Mr. Ceci: Thank you. You know, the ridiculousness of the allegations from the other side I don't want to even address. What I will say is that AIMCo is a great company that works on behalf of Albertans, invests a great deal of money. I have confidence in them. I think the other side should have confidence in them as well, but they exhibit a lack of confidence. We'll see where those appointments are shortly when they come forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Pure North S'Energy Foundation

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There have been concerning reports in the media about Pure North, a nonprofit foundation that promotes the use of multivitamins and supplements. The reports suggest that government provided funding and support for what were called medical experiments on vulnerable people without their fully informed consent. Apparently, these people were given very high doses of vitamin D and other nutrients in a way that can pose a health risk. To the Health minister: did this actually happen, and is this type of program consistent with the guidelines on ethical experiments on people?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. This is something that, in the detailed coverage that has been available, happened under the previous government, that grants were given out for these types of programs that certainly weren't respectful, I think, of the dignity that we want to ensure that all Albertans have through our billable services. So, please, to the member: I hope that the next time he's slow dancing with the third party, he asks them that specific question because if that happened, which I have no specific knowledge of, that certainly would be very concerning, and we would want to make sure that we follow it up appropriately.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, given that according to these media reports Alberta Health officials raised very serious safety, ethics, evidence, and liability issues about Pure North's alternative health program and given that senior ministry officials advised the previous government against providing Pure North with a grant and given that the documentation cited in these media reports came from FOIPed information from the Health minister, will the Health minister tell us if and when she was aware of the concerns of Alberta Health experts when she provided even more funding to Pure North?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thanks again, Mr. Speaker. To help inform the member opposite and any others who have concerns, there are two different programs, one that was funded under the former government which, I believe, could have been for things that aren't covered under Alberta Health billable services, and a second program, which is a nurse practitioner program. I hope all members of this House are keen in wanting to work with us to expand the practice of nurse practitioners in primary care. The grant that he's speaking of is about primary care with nurses, LPNs, RNs, and nurse practitioners as well. This is a completely different program. This is a government of Alberta nurse practitioner program, and I think we can wait and see the results of that. But certainly not any other . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, six days before the funding agreement was signed by the previous government, the grant's stated purpose was changed from a research project to simply an expansion of Pure North's existing seniors' program. It appears that a group can circumvent ethical guidelines through creating a program rather than conducting a legitimate medical experiment. To the Health minister: is it acceptable to frame a research project as a program in order to get around ethical guidelines?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. No, I don't believe it is. I think that that question is probably best directed to the former associate minister of Health, who happens to be the MLA for Calgary-Lougheed, at the time at which this was signed. I have very grave concerns about this. As I said previously, maybe when you're square dancing with members of the third party, feel free to ask them that exact question.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Justice System Delays

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government is well aware of rising crime in rural Alberta but have lollygagged around before doing something about it. The Wetaskiwin Crown prosecutor's office, which serves the Ponoka area, saw a 36 per cent increase in the number of charges commenced this year compared to last, the highest in the province. In response, even after the appointment of new judges, the minister wants to triage crime. Will a miscarriage of justice be the result of the minister picking which crimes will not be prosecuted, or how will she triage crime and maintain the integrity of the law?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the member has referenced, there are a number of cases that are at risk under Jordan, and given the intense backlogs that have built in the system over a long time, that is a significant concern. That's why this government took immediate action to ensure that we are injecting the necessary resources into the system. It's also why we ensured that Crown prosecutors were able to focus on the most serious and violent crimes, so that it wasn't being picked just on the length of time but that we were doing this in a thoughtful manner that protected the safety of Albertans.

Mr. Orr: Mr. Speaker, rising crime levels combined with a lack of staff mean that criminals are being let go under the Jordan timeline. Given that both the minister and the Wetaskiwin prosecutor's office have outlined staffing as the main cause of this problem, which has caused 2,100 charges to be unconcluded or just dropped this year alone, and given that we have heard over and over about the staff shortage at the Alberta Crown prosecutors' offices long before the Jordan ruling, why did the minister wait so long to address these issues?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to stand up and confirm that there is hiring under way for a new Crown prosecutor in Wetaskiwin. In terms of the numbers the member opposite cited, I don't think that those are correct. It is certainly the case that the result of the Jordan decision in combination with systemic backlogs has created quite a situation, and that's why this government moved to invest resources where the members opposite would have cut.

Mr. Orr: Mr. Speaker, the numbers come from the Alberta Crown Attorneys' Association, so if they're wrong, it's them.

Given that prosecution is only one aspect of the problem, the other being enforcement of the law, and that an 18-year veteran of the Edmonton police force recently told me that small crimes are the training grounds for major felonies, yet these are overlooked due to lack of resources, and given that experts know that petty crimes lead to major crimes, what is this government doing to nip the small criminals in the bud before they're back in our court system for a major crime?

Ms Ganley: Mr. Speaker, I have to absolutely disagree with the member opposite. Taking individuals who are suffering from mental health challenges or addictions problems and throwing them in jail has never solved anything. We need to provide these individuals with access to the treatment they need so that our criminal justice system can focus on serious and violent offenders.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Whirling Disease in Alberta Fish Populations

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In February the government released a statement regarding whirling disease in the Bow River basin watershed outlining steps that will be taken to contain the disease such as testing provincial aquaculture facilities and class A fish farms. To the Minister of Environment and Parks: can you please update this House on the status of whirling disease in Alberta?

The Speaker: The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. I appreciate it very much, and I appreciate the opportunity to update the House on this particular matter. It is a pressing matter for the health of the fisheries in southern Alberta; there's no question. That is why we have proposed $9 million extra within this year's budget in order to address the problem of whirling disease, in order to expand our education efforts among anglers and boaters, and to ensure that we are quarantining commercial fish farms and that we are deploying resources for monitoring and further testing so that we can at least know where the disease is and contain it appropriately.

Thank you.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that hundreds of recreational and commercial fish culture licences are under review by the government and given that stocking season is days away, to the same minister: what is the status of these reviews, and when can those waiting expect a decision?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. We have been able to test many of these commercial fish operations. I would be happy to follow up with the member to give him a full status report on which ones have been cleared and which others still require further action. We're working with those commercial fish farms in order to have a response plan that works for them as well.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the entire aquaculture industry plays an important role in Alberta's economic diversification and given that this industry is estimated to have an impact of up to $14 million per year and is losing investment every day that decisions aren't made, to the Minister of Economic Development and Trade: what is being done to support the long-term viability of these family-run fish farms so that they can support your efforts to diversify the Alberta economy and grow the fish farm industry?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is no question that whirling disease poses a challenge to commercial fisheries as well as to our wild fish populations, which is why we have taken the actions that we have. We have invested more resources into monitoring, testing, and working with those commercial fish hatcheries to ensure that we can work with them to develop a plan going into the future that works for them and that works for anglers and for the tourism industry.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Calgary Gas Plus Brownfield Site

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Constituents from Calgary-Bow have had ongoing concerns that date back many years about the Gas Plus brownfield site. This empty site is a detriment to local businesses and a major concern to community members, a problem that was inherited from the previous government. To the Minister of Environment and Parks: why has it taken so long for the community to get resolution of this concern?

The Speaker: The minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I'd like to start off by acknowledging the advocacy work that has been done by the Member for Calgary-Bow. I appreciate her efforts to advocate on behalf of her constituents very much. Similarly, the city of Calgary has been a good partner to us as we try to find a resolution to this matter. We're in legal proceedings right now to access the site so that we can assess its status, and the matter continues to be before the courts. As the legal action on the file proceeds, we have already taken a number of actions to support community members in the Member for Calgary-Bow's riding, including . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what has the Department of Environment and Parks done to support community members in Calgary-Bow to address this ongoing problem?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Department of Environment and Parks has begun remediating materials and off-site migration on the outskirts of the site. We are also finishing the field portion of the remedial approach pilot test and completing the remedial pilot activities and findings report from 2016. We're also completing many of the preparatory activities to support implementation of the remedial action plan. In order to support all of those efforts, we're hosting an open house to ensure ongoing communications with community members in Calgary-Bow and to update them on the status of the site, the work done to date, and the actions going forward.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the brownfield site represents not only problems but also opportunities, to the same minister: what is the government doing to support the 2012 Alberta Urban Municipalities Association's recommendations around brownfield site remediation?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we have heard loud and clear from municipalities that they would like to see us move forward in terms of reviewing the regulation and operation of the remediation certificate program, so we are pleased to do so. A number of the steps that we've taken so far include release of the updated tier 1 and tier 2 Alberta soil and water guidelines. We've recently hired a brownfield co-ordinator in our department. We've created a crossministry contaminated-site steering committee. We are also updating the Municipal Government Act very soon, concerning taxation powers, to support brownfield redevelopment and negotiations on big-city charters. We are committed to . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Victims of Crime

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Victims' services units across the province are seeing a rise in their case files. Victims' services provides a range of services from helping victims through the criminal justice system, providing court support, making sure that victims know their rights, and informing clients of the different packages available through the Alberta government for financial benefits. Yet despite these facts, they have found no increase in their budget. To the minister: how are you ensuring that victims of crime have access to the services they need?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's important that all victims have access to services throughout the province. That's why we're looking very closely at the system. On the recommendation of the Auditor General we are doing a full evaluation. We have completed a gaps analysis in terms of what needs to be done to move forward. Once we have completed an analysis of how best to measure the outcomes in that matter, we will absolutely be moving forward to help resolve this issue.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, given that the victims of crime fund has come under fire, as stated by the minister as well, from the Auditor General for its lack of plans to deal with the extra money and given that victims' services units across this province are seeing a sharp increase in case files and given that Alberta has seen an 18 per cent increase in crime, the largest of any province or territory, will the minister direct the surplus monies to the front-line workers who support victims of violent crime?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we've been working very closely with groups that advocate for victims. We have been meeting with them as well as their members to ensure that they do have the resources they need. As we move forward doing our work, it's important not just that that money goes out the door but that it gets to the place where it's directed, that it, in fact, be used to address the needs of victims. That's why we're ensuring that we do the work first and get the money out the door second.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, given that under the Victims of Crime Act the minister has under section 10(a) the ability to make regulations to make payments from the fund and given the rise in crime and the need for victims' services units and other invaluable victims' services, will the minister amend the regulations today to ensure that victims in our province do not go without support?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's clear that the members opposite aren't interested in getting the evidence to make sure that money is used effectively, but on this side of the House we think that it's important to ensure that we have the gaps analysis so that we have an understanding of what the needs of victims are to make sure that that money is going to do what it's supposed to do; that is to say, to support the needs of victims, exactly as we've been asked to do by the Auditor General.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Transportation Infrastructure in Fort Saskatchewan

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A couple of weeks ago, to great fanfare and a superb photo op, the Premier and the Transportation minister announced that Fort Saskatchewan would see a new bridge built. Just like that, everyone applauded. This project was well received; the community was happy. But let's drill down a little bit. In all this applause perhaps the people missed that the total funds dedicated to this project are only $10 million. Minister, what will come with the $10 million? What kind of bridge, a Lego bridge or something?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. [interjections] Obviously, the capital plan ...

The Speaker: Quiet.

Mr. Mason: ... as the member ought to know, extends over a number of years. It's a four-year capital plan, Mr. Speaker. Some projects take more than that. Certain amounts are allocated to that in a given year. That will get the bridge started, and then we'll finish it.
2:50

Mr. Gill: Given that the project is set to begin in 2019 with a three-year build-out, which brings us to 2022, and given that the government has only committed $10 million to this multiyear project, without any further indication that it'll provide the remaining funds, and given that the people of Alberta are sick and tired of this NDP government's buying announcements, to the same minister: when will the government commit the rest of the funds to this project in 2019? Again, an election year promise ...

The Speaker: Hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, you know, it's really, really interesting that the hon. member opposite thinks that we're not going to finish the bridge. He may not have noticed, but there's a change in government, and we do things differently now than they used to do. That bridge was due for twinning 10 years ago. [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet.

Mr. Mason: The amount of traffic on that bridge should have triggered this action 10 years ago. That government sat around for eight of those years and did nothing, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I'm sure it was an oversight.

To the hon. member: be cautious of the preambles.

Mr. Gill: Given that we used to pay our debts on time and given that there was a lot of fanfare and a lot of photo ops for $10 million and given that the Industrial Heartland has been and will continue to be a much-needed economic generator for our province and given that this bridge must provide full access for heavy industries on the other side of the river, Minister, can you commit to Albertans today that this will be a wide heavy-load bridge ...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Thank you.

Mr. Gill: ... to accommodate traffic to ...

Speaker's Ruling Addressing the Chair

The Speaker: Thank you. Thank you. Hon. member, when you're looking at the chair, you'll know when he's standing up. When you're looking to the other side, you sometimes miss it. I encourage you to look at the chair in the future so that you can sit down on time.

The Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to look at the chair. The view is much better.

Now, the mayor of Fort Saskatchewan says: this announcement is very good news for the prosperity of Alberta's Industrial Heartland and the quality of life for our residents; we look forward to continued dialogue with the province and our community as the project unfolds and more information is available. Mr. Speaker, we are supportive of the Industrial Heartland and the economic development that that generates for our entire province.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Highway 2 Gaetz Avenue Interchange in Red Deer

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the MLA for Red Deer-North I see first-hand that my city is an important hub for provincial travel. Given that its unique location on highway 2 is both a defining feature of the city and also a lifelong infrastructure challenge for my constituents as they deal with significant congestion issues, to the Minister of Transportation: what is the government doing to improve road infrastructure in Red Deer along the QE II?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the hon. member and her colleague from Red Deer for their strong advocacy on behalf of the people of Red Deer and the surrounding area. Red Deer is in fact becoming a fast-growing economic engine of our province, driving our economy forward. Last year our government moved forward on the Gaetz Avenue interchange project, an $80 million project that will significantly improve critical infrastructure in the area. I'm very proud of the significant infrastructure investments we've made in the Red Deer region, making life better for all ...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

First supplemental.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that my constituents have expressed concerns regarding significant traffic congestion and slow-moving traffic on and off the highway, to the Minister of Transportation: will this interchange improve my residents' frustrations with traffic in this highly used area?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much. I certainly hope so, Mr. Speaker. The new interchange will accommodate increased traffic volumes on highway 2 by providing three lanes in each direction. It will improve safety – and this is very important – for motorists by separating high- and low-speed traffic getting to and from the highway. And it will integrate the Taylor Drive and Gaetz Avenue interchanges into one full interchange system. These much-needed improvements will help create jobs and sustain economic growth and make life better for the people of Red Deer.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Red Deer has become an important centre for travellers and industry; however, provincial infrastructure has not kept pace with our growth. Given that road infrastructure needs will likely continue to increase in our growing city, what has our government committed to in Budget 2017 to ensure continued improvements at this important intersection?

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, as part of our four-year capital plan we're investing nearly $5.2 billion in our provincial highway network. It includes a commitment of $64 million over the next four years to this project, which will help connect communities and make life better for residents in Red Deer. Gaetz Avenue interchange project is well under way, and multiple construction activities are planned for the upcoming season. It will support the city as it hosts the 2019 Canada Winter Games, one of the many reasons our government supported this important project.

The Speaker: Government House Leader, did you have a motion?

Mr. Mason: Oh. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask for unanimous consent to extend the Routine until its completion.

Battle of Vimy Ridge

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak about the incredible sacrifice made 100 years ago at the Battle of Vimy Ridge. As the government of Alberta's liaison to the Canadian armed forces I have had the privilege of meeting and speaking with our guests in the gallery as well as many more members of the Canadian forces and their families at commemorations across our province.

On April 9, 1917, our brave Canadian soldiers began the infamous creeping barrage at 5:30 a.m. Over 3,598 Canadian soldiers were killed and 7,004 wounded in this historic battle.

The Vimy Ridge monument was erected in 1936 to commemorate Canada's fallen sons and the sacrifice so many made for freedom on those fields in France. There are 20 symbolic statues on the monument, but one in particular stood out to me. It was the statue of Canada Bereft, or, as many commonly know her, Mother Canada. She is symbolic of the spirit of Canada weeping for her fallen sons.

Many of you were here in the House when I introduced my eldest son last week. He is the same age as so many who died fighting for Canada at Vimy Ridge. As a mother I am awestruck by the strength of so many Canadian mothers and fathers who said goodbye to their sons not knowing if they would ever see them again. I can't even begin to fathom the sense of loss and grief that so many mothers, fathers, spouses, and children must have endured after this historic battle.

Yesterday I was proud to be part of a declaration by the government of Alberta that recognized April 9, 2017, as the Battle of Vimy Ridge Day here in Alberta. This declaration cannot bring back the fallen, but this recognition and the other commemorations around the province and the world can demonstrate in a small way our gratitude and the honour in which we hold all who fought and still fight for our freedom.

To all Canadians who sacrificed that day, to their families and loved ones, and to those who continue to protect our rights and freedoms: we thank you from the bottom of our hearts.

Battle of Vimy Ridge

Mr. Schneider: In my riding next to the Lethbridge Airport is the home of the 20th Independent Field Battery, Royal Canadian Artillery. At the outbreak of World War I Major John Smith Stewart raised the first Alberta artillery battery, to be known as the 20th battery, augmented with members from Edmonton and Calgary. The 20th would be joined in France shortly afterward by another Lethbridge battery, the 39th. It's interesting to note that during the planning for the battle a trench was marked on the battle map, to be known as Stafford Street in honour of the battery commander of the 39th, Major Alexander Boswell Stafford. Both of these units fought with distinction at Vimy Ridge.

To recognize the importance and close connection these two units have with this historic victory, their armoury was rededicated and renamed as Vimy Ridge Armoury on November 9, 2001. This year, in order to commemorate and mark the 100th anniversary of the Battle of Vimy Ridge, a parade and salute with their howitzers were held on April 8 at Lethbridge city hall. This parade also included cadets from Fort Macleod, Lethbridge, and Taber. That evening the 20th battery held their annual Vimy Ridge dinner, which this year commemorated the 100th anniversary of the battle.

Canada's military achievements during the remainder of the war raised our international stature and helped us earn a separate signature on the Treaty of Versailles, that formally ended the war.

Today on land granted to Canada for all time by a grateful France, the Canadian National Vimy Memorial sits atop Hill 145 as a lasting legacy. This great monument is inscribed with the names of 11,285 Canadian soldiers who were listed as missing, presumed dead in France during the First World War. Whenever Canadians visit the memorial today, one can't help but leave with a renewed sense of patriotism, similar, no doubt, to the sense of pride felt after the victory by the Canadian Corps. It stands as a tribute to all who served our country in the conflict and paid the ultimate price to help ensure that peace and freedom are alive and well today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Employment and Labour Code Consultations

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Everyone can agree that Bill 6 was an unmitigated disaster. Even the minister of agriculture admitted that their communication efforts were lacklustre and that they would need to improve in the future. However, this government just cannot learn from their mistakes. Instead of broadly consulting openly and with wide-ranging engagement efforts across our province, this government is rushing ahead, with limited consultation and minimal ministerial representation, on significant changes to both employment standards and the Labour Relations Code.

The Minister of Labour is utilizing a 36-day online survey to consult only on potential changes to employment standards. Not only is this timeline wholly insufficient; the questions appear to be leading respondents to a predetermined outcome. Thirty-six days is shorter than the consultation period for both daylight saving time and the Castle park management plan and will take less than one-tenth the time this government has spent reviewing WCB. The Calgary Chamber describes the process as completely, woefully inadequate.

Multiple stakeholders are concerned about government bias towards making it easier for unions to certify, moving away from the democratic secret ballot to a card check process, yet despite all the concerns from stakeholders across this province, the government still feels they know best. The minister has stated publicly: the timeline we've set out is very reasonable. Their favourite son, Gil McGowan, stated: we don't need two years of consultation to say what's obvious. Well, the irony of the statement is that Ontario is taking two years to consult before making similar changes.

I would like to take the time to offer this government some friendly advice: remember Bill 6. Take your time, consult widely, and build as broad based a consensus between business and labour, Albertans all, as you can. Mr. Speaker, Alberta's economy is struggling to recover. These changes could have a serious impact, and the short-term gain of pleasing your elite, union-boss friends will be far outweighed by the damage you do to Alberta businesses and our fragile economy.

Thank you.

Henson Trusts for Persons with Disabilities

Mr. Malkinson: Mr. Speaker, today I rise to address a question asked by every Albertan parent who has a child with a disability: how will they ensure that their child has the support they need even after they pass away? I know that this question keeps many Albertan parents and caregivers up at night.

Many parents across Canada can ensure that their children receive the support they need after they pass through something called a Henson trust, also known as an absolute discretionary trust, for the lawyers in the room. If Alberta had Henson trust legislation, this would ensure that persons with disabilities who inherit assets following a parent's death will not be penalized, as Frances Harley explained to me, for being too rich. That's shameful. Since my being elected to this House, parents like Frances, Farhood, Mina, and many others have shared with me their worry that their child's AISH would be cut or that their child would no longer be able to afford the medication or supportive housing they need. What these families, what the parents are seeking, Mr. Speaker, is continuity of care.

I have heard these concerns in Calgary-Currie, Mr. Speaker, and they have motivated me to investigate the idea of Henson trust legislation here in Alberta. This is why over the past two weeks my office has begun a series of consultations in both Calgary and Edmonton on the best way to introduce Henson trusts here in Alberta. These consultations could not have been better attended. Self-advocates, disability advocates, and organizations like Connections Counselling and the Developmental Disabilities Resource Centre of Calgary all attended. But I now appeal to my fellow Albertans. I ask them to contact my office and share how such legislation could offer them peace of mind, knowing that loved ones will be cared for after they are gone.

As legislators we should work to make life better. Our laws should ensure that all are able to live dignified lives, but right now in this case ours do the opposite, and that needs to change.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Women's Suffrage Anniversary

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Voting is a hallmark of Canadian citizenship, and I would wager that every single Member of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, past and present, holds the right to vote in very high regard. Political franchise is a precious right and one of the tenets of democracy. The authority of government flows from the people. It's based on their consent.

Imagine living in a society that didn't recognize you as a person. You could be an accomplished professional. Maybe you're the first female judge in the British Empire or the first woman elected to a Legislature in the British Empire. Maybe you're the first female cabinet minister in the province or the founder of a charitable foundation that cares for people in the community, that still exists today. Imagine that you are well-informed and engaged, not just engaged but passionate about the place you live, passionate about ensuring better working conditions for women, better wages for women, passionate about protecting children. Now imagine that you have no say in these matters because you are not legally recognized as a person.

The passion to change women's status was what led the Famous Five – Emily Murphy, Irene Parlby, Nellie McClung, Louise McKinney, and Henrietta Edwards – to ask the Supreme Court of Canada if the word "persons" in section 24 of the British North America Act meant women, too. Because of their efforts the Equal Suffrage Statutory Law Amendment Act was passed in April 1916, giving most women in Alberta the right to vote, ending a time when women had been deemed to have no place in political life, an ideology that maligned women as lacking logic, solely belonging at home to raise children, and incapable of making good choices.

I am incredibly grateful for the courage and commitment of these women and their supporters, Mr. Speaker, because the 29 women that are current members of this Assembly probably wouldn't be here representing the interests of half the population or marking the 101st anniversary of women's suffrage in Alberta, and that would be a travesty.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Rocky View School District Funding

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak about the importance of education and the need for us as parliamentarians to work together to ensure that schools are being built in the communities that need them most. The Rocky View school district is one of the fastest growing school boards, and Airdrie alone needs an average of two schools built per year just to keep up with the growth. This highlights the desperate need to address infrastructure deficits. Obviously, schools can only fit so many teachers, students, and classrooms.

According to a recent report it appears that Rocky View school district is one of the lowest funded school divisions in Alberta, based on geography and student populations. Encompassed in this district is, of course, the beautiful city of Airdrie. Since 2006 Airdrie's population has more than doubled. It continues to grow by an average of 3,000 people per year, and that is the same as other communities within the Rocky View school division like the rapidly growing city of Chestermere and the hamlet of Langdon. What this means is obvious, Mr. Speaker: more people and more families looking to raise their children in Airdrie.

But schools are not the only problem. Recent changes to the types of school fees that schools can charge have also made it more difficult for schools to fund essential operations like busing for students who live 2.4 kilometres or greater from their designated school. School fees are definitely something that, we can all agree, needed to be addressed, but the current offsets are leaving schools at a loss to cover these programs. In my area the $3.5 million in offset funding will still leave them with an operating deficit of a quarter of a million dollars. It is my understanding that some discussions have begun to take place with the minister, and I'm grateful for that.

I would also encourage that these discussions continue so that we can all work together in the best interests of students to ensure that schools are in place and that there is adequate funding to support them.

Thank you very much.

3:10 Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the honour of submitting on behalf of the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future its final report, pursuant to Standing Order 52.07(2) and (4), Growing and Diversifying Alberta's Agrifood and Agribusiness Sectors. For the past six months we received feedback from over 100 stakeholders in Alberta and invited nearly 50 presenters to appear in front of the committee. This report provides 13 recommendations, that received unanimous support from all parties in this House. I'd like to thank all members who participated, all submitters who provided feedback, and research services for their hard work on this.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and present a petition that I sponsored in recognition of Vimy Ridge. It reads:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to make a proclamation establishing a Day to Commemorate the 100th Year Anniversary of the Victory by the Canadian Expeditionary Force at Vimy Ridge in World War One.

Thank you.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Bill 8

An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce Bill 8, An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government.

During the summer tour last year and another round of engagement over the winter we heard these ideas for how our government could make a real difference for families and communities. These amendments would strengthen how school boards and municipalities work together on school sites and provide a way for councillors to take parental leave. This bill would make Alberta a leader in how municipalities collaborate on community infrastructure like rec centres and libraries and how municipalities can strengthen relationships with neighbouring indigenous communities. The proposed amendments are a result of extensive and open engagement, which is the hallmark of the MGA review. This is yet another way that we're listening to Albertans and responding to their ideas for how our government can make practical changes that make their lives better.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 8 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the requisite number of copies of a misnumbered survey circulated by the Wildrose in St. Albert a couple weeks ago, including the question: "Do you believe global warming is primarily caused by human activity?" I note that both the Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock and the Leader of the Official Opposition were present for this.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today when I was asking about the new Crown corporation to handle infrastructure procurement by this provincial government, the Minister of Infrastructure made fun. You know, he wanted to know where I was coming from, so I rise here to table five copies of an excerpt from Canada's free trade agreement, which states, "Alberta gives notice of its intention to create a Crown corporation which will be responsible for all the infrastructure procurement . . ."

The Speaker: Hon. member, are you ready . . .

Mr. Panda: Yeah, I'm ready to table this.

The Speaker: Let's move it along. Let's move it along, please.
The Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table a copy of a letter from the Alberta Crown Attorneys' Association which does indicate a 36 per cent increase in charges in Wetaskiwin court as well as more than 2,100 charges that were not concluded in the last year.

Thank you.

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to submit the requisite number of copies of an NDP-written document called Your Land, Your Rights, that talks about land rights for landowners in Alberta. I referred to it in a speech I made last week on Bill 204, the private member's property rights bill.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour today to rise and table the requisite five copies of a letter I wrote to the hon. Government House Leader on March 9, where I quote the Premier when she was in opposition. She said, "Really, quite frankly, you know, we've had lots of conversation about how this government has been using Public Affairs Bureau money to essentially engage in pre-election campaigning." This is a great letter I wrote to the minister that I hope he will read very carefully.

Orders of the Day

The Speaker: The House leader for the Official Opposition.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to seek unanimous consent to waive Standing Order 8 in order to proceed immediately to debate on Bill 202, Protecting Victims of Non-consensual Distribution of Intimate Images Act.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 202
Protecting Victims of Non-consensual
Distribution of Intimate Images Act

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. It gives me great pleasure today to move into the Committee of the Whole on Bill 202, Protecting Victims of Non-consensual Distribution of Intimate Images Act. As the sponsor of this bill it is with great pride that I'm able to say that through co-operation from all parties, I've been able to get this bill to the point where we can actually start to improve the bill through adding amendments at this step here.

I will say that when it comes to the co-operation the government has shown in this, I need to ensure that they understand that while it is important that we are all working together, it is also important that we are trying to improve legislation. I will say they have done their part, and I would like to thank them.

This bill is an important piece of legislation which falls in line with the good work of the federal Conservatives, who made it illegal to distribute the intimate images of individuals.

My bill seeks to accomplish three important issues. First, it creates the tort law for victims of this egregious crime to seek reparations from a person distributing this issue without their consent. Second, it ensures that for anyone seeking to use intimate images of others without their consent for the purpose of making a profit, all financial gains can be returned to the victim. Third, it gives the principal of the school district discretionary power to recommend further punishments for a student who has chosen to distribute the images of their peers.

Last week we heard about the extradition of a gentleman, a Dutch citizen, who has lost his appeal against extradition to Canada for his role in the cyberbullying case of 15 year-old Amanda Todd, who took her own life, tragically, in October of 2012. Amanda Todd committed suicide at her home in Port Coquitlam, B.C. Prior to her death Todd posted a heart-wrenching video on YouTube in which she told her story of being blackmailed into exposing her breasts via webcam and of being bullied and physically assaulted.

It is my hope that this will never happen again and that we can protect our children from future predators. When I think about my own girls at home, I think about how they may fall victim to these predators. It is important that all parents talk honestly about this topic with their children. With the advent of new technology there is a permanence to what they do online, and actions made in a moment could last forever. It is my hope that this government will take this a step further by providing educational components about the dangers of online predators for our students and everyday Albertans. The Internet and new technologies provide us with new ways to connect with each other, but we need to remind Albertans that privacy isn't just a thing of the past. These are real consequences for respecting this fact, and this bill cements that into law.

Madam Chair, I would like to move an amendment to my bill, and I'll wait until the copies are distributed. I'd like to keep a copy if that's fine.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: This will be amendment A1.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you.

The Chair: Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. Mr. Cyr to move that Bill 202, Protecting Victims of Non-consensual Distribution of Intimate Images Act, be amended in section 7 by renumbering it as section 7(1) and by adding the following after subsection (1):

(2) In awarding damages in an action for the distribution of an intimate image without consent, the court must not have regard to any order made under subsection (1)(b).

Signed by myself today.

Madam Chair, this will amend section 7 to prohibit the court from reducing damages when a defendant has been required to account for the profits accrued as a result of the distribution of an image. In effect, this will mean that any damages must be awarded in addition to returning any profits to the victim rather than collapsing these two categories together.

With that being said, I urge all members to support this bill, I urge all members to support this amendment, and I'd like to take again the time to tell the NDP government – they had a concern forwarded to my office. This is correcting an error that had been found, and I want to thank the NDP government for asking me to move this amendment.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Madam Chair. I am very happy to speak to this amendment. I'm going to be happy to speak to the bill later on in committee. I think that the member opposite has done a lot of very good work on this bill. I think he's been very forthcoming and open to working with other members in this Assembly. I think that this amendment in particular does speak to that. I think that what the member said already about this amendment is very important.

I do want to touch a bit on how this amendment does indeed help victims and it does indeed help provide that closure moving forward because as we do see from this amendment, it encompasses a broader range of effects that you might become victim to. It encompasses a broader range of things that you might feel and experience and be affected by moving forward. Without this amendment and without this section a court would look at Alberta's legislation and try to determine why Alberta did not include this provision moving forward, and a likely result would be that the courts could interpret that Alberta's legislation was not keeping those items separate.

It brings us in line with some other provinces such as Manitoba, where we see the Intimate Image Protection Act, which has this section. Under Manitoba's legislation, for example, a victim would be able to recover for things like job loss or suffering or reputational damage. Someone having shared their image without consent as well as anyone being able to take profits, that person who shared their image would no longer be able to keep those profits. This would allow the recovering of those profits and any other damages such as for job losses or reputational damage.

I'm happy to see that the member has taken those considerations into account. I'm happy to see that these types of damages are going to be brought in line here in Alberta as in other jurisdictions. I think that that's something where we are able to ensure that victims are properly compensated and have all of those grounds covered, not just in one aspect but in aspects financially, emotionally, and whatever it may be, that we can close the door on all these types of things moving forward. It's only fair that when you breach someone's trust in such an intimate way, when you break somebody's most sacred and most internal being in such a way, you should not have an opportunity to reduce your own costs by profiting off that breach of trust. You shouldn't have the opportunity to be able to further your own interests and not be able to be punished for that.

I do want to thank the member for accepting the suggestion to bring forward this amendment. I do want to thank the member for the co-operation brought forward on this amendment and this bill overall, Madam Chair. I'm happy to be able to support this amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Madam Chair. This is a very reasonable amendment, and I'd like to applaud not only the member but, you know, also the government in co-operating on a very, very important bill. This is one of those bills and amendments that transcend beyond party lines. This is about certainly doing what is right for victims, and I just want to commend not only the hon. member but also the government for listening and co-operating reasonably in order to come to a positive outcome, hopefully, in the conclusion of not only Committee of the Whole but, hopefully, third reading as well. I certainly want to stand up again and continue to support this amendment and this bill.

Thank you, Madam Chair, for your time.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A1?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Chair: We're back on the main bill.

Any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Connolly: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Just to start, I actually wanted to talk a little bit about when I was in my first year of university. Actually, it was 2012, that was exactly when Amanda Todd's case was coming out, and I remember not debating it but discussing it in our classroom and how passionate people were because in our time as youth we have all known people who've given out or sent intimate images of themselves and others. Since I was in high school was when camera phones really started getting going, so that's when we started to see more and more of these things come forward and more and more issues. Even when I was in junior high – although I didn't even have a phone in junior high, a lot of my peers did, and I remember it starting even then.

The problem is that it's not usually some random person online. A lot of the times it's someone that you're even dating. Sometimes there's a really hard breakup, and then they decide to send that out to whomever. Or it's a friend of a friend, and the intimate partner has shown it to that person, and they decide to send it to all their friends.

It's very hard to keep track of these photos, and people need to know that there are consequences to their actions. However, when you trust someone with an intimate photo, there's a sense of hope, and you assume that they're not going to break that trust. You have a trust with them, and they're not to break that. However, sometimes that does happen, so people need to make sure that if they are sending intimate photos, they are careful of exactly where they go.

I actually have an amendment to Bill 202 to strengthen the bill, I believe. Just to explain a little bit, it changes only a couple of small things. I'll wait till you have a copy, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Go ahead.

Connolly: Perfect. Member Connolly to move that Bill 202, Protecting Victims of Non-consensual Distribution of Intimate Images Act, be amended by striking out section 5 and substituting the following:

5 In an action for the distribution of an intimate image without consent, a person depicted in the image does not lose the expectation of privacy in respect of the image if that person

- (a) consented to another person recording the images, or
- (b) provided the image to another person, in circumstances where that other person knew or ought reasonably to have known that a person depicted in the image did not consent to the further distribution of the image.

To start with, the first change, in the first sentence, is from "the person" to "a person." In a lot of intimate photos there can be more than one person depicted in that photo, so it's making sure that it's not just the one person that's distributing the photo that's in charge of it – they should be – but it's to make sure that the other people in that photo, whether it be one other person or more, are also protected under this law.

The second part that it changes is the end. A lot of the times with our new dating apps they'll save one photo, and you can send that photo to a number of different people. If somebody decides to take an intimate photo and send it to one person or multiple people, then they should still be covered under the law to make sure that that person then does not have the right to distribute that one image to other people. So person A can send it to person B, but person B does not have the right to send it to persons C, D, E, and F. That's what this amendment is supposed to do.

Actually, the idea for the amendment was brought to me by a friend named Joshua Shaw, who actually brought my attention to the problem via Instagram. It really shows that not only are our images more important now than ever, but we can find on apps where people are looking at legislation and making changes as well, not just through Twitter or Facebook but through venues that are meant more for fun and are less policy driven. I'm really glad that he was able to bring this to my attention because, quite honestly, I didn't see a problem with it before I viewed it.

I'm glad to be able to put this amendment forward. I've been able to speak with the opposition and the member who brought forward this bill, and I believe that we have some sort of agreement that it does strengthen the bill for future generations. I really hope that all members of the Assembly will support this amendment.

The Chair: Just a reminder, hon. members, that the custom of the House is that we do not use names even when reading from an amendment. I encourage you to always use the constituency name instead.

On amendment A2, the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to support the amendment and to thank the hon. member for putting it forward. It's a thoughtful improvement to the legislation. I think it covers some ground where the legislation, without it, would have been noticed and would have had to have been corrected later, so better to correct it right at the front.

Further, thank you to the hon. member for taking the trouble to speak with the sponsor of the bill to get on the same page. That will make all this go better. I think this amendment improves a bill that is timely, important, and I'm sure it will make a lot of difference to a lot of Albertans in the future. I have every intention of supporting this amendment.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to amendment A2. You know, one of the things that I think we have seen in the House, particularly on Mondays, is a real desire to work together to ensure that we get legislation that is the best possible piece of legislation. I think we saw that in previous sessions with the Member for Calgary-Bow, we've seen that on a number of occasions around private members' business, and I think that's what we're seeing here today. I know that my hon. colleague from Bonnyville-Cold Lake would like to speak to this particular amendment as well.

I think it's a thoughtful amendment. I think that in consultation with Albertans we've seen a possible gap in the legislation, so we're closing that gap. I think that whenever we pass legislation, it's important that we try to get it as complete as possible, first past the post. That's not always going to be the case. You know, the very need for this type of legislation didn't exist a few years ago, so as technology changes, it's possible that legislation will also need to change. It's really important that we close as many gaps as possible, and this really is about the best idea winning. I think that we have that opportunity here this afternoon, certainly, on amendment A2. I intend to support it, and I encourage all members of the Assembly to do so as well.

The Chair: Any other speakers to amendment A2? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I've had foreknowledge of this amendment coming forward, and I'd like to thank the Member for Calgary-Hawkwood for giving me a bit of a heads-up, if you will, on this amendment moving forward. Whenever you hear – and we'll go to the start of it – that you're going to be striking a section out of your bill, you obviously have some concerns coming up, but again it's just a part of the parliamentary procedure here. By him moving this forward, we're able to discuss it and really get an understanding of what he is trying to accomplish with this. I have to commend him for finding a gap that was within the bill and correcting that gap. That's what we're here for: to strengthen legislation, work together, and make the best possible law within Alberta.

Now, I have to say that when it comes to the expectation of privacy, it just makes sense that you would want to make sure that groups of people would be included in that expectation of privacy, not just singular photos. The fact that the Member for Calgary-Hawkwood was able to reach out to stakeholders in his own constituency on a bill that I'm presenting here is showing advocacy, and I have to say thank you to that member. It's something that we should all be doing whenever we've got a bill. Now, I do know that we go through these bills fairly quickly in the House and that we don't always have that opportunity, but with the private members' bills it does seem like we're able to have a little bit more time. The fact that we were able to have a lot of people putting a lot of effort into trying to strengthen this is something that I think everybody in this Legislature should always aspire to, the best possible legislation.

I will be supporting this amendment, and I would hope that everybody in the House would support this amendment. I again thank the Member for Calgary-Hawkwood for putting this forward.

The Chair: I'll recognize Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just wanted to echo some of the comments that have been made by the hon. members. That expectation of privacy: it's exactly right. You have that expectation. You automatically think that when you are sharing something with somebody, that is as far as that's going to go. The fact that you were able to reach in and find some other spaces where that may not have been the common denominator: this is excellent. I just quickly wanted to say thank you so much for strengthening this legislation for our children and people and for anybody who may be impacted by this horrible invasion of privacy.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood on amendment A2.

Connolly: Thank you very much. I'd like to thank all members of the opposition for accepting the legislation. I haven't heard from the other two parties. However, I'd like to thank both the main opposition parties for accepting the amendment. It is very important. I do hear from a lot of people, whether it be in my riding or around the province, that privacy is a large issue for them. I know a lot of apps like Grindr and Tinder and Hornet. There are, like, 16 different dating apps now.

An Hon. Member: Name them.

Connolly: I can't. Those are the only three I can name off the top of my head. I don't use them anymore. I have a partner now. So there you go. [interjection] Yeah. It's been one year now, so that's been very nice.

Anyway, beyond that, I hear from a lot of stakeholders that it is an issue for them. Sometimes they go on these apps, and from what I've heard, they send an intimate photo to someone else, and then another person sends the exact same photo back to them, saying: look what I found. Now with this amendment and with this bill, thanks to the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, that will be illegal. It will be in law that you cannot go around and share intimate photos of somebody else with the rest of the world.

From what I hear, it's very scary, and it can be rather humiliating seeing these photos of yourself being posted, whether it be online or that a friend saw an intimate photo of you. It can be very disturbing. And like what we've seen with the cases such as Amanda Todd and others around the country and even around the world, such violence – well, I wouldn't say violence, but sometimes it can feel like violence – can lead to suicide and depression, and it really becomes a cycle.

I just read an article recently where somebody has been fighting for years. They would google videos of themselves posted online and would then e-mail these websites and say: "Take this down. This is my photo. Please get rid of it." She would do that every single day. An ex had taken an intimate video and decided to post it online, and then that video was online forever. People have it saved on their computers and can send it out to any number of websites and are able to take money from that because of those images.

I really thank the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake for coming forward with this very important bill, and I really hope that this amendment will be able to strengthen this bill. Thanks.

The Chair: Edmonton-South West on amendment A2.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's the wonderful constituency of Edmonton-South West.

I do want to thank the Member for Calgary-Hawkwood for bringing this amendment forward. I think it's something that's so important. I do want to point out that I think he can actually name more dating apps than I can. That's something that's probably quite commendable as well.

This amendment is something that I find very important. When I read it, I had one thought: this should already be implicit. This isn't something we should have to put down in words. This is something that every single Albertan should already know. But with that comes the idea that it's something that not every Albertan does know. It's something that not every single person implicitly does understand, and that's why we are making it explicit. That's why I'm so happy that every single party in this House has said that they are willing to support it.

I think it's something that does strengthen this legislation. I think it's something that does make it stronger, does ensure that if you are on one of those dating apps, if you are on your Snapchat, if you are on your Facebook Messenger or whatever it is, if you're going out there and having consensual communications with other people, if you're going out there and enjoying yourself however you would like, you should be able to expect that you are safe. You should be able to expect that what you did is safe and what you do is safe, and you shouldn't have to be concerned that there is some loophole that because once you consented, that consent is going to be in perpetuity.

We know consent doesn't work that way, Madam Chair. We know that that isn't how we work with consent, but this makes that explicit. This sets that into writing and says to us that we know what is right and what is wrong and if you choose to break someone's trust in the future, well, that is wrong and that is something that we cannot let you do.

Madam Chair, I think that this amendment strengthens the bill moving forward. I think that it creates something that all parties and all members of this House can be proud of as we move forward and will help protect people and will help protect our children as we move forward. I'm so happy to be able to rise and support my colleague from Calgary-Hawkwood. I'm so happy to support this amendment, and I look forward to seeing it pass and help move this bill forward.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to amendment A2? The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Madam Chair. I want to thank the hon. member for bringing forward this amendment as well as the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake for the initial bill, too.

You know, touching on a few themes that kind of went out there, the Member for Calgary-Hawkwood alluded to victims who used to google themselves, and it really reflected back to something that we used to see in the workforce when we were hiring people and when we would do vetting, when we would do reference checks. There's a new reference check that has been established in the last 20 years, and that's us googling the employees that we're seeking to hire. I'm sure that even within political vetting some of us are probably familiar with political parties that will google members before they even move forward through the process to see if there are any issues.

This leads to revictimization. It leads to a situation where an employer can find an individual online and find unfortunate and compromising images about this individual, and it can lead to a situation where there is a small facet, a very small group of individual employers, who might have malicious intents who will hire these employees because of these things that are occurring, and it can lead to further abuse. I think that this amendment that's been brought forth here by the Member for Calgary-Hawkwood will allow us to strengthen and remove some of these opportunities that will happen as well.

You know, being born in 1986, I unfortunately am tied in with or have been told that I am a millennial. Some of the things that I've gotten to see growing up as a millennial is that technology has evolved, and it's evolved at a rapid rate. I remember that when I was entering the workforce, it was around the same time that camera phones became something, and that was really neat. How cool. I could take a really pixelated photo of my dog and bring my phone to work and show everyone my dog.

I didn't think twice about it being used for bad purposes until one time when I was at work. As an 18-year-old, to date myself again, there was an individual who actually took a compromising photo of his girlfriend at the time, and he was showing it around at the workplace. It was a very intimate photo that she was not aware that we were seeing, and I remember speaking up and telling him that this was inappropriate. But at the time the only means to share it, because data plans weren't as good and social media hadn't caught on, was for him to bring it into the workplace and share that. I felt that that was extraordinarily invasive, and it was only 10 people seeing this.

Now billions of people can have access to these invasive images. It's very unfortunate, and it's very inappropriate. With that being said, I think anything that we can do to avoid these things from occurring, any way that we can reinforce and strengthen this bill that's been brought forward, anything that we can do to make sure that this occurs is very important.

I want to thank all members who've really done their due diligence, really read this bill thoroughly, and the member who's done a lot of research to really look into this very important issue. That's why I'll be supporting this amendment.

The Chair: Any further speakers to amendment A2?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A2 carried]

The Chair: We're back on the main bill. Any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm delighted to speak about this bill, and once again I really wanted to thank the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake for bringing this bill forward and for his acceptance of the amendment from the Member for Calgary-Hawkwood. Unlike the two previous members who've spoken, I'm from an older generation, but I do have two sons who are of the age of the Member for Calgary-Hawkwood, so this whole issue of images that may have been taken against their consent, images that may make their way onto the Internet and through various social apps, is one that has really preoccupied me as a mother because I just know how easy it is for these images to be used in ways that are either meant to dishonour the person or sometimes just – as a lot of young people do, they enjoy joking or enjoy teasing each other. I was very, very concerned about this.

Fortunately, one of my sons is a teacher. During his schooling in university they were told about the challenges if teachers do post things or are involved in any social media activity that discredits their role as teachers. Having talked a lot to my son, whom I'm hoping members will get to meet because he's coming back from teaching overseas this year – we've had many conversations about how careful he is in using social media and that he goes overboard in terms of protecting any images of himself that could be construed to be offensive to the role of teachers. But as we all know, those things happen, and I'm so glad that the member has thought to protect young people. Also, I think that the bill is really a cautionary bill for all of us, especially for young adults who, even though they're above the age of 18, may not really understand how they need to continue to protect their own images.

The other thing I wanted to mention in the House is that this bill also clearly gives victims some path for them to seek compensation and some path for them to feel that their victimization has been heard. I think that as we pass this bill and as we discuss it, we really need to remember the victims. As we mentioned in this House before, in Canada we have had a number of young persons who've been victims. I'm assuming that there are probably hundreds more who have been victimized by the inappropriate distribution of intimate images but that we don't know about because they've never gone to the police, have never gone to an adult or to others to let them know.

As I am going to vote for this bill, I'm going to remember not only the past victims, but also I'm going to really think about how this bill is going to prevent the victimization of other young persons in the future because it's going to be a caution to everyone to ensure that they do not get involved in any activities that inappropriately distribute intimate images of anyone that they know. I think that's really important, too.

Madam Chair, I am so delighted that the member has worked with all members of this House on this bill, and I'm also very delighted that as an Assembly we've recognized the importance of protecting victims from this kind of behaviour. I'm really looking forward to the enactment of this bill if the House decides to vote in favour and to how any kind of public media, any kind of communication is going to ensure that it's made very clear to people that this kind of sharing of inappropriate images is going to result in some serious punishments and some serious consequences.

I want to thank the member once again, and I'm looking forward to the House voting in favour of this bill. Thank you.

The Chair: I'll recognize Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Chair. First of all, I would like to thank my friend the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake and all of the members that have contributed to this bill. There's been so much great work that's been done in the House. It's very, very heartening.

I fully support this bill. I think it adds a critical component to online safety for all Albertans. This bill allows someone to sue a person who oversteps personal boundaries by publishing private pictures, and the bill will establish provincial tort law to allow the individual to sue another one who distributes intimate images without consent. The tort law provides compensation for people who've been injured or whose property has been damaged by the wrongdoing of others. This goes anywhere. It's a vast area of private law that has evolved into technology and social issues and has been used by a growing number of victims of crime to help them seek justice against perpetrators. It's also been at the centre of recent high-profile Canadian cases involving the abuse of children, the liability of governments for failing to protect citizens from contagious diseases and from defective medical devices.

The focus here with the tort law is that it will support both the federal and other provincial laws that address cyberbullying and in general the distribution of pictures without consent. The penalty under Bill 202 brings home some of the reality of the impact of publishing pictures without consent, and there will be fines attached. The victim could seek damages for harm done.

The School Act will also be amended by adding a clause which will allow teachers and principals the discretion to suspend a student and seek various forms of punishment. The school trustees still retain the authority to hear appeals from the student and their parents.

Of high importance for me – and the Member for Calgary-Hawkwood had also mentioned this. He was speaking about how the removal of these images is very, very difficult. So Bill C-31 at the federal level amended the Criminal Code to provide for a new offence of nonconsensual distribution of intimate images, which includes “complementary amendments to authorize the removal of such images from the Internet,” but as we know, that is still very, very difficult to accomplish, and also “the forfeiture of property used in the commission of the offence.” As you can imagine, as these pictures are published and sent out into the world, it is very, very difficult to find out where they've gone and to actually have that property returned. Well, not even returned to the person but removed so that it can't be used over and over again. It's a very important part of this legislation.

If we're teaching our youth early on about the consequences of this, we'll have a much better opportunity to make sure that at the monetary level they're hit in the pocketbook initially but will also understand the consequences should a person be able to google their name and see that this horrible piece of their personal life is still distributed across the Internet. We have to make sure that that stuff comes down.

Bill 202 is also consistent with recent legislation passed in Manitoba, which I think was brought up by one of the other hon. members. Just to be clear about that, the Intimate Image Protection Act created new tort law to address nonconsensual distribution of intimate images. This will allow a person whose intimate image was distributed without consent to sue the person who distributed the image. The Manitoba law also includes provisions similar to the federal law in that it requires the government to make supports available to assist people who have an intimate image distributed without consent.

Very, very importantly, especially with regard to what I had just mentioned previously, is that there are people who may even believe that their image is about to be distributed. That's also very important. With the instantaneous outreach of Snapchat and the various other apps that were mentioned, that I have, truthfully, no clue about, this is instant – instant – information that's put out there.

So if a person is concerned that their image may be put out there, that is a very, very important aspect of this legislation as well. This is highly proactive and allows a potential victim to head off potentially damaging situations. Assistance under the Manitoba legislation can include having an image removed from the Internet as well as information on some of the legal remedies and protection for persons concerned about the distribution of this intimate image.

What this legislation does is that it brings the focus to a new form of victimization that is no longer localized. I say “new” because it’s newer to me. Other generations it’s not so new to, but for those of us who are just wading into this with our own children and with the complexity of this, it’s really, really important that we understand that this information can go viral and can go universal in nanoseconds and can follow a victim around the world for the rest of their lives.

Can you imagine that for a young person in a developing part of their life, to have this image follow them for the rest of their lives no matter what they do? If an employer is looking up things about them, this might be a central facet of what is to learn about them in this area. So it’s one of the more important pieces of this legislation. Of course, to again mention the tragic consequences we’ve seen through digital victimization, we have people committing suicide, and we continue to mourn with their family and friends.

The other thing, Madam Chair, is that our laws have to keep pace with our world, and Bill 202 provides all Albertans with a way of seeking restitution that will hit the victimizer in the wallet. If we can start there, there’s ample opportunity to fix the other things that follow.

Madam Chair, the bill is about protecting victims, people who are having face-to-face consequences of having intimate pictures of themselves shared across the Internet. The Internet is a 24-hour ability to bully somebody, 24 hours and no safe spaces ever. I’m hoping to see that the consequences of this legislation are discussed amongst Albertans at home, around the water cooler, while you’re shopping, whenever people have conversations, that people will talk about this and have discussions about what constitutes acceptable behaviour in today’s digital world. I’m hoping that shining a spotlight on digital victimization will spark conversations to destigmatize being a victim of digital exploitation.

We all have the right to expect that what we do in private remains private unless and until we give specific permission to share. When private actions are shared without consent or knowledge, as we have seen with Amanda Todd and Rehtaeh Parsons, the consequences can be absolutely tragic. My hope is that this bill will raise awareness of the pervasiveness of the dangers of cyberbullying by actually describing specific actions that are offences under the law.

Again I’d like to thank my friend from Bonnyville-Cold Lake and the other members who have provided amendments to this legislation to strengthen it so that we can provide mechanisms of restitution to victims.

Thank you.

The Chair: I’ll recognize Calgary-North West, followed by Calgary-Elbow.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Madam Chair. This is a bill that feels very close to my heart. When I was associate minister of family and community safety, I had an opportunity to go to Vancouver and meet with Carol Todd, Amanda’s mom, as she was going through the period before they found out who the suspect was at the time in Amanda’s case. I was just out in Vancouver a week and a half ago and went for lunch with Carol. We’ve had many opportunities over the last number of years, as we’ve become good friends, to talk about what happened with Amanda, to talk about what we need to see in this country in terms of legislation, and to talk about kids and what kids go through.

You know, as the mom of a 16-, almost 17-year-old now, for those of us in the Chamber who have kids somewhere in that age group, if you’re anything like me, your kids are much smarter than you and not always interested in taking your advice. So when it comes to warnings that we have about who you’re chatting with on the Internet, often our kids will say, “Oh, my God, mom; I think I would know if I was speaking to a 40-year-old man,” except that it’s not always that easy. Our kids think they know all these things, but we need to make sure that we have these additional protections in there because, as we saw in the case with Amanda, she didn’t know who she was talking to. She assumed it was a young person. Therein lies the danger of the Internet, something that my generation didn’t have to deal with. [interjection] Exactly. My generation certainly didn’t have to deal with this.

I look at, you know, what they have to deal with now, and it’s not just the propensity of cyberbullying that happens within their own peer group that can happen in schools; it is the fact that these sorts of things then have no global boundaries. So you have no idea if someone chatting with your 16-year-old daughter is another 16-year-old girl or boy or a 50-year-old-man who lives halfway across the world. We have to really think – and I like this piece of legislation because I think it encourages us to really spend time and think about what kids face when they’re on the Internet today.

You know, if there’s one thing that I feel grateful about, it was the opportunity in my former position to speak with a lot of people who had experience in this area, who talked about the effects it had on their families and how important it was that governments listen to the families who have gone through this and understand that when we take the time to make sure we have these added protections for our children, we make our kids safer and we make our communities safer and we give parents peace of mind in knowing that this is on the books and is something there to help.

It’s also a piece that encourages us to sit down and have a conversation with our kids and to talk to them once again, even though sometimes they get very tired of having the conversation, to layer in the conversation about where they spend their time on social media and the choices they make and how those choices can end up being very scary. You know, when I look at this, I applaud this, and I applaud the member for bringing this forward.

If it does anything to spur a new conversation for those of us who are parents and our kids – and some of us are parents who have kids that aren’t quite at that point where this is becoming a discussion, but certainly it’s going to be a discussion for a lot of folks in here maybe in the distant future or the not-so-distant future. I hope that it gives these parents a better understanding of what’s happening out there on social media and the risks their children could face in the future and do face right now and that they will use that opportunity to sit down and have that conversation with their kids. Maybe the conversation at a younger age is as simple as: remember that the people that you talk to on social media aren’t necessarily who you think. Then as they get a little older, layer into that conversation not only about making sure that you make good choices but also about knowing that you have rights yourself. Whether you’re 10 years old or you’re 15 years old or you’re 18 years old, you have rights yourself.

I want to thank the member for this. I will certainly be supporting his bill and hope as well that it encourages a new level of conversation between parents and their kids about what’s happening out there on social media. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow, followed by Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Chair, and thank you to the Member for Calgary-North West for sharing her comments. Thank you in particular to the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake for bringing this forward and to the Member for Calgary-Hawwood and others for bringing forward your amendments and sharing your stories.

It's been nice to be here this afternoon as we work together as legislators across party lines, within and between different caucuses, working together for something that's very important and something that's bigger than any one of us or any of our partisan differences. It would be nice if we were able to do this a little more often, actually. I think this Assembly would work a little better, and I think Albertans would think more highly of the political process. It's nice that we're able to do that today, and let's hope it will continue for a long time to come.

Just this past weekend my daughter celebrated her 13th birthday. She celebrated with a few friends and celebrated with her first electronic device, that she now can take to school and text, I'm guessing, 3,000 or 4,000 times a day with her friends. That's just the way of the world these days. That's just the way it is. We've talked a lot in the months leading up to her birthday and her getting this new device about what is appropriate and what is not appropriate.

Now, I have a great deal of faith in my daughter. I think she, luckily, takes after her mother and is a very, very sensible young woman. She's incredibly bright, and I couldn't be more proud of her. I could spend the rest of my 10 minutes here just talking about my daughter. She might not like it, but I think she really is a remarkable person. I don't worry that she might make bad choices because she is a sensible young woman, but things happen. Things happen that are beyond the control of individuals. Certainly, things happen in school, and I'm not so naive as to think that someone in my own family might not make a poor choice at one point.

What if some things happen that are beyond your control? We all carry our phones. We all have these cameras on our phones. You know, what if images are taken that are not consensual? What if images are taken without the knowledge of the person who's in the image? Now, we know that's illegal. There is federal legislation that says that that's illegal, but what are the consequences for the people who would not only take intimate images but distribute those images without consent? That is what this bill seeks to address and why I'm such an enthusiastic supporter of this bill because it allows for civil action to be taken against someone who has distributed intimate images.

The amendments that have been brought have covered off some of the potential gaps in the legislation, and I think it's a very positive thing that we've been able to work together to do that. It also allows for school principals and others in the education system to bring consequences upon anyone who is in the school system who would distribute intimate images. I think that brings some real consequence to what is a very, very difficult thing to properly police.

I hope this bill gets sufficient media coverage, that we get sufficient coverage on social media in particular so that people know about it, so that people will think twice before they would do such a thing as sharing intimate images in spite, as a way of getting back at someone, for profit or personal gain or even just as a joke, thinking it might be sort of funny to get this out there. As we've heard in some of the stories here from other hon. members, once an image is out there – the Internet is forever – it is almost impossible to get rid of it. The only way to really, truly avoid these images being shared around is by not having them online in the first place. So knowing that there's a consequence should you do that, I think, is a very, very important way of ensuring that people maintain control over their own images and that we don't end up in these very difficult situations where people are bullied, where images are shared without consent, and people will no longer have to fear suffering the consequences. Unfortunately, some of the benefits that modern technology has brought have also brought some substantial risks and downsides and negatives.

With that, I'll again thank the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake for bringing this important bill forward and will enthusiastically support it at all stages of the bill. I encourage all of my hon. colleagues to do the same.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Madam Chair. You know, I want to reflect back, first, to kind of how we got to this bill here and to thank the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, who brought forth this bill. From the roots of it, how I sort of see why this came about, and something that I can deeply understand is that, like myself, he's a father. As much as he and I may disagree on certain principles in this House, I can acknowledge that from what I've seen, he's a great father. I reflect back to when we were in ethics and accountability and he brought his daughter in and she watched him from the gallery last summer, just kind of that bond that he likes to have with her. So I can kind of reflect back to that.

It kind of reminded me of this weekend. Actually, on Saturday I was thinking of taking my kids to Nanton because, you know, my kids have seen a lot of work the government has been doing in promoting rural Alberta, and they've seen a lot of the promotions there, so I was going to take them down to Nanton and visit the candy store and see some of the tea shops. But I found out about a sort of meeting we were going to have at the Women's Centre of Calgary to talk about Bill 2 with a lot of stakeholders. I felt it important to go, so I actually brought my kids with me. My daughter got extraordinarily shy when we were there, and she wrapped her arms around my neck – she's about two and a half – and she wouldn't let me go because she knew I would keep her safe. Now, having a nine-year-old now, I know those moments don't last forever, and it's going to be harder to keep our kids a bit more safe because they're experiencing the world, and we need to allow them the opportunity to make mistakes.

Which brings me back to, you know, where we are at with technology and alluding to the fact of the millennial, which I've talked about before. You know, I love technology. I love the fact that I can go onto the WWE Network and watch any pay-per-view for just $9.99. I enjoy the fact that I can listen to any songs I want to on Apple Music or watch Netflix and see any movie that I really want to. I can go online and search about Ukrainian history here in Alberta if I want to, and I can use my smart phone to do all these things. But the unfortunate thing around that smart phone is that as much as it's a tool, it's almost a weapon.

You know, I reflect back to when Alfred Nobel invented dynamite. He did it for the right reason. He did it because glycerine was highly volatile and people were dying transporting this material, that was used for mining, so he invented dynamite because it was more secure and people wouldn't die. In return, unfortunately, people started using it as a weapon, even though it was something that was invented for good.

As government it's our duty to ensure that we move forward with reasonable legislation that allows us to protect the citizens and our youth that are in this province. Unfortunately, technology can be used for things like voyeurism, revenge porn, nudes leaks that happen. There was a high-profile one recently with, you know, the iCloud leak. There was another high-profile one, that's been all over the news media, which was when former professional wrestler Hulk Hogan had a leak that was leaked on Gawker. Actually, some of the legislation that was in place in the United States allowed him to sue Gawker, and he actually won. So that lawsuit has finished, and I think he was able to get a big settlement and was able to get all of that information taken down, which shows that while he's still a victim of those leaks, he's able to start the healing process.

We've already said that, you know, here in Canada we've seen the high-profile case of Amanda Todd. It hurt a lot of us when we heard about this because we all think about how that could be our child or someone we love, and this led to new legislation that we saw from the federal government, moving forward to protect from these online crimes that were happening as well.

Moving forward, looking at this legislation allows us to have five main things which create a tort, or grounds for civil lawsuit, which is something that I alluded to earlier. That allows people to redeem themselves over the situation because, you know, as I've talked about, a lot of employers now are doing online searches of individuals before they hire. So I could understand that a person could have trouble seeking a new career if there was a leak, even if it happened 10 or 15 years ago, and they're a qualified professional but can't find a job because their name gets Google searched. You know, if you Google search my name, you're going to find out everything about me because mine is a pretty uncommon name.

You know, it creates broad powers to award remedies related to distribution of these images. It allows parents the power to take civil action if their children are under 18. It's important to recognize that these parents can have that opportunity to really try to protect that child long term because, as I've alluded to, there are going to be challenges for that individual in potentially seeking employment. It will allow the courts to issue bans on identifying information as well, and it will allow them to try to really pull back on some of the information that's been released online that can be very damaging to that individual.

Furthermore, it allows schools and school boards to have some disciplinary measures because a lot of these mistakes, unfortunately, happen with a lot of youth. Sometimes there are situations where someone has made a mistake and has shared this information, and the person who has shared that explicit photo doesn't fully comprehend the impact that it's had.

While our work is not done with this legislation – there's important work that we need to do educating youth and educating our kids about this – I think this is a very important step that we're taking, and I want to thank all members of this House who have contributed to it as well.

The Chair: Any other questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to rise to speak to Bill 202, put forward by the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake. I want to thank him for bringing this bill forward as well as the Member for Calgary-Hawkwood for his helpful addition to the bill.

Today is one of those sometimes too rare days where we actually manage to find agreement among all parties and work fruitfully for the people of Alberta. We seem to have had a few of those lately, and it certainly is a pleasant change in tone from the usual combateness of this place that we all love so much. This bill is the kind of thing that Albertans want to see as a concrete step forward for protecting people, in particular young people, who are most likely to fall victim to the nonconsensual sharing of intimate images.

This bill will create a tort, giving people the power to sue and seek compensation when intimate images are taken of them and are shared, normally online, without their consent. A lot of people have stood here and raised their own experiences as mothers and fathers as reasons for wanting to support this bill, and as someone who has recently joined the club, I can appreciate more than ever where they're coming from.

You know, I'm the youngest member on the opposition side of the House, which makes me significantly older still than the youngest member on the government side of the House, but our generation, those of us in our early 30s, grew up with lots of opportunities to get into trouble where cameras were more readily available than any generation before us. Younger people today are in a whole other category when it comes to the availability of cameras and the ease with which images can be distributed online now. I can only imagine the trouble that members of this House would be in if we had easily accessible cameras on us 24 hours a day as kids and the ability to redistribute images. We can just imagine that one day there'll probably be a President of the United States who has very embarrassing photos of parties and drinking while they were in college. In fact, we may have already had those.

The hon. government whip actually spoke very well to this at an early stage of the debate, where it was not the exact kind of case, you know, but where he perhaps imbibed a bit much as a teenager and found himself the object of hurtful hilarity. I think many people can sympathize with that and how hurtful that was on a smaller level. But a video like that taken in our generation: as hurtful as that might be, it's not on the Internet.

As the hon. leader of the party stated, what happens on the Internet stays on the Internet. When young people get into trouble either consensually or nonconsensually with these kinds of things today, it lasts forever. When people put this kind of thing online – we colloquially refer to it as revenge porn – for whatever reasons they have, it's not a temporary laugh at someone's expense. It is deeply hurtful and stays with them forever and can seriously affect what they do going forward. You can just imagine that if a young girl was fearing that this was out there, she might be much less willing to take big risks in life and do something like run for public office knowing that someone could take those images and use them against her. So she might not reach her full potential in life.

We need to create the strongest disincentives possible against exactly this kind of action. You know, once something is posted online like that, there are ways to try to get it taken down, but the process is long and expensive and arduous and never truly and fully complete, and the damage is done. We have to build our laws in such a way as to prevent this from happening in the first place.

I'm so pleased to see that members of the government, the Official Opposition, the third party, and the two independent members are in unanimous agreement about this bill. In fact, we've had a friendly amendment from the Member for Calgary-Hawkwood which I think improves it. We're going to make sure that those who share these images and distribute them are also subject to penalties in addition to those who post them originally.

So I won't belabour the point too much. Members on all sides have spoken adequately to this bill. I want to thank the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake for bringing it forward and all members for supporting it.

The Chair: Any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill?

Ms Fitzpatrick: Madam Chair, I stand in support of this bill. How could I not? I'll begin by thanking the member, first of all, for having the conversation with your daughter and then for putting the bill forward.

As the member is aware, in my previous career I worked in the field of corrections for over 30 years, and this was a topic of conversation with a number of my colleagues on a number of occasions. We discussed how easily it could happen and how devastating it would be to the person being victimized. We discussed the difficulty previously of knowing that these images were being shared without consent and recognized that now it's a little easier to track and find out that they're happening, because I come from that older generation.

Now I'll share a little story about my childhood and how one perceives things. This is a good story but shows how easily young people can get caught up with the stories of others. I think often about myself as a child. I grew up in a family that had many members, all of whom had what Newfoundlanders call the gift of the gab. All of my uncles were renowned storytellers. I remember several of my uncles coming from away to visit the family back in Newfoundland. When they visited, there was always a conversation around the kitchen table, which went on for hours. It really was a kitchen table party. We as children were absolutely hanging on every word of the stories that were being told. Bed was out of the question because even if we were sent to bed, we would very quietly arrive back on the stair to listen to the rest of the story.

I realized, as I grew older, that each uncle tried to out-storytell his brothers. We were certainly entertained, but having said that, I realize that the stories were certainly embellished. There was always an element of truth in the story, but it was stretched to the very limit to make a more interesting story.

I've led with this story because, as I learned through my own life experiences, whether we meet others in person or online, the story that is told is most often accepted as truthful. We expect others to act as we would act. I've also learned that, in fact, many others do not act in this way. As an adult, if I could be taken in by a story that was shared with me, leading me to trust another person, then how much more easily are children and younger adults taken in?

Once taken in, it is but a short step to sharing intimate things, whether that is about your feelings, intimate details about your life, or perhaps pictures. At first those pictures may be just a picture of you and the dog, but eventually the sharing may move to more intimate pictures or pictures or videos taken without one's knowledge. Sharing something, especially something intimate, would be with an expectation of privacy. You would not even think of asking that it not be shared because that's your expectation, that if you're sharing something private, it will remain private.

However, if it is shared, your privacy is breached. You have been violated even if you're not aware of it. Now, with the advent of the technology we have available at our fingertips, this violation becomes public very quickly. The level of damage which is done through the commission of this offence is unfathomable. If you are an adult and this happens to you, how do you feel? When you are e-mailing or facebooking with a friend, is it your friend, or has your account been hacked?

I would suspect that you are reasonably careful about what you say or share on any electronic device. My grandson is about the same age as the Member for Calgary-Hawkwood. Perhaps he is sick of me harping on him to be careful about what he says, receives, or shares on social media. Like the Member for Calgary-North West, all I can do is share with him my cautions. I have shared the stories of other persons who have been drawn into this quagmire of violation.

The question for me is always: why would somebody do this? However, they do. Certainly, one can take action when you find out this is happening. Punitive consequences are one response. Any monetary gain by the perpetrator must be removed, and it should be used for the plaintiff. One may never heal from such a violation as the images remain in the Ethernet forever.

I absolutely applaud the member for bringing this forward, and I certainly support it with all my heart. Thank you.

The Chair: Any other questions, comments, or amendments on this bill?

Seeing none, you're ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The remaining clauses of Bill 202 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you. I move that the committee rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Rosendahl: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill with some amendments: Bill 202. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

- Q9. Mr. Panda:
How many new businesses have been created or financed by Alberta Innovates, Alberta Innovates: Bio Solutions, Alberta Innovates: Health Solutions, Alberta Innovates: Energy and Environment Solutions, and Alberta Innovates: Technology Solutions in each fiscal year from 2014-15 to 2016-17?

Alberta Innovates

- Q10. Mr. Panda:
Was any technology commercialized by Alberta Innovates, Alberta Innovates: Bio Solutions, Alberta Innovates: Health Solutions, Alberta Innovates: Energy and Environment Solutions, and Alberta Innovates: Technology Solutions in each fiscal year from 2014-15 to 2016-17, and if so, what revenue was generated for each product?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to seek unanimous consent to call it 5 o'clock and proceed immediately to Motion 504 on the Order Paper, notwithstanding the order as set out by the draw provided for in Standing Order 41(1), and that Motion 503 be called for consideration on the next available Monday.

Motions Other than Government Motions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

School Nutrition Programs

504. Ms Miller moved:
Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to consider expanding the number of communities that are served by school nutrition programs.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Madam Speaker, for the opportunity to rise today and speak to a concern that families in my constituency and Alberta have, access to nutritious food for their children. I would also like to thank the hon. Minister of Education for his announcement last week regarding the expansion of Alberta's school nutrition program for the 2017-18 school year. The additional investment of $10 million for this program is yet another example of our government's commitment to improving the lives of Alberta families and children. We are all aware that Alberta's economy has been in a difficult position, and this side of the House is keenly aware of the effect this is having on Albertans. Let me be clear. The previous government's failure to diversify our economy after 44 years in government is adding pressure to Albertans' pocketbooks. That's exactly why investments in programs such as expanding Alberta's school nutrition program are so vital.

Back in the early '90s, when my children were in school, was when I first observed the large number of children coming to school with little or no lunch. I was part of a nutrition committee for 120 kindergarten students. Our budget was 12 and a half cents a day per child to provide a small snack. The problem was that about a third of the children were relying on that snack to substitute for both breakfast and lunch. Through generous donations from the community we were able to provide a substantial meal for the children.

During this same period my six-year-old daughter came home from school one day quite upset. She asked me if it was okay to tell a white lie. I asked her to explain, and she told me that one of her friends had brought the same carrot for lunch and didn't eat it. She said that the carrot was black. My daughter asked if it was okay to take extra lunch every day and share with this girl. She said that the girl was embarrassed when she was sent to the office to get a sandwich. My daughter wanted to tell a white lie. She wanted to tell her friend that she would be in trouble if she didn't eat all her food and that her friend should help her. The next day and every day that my kids were in school, they all took double lunches to share with other students.

That's why this motion is important. It is my goal that every community and school in the province have access to this program because on this side of the House, Madam Speaker, we are ensuring that life is more affordable for everyone. On this side of the House we are making practical changes that are making life better for Albertans. The opposition would cut $9 billion out of the budget, meaning that vital programs like this would be on the chopping block along with increases in school fees and larger classrooms. That is why I'm standing here today. I am advocating on behalf of all my constituents who have reached out to me and have shared their concern with me to ensure that all children who are unable to receive healthy, nutritious foods have access to them.

I was pleased when the pilot program was introduced not only because it addressed another campaign promise our government had made but because the pilot program was potentially the start of a larger framework. As I've seen the program roll out, I am confident in supporting not only the recent announcement but in urging the government to continue measuring its progress, successes, and challenges so that this program becomes accessible to all children and families who need it, because on this side we want to make life better for Albertans.

Madam Speaker, let me tell you why I'm confident in supporting the school nutrition program and why I want the government to consider continued expansion. Numerous studies have shown the link between students having access to nutritious food and their success. We have a duty as members of this Legislature to ensure that our children have the tools they need to ensure success. Given that the first year of this program is expected to see approximately 520,000 breakfasts, 530,000 lunches, and 490,000 snacks for students, I am confident that many families and children who need the support are receiving it.

As I mentioned, with the expansion to the remaining 46 schools our government is fulfilling a campaign promise. Not only are children receiving food that is improving their outcomes, but many families are learning about nutritious foods that they can prepare easily and cheaply at home. I am pleased to see that this aspect has been incorporated into Alberta's school nutrition program because establishing strong health promotion and healthy dietary habits is vital to promoting long-term health for families and communities.

This is why this program, which follows the Alberta nutrition guidelines for children and youth, is so important. It ensures that the food students receive is the right food for their growing bodies and minds. We are holding schools accountable by having school boards demonstrate that their program follows the Alberta nutrition guidelines to ensure effectiveness and protection of public dollars.

We are aware that Albertans are resilient and hard-working, so by providing families with information on nutritious foods, families are becoming empowered. Participating school authorities are required to include a nutrition education component as part of their program. The fact is that when parents are involved in nutrition programs, it has a lasting effect on children, so we need to ensure parents also have the tools to support their children by engaging in healthy eating.

We have already seen examples of children and youth empowerment because of this program. For example, the culinary arts students at J.A. Williams high school prepare and deliver lunches for the Vera M. Welsh elementary school in Lac La Biche, which means students are earning credits, gaining valuable work experience, and learning about healthy eating habits.

Our government is making life better, even in a tough economy, and ensuring programs like Alberta's school nutrition program remain vibrant. As the hon. Premier stated last week, we know students can't focus in class if they have an empty stomach. Giving students access to a daily nutritious meal not only ensures they have the fuel they need to get through the school day; it also helps develop the skills that ensure lifelong healthy nutrition. That's how we are working to make life better for Alberta families.

While the opposition doesn't share our priorities and almost always opposes policies that will make life better for Albertans, I encourage them and all members of this Legislature to support this motion and ensure all children in Alberta have access to nutritious, healthy foods.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Red Deer-South, could I just confirm that you are moving this motion?

Ms Miller: Yes. I am moving this motion.

The Deputy Speaker: Motion 504, correct?

Ms Miller: Yes.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak in favour of the motion. I will be interested to hear what my hon. colleagues from the Official Opposition have to say as well. It would surprise me very much if there's a member of this Assembly that doesn't support expanding the number of communities served by school nutrition programs. It is something, I think, that is essential and fundamental.

You know, we're here on private members' day to talk about private members' business. We've just come from, I think, a very productive discussion about Bill 202, very cohesive, from the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, and I think that we agree as members that together, irrespective of which side of the House we sit on, which party we represent, we are going to work together to do things that are important for Albertans.

While I do absolutely support this motion, I would say that I am disappointed in the partisan tone that the member took, repeatedly taking shots at the Official Opposition and those of us on this side, repeatedly parroting the government's catchphrase for this particular budget cycle. I think that that really doesn't serve the public interest in terms of what we're trying to achieve here. It takes away from the important issue of school nutrition.

While I support the principle behind this motion – and I will vote in favour of it – my question is: is the government's path the only possible path to follow to achieve the outcomes? Is the government's sole job to build community? I think and I would argue that government typically doesn't do a great job in building community itself. I think it can create some of the structures to allow that to happen, but ultimately it's about community, and it's about the people in the community that make it happen.

Let me just get to first principles here, and that is that I think it is remarkable the impact that going to school hungry has on the ability of students to learn, which exacerbates and furthers a cycle of poverty, which means certain groups of students do not learn as well as others and therefore find themselves, as they become adults, in a situation where they do not have the educational tools that they need to succeed, to break that cycle of poverty.

School nutrition is really, really important in ensuring that every kid in this province has the equality of opportunity, has a chance for a great life. That's why I believe in public education. I think a high-quality public education system allows for that equality of opportunity, not equality of result, necessarily. Ultimately, everybody needs to carve their own path, and you ought to be rewarded for your own honest efforts, but that's the whole idea behind the social contract that I think we represent here in this Assembly, that everyone ought to have the same chance in life. Making sure that you don't go to school hungry, making sure that you have a great education system: that is our job.

But the question is: how? How do we go about doing this? When the government comes in with a plan that's $10 million for pilot projects, which works out to, as I understand it, roughly $250,000 per school per year, when you have organizations like Brown Bagging for Calgary's Kids – they provide 3,200 meals a day across 205 schools in Calgary and area. Using the metric of $250,000 per school, if we were to multiply that by 205 schools served by Brown Bagging, that would be $51 million per year. Brown Bagging for Calgary's Kids serves 3,200 students a day in 205 schools, and they do that for $1.3 million, one-fiftieth, literally, of the cost that this program would take.

Now, that isn't to say that there's no place for a government-funded program. It isn't to say that there's no place for ensuring that gaps are filled. It isn't to say that the Brown Bagging model would work perfectly everywhere else in the province. But I think it's incumbent on government to understand that there are volunteers willing to step up to help their neighbours, to help their community. That is community building.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Organizations like Brown Bagging for Calgary's Kids – and there are others; I Can for Kids is another one that I know about in Calgary, and I'm sure that there are other organizations elsewhere in the province that follow a similar model – meet a need. They identify who needs help, and they provide that help. They don't create a need; they meet a need. They understand who needs that help, and they provide it, and they provide it in a way that engages further community members in solving a problem. There are hundreds and hundreds and hundreds of volunteers for Brown Bagging who put together the lunch packages, there are school nutrition education programs – and that is highly, highly successful – and they do all of that without a dime of government support.

Now, there are cases – and I think this is one of them – where there's a role for the government to play in helping ensure that these sorts of programs are applied equally throughout the province. I applaud the government for going down the path of at least trying to address this issue.

There is a need to address this issue so long as what the government does actually addresses the problem and is focused on addressing the issue, not on furthering a particular world view on how things ought to work, not about just creating more jobs for government workers, not just about creating a larger footprint of government. You have organizations that work well in the not-for-profit sector relying on volunteer effort to help bring costs down and keep quality high. Those are models the government ought to be looking at. Be very, very careful about displacing with government services any of these sorts of models that exist because they're incredibly efficient, incredibly effective. They do tremendous work, and not only do they solve that problem of child hunger, but they build community. They build capacity in our community. They channel that natural, true Alberta instinct of helping our neighbours. They are remarkable people doing remarkable things in our community.

I will support this motion because I would be surprised if any member of this House would vote against a motion that resolves that the Assembly “urge the government to consider expanding the number of communities that are served by school nutrition programs.” That should be an imperative of this government and of any other. The question that is essential here is on how we go about doing that. My answer to that question is that it's not either/or. It is not just community and not just not-for-profit, and it is not just for government. It should be both.

There is a need for both, but I urge the government to be very careful in how you go about doing that, to not cause structures that are expensive and clumsy and bureaucratic that may not fully solve the problem when you have very, very efficient and highly effective organizations that are doing this work already in Alberta that have been created by hard-working, dedicated, thoughtful, community-minded people. Ask those people their opinion and their perspective. I hope the government has done that. If and when you are asking for the opinion and perspective of people who are already doing this work, I really hope you're listening to those folks because they're tremendous people, and they do great, great work.

I hope that we don't get bogged down in too much partisanship. That's part of this job that bothers me, that we get caught up in this stuff and the partisan side. I really urge the government to make sure that your focus is in the right place, that the focus is on building community and making sure that we're actually solving the problem in the most efficient and effective way possible.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I really want to start off by just thanking the Member for Red Deer-South for bringing this motion forward. I've had many conversations with her over the course of working with her, and I know that she's been a tireless advocate and volunteer. She's worked in schools, she has volunteered in schools over a very long time, and she has seen the effects of hunger on children personally. That story that she told in her speech was not the only one that I've heard her tell. I know that she knows that this affects students personally every day, so I thank her for her work in putting this motion forward.

I wanted to speak to this motion because all three schools that are currently participating in the pilot in Calgary are in my riding. The three schools that are in my riding are Holy Family school, St. Peter school, and Marlborough elementary. I've had the opportunity to visit those schools and see the lunch program in action and see that it is really making a difference in the lives of students. I was speaking to one grade 6 class at Holy Family about government, and, you know, one of the things that the students brought up – it wasn't me – was, “Hey, isn't that lunch program that we are getting now part of something that you are doing?” and I was able to answer, “Yes, it is.”

I did have an opportunity just to shoot a quick e-mail off to the principal of one of those schools to ask him how it was going in preparation for this motion today, and he sent me back just a quick response. He said:

Things are going great . . . There have been minimal issues which have been easily resolved. We are holding a Family Cook Night on Tuesday so hopefully that will be a success. We continue to have a fantastic relationship with Meals on Wheels and their food is well-received by our students. By all accounts, the food is good, children are eating more nutritious meals at school, they are seeking fruits and veggies at home that they never had before, their behavior at school is more settled and focused. Everyone is happy! As we do our year-end assessments in the coming weeks, I am hopeful we will see big gains. I look forward to comparing the students' achievement from year to year.

Thanks for checking in.

That was from the principal of one of the schools. By all accounts it's going very well, and I hope to be able to drop by soon to see how it's going further.

I do just want to mention in this, prior to what the Member for Calgary-Elbow said, that many of the school nutrition programs are partnering with local nonprofits to be able to deliver the programs in an effective way. I know that in Calgary there have been lots of nonprofits who have been working with schools all along to be able to provide these kinds of services. When looking at the pilot program and looking at the most efficient way to do things through this extra spending and to be able to bring nutrition programs to more schools, many of the school programs have partnered with nonprofits such as Meals on Wheels, which is one of the partners in my riding. Really, these nutrition programs in my riding are part of what I consider and see to be a burgeoning interest in food and in food security and in healthy eating because people are recognizing that the more we eat healthy, the better outcomes we're going to have for everyone.

In my community I'm seeing more community gardens popping up. The Albert Park, Radisson Heights community has a community garden. It's a neighbourhood that has a high population of renters. A community garden is helping them to grow food and be more food secure in their neighbourhood.

The Alex Community Food Centre is a wonderful establishment in the Member for Calgary-Fort's riding that encourages healthy eating, healthy cooking. It teaches people to cook healthily. People can come and have community lunches on Wednesdays.

Also, the Mosaic primary care network recognizes that food security and nutrition is an issue in east Calgary. They have a lot of programs that help teach people to cook and eat healthily and have nutritionists on staff.

The school nutrition program is really a piece in a whole movement of food and food security and recognizing that people are better off when they're eating more healthily.

