultimately this is about standing up for Alberta's workers and that involves talking to all our partners in the industry, to the same minister: what is the government hearing from Alberta construction and road builders about this protectionist restriction?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. From the building trades to construction associations, industry partners are dumbfounded and confused by Saskatchewan's unsubstantiated claims. They worry about their members and the impacts this restriction is going to have on construction. That's why we're standing up for Alberta companies and Alberta workers. We know that the government of Saskatchewan is not trade compliant. We will fight this in court, and we will win. Our government has the backs of Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Veterinary Profession Act Amendments

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A little over two hours ago Bill 31 passed third reading in this Assembly despite vocal opposition from veterinarians, veterinary technologists, and pet owners from across the province. This bill includes several amendments to the Veterinary Profession Act, which is under the purview of the Minister of Labour. The veterinary profession reports to the Minister of Labour, who was silent throughout the debate on Bill 31. To that minister. Please clarify: do you support the changes that Bill 31 makes to the Veterinary Profession Act?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta and Status of Women.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We were very proud to pass Bill 31 today. We know that veterinarians are trusted professionals, and Albertans look to them to provide quality care for their pets. Our government supports this legislation because after the past several months of listening to thousands of Albertans who told us that they want better protections for consumers and a level playing field for business, we were happy to be able to consult with the industry and other veterinary stakeholders. We heard their concerns, and we were happy to pass legislation and are very much, after hearing all sides, of the view that it strikes a balance.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, we know how that minister feels. We're really wanting to hear the Minister of Labour.

Given that the issue of veterinary billing was identified as number 13 out of 15 of the issues in the government's consumer protection survey and given that this paragraph was deleted from the report on the survey that was shared with the ABVMA and given that the withholding of this vital information is a disturbing practice by the Minister of Service Alberta, to the minister: how do you explain the two different versions of the document reporting on veterinary billing survey results, and why did you withhold selected information from the ABVMA?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we heard from many ordinary Albertans who told us that they want to be better informed when looking for veterinary services for their pets. That's why we proposed reasonable new rules requiring fee disclosures that are in line with other provinces. Certainly, when we reviewed the results of the survey, we took not only into account quantity but also the quality of responses. After hearing some very heartbreaking stories from individual Albertans and, again, after consulting with industry, we determined this was a balanced approach.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the members of the veterinary profession are justifiably outraged by the callous and disrespectful treatment given them by the Minister of Service Alberta and given that this damage the ham-handed handling of Bill 31 has done to the relationship with our profession and given that the successful implementation of changes to the Veterinary Profession Act will require a co-operative effort between this government and the ABVMA, to the minister: now that you've taken over the Veterinary Profession Act, will you work to repair the damage you've caused by speaking at the AGM of the ABVMA, as the Minister of Labour did last March?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to take the opportunity to clarify something mentioned by the member. The legislation has not been moved under the jurisdiction of Service Alberta. We consulted with Albertans and with industry with respect to some specific changes around the issue of transparency, which we heard from Albertans was a concern and an improvement that they would like to see in this area. We will continue along with Labour, as we have throughout our consultations, in conjunction, to consult with the ABVMA and other stakeholders to ensure the regulations . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister. [interjection] Hon. member.

Photoradar Review

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, last spring the Official Opposition called on the Transportation minister to conduct a review into the use of photoradar. Even the minister said last May that, quote: my concern is that there is a strong public view that photoradar has gone beyond just enforcing safe traffic and has become in some cases a bit of a cash cow for municipalities. End quote. Can the minister advise the House: what is the status of the review of photoradar, and when will the report be tabled?

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to do that. I think there's been a great deal of public concern about the utilization of photoradar, and it's important that any kind of electronic monitoring of traffic or enforcement needs to be done on the basis of improving safety. That's our main objective. It's always focused on making sure that people are safe on our roads, and the degree that it can be a useful tool for that is the degree to which this government will support it. Otherwise, it should not be used in place of taxes.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that when the minister committed to the review, which has not been tabled, nor did he mention anything about it, Alberta was one of only four provinces with a photoradar program and given that Alberta is the only province that allows so-called mobile speed cameras on roadways that are neither school zones nor construction zones, can you update this Assembly on why your government is delaying this much-needed review, or is this another broken NDP promise?

Mr. Mason: I can assure the hon. member that that is simply untrue. This government is committed to seeing through this review and to making sure that our roads are as safe as possible but that these devices are not misused. That's the subject of the review, Mr. Speaker, and we're very much focused on that. Safety is our top priority, and we also want to make sure that drivers are not unfairly taken advantage of for taxation reasons.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, Albertans have a long-standing concern about how photoradar is used in this province. Earlier this year the government scrambled to book a press room to get out ahead of the opposition last minute on this issue. Since the minister hastily announced this year that there would be a review, there has been no update or sign that the review is even close to completion or even started. Minister, how many people are working on this review, and is it anywhere near completion?

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can assure the House that a review is under way. We have issued an RFP in order to provide an opportunity to look at consultants who can help us with this review, and the House will be informed of the results of the review in due course.

Energy Policies and Industry Competitiveness

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, the CAPP president, Tim McMillan, said, quote: Alberta's climate plan with its new regulations does not support working Albertans. End quote. He said that the $440 million oil sands innovation fund pits companies and communities against each other and that the NDP government's plan does not protect jobs or the competitiveness of the energy sector. Husky, Imperial, and CNRL all agree. To the Deputy Premier: why is your government making it more difficult to do business in Alberta while making life miserable for Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll thank the member for the question. You know, we've been working with industry, including CAPP and all of their members, for the past two years, ensuring that we were going to move forward with our climate leadership plan to ensure that companies are moving forward on developing innovative technologies that will reduce their greenhouse gases, reduce their footprint but also make them more competitive. Last week we announced $1.4 billion that will be invested with industry into finding innovative solutions and continuing to drive the innovation agenda forward.

Mr. Panda: When the Official Opposition is trying to do its job holding the government to account and offering constructive feedback, the NDP says that we are cheering for the failure of Albertans. Mr. Speaker, nothing could be further from the truth, and we will not be bullied by this NDP government. Instead of auditioning for the role of Official Opposition, why won't this NDP government face the facts about high unemployment, the brain drain, rural crime, credit downgrades, and vanishing investments and stop pulling from their record?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know what I find disingenuous? That the opposition is continuing to hope that the pipeline approvals that we've secured will fail and that these pipelines won't be built. It's getting quite tiresome of an opposition that is running down our industry. We know that they are the best in the world. We are working collaboratively with them to increase opportunities, to expand the innovative technologies that they are developing. We are partnering with industry. We stand with our oil and gas sector. We stand with our energy sector. When will the opposition do the same?

Mr. Panda: Given, Mr. Speaker, that the NDP shamelessly takes credit for any success of hard-working entrepreneurs and businesses like JACOS, who only recently started production after years of construction, and since the NDP is taking credit for the increased production of Suncor, Cenovus, and CNRL but it was all due to the mergers and acquisitions when the multinationals left, will the NDP admit that they're just following Tommy Douglas's energy policy of the 1970s to kick the big multinationals out of the oil sands while misleading Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know what? The opposition would have us sit on our hands and do nothing. Well, you know what? There is a role for government to play, and we're very proud of the role that we play in working with industry to encourage investments, to make it as easy as possible to invest in this province. The credit always goes to the companies and to the small-business owners. But there is a role for government to play, whether it's through our Alberta jobs plan, bringing forward tax credits that make us more competitive, or, again, investing $1.4 billion from the carbon levy into innovation that's going to benefit our oil and gas sector, our energy sector, our food processors.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Renewable Energy Development

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Rural Albertans are being pressured to sign away the right to their land, all in the name of this government's rapid and irresponsible drive to 30 per cent renewables by 2030. I have asked repeatedly about what protections are in place for landowners and what reclamation requirements exist. The answer: none. It turns out that even minimum setback requirements are, quote, negotiable. When will this government protect rural Alberta farmers from the predatory practices of Ontario speculators furiously buying land options so they can develop subsidized wind projects in Alberta?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, we're really proud of the fact that we're working to ensure that we address climate change. We do it in a way where we work with local Albertans, taking all of the money invested through that price on carbon, investing it back in Alberta's local economy. We also know that that means there are opportunities for more income, more employment. I've met with many rural landowners who are excited about the opportunities that they see now for diversifying some of their income as well. We respect them. We want to ensure that they have the opportunities to work collaboratively, and we will continue to do so.