One other really important thing that I think the Member for Red Deer-South mentioned was the nutrition curriculum that comes along with this program. Part of the program is ensuring that kids are learning about healthy eating in addition to eating healthily. Now, I know as a teacher that for years we've had healthy food, nutrition programming in school. You know, you learn about the Canada food guide, and you learn what you're supposed to be eating every day, but to have lessons about healthy eating separated from actual healthy eating doesn't always balance out particularly well. The nutrition curriculum component is really important, but seeing the food happening and kids being able to eat and learn how to cook healthy foods and things like having a family cook night really work together to create the environment for students to be able to eat healthier in the long run.

I was a former junior high school teacher. The kids know what's healthy. Kids know. You can ask them. They know what they should be eating, but quite often they come back at lunchtime with, you know, a Slurpee, like, a very large Slurpee, and a bag of ketchup chips, and that's what they were planning to have for lunch. It's delicious, absolutely. But when you have to try and teach math after a bunch of 13-year-olds have just consumed that much sugar, it can be really problematic. Any teacher knows this. They know that the kind of nutrition kids have fundamentally affects how they're learning in class.

You know, I used to . . .

The Speaker: Hon. members, do you suppose we should continue to serve the sugar in the coffee shop back here before coming to the Legislature?

Ms Luff: Maybe that's the problem. Maybe we need to be consuming healthier beverages here at work.

Yeah. There's really a limited window of when kids learn well. I was always happy on days when I had PE first thing because kids would come in and we'd exercise for 45 minutes, and then I'd have two periods of math and science right after exercise, where kids were, like, really focused, and they learned really, really well. Then that same two periods of math and science that I had after lunch, after kids had spent 45 minutes drinking pop and other, you know, unhealthy things – the difference between the learning that the kids in the morning did and the kids in the afternoon did was profound.

I would like to just mention that I think moving this program – and when we expand it, expanding it into junior high schools and high schools to give kids a reason to stay at school over the lunch break, to eat a healthy meal. It might encourage them to eat more healthily, and also they will be able to learn better after lunch. You know, just from personal experience I think that's important.

Also, I really appreciated that the focus of this pilot was on areas of high socioeconomic need. We really do have an amazing public school system in Alberta, and it educates all of our children in an incredible fashion, in an excellent fashion, but it's absolutely no secret that some schools deal with more difficult circumstances than others. There are schools with high ESL populations, schools with higher populations of students on IPPs. There are schools in my riding that don't have parent fundraising societies, that aren't able to provide those extras that so many schools have. We also know that there are schools where higher proportions of students are hungry, schools where the lunch that a student gets at school might be the only healthy and nutritionally balanced meal that they get all day.

It's no secret to me the inequalities between schools have very little to do with curriculum, they have very little to do with teacher quality, but they have a lot to do with student poverty. It has a lot to do with issues that arise from poverty, and this is the main reason why every year when the Fraser Institute comes out with its school ranking report, it drives me absolutely crazy. I have to explain all of the things that they don't include in that report when they're ranking schools.

It's also the reason why this government is committed to addressing root inequalities that lead to a cycle of poverty. The school nutrition program is one in a series of things that we're doing to try and address root causes of poverty. We have created the Alberta child tax benefit. We're raising minimum wage. We're freezing university tuition. We're piloting affordable quality child care, which I'm also getting in my riding, which I am also excited about. And, yes, we are also providing school lunch. These things in concert are things that really help to lift children out of poverty and help to improve their outcomes.

Numerous studies link quality nutrition to the ability to learn because if you're hungry and if you don't have the right vitamins, you can't learn. Many differences in outcomes for kids are linked to poverty, and when you address poverty, you improve outcomes because the truth of the matter is that social issues affect economic issues, and a thing like a nutritious lunch can make all of the difference. In concert with all of the other initiatives that I mentioned, school lunch can make a big difference.

So I'm absolutely in support of this motion to expand the school nutrition program. I've seen how it's working in schools in my riding, and I anticipate that schools all across the province will begin to see the benefits from this. We are working in concert with nonprofits that were already providing this service to be able to do it in the most efficient manner. If it helps kids to learn, it's going to improve their outcomes. It's going to lead to a better future for all of us.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to read out the motion. "Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to consider expanding the number of communities that are served by school nutrition programs."

I, first of all, wanted to thank the Member for Red Deer-South for bringing this forward. Thank you very much. I'm honoured, of course, to rise and speak to Motion 504 regarding school nutrition programs. Just to be clear, there's a lot of misleading commentary with regard to feeding hungry children, and I'm pretty sure that I can speak on behalf of everybody in this Chamber that we understand the importance of ensuring that children are well fed. Let me be clear.

Many of us here are parents from all sorts of socioeconomic backgrounds. We all want the same things for our children and as parents the ability for our children to grow up healthy, safe, and overcome challenges, reach the potential that is inherently within them to do so. Research may suggest all these things; so does parenting. When children go to school with a full belly, they will obviously perform better, and this in turn will help them achieve in school and in life.

As an adult, even in this space working in this job for the last two years, I can't tell you how many times I've come into this Chamber hangry, right? That's not because somebody didn't give me the opportunity to eat. I just didn't find the time. I think I'm pretty much common sense. I could probably figure it out, to go and have an apple but just didn't do it, to my own detriment. Even with that, absolutely, the imperativeness of making sure that children understand that they don't fall into the cycle of the things that I do to myself and my body – my own son is like that, too. We are the kind of people that once we get a project in our minds, we'll just go the entire day without even looking at food, let alone hydrating. These are life skills that are very important, that can be taught at a school level with regular intervention, with making sure food is there in between classes and, like you were saying to the member, not having pop necessarily versus other good choices. There are lots of things that we can do. But let me be clear. We are all in agreement here about that.

One of the things that's important when we talk about the role for the province in this issue is actually not only just talking about nutrition and about what it is that children need, but we need to also be part of the solution that empowers local school boards, as the hon. member had mentioned earlier. Now, local school boards already to a large degree – and kudos to them – explore various ways that children and youth may be helped, especially when it comes to nutrition. There are so many school boards that are already doing these kinds of things, and I would like to thank them and also the other community organizations that rally around families in all sorts of areas of socioeconomic distress.

For example, we've heard stories about the money being used to enable high school students to learn how to cook while at the same time providing nutritious meals to other children within the school system. Now, these programs are not necessarily about food and bellies. If I understand this correctly, the dollars that are going into this are to expand the number of communities that are served by a nutrition program, not necessarily putting food in bellies. So if that's what we're talking about, we have to make sure that communities, school boards, and everybody is involved to make sure that we rally around these kids. This is an excellent example of how we can use funds to meet several different needs, from ensuring that children who need a meal in the morning are fed and ensuring that the youth learn about these healthy choices and learn about becoming more self-sufficient by teaching them how to cook.

As far as I understand it, too, the money can also be used to fund partnerships with communities and organizations in order to best meet the needs of children. These partnerships that are involving the community are an inherent part of how we make sure nutrition programs are working and providing what it is that we're wanting to get into the school system.

One organization – I'm sorry to repeat it again, but I will for the sake of this amazing group that I have a great deal of admiration for – is the Brown Bagging for Calgary's Kids. They work in partnership with Calgary schools every day to make and deliver free healthy lunches to students who would otherwise go hungry. This is an excellent example of exactly what this motion should entail and should promote. That cost every single day is one dollar, one dollar per meal, and is supported by literally thousands of volunteers. When you have community buy-in into an area of need, where children need food, where it's absolutely necessary to make sure that those kids have food in their bellies, you will have a sustainable amount of people, community buy-in, involvement, and dollars to make sure that those kids aren't only getting fed this year but for 15 years down the road if that's what's necessary.

When the government works as a partner to support a community and to strengthen society, that's what makes Alberta better. Food in the bellies: this is what we're talking about, and there's no reason for government services to compete with the community services when collaboration, obviously, would mean best results. This would also further empower these organizations to meet the needs of the communities that they're so invested in and have knowledge of. By collaborating with the communities that are actually showing that they have this ability, you already have insight into communities and what their needs are. This is an efficient use of dollars, an efficient use of manpower, and making sure that kids are getting fed.

There is such a great potential with this motion, Mr. Speaker, and I have some questions, like always. These revolve around the government's recent announcements last week. I think we just need some answers. For example, the 14 school boards that were part of the pilot were receiving $250,000, but the remaining 46 school boards are going to get a reduced amount of $141,000. Why is there this disparity of funds? Is this based on socioeconomic? Like, how was that decided? One school board may have more schools than another, so I'm very interested in understanding why there is a disparity in those funds. Obviously, a good meal will help our children in their studies.

I also have a question about whether or not the Ministry of Education is the right place to run this program. Would it be more feasible or even more efficient if the program ran out of, for example, Health or Children's Services? I'm just thinking out loud as to whether there is an opportunity to also look within other ministries to continue ideas on how this funding would work and be sustainable.

I also mentioned before – and I will reiterate this as many times as I can through this debate – the ability to collaborate in supporting community organizations and nonprofits, not work against them, to continue the good work that they're already doing on this issue.

Another question I have is: what mechanisms are in place to ensure the integrity of the program? The hon. member had mentioned that there is a humongous amount of oversight to make sure that the dollars are going to where the program is going. How are you ensuring the integrity of the program, and are you collecting data on metrics to make sure that these children are actually being helped out in the manner that we want to see them helped out?

Also, the studies and assessments that have been done and are being done to ensure that the assistance is being allocated where it's most needed: is that a priority of this program? As the other hon. member mentioned, these pilot programs were put into high areas of need. Is the idea to continue on with that process, or is there a larger mechanism that's going to come out as a result of this?

How do you look at incorporating parents into this program and ensuring that they also have tools and resources as well? The member was saying that children were coming into the school and having these nutritious meals and then going home and demanding that at home. Well, for a parent that may not be able to afford that, it is a tremendously difficult thing for a mom or a dad to potentially be able to say: I'm sorry; we can't afford that in our household. As we all know, there are many families out there that are struggling right now. Are you going to also incorporate into your programs making sure that parents are involved with that to make sure that this is a collaboration between children and parents so that children and parents also understand what they're able to do within the means that they have in place?

Mr. Speaker, I also wanted to reiterate what I said at the beginning. All of us here want what's best for our children. To say anything else is nothing less than divisive. We all care deeply about them not only just because they're our children, but this represents the future of our province. I mean, obviously, I support the consideration requested in this motion. I hope and trust that some of these questions that I raise today will be thoughtfully considered by the government should this motion be passed, and I hope that all hon. members here will be encouraged to also ask additional questions so that we have a truly robust conversation and that we can actually have a conversation. I'm saying this. If the government chooses to politicize this issue, ultimately that's the government's prerogative and you can take responsibility for that, but I would hope that this motion is ultimately about the children and less about politics.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to thank the Member for Red Deer-South for putting forward this motion. I'm so proud to be part of a government that is making life more affordable for Albertan families. By expanding the school nutrition program, our government is fulfilling another campaign promise and ensuring that children and families struggling to have access to nutritious food will have it.

I don't think that any child should have to go to school hungry because if you're hungry, it's hard to focus, and that would affect your grades and overall learning. As the Member for Red Deer-South has mentioned, there have been numerous studies that have shown the links between students having access to nutritious food and their success. We have a duty as legislators to make sure that the children of this province are healthy and are enjoying their educational experience.

I would like to talk about how this has helped my constituents in Calgary-Bow. Back in February I was happy to visit a school in my riding that was approved for the school nutrition program. The Member for Calgary-Hawkwood also joined me at Bowcroft elementary school to chat with the students and faculty about the benefits of this program. We sat down with the students and talked about how the food was not only delicious but also helped them stay focused.

There was one particular student that stood out to me, Trinity. She is a grade 5 student at Bowcroft, and she was telling me that she is very passionate about helping others in Bowness. Bowness is very community oriented. There are many volunteers that help with many different things. There is something going on every day in Bowness. One of the things that I love is that we have an annual Christmas dinner that feeds around 500 to 1,000 people, so it's quite impressive. Trinity actually saved up all her Christmas money that she got and donated it to the Bowness Community Association. I just thought that was amazing, and I just want to thank her again for her efforts on that.

You know, I think that not only is this nutrition program helping feed our students, but it's also teaching them life lessons. I think that seeing the government come through and help others and having volunteers come in and help feed students every day shows Trinity that it's important to help others, and I think that's why she did what she did.

I've also had conversations with Principal Rudy Stein about how this program has made a difference for the students at Bowcroft. She was telling me that there were many times where students would come to her office and ask if she had any food for them, and oftentimes teachers would have to buy food with money from their own pockets to make sure that students at least had something in their stomachs. She was extremely grateful for this program and thanked our government for putting this pilot program forward.

I would like to commend the principal for her actions to help students at Bowcroft stay healthy. They actually just put in 17 stationary bikes, or Spark bikes, with the intent of helping kids who are feeling restless or frustrated. Students have said that hopping on a stationary bike for about 10 minutes makes them feel calmer and helps them focus better on their studies. I think that maybe that's something we could try here in the Legislature. That aside, Bowcroft is actually the only school in Calgary that has tried this initiative, but I really hope that other schools will follow along.

I think it's safe to say that exercise and eating healthy helps children do better in school, and it also strengthens our communities. I'm just so proud to stand here and say that our government is making life better for all Albertans, even in tough economic times. Our government won't cut vital services like this one, unlike the opposition, that would have cut $9 billion out of the budget. Not only would that have increased school fees; it also would have cut this program. I'm glad that our government has Albertans' backs.

I would like to again thank the Member for Red Deer-South for putting this very important motion forward, and I encourage everyone to vote for it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I would like to thank the Member for Red Deer-South for bringing forward Motion 504, urging the government to consider expanding the number of communities that are served by school nutrition programs.

Mr. Speaker, I was very happy that a school in my constituency of Red Deer-North, Fairview elementary, was a recipient of the school nutrition pilot program. I believe that the first provincially funded lunch in that school was served on December 12 of last year. I have been very fortunate to be able to visit the school over the lunch hour once a month since the program was first rolled out.

I have spoken with the principal and staff, who shared how pleased they are with the program. They talked about the difference in the children's lunch hour and their school day. Some of the students in this elementary school did not come to school with a lunch, and we all know that we cannot learn when our stomachs are hungry. Absenteeism numbers are now better, and the staff believe that the reason is directly because of the school nutrition program. They believe that some parents felt that they would get into trouble for sending their children to school without a lunch, so they kept their children home. Now that students are attending more days in school, grades are up. Mr. Speaker, it cannot get any better than that.

I have thoroughly enjoyed spending lunchtime with the students at Fairview school over the past few months. The students love the program. They love trying something that they have never been served before. Some of the students had never tried spaghetti or even celery. The program is teaching the students about the Canadian health food guide and the importance of healthy choices. Mr. Speaker, the children tell stories of going home and teaching their families about healthy and inexpensive choices. I polled the students and asked them what their favourite menu items are, and I was told: boiled eggs, green peppers, and, by far, smoothie days. All healthy choices, I might add.

Mr. Speaker, I couldn't be more proud to be part of a government that is making life more affordable for our province's families. As a government we have an obligation to ensure that children and families struggling to have access to nutritious food will have it.

Again I thank the member for bringing this motion forward, and I encourage all in the House today to vote in favour of this motion.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to get up to speak in support of the motion. As many members know, I was an educational assistant for many years. One of the jobs that I oversaw in a lot of the different schools that I worked with was nutrition.

That wasn't because it was mandated by the IPPs, which is part of the individualized support programs that you do for students with disabilities to make sure that their learning is there, but it was because the nutrition aspect prevented that educational work from being conducted. It usually looked like a behavioural outburst or something like that, in which case I knew that that child needed to be fed before we could even talk about being educated.

I know that a program like this, especially when it comes to expanding it to other communities, allows the parent groups and the involvement of community to really be about the enhancement of education for the needs of communities. Food is a basic need that everyone has, and we know that from Maslow's hierarchy of needs. We know that in order to make sure that everyone has opportunities and has equal access to those opportunities, we need to put those resources in place.

I know there are many organizations that help with the nutritional supports in schools. But in many cases and in many situations throughout my experience as an educational assistant it came down to creative solutions. It came down to sometimes funding it myself with teachers. It came down to recognizing that sometimes those students did have food from home, but sometimes it was mouldy, and sometimes they would hide it because they didn't want to eat it.

At the end of the day, Mr. Speaker, something like this is incredibly important. I think for communities that experience multiple, various pressures of marginalization from being immigrants, from being a person of colour, or for indigenous communities, there are a whole lot of reasons why it's important to make sure that the public school board system and the boards have the ability to address the local needs. Putting a program in and expanding the nutritional support program does that.

I've heard throughout the debate, you know, to not create in this a partisan issue. I think, from our perspective, that it's not about creating a partisan issue out of it. But the reality still exists that in the vacuum of information that we don't have as to what would not make the cutting block in the opposition's cuts, we don't understand what the priorities would be. I think that no one here would argue that everyone has good intentions, that the intention of feeding kids is important. But what does that beat out? And would it make the cut?

Those kinds of things require an actual perspective because protecting those services is what members like myself ran for, to protect those things. Because austerity budgets of the past have done exactly that. When budgets were cut, the operational funding for school boards was cut. When issues like these presented themselves, they had fewer resources to address the auxiliary needs of the students outside of the educational practices. So the principals were put in a very difficult spot where they recognized that, yes, that child can't eat, but at the same time it's not the responsibility of the school to feed them. They don't have the funding for that, so what can they do?

Then educational assistants, teachers, speech pathologists, all groups of people that could be focusing on supporting the educational needs of that child, are thinking about how to feed that child. It's not the best use of those funds for those specialized services whereas if we could find a program and put those things in place, that time can actually be best utilized by educating the child and making sure that when they're sitting in that classroom, they're not losing focus because of lack of food.

The thing is that programs like this require funds, and the commitment from the opposition to fund these programs is questionable. That is questionable because we don't have a shadow budget to look at. We don't have a firm commitment. We have a history from the past; even last week their position on GSAs switched in the middle of the week. We have an opposition that continuously thinks of public services as, you know, inefficiencies. We don't know what's going to make the Dragon's Den, and I think it's of utmost importance to discuss those things in this House.

This is where these things need to be discussed because those are the political ramifications for the positions of austerity budgets. I think it is imperative for members of this House to respect that we have differences of opinions, but that doesn't make them wrong to express it. You might not want to hear it, but the members opposite still need to know the other side of the effects of your positions.

The Speaker: Hon. member, through the chair.

Cortes-Vargas: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker.

I think this program in a lot of ways speaks to the importance of expanding those nutritional supports throughout the province. I think it is of utmost importance. Making sure that we look at what programs are in place and what works efficiently is something that we have been committed to doing this entire time, making sure that those programs are supported through community initiatives but also recognizing that, likely, the communities that experience the issue of a high need for nutritional programs such as this also have a variety of other issues that they could work to support instead of the nutritional values.

They could make sure that – it's a group, I think, of some of the classrooms I work on where it was a high population of immigrant communities that were just getting adjusted and food was one of the problems, but if they didn't have to worry about that, they could really focus on increasing the supports for learning English in the classrooms. That could go incredibly further in making sure that there is enhancement to those things. By saying, you know, that it might not be the province's responsibility to do those things – we need to make sure that we work in partnership, absolutely, and we need to make sure that the programs we put in place are accountable to the people that they serve. We need to make sure that they are the best programs for that situation, but we also need to understand that the communities that will experience a high need for the nutritional supports that these programs would address would also be the ones that would have issues with fundraising in order to make those things possible.

There are absolutely exceptions, and there will always be exceptions to those rules. I forget the name, but we were at Ben Calf Robe in Edmonton. They actually have a fantastic nutritional program. They have a focus on local food, and they've partnered with different organizations, but just that was tremendously difficult to put in place, took hours and hours of parental work. They're also working on many different fronts to confront the experiences that are produced from the cycle of poverty.

At the end of the day, we need to recognize, in order to make sure that everyone has equal opportunity, that these programs are a vital solution to that. The thing is that we are making Albertans' lives better when we put these things in place. It's in the same light as the perspective of a budget that could look much different than this. Cuts to operational funding or cuts to programs like this could have a very negative effect on those very people. I think we're all very conscious of that within this Chamber, but I honestly think that it's hard to say, that from our perspective of listening to the opposition, their intention might be good, but we don't know what that would look like and to what limits that would go.

I think there are different ways of going around things. There are always ways to look for solutions, and we're always open to working together. I think we saw that earlier today as we worked through the first bill. I think it's important with issues like this, that are important to all of us, to make sure that we are looking for those solutions and that we are clear as to what our positions are. I think that creates an atmosphere of stability for Albertans to know that this is an issue that is important to all of us and that everyone is committed to addressing it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The House leader for the opposition.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to Motion 504, "that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to consider expanding the number of communities that are served by school nutrition programs." It's an absolute pleasure to rise and not only speak to Motion 504 but speak in favour of Motion 504.

Mr. Speaker, you know and I know and members of this Assembly know that we all have a role to play in ensuring that in a province like ours, with the abundant resources that we have, there should be no reason why there are children who are attending school who don't have access to the food that gives them the ability to learn and to function in such a capacity.

As we've heard today, there's no doubt that the government has a role to play in this, and there's no doubt that there are great programs that exist all across the province. It's my hope that in the projects that the government announces, we will see a partnering with those great programs that are happening all across the province. If there's one thing that I know for certain, Mr. Speaker, it's that a one-size-fits-all model isn't often the best to meet the needs of individual communities and individual schools.

As the government increases access to school nutrition programs – I met with the school division just during the constituency break, and I know that one of their concerns was that a program might come from Edmonton but not specifically address the needs in that school division. It's so critically important that as we move forward, we ensure that those who are on the ground, the best deliverers of those programs, are in fact delivering those programs.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 8(3) provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of a motion to close debate. I would invite the hon. Member for Red Deer-South to close debate on Motion 504.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to all members of the House for the debate here today. You know, I am proud to be part of a government that is making life more affordable for Alberta families. By expanding the school nutrition program, our government is fulfilling yet another campaign promise. Our government's program not only ensures that children receive food that is critical to improving their education outcomes, but it also allows many families to learn about nutritious foods that they can prepare at home. By proposing this motion, my hope is that every community and school in the province will someday have access to this program so that all children and families in Alberta struggling to access nutritious food will have it.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that it is our job as elected representatives to make life more affordable for Albertans, and that is why I'm standing here today. I am advocating on behalf of constituents who have reached out to me and shared their stories to ensure that all children in the province have access to healthy, nutritious foods. As I have already stated, Mr. Speaker, evidence has shown a link between students having access to nutritious food and their success. I believe that it's our duty as members of this Legislature to ensure that our children have the tools they need to ensure success.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I encourage all members of this Legislature to support this motion and set the goal for ourselves to make sure that all children in Alberta have access to nutritious, healthy foods.

Thank you.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 504 carried]

The Speaker: The Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, seeing the progress today, I move that we call it 6 o'clock and come back tomorrow . . .

Mr. Cooper: At the appropriate time.

Cortes-Vargas: . . . at the appropriate time, 1:30. Sorry. It's estimates.

The Speaker: The legislative policy committees will convene this evening and tomorrow morning for consideration of the main estimates. This evening Families and Communities will consider the estimates for Health in the Rocky Mountain Room, and Alberta's Economic Future will consider the estimates for Economic Development and Trade in the Parkland Room. Tomorrow morning Alberta's Economic Future will consider the estimates for Labour in the Parkland Room, and Resource Stewardship will consider the estimates for Energy in the Rocky Mountain Room.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us reflect or pray, each in our own way. Allow us time to reflect on the past, recognizing the significant achievements that we have made along the way. Let us concentrate on the present and have a vision for the future that makes life better for our province and for our world.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

Ms Gray: M. le Président, c'est avec fierté que je me lève à la Chambre aujourd'hui pour introduire Greenvue elementary school. The students are accompanied by their teachers, Mme Cheri Krywko and Mrs. Angela Sharun, along with their chaperones: Mr. Bob Graham, Mrs. Terri White, and Mrs. Michele Schuldhuis. There are two classes visiting today, approximately 47 students, learning about the important history of this place and those who have had the privilege of serving here. I would like them to all rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 44 bright young students, two classes, from Overlanders school in the incredible constituency of Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. They're accompanied by their two teachers, Mrs. Nabe and Ms Torrance, and four chaperones: Kiera Batchelar, Rafia Moazam, Sarah Antoniuk, and Damir Skeric. I'd ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there any other school groups, hon. members? The Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my – oh. It's a student as opposed to a school group. Is that ...

The Speaker: You've got the floor.

Ms Larivee: I'm here anyway. Okay.

On behalf of my colleague the Minister of Seniors and Housing it is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Jack Stoddard. Jack is an honours student in grade 9 at l'école Joseph-Moreau and is very involved with cadets, having achieved the rank of master corporal in 2836 Edmonton 1st Combat Engineer Regiment in the Royal Canadian Army Cadet Corps. He is also keenly interested in politics and is here today to observe both question period and to watch the pages at work since he is interested in learning more about the page program. I would ask him to rise as a student here today and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome. I hope you still want to return and become a page after you watch this event.

The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you a number of folks who are here today because it's Dental Hygienists Week and April is Oral Health Month, including dental hygienists. Dental hygienists are the sixth-largest health profession in Canada. They play a crucial role in promoting oral health and preventing disease. In their honour I remind my esteemed colleagues to brush, floss, and get regular checkups, please. I now ask Paulette Dahlseide, Denise Kokaram, Alysha Ferguson, and Marthe Benoit to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Infrastructure and of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly officers of the Parkinson Alberta board, clients, and care partners, who are here as we recognize Parkinson's Day. The chief executive officer of Parkinson Alberta is John Petryshen. He's joined today by members of the Parkinson Alberta board and, as I mentioned, clients and care partners: Dr. Wayne Martin, neurologist and Parkinson Alberta board member; Brandi La Bonte, operations manager of Parkinson Alberta; George Plouffe; Paulette Plouffe; Ron Ebbers; Brad Freysteinson; Brandy Freysteinson; Blair Harwood; Dr. Harold Dhliwayo; Lucia Dhliwayo; Jim Maxwell; Gina Tedeschini; and Doug de Vries. The tulips we wear today symbolize that hope will bloom this spring. I would like to recognize and applaud the efforts of Parkinson Alberta as they rise to receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly board members and staff from Alberta Ballet, including the daughter of one of the founders: Larry Clausen, George Goldhoff, Josh Bilyk, Jennifer Faulkner, Margaret Dalwood, Candice Harris. I look forward to doing my member's statement later today on Alberta Ballet and its 50th anniversary season. I would like them now to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real privilege to be able to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Pastor Jim Lochhead. Jim is the pastor at the fine church of McClure United, and I will be speaking more about Jim later in my member's statement. I would now ask him to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. It is my privilege to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly four members seated in your gallery from the northeast division of the Edmonton Police Service located in the constituency of Edmonton-Manning. I would like to introduce Acting Superintendent Teri Uhryn, Staff Sergeant Dave Goodkey, Patrol Sergeant Shelley Fisher, and Sergeant Cory Huculak. I will be speaking more to these four members and the entire Edmonton Police Service northeast division in my member's statement this afternoon.

I would also like to introduce Gerard Amani, the newest addition to the Edmonton-Manning constituency office. Gerard was born in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and came to Canada with his family at the age of 18 as a refugee and has given back to his community ever since. I look forward to working with Gerard now and in the future.

I would like to ask them all now to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour and privilege to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly representatives from the Sikh community who are joining us today: Tejinder Sidhu, Vikram Sahiwal, Dr. Hans, Deep Shergill, Vishal Comer, Prabhjeet Grewal, Varinder Sidhu, Pavan Elapavuluri, and Arohi Elapavuluri. Last Friday along with my colleagues I was honoured to declare April 2017 to be Sikh Heritage Month in Alberta, and my guests are joining us here for the reception tonight. I ask my guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mr. Carlier: Mr. Speaker, it is my sincere pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a number of agriculture stakeholders who are visiting today. They represent the many hard-working men and women of the Alberta Beef Producers and Alberta Lamb Producers. Bob Lowe, a rancher from Nanton, Alberta, is the board chair of the Alberta Beef Producers. He's joined by Roland Cailliau, vice-chair, and Tom Lynch-Staunton, government relations with ABP. Darlene Stein is the board chair of the Alberta Lamb Producers. She's joined by Bernadette Nikkel, member and producer, and with them are future lamb producers Lexi Stein and Rebekah Nikkel. I would like to ask them all now to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

McClure United Church Gifts to Central America

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this year I provided some pencils, pens, and pins to Pastor Jim Lochhead from McClure United church. He was bicycling through Nicaragua, Costa Rica, and Panama and needed some small gifts for schools and children in the area. This is just one example of how his church is making lives better for people here and elsewhere.

Recently I was absolutely delighted to receive this e-mail from Pastor Lochhead and wanted to take the opportunity through this member's statement to share it with everyone.

I want to thank you for the pencils, pens and pins that you provided me with to share while traveling in Central America. I was able to distribute all of the pencils and pens along the way. One of the most heartwarming moments doing this occurred during a ride between Rivas and San Juan Del Sur in Nicaragua. It was a hot, dusty ride along a gravel road. Children were standing alongside the road shouting "hello" as we went by; obviously practicing the English they were learning at school. I carried the pencils and pens in my shirt as I rode. I would take a pencil and a pen [out] for each child as I rode, throwing them to them, or passing them if able. At one point three children were in the middle of the road having greeted riders ahead of me. Seeing me coming they began to move to the side, two younger siblings encouraged by the older sister who was 9 or 10. The older sister saw me taking the items from my pocket and reached for them as I handed them to her. I could hear her shouting, "Gracias! Gracias!" as I continued along the road. Other riders commented on her delight for the gift. It is an area of Nicaragua that appeared both isolated and impoverished. I was grateful for the opportunity to offer a little (however small) help along the way.

Thank you, Pastor Lochhead, for all your hard work bringing joy to these children. I'm very proud to have you and your parish in my riding, and I can't thank you enough for all that you do.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I wonder if we might have unanimous consent. I neglected two introductions today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To you and through you to all members of the Legislature I'd like to introduce four residents of Edmonton-Whitemud and two residents of Edmonton-Centre who are here today to meet with representatives of the Ministry of Service Alberta to discuss the evolution of condominium and life lease regulations and to witness question period. As I read their names, I would ask our constituents to rise: from Edmonton-Whitemud, Bernice Neufeld, Carol Stirrett, Judy Slavutych, and Marilyn Richardson; and from Edmonton-Centre, Carol Moeller and Tom Hodgson. I would ask my colleagues to extend their usual recognition.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Status of Women and of Service Alberta.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a good friend of mine in the gallery, Jean Munn. She is an accomplished immigration and refugee lawyer in the city of Calgary and a partner at Caron & Partners. She has also been a professor from time to time at the University of Calgary, and I had the opportunity of learning under her tutelage the topics of immigration and refugee law. I ask that she rise and be given the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Thank you, hon. members.

Residential No-charge Energy Savings Program

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans didn't like the residential no-charge energy savings program right from the start. They saw it for what it was, a blatant waste of money funded by the equally insulting carbon tax. When legitimate questions are raised on this program, instead of addressing Albertans' concerns, the government suggests that we don't respect those that have signed up for the program. Nothing could be further from the truth. One person who signed up and saw the video of the question period exchange where the Deputy Premier suggested that the Wildrose disrespected those who did sign up said this to the government, quote: don't – and I say don't – involve me in your lies. End quote.

The environment minister has made a few dubious claims as well, including that this was the most cost-effective way to run an energy efficiency program. I can't imagine that paying a company from Ontario to install light bulbs in Albertans' homes is the most cost-effective way of improving energy efficiency in this province. As we delve deeper into this program, we find some totally inappropriate clauses, including that installers ask personal questions, including the number of people in the home, income range, utility account number, and rate codes. For a government who constantly touts their ban on door-to-door energy sales, how can it justify requiring installers to upsell energy programs and products? Unfortunately, this is yet another example of hypocrisy from this NDP government.

We know that some installers will be Albertans just doing their best, but to have this kind of wording in the bid package is alarming. Finding out that the government misled them when the environment minister said that the Ecofitt bid was the lowest cost provider was disturbing. Now we learn that not only was Ecofitt not even the second-lowest; it was actually the third-lowest bid. A person doesn't just accidentally mistake the lowest bid for the third-lowest bid.

Well, Mr. Speaker, the government, in the words of the Energy minister, continues to mislead this House and indeed Albertans for their own political gain. Now, that's just unacceptable.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Calgary-Lougheed Town Hall Meeting

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently I held a town hall in Calgary-Lougheed, and the attendees asked me to deliver the following unanimous messages to the NDP. They said that the debt should be repaid and the government should eliminate its deficit. They should cut personal, business, and carbon taxes, and the size of the Alberta government should be reduced. There should be a public-sector salary freeze, no negotiated increases in public service contracts, and across-the-board spending controls. The government should renegotiate a better equalization agreement. The NDP should work with the energy industry and the New West Partnership, not against them. Government spending over $30 million on advertising for the climate leadership plan, on light bulbs, shower heads, power bars, and thermostats is a misuse of taxpayer money. Instead, job creation should be the top priority for this government. There should be no secrecy regarding the revamp of the education curriculum. Serenity's bill should be passed. And the NDP needs to start listening and stop taxing the average middle-class Albertan into nonexistence.

On this point one constituent was so incensed that they wrote this. Our voices are not being heard by this totally incompetent NDP government. They stand on higher ground in the belief that we as Albertans are accepting of the policies that have been shoved down our throats, but I will be silent no longer. As a single parent I have struggled to make ends meet. I am very proud I have stood on my own two feet and raised my children to be self-sustaining adults and proud Albertans. Please use me as an example of what a typical Alberta family is facing and tell the NDP they have done nothing to improve the quality of life for Albertans. Tell them that we do not accept this. Yours truly, Tracey.

Mr. Speaker, the NDP would do well to listen to Tracey, the constituents of Calgary-Lougheed, and indeed all Albertans. Thank you.

Alberta Ballet

Ms McKittrick: Mr. Speaker, when I was a young girl growing up in Paris, I was fortunate to attend ballet performances at the Palais Garnier opera house. My love of ballet and appreciation for the artistic, physical, and musical demands on the dancers have stayed with me.

Mr. Speaker, we are fortunate here in Alberta to have Canada's second-largest ballet company, renowned for their contemporary and classical ballets, available to both Edmonton and Calgary audiences. This year Alberta Ballet celebrates its 50th anniversary season. Alberta Ballet is comprised of 28 classically trained professional dancers from as far away as Japan to as close as my own riding of Sherwood Park. This season we've enjoyed performances of traditional ballets such as Alice in Wonderland and Dracula and three visiting contemporary dance groups.

I was pleased this year to introduce my 90-year-old mother-in-law to ballet. She had never been to a performance before. She now has insisted that she be my date for the next season.

Jean Grand-Maitre, the company's artistic director, has been with the company since 2002 and has raised the profile of Alberta Ballet to a world-wide audience. The company has caught the world's attention for its portrait ballets, collaborations with popular music icons such as Joni Mitchell, Elton John, and k.d. lang.

I am delighted that the final performance of this season is Our Canada, the latest portrait ballet, featuring the music of singer-songwriter Gordon Lightfoot, the first singer-songwriter I learned to love when I moved to Canada. Our Canada commemorates the nation's 150th birthday. It tells the story of all Canadians and honours the cultural diversities which define us. Performances will be May 4 to 6 in Calgary and 12 to 13 in Edmonton.

This government is proud to support the work of organizations which try to make life better for Albertans through art and culture. I am not sure how many MLAs have had the pleasure of attending a performance of Alberta Ballet . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Residential No-charge Energy Savings Program

Mr. Jean: Here are some real-world issues for the Premier: 100,000 Albertans are on unemployment insurance right now in Alberta; over 60,000 haven't been able to find work for six months. What has been the NDP's response to this? Well, they've raised everyone's taxes with the largest tax grab in Alberta history. Billions of dollars from families, billions of dollars from businesses, and for what? To pay for a sweetheart contract to an Ontario company to install taxpayer-funded light bulbs. Premier, this program is turning into a real boondoggle. How much will it cost Albertans by the end of this year?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Once again the member opposite is showing his tendency to flip and flop just a little bit. Last week the Wildrose was complaining that we had an energy efficiency program. This week in their press release they're complaining that our energy efficiency program isn't big enough. You know, at least the light bulbs are starting to turn on over there. What we will say is that Albertans are excited about saving money. What they're not excited about is the Wildrose opposition, that wants to reverse our cut to school fees, that wants to reverse our tuition freeze, that wants to reverse our school lunch program. They know we're working to make their lives . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Jean: Non answer number one, Mr. Speaker.

The government once claimed that Ecofitt was the lowest cost provider, but we know that's simply not true. Now we see in the request for proposal that the NDP is asking Ecofitt to upsell Albertans on "all other energy efficiency opportunities in the home" and to "cross-promote other energy . . . programs and services available." That's after, of course, Ecofitt gets into their homes. The NDP claims to be against door-to-door sales tactics but have asked Ecofitt to do just that. Why is the NDP allowing Ecofitt to push other products once they get into Albertans' homes?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, the member is right in the fact that this government did ban door-to-door sales. And you know what? We're very proud of that. What we didn't ban was helping Albertans save money on their energy bills. That is what this program does. Now, given that the Wildrose is opposed to cutting school fees, freezing tuition, capping electricity rates, it is hardly surprising that they're also opposed to helping people save on their energy bills. But you know what? We're going to help Albertans do just that because that's what this government promised to do.

Mr. Jean: Non answer number two, Mr. Speaker.

Here's why this whole program is one of the most boneheaded government policies we've ever heard of. Albertans don't need the government to spend their money to hire workers to come into their homes and then educate and upsell them in their own houses. On this side of the House we believe that keeping life more affordable means not taking Albertans' money in the first place. We trust that Albertans know how to install their own light bulbs. Maybe if you need some help, you could ask on this side of the House. Why not just scrap the carbon tax and trust that Albertans know how to spend their own money better than you do?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, over 90,000 Alberta households have signed up to save money on their energy bills. Now, you might think that the Wildrose would say that this is a good thing, but not this gang. I'll tell you what. We know that the Leader of the Opposition has trouble taking a position on a number of different issues, and we know that he has trouble getting consensus from his caucus on a number of different issues where he's failing to take a position. I suggest that he go back and take about six weeks to consider whether he might actually support Albertans wanting to save money on their energy bills.

Mr. Jean: Non answer number three, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The second main question.

Premier's Trip to Washington, DC

Mr. Jean: While 35,000 Albertans have been out of work for over a year and are having trouble actually putting food on the table, this

NDP government is quickly developing a taste for excess, for waste, and for mismanagement. Here's one example. Last month the Premier travelled to Washington for a three-day visit. The cost: $42,000 to the people of Alberta and without meeting any senior cabinet officials whatsoever. Now, the Premier of Saskatchewan, just next door, finished his trip. The cost according to his office: $10,000. How can the Premier possibly justify spending four times as much for the same trip as the Premier of Saskatchewan?

Ms Notley: Well, frankly, Mr. Speaker, if I were the member opposite, I truly would be a little cautious about holding up the Premier to the east of us as an example to follow. But, as I'm sure the member knows, the Auditor General directed our government to include the full expenses of everybody involved in the trip, and that's why our numbers are higher, because they are counted differently. He's comparing apples to oranges. That's hardly new, just another example of how the member opposite tends to exaggerate things to the people in this Assembly and to the province. [interjections]

The Speaker: It's getting noisy, folks. Keep it down.

Mr. Jean: We understand the need for the Premier's security and a strong voice in Washington. It's very important, now more than ever. But taxpayers in Alberta deserve to see good value for money spent. Saskatchewan's Premier met the Commerce secretary, the President's point man on NAFTA. They met the Energy secretary, and they met the head of the EPA. A $42,000 trip? That's what the Premier gave us, new professional diplomats and, of course, the social licence that was promised to come with massive new carbon taxes, yet not a single meeting with a senior member of the President's cabinet. Not one. Why does the Premier possibly think that is?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the member knows, I had the opportunity to meet with oil and gas executives as well as forestry leaders, manufacturing leaders, and agriculture leaders before we went to Washington. We were proud to be the first province down in Washington advocating on behalf of our industry to support strong trade relationships and to support those industry representatives. Just on Friday members from my office met with those leaders from the energy industry, and they said that they were exceptionally pleased with the work that we've done, that they'd heard tremendous feedback, and that people are getting our message, so I believe . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Jean: The NDP spent $1.3 million to maintain Alberta's presence in Washington. Just a year ago they fired a very well-connected envoy in favour of professional diplomats because they said that it would get us a better deal. Apparently not, Mr. Speaker. Not even a meeting, in fact. Saskatchewan has the former U.S. ambassador advocating for them and setting up meetings with senior members of the President's cabinet. It cost a third of the NDP's hand-picked Washington office. Tens of thousands more for trips, hundreds of thousands more for offices, and minimal access if access at all. How can the Premier justify this ineffective use of Alberta's tax dollars?

Ms Notley: Well, I appreciate the interesting choice of the member opposite to use his opportunity to ask me questions to defend a former political friend and insider on an issue that's two years old.

However, Mr. Speaker, I'm focused on promoting Alberta jobs, Alberta industry, Alberta business in Washington and across the border, and that's exactly what we've been doing. We've been doing it objectively with excellent support both from the federal government and from our own officials, and we will continue to do that because that is the kind of professional work that Albertans expect.

The Speaker: Third main question.

Canadian Free Trade Agreement

Mr. Jean: Yesterday the NDP showed how little they know about the deals that they made on behalf of Albertans. When asked about a new Crown corporation they agreed to create in last week's free trade deal, the minister said that he had no idea where we're getting our information. Well, here's a hint. Read the agreement that you signed. "Alberta gives notice of its intention to create a Crown corporation which will be responsible for all infrastructure procurement." We didn't make this up. It's in the agreement you signed. Will the Premier please confirm that they've signed us up for a new Crown corporation, or have they still not actually read the agreement that they signed?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the answer that I gave to the hon. member yesterday was correct. We have no intention whatsoever of setting up a Crown corporation for infrastructure. In the previous agreement the only way to exempt Alberta companies from free trade requirements under the agreement was to set up a Crown corporation. Other provinces had done that. But I want to say that the minister of economic development has negotiated a new agreement, a new free trade agreement, that protects Alberta businesses. We don't need the Crown corporation, and we have no intention of setting it up.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, yes, no, no, yes, but they include it in the agreement? Come on. Albertans should be concerned about the NDP pattern of making decisions without understanding what they're actually signing Albertans up for. The last time that happened, taxpayers found themselves on the hook for a $2.3 billion bailout of the power agreements under this government. Now we have a brand new Crown corporation coming without the NDP providing any information whatsoever on what this body will do or what it will cost the taxpayers, but they included it in an agreement. Once the NDP get a chance to read this agreement that they signed, will the Premier please release details about just ...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. [interjections] Quiet down, folks.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I wish the hon. member would listen to the answer for a change because the answer is: we're not setting up a Crown corporation; therefore, the Crown corporation will have no costs because the Crown corporation will not exist. And because it does not exist, there will be no costs. I don't know if he's following me, but we're not setting up a Crown corporation, and there are no costs, just to be clear. [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet, everyone. [interjections] Quiet down, please, hon. members.

Mr. Jean: Now, there were rumours about the negotiations on the free trade agreement with the NDP government, that they were the odd person out and were actually pushing protectionist policies. Mr. Speaker, I'd like to believe that that's not the truth, but now we're in a spot where the government's front bench doesn't even know the contents of a major trade agreement that they signed. Albertans don't want protectionist policies. They don't want a secret agenda from these folks. They want to show that Alberta is open for business and attracting investment, not turning it away. Why on earth did the Premier sign Albertans up for a Crown corporation that they didn't ask for and that they don't need but that is in an agreement they drafted and had signed? [interjections]

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. [interjections] Quiet, please. [interjection] Hon. minister, please.

The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know what? For decades the previous government failed to take meaningful action to stand up for Alberta businesses. The Canadian free trade agreement is a good deal because it finally levels the playing field for Alberta. It's now easier for Albertans to get their world-class products and services to Canadian markets. At the same time, we worked hard to ensure that this is fair treatment for Albertans at home. We will not apologize for negotiating exemptions that mean we can put Albertans back to work rebuilding Fort McMurray. [interjections]

The Speaker: Calm, folks.

The leader of the third party

Children's Charter

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, Albertans were consulted on an Alberta children's charter in 2013, leading to the 2013 Children First Act. Bill 25 passed unanimously, with senior members of the current government in the Assembly. Albertans expected the charter would be adopted in 2015, but instead the NDP government has done nothing. The website childcharter.alberta.ca has since disappeared. I will table the document Together We Raise Tomorrow and provide a copy to the minister today in case she hasn't seen it. To the Minister of Children's Services: why has this government stalled work on adopting and implementing the children's charter?

The Speaker: The Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What I can tell you is that this government has unapologetically stood up for children and families here in Alberta, and we've committed to making the lives of Albertan children better. That's why we have a Children's Services department once again, to focus on providing support and making life affordable for everyday families through the child benefit, investing in new child care spaces. If there is anyone who is child centred and focusing on placing children first in this Legislature, it's the members on this side of the room.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. Well, perhaps the government could try answering the question, because that's her ministry.

Given that the government-dominated Legislative Offices Committee has been reviewing the Child and Youth Advocate Act and related matters since September 2015 and given that the Alberta children's charter has not been discussed since then, again to the minister, and it is your ministry: when do you intend to fulfill the obligation under section 2(1) of the Children First Act to establish a children's charter?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a demonstration of how centred and focused we are on children in this province, we established the Ministerial Panel on Child Intervention. There were many tragic outcomes within the child intervention system, a system that has clearly had substantial challenges for years, so this government is taking action to put children first. We established the ministerial panel, and I look forward to working again with all of my colleagues to deal with this challenging issue, to take some real action to ensure that Alberta's children really have the support they need to move forward and have the very best outcomes.

The Speaker: Thank you.
Second supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister ought to be less chippy when she doesn't know her own file, so I'll give her another chance. Given that protection of children and, particularly, vulnerable children in care has been a heightened priority for all Albertans and given that this is now the third session without work on the children's charter, again to the same minister: when will Albertans and this Assembly expect to see a draft of the children's charter as required by section 2(1)? Will you do your job, Minister?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While others within this Legislature would focus on cuts that would not give families the leg-up that they need in tough times, this government is taking action to make life better and more affordable. We're not talking about words here. We're going to take real action and we have taken real action to focus on families, to be child centred, and to move forward in ways that we haven't seen in the past to really take that real, strong action to make life affordable, to provide those services to children and families. [An hon. member raised an object]

The Speaker: Hon. member, would you please put that down. You're interfering with my view of the member whose turn it is to now speak.

Calgary-Elbow.

Acute Health Care System Costs

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last week I had an unexpected opportunity for an up-close-and-personal tour of our health care system, and I am proud to say that it was there for me when I needed it. I know that there are people who fall through the cracks and that we still have a lot of work to do in this province on prevention, chronic disease, and mental health, but our acute-care system is truly world class. Every single front-line worker I encountered, from the admissions clerk to the amazing nurses, from all the porters and doctors and cleaning staff to everyone in between, all were compassionate and professional. We're truly lucky to have them. To the Minister of Health: what are you doing to ensure that the voices of people on the front lines are being heard and that the suggestions they make are being listened to?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much to the member, and welcome back. We're pleased that you had a successful experience.

One of the things that I personally do regularly – and I know that our CEO for Alberta Health Services does as well – is site visits. For example, this morning I met with staff at the Boyle McCauley health centre. Regularly we tour AHS facilities as well and have opportunities to chat with some of the staff on the front lines and meet with their elected representatives through their unions as well. It's important that they have a voice, that their voice is heard within their organization and is respected by their government, and that's what they have in this government.

Mr. Clark: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm very glad to hear that because while I was in hospital, staff told me about some of the challenges they face and shared with me some ideas about how to fix them. I was told that it takes $8 to process every single blanket they use. I learned that it cost $500,000 to paint a small space in emergency and that an ordinary office desk that costs about $1,500 at Staples cost more than $12,000 when it was acquired through the AHS procurement process. These are just stories that I heard in the little more than 24 hours in hospital. Again to the Minister of Health: do you hear these sorts of stories from the front lines, and when you do, what do you do about them?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much for the question. I welcome the member to pass along those details to my office. I'd be very happy to share them with Alberta Health Services. Definitely, I have a regular meeting with the CEO of AHS and the deputy minister. It's important that we're at the same table, that we have an opportunity to raise specific questions and concerns with each other and to make sure that we're bringing about the very best result, using our investment effectively, and finding ways to improve efficiencies. That's why we're also looking at operational best practices, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It sounds like a lot of the complaints I heard stem from the procurement process. This government has been in power for nearly two years, and they haven't made any meaningful changes to these old, broken, and expensive processes. Now, I realize that there are special considerations when buying medical equipment or renovating a hospital, but there's a huge missed opportunity here for savings. Again to the Minister of Health: outside of nationalizing laundry and lab services, do you have any plans to improve AHS procurement to focus on real savings in areas that won't hurt front-line care?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much for the question. The hyperbole around how we're going to protect Albertans and make sure that we have effective and efficient systems I'll be happy to expand on tonight in estimates, I imagine.

I also want to say that I'm happy to talk about procurement. We've brought in a number of initiatives through Alberta Health Services. They've been very effective in finding many areas for significant savings. I'll be happy to detail those through a tabling later this session. We always are looking for more ways to be efficient, Mr. Speaker, rather than just pushing the slash-and-burn budgets that the Official Opposition and the third party, their best friends, are pushing. We're effective in making sure we can find ways to use Albertans' money most effectively.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Life Lease Housing

Dr. Turner: Mr. Speaker, my constituents, particularly seniors, are really pleased with our government protecting consumers by banning door-to-door sales of various products. These changes have helped our seniors be at less risk of losing their peace of mind and their financial stability. In a similar vein, I've met many seniors in my constituency who reside in life lease units that are not covered by our current condominium act. Residents have expressed concern that they have little or no input into management of the facility and have difficulty in disposing of the units. My question is to the minister responsible for Service Alberta. Are there currently any protections in place for constituents like mine who are life lease holders?

Ms McLean: Mr. Speaker, there is no legislation specific to life leases in the province of Alberta. As a result, the terms and conditions of the life lease are governed by the contract between the resident and the life lease owner or operator, including the fees and calculation of those fees. It is important for life lease holders to read their contract carefully and obtain legal advice, as they would for any housing transaction. Some life lease agreements include a dispute resolution process. However, in the absence of this, disputes that cannot be worked out proceed through the court system like any other contractual dispute.

Dr. Turner: Given that amendments were passed to the condominium act in 2014 and given my constituents' concern about increased consumer protection, what is the minister doing to ensure both consumers and condo boards are consulted with on any future changes?

Ms McLean: Service Alberta will be consulting with all condominium stakeholders as part of the consultations for the development of the regulations. Condo boards will be included as part of the consultation, as will condominium owners, managers, developers, members of the legal community, and others who are part of the condo industry. My department expects to be inviting feedback later this year so that all condominium owners can make their voices heard.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Minister. Given that life leases are a hybrid financial product, combining aspects of condominiums and rental units, to the minister: can life lease issues be incorporated into the consultation for consideration?

Ms McLean: Mr. Speaker, as mentioned, there is currently no legislation applicable to life leases. Life leases are a legal contract the person can enter into, and it lies between the owner and the resident. That being said, the planned condominium property consultation will allow for Albertans to engage the government on important issues such as but not limited to governance, insurance, reserve funds, dispute resolution, voting procedures, and general public comments. Service Alberta certainly welcomes the opportunity to hear the important and diverse set of perspectives from Albertans.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

School Nutrition Programs and Special-needs Children

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A boy with autism was sent to eat in the hallway because he brought banana bread for lunch. This child was unnecessarily traumatized by having to sit in the hallway, away from his classmates. Getting healthy food into children with aversions is a lifelong strategy for a family. Teaching proper nutritional choices in the classroom is essential. However, this should not be done in a way that snack shames children. To the minister: is this snack shaming part of the curriculum?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much for the question from the hon. member. It's very important to understand what individual circumstances might have been in a situation like this. I did say that this was not an appropriate circumstance, by any means, but it's also important for us to look further, investigating and seeing what the individual case might be. Yes, I did read about this as well, and I did find it disturbing. It's nothing to do with the curriculum. It could have been some kind of misstep in regard to whoever the responsible adult might have been.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. Well, given that the parents are feeling the impact of an authoritarian behaviour run amok over snacks and given that parents know what their children will eat and will not eat and don't need government telling them how to feed their children, especially when their food sensitivity is an obvious issue, and given that pudding, granola bars, and applesauce have been banned in this classroom, the parents are now contemplating moving their child to another school. To the minister: what approach should schools and boards take to encourage healthy eating in the classrooms and, more specifically, for children with special needs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, if this hon. member knows more specific circumstances about this individual case, I would be glad if she might share those with us afterwards. In general, certainly, it's entirely inappropriate to connect an individual circumstance around food and banana bread and one of the most effective education programs that we have put out in a generation, which is the school nutrition program here in the province of Alberta. We're expanding that now, using the local community to help us do so, making choices in the community. I can tell you that it's one of the most effective ways not just for nutrition but for education.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mrs. Aheer: This is not effective for children with special needs. Since banana bread to this little guy was not only food for his body and comforting and consistent and delicious to him, this is not a reason that a child should be excluded from that classroom, and given that it is important to avoid making food choice a chronic source of conflict, children with disability need specific, thoughtful, and supportive care in the classroom, not reprimands and associated stigmas. Does the minister provide resources for teachers and parents through Alberta Education to accommodate instead of berating parents and children?

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, if we might share individual information about this circumstance. Certainly, from the reports that I did receive, it was probably not the most appropriate thing to have happened, although we don't have all the details. Maybe there's something to do with allergies. We don't really know what the individual's circumstances are, but we certainly know that the general circumstance of school nutrition in our schools and with our families is very, very strong. The school nutrition program – I was just at one in Wetaskiwin this morning. They said that it was one of the most meaningful nutrition and education experiences that they had ever endeavoured in that school.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Coal Strategy

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, this government is sending Albertans mixed messages on coal. The Health and Environment ministers tell Albertans that coal is bad, it's dirty, and that to save the planet, we must stop using it to generate electricity. But the Energy minister tells Albertans that coal is good, that it's clean, that it provides jobs and tax revenue, and that our coal is highly sought after. As if to prove the point, last night the economic development minister told Albertans that he is actively seeking export markets for our coal. To the Environment minister: help us out here. Is coal good, bad, or does it just depend on which minister is speaking?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is a difference between thermal and metallurgical coal. Thank you. [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet, please.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the phase-out of coal-fired electricity is a key pillar of this government's climate leadership plan and given that while we are shutting down our 18 coal-fired plants, some 2,400 coal-fired plants are either under construction or being planned world-wide and given that the economic development minister says that he supports exporting our thermal coal, to the environment minister: if Alberta's coal is burned in a power plant overseas, GHGs are still emitted, so why is it acceptable to simply shift GHG production to a different part of the same planet?

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to stand up and respond to this again. With our climate leadership plan we're phasing out coal-fired electricity emissions, and if the coal plants decide, if coal mining wants to continue their operations and look to potentially exporting, then they are completely entitled to do that.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that Canada is the world's third-largest exporter of metallurgical coal, coal that is essential in making the steel that is needed for manufacture of things like – oh, say – wind turbines and given that Alberta has eight proposed metallurgical coal projects that could generate $10 billion to $13 billion in government revenue and their proponents have been waiting in some cases for over a year for any word on their applications, to the environment minister: why the delay, Minister? When might these job-creating enterprises anticipate a response from your ministry?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question. With respect to metallurgic mines and export mines, this is not part of the coal phase-out, as we've said, but they do need to go through the process with the AER in consultation and get the correct permits and all that before they can go. They're treated just the same as any other energy project in Alberta.

The Speaker: Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week, following the release of the free light bulb RFP from the environment minister, it was discovered that not only are we not getting the best deal, but the government is breaking its own rules on door-to-door energy sales. The RFP gives Ecofitt the okay to notify residents "of all other energy efficiency opportunities in the home . . . and cross-promote other energy efficiency programs and services." That sounds like high-pressure selling to me. Why is this company getting the green light to break Alberta law?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for an opportunity to ask him why in this House yesterday he came forward with a button on, with six other members of his caucus, that clearly was offensive towards children who are trying to create gay-straight alliances. [interjections] They introduced and had all of us cheer for somebody who just equated GSAs with residential schools. That's shameful. Stand up, and tell us why you did that. [interjections]

The Speaker: Folks, calm down. I'm trying to think of something wise to – I'm having difficulty.

First supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a bait and switch. Given that seniors on fixed incomes are desperately looking for ways to reduce their costs in these tough economic times and given that this government is aggressively selling this supposed no-cost energy retrofit program but at the same time giving Ontario-based Ecofitt the green light to utilize high-pressure sales tactics in Alberta homes, will the minister issue a notice that any Ecofitt worker caught upselling through their retrofit program will be charged under the Fair Trading Act as per Alberta law?

Ms Hoffman: We're proud to stand up and protect Alberta consumers, Alberta seniors, and Alberta children, Mr. Speaker. Albertans want to know why the former Education critic from that party moved on with six other colleagues, clearly in opposition to what his leader has been saying about protecting children and GSAs. We're proud to protect seniors. We're also proud to protect children. Stand up and tell us if you thought that button was appropriate while your leader and your Education critic clearly disagreed with you.

Mr. Smith: Let's try this again, Mr. Speaker. Last week, following the release of a free light bulb RFP from the environment minister, it was discovered that not only are we not getting the best deal, but the government is breaking its own rules on door-to-door energy sales. The RFP gives Ecofitt the okay to notify residents of, and I quote . . .

The Speaker: Could you get to your question, hon. member? Get to your question.

Mr. Smith: Why is this company getting the green light to break Alberta law? Minister, answer the question.

The Speaker: The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Wildrose is so opposed to saving Albertans money that they're making things up again. This is not a program that will break the door-to-door sales ban. What it will do is introduce door-to-door savings, which is something that the Wildrose is opposed to. They want to reach into seniors' and others' pockets and take out $112 per year. That's over 90,000 Albertans who are going to get those savings, Mr. Speaker, and they are so enamoured with their climate change denial, so enamoured with their ideological fixation on rejecting the science of climate change that they can't find it in their hearts . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Job Creation and Retention

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, we heard from Suncor's CEO recently that oil sands investments are coming to an end, not just for Suncor but for the industry, for a considerable period, probably in excess of 10 years. Suncor has no plans to be going ahead with major capital investment in either mining or in situ in the foreseeable future. Can the Premier tell this House how she's planning to replace thousands of good-paying jobs from hundreds of approved projects not going ahead for at least a decade?

The Speaker: The minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to talk about our Alberta jobs plan. Through our capital plan it's creating 10,000 jobs a year. That was suggested to us by the former Bank of Canada governor David Dodge. As far as our petrochemical diversification program, that will create 5,000 jobs. Who laid the groundwork for that? Well, let's go back in time. That was actually Peter Lougheed, something that both parties have moved far away from. We are investing in jobs. We are investing in Alberta businesses. We have their backs, and we are going to continue to get Alberta's economy back on its feet.

Mr. Panda: Back to reality, Mr. Speaker. Given that thousands of engineers have been let go from EPC firms like Amec, Bantrel, Fluor, Golder, Jacobs, SNC-Lavalin, Stantec, WorleyParsons and given that it is believed that over 20 per cent of Alberta's engineers and 60 per cent of geoscientists are out of work, what is this government doing to keep our highest skilled workers in Alberta?

The Speaker: The minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, again, there are a number of initiatives in our Alberta jobs plan from two different tax credits that will help incent investment right now, when the economy needs it the most.

I just want to talk a little bit about some of the companies that are actually increasing their investment in our province this year. On that note, the Conference Board of Canada, TD Bank, and other banks have all said that Alberta's economy is going to grow the most in 2017 and 2018, faster and more than any other province in the country, growing at a rate of 2.7 per cent. Do you want to know why? Because we got two pipelines, and we're investing . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Panda: Zero answers, Mr. Speaker.

Given that new oil sands mining development won't be happening soon and given that Alberta has plenty of metallurgical and thermal coal projects that could boost the mining industry and given that coal is needed to make the steel for wind turbines and light rail tracks and the coal is already travelling across Alberta from the U.S.A anyway for export to Prince Rupert, will the Premier commit to cutting the red tape and ramping up coal mining to put Albertans back to work, back to real work, not imaginary work?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I mentioned, metallurgic coal is not part of our coal phase-out. In fact, we do agree that it's good for manufacturing. It has a place. So those projects, as mentioned, are treated the same as any other energy project. They go through the AER standards consultation and all that sort. It's impacting communities. It will provide jobs.

I have to say on another front that recently we met with engineers, and I have to give the Labour department . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Employment and Labour Code Consultations

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, when introducing the infamous Bill 6, this government handled the process so poorly that thousands of Albertans protested across the province and on the steps of this Legislature before the government dispatched their ministers to actually speak with Albertans, a novel idea indeed. Now, with proposed changes to employment standards and the labour code, we once again see this government's distaste for open, transparent consultation with Albertans. To the Minister of Labour. Your ministry only set up four invitation-only consultations. Can you tell Albertans how many of those you personally attended?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour responsible for democratic renewal.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We are very proud to have embarked on a review of Alberta's workplace legislation because it has not been reviewed since 1988, since Tom Hanks starred in the movie Big. We're making sure that we are having that conversation with Albertans and engaging with them to determine what their thoughts are on: should Albertans have job-protected sick leave the way other Canadians have? This is the conversation we're having. I'm very pleased with the results we're getting from our round-tables thus far.

Thank you.

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, I'll take that as a zero.

Given that this government decided that four sessions, 36 days, and online consultations were adequate to understand Albertans' concerns around potential changes to the employment standards and to the labour code and given that this Legislature sent a private member's bill on daylight saving time to committee for further consultation and has given three months of consultation for the Castle park management plan, again to the minister: how can you defend a 36-day consultation as adequate for such important legislation when your government and members support much greater engagement for legislation of significantly less impact?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our government believes in consulting adequately on each issue. In the case of our Employment Standards Code and Labour Relations Code we are asking some very focused questions. We are asking Albertans whether they believe compassionate care leave, that other Canadians have access to – that Albertans should have access to leave of the same length. We are asking about job-protected sick leave. We are asking some very targeted questions both online, where over 3,000 Albertans have submitted their opinions, and in round-tables. Making sure that we hear from Albertans is important to me, and we are through this process.

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, zero plus zero is zero.

Given that Ontario is taking over two years to consult and work towards broad-based consensus on similar labour-related legislation and given that the minister has described Alberta's 36-day consultation window as very reasonable despite key stakeholders such as the Calgary Chamber describing the process as completely, woefully inadequate, again to the Minister of Labour: Minister, without even talking about content, will you do the right thing and extend and enhance the consultation process with business and labour to better inform the impactful changes you are contemplating? [interjection]

The Speaker: I can't exactly tell, but there's a very loud voice coming from that corner. I'd ask you to contain your volume, please.

The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our government is embarking on a focused review. There are other reviews happening in this country, much broader, bigger reviews that are talking about things like: who is an employee? We are asking Albertans if they believe they should have job-protected sick leave. We are asking some very targeted questions. The amount of time that we've allocated in order for Albertans to submit their feedback has been adequate. In fact, we still have another week. I would invite all Albertans, including the members opposite and their constituents, anyone interested, to please submit your feedback because the consultation is still active . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Recreational Use of Public Lands

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Community members in my constituency of West Yellowhead enjoy spending time out on the land, particularly in the natural areas. Given that there have been rumours that off-highway vehicles, or OHVs, may be newly prohibited in popular OHV-use areas in West Yellowhead, to the Minister of Environment and Parks: has this government undertaken any plans to prohibit OHVs in many areas in my constituency?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The answer to the hon. Member for West Yellowhead's question is no.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that OHVs are a popular recreational pastime in Alberta and given that the Castle wildland park draft management plan is currently under consultation, to the same minister: how is the government working with OHV users in the Castle area as the plan is being finalized?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, what is in the draft management plan is a staged phase-out of OHV use in environmentally sensitive areas. Also, the House will note that in the budget papers currently there is a proposal for $3 million over the next two years to invest in trail rehabilitation and infrastructure in adjacent areas so that that activity can be well supported where those opportunities are most appropriate and are best supported by the best available science.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Minister. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Albertans enjoy a variety of activities in our great provincial outdoors, to the same minister: how will the Castle wildland draft management plan affect other land-use pastimes such as hunting and fishing?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact what we've done is that we've extended hunting opportunities in the provincial park portion of the Castle in response to requests from ranchers and landowners. The draft plan also works with hunters on access routes and proposes some of those changes for the retrieval of game. We're also making sure our fishing opportunities are there for Albertans for all generations by rehabilitating habitat that's been damaged through erosion, through illegal stream crossing, and so on. We've also increased our enforcement presence in response to requests from ranchers and municipalities and others to ensure . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Labour Legislation and Regulation Consultations

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, recently I had the privilege of holding some town halls in my riding with the Leader of the Opposition. It was an opportunity to hear from our constituents. During these meetings I met a prominent member of the Farmworkers Union. He asked me to openly advocate for a quick resolution to the round-table regulations so that, quote, farmers can strike. End quote. To the Minister of Labour: is the fix in on writing these labour regulations in order to bolster the ranks of the unions?

The Speaker: The Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I understand that the member might not be well versed in labour relations and other things. I understand that perfectly well, but you're more than welcome to educate him on that. Other provinces that have had rights for these workers for decades are . . . [interjections] Yes, I do. They have had these rights for decades, and there isn't every farm that's unionized. I think he's very misinformed.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess the folks across the aisle really don't want to upset the folks that actually door-knock for them.

Mr. Speaker, given that this government has announced its intention to rewrite several parts of the labour laws and given that any recommendations from the farm safety round-tables on labour can be undone by this upcoming labour rewrite, Minister, if the government intended all along to rewrite the labour laws, then was this farm safety round-table nothing more than a PR exercise to take some heat off this government for an ill-conceived Bill 6?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We believe firmly in the rights of all workers, including farm workers, and in basic human rights. I'm perfectly willing to sit down with any member from over there and help to educate them on those basic human rights. We feel that these farm workers should have similar rights that every other farm worker in Canada has. These workers now have those same rights here in Alberta, and that's something this government is proud of. We're making Albertans' lives better.

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, I think the question had a lot more substance than the answer. If this is not a PR stunt . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Hold it. You may continue.

Mr. Schneider: If it's not a PR stunt, then given that farm safety round-tables have been going on for many months and given that your government is rewriting several aspects of the labour code and the employment standards and that the question has more substance than the answers I've been getting, Minister: why are you only giving Albertans a five-week consultation when the farm safety aspects alone were given several months?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again I have the opportunity to educate the member a little bit. This group of workers didn't have these rights ever in the history of Alberta. For decades the workers have been denied these rights and are now going to be getting these rights. It takes a little bit more work when they had no rights in the first place. Here's an opportunity to give these basic human rights to these workers as all other workers in Alberta have right across the country. That, I'm proud of. That, this government is proud of. We're sticking up for Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

2:40 Crown Prosecution Services Funding

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recent stats point to a dramatic increase in crime as well as the severity of crime in the last two years. Actually, criminal prosecutions rose accordingly during the same time period, yet in 2015-16 this government cut the Alberta Crown prosecutors budget by $5 million and left 35 positions unfilled. Then the Jordan decision caught Alberta's justice system in a vise. To the minister: why did you reduce the Crown's budget in each of your first two years in office?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the member alluded to, backlogs in our court system had built up over a long time, and this government, when it took office, came into a fiscal situation that was very tight, which is why we were ensuring that we found the necessary efficiencies in every department. Obviously, just as the member has alluded to, the Jordan decision had a massive change in direction in terms of the court system, so we have responded accordingly. We will continue to respond to the facts on the ground because that's what good governance looks like.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Justice minister was asked a direct question about cutting the Crown prosecution service during the NDP's first two years and given that the cuts resulted in "exercising restraint in filling vacancies" and given that those vacancies involved 35 prosecutor positions, yet she points to the former government for "intense backlogs," Minister, will you not accept responsibility for the role you played in creating the backlog?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The member, of course, is absolutely right. We did have the file for two years; they had it for 44. But I'm sure those things are perfectly comparable. When the situation changed when the Jordan decision came down, we knew we had to do things differently, and that is why we injected resources, unlike the members over there, who propose 10 per cuts to that same department.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that during those same two years the Justice minister increased funding to Legal Aid by more than 26 per cent and given that this enhanced funding for legal aid clearly showed the minister knew the system was dealing with higher caseloads and given that the minister still went on to cut the prosecutors budget two years running: Minister, what was your plan here? Were you simply expecting Crown prosecutors to do more with less?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the increases of funding to Legal Aid were as a result of decades of underfunding by the previous government because apparently they don't understand that all elements of the system need to work together in order to have a functioning justice system. The rights of vulnerable individuals in Alberta are things that need protecting as are the rights of all Albertans, and we will continue to stand up for them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Edmonton Police Service 125th Anniversary

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans deserve to feel safe in their homes, communities, and workplaces. The Edmonton Police Service plays a critical role in ensuring that they do. Today I am proud to recognize the work of the Edmonton Police Service, an organization which just celebrated its 125th anniversary.

A strong, well-functioning law enforcement system is one of the cornerstones of any thriving city. Over the last 125 years Edmonton has grown larger and even more complex. Each change in growth also comes with unexpected new challenges, including opportunities for criminal activity. EPS has consistently risen to meet these challenges, finding innovative ways to maintain the peace and deal with the forces that disrupt it.

Mr. Speaker, that mission would be impossible to carry out without the brave men and women of the Edmonton Police Service. These officers put on their uniforms each day without knowing what dangers may cross their path. We ask so much of these officers. We require them to be courageous in the face of physical danger, to be resourceful and quick thinking in the case of medical emergencies, and to be compassionate in their dealings with victims of violence. Their ability to perform these challenging tasks with grace and integrity is nothing short of remarkable. They leave their homes and families every day, not knowing if they will return, and when they do, they bear the burden of things they have seen and the time they must spend away from their loved ones. These sacrifices are to ensure that we can live and enjoy safe communities.

Our government, especially the Minister of Justice, enjoys an open and honest and well-respected relationship with the Edmonton Police Service. They are an integral part of ensuring that we can continue to make life better for all Albertans.

I want to ask all members of this House to join me in expressing my gratitude to the northeast division and to the Edmonton Police Service. Thank you.

Easter

Mr. Orr: Over 700 years before the first Easter one of many prophecies made by the prophet Isaiah was, "Surely he took up our pain and bore our suffering . . . he was pierced for our transgressions, he was crushed for our iniquities; the punishment that brought us peace was on him, and by his wounds we are healed."

This week Christians around the world are recognizing this sacrifice made by their Lord and Saviour 2,000 years ago. Christians begin their remembrance by honouring Palm Sunday, when Jesus, their King, rode into Jerusalem on a humble donkey. Later that week, after a meal with His closest friends Jesus was betrayed. On Good Friday the Romans crucified Him for a crime He didn't commit, in one of the cruelest expressions of evil. For Christians around the world the killing of Jesus, the guiltless one with a message of peace, is a proxy for the death that we all deserve. His death forces us to confront our own faults and shortcomings.

But there is hope: the resurrection, the most profound moment in human history, when, as Christians believe, the all-powerful God of the universe, come in human flesh, died and came back to life. The God of great mercy and power makes right what is wrong, the power of death as condemnation for our sins is broken, injustice is made right, and a life cruelly taken is restored. This is the ultimate divine intervention. This is God revealing His true nature of compassion and righteousness, providing a pathway of redemption and restoration. This is the assurance that there is hope for humanity.

Because of Easter we know that God accepts us. We also know that He invites us to be changed and to choose change within. We have lived long enough in our old ways. Let us now live with joy for Him, moved by thanks and love rather than fear. At Easter God extends the free gift of life to all. It remains only for us to embrace this priceless gift.

Thank you.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Bill 9

Marketing of Agricultural Products Amendment Act, 2017

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today to introduce Bill 9, the Marketing of Agricultural Products Amendment Act, 2017.

Bill 9 will help to restore one of the fundamental principles and intents of this legislation, which is to empower Alberta's agriculture producers and organizations to set the direction for their own industries. The Marketing of Agricultural Products Act, or MAPA, enables our province's agriculture commissions to collect service charges to fund their operations as well as activities that benefit our broader agriculture industries such as research and marketing. The amendment I am introducing today will provide commissions and their member producers with the choice to implement the service charge model, either refundable or nonrefundable, that works best for them. Mr. Speaker, we recognize that a one-size-fits-all approach doesn't make sense in today's diverse agriculture industry. This amendment will also bring us closer in line with other jurisdictions across the country. I ask all members to support this important legislation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 9 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table five copies of a document I shared with the Minister of Children's Services today, entitled Together We Raise Tomorrow, summing up the consultation for the children's charter in 2013.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table a copy of an e-mail from the Calgary board of education to Calgary parents. It highlights the concerns the board has about not understanding the impacts on fees and service levels for families, on transportation, and therefore on delays to preregistration for the 2017-18 school year, seeking clarification on what constitutes instructional materials and supplies.

I also table the letter from the Education minister to parents and guardians. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings that I referred to in estimates this morning with the Minister of Labour. The first one is from the Alberta Chambers of Commerce, a document that is titled Cost Impacts Affecting Employment Outcomes in Alberta: Considerations Regarding Further Provincial Minimum Wage Increases.

The second tabling I have is a document prepared by the University of Calgary entitled If It Matters, Measure It: Unpacking Diversification in Canada. It references that Alberta and Saskatchewan are the most diverse economies in Canada.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At this time I'd like to table the requisite number of copies of a publication entitled Metallurgical Coal: Building the Future, which clearly outlines the differences between metallurgical and thermal coal.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I rise today to table five copies of the Information and Privacy Commissioner's investigation report F2017-IR-03, entitled Investigation into Allegation of Delays and Possible Interference in Responding to Access Requests.

I would also like to table five copies of the commissioner's special report and request for legislative amendment, submitted to the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, entitled Producing Records to the Commissioner: Restoring Independent and Effective Oversight under the FOIP Act.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the Hon. Mr. Mason, Minister of Infrastructure and Minister of Transportation, responses to Written Question 7 and Written Question 8, asked for by Mr. van Dijken on April 10, 2017: Written Question 7, as of March 1, 2017, what is the cost to resurface one kilometre of highway with gravel at both 11-metre and 13-metre widths; and Written Question 8, as of March 1, 2017, what is the cost to resurface one kilometre of highway with asphalt at both 11-metre and 13-metre widths?

Speaker's Ruling Language Creating Disorder

The Speaker: Hon. members, I would like to make a comment if I could. Earlier today the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky in his comments referred, I believe – I don't have the Blues in front of me – to the word “lie” or to lying related to that. As we all know and discuss in this House – I've discussed many times – context is always the situation that comes into play in this House. I want to remind that member and all of the members that when they are citing from documents, they cannot “use language which would be out of order if spoken by a Member.” I would refer the member to page 609 of the House of Commons Procedure and Practice. I'd ask that you all pay attention to that.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Yes.

Point of Clarification

Mr. Cooper: I'm just seeking some clarification from you to ensure that we won't make that mistake in the future. Under 13(2) “The Speaker shall explain the reasons for any decision on the request of a Member.” It appears to me, Mr. Speaker, that you made a ruling about language that was used by my colleague in a member's statement where he quoted the Energy minister utilizing language that was deemed parliamentary by you in a ruling. He was using it in a very similar context today, that the government – in fact, the only change was the word “government” for “opposition” in the quote that he had made. I'm having a hard time understanding how the context is significantly different, and I'm having a hard time understanding how today that language could be ruled out of order when it wasn't when the government used it. If you could provide some clarification so that on a go-forward we have a much better understanding of exactly how you would like this rule applied, that would be very helpful to this side of the House.

The Speaker: Well, let me just – first of all, Government House Leader, did you have a comment you wanted to make?

Mr. Mason: I did.

The Speaker: Sorry. I may be out of order in this regard.

I will respond to the Opposition House Leader. First of all, I want to remind you of the comments I made at the outset, that it has everything to do with context, and they are different each time. That includes things like references to tone, et cetera. Nonetheless, in this particular instance you can't say – I also indicated that the specific fact that was addressed to this particular comment was on page 609. Maybe you missed it. I don't believe that applied before, but I stand to be corrected. Again, another part of page 609 is that you can't do indirectly what you can't do directly. I think it's wise for all of the House to avoid those words like “liar,” “lie.” It's not constructive. It's not helpful. Yes, each context or situation is different, and I want to remind you of paying attention to that in the future.

Hon. members, the daily Routine is now concluded. Pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(5)(b) the House stands adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at 1:30.

Please be seated. Just a minute. I'm not finished yet.

The legislative policy committees will convene this afternoon and tomorrow morning for the consideration of the main estimates. This afternoon Families and Communities will consider the estimates for Health in the Rocky Mountain Room. Tomorrow morning Families and Communities will consider the estimates for Service Alberta in the Parkland Room, and Alberta's Economic Future will consider the estimates for Infrastructure in the Rocky Mountain Room.

[The Assembly adjourned at 2:58 p.m. pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(5)(b)]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Please bow your heads. Let us reflect and pray, each in our own way. Hon. members, today is the International Day of Pink, a day against bullying and discrimination. Each of us might want to reflect on those times when one of us may have been have a victim but also maybe a time when we may have been the perpetrator. Bullying is a threat to rights and freedoms and therefore a threat to democracy and to this Chamber.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is always a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all of the members of this Assembly one of the school classes that visit this Legislature from my constituency. One of the best ways of learning anything is to do it, and by visiting the Legislature, these young minds have the opportunity to put a real face to the terms “MLA” or “Premier” or the “Speaker of the House.” It is with great pleasure that I would ask the staff and the students of St. Anthony school in Drayton Valley to stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It’s my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly on behalf of the Minister of Energy a number of bright young minds from Heart Valley Christian School in the beautiful constituency of Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley. They are accompanied by their teacher Harley Toews and four parent chaperones: Burt and Cindy Barkman, Herman and Judy Neudorf. I’d ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions. First, a school group. I rise today to welcome Mr. Tyson Mastel and the grade 6 students from Brightview elementary school. I know Brightview well and Tyson as well. He is always the first teacher to invite me to read during Read In Week, and I’m looking forward to getting that call again, Tyson. I now ask that Tyson, his colleagues Allyson Tanner and Cindy Annala, and the Brightview students please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other school groups?

The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Sorry. Now for my other guests. My apologies, Mr. Speaker. I rise to recognize the province’s optometrists and the care that they provide to Albertans every day. Today is eye health day, and I hope my colleagues were able to stop by the display downstairs, have their eyes examined, and learn a little bit more about Alberta’s eye health situation. I now ask that Dr. Kim Bugera and Dr. Nasir Khan from the Alberta College of Optometrists as well as Dr. Troy Brady, Dr. Kevin Hesterman, and Dr. Brian Wik from the Alberta Association of Optometrists please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly. Thank you for being here.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It’s an honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of our Assembly Vanessa Schonekess. Vanessa is a paramedic in the Stony Plain constituency with a remarkable history of dedication to the emergency services. I’d ask Vanessa to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It’s my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you an amazing young woman named Rachel Brown, and she’s here today with her mom, Sharon. Rachel attends Richard S. Fowler, where she recently met Bear, a therapy dog, and that has inspired her journey and quest to get her own service dog, so we’re thankful for our government’s recent changes to the regulations on service dogs. I’d like you to join me in welcoming them to the House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Northern Hills.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’d like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two board members from the Reel Fun Film Festival. Please rise when I say your names. Cathy McKee is the festival director. In her first life she was a teacher with the Calgary Catholic and public school boards. Cathy left her career to raise four children, and then as she got older, she began working for the Calgary International Film Festival. Her love of films led to the launch of the Reel Fun Film Festival.

Debbie Muller was a high school science teacher with the Calgary separate school board. She retired to raise her four children and worked as a volunteer at her community school and church. She later became a board member for the film festival. I would now ask that my colleagues extend the traditional greeting of the Legislature.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It’s my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Miss Jessica Bos. Jessica’s mother, Shannon Hamelin, is a friend of all of us in the opposition caucus. She works side by side with us each day, holding this government to account, and Jessica is here with her mother today. She’s a strong fiscal conservative dedicated to working with us to make sure that this government is replaced in 2019, and I would ask that she rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Lonnie Pilkington. Lonnie is a volunteer with the Reel Fun Film Festival in Calgary, which my colleague from Calgary-Northern Hills will discuss further in his member's statement, and is also a constituent of Edmonton-Meadowlark. Prior to her retirement Lonnie worked for Service Alberta for 35 years, and we thank her for her ongoing commitment to our province. I'd ask her to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two of my constituents from the exemplary riding of Calgary-Foothills that are here today along with their colleagues on behalf of the Canadian Parks and Wilderness Society, better known as CPAWS: Gord James, who is the chair of the CPAWS Southern Alberta Board and a former colleague of mine at Suncor Energy; and Phil Nykyforuk, who is the vice-chair of the CPAWS Southern Alberta Board and a partner at the law firm Gowling Lafleur Henderson LLP in Calgary. I would ask all our guests from CPAWS to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Ethane Jarvis and his son Derek. Ethane is my assistant in the Grande Prairie office. If you could please rise, Ethane and Derek, and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

Government Policies

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, I have been trying to work with the government to get to the bottom of important economic issues for two years now with little success. Just this week both the Minister of Infrastructure and the Premier laughed at my serious questions about the Crown corporation and refused to give any real answers. There has been a pattern from this front bench of undemocratic, insulting behaviour at a time when Albertans are looking for leadership.

Last year the minister of economic development bragged about how he was going to create 100,000 jobs. Since then tens of thousands of Albertans have lost work and seen the introduction of many job-killing policies, like the 100-megatonne cap and the $5 billion carbon tax and other tax hikes. The minister brags about creating part-time retail jobs while tens of thousands of highly skilled workers sit at home or leave the province after they've run out of EI.

The CEO of Suncor, a bellwether company of the industry, just warned that there could be no new oil sands investment for the next 10 years. The minister naively tells oil sands producers to use AITC and CITC to create jobs. It's ridiculous. Those $5 million tax credits have no relevance in developing oil sands projects. This is a crisis situation. How does the NDP respond? By killing thousands of well-paying coal jobs with an ideologically confused coal phase-out plan. Even the cabinet seems to be unaligned or in disagreement.

I have been trying to meet with the minister for three months to discuss these important questions, and he has no time for me, while I can get appointments on short notice with four ministers from Saskatchewan. Albertans expect government to work with them. The Premier and cabinet must do better.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Northern Hills.

Reel Fun Film Festival in Calgary

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since 2006 the Reel Fun Film Festival has provided youth and families with the very best in film. This year marks the 10th anniversary. Running for a full week each year, the festival partners with Landmark Cinemas in Calgary-Northern Hills to showcase international, award-winning films, including Canadian premieres, to audiences of all ages. This year films were viewed by 6,640 kindergarten through grade 12 students from 41 Calgary classrooms.

On day 2 I stopped by to meet the festival director and cofounder, Cathy McKee. To select films, Cathy and teacher liaison Debbie Muller scour the planet looking for international, award-winning, family-friendly films with high-quality content, suitable language, and affordable screening costs. During the festival volunteers pitch in to organize the school groups, and they have concessions ready for them when they arrive. Yes, popcorn and drinks are available.

This year they screened 18 films from 16 countries, one an international premiere, nine Canadian premieres, and three western Canadian premieres, one made by a local Calgary writer and director.

When I asked what students learn by attending the festival, Cathy told me that the experience of seeing award-winning global films that can be linked to curriculum is unique, and the experience extends beyond the theatre into the classrooms and homes. One such film is Fanny's Journey, a film about Jewish children forced to flee Nazi-occupied France for Switzerland during World War II. I attended the screening and noted few dry eyes in the theatre.

Calgary-Northern Hills is certainly fortunate to have community-minded folks like Cathy McKee, Debbie Muller, Lonnie Pilkington, and many other volunteers who have made this event such a success over the past decade. The festival has been operated for 10 years by 100 per cent volunteers with sponsorship to cover costs from the local film industry and private business donations and sponsorship.

I wish them every success as Cathy and her team carry this film festival on into the future for the benefit of all Albertans.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Vaisakhi

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a proud Sikh it is an honour to rise today to acknowledge Vaisakhi, which is a special time of year for my family and my community. Vaisakhi is a historical and a religious festival in Sikhism. It is celebrated on the first day of the month of Vaisakh of the Sikh calendar every year. Vaisakhi marks the Sikh new year and commemorates the formation of Khalsa Panth by Guru Gobind Singh, our 10th guru, in 1699.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta has a thriving Sikh community. In our province our community has been a proud contributor to our economy, provincial culture, the Alberta way of life, and leadership. And I can't help but remember our dear friend Manmeet today.

Vaisakhi is time for seva, or selfless service, which fits in well with the province because Albertans are well known for selfless service, always willing to lend a hand to those in need, expecting nothing in return, which we all saw in the Fort McMurray wildfire last year.

Mr. Speaker, there will be a number of Sikh celebrations for Vaisakhi around the province this weekend, and I urge all members of this House to attend one near them. Those who have attended can attest to the excitement of this colourful celebration.

Our 10th guru created Khalsa Panth and gave us the principles of Sikhism and expected Sikhs to live by those principles. A few days before Vaisakhi I want to challenge all the Sikhs living in Alberta and around the world with a simple question: are we living by the principles given to us by our guru on this important day? The principles are protecting the truth, equality, protecting the underprivileged, living a life of integrity, dedication, and meditation on the divine name with love and devotion. My challenge to you today is that we continue to make our 10th guru proud.

To all the Sikhs around the world: I wish you a happy Vaisakhi and a very happy and prosperous new year. [Remarks in Punjabi] Hail the Khalsa who belong to the Lord God. Hail the Lord God to whom belongs the victory. [As submitted]

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Stony Plain Emergency Services

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it's my privilege to rise and speak about the amazing staff of emergency services in the constituency of Stony Plain. These people are on the front line of health care and public safety, working every day to keep us safe and healthy. I am so proud to be part of a government that supports our front-line workers.

Recently I had the honour of attending the unsung heroes award gala. This gala was held to honour those individuals from emergency services that go above and beyond the call of duty. Not only do these people put themselves in harm's way in order to help others and work demanding shifts; they also reach out to the community to engage, teach, and bring awareness about all aspects of protective services.

The recipient for paramedics was Vanessa Schonekess, who I had the honour of introducing earlier. Vanessa started with the EMS in Leduc in 1982, volunteering with the Tri-county EMS team. Soon she was recruited by the Parkland Ambulance Authority, and she moved to Stony Plain in 1983. Vanessa was one of only two paramedics in Parkland county at the time, and because of this, she worked many demanding shifts and provided advanced life support backup for our communities until more paramedics were trained.

Vanessa has worked as a supervisor and teacher in both basic and advanced life support for adults and pediatrics. She continues to mentor new staff and students, bringing new courses and training to EMS as well as teaching the first LEAP course to paramedics, which centres around the care of palliative patients. She has worked closely with RCMP, victims' services, peace officers, and fire services for many years and richly deserves this recognition.

Along with Vanessa two other outstanding individuals in our community, RCMP officer Constable Patricia Chornoby and Stony Plain Fire Chief Trevor Mistal, were also recognized for their services.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

World Curling Championships

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The nuance and strategy of the game are as varied as a chess game. It requires the endurance of a marathoner, the agility of a gymnast. The game to which I refer is curling, a sport which has been played in Canada for longer than my lifetime. Now, I've heard some people say that watching curling is like watching paint dry. I say: absolutely not so.

Last week in Edmonton the world spotlight was on Alberta. Edmonton hosted the 2017 World Men's Curling Championship. Thousands of fans attended from across Canada and the world. An exciting and historic win was delivered by fellow Newfoundlander and hometown hero Brad Gushue and his team of Nichols, Gallant, and Walker. The brilliant Gushue team was the first team to go undefeated in the world men's championship since 1995. Gushue has also led his team to a gold medal at the Olympics in Torino and a gold medal in the junior international championships, from my research the only curler to have done so.

Now, this was not the only recent win for Canada in curling. On March 26 Rachel Homan and her team – Miskew, Courtney, and Weagle – from Ontario won the World Women's Curling Championship in Beijing. Her team also went undefeated in that championship, and this was the first gold for Canada since 2008.

Canada has a lot to be proud of with the accomplishments of these great athletes.

I will have the honour of bringing greetings to the World Senior Curling Championships, which will be held in Lethbridge beginning on April 22. This will be another opportunity for Alberta to shine on the world stage, and I invite all of Alberta to Lethbridge.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. members, before we start the clock, I just want to, as a courtesy to all, remind members of the memo that was distributed to everyone, I think, on February 13. Just to refresh your memory, "Members may use their mobile devices during Oral Question Period but must only use them as reading devices and not for streaming, sending or receiving messages."

Start the clock.

The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Oral Question Period

Residential No-charge Energy Savings Program

Mr. Jean: The NDP is dripping with hypocrisy. They say that they're protecting Albertans from private-sector energy sales agents at their doors while mandating that the installers of their free light bulb program have sales experience. Now, Mr. Speaker, Ecofitt is told to poke around inside people's homes to identify ways to upsell further energy efficiency solutions. They are salespeople. That's the mandate the NDP has given them. They're not just installing lightbulbs. Does the Premier see the hypocrisy of sending companies into Albertans' homes to upsell and act as PR agents for the NDP government?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, yesterday I very clearly distinguished between door-to-door sales and helping Albertans save money on their energy bills. I'm not going to go back to that quite yet.

When it comes to hypocrisy, the member opposite sat in a government for nine years and not a peep about equalization that whole time, but he comes here and talks about it. He sat in government for nine years, watched the judges problem grow and grow and grow, said not a word, came back here and complains about it. He sat in government for nine years, didn't get any pipelines, came back here . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Jean: There is no denying it, Mr. Speaker. This contract with Ecofitt is a sweetheart deal that is a kick in the teeth to Alberta businesses. It's a massive competitive advantage for Ecofitt as they get tens of millions of dollars from the NDP to build their Ontario business. Ecofitt currently advertises things that don't even fall under the no-charge savings program; for instance, energy monitors, pre-rinse sprayers, window and door caulking, shrink-fit window kits, weather strips, and the list goes on and on. How can the NDP guarantee these products won't be pushed on Albertans door to door when Ecofitt comes into their homes?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, what we have done is ensured a ban on door-to-door energy sales and some of the predatory practices that we saw seniors, in particular, being subjected to. It was not a ban that was supported by the conservative parties because they're not interested in making life better for Albertans. What we have not done is banned door-to-door savings because we are making life more affordable for all Albertans.

Mr. Jean: The Premier keeps insisting that she's trying to help Albertans with their energy bills, but here are the facts. She is crushing Albertans with a massive new carbon tax. Heating bills, gas bills, and groceries are all going to be more expensive this year, and – wait for it – she plans to raise the tax by 150 per cent next year. She is sending a company into people's homes with taxpayer money to install light bulbs and poke around their homes to educate and upsell homeowners on their products. Now, how can the Premier possibly stand behind her government's own gross hypocrisy?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, what our government is focused on doing is making life more affordable for Albertans, and that's exactly what we are doing. So low- and middle-income Albertans are getting rebates. So all Albertans, 90,000 households at last count, are getting help with saving on their energy bills. So families across Alberta are getting help with their school fees. So students all across Alberta are getting help with their tuition fees. You know what? We're just getting started. I know the members opposite don't want to help make life more affordable for Albertans, but we are just . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
Second main question.

Canadian Free Trade Agreement

Mr. Jean: The ink is barely dry on the Canadian free trade agreement, and the NDP are already making our trade partners extremely nervous. You see, they drove a hard bargain in free trade talks, telling other provinces that they'd have to deal with a brand new Crown corporation that Alberta would create to handle procurement. The NDP went as far as insisting it be in the final trade agreement. Now they want us to believe it was all just a joke, a farce, that they never really meant it. What are our provincial trade partners and potential investors to think when only days after the trade deal is signed by this government, the NDP are putting the entire commitment of the contract in doubt?

Ms Notley: You know, Mr. Speaker, the minister yesterday made it very, very clear that we have no intention of moving forward with a Crown corporation. You know what? The other thing that the minister said and that bears repeating is that our government is absolutely committed to standing up for Alberta jobs, and that's exactly what we did in that agreement. If the member opposite wants to go outside onto the streets of Edmonton or the streets of Calgary and explain why he's angry that we aren't creating jobs in Saskatchewan and Ontario, I suggest he go right ahead and that he come back and let us know how that worked for him.

Mr. Jean: Along with the creation of a new Crown corporation, the NDP negotiated exceptions to this trade agreement dealing with the disposition of Crown lands, residency requirements for hunting permits, alcohol, resource extraction, and power contracts. Free trade agreement? My goodness. It's all in the agreement that the NDP signed, Mr. Speaker, but perhaps all of that, too, was some part of an elaborate ruse to hoodwink our provincial neighbours. I'm wondering when the Premier plans to fill in her counterparts across the country as well as Albertans at home on what other parts of this free trade agreement she doesn't actually plan to honour. [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet.

Ms Notley: You know, Mr. Speaker, I understand that the member for Regina-Somewhere is very concerned about the jobs in Saskatchewan and jobs in Quebec and jobs in Ontario. He's doing a lovely job for them, but you know what? Our government is focused on jobs for Albertans, and that is exactly what that deal is going to deliver.

Mr. Jean: The NDP government's handling of this file is so confusing that it's hard to tell what they really want as an outcome. Thankfully for all of us, there were others at the table when Alberta bungled negotiations. For instance, she's right. Saskatchewan's Economy minister has stated that, and I quote, it was a consistent Alberta position, that both at the officials level and the political level Alberta has been very consistent that they intended to create a Crown. End quote. Will the Premier just come clean and either admit that they were in over their heads negotiating or that they actually are creating a Crown corporation? Come clean with Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I believe the first question has been answered several times in that we are not moving forward in terms of creating a Crown corporation. Here's what we are moving forward on. We are investing over $30 billion in infrastructure for Alberta families and Alberta communities. You know what? We're going to do everything we can to make sure that it's Albertans that work on those projects. You know what else we are doing? We are working with the people of Fort McMurray as they rebuild, and we are making sure that it is businesses from Fort McMurray that get those contracts. You know what else? We are moving forward to a new renewable energy . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
Let me remind everyone in the House: 35 seconds each.
The Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Information and Privacy Commissioner Report

Mr. Cooper: A new report from the Privacy Commissioner released yesterday is another black mark on this government. They have quickly adopted a shocking pattern of secrecy and dishonesty.

I've never seen comments from the Privacy Commissioner in Alberta dripping with such contempt for a government that consistently blocks access to information and Albertans getting it. It's outrageous. It's clear that the NDP can no longer be trusted. Why does the Premier think it's okay to block the Privacy Commissioner from doing her job?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, it would be helpful if the member opposite were to read the report a little closer because the report addresses investigations of conduct that occurred between 2009 and 2014, conduct that was delivered by their new slow-dance partners slightly over to the left or to the right. Who knows? That's what the report is about. Our government has been working diligently on improving transparency and access for Albertans, and I look forward to our Minister of Justice talking about just how we're doing that.

Mr. Cooper: "What should have been a relatively straightforward investigation has concluded under a shadow that . . . has the potential to erode public confidence in an open and accountable government." This is under the Premier's watch. She has the ability to release the information today, but they continue to block the Privacy Commissioner from getting that information. What is the Premier hiding? Why is she trying so very hard to hide this information from Albertans?

Ms Notley: Again, Mr. Speaker, I urge the member opposite to read the timeline in the report that he's referring to. The investigations and the requests were made in March 2015, at which point the whole thing went to the courts, and everything essentially stopped because the Supreme Court of Canada was reviewing the issues. We indicated that once that decision was made and once the Privacy Commissioner made recommendations, we would consider them and look at how we can move forward. We got that report yesterday, and we look forward to acting on many of those recommendations to improve freedom of information . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, the Premier has access to the information today, yesterday, and two years ago, and she ought to release it. This is the third report in three months condemning the actions of this government. This is the type of nonsense that the government promised would stop when they took over, and it hasn't. The government is continuing to abuse the system. They're politically interfering to cover up information, and it's all being done under the guise of solicitor-client privilege. Will the Premier fix the law? If not, why not, and what are you hiding? [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet, please, everyone. [interjection] Hon. member. The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. That was a lovely display of drama. The only thing is that the member opposite should have turned another 45 degrees to his left and asked his new slow-dance partner that beautifully delivered question because that's what the report is about. Just yesterday the Privacy Commissioner tabled recommendations that arose as a result of the November decision of the Supreme Court of Canada. We have committed that we will look at those recommendations, and we will move forward to build on the work that we have already done to improve transparency, to improve response times, and to . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
The leader of the third party.

Employment and Labour Code Consultations

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, Alberta has benefited from labour peace over the years. Workers have been paid. Business has been allowed to make a profit. These things go well together, and they create prosperity. The Alberta Chambers of Commerce has concerns that the current labour consultations are inadequate in light of the significant changes contemplated. The minister has the letter. To the Premier: since your minister has refused to fix the consultation process, will you now direct that that consultation period be extended in order to get proper input from business, organized labour, and all working Albertans?

Ms Notley: You know, Mr. Speaker, the member opposite suggests that everything was working fine and that workers were getting paid, and in most cases they were unless they were sick, in which case they wouldn't get paid, they wouldn't get access to EI that many other people in Canada would get, and they might get fired. You know what? That wasn't actually working so well for all Albertans. It is time that these issues get reviewed. That's what we committed to doing. That's what we are doing. We're getting all the information. We will ensure that everyone will have been heard from, and then we will move forward in a responsible way that benefits all Albertans.

Mr. McIver: Well, 5 per cent unemployment was a lot better than the Premier's 10.

Though it's reasonable for the minister to want to update labour legislation, it can be said that with only 45 labour stoppages in the last decade, this is not an urgent situation. It could be called a solution looking for a problem. Labour peace, high employment, and profits are a formula for prosperity and a high standard of living. Premier, since workers have benefited from the current system for years, including in unionized workplaces, can you assure Albertans that you have no plan to subject workers to intimidation by taking away the secret ballot provision in the legislation?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure that members of the Supreme Court of Canada will be interested to hear that the member opposite sees them as a solution looking for a problem. You know what? We don't think that is true. We think it is time for us to move forward, to modernize things, and to also do so in a way that encourages wide-ranging consultation and good discussions. That's exactly what we will do.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad the Premier mentioned a wide range of consultation because the credibility of labour relations is based on balance between labour interests and business interests at the Labour Relations Board. With the latest order in council four out of the six new picks were from the labour side. To the Premier: since you like to say that you bring different voices to the table, can you assure Alberta workers and businesses that you will maintain the balance between business and labour at the Labour Relations Board?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I do find it interesting that the member opposite suggests there was balance when back when they were in government, they had a Minister of Labour who refused in principle to ever meet with the leader of the Federation of Labour while he was Minister of Labour. Notwithstanding that, we absolutely believe in balance, and that's absolutely the way we would move forward. It just happened that the vacancies that came up were worker ones. Of course, the labour board must maintain balance, and we are absolutely committed to that.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The very first thing I did as an MLA was try to put a stop to unauthorized shredding. Transparency and openness are core values of the Alberta Party, and we expected that this new government would take their once-in-a-generation victory as an opportunity to make real changes to Alberta's FOIP laws. Yesterday the Privacy Commissioner issued a report that says that there was "possible political interference" and that she has "been thwarted by the refusal of the former and current governments" to grant access to records. To the Premier: what's going on over there? What caused the commissioner to accuse your government of withholding records?

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, the commissioner also notes that there have been improvements under our government, and that is because we have taken action to hire more FOIP co-ordinators, something that was necessary. The commissioner identified that there was a long-standing resourcing problem, so we've moved forward with that. Even while waiting for the decision from the Supreme Court of Canada, the Minister of Justice has asked her officials to do work on significantly narrowing the application of the solicitor-client privilege exception, that had been overused by the previous government. We are taking action. We know there's more to do. We look forward to doing that.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Clark: "Former and current governments," Mr. Speaker.

It never ceases to amaze me how quickly a new government acquires bad habits. When in opposition, the NDP loudly and correctly criticized the PCs for withholding information. You also complained about their partisan advertising budget, using their majority to push through controversial legislation, and gratuitous puffball questions. My, how things change. Again to the Premier: is your government obstructing the work of the Privacy Commissioner because now that you're in charge, you'd rather keep things secret? [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet.

Ms Notley: What we are doing, Mr. Speaker, is supporting the work of the Privacy Commissioner as a result of the initiatives taken by our Minister of Justice and as a result of just yesterday receiving the recommendations from the Privacy Commissioner now that she's responded to the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada, that wasn't made until November 2016. As a result of that work having just been finished, we look forward to working with her and ultimately with members of this Assembly to improve our transparency, to improve access to information because that benefits all Albertans.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A very straightforward and simple question. The Privacy Commissioner made a clear request for simple changes to Alberta's FOIP Act to address her concerns. Given that it's only going to take a couple of weeks from the time labour consultations wrap up until we see substantial legislative changes in this House, a simple question to the Premier: will you accept the commissioner's request and bring changes to the FOIP Act this spring?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, as I've said, we just received the request and the report from the FOIP commissioner yesterday, so we will review it. We will review it as part of likely a broader review of the freedom of information legislation and probably a broader review that would happen in an all-party committee. As we know from the last time that the member opposite participated in what was supposed to be a very clear discussion in an all-party meeting, things kind of went off the rails, and it took a little bit longer than expected. [interjection]

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Ms Notley: We certainly do plan to move forward on improving transparency, and we look forward to working with the commissioner, taking into account her recommendations, and having further discussions going forward.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
Calgary-Northern Hills.

School Construction

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In Budget 2017 this government committed to making significant investments in new schools and modernization projects, having allocated $500 million this year for new school projects. Given that we're catching up on school construction and that we've inherited a school infrastructure deficit from the previous government, to the Minister of Education: how does this government plan to deal with the backlog of crucial school infrastructure that Albertans need?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, since we've taken this term, we have been building schools, with 26 new school projects in this budget. Yes, there has been a considerable backlog, but we had the Auditor General help us to build a way to streamline the situation to make sure that we are building schools and giving long-term planning to those school infrastructure projects. For more than a decade the government failed to do so. I'm here to help clean it up and build schools in every corner of this province.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. Given that members opposite would make reckless cuts that would only worsen the issue of school infrastructure, to the same minister: how does our government plan to address the issue of much-needed high schools in Alberta such as the north-central high school in Coventry Hills in my constituency. [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet, please.
The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, I've heard loud and clear from the constituents in Calgary-Northern Hills. We know that there is a high school needed there. There are schools right across the whole province that we are required to build. I've been working closely with school boards and their lists that they give us, and we update those over time. Certainly, we are taking prudent, practical steps to make sure that we build the schools where we need them, to have teachers in the classroom, support staff, and the whole deal because we care about education. We want to make life better for . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that my constituents are concerned about a high school in the area, to the same minister: can you clarify, please, how schools are prioritized and selected for funding?

Mr. Eggen: Mr. Speaker, I'd be very glad to do so. We use the school boards' capital lists. We work with geography. We work with imminent safety concerns. For example, in Drayton Valley there was a school that needed to be taken care of there. Of course, enrolment is the biggest factor because we still see very dramatic growth in all of our population centres, especially in suburban centres. We certainly will address those coming because we have a long-term plan to build schools, make life better for Alberta families, and get the job done.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Labour Legislation Review

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, Albertans have expressed their frustration and concerns with the government's labour laws review. This government has consistently failed to properly consult Albertans. To date Ontario has allowed two years for its consultation while Albertans have been given a mere 36 days to provide feedback. The changes to our labour laws back in 1988 were a result of unions, companies, and associations working together for more than a year, and these laws withstood the test of time. Stakeholders in Alberta have asked the minister to extend and enhance the consultation for her labour laws review. My question is: will she?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the member opposite referenced, the labour legislation that we are reviewing has not been updated since the movie Beetlejuice was released. We want to make sure that we have fair and family-friendly workplaces that contribute to a strong Alberta economy. To do that, we are working with companies . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, please.

Ms Gray: . . . and organizations that represent businesses. We're working with labour, and we are collecting excellent feedback from Albertans so that we can make sure we have the best workplace legislation in our country.

Mr. van Dijken: Given that yesterday during the budget estimates the minister said that Ontario was different because they're "doing a soup-to-nuts review" and given that this minister's mandate letter to Andy Sims is very broad and includes foundational questions such as the very definition of an employee, processes to choose, change, or cancel union representation, whether to mandate a Rand formula in collective agreements, broadening the Labour Relations Board mandate, and many more issues, will the minister please clarify how her labour relations review is very focused compared to Ontario's "soup-to-nuts review"?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. For our review of employment standards and labour relations we have chosen to do a focused review where we're looking at a number of key issues. For example, in Alberta someone who needs to take time off because they themselves are sick or their child is sick could lose their job because we do not have job-protected sick leave. We do not need weeks and weeks to talk about that although I understand it can take the members opposite a lot of time to decide if they need to feed hungry kids or not. In this case we are talking to the key players to make sure that we have labour legislation that works for . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: Hon. members, you will note that I've been using this of late, and I note that increasingly there are a number of you using it. It has to do with the overall volume of this place. I ask on all sides, not only as individuals but also as a group, to please keep it down if you want to influence the policy into the future.

Mr. van Dijken: Given the minister's business plan states that "the ministry must meet high expectations for transparency and engagement when making any legislative changes" and given that this minister said, "we absolutely look at making sure that we are meeting our own high expectations" and given it appears that this minister's high expectations are well below the expectations of many Albertans, Minister, tell us why you're not taking more time to hear from Albertans on matters like union certification and collective bargaining. Is it because you already know the results you want?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's very important that we consult with employers and employee groups as well as everyday Albertans. Our consultation is ongoing, and I invite all Albertans to go to work.alberta.ca. If you have interest in employment standards or the Labour Relations Code, please weigh in on these important issues. We will continue to accept that feedback as well as work with labour lawyer Andy Sims to make sure that we have reasonable, fair, and responsible legislation for Alberta dealing with issues like that where currently . . .

The Speaker: Quiet.

Ms Gray: . . . someone can get fired if they take a sick day. [interjection]

The Speaker: Hon. member, please. Quiet. Hon. member – you – be quiet. Thank you. Hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, I asked you to be quiet. Please, when I ask you to do that, respect this chair.

Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Wellness Strategy

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The NDP claim to be bending the curve on costs, but their budget is the largest in Alberta history. Let me remind them that wellness programs are positive, proactive, and preventative. They keep people happy, healthy, and out of the hospital, and they increase quality of life while decreasing health care costs. When will the Minister of Health reimplement internationally respected programs, including Alberta's strategic approach to wellness, International Wellness Symposium, provincial wellness forum, workplace wellness summit, Healthy U, Be a Health Champion, aboriginal youth intervention, Communities ChooseWell, injury prevention programs, and more?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the former member of the government, who was associate minister of wellness when a lot of programs actually were cut that did impact people's health and safety, including wellness. I have to say that we know that in this House members opposite tell us to cut each and every day. They tell us that we're being too generous, that we're spending too much money on supporting Albertans. On this side of the House we're going to continue to have Albertans' backs. We're going to make their lives better, and that includes making sure that we have strategic, focused investments in wellness. We know the members opposite want to cut. We're going to protect Albertans.

Mr. Rodney: Those who benefited from these programs would like a real answer.

Perhaps this one. Given the success of programs that helped Albertans make healthier choices, including other ones like Ever Active Schools, MEND, and healthy schools, healthy futures, and given the invaluable work done by Albertans during the provincial wellness engagement tours as well as partnerships embarked upon with Participation – get out for sport, concussions, informed dining, and sodium strategies – when will the minister build on the successes of these programs, and when will she proclaim the Alberta physical activity amendment credit so that Alberta can be the leader in wellness that it was intended to be in the first place?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's always interesting when people on the other side of the House, who had a chance to proclaim legislation and did not, ask us why we're not acting on things that they did not act on themselves. I have to say that it's pretty rich coming from the members opposite, who like to make lots of campaign announcements without actually ever following through on them. We're working with Albertans. For example, this morning I met with parks and rec to work at ways that we're continuing to support communities through grants and local initiatives like community gardens. We are continuing to have Albertans' backs, make their lives better, and not with the deep cuts that the members opposite are proposing.

Mr. Rodney: They're looking backwards, and they're going backwards.

Given that the Alberta Get Outdoors Weekend, or GO Weekend, brought together students and seniors and people at work in an invaluable tradition of energizing Albertans after a long, cold winter and given that GO mobilized amateur and professional athletes as well as those who simply enjoy a walk in the great outdoors to reap limitless physical and mental benefits and given that this cost taxpayers absolutely nothing and was passed by all parties in this Legislature, why did the NDP again not do anything about Alberta Get Outdoors Weekend, which was to be celebrated last weekend? Is that a matter of oops; you did it again?

Ms Hoffman: In terms of a Britney quote, I know the member opposite likes to pretend everything he did was perfect. But guess what the members opposite did. They did a lot of announcements that actually had no action behind them. We're actually moving forward with communities, with partners and making sure we're working in partnership. We are of course continuing to support Albertans throughout our province. We're glad to have a good, strong future, Mr. Speaker, not pushing for drastic, erratic cuts like the members opposite are and having announcements that they don't actually have any plans to fulfill.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Carbon Levy and Vulnerable Albertans

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On December 2, 2016, Seniors and Housing received two letters from housing management bodies explaining that they'd have to levy a $10 fee to cover the cost of their carbon tax. They pointed out that 95 per cent of their clients would be receiving the carbon rebates, yet the housing management bodies would be the ones paying the cost of the tax. The government's manager of stakeholder relations ordered the housing management bodies not to charge the $10 fee, that their decision would be reviewed once we have the evidence of the actual effect. To the Minister of Seniors and Housing: what has your ministry done to alleviate the impact on the housing management bodies due to the effects of the carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we're working very closely with our housing management bodies to support them through this time of transition. We've invested $57 million to support them for energy efficiency upgrades, for furnaces, triple-pane windows, that kind of thing. Certainly, seniors themselves are receiving the rebate; 260,000 seniors will receive up to $300 in rebates. We're working very closely with seniors and housing management bodies to support them during this time.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, nonprofit organizations have to cover the cost of this NDP, job-killing carbon tax. The increase in the minimum wage is going to impact their already stretched budgets, and all these increases could cost as much as an extra $10,000 to $15,000 a year. Given that nonprofit organizations cannot run up endless debts by creating spending deficits each year like this government does, can the minister explain why they expect nonprofits to live within their means and meet the needs of their vulnerable clients when they are being hit by this job-killing carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we're working with nonprofit agencies also. We've rolled out energy efficiency programs to support them to have energy efficiency upgrades, and we certainly are supporting them to serve their clients well. We know that the opposition doesn't care about those programs and would be cutting billions of dollars from the budget. We're working with nonprofits and housing management bodies and seniors to make life better for Albertans.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, the opposition recently told this government that a job-killing carbon tax would increase the cost of everything and hurt nonprofit organizations. Given that I've talked with at least one nonprofit organization that does not know how it will absorb this carbon tax and given that this policy is having a negative impact on some of the most vulnerable within our society, to the minister: when will you scrap this carbon tax on nonprofits?

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, nonprofits, housing management bodies serve vulnerable seniors throughout the province, and we're very grateful for their service to us. We work closely with them. We're investing in energy efficiency programs for them. We're doing energy audits to support them to know what the best investment is of that $57 million that we're working on. We know that the opposition want to be climate deniers and not take care of any of these issues, so we're very pleased to be making life better for Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Judge and Lawyer Training on Sexual Offences

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. All across this country Canadians have taken to the streets to protest outdated, outrageous, and outright sexist comments coming from our courts. Sexual assault myths and stereotypes and victim-shaming comments like "why couldn't you just keep your knees together?" deter victims from coming forward and can even revictimize the person. Minister, considering lawyers, both defence and Crown attorneys, have a role to play in ensuring a respectful victim process, does the minister support mandatory training for lawyers who represent sexual assault victims?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, our government firmly believes that these sorts of myths and stereotypes have no place in the courtroom. That's why I wrote the letter which initiated the complaint against Mr. Justice Camp and resulted in his ultimate removal, and we are very proud of that. We continue to believe that these sorts of myths and stereotypes absolutely have no place at all within the law, and we'll continue to support education not only for judges but also for lawyers.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, given that four Alberta court judges have recently come under fire for their disgustingly insensitive comments and given that Alberta's Chief Justice Neil Wittmann has advocated for more training for the judiciary on topics of sexual violence and given that he has also stated his outright disagreement that education opportunities infringe on judicial independence, to the minister: will your government support introducing voluntary training on sexual misconduct for judges under the purview of the Chief Justice?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Not only do we support voluntary training for judges on sexual assault law; it's already provided. In fact, just last year at the judges' conference they did a very long working group on this. We pay a grant to the National Judicial Institute to ensure that they have access to all of these materials. But in addition to education, this is a larger problem. It speaks to the quality of appointments being made to the bench. That is why we are so careful in ensuring that we are appointing Albertans who have experience in these sorts of matters.

An Hon. Member: And the NDP world view.

Mr. Mason: Who appointed them?

The Speaker: Government House Leader. [interjections] Government House Leader.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, given that protecting sexual assault victims from revictimization and court reforms are nonpartisan issues and given that this is also being addressed at a national level, where Thomas Mulcair and the NDP have put forward a motion to fast-track the Conservative leader's bill, will this NDP government also take action and allow for unanimous consent to debate a motion to dispel rape and sexual assault myths and stereotypes from our courts?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I find it interesting that as we were having a conversation about the importance of appointing people who want to respect the law and respect survivors of sexual assault, the members opposite were screaming about the NDP world view. Well, they're absolutely correct. It is the world view of this side of the House that survivors of sexual assault deserve respect. They deserve respect in the courts, and they deserve respect in this House.

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, when government introduces sweeping changes to legislation, it's important that as many affected stakeholders as possible are able to speak directly with the minister responsible in order to ensure, of course, that all sides of the issue are truly heard. Upcoming changes to employment standards and labour code are a perfect example of changes in government policy which will affect hundreds of thousands of Albertans. Again to the Minister of Labour, Edmonton, Calgary, Grande Prairie, and Lethbridge: which, if any, of these did you actually attend?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Making sure that our lives are up to date with today's modern workplaces is a priority for this government. Making sure that we have a consultation where we're able to hear from Albertans, making sure that we have representatives from labour organizations and employers is important. I did attend some of the consultations, and I am pleased to be able to report that we had common ground with all members. Employers, in fact, were surprised that Alberta does not have job-protected sick leave. Most didn't realize we were so out of step with other jurisdictions.

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, given that affected stakeholders would simply like the opportunity to have an honest conversation with the minister and to inform her of potentially serious consequences of proposed policy changes and given that we heard that invitation-only consultations to date have been light on business representation while union presence has been consistently and notably strong, again to the minister: which businesses or business advocacy groups have you personally consulted with regarding proposed policy changes?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Talking about Alberta's workplace legislation is one of my core responsibilities, and I have been doing that since my appointment, including talking to Alberta Chambers of Commerce, Edmonton chamber, Calgary chambers, chambers across this province, CFIB, other organizations throughout this process. All of these organizations have been invited to participate in this process. We are making sure that we are hearing from a balance of voices: from the employer side, the labour side, all Albertans. Anyone interested in employment standards or labour relations should go online and commit their thoughts on this process, which is open right now.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Gottfried: Mr. Speaker, given that this government has already failed to consult on numerous occasions with impacted stakeholders prior to introducing controversial legislation in this House and given that thousands of Albertans have repeatedly and loudly expressed their distaste for this type of behaviour right here on the steps of the Legislature and given that government should listen to all viewpoints, not just the ones which align with their world view, again to the minister: stakeholders want to be heard. Will you do the right thing and extend and enhance consultations? Albertans want to know.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is very important to us that we have family-friendly, fair, and modern workplace legislation, that Alberta has been lacking. We are making sure that we are engaging fully, including over 700 employers having completed the survey online, including nearly 50 employer representatives attending the meetings that were held across Alberta. We have been engaging completely with Albertans. I am looking forward to seeing the results of the consultation, and again I invite anyone who wants to participate to do so now.

Support for Indigenous Women

Mr. Malkinson: Mr. Speaker, this year I once again participated in the Valentine's Day missing and murdered indigenous women's march at Scarboro church in my riding, and once again I heard heart-wrenching stories of indigenous families who have lost a daughter or a mother. To the Minister of Indigenous Relations: what has your ministry done to support the work of the national inquiry into missing and murdered indigenous women and girls?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question and his ongoing advocacy in this area. Alberta, of course, is in full support of the national inquiry and has been one of the original people to call for the inquiry in this country. We also believe it's important to consult with the members of families who have lost a family member, a girl or a woman, as we did in our fall conference with family members here in Edmonton.

Shortly after we were elected, we made the call, and subsequently we have put in the orders in council to ensure that the commissioners, when they come to Alberta, have all of the jurisdiction that they need.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, could you please keep the volume down.

First supplemental.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that I understand the province is playing a role in helping families who have loved ones go missing, again to the Minister of Indigenous Relations: what formal structures have been put in place to provide support for these families?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. The federal government has set aside $11.7 million for provinces and territories to establish family information liaison units. The Alberta unit will be fully staffed by mid-April 2017. The FILUs will be a one-stop information and support service for families of missing and murdered indigenous women rather than referring families to other services. These units are to help relatives of missing and murdered indigenous women navigate the justice system and to offer support.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Indigenous Relations: what other measures are being taken to address the needs of indigenous women in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. We are very pleased with our progress in working with the indigenous women in this province. In December we appointed 32 women to the First Nations Women's Economic Security Council and the Métis Women's Economic Security Council, and for the very first time we provided core funding for the Institute for the Advancement of Aboriginal Women and have expanded programs of antiviolence such as the I Am a Kind Man campaign and the Moose Hide campaign. Other ministries in this government have also provided services such as Children's Services, which is providing funding for pregnancy pathways, an inner-city program for pregnant and homeless indigenous women.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Water Co-operatives Funding

Mr. Stier: Mr. Speaker, my question today is for the Minister of Transportation and Infrastructure. Minister, as you know, for decades water co-ops have been formed, and there is an Alberta water co-op association with dozens of member boards. These are normally funded by joint federal and provincial programs. In this year's federal budget, actually, is a program for $165 million destined for Alberta known as the green infrastructure clean water and waste-water fund to supply communities with clean, dependable drinking water. Minister, has your ministry received this funding, please?

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much for the question. Mr. Speaker, the member raises an important question, which is access to clean drinking water. Now, in terms of the provincial funding, which I'll deal with first, our program does not contain enough resources to support everybody that is seeking to expand their water supply, so we limit it to certain types of programs, and they're limited to municipalities and water commissions. Currently it does not cover water co-ops. As much as I would like to do that, we're going to have to find a way to do that. That is going to take a bit of time. Perhaps the federal program may assist us in . . .

Mr. Stier: Again to the minister, Mr. Speaker: given that the Leavings Water Co-op near Claresholm is out of a local supply of water and has met you and your ministry regarding their urgent need to supply over 550 people with reliable, clean water and have been refused on the basis that there are apparently no grants available for this purpose and given that the $165 million provincial clean water funds seem destined for these types of critical needs, why has this Leavings Water Co-op proposal not been given an opportunity to apply for this program?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is correct that I have met with the Leavings co-op. I have great sympathy for their situation. They're dependent on well water, and they would like to extend the water line to bring a number of farms into the program. Unfortunately, with the limited funds available and the criteria under the existing water for life the municipal water or waste-water program does not cover co-ops. It is intended for municipalities and water commissions and waste-water commissions only.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Stier: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Given, though, that very recently the Minister of Environment and Parks announced new funding for a water line in my constituency from Cowley to Beaver Mines that was backed apparently by both federal and provincial governments and valued at approximately the same value as the Leavings Co-op, around $5 million, near Claresholm, yet that one is for a much greater urgent need here near Claresholm – Minister, these people have travelled with their hats in their hands. They're out of water. Why has this government not provided the co-op board with information on how to apply for this new federal-provincial clean water grant?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We have offered support to connect the Leavings Water Co-op. There are a number of options that they have, including water rates for their members, that could help close the gap. But I will undertake, thanks to the hon. member, to look further into this matter to see if we can alleviate the situation through the use of the federal program.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 30 seconds we will continue with members' statements.

Government Policies

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, over the past two years the NDP have made things go from bad to worse, and their actions show a blatant disrespect for the good people of Alberta. Saskatchewan used to be Alberta's closest partner, but the Premier found it wise to spend her time picking fights with Brad Wall, severely damaging that relationship.

Remember the long lost days of provincial surpluses? The Premier's last disaster of a budget was a harsh reminder that the NDP just can't seem to help themselves from trying to spend their way to prosperity. Albertans know that running a $10 billion deficit and racking up a $70 billion debt isn't the way to get our province back on track.

It's no secret that money management isn't a strength of the NDP, but even the opposition was shocked to learn that the environment minister picked the third-lowest bidder for the Ecofitt boondoggle of installing light bulbs using the carbon tax slush fund, most shockingly because she told Albertans that she selected the most competitive bid.

The NDP also changed the rules for AIMCo, an independent organization responsible for investing Alberta's heritage savings trust fund, otherwise known as Alberta's future, Mr. Speaker. Why did they do this? So that the NDP can plant political insiders in high-ranking positions. What's worse is that the Premier's own staff have already been caught red-handed politically interfering with AIMCo.

When it comes to operating a transparent government, the NDP is an embarrassment. Yesterday the Privacy Commissioner slammed the NDP for their failure to provide accountability, showing that they have embraced the secretive practices that they once decried. The NDP has deeply damaged our province. My message to Albertans is simple.

The opposition will continue to fight to make Alberta a competitive marketplace, a safe community, and the best place in the world to raise a family and start a business. In 2019 Albertans will cast their ballot, and the orange experiment will be a painful but distant memory. [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Okay. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am tabling the five copies necessary: with regard to labour laws, a letter to the editor in the Edmonton Journal this morning by Mr. Bert MacKay, quoting that he was part of the process that took over one year to work out the new labour legislation at that time.

The Speaker: Strathmore-Brooks, you had something?

Mr. Fildebrandt: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Since I have to stick around, I thought that I may as well make another tabling on day 10 of fun tablings. On the 9th of March I wrote a letter to the hon. Government House Leader quoting the now Premier calling the Public Affairs Bureau someone who recharacterizes the truth and spins it. I'll table the requisite five copies for the delight of the Government House Leader.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we had a point of order.
The Government House Leader.

Point of Order Oral Questions

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. During question period today the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek was asking the Minister of Labour questions about her attendance at an event, a conference of some sort, that he felt she should be at. It's well known in the House that questions ought to be on a matter of government policy. It's not an opportunity for the opposition to take attendance; it is an opportunity for them to hold the government accountable for the policy positions that the government takes. I'd ask that those types of questions be ruled out of order in the future.

Mr. Rodney: I'm quite surprised that there was no citation given, Mr. Speaker. I don't know how there can be a point of order, first of all, as there is no citation.

Secondly, we were not referring to any absence in the House. In fact, the question was: "To the Minister of Labour, Edmonton, Calgary, Grande Prairie, and Lethbridge: which, if any, of these did you actually attend?" It was directly related to government policy, that being stakeholder consultation with respect to changes in legislation to the employment standards and labour code.

Mr. Speaker, it was a bizarre day again in this House, and I'm really surprised that this would be picked on. Again, no citation, related to policy, having nothing to do with absences in the House: I think that we should move on.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I think in this instance I agree with the opposition. I do not see a point of order in this situation.

Point of Clarification

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I know that there is lots going on today, but I'd just like to briefly rise, if I may, on a point of order. Under 13(2) "The Speaker shall explain the reasons for any decision on the request of a Member."

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to just briefly point to Beauchesne's with respect to decorum in the House and what may or may not be appropriate with respect to clothing inside the Chamber. You will find in Beauchesne's, sixth edition, page 98, under 329, a fairly extensive discussion about what may or may not be permitted inside the Chamber.

I know that earlier today we saw three members of the government – and I understand that they may have some affiliations with northern Alberta and, in particular, enjoyment of one hockey team or another. Perhaps you saw some Oilers jerseys inside the Chamber earlier today as well, but Beauchesne's is fairly clear about what is appropriate to wear inside the Chamber and what isn't appropriate. I can only imagine that they would have asked permission from you, Mr. Speaker, to wear such a jersey in such an important place like this. If you could explain why you would allow an Oilers jersey in this place when everyone knows that a Flames jersey would be much more appropriate. [laughter]

The Speaker: Gosh, it's nice to hear laughter in this place.

Mr. Rodney: Actually, there's a long history of this, I'd point out, through the Speaker, to the hon. Opposition House Leader. The fact of the matter is that indeed written permission would be required. Mr. Speaker, if you do that, then that's just great. I think anything that we can do for the spirit of Edmonton, for the spirit of Calgary, for the spirit of Alberta is a great thing to do.

That being said, traditionally in the past previous Speakers have ruled this way: either written permission or – and I'm not making this up – a person is permitted to wear such a uniform if they provide every other member of the Legislature with the same jersey. You can look it up, sir. I've seen it on a few occasions, including from this area of the province a while back when that junior hockey team was doing well. Perhaps you could provide the Opposition House Leader with some clarity and the rest of us because – let's face it – the battle of Alberta could be great, but it could be ugly, right? Go Flames.

The Speaker: To the point of order, Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, under section 13(2) – and this is the citation – "The Speaker shall explain the reasons for any decision on the request of a Member." It is my understanding that the decision of the Speaker with respect to this limited the wearing of jerseys to Alberta teams. I simply have to ask: why not Montreal?

The Speaker: Hon. members, this is probably one of the most challenging rulings I've been called upon to make. I feel that out of respect for this House – I want you to know that I'd better take some time; we'd all better take some time. Under this vestment there's something orange and something red.

An Hon. Member: Oh, nonpartisan.

The Speaker: That's exactly correct.

Hon. members, the daily Routine is now concluded. Pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(5)(b) the House stands adjourned till tomorrow afternoon at 1:30.

Don't leave yet.

The legislative policy committees will convene in the afternoon and tomorrow morning for consideration of the main estimates. This afternoon Resource Stewardship will consider the estimates for Municipal Affairs in the Rocky Mountain Room. Tomorrow morning Resource Stewardship will consider the estimates for Indigenous Relations in the Parkland Room, and Families and Communities will consider the estimates of Seniors and Housing in the Rocky Mountain Room.

[The Assembly adjourned at 2:54 p.m. pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(5)(b)]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us reflect or pray, each in our own way. Hon. members, many Albertans of the Jewish faith are celebrating Passover, and the large Christian community this weekend will be celebrating Easter. Let us in this House respect and appreciate those persons of faith, who make this province so rich and diverse.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed my very great privilege today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 30 students from Lakeland Country School, which is a very small school north of the community of Dewberry. Dewberry is not a really big place, but it's a very exciting place. I spent my last two Friday nights there, and we can talk about that later. These fine folks are from a Mennonite community. I visited their school. They open every day with a cappella singing, that is very much part of the Mennonite tradition, and they asked me not to sing and join them. That's also one more way to make it nicer. They are here with their teachers Brenda Koehn and Nola Toews and a number of chaperones that have very Mennonite-sounding names like Toews and Warkentin and Penner and that sort of thing. I would invite them to rise and enjoy and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. member, it speaks to the education of our children in this province that they would be wise enough to not ask you to sing that.

The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you the many students of High Prairie elementary who were able to join us here today. They are accompanied by a number of teachers – Ms Joanne Murphy, Miss Andrea Pollock, and Mrs. Melissa Isaac – along with a number of chaperones to assist them today as well: Brad Cunningham, Mathew Robinson, Cody Quevillon, Becki Cardinal, Rachel Roberts, Judy Willier, Christine Bradley, Richard Romick, Michael Strebchuk, Mitch Hammond, Jamie Bilyk, Clancey Neill, Dennis McNabb, Martha Rosychuk, Janelle Pratt, and Verna Isaac. A big thank you to Colleen for showing them around today. I would ask the students and all of their chaperones and teachers to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you 17 students from Duffield school in the fabulous riding of Stony Plain. They'll be joining us shortly with their teachers, Mr. John MacDonald and Ms Ann Marie Gillie, and their chaperone, Mrs. Michelle Kaiser. I would appreciate it if all members could join me in welcoming them in anticipation of their arrival.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any other school groups today?

Seeing and hearing none, the Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of our Assembly our Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms Paul Link's family. They are seated in the Speaker's gallery, and they include Paul's wife, Hamdee Fythe; mother, Mercedes Link, who is visiting us from Gibsons, B.C.; cousin John Zubkowski, who is a resident of the Sherwood Park community; and family friend Val Oczkowski. They gave me this because I'm Ukrainian, and I tripped on your names. I'm so sorry. [Remarks in Ukrainian] Would Paul and his guests please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome. It's a privilege to have you here.

The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, it's my privilege to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two councillors and the mayor from the town of Vegreville. Please stand as I say your name. Mayor Myron Hayduk, councillors Taneen Rudyk, Tim MacPhee, and I see that Marielle Brodziak has had the opportunity to join us. They had the opportunity to meet with the Minister of Labour and I this morning. These are small-business owners, volunteers, and people that are committed to raising their families in rural Alberta, in Vegreville. This is why we fight together to keep the immigration case processing centre in Vegreville. Please join me in extending the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

The Hangar Flight Museum in Calgary

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. "To inspire dreams of flight," this is the vision of The Hangar Flight Museum in Calgary. Alberta has an ongoing history in flight that our province can be very proud of. It's been an important contributor to the oil and gas industry, northern exploration, the development of passenger airlines, and providing assistance to northern communities.

Calgary's first commercial airport was established in 1914 and was named after Captain Fred McCall, a World War I ace. The first aviation museum in Calgary, the Air Museum of Canada, was founded in 1960 and was largely a collection of privately owned aircraft. Disbanded in 1971, the museum's aircraft and assets were turned over to the city of Calgary and housed at the city's planetarium.

In 1975 the Aero Space Museum Association of Calgary was registered as a nonprofit and took over the care and upkeep of these artifacts. Aircraft include the Avro Lancaster bomber, the Lady Orchid, a DC-3, and restored Anson and Harvard trainers that were used by the British Commonwealth air training plan in WW II to train Commonwealth pilots, and a Sopwith triplane similar to those flown over the fields of Vimy and Passchendaele.

In 1985 the aerospace museum of Calgary moved to its current location at the south end of the Calgary International Airport, and they changed their name to The Hangar Flight Museum last year. Over 36,000 people visited the museum last year, including 5,000 Alberta students who took part in curriculum-related school programming. There are hands-on programs to participate in, and the museum is open seven days a week and operates with a small core of staff and over a hundred very dedicated volunteers.

I was honoured to attend the RCAF Mess Dinner last month at the museum, where those in attendance dined among the planes and aeronautic memorabilia, and I'd like to encourage all members and those listening to take time to visit the museum and learn about our flying history.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Passover

Mr. MacIntyre: Throughout the ages the Jewish people have commemorated the Exodus in remembrance of how the God of Abraham with a mighty hand and outstretched arm delivered the children of Israel from slavery to the Promised Land. This celebration is known as the Passover. The patriarch Abraham and his wife, Sarah, went to the land of Canaan, where he became founder of a great nation. From the book of Genesis we learn that God told Abraham: know this for certain; your descendants will be strangers in a strange land, be enslaved and oppressed, but know that in the end I shall bring judgment on the oppressors.

During a time of famine Abraham's descendants sought refuge in Egypt, where the Hebrew people lived and prospered until a new pharaoh arose. Fear of their numbers led to the oppression of the Hebrew people, culminating in an order to drown all Hebrew boys in the Nile River, but the mother of a little boy refused, and this boy would be named Moses. God would remember his covenant and call to Moses. As a man Moses obeyed the instructions of God and demanded of the pharaoh: set my people free. Nine times the pharaoh refused, and each time God sent a plague. After the ninth plague Moses told the Hebrew slaves to mark their doorposts and lintels with the blood of a lamb, telling them: none of you shall go out for God will pass through to smite the first-born of the Egyptians, and when he sees the blood, God will pass over your doors. Finally, when God brought down the 10th plague, the pharaoh broke, allowing Moses to take his people and deliver them to a new land.

It is my hope that during this feast of unleavened bread Jewish families are brought together and that God will bless the children of Abraham around the world with freedom and prosperity.

Provincial Budget

Mr. Clark: Budgets are about choices. They tell us what your values and priorities are, and they show us whether you think long term or short term. This government's budget shows they care more about their chances in the next election than they do about the long-term well-being of our province. Their budget shows that they don't even want to try to find savings, even if it is absolutely possible to do so without impacting front-line service delivery. They've said, in essence, that they're not worried about paying back debt because they'll deal with that problem when it comes. Yes, there are choices.

Unfortunately, we don't know what the right-wing parties would do to address Alberta's budget challenges. They poke holes in the government's plans, but they are totally unwilling to level with Albertans about how they would balance the budget and what impact that would have on the public services Albertans rely on.

Choices. The Alberta Party's shadow budget shows Albertans in great detail what choices we would make, how we would address the problems facing Alberta, how we would put our province back on a pathway to prosperity. It's a matter of finding just 1 per cent savings across government each year for four years. Yes, it is possible to find 1 per cent in a $53 billion budget without impacting front-line services. You can do it. You just have to try.

We would ensure that core services receive funding increases to match population growth. This ensures class sizes stay small, health care wait times are reasonable, and our vulnerable neighbours are looked after. We would continue making big investments in infrastructure to ensure that we don't turn a financial deficit into a human and infrastructure deficit as the right-wing parties would do. We would cap the amount of nonrenewable resource revenue we use for operations and put any surplus into capital spending, debt repayment, and then into the heritage fund. This ensures that Alberta's debt-servicing costs don't spiral out of control as they will do under the NDP's plan. We would make Alberta's carbon tax revenue neutral through cuts to personal and corporate taxes and through innovation credits to ensure that Alberta is a leader in the next economy, just like we are in the current economy.

These are the choices the Alberta Party would make. Our choices are balanced . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Affordable Child Care

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very proud to be part of a government that stands up every day for Albertans and makes life better in important areas like health, education, and child care; to be part of a government that is willing to protect the citizens of this province from the worst recession we have seen in decades; a government that is finding cost savings without compromising care, doing so with improved planning and innovation.

Mr. Speaker, I know how hard it is for Albertans to find quality, affordable child care. In Edmonton-Meadowlark several of the daycares have waiting lists and can cost families upwards of $1,000 a month for caring for one child. There is also a lack of flexibility in operating hours for these spaces. Most of them are open only for the daytime, which does not give adequate support for families who work evening shifts.

That is why our government is innovating child care in this province by increasing access to quality, affordable child care. The recent announcement about the creation of 22 early learning and child care centres in communities across our province is a good start towards making $25-a-day child care available on a wider basis. These centres will ensure that children have the best possibilities for the start of their life by offering almost 1,300 child care spaces, and they will make life better for all Albertans by creating new jobs for child care practitioners and offering flexible and extended hours to support parents working part-time or attending school. This will provide extra support for vulnerable families in these tough economic times.

Mr. Speaker, we have seen recently that choosing cuts over families can lead to the loss of child care opportunities like preschool programming, delivering a further blow to struggling families. Albertans chose a party that protects services and is willing to invest in our families, and I will continue to be a tireless advocate for the residents of Edmonton-Meadowlark within a government that supports the values that I was elected to represent.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Red Deer Regional Hospital Obstetrics Expansion

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm speaking not only to thank the government for an essential investment in my community but also to offer congratulations. Congratulations to the Clark family and their new baby daughter, Ilandra, the first baby born at the Red Deer regional hospital's new expanded labour and delivery unit. The $9.7 million investment into the Red Deer regional hospital will help with the growing needs in Red Deer and central Alberta while putting expectant mothers at ease knowing they have access to a state-of-the-art facility.

The project that created two new obstetrical surgery rooms creates a better quality of life for central Albertans hoping to create a family. Not only is this a win for mothers and infants, but it will make life better for all other hospital users as well. The new obstetrical operating rooms will free up space in general operating rooms in the Red Deer hospital, allowing for 330 more general surgeries per year. The addition of two dedicated obstetrical operating rooms also offers greater privacy to mothers requiring an emergency delivery, who were previously transported to a general operating room in a separate wing. This is also going to create jobs on top of the ones created during construction. Nurses, clinical staff, and nonclinical staff will all be added to the strong network of employees that AHS employs in our region.

A sincere thank you goes out to the Red Deer Regional Health Foundation for their donation of $1.2 million for equipment and to all of those who worked to advocate on this expansion.

Mr. Speaker, this government is showing that it is committed to improving the health care provided to central Albertans and Red Deer residents. We know health care is a vital issue in central Alberta, and this government will continue working to improve things that make a difference in the lives of Albertans, like the quality of care my constituents and those in surrounding areas receive.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Vaisakhi

Mr. Panda: [Remarks in Punjabi] Greetings. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to mark the East Indian festival of Vaisakhi. Vaisakhi commemorates the formalization of Sikh religion practices 318 years ago. Guru Gobind Singh then formed the Khalsa and gave the Sikh faith Amrit Sanchar. Vaisakhi also marks the traditional harvest festival season for Punjabis and the Sikh new year, the Hindu solar new year, and features parades, fairs, flag raisings, and Amrit Sanchar, also known as baptisms.

Guru Gobind Singh gave all Sikhs the opportunity to live lives of courage, sacrifice, and equality. In Canada the Sikh community very much enjoys these values, including freedom of speech, equality of life, and justice. In Canada Sikhs have made their mark in all walks of life, whether it's public service, charity, sports, culture, or entrepreneurship. They contributed to the economic and social success of Alberta and Canada.

In India, although Sikhs are less than 2 per cent of the nation's population, Sikh community members have held the highest offices like President, Prime Minister, Chief Justice, chief of armed forces, and, most importantly, captains of India's cricket team and field hockey team.

Vaisakhi is a unifying holiday in India. This time of year trains are full of holiday travellers heading home to celebrate Vaisakhi with their loved ones. In celebrating Vaisakhi, Albertans, both Sikhs and non-Sikhs alike, are brought together in a spirit of friendship and unity. I look forward to celebrating the Vaisakhi on Saturday in Calgary. [Remarks in Punjabi] Wonderful Lord's Khalsa, victory is to the wonderful Lord. [As submitted]

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Also, on behalf of our Wildrose caucus, to all of the Christian brothers and sisters celebrating this weekend, Happy Easter.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At the appropriate time I intend to move the following motion pursuant to Standing Order 42:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to work collaboratively with the Law Society of Alberta and the Provincial Court Judges' Association of Alberta to ensure that anyone being considered for appointment as a judge of the Provincial Court of Alberta has successfully completed a comprehensive education on the current state of the law with regard to any crime of a sexual nature and that continuing education plans for judges and lawyers involved with victims of sexual offences are adequate in respect of matters related to crimes of a sexual nature, including instruction in evidentiary prohibitions, principles of consent, and the conduct of sexual offence proceedings as well as education regarding myths and stereotypes associated with sexual offence complainants.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Energy Policies

Mr. Jean: Reuters is reporting this morning that Chevron is getting ready to wave goodbye to all of its assets in the oil sands. It's just another day in the NDP's Alberta. Shell, ConocoPhillips, and now Chevron: just add it to the growing list of multinationals fleeing Alberta under this NDP government's watch. Carbon taxes, breaking power contracts, labour reviews, shutting down our coal industry, instability at its best: this is the Premier's record. How many more oil companies can we expect to see flee Alberta under your government's watch, Premier?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, the member opposite is just so negative. We know that the last two years have been tough on our oil and gas industry and on the economy, but every step of the way our government has made a commitment to stand shoulder to shoulder with Albertans. There's more work ahead to do, but we're making progress: 20,000 jobs just last month, more than the rest of the country combined; exports up 37 per cent; housing starts up 35,000. Here's what the president of CNRL says: this is a very exciting time; we're moving back to more stable times. Albertans are looking forward with confidence. It's about time that the member opposite joined them.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Jean: Well, it's very clear that what this government is doing is not working. The policies aren't working. Their work is not working. Mr. Speaker, oil and gas workers in Alberta continue to suffer, and families are being picked bone dry by this government through their brand new carbon tax. Now we find out today that despite the NDP saying that it would stop, grieving widows are still being asked by the NDP government through CRA to pay back the government's carbon tax rebates. How ridiculous. It's just another reason why no one in Alberta trusts this government to keep their word. How can the Premier keep letting this happen?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the member opposite knows, the Minister of Finance has already said very clearly that this is not to happen and that we have said very clearly that people who receive these notices in error will not have to pay that money back because we have already determined with the Canada Revenue Agency that we are not going to ask for that money back. We are now in the process of ensuring that. We know that this is a stressful time for people who are receiving those notices, and we have said very clearly that we have no expectation that they pay that money back, and we apologize for the confusion that's been created.

Mr. Jean: Well, maybe, just maybe, Mr. Speaker, she should pick up the phone and tell CRA because they haven't gotten the memo.

This whole carbon tax scheme is ridiculous. Alberta will soon have the highest carbon tax in North America. It's making life more expensive for every single family, and for what? To have an Ecofitt agent come into their home to install light bulbs and act as a PR rep for this government? To have the taxman bullying grieving widows? NDP policies are putting us at a massive disadvantage with the United States. Our competitive advantage is gone. Is the Premier going to do anything to respond to the devastating effects of her carbon tax and what it's doing to normal, everyday Albertans?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, the real threat to investment in this province is the opposition trying to scare away investment for cheap political points, promising to repeal the very plan that got us not one but two pipelines. You know what else is going on? Job growth in eight of the last nine months, manufacturing sales up 16 per cent. John Rogers from MEG Energy says that the industry is re-emerging stronger and more powerful than it has in the past. There is more to do. We know that. Alberta families want their government to have their back, and we do.

The Speaker: Second main question.

Information and Privacy Commissioner Report

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, the Privacy Commissioner is being stonewalled by this NDP government on a continuous basis. Yesterday the Premier pinned all the blame on this previous government. The Privacy Commissioner is clear, however. The NDP own this file. Don't take my word for it. The Privacy Commissioner just told the Edmonton Journal: "A part of me thought it would change when the government changed. It didn't. There was no change." Why won't the Premier take responsibility for all the bad practices of her current NDP government?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned and as I explained yesterday, the Privacy Commissioner's report looks at behaviour that occurred between 2009 and 2014. I don't need to give the members opposite a history lesson, but we weren't part of that. After March 13 the dispute between the government of Alberta and the Privacy Commissioner was before the courts, so we determined that we would wait for the courts to make their decision, which they did in November 2016, at which point we waited for the Privacy Commissioner to give us her recommendations. She did two days ago, and we are looking forward to working with her on how to improve the system . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Jean: Well, Mr. Speaker, let's be clear. Let's tell the truth here. This is happening today under the nose of this Premier and her cabinet. They're hiding something, or they're wilfully politicizing the FOIP process. The Privacy Commissioner says that she's "speechless," that she's "frustrated," and that she's "angry" about what is happening under this NDP government, not some other government in the past. Yesterday the Premier said that she was committed to improving the transparency of the system, but will she demonstrate this commitment by providing the Privacy Commissioner the unredacted documents that she's asked for? Yes or no?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, as the member opposite knows, that matter was adjudicated by the Supreme Court of Canada, and the position of the government was supported by the Supreme Court of Canada. Meanwhile our Minister of Justice has been very clear that, going forward, we want to limit the scope of the application of the solicitor-client privilege exception because we do believe in enhancing transparency. There is a great deal of other work going on to go forward with that, and we look forward to reporting on that as we achieve it.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Jean: Here's what else the Privacy Commissioner had to say. The bad ministers of the past are all gone, but "the deputies are still there." Some of these deputies oversaw and covered up and continue to cover up government scandals. Now they're helping this NDP government to keep these sneaky secret practices as well. It's a culture of secrecy and crookedness that Albertans are, frankly, sick of and kicked out in the last election. Why doesn't the Premier or anyone in this government stand up, have the stomach to clean this up?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the member opposite might want to be a little bit careful because the scandals he claims that people are trying to cover up are the scandals that were undertaken by their new slow-dance partners over there. [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet, please.

Ms Notley: I think they really might want to think about whether those are the folks that they want to be going into the next election holding hands with, Mr. Speaker.

But that being said, our ministers are working tirelessly to improve transparency, to improve response times, to improve the scope of response. I know we're putting more resources into it, and we will continue that work, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The third main question.

Judge and Lawyer Training on Sexual Offences

Mr. Jean:

It is, indeed, very rare in the House for leaders of political parties to support each other's private member's bills, but when the issue is how our judicial system handles cases of sexual assault, we all have to come together and say that we believe survivors.

It is with sincere respect for the Leader of the Opposition that I move the following motion.

Now, those were the words of Tom Mulcair supporting Conservative leader Rona Ambrose's private member's bill just a little while ago. Can we expect the same sort of support from the Premier later today on my private motion? [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet, please.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me begin by saying that our government has been working very hard to support survivors of sexual and domestic abuse. We increased funding for FCSS. We increased funding for women's shelters by 40 per cent. We introduced tenant protection for people fleeing violence. We introduced legislation to expand the limitation period for people to claim compensation. Of course we will support the member's motion.

Mr. Jean: Appropriate training for judges and lawyers on the laws relating to crimes of a sexual nature should be above partisanship, and I'm glad to see that it is. The same goes with ensuring that those in the judicial system understand the myths and the stereotypes associated with sexual assault. The government supporting my motion is a goodwill gesture to show that while our Legislature respects the independence of the judiciary, we need to remove the stigma associated with sexual assault. I'm hoping as well that she will direct her caucus, all of them, to support my motion. That would make our judicial system a better place for sexual assault survivors.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, as we've indicated, that's likely going to happen. But it would also be very helpful if the members opposite would support our government's work to support victims and survivors of sexual and domestic assault throughout our community. It would also be helpful if they would support our efforts to support prevention of sexual and domestic violence and assault throughout our community. A lot of that work involves supporting our antipoverty efforts, supporting community-based groups, supporting FCSS, and supporting the provisions and the spending on that. Asking the government to cut $2 billion out of operating is not a way to address those issues.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Ignoring the out-of-touch understanding of sexual assault in our judicial system won't make it go away. I want to assure the Premier that Wildrose will always support common-sense policies that will help the most vulnerable. But Alberta has seen stark examples of sexual assault cases being mishandled by our justice system. Albertans do deserve better, and I'm glad to see her support my motion. Sexual assault victims deserve better, and as legislators we need to continuously, every day, send a strong signal that training in the law needs to be better. Even Alberta's Chief Justice supports this type of training. Will the Premier assure this House and all Albertans that we'll continue to have the resources necessary . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, there is no stronger advocate for putting appropriate resources into our justice system than our Minister of Justice right now. And let me tell you that that's a hard thing to do when the folks over there are constantly calling on us to cut billions and billions of dollars out of our annual operating. It's kind of hard to have both. Nonetheless, we are striking the right balance. We are standing up for survivors of domestic and sexual assault, and we will continue to do that.

The Speaker: Now for the leader of the third party.

Minister of Justice

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, during question period yesterday the Minister of Justice, Alberta's top justice official, in response to the Member for Airdrie, who asked about judges' training, said: "But in addition to education, this is a larger problem. It speaks to the quality of appointments being made to the bench." The Law Society under its code of conduct, section 5.6-1, says, "A lawyer must encourage public respect for and try to improve the administration of justice." To the Premier: do you agree with your minister, who has characterized judges as a larger problem?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, it's interesting because the judge who triggered this discussion as a result of some of the outrageous statements he made during a trial was a judge who was appointed first to the Provincial Court by the third party when they were in government and then to the Federal Court by the Conservative government that the leader of that party was a part of. That judge himself said: when I was appointed, I wasn't qualified. That was one of his very direct statements.

We also have a job to do to make sure that we work collaboratively to . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
First supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The issue here is that the minister is clearly offside with the rules of the Law Society. The standard-of-conduct rule 7.4-1 for lawyers in public office states that "a lawyer who holds public office must, in the discharge of official duties, adhere to standards of conduct as high as those required of a lawyer engaged in the practice of law." To the Premier: are you confident that this minister is living up to this code of conduct sufficiently when she's criticizing judges who hold this important post? [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, the minister has not criticized any judges, and it is an outrageous reach for the member opposite to suggest that the minister has done that. We have respect for our judiciary. We need to work collaboratively with them with respect to the process of appointing judges and, quite frankly, to respect the work that they do to keep themselves educated, knowing that they work very hard. And that's exactly what they do.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier has ignored that her Justice minister yesterday clearly cast aspersions on the ability of every judge appointed before her appointment to cabinet. The minister has fallen short of both sections 5.6 and 7.4 of the Law Society rules. To the Premier. As Premier and as a lawyer yourself you know this is wrong. Will you do the right thing today and demand that the minister apologize to Alberta judges and then fire that minister?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, the member opposite completely mischaracterizes everything that has been said and also mischaracterizes the meaning of it and also mischaracterizes the application of the sections that he's quoting. Of course I would not do that because we have a good working, respectful, distant relationship with the judiciary, just as we need to have. We look forward to working with them in the ways that are appropriate to make sure that we can all strengthen our justice system for the people who matter most, which are Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Vegreville Immigration Centre

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last October the federal government announced its intentions to close Vegreville's immigration case processing centre. According to a Nichols impact study commissioned by the town of Vegreville, this would mean a loss of 130 students from local schools, a 30 per cent drop in housing prices, and $11.6 million lost in labour income. To the Minister of Labour: what action has this government taken to urge the federal Liberal government to reverse such an ill-judged decision?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I remain deeply disappointed in the federal government's decision to close this centre with no regard to the impact on the committed staff and town. I want to commend the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville for her ongoing advocacy. Since the day this was announced, we have been urging the federal government to reconsider. Today I met with the mayor and councillors from Vegreville and had a very productive discussion. I thank these representatives for meeting with me today and sharing their ideas on how to ensure that the federal government understands the negative impacts of their decision.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you. Given the critical work that this centre does processing the claims of immigrants and refugees and the top quality of work that they do, to the Minister of Labour: how else can the province support mortgage-paying jobs that create critical rural economic development in Alberta and in Vegreville?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to thank Vegreville for the town hall meetings held in November and February. The town continues to discuss ideas on how to keep the centre in Vegreville and increase its value in the eyes of the federal government. To everyone in Vegreville, Alberta, and across Canada that's concerned about this, I encourage you all to continue calling, writing, and voicing your concerns to the federal Minister of Immigration, Refugees and Citizenship.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you. Given the letters sent from Alberta ministers, MLAs, and the support of PSAC on the Respect Vegreville campaign, which I have a button for, to the Minister of Labour: how else can our members and the town advocate for Vegreville so as to reverse this decision and finally get the federal Liberal minister of immigration to take responsibility?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Along with continuing to support Vegreville, I would like to say that we are continuing to support making life better for Albertans in Vegreville by creating good jobs in a diversified economy. Our government operates an InnoTech Alberta site in Vegreville, focused on the growth, development, and commercialization of new technologies. Vegreville also has the Business Development Centre incubator that supports small and start-up businesses looking for assistance, networking, and shared services. These are just a few of the works we are doing. Our government will be there for Vegreville no matter what Ottawa decides.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Mr. Fildebrandt: Two thousand and seventeen marks the tragic 100-year anniversary of the income tax. Promised as a temporary, short-term measure for the war effort, most Canadians accepted it as a necessary evil, but there's nothing so permanent as a temporary government program. Overbooked taxpayers have come to be reaccommodated to this, but since coming to power, the NDP has introduced or raised 63 different taxes. Can the Minister of Finance tell us if any of these taxes are temporary?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very proud of the fact that we put forward a budget that protects Alberta families and makes sure that we have the services that they require to make sure that they have good, successful communities, families, and social supports. We did bring forward a budget. Every year budgets are reviewed. We stand by the importance of setting a path that protects families instead of pushing rash, erratic, deep cuts. We're proud of the budget we've brought forward for Albertans.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, not only did the minister not answer the question; the wrong minister gave the wrong non answer.

Given that the NDP did not run on a carbon tax during the election but that when they introduced one anyway, it was supposed to be $3 billion and given that it was just temporary as a few months later they raised it to $5 billion but that NDP allies demand that it be even higher for it to actually reduce greenhouse gases, just how temporary is the $5 billion target for the carbon tax?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, when you set a budget, you have a choice. You have a choice between pushing forward with a rash ideology that's going to make life more difficult during an economic downturn. You have a choice to stand up for families. [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet, please.

Ms Hoffman: As I said, you have a choice between moving forward with your rash, deep cuts that are driven by your ideology or protecting Alberta families and making sure that they have the class sizes they deserve, that nurses and teachers have jobs, and that front lines are supported. Mr. Speaker, I'm proud that we brought forward a budget that's putting food on the table, literally, for children in schools who are hungry. I'm glad that the Leader of the Official Opposition is finally onboard.

Mr. Fildebrandt: One thing that we all agree will be temporary is the NDP.

Mr. Speaker, given that when Trudeau the second said that he would run a deficit, he said that it would be temporary but that under current projections they will remain in deficit for 34 years and given that Alberta's temporary deficit is in its ninth year and that the Finance minister can't provide a shred of evidence that it will be anything but permanent, will the Minister of Finance, not the Deputy Premier, stand up and tell us if this temporary deficit will be as permanent as the income tax?

Ms Hoffman: The member opposite talks about nine years of deficits. Let's talk about one of those years, when a person who was sitting in the House of Commons in Ottawa said, "Short-term deficit-financed spending is necessary to jolt the country's economy and replace lost jobs." [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet.

Ms Hoffman: "We are taking a hit today to invest in tomorrow . . . It's better to pay on a mortgage than it is to rent a house and [you] think this is no different in this particular case." Mr. Speaker, that was in the Calgary Herald in 2009, and that person giving that quote was the member opposite's leader.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Interprovincial and International Trade

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Minister of Economic Development and Trade signed the new Canadian free trade agreement. The government promises that the CFTA will make it easier for Alberta businesses to get their goods and services to Canadian markets. However, many issues remain unsolved in this new deal, including food labelling, trucking regulations, and movement of professionals and tradespeople. To the minister of economic development: what is your plan to work with other provinces to solve the gaps in this new CFTA?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the question. This new free trade agreement, the Canadian free trade agreement, was about two and a half years' worth of negotiations. Alberta for decades has been disadvantaged compared to market access in other provinces and other jurisdictions. What the previous government did was to negotiate an agreement that opened up Alberta's borders and markets so other provinces' businesses could compete in Alberta, yet it wasn't reciprocated. Our businesses didn't have the same opportunity. This new free trade agreement levels that playing field.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Alberta's exports to the rest of Canada totaled $63 billion in 2015 but given that trucking regulations across the country remain unharmonized, which hampers movement of goods across the country, and given that the newly signed CFTA offers no new mechanisms enabling businesses to operate in multiple Canadian jurisdictions, to the Minister of Transportation: when will we see synchronized trucking regulations with the rest of Canada?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll thank the member for the question. This is one of those issues, again, that that table, the provincial-territorial trade ministers, were trying to work through. There are a number of outstanding issues that we weren't able to resolve in that round of negotiations. There are a number of tables that will be followed up on. Our work is not done. I recognize that the issue that the member raised is a challenge for companies, so we are committed to continuing to work with our partners across this country to resolve as many issues as we can if not all of them.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the trucking industry in Canada and the U.S. is a vital component of the multimodal transportation sector and given that the regulatory differences between Canada and the U.S. prevent the trucking industry from operating at peak performance, to the Minister of Transportation: what's left to improve compatibility with the U.S., and how are you working with the federal minister to fix it?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll thank the member again for his very, very good questions. There are a number of things that we are doing, not only working with the federal government but, again, working with our other counterparts provincially across this country. We recognize that, obviously, Alberta is an export province. We need to get our goods to market, so we are looking at all the different modes of transport and how we can make it easier to be more competitive, to get our goods and services to the coast, whether it's via trucks or elsewhere. There are a number of outlets that we have . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Public Consultation

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has a horrible track record on consultation. We need only look at Bill 6 to see how poorly this government even understands the word "consultation." The sad part is that they don't seem to be learning. Whether it is the Castle park management plan or the invite-only budget consultation, they just don't get it. Now this government is reviewing labour legislation. A similar review in Ontario is taking two years, but our government insists that they can consult in only 35 days. Why won't this government just tell Albertans the truth? You've already made your decisions, and your consultations are just a sham.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We have not taken a serious look at our employment or labour legislation since the Christmas classic Die Hard was first in theatres. It is important that we make sure that the government has workplace legislation that works for employees and employers, and we are confident that our consultation process will allow both employers and employees to be heard. We've held four round-tables to ask whether leaves like protected sick leave make sense for Alberta. Those round-tables were attended by nearly 50 employers and employer groups, including the Alberta chambers . . .

Mr. Loewen: Given that on July 1, 2016, Environment and Parks sent out a memorandum titled Notice of Changes Affecting Alberta Trappers and given that two of these changes include submitting fur sales receipts and not allowing conditional relinquishments, which allow trappers to sell their traplines to whomever they choose, to the minister: why was there absolutely no consultation with trappers before these changes were implemented? Furthermore, what problems were these changes attempting to solve?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It remains a mystery how trapping regulations are related to labour law, but let me do my best. We continue to work with the Alberta Trappers Association and others. There are a number of stakeholders in this. Wildlife regulations and other regulations governing these sorts of activities are updated on an annual basis. I'm pleased to provide the member with more information on these matters as a follow-up and to update the House as well.

Thank you.

Mr. Loewen: Given that this government seems to be mystified by the word "consultation" – even the minister doesn't seem to understand – and given that the government has produced a caribou draft plan and has insisted that it is consulting on the plan with the communities and industries affected and given that the government has admitted that it has already started to implement several parts of this draft plan before a final plan has been produced, to the minister: how can this government continue to mislead this House and, in fact, all Albertans when they say they are consulting when they obviously have their decisions predetermined?

The Speaker: Again I want to caution all of the members on words that have an inflammatory value in this room. I want to caution you all to be careful how you answer those, ask those.

The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, on the topic of consultation, of course, many months ago we released a draft plan. As a result of that we've had many, many meetings with various stakeholders on this matter, whether it's municipalities, workers, sawmills, and others. I just spoke with the town of Grande Cache even this morning on the matter. Yes, we have committed some resources to range restoration in terms of seismic restoration. That creates good jobs. I'm not surprised that the members opposite are opposed to that measure because, of course, that makes life better for folks in northwest Alberta. We'll continue to work with the federal government, as we said we would, and we continue to do so.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Renewable Energy Land Leases

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister of the environment has repeatedly stated that renewable projects are arrangements between the private landowners and the companies. This simplistic view of the situation is far from complete. Many landowners are telling us that some companies are buying up surface rights for renewable development for the sole purpose of flipping them to larger companies when the time is right. To the Minister of Energy: in the rush to jam through the renewable agenda, what safeguards are there to protect landowners and surface lease holders from unscrupulous companies?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, on this side of the House we are interested in job creation. We are interested in economic diversification. [interjections] We're interested in investment coming into this province, and that's why we have created the largest renewable energy opportunity in the country . . .

The Speaker: Quiet.

Ms Phillips: . . . ushering in $11 billion at a minimum of new private-sector investment and creating thousands of jobs. We welcome that kind of economic activity on this side of the House. We are an energy province: oil and gas, yes; renewables, also yes. It is unfortunate that the folks opposite want to slam the door on those kinds of jobs.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Strankman: I'll rephrase, Mr. Speaker. Given that the oil and gas sector needs to use a licensed land agent and given that no such regulation exists for an equivalent for renewable contracts, to the minister: what protections is this government going to put in place to ensure that both renewable companies and landowners are protected from predatory speculation in the wind and solar contract market?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know that, in fact, many landowners and farmers are very excited about the opportunities in solar power. To provide them, we've just launched the first competition for 400 megawatts of renewable power. That's going to bring 7,000 jobs, $10 billion of investment. But we also have resources under the Farmers' Advocate and under the AUC that landowners can avail themselves of should they wish to enter contracts with those providers.

Mr. Strankman: From another angle, Mr. Speaker. Given that when oil and gas industry company agents are taking an interest in land, they fall under specific land agent regulations that must be abided by, again to the minister: why are similar agents representing renewables not regulated and licensed in the same manner as land agents are in the oil and gas industry?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To be clear, there are resources available through the AUC, the Alberta Utilities Commission . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: . . . and the Farmers' Advocate for landowners. There are different arrangements under surface rights. [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Oil and gas projects have a different set of rules. To be clear, landowners and farmers do not need to go into these agreements should they wish not to. There is no way to compel them . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: . . . but should they wish to do that, they can consult the Farmers' Advocate or the AUC for help with those resources.

Municipal Minimum Property Tax

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, the one consistent thing about this NDP government is its inconsistency. The Health and Labour ministers lecture us about bringing Alberta in line with other provinces, but other ministers disagree. The Minister of Municipal Affairs refused to eliminate the punitive and unfair minimum tax provision found only in Alberta. The Doing Things Differently Gang failed once again. But now we have a new minister, so there's hope. Minister, you've already introduced amendments to the newly passed MGA. We're the only province that allows minimum tax. Will you bring Alberta in line and eliminate it? [interjections]

The Speaker: Hold it.

The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs. [interjections]

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Quiet.

Mr. S. Anderson: I appreciate standing up. You know, I'd like to follow up after with the opposition member on some specifics for him if he'd like. I am very proud of the work we're doing in this government, especially with the MGA, as the president of the Chambers of Commerce calls it, the gold standard of consultation. [interjections] You're welcome. When it comes to issues, especially out in rural areas, I have been speaking directly with municipal officials . . .

The Speaker: Quiet.

Mr. S. Anderson: . . . and my staff has been speaking with municipal officials constantly. We are involved day by day with consultation, and I am proud of Bill 8.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, gold for the MGA, lead for the labour code.

Given that some municipalities are now facing expensive litigation in determining the legality of minimum tax and given that this litigation can result in small villages spending tens of thousands of taxpayer dollars paying lawyers rather than providing essential services and given that the new minister could be a hero to these small municipalities if he ordered a judicial review into this issue rather than having protracted litigation, to the minister. Municipalities need clarity. Will you instigate a judicial review into the issue of minimum tax? [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members.

The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What I'd like to say is that this government has consulted vigorously, obviously on this act. We are there to support municipalities. We always have been, and we always will be. We are making lives better for Albertans out there. That's our job, and that's what I commit to do.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Time is of the essence, and given that the minister's beard has had a longer tenure than some of his predecessors in this ministry and given that the minimum tax robs from the poor to subsidize the rich and given that this reverse Robin Hood policy surely runs contrary to the NDP world view, to the minister. You have the chance to bring Alberta in line with other provinces. You have the chance to end minimum tax and be the real Robin Hood. Minister, what's it going to be? Robin Hood or evil Prince John?

The Speaker: I hope no one gets lost going through the park when they're on their way home.

The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll say it again. We will continue to consult with municipalities, as we have since day one. We are always listening to what the issues are out there. I am proud that we're giving 26 cents of every capital dollar to municipalities because we know how important they are, and they support towns and villages and big cities all across this province. Everything they do touches everyday Albertans' lives. So I am proud to stand here and represent those values, and I will support them going forward.

Affordable Housing

Ms McKittrick: Mr. Speaker, this is a good-news question. My community was delighted with the recent capital announcement of funding to rebuild the Clover Bar Lodge in Strathcona county. I have had the pleasure of visiting with residents of this lodge, and I know how important this funding is to their safety and quality of life. To the Minister of Seniors and Housing: how will these funds be used to rebuild the Clover Bar Lodge?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under Budget 2017 we will be investing in new housing units and renovating existing ones to make life better for Albertans. For Sherwood Park a new and larger Clover Bar Lodge is one of the projects that will proceed under our capital plan. Funding has been provided to Heartland Housing Foundation for planning and design of the lodge and the site. I look forward to joining Heartland Housing Foundation and Strathcona county to officially announce the project in the coming weeks.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for that good news. Given that Strathcona county residents only have access to the direct rent supplement program through an Edmonton-based agency, to the same minister: is this government going to increase rent supplements for the residents of Strathcona county and Fort Saskatchewan?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The direct rent supplement program is one way this government helps low-income Albertans find a safe and affordable place to call home. Last year we increased overall funding support for the rent supplement program by approximately $1.3 million. Capital Region Housing Corporation administers the program for tenants across the capital region, and they have seen an increase for the rent supplement program. This means more residents of Strathcona county, Fort Saskatchewan will move off wait-lists and into their own homes.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that some of the residents in my constituency are living in a housing co-operative called Brittany Lane, to the same minister: how will the province work with the federal government's affordable housing strategy to maintain subsidies for low-income tenants in housing co-operatives?

Ms Sigurdson: Housing co-operatives are an important option for affordable housing in Alberta communities. We have provided rent supplement subsidies for low-income co-op housing tenants. We process monthly rent subsidy claims that are submitted from the housing co-ops throughout the province, including Strathcona county. We will continue to work with the federal government to ensure that Albertans have a safe and affordable place to call home. I myself lived in co-op housing when I was a young single mom and a student, and it's a wonderful way to support people of low income.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Carbon Levy in Border Communities

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this year the government announced a grant program to help fuel retailers on the Alberta side of Lloydminster. The grant is to help offset inequities that retailers close to the Alberta-Saskatchewan border experience due to the carbon tax. The carbon tax is affecting retailers in Provost and Lloydminster, towns that are close to the border, and that's a competitive disadvantage. Is the NDP government going to recognize the retailers in towns located a short distance from the border whose sales have been negatively affected by the carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for raising this issue. Of course, we worked with the city of Lloydminster, and we'll continue to work with other communities on some of these pieces, as the national carbon tax has not been phased in yet, and on some of the differences between the Saskatchewan PST and the lack of a PST on the Alberta side. We'll continue to work on that. Certainly, I'm happy to follow up with the community of Provost, or the Finance minister will do so.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Taylor: Given that the town of Provost is located mere minutes from the Saskatchewan border and from the town of Macklin in Saskatchewan and given that I've heard that the sales for fuel in Provost have gone down inversely to sales in Saskatchewan – that's carbon leakage, my friends – will the government commit to implementing the same grant that applies to Lloydminster in other communities that are in close proximity to the border so that the retailers can be compensated for the loss due to the carbon tax?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We, of course, are working to make life more affordable for Albertans and Alberta families, and we recognize the unique challenges of fuel dealers . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet.