Mr. MacIntyre: I look forward to the minister tabling that list.

Minimum wage increases, costly Bill 6 regulations, a carbon tax that unequally penalizes rural Albertans forced to travel further for their goods and services: it's, frankly, impossible to figure out what this government hasn't done to make life harder in rural Alberta. Given that we've heard repeatedly about efforts to buy development options along the poorly wind-resourced eastern slopes, do these developers even need to prove viability, or are skyrocketing electric bills one more thing rural Albertans can look forward to?

Ms Hoffman: Sorry. My rural roots just couldn't keep me seated on this one, Mr. Speaker, because just earlier this week I had the opportunity to visit a number of different health care facilities in northwestern Alberta, and I have to say that the number one question they ask is: we're really scared that our hospital is going to get closed. You know what? We've worked with those rural communities to ensure that we're providing stable, supportive care environments for those Albertans. We're working with rural landowners to make sure they have opportunities to get fair compensation if they choose to expand and diversify some of their opportunities for investment, and we're working to make sure that local municipalities have a voice and have strong opportunities to engage with this government. I'm proud of that.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. MacIntyre: Wow. That was exciting.

The government is announcing today the results of Alberta's renewables auction. Pricing per kilowatt is reported to be below 4 cents. But that is not the full cost to Albertans, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister tell Albertans what the full cost of renewable electricity will be, including the cost of rapid-response backup generation and the infrastructure for it when the wind doesn't blow and the sun doesn't shine?

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think there's quite a bit of wind blowing from the other side of the House.

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that Alberta isn't just a leader in oil and gas; we're a leader in renewable energy as well. The announcement today is about great jobs, big private-sector investments, and making sure that we get the best possible price for Albertans. Alberta is setting a record for the lowest cost of renewables in Canada, less than half of the price in Ontario and amongst the lowest in the world. This shows that our made-in-Alberta plan is working. It highlights a highly competitive process, strong potential for renewable power in Alberta, and positive.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Dementia Care

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The number of people with dementia in our province will triple in the next 30 years, and that's why I've been asking this government repeatedly about their dementia strategy, or should I say their lack of a dementia strategy. Frustrating as it is, I will ask today for the third time. In June the Minister of Health promised that a strategy would be completed in a couple of weeks. In September she said that it's coming soon, but Albertans are still waiting. To the Minister of Health one more time: where is the dementia strategy? When will we see it? Why is it taking so long?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. This absolutely has been a priority. Every time we feel like it's almost done – it kind of reminds me of when I was working on my master's thesis – we always think there's one more thing that we can just improve a little bit to make it that much better. We're doing this in partnership with a number of stakeholders, but it will be done very soon. I'll dare to give an exact date. I'm hoping to have it out before Christmas.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, given that this government has started sending signals that cuts are coming to education and PSE, we can only assume that health care is next and given that there are many community programs that are cost-effective and that deliver badly needed services to people with dementia, their families, and caregivers and given that these programs save money by keeping people in the community rather than hospital, again to the Minister of Health: will you commit to not cutting any existing dementia support programs in the next budget?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. I think that our past budget practices have shown that on this side of the House we stand with Albertans. We're working hard to protect and improve health and education. The calls for cuts continue to come from the members opposite. We're working to make sure that we can move forward in a way that's respectful of all Albertans, including those who are living with dementia in their families.

Mr. Clark: That's not a no, Mr. Speaker, and you're not hearing calls for cuts from me.

Mr. Speaker, dementia care in this province doesn't just need sustainable funding for existing programs; new investments are badly needed. Given that Ontario has a fully funded provincial dementia strategy and given that this strategy allocates $100 million over three years plus an additional $20 million for respite care, one more time to the Minister of Health: if we do eventually see a provincial dementia strategy – and I sincerely hope that we do – will it come with significant new funding to support Albertans living with dementia, their families, and caregivers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you again to the member for the question and for the opportunity to respond, Mr. Speaker. We continue to work with the dementia strategy itself, which will hopefully be released in the coming days. The budget process, the budget cycle begins, of course, in the spring. We look forward to bringing a budget to this House. We know that the Official Opposition has talked about cuts of 20 per cent. We know that wouldn't help Albertans. We're fighting hard to make sure that we improve opportunities for Albertans to get care in the communities that they choose to live in, and that, of course, includes dementia supports.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Agricultural Exports and NAFTA

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year 40 per cent of our agriculture products were exported to the United States, bringing in $4 billion to the Alberta economy. The North American free trade agreement, or NAFTA, has played a critical role in giving Alberta producers access to the American market. To the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry. Farmers in my riding are curious to know: what is the government doing to protect Alberta's agricultural interests under NAFTA?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We understand how important it is for Alberta producers to get their products to market. It makes life better for farm families, makes life better for small communities, small rural communities. It's important for diversifying our economy and creating jobs that support families. We're working closely with the government of Canada and with other provinces to defend Alberta's interests during the review of our trade agreements with the United States and Mexico.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: how is the government ensuring that the supply management of agricultural products is protected in any proposed changes to NAFTA?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Our government strongly supports supply management. Together, SM5 commodities accounted for 6.9 per cent, or $891.6 million, of the total value of agricultural production in 2015. The latest demands to scrap the supply management system in the United States are unacceptable to us and industries like dairy. They've made unsupportable suggestions like this on other issues before. We'll continue to advocate for a system that ensures stable access to safe, healthy food.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what is being done to diversify Alberta's agricultural exports to make us less dependent on exports to a single market such as the United States?

Mr. Carlier: Mr. Speaker, the world knows our reputation for good, safe, and quality products. Our government will work to open those opportunities for producers. That's why I'm pleased to participate in trade missions that showcase our amazing products, places like China, Japan, Korea, and Europe. We will continue to monitor developments in the U.S. very closely, and we will take a pragmatic, long view of any proposed changes to ensure that we're protecting Alberta's interests. The United States is Canada's biggest trading partner, and we value that relationship. We also know that we need to diversify our markets so that more people around the world have the opportunity to enjoy amazing agricultural products: beef, pork, grain, and oilseeds.

Justice Ministry Intervention in University of Lethbridge Labour Grievance

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, as disgusting as it may be to all of us, pockets of anti-Semitism still exist in Alberta. Anthony Hall, a disgraced, Holocaust-denying professor from the University of Lethbridge, may as well be the poster child for such hate-mongering beliefs. In October 2016 the U of L took a strong stand and suspended Dr. Hall based on his abhorrent conduct. Sadly, Dr. Hall's union pushed hard for his reinstatement. During court proceedings the government intervened in support of the position taken by Dr. Hall's union, an exceedingly rare action within Canada. Respectfully, to the Minister of Education: why did the government choose to intervene in this case?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity that the member has given me to address this issue. The Ministry of Justice did intervene in this case. It had absolutely nothing to do with supporting Dr. Hall's abhorrent views. It had everything to do with making sure that we followed the proper process, that was a result of the legislation that we brought forward to enhance postsecondary bargaining in this province. The Justice department was keen to make sure that all the parties involved in this dispute were following the proper procedures that were new to this case and to make sure that we didn't set a dangerous precedent.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, given that B'nai Brith, a respected Jewish human rights organization, reached out to the government during this dispute and warned them that intervening in this case could have the effect of placing a Holocaust denier back in the classroom and given that the government chose to brush off such concerns and intervene, arguing that they needed to do so in order to uphold the academic labour relations structure implemented via Bill 7, introduced this spring, again to the minister: why did the government ignore the concerns of B'nai Brith prior to intervening in this case?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we took B'nai Brith's concerns very seriously. We find as a government that

Dr. Hall's views on the world are abhorrent and really have no place, poisoning the young minds of the province of Alberta. It was important, though, that we follow the proper procedure in this case so that we don't set a precedent for dismissing people from our universities improperly. Dr. Hall is under investigation by the University of Lethbridge, and I look forward to seeing the outcomes of that investigation in the very near future.

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, given that the judge overseeing court proceedings specifically said that the passing and content of Bill 7 are the reasons he was ruling in favour of Dr. Hall's union and given that the passing of Bill 7 retroactively strengthened Dr. Hall's and his union's position, leading to his reinstatement, thankfully not to a teaching position, again to the minister: were you aware that a situation like this, where a professor is reinstated to an institution that has valid concerns regarding adherence to human rights legislation, could arise as a direct result of the passing of Bill 7?

Mr. Schmidt: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think it's important for all members to remember that the proper process has been in place. We certainly don't want people to be dismissed unfairly from any of our postsecondary institutions. We want to make sure that everybody has access to the proper procedures and the proper administration of the law, regardless of how abhorrent their views are. Dr. Hall is under investigation. The proper procedure is being followed in this case. I look forward to the outcome of following the proper procedure.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Rural Crime

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Less than three weeks ago we had over 100 rural residents show up, demanding actions on rural crime. We asked the government for an emergency debate to discuss solutions that could be used to solve the rural crime problem, but the government argued against the need for debate. One of those solutions would be to ban the Waze app and other apps that track police vehicles. To the Acting Minister of Justice: has the government given any consideration to banning such software applications to get them out of the hands of criminals?

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, rural crime has many faces. Certainly, trespassing and poaching are significant issues in rural areas of Alberta, and we remain very concerned about those in addition to all of the other rural crime issues that have been raised in the past. Our government has made significant advances in reducing rural crime, including investing in ALERT, a program that, of course, Jason Kenney cut when he was in the federal government. We continue to invest in more prosecutors. We're investing in more courthouses. The hon. member . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Hanson: Wow, Mr. Speaker. That's all I can say.

There are other things the government can do to combat rural crime, and since this government saw fit to build a new courthouse in Red Deer and demands for a new courthouse also exist in Strathcona county – meanwhile, courthouses in other parts of the province have been closed down – to the Acting Minister of Justice:

would your department be prepared to reopen the courthouse or resume court services in the provincial building in the town of Smoky Lake to help reduce the backlog?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we continue to examine ways that we can reduce rural crime, and it's important to remind all members that we have invested significantly in the justice resources that are available to the people of Alberta in spite of the calls from the members opposite to cut the budget by 20 per cent. It's interesting that the member opposite wants us to invest more resources while cutting the budget and cutting taxes for wealthy people. Those two things don't add up. We can't do both. We're investing in crime reduction.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Hanson: Mr. Speaker, I'm trying to offer some practical solutions here. Given that adjustments to the courts could get more criminals and troubled people off our streets, cracking down on crime, and given that in other jurisdictions specialized courts like mental health courts can be used to get people the help that they need and in other places special night courts are held to deal with traffic offences, minor infractions, misdemeanours, and to enter pleas, to the acting Justice minister: are you prepared to sit night courts in the major cities in order to help us clear off the backlog?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, as I've said in my previous answers, we continue to look at additional ways that we can reduce rural crime. We're very concerned about the backlog. We continue to press the federal government to appoint additional judges to the Court of Queen's Bench, but you know the member opposite has to recognize that the resources he's demanding cost money. We can't cut taxes for rich people, we can't cut a budget by 20 per cent and do the things that he's asking us to do. We need to invest in resources to cut crime. That is what our government is doing.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Stoney Trail 14th Street Interchange in Calgary

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Mr. Speaker, it wasn't that long ago when Stoney Trail defined the northern edge of the city of Calgary. However, over the last few years, as neighbourhoods in Panorama and Coventry were completed, growth in Calgary has expanded to the north side of Stoney Trail into the neighbourhoods of Evanston and Carrington. My question to the Minister of Transportation: when will the 14th Street overpass commence construction, linking the communities of Panorama and Evanston?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, our government is very committed to ensuring the safe and efficient transportation of individuals and goods on our provincial highways. We've had conversations with the city of Calgary going back to 2015 around this particular interchange. We have, in fact, retained a consultant with respect to this potential project, and we're waiting for the city of Calgary to put it on their construction program, which they have not yet done.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Residents of both Evanston and Panorama tell me that navigating around the Stoney Trail-14th Street interchange can be confusing and that they often have to drive through other communities, adding to neighbourhood traffic. My question, again to the Minister of Transportation: can residents expect to see this important project appear on the funded or unfunded capital projects list in the upcoming budget?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much for that question, Mr. Speaker. We know that this project is important to those living in and developing these communities. We need to listen to the concerns of these residents and the businesses as well as being aware of the ongoing development plans of the city of Calgary. We have signed an agreement in principle for the city of Calgary to fund this interchange, and the member needs to stay tuned.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this could be the last supplemental of the session and, again, given how important the Stoney Trail and 14th Street overpass is to the connectivity of the neighbours, neighbourhoods, and commerce and given that this is the best time to move forward with infrastructure investments, when can we expect to see improvement on this issue for the betterment of north-central Calgary?

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much for that question. Mr. Speaker, I can tell the hon. member and the House that we're continuing to have conversations with the city of Calgary, and we will have more information to share on the tendering of this project and the eventual start date. It's another example of this government working with the people of Calgary to improve the lives of the people of that city.

Orders of the Day

Statement by the Speaker

Remarks at the End of the Fall Sitting

The Speaker: The time is already consumed, hon. members. [interjections] I'm surprised by the reaction. I heard rumours around this place – and of course there are very few rumours in this place – that many of you wanted to go home. I don't know if that's true.

In that light, hon. members, if you would allow me, as we leave, I'd just like to make a few remarks to all of you. I would say that I think that I speak for all of you that the privilege to be in here is beyond the expectation that any of us had prior to this experience. It's my hope that each of us will remind ourselves of that fact frequently. Whenever we speak to and with each other, let us remember that the goal is to reach an agreement, not whether one side lost or won.

I learn at least one thing every day that I am here. There is, however, so much more that I need to learn.

On behalf of the LAO staff, the deputy speakers, myself, I hope that each of you have a peaceful time with your loved ones. It has been my honour and privilege to serve you.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 33 Electoral Divisions Act

[Mr. Sucha in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to stand and move third reading of Bill 33.

Bill 33 enacts the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission as well as incorporating limited name changes approved in this Chamber on November 28. As I've said in the past, I think it's safe to say that electoral boundary redistributions rarely satisfy everyone. It's important, Mr. Speaker, to remember that this was an independent panel that studied the issue at some length. We believe that the alternative of politicians deciding their own boundaries is not appropriate, so it's for that reason that I urge members of the House to support this bill at third reading.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's unfortunate that we are here today with this bill. I will tell you that it's very disappointing for myself to see the constituency of Bonnyville-Cold Lake be changed the way it is. A lot of my rural colleagues across the province – I would say that even some of the government colleagues – are not overly enthused with this.

Now, I would like to note a few things from my colleague from Battle River-Wainwright, some of the concerns that he brought forward for the House. I'd like to put that on the record, that he's put a lot of effort into some of this. The first thing that he mentioned here is that according to the interim report it's actually written that "Alberta is no longer rural." I would agree that after the commission is done, we're no longer rural. What happened was that they took that statement, and after realizing that this was probably a poor statement to put into an interim report and finalize into a final report, they changed the statement to, "Alberta is no longer entirely or primarily rural in nature." You've got to recognize here that I believe the commission is completely letting rural down. I am sad to see that some of our colleagues from across the aisle can't see the fact that this is causing long-standing damage to Alberta and to the representation to rural Alberta.

But I want to take this a step further, and I want to explain. I talked about section 14, I believe, in a referral motion to committee, but the specific things that my colleague from Battle River-Wainwright was very, very focused on were the legal aspects. Some of this can be a little dry, but I need to get it onto the record. Now, he goes on, saying that the legal part is something that needs to be considered. Is what we're doing legal? That is the question. It's clear to myself that the commission was given a mandate and they broke that mandate. It's a shame, but here we are today with this broken piece of legislation.