Ms Hoffman: . . . many of whom are families, that own these fuel stations in the border town of Lloydminster. In terms of that community, we were pleased to work with them to ensure that our fuel taxes were properly aligned, and we are continuing to do that in the city of Lloydminster. Offsetting the levy for fuel dealers continues to be the practice.

Mr. Taylor: Given that the carbon tax is affecting communities and competitiveness across Alberta and given that businesses are leaving rural Alberta at an alarming rate and given that prior to the carbon tax Saskatchewan had a program so that the fuel cost would be the same on both sides of the border, again to the minister: will the NDP commit to bringing in the same grant that applies to Lloydminster to other communities so that those who sell fuel, groceries, and products won't lose business as a result of where they live?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we will continue to engage with communities in terms of ways that we can best support reinvestment of carbon levy revenues, in particular for the commitment made to municipalities, some several billion in municipal infrastructure investments. But I will point out that this province has an $8.7 billion tax advantage over Saskatchewan given that Saskatchewan has extended the PST to things like children's clothing and construction. That tax advantage in Alberta has only increased since the introduction of the Saskatchewan budget.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Employment and Labour Code Consultations

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's hasty workplace legislation consultation includes changes to the Employment Standards Code and the Labour Relations Code. The Employment Standards Code has the greatest impact on small and medium-sized businesses, and they are understandably concerned with the NDP's unwillingness to engage them in a meaningful consultation. To the minister: will you please regroup and initiate a more robust consultation process to ensure that you're listening to Alberta's business owners, who are the actual job creators in this province?

The Speaker: The Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We are confident that our consultation process will allow both employers and employees to be heard. We've met with the Edmonton Chamber of Commerce, the Calgary Chamber, the Alberta Chambers of Commerce, and the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. We've had 700 Albertans who've identified themselves as employers respond to our online survey. We're meeting with many business partners, and certainly we're listening very well.

Thank you.

Mr. Gill: I was hoping for the Labour minister to answer.

Given that the invitation-only consultation involved few, if any, actual business owners and given that the only direct opportunity for a business to participate is through a public online survey that does not validate that business owners are even responding and given that on Tuesday the minister said, "We have publicly communicated April 18 for the online portion, but I think we intend to have conversations continuing past that," Minister: considering this statement, will you commit to consulting on the findings of the Sims report before enacting changes to the existing legislation?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, I am going to say it again. These are representatives of the business community: the Edmonton Chamber of Commerce, the Calgary Chamber, the Alberta Chambers of Commerce, and the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. Certainly, Andy Sims has been consulting with employers. As I said, 700 Alberta employers have submitted responses to our survey, so we're having a robust consultation process and hearing from businesses in Alberta.

Mr. Gill: I'd still like to hear from the Labour minister.

Given that Ontario's two-year labour consultation puts Alberta's six-week process to absolute shame and given that part of Ontario's process includes direct engagement with business owners and business representatives, frequent meetings with the minister, and the tabling of a 300-page interim report and given that Alberta is circumventing all of those processes in an apparent rush to introduce legislation, to the same minister: is this government planning to introduce amendments to the Labour Relations Code and the Employment Standards Code this session?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta hasn't reviewed the labour laws since 1988, and a lot has changed in that time. For example, in Alberta, if you lose your job and you're sick, you can't access employment insurance. Every other jurisdiction in Canada has that provision. That's just not fair. This is the type of legislation to support workers in Alberta, and we want to make it more fair, so we're very proud to be reviewing the legislation at this time.

Thank you.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have four tablings. I'll try not to waste time with them. The first tabling is five copies of the relevant sections of the Law Society codes that I referred to in my earlier question to the Premier.

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is five copies of a letter to the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Energy and the Minister of Economic Development and Trade from the Calgary engineers and designers forum, talking about engineering jobs in Alberta and asking for help.

The next tabling is five copies of a letter from the president of APEGA and from the Calgary engineers and designers forum again asking for government help for engineering work that is done online in other countries instead of here.

For my last tabling, Mr. Speaker – I hope I'm going fast enough for you – I'm pleased to table copies of a letter to the CEO of Engineers Canada from the Calgary engineers and designers forum still looking for government help for engineering jobs that are being done online instead of here.

The Speaker: The hon. Health minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to table the requisite number of copies of the quotes that I referred to today where at the time, in 2009, the current Leader of the Official Opposition defended five straight deficit budgets. Five.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to table four documents today. The first is an article from the University of Calgary Faculty of Law: When Judicial Decisions Go from Wrong to Wrongful – How Should the Legal System Respond? This is from November 3, 2015, by Alice Woolley. There are five copies.

The second is an article from the Globe and Mail, April 5, 2017: Rona Ambrose Played Role in Robin Camp Appointment, Former Justice Minister Says. There are five copies.

A letter from the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General of Alberta dated December 22, 2015, to the hon. chairperson of the Canadian Judicial Council questioning the conduct of Justice Camp. There are five copies.

And the report and recommendation from the Canadian Judicial Council dated November 29, 2016, in the matter of an inquiry pursuant to section 63(1) of the Judges Act regarding the hon. Justice Camp.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table an article from the Edmonton Journal of April 12, 2017, by Paula Simons titled Why Is Alberta's Information and Privacy Commissioner Being Kept in the Dark? It clearly shows that despite the government's protests they are responsible for the current FOIP mess.

Motions under Standing Order 42

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Judge and Lawyer Training on Sexual Offences

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak to Standing Order 42. The standing order reads as follows:

A motion may, in case of urgent and pressing necessity previously explained by the mover, be made by unanimous consent of the Assembly without notice having been given under Standing Order 39.

I thank the Premier today, Mr. Speaker, for saying that she would support this motion, and I'm hoping that her entire caucus will and, of course, all members of this House. I'm requesting, of course, unanimous consent from the members of this Assembly to support my motion.

Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of urgent necessity as the issue is right now before many Legislative Assemblies and, of course, the Parliament in Ottawa and is being widely discussed not just in the media but in other Houses and, of course, in the federal regime. Many members of the legal community also are seized with this. There has been discussion by judges' groups, by judges and professionals right across the country. Lawmakers, victims, and members of the public have said that there is a fundamental problem with a lack of understanding around the current state of the law when it comes to crimes of a sexual nature.

Mr. Speaker, as somebody that practised law for some period of time, I can tell you for certain that the law changes. It's constantly moving, and we need to make sure that all professionals – judges, lawyers, Crown prosecutors – continue to be kept to the highest possible standard, as they should be in Alberta. I would say, as somebody that practised in Alberta for 10 years, that I believe that the Alberta Bar Association and the Law Society of Alberta keep our particular bar – the Crown prosecutors, the legal profession, defence lawyers – as one of the highest in all of Canada and, I would suggest, one of the highest in all the world as far as expectation on education. They even require, as has been pointed out in the past, that an education program and an education plan be put forward.

I do believe that the Alberta government has required one of the best educational programs, and of course LESA, the Legal Education Society of Alberta, and the Law Society of Alberta have required one of the best educations for our lawyers that is possible. I do believe that because of the nature of sexual offences and sexual assaults and the vulnerability of the particular complainants, the victims, usually, of these crimes, it's absolutely necessary.

As a result of that, Mr. Speaker, I would urge that all members of the Assembly support this motion today, and I would appreciate that as I do believe that also the victims of crime would recognize this. I have received a lot of correspondence on this particular motion in support of it, sometimes even from victims that have gone through the court system and think this is absolutely essential. I would appreciate the support of all members on this motion.

Thank you.

Mr. Jean moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to work collaboratively with the Law Society of Alberta and the Provincial Court Judges' Association of Alberta to ensure that anyone being considered for appointment as a judge of the Provincial Court of Alberta has successfully completed a comprehensive education on the current state of the law with regard to any crime of a sexual nature and that continuing education plans for judges and lawyers involved with victims of sexual offences are adequate in respect of matters related to crimes of a sexual nature, including instruction in evidentiary prohibitions, principles of consent, and the conduct of sexual offence proceedings as well as education regarding myths and stereotypes associated with sexual offence complainants.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm so pleased to see this today as we have in the past co-operated with the NDP on some particular bills, taking, of course, corporate money out of politics, and on some other good laws that we have passed. I appreciate the fact that today they're standing up for victims across Alberta and making sure that we have the opportunity to have as good a training as possible for our legal teams, no matter whether they speak for the accused or the Crown.

Of course, judges are also encouraged – it is, I think, absolutely essential – that all members that are on the bar that have the opportunity and the necessity to work with these victims have the full education possible on the current state of the law. The fewer mistakes that are made, obviously, the better the chance that real justice will be seen by not just the victims but by the accused themselves.

The fact is that the conviction rate for sexual assault cases remains far lower than any other cases, Madam Speaker, and I would point particularly to the fact that for sexual cases in Canada the conviction rate is 45 per cent. That means that ultimately very few people are actually charged with these types of offences relative to other cases. Indeed, other sexual offences besides sexual assault have a conviction rate of 57 per cent. About half of the trials or even less than half of the trials actually lead to some form of conviction. This means that complainants – and often that person is obviously the victim of a sexual assault or a sexual misconduct or is, in fact, a minor – are put under extreme scrutiny by the judicial community as well as by both the Crown and the accused. I would suggest that they need to be on the same page to make sure that these people are treated with respect and are given the best opportunity to have justice.

Now, 44 per cent of sexual assault cases and only 34 per cent of other sexual offence cases are actually stayed or withdrawn. That means that even though you may receive a charge of a sexual nature or a sexual assault under the Criminal Code, 44 per cent of those sexual assault cases are actually dropped by the Crown for a variety of reasons, either as a result of a stay or a withdrawal, even before they get to trial. Of the ones that do get to trial, only 50 per cent of them get convicted. Now, I would suggest that it's very important not just to have convictions but to actually have justice. We need to make sure that justice is real and that the complainant, the accused as well as the entire system are kept honest and in the best interest of the justice system without forgetting the actual victim.

We should all in the House be well familiar with the comments that we've heard from judges that, I believe, are totally out of touch with reality in our current system and are unacceptable. Our courtrooms have actually, as a result of these comments, aggravated the situation, and I believe that as a result of that, Albertans and Canadians as a whole are less willing to come forward and make complaints against particular people because they feel that they will sometimes not be able to lead to a conviction, that they will not be listened to, or, in fact, that they will be treated with disrespect.

We know that the case of a Calgary courtroom where a victim was told to "keep your knees together" in a sexual assault trial is completely unacceptable. Frankly, Madam Speaker, I noticed your reaction to that, and I would agree with you. It's completely unacceptable.

Last April another example was that a lower court judge here in Alberta actually issued an acquittal because a 15-year-old girl, a young girl, a young woman, appeared complacent even though she said no twice. Now, Madam Speaker, that type of behaviour by our court system obviously brings the disrepute of justice into real question. It has, I think, a stigma to drive people away from seeking justice. Justice is not just about the current person that is the victim but to also avoid future victims, to make sure that these people are kept off the streets and are actually punished for what they've done.

Recently, as a result of a lack of resources that are put into our justice system, Madam Speaker, we've seen 200 cases that were dismissed just in a few short months earlier this year, 200 cases as a result of not enough resources put forward by this government. Now, we've asked a number of times for this government to take it more seriously. We know that they spend one of the highest amounts on justice per capita of any jurisdiction in Canada. Yet 200 cases – 200 cases – with one person accused of murder, were thrown out as a result of lack of resources, lack of judges, and lack of Crown prosecutors. That's not acceptable. Two sexual assault cases were thrown out in the same group of 200 and over a dozen impaired operation offences. People that were actually caught red-handed and accused of careless driving or impaired driving are back on the street without any punishment whatsoever.

Another Alberta judge recently was rebuked for relying on "discredited myths and stereotypes." It's important, Madam Speaker, although I feel emotion for this, because I know how important it is that we have actual justice. We know that during the trials themselves we have to be absolutely certain that not only the people involved – the judges, the Crown prosecutors, and the defence lawyers – know the current state of the law, but we also know that they have to understand what's happened to those people, as in that particular case where the Alberta judge was rebuked recently for relying on "discredited myths and stereotypes."

I saw this in the law, Madam Speaker. I saw this when I practised law in Alberta in the '90s, that there are a lot of myths and stereotypes, and people don't understand why they can't be brought up in court. That's why it's so important that judges and lawyers don't allow that to happen because there can be the case of mistrials, stays, and it can help the accused. Frankly, if the accused is guilty of the crime, it can often, as the result of a mistrial, cause serious ramifications for the trial itself.

In that case, Madam Speaker, the judge actually questioned why two young girls didn't tell anyone earlier about abuse at the hands of their stepfather. Now, that's unacceptable. You know that time has no relevance in relation to these types of charges, and when complainants bring them forward, we need to believe these people. It's absolutely essential that the people of Alberta know that they will receive justice. In that case, even though it was against the accused's two stepdaughters, that man had also been accused of sexually abusing his own daughter. Now, this type of situation is absolutely unbelievable and unacceptable, but they do happen in our court system, and that's why we need to make sure that when the complainants come forward, they are believed and that they have the opportunity to have due process and justice.

The federal and other provincial governments are discussing right now how training and education should take place to address these problems, and it's critically important that the Alberta government participate in this conversation. I was very thankful to see the Premier stand up today and accept our motion, to move forward with this motion. Of course, the real issue is in the details, and we're hoping the government will work with other jurisdictions, including the federal government, to come up with a good law to support victims and our justice system.

Victims of sexual assault in and across Alberta have seen their trust in our justice system shaken as a result of these stories that come forward, as a result of 200 cases not being prosecuted and dismissed, where the training may have been available and wasn't taken. That is also very disturbing because, of course, the Alberta government puts a lot of resources into this, as does the Law Society of Alberta, and we need to encourage all lawyers and judges to take this training on an ongoing basis.

We cannot infringe on judges' independence, and that is very clear with this particular motion. What we've said in this motion is that not during the judges' tenure but before the judges are actually appointed, they should take up-to-date education on the current state of the law. We believe also that the judges – and the Chief Justice should encourage them – should take ongoing legal training to make sure that they continue to provide to Albertans real justice and that people recognize that in Alberta we have one of the best justice systems in the world. That's what we need clarity of in the public. They need to know that when they go and make a complaint to the RCMP or the city police, they are able to be believed and go forward with that charge and hold the accused accountable if indeed they're guilty of the crime.

Myths do exist, myths like: women will struggle and use all their force to try to avoid an assault. Oftentimes these are situations where somebody is in a power position, where somebody is familiar to them, and often young people and people that are vulnerable will not respond in a way that most people would think is normal. Or even that a woman can't be assaulted by someone she knows: it's absolutely not the case. In fact, more times than not that's what happens. That lifestyle choices in particular discredit a woman's testimony: that's absolutely unacceptable. Or that if a woman is assaulted, she will go to the police right away: that never should be perpetuated by the courts, Madam Speaker. These myths just discredit our entire justice system.

Judges know how to react to this if they're properly trained. Crown prosecutors know how to treat the complainants if they're properly trained. With all three of the main people in this particular situation being educated properly and being at a consistent level of high education, I believe we'll actually see better trials, more justice seen, and, as a result, victims being treated in a way that they actually feel they're not being revictimized, which I hear time and time again.

Of course, Madam Speaker, I'm glad to hear this isn't a partisanship issue, that we've put partisanship to the side. I know that the Justice minister was for a period of time hesitant in coming out to support this motion even this week and earlier. I sincerely hope that she along with the rest of her caucus, as the Premier has stated, will stand up and support the motion.

She has stated that she wouldn't want to interfere in the justice system, with the judges. We heard that clearly and loudly, and we looked at and analyzed the state of the law across Canada. That's why we came forward with a different type of model than what was brought forward at the federal level. Many people don't know this, but most of the cases that deal with sexual assault and sexual misconduct are actually at the provincial court level, and those judges are actually appointed by the provincial government here, by the NDP Premier. That's why it's so important. Those are the judges that are actually seized with most of these sexual misconduct cases, and we know that if they're trained early on, we'll have fewer problems as time goes.

The wording of the motion actually respects the independence of the judiciary and of all the respective bodies, including the Law Society of Alberta and the judges' association. In a private member's bill before the federal House of Commons right now being driven by my former colleague and Leader of the Opposition Rona Ambrose – the chief justices, including the Chief Justice here in Alberta and many other lawyers and judges, have come out to support this idea, support the idea of ongoing education. I can't think of anything more important than training and education for judges and lawyers on the state of the law, making sure it's up to date, because laws do change every day. The work must be supported by lawyers, by Crown prosecutors.

This work will continue to go on for some period of time, and that's why I hope that we don't just see this motion shovelled under the carpet, and somebody accepts it. The Premier has grabbed it, and the NDP government has grabbed it, but I want to see them move forward with it. That's why I'm hoping to see some real plans. We'll continue to ask about these questions in this House because, of course, this work is supported by a lot of lawyers.

But let's look past lawyers because what's important is the victims and their advocates. They want change. They know that this is a situation that has gone on for years and years, and there is a delicate balance. We can't interfere with the judiciary, but what we can do is to support victims when they come forward, to make sure that they're treated right, with respect.

It also has the full support of federal opposition, including, I might add, the NDP Party federally. We were glad to see that crosspartisan exchange. Here's another quote from NDP leader Thomas Mulcair: "When the issue is how our judicial system handles cases of sexual assault, we all have to come together and say that we believe survivors." Right now the House of Commons Committee on the Status of Women is considering a private member's bill by Rona Ambrose.

The information from those testifying is important for us, too. I quote from a CBC article from April 12 on the president of the Association of Justice Counsel, Ursula Hendel, which represents 2,600 federal lawyers and prosecutors.

She supports more education for judges but says they're not the only ones who need it.

I continue with the quote.

The truth of the matter is that no training of any kind is actually mandatory for Crown prosecutors.

That's what she told MPs at that committee meeting. She went on to say, Madam Speaker:

I'd like to see training made mandatory for prosecutors, and particularly for prosecutors who conduct sexual assault cases – and early in their career. I didn't get training until I was at least five years in and by then it was a little late.

I think she indicated in the article that she'd actually tried 500 cases by that time. That's one case a week. I would suggest that that's a lot of cases that she was involved in as a Crown prosecutor, and without adequate and up-to-date training it's a little bit shocking.

Federal Crowns get most of their training from the Public Prosecution Service of Canada's prosecutors' school. Now, in that prosecutors' school they go to school once every year for a five-day course that's offered for them. I would suggest that here in Alberta since – actually, my understanding is that currently the Law Society expects a legal education plan from each lawyer, to submit that plan, and to follow through with that plan.

The Legal Education Society of Alberta, which provides a lot of the training for the Law Society of Alberta, actually has a lot of great courses. I know and I believe and would submit to you that they would be able to pull this idea across the country and listen to all of the evidence presented here today and, of course, in the committee hearing in Ottawa and other places in other jurisdictions, including Ontario, and put forward good ideas that will implement a better justice system for all of us.

The goal of this motion is simple: for the government to work together with the Law Society, with the Provincial Court Judges' Association to ensure that anybody considered for an appointment is duly educated on it and continues, hopefully, to receive education if indeed the Chief Justice would impose that upon the judges. I believe, based upon their comments, that they will do that. I think it's very important that the minister work with the Law Society, with judges, with the Crown prosecutors' association, with the trial lawyers associations, and with other people. We've seen consultation by this government before such as the labour review in 36 days or Bill 6 in just a very short period of time, and I really think that this is so important that we need to make sure that victims are heard, victims' voices.

Sheldon Kennedy, for instance, is somebody that's a huge advocate for young people and for those that are the most vulnerable in our society. I had an opportunity to meet with him just weeks ago, and I can tell you that he continues with his struggle and his plan to make sure that he does as much as he can for victims and survivors. I would suggest that that would be a good place to start for this government, to listen to not just lawyers but also those people that have been on the other side of the situation and have been in court and have suffered as a result of what I would consider to be not adequate education for the judges and some of the other people involved in the cases.

As to the first part of the motion, it is the minister that decides whether someone is appointed as a judge here, and we know that those people, before they apply, might have not even practised criminal law. Can you imagine going into a court system, and all your life you do family law, and then you're appointed as a Provincial Court judge? Now, I don't know if you're aware, Madam Speaker, but Provincial Court judges deal with most trials, most criminal trials, especially. In fact, I would suggest that just about every matter goes through Provincial Court as far as applications go, as far as an opportunity to hear, before a Queen's Bench trial, a preliminary inquiry in Provincial Court.

All of these Provincial Court judges are absolutely essential. It's absolutely essential for them to be trained because when these people do come in from especially rural communities, I think, where sometimes the training is not provided – I would suggest that that's the place that we need to make sure that all the judges are at the same level, all the lawyers are at the same level, the best level possible to serve and to make sure that justice is served. The first part of the motion, of course, will ensure that no new appointees to the bench are unprepared, and I think that is also important.

Madam Speaker, I'm so happy to see today this House and all opposition parties and the government itself stand up and support victims and stand up and support this Wildrose motion.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would like to preface my comments by saying that many people who have endured sexual assault prefer to be referred to as survivors rather than victims, and I am definitely speaking for myself.

Our government believes that survivors of sexual assault in Alberta should be treated with respect and dignity in the justice system. We also believe that it's vital for Alberta to have qualified, compassionate judges. Judges should know and should properly apply our sexual assault laws in our court system. There's no room for sexual myths and stereotypes in our justice system. That's why in 2015 our Minister of Justice asked for a formal inquiry into Justice Camp's conduct, which recommended his removal from the bench, and why this government introduced Bill 2, An Act to Remove Barriers for Survivors of Sexual and Domestic Violence. Our government believes it's vital for sexual assault survivors to hear that these sorts of actions, comments, and conduct are not accepted in our society and most certainly not accepted in our courtrooms.

We're happy to agree with this motion in principle. We all have a role to play in ensuring that not only do we provide compassion to survivors of sexual violence but that we work to reduce sexual violence in the first place. We all have a role to play in education related to sexual violence throughout society, including how prevalent it is. Education alone is not enough. We must ensure that our society does not reward another Justice Camp. Despite the benefit of education he continued to hold archaic, sexist beliefs.

One of the biggest keys to combating sexual violence is making sure that powerful positions in society like the bench are held by people with reasoned views of sexual violence and equality. I understand there may be some challenges related to the constitutionality of legislating training for justices, so government needs to be careful not to be mandating what the judiciary learns, to avoid influencing the decisions of another branch of government. This is a foundational principle of our democracy, but government definitely has a significant role to play in supporting the education of judges.

By and large, our judiciary is comprised of committed Albertans that have given service to the law and committed to their communities, and this is vital. Perhaps government's most critical role is ensuring that appointments to the bench are people who are learned in the law and have the compassion and empathy to consider the context of the matters in front of them. Clearly, there's a need to ensure that people appointed to the Provincial Court have empathy towards sexual assault survivors as well as a background in the area of the law they preside over prior to hearing a case related to sexual violence. I'm happy to see that this government's appointments have respected that, including the appointment of a number of Crown prosecutors and defence counsel to the criminal court that are well versed in the laws around sexual assault as well as individuals who have volunteered with survivors of sexual and domestic violence.

This issue is also being considered by the federal government, and it will be useful to see what steps they take. I understand as well that our Minister of Justice and Solicitor General has raised the need to further remove barriers for victims of sexual assault across the justice system with her federal and provincial colleagues.

We're happy to accept this motion in principle and look forward to continuing to work with the Provincial Court and the Law Society to make sure that the resources appropriate for training are available to lawyers and judges.

This is an extremely important issue. We took action on this issue in 2015 when we asked for a formal review of Justice Camp's conduct. Where was the opposition then? After all, it was their former Conservative government in Ottawa that gave him a promotion after his inappropriate conduct in the 2014 sexual assault case.

On this side of the House we believe judges should have a wide variety of expertise and appointments should be merit based. Many of the appointments the Justice minister has made include professionals who have backgrounds working with sexual assault and domestic violence organizations like the Sexual Assault Centre of Edmonton, the Zebra Child Protection Centre, the Sheldon Kennedy centre, and the YWCA battered women support group.

I'm proud that Alberta's appointments have been focused on bringing more women to the bench and bringing in indigenous Albertans and members of the LGBTQ community, traditionally underrepresented amongst our judiciary. It's vital that Albertans entering courtrooms see themselves reflected in the judge before them. We will continue to work to ensure that our appointments are diverse, reflect Albertans, and have expertise in the area of law over which they preside.

The report and recommendation of the Inquiry Committee of the Canadian Judicial Council in the matter of Justice Camp states:

It is difficult to understand how Justice Camp could conclude – particularly after his intensive sessions with Justice McCawley, Dr. Haskell and Professor Cossman – that his acknowledgement of misconduct did not involve sexism and gender bias, and that it did not implicate profound issues of equality. His evidence leaves the Committee doubtful about whether he is fully engaged in the necessary ongoing process of constant self-reflection about which Dr. Haskell testified and which the public has a right to expect of members of the judiciary.

Judges need more than just one training course; they need to be committed to continual learning, as we all do, respecting the law and applying it fairly, and to not be stuck in old-fashioned thinking when society and the law have obviously moved beyond that. That's why we strongly encourage judges to take a wide range of training courses, including sexual assault, tailored to the nature of their own knowledge and the area where they will be practising.

In fact, currently there is more training and mentorship available to judges in Alberta than ever before. We provide almost $200,000 in grants toward training support for judges in Alberta. Training for judges in Alberta is provided by the Alberta Provincial Judges' Association, the National Judicial Institute, the Canadian Association of Provincial Court Judges, and through the office of the chief judge education committee. All new members of the judiciary are required to attend new training upon being appointed to the bench. This initial training is provided by the Canadian Association of Provincial Court Judges. The Alberta Provincial Judges' Association organizes two education conferences per year. The APJA conference last year focused on sexual assault and indigenous issues.

In 2015 the Provincial Court formalized a mentoring program for all newly appointed judges. All new judges shadow more experienced judges after their appointment. Continuing legal education for Provincial Court judges covers a range of areas, including sexual assault law, and involves ongoing mentoring from more judges. The work that our Provincial Court has done in recent years under the leadership of Chief Judge Matchett is impressive and should be applauded. In addition, the National Judicial Institute, whose executive director is Alberta Court of Queen's Bench Justice Adele Kent, has committed to expanding the availability of online learning opportunities for judges regarding sexual assault. This is an important step as National Judicial Institute materials are available to provincially and federally appointed judges thanks in part to the provincial government's grant to the institute.

But there is an individual responsibility on judges and lawyers as well. They have to believe that they are appropriately versed in the law prior to hearing a case or remain open to hearing arguments from counsel and further researching areas that are novel to them. That is what good judges do, and it's critical that we appoint people that will make a lifelong commitment to be a student of the law.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak on this very important motion, which I was hoping would be nonpartisan, the motion that takes aim at reforming the judicial system to ensure that judges and lawyers dealing with sexual assault cases are properly educated on the myths and stereotypes of sexual violence.

When a victim decides to come forward to the authorities with their story, it can be one of the most difficult times in their life. The pain, the emotional trauma, and the fear of not being believed are all too real, and I, for one, want to know that when a victim comes forward, the system is supporting him or her through these difficult times with respect and empathy. Justice Robin Camp's absolutely deplorable comments regarding a rape victim's account have quite rightly drawn the ire of Albertans, Canadians, and the entire international community. In this case the now former judge stated to the victim in court that "sex and pain sometimes go together." I can't imagine how he thought that would be appropriate. He questioned why she wouldn't sink her bottom into the base of a sink so the assailant couldn't penetrate her. And then, of course, the keep the knees together comment.

These statements encompass the fundamental ignorance that perpetuates myths and stereotypes and deters victims from coming forward in the first place. Rape and sexual misconduct often go unreported because of instances like this. Why would a victim ever come forward and tell the most haunting and personal story only to be ridiculed by an officer of the court?

I'd like to highlight three common myths, which the Leader of the Official Opposition touched on as well, that are readily apparent in these statements made by Justice Camp. The first myth: a woman will always try to fight back to avoid being sexually assaulted; that is, she will always fight back, struggle, and she will use force to stop her attacker. We know that this isn't true. Everyone reacts in a different manner to various situations, and this is especially so with something as serious as sexual assault. Further, there's absolutely no surety that struggling will stop the attack. In fact, some may argue that it may result in further harm to the victim. These attacks are about control almost every single time and have very little to do with the sexual nature of what's going on.

The second myth contained in these statements: woman should not be believed if they are on social assistance, have mental health challenges, dress provocatively, drink, or use drugs. This myth is crazy, and it's probably one of the most common and in some aspects actually suggests that the victim somehow is asking for it. Reputation, clothing, lifestyle choices, and other superficial circumstances do not somehow invalidate the claim that a sexual assault or rape has occurred.

The third myth contained here is the idea that a woman is either a saint or a sinning whore. Justice Camp in his comment of "keep your knees together" fell directly into this category by failing to consider this instance as an isolated event. According to the law each and every sexual incident requires consent. Reputation does not play a role in determining whether or not a sexual assault has occurred. Let me repeat: reputation should not play a role in determining whether or not a crime has happened.

Sadly, no, this is not the only instance in which a victim has been ridiculed by a member of the judiciary. Recently four judges – not one; there are four – have been rebuked for their serious errors in judgment, which adds further evidence that it is unacceptable to continue to allow our judges to operate without any knowledge or training in this area.

In a recently overturned case it was found that Judge Michael Savaryn had used seriously erroneous logic to find a 15-year-old boy not guilty of sexually assaulting a 15-year-old girl, this despite video evidence and despite that she had told him "no" and fended him off with a water bottle. Judge Savaryn concluded: "The complainant tried so hard to laugh it all off, that I do not believe she was successful in communicating her discomfort . . . and even at the end, I am not convinced she clearly expressed her objections." In Justice Juliana Topolniski's decision to overturn the acquittal she wrote, "The word 'No' coupled with fending off an attacker with a water bottle does not mean 'Yes.' There is nothing ambiguous about it."

Saying that these judges need an education is an understatement.

What we are all asking here today is very simple. We want accountable judges who have been educated on the laws that are expected to be enforced. This is something that many judges are in favour of. Alberta's Chief Justice has publicly stated that training in this area of law is something that is sorely needed and, contrary to dissenting opinion, this does not infringe on judicial independence.

The other aspect to this motion revolves around the lawyers and ensuring that they, too, are properly educated on the facts around sexual assault. Some attorneys say that this erodes their independence as well, but I quite frankly do not see how providing an education on sexual assault would do that. It's about holding our courts and the officers to a higher standard, as we would expect, to ensure that erroneous and harmful positions are not used which could ultimately revictimize the person. Lawyers that are wishing to become judges should be looking for opportunities to expand their understanding of the law, and this does just that. This motion does that.

At the end of the day, what we are talking about here is the need to ensure our system is finding justice for individuals and not adding to the problem. This is a nonpartisan issue. I will treat this as a nonpartisan issue, and I do want to thank my colleagues for supporting our motion on this side of the House, on the other side of the House. This is a very important topic. I know that at the federal level this is a nonpartisan issue as well, with the NDP and the Conservatives working together, and I hope that we will see this Chamber work together moving forward. Together as legislators we can show that I believe you with real reforms to educate the courts on sexual assault.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I want to pick up on where the Member for Airdrie left off and on the partisan or nonpartisan nature of this debate. I'm really glad to see that the temperature is turned down in the House now as we got a couple of speakers in, but frankly as I sat here and watched what happened with the first couple of speakers, we had partisan bombs being chucked across the aisle at one another. Enough of that. Shame on all of you for doing that. This is not . . . [interjections] Hang on. Listen to me. [interjections] Listen. Honestly, this issue . . .

The Acting Speaker: Member, if you could speak through me, please.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I will do that.

It frustrates me, Madam Speaker. It frustrates me very much that issues that are as important as preventing sexual assault, ensuring that judges get the training they need – and I'm speaking in favour of this motion, undeniably. But things get bogged down so much here. You know, the Member for Airdrie, I think, struck exactly the right tone, and I think there's an opportunity here for us to ensure that both sides are focusing on the issue.

We're here to ensure that survivors of sexual assault, victims of sexual assault, whatever people who have had sexual assault perpetrated against them would like to be called – that isn't the issue that we're debating. The issue we're debating is: how do we prevent that? How do we ensure that people who perpetrate sexual assault are held accountable and that, overall, the rates of sexual violence drop in our province? That's what we should be focusing on.

That's what I hope this motion can achieve, which is, again, why I support that. We know that Alberta has some of the highest rates of sexual offences in the country. My data show that we have the third-highest level of sexual offences in this country. A motion like this and training for judges can ensure that we change those statistics. I'd like to see an increased focus from our government and from society as a whole to ensure that we do in fact change that.

Really, this motion, I think, is one of the things that we can do to take real steps towards reducing the prevalence of sexual violence in all its forms. It's certainly in no way the only thing that we should be doing as a province, but it is an important motion.

It's important that professional development continues within the judiciary, that it happens with Crown prosecutors and in all aspects of our justice system, including police, that it is gender and culturally sensitive. We need to ensure that judges, police officers, Crown prosecutors, and court employees have comprehensive understanding of the impact of sexual trauma on individuals, how it happens, how it manifests itself, and whether those people who are part of our judicial system have their ability to participate in these investigations or prosecutions clouded by their biases, whether they know about those biases or not. That's where training comes in.

I recognize that there are some jurisdictional issues or some limitations. The judiciary clearly must be independent from the legislative branch; therefore it's limited, what we can do. But, again, this motion has addressed that particular concern. This motion is future-focused and focused on training, and I think that is absolutely right.

But back to bias. I think we need to always remember that myths and stereotypes about sexual assault and about sexuality persist within our system, as do racial and other biases. Those persist in society, and they exist also within our judicial system. There have been many examples here, that we've heard today, that play that out, of course.

I would like to see that a term of employment for Crown prosecutors is proper sexual assault training. I think that should be mandatory.

We should ensure that training procedures are in place for police officers. All police, I think, should ensure that they have a standard operating procedure that is common across the province so they understand and are on the same page when it comes to handling investigations of sexual assault cases.

Now, I know that some police forces, perhaps all, have dedicated resources to sexual assault. I'd like to ensure that those staff have the resources they need to ensure that those who come forward with sexual assault complaints are taken seriously, that they are believed, that those prosecutions move forward, and that the people who are bringing those charges forward are supported throughout the process.

It should be said that the judicial system and judges are just one part of the problem, one part of the system. We need to ensure, again, that hospitals, of course – and I know there are dedicated resources in hospitals – have the resources that they need.

I know that governments in this province have done a lot to prevent violence against women and girls. I think that's important work, and it must continue, but more needs to be done in that regard.

I'll note just in conclusion that I understand that there was a 2013 document called Best Practices for Investigating and Prosecuting Sexual Assault. I'd be interested to know whether that does include mandatory training and, if it does not, to ensure that it is updated.

I will certainly stand in support of this motion and look forward to continuing the debate, and I sincerely hope that my colleagues on all sides of the House do support it.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'll begin my comments by saying that I accept this motion in principle. The Leader of the Official Opposition mentioned that a fairly high number of cases were withdrawn or stayed. I know personally how difficult it is to lay that charge. It took me nine years to lay the first charge. It wasn't because I hadn't been physically or sexually assaulted previously. It was because of the fear of the threats of injury and death from my ex-husband. I know that those kinds of threats that one receives between the laying of the charge and going to court are so scary that one can be paralyzed with fear. Many women withdraw because it is too much to handle.

Now, I believe that everyone who comes before a court should be treated with respect and with dignity, whether that is a plaintiff or a defendant. I also believe that every judge who sits on a bench is there because they have been educated. They've received a law degree, they've passed the bar, and they've had some experience practising law. I expect that anyone who sits in the position of a judge to be completely impartial. He or she would look at the facts of a case, hear testimony, weigh those facts against any mitigating circumstances, and make a decision based on the law. I would expect that the judge should be compassionate and understand the vulnerabilities of the plaintiff in a sexual assault or domestic violence case just given the nature of that case.

In my own experience I believe the judge did make the correct decision in finding my ex-husband guilty based on the evidence of the case and the law. However, he did not treat me with dignity, respect, or actually offer me any protection. His comments to me, telling me that it was a marital problem and to get a divorce and leave, were disrespectful at the very least. Suspending the sentence and allowing my ex to leave the court a free man put me and my children at immediate risk. He didn't even give me a chance to get a divorce and leave. His failure to take any further action when my ex threatened to kill me as he was walking out of the courtroom exacerbated that risk and should never have happened.

In Alberta I believe by and large that judges do an excellent job of assessing the evidence, weighing the facts, and making good decisions based on the law. By and large I believe the judges to be compassionate and treat both plaintiffs and defendants with respect and dignity within the justice system. I also know that that is not always the case, and that is why I was pleased when the Minister of Justice asked for the formal inquiry into Judge Camp's conduct, which recommended his removal from the bench.

Our government has taken action. Additional action was taken with Bill 2, and I look forward to further action in the future on the issue of sexual assault and domestic violence.

The motion has called to ensure that anyone being considered for an appointment actually be educated further. I don't disagree that further education is a good thing. As I said, I believe that to become a judge, one first has to graduate from law school. They have to pass the bar exam, and they have to have experience as a lawyer. I think that all of those things are part of the education piece. However, one can't be taught to be compassionate. You have that inside you, and I think those are things that you learn as you're growing up. It's reinforced by the acceptance of your peers of the behaviour that you portray, and when you portray bad behaviour and your peers give you kudos for that, it exacerbates bad behaviour.

I believe that – well, I need to back up. Given my statement in November 2015 about my personal experience of domestic violence I was subjected to behaviour reminiscent of that which my ex-husband exhibited. Despite the fact that I gave my statement publicly right here in this Legislature, I was subjected to that behaviour.

I believe what is most important to change are the attitudes and beliefs that one holds in one's mind and soul, so I find it, as the Premier might say, rich that the opposition is putting this motion forward. When the media first reported on Judge Camp's comments and behaviour, the opposition said nothing. In fact, as my colleague had said, the government in Ottawa at the time gave Judge Camp a promotion after his inappropriate behaviour in that sexual assault case in 2014, and the new leader of the third party, Mr. Kenney, was involved in appointing Mr. Camp to the Federal Court. Now, isn't he the one who's the new best friend of the Leader of the Official Opposition?

This is an extremely important issue to me, and it should be for everyone in this House and everyone outside. I've said over and over again that this kind of behaviour will change when we as women do not accept being treated disrespectfully, demeaned, and devalued. We all have a role to play to stop this.

As I stated at the beginning, in principle I support this motion. However, I would suggest that if the members opposite really want to fix this, the heightened rhetoric heaved at the female members of our cabinet should change. The man-something-explaining to ministers would cease, and the collaboration with the government, that is working to make life better for Albertans, would actually begin.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm going to be brief and contain my remarks to the basics, but let me just say that I am going to support this motion because I think it's a sincere attempt to make it better for survivors or victims of sexual assault to get the treatment and the dignity as human beings that they deserve. I think – I hope – this is the type of issue that does bring the House together.

On that note, I'm going to take a couple of minutes here and just compliment the government. Yes. There's no: yeah, but. There's nothing. I want to compliment the government on Bill 2. Nice work. Real nice work, which I support.

I heard lots of speeches and talk from members of this House, very personal, in some cases painful, tough stories about their experiences, and I thank all the members of this House for that. I just want to say that this is an issue there – we have so many things to fight about. Let's not fight about this one. Let's work together on it.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd like to preface my speech by saying that if I use words that aren't necessarily accepted by the government, it's just because those words resonate more with myself. Please understand that I will endeavour to make sure that the language I use is respectful to all people and their various spaces and where they're at in various places with regard to their particular trauma. Please understand that it's not an insult to anybody in this House.

I also wanted to mention with regard to the last hon. member who spoke that, unfortunately, sometimes within the opposition the things that we say and how we react are not taken into the media. There were many of us who spoke out against those particular things, but our local media and our little rural newspapers don't get pushed out into the regular media. So please understand that that is also a huge misnomer, and I would really appreciate that if statements like that are made, you do a little bit more research before you cast aspersions on this side of the House.

Secondly, I'd also like to say that it's a huge honour to rise today and speak to this very important motion. I think that the most important thing is that it takes aim at ensuring that our courts are safe spaces for victims who have survived violent sexual assault. The believe her campaigns and the I Believe You campaigns are absolutely imperative to making sure that the language and the dialogue change.

According to the Canadian Women's Foundation and Statistics Canada, women self-reported 553,000 sexual assaults in 2014. Those are only the reported ones. We don't even know how many were not reported as a result. On average, women were 10 times more likely than men to be the victim of violent sexual assault and account for almost 92 per cent of those who have been victimized and have fallen victim to sexual assault.

The crime is so heinous, so vile, and so fundamentally evil that it's hard for people who have not been victimized or even those who are really close to people who have been to realize the trauma that is associated with sexual violence and rape. The humiliation, the violation, the stigma are endless. All are reasons why, too often, women and men who suffer this atrocity rarely come forward. Another reason is the perception that those who have been victimized will be revictimized by the system.

One of the things that I wanted to mention about what the hon. member had said before – I believe she was saying in her speech that judges that are there have already gone through becoming lawyers, have gone through all of that instance and everything – is that as much as I agree with that, I think there's a process that needs to happen earlier on to make sure that these folks that are applying to become judges have this kind of training so that judges like Justice Camp are well aware of what their responsibilities are and that those horrible and horrific things that those people say never see the light of day. This is exactly why we must ensure that when they do come forward, these people, these survivors, are treated with the dignity and respect that they deserve.

Over the last year we have watched as judges and other court officials have directly contributed to the sentiment behind why the believe-her movement is important. Instead of endeavouring to find the truth, these people in these positions have contributed to the negative myths and stereotypes about sexual assault that revictimize and also pose an affront to principles of justice such as fair and equitable treatment under the law.

Justice Camp – I mean, I'm going to repeat what's been said before, but I believe that with the absolutely disgusting behaviour that has been seen here by this man, it's worth saying again – who is now a former and disgraced member of the court, has eroded public confidence in the system, and now here we are. His infamous comments when he asked the 19-year-old alleged assault victim, "Why couldn't you just keep your knees together?" highlights the appalling misunderstandings, and I use "misunderstandings" loosely here. I don't think that appropriately describes that behaviour. But it still exists, and it's ridiculously prevalent in the court of law. This is a problem that's happening right across the country.

I would like to take a moment to comment also on a Nova Scotia judge and his ruling that someone so intoxicated that they had passed out in the back of a taxi and urinated on themselves could somehow consent. This topic of consent is of utmost concern to me. We need to have confidence in our judiciary, that they are trained, that they are respectful, and that they truly understand the complex nuances of this issue of consent.

Just to provide another perspective, too, I think of a situation of a person who has special needs, a child or an adult who may be on the autism spectrum and may have some sort of developmental disability, who may not even fully understand the social aspects of personal space. In this hypothetical suppose that this individual grabbed someone and hugged them at a rather inappropriate time or without their consent. I would expect – in fact, I would demand it – that the judges are informed about what constitutes malicious assault versus a misunderstanding in the circumstances and that it matches with the appropriate punishment.

Clearly, judges need to be allowed to use their discretion, but sometimes they also need a base from which to form their knowledge, and this is something that the minister absolutely has the power to change at the point where she appoints a judge, which this motion reaffirms.

I would like to take a moment to thank the Minister of Justice for her advocacy in dealing with Justice Camp. It took tremendous courage for her to do that, and we're extremely, extremely honoured and grateful that she pushed that forward, so thank you to the government for that.

We must all work together to educate our judges, to ensure that no more persons who have been victimized by sexual assault are blamed and that the perpetuating myths of these stereotypes stop.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Our government believes and I believe that sexual assault cases in Alberta should be treated with respect and dignity in the justice system. We believe that it's vital for Alberta to have qualified, compassionate judges. Judges should know and should properly apply our sexual assault laws in our court system.

There is no room for sexual myths and stereotypes in our justice system, and that's why in 2015 our Minister of Justice asked for a formal inquiry into Justice Camp's conduct, which recommended his removal from the bench. It's why this government introduced Bill 2, which would remove barriers for survivors of sexual and domestic violence. Our government believes that it's vital for sexual assault survivors to hear that these sorts of actions, comments, and conduct are not accepted in our society, most certainly, and not accepted in our courtrooms.

This is, Madam Speaker, an extremely important issue. I am proud that our government took action on this back in 2015 and asked for a review. It was the right thing to do, and I wish that we would have heard from more members of this Assembly at the time that it happened. I was particularly proud of the Member for Lethbridge-East when she shared her story back in 2015. It was a groundbreaking thing to happen in this Chamber.

I think that sometimes when we have comments that come around this Chamber it does – you know, we model. When we speak in this Chamber, we model for everyone that is in Alberta and anyone that engages with our social media from across the world, which we can see from issues like GSAs being reflected at us from across the pond. I find it unfortunate that it's taken until now to actually have this kind of motion put forward.

It was the former Conservative government in Ottawa that gave Justice Camp a promotion after his inappropriate conduct in a 2014 sexual assault case, and it was Peter MacKay, former Minister of Justice and cabinet colleague of Mr. Jason Kenney, who said that regional ministers like Jason Kenney and Rona Ambrose signed off on those appointments. Mr. Kenney hasn't seemed to be around in the last couple of weeks; however, I understand that he has been speaking a lot to the Leader of the Official Opposition lately. I encourage members opposite to ask about Justice Robin Camp, who, thankfully, is no longer a justice, about that appointment the next time they see him.

On reviewing the court transcript, our Justice minister felt it was important that victims know that this was not an acceptable way to be treated by the justice system. It's important to know that they will be treated with respect and dignity, not subjected to sexual myths and stereotypes. It's vital for sexual assault victims to hear that this sort of conduct and these comments are not acceptable in our society. It's why the minister wrote and requested an inquiry. The minister's complaint states:

In my respectful opinion, the conduct of Justice Camp throughout the proceedings . . . was so manifestly and profoundly destructive of the concept of the impartiality, integrity, and independence of the judicial role that public confidence has been sufficiently undermined to render Justice Camp incapable of executing his judicial office.

She then goes on to question the myths and stereotypes reflected in the trial judge's comments, comments like calling the survivor in that case the accused. He called this person, who, let us not forget, was homeless at the time, the accused.

That speaks to the fact that this is not just an issue where we have one thing that we can do to address this. This is a complex institutionalized problem that needs to be addressed from multiple aspects of people that do not have access to services, people that don't have access to the ladder you can move up with employment. There are many different issues at work here.

Also, there is emerging research that shows that this isn't just about power. It is about power in part, but lots of times this is happening because someone just doesn't think that it's wrong. When I had the opportunity to share my experience in December, after it was recommended by the inquiry that Justice Robin Camp be removed, I was talking about my own story, and I have to tell you that I don't love talking about it. I'm happy to share it because I think it's important and I think creating a dialogue is important and that to speak for people that are not ready to is important. But I don't love talking about it.

That being said, in my experience I was on a date. I was at someone's home, and I thought I was in a safe place. You know, without going into details, we ended up in bed together, and what was happening had thus far been consensual. Then I ended up pinned underneath someone much larger than me and very quickly realized that I had no strength or power that could match what was happening. One of those myths, you know, is that women have to fight back and have to scrap, as if it takes that to mean no. A person can just say no, but when you're in that moment, you are concerned about your survival. It, thankfully, ended quickly, but when I spoke to that person the next day and he wondered why I didn't want to go on another date, I told him: well, it's because you raped me. He said: well, that's what you all say.

It was so scary. It reinforced to me all I needed to know about why I didn't want to go to the police and why I didn't want to try that case because I didn't have any good reason that anyone would believe me. Because of the case that at the time I couldn't prove a struggle, I couldn't prove signs of trauma, it would have just been my word against his.

This is an ongoing issue, and it is important to have people that are appointed to these benches who reflect us and to ensure that we have ourselves seen, that Albertans see themselves reflected in these benches. This is why it's important to put women in these positions. This is why it's important that the minister appointed the first disabled judge to the bench a couple of months ago. Those things create the faith that we need to have in our justice system. Also, we need to make sure that those judges are qualified.

One of the quotes that confounded me the most when I was looking at all of the coverage that had happened was Justice Camp saying: my colleagues knew my knowledge of Canadian law was very minimal; it was nonexistent. So when we talk about the training that these judges need to go through, I was looking at the report and recommendations, and it stated:

Justice Deborah McCawley has been a judge of the Manitoba Court of Queen's Bench since 1997. She has been at the vanguard of social context education for Canadian judges. Beginning in December 2015, she and Justice Camp met on a number of occasions and had dozens of weekly mentoring calls. They attended together a two-day conference on the conduct of sexual assault trials and a two-day conference on judicial ethics, both provided by the National Judicial Institute.

The report then goes on to say:

It is difficult to understand how Justice Camp could conclude – particularly after his intensive sessions with Justice McCawley, Dr. Haskell and Professor Cossman – that his acknowledgement of misconduct did not involve sexism and gender bias, and that it did not implicate profound issues of equality. His evidence leaves the Committee doubtful about whether he is fully engaged in the necessary ongoing process of constant self-reflection about which Dr. Haskell testified and which the public has a right to expect of members of the judiciary.

What I find so shocking about the appointment was that he acknowledged that there was existing law, and then he rejected it. He tried to make a case for returning to the bench by taking on training and still only talked about these views as old-fashioned. It shows that he never understood that this was sexism that was born out of an inequality of genders over the entire span of time. It speaks to the character of the appointment that he was provided those opportunities to learn and apparently didn't see them as necessary, and he actually also spoke of the fact that – in the findings of the inquiry that recommended that he be removed, he mocked the idea of consent.

That's something that we need to work on from a provincial point of view, with things like education revamp and curriculum. There are many ways that you can talk about comprehensive sexual education, and one of the most important things is verbal consent or consent at all. That's one of the things that I'm proud that our government supports.

Our provincial courts in Edmonton and Calgary are divided, based on the matters, into criminal, family and youth, and civil court, and it's important to make sure that these people that are coming into these appointments have a criminal law background. You know, for some reason previous governments did not see this as being a crucial step in the appointments.

I just want to touch on consent and something that is actually easy to remember. It's about FRIES: consent is freely given, consent is reversible, consent is informed, consent must be enthusiastic, and consent must be specific.

We have learned that Jason Kenney plans to be a part of this Legislature. It seems that he played a pivotal role in the political screening process for Justice Camp, approving this promotion, so I would want to hear further as to why he thought that Robin Camp was appropriate to be appointed to the Queen's Bench.

I am very, very happy that we finally have a government that sees things differently, that fundamentally sees things differently, and that when we appoint these people with legal backgrounds on the types of matters that come before them, they have long histories of helping survivors and serving marginalized communities. I'm proud that this government is looking at character over politics when we're looking at these appointments.

Just one other thing that I would like to point out that continues to keep me up at night is that 99 per cent of offenders in sexual assault cases are men, and 90 per cent of the victims are women. This speaks to a fundamental issue of equality when we are talking about sexual violence and how we can find better paths forward.

With that, Madam Speaker, I will conclude my comments. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure today to rise and speak to the motion. I just want to provide some very brief comments, as I assume it to be wrapping up today, around what is a very important issue. You know, we've seen some to-ing and fro-ing here in the Chamber this afternoon around the role of individuals who may or may not and who have been involved in judicial appointments. We've seen some choose to engage in much more partisan discussion.

You know, this Chamber is a place where ideas and issues are dealt with passionately, and that is a wonderful thing. Sometimes it is a little bit frustrating when I know that it was the desire of this side of the House to highlight this very important issue, to highlight some of the horrific things that have happened, not to dwell on those horrors but to highlight them so that we can move forward from the challenges that we've seen in the past.

There are occasions when members of the Chamber choose to make accusations or say things on social media about members of this side of the House, the assertions that they might be making, and expressing their disappointment that Wildrose MLAs were saying that most who've been sexually assaulted preferred victim over survivor, and nothing could be further from the truth. Now, it is possible that there are individuals on this side of the House who said "victims," and it is possible, Madam Speaker, that out of a heart of trying to help, they may not have been aware of either the word that they used or perhaps even the appropriate language to use.

I know that every single day in this Chamber and outside of the Chamber I endeavour to do better. I endeavour to learn more. I can tell you there are lots and lots and lots and lots of things that I didn't know 24 months ago, and many of those things I have learned from members of that side of the House. I believe that today I am a better person, I'm a better parliamentarian, I'm a better servant because of some of the things that I've learned from members on that side of the House. They include some of the advocacy work around PDD. They include some of the advocacy work around this very issue. They include some of the work that takes place in our LGBTQ community, things that I didn't know but because of people in this place I now have a better understanding of.

But I can tell you, Madam Speaker, that I have a lot more to learn. So it's so much better when we can help each other in this Chamber instead of making assertions about what an individual did or did not intend to do.

I think that it's a great opportunity today, on this motion, to do just that, to raise the level of awareness around such an important issue, to raise the level of awareness of the requirement for training among our lawyers and judges. Madam Speaker, some of the comments I've heard this afternoon were around lawyers that, you know, may have been trained because they received a law degree. But part of the challenge is that just because you're a lawyer doesn't mean – and you might be a very good lawyer that's appointed to become a judge, but you might be an expert in immigration or environmental law and not in the area of consent, sexual abuse, and other very, very important issues that that individual may hear as a member of the bench.

This idea of training is so critically important, this idea of ensuring that we are offering our very best to the bench, that we're offering the best to our judicial system, that is going to provide the best outcome so that the survivors of these horrific crimes can be treated in a way with the dignity and respect that they deserve so that on a go-forward basis we can ensure – and the truth of the matter is that even this measure isn't going to fully ensure that that be the case, but it's our role and responsibility to remove those barriers so that we have the best opportunity for our judicial system to work the best.

It's staggering to think that 1 in 3 women will experience some form of sexual violence or assault in their lifetime. We need to as responsible legislators, as servants of the public, as moms and dads, and as Albertans ensure that we are doing everything possible. That includes helping one another inside this Chamber. It includes, particularly on issues such as this, that we put the needs of those survivors, that we put the needs of those who have been affected by this ahead of all of the other things that often encompass this Chamber.

I commend the government. I know that they've done some good work on this particular file. I know that they've done good work on Bill 2, which the opposition was in support of. I know that members on this side of the House spoke in the form of press releases and public commentary around the disgusting comments that have been made and highlighted this afternoon. I won't go back into those, but I think it's important that we endeavour on a lot of these very, very, very important issues to keep the main things as the main things.

I want to thank the members opposite for their support of this motion. I want to thank all members of the Chamber for providing unanimous consent. We all have a role and a responsibility, whether it's in the training of judges and lawyers in the future or whether it's speaking out against sexual violence publicly or whether it's working to educate both men and women on the horrific nature of these events or whether it's just speaking out against those that would perpetrate these crimes or if it's in believing those who've disclosed. We all have a very important role, and I thank all members of the Assembly for supporting the motion.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the motion?

I will put the question.

[Motion carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It has been a heavy afternoon. There is a heavy snowfall warning. I move that the House stand adjourned until Tuesday, April 18, at 1:30 p.m.

The Acting Speaker: You're calling the time 4:30 p.m.?

Ms Hoffman: Yes. I move that the House rise.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:15 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 29th Legislature - 3rd Session (2017)

Activity to Thursday, April 13, 2017

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 1 to 200 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 201 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

* An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at 780.427.2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned chapter number until the conclusion of the Fall Sitings.

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us reflect and pray, each in our own way. As we all return from our celebration time with our families and communities, let us express our appreciation, gratitude, and respect to our fellow MLAs for the opportunity to work with them.

Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, we will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Mr. Robert Clark. I would invite all to participate in the language of their choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
Il sait porter la croix!
Ton histoire est une épopée
Des plus brillants exploits.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure that I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two groups of students from Patricia Heights elementary school. They are accompanied today by their teachers, Keri Clifford and Shane Little, and also by their chaperones, Scott Karaim, Rhonda Phibbs, Elizabeth Martin, and Ms Kendra Blumenhagen. I wish them to rise now and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you 50 students from the beautiful and, I may add, diverse constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie from Meyokumin school. They're accompanied by their teachers, Mrs. Megan Davis and Ms Cindy MacLeod. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other school groups here today?
Seeing and hearing none, the hon. Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very honoured to rise today on your behalf to recognize Stephanie Nedoshytko. Stephanie has been an integral member of the Legislative Assembly for the past five years and recently resigned to take up a new position as the president of the Students' Association of MacEwan University. Stephanie began her time here as a page, then continued on as a part-time office assistant in the Speaker's office, where I know both you and I greatly appreciated her hard work on our behalf. Today she's joined by her parents, Mary and Ihor Nedoshytko. Mary is a junior high teacher at Holy Family Catholic school. Ihor is a retired teacher and musician who currently spends his time in various organizations as an instructor and band member. They're also very active in the Ukrainian community. We'd like to give our sincere thanks to Stephanie for your dedicated service to the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. They're seated in your gallery, and I'd ask that they now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce two compassionate professionals from Alberta Health Services advanced care planning goals of care team. April 16 was National Advance Care Planning Day, and we are encouraging all Albertans to talk about their health care goals with their families and their care providers and to write them down in a personal directive. I now ask Sharon Iversen, AHS project lead for advanced planning, and her colleague Sarah Hall to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Dr. Turner: Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members skin cancer survivor Violetta Ambrozuk and Chelsea Draeger, executive director of the Canadian Cancer Society. I'll be speaking to this in my coming member's statement. Joining Violetta and Chelsea is Angeline Webb, who works with the Canadian Cancer Society in health policy and promotion. The CCS is a strong voice informing Albertans about the need to avoid excessive UV exposure. I'd ask my guests to rise and receive the customary welcome of this Chamber.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this House a remarkable Canadian, Ai Tran. Ai left Vietnam as a 20-year-old person and lived as a stateless refugee in a camp in the Philippines for 12 years. In 2000 he married his childhood friend, who lived in Canada, and came here the following year. Here he built upon an already remarkable life, graduating from McGill with honours before moving to Edmonton to become a social worker, which is how I met him and heard his story. I ask my guest to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to introduce a good friend of mine, Garnett Genuis, the Member of Parliament for Sherwood Park-Fort Saskatchewan. Garnett and I were close family friends. His wife, Dr. Rebecca Genuis, came from Goa in India. Today Garnett is accompanied by his beautiful daughter, Gianna. His wife and younger son, Judah, couldn't be here. Garnett and I were two of those 70 losers for Wildrose in 2012, but today we both are here. Although he is the youngest parliamentarian, he spoke most of the words in the Commons, and he actually used a creative standing order to introduce me and the Member for Strathmore-Brooks in Parliament in February. I ask everyone to extend a warm welcome for him and his daughter today. Please rise.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to welcome through you and to you three guests this afternoon. Blake Radovanovic is a grade 12 student at Eastglen high school, whom I met last week at a GSA meeting at his school. He is joined today by his parents, David Leslie and Nick Stadnyk. I enjoyed meeting Blake and David last week, where we discussed the importance of GSAs for students in Alberta and the work our government is doing to ensure that all of our schools are welcome, caring, and safe. I'd ask them to please rise and for everyone to give them the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a constituent, Marilyn Spilchen. Marilyn is the manager of corporate support with One! International Poverty Relief, which her daughter Tania founded in 2001. One! International operates three schools in Mumbai, India, for children who would not otherwise have the opportunity to obtain an education, a cause that is very close to my own heart. The organization wants to thank the government of Alberta for helping them to make a difference by providing a yearly grant since 2012. I would ask Marilyn to stand up to receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce some outstanding constituents from the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. You know, there are few people in your life who you can call at 3 a.m. and know that they will answer the phone, but some of those folks are up in the gallery today. We are joined by some very, very dear friends of ours, Trevor and Kristin Whitlow, and their two children, Julia and David. If you'll please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Reynolds-Alberta Museum

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to speak today about the Reynolds-Alberta Museum in my Wetaskiwin-Camrose constituency. The Reynolds-Alberta Museum opened in 1992 to interpret the impact of technological change in transportation, aviation, agriculture, and industry from the 1890s to present. The museum now contains thousands of vintage artifacts and is family friendly, offering school tours and group programs.

Director Noel Ratch was here on budget day to hear about the three-year, $39.5 million investment to develop and expand artifact acquisition, storage, restoration, and display. It was great news for local job creation, tourism, and economic stimulation, and I wanted to share some of what the museum has to offer.

For car enthusiasts this June 10 and 11 will be the ultimate car show, featuring more than 700 cars, trucks, and motorcycles spanning a century of automotive history. Imagine the thrill of driving a manual transmission classic car. This year on July 16 young drivers between the age of 15 and 25 will learn how to start, operate, and drive one of these classics. August 19 will be a great day for motorcyclists from across Alberta as the museum hosts the Motorcycle Ride to Reynolds. Throughout the summer, for a fee, you can take a two-seater biplane open-cockpit flight, which flies over my home, so be sure to wave when you go by. Chauffeur-driven tours of the grounds in select 1920s to 1950s vintage vehicles give you the rare chance to hear and feel the motion of these venerable links to our past. More than just a viewing museum, Reynolds is world-renowned for its vehicle restoration workshops. Professional restorers offer one-, three-, and five-day courses. All of these can be found at the museum website.

I am proud of our government for its continued support in Alberta heritage. Thank you.

Conservatism

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, over the past few weeks I have noticed that the NDP continue to up their shrill, acerbic attacks. Now the PCs and Wildrose are being lumped into one category, conservatives, almost as if that is something to be ashamed of, so I decided to use my member's statement to define what it means to me to be a conservative.

This definition comes from the founder of the Heritage Foundation, Ed Feulner. He starts:

The purpose of politics is . . . to carve out a system of justice under the rule of law . . . and freedom . . .

When governments seek utopia, they end in oppression, because man and society are infinitely complex and cannot be reshaped by any institution of experts.

He goes on to say:

Conservatives . . . understand that power is a zero-sum game. When power is assumed by government, it is lost by individuals. There must be a stopping point in every program and plan beyond which no government should be allowed to go, not merely because of budgetary concerns but because of the inevitable loss of freedom . . .

Conservatives believe in the necessity of change, yes. But not in radical change based on abstract theories and the passions of the moment.

He finishes by saying that the value of conservatism isn't their persuasive leaders, but the power of their ideas – and the applications of those ideas to the problems of the day.

There it is, Mr. Speaker, the difference between socialists and conservatives.

Conservatives are all about outcomes. As a case in point, my van is presently in the mechanic's shop. The mechanic is a very nice person, but I can tell you that if he didn't fix the vehicle or did a shoddy job, he wouldn't get my business because I need to see acceptable outcomes, not pie-in-the-sky best of intentions as we have seen over the past two years from this NDP government.

I conclude by imploring the individual MLAs opposite to look at the outcomes of the past two years as well as the outcomes of past NDP governments in other provinces and ask themselves: do we really want that kind of legacy?

Emergency Medical Services Funding

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, leadership is defined in different ways, and it's subjective to how the leadership is applied. For instance, the NHL captain on a hockey team is responsible for something entirely different than the captain of a fire hall. Another example: a CEO of a multinational company deals with different consequences of their leadership than the CEO of a local charity society. What they all have in common, though, is the accountability to the people that they lead, which brings us to the responsibility of government to lead. What they say and what they do is intensely scrutinized because they're the government and they're in charge and, at the very least, until the next election they are directly responsible to Alberta and its citizens.

The provincial government bears an immense responsibility to Albertans, and one of the most important aspects of that responsibility is to provide the services necessary to ensure that Albertans have timely access to treatment in a medical emergency. What I find perplexing is that even with regard to the most basic responsibilities of a government, the responsibility to provide public safety and emergency care, the government is cutting corners. The government is putting emergency medical services in a no-win situation. You can't say that front-line services matter and then cut their budget by $17 million. EMS workers are the very definition of front-line services, often being the first point of contact for Albertans in medical distress.

Mr. Speaker, I don't say this lightly, and I don't say this without understanding or experience. I have the experience, I have the understanding, and, what's more, I have the confidence and support of the EMS community on this issue. There's been a lot of discussion about bringing people of different backgrounds and different experiences into this House as representatives so that we can be more effective voices for those communities. Today I'm in this House speaking for concerned paramedics across this province. Paramedics across Alberta are asking this minister to restore the $17 million cut to emergency medical services. In fact, they're asking the government to recognize them as a major partner in the delivery of health care in this province, not to be treated as an afterthought. Minister, they're asking you to lead in this regard. I'm asking you as a registered paramedic, me to you. Don't let us down.

Daffodil Month

Dr. Turner: Mr. Speaker, April is Daffodil Month, the month when Canadians unite in the fight against cancer. This April the Canadian Cancer Society is marking the 60th anniversary of Daffodil Month by asking all of us to show support for persons living with cancer and to honour those who have died by wearing a daffodil pin and buying fresh daffodils. Money raised goes to cancer research, education, and advocacy, and to support compassionate programs.

Mr. Speaker, as an oncologist I'm very proud of the advances made in cancer treatment over the last 40 years. My leukemia research has been very well supported by the Canadian Cancer Society, and there are, thankfully, many Albertan survivors of all types of cancers treated by my colleagues in CancerControl Alberta. I'm also keenly aware that the majority of cancer cases could be prevented by lifestyle modification, and this is the focus of this month's efforts of the CCS.

The CCS is encouraging youth to creatively educate their peers and families about cancer prevention and to advocate for policy changes in their communities that support four topics. Topic 1: expose the deceitful and manipulative ways that big tobacco markets to youth. Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud to be part of a government which banned flavoured tobacco as one of its first actions after the election two years ago. We also are pursuing repayment of health costs from big tobacco, just two ways we're making life better for Albertans. Topic 2: learning about the fun and the positive benefits of regular physical activity. Twenty minutes a day of aerobic exercise is the best preventative for cancer of all types. Topic 3: embracing their natural glow while avoiding excessive sun exposure or using tanning beds. Topic 4: educating their peers about choosing healthy beverages. This applies to both alcohol and to high-sugar drinks that the food industry is marketing to our youth.

Mr. Speaker, youth are being encouraged to act, and they are responding. As legislators we are opinion leaders in our communities and bear responsibility to act as well. The CCS and I ask that we all use our abilities to support this fight against cancer.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Easter

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Renewal of faith and hope. Ash Wednesday marks the beginning of the Lenten calendar for many Christians. Lent gives Christians the opportunity to focus on their love for one another and God's love for them. Those practising Lent sacrifice something meaningful and, instead, spend time on their relationship with God.

World-wide there are over 2 billion people that observe Easter, one of the most important dates on the Christian calendar. God's love is so great that he gave the life of his only son, Jesus Christ, so that Christians may have eternal life. Christians believe in the miracle of Christ rising from the dead three days after he was crucified, showing Christians that their faith is well placed.

There's also a secular aspect to Easter that many people celebrate and that has us looking under the couch and around the fridge for chocolate eggs and rabbits. During Easter many people come together with their families and their friends to celebrate peace and love.

It's important for us to honour the role that Christians have played and continue to play in the culture of our province. There are more than a dozen churches in Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill, and I know that many constituents came together on Sunday to celebrate the day that Christ rose from the dead.

I hope that everyone here and those who are watching and listening had a peaceful Easter.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Employment and Labour Code Consultations

Mr. Jean: In less than 12 hours the clock will run out on labour review consultations. I'll forgive everyone if they thought they just started; however, here in Alberta they're just ending. Ontario consulted for two years on similar changes to labour legislation, but here at home: 36 days. Albertans got just over a month. No wonder small-business owners are seriously worried about the ramifications. When the NDP ran out of taxes to raise, they created new ones. They threatened lawsuits to break contracts, and now they're rushing through significant changes to labour legislation. Why won't the NDP simply slow down, extend the consultation period, and listen to Alberta businesses?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In 1988 singer Bobby McFerrin released the hit single Don't Worry, Be Happy, which is the same thing that right-wing parties have been saying to Alberta workers ever since. Can't access job-protected sick leave? Don't worry; be happy. Well, I'm not happy about it and neither are many Albertans. We are working with stakeholders to ensure we have fair, balanced, and effective workplace legislation for all. We've received over 4,600 submissions so far, and I look forward to seeing how many more we receive today.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, everybody wants a good song; we just want to take some time to write it.

While there's no doubt that a need for some fine-tuning is there, Alberta has enjoyed relative labour peace for over 30 years. This is important. Any major overhaul that catches job creators by surprise will have some major ramifications for jobs, the economy, and, ultimately, Albertans. It's important. It's clear the fix is in. Invitation-only meetings, Mr. Speaker, no public events, and a cloud of secrecy have surrounded this government and what exactly they plan to do with this legislation. If the NDP won't extend consultations to a reasonable time, will they at least tell Albertans what they plan to do and when they will see . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In a tough economy everyday Albertans deserve a government that's working to make life better. In Alberta you can lose your job if you get sick, and even though Albertans pay into employment insurance, we don't have access to some of the leave that other Canadians do. So we've reached out to Albertans about these kinds of practices and whether they need to be updated and modernized. We've received over 4,600 responses to date, including over a thousand from employers. We've held round-table discussions to discuss some of these issues, and we look forward to reviewing the results of the consultation and working to make life better.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, Albertans are clear. They want a government that actually listens and consults, an easy idea that would put a lot of people's minds at ease, because they are worried. We know that the Premier's own appointees, who serve as partisan big union bosses, are pushing to get rid of a worker's right to a secret ballot. That is wrong and will cause chaos throughout businesses and companies across Alberta. It will. It's a fundamental democratic right of a worker. Will the Premier take at least this off the table, or will she continue to cozy up to her big union boss friends, who right now want to take away this right from Alberta workers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The issues that we're discussing with Albertans have developed over decades. The previous government had years and years to make changes, and they never lifted a finger, even after conducting their own reviews. They would prefer that Albertans have no protections and fewer rights than other Canadians. We are going to work with stakeholders to make sure we're bringing forward fair and balanced changes that will improve the Alberta economy and workplaces for all.

The Speaker: The second main question.

Interprovincial Relations

Mr. Jean: The Premier said last week that political staff are not allowed to campaign for their counterparts in the B.C. NDP. The only problem is that that memo didn't seem to make its way into the hands of the Premier's chief of staff, John Heaney. His name is currently on the advertising sponsor list with Elections BC. Heaney was chief of staff to the current B.C. NDP leader and was called an invaluable adviser. Can the Premier please reassure Albertans that this is simply an oversight and that her chief of staff is no longer on the sponsor list for the antipipeline B.C. NDP Party? [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet.
The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Heaney is not involved in the B.C. election. The third-party advertising report that was posted was from the 2005 and '09 elections.

In speaking about memos, perhaps the member opposite missed the ableg hash tag where his colleague the Member for Strathmore-Brooks says: "Actually seems like an honest mistake. Genuinely pleased the Premier has put the kibosh on [NDP] staffers campaigning [in] B.C."

Mr. Jean: Alberta's relationship with neighbouring provinces has never been worse, Mr. Speaker. On the one side, the NDP holds press conferences to slam the budget of a provincial neighbour while threatening them with trade sanctions. On the other side, the Premier's chief of staff is registered as a third-party adviser in the B.C. election still. Oh, and let's not forget the bait-and-switch negotiating tactics that the NDP employed in negotiating the Canada free trade agreement. Can someone over there admit that it might be just time to start making friends and stop making enemies of our allies? [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet. [interjections] Quiet.
The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to answer the question from the member for Regina-Somewhere or maybe it's Kelowna-Somewhere. On this side of the House we're standing up for Albertans. Every day we're going to make sure that we work to make Alberta lives better, and that's what we're doing, whether it's negotiations with our partners at the table for the western trade agreement, whether it's across Canada, or whether it's our Premier and her chief of staff working to make sure that we expand market access in Japan through pipeline access on the west coast. I am proud of the work that we're doing every day and the results we're getting for Albertans.

Mr. Jean: A hundred thousand Albertans on unemployment insurance, Mr. Speaker, a record.

The Premier is chalking up a long list of adversaries at the provincial level. The cracks are beginning to show. The two contending parties in the B.C. election: neither are friends to this Premier. We know her comments on the B.C. NDP. The Premier of B.C. said just last week that, and I quote, Alberta is going broke under this NDP government's watch. I couldn't agree more. This Premier has positioned our province to be the enemy of B.C. regardless of who wins that election. When will the Premier realize that her divisiveness and bad economic policies are only hurting Alberta with what should be some of our closest allies, that we should be working together with?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm incredibly proud of the work that our Premier and our government are doing to make life better for Alberta families. That's why we are behaving in a mature, responsible fashion in working with them rather than spouting off angry tweets at partners from across the country who were working to actually continue to gain market access through expanded pipelines. We're going to continue being respectful, working with our partners, and getting results for Albertans, including the 20,000 net new jobs that we got, full-time jobs, in Alberta in just the month of March. That's good results for the people of Alberta.

The Speaker: The third main question.

Marijuana Legalization

Mr. Jean: In just over a year recreational marijuana use will be legal. It's a dramatic change and demands immediate action from this government and the province. There are still a lot of questions about how effective saliva and other roadside tests will be and where the new training or technology will actually come from. Police forces are anxiously waiting to see how this will be administered. What roadside tools is this government thinking about giving our men and women in uniform to ensure that they have all the tools they need to keep our roads safe?

The Speaker: The hon. Justice minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, keeping roads safe and keeping marijuana out of the hands of children are the province's top priorities as we move forward. We're happy to see that those are priorities shared by our federal counterparts. We do know that they have to recognize the test under the Criminal Code in order for it to be legal. I understand that they're working very hard to have that under way. In the interim it is now and remains illegal to drive under the influence of any drug.

Mr. Jean: Last year 144 Albertans, tragically, died on the job. That number rose despite the economic slowdown. Oil, gas, and construction managers know the deadly consequences of on-the-job drug use. As such, they've developed strict drug-testing practices to keep their workers safe. However, employers are concerned that current technology can't accurately detect the level of marijuana impairment. What restrictions will the government consider on marijuana use in safety-sensitive workplaces to ensure that all workers get home safe and sound at the end of the workday?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. All Albertans should have safe workplaces, and that means workplaces that are free from impairment. Workers' safety is too critical for us to sit and wait and see what the federal marijuana regulations will look like, so as a province we are working with our partners across other jurisdictions to make sure that we have a plan. That includes making sure that employers can ensure their worksites are safe, and a significant aspect of this is ensuring that workers are fit to perform their tasks. We will work with Labour departments across Canada to fashion a pan-Canadian approach to this.

Mr. Jean: This rushed timeline for marijuana legislation is creating significant challenges for Alberta's municipalities as well. The AUMA has said that it needs more time than a few hundred days to develop policy to support this major drug reform from the federal government. They're calling for more support from the provincial and federal governments, and who can blame them? It's important. What is the government doing to support all communities to ensure that they have the tools necessary to meet this rapid 2018 deadline?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the member correctly points out, all levels of government will have a role to play in this. That's why I've already taken the initial steps of meeting with leadership from the AUMA and the AAMD and C. I also touched on this at my address to the AAMD and C just recently. As we move forward, we'll continue to work together. I do know that there's a lot of heavy lifting to do on both parts, but the safety of Albertans is at stake, so we will ensure that we get there.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Labour Relations Code Review

Mr. McIver: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, this NDP government, in its haste to amend the labour code far beyond what the Supreme Court requires, has not taken the time to properly consult with Alberta's business leaders, as it failed to do with the farming community during the Bill 6 fiasco. The prospect of removing the secret-ballot provisions in union certification drives and the opportunity to intimidate workers by forcing them to stand up and show their hand will concern many Alberta workers. To the Minister of Labour. It's a simple question that requires a straight answer. Are you planning to remove the secret-ballot provision?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, in this tough economy everyday Albertans deserve a government that's working to make life better. We have been reaching out to stakeholders to make sure that we are proposing fair, balanced, and effective workplace legislation for all. We've had over a thousand employers who've provided their feedback as well as over 4,600 Albertans. I look forward to reviewing their feedback so that we can move forward with reasonable changes that make sense for Alberta.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, a non answer sometimes speaks louder than an answer.

Mr. Speaker, given that we have had incredible labour peace in Alberta for decades and given that the minister and her comrades have chosen to bulldoze ahead with these changes far beyond the Supreme Court directive and further put the Alberta economy at risk, again to the minister: will you be clear and tell this House and all Alberta workers that you have no plans to remove the secret-ballot provision?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Did you know that in 1988 the singer Bon Jovi released his hit track Bad Medicine? That's exactly what not being able to take a sick day looks like, bad medicine. Not being able to take a sick day for fear of losing one's job shows that we have outdated laws, and we are talking to Albertans right now about how we might fix that. We are focused on making sure we have fair and balanced workplace legislation that supports a strong Alberta economy, and Albertans have responded very well to our consultation. I look forward to reviewing those results.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, the Labour minister uses examples of Beetlejuice and Bon Jovi from 1988, when the current labour standards were passed. She is at the same time, as she confirmed in estimates, using as a guideline the International Labour Organization's eight core principles, that go back to 1930, when the Marx Brothers' movie Animal Crackers was released. Minister, since time is obviously not the real reason for your rush to a decision on the labour standards changes, what is the real reason? [interjections]

The Speaker: Whoa. Quiet.

Go ahead.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The member opposite seems proud that we still do not meet standards that were implemented in the 1930s. The former government had years, years, and years to review these workplace legislations. In fact, they did review, but they did not put in basic workplace rights like job-protected sick leave. They would prefer that Albertans have no protections, they would prefer that we have fewer rights than other Canadians, and their new dance partners in the Wildrose seem to agree. We want to make sure life is better for Albertans, including reviewing workplace legislation. [laughter]

The Speaker: Many of you are laughing – that’s a good thing – but you’re all very noisy. That’s not a good thing.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Poverty Reduction Strategy

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Party believes passionately in the importance of tackling poverty in our province, and I assume the NDP government would as well, but in the two years since the election there’s been no effort to create a comprehensive poverty reduction strategy. In fact, the word “poverty” doesn’t appear in the Speech from the Throne even once, nor is it anywhere in the budget. Actions speak louder than words, but in this case we don’t have either. A simple question to the Premier: when is your government going to create a poverty reduction strategy? [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet. Quiet, please.

The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. I certainly agree that actions speak louder than words. We added $25 million to FCSS. I guess that action speaks louder than words. We added a new child benefit and enhanced the existing child and family benefit, a $340 million investment, so certainly our actions speak very loud for the families throughout the province. Certainly, we have Albertans’ backs, and we are working to make sure that all Albertans benefit from the prosperity that Albertans enjoy.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, my concern is with this government’s patchwork approach and lack of a plan. Many not-for-profits I’ve talked with don’t know where they stand among the hodgepodge of quickly evolving government programs. An Alberta poverty reduction strategy would allow not-for-profits to align their important work with government programs. Again to the Premier: in the absence of a strategy, can you tell us what you think the role of government is and what role not-for-profits should play in poverty reduction?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much. I’m happy to take this one and then go back to the minister for the final one. I want to talk about some of the work that we continue to do to make life better for Alberta families, including having reasonable, planned increases to the minimum wage for some of the lowest earners in Alberta; making sure that we’re expanding access to affordable daycare because we believe that every child deserves to have a safe place to be while their parents are at work; making sure that hungry children, when they go to school, have a balanced, nutritious meal and that their parents don’t have to worry about whether or not they can buy that, Mr. Speaker. These are some of the concrete actions that we’re very proud to take in partnership regularly with the not-for-profit organizations in Alberta, and we continue to continue working with them.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Second supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. EndPovertyEdmonton says that people “experience poverty when they lack or are denied economic, social and cultural resources.” Calgary’s enough for all plan says simply, “My neighbour’s strength is my strength.” I want to end poverty. There is clear evidence that the most effective, efficient policy tool to end poverty is a guaranteed income targeted at those who genuinely need help. To the Premier: will you replace your damaging minimum wage plan with a guaranteed annual income for those who really need it?

2:10

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There were a lot of oohs in many parts of this House with that last question. I have to say that we are very proud to make sure that Albertans who work full-time, who are at a job for 40 hours a week, have the ability to pay their rent and put food on the table. This is something that we believe is important, to make sure that everyone has access to live with dignity and respect. While I appreciate that other ideas are being proposed rather than just opposition, we think that the reasonable thing to do is to make sure that we have planned increases to make sure the minimum wage can support Alberta families, and we’re proud to be the government doing that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Educational Curriculum Redesign Arabic Language Educational Curricula

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this government is currently taking part in the largest curriculum redevelopment in Alberta’s history and just last week spoke about the results of the fall curriculum survey, to the Minister of Education: what were some of the areas that Albertans want to see focused on in the curriculum redevelopment?

Mr. Eggen: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, we found a number of areas where the vast majority of Albertans surveyed want a new focus on curriculum. A vast majority of participants were looking for pathways to career and other postsecondary opportunities. We also saw some very interesting commentary, that we’re following up on, in regard to financial literacy, coding, working with business groups, energy, and especially language advocates.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that my constituents of Edmonton-Decore have expressed how important Arabic language programming is, to the same minister: what are you doing to ensure that the curriculum redevelopment will benefit those seeking Arabic language arts programming?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While some school boards do offer other languages, including Arabic language prototypes, I'm very happy to tell you that we're in development of a provincial Arab language arts curriculum here in the province of Alberta, that should be ready about one year from now. This is something that we've needed in our province for many years. We've worked very hard in conjunction with language groups, and we've seen that they are very willing and happy to help us.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the importance this language program will have on this vibrant community, to the same minister. We already heard the hint. When can we see and expect this programming to be in place?

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud to announce that we are identifying the resources here over the next 12 months, building on programs that have existed in Edmonton already, working through the translations and so forth so that we can have something in place by the fall of 2018. I want to thank the members of the Alberta Arab community for their very hard work and advocacy to help make this happen.

Carbon Levy Revenue Utilization

Mr. Fildebrandt: Normally getting the Minister of Finance to answer a question is a bit like trying to nail Jell-O to the wall, but this morning in estimates we finally got to pin the minister down on a few things. Like Muhammad Ali, he danced around questions like a butterfly but stung taxpayers like a bee. But we finally got him to admit that the carbon tax slush fund is kept off the main set of books, unlike any other expenditure in the government. This falsely makes it look like they're spending less money than they are. Why is the government misleading Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We made a commitment to fully reinvest those revenues from the climate leadership plan back into Albertans' pockets, and we clearly laid that out in our budget. We have page 61 of the fiscal plan, and it shows clearly how those climate leadership plan expenses match revenue over time and will have no net impact on our bottom line. We're going to continue to do that because that's what Albertans expect.

Mr. Fildebrandt: The NDP say "reinvest taxes" like United means "reaccommode passengers."