Now, what we need to say is: is rural Alberta getting effective representation? It's worth bearing in mind this explanation of the goal of redistribution as contained on an Elections Canada website. We've got a quote here. "The right to vote under section 3 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms guaranteed the right to effective representation. The goal of redistribution is a constitutional right to 'effective representation.'" So this goes beyond Alberta's laws. This is an actual constitutional right. This is what, I believe, our boundaries commission has deliberately broken, our right as rural representatives.

What we've got here is an example for assistance, this summary by the 2009-2010 commission on what effective representation is.

In summary, the principles of effective representation seem to the Commission to be as follows:

- (1) Relative parity of voting power.

- (2) Tradition in Canada is “effective representation,” not absolute parity as in the [United States].
- (3) The process of achieving effective representation may involve diluting the political force of some votes but not unduly and not without reason.
- (4) The balancing of these interests is a delicate one, which involves an examination in depth of the social history, geography and demography of the communities in every sense of the word.

Those are the four.

Now, I'd like to point out that what's key here in my view are comments 2 and 4. The 2009-2010 commission themselves gave clear indication that the exercise is not one purely of mathematics. This is important that this is a starting point, if you will, to ensure that we have numbers in constituencies. But what happens is that we need to be making sure that our MLAs are able to get the voice of our constituents out effectively, effective representation. That's effective representation, which I believe our commission has missed.

Moving on to voter parity now. In response to the commission's comment regarding the absolute voter parity reference I would offer this observation made by Justice McLachlin in the Electoral Boundaries Saskatchewan 1991, 2 SCR 158 decision.

First, absolute parity is impossible. It is impossible to draw boundary lines which guarantee exactly the same number of voters in each district. Voters die, voters move. Even with the aid of frequent censuses, voter parity is impossible.

So while absolute voter parity has a very intuitive appeal, one person to one vote is just not possible. It's just not possible.

Incidentally, moreover, in the redistribution rules is the concept of voter parity even mentioned? Further, population and voter parity numbers are two entirely different measures. Comments were made by the commission that with the advent of motor vehicles distance capacity would increase significantly. Unhappily, they failed to notice that the length of workdays has not increased. What we need to say is that by adding a lot more to an MLA, we are expecting a lot more from within that constituency, especially when you have something called windshield time, not to mention time spent actually carrying out the real work. It certainly gives very clear credibility to a quote by Robert Louis Stevenson that it is better to travel happily than to arrive.

Furthermore, regarding providing better allowances, more staff, satellite offices, and video conferencing, none of which the commission was mandated to actually move forward, what we have seen here is that they have completely failed. What they did was say: “Well, you know what? To make up for that failure, let's allow the government just to give those MLAs who are impacted more money.” That seems strange. This is literally robbing Peter to pay Paul, proposals that are at best unfair and at worst possibly a breach in the redistribution rules.

Regarding the commission I have made a case that a failure to properly apply section 14 is enough rationale that we are robbing some rural ridings of their current status. In turn, this is diluting, perhaps in some cases removing, effective representation, which is the goal of the redistribution rules that were in place. Put candidly, I believe that the commission is opening the door to a reverse Saskatchewan 1991 legal challenge.

As I have mentioned in my previous speeches, Bonnyville-Cold Lake is the prime example of a commission that went out of control. They chose to create facts that were refuted in the interim process. I don't understand how they could say that my constituency was going to decline versus Alberta's average even though I brought forward proof that the Alberta government themselves believed that my constituency is going to grow.

To put perspective to this, I am asking each and every member here to look at what it is that you're trying to do. I will tell you that rural Alberta needs your voice now. We need to vote this terrible piece of legislation down. We need to throw this review out, and we need to give that commission a better mandate.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm not going to go into too much detail because I think we've already covered most of the issues, but I'd just like to go on the record, you know, as saying: what a way to wind up the 2017 fall session, with a good hard slap to the face of rural Alberta.

You know, I don't believe that northern Alberta got a fair shake in this deal. I don't think that we were given the respect that we deserve as being the economic driver of the province. I think that all constituencies in this province benefit from what comes out of the northeast and northwest parts of our province, and I think that it should have been recognized as such.

The message all over the province, at least in the sessions that I attended, was very, very clear. Everybody sent the same message, to leave the boundaries the way they are. There aren't any constituencies that couldn't have been tweaked a little bit here or there. You know, it's very unfair that a lot of our rural ridings ended up plus 10 to plus 15 over the provincial average while some areas of Calgary and Edmonton are at par or negative, with really no potential to grow. Why wasn't that taken into consideration? We could have maxed out some of those, spread those lines a little bit. I mean, they're never going to increase in population by 10,000 people. It's impossible.

The legislation mandates a review of the boundaries on a regular basis I believe it's every eight years or every second election, whichever comes first but it does not mandate a wholesale change. It just mandates a review. So I think that the boundaries commission went way above and beyond what was requested or expected of them, and we're going to suffer the consequences in rural Alberta.

Now, I know that there are members across the aisle, both rural and urban, that don't like what's in this boundaries commission report, and I would urge those members to vote against this bill. I know that their constituents don't want it. And I would urge those members that are sitting on the fence to support your rural MLA that's going to have to go out and face his constituents over the next year and especially in the election in 2019 that will be coming up.

I'm just going to end with: again, support and stand up for yourself and your constituents; stand up for your MLAs that are going to suffer the consequences of this bill. It doesn't need to be done. I think we should all vote to reject it in third reading.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow. Under 29(2)(a), sir?

Mr. Clark: No.

The Acting Speaker: Seeing and hearing none, the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak very briefly in third reading to Bill 33. I've heard the comments from our legislative colleagues representing rural constituencies, and I have a tremendous amount of empathy for the challenges they face as rural MLAs. It is different than the challenges faced by urban MLAs.

I think that one of the things that we should consider and had I had the opportunity to be on the Members' Services Committee, perhaps Members' Services could have tackled this particular issue is looking at providing more financial resources to rural constituencies to allow those larger rural constituencies the opportunity to have more than one constituency office fully staffed on a full-time basis, or perhaps even more than two for some of the larger constituency areas, so that the residents of those large rural constituencies have adequate access to their representatives.

I acknowledge that it will not always be possible for MLAs in large rural constituencies to meet in person with every constituent that wants to. It is different, very different, to have to travel many hundreds of kilometres over many, many hours to get from one end of your constituency to the other. That is a different challenge than faced by urban MLAs, and I want my rural colleagues to know that I understand how difficult that is.

I think that in a time where we have access to information technology, to ways of connecting with your MLA that go beyond face to face it's not a replacement; it is somewhat helpful. It can never replace that face to face. I know constituents do want to come in and meet in person with their MLA. If they can't meet in person directly with the MLA, if there's an opportunity for us to find ways of providing more resources to those rural MLAs so that they can have more constituency offices staffed for more hours, perhaps that's a way of bridging some of this.

It will never be perfect. This will never be perfect. We'll never be able to have as many MLAs in as many places as, I'm sure, all of us might like. That said, I would never advocate for more politicians in Alberta. I don't think, as much as I would like to get re-elected, that that would be a strong platform to run on. I think that while the role that we play is an important one, we're never going to find a perfect world.

The process was a very open process. There were two rounds of the panel travelling the province, allowing Albertans the opportunity to provide their input rural and urban, north, central, south, east, and west provide that input in person, provide that input online, comment on a draft report, provide further comment. There was an opportunity for members to tweak some of the names of constituencies to make them more appropriate.

We're never going to get to a place where everyone is happy. I acknowledge the challenges this creates for rural MLAs, and I acknowledge and hear the concerns of rural Albertans. But I do in the end stand in favour of Bill 33 at third reading. The process was appropriate, and I think we need to move forward.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing and hearing none, the chair will recognize the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, we know that many government members are not happy with this, too. We know that a lot of the ones from the rural constituencies are not happy. We know that even urban MLAs are not happy. In good conscience, I would encourage those members to vote with their conscience on this and not be whipped into a vote or whatever they're doing there to make them vote along the lines of the government's choice, which is to pass this bill.

Now, when we look at this report, I think everybody seems to agree that there were a lot of mistakes in this. A lot of people agree on that. When I look at it, you know, the constituency that I represent now was actually misspelled, which might not seem like a big thing. I mean, I'm sure that if somebody from southern Alberta misspelled the name of my constituency, that's not a big deal, but when the people in charge of creating a report like this can't get the name right, then I think that shows a little bit of how much care and concern they actually put into this.

During debate on this there was one thing that kind of struck me, and that was, of course, when the Member for Lethbridge-East got up and said that voting against this bill is gerrymandering. Now, that's an absolutely bizarre comment. Voting against this bill means that we'll have the status quo, what we have now. So, Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure how voting against something to remain status quo could be gerrymandering.

Now, what was also interesting is that the Member for Lethbridge-East made a presentation to the boundaries commission with a member of her NDP constituency executive. Mr. Speaker, as far as gerrymandering and trying to influence the commission to do something for political purposes goes, I would say that if an MLA shows up with a NDP constituency executive at a commission to do a presentation I'll just leave it at that.

What was also interesting is that the constituency of Lethbridge-East didn't change. It stayed the same through the interim report to the final report, as it is right now. Obviously, then, if it's gerrymandering to vote against this to remain status quo, then with the Member for Lethbridge-East voting to have the status quo, for her it must also be gerrymandering, I guess, following that same logic.

Mr. Speaker, you know, I tried to make one amendment to change the name of the constituency, to take it from three words to two words, to more accurately describe the constituency. Even that was voted down by the government. I mean, a simple thing like that, that changed nothing other than to more accurately reflect the constituency, was turned down by this government. Obviously, there is nothing we can do on this side of the House to change the government's mind on this. They're going to make all their members vote for this so that we have to take this report that, of course, they admit is not good.

Mr. Speaker, I'm going to leave it at that. Like I say, there have been some very odd things said in this House in regard to this. I think that we should be able to vote our conscience on this. We should be voting against this and turning this down. Under legislation the report had to be made. The report is flawed. Accepting something that's flawed I don't believe does any justice to what our job is here.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing and hearing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to Bill 33 in third reading. First, earlier today I tabled copies of a letter from Mr. Glenn Koester, the reeve of Wheatland county. Now, currently, as the final boundary report sits, it puts a little chunk of Wheatland county into the new constituency of Airdrie-East. I'll read the letter and then I'll speak to it.

While we thank The Electoral Boundaries Commission for asking in July for our input regarding the proposed changes to electoral boundaries, we are concerned and disappointed that The Commission moved forward with drastically different boundaries than what were first proposed.

In our preliminary feedback, we indicated that we were satisfied with the new boundaries as suggested – as that proposal ensured that all of Wheatland County would remain in one electoral division. In the Final Report of the 2016/17 Electoral Boundaries Commission however, Wheatland County is divided amongst four different electoral divisions. We are concerned that the needs of Wheatland County residents will not be sufficiently represented under this structure. The County areas included in each of the four electoral divisions will be insignificant in comparison to the whole of each division and, as such, they will have very little voice.

In conclusion, Wheatland County Council is greatly concerned that there was no opportunity to provide feedback on this proposed final version. We maintain that being inclusive is necessary at this stage of the process as well, and request that input be sought once again regarding these updated changes to electoral boundaries prior to adoption.

Mr. Speaker, as is very clearly articulated in this letter from Wheatland county, just Wheatland county, many of my hon. colleagues have expressed concerns as well as colleagues from the government side have expressed concerns, many different concerns, this one certainly being that a county, the county of Wheatland in particular, here in this case now resides in four different ridings.

The riding, the current riding of Airdrie, does in fact contain Airdrie city, a major population, and of course a good chunk of Rocky View county, which I know I share with a few other MLAs here in this Chamber. I do my best to make sure I represent the rural constituents in Airdrie and the Madden area, Nier, and Dogpound as well as the needs of the Airdrie citizens as a whole, whose population currently sits at about 65,000 people. Now, there's no doubt that given the population numbers in Airdrie the constituency would have to be split up in some way, shape, or form. I understand that. It's the fastest growing city in Canada, Mr. Speaker. Sorry; it was about a year ago, but I'm not quite sure where we sit right now, to be honest.

To be fair, the rural constituents in the Airdrie riding for many years have actually always felt a little bit on the outside. It doesn't matter who the MLA is or what efforts are taken; it's very common to think that as the largest part of the population of the constituency is within Airdrie. Now, any constituent that contacts my office certainly gets all of the respect and attention that they need for their concerns, and I will absolutely bring it forward. I have a great relationship with the reeve of Rocky View. I'm very, very grateful for that, and I will continue to nurture that relationship moving forward as Rocky View county also now sits in the new constituency of Airdrie-East. That would make it part of Airdrie, the city of Airdrie, part of Rocky View county, and a little bit of Wheatland county.

Now, Wheatland county in particular is the one that brings up the most significant amount of concern, and I absolutely share this concern. To be honest, Mr. Speaker, I've never been to Wheatland county. I will, and I'm sure it's a wonderful, wonderful place. I will seek a nomination in the Airdrie-East riding, and I will get to know the people and the councillors in the county of Wheatland and the area. I've heard it's beautiful. I've heard it's wonderful. Something about duck hunting. I don't know. Could be interesting.

There are some significant concerns on proper representation when a county that's split amongst four different electoral districts in very small chunks, to be honest, according to this letter that the reeve from Wheatland county sent – Mr. Speaker, they're going to feel the same way that many rural constituents do when they are put into a municipality with such a larger population. I mean, I don't think Wheatland county has a parade. I don't know.

Just speaking from experience in the riding that I currently represent, there's a pancake breakfast every year once a year in the area of Bottrel. If you've never been to Bottrel, it is a beautiful, wonderful area. There's a campground there. There's a neat creek that goes through, and some really awesome people come out to this pancake breakfast every year. It's a great opportunity for me to be able to connect with a lot of the rural residents in the area; otherwise, there are not a lot of spaces or events or things where we all gather together in one place. I also, in the area of Bottrel, get to meet a lot of my colleagues' constituents from around the constituency of Airdrie as well and lots of farmers that are busy throughout the year, and you know this is one of the big main gathering events for the area of Bottrel.

Of course, Madden has a golf course and a community hall out there and an RV park. There is a golf course in that area as well. I think I just mentioned that. There are some things that happen there, but there are not a lot of times where the people of Madden and the people of Bottrel and the people of Airdrie interact with each other or do life together or have similar interests or concerns, that type of thing.

It was interesting: during Bill 6 I got a lot of e-mails from the rural constituents in the area, and a lot of people in the city didn't quite understand Bill 6 if they had not been those people that actually grew up in rural Alberta or in rural Canada, wherever they might be, having that understanding or that background of the things and the effects that Bill 6 has on that way of life. It was really interesting that that, in itself, shows quite a divide just on one piece of legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I know that I always will continue to balance the needs and the wants and the concerns of my constituents. I always have. I always will, and I have no doubt that everyone in this Assembly absolutely will, but the boundaries in this report, quite honestly, in many ways don't make sense, as expressed by many of my colleagues here in this Assembly both in the opposition and the government side. There are a lot of dangers in these ridings, I think, in proper representation.

Mr. Speaker, the mandate of the Electoral Boundaries Commission was to update the electoral districts while respecting the following considerations:

- (a) the requirement for effective representation as guaranteed by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms,
- (b) sparsity and density of population.

That certainly speaks to the density of population in the city of Airdrie and the sparsity of population in Wheatland county and Rocky View county. They don't do life together. I can bet many people in Airdrie have not been to Wheatland county and vice versa. Maybe we'll have to create a pancake breakfast should this report actually go forward just to bring all of these constituents together.