Given, Mr. Speaker, that just because a tax is dedicated to a specific expenditure doesn't mean it doesn't count as spending – we spend money raised from the alcohol tax, the tobacco tax, and the lottery fund, and all of these count as operational spending – and given that when asked today why spending from the carbon tax doesn't count on their books, the minister said that it's "just this one," why?

The Speaker: Hon. members, I need to remind you again. I'm very patient, very generous with the opportunities. I do want to tell you that when you're asking questions, though, you might want to listen to some of your peers as to what is a preamble and what is not.

Let us go to the answer to the question. The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, this is the first full year of the climate leadership revenue and expenditure.

Making year-over-year comparisons would not provide an accurate picture with regard to the changes in our operating expenses. We will do that going forward in the '18-19 year.

Mr. Fildebrandt: This minister could dance around a question like Dancing with the Stars.

The Speaker: That's a preamble.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Given, Mr. Speaker, that if I had a nickel for every time the minister didn't answer the question I asked him, I could balance the budget, but given – let's try again – that if a tree falls in a forest and no one hears it, did it really fall? Or . . .

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

The Speaker: I've got a point of order.

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, I'm incredibly proud of the budget we have laid before Albertans. Working to make life better for Albertans is what we have committed to do. We're doing that by ensuring that operating expenses for programs and services like health care, education, and social services remain strong. This is the first full year of the climate leadership revenue and expenditures, and going forward, we will include those in our budget fully.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Agency, Board, and Commission Appointments

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Institute of Corporate Directors, or ICD, is Canada's leading organization for fostering excellence in corporate governance. Graduates of ICD's director education program include high-ranking Alberta officials such as the Auditor General, the Ethics Commissioner, and the deputy ministers of Environment and Parks and Status of Women. Now, one would think that being an ICD graduate would be a huge benefit to any board, but apparently this NDP government does not. To the Premier: can you confirm that ICD graduates are no longer being considered for appointment to the boards of Alberta agencies, boards, and commissions?

Ms Hoffman: No, I can't, Mr. Speaker, because that is not indeed a fact. But what I can confirm is that it shouldn't be a course that costs in excess of $10,000 for you to even be considered to serve your province. So while we are very pleased to receive applications from people who do have the ICD credential, we are opening the application process to all Albertans. We're posting them publicly, and we're proud to do so.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's certainly not what ICD graduates have been telling us.

Given that the ICD director education program is recognized world-wide as the leader in delivering competence in board governance and given that improved board governance is surely something that the NDP wants to see in all of Alberta's agencies, boards, and commissions and given that many ICD graduates have been told that they should either not apply for board reappointment or not disclose that they are ICD graduates in their application to government boards, to the Premier. Cabinet makes dozens of appointments. How many ICD graduates have you appointed to Alberta's boards, agencies, and commissions?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We're certainly happy to receive applications from all Albertans. One of the things that we reviewed in the past was that sometimes having an ICD credential was listed explicitly to ensure that other Albertans who didn't have $10,000 that they could afford to put into that course wouldn't even be eligible to put their names forward. While we're very happy to receive applications from people who do have ICD credentials, they're not the only people who are welcome to serve Albertans, to be part of our agencies, boards, and commissions. We encourage all Albertans to please look at the website. There are many postings available right now, and we want them to put their names forward.

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, given that this NDP government has made it clear that it wants wholesale changes in the governance boards of Alberta's agencies, boards, and commissions and given that many current board members are being told not to reapply but are not being told why and given that board vacancies are being filled using methods that are certainly far removed from the universally accepted practice of analyzing gaps in competency matrices, to the Premier: which affiliation is best for Albertans applying to the BODs of the ABCs, ICD or NDP?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much for the fun question coming from the former member of the most secretive government in Canada. Mr. Speaker, we are very proud of the fact that we have an open and transparent process. All of the applications are posted on our website. We are happy to receive applications from all experienced applicants, including people who've been involved in any party represented in this House or otherwise. We want Albertans to step forward, be part of the process, be part of making life better for all Albertans, and we are happy to welcome all applicants to the process of serving their government.

The Speaker: Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Health Quality Council of Alberta

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently we learned that the Health Quality Council of Alberta has received very few requests from this NDP government. The state of our health care in Alberta is inconsistent. We see significantly higher rates of C. difficile contamination in Edmonton hospitals. Hip surgeries are 19 weeks slower in Red Deer than in Edmonton, and as an urgent patient you wait over an hour longer to see an ER doctor in St. Albert than you will in Medicine Hat. To the Minister of Health: why doesn't your government ask the HQCA to investigate these discrepancies and identify solutions?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We're very proud to have the Health Quality Council of Alberta and to put them to work in a number of very key areas of focus. For example, in the past few years HQCA has done work to support us in a co-ordinated fashion with the implementation of medical assistance in dying, a huge public policy initiative that we're very proud to have their support on; worked to review lab services, that play a key part in the development of our overall provincial framework; developed the website FOCUS, which has updates on emergency departments. We are proud to have them working in partnership with us, and we'll continue to do so.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, we've also learned that the Health Quality Council has decided to eliminate a patient satisfaction survey. Given that within AHS there are major departments called community engagement and communications, another one called community engagement, operational best practices, quality and patient safety, and so on, and so on, again to the Minister of Health: was this survey removed due to all the unnecessary overlap between AHS, Alberta Health, and the Health Quality Council, or is the state of our health care system so bad that you had to do away with this independent quality measure?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much for the question. I'm having a little déjà vu to estimates because I believe the member at estimates was asking me to cut a number of initiatives that were taking place in other areas because he thought they were redundant. Mr. Speaker, this isn't a proposal that we brought forward. The Health Quality Council thought that they had ample information in this area, and they were happy to work with partners to continue to update that information. But we look at their expertise, and on occasion we do call them to do specific work for us in areas of research, including the support we had on medical assistance in dying.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, in this most recent budget this NDP government increased the budget for the Health Quality Council. Interestingly enough, the Health Quality Council stated that they have current capacity to do more and they've had fewer requests for its services from Alberta Health Services and this NDP government. To the Minister of Health. Can you please clarify: despite giving them fewer requests and the Health Quality Council indicating that they can do so much more and multiple departments within AHS and Alberta Health providing similar roles, why did you increase their budget?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. It's my understanding that they requested two additional staff to support them in meeting some of the timelines that they were struggling with. One of the reasons why we are making sure that we have this is to make sure that we have open, upfront work done. For example, they're continuing to do work on continuity of patient care, surveys of families in long-term care on their experience, and gathering physician participation, that was brought alongside to help expand the physician panel work on the provincial scale. We're proud of the work that they're doing, and we're continuing to work in partnership to make sure that Alberta's health care system is the best it possibly can be instead of deep . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again this NDP government has found itself in trouble for not consulting before it bulldozes ahead with ideological legislation. Today Alberta's opposition parties stood on stage with Alberta's business community and called on the government to extend its consultation process on upcoming labour legislation changes, citing a severe lack of engagement. This government has committed in the past to raising the bar for transparency and engagement. Will the minister

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us reflect and pray, each in our own way. As we all return from our celebration time with our families and communities, let us express our appreciation, gratitude, and respect to our fellow MLAs for the opportunity to work with them.

Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, we will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Mr. Robert Clark. I would invite all to participate in the language of their choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
Il sait porter la croix!
Ton histoire est une épopée
Des plus brillants exploits.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure that I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two groups of students from Patricia Heights elementary school. They are accompanied today by their teachers, Keri Clifford and Shane Little, and also by their chaperones, Scott Karaim, Rhonda Phibbs, Elizabeth Martin, and Ms Kendra Blumenhagen. I wish them to rise now and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you 50 students from the beautiful and, I may add, diverse constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie from Meyokumin school. They're accompanied by their teachers, Mrs. Megan Davis and Ms Cindy MacLeod. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other school groups here today?
Seeing and hearing none, the hon. Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very honoured to rise today on your behalf to recognize Stephanie Nedoshytko. Stephanie has been an integral member of the Legislative Assembly for the past five years and recently resigned to take up a new position as the president of the Students' Association of MacEwan University. Stephanie began her time here as a page, then continued on as a part-time office assistant in the Speaker's office, where I know both you and I greatly appreciated her hard work on our behalf. Today she's joined by her parents, Mary and Ihor Nedoshytko. Mary is a junior high teacher at Holy Family Catholic school. Ihor is a retired teacher and musician who currently spends his time in various organizations as an instructor and band member. They're also very active in the Ukrainian community. We'd like to give our sincere thanks to Stephanie for your dedicated service to the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. They're seated in your gallery, and I'd ask that they now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce two compassionate professionals from Alberta Health Services advanced care planning goals of care team. April 16 was National Advance Care Planning Day, and we are encouraging all Albertans to talk about their health care goals with their families and their care providers and to write them down in a personal directive. I now ask Sharon Iversen, AHS project lead for advanced planning, and her colleague Sarah Hall to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Dr. Turner: Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members skin cancer survivor Violetta Ambrozuk and Chelsea Draeger, executive director of the Canadian Cancer Society. I'll be speaking to this in my coming member's statement. Joining Violetta and Chelsea is Angeline Webb, who works with the Canadian Cancer Society in health policy and promotion. The CCS is a strong voice informing Albertans about the need to avoid excessive UV exposure. I'd ask my guests to rise and receive the customary welcome of this Chamber.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this House a remarkable Canadian, Ai Tran. Ai left Vietnam as a 20-year-old person and lived as a stateless refugee in a camp in the Philippines for 12 years. In 2000 he married his childhood friend, who lived in Canada, and came here the following year. Here he built upon an already remarkable life, graduating from McGill with honours before moving to Edmonton to become a social worker, which is how I met him and heard his story. I ask my guest to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to introduce a good friend of mine, Garnett Genuis, the Member of Parliament for Sherwood Park-Fort Saskatchewan. Garnett and I were close family friends. His wife, Dr. Rebecca Genuis, came from Goa in India. Today Garnett is accompanied by his beautiful daughter, Gianna. His wife and younger son, Judah, couldn't be here. Garnett and I were two of those 70 losers for Wildrose in 2012, but today we both are here. Although he is the youngest parliamentarian, he spoke most of the words in the Commons, and he actually used a creative standing order to introduce me and the Member for Strathmore-Brooks in Parliament in February. I ask everyone to extend a warm welcome for him and his daughter today. Please rise.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to welcome through you and to you three guests this afternoon. Blake Radovanovic is a grade 12 student at Eastglen high school, whom I met last week at a GSA meeting at his school. He is joined today by his parents, David Leslie and Nick Stadnyk. I enjoyed meeting Blake and David last week, where we discussed the importance of GSAs for students in Alberta and the work our government is doing to ensure that all of our schools are welcome, caring, and safe. I'd ask them to please rise and for everyone to give them the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a constituent, Marilyn Spilchen. Marilyn is the manager of corporate support with One! International Poverty Relief, which her daughter Tania founded in 2001. One! International operates three schools in Mumbai, India, for children who would not otherwise have the opportunity to obtain an education, a cause that is very close to my own heart. The organization wants to thank the government of Alberta for helping them to make a difference by providing a yearly grant since 2012. I would ask Marilyn to stand up to receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce some outstanding constituents from the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. You know, there are few people in your life who you can call at 3 a.m. and know that they will answer the phone, but some of those folks are up in the gallery today. We are joined by some very, very dear friends of ours, Trevor and Kristin Whitlow, and their two children, Julia and David. If you'll please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Reynolds-Alberta Museum

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to speak today about the Reynolds-Alberta Museum in my Wetaskiwin-Camrose constituency. The Reynolds-Alberta Museum opened in 1992 to interpret the impact of technological change in transportation, aviation, agriculture, and industry from the 1890s to present. The museum now contains thousands of vintage artifacts and is family friendly, offering school tours and group programs.

Director Noel Ratch was here on budget day to hear about the three-year, $39.5 million investment to develop and expand artifact acquisition, storage, restoration, and display. It was great news for local job creation, tourism, and economic stimulation, and I wanted to share some of what the museum has to offer.

For car enthusiasts this June 10 and 11 will be the ultimate car show, featuring more than 700 cars, trucks, and motorcycles spanning a century of automotive history. Imagine the thrill of driving a manual transmission classic car. This year on July 16 young drivers between the age of 15 and 25 will learn how to start, operate, and drive one of these classics. August 19 will be a great day for motorcyclists from across Alberta as the museum hosts the Motorcycle Ride to Reynolds. Throughout the summer, for a fee, you can take a two-seater biplane open-cockpit flight, which flies over my home, so be sure to wave when you go by. Chauffeur-driven tours of the grounds in select 1920s to 1950s vintage vehicles give you the rare chance to hear and feel the motion of these venerable links to our past. More than just a viewing museum, Reynolds is world-renowned for its vehicle restoration workshops. Professional restorers offer one-, three-, and five-day courses. All of these can be found at the museum website.

I am proud of our government for its continued support in Alberta heritage. Thank you.

Conservatism

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, over the past few weeks I have noticed that the NDP continue to up their shrill, acerbic attacks. Now the PCs and Wildrose are being lumped into one category, conservatives, almost as if that is something to be ashamed of, so I decided to use my member's statement to define what it means to me to be a conservative.

This definition comes from the founder of the Heritage Foundation, Ed Feulner. He starts:

The purpose of politics is . . . to carve out a system of justice under the rule of law . . . and freedom . . .

When governments seek utopia, they end in oppression, because man and society are infinitely complex and cannot be reshaped by any institution of experts.

He goes on to say:

Conservatives . . . understand that power is a zero-sum game. When power is assumed by government, it is lost by individuals. There must be a stopping point in every program and plan beyond which no government should be allowed to go, not merely because of budgetary concerns but because of the inevitable loss of freedom . . .

Conservatives believe in the necessity of change, yes. But not in radical change based on abstract theories and the passions of the moment.

He finishes by saying that the value of conservatism isn't their persuasive leaders, but the power of their ideas – and the applications of those ideas to the problems of the day.

There it is, Mr. Speaker, the difference between socialists and conservatives.

Conservatives are all about outcomes. As a case in point, my van is presently in the mechanic's shop. The mechanic is a very nice person, but I can tell you that if he didn't fix the vehicle or did a shoddy job, he wouldn't get my business because I need to see acceptable outcomes, not pie-in-the-sky best of intentions as we have seen over the past two years from this NDP government.

I conclude by imploring the individual MLAs opposite to look at the outcomes of the past two years as well as the outcomes of past NDP governments in other provinces and ask themselves: do we really want that kind of legacy?

Emergency Medical Services Funding

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, leadership is defined in different ways, and it's subjective to how the leadership is applied. For instance, the NHL captain on a hockey team is responsible for something entirely different than the captain of a fire hall. Another example: a CEO of a multinational company deals with different consequences of their leadership than the CEO of a local charity society. What they all have in common, though, is the accountability to the people that they lead, which brings us to the responsibility of government to lead. What they say and what they do is intensely scrutinized because they're the government and they're in charge and, at the very least, until the next election they are directly responsible to Alberta and its citizens.

The provincial government bears an immense responsibility to Albertans, and one of the most important aspects of that responsibility is to provide the services necessary to ensure that Albertans have timely access to treatment in a medical emergency. What I find perplexing is that even with regard to the most basic responsibilities of a government, the responsibility to provide public safety and emergency care, the government is cutting corners. The government is putting emergency medical services in a no-win situation. You can't say that front-line services matter and then cut their budget by $17 million. EMS workers are the very definition of front-line services, often being the first point of contact for Albertans in medical distress.

Mr. Speaker, I don't say this lightly, and I don't say this without understanding or experience. I have the experience, I have the understanding, and, what's more, I have the confidence and support of the EMS community on this issue. There's been a lot of discussion about bringing people of different backgrounds and different experiences into this House as representatives so that we can be more effective voices for those communities. Today I'm in this House speaking for concerned paramedics across this province. Paramedics across Alberta are asking this minister to restore the $17 million cut to emergency medical services. In fact, they're asking the government to recognize them as a major partner in the delivery of health care in this province, not to be treated as an afterthought. Minister, they're asking you to lead in this regard. I'm asking you as a registered paramedic, me to you. Don't let us down.

Daffodil Month

Dr. Turner: Mr. Speaker, April is Daffodil Month, the month when Canadians unite in the fight against cancer. This April the Canadian Cancer Society is marking the 60th anniversary of Daffodil Month by asking all of us to show support for persons living with cancer and to honour those who have died by wearing a daffodil pin and buying fresh daffodils. Money raised goes to cancer research, education, and advocacy, and to support compassionate programs.

Mr. Speaker, as an oncologist I'm very proud of the advances made in cancer treatment over the last 40 years. My leukemia research has been very well supported by the Canadian Cancer Society, and there are, thankfully, many Albertan survivors of all types of cancers treated by my colleagues in CancerControl Alberta. I'm also keenly aware that the majority of cancer cases could be prevented by lifestyle modification, and this is the focus of this month's efforts of the CCS.

The CCS is encouraging youth to creatively educate their peers and families about cancer prevention and to advocate for policy changes in their communities that support four topics. Topic 1: expose the deceitful and manipulative ways that big tobacco markets to youth. Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud to be part of a government which banned flavoured tobacco as one of its first actions after the election two years ago. We also are pursuing repayment of health costs from big tobacco, just two ways we're making life better for Albertans. Topic 2: learning about the fun and the positive benefits of regular physical activity. Twenty minutes a day of aerobic exercise is the best preventative for cancer of all types. Topic 3: embracing their natural glow while avoiding excessive sun exposure or using tanning beds. Topic 4: educating their peers about choosing healthy beverages. This applies to both alcohol and to high-sugar drinks that the food industry is marketing to our youth.

Mr. Speaker, youth are being encouraged to act, and they are responding. As legislators we are opinion leaders in our communities and bear responsibility to act as well. The CCS and I ask that we all use our abilities to support this fight against cancer.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Easter

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Renewal of faith and hope. Ash Wednesday marks the beginning of the Lenten calendar for many Christians. Lent gives Christians the opportunity to focus on their love for one another and God's love for them. Those practising Lent sacrifice something meaningful and, instead, spend time on their relationship with God.

World-wide there are over 2 billion people that observe Easter, one of the most important dates on the Christian calendar. God's love is so great that he gave the life of his only son, Jesus Christ, so that Christians may have eternal life. Christians believe in the miracle of Christ rising from the dead three days after he was crucified, showing Christians that their faith is well placed.

There's also a secular aspect to Easter that many people celebrate and that has us looking under the couch and around the fridge for chocolate eggs and rabbits. During Easter many people come together with their families and their friends to celebrate peace and love.

It's important for us to honour the role that Christians have played and continue to play in the culture of our province. There are more than a dozen churches in Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill, and I know that many constituents came together on Sunday to celebrate the day that Christ rose from the dead.

I hope that everyone here and those who are watching and listening had a peaceful Easter.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Employment and Labour Code Consultations

Mr. Jean: In less than 12 hours the clock will run out on labour review consultations. I'll forgive everyone if they thought they just started; however, here in Alberta they're just ending. Ontario consulted for two years on similar changes to labour legislation, but here at home: 36 days. Albertans got just over a month. No wonder small-business owners are seriously worried about the ramifications. When the NDP ran out of taxes to raise, they created new ones. They threatened lawsuits to break contracts, and now they're rushing through significant changes to labour legislation. Why won't the NDP simply slow down, extend the consultation period, and listen to Alberta businesses?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In 1988 singer Bobby McFerrin released the hit single Don't Worry, Be Happy, which is the same thing that right-wing parties have been saying to Alberta workers ever since. Can't access job-protected sick leave? Don't worry; be happy. Well, I'm not happy about it and neither are many Albertans. We are working with stakeholders to ensure we have fair, balanced, and effective workplace legislation for all. We've received over 4,600 submissions so far, and I look forward to seeing how many more we receive today.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, everybody wants a good song; we just want to take some time to write it.

While there's no doubt that a need for some fine-tuning is there, Alberta has enjoyed relative labour peace for over 30 years. This is important. Any major overhaul that catches job creators by surprise will have some major ramifications for jobs, the economy, and, ultimately, Albertans. It's important. It's clear the fix is in. Invitation-only meetings, Mr. Speaker, no public events, and a cloud of secrecy have surrounded this government and what exactly they plan to do with this legislation. If the NDP won't extend consultations to a reasonable time, will they at least tell Albertans what they plan to do and when they will see . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In a tough economy everyday Albertans deserve a government that's working to make life better. In Alberta you can lose your job if you get sick, and even though Albertans pay into employment insurance, we don't have access to some of the leave that other Canadians do. So we've reached out to Albertans about these kinds of practices and whether they need to be updated and modernized. We've received over 4,600 responses to date, including over a thousand from employers. We've held round-table discussions to discuss some of these issues, and we look forward to reviewing the results of the consultation and working to make life better.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, Albertans are clear. They want a government that actually listens and consults, an easy idea that would put a lot of people's minds at ease, because they are worried. We know that the Premier's own appointees, who serve as partisan big union bosses, are pushing to get rid of a worker's right to a secret ballot. That is wrong and will cause chaos throughout businesses and companies across Alberta. It will. It's a fundamental democratic right of a worker. Will the Premier take at least this off the table, or will she continue to cozy up to her big union boss friends, who right now want to take away this right from Alberta workers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The issues that we're discussing with Albertans have developed over decades. The previous government had years and years to make changes, and they never lifted a finger, even after conducting their own reviews. They would prefer that Albertans have no protections and fewer rights than other Canadians. We are going to work with stakeholders to make sure we're bringing forward fair and balanced changes that will improve the Alberta economy and workplaces for all.

The Speaker: The second main question.

Interprovincial Relations

Mr. Jean: The Premier said last week that political staff are not allowed to campaign for their counterparts in the B.C. NDP. The only problem is that that memo didn't seem to make its way into the hands of the Premier's chief of staff, John Heaney. His name is currently on the advertising sponsor list with Elections BC. Heaney was chief of staff to the current B.C. NDP leader and was called an invaluable adviser. Can the Premier please reassure Albertans that this is simply an oversight and that her chief of staff is no longer on the sponsor list for the antipipeline B.C. NDP Party? [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet.
The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Heaney is not involved in the B.C. election. The third-party advertising report that was posted was from the 2005 and '09 elections.

In speaking about memos, perhaps the member opposite missed the ableg hash tag where his colleague the Member for Strathmore-Brooks says: "Actually seems like an honest mistake. Genuinely pleased the Premier has put the kibosh on [NDP] staffers campaigning [in] B.C."

Mr. Jean: Alberta's relationship with neighbouring provinces has never been worse, Mr. Speaker. On the one side, the NDP holds press conferences to slam the budget of a provincial neighbour while threatening them with trade sanctions. On the other side, the Premier's chief of staff is registered as a third-party adviser in the B.C. election still. Oh, and let's not forget the bait-and-switch negotiating tactics that the NDP employed in negotiating the Canada free trade agreement. Can someone over there admit that it might be just time to start making friends and stop making enemies of our allies? [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet. [interjections] Quiet.
The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to answer the question from the member for Regina-Somewhere or maybe it's Kelowna-Somewhere. On this side of the House we're standing up for Albertans. Every day we're going to make sure that we work to make Alberta lives better, and that's what we're doing, whether it's negotiations with our partners at the table for the western trade agreement, whether it's across Canada, or whether it's our Premier and her chief of staff working to make sure that we expand market access in Japan through pipeline access on the west coast. I am proud of the work that we're doing every day and the results we're getting for Albertans.

Mr. Jean: A hundred thousand Albertans on unemployment insurance, Mr. Speaker, a record.

The Premier is chalking up a long list of adversaries at the provincial level. The cracks are beginning to show. The two contending parties in the B.C. election: neither are friends to this Premier. We know her comments on the B.C. NDP. The Premier of B.C. said just last week that, and I quote, Alberta is going broke under this NDP government's watch. I couldn't agree more. This Premier has positioned our province to be the enemy of B.C. regardless of who wins that election. When will the Premier realize that her divisiveness and bad economic policies are only hurting Alberta with what should be some of our closest allies, that we should be working together with?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm incredibly proud of the work that our Premier and our government are doing to make life better for Alberta families. That's why we are behaving in a mature, responsible fashion in working with them rather than spouting off angry tweets at partners from across the country who were working to actually continue to gain market access through expanded pipelines. We're going to continue being respectful, working with our partners, and getting results for Albertans, including the 20,000 net new jobs that we got, full-time jobs, in Alberta in just the month of March. That's good results for the people of Alberta.

The Speaker: The third main question.

Marijuana Legalization

Mr. Jean: In just over a year recreational marijuana use will be legal. It's a dramatic change and demands immediate action from this government and the province. There are still a lot of questions about how effective saliva and other roadside tests will be and where the new training or technology will actually come from. Police forces are anxiously waiting to see how this will be administered. What roadside tools is this government thinking about giving our men and women in uniform to ensure that they have all the tools they need to keep our roads safe?

The Speaker: The hon. Justice minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, keeping roads safe and keeping marijuana out of the hands of children are the province's top priorities as we move forward. We're happy to see that those are priorities shared by our federal counterparts. We do know that they have to recognize the test under the Criminal Code in order for it to be legal. I understand that they're working very hard to have that under way. In the interim it is now and remains illegal to drive under the influence of any drug.

Mr. Jean: Last year 144 Albertans, tragically, died on the job. That number rose despite the economic slowdown. Oil, gas, and construction managers know the deadly consequences of on-the-job drug use. As such, they've developed strict drug-testing practices to keep their workers safe. However, employers are concerned that current technology can't accurately detect the level of marijuana impairment. What restrictions will the government consider on marijuana use in safety-sensitive workplaces to ensure that all workers get home safe and sound at the end of the workday?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. All Albertans should have safe workplaces, and that means workplaces that are free from impairment. Workers' safety is too critical for us to sit and wait and see what the federal marijuana regulations will look like, so as a province we are working with our partners across other jurisdictions to make sure that we have a plan. That includes making sure that employers can ensure their worksites are safe, and a significant aspect of this is ensuring that workers are fit to perform their tasks. We will work with Labour departments across Canada to fashion a pan-Canadian approach to this.

Mr. Jean: This rushed timeline for marijuana legislation is creating significant challenges for Alberta's municipalities as well. The AUMA has said that it needs more time than a few hundred days to develop policy to support this major drug reform from the federal government. They're calling for more support from the provincial and federal governments, and who can blame them? It's important. What is the government doing to support all communities to ensure that they have the tools necessary to meet this rapid 2018 deadline?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the member correctly points out, all levels of government will have a role to play in this. That's why I've already taken the initial steps of meeting with leadership from the AUMA and the AAMD and C. I also touched on this at my address to the AAMD and C just recently. As we move forward, we'll continue to work together. I do know that there's a lot of heavy lifting to do on both parts, but the safety of Albertans is at stake, so we will ensure that we get there.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Labour Relations Code Review

Mr. McIver: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, this NDP government, in its haste to amend the labour code far beyond what the Supreme Court requires, has not taken the time to properly consult with Alberta's business leaders, as it failed to do with the farming community during the Bill 6 fiasco. The prospect of removing the secret-ballot provisions in union certification drives and the opportunity to intimidate workers by forcing them to stand up and show their hand will concern many Alberta workers. To the Minister of Labour. It's a simple question that requires a straight answer. Are you planning to remove the secret-ballot provision?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, in this tough economy everyday Albertans deserve a government that's working to make life better. We have been reaching out to stakeholders to make sure that we are proposing fair, balanced, and effective workplace legislation for all. We've had over a thousand employers who've provided their feedback as well as over 4,600 Albertans. I look forward to reviewing their feedback so that we can move forward with reasonable changes that make sense for Alberta.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, a non answer sometimes speaks louder than an answer.

Mr. Speaker, given that we have had incredible labour peace in Alberta for decades and given that the minister and her comrades have chosen to bulldoze ahead with these changes far beyond the Supreme Court directive and further put the Alberta economy at risk, again to the minister: will you be clear and tell this House and all Alberta workers that you have no plans to remove the secret-ballot provision?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Did you know that in 1988 the singer Bon Jovi released his hit track Bad Medicine? That's exactly what not being able to take a sick day looks like, bad medicine. Not being able to take a sick day for fear of losing one's job shows that we have outdated laws, and we are talking to Albertans right now about how we might fix that. We are focused on making sure we have fair and balanced workplace legislation that supports a strong Alberta economy, and Albertans have responded very well to our consultation. I look forward to reviewing those results.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, the Labour minister uses examples of Beetlejuice and Bon Jovi from 1988, when the current labour standards were passed. She is at the same time, as she confirmed in estimates, using as a guideline the International Labour Organization's eight core principles, that go back to 1930, when the Marx Brothers' movie Animal Crackers was released. Minister, since time is obviously not the real reason for your rush to a

The Speaker: Whoa. Quiet.
Go ahead.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The member opposite seems proud that we still do not meet standards that were implemented in the 1930s. The former government had years, years, and years to review these workplace legislations. In fact, they did review, but they did not put in basic workplace rights like job-protected sick leave. They would prefer that Albertans have no protections, they would prefer that we have fewer rights than other Canadians, and their new dance partners in the Wildrose seem to agree. We want to make sure life is better for Albertans, including reviewing workplace legislation. [laughter]

The Speaker: Many of you are laughing – that’s a good thing – but you’re all very noisy. That’s not a good thing.
The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Poverty Reduction Strategy

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Party believes passionately in the importance of tackling poverty in our province, and I assume the NDP government would as well, but in the two years since the election there’s been no effort to create a comprehensive poverty reduction strategy. In fact, the word “poverty” doesn’t appear in the Speech from the Throne even once, nor is it anywhere in the budget. Actions speak louder than words, but in this case we don’t have either. A simple question to the Premier: when is your government going to create a poverty reduction strategy? [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet. Quiet, please.
The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. I certainly agree that actions speak louder than words. We added $25 million to FCSS. I guess that action speaks louder than words. We added a new child benefit and enhanced the existing child and family benefit, a $340 million investment, so certainly our actions speak very loud for the families throughout the province. Certainly, we have Albertans’ backs, and we are working to make sure that all Albertans benefit from the prosperity that Albertans enjoy.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, my concern is with this government’s patchwork approach and lack of a plan. Many not-for-profits I’ve talked with don’t know where they stand among the hodgepodge of quickly evolving government programs. An Alberta poverty reduction strategy would allow not-for-profits to align their important work with government programs. Again to the Premier: in the absence of a strategy, can you tell us what you think the role of government is and what role not-for-profits should play in poverty reduction?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much. I’m happy to take this one and then go back to the minister for the final one. I want to talk about some of the work that we continue to do to make life better for Alberta families, including having reasonable, planned increases to the minimum wage for some of the lowest earners in Alberta; making sure that we’re expanding access to affordable daycare because we believe that every child deserves to have a safe place to be while their parents are at work; making sure that hungry children, when they go to school, have a balanced, nutritious meal and that their parents don’t have to worry about whether or not they can buy that, Mr. Speaker. These are some of the concrete actions that we’re very proud to take in partnership regularly with the not-for-profit organizations in Alberta, and we continue to continue working with them.

The Speaker: Thank you.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. EndPovertyEdmonton says that people “experience poverty when they lack or are denied economic, social and cultural resources.” Calgary’s enough for all plan says simply, “My neighbour’s strength is my strength.” I want to end poverty. There is clear evidence that the most effective, efficient policy tool to end poverty is a guaranteed income targeted at those who genuinely need help. To the Premier: will you replace your damaging minimum wage plan with a guaranteed annual income for those who really need it?

2:10

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There were a lot of oohs in many parts of this House with that last question. I have to say that we are very proud to make sure that Albertans who work full-time, who are at a job for 40 hours a week, have the ability to pay their rent and put food on the table. This is something that we believe is important, to make sure that everyone has access to live with dignity and respect. While I appreciate that other ideas are being proposed rather than just opposition, we think that the reasonable thing to do is to make sure that we have planned increases to make sure the minimum wage can support Alberta families, and we’re proud to be the government doing that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this government is currently taking part in the largest curriculum redevelopment in Alberta’s history and just last week spoke about the results of the fall curriculum survey, to the Minister of Education: what were some of the areas that Albertans want to see focused on in the curriculum redevelopment?

Mr. Eggen: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, we found a number of areas where the vast majority of Albertans surveyed want a new focus on curriculum. A vast majority of participants were looking for pathways to career and other postsecondary opportunities. We also saw some very interesting commentary, that we’re following up on, in regard to financial literacy, coding, working with business groups, energy, and especially language advocates.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that my constituents of Edmonton-Decore have expressed how important Arabic language programming is, to the same minister: what are you doing to ensure that the curriculum redevelopment will benefit those seeking Arabic language arts programming?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While some school boards do offer other languages, including Arabic language prototypes, I'm very happy to tell you that we're in development of a provincial Arab language arts curriculum here in the province of Alberta, that should be ready about one year from now. This is something that we've needed in our province for many years. We've worked very hard in conjunction with language groups, and we've seen that they are very willing and happy to help us.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the importance this language program will have on this vibrant community, to the same minister. We already heard the hint. When can we see and expect this programming to be in place?

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud to announce that we are identifying the resources here over the next 12 months, building on programs that have existed in Edmonton already, working through the translations and so forth so that we can have something in place by the fall of 2018. I want to thank the members of the Alberta Arab community for their very hard work and advocacy to help make this happen.

Carbon Levy Revenue Utilization

Mr. Fildebrandt: Normally getting the Minister of Finance to answer a question is a bit like trying to nail Jell-O to the wall, but this morning in estimates we finally got to pin the minister down on a few things. Like Muhammad Ali, he danced around questions like a butterfly but stung taxpayers like a bee. But we finally got him to admit that the carbon tax slush fund is kept off the main set of books, unlike any other expenditure in the government. This falsely makes it look like they're spending less money than they are. Why is the government misleading Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We made a commitment to fully reinvest those revenues from the climate leadership plan back into Albertans' pockets, and we clearly laid that out in our budget. We have page 61 of the fiscal plan, and it shows clearly how those climate leadership plan expenses match revenue over time and will have no net impact on our bottom line. We're going to continue to do that because that's what Albertans expect.

Mr. Fildebrandt: The NDP say "reinvest taxes" like United means "reaccommode passengers."

Given, Mr. Speaker, that just because a tax is dedicated to a specific expenditure doesn't mean it doesn't count as spending – we spend money raised from the alcohol tax, the tobacco tax, and the lottery fund, and all of these count as operational spending – and given that when asked today why spending from the carbon tax doesn't count on their books, the minister said that it's "just this one," why?

The Speaker: Hon. members, I need to remind you again. I'm very patient, very generous with the opportunities. I do want to tell you that when you're asking questions, though, you might want to listen to some of your peers as to what is a preamble and what is not.

Let us go to the answer to the question. The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, this is the first full year of the climate leadership revenue and expenditure.

Making year-over-year comparisons would not provide an accurate picture with regard to the changes in our operating expenses. We will do that going forward in the '18-19 year.

Mr. Fildebrandt: This minister could dance around a question like Dancing with the Stars.

The Speaker: That's a preamble.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Given, Mr. Speaker, that if I had a nickel for every time the minister didn't answer the question I asked him, I could balance the budget, but given – let's try again – that if a tree falls in a forest and no one hears it, did it really fall? Or . . .

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

The Speaker: I've got a point of order.

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, I'm incredibly proud of the budget we have laid before Albertans. Working to make life better for Albertans is what we have committed to do. We're doing that by ensuring that operating expenses for programs and services like health care, education, and social services remain strong. This is the first full year of the climate leadership revenue and expenditures, and going forward, we will include those in our budget fully.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Agency, Board, and Commission Appointments

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Institute of Corporate Directors, or ICD, is Canada's leading organization for fostering excellence in corporate governance. Graduates of ICD's director education program include high-ranking Alberta officials such as the Auditor General, the Ethics Commissioner, and the deputy ministers of Environment and Parks and Status of Women. Now, one would think that being an ICD graduate would be a huge benefit to any board, but apparently this NDP government does not. To the Premier: can you confirm that ICD graduates are no longer being considered for appointment to the boards of Alberta agencies, boards, and commissions?

Ms Hoffman: No, I can't, Mr. Speaker, because that is not indeed a fact. But what I can confirm is that it shouldn't be a course that costs in excess of $10,000 for you to even be considered to serve your province. So while we are very pleased to receive applications from people who do have the ICD credential, we are opening the application process to all Albertans. We're posting them publicly, and we're proud to do so.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's certainly not what ICD graduates have been telling us.

Given that the ICD director education program is recognized world-wide as the leader in delivering competence in board governance and given that improved board governance is surely something that the NDP wants to see in all of Alberta's agencies, boards, and commissions and given that many ICD graduates have been told that they should either not apply for board reappointment or not disclose that they are ICD graduates in their application to government boards, to the Premier. Cabinet makes dozens of appointments. How many ICD graduates have you appointed to Alberta's boards, agencies, and commissions?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We're certainly happy to receive applications from all Albertans. One of the things that we reviewed in the past was that sometimes having an ICD credential was listed explicitly to ensure that other Albertans who didn't have $10,000 that they could afford to put into that course wouldn't even be eligible to put their names forward. While we're very happy to receive applications from people who do have ICD credentials, they're not the only people who are welcome to serve Albertans, to be part of our agencies, boards, and commissions. We encourage all Albertans to please look at the website. There are many postings available right now, and we want them to put their names forward.

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, given that this NDP government has made it clear that it wants wholesale changes in the governance boards of Alberta's agencies, boards, and commissions and given that many current board members are being told not to reapply but are not being told why and given that board vacancies are being filled using methods that are certainly far removed from the universally accepted practice of analyzing gaps in competency matrices, to the Premier: which affiliation is best for Albertans applying to the BODs of the ABCs, ICD or NDP?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much for the fun question coming from the former member of the most secretive government in Canada. Mr. Speaker, we are very proud of the fact that we have an open and transparent process. All of the applications are posted on our website. We are happy to receive applications from all experienced applicants, including people who've been involved in any party represented in this House or otherwise. We want Albertans to step forward, be part of the process, be part of making life better for all Albertans, and we are happy to welcome all applicants to the process of serving their government.

The Speaker: Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Health Quality Council of Alberta

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently we learned that the Health Quality Council of Alberta has received very few requests from this NDP government. The state of our health care in Alberta is inconsistent. We see significantly higher rates of C. difficile contamination in Edmonton hospitals. Hip surgeries are 19 weeks slower in Red Deer than in Edmonton, and as an urgent patient you wait over an hour longer to see an ER doctor in St. Albert than you will in Medicine Hat. To the Minister of Health: why doesn't your government ask the HQCA to investigate these discrepancies and identify solutions?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We're very proud to have the Health Quality Council of Alberta and to put them to work in a number of very key areas of focus. For example, in the past few years HQCA has done work to support us in a co-ordinated fashion with the implementation of medical assistance in dying, a huge public policy initiative that we're very proud to have their support on; worked to review lab services, that play a key part in the development of our overall provincial framework; developed the website FOCUS, which has updates on emergency departments. We are proud to have them working in partnership with us, and we'll continue to do so.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, we've also learned that the Health Quality Council has decided to eliminate a patient satisfaction survey. Given that within AHS there are major departments called community engagement and communications, another one called community engagement, operational best practices, quality and patient safety, and so on, and so on, again to the Minister of Health: was this survey removed due to all the unnecessary overlap between AHS, Alberta Health, and the Health Quality Council, or is the state of our health care system so bad that you had to do away with this independent quality measure?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much for the question. I'm having a little déjà vu to estimates because I believe the member at estimates was asking me to cut a number of initiatives that were taking place in other areas because he thought they were redundant. Mr. Speaker, this isn't a proposal that we brought forward. The Health Quality Council thought that they had ample information in this area, and they were happy to work with partners to continue to update that information. But we look at their expertise, and on occasion we do call them to do specific work for us in areas of research, including the support we had on medical assistance in dying.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, in this most recent budget this NDP government increased the budget for the Health Quality Council. Interestingly enough, the Health Quality Council stated that they have current capacity to do more and they've had fewer requests for its services from Alberta Health Services and this NDP government. To the Minister of Health. Can you please clarify: despite giving them fewer requests and the Health Quality Council indicating that they can do so much more and multiple departments within AHS and Alberta Health providing similar roles, why did you increase their budget?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. It's my understanding that they requested two additional staff to support them in meeting some of the timelines that they were struggling with. One of the reasons why we are making sure that we have this is to make sure that we have open, upfront work done. For example, they're continuing to do work on continuity of patient care, surveys of families in long-term care on their experience, and gathering physician participation, that was brought alongside to help expand the physician panel work on the provincial scale. We're proud of the work that they're doing, and we're continuing to work in partnership to make sure that Alberta's health care system is the best it possibly can be instead of deep . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again this NDP government has found itself in trouble for not consulting before it bulldozes ahead with ideological legislation. Today Alberta's opposition parties stood on stage with Alberta's business community and called on the government to extend its consultation process on upcoming labour legislation changes, citing a severe lack of engagement. This government has committed in the past to raising the bar for transparency and engagement. Will the minister listen to business, work with the opposition, and extend and enhance the consultation process?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In a tough economy hard-working Albertans deserve a government that makes life better. Alberta has changed a lot. With labour codes that were enacted in 1988, we have a responsibility to ensure that our employment and labour practices are fair and balanced for all Albertans. We have ensured that we have engaged all stakeholders through this process, including members of the CFIB and chambers who are part of our round-tables, as well as received over a thousand submissions from employers. I look forward to reviewing those results.

Thank you.

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, given that this NDP government has given Andy Sims, the hand-picked union lawyer tasked with completing a review of labour relations changes, no deadline for completing his report and given that it would be foolhardy and ideological to move ahead with sweeping labour changes without at least having this report in hand, is the minister going to give Mr. Sims ample time to write this report and make it public before making any changes to Alberta's labour relations legislation? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Being disrespectful does not become the member opposite. Mr. Andrew Sims is one of the most experienced and respected labour lawyers in our province. He has a deep understanding of labour law. He was used in consultations by the previous government. He is a former chair of the Labour Relations Board. I am very honoured to have his expertise at my disposal for this important review so that we can make sure we have fair and balanced workplace legislation for all Albertans.

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, given that in estimates I asked the minister if she would consider enacting an all-party committee to discuss any potential labour legislation changes, to which she replied, "Thank you for the suggestion," and given most Albertans would agree that an all-party committee would meet a higher bar for transparency and engagement, will the government initiate an all-party committee to ensure that a wide variety of expert voices are heard on this critical issue?

Ms Gray: Mr. Speaker, it seems like only tomorrow, but did you know it was 1988 when the band Guns N' Roses released their hit single Sweet Child o' Mine? Speaking of children, did you know that Alberta women have to work far longer than women in any other jurisdiction before they qualify for and can claim maternity leave? Alberta's labour laws have not been revised since we first heard Slash's guitar solo, and while that amazing solo has stood the test of time, our labour laws have not. We will continue to work with stakeholders to make sure we have fair and balanced workplace legislation that serves all Albertans.

The Speaker: I have some eight-tracks of those.
The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Applied Research and Forage Associations

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's agriculture associations are a key part of the agricultural industry. They develop partnerships with municipal and industry sources to enhance the work of ag producers through collaboration and innovation. The applied research they create through these partnerships is used to enhance profitability, sustainability, and responsible stewardship of the land as well as to contribute to rural development across Alberta. To the minister of agriculture: do you support the work of Alberta's applied research and forage associations?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of agriculture.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I absolutely support research. Any kind of research done in agriculture can only benefit our producers, our farming community, and agricultural industry right across the province. It's important that all players in the field there contribute to research. Agriculture in this country and, as a matter of fact, world-wide has advanced because of that research, and we'll continue to support it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that these groups do much of the extension work for the agricultural industry and given that these groups are working hard to enhance agricultural practices through research and innovation and given that Alberta agriculture relies on these groups to do extension work to enhance the work of ag producers, to the minister: what benefit do these groups have for Alberta's agricultural industry as a whole?

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. As I said in my previous answer, any research within agriculture is beneficial and crucial to the advancement of agriculture, as it always has been. Canada and Alberta, in particular, have had some great success stories over the years, applying that research directly into the field and continue to do so. The province of Alberta has had some great successes around research. Crop Diversification Centre North and Crop Diversification Centre South do great work, as just some examples. As producers do some more research themselves, it can only advance Albertans, as this government does, to make sure that all Albertans benefit.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that there are 12 applied research and forage associations that receive funding through the agriculture opportunities fund and given that these groups partner with others to expand the AOF funding they receive and given that the extension work they do would not be possible without the AOF funding, to the minister: will you commit to stable funding for these applied research and forage associations?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Research in agriculture, as I said before, is crucial to advancement. There have been some great projects, great programs by a lot of the commissions, whether it's canola, wheat. Forage has had some great projects, some great plans for their future to advance their industry for the advancement of their own producers here in the province and for those buyers of their products right across the nation, across the globe. This government is particularly proud of making Alberta farmers' lives better.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Postsecondary Education Funding

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For many years postsecondary institutions have been severely underfunded, which has led to a buildup of significant deferred maintenance liabilities. Given that this lack of adequate funding by the previous government has resulted in much fixing up being needed, to the Minister of Advanced Education: what is this government doing to address these issues at the University of Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the hon. member for the question. In a tough economy we're working to make life better for Albertans looking to return to school to upgrade their skills, and a crucial part of that is making sure that we have the facilities on campus to deliver a world-class education. We've heard from students and from our institutions that the previous government did leave a significant deferred maintenance liability, and it's one that our government is committed to addressing. That's why Budget 2017 provides $154 million for maintenance and repair work and identifies $676 million over the next four years at our postsecondary institutions.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Alberta is home to world-class postsecondary institutions which are in dire need of repairs due to previous government inaction, to the same minister: what other investments is the minister making in our postsecondary institutions across the province? [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hear the members opposite decrying the lack of toughness in the question. However, they didn't make those investments, that our government is making, for 44 years. I'm quite proud of the fact that we're investing $451 million in new and continuing capital projects, including two major renewals of existing facilities at our two largest universities. The University of Alberta will get the new dentistry and pharmacy restoration, and in Calgary we're committed to redeveloping and renovating the MacKimmie complex, which will create more than 500 new spaces for students at that university.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that well-maintained facilities are crucial to all of our postsecondary institutions but students require many more supports than that, to the same minister: what else is the government doing to support our students?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you again, Mr. Speaker. We're committed to making sure that Alberta students are able to access affordable, high-quality education on campuses all across the province. We proudly announced in this budget that we've extended the tuition freeze for a third year, and we've been consulting with students on the creation of a long-term framework for tuition. We've also allocated $3.6 million for mental health supports. This is a continuation of previous funding. After the completion of the pilot project, we're looking forward to rolling out a long-term strategy and funding for student mental health. We've been working with our colleagues at the Ministry of Health to be able to deliver this important program supporting students.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Air Ambulance Service in Southern Alberta

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just as southern Alberta's ground ambulance dispatch was centralized to Calgary, diverting rural ambulances to do Calgary's day-to-day work, so too goes southern Alberta's fixed-wing medevac service. The recent award of the medevac contract has southern Alberta fearing that medevac services will be pulled from southern Alberta airports and centralized in Calgary, resulting in longer transfer times. Can the Minister of Health confirm or deny that southern Alberta's medevacs are being consolidated to Calgary?

Ms Hoffman: That's not true, Mr. Speaker. They are not.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, given that there is no hangar space in Medicine Hat, affecting the ability of the new medevac provider to set up base, and given that it will take time to set up new facilities to originate medevacs from these cities for the critical health care that southern Albertans need, what assurances can the minister give that if the medevac operator cannot establish bases in southern Alberta in a timely fashion, this service will not be impacted and consolidated to a busy and congested Alberta international airport?

Ms Hoffman: I hope that the member heard the answer to the first question. The scope of the contract that went out for RFP was to continue to have those local services provided locally. So, Mr. Speaker, that's the contract that was bid on. They certainly have an opportunity to fulfill their end of the contract, as the person who was successful in that application. He's asking hearsay questions or theoretical questions. All I can tell you is that the intent and the plan is and will continue to be to have those air ambulances housed locally.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, we have heard these kinds of answers before, and they proved false.

Can the minister assure this House that if the awarded company is not able to establish the bases or have the new aircraft delivered in time, the contract will be retendered so that companies who have the ability to fulfill these obligations are able to vie for the work?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently in a grade 6 class they asked me about fake news, and now I'm hearing some fake questions. I have to say that we are committed to making sure that we're moving forward in an open and transparent way. There is an appeal process, I believe, under way. But everything is going to continue to be done locally, as the tender laid out.

Emergency Medical Services Funding

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, the members of this House will be familiar with the term "shell game," where skilled hands working at a furious pace attempt to confuse the observer. We all know that game and how it applies to the art of government budgeting. Now, I'm sure the government is waiting for a zinger or a gotcha-politics question, but I believe that in this case it's the government that's being deceived. To the Minister of Health. I'm speaking to you as a paramedic, embedded in that community with experience. You don't honestly believe that once you pay off an ambulance, you can cut the EMS budget for the cost of that ambulance, do you? Please answer carefully because paramedics are watching.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. It's clear that it is coming from a paramedic, not a conservative, because the conservatives of both parties have pushed for billions of dollars of cuts. While we are working with AHS to make sure that they continue to protect and support the front lines, we've made it very clear that we want to see their budget held harmless, and we've done so by arranging a meeting, that I was happy to facilitate, between paramedic representatives as well as with AHS, and that message was delivered very clearly. We're going to continue to support our front-line workers who every day work to support Albertans.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, given that the Health Sciences Association of Alberta president, who is also a paramedic, has denounced this budget cut and given that EMS is already underfunded to the tune of $20 million necessary to make a greater contribution to the health care system here in Alberta and given that this is over and above the $17 million that you in the Health department are going to cut, to the same minister: Minister, do you realize that in order for AHS, EMS not to cut front-line services, you need to restore the $17 million? Will you do that?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you for the question from the member, who does rightfully refer to the fact that the president of the HSAA is a paramedic. Mr. Speaker, the president with the HSAA sat down in a meeting with myself and the president of Alberta Health Services, and we articulated very clearly that we expect to maintain those front-line services, that it will be done by ensuring that we protect front-line workers and making sure that they have the resources that they require. We're waiting to see the AHS proposal for their budget, and when it is received, it will be posted publicly, and paramedics will be able to see that AHS is fulfilling their commitments that were made during that meeting.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that you have said time and time again that your government will invest in the most crucial of front-line services and given that there is a fentanyl crisis, a rise in posttraumatic stress syndrome, call volumes on the rise, the seriousness of calls on the rise, increasing hospital waits that are killing the morale of paramedics, Minister, I implore you to revisit this cut to front-line services.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, I'm very proud of the work that our paramedics do each and every day. I was proud to visit a number of them just last weekend here in Edmonton. I have to say that the work they do is crucially important to saving lives across Alberta. That's one of the reasons why we had this conversation, a face-to-face opportunity to have discussions with Alberta Health Services. They have also communicated with HSAA that they're going to make sure that they hold harmless the front lines. We're going to make sure that we protect them. I'm glad that the member opposite is standing up for paramedics. I hope that he will stand up for all Albertans because his party certainly is pushing for a far more drastic reality than the one that he is arguing for.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Condominium Property Act

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans throughout the province, including many of my constituents of Edmonton-McClung, are buying new condominiums. Buyers of condos must provide a significant cash deposit toward a unit before it's actually completed. To the Minister of Service Alberta: how will changes to the Condominium Property Act protect these customers and ensure that they get the unit that they pay for?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for his question. This government cares about everyday Albertans, and we believe that Albertans deserve to be protected, especially when making a large purchase as important as a home. That's why the amendments to the Condominium Property Act will ensure that anyone holding a purchase deposit in trust is subject to specific rules and held to high standards. The act will also ensure that homebuyers have options if developers make any changes to units between the time that they are bought and the time they are actually being built.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that there may be years between the day the purchase agreement is signed and the construction of the actual unit, to the same minister: how will the government make sure that purchasers ultimately get the unit they were promised?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The act makes it clear that the developer must notify the buyer whenever there is a material change to the homebuyer's unit. Where a change happens, homebuyers will have clear notice and the ability to take action if needed. Since taking office, we began exploring and implementing ways to expedite developing these new rules. This is just one example of how we're taking action and making life more affordable for Albertans.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, given that purchasers' deposit monies may be held in trust for a long period of time, to the same minister: what is the government doing to ensure that those funds are safeguarded?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We heard from Albertans, loud and clear, that when a developer does not finish on time, buyers ought to have the option to cancel the agreement and get their deposits back. The act makes it clear that all purchase money will be held by a specific trustee. Work is currently under way to develop regulations to set requirements for these trustees. Once these rules are in place, Albertans will be able to take comfort, knowing that their purchase deposits are safe and subject to regulatory standards.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thirty seconds for members to leave the House.

Energy Industry Jobs

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last Thursday the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville asked a question to the Labour minister regarding the federal government's decision to close the immigration case processing centre in Vegreville. They both cited concerns about the loss of jobs, loss of students, and the impact to the local economy. I, too, am very concerned about this closure, and I have written to the federal minister of immigration, as have my local MP and many of my colleagues. Closing this centre will definitely have an impact on Vegreville and the surrounding area, much like the coal generation shutdowns have a devastating effect on communities like Hanna and Forestburg. Unlike my colleagues on the government side, we are concerned about all Alberta jobs.

Unfortunately, what we see is that governments often have their minds made up, either for political reasons or ideology, long before announcements are made. Why don't the government members concentrate on saving Alberta jobs they can actually do something about by stopping the attacks on our coal industry? I wonder if either of the members has advocated for the people in Hanna, Forestburg, or any of the other communities that will be affected by their own ideological policies, or are they just poor-policy deniers?

Fort Saskatchewan is a huge industrial economy here in Alberta, heavily dependent on pipelines and continued development in the oil and gas industry. I wonder if their local MLA has discussed the implications of the Leap Manifesto with local industry leaders and their workers.

We are seeing in the election to the west that the Leap Manifesto line dance is alive and well within the NDP even though our local NDP government pretends not to know the steps. This government as well as its dance partners to the west and federally need to come clean with Albertans on what their actual intentions are. Albertans know exactly how this group actually feels about pipelines and our oil and gas industry. It's not much of a leap unless, of course, you're a poor-policy denier.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today, both from companies who feel they have not had adequate time or access to the consultation process around the changes to labour legislation. One is Mustang Well Services Ltd. from Calgary, and the other is the Canadian Federation of Independent Business.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also rise today to table eight letters from different organizations also calling for an extension and enhancement of a more robust consultation process with respect to labour and employment legislation. I have those from George Goldhoff, president and CEO of Pure Canadian Gaming; Rod Rundell, general manager of Chinook Drilling; John Voorhorst, C.V. Benefits Inc.; John Yates, director of IT for Pure Canadian Gaming . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, that information is in the report?

Mr. Gotfried: I'm tabling these.

The Speaker: How many more names are there?

Mr. Gotfried: . . . Sandra Legere, VP of human resources, Pure Canadian Gaming; Maaiké Ezinga, vice-president, human resources, Trico Group of Companies; and Mark von Schellwitz . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I think we got the substance. Pass it around. Let's go. We're done, okay?

Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a letter from the Sylvan Lake Chamber of Commerce with regard to the workplace legislation review and their concern that they were not properly informed and engaged with regard to the review. I have the five copies available.

I also have a letter from Hurley Well Service, county of Grande Prairie, with regard to employment standards and Labour Relations Code review. They are concerned that they were not properly engaged in the review process.

I have a letter here from Pure Canadian Gaming. This letter, actually CCed to me, was sent to the Hon. Christina Gray, Minister of Labour, with concerns over the labour legislation review. That's come from Jeff Craik, general manager, Casino Edmonton.

I have another letter from Pure Canadian Gaming with the same concerns. The minister has this letter; it was sent to her. It's from Tony Chen, executive manager of business development.

My last tabling today, Mr. Speaker, is from Pure Canadian Gaming. It is a letter with regard to the workplace legislation review and their concerns that there was not proper consultation done. This is from Vince Pao, executive director of marketing, Pure Canadian Gaming.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to rise today to offer five copies of letters from constituents who are opposed to, as they say, the NDP slamming through workplace legislation and are pleading with the government to slow down and truly consult with real Alberta stakeholders to ensure that the Alberta labour code truly reflects their reality's past, present, and future. Now, there are 41 different constituents who wrote in. Would you like me to read each of their names?

The Speaker: No, I sure would not.

Mr. Rodney: They sure would like their names to be known. I'll be happy to table them instead, and you can all read them for yourselves.

The Speaker: Thank you. [interjections] Quiet.

The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table a letter from a friend of mine, Mr. Pak Wong, who operates a hotel and a restaurant in nearby Provost, Alberta. He employs 26 people, and he, too, has concerns over the lack of consultation regarding the labour relations act.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table five copies of a letter I wrote on March 9 to the hon. Government House Leader quoting what the Premier said on the 20th of April, including that the "Alberta NDP policy is to replace the Public Affairs Bureau with a smaller group of communications professionals."

The Speaker: Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a letter here addressed to the Minister of Labour from the Pacific Western Group of Companies, who employs 3,500 employees just in Alberta. They're very concerned about the time they need for better consultation, so they're asking them to consider their request to extend the time with regard to the workplace legislation review. I have the requisite copies.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, I believe that we have one point of order today. The Government House Leader.

Point of Order

Preambles to Supplementary Questions

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rose today during question period, during, I believe, the second supplemental of a question from the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks. I didn't write it all down, but I got a fraction of it that will give the sense of it. The hon. member used "given" and then proceeded into an unrelated speech, which included "if a tree falls in a forest." You know that saying.

Now, you've ruled on this before, Mr. Speaker. "Given" is permitted and does not constitute a preamble if you're stating some premise for the question that follows or some fact upon which the question is based. Otherwise, I would ask that you rule that it's an inappropriate use and simply an attempt to get around the rule against preambles on supplementary questions.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, on April 6 in Hansard on page 549 you cautioned the same member: "Hon. member, I would respectfully ask that you contain the preambles. In fact, you already know that's not accepted, so please ask your question without the preamble. Please proceed." The hon. member is quite aware of this issue.

Now, Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules & Forms, sixth edition, citation 410(8) says, "Preambles to questions should be brief and supplementary questions require no preambles. Supplementary questions should flow from the answers of Ministers."

House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition, 2009, says:

The same guidelines which apply to initial questions apply to supplementary questions. They are to be constructed as "a follow-up device flowing from the response and ought to be a precise question put directly and immediately to the Minister, without any further statement."

Mr. Speaker, in House of Commons Procedure and Practice under principles and guidelines for oral questions it states, from Speaker Jerome in 1975, that:

Speaker Bosley elaborated further . . .

And he's talking about brevity.

There can be no doubt that the greatest enemy of the Question Period is the Member who offends this most important principle. In putting the original question on any subject, a Member may require an explanatory remark, but there is no reason for such a preamble to exceed one, carefully drawn sentence.

And, Mr. Speaker, to quote another Speaker of note, on page 472 of Alberta Hansard the Deputy Speaker – I'm sorry; I thought it was you – said:

I would like to offer a little bit of clarification, however, on preambles with the use of "given." It doesn't give you blanket permission to just string together a bunch of unrelated comments simply because you've said "given" in between them. I'd encourage you, hon. members, to please keep your supplementals relevant to the first question.

Thank you.

Mr. Speaker, the use of "given" is something that I'm very familiar with in this House, but it is based upon a premise for the supplemental question and is not simply something that you can say and then go on with some unrelated speech. So I would ask that you rule that in the future the rule against preambles ought not be circumvented in this way.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to the point of order this afternoon. I'd like to thank the Government House Leader for providing some context, which I believe made the case for the Member for Strathmore-Brooks. The Member for Strathmore-Brooks very specifically today asked three questions with respect to the use of a particular accounting tool that the government is using, some would suggest, to not provide all of the facts to Albertans. The Member for Strathmore-Brooks was merely highlighting that fact. I know that you have provided some feedback to the member inside this Chamber, and I also know that the member is efforting to ensure that he, too, is using the tools that are at the disposal of the opposition in the form of the use of "given" in our desire and ability to put together information that is reasonable and required for the question.

In many respects I think that this particular point of order has more to do with the opposition's ability to ask questions than it has to do with the preamble rule. There has been significant debate around this Chamber over a long period of time about whether or not this rule was an effective rule to keep order inside the Chamber. Again today we're seeing that it hasn't been but that, for whatever reason, there's a reluctance on behalf of the Government House Leader to review some of these challenges. I'm a little bit surprised because when in opposition, the Government House Leader was a master at utilizing the tools that were available to the opposition just as this opposition endeavours to do. So today for the Government House Leader to say that the Member for Strathmore-Brooks was just using the word "given" to put a few sentences together isn't close to the facts. My colleague in the opposition was utilizing a couple of analogies that are very important and useful to getting the point that he was making across, and that's exactly what happened.

Also today in the Chamber, with all due respect to my hon. colleague for Vermilion-Lloydminster, he also utilized some of these tools when it came to a quip that he utilized prior to his question, which is significantly different than a preamble, Mr. Speaker. The quip that he used, my colleague from the third party, was that that's not what the ICD graduates are saying. At that point in time you had no desire to interject about preambles because quips have been used as a tool to ensure that we can respond to what the minister has said just like the use of the word "given" or "since."

In this case my colleague used multiple givens in both supplementals. They were both on topic with respect to the same question, that the Finance minister was utilizing this very unique budgeting technique.

While I appreciate that these preambles sometimes – and I know that the Government House Leader mentioned that he would be brief; however, he wasn't. This tool is a very, very, very important tool that the opposition uses and will likely need to continue to use.

The Speaker: I'm not sure that I entirely agree with the Government House Leader with respect to the use of the word "given" because in my experience here in the last two years, that seems to have been a practice that's been accepted. By the way, I think you used the word "desire."

I, too, heard the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster make that quip, as you called it, but I decided in my patience and desire for protection of freedom of speech to not correct him. It is the freedom of speech question that we are speaking about here. Once you begin to erode that, it seems to me that we may be eroding the reason for this place.

Notwithstanding that, to the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks: we've discussed this several times today. I did hear it, and for the record this is what was said:

Given, Mr. Speaker, that if I had a nickel for every time the minister didn't answer the question I asked him, I could balance the budget, but given – let's try again – that if a tree falls in a forest and no one hears it, did it really fall?

I'm finding that "given," in fact, is not the kind of comment that would help answer your initial question.

In this particular instance I was not going to rule because I was hoping that this may change through experience, because there are many masters – and maybe someone in the back there would be an example of that – who are very good at that. In this particular instance I have to agree. There was a point of order, and I urge you, hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, to hone your skills a little bit more with respect to using givens that are tied to the initial question.

Hon. members, the daily Routine is now concluded. The legislative policy committee will convene this afternoon and tomorrow morning for consideration of the main estimates. Alberta's Economic Future Committee will consider the estimates for Education in the Rocky Mountain Room.

Postsecondary Education Funding

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For many years postsecondary institutions have been severely underfunded, which has led to a buildup of significant deferred maintenance liabilities. Given that this lack of adequate funding by the previous government has resulted in much fixing up being needed, to the Minister of Advanced Education: what is this government doing to address these issues at the University of Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the hon. member for the question. In a tough economy we're working to make life better for Albertans looking to return to school to upgrade their skills, and a crucial part of that is making sure that we have the facilities on campus to deliver a world-class education. We've heard from students and from our institutions that the previous government did leave a significant deferred maintenance liability, and it's one that our government is committed to addressing. That's why Budget 2017 provides $154 million for maintenance and repair work and identifies $676 million over the next four years at our postsecondary institutions.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Alberta is home to world-class postsecondary institutions which are in dire need of repairs due to previous government inaction, to the same minister: what other investments is the minister making in our postsecondary institutions across the province? [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hear the members opposite decrying the lack of toughness in the question. However, they didn't make those investments, that our government is making, for 44 years. I'm quite proud of the fact that we're investing $451 million in new and continuing capital projects, including two major renewals of existing facilities at our two largest universities. The University of Alberta will get the new dentistry and pharmacy restoration, and in Calgary we're committed to redeveloping and renovating the MacKimmie complex, which will create more than 500 new spaces for students at that university.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that well-maintained facilities are crucial to all of our postsecondary institutions but students require many more supports than that, to the same minister: what else is the government doing to support our students?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you again, Mr. Speaker. We're committed to making sure that Alberta students are able to access affordable, high-quality education on campuses all across the province. We proudly announced in this budget that we've extended the tuition freeze for a third year, and we've been consulting with students on the creation of a long-term framework for tuition. We've also allocated $3.6 million for mental health supports. This is a continuation of previous funding. After the completion of the pilot project, we're looking forward to rolling out a long-term strategy and funding for student mental health. We've been working with our colleagues at the Ministry of Health to be able to deliver this important program supporting students.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Air Ambulance Service in Southern Alberta

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just as southern Alberta's ground ambulance dispatch was centralized to Calgary, diverting rural ambulances to do Calgary's day-to-day work, so too goes southern Alberta's fixed-wing medevac service. The recent award of the medevac contract has southern Alberta fearing that medevac services will be pulled from southern Alberta airports and centralized in Calgary, resulting in longer transfer times. Can the Minister of Health confirm or deny that southern Alberta's medevacs are being consolidated to Calgary?

Ms Hoffman: That's not true, Mr. Speaker. They are not.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, given that there is no hangar space in Medicine Hat, affecting the ability of the new medevac provider to set up base, and given that it will take time to set up new facilities to originate medevacs from these cities for the critical health care that southern Albertans need, what assurances can the minister give that if the medevac operator cannot establish bases in southern Alberta in a timely fashion, this service will not be impacted and consolidated to a busy and congested Alberta international airport?

Ms Hoffman: I hope that the member heard the answer to the first question. The scope of the contract that went out for RFP was to continue to have those local services provided locally. So, Mr. Speaker, that's the contract that was bid on. They certainly have an opportunity to fulfill their end of the contract, as the person who was successful in that application. He's asking hearsay questions or theoretical questions. All I can tell you is that the intent and the plan is and will continue to be to have those air ambulances housed locally.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, we have heard these kinds of answers before, and they proved false.

Can the minister assure this House that if the awarded company is not able to establish the bases or have the new aircraft delivered in time, the contract will be retendered so that companies who have the ability to fulfill these obligations are able to vie for the work?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently in a grade 6 class they asked me about fake news, and now I'm hearing some fake questions. I have to say that we are committed to making sure that we're moving forward in an open and transparent way. There is an appeal process, I believe, under way. But everything is going to continue to be done locally, as the tender laid out.

Emergency Medical Services Funding

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, the members of this House will be familiar with the term "shell game," where skilled hands working at a furious pace attempt to confuse the observer. We all know that game and how it applies to the art of government budgeting. Now, I'm sure the government is waiting for a zinger or a gotcha-politics question, but I believe that in this case it's the government that's being deceived. To the Minister of Health. I'm speaking to you as a paramedic, embedded in that community with experience. You don't honestly believe that once you pay off an ambulance, you can cut the EMS budget for the cost of that ambulance, do you? Please answer carefully because paramedics are watching.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. It's clear that it is coming from a paramedic, not a conservative, because the conservatives of both parties have pushed for billions of dollars of cuts. While we are working with AHS to make sure that they continue to protect and support the front lines, we've made it very clear that we want to see their budget held harmless, and we've done so by arranging a meeting, that I was happy to facilitate, between paramedic representatives as well as with AHS, and that message was delivered very clearly. We're going to continue to support our front-line workers who every day work to support Albertans.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, given that the Health Sciences Association of Alberta president, who is also a paramedic, has denounced this budget cut and given that EMS is already underfunded to the tune of $20 million necessary to make a greater contribution to the health care system here in Alberta and given that this is over and above the $17 million that you in the Health department are going to cut, to the same minister: Minister, do you realize that in order for AHS, EMS not to cut front-line services, you need to restore the $17 million? Will you do that?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you for the question from the member, who does rightfully refer to the fact that the president of the HSAA is a paramedic. Mr. Speaker, the president with the HSAA sat down in a meeting with myself and the president of Alberta Health Services, and we articulated very clearly that we expect to maintain those front-line services, that it will be done by ensuring that we protect front-line workers and making sure that they have the resources that they require. We're waiting to see the AHS proposal for their budget, and when it is received, it will be posted publicly, and paramedics will be able to see that AHS is fulfilling their commitments that were made during that meeting.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that you have said time and time again that your government will invest in the most crucial of front-line services and given that there is a fentanyl crisis, a rise in posttraumatic stress syndrome, call volumes on the rise, the seriousness of calls on the rise, increasing hospital waits that are killing the morale of paramedics, Minister, I implore you to revisit this cut to front-line services.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, I'm very proud of the work that our paramedics do each and every day. I was proud to visit a number of them just last weekend here in Edmonton. I have to say that the work they do is crucially important to saving lives across Alberta. That's one of the reasons why we had this conversation, a face-to-face opportunity to have discussions with Alberta Health Services. They have also communicated with HSAA that they're going to make sure that they hold harmless the front lines. We're going to make sure that we protect them. I'm glad that the member opposite is standing up for paramedics. I hope that he will stand up for all Albertans because his party certainly is pushing for a far more drastic reality than the one that he is arguing for.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Condominium Property Act

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans throughout the province, including many of my constituents of Edmonton-McClung, are buying new condominiums. Buyers of condos must provide a significant cash deposit toward a unit before it's actually completed. To the Minister of Service Alberta: how will changes to the Condominium Property Act protect these customers and ensure that they get the unit that they pay for?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for his question. This government cares about everyday Albertans, and we believe that Albertans deserve to be protected, especially when making a large purchase as important as a home. That's why the amendments to the Condominium Property Act will ensure that anyone holding a purchase deposit in trust is subject to specific rules and held to high standards. The act will also ensure that homebuyers have options if developers make any changes to units between the time that they are bought and the time they are actually being built.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that there may be years between the day the purchase agreement is signed and the construction of the actual unit, to the same minister: how will the government make sure that purchasers ultimately get the unit they were promised?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The act makes it clear that the developer must notify the buyer whenever there is a material change to the homebuyer's unit. Where a change happens, homebuyers will have clear notice and the ability to take action if needed. Since taking office, we began exploring and implementing ways to expedite developing these new rules. This is just one example of how we're taking action and making life more affordable for Albertans.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, given that purchasers' deposit monies may be held in trust for a long period of time, to the same minister: what is the government doing to ensure that those funds are safeguarded?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We heard from Albertans, loud and clear, that when a developer does not finish on time, buyers ought to have the option to cancel the agreement and get their deposits back. The act makes it clear that all purchase money will be held by a specific trustee. Work is currently under way to develop regulations to set requirements for these trustees. Once these rules are in place, Albertans will be able to take comfort, knowing that their purchase deposits are safe and subject to regulatory standards.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thirty seconds for members to leave the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Energy Industry Jobs

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last Thursday the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville asked a question to the Labour minister regarding the federal government's decision to close the immigration case processing centre in Vegreville. They both cited concerns about the loss of jobs, loss of students, and the impact to the local economy. I, too, am very concerned about this closure, and I have written to the federal minister of immigration, as have my local MP and many of my colleagues. Closing this centre will definitely have an impact on Vegreville and the surrounding area, much like the coal generation shutdowns have a devastating effect on communities like Hanna and Forestburg. Unlike my colleagues on the government side, we are concerned about all Alberta jobs.

Unfortunately, what we see is that governments often have their minds made up, either for political reasons or ideology, long before announcements are made. Why don't the government members concentrate on saving Alberta jobs they can actually do something about by stopping the attacks on our coal industry? I wonder if either of the members has advocated for the people in Hanna, Forestburg, or any of the other communities that will be affected by their own ideological policies, or are they just poor-policy deniers?

Fort Saskatchewan is a huge industrial economy here in Alberta, heavily dependent on pipelines and continued development in the oil and gas industry. I wonder if their local MLA has discussed the implications of the Leap Manifesto with local industry leaders and their workers.

We are seeing in the election to the west that the Leap Manifesto line dance is alive and well within the NDP even though our local NDP government pretends not to know the steps. This government as well as its dance partners to the west and federally need to come clean with Albertans on what their actual intentions are. Albertans know exactly how this group actually feels about pipelines and our oil and gas industry. It's not much of a leap unless, of course, you're a poor-policy denier.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today, both from companies who feel they have not had adequate time or access to the consultation process around the changes to labour legislation. One is Mustang Well Services Ltd. from Calgary, and the other is the Canadian Federation of Independent Business.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also rise today to table eight letters from different organizations also calling for an extension and enhancement of a more robust consultation process with respect to labour and employment legislation. I have those from George Goldhoff, president and CEO of Pure Canadian Gaming; Rod Rundell, general manager of Chinook Drilling; John Voorhorst, C.V. Benefits Inc.; John Yates, director of IT for Pure Canadian Gaming . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, that information is in the report?

Mr. Gotfried: I'm tabling these.

The Speaker: How many more names are there?

Mr. Gotfried: . . . Sandra Legere, VP of human resources, Pure Canadian Gaming; Maaiké Ezinga, vice-president, human resources, Trico Group of Companies; and Mark von Schellwitz . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I think we got the substance. Pass it around. Let's go. We're done, okay?

Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a letter from the Sylvan Lake Chamber of Commerce with regard to the workplace legislation review and their concern that they were not properly informed and engaged with regard to the review. I have the five copies available.

I also have a letter from Hurley Well Service, county of Grande Prairie, with regard to employment standards and Labour Relations Code review. They are concerned that they were not properly engaged in the review process.

I have a letter here from Pure Canadian Gaming. This letter, actually CCed to me, was sent to the Hon. Christina Gray, Minister of Labour, with concerns over the labour legislation review. That's come from Jeff Craik, general manager, Casino Edmonton.

I have another letter from Pure Canadian Gaming with the same concerns. The minister has this letter; it was sent to her. It's from Tony Chen, executive manager of business development.

My last tabling today, Mr. Speaker, is from Pure Canadian Gaming. It is a letter with regard to the workplace legislation review and their concerns that there was not proper consultation done. This is from Vince Pao, executive director of marketing, Pure Canadian Gaming.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to rise today to offer five copies of letters from constituents who are opposed to, as they say, the NDP slamming through workplace legislation and are pleading with the government to slow down and truly consult with real Alberta stakeholders to ensure that the Alberta labour code truly reflects their reality's past, present, and future. Now, there are 41 different constituents who wrote in. Would you like me to read each of their names?

The Speaker: No, I sure would not.

Mr. Rodney: They sure would like their names to be known. I'll be happy to table them instead, and you can all read them for yourselves.

The Speaker: Thank you. [interjections] Quiet.

The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table a letter from a friend of mine, Mr. Pak Wong, who operates a hotel and a restaurant in nearby Provost, Alberta. He employs 26 people, and he, too, has concerns over the lack of consultation regarding the labour relations act.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table five copies of a letter I wrote on March 9 to the hon. Government House Leader quoting what the Premier said on the 20th of April, including that the "Alberta NDP policy is to replace the Public Affairs Bureau with a smaller group of communications professionals."

The Speaker: Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a letter here addressed to the Minister of Labour from the Pacific Western Group of Companies, who employs 3,500 employees just in Alberta. They're very concerned about the time they need for better consultation, so they're asking them to consider their request to extend the time with regard to the workplace legislation review. I have the requisite copies.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, I believe that we have one point of order today. The Government House Leader.

Point of Order

Preambles to Supplementary Questions

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rose today during question period, during, I believe, the second supplemental of a question from the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks. I didn't write it all down, but I got a fraction of it that will give the sense of it. The hon. member used "given" and then proceeded into an unrelated speech, which included "if a tree falls in a forest." You know that saying.

Now, you've ruled on this before, Mr. Speaker. "Given" is permitted and does not constitute a preamble if you're stating some premise for the question that follows or some fact upon which the question is based. Otherwise, I would ask that you rule that it's an inappropriate use and simply an attempt to get around the rule against preambles on supplementary questions.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, on April 6 in Hansard on page 549 you cautioned the same member: "Hon. member, I would respectfully ask that you contain the preambles. In fact, you already know that's not accepted, so please ask your question without the preamble. Please proceed." The hon. member is quite aware of this issue.

Now, Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules & Forms, sixth edition, citation 410(8) says, "Preambles to questions should be brief and supplementary questions require no preambles. Supplementary questions should flow from the answers of Ministers."

House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition, 2009, says:

The same guidelines which apply to initial questions apply to supplementary questions. They are to be constructed as "a follow-up device flowing from the response and ought to be a precise question put directly and immediately to the Minister, without any further statement."

Mr. Speaker, in House of Commons Procedure and Practice under principles and guidelines for oral questions it states, from Speaker Jerome in 1975, that:

Speaker Bosley elaborated further . . .

And he's talking about brevity.

There can be no doubt that the greatest enemy of the Question Period is the Member who offends this most important principle. In putting the original question on any subject, a Member may require an explanatory remark, but there is no reason for such a preamble to exceed one, carefully drawn sentence.

And, Mr. Speaker, to quote another Speaker of note, on page 472 of Alberta Hansard the Deputy Speaker – I'm sorry; I thought it was you – said:

I would like to offer a little bit of clarification, however, on preambles with the use of "given." It doesn't give you blanket permission to just string together a bunch of unrelated comments simply because you've said "given" in between them. I'd encourage you, hon. members, to please keep your supplementals relevant to the first question.

Thank you.

Mr. Speaker, the use of "given" is something that I'm very familiar with in this House, but it is based upon a premise for the supplemental question and is not simply something that you can say and then go on with some unrelated speech. So I would ask that you rule that in the future the rule against preambles ought not be circumvented in this way.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to the point of order this afternoon. I'd like to thank the Government House Leader for providing some context, which I believe made the case for the Member for Strathmore-Brooks. The Member for Strathmore-Brooks very specifically today asked three questions with respect to the use of a particular accounting tool that the government is using, some would suggest, to not provide all of the facts to Albertans. The Member for Strathmore-Brooks was merely highlighting that fact. I know that you have provided some feedback to the member inside this Chamber, and I also know that the member is efforting to ensure that he, too, is using the tools that are at the disposal of the opposition in the form of the use of "given" in our desire and ability to put together information that is reasonable and required for the question.

In many respects I think that this particular point of order has more to do with the opposition's ability to ask questions than it has to do with the preamble rule. There has been significant debate around this Chamber over a long period of time about whether or not this rule was an effective rule to keep order inside the Chamber. Again today we're seeing that it hasn't been but that, for whatever reason, there's a reluctance on behalf of the Government House Leader to review some of these challenges. I'm a little bit surprised because when in opposition, the Government House Leader was a master at utilizing the tools that were available to the opposition just as this opposition endeavours to do. So today for the Government House Leader to say that the Member for Strathmore-Brooks was just using the word "given" to put a few sentences together isn't close to the facts. My colleague in the opposition was utilizing a couple of analogies that are very important and useful to getting the point that he was making across, and that's exactly what happened.

Also today in the Chamber, with all due respect to my hon. colleague for Vermilion-Lloydminster, he also utilized some of these tools when it came to a quip that he utilized prior to his question, which is significantly different than a preamble, Mr. Speaker. The quip that he used, my colleague from the third party, was that that's not what the ICD graduates are saying. At that point in time you had no desire to interject about preambles because quips have been used as a tool to ensure that we can respond to what the minister has said just like the use of the word "given" or "since."

In this case my colleague used multiple givens in both supplementals. They were both on topic with respect to the same question, that the Finance minister was utilizing this very unique budgeting technique.

While I appreciate that these preambles sometimes – and I know that the Government House Leader mentioned that he would be brief; however, he wasn't. This tool is a very, very, very important tool that the opposition uses and will likely need to continue to use.

The Speaker: I'm not sure that I entirely agree with the Government House Leader with respect to the use of the word "given" because in my experience here in the last two years, that seems to have been a practice that's been accepted. By the way, I think you used the word "desire."

I, too, heard the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster make that quip, as you called it, but I decided in my patience and desire for protection of freedom of speech to not correct him. It is the freedom of speech question that we are speaking about here. Once you begin to erode that, it seems to me that we may be eroding the reason for this place.

Notwithstanding that, to the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks: we've discussed this several times today. I did hear it, and for the record this is what was said:

Given, Mr. Speaker, that if I had a nickel for every time the minister didn't answer the question I asked him, I could balance the budget, but given – let's try again – that if a tree falls in a forest and no one hears it, did it really fall?

I'm finding that "given," in fact, is not the kind of comment that would help answer your initial question.

In this particular instance I was not going to rule because I was hoping that this may change through experience, because there are many masters – and maybe someone in the back there would be an example of that – who are very good at that. In this particular instance I have to agree. There was a point of order, and I urge you, hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, to hone your skills a little bit more with respect to using givens that are tied to the initial question.

Hon. members, the daily Routine is now concluded. The legislative policy committee will convene this afternoon and tomorrow morning for consideration of the main estimates. Alberta's Economic Future Committee will consider the estimates for Education in the Rocky Mountain Room.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us reflect and pray, each in our own way. Today marks the 101st anniversary of women receiving the right to vote, a milestone that should never be forgotten. Allow that event to serve as a reminder of the power of equality and that we are stronger when we are equal.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you 22 amazing students from Meyokumin school in the beautiful and ethnically diverse constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie. They are accompanied today by their teacher, Susan Rehacek, and one of the parents, Dennis Baleja, who I've had the pleasure of meeting and discussing policy with at community events. I'd ask them all to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Labour and minister responsible for democratic renewal.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 28 students from the excellent Meyonohk school in Edmonton in the greater community of Mill Woods. This is one of the handful of schools in Edmonton that offers a Mandarin bilingual program. Meyonohk school incorporates Chinese culture into their learning, and students in the grades 4 to 6 regular English program also receive French as a second language. Meyonohk, translated from the Cree language, means a nice place to be. I can assure you that it is. With them is their teacher, Ms Danielle Woodman. I'd like to request all of the students and their teacher to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour today to rise and introduce to you and through you to the rest of the Assembly 23 students who come from the wonderful St. Martha school in Edmonton-McClung. I'm pleased to announce they are accompanied by teachers Paul McNeely, Sylvia Franklin, and Nicole Aasgard as well as chaperone Dolores Sandalo. It's a very active school, which has featured movie nights, pyjama dance nights, a silent auction soon to happen, a very active parent council, and I'm happy to participate with them. I wish for them to be welcomed by the Assembly in the traditional way now.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other school groups? The Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House the grade 6 social class from G.H. Dawe public school in my riding of Red Deer-North. With the help of great educators such as Deanna Labranche and Daryl Puzey, these students are here today to gain first-hand experience regarding provincial governance to assist in understanding the context of their curriculum. I ask my guests to rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly Dale Smith. Dale was a page in this Assembly from 1994 to 1996. He currently resides in Ottawa and is a freelance journalist in the Canadian parliamentary press gallery. Dale has written for the Ottawa Citizen, the National Post, Maclean's, Canadian Business, Canadian Press, iPolitics.ca, and The Hill Times, and he's recently released a book titled The Unbroken Machine: Canada's Democracy in Action. Dale is seated in the members' gallery, and I ask that he now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you an amazing group of community leaders from the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Castle Downs. They are members of the Castle Downs Recreation Society, also known as CDRS, and I will be speaking about this later in my member's statement. Please rise as I say your name: Lynnette Thompson, president of CDRS; Nadine Meads, president of Castle Downs Variety Show; Lorna Lewis, chair of the CDRS bingo; and Vini Buecken, member of CDRS International. Thank you so much for making it here today, and please accept the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce guests who are leaders in the Ukrainian community involved in a cross-country project to raise awareness of the Holodomor. The Holodomor mobile classroom arrived in Alberta to educate and engage students and visitors about this tragic period of Ukrainian history. This classroom on wheels is at our front steps today until 4 p.m. and will be visiting a number of schools throughout Alberta thereafter. I ask that Mr. Bohdan Onyschuk, Canada Ukraine Foundation president; Mrs. Roma Dzerowicz, Canadian executive director of the Holodomor bus; as well as Ms Olesia Luciw-Andryjowycz, president of the Ukrainian Canadian Congress Alberta Provincial Council; and Mrs. Slavka Shulakewych, provincial co-ordinator of the Ukrainian Canadian Congress Alberta Provincial Council, please rise and receive the warm welcome of this House and our appreciation.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Service Alberta and Minister of Status of Women.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you today Julia Hayter, my fabulous constituency assistant. It is very fitting that she is here today. She is also a very strong feminist and an excellent role model to her three children. She always has a friendly face, and she has boundless energy. I would certainly be lost without her. I am also proud to call her my friend. Here with her today is her son Liam Hayter. They are in Edmonton from Calgary so that Liam could compete in his dance competitions as it is dance season. He has performed a ballet duet and received high silver today. Very impressive. I'd ask that they stand to receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

Government Policies

Mr. Stier: Mr. Speaker, under this NDP government things have gone from bad to worse for Albertans. In just two short years they've imposed a radical agenda of economic experiments and job-killing tax hikes. Eighty-four thousand full-time jobs are now gone, a hundred thousand Albertans are on EI, and a record number of people are crowding into homeless shelters and food banks. While Albertans are suffering, the NDP is calling them names like, and I quote, embarrassing cousins and sewer rats.

The government's lawsuit against power companies and the flip-flop on a new Crown corporation have investors worried that they don't respect contracts or the rule of law.

Amidst all of this the $5 billion carbon tax is bleeding families dry. The NDP didn't campaign on it, and Albertans don't want it despite this government spending over $10 million on carbon tax propaganda. The Premier swore up and down that all this money would stay in Alberta. Here's the truth, though. The carbon tax will transfer $140 million straight to Ottawa. But that's their MO. They're using carbon tax money to transfer wealth like when they gave Ecofitt, an NDP-friendly company from Ontario, tens of millions of dollars to screw in free light bulbs.

The writing is on the wall for business, also. Shell, ConocoPhillips, major international companies: they're all getting out of Dodge. Meanwhile our Premier is making political enemies of our closest allies in Saskatchewan and B.C. It's just one disaster after another from this government.

So let's take a look at where we're going. They've sent us down a road that leads to nowhere but more credit downgrades and a record $74 billion of debt. This will soon cost us billions every year in interest payments. The NDP just doesn't understand Alberta no matter how hard they try. Albertans, though, don't play second fiddle or aim for the middle. Albertans lead. This government doesn't understand that, but Albertans do, and they can't wait to put Albertans back in charge of this province in 2019.

Passover

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Passover, or Pesach in Hebrew, is an eight-day festival celebrated from the 15th through the 22nd of the Hebrew month of Nissan. The tradition in ancient Israel held that the first day of Nissan would not start until the barley was ripe. It is one of the most widely observed Jewish holidays. It commemorates the freedom of the people of Israel from slavery in ancient Egypt. God helped the children of Israel escape from the Pharaoh's slavery in Egypt by inflicting 10 plagues upon the ancient Egyptians. While doing so, God spared the children of Israel, passing over their homes, hence the name of the holiday. Pharaoh's resistance broke, and 600,000 adult males plus many more women and children fled slavery that day and began their trek to freedom and Mount Sinai.

It is said that they left in such a hurry that they could not wait for bread dough to rise, or leaven. With only this food they relied on the Almighty to provide sustenance for the entire Jewish nation: men, women and children. Each year, to remember this, unleavened bread called matzo is eaten on the first two nights of Passover.

People of the Jewish community also observe Passover through celebrations such as Seder, where people gather to retell the story of their liberation from Egypt and take part in the Seder ceremony. Passover for the Jewish community is also a festival of freedom, commemorating not only their history but also the importance of this basic human right.

Mr. Speaker, we are blessed to live in a province with a rich multicultural history and with the freedom to express our faith in the manner of our choosing.

Passover was celebrated this year from April 10th to April 18th. In Calgary-Glenmore the celebration was held in the homes of constituents and in the Calgary Jewish Community Centre and Beth Tzedec synagogue. I hope this year's celebration of freedom, hope, and new life was enjoyed by all members of the Jewish community.

Thank you.

Armenian Genocide

Mr. Rodney: I rise to remember the Armenian genocide, which was perpetrated against the Ottoman Empire's Armenian population between 1915 and 1923. Two hundred and fifty Armenian intellectuals and community leaders were imprisoned, deported, and assassinated. A law was passed authorizing the deportation of the entire Armenian population. There were mass murders of entire villages. Women and children were burned alive or drowned in the Black Sea very close to where my maternal grandmother was born.

Those who did not meet this gruesome fate were deported by the hundreds of thousands and marched into the desert to die of thirst, hunger, disease, and exposure. Deportees who somehow survived these miracle marches were sent to die in one of the 25 concentration camps along what is now Turkey's border with Syria and Iraq. One and a half million Armenian lives were exterminated as the international community watched, powerless to stop the atrocities. Two decades later the world witnessed a genocide again in the form of the Holocaust.

Mr. Speaker, here in Canada our new leader cosponsored the parliamentary motion recognizing the Armenian genocide, and Prime Minister Harper was the first to recognize it on behalf of the government of Canada. They did so because we have a duty to remember and to learn from this first genocide of the 20th century.

Tragically, the hatred that leads to genocide exists in our time. Armenians and other indigenous minorities have faced attempted genocide at the hands of ISIS in Iraq and Syria, which is one of the reasons why Canada has welcomed hundreds of Armenians and thousands of other resettled refugees from that region.

I pray for the hundreds of thousands of lives lost and for those still in harm's way, and I join Armenians across Alberta and around the globe in remembering the crimes perpetrated against their people. Let us strengthen our collective resolve to never again allow hatred to turn into the mass violence of genocide. We owe it to the 1 and a half million Armenians and the millions more who have lost their lives in acts of genocide.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Castle Downs Recreation Society

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to highlight the incredible work of the Castle Downs Recreation Society, also known as the CDRS, in the magnificent community of Edmonton-Castle Downs. The society was first established in 1983 and includes CDRS International and the Castle Downs Variety Show. The board itself is made up of representatives from six community leagues who work collaboratively with the city of Edmonton and the Castle Downs Family YMCA. This allows for over 60,000 residents of northwest Edmonton to be served by the society. The society prides itself on community engagement. Just a few of the many successful events are Canada Day, Winter Fest, and the annual Castle Downs Variety Show. These have all become family traditions for those who live in north Edmonton.

I highly recommend attending the variety show, which just wrapped up their 32nd season. Volunteers return year after year, showcasing their incredible talents and making memories. Last year was very exciting as the cast and crew received a community facility enhancement program grant to upgrade their staging and their sound equipment. Our government was happy and proud to support the Castle Downs Variety Show and continues to promote initiatives across Alberta that encourage community engagement.

To Lynnette Thompson, a 30-year member and current president of the CDRS board as well as the chair of park development; Nadine Meads, board member and current chair for the Castle Downs Variety Show and president for the Dunluce Community League; Lorna Lewis, current member and bingo chair; and Vini Buecken, a member of CDRS International: thanks for all the dedication and commitment of those here today as well as the many others who work tirelessly behind the scenes to ensure that Castle Downs Recreation Society is a vibrant pillar in our community.

As a resident of Castle Downs for more than 20 years and now working so closely and collaboratively with you, I thank you for welcoming my office into the fold and for all of your hard work for the residents of north Edmonton.

Thank you.

Government Innovations

Mr. Westhead: Mr. Speaker, April 15 to 21 each year is World Creativity and Innovation Week. It begins on Leonardo da Vinci's birthday and ends on World Creativity and Innovation Day. Its purpose is to provide time to encourage and enable new thinking, to create new futures, to make the world a better place, and to make space and time to generate new ideas. This initiative is spearheaded locally in Canmore by Marci Segal, who has achieved recognition for her efforts from the United Nations.

In honour of this week, I'd like to recognize our government's creative and innovative approach that is making life better for Albertans. We are taking an innovative approach to address climate change that is getting results and leading the country. Two pipeline approvals are proof of that. Imagine: a government embarking on a school nutrition program or a $25-a-day daycare program. Ah. No need to imagine that, Mr. Speaker. It's a dream come true.

That's what happens when you elect a government that is nearly gender balanced, reflects our province's diversity, and has Albertans' backs. Social issues aren't stale. On the contrary, they provide opportunities for creative solutions that make a meaningful difference in the lives of Albertans. For instance, it took the election of this forward-thinking government to remove limitations for survivors of sexual and domestic violence to file a claim and to ensure gender identity and gender expression as basic human rights. Even the oil sands emissions cap, the modernized royalty framework, and the 30 per cent renewable energy target are resulting in creative and innovative market-based solutions in Alberta's energy sector.

I'm glad that this government is thinking out of the box. In Banff-Cochrane we have public transit, affordable housing, and the approval of a decade-overdue intersection to show for it. I'm proud to be part of a government that is focused on creative and innovative ways to make life better.

Thank you.

Brooks Bandits Junior Hockey Championship

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, 2017 is a great year for Alberta hockey. The Flames are in the playoffs, the Oilers are in the playoffs, but last night wasn't very good for the orange team. They're still in the running. But before we lose all hope about another missed championship, I implore all members to have faith in the Brooks Bandits. The Brooks Bandits have charged their way through the Alberta Junior Hockey League championship. When they won the Alberta Gas Drive Cup last night, they swept the Whitecourt Wolverines 4-nothing in the championship series. They're going all the way to the western Canadian finals.

Now, speaking of Whitecourt, I made a friendly wager for a six-pack of delicious Wild Rose beer with the Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne that the Calgary Flames would outlast the Edmonton Oilers in the playoffs. Most members of this House know that I have made a few wagers from time to time, and so far I've won, but in this case I feel the need to probably hedge my bets a bit. But since he didn't bet on his own team in Whitecourt, I think we might be even. I can understand him not wanting to bet against the Bandits, though. They are led by our captain, Nick Prkusic, and the coach, Ryan Papaioannou, to make the Brooks Bandits positively unstoppable this year.

We also have our not-so-secret weapon, Cale Makar, who is ninth in line for the NHL draft pick. My hope is that when Cale has finished his time with the Bandits, he will be drafted by Alberta's only real NHL team, the Flames. Many Flames fans on this side of the House will not shed a tear when the orange team loses in the playoffs or in 2019, but, friends, let's not let this divide us. Regardless of our politics or how long our two big teams may last in the playoffs, we can all agree that the Brooks Bandits are Alberta's team.

Statement by the Speaker

Referring to a Member by Name

The Speaker: Hon. members, just as sort of a reminder, I did not hear this personally, but it's been pointed out to me that during what is affectionately now known in the House as heckling, first names may have been used. I would remind you that first names are not used in the House, and that's not only in terms of speeches but also with respect to comments.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

GST on Carbon Levy

Mr. Jean: This NDP carbon tax is one of the biggest rip-offs in Alberta history. It's nickel and diming families and businesses everywhere they turn: on their groceries, at the pumps, and on their home heating bills. Now new information confirms that the NDP carbon tax is just another tax on tax, giving Ottawa hundreds of millions of dollars in new revenue from the GST. The NDP have known for months that their carbon tax is just another gift to Ottawa from Albertans. Why didn't the NDP do anything to stop this fiasco?

Ms Hoffman: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member should know that the GST applies to provincial levies and taxes. Why should he know that? Because when he ran federally, he campaigned with a promise to remove the GST from these situations. And what did he do when he was in Ottawa? He broke that promise. Say one thing; do another: it's a pattern with the Leader of the Official Opposition. This is a situation that he promised he'd fix, and instead he only made it worse.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Factless, totally factless.

Now, I know the NDP don't want to hurt the feelings of their political allies in Ottawa, their new BFFs, but here are the facts. Albertans already send $24 billion more to Ottawa every single year than we get back in transfers or services from Ottawa, and while tens of thousands of oil and gas workers are out of a job, Ottawa just raised taxes on our oil and gas industry. It's unfair, and it's just not right. We know the Premier refuses to do the sensible thing and repeal the carbon tax – we wish she would – but why won't the Premier fight Ottawa for an exemption on the GST on the carbon tax?

Ms Hoffman: The real question, Mr. Speaker, is: why did the member opposite promise to do something and then do nothing when he actually had the opportunity for 10 years in Ottawa? I know the member opposite is used to getting direction from Ottawa, and that seems to be the case again today, but let me tell you some real facts. Today the Business Development Bank's chief economist, Pierre Cl  roux, said that Alberta is going to have better growth than Saskatchewan, than Newfoundland, that we're seeing more investment right now in Alberta. This is going to be a great year for Alberta. There's going to be a turnaround, and we're going to build on that from this year forward. Those are the real facts.

Mr. Jean: A load of carbon tax.

The fact is that Albertans need fuel to live and work, and they really don't like government taking more from their pockets to do simple things like driving their kids to school, for instance, or maybe to an extracurricular activity. The Premier along with the Prime Minister have insisted that the money collected from the carbon tax will stay in Alberta. Well, we know that that is simply not the truth. All this tax does is make people poorer while growing the size of this government. Why did the Premier refuse to tell Albertans the full truth on the costs of the carbon tax they don't want?

Ms Hoffman: Here's the truth, Mr. Speaker. We know the cost of doing nothing because that's exactly what happened when the member opposite was in Ottawa with his new best friend. That's because on that side of the House they don't want Alberta to succeed. They are not proud of the fact that we got two – two – new pipeline approvals. We did that because we showed courage. We did that because we're working in partnership. We're working with industry. They stand with us. The job creators stand with us. Alberta is on the way up, and the members opposite know it.

The Speaker: Second main question.

Mr. Jean: On the way up, Mr. Speaker? Record unemployment numbers are here in Alberta today because of the NDP.

Energy Efficiency Programs

Mr. Jean: The NDP's new energy efficiency program, announced yesterday, creates an instant rebate program for things like LED lights, programmable thermostats, water-saving devices, and smart power strips. It sounds familiar, mostly because they're the same products offered in the NDP's Ecofitt boondoggle, and the way I see it, the NDP either realize how awful their Ecofitt program is, or they realized Albertans are actually capable of screwing in their own light bulbs. When will the Premier come clean to Albertans and cancel this wasteful duplication of a program?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much for the opportunity to talk about the great energy efficiency program that we have here in Alberta, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are excited about the opportunity to save energy and to save money on their power bills and put that back in their own pockets. Alberta contractors are excited about what this will mean for them in terms of new jobs. This is just the beginning. Last month we added 20,000 new full-time jobs in Alberta. These programs are going to add more. This government is getting real action and real results by our jobs plan.

Mr. Jean: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's obvious that the NDP government must realize how bad their Ecofitt boondoggle is. Why else would they announce two programs just a couple of months apart which do the same thing? It doesn't make sense. They're spending Albertans' hard-earned money collected through the carbon tax like it's Monopoly money. There is no doubt that the energy efficiency program announced yesterday will be more cost-effective than the NDP actually hiring an Ontario company to go into houses in Alberta to change Albertans' light bulbs, that's for sure. Will the Premier face the facts and cancel her Ecofitt boondoggle, or do we expect a third one in a couple of months?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are excited to have an opportunity to work with a government that's helping them save money, and some of these things sound familiar because they've been happening for decades across North America. Where weren't they happening? In Alberta. The members opposite want to pretend that they can ignore reality, but we're not doing that. We're helping Albertans save money, we're getting access with two new pipeline approvals, and 350 contractors, Alberta contractors, have already registered to be part of this program. [interjections]

The Speaker: Would you keep the volume down, please.

Mr. Jean: We all know that a favourite pastime of this government is pushing the NDP world view on Albertans. Both the Ecofitt boondoggle and the new energy efficiency program require time set aside for training of program participants. When Ecofitt comes into your home to change your light bulbs, you will also get the privilege of getting lectured on the NDP world view. It seems that Alberta contractors will be trained in that lecturing, too. Will the Premier tell us what chapter of the Leap Manifesto she'll be pushing on Albertans through these programs? [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet, please. [interjections] Quiet, please.
The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the residential no-cost program is going to save Albertans an average of about $112 per year. The only ones who are unhappy about that are the Wildrose, who continue to make fun of the 90,000 Albertans who have signed up for that program. With the new programs announced yesterday – the rebates for windows, for tankless hot water heaters, and for insulation – again the Wildrose continues to make fun of those Albertans. So many of them were interested in it yesterday that the website crashed. Albertans want to save money. The Wildrose want to . . .

The Speaker: Hon. minister, when I stand, would you please sit down? Thank you.

I think we're at the third main question.

Educational Curriculum Review Survey

Mr. Jean: It will come as no surprise to many Albertans that the NDP government has been less than forthcoming about the results of their curriculum review survey. While more than 32,000 Albertans took the time to participate in the survey, obviously important, the Education minister chose to only reveal hand-picked results from the review. Why? Well, I can only guess that they wanted to push results that aligned with the NDP world view or maybe the Leap Manifesto. Will the Premier commit to more openness and transparency and make the full results of the curriculum survey available to all Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much for the question. It highlights the survey that we had with Albertans, the largest survey that we've ever had with Alberta Education, more than 32,000 participants, and we published the results. Quite frankly, we published the good, the bad, and the slightly awkward even. There were 50 people who said that we should get rid of Shakespeare. As an English teacher we're not going to do that. [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet.

Mr. Jean: When I travel our province, I hear time and time again about how worried our parents are about their students being prepared in things like math and reading. They want Alberta to return to basics and to once again be a world leader in education, as we were 25 years ago. The curriculum survey itself asked leading questions that certainly don't allow parents to focus on these concerns that are important. Will the Premier commit to putting an end to our children being treated like guinea pigs in the classroom and listen to the concerned parents, who very much care about their children's welfare?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I certainly invite both the hon. Leader of the Opposition and all Albertans to fill out the next questionnaire, talking about the scope and sequence for our education system. You know, so many Albertans did participate in this enterprise because they are concerned, and every step of the way we are putting this out in a very transparent manner. We know that we can make life better for Albertans, better than any other investment, by putting it into our education system. Our caucus has done so. We've built a budget that will support that, and I would advise the hon. member to support that budget, too, for Education.

Mr. Jean: The rollout of results from the curriculum survey clearly points to the NDP government working towards a predetermined end result that will satisfy government bureaucrats and no one else, certainly not Albertans. Without seeing how concerned Albertans actually answered the survey, we'll just have to take the NDP's word for it. That doesn't really sit well with me, and it doesn't sit well with parents who want to see their children succeed. Unless the Premier has something to hide, she should have no problems whatsoever in releasing the survey results. Premier, my question is simple. Will you release the actual results to Albertans? Yes or no? What are you hiding from Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, sometimes you learn a lot from putting out surveys. For example, we perhaps need to have better education for opposition members to read survey results, which are published in their fulsome wholesomeness for everybody to read. Certainly, it gives us lots of interesting directions to go to, a sense of transparency every step of the way, to make sure that we provide the best education for Alberta students.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This NDP government's energy inefficiency program sees people travelling across three provinces to screw in Alberta light bulbs. Not the brightest idea. The government claims that over 90,000 people have applied for the program even though a small fraction will be able to take advantage. A lot of valuable data is being collected for any number of uses. Albertans have a right to know what will happen to this data and their privacy. To the Premier: can you assure this House that all Albertans' information will not be mined by the NDP for your re-election purposes?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet, please.
The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, we can assure the House that that is the case.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, this NDP government is misleading Albertans. The government's Energy Efficiency Alberta website has a section, which I will table today, which says: "Energy Efficiency Alberta's official agents will visit your home or business only when invited and will provide you with official identification. They are not selling anything, and they will never ask you for money." We know that they are expected to offer goods and services that are not a hundred per cent free. To the minister: if your official agent with identification won't be asking for money and selling, who will be? When will you correct the misleading website?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, Albertans will be able to sign up and receive no-cost residential installation of select products which will save them, on average, about $112 a year. In addition, yesterday we announced a contractor program in which Alberta homeowners can receive rebates for the installation of new insulation, high-efficiency windows, and tankless hot water heaters. Those will also make life more affordable for Albertans and actually repair the fact that we're the only place in North America without an energy efficiency strategy thanks to the PC government.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: The minister just admitted that someone will be asking for money because that's the only way it can be rebated. She didn't answer the question.

The NDP are vote buying with free stuff and subsidized stuff through Energy Efficiency Alberta. To make matters worse, the CRA says that the carbon tax will cost $150 million a year when this program gets into full flight. To the Premier: when will you realize that you don't work for those people in Ontario whom you've hired to deliver this program? Start putting Albertans first. They need a Premier that loves them, too.

Ms Hoffman: Speaking of Ontario, Mr. Speaker, I hope that that member asks his new leader why he didn't in fact fix the very situation that his party campaigned to fix many, many years ago. This isn't new. It's not news to the member opposite. We're working to make sure that we increase market access; get good results for Albertans, like two pipelines; and save money, putting $212 back into a typical Albertan family's household pocket. This is good news, and I'm proud to stand up for it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Highway 2 Gaetz Avenue Interchange in Red Deer

Mr. Clark: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Gaetz Avenue interchange project was announced with great fanfare in 2016. In addition to the safety improvements for all who travel the QE II, the people of Red Deer and central Alberta are relying on the project to be completed in time to handle the increased traffic that will come from the 2019 Canada Winter Games. But the last few times I drove by, I couldn't help but notice the lack of activity. So I looked into it, and it appears that all may not be well with the project. To the Minister of Transportation: has work stopped on the Gaetz Avenue interchange project, and if so, will it be done on time?

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation and Infrastructure.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'm not aware of what the hon. member is referring to. I do not believe that work has stopped on the project. But since he believes that to be the case, I will certainly look into it and get back to him.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad to hear that the minister will look into it.

I have been told by the people in Red Deer that there are challenges with the project. I understand and was told that there's a stop-work order on the project because the steel used is not up to standards. Again to the Minister of Transportation: is that true?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you. Well, I know that the hon. member's question is getting members on the other side excited, Mr. Speaker.

I am unaware of this issue. I will look into it, and I will get back to the member.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Now, I understand also that the procurement process on this particular project has been different than the ones they've used in the past. The question is to the Minister of Transportation again. Is it true, in fact, and if so, did the new process lead to delays with the project?

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much for that question. Mr. Speaker, as I said, I'll get back to the hon. member.

I want to tell the House that this government is contributing over $4 billion towards projects that are putting people back to work, Mr. Speaker, that are getting Albertans building things throughout the province. That project will improve safety in the Red Deer area. It will put hundreds of people to work, and it will really boost this economy, something this government is doing to make life better for Alberta families.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Northern Hills.

Public Transit Capital Funding

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the MLA for Calgary-Northern Hills I represent a growing and newer residential community. Living on the northern edge of Calgary, one of the greatest challenges residents of my community face is efficient and more frequent and accessible public transit. To the Minister of Transportation: do you have a plan to help fund Calgary's priority transit project, the green line?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I want to assure the hon. member of this government's commitment to public transit, including supporting both major cities on their LRT network. The city of Calgary has yet to refine the details of the project in terms of its scope, its timing, and total cost. I've indicated to the city of Calgary – and I've had many conversations with the mayor on this matter – that when they have a final ask in terms of this, we are certainly going to sit down with them and consider it because public transportation is a key priority of this government.

2:10

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that many Albertans, including residents of Calgary-Northern Hills, are eager to see transit projects move forward, to the Minister of Transportation: will you make a firm commitment to funding public transit infrastructure in the coming year? [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet.

The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very happy to tell the hon. member that that has already taken place. We're investing, as part of our four-year capital plan, $1.3 billion in transit funding initiatives to connect communities, to enhance access to markets and services, and to make life better for Albertans. It includes $305 million over four years for new transit initiatives to support both regional and green transit infrastructure projects in Alberta. This government is committed to making life better for Albertans.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Alberta's economy has been experiencing a downturn and many Albertans are in need of work, including Calgarians, again to the Minister of Transportation: how does the plan to build public transit put Albertans to work and help support economic diversification?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet, please.

Mr. Mason: I know, Mr. Speaker, that the economy is on many people's minds. That's why our government is investing in infrastructure throughout the province. We create jobs in construction, in engineering, design, and many of these jobs are in the city of Calgary, I just might say. It provides affordable alternatives to single-family vehicles for Alberta families, part of our commitment to make life more affordable for Alberta families.

Continuing Care Wait Times

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, when a senior needs continuing care, extended wait times can be catastrophic for everyone. I've seen what a wait time for a loved one suffering from Alzheimer's can do, and I've seen it almost kill the spouse as they tried to care for the most important person in their life. According to the AHS third-quarter performance report Alberta seniors have only a 56 per cent chance of finding a continuing care placement within 30 days. To the minister: when can our seniors, the men and women who built this province, expect better results?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the important question. This certainly is one of the issues that matter a lot to Alberta families. When you are aging and you require additional supports, you deserve to be able to have access to that in a timely fashion, to live in a homelike environment. That's one of the reasons why while the opposition and the third party were lobbying for big, deep cuts in the last campaign, we were campaigning on building 2,000 new long-term care and continuing care beds. We're really proud to keep moving forward with that initiative. There is still much more work to be done, but we are working to make sure that we make life better for Alberta seniors.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that these long wait times are getting worse under this government's watch and that families are suffering and given that in southern Alberta, or the south zone, seniors only have a 48 per cent chance of being placed within 30 days – the system is obviously failing seniors – and given that in the summary of the report it states, and I quote, that the south and the north zones have remained stable, does the minister really think that a failing grade is stable, or do southern Alberta seniors just not matter in the eyes of this government?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every Albertan matters to this side of the House. We are working diligently to make sure that we are building those 2,000 very much-needed long-term care and dementia beds. We're making sure that we're working in partnership with communities to make sure that everyone can age with dignity and respect. That's important to us, and that's one of the reasons why not only are we moving forward with the capital projects that are much needed in this province, but we're actually providing operating funding to make sure that those beds can actually be staffed, that seniors can have dignity, instead of pushing for billions of dollars in cuts, which the members opposite are advocating for.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that self-managed care increases the quality of life for seniors and lowers costs on the system and given that we have heard that AHS enacted changes in the fall of 2016 so that clients residing in privately operated supported living settings are no longer eligible to receive self-managed care funding, why is the NDP stopping seniors from receiving self-managed care funding in private settings at a time when seniors are facing long wait times for continuing care placements?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Each potential home-care client is assessed individually to determine whether or not he or she has any unmet health care needs that could be addressed under self-managed care. Clients receive funding to hire and pay for their own unmet personal care. So there would be individual assessments that are done to determine if there is unmet care. We did touch on this in estimates. I'm happy to discuss this matter further if the member would choose to, but I think that there's perhaps some lack of information, and I'd be happy to provide it to the member.

Workplace Legislation Review

Mr. Gottfried: Mr. Speaker, yesterday opposition parties shared Albertans' concerns about the inadequacy of consultation with respect to broad changes being considered by this government to both the labour code and employment standards. These changes will impact every business in Alberta, with small and medium-sized enterprises being particularly affected. All that these individuals and businesses ask for is meaningful consultation and for their views to be heard and considered. To the Minister of Labour: will you do the right thing, reopen consultation, enhance it, and extend it at least until the end of the calendar year? And, please, this is not a question about 1980s pop trivia.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. During tough economic times Albertans need legislation that protects families. The former government held consultations and did reports on Alberta's workplace legislation, too, but then what did they do with it? They did nothing. The member opposite is speaking about the concerns of Alberta businesses. I'm very much interested in working with businesses as we move forward, but I'm also listening to the concerns of Alberta workers, concerns like talking to Andrew, whose wife had to work through chemotherapy because she couldn't get access to job-protected sick leave.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Gottfried: Mr. Speaker, given that we continue to hear concerns from stakeholders that this government's hasty consultation is a sign that the minister already knows what the final legislation will look like and given that many individuals and organizations have expressed concern that the government will use pro-union legislation as an olive branch or quid pro quo in upcoming labour negotiations with their ideological friends, again to the minister: did you design consultation to meet a predetermined outcome... [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet, please.

Mr. Gotfried: ... and will you use ill-considered legislation to appease union leadership as part of upcoming public-sector negotiations?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that this legislation has not been updated in so much time, it was responsible and important for this government to start reviewing workplace legislation. In regard to the consultation process, particularly with the Labour Relations Code, we have engaged expert Mr. Andrew Sims, and I have spoken in this House before about my respect for this gentleman. Also, the Member for Calgary-Hays has spoken about his respect and has suggested that getting advice from Andrew Sims is a good idea, that he is one of the smartest people you will ever meet on labour laws. I am confident in our consultation.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, given that part of the concern with inadequate consultation is this government's and the NDP's deep and obvious constitutional and personal ties to a variety of unions and labour groups and given that because of these strong ideological ties there's an assumption that this government will facilitate greater ease in the formation of unions by getting rid of the privacy and anonymity of the secret-ballot process, again to the minister, a question that is important to all Alberta employers and employees: are you planning on get rid of the secret-ballot requirement for unionization? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our consultation closed just yesterday at midnight, so we are going to be reviewing what over 4,800 Albertans had to say on the matter, what over 1,000 employers had to say, and 340 written submissions. I want to see what Albertans have had to say and then move forward with fair and balanced legislation that will make sure we're supporting a strong economy here in Alberta, making sure we're returning some basic rights to our workers like job-protected sick leave.

2:20 Municipal Government Act and Wood Buffalo

Mr. Yao: It was nearly a year ago that the Premier rose in this place and called the Leader of the Official Opposition a fearmongerer after he raised concerns about the wildfire that would eventually devastate Fort McMurray. Eleven months ago this government said that it would stand side by side with Fort McMurray as it rebuilt. Five months ago the former Minister of Municipal Affairs said, and I quote: Bill 21 grandfathers the current ratio indefinitely. End quote. Now we have Bill 8, which exposes Fort McMurray to massive property tax hikes. Why should my constituents and all Albertans trust this government after this massive flip-flop?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. We spoke about it yesterday, and as I told him yesterday, that ratio of 5 to 1 is in regulations that will be coming out soon and that we're going to collect feedback on. We've been working hand in hand with RMWB on this. They've been working very closely with industry on this, and we're waiting to hear feedback on what they come up with and what all these other municipalities have to say on it, like we have been doing constantly.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, many people in my riding are struggling since this government came to power. Given that local businesses are closing shop and many homeowners that are trying to rebuild are still stuck in limbo and given that this bill could be another blow to a community that has faced so many challenges in the last few years, will the Premier please explain, given the economic situation in Alberta and Wood Buffalo, how she can justify sticking these homeowners with a policy that could lead to massive increases in Fort McMurray's residential tax rates?

Mr. S. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, I don't deal in hypotheticals. We're working together with Fort McMurray. We're working together with municipalities across this province. The MGA is the gold standard of consultation. I've said it before, and I continue to say it. We are going to make sure that we have the backs of the people of the RMWB. We said it last year, we've continued to say it, and we will continue saying it and having their backs going forward.

Mr. Yao: There's nothing hypothetical about this bill, sir.

Mr. Speaker, for many years Fort McMurray was forgotten and left to fend for itself by provincial decision-makers. As such, our municipality took matters into its own hands to ensure that people in our region had the services that we needed. Given that previous government decisions drove housing prices through the roof, affordable rent disappeared, wages had to be compensated for the high cost of living, and the RMWB built infrastructure with no provincial funds, is this Premier taking her advice from the same bureaucrats responsible for creating these very same issues?

Mr. S. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, it's unfortunate, the disrespect coming from the opposition's side for our people that work so hard to make sure that the people in Fort McMurray were taken care of and continue to be taken care of. I can't believe that he's saying this. I am proud of the people in my ministry, how hard they work, the effort they put in day in and day out. I will continue to support them, and I will continue to support the RMWB going forward, as I've said.

Okotoks Water Supply

Mr. W. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, last week in estimates when asked about whether or not the Okotoks water pipeline was a funding issue, the Minister of Transportation said that he believed the main and only remaining hurdle for the town to procure potable water from Calgary was a licensing issue. He said, "There are no more licences to draw water, so it's a matter of negotiating, I think, between Okotoks and Calgary." Pretty profound. Does the minister still agree that this issue would be resolved if the town could obtain water from the city of Calgary?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that the town has made an application under the water for life program with respect to this matter, and that is under consideration. I'm not at liberty to disclose the results of that application because it has yet to be determined.

Mr. W. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, given that in 2014 the city of Calgary issued a letter stating, “I am pleased to inform you that Calgary City Council has confirmed that The City of Calgary is prepared to provide treated water to the Town of Okotoks to supplement [their water supply]” and given that this letter should allow Okotoks to begin discussions with the province of Alberta to provide funding assistance for the pipeline, as they did, why is the province standing in the way of this important project for the town of Okotoks?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have also had conversations with both the town of Okotoks and the city of Calgary on the water licensing issue, and we continue to work on it within Environment and Parks because, of course, our commitment to clean drinking water for all Albertans is a shared responsibility between the Ministry of Transportation and the Ministry of Environment and Parks. That remains our commitment to make sure that all Albertans have access to that drinking water infrastructure that they need in order to make life better for everyone.

Mr. W. Anderson: Well, to either minister. Which one? They seem unaware that the details of the situation are well known.

Since I’ve raised this issue several times in the past two years, when will the minister put an end to the bureaucratic red tape and roadblocks, move forward on this file, and give Okotoks the much-needed water pipeline they deserve? Do the right thing.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Environment and Parks has said, we’re committed to making sure that Albertans have . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet, please.
Go ahead, hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We’re committed to making sure that Albertans have access to clean drinking water. We’ve expanded the program, for example, in order to provide drinking water . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet, please.

Mr. Mason: Will you knock it off?

The Speaker: Hon. minister, finish quickly.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We’re committed to making sure that Albertans have access to clean and safe drinking water, and we’ve extended the program $100 million over four years to extend water lines to First Nations as well, which is a very serious problem. In terms of . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Fentanyl- and Carfentanil-related Deaths

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Drug dealers have upped the death toll by lacing opioids with carfentanil, an elephant tranquilizer. We learned this news through an interim AHS opioid abuse report highlighting that carfentanil not only killed 30 Albertans in 2016, but it has already killed 15 people in the first six weeks of this year. When this government learned of the alarming death toll spike, it did not raise an alert. Minister, why, at the very minimum, did you not warn the public the moment you learned that carfentanil was killing Albertans?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. As was highlighted by the member, earlier this month we released the interim fentanyl death report, which showed that 51 Albertans died from fentanyl overdoses, which compares to 28 deaths in the same six-week period in 2016. We know that this crisis is escalating, and with the emergence of carfentanil we are very concerned as well, which is why when the first cases of carfentanil were detected in Alberta, a public statement was made by our government officials. We continue to warn Albertans about the dangers of fentanyl and carfentanil.

Mr. Ellis: A report is not a warning.

Given that carfentanil is 10,000 times more potent than morphine and 100 times more toxic than fentanyl and given that someone overdosing on carfentanil may need multiple doses of naloxone and people assisting them need to know this and given that carfentanil’s extreme toxicity also puts first responders in danger, to the minister: why have you not created a system that will alert all Albertans of surges and locations of fentanyl-related incidents to assist in saving lives and co-ordinating resources?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Our government officials have been working very closely with law enforcement as well as with first responders, sharing data as well as information about emerging trends. What we are finding, of course, is that law enforcement and first responders, in particular, tend to see trends emerging sooner than we maybe see them across the province. Having those open lines of communication and working together in a collaborative effort is how we’re going to work together to respond to this crisis.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that six weeks into 2017 fentanyl-related deaths are estimated at 51 – that’s almost twice the number as last year at this time – and given that fatalities could be astronomic this year alone and given that in the United States, where 91 people are dying every day and this death toll crisis is being compared to the AIDS epidemic of the 1980s and Alberta was ground zero for it, to the minister: how many Albertans have to die before you finally declare a public health emergency and bring all resources to bear on this crisis?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We are aware of what a serious crisis this is, and that is why we’re multiplying our efforts in Budget 2017, spending up to $56 million over the next year to help Albertans get the treatment they need to reduce the harm of substance use and to raise public awareness. I sincerely hope that when we get to the budget estimates in Committee of Supply later today, the members will vote in favour of our Health budget.

Unharvested 2016 Crops

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many of my constituents' livelihoods depend on agriculture, but given the recent disastrous harvest season these hard-working farmers have raised specific concerns they want this government to address. To the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry: how is this government prepared to mitigate the disastrous harvest this past year, and what proactive measures are being taken to ensure that our farmers are protected in the future?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Last season was certainly a difficult one for producers, from dry conditions early on to wet. While we can't control weather conditions, we can control our response, and we can prepare for these types of tough growing seasons. That is why our government continues to invest heavily in business risk management programs like AgriInsurance, AgriStability, and AgriInvest. These programs are available to help producers mitigate the potential effects of these kinds of conditions and is one of the ways that our government works to make life better for producers.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the concern my constituents have with wait times, to the same minister: has this government supported AFSC to ensure that they have enough adjusters to assess last year's crop damage in a reasonable time frame?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My department is working closely with AFSC to track their response to the poor season, to make sure that producers are looked after. As of March 24 over $32.3 million has been paid out to producers, and 95 per cent of eligible unharvested acres benefit claims have been processed. I've been in touch with AFSC to ensure that they have an aggressive strategy in place to effectively allocate resources. I'm pleased to hear that AFSC has been working diligently to ensure that resources are allocated effectively and that claims are processed as quickly as possible. I would urge all producers to work closely with their local AFSC office.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that farmers are expected to leave rows of unharvested crop for assessment, which may render cross-contamination of the new crop, to the same minister: how is the government preparing to mitigate that issue?

Mr. Carlier: Mr. Speaker, if a producer is eager to get the crop off the field, I strongly urge them to reach out to the AFSC prior to doing anything. Some producers may be asked to leave rows for assessment, but I've been told that AFSC will assess as soon as possible. Producers concerned about contamination should call 310.FARM to explore options. There are many unique crop scenarios for AFSC to consider, and AFSC will recommend a variety of actions according to the unique circumstances of that crop and that region.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

New School Construction in Rocky View County

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Chestermere is one of the fastest growing cities in Canada, and Chestermere high school serves the communities of Langdon, Indus, Conrich, Chestermere, Dalemead, Delacour, Balzac, and Kathryn and has for 54 years and is overcrowded and old. The Auditor General report states that the departments of Education and Infrastructure do not have adequate systems to plan, deliver, or report on school build plans. Chestermere high school is on the second year of the Rocky View capital plan and, hopefully, will be built far away from the highway that took Jaydon Sommerfeld. To the minister: what will it take to get a school built in Chestermere-Rocky View?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much for the question. Certainly, we were just in six hours of estimates the last two days, and we did discuss capital projects in quite a large degree of fulsomeness. One of the features that we have built in as a result of the Auditor General's report is extra money to help individual school boards get site ready in terms of site ready for the sewage and for the electricity and for drainage and so forth. We are directing these extra monies and supports to make sure that we get schools built on time to make life better for Albertans.

Mrs. Aheer: Given that the Auditor General's report stated that each of the departments of Education and Infrastructure is responsible for specific pieces of school builds but neither is responsible for the overall results, so the information on project schedules, including completion dates, is lost and given that the AG said that internal reporting on the project progress is lacking and public reporting is therefore consequently weak and that in Langdon we have a school that is on the first-year capital plan, to the minister: what has your ministry done to work with the Ministry of Infrastructure to address the specific concerns in the AG's report and get our schools built?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, in fact, we did ask the Auditor General to produce that very report because we were concerned about the scheduling of how the previous government was building schools. We found that more than half of them were behind schedule. Based on that report that we actually asked the Auditor General to do, we built a very sophisticated system by which we communicate with Alberta Infrastructure. We have meetings, and we have just-in-time funding. We meet with the larger school boards who are building their own projects. It's working. We're saving Albertans money. We're getting schools built. Certainly, I'm well aware of the circumstances in Rocky View school...

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, given that the Auditor General stated that neither of the departments of Education or Infrastructure has the systems to support school building programs, nor could they keep pace with the very large growth and complexity of the school build program and given that there seems to be no clear method of reporting school projects' progress, which the surrounding communities desperately need, to the minister: will you be able to build a school in Chestermere-Rocky View?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Eggen: Again, thank you very much, and yes, yes, yes. We certainly are working on this in the most fulsome sort of way, and I'm well aware. I met with the Rocky View school board last week, and it's one of the fastest growing enrolment situations in the province of Alberta. So we are working very closely with them, including getting site readiness for schools like Chestermere, making life better for Alberta families.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Fentanyl Use in Indigenous Communities

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During estimates for indigenous affairs the minister spoke about the need to fully consult with First Nations before implementing aspects of the climate leadership plan that affected those communities. He said that decisions could not be made unilaterally and must include government-to-government dialogue, but I've heard from First Nations leaders who feel that their input was not fully considered regarding declaring a public health emergency with respect to fentanyl. To the minister: what consultation occurred, if any, specifically with First Nations groups regarding the fentanyl crisis?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the very important question. We know that indigenous communities have been particularly hard hit by the fentanyl epidemic, which is why we're working with leaders in those communities. Further, we've been working with health centres on- and off-reserve to ensure that supplies of naloxone are readily available as well as that the adequate screening is there so that those kits are able to save lives.

Mr. Rodney: Given the shared responsibility between provincial and federal governments with respect to indigenous relations and health spending and given that the federal government has designated money to be put aside to combat opioid abuse and given that in estimates the Minister of Indigenous Relations agreed with me that we have a fentanyl and opioid crisis on our hands, to the same minister: would the declaration of a public health emergency help First Nations to access more resources to deal with opioid addiction and the scourge of fentanyl, and if so, what is your government doing to help them access additional federal support? The Minister of Indigenous Relations, please.

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the very important question. We are continuing to work with indigenous leaders both on- and off-reserve to ensure that we have adequate and culturally appropriate treatments and supports available to all indigenous peoples, whether they live on-reserve or off-reserve. To that end, we are also working to establish supervised consumption services in areas where there is the highest level of need.

Mr. Rodney: I didn't know we had a new Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Now, given the need to foster dialogue with First Nations so that the fentanyl crisis is quickly and efficiently addressed and given that other ministries such as Health rely on the expertise of Indigenous Relations to help them develop culturally appropriate practices and given the unique challenges that each of these treaty groups has in dealing with this crisis, to the Minister of Indigenous Relations: will you facilitate meetings with treaties 6, 7, and 8 and their representatives to help co-ordinate the provincial response to fentanyl with culturally appropriate best practices for each . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The associate minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We have actually taken a crossministerial approach to the fentanyl crisis, working quite closely with partners in law enforcement, with Indigenous Relations as well as Advanced Education and Education. This is a very important issue and one that we take incredibly seriously as government, which is why we've also been working quite closely with the federal government, not just on how we're going to best and most effectively implement the resources for people using the federal funding that we received at the end of last year but also with matching funds from our government. Again, I urge the members across the way to support the Health budget so we can continue to . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The member for Calgary-East.

Affordable Child Care

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the main concerns that I hear from my constituents in Calgary-East is access to affordable, quality child care. Many parents in my riding are shift workers and require flexible hours, and as a mother I am keenly aware of how difficult it is to find a licensed space that meets your children's needs. To the Minister of Children's Services: will the government's recent investments increase access to spaces for parents in Calgary?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a mom I know how important the place that you drop your kids off every day is, but when the cost of child care is as much as a second mortgage, many parents are forced to choose between child care and pursuing their career, and the struggles that moms and dads face when trying to provide the best opportunities for their kids have been ignored in this province for far too long. That's why we're making life better and more affordable for families with our early learning and child care pilot centres, costing no more than $25 a day.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that research shows the preschool years are absolutely critical for child development and given that parents deserve a child care centre that meets the learning needs of their children, how will the 22 new centres ensure that children with diverse needs can access the care that they need?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While our goal is to make child care more affordable, we are also focused on addressing gaps that already exist in Alberta's child care system. Early learning and child care centres will be welcoming, supportive places for children with developmental and other disabilities, indigenous and newcomer families and will offer the kinds of flexible hours that have been missing in Alberta for so long. Centres will fit the needs of their communities, meaning parents can trust that their kids are getting the kind of care that they need.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the interest my constituents have expressed in the pilot program and given that early learning centres are already receiving a high volume of calls for spaces, can Albertans expect to see this program expanded?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know these centres won't come close to addressing the demand for quality child care in Alberta. They are just a start, a pilot, and we'll be watching closely as they evolve, and we'll apply what we learn as we expand this pilot as the province's finances permit. For families who won't be able to take their kids to the centres right away, we are continuing to invest in the child care subsidy program to provide supports for early learning and child care professionals. Unlike the Official Opposition, who has called this program a waste of money, we made the choice to make this investment in affordable, quality child care for Alberta families now and in the future.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we'll proceed in 30 seconds.

Hon. members, if you're exiting, please exit. Hon. members, either sit down or exit.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have several tablings. The first, from Great White North Franchisee Association-Tim Hortons storeowners requesting consideration in the ongoing discussions around consultations with business and the labour code.

The second is from the Progressive Contractors Association of Canada.

The third is from the Motor Dealers' Association of Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I've got a couple of tablings here. The first one is a screenshot of the Energy Efficiency Alberta website that I referred to today about not selling anything and not asking for money.

The second one is an article from the Edmonton Journal talking about how the carbon tax could raise another $280 million in revenue for the federal government on the surtax on the carbon tax.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks for your note today. I have three letters for tabling with respect to a call for an extension and enhancement of the consultation on labour and employment standards. The first is a letter from Marc Rheume, vice-president, Hospitality Inns, Delta Hotels. The second one is from Jessie Lail, chief investment officer, Indevolutions Corp. The third is from Mr. Dean Koeller, president, Calvert Home Mortgage Investment Corporation.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have five copies to table of a letter I wrote to the hon. Government House Leader on March 9, 2017, with this one particular quote: "I was interested earlier when the Premier was going on and on about how the terrible opposition parties with their tiny resources had been able to brainwash the entire population of the province on postsecondary education." That was the minister in 2005.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In estimates the committee chair asked if I would table five copies of the following. It is indeed the Association of Independent Schools and Colleges in Alberta's December 2016 newsletter. The reason he asked me to table it is this quotation: "We have – and will continue – to support choice in education as well, whether students are learning in a bricks-and-mortar school or at home under the watchful eyes of their parents." That was said, of course, by the hon. Minister of Education.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a letter from the Calgary Motor Dealers Association about the workplace legislation review. They're not satisfied with the consultation process. They felt it was flawed, and they wanted more time for the consultation.

The Speaker: The Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a copy of a letter that was CCed to me. It was sent to the Minister of Labour, writing to request additional time and better local and regional access with respect to the workplace legislation review. This letter is from Kelly Temple, the dealer principal at Eastside Kia in Calgary.

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to request unanimous consent of the House that we return to Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees. In the order of proceedings we seem to have missed something.

[Unanimous consent denied]

Orders of the Day

Committee of Supply

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Hon. members, prior to beginning, the chair will outline the process for this afternoon. The Committee of Supply will first call on the chairs of the legislative policy committees to report on their meetings with the various ministries under their mandate. No vote is required when these reports are presented according to Standing Order 59.01(10).

The committee will then proceed to the vote on the estimates of the offices of the Legislative Assembly. The estimates of two ministries will then be voted on separately pursuant to Standing Order 59.03(1)(b) and in accordance with notice provided by the Official Opposition House Leader to the Clerk and the Chair of Committees on April 18, 2017. The final vote for the main estimates will consist of the remainder of the ministries not yet voted upon.

Finally, the chair would like to remind all hon. members of Standing Order 32(3.1), which provides that after the first division is called in Committee of Supply during the vote on the main estimates, the interval between division bells shall be reduced to one minute for any subsequent divisions.

Committee Reports

The Chair: I would now invite the chair of the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future to present the committee's report.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Madam Chair. As chair of the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future and pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(10) I'm pleased to report that the committee has reviewed the 2017-2018 proposed estimates and business plans for the following ministries: the Ministry of Advanced Education, the Ministry of Agriculture and Forestry, the Ministry of Culture and Tourism, the Ministry of Economic Development and Trade, the Ministry of Executive Council, the Ministry of Infrastructure, and the Ministry of Labour.

Pursuant to Government Motion 17 the committee has also reviewed the 2017-2018 proposed estimates and business plan for the Ministry of Education.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you.

I will now call on the chair of the Standing Committee on Families and Communities to present the committee's report.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Madam Chair. As chair of the Standing Committee on Families and Communities and pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(10) I am pleased to report that the committee has reviewed the 2017-2018 proposed estimates and business plans for the following ministries: the Ministry of Children's Services, the Ministry of Community and Social Services, the Ministry of Health, the Ministry of Justice and Solicitor General, the Ministry of Seniors and Housing, the Ministry of Service Alberta, and the Ministry of Status of Women.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you.

Now the chair of the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship.

Loyola: Thank you, Madam Chair. As chair of the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship and pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(10) I am pleased to report that the committee has reviewed the 2017-2018 proposed estimates and business plans for the following ministries: the Ministry of Energy, the Ministry of Environment and Parks, the Ministry of Indigenous Relations, the Ministry of Municipal Affairs, the Ministry of Transportation, and the Ministry of Treasury Board and Finance.

Thank you.

Vote on Main Estimates 2017-18

The Chair: We shall now proceed to the vote on the 2017-18 offices of the Legislative Assembly estimates. Pursuant to Standing Order 59.03(5), which requires that these estimates be decided without debate or amendment prior to the vote on the main estimates, I must now put the following question on all matters related to the 2017-18 offices of the Legislative Assembly estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2018.

Agreed to:
Offices of the Legislative Assembly $128,440,000

The Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Now we will proceed to the vote on the estimates of the two ministries which will be voted on separately pursuant to Standing Order 59.03(1)(b) and in accordance with notice provided by the Official Opposition House Leader to the Clerk and the Chair of Committees on April 18, 2017.

Agreed to:
Ministry of Children's Services
Expense	$1,205,824,000
Capital Investment	$1,539,000

The Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Agreed to:
Ministry of Justice and Solicitor General
Expense	$1,336,428,000
Capital Investment	$4,452,000

The Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

We shall now proceed to the final vote on the main estimates. Those members in favour of the remaining resolutions for the 2017-18 government estimates for the general revenue fund and lottery fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2018, please say aye.

[The voice vote did not indicate agreement]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 2:55 p.m.]

[Fifteen minutes having elapsed, the committee divided]

[Ms. Jabbour in the chair]

[The remaining estimates of the general revenue fund and lottery fund were carried]

The Chair: Moving on, shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

I would now invite the hon. acting Deputy Government House Leader to move that the committee rise and report the 2017-18 offices of the Legislative Assembly estimates and the 2017-18 government estimates for the general revenue fund and lottery fund.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I move that the committee rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions relating to the 2017-18 offices of the Legislative Assembly estimates and the 2017-18 government estimates for the general revenue fund and lottery fund, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

3:40 Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 6 Northland School Division Act

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Ms Woollard: Are we speaking on the bill? Okay.

Madam Chair, I'm very pleased to be able to speak about the Northland School Division Act. Some of the things that I was thinking about – I've given it a lot of thought. Northland school division was created not like every other school division in Alberta, not like most of them. It was created out of whole cloth in the '60s to fill a gap. That gap was providing some form of school system for the various northern communities that had their educational needs tended to by the churches or by a few local, very individual school divisions but nothing in which there was cohesive effort to make sure that their standard of education was the level or the equivalent of other people, other students in Alberta. They took care of the very small, some medium, some very isolated communities. There were farming communities; there were very definitely bush communities all over north-central Alberta, Métis settlements, and a lot of different areas.

One of the things that I find intriguing is that while there were commonalities to them – the population was 95 per cent indigenous at the time of creation – there was diversity, differences among them. Just for instance, I remember my class in Wabasca where the students found it very funny to listen to a tape of children from one of the farther east Northland schools speaking Cree because the accent was so different from their own. It was the same language, but it definitely had regional variations.

I want to talk about a few of the communities within the Northland division just to give kind of an illustration of how challenging running a school division like that, like Northland and that is Northland, can be. One community where I spent some time working as a psychologist is Susa Creek. Susa Creek is south of Grande Cache. It's just along highway 40, so when you go north from Hinton, you go up along that highway. Susa Creek is a very small community, and it's a co-op. It is not a reserve. It is not a settlement. It is a co-op. There are little co-ops set along that highway, groups of people who were displaced from Jasper national park when it was created.

What happened is that the Susa Creek people and the other people in the various co-ops along there were offspring of the Cree people and the Iroquois voyageurs who wound up settling in around Jasper. They farmed. They had a very nice farming community in the Athabasca River valley. If you go to Jasper park now and you go to Snaring River campground and you turn left to go towards Celestine Lake, you'll come to this big, beautiful valley surrounded by mountains, and you'll see some of the original farmhouses and outbuildings of the people that lived there. It's just lovely. But the park, when it was created, really didn't have a place for them there, so they were given these little pieces of land up along the eastern slopes of the Rocky Mountains and, basically, to the best of my knowledge, what I've been able to understand, were told: away you go. It was a year's march – that's in the Grande Cache visitor centre, which also works as a museum – to get all their belongings and their farm animals all that way on their own. So they settled there, and they've managed to have pretty active communities.

The only one of the co-ops that has its own school is Susa Creek, maybe just because it was the largest of the co-ops. The people there, as in many of the Northland communities, are always walking that tightrope, wanting the best for their children, like parents everywhere do, which means giving them options to do different things when they grow up. They want an education that's needed, but they want them to be aware of and to learn about their traditional way of life.

I had a long conversation with one parent in that community who said that every once in a while she and her husband would become aware that the children were becoming too affected by the modern conveniences. It didn't necessarily mean that she didn't want them spending all their time watching TV or playing video games but that they were missing out on learning how to do the things that were important in the culture. So their solution, which they did on a semiannual basis, my guess would be, was to move everybody into the wilderness for a period of time. They had a wilderness area where they would live, and they would set up a home, and they would provide for themselves.

Of course, the children would learn everything they'd need to know: the old ways of doing things and the ways you took care of things, how you get your food, how to get your water, how to build your housing. This was really important. It's such a challenge but, obviously, a very rewarding one because they want to maintain the traditional way of life and to have an education be available for the children, so they will come back into the community for the schooling to make sure that they're not missing it.

One of the things that becomes very clear the longer that you work up north is that to go in and have any expectation that the people in the various northern communities are going to somehow transform into people that are more like, you know, their urban neighbours, is not really realistic. That wouldn't be them.

I had a long conversation one time with a family up in Fort Chipewyan, and it involved raising grandchildren. When children sometimes would disappear into the delights and the money of Fort McMurray and not necessarily come back, the grandparents would be left with the children. Again, they'd be working very hard to maintain the traditional ways and to make sure that the children grew up with the skills of their culture but also to support them being successful at school.

Again, I heard parents talking about that one concern some of them had in one of the more southern schools was how important it was that children learn math and science: well, you know, don't dumb things down; don't oversimplify things. They wanted their children, when they graduated, if they wanted to go to NAIT or university, to be able to do it, so what they were being taught in school needed to be at a level that would benefit them, that would be worth while for their futures.

Of course, it is bearing fruit. I'm noticing now that in a lot of the Northland schools more and more of the people working in the schools, the teachers and other professional people, are people from the communities, so that's success right there. Things are working.

One of the problems sometimes is that people want it to work really fast. They want things to change overnight. I can tell you, as anybody who's lived up north knows, that if you spend 40 years up there, if you're lucky, you're going to see a change, but you're not going to see great big, huge landslide changes.

It's recognizing, acknowledging, celebrating the culture, and it's also making sure that the education, as I've said, is something that will benefit students in the long run. It's making sure – and I do agree with that – children have the opportunity to learn about their cultures in school, so it's not just saying, "You know, on weekends you can go and be with your families and learn about your cultures," but to get a big picture of where their cultures fit into the big mosaic of being a Canadian, being an Albertan. It's really important to make sure that they know they are important in the fabric of their country and their community.

In the variation, as I've said, about Susa Creek, Wabasca-Desmarais, which are quite big communities, there's another comparison because they're not exactly urban but by comparison they are. They've got stores, they've got hotels, and they've got gas stations. There are a few more temptations for families. Sometimes, as a result, families will leave those centres as being a little bit too modern and will go live in the wilderness for a while, for six months or a year, just to be able to get back to their roots. I've known people who did that. It's not only sometimes for the children but for themselves, so they can find out where they are, remember who they are, remember what's important, and then they come back. This is fairly common.

There are people who, you know, are next to highways. The Mackenzie highway goes right by a couple of schools out there. There are the people of the fly-in communities, Chip Lake in the summer, and other places. Well, Susa Creek, being near Grande Cache, is pretty central. It's just that the more I look at it, the more interesting, the more diverse, the more varied it is, and the more we need to support having a board.

I was just having a look at some of the old reviews and some of the studies of Northland, and one of the things they said was that if you try to break up Northland and try to just put everybody with the nearest local community, you're going to be discounting the nature of the people that make up Northland. To help Northland and to help the children there and to celebrate who they are and what they're doing, they need to have their own schools and they need to be fostered, celebrated, and helped to prosper.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to thank the Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek for just wonderful information and for your obvious passion for the people in your outreach out there. Thank you so much for that. It was really, really wonderful to hear your background and your understanding of those folks. It's spectacular. Thank you so much. It actually plays a lot into the things that I want to speak about with regard to this bill, so thank you so much.

One of those things is that need for consultation, especially in spaces like this, where you have so many people and such diverse communities. As you were saying, Cree is spoken differently in one area than it is in the other. It's a beautiful and an unusual and very – I don't know – unique, I guess, aspect of those folks that may not get a chance to see each other and may have been, you know, separated by distance for a very, very long time so that they ultimately get their own accents and colour and feelings and words to describe the same things. Thank you so much for sharing that because I didn't know that and it gives a lot of personal anecdotal information to bills like this.

You talked about the cultural diversity, but there's also huge geographical diversity as well, isn't there? When you have that vast territory that's covering so much of Alberta's north, it provides learning opportunities that must be inclusive of First Nations and Métis students. We don't want – and I was saying this to the minister earlier today. This isn't about incidental inclusion; this is about actual inclusion and the obvious decisions that need to be made around making sure that those kids actually go to school, right? Obviously, based on a lot of the information that you've shared, hopefully, that's helping to determine the way this bill will move forward, too, because a lot of the information that you brought forward, I think, should be part of how the determination comes about on how to put this school board together. I think, ultimately, that information that you gave is going to help get kids into schools, get bums in seats, as it were.

There are approximately 2,900 students and 500 staff in those 23 schools. Of course, we've already listed some of the challenges that they've faced in these last 50 years. One of the things that we see with this particular area is low rates of school attendance and poor levels of student achievement and low high school graduation rates. I would love it if the member at some point would also maybe be able to speak to her knowledge about maybe why that is as well because I think that again could help in determining how this bill should go forward and the regulations that go with it.

The division was operated with appointed trustees. That started in 1961 and went to 1983. At that time, the first local school board committees were elected. Then from 1983 to 2010 the division's board was comprised of chairpersons from all of those local school board committees. On January 21, 2010, the Minister of Education at the time dismissed the board and then appointed an official trustee.

The Auditor General actually made three recommendations to improve governance and student performance in Northland, and the first one of those was to develop a plan for student attendance. Now, that sounds fairly obvious, but I think in this particular situation that this is probably one of the more important pieces of this. The second piece is: what is the oversight of the department to be in this? The third piece is: how do we monitor and engage students so that they're attending school?

I am very, very glad to see that this legislation will reinstall the democratic process of electing the trustees out there. I think that will make the Northland school division – well, it will bring them in line with other school divisions. With elected trustees generally I think we're going to feel that they're representing those local constituents better on their various issues. Then that model will also reflect the school board formation across the province and provide local representatives an opportunity to share in local issues and local decision-making. Again, with the uniqueness of this area this is super important because every one of these is a thumbprint. They're unique, they need their space, and they need people who understand those areas to be helping to make those decisions.

There are some good changes that will be made so that the board can adapt to circumstances that change. I mean, I'm assuming – and this is one of the places where I think this outreach is going to be so important. Maybe the minister might be able to clarify some of these things as well. If it is a good idea or if a reduction in the number of wards is the right way to go here to reduce the overall administrative costs, to help streamline the decision-making, that's a good thing. But we want to make sure that the information is thoughtfully gathered through stakeholder outreach consultation and, in some cases, consensus with some of these groups.

I didn't know about the co-ops. That was a really, really neat piece of information. Thank you for sharing that.

The caution, of course, that I would say, as always, is that we need some clarification of the roles and the responsibilities of that administrative structure. Starting with the administrative structure is important, obviously, but again we have to look at learning outcomes and getting kids into classrooms. I think that's the priority here. I felt that was a very strong part of the discussion that we had around education with Northland schools, that it was about really engaging with these students and getting them into the classrooms. I mean, obviously, administration and governance are important to any school division, but kids come first. We've got to get them into school.

We know that the previous board – I don't know if it's the right thing to say that they weren't successful in meeting the learning needs of students, but it certainly wasn't working. In whatever capacity that was happening before, we were seeing that the learning needs of students as a result – their extremely low levels of high school graduation, as I said before. The student achievement rates have to be the priority in this situation, in my opinion. I guess that in my understanding – and please correct me if I'm wrong – that was the reason the board was fired and an official trustee was installed, I believe, at that point.

Here are my questions to the minister. What does the legislation really change? We know that we're going to streamline the administration, but what does it actually change for the folks out there to really honour the uniqueness of this area that the Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek brought up?

Secondly, what makes you believe that a different administrative structure will positively impact the lives of those students serviced by the Northland school division? I truly believe – and I think we could all agree – that there is such a need to help reinvigorate that school division. I really hope that that new administrative structure is able to provide an opportunity for the schools in the Northland division to find the supports that they need to meet their students' needs, again, consultation being key with the folks that work and live in that unique area and understand the needs. I think that if the appropriate administration, the right people in those right places, is paired with changes in classrooms to improve educational opportunities for the students, we'll see a turnaround. Again, this is going to be about making sure that that education is really reflective of what goes on in that area.

The member was saying some interesting things about how sometimes the parents take the kids out into the bush for a little while and live and work out there to understand those areas. Maybe that's something that can be brought into the educational piece as far as outdoor education or – I'm not quite sure, not knowing what it is that they're doing while they're out there, but I'm certain that curriculum could certainly be constructed around those pieces. I think that would be very fun. Obviously, I mean, this is a nonpartisan issue, so all of us have a very, very important role in supporting education in those northern, rural, and indigenous areas.

I really feel that in here we need to support the work of these communities who are directly affected by this bill to ensure that every single decision that we make puts student learning first. I would propose that we use the opportunity that we have here to have some really meaningful discussions and conversations around what's going on with our indigenous partners and how to play a larger role in making this division a success. Of course, that can only happen if we're equal partners with the First Nations folks and co-operatives that are working out there so that we make sure that we understand where we're coming from, that we're not just throwing what we think is the right idea at them and assuming that they should fit into our mould. I think we should really make sure we're taking a look at this and that it works for these people.

We really want to see them improve their chances for academic success for all of these students and these families. In order to do that, we're going to need the support for this school division, the schools, the administrators and the teachers, and ultimately the students.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Madam Chair. Certainly, I appreciate the comments from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek as well as Chestermere-Rocky View. I am very interested to see this bill move forward. I'm here to answer questions specifically, so for the hon. member's questions around what we are changing with Bill 6 from the existing governance structure: well, it's a way by which we can have elected trustees to represent areas and mostly represent probably more than one school. Again, I wasn't around personally to see how the original system was working with a trustee from each of the 23 schools, but I could probably see that it would be cumbersome. I have talked to trustees that were part of that system, and they found it to be – you know, each person was defending their own individual school, and then people weren't having that sort of broader picture of looking after the whole system together. I think that is definitely a change as well.

Also, this bill compels this newly elected Northlands school board to have school councils and to be meeting with them on a regular basis but also a ward council having a schedule – I think a quarterly schedule – to meet with the ward council and then also having a general council elected that meets once every term, which would be representation from all of Northlands school division. Again, that's a unique structure. I mean, this is the only school board that has its own act. That's the unique structure that forms the framework of this bill.

Also, I know that if we do pass this Bill 6, we are making a commitment to increasing funding to Northlands school division here over a period of a number of years, which we are paying for internally, Mr. Finance Minister. He was looking at me. You know, this is important, too, because, yes, we will, I think, make some great advances by having a democratically elected board back in place, but we need to send a message that we are supporting them as well.

We know that attendance and graduation rates from this particular school division are the most challenged, let's say, in the entire province. We know there are a lot of kids that just aren't going to school up there, Madam Chair. I think people talking about the elections, talking about increased funding, trying to entice teachers to make a long-term commitment to work at these schools will generate a lot of interest, and people will start to go back to school.

We think there are 2,300 kids enrolled right now, but it's probably even less than that now because we see a lot of people coming and going, different seasonal basis. Yeah. You know, you mentioned 2,900, but really our actual numbers are quite a bit lower than that. So that's a challenge for all of us, to get more kids into school. I know there are way more kids up there that aren't going to school at all, so that's what we're going to aim for. We make our measurements based on graduation rates and attendance, so those are the improvements we hope to achieve.

Teacher retention is a big deal, for sure, to be able to get teachers to come and to stay longer, to get First Nations, Métis, and Inuit teachers into place not just as teachers but as administrators. I'm endeavouring to do that as well. Every step of the way we want to make sure that we're building a partnership where people are making their own decisions about their education future in the schools in the Northland school division. That's very, very important. You know, we have Kee Tas Kee Now Tribal Council as a partner with Northland schools, and I think that's a nice way to show how things can change over time, Madam Chair, that we can have an evolution of governance and how Northland looks like over time. I'm not suggesting that this bill would cast in stone how Northland would move forward forever, but rather it's the reinstatement of democracy for people to make choices about how Northland will look in the future, so that's an important consideration.

The consultation and the choices that people make in those democratic elections – they can make changes over time, just like all the other school boards, in terms of structure, composition, wards, direction, education, the whole nine yards. But the key is to take the power back to where it belongs, with the people, democracy in Northland, and to know that we are here to support change and that we will stand behind our choices here to improve education for students in Northland school division every step of the way.

Thanks.

The Chair: Any other questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: If I may, Madam Chair, I just would like to ask for some clarity on a few things that the minister had mentioned.

Minister, you had mentioned about compelling the school boards. Would you mind expanding on that a little bit in regard to the ministry's oversight with respect to compelling the school boards. Thank you so much.

Mr. Eggen: Sure. Yeah. Built into the bill that we're debating here today is that the structure will be in place to have a school council, the trustees to have regular meetings with the school council, and then a ward-level sort of council as well. Then, you know, I've instructed the trustee that I have appointed there, the interim trustee who will stay for a period of 18 months after, to get things moving, to make sure that these things do come to pass.

You know, we want to have representation from elders and from youth to be encouraged on each of these levels of council because we believe that those are the two places where there's the most to be gained from both the cultural perspective from elders and from the buy-in from young people up in the school division. So the oversight comes through the channels of my elected trustee and on a transition basis. But then, you know, it will be built into legislation if we pass this bill, and that will drive it, right? I mean, obviously, it's not like we're building a speed trap law or something like that here. It's not like we're going to catch them and make sure they do it. But, I mean, we have mechanisms to work together in partnerships to compel those structures to be in place.

We're trying to build, like you've heard before, that level of input that is so valued in the northern communities – I mean, it's valued everywhere – that idea of people coming together and forming some consensus. It becomes obvious where you need to go to move forward, and we want to honour and value that, too. As part of our consultation, which will be ongoing here in the next coming weeks and months, too, you know, we are making sure that – like, I spoke to some of the political organizations up there with Treaty 8 and the Métis settlements association to let them know that, again, we're not just making decrees from Edmonton here. This is a bill that will set things free to restore the democratic choices that should reside in Northland school division.

This is not the bill. That's why I'm holding up the back side. It's actually Bill 10.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you.

The Chair: Any other questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill?

Are you ready for the question?

[The clauses of Bill 6 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Ms Ganley: Madam Chair, I move that the committee rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 6.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? Say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed, say no. So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 1 An Act to Reduce School Fees

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you. It's my pleasure to rise and move third reading of Bill 1, An Act to Reduce School Fees.

Madam Speaker, it's been very heartening to see so many members rise in this House to support this legislation. When I think about our government's efforts to make life more affordable, there are few initiatives that I can think of that will have this level of impact with so many families, and I believe it will be felt almost immediately and certainly in the fall.

With the bill, if proclaimed, we will be removing the burden of instructional supplies and materials for nearly 600,000 students and families, and we will be removing these fees for busing to designated schools for more than 145,000 students. I just want to be clear in my response to the hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View in relation to one of her questions that we will be funding the busing for special-needs students as well. All told, Alberta families will be saving more than $54 million this September. You know, Madam Speaker, of course, I'm a teacher myself and have witnessed first-hand so many families struggling to come up with money to pay for fees, and the fee structure was just kind of let go, so it's a very bumpy landscape out there, to be sure.

I know that many members of this House will be watching closely as we develop regulations, and I expect them to do so, of course. We also will do so in partnership with all of our school boards, including those from charter schools, too, because the other part of this bill is that it's an act to reduce school fees but also an act to get school fees in check somehow so that we have a more uniform landscape, using the same simile or metaphor, if you will. I know that the Member for Calgary-Mountain View was talking about this in regard to the school fee situation, and I'm glad that he did bring it up because it helps us to understand that this is a discussion moving forward. It's an act to reduce school fees; it's not an act to eliminate school fees.

I think it was a remarkable support from our caucus and cabinet and Premier to come up with this to reduce school fees a year earlier than what I had built in a long-term budget, and I think we did a good job as an act to reduce school fees.

We believe that every student in Alberta has the right to an education and to have it affordable and of the highest quality, but we also, Madam Speaker, do care profoundly about Alberta's families and their pocketbooks. We were supported, as part of our platform, to make these changes and to improve and protect education and to make life better for Alberta families, so that's exactly what we did. I have been very heartened and encouraged by the support and encouraging words that I've had from other parties in this House as well. I can't wait for September, when people can see their school fees reduced, and we get some money back into Alberta families' pockets.

You know, one other issue I just wanted to bring forward here today: I've been getting some reports here and there where schools and school boards are putting out information suggesting that they would be short as a result of An Act to Reduce School Fees, that they might have to cut programs or fire or lay off teachers and so forth. We are covering this here from the government of Alberta, the finances to reduce school fees. We made reductions in other areas and other ministries, and I thank them for that very much. Schools and school boards will not be shorted as a result of An Act to Reduce School Fees. Any suggestion of that is perhaps confusion or something else, that I'm less happy about. We will get that information out very clearly once again for everybody to know that this is not in any way going to compromise the staffing or the programming or any of the offerings that school boards have right through this fine, fine province of ours.

I'm very happy at this point to once again thank everybody for helping us to build a very coherent and helpful bill for Alberta families, and I thank you for this time.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. First of all, I'd like to thank the minister for the announcement on being able to bus our very able and wonderful special-needs kids. I do have a question for you about that, and I'll include it in my little speech here. That's just wonderful news. It's a great way to start this part of the discussion. Thank you so much for that.

As always, I'm very pleased to speak to this bill. We've had a great chance to debate the bill, and I've heard some very positive pieces as well. We have a few concerns as well, and I'll reiterate those just a little bit as we're going forward because regulations will come, so this, you know, will hopefully help with going forward on those regulations as this bill starts to take form.

Overall, of course, we're pleased to see that the government took some leadership to address the Wild West of school fees, as they've been called, and to find ways to mitigate the impact of what's happening with families right now. Especially with the carbon tax and other things, reducing those transportation costs is going to be somewhat helpful, for sure. As you know, these issues are very, very close to the hearts and minds of the Wildrose and its caucus. We would like to of course see the eventual elimination of school fees.

My concerns, though, fall into a couple of specific categories. One of them is just with respect to the school fees. I've asked this question before, and I suppose that this may come forward in the regulations, but this is with respect to how they're defined. It seems a little bit inconsistent with the goals and objectives of the ministry's business plan. In the plan the government states, "Children and students are provided with an education that enriches their lives, prepares them for flexible careers in a diversified economy, and prepares them for success." Depending upon the school, their needs are going to be slightly different, one from the other. In the documents around the curriculum rewrite we read, "We are looking ahead to the future and working to ensure that provincial curriculum continues to give... students the best possible start in [a] life" that meets the demands of living in the 21st century.

With that large umbrella over what our education system could and should look like as we prepare our children for this world, all discussion of fees: we have to understand what's going to be reimbursed and link them. Are we linking them to paper and pencil like what we grew up with, or are we linking them to technology? Like, what are we looking at when we're talking about where the fees are going to be, where they're going to be taken from, and what is actually going to be covered? We've heard from the government that they'll define what constitutes school fees, and so far we've heard this much: workbooks, photocopying, printing, paper, and common fees charged to entire school bodies or a grade cohort.

The concerns are more around if the ministry is going to define the school fees across the province. Are we going to find that it's sort of a one-size-fits-all, that may not necessarily be helpful for certain school boards? It's just a thought and, as you go forward with regulations, just something to consider. Is it going to be difficult to define what constitutes mandatory fees? That will be, I would think, a critical part of implementing this bill.

Like I was saying earlier, school communities are so different across the province in the way that they meet their students' learning needs. We were just talking about Northland. I mean, this is perfect timing. We're talking about a school division that is extremely unique and may require different kinds of resources. If the government is going to support those families by reducing school fees, I would think that it would make sense to have some flexibility in determining what that's going to look like instead of sort of a centrally determined school fee. Again, this is just something to look at in the regulations. For example, in some schools workbooks and photocopying may constitute fees, but in others costs might be more related to digital media or learning activities with communities or as part of work experience or CTS, where those may constitute fees.

I heard during the budget estimates that the minister intends to expand the dual credit program as well, so that's a wonderful opportunity to allow students to see some really great academic success in new ways. The school fees for a high school that offers a wealth of dual credit options could look extremely different from the fees in a high school that has a more traditional classroom program.

We've also heard from stakeholders that are a little concerned that how school fees are defined may not support their efforts to provide learning experiences that will prepare them for life in the 21st century. I think that some clarity around those pieces and consultation, I think, especially around that, going into the regulation phase of this, once the bill passes, will be very, very important.

I'm also very interested to see how the bill will be implemented and how the regulations are going to be developed. As the minister said, we'll be watching extremely closely to see how that happens and to see the impact of that. Are the funds going to go just to general revenue, or are they going to be used at the complete discretion of the local authorities? Obviously, we support local decision-making, so if the funding is intended to reduce school fees for families, are we going to see some measures of accountability as well to ensure that families are actually enjoying the benefit of these reductions in the funding?

On the website it reads, "In the long term, the proposed amendments would provide government with increased authority over all school board fee types related to publicly funded education programming." If maybe the minister has a moment to talk a little bit more about the increased level of authority. That raises some concern and also will impact the way that the bill is implemented. That's actually determined after the bill is passed, so I would like to have some clarity on that if that's possible.

The collaboration of Albertans prior to the enactment of any legislation: I think if there's one thing that we've learned since we've been in this House, it's that piece. Albertans have been really disappointed. They feel like they've been sidelined. I mean, we could bring up Bill 6. There are lots of examples. It can be deeply hurtful and destructive and very divisive if governments don't engage meaningfully and with consultations prior to enacting legislation. The bill seems to follow in that pattern: you know, table legislation, pass it through the process, proclaim it, and then consult. I feel it's very, very important that Albertans understand not just the fact that we're reducing school fees – that's excellent – but that there are other pieces to this bill that will not be determined until it's actually passed.

Again I wanted thank the minister for his consideration of special-needs students. My question with regard to that: is that just to designated schools, or is that going to be able to take kids to schools that might specifically be for their needs? Not all kids with special needs or disabilities can go to the school that's designated. That's just my question around that.

Also, the government speaks about ensuring that our students have the best possible education experience. The distance allocations to designated schools may actually put families at a disadvantage. Again, within the regulations, that might be something that you want to look at, those distances. The more kids we can get on those buses, the better. I think there are efficiencies to be had there. The minister was actually speaking today about areas where children can be picked up and a couple of other things. Maybe you could expand upon that as well.

I'm also wanting to just again ask – and I know I've asked this a hundred times; I'll ask a hundred times more – about the impact of the carbon tax on transportation costs. The cost of carbon tax to boards is expected to be between $8 million to $12 million over the next year. This change and the expected payment of $15 million to boards will not really begin to cover the cost of the carbon tax and the reduction of the school fees.

These are just a few of my concerns, Madam Speaker. The minister is quite aware of my concerns, but I just thought it might be time to bring some of these up again and maybe get some more clarity on those. It's a good first step in trying to ease the financial burden on Albertans, reducing the school fees. I really do look forward to further conversations around implementing the bill and the regulations.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I rise at third reading of Bill 1 to speak in favour of the bill and will be voting in favour of An Act to Reduce School Fees. Clearly, it's important that we make public education as absolutely accessible as it possibly can be. School fees and other fees do act as a barrier for many parents. I know that many parents have a very difficult time paying those. Of course, I'd love to see it be an act, in fact, to eliminate school fees because I know this is something that really is a burden for many Albertans. But this bill in its current form is at least a step in the right direction, so I will support the bill.

Having said that, I do have some concerns. The Member for Calgary-Mountain View had brought an amendment, of which I was certainly supportive, to address the gap, what this bill does for all public schools but, quite curiously, leaving out charter schools, whereas we know, of course, that charter schools are in fact public schools. It is very interesting that the government has chosen to ignore charter schools when reducing school fees, and I do wonder, frankly, if that is a deliberate choice on behalf of this government. Clearly, it is, because they rejected the amendment and have kept it in the bill.

When this bill was first introduced, it was interesting. A lot of parents, I think, were left with the impression that there would be no school fees, and those parents, of course, included parents of children who were in charter schools. The news release itself indicated that Alberta parents will no longer have to pay school fees for certain categories of fees – those included instructional supplies or materials and eligible students taking the bus to their designated schools – but, obviously, not all Alberta parents and not all public schools because charter schools were excluded. So I wonder about that.

Of course, charter schools are public schools as per the legislation that governs them. They provide the same basic education as per the curriculum that is laid out by Alberta Education, and they do so in a way that's different or to enhance overall student learning. Now, there are a lot of questions about charter schools, whether or not they cherry-pick students, whether all charter schools are, in fact, accessible. And I believe very much that they are. They cannot deny access to any individual or group. They cannot charge tuition. They can charge the same school fees as other public schools currently can. That will change under this bill, where other public schools have a reduction in their school fees and, again, charter schools do not.

I wonder why that is, and all I can surmise is that the government is lumping together charter schools with private schools, and they are not private schools. It is very much a different thing. I just wonder if this is part of what I would consider a passive-aggressive attempt to divide schoolchildren between those who are seeking their public education through a charter school and those that are seeking their public education through a traditional public school rather than the government choosing to make a definitive statement.

Now, I've heard the minister, and he and I have actually had a conversation directly in the past about whether this government does in fact support charter schools, what their plans are going forward. He's indicated that charter schools will remain part of Alberta's education system, and I sincerely hope that is the case. He also indicated earlier today that he will look into what he deems an oversight, to not include charter schools. I don't believe it is an oversight. It seems to have been a deliberate choice.

I hope, though, that it is not a way of starting a chipping away at charter schools. I think they provide a tremendous service to the students who participate in them. They enrich our province and enrich the overall educational experience and have driven public school boards in those similar jurisdictions and around the province to add programs similar although not always identical to the programs that are provided by charter schools. That also is a good thing. It is innovation in our education system within the public frame, and as a supporter of public education I can only think that that's a very good thing.

It's a worry when a minister is establishing one set of rules for public schools and another set of rules for a different group within the public schools. I don't think it's right, and I would obviously encourage the minister to fix that going forward.

In the end, though, I will support the bill because I think it's important to reduce school fees, much as I would have liked to have seen the charter schools included in that. I'll take the minister at his word that he's going to look into this, and I would hope it would be something he would address going forward.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of questions and answers if anyone wishes to take advantage.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak on Bill 1, An Act to Reduce School Fees. I think it's a good step in the right direction to lighten the load for Alberta's parents, but as did my colleague from Calgary-Elbow, I want to focus specifically on the bill as it pertains to charter schools.

I have a great small rural charter school in my area, Valhalla Community School. It is the smallest charter school in Alberta and the only truly rural charter school in Alberta. It is a K to 9 school that serves the population in the surrounding 3,600 square kilometres around the hamlet of Valhalla. It is a rural school that serves families in Valhalla Centre as well as the surrounding farming community.

The school has a direct instructional model of teaching and learning through a phonics-based reading and writing program starting in kindergarten. The highly structured and sequenced approach to education meets with a very high level of parent satisfaction, increasing levels of academic success on the part of the students, and it sees increasing enrolment registration numbers for early elementary school. All of the kids and parents of Valhalla Community School attend school council meetings to get a sense of being involved in rural communities. This school believes that the long-term goal of rural education is to develop the skills, knowledge, and values that will enable students to become strong and contributing leaders of tomorrow. I think I can speak for all of us and say that we share this belief in our next generation of Albertans.

Bill 1 is designed to reduce school fees for parents of children attending public schools. Let me be very clear. Charter schools in Alberta are public schools, so if this government aims to help the parents of children who attend public schools, then children who attend charter schools must be included. Unfortunately, this is not the government's plan. The government is reimbursing public schools through grants, but charter schools are not eligible to receive those grants. If another public school in a designated area can receive a government grant so that they don't have to charge parents school fees, why can't a rural charter school like Valhalla Community School receive the same grant? The expenses are going to be the same at both schools. The difference is that the designated public school can get money from the government, and the charter school can't.

Transportation funding is a long-standing issue. Transportation funding in rural Alberta is divided into base funding and distance funding. Kids who are in Peace Wapiti get funding for both base and distance funding. The transportation for Valhalla kids would only be eligible for base funding. In a $1.4 million budget base transportation funding would be $90,000. To cover transportation costs in full would likely take another $90,000, which is 7 per cent of the budget, which would have to come out of the operation funds, which is basically a teacher's salary.

With this distinction in funding, the parents of children who attend charter schools will have to pay more than parents who send their kids to a public school in their designated area even though they are both public schools. If parents want to send their kids to a charter school like Valhalla because they think it's the best choice for their children's education, they are now at a financial disadvantage. Moving to a designated school from a chartered school that they believe in, due to finances, is not a choice we should be forcing our parents to make.