I think there could be the potential for many opportunities where the constituency is imbalanced on major issues, and that would not present a fair and equal opportunity for the constituents in the riding as a whole. I think Wheatland county would have the concern that perhaps they would be less on the totem pole, which is a valid concern to have. I'm not saying that that's what would happen, but their fears about not being properly represented are very clearly spelled out in this letter, and I can empathize with these.

I think that we don't actually have to pass this. We had to study the electoral districts and make recommendations, but there is actually no provision that says that we have to pass this or actually make those changes. We don't have to do that, so, Mr. Speaker, I would urge this Assembly to think long and hard about what we're doing here today when it comes to changing these districts because we don't want to make anyone feel like they are not part of what we do here in this Assembly.

When they go to vote in, say, a constituency like mine, Mr. Speaker, sometimes in the rural areas – and this is certainly true for my riding, for many years – the rural constituents aren't actually quite sure which riding they're in. I have a few friends, actually, that showed up to vote for me in a riding and found out that my name wasn't there on the ballot. They were in fact, you know, right on that line and voted for my hon. colleague in Chestermere-Rocky View, so it worked out really well.

Mr. Speaker, I would just urge this Assembly – I won't take more time – to not vote this thing forward. Sit back, take a breath, and figure this out. I know that we've got some MLAs pitted against other MLAs when it comes to nomination on the government side and the opposition side. There are lots of problems with this, so listen to your conscience on this as you've listened to your constituents through your consultation on the electoral boundaries. The second draft was not at all like the first draft, and we have no way to provide input on this except by not moving the new electoral divisions forward.

With that, I will be voting against this, absolutely, and I urge all members in this Assembly to vote with your conscience, vote against this piece of legislation, and do the right thing for your constituents.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing and hearing none, anyone wishing to speak to Bill 33? The hon. Member for Calgary-Northern Hills.

Mr. Kleinstuber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad I had a chance today to speak to Bill 33, Electoral Divisions Act. I had quite a bit to say here, but I'll keep my remarks brief. In May 2017 the Proposed Electoral Division Areas, Boundaries, and Names for Alberta interim report was released. At that time the report recommended that the boundaries for Calgary-Northern Hills be divided into three ridings: Calgary-North, Calgary-Bedlington, and Calgary-North East. There were a few concerns that I had with the report, and as a result, I joined many members of the community in Calgary-Northern Hills at the hearing in Calgary that was scheduled on the evening of July 20, 2017.

At that hearing I proposed three main suggestions. When referring to the link between the new proposed riding of Calgary-North East and the neighbourhoods of Coventry Hills, Harvest Hills, partnering with the communities in the northeast, I had the following concerns: one, recreation. Vivo for Healthier Generations is a community hub for Calgary-Northern Hills, and it would be part of the proposed Calgary-North East riding. It has very little connection with Redstone and Skyview Ranch, and I think there is too much distance between Coventry Hills, Country Hills Village, Harvest Hills, and the other communities across Deerfoot and past the airport in the north commercial district, the Métis Trail to the northeast communities of the proposed riding. Vivo should be closely connected to the communities it serves. Redstone, Skyview Ranch communities are more oriented to go with the Genesis Centre in the Saddle Ridge, Martindale, and Taradale neighbourhoods rather than Vivo and the Coventry Hills neighbourhoods.

Community associations were also an issue. The Northern Hills Community Association serves Panorama Hills, Coventry Hills, Country Hills Village, Country Hills, and Harvest Hills, and it has no connection directly with the communities east of Deerfoot. The proposed boundary changes would split these community associations and their political advocacy into three electoral districts.

Finally, the third issue was school infrastructure. The Notre Dame high school, CCSD; and the future north Calgary high school, which would be the CBE, are both provincially funded school systems, and their source communities are and will be Panorama Hills, Coventry Hills, Country Hills Village, Harvest Hills, and Country Hills. The students in the Redstone and Skyview Ranch communities are more oriented to go with the new Nelson Mandela high school in Taradale.

Mr. Speaker, these were some of the concerns that I raised last summer, and I highlighted that these communities have little in common. But imagine the surprise when the final report was released, in October 2017, to see that the boundaries had not shifted, that they were nearly exactly the same as in the interim report.

Mr. Speaker, I know that myself and many members of the community put a lot of time and consideration into this report. One member actually drafted and submitted an alternative boundary map for consideration, and I would like to thank her for that thoughtful submission. In addition, another member of the community, the first vice-president and advocacy director of the NHCA, recently wrote a three-page letter voicing his concerns about the final report.

Mr. Speaker, despite all these negative impacts that I see from splitting Calgary-Northern Hills into three ridings, I had to reflect back to my initial observations when I started researching the 2016-17 Electoral Boundaries Commission. From the beginning I recognized that the city of Calgary had some wild differences in population between the ridings. According to the Calgary civic census count estimates for 2016 the population of Calgary-South East stands at 79,000 while the population of Calgary-Fish Creek, for example, is at about 40,000. One riding is nearly double the population of another riding.

The target identified in the interim report was 46,118, as noted on page 24. Again, the first thing I recognized in this report was that the populations of the city of Calgary had to be equalized to create more fair representation and access to MLAs. Calgary-Northern Hills' 2016 estimate was 61,377, which means that the population of Calgary-Northern Hills is over by 15,000 people. It was clear that the boundaries had to change. I and other members of the community made our case and presented our vision of how these boundaries should have looked. At this point I want to express my disappointment in the final conclusion. I felt that the commission could have reflected some of the requests that we had presented a little bit more clearly. However, I will be supporting Bill 33 at third reading because I think it's important that the populations in Calgary are balanced evenly between the electoral divisions.

I think it's also important to consider that the Electoral Boundaries Commission panel worked independently of politics and interference from the parties in this Legislature. In the end, if we cannot support the work of an independent panel and we start to delve into the electoral boundaries in the political sphere, it will open debate about the self-interest of individual MLAs, who should not decide these things.

Mr. Speaker, I'll continue to work hard for the constituents of Calgary-Northern Hills within the current boundaries. I want to again thank the president and volunteers of the Northern Hills Community Association, some of whom took some late-night phone calls from me. I'd also like to thank many of the other community volunteers who took the time out of their schedules and their lives to submit their suggestions and try to design the electoral divisions that reflect our community.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any questions under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm really confused here. The hon. member says that he doesn't agree with the report, and then on the other hand he says that he's going to support it.

Just to put it in context, actually, I ran in that riding of Calgary-Northern Hills twice. I probably door-knocked at every house, in those six years that I campaigned in that riding, five or six times, so I have a history in that riding. The persons that he is referencing actually called me, too, and they were very disappointed.

When it comes to my case, it doesn't matter to me. I can run anywhere in that part of the city although my riding is also split into three. Calgary-Foothills will become Calgary-Foothills, Calgary-Edgemont, and Calgary-Bedlington.

That apart, my initial dilemma was, you know, that if I go and represent myself and give my submissions, then I thought that maybe I'll be blamed because I'm looking after myself, my self-interest.

I thought that we would have an opportunity here to fix those shortcomings. The Government House Leader asked us to support this, but he's the person who actually rejected even simple fixes like the name changes. There was an opportunity to fix some of those problems and attach the historic names in our area. I'm sure that the members from Calgary-Hawkwood, Calgary-Northern Hills, and Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill, all my neighbouring ridings, all agree with me. There is some sentiment attached there, so we asked for those name changes, but they were all rejected.

If I knew that this was how this government was going to handle this, unilaterally rejecting, showing an authoritative, dictatorial approach, I probably would have had better luck arguing my case, actually, with the boundary commission. So I should have done that. I deeply regret.

Mr. Hanson: Support your rural MLAs.

Mr. Panda: Yeah.

Now, my hon. colleague from Northern Hills was saying that he represented the problem correctly, but in the end he's caving in. That's not democracy. I'm not going to support this bill, and I ask my hon. colleagues on the other side to actually vote as per the wishes of their constituents and to also support some of these rural MLAs. They're going to face real hardship with these changes. It's an obligation on their part to show some sympathy and empathy and solidarity with their rural colleagues, too.