I support the work that the rural charter school of Valhalla is doing to educate rural kids in my area, and I hope that this government can see that disadvantaging these schools by inequity in funding is not the way forward. I urge the Minister of Education to carefully consider how the money going to school boards could be more efficiently distributed to also lessen the school fees load for our Alberta charter schools.

I'm not quite sure and am not clear on the minister's plan going forward, you know, on how he's going to finance these. I just hope, going forward, that he doesn't reward the bad operators and punish the good ones. I know of large rural schools that have large areas that actually lose a lot of funding in transportation, and they cover that cost from the classroom funding. They don't charge transportation school fees. Yet I know large schools in cities where the school boards actually make money on transportation and use that money to subsidize the classroom. And guess what? They charge school fees for transportation. I don't think it's quite right that he punishes the good operators and rewards the bad ones.

Those are my comments. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other speakers to the bill?

Seeing none, I'll call on the hon. Minister of Education to close debate.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thank you and for everyone's comments. I appreciate the commentary. Certainly, once again if I can express that this is An Act to Reduce School Fees. We gave it that title for a reason. We will have a fulsome discussion about reducing more school fees as we move forward.

Talk about something that literally epitomizes and defines making life better for Alberta families with children: this is it. I'm really glad that people do kind of see the forest for the trees on that. The comments that each member made I will certainly take into fulsome consideration.

Otherwise, Madam Speaker, I would ask to close debate on this bill.

[Motion carried; Bill 1 read a third time]

Bill 2

An Act to Remove Barriers for Survivors of Sexual and Domestic Violence

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm honoured to be able to rise today and move third reading of Bill 2, An Act to Remove Barriers for Survivors of Sexual and Domestic Violence.

I want to thank my colleagues on all sides of the House for their willingness to support this bill and for the constructive debate we've had so far. Bill 2 proposes amendments to the Limitations Act that would help survivors of sexual and domestic violence by allowing them the time they need to come forward and file a civil claim. If passed, the bill will eliminate the limitation period for commencing a civil claim related to sexual assault or other sexual misconduct and nonsexual assault involving a minor, an intimate relationship, or a dependant.

We have heard from survivors that the current time frame, two years, is often not enough time to heal from their traumatic experiences. Madam Speaker, we know it's time to do more to support and protect people who have experienced sexual and domestic violence. We recognize that for survivors, the decision to come forward is extremely personal and difficult. Removing the existing limitations period empowers survivors to come forward on their own terms when they are ready.

If passed, the legislation will make Alberta a leader in addressing other sexual misconduct in intimate relationships as no other jurisdiction in Canada expressly states this in their legislation. Removing the limitation period for these types of claims would help people who have experienced a broad range of behaviours. This includes sexual exploitation, sexual harassment, stalking, indecent exposure, voyeurism, or distributing sexually explicit photographs or videos without an individual's consent. The provisions of this bill would apply retroactively, meaning it would allow claims that stem from incidents that predate its coming into force.

Madam Speaker, every Albertan deserves to feel respected in their communities, homes, and workplaces. Organizations that work with survivors call this legislation an inspiration. They told us that the bill opens one more door for survivors to come forward and provides one more option for a survivor's journey. Survivors will have time to heal. Ultimately, this is about choice. It's about allowing survivors to come forward and hold their perpetrators to account when they choose to do so.

I'm gratified by the support this bill has received so far, and I have been moved by many of my colleagues in the House who were brave enough to speak about their own experiences during second reading. Their ordeals and those of countless other survivors underscore how common these crimes are and the need for legislation like this.

Madam Speaker, the evidence certainly suggests that when a survivor is healing from sexual or domestic violence, these journeys take all sorts of different paths and that we need to empower these individuals to have the tools they need to come forward when they are ready to make the decisions that are right for them in each individual case. Not everyone will take advantage of this legislation, but at the end of the day, this is about giving survivors a choice, a choice of when they feel ready and when they choose the path forward.

I stand here today seeking continued support from the House for this bill. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak to Bill 2, An Act to Remove Barriers for Survivors of Sexual and Domestic Violence. As we all know, sexual assault, assault on minors, domestic violence are some of the most disgusting crimes present in our society.

You know, as a former law enforcement officer I, sadly, have had much experience in dealing with many victims of crimes, especially those pertaining to sexual and domestic violence. These crimes violate the fundamental feelings of security that are a necessary condition for feeling safe within our community. All too often that feeling of security is further harmed when the victims of these crimes attempt to seek justice. While the men and women who work in our police services and in the criminal judiciary system do amazing work, the reality is that our justice system is not always accommodating to victims.

The high burden of proof that we demand in our criminal justice cases to prevent wrongful conviction and maintain innocence until the proof of guilt can be traumatic for someone that has recently suffered. While the civil prosecution system offers an alternative method of obtaining justice, where the burden of proof is lower, there are still many factors that would discourage a victim from coming forward.

One of these factors is a reluctance to face the person who wronged them so soon after that event. Given the nature of the offences that this bill is focused on, there are very strong emotions involved in bringing an accusation forward, and the experience of testifying, attending court day after day, and hoping to obtain some measure of peace can be extremely trying. The idea of having to go through all of that can discourage people from bringing forward accusations, and that can become a barrier to achieving justice.

While the bill before us today doesn't make the experience any easier, it does give more time to heal before having to go through with it. I think that is a positive step, a way of acknowledging that we know how hard the process can be, that if you need to take longer than the two years previously allowed, you can do that, and you can do that without worrying that justice won't be served because you waited.

For that reason, I will support this bill as a show of support for anyone who finds themselves in a situation. Along with that support, though, I do have a note of caution for the government. I see that the bill makes the removal of limitations retroactive, and I don't have a problem with that, but I do want to make sure that the government has the resources in place so that when these older cases start to go through the system, they do get the attention that they deserve. For many of these people seeking to bring older cases, some of them have lost faith in the ability of the system to help them, and if they try again after any number of years to address past wrongdoings and the system fails them again, well, that will be another traumatic experience that they simply just do not need.

I will be, of course, voting for this bill, and I hope that the government will dedicate the necessary resources to make it a success. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and speak to the third reading of Bill 2, An Act to Remove Barriers for Survivors of Sexual and Domestic Violence. It's a bill that I will certainly be supporting and, I should add, all members of my caucus as well.

Now, this bill is an opportunity for all of us to work together and collectively show that we support survivors. It's important for us to recognize the absolute horrors of sexual assault and that we as legislators reflect this understanding by addressing barriers to justice for these crimes.

Sexual abuse and any form of sexual violence, including rape, molestation, incest, and similar forms of nonconsensual sexual contact – most sexual abuse experts agree that sexual abuse is never only about sex. Instead, it's often about an attempt to gain power over victims. We have an obligation to Albertans to ensure that we put the power back into the hands of victims. Removing the time limitations on civil matters of sexual abuse will allow victims to seek their own form of justice that they might not otherwise have been able to, whether that be due to trials being stayed or dismissed or for some other reason.

Sexual assaults can leave victims with a feeling that their body is not their own. Victims often feel shame, terror, depression, and may even blame themselves for the attack. When a survivor finally comes forward, it can be sometimes decades later. According to some studies in the U.S. approximately 73 per cent of child victims do not disclose the abuse for a year or more, and 45 per cent do not disclose it until more than five years have passed. Many victims of childhood sexual abuse never tell anyone about the abuse. It is important that when they are ready to seek justice, they still have options.

I want to thank all parties in this Assembly for joining the call to put victims first, and I thank the minister for her very hard work on this file. Good job. I urge all of my colleagues to support and stand in favour of this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for questions or comments.

Seeing none, I'll recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak in strong support of this bill, and I think the best way to start the conversation and my comments is just to quote the minister. First, I want to thank the minister for bringing this forward and thank the government for taking real steps that I think will help survivors of sexual and domestic violence in a meaningful way. Quoting the minister, it allows them "to come forward when they are ready. We respect the time it may take to do this. If passed, Bill 2 will improve the lives of these Albertans."

I think we in this House can agree with all that, all of those words and this sentiment. It's good when we can focus on an issue together in this House that is a huge problem in our community but also come forward with a solution that we can all agree is the right one. I do take the Member for Calgary-West's point, that resources in our court system are an important aspect and an important issue and something that we do need to ensure we focus on, and I will continue to hold the government to account for their role in ensuring that the court system continues to function well.

But as it relates specifically to this bill, it's timely, and it helps make Alberta a leader in addressing sexual assault and sexual misconduct. It helps address what is a chronic and substantial problem in this province and, sadly, has been in Alberta for many, many years. The statistics are sobering. Half of all women in Canada have experienced at least one incident of physical or sexual violence; 74 per cent of Albertans, three-quarters of Albertans, say that they have personally known at least one woman who has experienced physical or sexual abuse.

A number of years ago I volunteered with HomeFront, the domestic violence specialized court in Calgary, a remarkable organization that focuses on survivors of domestic violence and ensures that we tackle the root cause of why it happens, ensures that perpetrators are brought to trial quickly. But the focus is not purely on punishment. The focus is on counselling, not just for the perpetrator but for the victims, for the survivors and their families, to really get into the root causes of why domestic violence happens and to try to, in the tag line of the organization at the time, stop it where it starts.

I'll tell you a brief story from that time. A volunteer rode with the Calgary police domestic conflict unit that night, and they said: all right; we're going to sit and listen to every single domestic violence call that comes in, and we're going to try, lights flashing, to get to every single one tonight if we can. It was absolutely impossible. They'd get a call in one corner of the city, and while they're on their way, a minute later they'd have to be going to the next call and to the next call and the next. It was absolutely not possible to respond to every single domestic call that evening, and that just tells you about the scale of the problem.

My statistics here show me that the Calgary Police Service responds to 19,000 domestic violence calls every year. So we get a sense of the scale of this issue, and by no means will Bill 2 address every single aspect of the issue – far from it – but it's an important step to allow survivors, victims of domestic violence and sexual assault to, in their own time, bring action that can help them with their healing journey.

With that, I will absolutely support this bill, and I again thank the government for bringing it forward. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

Seeing none, I'll call on the hon. Minister of Justice to close debate.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I don't think that much remains to be said on this bill. I'd like to thank again my colleagues on all sides of the House for their support of this bill and particularly my colleagues who shared their stories at second reading. I think that really signals to the public just how prevalent these sorts of offences can be and how they reach through sort of all different areas of society and touch the lives of all Albertans in a really devastating way. I'm very glad that we were able to move forward on this bill to ensure that survivors can come forward in their own time and to make it just a little bit easier for them.

Thank you, again, very much.

[Motion carried; Bill 2 read a third time]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 7 An Act to Enhance Post-secondary Academic Bargaining

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to move second reading of Bill 7, An Act to Enhance Post-secondary Academic Bargaining.

Our government is committed to fair legislation that makes life better for hard-working Albertans. This includes the proposed bill, that will modernize Alberta's labour relations model for the postsecondary sector.

In 2016 our government introduced changes to the legislation governing essential services. These changes extended the right to strike to Alberta's public services and health care sector; however, it did not include academic bargaining in the postsecondary sector. This gave postsecondary employers and employees additional time to transition and established a thorough consultation process to better understand the unique details of labour relations in the postsecondary sector and the needs of stakeholders.

Madam Speaker, we are bringing this bill forward after extensive consultation with stakeholders. As a result, I believe the changes we are introducing do take into consideration the unique nature of the postsecondary sector while also extending constitutionally protected rights to postsecondary faculty, graduate students, and postdoctoral fellows.

Bill 7 proposes sections of the Post-secondary Learning Act to be repealed and creates a new division in the Labour Relations Code for the postsecondary sector. If passed, academic staff, graduate students, and postdoctoral fellows would fall under the Labour Relations Code, giving them the right to strike and becoming subject to essential services legislation. This means that for the first time in Canada postdoctoral fellows would fall under legislation that formally recognizes their status as employees and would improve and protect their rights to fair and respectful workplaces.

Our government believes in the collective bargaining process that respects both workers and employers. That's why postsecondary institutions would be required to negotiate essential services agreements with bargaining units and would be covered by the lockout provisions under the Labour Relations Code.

With the proposed changes, graduate students and postdoctoral fellow associations would be responsible for bargaining with the institutions for mutually beneficial collective agreements. Ending compulsory arbitration will allow faculty, graduate students, and postdoctoral fellows and their institutions to come to prudent agreements that respect workers' constitutional rights, protect students, and ensure affordability for taxpayers.

Madam Speaker, Alberta has long been out of step with the rest of Canada, and it's time to ensure that postsecondary employees have the same rights as other Canadians. The changes that we are proposing would extend the right to strike, with protection of essential services, to faculty so that labour relations in Alberta's universities and colleges are consistent with the rest of Alberta's public sector and with the postsecondary sector across Canada. In addition, by modernizing our labour model, we are ensuring that our workplace rules comply with the Supreme Court of Canada's 2015 decision.

Over the past year we've worked with well-known labour lawyer Andy Sims to better understand the needs and considerations of our stakeholders. Since the introduction of the bill last week, many of our stakeholders have shared their satisfaction with the proposed changes. Many graduate students and postdoctoral fellows have applauded this government for considering their unique situations and for pushing for these changes. We know there'll be questions, and we will continue to take careful and measured approaches to provide stability.

Over the next five years the government will work closely with institutions to transition postsecondary staff to a collective bargaining process that addresses their unique needs.

While we recognize that these changes directly affect staff on our postsecondary campuses, students will also have questions about the impacts to their education. That's why we'll work with institutions to ensure that adequate contingency plans are developed to address strikes and lockouts and ensure minimal impacts to students. This includes reviewing and making contingency plans that address student aid, grants, and bursaries because we know, Madam Speaker, that these are the things that make a difference in the lives of students and Albertans.

This bill demonstrates our government's work to make life better now and into the future by making practical changes, changes that ensure that workplace rules are strengthened and that hard-working Albertans have good, fair jobs that support a strong and modern economy because that's what Albertans deserve.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak to Bill 7, An Act to Enhance Post-secondary Academic Bargaining. First, I want to say that the bill itself seems a bit misleading. What the NDP have introduced here is not going to enhance anything except the likelihood of professors on picket lines. But maybe that's what the desired outcome is. As a matter of fact, we know that not only will it make bargaining more combative; it also caused quite a stir in the academic world. The government admitted in its discussion document that this could have been sorted out within the existing postsecondary act. We agree with some of the faculty associations that basically turning these associations into labour unions under the postsecondary act is once again a case of this government going a little too far in pursuing its ideology.

Many stakeholders and faculty and staff have been in contact with me and are not in support and have not felt that they have been heard. The objective in consultation was to seek stakeholder feedback to make informed options for potential legislation, or at least one would hope. This, however, is not what happened to many. They made submissions and even explained what the obstacles were and would present, but once again it seems like ideology has taken precedence over common sense. Most agree that some changes to bargaining are needed to comply with the 2015 Supreme Court of Canada decision and the Saskatchewan Federation of Labour case. It is seen as strengthening Canada's public-sector workers' right to strike unless they are actually deemed essential.

Granting this to academics, I'll note, is not out of line with a number of other provinces, for better or for worse. But as usual, the NDP government couldn't help themselves and went too far with something that is not very popular with a number of faculty associations. Many stakeholders that we have spoken to do not like the contents of this bill and certainly have felt that they have not been heard.

Today I will stand in the gap and tell the House what I've heard from some of the ones who have not felt that they've been heard. What I've heard, Madam Speaker, is that many aspects of the model, except the strike lockout, are already covered in their collective agreements. What they don't desire is to be unionized, but would prefer to work the strike lockout and essential services element into the Post-secondary Learning Act.

The very nature of the uniqueness of postsecondary education is such that it should have its own labour regulations and have its own regulations arrangement. The academics play an integral role in the management and direction of the university and its friendly atmosphere, and that's the way they want to keep it. Instead of being perceived as academics and intellectuals in a leadership role, the government is trying to turn the faculty associations into trade unions, diminishing and diluting their status to fit into the NDP world view, where either you're a boss trying to exploit workers or a worker who will be exploited unless you have a powerful union.

I want to make it clear that I'm not trying to belittle one sector for the sake of another. What I'm trying to say here is that these academics are just different, and they should not be moulded or attached to any other just to fit this government's agenda. Apples should not be compared to oranges. An overwhelming majority would prefer the status quo, especially as it relates to bargaining, because it allows faculty associations to exist as integral partners of the governance and operation of the institutions. Statutory rights of faculty associations have tempered a potential adversarial relationship between management and faculty. The other issue is that after five years these faculty associations could be replaced by trade unions.

As well meaning as this government might be, it always has to take it one step too far. There are some good things that have been decided upon, but do the associations need to be moved from the PSLA to the labour act to achieve these outcomes? As a matter of fact, moving associations from the PSLA to the labour act creates more problems and conflict and more points of confusion than what really needs to be dealt with.

Bill 7 provides no transition period for bargaining that's already in progress, and unfortunately there will be plenty of colleges and at least one university that we know of that will lose their ability to go to arbitration should there be an impasse at the bargaining table, which is what the rules were when they started the process. In other words, with this bill the government is pulling their existing right to binding arbitration in the middle of negotiations. With the new legislation in place the only binding dispute resolution mechanism is to strike or, better yet, to get locked out.

Now, let me be clear about one thing. Many of my colleagues think the binding arbitration that public sectors have relied on is a mixed blessing. Yes, it means that there have been virtually no work stoppages in Alberta, but it also meant that the government has not been able to get the best deal for taxpayers because pay for government workers has been decided on by arbitrators.

I'm not against changing the rules, but I do think that if we're going to change the rules, it's pretty surprising that this supposedly pro-labour government is doing it mid-negotiation – why? – because you're giving them the right to strike, and they probably can't use that because they never thought they would have to prepare for it. No protocols are set up, and more importantly they have no contingency fund.

Legislation should have been very clear that an appropriate amount of time be allowed for the transition. There is no order and no arrangements have been made that will provide stability going into a nonstrike environment and none where strikes are now allowed. Some forethought should have been given to how this would affect the institutions, faculty, grad students, and postdoctoral fellows. We understand that you took extra time just so you could justify making the heavy changes, but without actually listening carefully to all sides involved, only ideology will be achieved.

Designing an appropriate labour code provision to the PSLA would have been less disruptive. The fact that faculty members wear different hats only justifies a unique approach to labour relations within the PSLA or even a separate section of the labour code. I'm almost positive that if you would have asked some of these faculty associations to help you design such a regime, they would have been more than happy to help.

Other recommendations have been made, and you have and you are possibly incorporating similar language as in the B.C. College and Institute Act. This would only strengthen the authority of the academic councils in that the board of governors would have to consult academic councils on the development of educational policy for matters outlined at least 10 working days before the board of governors deals with the matter.

Currently PSLA states that an academic council "shall make recommendations . . . to the board with respect to any matter that the board refers to the academic council." In other words, academic councils currently have no more than an advisory role on matters that the boards refer to them.

Another change that has been recommended is that certain matters be the joint responsibility of both the board of governors and the academic councils. If agreements cannot be made, the matter is then referred to the minister. It has its pros and cons, but I'd like to hear this government's thoughts on that.

Another item discussed was that the composition and election of academic councils must be clearly defined. Many examples of this have been presented to you.

Moving ahead, I know you've heard that instead of appealing to the Labour Relations Board, ideally the board of governors and faculty associations should jointly be responsible for the designated decision, with the right to appeal the designated decision to an independent third party.

In closing, due to the overwhelming evidence that has been presented to me in regard to this legislation, I have no other option, then, but to oppose this government's bill in its current form and ask them to at least make some changes to reflect the wishes of those who this bill will affect.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to this bill?

The hon. Minister of Advanced Education to close debate.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. Of course, I have listened intently to the Member for Highwood's statements, and I look forward to perhaps getting into the details of some of the changes that he and the people he represents would like to see in Committee of the Whole. But for this afternoon I think we've enjoyed a vigorous and stimulating debate, and I would like to close debate on this bill.

[Motion carried; Bill 7 read a second time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Acting Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Seeing the really fantastic progress that we have managed to make today – I'm very impressed with us and our ability to work together on moving these things forward – I move that we call it 6 and adjourn for the day.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:10 p.m.]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Good morning.

Let us reflect. As we come to the end of our week and prepare to head back to our home constituencies, let us reflect on the good work we've accomplished here together these past weeks. May we return refreshed and energized for the important work that still remains to be done.

Please be seated.

Second Reading

Bill 9

Marketing of Agricultural Products Amendment Act, 2017

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and move second reading of Bill 9, the Marketing of Agricultural Products Amendment Act, 2017.

The main objective of the bill is to empower our province's agricultural producers by allowing a vote on their commission's service charge model. The Marketing of Agricultural Products Act, which we commonly call MAPA, was always intended to empower Alberta's agricultural producers and their organizations to set the directions of their own industries.

One key part of MAPA is that it enables our province's agricultural commissions to collect service charges, also known as check-offs, to fund their operations as well as activities that benefit our broader agricultural industries. These activities include product marketing and promotion, trade missions to maintain and build market access, and support for industry research. However, in 2009 the previous government amended MAPA to make all service charges refundable for any members who requested refunds. This forced our wide range of agricultural sectors into all adopting the same model for their check-offs. We know that a one-size-fits-all approach doesn't make sense in today's diverse agricultural industry.

The purpose of this amendment to the Marketing of Agricultural Products Act is to restore MAPA to its original intent by allowing commissions to work with their memberships to determine whether they want their check-off dollars to be refundable or nonrefundable. The Minister of Agriculture and Forestry has heard from commissions and individual producers who want the commissions to have the flexibility to make this choice and not have the service charge model dictated by government. Our government wants to empower agricultural commissions and their members with autonomy, showing our deep respect for them to be able to work with their producers to figure out which service charge model works best for them. Many commissions and producers may want to keep things the way they are with the refundable model. Some commissions may choose to consult their member producers and discuss changing to a nonrefundable model.

This amendment is not about one model being better than the other but about giving commissions back the flexibility. At the end of the day, this decision will result from agricultural commissions and their members. If a commission chooses to make a change to its service charge model, they will have to conduct a plebiscite of their members to ensure producers are consulted. Our clear expectation is that any change must follow a fair and transparent process. That allows the opportunity for producers to voice their opinions.

The Alberta Agricultural Products Marketing Council, which was established through MAPA and provides oversight of agricultural commissions, would work with each commission to determine specific plebiscite requirements, ensuring they would be appropriate to the size and nature of each specific sector. The government is here to support producers, commissions, and our province's marketing council in ensuring this process includes opportunities for all voices to be heard. But we are not here to dictate how every sector should shape their service charge models. This amendment would also bring us closer in line with other jurisdictions across the country, with Alberta being the only province with mandatory refundable service charges.

I ask for the support of all members of the Assembly for Bill 9 to restore this flexibility and autonomy to commissions in our agricultural sector. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, can I confirm that you are moving second reading on behalf of the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry?

Mr. Rosendahl: Yes. That is correct.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to get up to speak on this bill this morning. Before I start, I'm just a little unsure with the rulings in this House lately. I want to be up front and say that I own a farm. I've been a farmer all my life. My brothers farm, my relatives farm, and my family has been farming in Alberta for a hundred years, so I'm not sure if I'm in conflict here or not, but unless you rule otherwise, I'm happy to speak to the bill. I won't apologize for speaking up for Alberta agricultural producers. In the meantime, unless you rule differently, it's a pleasure to speak on this bill.

I'm going to support the bill. I think it's absolutely the right thing to do. I want to congratulate the minister for bringing it forward. You know, it's a pretty simple bill. It just gives the commissions the power to change whether their check-offs are refundable or not, and they have to do it with a producer plebiscite, so the producers in Alberta will have a say whether their check-offs are refundable or not. I think it's absolutely the right thing to do. I support it, and I encourage all my colleagues in the House to support this bill as well.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I gather that some of the conflict rules are related to if you have a fiduciary interest. All the farmers I know: I don't think they make much money, so I don't think there's any danger there.

Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the ruling that you gave. I myself am an agricultural producer. I've got the same problem. In fact, we checked with the Ethics Commissioner yesterday to make sure because I didn't want anything I said in this House to be something that someone else could take a shot at, et cetera, et cetera. I think we all know where that was heading.

Anyway, I rise today to discuss the upcoming changes to the Marketing of Agricultural Products Act, commonly known as MAPA. Now, Bill 9 would see MAPA return to the same state it was prior to Bill 43 being passed in 2009. The proposed amendment to MAPA is to allow the producer membership as a whole to choose via plebiscite either a refundable or nonrefundable service charge model for the commission.

Alberta's seven marketing boards operate under a supply management system. This often occurs through national organizations. The boards set and negotiate a price, and they have a nonrefundable service charge model. The Marketing of Agricultural Products Amendment Act, 2017, applies to only Alberta's 13 agriculture commissions. This legislation does not apply to the marketing boards. These 13 commissions represent a variety of crop and livestock commodities and currently use a refundable model.

It's no secret that the Wildrose believes in letting grassroots members determine their direction. Having grassroots determine how things go is what the entire Wildrose organization is all about. That is what I believe this amendment actually returns Alberta's commissions to. Through a plebiscite the commissions can allow members to self-determine the model for service charges, or check-offs, as they are also often called. This puts the decision back into the commissions and into their members' hands. Although the commissions do require all producers of regulated products to be members, some commissions have provisions where producers who produce on a smaller scale can be exempt from the commission, something like a bee producer or sometimes potato growers that don't grow enough products for sale. This can then exempt them from the provisions of the related commission.

Members on this side of the House understand the role these commissions play. We have members of the beef, barley, pulse, canola, and wheat commissions represented right here. In my own instance I commit to check-offs every time that I sell spring wheat, every time I sell canola, peas, or barley. Certainly, when I was involved with the cattle industry as a cow-calf producer, I had a check-off each time I sold cows or calves. Through check-offs deducted from my grain cheques, each time I deliver grain to the elevator, I'm automatically a member of all kinds of research and development organizations. I don't have to sign a membership card or pay a fee or even show up at a meeting. If they have taken my check-off, I'm automatically a member of that organization.

As a producer you may be trying to determine if you need micronutrients for your crop. There are mountains of information to find on subjects like that due to research that's been done. Trying to figure out what might be the best time to sell your canola? The Alberta canola commission has ICE canola futures on that page. Many commissions have current market outlooks on their websites. Not sure what damage Fusarium in a wheat crop could cause? Well, the Alberta Wheat Commission has a funded research page that will give you all kinds of info on that subject. When my grain is hauled or cattle is sold, the check-off helps pay for research of all kinds, and that is value added to the membership.

You know, with the money received from check-offs each year, you're funding some pretty impressive research. In fact, it's so impressive that the Canada Revenue Agency will give you an investment tax credit through the scientific research and experimental development program. Each year the feds take a look at organizations that are actively involved in research for their commissions. Then the CRA has some criteria that has to be met, and spending on research has to meet those conditions, but when the air is all cleared on that, the CRA allows a tax reduction from your income on that particular crop.

Now, it's understood that each commission assesses and collects service charges, and as of 2009 and Bill 43 these service charges are refundable. That means that members can indeed apply to have these charges returned to them. These groups operate in a self-funded model, where service charges assessed and collected from members are often the main source of income for these operations and include research and marketing as well as day-to-day business costs. Investment in programs through service charges is designed to benefit all producer members, including those who request refunds.

While some detractors equate this funding to a tax on their livelihood, many commissions that have a refundable system in place report that the refund rate percentage is in the single digits and that this is a nonissue. Others feel that going to a nonrefundable model would take away the only form of protest that members had, and that was to withhold funding to the commission by applying for a refund. While we've certainly listened to both sides of the argument, the fact remains that there are still mechanisms in place to ensure that members are represented. It may be through lobbying members to vote a certain way and making your opinion known, but options do exist.

While it is never perfect – and it's never going to be – democracy is still the best option, in my view. That's why allowing a plebiscite to change the funding model or to remain with the status quo is so important. Each commission will be able to determine the method and rules around the individual plebiscites or if there is even desire by members to hold one.

Madam Speaker, MAPA established a government-appointed provincial agency called the Alberta Agricultural Products Marketing Council. This marketing council provides advice to the minister on Alberta's marketing boards and commissions to oversee their operations and administer regulations under MAPA. It is this body that will oversee the plebiscite and work with the commissions to ensure the entire process is transparent and completely above board. The power to determine the direction that each commission will ultimately take will reside in the membership. It is they who have the power to initiate change or not.

This amendment to MAPA brings our legislation in line with all other jurisdictions. They all have legislation in place which enables the producer bodies as a whole to choose their respective service charge model. It's time we returned Alberta to this model, and this is why I'll be supporting this bill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) comes into effect if anyone has questions or comments.

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to stand up and respond to this bill, in support of Bill 9, Marketing of Agricultural Products Amendment Act, 2017. It's an important step to do at this time because, of course, the beef industry along with other industries is looking for ways in which they can better support their producers in areas such as research, such as trade discussions with other jurisdictions around the world.

Of course, a lot of those things do require resources. The Alberta Beef Producers, for example, take in approximately $7 million a year in check-off fees, but something like fighting the country of origin labelling, otherwise known as COOL, was something that cost $6 million. It was something that was done in the interests of all beef producers in Alberta to ensure that trade markets remain open for our Alberta producers with other places like the United States. [A cellphone rang] Sorry; I'll just let the member address his phone.

When we see something in the order of 34 per cent of check-offs being refunded from an amount of $7 million, it's a sizable amount of money. It's $2.4 million that are withdrawn. The research and the trade discussions that are undertaken by Alberta Beef Producers are something that benefits all members. In the event that a member doesn't believe that the commission is fulfilling what their needs are, they can take their money out, but the producer commission still works for that member regardless of whether their money has been left in or not.

I have had constituents that have come to my office feeling like the system hasn't been fair. While this doesn't make it nonrefundable, what this will do is actually put that vote back in the hands of the producers. There are other measures of accountability such as if 20 per cent of the members of that commission come together and ask for a plebiscite or for something to be addressed, then they can also use those mechanisms of accountability to ensure that their voices are being heard. This is something that has come from many small and medium producers that are in my constituency that believe in the work that is done on their behalf. They want to see the research that is going on around the world in terms of efficiency, in terms of finding that sort of cutting-edge research that actually propels their industry forward on a world stage.

It's interesting to read back in history on the Bill 43 that was passed a number of years ago, about eight years ago, about this issue. Really, there just were not a lot of commissions and members that were asking for it. I have some material from a press release that came out from the Potato Growers of Alberta that was saying that they didn't believe that the Alberta government was understanding the value of their commission, that they didn't believe that this was something that was actually asked for by their industry. Also, there was a press release from the Alberta Beef Producers at the time that was saying that the government was ignoring democracy, that they saw the bitter irony of having democratically elected MLAs in the Legislature making decisions that would take away their own democratic process of having a vote on something like whatever their check-off model is. In going through the Hansard from different members, from members such as who is now the hon. Minister of Transportation and of Infrastructure, at the time when he spoke about it, he was talking about the need to have power not just concentrated in the hands of large producers.

Unfortunately, that can be one of the implications of taking check-off fees back into a company. It's based on a per head model, so while you have lots of people that might have 400 head, if you have a company that has 100,000 head, it tends to displace the power of how those check-offs are impacting the industry as a whole.

This is something that is very important to many in the industry like the potato commission to make sure that the research dollars are available to leverage. One of the things that I have heard about in multiple meetings with different agricultural producers is that they want there to be those dollars available to leverage on a 2 to 1 ratio or a 5 to 1 ratio of the actual returns that they get in the end, the actual value of the scientific research that can be done at places like the University of Alberta. This is something that will restore the autonomy back to industry groups if it is something that the groups want to do. That's just the thing. It doesn't make it nonrefundable; what it does is that it just gives the power of that decision back to the producers.

I had the great opportunity to go to an Alberta Beef Producers meeting in Smoky Lake with the Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater and to talk to local producers in his area and in my area – the zone is quite large – and talk about what it is that people want to see going forward. The power of the membership is that they can have producer-driven conversations on what they want and ensure that there is good accountability and have that strong local voice. We have zones across Alberta where the producers come from many different parts of the sector. They can talk to their directors, and they can elect directors at their groups to make sure that they are the ones that step forward and want to be that voice for change as a director or who just has that good involvement with their group at a local level to be addressing their needs.

Alberta currently is the only jurisdiction in Canada that has a mandatory refundable model for commissions. This is something that will bring us closer in line to the rest of the country. I know that in looking at the conversation that happened eight years ago, there were not a lot of members that were even speaking in favour of taking this democratic ability away from the groups. They weren't really talking about why it was something that was important except for talking about choice, but to truly have choices is having a vote, so I'm very pleased that this is the direction that this bill is going in.

It will require, still, a plebiscite for changes to happen in a commission if that's what they choose, but just like other members were saying, it's true that there is no one-size-fits-all approach. The agriculture industry in our province as well as the rest of the world continues to become more diverse as climate changes and as food preferences change, so we have to have models that change and morph with it to actually respond to the needs of producers.

With that, I will just encourage all members of the House to vote in favour of the bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), questions or comments? Under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Strankman: Yes, ma'am.

The Deputy Speaker: Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you. Thank you for the opportunity. It's with great interest that I take umbrage at the comments coming forward here because I, too, have direct interest in our family farming operation. Madam Speaker, to your position, I guess I would call it, in regard to the potentiality of conflict of interest, I too want to make it publicly known and known in this Chamber that I'm pleased and proud of my associations directly with agriculture. I do take great pride and stock in that I do provide food for Albertans coming forward.

To the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville: she talked on many subjects, and I'm happy to do a back and forth. I have a series of questions here. The member specifically talked about international trade and country of origin labelling and how that potentially could be affected by this, the bill coming forward, which I think is progressive and open minded. But the member did talk about COOL, or country of origin labelling. I don't know if the member is aware of an organization in the U.S. called R-CALF. R-CALF has considerable concerns about the check-off organizations that we do have in Canada. The member also mentioned potato growing and such like that.

I was wondering if the member could give us some understanding of how this may or may not affect international trade based on the opinions of an American-based organization like R-CALF. Also, I was also wondering if she could table any information to confirm the comments that she made about the different levels of displacement of power. The member talked, Madam Speaker, about some organizations that may have, like, 400 head and other organizations that may have 10,000 or even up as high as 100,000 head. She talked about the displacement of power based on those organizations. The member was talking about a check-off based on a per head basis, but in the case of potato growers was she talking about a check-off based on a per-acre basis?

We also have wheat growers, of which I'm one, and barley growers and such like that who pay a check-off on a per-tonne basis, but the tonnage is based on an acreage of production.

I was just wondering if the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville could give us some background on her understanding of those relationships. It is important with a prominent bill like this that's come forward that we don't create any disruptive international trade barriers.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you for the interest. The potato growers pay 7 cents per 100 pounds sold for processing; they pay 2 cents for each 100 pounds of culled potatoes sold for processing; $25 per harvested acre of potatoes produced for table use; $35 per certified harvested seed acre; and .75 per cent of annual gross income sales or transfers of plantlets or potatoes derived from an undertaking consisting of a facility or operation of one or more laboratory greenhouses.

For the year – I think this was for 2015 – they collected approximately $1.4 million and saw a refund basis of approximately 5 per cent, which meant $70,000. That's $70,000 that gets refunded that is then not able to be put towards things like leveraging scientific research for that industry.

In the case of COOL, the commission uses the fees that are paid to them for a number of things like making sure that the trade barriers are not something that preclude their producers from having a level playing field in other jurisdictions. That is something that they worked quite hard to take off.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Speaker's Ruling Conflicts of Interest

The Deputy Speaker: Before we continue on, I just want to clarify for members of the House that the role of the Speaker is not to make decisions regarding conflicts of interest. That is something that rests strictly with the Ethics Commissioner, and the Speaker does not decide if somebody is in a conflict. The Speaker may have a role in bringing forward the Ethics Commissioner's decision to the House, but the Speaker does not make that decision. Just so that you are aware.

Debate Continued

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other members that wish to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater-Sturgeon.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater. It's my privilege to rise in the House today to speak in favour of Bill 9. This is something that I know that I've heard from producers in my area on, you know, particularly members of the Alberta Beef Producers but not only them, where they thought that the previous administration had made a bit of a wrong step back in 2009 in changing a system that had been working well for the majority of producers.

Now, of course, the whole point of the Marketing of Agricultural Products Act in its original conception: it was intended to empower Alberta's ag producers and their organizations to set their own directions. That's why it was set up. It wasn't something directly run through Agriculture. It was something where producers had their own say, and it's kind of important, when it comes to key decisions about their organizations, that that be respected. Since 2009 that hasn't necessarily been the case.

Pretty key to these organizations is, of course, check-offs. Now more than ever these funds are critically necessary for them to be able to adequately fund their operations and to do research to benefit the broader industry and, of course, then, all of us. These activities – and I know other members have alluded to that – would include marketing, promotion, trade missions to build market access, support for industry research, and ongoing outreach and education efforts. It's one thing that I know I've been happy to be a beneficiary of, the work of members of, in particular, the Alberta Beef Producers up in my area, that have been more active, to educate us on some of the concerns that they have and to do it in a really I don't know if I could say rural kind of friendly way. I know that I had a great opportunity some months back to have a delicious Alberta beef dinner – actually, they even do recipes with Colin Campbell, who's the vice-president of one of the zones in my riding. He's part of, you know, the discussion.

This is something that is kind of important to respect. I mean, since 2009 you've had a wide range of sectors that have been forced to adopt essentially the same model for their check-offs. This sort of one-size-fits-all approach doesn't really make sense in industry today. It's really important to restore MAPA to its original intent. This is something that I know the minister has heard from many different quarters on, from both commissions and individual producers. I think this is sort of a good middle way, right? I mean, it's not imposing a particular solution on any particular check-off organization. Rather, it's giving them the flexibility to make that choice for themselves and not have the service charge model dictated, well, by us.

Now, of course, there are producers out there and there are commissions that are still committed to having the refundable model. I mean, that's something where if a majority of their members believe the same thing, they can keep things essentially the way they are whereas there are other organizations where it's not quite the same situation, where a majority of members might well want the opportunity to go back to the nonrefundable model. It just sort of depends on where they're at in the industry.

I've heard a lot from producers where they really resent – I guess I'm trying to think of a diplomatic way of saying it. I mean, it sort of comes down to the whole problem of the free ride, where they feel like you have some members of the organization that are, you know, asking for the refunds, but they're able to benefit from the research, from the marketing, and from the advocacy efforts that their associations provide without actually providing funds to support that. For those that do provide those funds, they find that not only kind of irksome, but they also find it where it leaves these organizations sometimes with perhaps not enough funds to be able to fulfill their mandates.

It's particularly important – I know that other members have alluded to this today – in this very uncertain time. We have a very export-oriented agricultural industry in most sectors, and we're facing a very complicated international environment, where you have other governments, you know, heavily subsidizing their producers. I mean, I know that members alluded to some American organizations. You have some organizations that are pushing hard for backtracking on the advances we made with the country of origin labelling.

Then, of course, we have the challenge of climate change both in the kind of research that's required to adjust agricultural operations to keep them efficient and also to be able to meet climate change goals. I know that people in the industry and people that are interested in the industry, you know, are gratified to see that there have been some really pretty interesting developments on changes to husbandry practices, changes to feed, and all the things that are leading us to our goals. But these things require money, they require research, and then they require education. These are all things that these check-off organizations I know provide.

The Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville was happy to accompany me to Smoky Lake, actually, partly because, I think, most of that zone is in her riding and not mine. But it was a very interesting event in that all those different aspects were combined in one regional meeting. There were presentations on best practices in shipping, there were presentations on – actually, there was a lot of different information. It really went down the whole gamut: updates in research, updates for education, discussions on advocacy. I found the whole thing very helpful.

It's difficult to see how our industries could flourish the way that they have without robust organizations such as these working. To be able to give these organizations the type of flexibility where, if their membership so decides, they can make sure that all the members of the organization contribute to it, when it's appropriate: I think that's all very good.

Considering that it seems we have unanimous consent so far, it's a very good sign that we're taking a step in the right direction with this. Well, I guess that most members have already made their minds up, but if there are any members wavering on this, you know, unanimous support for this bill would, I think, send a great message to our producers.

With that, I'd like to rest my comments.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? I'll recognize Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate being able to talk about this and ask a question to the hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater. I just want to say, first of all, that I do believe that I am in favour of this bill; however, there are some concerns that I have. I also want to state that I'm not a farmer or rancher, so in terms of being able to speak about this bill from that perspective, I don't believe I have that right or ability.

But I do want to ask the hon. member about the issue of being able to balance a democratic right for producers to be able to vote for this check-off or not or receiving the check-off back or not versus the importance of property rights. I'll give you an example. You talked about how some of the members of these commissions feel like other members were getting a free ride. From what I understand, if you are a producer and you want to sell your product elsewhere, you have to be involved in one of these commissions. In order for you to be able to sell your goods, being mandatorily required to be part of this – a little bit of your freedom is being taken away. So your right of property, the ability of property, can be affected by this mandatory compulsion to be involved in this commission.

Again, I don't think that any bill is perfect, and I believe that this bill is allowing that democracy, and I think that that's very important. I applaud the agriculture minister for bringing that forward. However, for that member or for that producer who feels he or she is not getting the benefit of that check-off, they could be under the tyranny of the majority, be required to have to pay this. So it affects their property rights, their ability to produce what they believe is in their best interest. This is the only concern that I have with this bill.

We have seen it, actually, in this House, where the tyranny of the majority decides for an individual what the consequence is going to be. In the event that someone felt like they just didn't agree with one individual, the majority could vote against that individual. This is why in our western society we have a balance between democracy and the rule of law, that individuals have certain freedoms that we need to balance, and I think that it's extremely important for us to make sure that we get that proper balance.

Again, I just want the member to maybe give us a little more information and provide a little more detail on what he thinks is the proper balance in terms of what this commission is mandating individual producers to do versus their, I guess, right in our country for property rights.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: All right. I'd like to thank the hon. member for a very interesting question, one that's, I'd say, fairly weighty for this early in the morning. It's a question that, of course, we as human beings have been debating in various forms for millennia. So I'm not sure if I'm going to be able to wrap this up with a nice bow on it, but, you know, I do want to recognize that I think the member is absolutely correct, and I think it's something that applies to every decision that we make in this House. There's always going to be that tension between individual autonomy and the well-being of the group. The question is: well, where do you draw that line?

I mean, we do have a guide, I guess, of sorts. Well, I shouldn't say of sorts. We do have a very firm guide in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and where that line is drawn is what's called "reasonable." So what's reasonable and demonstrably just? [Mr. Piquette's speaking time expired] Oh. Thanks.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the bill?

The hon. member to close debate on behalf of the minister.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I've got to thank everyone who spoke on this bill this morning. I move to close debate on second reading of Bill 9.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 9 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 9 Marketing of Agricultural Products Amendment Act, 2017

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Chair. I want to thank you for the opportunity to speak in Committee of the Whole on Bill 9, Marketing of Agricultural Products Amendment Act, 2017. The saga continues.

I must divulge here that I did grow up on a farm; I am a farmer. In my younger days, in the '60s and '70s, the whole discussion around marketing boards, marketing commissions, and the establishment of a marketing council and all of that was a very hot topic around the kitchen table with friends and neighbours and family as I grew up. Those discussions were always very passionate and very much about trying to get to the bottom of who we were going to allow to decide for us and how we would establish a system that allows it to work in the best interests of the industry, the farms, yet not give up the freedom to choose how we market our products. Those are ongoing today again.

I remember back in 2009, when Bill 43 was introduced. The government of the day felt it was important to allow four of the industries to have the same rights to a refundable service charge that nine of the commissions already had. What we're finding today is that we see that we have possibly nine of the commissions that never had the opportunity for nonrefundable service charges wanting us to adjust to a position – well, I would suggest it's all 13 of the commissions we're considering here – to a system that would give the producers, the members of those associations, those commissions, the opportunity to have their say through a democratic vote, through a very fair and transparent process.

The Marketing of Agricultural Products Act essentially established the Alberta Ag Products Marketing Council, which is an agency operating for the ministry, for the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry. As we move forward on this, I believe that the marketing council is essentially charged with ensuring that these decisions and these processes, that the commissions will go forward with if they choose to, are conducted with a very fair and transparent mechanism, in a fair and transparent way, so that all producers are properly represented in that they have a fair representation of their concerns within that.

When the marketing council and the minister, essentially, have to make their decisions on, "Is this fair, and is this transparent?" one of the things that will possibly come into it is what the definition of a fair process is. I'm not sure that there's any indication in this at this time of what the minister of the day considers fair, but there is concern that possibly 50 per cent plus one would make the change for everything. That's 50 per cent plus one of members of the association as opposed to two-thirds of members of the association and commission. Is that fair? I guess that's up to interpretation. At the same time, 50 per cent of membership might be responsible for only 20 per cent, 25 per cent of production. So then the conversations go around – and I remember these conversations as a child – well, how is it fair that 50 per cent of the members get to decide when they only produce 10, 20, 25 per cent of the product?

So I suspect the saga will continue even after today. I believe that we are improving it today but that those discussions will continue on, and we'll continue to try and evolve to where we can land at another place that can be interpreted as treating all people fair, all producers, in trying to come to a system that will work for each producer in those commodity groups.

Like I said before, you know, in 2009 there were nine commissions that already had the choice of a refundable service charge. I'm not sure what the history on that is, whether that was how the marketing council decided to set those commissions up, but at that time they already had that in place. I would suspect that they would at that time have been able to change if their memberships so wished. Essentially, in 2009 we had the beef, the pork, the lamb, and the potato growers getting the option to have the refundable. The way their commissions were set up was that they didn't have that option. They were essentially nonrefundable. They couldn't have even voted to go nonrefundable, from the way I understand it. So in 2009 it changed to what we are currently at, and now we are looking to move into a situation where we let the producers and the members of the commissions make the choice of: do they wish to move to a refundable or nonrefundable service charge?

I believe that is the proper direction to go at this time, so I am in favour of Bill 9 as we are putting it forward today. But I do have questions with regard to indications on fair and transparent, how the minister would view that, how those regulations would come into play. I do believe that memberships should determine what direction their associations and their commissions go. I am concerned that we are now in a position where we have the marketing council, again, making a decision based off of their interpretation of the process being proposed by each commission on how to move forward.

Then, also, there are always the concerns that the industry has to then decide how they implement their service charge. Is it every time the animal is sold that they're charged the service charge? I believe the lamb commission ties it in with their identification tags, where you pay a service charge whenever you purchase those identification tags. So that's a one-time thing, for each animal essentially. Is there any indication as to: will there be some mechanism, or are we essentially leaving it in the hands of the commissions to try and figure out what that fair service charge is?

I do believe that part of the discussions back in the day – I was in the hog industry at the time, and I have produced beef over the years. But part of the discussion at that time was that for the beef animal, when you sold the calf, you paid a charge. When you sold that feeder animal, feeder steer, you paid the charge. Then for the finished animal you paid a charge. So that may be paid three, four, five times during the lifetime of that animal. I guess the commissions have to try and find a way to allow it to be fair, where each producer feels like they're being treated equally in the whole process. It's all about finding policies that work for everyone and trying to find that balance.

One other question I do have is with regard to moving forward as the commissions make a decision. You know, some have made a decision, I believe, already, where they will stay to the refundable check-off unless they're lobbied by their members to move to a nonrefundable check-off. My question would be: moving forward from there, can the commission at any time in the future bring it back to the table for a vote? So if they decide this year or next whether or not they're going to go to the nonrefundable, is it, then, in two years' time after that where they have the option to have another vote? Is that going to create a certain amount of divisiveness within the industry, where we're going to have the different producers and the different organizations – in the beef industry you have the cow-calf producers, you have the feedlot operators, and it can become very divisive because their interests don't totally align at any given time. If I could get some clarification on the process moving forward, whether this is something that the minister sees as ongoing, where the commissions continue to have the opportunity to have a vote at any time moving forward.

I think those are all the questions I have at this time. I'd like to thank the minister for bringing this forward. I do think this is an improvement on what we have. It puts the onus back to the industry and the decision-making back to the industry. But, again, the saga will continue because the talks around the kitchen table will be very passionate on how we move forward and how to best represent all producers.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just wanted to use the notes that I have here about situations that would require a plebiscite vote because, of course, that is what would be required to change the structure for how producer groups use their check-off fees. So this is saying what situations require a plebiscite vote. Under sections 16 and 24 of the Marketing of Agricultural Products Act a plebiscite vote is required to establish a marketing board; amend the regulation of a marketing board if the amendment relates directly to the control or regulation of the production or marketing, or both, of a regulated product under the plan; terminate a marketing board or commission that was established pursuant to a plebiscite of the producers; terminate a marketing board or commission that was in operation immediately before July 27, 1987; determine, if the marketing council considers it appropriate, the opinion of the producers under the plan as to whether the plan should be amended, continued, revised, or terminated.

Then there are the criteria for conducting a plebiscite. Once the plebiscite request has been recommended by the marketing council and approved by the Lieutenant Governor in Council, the marketing council is required to arrange to conduct a plebiscite, and then the marketing council, by regulation, with the approval of the minister, must determine what constitutes (a) an eligible producer, (b) a sufficient number of eligible producers, and (c) a sufficient portion of the total agricultural product that is marketed or is capable of being produced by the eligible producers. When a sufficient number of eligible producers have, one, voluntarily registered with the marketing council in order for a plebiscite to be held and, two, the eligible producers registered for conducting the plebiscite market or are capable of producing a sufficient portion of the agricultural product, then a plebiscite would be held. Both criteria must be achieved in order for the plebiscite to be valid.

To date, the marketing council's decision on how many producers must register and what portion of production is required in order to meet the minimum requirements for a plebiscite has been based on several factors, including previous plebiscite requirements; recommendations from the marketing board, commission, or industry as to what they think would be sufficient numbers; the level of importance associated with the proposed change and plebiscite; the number of producers producing that product; the amount of production and concentration of production; and the ability to contact producers.

There have been a number of plebiscites in the past, including, in the year 2000, the pork board's. There was a plebiscite to become a commission and split from the Western Hog Exchange, where 20 per cent of producers was the minimum number of producers that would need to be registered, and 30 per cent of production was required to be registered. In that vote there were 73 per cent that were in favour.

Also, in 2002 there was the milk plan to become a marketing board, where 25 per cent of producers would need to register and 25 per cent of production. In that specific example, 50.5 per cent of producers had registered along with 50.7 per cent of production, or 335 million litres of milk, that they represented. When they did that vote, they voted 91.8 per cent in favour.

It's also worth adding that producers currently do have a mechanism to ask for redress in their marketing commissions, where 20 per cent of producers can petition the marketing council. MAPA, section 21, considers petitions from producers under a plan whereby producers request that a plan be amended, continued, revised, or terminated, and a marketing council shall only accept a producer petition where the petition (a) clearly states the intent, (b) is signed by at least 20 per cent of the producers under the plan, (c) sets forth the name, address, and signature of each petitioner, and (d) is submitted to council within 12 months from the date the first petitioner signed the petition.

Thanks, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to rise on this bill. First of all, I'd like to say that I support it. I think that taking advice from my colleague from Grande Prairie-Wapiti, who's forgotten more about farming since he woke up this morning than I'll ever know, is a pretty good source of information for me.

But I have to say that I was interested in some of the comments from some of the members on the government side. For instance, they talked – and I agree with this – about providing autonomy for producers, which is a very good idea. I have to say, Madam Chair, that it is in sharp contrast to Bill 6. To the government's credit, I'll compliment them for improving their line of thinking, but I will remind them that it's exactly the opposite of what they did in Bill 6, which is to take away the autonomy. Also, I heard a government member talk about: one size doesn't fit all. Again, I couldn't agree more. Again, that's in sharp, sharp contrast to Bill 6, where apparently, with WCB, one size, they decided, does fit all. It's good that they've learned something since Bill 6, and there's still time, in my view, before they fully implement that, to reverse course and correct that.

So I will compliment the government on this bill, and I do that without reservation, but I will do that along with a recommendation to the government that they actually expand the learnings that they seem to have shown in this bill across the other pieces of legislation, including the labour bill, where one size is going to fit all and without much consultation to get people to agree with it where they come forward. If they would use the more clear thinking that they've used to come up with this bill and apply it to the rest of the work that the NDP government does, that would be to Alberta's benefit.

I'm happy to support this bill and hope that the government will indeed use their clearer level of thinking that they've had in creating this bill and apply it to other things that they do.

The Chair: Any other questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Rosendahl: Yes. The important thing is that we've got to consider that these amendments will return to producers the freedom of choice – and that's what's important here – so that the producers can choose what they want. That's the main message of this thing. It's important we consider that, that we return that freedom of choice to them so that they can choose what they want to do. That's the whole idea of this bill. It returns that important aspect and gives producers that ability to choose.

I just wanted to add that. Thank you.

The Chair: Any other questions, comments?

Mr. van Dijken: Just some more comments with regard to – thank you to the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville for bringing up some of the details for the questions that I was asking. I'm just going through the Marketing of Agricultural Products Act. You know, we talk about section 21, that it's in the hands of producers, but then at the end of the day, it is actually in the hands of cabinet.

I'm trying to find it back here, but under one of the previous sections it's in the hands of cabinet as to the very definition of a producer. Then we get into a discussion about, "Is that definition going to be a producer eligible for that year, or is it a producer that produced the product in the last five years maybe?" those types of things. So it will continue to evolve.

I do believe that we're moving in the right direction here, where we do have the producers decide. But I do believe that we're going to have ongoing discussions, and the minister has to be very aware of this – I'm sure he is – with regard to the nuances of how to implement in a way that all producers can feel that they're being heard and that their concerns are being raised.

The member did allude that in 2000 we had a plebiscite in the hog industry. I was happy to be part of that and was a member of the founding board of the Western Hog Exchange. Yes, the producers at that time did vote. Pretty much three-quarters of the eligible producers voted in favour of moving in the direction that was being proposed at the time.

Yes. I just found it, section 16.

(2) The Lieutenant Governor in Council may exempt a proposed plan from the operation of subsection (1)...

Then further on:

(3) ... the Council shall ... [with] approval of the Minister determine what constitutes

- (a) an eligible producer,
- (b) a sufficient number of eligible producers, and
- (c) a sufficient portion of the total agricultural product that is marketed or is capable of being produced by the eligible producers.

There are going to need to be decisions made as to how to keep this fair. I haven't produced a calf for I'm going to say 20 years, more than 20 years, 25 years probably, yet when did I no longer become a calf producer? When I sold my cows, or when I divested of the facilities that allowed me to be a calf producer? You know, that's the kind of nuance that will come forward. I haven't been a hog producer since 2008, yet I own facilities that I could raise hogs in today, so am I currently a hog producer? What is the definition of the hog producer? There are points in time where hog production can be very – we're cleaning out a herd or a situation like that where they're not actively selling a commodity, yet they can be actively participating in the industry.

These are just nuances I bring up just to alert everyone to the fact that we're not done. You know, it is going to continue to evolve. I trust that the minister is going to be moving forward in a way that recognizes the will of the producers and tries to move forward in as fair a manner as possible.

I'm sure there are going to be certain unintended consequences that come out of this, that we're going to learn as we go again. Actually, in 2009 there was kind of a sense of: oh, I think we might have landed somewhere here where, yeah, this is fair. But we're finding out that, no, we're moving now in the direction where it's putting it in the hands of the producers, where it needs to be, and the membership decides.

The Chair: Any others? The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you. Just to quickly respond, I mean, what this is is enabling legislation. Those decisions on how the marketing council determines who an eligible producer is: that's not changing. What is changing is just putting the power of the vote for how the model is in place or could be in place in the future, that democratic right, back into the hands of the producer.

The Chair: Any other questions, comments, or amendments with respect to the bill?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

[The clauses of Bill 9 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that the committee rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Ms Sweet: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 9.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Bill 10 Appropriation Act, 2017

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Finance it's my pleasure to move second reading of Bill 10, the Appropriation Act, 2017.

This act will provide funding authority to the offices of the Legislative Assembly and the government of Alberta for the 2017-18 fiscal year. The schedule to the act provides amounts that were presented in greater detail in the 2017-18 government and Legislative Assembly estimates, tabled on March 16, 2017. These estimates were subsequently debated by standing committees and voted on in Committee of Supply.

Madam Speaker, Budget 2017 makes practical changes that will make life more affordable for Albertans. Our budget supports a reduction in school fees for kindergarten to grade 12 students. This will deliver real relief to Alberta families, from the cost of busing to instructional supplies and materials, when they send their children to school.

For postsecondary students we are extending our freeze on tuition to the third year in a row. Young adults will be able to pursue a career in their chosen field without being priced out of a good education.

This government is also committed to reducing electricity costs for Alberta families. We are capping electricity prices to ensure stable and affordable power over the next four years. This will give families more certainty as they plan their household budget. Our budget includes measures to help Albertans reduce their carbon footprint and energy costs. Energy Efficiency Alberta will deliver a variety of programs and services for energy efficiency and small-scale renewables. These are just a few of the ways Budget 2017 helps make life more affordable for Albertans.

The changes we're making could not come at a better time. We know that Alberta families are still feeling the impact of the recession. People are worried about their jobs and making their rent or mortgage payments. They wonder if they can afford to keep their kids in hockey or dance classes. Budget 2017 is making life more affordable for them by helping them with everyday costs.

The budget also continues our plan to build a diversified economy and get people working again. We are coming off a couple of tough years, marked by low oil prices and extraordinary circumstances like the Wood Buffalo wildfire, but we have a plan to get Albertans working again.

Budget 2017 continues government's commitment to build and improve modern infrastructure. Our capital plan commits $32.8 billion during the next four years. This will build health care facilities, schools, and other public institutions where Albertans can access the services they need. Keeping our interchanges, bridges, and highways in good working order will ensure that goods and services can be moved efficiently. Efficient transportation networks are essential for Alberta's export-based economy. Investing in building projects will create and sustain thousands of good-paying jobs for Albertans.

We are also bolstering our economy with tax credit programs to attract and keep investment dollars here in Alberta. Our government is into its second year of our $250 million investment to support job creators and encourage business capital investment. As part of our plan we're encouraging business innovation and investment in our province. This includes building green infrastructure and other initiatives such as supporting Energy Efficiency Alberta as outlined in our climate leadership plan.

Over the next three years $5.4 billion will be fully reinvested to reduce emissions, save energy, diversify the economy, and to help households, businesses, and communities adjust to the carbon price. The leadership our government is showing on the economy and environment will take time for the full effects to be felt. It's not going to happen overnight, but we know that our plan to get Albertans working again sets the foundation for economic recovery.

Alberta families can be assured that the programs and services they rely on to help them through the rough patch will be there for them. This budget contains an important promise to protect and improve services Albertans rely on. Last year saw significant caseload growth in income supports, AISH, and other support programs for our most vulnerable. This is directly correlated to the economic downturn. We had a choice as a government to either make deep cuts to the government programs and services that Albertans rely on or protect these programs and services. Our government is choosing to be there for Alberta families, especially during these tough times.

We are also committed to finding savings. We have a plan to gradually reduce the deficit year over year and return to balance by 2024. This will be achieved by keeping spending increases below population plus inflation growth. We're committed to finding $200 million in savings this year. That's on top of the $250 million in savings we realized last year and the $500 million we'll save over two years from the physicians' compensation agreement signed in November 2016.

We're putting an executive compensation framework in place for 23 public agencies, which is expected to save nearly $16 million a year once fully implemented. We're continuing the salary freeze for political staff and managers in government departments and public agencies. These measures along with others outlined in the fiscal plan will help us along our path to balance.

Madam Speaker, to summarize, Budget 2017 is our government's plan to support job growth and build a diversified economy. It's a promise to protect and improve the services and supports that make a difference in the lives of Albertans, and it is our pledge to lay the foundation for returned economic growth. This year our province will see a return to economic growth, and we'll get there through leadership in climate change, building critical infrastructure, and supporting job creation while protecting the services and programs that help Albertans most.

I along with my government colleagues look forward to implementing Budget 2017 and making the lives of Albertans better. I urge you to support this bill today.

I now move that we adjourn debate. Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 8

An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I request leave to give second reading to Bill 8, An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government.

After years of hard work, consultation, forward thinking, and relationship building, this bill is the third and final round of legislative amendments under the MGA review that we're aiming to put in place before the elections this fall. A comprehensive review of the Municipal Government Act started in 2012. The first set of amendments was tabled as the Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2015. This bill dealt with consensus issues and was unanimously passed in March 2015. The second round of amendments was tabled in May 2016 as the Modernized Municipal Government Act. This legislation addressed more complex and wide-reaching changes like the shift from competition to collaboration between Alberta municipalities.

Our government committed to open and accessible consultation with Albertans on the Modernized Municipal Government Act, and we took the time to do it right. Last summer our government held 21 sessions across the province to hear directly from Albertans about what matters for their communities. There are so many people across Alberta who care about their communities, who want to see smart planning and growth where they live, and who are active participants in their local governance. We heard from these people about how our government can make practical changes to make their lives and communities better. So we made some of the changes in the form of 40 additional amendments to the Modernized Municipal Government Act last fall before it was passed unanimously in December 2016.

Today is about the rest of what we heard, which included new ideas for how the MGA can support sustainable and collaborative communities. We heard these ideas from municipal leaders, families, young people, school boards, indigenous communities, small businesses, and industry. We took those ideas back to all Albertans last fall, and we heard strong support for nearly every policy proposal. We also held meetings with municipalities, school boards, indigenous communities, business, and industry to further discuss these ideas before developing this bill.

With this bill we are delivering on those ideas that we heard from Albertans. Let me tell you about a few of these ideas and how they became the amendments before us today. A key focus of the MGA's modernization is community collaboration. We believe that all Albertans benefit when municipalities are good neighbours, working together to provide services and strengthen the economy.

Over the last year we heard from leaders in many First Nations and Métis settlements that they want to see better relationships with their neighbouring municipalities. We are therefore extending the spirit of municipal collaboration to include Alberta's indigenous communities.

The amendments tabled today would require that municipalities give First Nations and Métis settlements the same notification opportunity to comment on statutory plans that is provided to all other adjacent municipalities. These changes would set a Canadian precedent to build stronger relationships between municipalities and First Nations and Métis settlements. We are also empowering municipalities to enter into agreements with indigenous communities. These changes are a small but significant step to strengthening relationships between indigenous communities and municipalities.

We're also aiming to make political life more accessible for women and Albertans with young families. These amendments would enable councils to make parental leave bylaws for councillors. We heard this great idea from the city of Edmonton, and I need to give credit to Councillor Bev Esslinger and Mayor Don Iveson as two of the key people in making this happen. Our elected councils need to better reflect the communities they serve, including young people, new families, and women. Half of Alberta's population are women, but right now in Alberta women only make up 26 per cent of municipal councillors, and 23 per cent of municipalities in this province do not have a single woman on them. Our government also wants to encourage young women and men to get involved so their voices can be heard, and having a child or wanting to have a family as a locally elected official is something that we would support with this change.

As you know, our government is committed to building schools to serve our young and growing province and to protecting and improving education for Alberta students. The education of our children is incredibly important to the well-being and prosperity of our communities, and schools are at the hearts of our neighbourhoods. We heard from municipalities and school boards that we can do better in how school sites are planned and serviced for communities. That's why this bill proposes that municipalities and school boards enter into joint-use and planning agreements to work together on integrated long-term planning for school sites and facilities. This will be good for students, for families, and for all communities.

These amendments and the rest of An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government are designed to make life better for Albertans no matter where they live. I encourage Albertans to go online, see the amendments and how they reflect the ideas we heard, and follow the debate as the bill moves forward. These latest amendments to the MGA will make our communities stronger and more sustainable. To develop this bill, we listened to Albertans. We are acting on what we heard, and we are working to have a modernized MGA and its regulations come into effect before this fall's municipal elections.

I'm proud to present for a second time Bill 8, An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government. I move that the bill be read a second time. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to this bill? The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and good morning, everyone. It's a pleasure to be here today to speak to Bill 8, An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government. I'd like to thank the minister for his remarks this morning. As always, enlightening as they were, we certainly have a lot of work to do here. We noted that there were 44 items in this bill, again, only a couple of months after we had a bill that was almost quadruple that size. Anyway, we're going to do our best in the limited time we have to try to present some information this morning during second reading.

While Bill 8 is not nearly as robust as the Modernized Municipal Government Act, that was debated in the fall, by my count it looks like there are about 50 different proposals in Bill 8, as I've just said. I'd love to discuss every one of them this morning, but that simply isn't possible, so I'll look to do my best to focus on about 10 of the major priority items we've identified and look forward to continuing the discussion during future stages of the debate.

In a previous life I had the honour of serving as a municipal councillor on the MD of Foothills council, which many in here may know, and I enjoyed my time there immensely and had the opportunity to work with some amazing people there. I look back on that time with a lot of pride, actually. There were an awful lot of interesting developments that took place that close to a major city, which I benefited from, for sure. It was a great experience.

Another of the important things I learned during that time was the value of the associations that represent the municipalities in this province.

The Alberta Urban Municipalities Association [or AUMA] represents urban municipalities including cities, towns, villages, summer villages and specialized municipalities and more than 85% of Albertans. It is a dynamic and evolving association, advocating the interest of members to the provincial and federal orders of government and other stakeholders.

The other association, representing Alberta's rural municipalities, is the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, of course, or AAMD and C, which describes itself on its website as "an independent association comprising Alberta's 69 counties and municipal districts. Since 1909, we have helped rural municipalities achieve strong, effective local government."

These two grassroots organizations do amazing research and amazing work in policy development and, due to the many overlapping areas of focus, often collaborate. I valued their insight during my time as a councillor and continue to value their insight and input today in my role as an MLA representing my constituents here in the Legislature and as the Official Opposition's critic for Municipal Affairs.

While both the AUMA and the AAMD and C were consulted and provided feedback to the government during the development of Bill 8, I think it's important to include, therefore, some of their feedback for the record here in the Chamber this morning. I'll clarify, though, that the AUMA and the AAMD and C submissions I'm going to be referencing here were referring to the document that was sent out by the department called Continuing the Conversation, which was released in November, just after the last amendments to the MGA were done under Bill 21.

I'd like to start with the 5 to 1 ratio issue because it is a very controversial issue that was dealt with before and that we're going to get into a bit again this morning. I won't spend too much time on it, really, but one of my esteemed colleagues is planning to speak on the topic in more detail a little bit later today. Essentially, in Bill 21, which was passed in the fall, they established this linkage between residential and nonresidential tax rates. Since the MGA was first amended, way back in the mid-1990s, there has been a growing divergence between the property tax rate a municipality charged on nonresidential property and the tax rate it charged on residential property. In almost all cases this difference was not really that large, you know: 1 to 3, 1 to 4, something like that for the most part. However, in about a dozen municipalities the divergence had then grown in excess of five times the rate being charged on a residential property.

Bill 21 actually established a cap that prevented this gap from exceeding a ratio of 5 to 1. Essentially, with Bill 21 a municipality's highest nonresidential property tax rate could no longer exceed five times the rate of the municipality's lower residential property tax rate. As I mentioned, for most municipalities this presented no problem as they already fell below that limit for the most part. However, in the case of, I believe, 19 or 20 municipalities their ratio at the time Bill 21 was first introduced exceeded the 5 to 1 setting. Bill 21 therefore allowed municipalities that exceeded the ratio to maintain whatever their current ratio was, be it 5 and a half to 1 or 11 to 1. However, it prevented the municipality from going beyond that in the future.

What Bill 8 seems to be proposing to do is bring those municipalities that exceed the ratio in line with the 5 to 1 ratio only after three months of passing Bill 21, which allowed those jurisdictions to be grandfathered into the formal rule. We don't know why the government is suddenly changing their stance on this, but it was quite a surprise to get that. It doesn't outline any sort of timeline for this to be done, either. It leaves all of that to regulation, apparently, and we all know here in the House that we don't debate regulations, unfortunately.

All I will say at this point, anyway, as we're going to go into it in detail later, is that there are a lot of reasons why a municipality structures their tax burdens the way they do and that there are often legitimate reasons why certain municipalities feel justified in setting the higher tax rates in the way that they do. I think that the AUMA and AAMD and C have some good insight on this, and I'd like to put up a couple of quotes here. The AUMA states in their submission that the AUMA "supports providing the Minister with the authority to exempt a municipality indefinitely from the 5:1 ratio." Likewise, the AAMD and C states in their submission that "the AAMDC supports the ability for municipalities to be exempt where appropriate or extenuating circumstances require it."

I'll end my comments on this particular topic now by reiterating that I suspect the municipalities that exceed the 5 to 1 ratio have legitimate reasons why. Likewise, if the government feels that it needs to bring all municipalities in compliance with the 5 to 1 ratio, it should provide the details and the proposed timelines within the legislation itself so that all MLAs have a chance to debate it and discuss it.

Let's move on, Madam Speaker, to intermunicipal off-site levies. This one here is a proposal to enable municipalities to jointly implement off-site levies for eligible projects that provide benefit to both municipalities. Bill 21 actually expanded the types of infrastructure that could be funded through off-site levies to include libraries, police stations, fire halls, and recreation centres. It also established that the percentage of the benefit would dictate the amount a municipality could collect from a levy. For example, if a new development was determined to derive 30 per cent of the benefit from a proposed recreation centre, the municipality could collect up to 30 per cent of the cost of the recreation centre from the levy it charged the developer.

AUMA states in their submission:

Permitting intermunicipal off-site levies between jurisdictions would allow for a more coordinated regional approach and allow neighbouring municipalities to share a common philosophy, and better support development of projects.

They also go on to say that consideration must also be given to how an appeal would function for an intermunicipal levy, the process in cases where a municipality does not wish to contribute/participate, and the mechanisms each municipality has in order to access appeals.

Very important comments. I would concur with the AUMA, actually, on that, that the details around how these levies are going to work need to be established in the legislation because, as I've said before, we don't get into regulations, but these are very important circumstances that need to be debated.

When it comes to the AAMD and C on this, they state that "intermunicipal off-site levies should be voluntary only and should not be imposed by one municipality on another." With that I'm in total agreement as well. If the government's goal is to indeed improve intermunicipal collaboration, then off-site levies must remain voluntary. I look forward to the minister providing a lot more detail over the course of the debate on the issue that this brings to rise, and hopefully we can get some details on this for our municipalities.

Madam Speaker, I'd also like to speak a bit on conservation reserves. This was a new one that came up with Bill 21, and it's the ability for a municipality to establish one of those. It was to address an issue that municipalities were facing when they were dealing with developments that often as not may have included some areas where environmental reserves were already being considered. You know, there was also an extra capability with Bill 21 to take extra lands, but in this case those lands that were to be dedicated in that regard as conservation reserves would require compensation to the developer. That's what happened in Bill 21.

The issue that the reserve hoped to solve was for an area that was developable but was identified as having environmental significance such as wildlife corridors, significant tree stands, or other environmentally significant features that the municipality wished to conserve. Since these areas were developable areas, the municipality was responsible for providing that they would give appropriate compensation to the developer.

The proposed changes now, though, in Bill 8 will allow reimbursement of purchase costs to be considered during the annexation processes and that those funds must be used for conservation purposes, exempt conservation reserves from paying municipal taxes, clarify that municipalities may include conservation goals and objectives in their statutory plans, and allow municipalities the ability to reclassify a conservation reserve if substantive changes occur that eliminate lands' conservation values. For example, when a tornado or something comes in and there's a significant riparian area that's destroyed, that kind of thing could come into play in that circumstance.

The AUMA is supportive of this change as it will ensure that the municipality that derives benefit from . . . reserve lands are the ones who pay for it; however, limiting the amount to what the municipality originally paid for the land should be removed and municipalities should have the ability to negotiate remuneration.

We certainly agree with that. There should be some sort of a negotiation put in place in such a situation.

In the AAMD and C's response to the proposed change, they say that they "will ensure that this tool is effective through shifts in boundaries." So it sounds like they will want to make sure that there are regulations in there when boundary shifts occur, that this conservation reserve topic is taken into account, which we certainly support.

Taxation of provincial agencies is another item that's come to the forefront. The government is proposing an amendment that would make property held by provincial corporations taxable for the purpose of property taxation. AUMA says that they're "supportive of adding these properties to the municipal tax base to compensate municipalities for the services the municipality provides (such as water, sewer, and fire protection)," et cetera. Likewise, AAMD and C say that they are "supportive of adding these properties to the municipal tax base.” While both AAMD and C and AUMA were supportive of the changes proposed in Bill 8, they want to see the property tax exemptions set out in the Financial Administration Act and the MGA, you know, including in there Alberta Health Services, housing management bodies, schools, colleges, and universities, be removed.

I’d like to now move to the electric energy exemption regulation elevation that is in Bill 8, which proposes to enable the minister to exempt certain properties from education property tax where they are used for or in the generation of electricity. On this particular proposal there are a few questions. I know that a long-time complaint of municipalities has been that they are ultimately responsible for the education property tax that the provincial government mandates the municipalities collect on a province’s behalf. Whether they are able to collect the tax from property owners is of no concern to the province. This results in the municipality holding the bag if a property owner refuses to pay or is unable to pay their property taxes.

I appreciate that this appears to partially deal with the issue, but if the province is planning on dealing with all the electricity generation, then I can see the value of this amendment. That being said, I would like the minister to explain how this is not just another example of this government hand-picking winners and losers. Furthermore, if the minister could explain how this is not a poorly hidden attempt at subsidizing solar and wind electricity generation, I would appreciate that, and I’m all ears.

Now I’d like to move back to off-site levies again this time, Madam Speaker, but going towards where they relate to provincial highways. Bill 8 is proposing to enable off-site levies being collected for a municipal road project that connects to provincial highways. Furthermore, when a municipal statutory plan comes within 1.6 kilometres of a provincial highway, the plan must be referred to the Minister of Transportation for review and comment.

The AUMA has a comment here on this which is worth while. It says that they [do] not support municipalities collecting offsite levies to pay for the provincial transportation system. The system should be funded through provincial revenues not local fees and charges.

The levies may manipulate the prioritization of provincial infrastructure projects and distort property prices in some communities.

I think that’s an important quote to note.

AAMD and C, on the other hand, “supports the proposed change,” but also in their case they were directing a request in the summer of 2016 regarding this to Municipal Affairs, and they’re waiting to hear a response. However, they do share AUMA’s concern that this provision could result in the prioritization of provincial infrastructure where a municipality had the ability to subsidize a portion of the cost.

Moving on to enforcement of ministerial orders now, Madam Speaker, Bill 8 is proposing to grant the minister additional remedies to address municipalities that are in noncompliance with an order by the minister. The proposal is to provide the minister with the same powers as are currently available to address noncompliance with an ALSA regional plan. In addition, Bill 8 would clarify that an order of the minister remains in effect while a review by the court is under way and furthermore requires that the minister receive 10 days’ notice of anyone intending to apply for injunctive relief against the decision of the minister.

The AUMA raises a number of concerns with this proposal, including:

The Minister should not be able to suspend authority to make bylaws/resolutions or withhold money from an entire council for the actions of an individual councillor.

AUMA also goes on to say that

- suspending a council’s authority to make resolutions or bylaws may be problematic when the council is unable to pass a bylaw that is necessary for the operation of the municipality (e.g. tax rate annual bylaw) and that

- withholding money payable to a municipality may also be problematic when a municipality has contractual obligations that rely on grants to be funded, which may lead to legal or financial repercussions if funds are withheld.

So there seems to be a recognition by the AUMA that there’s a very strong problem in this suggestion in Bill 8, and I look forward to hearing about that.

The AAMD and C also adds in their submission that the powers to suspend a council’s authority to make resolutions and bylaws should be reconsidered to ensure that municipalities have the decision making authority to allow for continuous operation of [their] duties.

Another great bit of information there to consider.

Both of these associations, therefore, are raising legitimate concerns with the government’s proposed amendments on this issue. However, I understand there are cases where the minister must act to ensure that a municipality is not operating in an irregular, improper, or improvident manner and that Albertans expect their elected officials to fulfill their duties with the dignity and respect that their role as an elected representative demands. I know I must sound like a broken record, but I look forward to the minister providing further details on this proposed amendment as well so that I can make an informed decision on the overall bill.

Madam Speaker, I’m going to have to end my comments here. It’s difficult because there’s so much more to say and there are so many topics in this bill and there are so many significant issues, as I’ve outlined, and so many concerns by the two most important associations in the municipal world, the AUMA and the AAMD and C. I look forward to hearing from all members in the Assembly as we continue this debate in the upcoming weeks on that, and my colleagues will be speaking more about this in the next hour or so this morning.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I’m proud to rise today to talk about the proposed changes to the Municipal Government Act and more specifically the proposed changes to create mandatory joint-use and planning agreements, or JUPAs for short. This amendment will require creating mandatory JUPAs between municipalities and school boards. There is general support among major stakeholders on both sides for this amendment but not without some concerns. As with any piece of legislation that comes through the House, the devil is generally in the details, and there are several areas where more detail is needed.

AUMA, as my colleague just spoke about, the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, for instance, is generally supportive of this amendment as they have long advocated for greater co-operation between school boards and municipalities. They have a particular interest in regard to school reserves and the planning and servicing of schools and the disposition of school property and school reserve sites. AUMA is also advocating for increased transparency when dealing with where future school sites are located.

AAMD and C – of course, that's the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties – believes that the amendment to require a joint-use agreement between municipalities and school boards will result in avoiding conflict provided these agreements are enforced and kept current. While supportive, I share their concerns about the parameters of this joint-use agreement as it deals with committee accountability and membership. This needs to be reviewed to ensure that the governance is appropriate and municipal representation is of proper proportions. Terminology needs to be clear to differentiate between a joint-use agreement, which speaks to the utilization of a facility, versus joint planning.

It is paramount that municipalities need to retain the authority to follow their own planning needs. This is especially important to those municipalities that have to deal with multiple school boards including Catholic, public, francophone, or charter schools. Consideration of these circumstances needs to be addressed.

Furthermore, provisions must also address a municipality's ability to repurpose surplus school sites as there have been instances where a municipality's access has been restricted in prior situations. It's also vital that certain provisions should be made that require joint-use agreements to address how reserves are collected in one municipality, will be used to contribute to school site acquisition and development in another municipality to which the first municipality sends its students. That may sound off the wall when we come to a city, but in rural Alberta this is a fact in a lot of places.

AAMD and C also expressed concern by identifying problems around the future of school sites where a school was never built. These lands are often held by the school authority with a market valuation despite the lands being initially provided to the school authority by the municipality at no cost. AAMD and C believes a process should be in place for school sites that are no longer to be used for such purpose to be returned to the municipality at no cost. Madam Speaker, this will all be rendered moot if there is no mechanism in this joint-use agreement that includes the province as an active partner or participant in these agreements. The province is, of course, central to any of the infrastructure decisions regarding school sites and, as such, must be part of the process from the beginning.

Since we are now on the topic of how important the province is to ensuring any joint-use agreement is successful, it's a bit disconcerting to see the lack of any funding to initiate these new responsibilities. Given that this government is responsible for making everything more expensive with their ill-conceived carbon tax, it's troubling that the province has downloaded the bulk of the responsibility for administration of this amendment onto municipalities and school boards without any funding whatsoever to follow. These are the same school boards and municipalities who have come forward with numerous examples of how the carbon tax is making things harder for their citizens: heating costs, increased costs for busing, that hurts municipalities and hurts school boards. The province wants them to do more with less, all the while taking more money from these boards and municipalities and, furthermore, requiring them to do all this planning without any additional funding. I cannot help but wonder: how does the province expect municipalities and school boards to do all this without adequate funding?

Madam Speaker, I sat as a rural municipal councillor for six years. We had a cordial relationship with the school board in our county, but we really didn't require regularly scheduled sit-down meetings. This new addition to the MGA will require school boards and municipalities to meet and put together mandatory joint-use plans. I'm not saying that there's anything wrong with sitting down and meeting. Exchanges of information are always important. However, this will cost both the municipality and the school board money in order to complete such a document at a time when an increase in taxes for both entities is taking much-needed money out of their coffers.

For municipalities alone, they have also had several mandatory agreements downloaded onto them by the provincial government, municipal development plans and intermunicipal collaboration frameworks. For those that do a tight three-year timeline has been put on the completion of these now statutory documents. These documents are not a simple process for municipalities, especially smaller municipalities like several of the ones in my riding. It's become a troubling theme with this government, one that sees it put forward legislation without, seemingly, a thought of the result. As my colleague from Drumheller-Stettler is fond of saying, this government never considers the unintended consequences of its actions.

Now, as we continue to discuss this bill, I would ask that we all bear in mind the diversity of municipalities in this province, especially in terms of size. We have the city of Calgary with about 1.2 million, Edmonton with a population of 900,000. The numbers are close. We have other cities such as Red Deer and Lethbridge with around a hundred thousand residents each. Then there are large counties in this province like Parkland, with 30,000 people; smaller ones like the county I come from, which has about 6,800 residents. This province has more than a hundred towns and around a hundred villages, which often only have a couple hundred people. The village of Carmangay, in my riding, has 367 people. The village of Milo, in my riding, has 122 people. The reason I'm bringing this forward is because I want to point out that the government cannot always treat all municipalities the same. Each have vastly different levels of capacity. Small municipalities obviously don't have access to the same number of staff with administration and planning as a bigger city or county does.

I think that's why I support the AUMA and the AAMD and C's request that the province provide the funding to develop additional resources to assist the municipalities with these new challenges. I'm hoping the government will soon provide details on how it is they'll be helping smaller municipalities comply with these requirements. Are we talking about a financial grant to each village to help them put together and administer these JUPAs? Perhaps a small sum of money to be used by the municipality is most effective at getting the job done. Will every municipality get the same amount of money, or how will the funding be determined? Will funding be based on population? Another question is whether there are multiple municipalities and school boards having to work together. Is that a possibility? Those kinds of questions haven't been answered.

You know, is this government not planning to provide any financial support to municipalities? Will they, instead, provide assistance by posting instructions and templates online as suggested by the AAMD and C? Will the government be setting up a helpline that municipal staff and school boards can call on when they need this resource? I have no doubt these resources would be helpful. I'm positive, Madam Speaker, that municipalities are hoping for more details and guidance in this area, and I expect the sooner, the better. Municipalities need these details as soon as possible so that they can begin making arrangements, especially since the government is moving this bill forward as we speak.

While I'm generally in favour of municipalities and school boards setting up these joint-use agreements, I hope that this government will provide boards and municipalities with more details and address the concerns that have been expressed by stakeholders and here in this Chamber.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is my privilege to rise and speak and join the debate in this Legislature on Bill 8, An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government. I speak in support of this bill. I will begin by saying that I am so pleased with the amount of consultation that has occurred and how the amendments are based on the feedback received from Albertans and stakeholders through the discussion paper Continuing the Conversation. This is a good segue into my comments on several areas of the act on which I feel compelled to provide comment.

The first is the area of collaboration. This area is exactly what my city and county are already doing. I've several examples I'd like to point out to you. Lethbridge and Lethbridge county have already collaborated to develop a new intermunicipal development plan, and they're collaborating on an airport master plan. Lethbridge also provides various services to the county from time to time as they are needed. I'm really delighted to see this bill as it affirms the collaboration that is already happening between our municipalities.