That's why I urge all members of this House, both sides, to unanimously reject this report. I'm not going to support this, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Northern Hills.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Yeah. I think that was under 29(2)(a)?

The Acting Speaker: Correct.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Yeah. I just want to comment as well. No, I don't think that we caved in. I don't think I caved in at all. I went and I presented on the mid-term report. I went with members of the community, and we presented our case, actually, to the boundary commission, as we should.

I just have a question as well for the member. I didn't see him at the boundary commission that night. I'm just wondering if he also had the opportunity to present his case then, if he did or if he didn't.

The issue here is that I think I made it clear that I and many members from the community did our very best. We made submissions, as we should, as we were asked to, when we saw the interim report and then took it to the final report.

The bigger issue, overall, was, in my opinion, with the populations in general for all the ridings in Calgary. I thought that, ultimately, as I mentioned in my statement here, the most important part was to balance that differential out evenly between the cities.

I appreciate as well some of the concerns that the member raised about the rural areas of the province. I, too, have a lot of sympathy for some of the changes there as well. Ultimately, as someone who represents a riding in the city, I thought it was important to represent my riding and respect as well.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The chair will recognize the hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will be brief. I have to respond to some of the assertions made by the Member for Calgary-Northern Hills, recognizing that the final report may not have had many changes from the interim report for his riding, but in my opinion the final report had very significant changes throughout many parts of Alberta. In that respect, I find it very concerning. With the final report, I would have expected to have very minimal changes from the interim report.

Therefore, I cannot support this bill. I did not support the motion to accept the report, and I do believe that we are moving down a path that is not leading towards effective representation of Albertans but that the commission decided to move more on a path of equitableness. In my opinion and in the opinion of many decisions that have been made in the past, effective representation is the goal, and effective representation is in the best interests of all of its citizens within a democracy.

You know, we saw also in some of the submissions how we have Edmonton and Calgary being outside of the population base by 5 to 6 per cent and the rest of Alberta being below by 5 or 6 per cent and that a few minor adjustments within the urban ridings could have made the difference with regard to the concerns where certain ridings had significant population increases without disrupting the entire province.

I will speak against this bill. I do encourage all members in this House to recognize the damage that we are doing to the democratic principles of effective representation in Alberta.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing and hearing none, I recognize the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed an honour to speak on Bill 33 regarding the electoral divisions as they've been put forward by the Electoral Boundaries Commission.

I guess I would say that the one thing I knew for sure about the riding that I'm privileged to represent is that if it was going to change, it wasn't going to go east. It was going to either go north or south or west, but it was not going to go east. That was the only thing we knew for certain. It was interesting, in the interim report, where there was a significant expansion of the constituency in a westerly direction, where the current boundary is approximately where highway 36 intersects with highway 16, that that boundary was proposed to be extended all the way to Elk Island park, which would have been a considerable extension along highway 16. At the same time, there would have been what I call a compression of the riding into a very long, thin ribbon along highway 16 and also highway 14.

I will give the boundaries commission, certainly, credit. There were a number of constituents in Vermilion-Lloydminster who lived north of township road 532 that were proposed to be moved into the Fort Saskatchewan-St. Paul riding, which was also being proposed. They expressed their concerns very, very clearly. They organized a letter-writing campaign, and about one quarter of the total number of written submissions to the Electoral Boundaries Commission came from the communities of Dewberry, Clandonald, Tulliby Lake, and Lea Park. I'm not sure that there are even 150 people that live in Dewberry, Clandonald, Tulliby Lake, and Lea Park, but certainly they got very organized. To the incredible credit of the boundaries commission, they looked at that and said: no, it makes sense to leave the boundary where it is, contiguous with the county boundary of the county of Vermilion River.

What was somewhat surprising in the transition from the interim report to the final report was that the electoral division was completely turned at a 90-degree angle, so instead of going east-west, it was flipped and now goes more or less north-south with the combination of the county of Vermilion River and the municipal district of Wainwright.

You know, overall, I'm actually very much in favour of using county boundaries as a way to set boundaries, especially in rural areas. They make sense. County boundaries are well established, they don't change, and the county boundaries are understood by everybody in the rural areas. If you say, "This constituency consists of this county, this county, and this MD," everybody knows exactly what you're talking about. That was one of the recommendations I made after the interim report was released.

I've listened to the debate, and I certainly listened very carefully to the comments by the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills and also his discussion of the minority report that was written by Commissioner Day. I would say that I completely concur with Commissioner Day's comments, especially vis-à-vis her comments with regard to rural representation. Commissioner Day, I think, absolutely nailed it when she discussed the need for rural representation to be reflective and also to consider the challenges of representing a large riding.

You know, I don't represent a geographically huge riding. I'm fortunate in that way, but I will tell you that despite that fact, on this past weekend, attending events in and around the Vermilion-Lloydminster constituency, I didn't leave the constituency, but from the time that I left Edmonton on Thursday night to the time I returned to Edmonton Sunday night, I'd driven over 1,300 kilometres attending events in my constituency. With all due respect to the Member for Calgary-Elbow, the reason why some of the electronic communication tools – yes; they're great. But the reason you do that is a lesson I learned from my former colleague MLA the long-time Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, whose lesson to us as young legislators was: being there is 50 per cent of it. Fifty per cent of it is being there.

He was right. When you're there, you don't have to speak. Most people would actually prefer that you don't speak. When you're there and you're interacting with the constituents, people absolutely appreciate that. I'm sure everybody in this Legislature would concur with that. People want to see the whites of your eyes because when you're there, you're telling them you care. You're telling them that you care about their community. You're telling them that you care about their cause or, you know, whatever it is that they're promoting when you're there at a graduation or at a 50th anniversary, as I was this past Saturday, or at a sporting event or at a rodeo or at a parade. When you're there, you're saying that you support them.

As the rural ridings become larger and larger and larger, that's going to become more and more difficult, and there's no amount of teleconferencing or additional offices that is going to mitigate the fact that you cannot be in two places at once. I think the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills said that. So did the Member for Livingstone-Macleod, you know, that really the only way that having extra offices was going to help was if you could be cloned. I have two offices now. I have an office in Vermilion. I have an office in Lloydminster. They're staffed by outstanding, outstanding assistants. I have wonderful staff. Could you open another office, say, in Wainwright, after the next boundaries? Yes. You could. In fact, I would definitely recommend that that be done, but basically what that means is that now not only do you have to staff the offices, but your presence is expected in those offices. If you have offices but you never show up at them, people start asking: "Well, why do you have this office? I want to be able to make an appointment to see you, and I want to be able to see you in the office that is closest to me. I don't want to have to drive an hour and a half one way to get to see my MLA."

So, Mr. Speaker, that's my concern. I think that Commissioner Day's comments were very, very well taken. I think Commissioner Day carefully considered the path this is going down and that if indeed we are to stay at 87 members – you know, I would even question whether that is this magic number of 87, but that was the parameter that was given, and that's fine – and if we're going to continue to do what this boundary commission did, and that was to put a heavy emphasis on voter parity and an equal number of voters per constituency, then rural Alberta's voice will become quieter and quieter and quieter. Pretty soon you'll have a scenario where the only rural representation will be in combination with an urban centre.

I have a riding that's a little bit like that. I mean, the city of Lloydminster on the Alberta side has got over 20,000 people, and that's nearly half of the total population of our constituency. Then Vermilion's got, you know, close to 4,500 people. But there are ridings like Drumheller-Stettler, for example, like Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, like Peace River, like the two Fort McMurray ridings. These are sprawling, huge tracts of land. You know, to have them represented by a single person, whether there are one, two, or three offices, is a daunting task. I worry sometimes about the fatigue of members. I worry about travel safety. I worry about the number of hours we spend driving. I know our families worry about that, too.

Like I say, I think that a balance has to be struck. I acknowledge that the Electoral Boundaries Commission has got a tremendously difficult job. The Government House Leader is right. No matter what gets proposed, somebody is going to be unhappy. He is right about that. But I think the overriding message in this Electoral Boundaries Commission report was the shift from rural to urban, those three seats. It doesn't sound like a lot, but it is, especially the precedent it sets that we are going to stick with absolute voter parity. Numerical voter parity does not equate to effective representation, and it's effective representation that we're trying to aim for.

I will be opposed to this bill. I will vote against it but not because I don't appreciate the efforts of the boundaries commission. I do. I recognize that they had a very difficult job. But I have to state unequivocally that it's so important that we have rural representation be able to bring forward the concerns and to have the rural representatives, the MLAs who represent these challenging ridings, be able to do their job, not just for them to have access to their constituents but for their constituents to have access to them. You know, while electronic means of communication are helpful – and they should be used; they're tools – ultimately it's your presence that people want. If the ridings become so very large that that becomes very difficult, it's going to become increasingly challenging, and I don't think that's good for democracy in Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing and hearing none, the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to rise very briefly today to speak against this bill, really around some concerns I have as an urban MLA. My constituency is rather concentrated. My ability to attend community associations and meetings throughout the constituency is very positive. My ability to attend events within the constituency is relatively easy in terms of access. I have an opportunity to see my constituents on a regular basis, and I make that opportunity to do so. So for me, although I'll be sad to lose the community of Canyon Meadows and will take over some territory from the hon. Speaker in terms of Midnapore and Sundance, those areas are not a far distance away from me. They are probably relatively similar in terms of the makeup of the community, in terms of the mix of rental accommodations and homeowners and multifamily and single-family and seniors' facilities and whatnot. Of course, then I'll have both sides of Fish Creek, so we won't have that boundary in the middle of us to converse over.

Ms Hoffman: Should you be elected.

Mr. Gotfried: Should I be elected. Should I be nominated, even.

The concern I have. You know, I always even talk to my children and I talk to people about the fact that the wealth of this province is not created – certainly, it's managed; the investment is there – in the glass towers of downtown Calgary. It's actually in the field, whether that field be the farmer's field or the forests that we enjoy or the oil and gas industries' operations, whether that be in the oil sands or whether that be drilling activity or natural gas drilling in the province. That is where our wealth is created.

The representation we talk about in this province is not always about raw population numbers; hence, obviously, when we get into the rural areas, where we have a lack of population density. But we do have rich resources in those areas. With appreciation for the hard work done by the Electoral Boundaries Commission, which we all appreciate, I think it's a bit of a slippery slope, and I'm concerned about that going forward. If we get continued urbanization of this province, what will happen is that eventually we will have fewer and fewer rural constituencies. We will have less and less representation of the land from which we derive our wealth in this province.

I'm concerned also with the huge distances and the chances and opportunities for representation, for attendance at community events, for those random opportunities. In my constituency I can see constituents at the grocery store and at the coffee shop and various other things, but that's because I am frequenting those areas. I'm often in those and have a chance to see them. When you might have 500 or 1,000 kilometres, or it could be longer distances, I think, in some of the constituencies, your chances to have those less frequent and more random opportunities to see your constituents, which I think we all embrace and enjoy, will become less. That concerns me deeply.

I just wanted to say as an urban MLA that when we are looking at this, I think that we should have the opportunity, possibly, for greater latitude within the urban environments, where we have an opportunity for strong representation, that we have sometimes more of an opportunity for density of individuals in those areas, that we do need to take into account more than just the population. We need to think about the wealth and the resources and the richness we have, whether that, again, be agriculture, forestry, tourism, or the energy sector as well. I don't believe that those are being taken into account on this bill and the report that we're embracing and taking a look at today. For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I will not be supporting this bill, because of the concerns today, tomorrow, and into future for future generations.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing and hearing none, is there anyone else wishing to speak to Bill 33? The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yeah. I just wanted to briefly get on the record a couple of points. Of course, I mean, I haven't made secret my own concerns over the Electoral Boundaries Commission. I just want to respond to some of the things from the people on the other side. As a rural member I don't feel like my colleagues are throwing me under the bus. I have to say that, I mean, they're looking at this from a different perspective. I respect that. I understand where they're coming from when they look at their own ridings and when they look at that we appointed this commission.

That all being said, I'm going to be voting against this on third reading. I feel like I can't do otherwise. I mean, I did very extensive consultation with members in my riding. I spoke to every individual municipality, and I had unanimous consent. I had unanimous consent not from the municipalities merely but from every single councillor that was a member of every municipality. They all said the same thing, that they were really concerned about the changes. They were concerned about the dilution of representation that the expansion of the boundaries of our riding represented, and they urged me that what they wanted to see was the status quo. Because of this overwhelming voice from the riding, I can't support the report's recommendations. I have to give credit, too, you know, that I do have the ability to vote against this, and I intend to exercise it.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Gill: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a comment to the hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater, I want to thank you for your commitment to your constituents and for listening to them and representing them in this Chamber while we're here. Thank you for voting against this bill. Thanks a lot, sir.

The Acting Speaker: Any other questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing and hearing none, any members wishing to speak to Bill 33? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wasn't planning to speak to this bill, but last week I was in Westlock for the Digital Futures conference. It brings together people from rural Alberta. I grew up in Sexsmith, Alberta. I'm very proud of having come from a rural location, and my riding as it stands right now has a number of farms in it still. On the north end of Calgary there is land that hasn't been developed yet, and there are a number of farms. From the conversations that I have had and my own experience growing up in a rural location, I do have concerns about the proportion of representation for rural Alberta. I'm a big fan of eating, and I really appreciate the experience of having grown up in a rural area. I really value that lifestyle, and I think it's a big part of our history in Alberta. I don't know that the Electoral Boundaries Commission's report really addresses those concerns. I think it's an opportunity for us to really think about what we value as Albertans, what's important to us. I would like to see more consideration of balancing those two.

For those reasons I will not be voting in favour of the bill.

The Acting Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing and hearing none, any other members wishing to speak to Bill 33? The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. I'm pleased to stand in support of Bill 33. I think we've had a good debate. I think that members have legitimate concerns, but we've laid out the reasons why the government is proceeding with a bill that mirrors exactly the boundaries recommended by the commission because the appearance of objectivity and nonbias, I think, is critical to the confidence of Alberta citizens.

I urge all members to support this bill.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation, to clarify, was closing debate?

Mr. Mason: What?

The Acting Speaker: You're closing debate?

Mr. Mason: I just did.

The Acting Speaker: Okay.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion for third reading carried]

[Motion carried; Bill 33 read a third time]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I would like to begin by thanking all members for their contributions in this session. I think it has been a productive session, and we've passed a significant number of bills in this House.

I would like also to wish everyone the merriest of Christmases or whatever way people celebrate the season. I wish them the very same thing and wish everyone safe travels home and a wonderful break. I think I certainly have need of it, and I'm sure some members do as well.

Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Government Motion 35 I am rising to advise the Assembly that the business of the sitting has been concluded and that the House stands adjourned.

The Acting Speaker: Happy holidays, everyone.

Hon. members, pursuant to Government Motion 35, agreed to on December 5, 2017, the House stands adjourned until February 2018.

[The Assembly adjourned at 4:06 p.m. pursuant to Government Motion 35]

Bill Status Report for the 29th Legislature - 3rd Session (2017)

Activity to Wednesday, December 13, 2017

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 1 to 200 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 201 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

* An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at 780.427.2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned chapter number until the conclusion of the Fall Sitings.

Main Estimates 2017-2018

The main estimates (budget) for 2017-2018 are all being considered in the legislative policy committees. Below is a list of ministries, the schedule of debate, and links to posted transcripts. At 3 p.m. on April 19 the Committee of Supply will meet to vote on the estimates.

Meetings start at 9 a.m. (morning), 3:30 p.m. (afternoon); or 7 p.m. (evening). Estimates debates are scheduled for three hours except for Executive Council, Indigenous Relations, Service Alberta, and Status of Women, which are scheduled for two hours. The ministries of Education, Environment and Parks, Health, and Justice and Solicitor General each have two meetings scheduled for a total of six hours' debate per ministry.