Another piece on the collaboration spectrum is a requirement for municipalities to have joint-use agreements with school divisions regarding the allocation and use of school grounds and fields. Personally, I feel Lethbridge has been the leader in this area. This has been a well-established practice in Lethbridge since 1959, long before many in this room were born.

The next piece I will speak to is that Lethbridge has already begun engaging our neighbours in the Blackfoot Confederacy in our new municipal planning that's under way. I believe this fits with the new requirement to notify adjacent indigenous communities when proposing new municipal development plans or area structure plans. What a great step between the Blackfoot Confederacy and my city.

The next area I will speak about is parental leave, an area which is near and dear to my heart. This proposed change would enable municipalities to establish a councillor parental leave bylaw and amend it to exempt councillors from disqualification when absent under the provisions of a local parental leave bylaw. I am very pleased with this proposed change which would open the door for more women to step forward and run in municipal elections.

During consultation Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, AUMA; the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, AAMDC; Calgary; and Edmonton were all in support of this addition. In fact, AUMA president Lisa Holmes has personally called for this to be mandatory for all municipalities. Many women such as myself have stayed away from being more involved in municipal politics, in fact, any kind of politics. For me, it was because I was raising a family, and for a number of years it was as a single parent. This was a huge barrier for me as I am sure it was for many others. Because of our own experiences in being the caregiver and breadwinner within our families versus the previously more traditional family dynamic, it provides us with a much different perspective on governance and action. Our well-honed skills in multitasking lead us to look for more efficient ways of organizing and completing tasks. These are definitely an asset when looking at municipal responsibilities and intersectionality of those responsibilities. Areas such as applying an environmental or family responsibility lens when making decisions really do come from a different perspective with that kind of experience.

That leads me to the next area about which I would like to speak, and that is: fostering environmental well-being. The proposed change in the bill is supported by our two largest cities. It is also supported to a great degree by my city, Lethbridge. The Lethbridge city council has identified this in its strategic plan. It is compatible with the approved waste diversion strategy for the industrial, commercial, and institutional sector and the city's decision to implement curbside recycling.

The final piece on which I would like to comment is the imposition of a maximum property tax ratio between nonresidential and residential property taxes. This would be a nonfactor for my city, Lethbridge, because the ratio applied in Lethbridge is 2.39 to 1, which is well below the maximum ratio of 5 to 1 that's being proposed. At this point I have to say that I am so proud of the progressive mayor and council we have at the helm in Lethbridge and also the reeve and council in Lethbridge county.

Now, I would like to point out that the MGA review began in 2012. Bills amending the MGA were introduced by government in 2015 and 2016. The Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2015, Bill 20, was passed unanimously on March 24, 2015, and the Modernized Municipal Government Act, Bill 21, was passed unanimously on December 6, 2016. Bill 21 was then reviewed by Albertans and stakeholders during the summer of 2016, and they provided very fulsome feedback on this bill. I think this has been very successful because this process has been both transparent and comprehensive. This is a wonderful example which shows how our government is listening to Albertans, and because of this, we are making lives better for Albertans.

I support the amendments in this bill, that strengthen municipal collaboration and environmental well-being, and I am so very proud of how the municipalities in my region are already leading the way in these areas.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any members to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thanks, Madam Speaker. I appreciate this opportunity to rise and speak about Bill 8, entitled An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government. I want to congratulate the government on some of the things in this bill. There are certainly some positive things, and I'm happy to acknowledge that. I will start with one that could be seen as window dressing, but I don't see it as that. I see it as important. The collaboration with indigenous communities, particularly with the reserves, I think is a very positive thing, and it must be. The only reason that some might consider it window dressing is because with the First Nations, of course, we can't force them to collaborate. But extending the friendly hand of government and Alberta municipalities to First Nations and indigenous communities I view as a very positive thing, so that is certainly something I support.

In my view, members of indigenous communities are a hundred per cent Albertan, the same as any other Albertan. The more that we can work together, I see it as a benefit for indigenous people on an equal footing with nonindigenous people. I thank the government for this particular encouragement for municipalities to reach out and have that collaboration and that sense of community and working together. I don't think that's an extra. I think that's something that is positive and, in my view, very much welcomed.

The enforcement of municipal orders that is in the act certainly requires 10 days' notice of intent to apply for injunctive relief against a decision or order of the minister. We'll see how that plays out. I'm not going to criticize it. I just think it's something that needs to be monitored by the government to make sure that there are no negative or unintended consequences.

Parental leave. I think that particular area of the act is welcome. It's certainly clear that municipalities before now could have put in a parental leave policy if they wanted to. In some ways it's a nonchange, but I suppose in another way it's legislative encouragement for municipalities to consider that.

I'm happy to see that the government is looking at the catchment area contributions, which will provide municipalities with increased flexibility to use a catchment area contribution structure that would support land dedication and development parameters with respect to the assembly of parks and school sites. Again, I would encourage the government to monitor that to make sure that there are no unintended negative consequences, but there's certainly the opportunity for good things to come out of that.

Now, the mandatory joint-use planning agreements is an area that municipalities have said that they have some concerns with. I know that a lot of municipalities already have joint-use planning agreements. Certainly, when I was with the city of Calgary, we had one with parks and the school boards, and it was a positive thing, in my estimation, although not without wrinkles. There was probably the odd unpleasant meeting over some of the issues involved; nonetheless, providing that platform or that place for the parties to come together, the municipality and the school boards, could be seen as a positive thing.

The same could be said for the off-site levies changes in the legislation. It's nice that intermunicipal off-site levies are available again so that municipalities that choose to work together to build a seniors' lodge, to build a recreation centre, an arena, whatever it happens to be that both municipalities agree on, have a framework for them to work together and both contribute to. I see the potential for good things to happen there, but again I would respectfully caution the minister and the government to monitor that and make sure that no unfortunate disagreements grow out of what I truly believe is a well-intended section in the act.

Again, I'm looking at some of the contributions from AAMD and C and AUMA, which I think are voices that need to be paid attention to here. On the AUMA website it says, "While the Bill contains a number of promising policy changes, there is still some uncertainty on their applicability and feasibility since much of the detail is not yet known and, similar to other MGA Bills, will be specified in a future regulation."

Unfortunately, this is a habit that this government has of passing legislation and saying: trust me on the regulations. I don't trust this government on the regulations. I'm sure they'll get some of them right, and other ones I'm sure they won't, and I would be much more comfortable if the government actually disclosed all or most of the regulations at this point before passing the legislation so that municipalities actually knew what was coming down the pike in changes that they will have to live up to.

AAMD and C and AUMA have both made comments that they want the government, when they require municipalities to meet certain regulations or certain requirements, to provide funding to do that, which I think is a reasonable requirement and, certainly, one that was asked for at the time that I spent eight years on the AUMA board. It's been pretty consistent from the AAMD and C side, too, that when the government downloads responsibilities and requirements onto municipalities, they ought to actually also download the dollars to pay for the meeting of those responsibilities and requirements. I think that's a reasonable request of the municipalities and something that, in my view, the government should consider.

It's a concern that I have heard from some municipalities that in areas where the government is enforcing the 5 to 1 ratio, it takes away some of the autonomy of municipalities to do that. I have to say that my personal view is that 5 to 1 is probably a bigger ratio than there should be. Having said that, I think it's more important to respect the fact that municipalities are duly elected bodies, and if they put the taxes out of whack with what the people in the municipality agree with, then the people in the municipality will give themselves a new council or new council members at the appropriate time once every four years.

My concern, again, with the limit, the 5 to 1 ratio, is that while in principle I think it in most cases probably would be considered a reasonable ratio, it does impinge upon the duly elected nature of municipal councils. I think that respecting their independence is important, particularly when one considers that the set and body of persons who elect municipalities across Alberta is exactly the same set and body of persons that elects people to this Chamber, to this Legislature. So when you consider that whatever authority we have comes from the people, I think it needs to be acknowledged that the authority for municipalities comes from exactly the same source as the authority for us in this Legislature in terms of who votes to choose who gets to exercise that authority. That's why I'm always concerned when the government impinges on the ability of a duly elected body to make decisions that are clearly within the authority of that duly elected body.

Now, the AUMA has acknowledged the province's depiction of the bill as being the "finishing touches," which I suppose is a legitimate concern because some of this is coming — well, let me just use their words. "Depiction of this Bill as being the 'finishing touches' before the municipal election is disappointing since many issues have not been resolved." That is why one thing that is disappointing to me as well is that this Legislature is being asked to vote on something that we don't really know what the net effect on municipalities will be because so many of the regulations that will be attached to this have not yet been disclosed.

Again, this is the continuation of a very bad habit on the part of this government, and while I intend to vote for this legislation, it's not without concern. It's not without concern as expressed by municipalities, by AAMD and C and AUMA, and our party, the PCs, will continue to stay in touch with AUMA and AAMD and C and advocate for the government to listen to them, though it seems they're hell bent to not fill in the blanks on what this legislation will really mean once the regulations are added to it, and for the government to correct that habit in the future and to not take the attitude, which, in my view, is somewhat demeaning to municipalities, to say: just trust us; it'll all be fine.

I think a much more productive, a much more constructive, a much more collaborative approach with municipalities would be to show them a set of the regulations that the government intends to bring forward for comment because some of those regulations, if they were to be changed on the advice of municipalities, actually might require the government to come back and change the legislation again. It would seem to me much more co-operative and much more efficient and, really, better manners for the government to do that ahead of time.

So there it is, Madam Speaker. I will be supporting the legislation but with the proviso that while there's probably more good than bad in there, there are issues the government has yet to resolve. I hope that the government will take the advice not only from the opposition but from Alberta municipalities to co-operate better in the future before they bring legislation forward.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm privileged to rise in the House today to speak in favour of Bill 8. This is a bill that I've been very privileged to have been a cosponsor on the amendments for, well, it seems like a long time. Now, Otto von Bismarck is credited with saying that to retain respect for sausages and laws, one must not watch them in the making. I'm not sure how they made sausages in Germany last century. I've seen sausages being made, and I still enjoy them. I've been able to watch this law and amendments get made, and I think this is – and I think I'm not alone in this – really the gold standard for consultation and transparency and collaboration among stakeholders in developing legislation that serves all interested parties effectively.

Now, I've been privileged as well to attend several of the consultation sessions in communities last summer. I was able to attend the consultations in Two Hills, in Lac La Biche, in Athabasca, and in Rocky Mountain House. I thought that these consultations were a model of how this kind of thing should be done. You know, in that, I'm kind of speaking as a former educator, where you're always keen to make sure that you don't just have a few loud voices dominate these proceedings. How these things are structured is really critical in that. With that, I'd have to once again commend Municipal Affairs for just the fantastic job that they've done in facilitating these consultations.

I think that speaks to the reason why it once again looks like we have a good chance of coming to unanimous support for this bill. I guess it speaks to when you do your consultations properly and effectively, although you're always going to be in a situation where there are going to be compromises – I mean, that's just the nature of politics in general – at least you know that you're on firm ground when you make those types of changes.

I do want to once again also extend credit to the previous administration, when they began this process in 2012, for choosing this type of model. I mean, I think it was well chosen. But I also think this speaks to why Albertans made the choice they did back in May of 2015. Now, the previous administration had gone forward with some of the consensus recommendations in March, but they left a lot of the more problematic issues still on the table. I think it took a fresh government, one not afraid of rolling up their sleeves and doing the heavy lifting needed for some long-overdue changes, to bring this process forward to where it is today.

This is something that's critical. I mean, previously the MGA hadn't been reviewed since 1994. You know, a lot has changed since that time. This is particularly important because, speaking as primarily a rural MLA, the MGA is really central to the continued viability and sustainability of a lot of rural municipalities. I mean, it's no secret that we're facing some pretty serious challenges in some of these municipalities. I think it really speaks well to the ministry and my colleagues in that seeing this crisis – well, I mean, a slow-moving crisis but a crisis nonetheless – they were left with decision points on kind of where you can put this balance. So you have a balance struck between competition and collaboration among municipalities and also a balance between sort of a top-down approach versus a bottom-up approach.

I'm gratified. I think our government has struck the balance kind of in the right place. Instead of dictating to municipalities exactly how, in detail, they're meant to interact with other municipalities, we've provided them with the process and the tools to be able to work out agreements that are going to be able to work for all of them. So we're able to get the synergies and efficiencies working, you know, where you've got overlapping services, overlapping areas of concern. Instead of dictating – and it's always dangerous because you don't see everything from Edmonton, right? People on the ground see a lot more, and they're able to make those types of decisions for themselves. But at the same time sometimes they do need a little bit of encouragement. Once again, I think it's striking the right balance, and I'm glad to see that we've maintained that through this process.

Now, I didn't want to reply directly to some of the concerns brought up by the opposition on second reading. There will be plenty of opportunity, I think, in Committee of Whole, but there is just one little one, and I'd like to just speak directly to that. Generally speaking – and I've spoken about this in earlier iterations of this – I think the opposition has been doing its job in holding us to account on this legislation.

However, you know, the idea that there's a lack of trust between the government and municipalities and particularly between AAMDC and AUMA is not something that I've seen reflected in my own experience whatsoever. In fact, the opposite seems to be the case. They seem to be, from the individuals that I've spoken to, very happy with how this process has been unfolding, how responsive and open the government has been in dealing with their concerns going forward as well as the recognition that we have kept our promises about the consultation over the regulations and that we've listened and made adjustments where it's been necessary.

I think this idea that there's a lack of trust is a bit of a red herring. Maybe in Committee of the Whole there might be information that comes out that could make me revise that. But at this present time it's just not something that I'm seeing, and it's not because I haven't been talking to people. Of course, I did go to the consultations. As well, I've been to many AAMDC events, had an opportunity to speak directly with their board, and I represent quite a few municipalities in my own riding, too, and that's something that we've been talking about. I mean, of course, there are always going to be concerns. There are always going to be questions when there's change. But when you have that trust – and I think this is a trust that's earned – we're able to work together to, you know, kind of get through those to a better outcome for everybody.

Once again, I think this bill is really kind of a good model for how work should be done, this legislation. I guess in another way it speaks fundamentally to the strength of Albertan democracy where, you know, in all the discussions I've had with people and when people bring up their objections, the different viewpoints are coming from different places, where people are viewing popular interests a bit differently. Of course, we see the world from where we are, not the way the world is necessarily, and this is true of this. But what I want to say about this is that these concerns have been brought forward based on people's sincere understanding of the situations in their community rather than self-interest or sort of a narrow parochialism. I think that's something that speaks well for our continued future as a vibrant democracy. So I'm happy about that.

Particularly to this set of amendments, you know, I don't want to go over too much of what my colleagues have spoken about, but some of it is just too good to not highlight again. In particular, the amendments affecting indigenous communities, that the hon.

member just talked about, are definitely not window dressing. It's another step in restoring balance to a relationship that for far too many years has been one of neglect and one of ignorance. Far too often when you have these reserves and these Métis settlements, it's almost as if there's a wall separating the community outside from the community inside when it comes to discussion and deliberation and participation. Now, that wall exists there, but it doesn't exist in any sort of a real sense.

I'm really appreciative of how our Ministry of Municipal Affairs and our Ministry of Indigenous Relations have understood, you know, that we can't prosper when we have large elements of our community that are being excluded. It's absolutely critical to the future of indigenous peoples in Alberta and people in Alberta generally that we collaborate going forward and that we facilitate communication and co-operation. I think this is a really important step in doing so. So I think this is great.

Other new amendments coming forward that I think are really welcome and do strike that right balance are around providing opportunities for municipalities to be able to provide parental leave. Now, coming from a small rural community myself, one of the critical requirements of smaller communities is being able to effectively include young residents, that when you have young families coming into your community, they feel that they have a stake there, that they're not excluded by, you know, sort of the old boys' network that runs a lot of these communities. If you don't make those types of provisions to make participation in municipal government more accessible for these individuals, they don't step forward, and that's one less tie to keep them with the community. That's just absolutely, fundamentally critical so that when we do attract young families into our communities, they stay and raise their families there and continue to contribute.

The other issue, of course, when you have municipal leaders that are very similar in their background, their age, and their gender, is that they don't know what they don't know, right? You unintentionally can have quite poor decision-making because that diversity just isn't at the table. So any steps that municipalities can take to provide for more diverse people at that table, the better the decisions are going to be for their communities. I think this is critical. Well, it's always critical on a basic-equity-between-people level, but it's critical to just simply good governance to be able to have these types of provisions. I think this is very forward thinking, and I'm glad to see that there's substantial support for this.

I guess I could wrap up my comments for now, just to reiterate that I think that these amendments speak directly to our central mandate as a government to make lives better for Albertans. No matter where they live, I think that this set of amendments, with the whole process, is a big win for rural Alberta and is going to set the stage for continued vibrancy and sustainability in the years to come. In fact, I think this is a historic occasion for this province.

I'm kind of slightly disappointed that there is nobody up in the galleries watching, but I guess it's one of those things where you – I think this is maybe some of the frustration that BlackBerry has been having in trying to do its marketing, right? I'm a big BlackBerry fanatic, as I know many other members here are as well. Part of the frustration they have with their marketing is that when you have good security, nothing happens. I think part of the reason why this set of amendments hasn't been getting the level of public ... [Mr. Piquette's speaking time expired] Well, anyway, thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a) any questions or comments for the previous speaker?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Very good. Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's always a pleasure to get up to speak in the House and today on Bill 8. It's always nice to stand up to speak after my colleague from Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater. I'd just like to point out a couple of things. First of all, Bill 8 is An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government. There are a few things I'd like clarification on.

But before I get into that, I'd just like to make some comments on comments that were made about your not getting any negative feedback from municipal councillors or reeves or anything like that. I'd just like to remind you that that's probably the result of politeness and diplomacy, not necessarily wanting to tell you the truth. I have sat in joint municipality meetings with you in Smoky Lake, in that area, where they've chewed on you pretty hard, so I know that you've been beaten up a few times. I'd also like to point out, you know, the AAMD and C and the AUMA conferences where the panel of ministers has been booed, where the standing ovation that was attempted only had MLAs and NDP staffers standing up. Everybody else did ... [interjections] I was there, too.

An Hon. Member: At my panel they stood. Maybe yours didn't.

Mr. Hanson: Absolutely, they didn't. I guarantee you that.

Anyway, I'd like to get some clarification on the taxation of provincial agencies because I'm not really clear on where we're going. It's been kind of bouncing around a little bit. What I've got is from the Municipal Government Act review. It says:

What's currently in place: A recent decision by a Composite Assessment Review Board ... has overturned a long-standing practice that properties leased by provincial agencies are subject to property tax.

Then it goes back down, and it says:

What this means: This change requires provincial agencies, as defined in the Financial Administration Act, to support the municipalities in which they operate in consideration of the municipal services they receive (such as fire protection) through property taxes.

It goes on to say:

Properties that are associated with health regions that receive financial assistance from the province, housing management bodies established under the Alberta Housing Act, schools, colleges, and universities will continue to be exempt.

Now, we've heard from both AUMA and AAMD and C that they would like to have those exemptions stricken from there.

I'm just going to give you one example, the small town of St. Paul, population of anywhere between 5,000 and 6,000 people. We have five schools. I mean, I'm bragging a little bit because these things are great to have, right? We have students from all over the county that are bused in there to these schools. They have a huge footprint, with their playgrounds and all that stuff, which is all wonderful stuff, but it takes up quite a big footprint in the town. We have a college. We have Portage College in town, right on Main Street, and again it's a huge asset to our community. We have a courthouse and a provincial building that cover I want to say two square blocks right in the centre of town.

You know, this legislation and this particular part has a significant effect on the town of St. Paul. We also have a major RCMP detachment, AHS facilities. We have a hospital. We've got clinics and AHS nursing facilities as well. You know, if we're just talking about one small school or something in a small town, it may not be that significant, but when you put all of these things together, the five schools, the college, the courthouse, the RCMP detachment, all the traffic that comes in with that, which is great for the businesses in town as well – you know, I'm not going to say anything against that – when all of these buildings are exempt from paying any municipal taxes, it can be quite a burden, that has to be spread around onto the regular taxpayers and small businesses in town.

I'd just like some clarification on whether some of these are going to be pulled out or whether the government is going to reinstate the grants in lieu of taxes, which used to cover this, that were pulled out, I believe, in 2015. If we could get some clarification on that so we can pass that on to our town council, that would be great. Like I say, you know, I'm bragging a little bit about St. Paul, but there are a lot of other communities in Alberta that face the same type of impact from the provincial buildings that are in town.

What else would I like to cover? The electric energy exemption regulation. I just want some clarification on that because currently it says: to elevate the policy regulation directly into the MGA, thereby enabling the minister by order to exempt certain components of properties from education property tax where these components are used for or in the generation of electricity. The clarification that I'm seeking is whether this is specifically industrial, or does this count a small business or a larger business that, you know, covers the roof of their building with solar panels or, in the same case, a resident that puts up solar panels? I just want some clarification on that because I think it could get fairly complicated.

Then while I have the floor here, I'd just also like to touch base on the 5 to 1 tax ratio because it does affect communities up in my area, specifically the county of Lac La Biche and north. They're currently sitting at about, I believe, 7.3 to 1 with their industrial. What we have to take into account is that it's fairly sparsely populated other than the centre of Lac La Biche itself, but we do have a lot of industrial development up in that area, so what we don't pass on to the shadow population that comes is the taxation. The population of Lac La Biche is around 3,000 people. Especially back in 2013-2014, when we had heavy industrial moving through there, we had camps, you know, people staying in camps. There was a lot of infrastructure that was being used by oil and gas. If it's equipment being hauled, water being hauled, or oil tankers, all the equipment that goes to Fort McMurray runs right through the county, whether it's highway 63 or 881.

All of these things combined: this is why these municipalities have to have this differential in taxation because you can't just keep passing this on to the poor guy that's living in town or on an acreage outside of town. It's very important that we take those guys into consideration before we change this. They were quite surprised to hear because they had been told and promised that that was going to be grandfathered in. It is far worse when you take into consideration the municipality of Wood Buffalo, where, you know, they're up into the 12 or 13 to 1 ratios.

To get back down to a 5 to 1 ratio, you either have to drastically cut the industrial or drastically increase the residential in order to get to that, and I think it's very unfair to – you know, these municipalities are basically the driving force of our province. Everybody in the province benefits from the oil and gas industry, and these communities are the ones that live in it and have to put up with the added cost to their infrastructure: the roads through town, sidewalks, all that stuff. It all takes a bit of a beating, especially with some of the heavier traffic. I'd really like to see that being reconsidered by the minister and the government.

That being said, I think I will adjourn debate on Bill 8 for the time being. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to Bill 10? The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Today I rise to speak to Bill 10, the budget appropriations. Looking at the government's record in making Albertans' lives miserable and unaffordable, I can't support this bill. If you look at the recent tax hikes and excessive regulatory burden and the carbon tax, that they never campaigned on, and the 100-megatonne cap on oil sands development and the electricity mess and the coal phase-out and the attack on farmers and on and on and on, with this government's record I can't truly support this budget. There are portions of it, however, like child care support and support for the justice system which the good people of Calgary-Foothills would like me to support, but overall the budget is not creating the jobs that this government promised. It's actually killing jobs.

That said, I mean . . . [interjections] I know I hear some noises on the other side. I can talk in detail about a particular file I follow, Economic Development and Trade. I have done budget estimate reviews with the minister, and I asked so many questions. I didn't get any response here. I can share some of that with the members that were not present during the estimates. Specifically, you know, about Economic Development and Trade, while the minister is out there promoting Alberta as a place to invest, back here at home I'm seeing all kinds of dubious programs, corporate welfare, and a department that lacks transparency with respect to the programs that have a dubious reputation of creating jobs.

This year, Madam Speaker, Economic Development and Trade plans to spend over $354 million in operating expenses, and there is $2.34 million in capital being transferred in large part to Alberta Innovates Corporation and $50 million in financial transactions. In the financial transactions this year is the transfer of $50 million to Alberta Enterprise Corporation, AEC, so this Crown corporation can actually invest the money into venture capital funds. Apparently, Alberta has a lack of venture capital, so instead of investing directly in businesses, the government invests in venture capital funds that invest in Alberta businesses. That all sounds good, but the results tell us a different story. In fact, Alberta has lost money on these venture capital funds 5 out of 6 years since the Enterprise Corporation has existed, and it has required an annual operating subsidy and recapitalization, an investment of good money after bad.

The largest funded line item in Economic Development and Trade's – EDT, I'll call it – estimates is the transfer to AIC, Alberta Innovates Corporation. I tried to ask the minister, along with my colleagues, who also asked some questions, detailed questions about what's going on over at Alberta Innovates Corporation, but because the minister has conveniently hidden or not published AIC's 2017 business plan, he blocked and stonewalled every question we asked. I bet that as soon as these appropriations are approved, Bill 10 is approved here, the magical missing document will appear again, but he doesn't want to share with us during estimates.

We did manage to find out that components of AIC will be funded as follows: health solutions, one of the four Innovates corporations in AIC, gets the biggest funding, $71 million; technology futures gets $65 million; energy and environment gets $28 million; and bio solutions gets $12 million; in total $176 million for these four Innovates.

When I asked how many non taxpayer-funded jobs Alberta Innovates created last year, the minister indicated that he does not track that information. In fact, the minister used weasel words to project Innovates onto the entire industry, a very slick way of avoiding the question, Madam Speaker. It's unacceptable to me and my caucus colleagues here. We need to track the number of jobs Innovates is creating in the private sector, especially when the ministry is spending $176 million. When the minister goes off on a tangent bragging about creating 20,000 new jobs but can't point to the exact source of the job creation or tie Alberta Innovates to those jobs, that's a big problem, Madam Speaker. He's bragging about creating 20,000 temporary jobs – no one knows where they are because they don't track them; they can't tell me, at least – while a hundred thousand Albertans are looking for work. Most of those were good-paying jobs lost in the oil sands because of this government's policies. I asked so many times: how do we get those Albertans back to work? I didn't get any answer in the OQP sense.

Now, let's talk about the CARES program, which is the community and regional economic support program. This year there is $10 million for program delivery support in the estimates for CARES and about $30 million over two years. The minister indicated that he has 63 out of 88 applications approved for $4.83 million in funding in the first round. Again, the minister did not know how many jobs had been created to date by CARES even though the program seems to be designed to employ management consultants.

Under program delivery support in the estimates he's responsible for the export expansion package. There is a $3 million program that had 102 export support fund grants approved totalling more than $640,000 for 2016-17 alone. On the trade mission to China companies received approximately $40,000 towards their involvement in the mission. Those are the people that accompanied the minister to China. Again, when asked about the number of jobs this program created, the minister had no idea.

With respect to the export readiness program, where seminars, events, and workshops were held and access to the Alberta Innovates microvoucher program was provided, again the minister had no idea how many jobs were created.

Then the minister talked about the Alberta investment tax credit program, and he said:

As of March 31 of 2017 there were 126 eligible business corporations, two venture capital corporations. By sector 87 per cent were research, development, commercialization of proprietary technology and products and processes.

The minister also indicated that EDT does not release the names of the companies that are receiving AITC and CITC funds. Those are supposed to be the flagship programs of this EDT ministry, but they don't want to release the names of those companies that are receiving those funds. They are not posted. People want corporate welfare, and then they cry uncle if their name shows up for competitive purposes. That's a blatant lack of transparency, Madam Speaker, of all the things this government speaks about. Again, the minister had no clue as to how many jobs AITC and CITC had created to date.

Madam Speaker, recently when I asked about the 100,000 well-paid jobs that were lost in oil and gas, the minister naively tells me to tell those oil sands developers to apply for funding from AITC and CITC. Those are billions of dollars of projects that oil sands developers were investing before. This $5 million tax credit that the ministry is talking about doesn't even apply to those oil sands developers, but that was his answer. I was so surprised to hear that. There is a common theme here. The minister has no clue about how many jobs his programs are creating, which is not acceptable to Albertans.

When we look at the minister's expenses, the ministry's support services are up over $1.3 million largely for strategic policy and corporate services. At $75,000 a contract – just hypothetically, about $75,000 per contract – that works out to 18 consultants or shadow bureaucrats that might be or could be hired in this part of the department.

In economic development the ministry is actually down over $3.5 million despite offering $10 million for the CARES program.

Now, talking about trade, investment, and attraction, there is $3.5 million in savings from economic development, and that gets moved here to fund the export expansion programs and add trade policy capacity. It's laughable, Madam Speaker, that the export expansion programs are funding translation services for Asian languages and some other languages for Alberta's private sector when the minister does not even have Alberta's promotional website available in other foreign languages. So our own government website is not giving any options for other foreign languages, but we are funding the private sector for translating. It should start first with the government.

In the innovation and science part of the department, Madam Speaker, technology partnerships and investments are up by $1.5 million. Alberta Innovates Corporation is up by $6.6 million.

Finally, we have $10 million for innovation and technology from the climate leadership action plan, the carbon tax slush fund that even painted Economic Development and Trade with its brush, Madam Speaker, that green slush fund.

There you have it: $354.18 million in operating expenses, $2.34 million in capital, and $50 million in financial transactions and the minister cannot point to one private-sector job created from one dollar of spending in his department. He has no clue.

Even with our international offices, Madam Speaker, some of which I recently visited on my own – I did my own trade mission at my own expense to India and Japan. I was trying to debrief the minister based on my observations. For more than three months I couldn't get an appointment with him. I'm still waiting for an appointment. Some of those offices are really providing good service, and they were providing excellent reports and performance measures in the department's annual report despite having achieved 44 economic outcomes facilitated. I asked the minister about the economic outcomes facilitated: what does it mean? He couldn't define that for me. Could he say if those were 44 jobs or 4,400 jobs? The minister did not know. He didn't have any clue.

Giving the minister over $356 million to blow this year while being unable to point to specific jobs he has created from last year's money can only mean one thing. Wildrose does not trust this minister with the money he wishes to spend and cannot support his plans.

That said, Madam Speaker, that's just one department. This government is overseeing a $50 billion budget for Albertans, and they can't tell us where they created a single job in the private sector. They couldn't. I've been asking them. I have been asking them. Some of those backbenchers sat on the committee, and they heard the minister not able to answer. That is just one department, but that is the pattern, and that's the template of this government.

Now, on this side of the House I have caucus colleagues who are the critics for various portfolios. I'm sure they'll bring up their points in the debate here. They had interesting things to say during their budget estimates.

Having said that, Madam Speaker, this government is unable to create jobs, so actually they're not making life better. They're making life miserable for Albertans. They're making life unaffordable for Albertans with all their tax hikes and all. In my city of Calgary Mayor Nenshi says that he has to increase property taxes because of this government's ideological policies.

Mr. Sucha: Not true.

Mr. Panda: He's on the record.

Having said that – I don't want to take too much time – although there are parts that my colleagues here would like to support for child care and the justice system, overall this budget is not good for Albertans. So I won't support it, and I ask all my colleagues across the aisle to not support this budget.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak to Bill 10, and it is an honour to be able to talk to my colleagues in this House and to talk about the money the Lieutenant Governor in Council has requested this elected Legislative Assembly approve. As Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition's shadow minister for Transportation I will address the spending in that role.

Madam Speaker, there's a lot of spending for the Transportation ministry this year. On page 6 of this eight-page bill we see Transportation having an operating expense of over $1.7 billion. Contained in this is $32.2 million to run the minister's office, the deputy minister's office, communications, and strategic services. This is largely salaries for hard-working public servants, servants of the Alberta public working on behalf of everyday working families, and I applaud their efforts. Then we have $28.2 million in here for programs, services, and support and $35.7 million for traffic safety services. We all know how important it is to promote being safe on Alberta's highways. There's $2.3 million in here to support the Transportation Safety Board. If anyone in this House loses their driver's licence for drunk driving, you'll be appearing before this board to get it back. The same if you want to open a short-line industrial railway: you will have to come talk to these fine people.

Next we come to a bone of contention across Alberta, provincial highway maintenance and preservation. In the constituencies we routinely get letters about the cuts to highway maintenance, which has been cut $46 million from three years ago. It now stands at $254 million. There is less crack sealing being done. This is a recipe for disaster, Madam Speaker. Water gets into the cracks, freezes, thaws, repeats, and you get potholes. In some cases, like the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky said, you even get grass and flowers growing up through the cracks in major provincial highways like highway 43. Plant roots cause damage to provincial highways. All of this damage only means higher capital expenses and early rehabilitation expenses.

We have even heard how bad the highway maintenance is out there from the minister. The minister in estimates indicated that he is extending the contracts for highway maintenance contractors for two years while a review is conducted to try and get value for money. One of his highway maintenance contractors, Carillion, bid so low on the contract that they couldn't make ends meet and needed an increase in payment for services for the next two years. That makes you wonder, Madam Speaker, what kind of an outfit a unionized Carillion is if they need more money when other providers like Volker Stevin don't. All told, the highway maintenance and preservation budget is over $358 million this year to look after the largest number of roads per capita of any province in the country.

The government saw well to maintain the assessment and support systems for provincial highway maintenance and preservation at $21 million, and I applaud them for that. They also managed to eliminate the minister's slush fund, the capital for emergent projects. I also commend them for that.

Municipal transit and transportation grant programs jumped almost five times in value.

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt, hon. member, but pursuant to Standing Order 4(2.1) the Assembly stands adjourned until 1:30 this afternoon.

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to introduce to you and through to the rest of the members of the House two classrooms from St. Augustine school in beautiful Ponoka. Their teachers are Mr. Ken Hackett and Mrs. Sharon Hackett. There are also some chaperones: Stephanie Gartner, Amanda Henderson-Kada, and Jennifer LaForge. I'd ask that they'd all please stand, the students included, and receive the warm welcome of the House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I assume they must be sitting up behind me. It's my pleasure to stand and introduce to you and through you the grade 6 students from Glen Avon school. They are accompanied by their teacher, Mrs. Karen Kendel. Although she doesn't look it, she's counting down the days to retirement. She actually taught both of my kids in grade 4. She is accompanied by teachers Terri-Lynne Nickason, Tanya Fontaine, and Nadine Silver and chaperones Pat Ryning, Shelley Hawthorne, Dwayne Girard, and Brian Reaney. I would like them all to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

She aged much better than you, hon. member.

Are there any other school groups today?

Seeing and hearing none, the Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the Blessed Oscar Romero Catholic high school cheer team and their head coach, Melissa Kolodenko. They won the 2017 Alberta provincial division 1 senior cheer championships for the second year in a row earlier this month in Athabasca. In the constituency of Edmonton-McClung we are very proud of the accomplishments of these student athletes, the coaching staff, and parent volunteers.

I'd like to thank Mr. Speaker for agreeing to pose with us earlier today for a photograph in the rotunda. I'd ask all the students and staff and teachers to rise to receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House the fine, hard-working volunteers of the Canadian Transplant Association who have organized today's organ and tissue awareness event in the lower rotunda. I'm going to read their names: Hirde Paul Jassal Singh, Jaspal Singh, Neil Folkins, Malkeet Singh, Rakesh Apra, Harmanpreet Kaur, Arsh Singh, Ashok Kumar, Jack McJannett, Barb Esdale, Amandeep Singh Dhanju, and Jageer Singh Dhanju.

On behalf of all recipients and from the bottom of my heart I want to say thank you to you and your wonderful organization for saving lives. My guests are in the public gallery, and I'd ask them to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To you and through you it is my honour to introduce several guests who have been integral parts of the health care teams at several Edmonton hospitals for many years. I'll be highlighting their service in my member's statement coming. Brenda Shim and Peggy Teixeira are with volunteer services at the Misericordia hospital. Patricia Fields is a key member of the all-volunteer team that has operated the gift shop at the Royal Alexandra hospital for over 100 years, not Pat herself. Shirley and Alan Gaudet are long-time Cross Cancer Institute colleagues providing patient information and rides to and from the Cross. I ask them all to please rise and receive the warm welcome of my colleagues.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly a good friend of mine, Mr. Jason Green. Jason and I met in the last election, and he is now the CFO of the Wildrose Drayton Valley-Devon Constituency Association. He's doing a great job, and I predict that he could give the Minister of Finance a run for his money as he seems to be able to not only balance our constituency budget, but he ensures that we have a healthy, positive bottom line. It's my pleasure, then, to introduce Jason to the Assembly. I'd ask him to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a valuable constituent of Edmonton-Ellerslie, Greta Gerstner, the founder of Strategic Alliance for Alberta Students with Learning Challenges. This group was born out of Greta's strong desire to change the education system to help all students with learning challenges. I've been working closely with her as she hopes to change how the system works, specifically focusing on how to eliminate roadblocks. She hopes to bring awareness to all Albertans that by not providing the students with learning challenges the help they need to succeed, we will add a long-term cost to the health care, justice, and social services systems. However, if we invest in appropriate supports now, these students can be productive and contributing members of society. I ask her to please stand and for all of us to welcome her with the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ministerial Statements

Holocaust Remembrance Day

Miranda: I rise today to speak about Yom ha-Shoah, Holocaust Remembrance Day, a most solemn day in Jewish history, a day observed in memory of the 11 million people who died during the Nazi genocide, 6 million of whom were Jews. The Shoah was a crime where the elderly and the young, over a million and a half of them innocent children, were systemically and with both extreme cruelty and savagery starved, experimented on, shot, buried alive, strangled, given lethal injections, gassed, burned, and reduced to ashes only because they were deemed guilty of the crime of being different, a crime without parallel in human history.

This Monday, April 24, Jews in Alberta, across Canada, and around the world will commemorate by recalling the darkest period in our collective memory. Two days ago we marked the end of Pesach, the Passover, celebrating our ancestors' freedom from slavery in ancient Egypt as told in the Book of Exodus. Generation after generation of Jews have experienced oppression. In fact, history is plagued by examples where anti-Semitism has taken up roots across cultures, faiths, and generations. However, despite the worst machinations by emperors, czars, pharaohs, kings, Caesars, kaisers, and führers, the Jewish people have endured and remain as testament to the belief in an ancient promise found in the Book of Genesis foretelling that Abraham's descendants would be as numerous as the stars in the sky and the sand on the seashore.

But why is it important to remember? In the words of Holocaust survivor, renowned writer, and Nobel laureate Elie Wiesel: "Without memory, there is no culture. Without memory, there would be no civilization, no society, no future."

Many years ago I had the opportunity to visit Yad Vashem, the Holocaust museum in Jerusalem. During my visit to the Children's Memorial we were reminded that entire families were annihilated, with no one left to say Kaddish, the prayer for the dead, in their memory. It was there that I and many others committed ourselves to each remembering one name and performed what I see as a sacred duty to remember. So today I remember Alvaro Coen. He was a Sephardi, a Spanish Jew. He was born in Rome, Italy, in 1936. During the war he was deported to Auschwitz, Poland, where, still a child, he was murdered.

Mr. Speaker, no matter how difficult it is to remind ourselves of the horrors of the Holocaust, no matter how unimaginable it seems, Yom ha-Shoah implores us to remember. It is only by remembering that we can work together as a society to prevent such tragedies from ever happening again because as difficult as it is to remember, what is even more difficult is the realization that the ignorance which colluded with hatred and the indifference that turned its back on human compassion and the most basic of human decencies, those seeds of hatred, the ones that paved the way for the Shoah in the first place, still remain with us today.

This is most evident during times of change, of anxiety, of uncertainty, of economic troubles, where there appears to be a willingness to give in to a base desire to find someone else, someone different to blame for those struggles. Refusing to forget helps us to take concrete action against the hate and discrimination which pose the greatest dangers to an inclusive, peaceful, and accepting way of life. We must remain vigilant against anti-Semitism and indeed all forms of discrimination, be it homophobia, transphobia, Islamophobia, misogyny, or racism. We must guard against the hatred and bigotry and give them no room to take up root or even grow in our province. Alberta must continue to be a welcome and inclusive place for all those who seek a better home and a better life.

As Hillel the elder once wrote: "That which is hateful to you, do not do to your fellow. That is the whole Torah; the rest is the explanation. Now go and learn."

As Jews around the world mourn and remember, let us all join with them. As legislators let us continue to build a society where people from all backgrounds, religions, cultures, sexual identities, and gender expressions are celebrated for those differences because let us not forget that alongside the victims who were forced to wear yellow stars, there were victims who were forced to wear pink triangles.

Let us remember and use that memory of the Holocaust to inspire our efforts to make this world free from all forms of discrimination. When we can all fully commit to this, we will have rightfully honoured all who died during those very dark times. As we put this into practice, we actually do practise one of the underlying values of Judaism, tikkun olam, Hebrew for "repairing the world."

Because it is not enough to remember, we must also act. One way to act is by continuing to work together in building a world of peace and tolerance for all. In the words of Yehuda Bauer, "Thou shalt not be a victim, thou shalt not be a perpetrator, but, above all, thou shalt not be a bystander."

Mr. Speaker, to honour this coming Yom ha-Shoah, I encourage all Albertans to learn about the Holocaust, to find out what steps each of us can take to support our province's Jewish communities and to stop anti-Semitism wherever it occurs.

In closing, I want to pay tribute to the Yiddishkeit, or the Jewish spirit, and hold it up as an example of the human capacity for resilience in the face of the most inhuman savagery that the world has ever seen.

They came for us. They did their best to try and destroy our spirit, and through it all here we are. We remain. Never again.

Thank you. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to pause and reflect in solemn remembrance of the atrocities committed against Jewish men, women, and children sometime ago in the Holocaust, also known as Shoah.

Holocaust Remembrance Day is an opportunity to honour those people, the 11 million people, humanity, whose lives were taken and, of course, the 6 million Jews amongst those that were systematically murdered at the hands of the brutal Nazi regime. Days like Holocaust Remembrance Day are important. The lessons learned from the Holocaust must guide our actions today and into the future.

Anti-Semitism or discrimination of any kind is not acceptable. It has no place in our society. We must combat fear and exclusion with acceptance and understanding for everyone. Canada and Alberta are home to a very proud Jewish community. We must work with this community as we must work with all communities to share their stories, to understand their history.

We must also as a whole work together to reflect on the horrors of the Shoah so that it can never be repeated and never happen again to anyone, no matter what the choice. Together we must recognize the unspeakable atrocities committed, honour the survivors, and also recognize those who showed such bravery in risking their lives to save others.

I did attend the Yad Vashem, the Holocaust museum in Israel, and it was very moving. I also had the opportunity to visit a concentration camp in Europe. Unacceptable. Yom ha-Shoah allows us to reflect on the strength and the perseverance of survivors, those people that do survive. The innocent men and women and children who were killed and are no longer with us: we must remember their legacy. We must honour their legacy as we reflect on one of the darkest moments that I think could be possible in human history.

On Holocaust Remembrance Day let us always remember the individuals around the world that continue today to face persecution and discrimination simply for who they are. This cannot happen and must not happen here. We must be a shining beacon to the world of what can be, with peace and acceptance and understanding and tolerance.

This injustice must be a call to action. We must never sit on the sidelines, be complacent. The Holocaust must be a harsh reminder for all of us on how far humanity can take persecution and how much the human spirit can actually accept the unacceptable, terror and injustice upon humanity. We must preserve the record of one of the darkest chapters and never forget. We must share the message and never forget.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The acting Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to request unanimous consent of the House to allow responses from the third party and the two independent members should they so choose.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to observe 16 years of Holocaust Memorial Day, or Yom ha-Shoah, in Alberta. I would be remiss if I did not take this opportunity to recognize the memory of the sponsor of this act, former MLA for Calgary-Glenmore Ron Stevens. On November 16, 2000, when this legislation was passed, the hon. Mr. Stevens said:

There are voices calling out to us from history, and they have much to teach us if we listen . . . They teach us about the dangers of simply being bystanders and of remaining silent . . . The voices of history teach us the need to commit to a legacy of remembrance, education, and conscience.

Today we pay homage to the more than 6 million Jews and many others targeted and brutally slaughtered by Hitler's Nazi regime. Included in this gruesome figure are 13,000 killed during the Warsaw ghetto uprising. Mr. Speaker, in April of 1943 the Warsaw ghetto bravely resisted Nazi attempts to transport them to their deaths in the Treblinka concentration camp. The resistance lasted just under a month and ended when the SS ordered the ghetto burned to the ground. Block by block all remaining residents were either burned alive or suffocated in the fires. This act of defiance was the single largest Jewish revolt against extermination. It exemplifies the bravery with which every Jewish man, woman, and child faced the horrors of the Holocaust.

Then there was the Łódź ghetto. Over 200,000 ghetto residents died or were exterminated in the nearby Chelmno camp. On September 4, 1942, the fateful "Give me your children" speech led to the methodical extraction of over 15,000 Jews. The sick, children under 10, and the elderly were exterminated, mostly in mobile gas vans, forcibly separated from their families.

Mr. Speaker, my father was a Polish-born Jew from Łódź. His fateful refuge in Shanghai in 1917 saved his immediate family, now survived by my family. Among the victims of the Holocaust, as far as we know to this day, were all of the members of my father's extended family – grandparents, aunts, uncles, cousins – an entire bloodline wiped off the face of this Earth. These are the stories of horror and blind hatred that few are left to tell.

Mr. Speaker, there are thriving Jewish communities across Alberta established in large part by refugees from senseless genocide and brutality and Holocaust survivors who sought refuge in Canada during and after the war. Names such as Aron Eichler and Bronia and Sid Cyngiser come to mind for sharing their stories with all Alberta. Their stories are inextricably linked to Alberta's story; their past traumas, our traumas. Their grief is our grief. Remember, this happened not just because evil people did evil things but because good people did nothing and said nothing. At sundown on Sunday, April 23, all Albertans will stand in solidarity with Jewish communities across the province to remember all who have perished at the hands of such evil.

As we face an uncertain future in a world that struggles with terrorism, mass refugee migration, and extremism, let us renew our vow to never again stand idly by as such heinous crimes as those perpetrated during the Holocaust are committed because, Mr. Speaker, the single greatest act of remembrance we can engage in on behalf of victims and survivors amongst us and around the world is to do our mitzvah, our good deed, and do all we can to reaffirm our commitment to upholding human rights, to fight for and protect freedom and democracy, to value diversity in all its forms, and to help those fleeing violence and persecution in a way which embraces the multicultural richness we enjoy and cherish in Alberta as a tolerant, respectful, and inclusive society.

Thank you. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This coming Sunday marks Yom ha-Shoah, Holocaust Remembrance Day, and today we stand in the Legislature to remember the millions of Jewish children, women, and men brutally murdered by the Nazi regime. We acknowledge that this is one day after we recognized the genocide of Holodomor, Stalin's Ukrainian genocide. The only crime of this Jewish community was being what Adolf Hitler and his government hated and feared, being different. Because of their religion, ethnicity, or sexual orientation they deviated from the Nazi ideal of a pure Aryan nation and so were exterminated.

The official name of Yom ha-Shoah translates to Holocaust and Heroism Remembrance Day, and while we remember humanity at its darkest and mourn those lost, we also acknowledge the incredible strength of the human spirit. Opposition to the Nazi regime took incredible courage, and obviously millions lost their lives in resisting. Nevertheless, resistance was widespread once ordinary men and women became heroes as they fought back in countless ways. Their bravery gave others a glimmer of hope, a candle in this darkness.

As the Holocaust fades into the past, we risk forgetting the consequences of not being vigilant against racism, hatred, genocide in all its forms and must be prepared to act when we see evidence anywhere, any time across our world. "Never again" is more than a hope; it's a promise to act. When we say these words, we promise that we will to the best of our ability follow the example of those who stood up and resisted to fight to ensure that the horrors of the Holocaust are never repeated.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, it's not often or not often enough that we get unanimous consent in this House on certain issues, I believe. The presentations, the last four I heard – we have a responsibility to never forget and to never let this happen again.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

GST on Carbon Levy

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday we asked some very simple questions about the fact that Ottawa is plucking hundreds of millions of dollars more out of Alberta as a direct result of the NDP's carbon tax on Alberta workers and Alberta businesses. Talking to the press, the Finance minister seemed completely clueless that this particular issue was even a problem, saying that he wants to "get a little more information." Well, he does manage a $52 billion economy. It's very important. I think that answer is simply not good enough. It's been 24 hours. Does he have the information? How much is this tax on tax costing Alberta families?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to start by setting the stage about exactly what we spoke about yesterday. This is not a surprise. This tax-on-tax situation that the member speaks of was something he lobbied that he would change when he was in Ottawa. Then what happened when he got to Ottawa? He didn't change it. So guess what? This happens in Alberta. This happens in B.C. This happens in Ontario. It would be great if it could be changed, and the member opposite had the chance to do something about it. Instead of putting our head in the sand, we're going to move forward. Guess what? We got two pipelines for Alberta.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure if the minister is aware, but we did have an actual reduction of the GST by two percentage points, from 7 to 5 per cent. That was a promise made and a promise kept.

The NDP, however, brought in a $5 billion carbon tax and never did their research on it. They had no idea, none whatsoever, Mr. Speaker, that their plan meant asking grieving widows to give money back to the NDP government coffers. They said that they'd fix it, and they haven't, twice. They didn't have an economic impact study done at all when they passed the carbon tax. They had no idea of the ramifications. Since I know the Deputy Premier wants to answer this question, I'll try the Finance minister anyway, even though she'll probably pop up. If the Premier . . .

Mr. Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are sick of an opposition that claims that the only way to move forward is by moving back. Let's move back, though, and acknowledge the record. He wants to talk about promises. He made a promise to fix the situation where the GST is charged on other levies and taxes, and he failed to do that. We're not going to make excuses. We're going to move forward and get real results for the province of Alberta. That's what we're doing. We are reinvesting revenues from the price on carbon right here in Alberta's economy, and we're proud to do so. [interjections]

The Speaker: Someone remarked that my tension sometimes escalates. I'm really working on finding positive ways to enjoy this place.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, here's another tax hike the NDP never thought through. A new report from the University of Calgary's School of Public Policy shows that labour earnings for the average two-income household will drop by – wait for it – $830 per year as a direct result of this government's 20 per cent tax hike on business taxes across Alberta. Now Alberta will have the highest business tax among the western provinces, and it means less money for families to put bread on the table. To top it off, we collected almost a billion dollars less in revenues last year alone. Will the NDP admit that this tax hike has failed Albertans, and will they ask Ottawa to fight for an exemption to the GST on the tax?

Ms Hoffman: I know the member opposite is used to getting direction from Ottawa.

We worked to bring in a made-in-Alberta solution, Mr. Speaker, and we're so proud to do that. Let's talk about what's happening in the economy. Yesterday a chief economist with the Business Development Bank said that this is going to be a year of turnaround, that we're going to build on that from this year on. This is going to take some time before everybody sees it, but this is a first step. It's going in the right direction. He's talking about Alberta, Alberta's economy, and the great efforts that are moving forward. That's why last month we got 20,000 new full-time jobs, and we are so proud of that. [interjections]

The Speaker: Could I ask again: keep the volume down.
Second main question.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We would appreciate it if we got an answer to a question.

Energy Efficiency Programs

Mr. Jean: I wish a light bulb would go on over the Premier's head to make her realize that Albertans don't need Ecofitt from Ontario to come into their houses to change their light bulbs. The fact is that the Premier is throwing Albertans' hard-earned money, that they are syphoning off through carbon taxes, at these programs to see what actually sticks. Now that the NDP have introduced Ecofitt 2.0, a more reasonable energy efficiency program, I would suggest, does that mean that the Ecofitt 1.0 boondoggle is going to be cancelled? Obviously, we know it's redundant, wasteful, and needs to be done away with. Does that mean that the Premier . . .

2:00

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much. As of April 4, Mr. Speaker, 98,576 families had signed up for the Energy Efficiency Alberta program. I am so proud that our government is there to have the backs of 900 Fort McMurray residents who are accessing this program. We're helping them to ensure that they have $112 they can put back into their own pockets. The members opposite want to scrap this plan. Instead, we want to make sure that we're supporting Albertans and saving money, and we're not going to apologize for expanding on opportunities to do that.

Mr. Jean: Of course they're going to apply for getting their money back, Mr. Speaker. It's their money. That's what the NDP forget. They're just getting a refund.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the NDP government is hoping they can pull the wool over Albertans' eyes about having two programs doing the same thing – exactly the same thing – but Albertans are savvy. They understand what's going on, and they know that this Ecofitt program, where salespeople actually go into your house, believe it or not, to upsell products, doesn't make any sense. They know that the NDP government is actually using their own money to try to bribe them. If the Premier won't listen to me, will she listen to Albertans and scrap this Ecofitt 2.0 boondoggle?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, we're proud of the more than 350 local Alberta contractors who have already signed up to help Albertans save money through this program. This is job creating. It's supporting local families and saving money, and we're not going to apologize for making sure we have an opportunity to act responsibly on supporting the environment, supporting families, ensuring that they can have greater efficiencies, the last jurisdiction in North America to finally catch up. I'm not going to apologize for standing up for Alberta families, working to make their lives better. We're going to keep doing that.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, the NDP are just showing a lack of respect for Albertans' hard-earned money. Why have one program when you can have two? That's, of course, the NDP way. Albertans deserve to know the price of installing these products by an Ecofitt salesman compared to an everyday Albertan buying one at their neighbourhood Alberta hardware store. Will the Premier release these figures, or does she not want Albertans to see how her government is actually wasting their money?

Ms Hoffman: It's no doubt that the Leader of the Official Opposition wants to turn the lights out. He wants to turn the lights out on Alberta families who are struggling to pay for tuition. We've capped that. He wants to turn the lights out on Alberta families who are struggling to pay their power bills. We've capped those, Mr. Speaker. He wants to turn the lights out on a climate leadership plan that brought us approval for two – two – pipelines. We're not going to turn the lights out. We're going to keep moving forward, and we're going to support Alberta families and our economy.

The Speaker: Third main question.

Electricity Power Purchase Arrangements

Mr. Jean: The NDP government's multibillion-dollar screw-up on our electricity system by first raising taxes and then trying to break contracts with Alberta-owned companies is something Alberta taxpayers will be paying a lot of money on for many years. Last fall we found out the Energy department asked the Balancing Pool to delete e-mails related to Enmax returning their PPA because they were, quote, sensitive. Now the Privacy Commissioner is investigating. Will the NDP release all of the documents for the investigation, and if not, why not?

Ms Hoffman: I'm pleased to tell the House and Albertans that we are happy to welcome the oversight provided by the Privacy Commissioner, Mr. Speaker, and we are pleased to talk about the government's plan to transition responsibly to a power system that takes care of everyday Albertans. We have been fully transparent and accountable, and we will continue to do so in every bit of the transition. We're happy to comply with and support the Privacy Commissioner in her work.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Here's why this all matters. The government is still fighting Enmax in the court for returning their Battle River PPA to the Balancing Pool. The government continues to make up stories that they had no idea that making massive increases to the carbon tax would break contracts that were long on the public record. Now, if the NDP forced this PPA back into Enmax, it means property tax hikes for Calgarians will go way up. Why doesn't the NDP start telling the truth to Albertans about this multibillion-dollar NDP screw-up?

Ms Hoffman: Want to talk about what screw-ups led to this situation, Mr. Speaker? It was the lack of transparent and accountable discussions, that happened behind closed doors, that were entered into in secret, backroom talks that off-loaded liabilities from businesses that were profitable onto the backs of Alberta families. That's how we ended up in this situation. We're not going to move forward in . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: I cannot hear the answer to the question. [interjections] Hon. members, please.

Ten seconds to finish off.

Ms Hoffman: It's clear that the opposition has chosen which side they're going to be on, the side of their slow-dance partners, who put liabilities, in their opinion, back onto Albertans. Instead, we're going to stand up for Albertans.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, so many excuses and only one party to blame, them. They should take the blame. They're not serving Albertans.

We know that the NDP now has a history of stonewalling information to the Privacy Commissioner. If you have nothing to hide, why delete the e-mails? They are hiding over 466 pages that the Privacy Commissioner has asked for, and we know that they are in the practice of deleting sensitive e-mails when it comes to multibillion-dollar screw-ups. Let's face it. The fact is that no one trusts this NDP government. Their policies are reckless, they're secretive, and they continue to wage legal battles with Alberta-owned corporations and Albertans. How many investigations do Albertans need before we start hearing the truth from this NDP government?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. If the member of the opposition wants to hear some truth and he won't take my word for it, then let's take the truth from Brian Ferguson, CEO of Cenovus, who yesterday told the Calgary Chamber that the recent decision to invest billions of dollars more in Alberta was based in large part on the confidence in the government policies. That's this government. He said: it's my belief that the carbon policy in Alberta was one of the key reasons the federal government was able to get its mind around approving these two new pipelines. This is a good result. We're going to keep working with the Information and Privacy Commissioner, but we're also going to work with Alberta businesses and employers. [interjections]

The Speaker: A couple of members I could hear above the tumult. I don't want to draw, at this stage at least, individual attention to them. I think you might know who you are.

The hon. leader of the third party.

Residential No-charge Energy Savings Program

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, yesterday in QP the environment minister admitted that someone would be selling things to Albertans while in their homes under the Energy Efficiency Alberta program. What the minister did not answer was who that would be. The Energy Efficiency Alberta people will have official identification, or so the website says. To the Premier: who will be doing the selling in Alberta homes after getting entry via your government program through Energy Efficiency Alberta? Their officials or somebody else?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Let me google that for you.

The Program . . . will introduce homeowners and tenants to the benefits of energy efficiency by delivering immediate energy savings at no cost to them. Engaging with residents offers opportunities to build trust and recognition of Energy Efficiency Alberta, cross-promote other efficiency programs, and can drive demand for larger investments and deeper energy savings.

This is if the homeowner so chooses. The program – it's very clear from the RFP, which is posted publicly – is about making sure that there is no cost directly to the individuals who are welcoming these people into their homes.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, this NDP government is still misleading Albertans. Beyond the minister's admission yesterday, the very website, on a page I will table today, says on the left side of the page that home improvements are for sale. On the right side of the page it says, "They are not selling anything, and they will never ask you for money." It can't be both. To the minister: since your webpage is obviously wrong on one side or the other, will you have it corrected today, or will you allow this misinformation to remain another day after it has been shown to you that you're giving Albertans false information?

The Speaker: I want to caution the member and the members. We've had many hours wasted on discussions about what's true, what's not true, misleading, false, et cetera. I want to caution everyone to be careful. The responsibility rests with all of you, not with me, with respect to that matter.

The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What we have done is introduced now three programs, in fact. One is a residential installation that Albertans can sign up for. As we've heard, almost 100,000 Albertans are going to avail themselves of those savings, saving them about $100 a year, a little more, with those installations. We've also unveiled the contractor installation program. Albertans who want to install new windows, insulation, or tankless hot water heaters may avail themselves of the over 350 contractors that have registered to provide those services. We're saving Albertans money. The previous government never got around to it.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Their website is still wrong, Mr. Speaker.

The government is asking Albertans to let Energy Efficiency Alberta into their homes to install electrical equipment and devices. Here is what the website says under terms of service. "To the full extent permissible by applicable law, we disclaim all warranties, conditions and guarantees, express or implied, including implied warranties, conditions or guarantees of merchantable quality, fitness for a . . ."

The Speaker: Hon. member, I have to be able to hear the question, and I can't. [interjection] Hon. member. [interjection] Hon. member.

Mr. McIver: I was reading, Mr. Speaker. I'm sorry.

The Speaker: I just wasn't certain if you were reading in English or some other language because I couldn't understand it. I'm not sure if there was a question in there or not.

Mr. McIver: It's here. I'm not finished, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Yeah, I know that, but it seems to me that you're taking advantage of the issue.

Would the government like to respond? Who may have heard a question?

Mr. Rodney: He has 10 seconds.

The Speaker: Okay. Then I've cautioned you before. You've got nine seconds.

Mr. McIver: I apologize for speed-reading.

To the Premier: don't you think you can give Albertans a little more comfort before asking them to open up their homes under your government's say-so?

The Speaker: The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, almost 100,000 Albertans have signed up for the residential no-cost program, which will save homeowners a little over $100 a year on average. In addition, there are other programs that we have announced. In addition to that, there are the solar programs we've announced. Now, the previous government left us in a situation where we're the only jurisdiction in North America without an energy efficiency program. Of course, the Wildrose denies the science of climate change, so they, too, would not invest in such a program. Might I suggest that all of these goings-on about energy efficiency are designed to distract from the fact that we have an internal caucus revolt happening over . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Hon. members, I'm surprised. I thought we would have a very friendly discussion today because everyone would be anxious to get home.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Gravel Extraction in Flood Plains

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, as a Liberal you might expect me to be asking some questions about marijuana today, but instead of weed I want to talk about rocks and water. Like human lungs, alluvial aquifers around rivers and streams are essential for exchanging surface water and groundwater, but gravel extraction in our flood plains is threatening to choke out our vital water supply. To be blunt, Alberta has the largest scale gravel extraction in the country.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I think your time has lapsed.

Dr. Swann: Impossible. Impossible.

The Speaker: I'm sure that the minister . . . [interjection] Hon. member, I think you need to sit down.

What a wonderful day in the neighbourhood.

I'm not sure if there was a question in there.

The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I share the hon. member's concern about, of course, water quality and gravel extraction, as we all do. We all want to make sure that safe drinking water and riparian habitat are appropriately maintained in this province. That's why, for example, we've invested in more river and stream monitoring as part of our consolidation of monitoring in the province, and we're working with the Sand and Gravel Association and the municipalities on these matters of gravel extraction, ensuring they're done in the best way possible.

Dr. Swann: Well, to the contrary, Mr. Speaker, it's clear that there's a potential for permanent environmental damage when we continue to allow gravel extraction in flood plains. I'll be tabling photographs from all over Alberta later today. The Minister of Environment and Parks has taken action on science-based evidence in the Castle, so I'm sure that there's a commitment to using science to make better decisions. Why is science enough to restrict industry activity in the Castle but not in flood plains? Why the double standard?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the hon. member for the question. Certainly, our department along with Municipal Affairs is working with the Sand and Gravel Association and other stakeholders to ensure that sand and gravel and all aggregate extraction is done in ways that protect our air, land, and water. Certainly, the Sand and Gravel Association has been a good partner to us in that. In many cases we work on a case-by-case basis with the affected municipalities to make sure that we're upholding the highest standards.

Dr. Swann: The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that the Sand and Gravel Association has a very cozy relationship with municipalities and Municipal Affairs, and they're the ones financially benefiting from the developments on flood plains. Allowing them to police is like asking a pot user to guard the brownies. What's needed is for the environment minister to remove the temptation and protect our water. When will you take real action and institute a total ban on gravel extraction in flood plains?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the hon. member for the question. We will certainly take his views under advisement as we speak to communities who have concerns about flood plains gravel and other aggregate extraction. We're always looking for a productive conversation with the communities that are affected by these projects.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Services for Seniors

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. From time to time my office will get calls from local seniors inquiring about benefits, and my staff will usually refer them to the information guide. This guide documents seniors' programs and services. It is a useful tool, but some of the information will soon be outdated. To the Minister of Seniors and Housing: what is the government doing to ensure that seniors get the accurate information they need in a timely fashion?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's vital that seniors are aware of programs available to them. We've appointed a Seniors Advocate, Dr. Sheree Kwong See, who is assisting seniors in navigating government services. Last year we sent out 40,000 information guides, and we update printed materials annually. Seniors receiving provincial benefits are sent information each July so that they are aware of available programs and services. I'm proud that we're making life better for seniors by protecting and improving programs and benefits here in Alberta.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that transportation is often a challenge for rural seniors, especially for those with mobility issues, to the same minister: how is the government helping seniors in rural Alberta who need transportation, particularly accessible transportation?

Ms Sigurdson: Mr. Speaker, seniors built this province, and they deserve to retire in dignity. We have supported the development of transportation tool kits for seniors in communities working to create their own programs. This tool kit helps communities create transportation alternatives that are more suitable to the needs of seniors. We continue to support the research and programs being developed by the University of Alberta's Medically At-Risk Driver Centre, and I'm proud that our government is also investing $1.3 billion over four years in public transportation.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that my constituents have expressed concerns with the existing financial benefit for seniors travelling long distances to attend medical appointments, will the government commit to examining the benefits schedule?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for your advocacy for seniors' issues in your constituency. My ministry's special-needs assistance program currently provides financial support to low-income seniors. We are aware that some seniors incur significant costs travelling to receive specialized care in larger centres. It's an important issue, and we are looking at what we can do additionally to support seniors.

Agrifood and Agribusiness Carbon Levy Costs

Mr. Schneider: Recently it was moved by the Member for Leduc-Beaumont that the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future undertake a study of how to grow and diversify the agrifood and agribusiness sectors and that the scope of this study be focused on value-added production, small-business opportunities, and local food production and promotion, but now we have had numerous agri-related businesses telling us that this government's policies are doing just the opposite. To the Minister of Energy: why did you jam through carbon tax legislation, that effectively runs counter to motions proposed by your own MLA?

The Speaker: The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, this province has been attracting a lot of investment and a lot of attention in the agribusiness sector. I'm thinking here of the $120 million expansion to Richardson Oilseed in Lethbridge and a commitment from Cavendish Farms for the largest private-sector investment in Lethbridge history, which is going to be a great economic driver for southern Alberta, certainly, for both my constituency and the Member for Little Bow's.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Schneider: It's great that we got a minister there.

Given that many of these agrifood businesses are already in the value-added production business and given that you didn't run on the platform of a carbon tax and given that several of these value-added agribusinesses are now considering relocating operations out of Alberta, to the minister of ag. Minister, this is serious. If you truly are supportive of the agribusinesses, will you stand up for them and fight your caucus to exempt agrifood producers from the carbon tax?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, this province has brought in a carbon pricing framework that is a made-in-Alberta solution such that a made-in-Ottawa solution is not imposed on us. You know, it's very clear that the Wildrose and their new frenemies over there in the PCs would rather a made-in-Ottawa plan. Given the rich, made-in-Ottawa pensions that both right-wing leaders are lining up for, I'm not surprised that they like things that are made in Ottawa.

Mr. Schneider: Given that this government was loudly bragging about the Cavendish Farms expansion and how it reflected well on this government and given that government MLAs leapt at the chance to tout this $350 million private investment, Minister, and that we are hearing from multiple sources that the expansion is now on indefinite hold due to economic uncertainty caused by your government's poor policies, how can you claim that your policies are improving the lives of Albertans while investors are reconsidering business here?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the fact that Alberta's carbon pricing framework was so widely praised, certainly, by energy executives and others yesterday is simply because we have put in place a system of output-based allocations to ensure that all industries do not end up with competitive trade pressures as happened in B.C., and then B.C. moved forward with a different kind of framework similar to what Alberta is putting in place. Now, of course, the Wildrose would not like to welcome new jobs to Alberta, but on this side of the House . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister. Time is up.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Springbank Flood Mitigation Project

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Following intense flooding in southern Alberta four years ago there was a consensus that the government needed to do something fast to mitigate against another flood event, so we did. Several projects were examined, and the one chosen seemed to be the quickest, easiest, most affordable solution, but for many reasons local landowners, residents, towns, and the Tsuut'ina Nation are all allied to stop the dam from being built at this location. To the Minister of Infrastructure: please explain to all Albertans how exactly you came to the decision on the Springbank dam project versus other options.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There was a lot of consultation done on the mitigation plans. Our government is focused on building strong, collaborative relationships with all First Nations. Just a little over a few weeks ago the minister did meet with the Tsuut'ina group and plans to continue meeting as the plans go forward.

Mr. Rodney: That is not what we're hearing at all.

Given that the proposed Springbank dam was expected to be the most viable solution to ensure Calgary and surrounding communities were properly protected from future flooding and given that I have heard grave concerns that this project will not be as quick or cost-effective as initially hoped and given that there has been a second option on the table for quite some time, which may actually be a better option now, again to the Minister of Infrastructure: has there been a significant increase in the cost estimates for the project, and if so, why?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member asks about what led to the decision-making around the Springbank project. Of course, it was the former PC government who began that decision-making process and the weighing of the two options. The other option was the McLean Creek option, which was an in-river dam that had many, many construction risks associated with it, a much longer timeline for its environmental assessments, many more environmental effects to take into account, and more long-term environmental effects given that Springbank is a dry dam.

Mr. Rodney: With respect, you're the decision-makers on this now.

Given that I along with all Albertans appreciate the commitment to flood mitigation and given that I've met personally with families who will lose their land, that they have ranched for five generations, along with Chief Crowchild, who fears that Tsuut'ina land as well as Redwood Meadows and Bragg Creek will be threatened by this potential dam, again to the minister: will you meet with the Premier personally, and will you commit to meeting about this specific issue with Chief Crowchild and affected landowners and residents to work towards a positive solution before construction begins?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, the 2013 floods were devastating in Alberta. In fact, I was one of the people stuck in Canmore for quite awhile. We don't want that to ever happen again. It caused over $6 billion in damage. We are working with the First Nations. As I mentioned, the minister met with them a few weeks ago. He plans on continuing to meet with the band as well as other people involved in this plan.

Interprovincial Relations and Pipeline Support

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, for decades the NDP and its ideological OSAG members railed against pipelines. The result: 60 per cent of British Columbia voters now support political parties opposed to pipelines. While the NDP in Alberta had a conversion on the road to government, their provincial cousins to the east and west would cause a train wreck to derail Alberta's economic recovery. Can the Deputy Premier explain how the NDP is rolling back decades of pipeline opposition to get British Columbians onside?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for an opportunity to talk about how proud we are of the great progress we've been making in getting approvals for pipelines to new markets. That includes, of course, getting new market access on the west coast. Right now our Premier is continuing to work to make sure that Asia Pacific markets are welcoming. She was in British Columbia earlier meeting with a number of individuals, and we're going to continue to work to honour their concerns but make sure that we get new market access, which failed to happen under our Conservative governments both in Ottawa and Alberta.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, given that the NDP held a press conference to attack the Saskatchewan budget while erecting a tariff wall and sparking a trade war with Saskatchewan over beer and given that the Premier of British Columbia launched her re-election bid by lambasting the government of Alberta on how bad Alberta's finances are under the NDP, to the Deputy Premier. You have isolated Alberta in trade and created enemies out of allies. How are you going to repair our intergovernmental relationships?

Ms Hoffman: Every day we're going to stand up for Alberta families and work to make their lives better, Mr. Speaker. That's why we are so proud that with thoughtful, reasonable collaboration with a number of individuals, including oil and gas executives, they are onside. For example, this morning energy CEOs praised Alberta's carbon tax at a Calgary Chamber event. Business leaders speaking at the Calgary Chamber of commerce event were empathetic, saying that a carbon tax makes sense. They went on to say that this government is doing the right thing and that they're proud to invest in Alberta. We're proud that they're investing here and that we're getting new market access.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, given that the Premier's appointees on her oil sands advisory group are busy trying to stop Alberta oil by making instructional videos on how to stop pipeline construction and given that industry uncertainty spurred by the NDP's cap on our oil sands development is stopping investment and killing jobs, when will the Premier deliver consequences to these radical, taxpayer-funded OSAG members who are trying to stop pipelines in B.C. instead of doing their jobs here in Alberta?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have to say that I am so proud of our reputation and the work that we're doing to make life better for Alberta families, including Tim McMillan, who I have respect for, from the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers, who said: Canada's reputation as a place that can move projects forward took a step forward today; we have seen today that our governments support energy projects that meet the high standards here in Canada. We also have the Calgary Chamber and others. Berkshire Hathaway Energy said that Alberta has struck a nice middle ground on carbon tax and electricity generation. They said that we have a fund . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, Deputy Premier.
The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Unharvested 2016 Crops

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The situation in northern Alberta is beyond dire for many local farmers, and many are not getting help from AFSC. Last Thursday, when it looked like we might get in the fields to harvest some of the 2016 crop, we got hit with another foot of wet, heavy snow. It is now questionable if area farmers will be able to start seeding on time, let alone get last year's crops off. To the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry. Last year's remaining crop is a writeoff in many areas. When will you step in and instruct AFSC to get those assessments completed?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I wish to thank the member for giving me the opportunity to highlight the good work that AFSC has been doing. It is true that it was a bit of a roller-coaster season last year. It started out dry, and it ended wet for many farmers. But as of March 24 over $32.3 million has been paid to producers. Ninety-five per cent of all unharvested acre claims have been processed, so I would disagree with the member. We're actually very well on track. Our inspectors are doing a good job.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that farmers are expected to pay their premiums on time and given that a local farmer, when calling in to the AFSC, was given the following response, "I could give you my supervisor's phone number, but she won't answer anyway; you will get put on hold and be given the runaround," and given that AFSC has only paid out 25 per cent of the insurance to some of these farmers, again to the minister of agriculture: when will you step in? This is a provincial program. Will this supervisor's attitude be dealt with, and how is this making life better for Alberta families?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What I do know is that we have 120 inspectors, you know, working out there in the field right now, boots on the ground, making sure that the very few remaining claims are processed. As for the individual the member is talking about, I'd encourage him to give me more information, and we'll look into it. Otherwise, all farmers can contact their AFSC office or phone 310.FARM.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hanson: As a matter of fact, Minister, the lady sent the same letter that she sent to me to your office as well.

Mr. Speaker, given that there are still thousands of fields that need to be assessed and there is no time for a full assessment and given that we discussed this probability with the minister just weeks ago and it's now April 20 and the situation has only gotten worse, to the minister of agriculture. These crops are ruined, period. When will you instruct AFSC to do a blanket assessment based on a nominal site visit and pay out what is owed to our hard-working Alberta farm families?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member. Again, I am proud of the work that the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation is doing, that the 120 inspectors are doing. Ninety-five per cent of those claims that he's talking about have been paid out on those unharvested acres.

As for the weather, I'm willing to inform the Assembly that I and this government have nothing to do with the weather, but what we do have is on those policies that AFSC is administering. They're going to continue to do a good job. We're going to continue having the backs of those farmers and continue having the backs of all Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Workplace Legislation Review

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has pulled a shroud of secrecy over its plans to change the Labour Relations Code and the Employment Standards Code. For instance, the Premier and the Minister of Labour have refused to tell Albertans if they will eliminate the secret-ballot provision. Minister, please come clean with Albertans. Are you planning to remove secret ballots? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the member opposite for . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Proceed.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the member opposite for his question. Whether it's the MGA or workplace legislation, our government is working to get consultations right. We have heard from hundreds of stakeholders on both consultations, and we are going to be listening to what stakeholders have said while we are designing legislation. The consultations have only just closed. I am still reviewing what has been submitted. But it is important to us that we make sure we have fair and balanced legislation that is right for Alberta.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that I did not hear an answer . . .
Did anyone else?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Gill: . . . and given that all Albertans, including my colleagues on this side of the House, want an answer, Minister, let me ask again. Are you planning to get rid of secret ballots? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's very important to me that when conducting consultations, I review the submissions and then make any decisions about what legislation might be brought forward. We've heard from almost 5,000 Albertans, including over a thousand employers. We are looking forward to reviewing that and bringing forward legislation that makes sure we have a workplace system that is fair and balanced for workers and employers. Since we have legislation that hasn't been updated since 1988, it's very important that we make sure we are bringing forward legislation that works for everyone.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that on April 13 I asked if this minister was bringing forward legislative changes to the Labour Relations Code and the Employment Standards Code in the spring session and given that I wasn't able to get an answer to the question that day, I will ask again, and I hope she does not once again trivialize these changes with insulting and disgusting pop music references. Minister, do you plan to sneak through NDP-friendly legislative changes at the eleventh hour? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our consultation in engaging with Albertans brought forward letters from people like Susan, who was concerned about the lack of bereavement leave when her husband's brother passed away in 2015. She wrote to me and said that during this period it was especially difficult to balance grieving, rationing vacation, and arranging child care while maintaining workloads for when they returned. I am taking this seriously. We need to review what's been submitted, and then I will make any decisions about what makes sense for Alberta. The previous government had done reviews and done nothing. I will do something.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Employer Liaison Service

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the province's economy improves, it is crucial to get Albertans back to work, so I was glad to see that our government is taking steps to ensure that employers in Alberta get the support they need to connect with unemployed Albertans before turning to foreign options. To the Minister of Labour: how is the new approach to hiring temporary foreign workers going to help put more Albertans back to work?

2:40

The Speaker: The Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In tough economic times hard-working Albertans deserve a government that has their back. That's why our government approached the government of Canada to ensure that Albertans in 29 high-skilled occupations have the first shot at available jobs. I'm talking about plumbers, carpenters, industrial electricians. When employers apply for workers in these job categories, our dedicated employer liaison officers will reach out and help them connect with Albertans who are looking for those jobs. We want to help Albertans get back . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this program is about connecting Alberta employers with Albertans and that it's also a new service, to the same minister: what is the expected cost to run this program?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This pilot program has no additional costs for either the Alberta government or the federal government. Alberta Labour already has 19 amazing employer liaison officers across the province. They are already helping employers understand their responsibilities and connect with supports like the summer temporary employment program or the Canada-Alberta job grant. This is simply an expansion of their role. Over the next 24 months our employer liaison officers will be working hard to connect employers with high-skilled Albertans and put them back to work.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this is a pilot project for which the government of Alberta and the federal government have high expectations, to the same minister: how is the government ensuring that Alberta employers are aware of the employer liaison service and know where to get support to navigate the new system?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I was thrilled to launch the employer liaison service pilot yesterday with the federal Minister of Employment, Workforce Development and Labour. We want to make sure that employers operating workplaces with workers in these 29 categories know that Alberta Labour can help them find highly skilled Albertans. This pilot will help job-seeking Albertans receiving EI benefits or those signed up for the job bank receive notifications that match their skills and experience. We encourage employers to contact us for support in creating a plan to help them recruit these Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Access to Information and Legal Privilege

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner has now released three scathing reports on government openness and transparency in the last two months, yet this government has not seen itself as the main problem within the FOIP process. When I asked in December about the government's practice of involving lawyers from start to finish in order to invoke solicitor-client privilege, the Minister of Service Alberta said that the allegations were absolutely absurd. Does the minister still believe this is absurd, or is she starting to see that we were right all along?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. It is true that the Information and Privacy Commissioner recently released a report into actions of the previous government. They were critical of some of the processes going on during that time. It is certainly the case that there were some concerns about the presence of counsel in some of those meetings. That process was set up under the previous government, but going forward we absolutely will examine it.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the government argues that Justice lawyers are only used to decide legal privilege in freedom of information requests and given that the Privacy Commissioner's April investigation report contradicts that by showing that a government lawyer counselling a FOIP co-ordinator is enough to invoke legal privilege to block information requests, will the minister admit that the government is using the presence of lawyers to be able to invoke privilege whenever the government is concerned about the records it is about to release?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It was the case that when we took government, we felt that the way in which legal privilege was claimed was overly protective of the government. Therefore, last year I gave instructions to the lawyers throughout government to only claim legal privilege when it was actually necessary and to sort of walk that back a little bit because this government absolutely has an interest in ensuring transparency.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Minister. Given that the Minister of Service Alberta has insisted several times that the presence of government lawyers is not being abused and given that I will table a memo from Service Alberta that states that "counsel from Justice and Solicitor General Central Legal Services will be in attendance when the policy decision is finalized," to the minister: why do you continue to deny the role that government lawyers play in so-called freedom of information when your own deputy minister signed the memo to the contrary?

The Speaker: The Minister of Service Alberta.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, I have no certainty . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Excuse me. There may be an acceptance of heckling in the House, but there will be no booing and also remarking upon the speaking style of any member. So please contain it.

The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Again, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am not sure what memo the hon. member is referring to. I'm happy to review it and happy to review same with my department and my deputy minister. Certainly, there are memos that are transported between individuals, that not everything goes through the minister. So I'm very happy to look into the matter and follow up with the member.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 30 seconds we'll begin Members' Statements.

Blessed Oscar Romero Catholic School Achievements

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Cheerleading is an important sport for many young women and men in Alberta. It was recognized as a sport by the Alberta Schools' Athletic Association, the ASAA, in 1984, and it has grown to comprise dozens of events for both schools and individual cheer clubs.

Today I rise to celebrate a very special group of cheerleading athletes who are with us here in the Chamber and the gallery, the Blessed Oscar Romero high school Ravens. Training day in and day out and demonstrating remarkable athleticism and dedication to their sport, these students have shown what hard work is all about.

I was there in March during the Edmonton competition. Spectators in that packed gymnasium really gained an appreciation for the sport, with the athletes tumbling through the air, doing backflips or cartwheels with complete and unbroken concentration. The Ravens won that competition and moved on to the provincial championship, that took place in Athabasca on April 7 and 8. They won that competition as well, and the Ravens became the ASAA senior high division 1 Alberta provincial champion cheer team for the second year in a row. We in Edmonton-McClung are very proud of their accomplishment and wish to extend to the team members, coaches, staff assistants, and parent volunteers our heartiest congratulations.

I would also like to recognize the principal of Blessed Oscar Romero Catholic high school, Simon Pryma. Mr. Pryma will be retiring this year after over 35 years of working in the front lines of teaching, and I'm proud to be a part of a government that supports front-line educators, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Pryma has been a dedicated educator and exemplary school administrator. He extended to me every opportunity to participate as the local MLA in Edmonton-McClung in the life and activities of the school in a very welcoming way, and I thank him for that and also thank him for his years of service. We hope he will visit the school from time to time to encourage his staff and students to continue their tradition of hard work and excellence and encourage the cheer team to do their best to compete for a championship each and every year.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Provincial Election Second Anniversary

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans have been absorbing shocks to their system for nearly two years now. The first shock happened on May 5, 2015. In my constituency of Bonnyville-Cold Lake the number of dazed expressions that I witnessed in reaction to the surprising NDP win is not soon to be forgotten. The shocks for not only my constituents but also Albertans didn't end there. Rather, it's just the beginning because the NDP took the opportunity presented for an immediate push to make changes that made an already shaky economy turn rocky. In came a 20 per cent business tax increase. In came a royalty review. Investors in my constituency looked for opportunities elsewhere.

To celebrate their win a year later, the NDP chose to introduce a new tax called the carbon tax. That was levied on every Albertan and every wallet. The surprise tax increase sent charities, schools, housing management bodies scrambling to find ways to pay their bills without sacrificing their services.

As the NDP are about to celebrate the end of their second year, in came the announcement of a labour review. My constituents and the people in Alberta are wondering: when will it end? They just want it to stop. We are out of work. We are relying on social assistance when we used to be relying on ourselves. We are losing hope. Will this confrontational NDP labour review send another shock wave that will put our local oil sands projects at risk? Why does this government choose to do this review just before Imperial Oil, CNRL, and Cenovus are working on a plan for their summer building season? Will this shock bring a prolonged deferral on building within my constituency? Only time will tell. As with everything, Mr. Speaker, a body can only absorb so many shocks.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to talk about the economy. Now, we know that some members opposite are quite fond of quoting Thomas Hobbes and are especially fond of quoting the phrase "nasty, [mean], brutish, and short" in various contexts. It's interesting to note that Thomas Hobbes' venerable book, Leviathan, was actually arguing for a return to an absolute monarchy. It's also interesting that the opposition relies so heavily on a book that was written over 350 years ago.

Now, I would like to recommend some more recent publications to the opposition. As reported in the Edmonton Metro, a recent Business Development Bank of Canada report stated that Alberta's economy is turning around faster than other oil-producing provinces. According to the BDC chief economist Pierre Cl  roux: "Alberta is going to have better growth than Saskatchewan or Newfoundland. We are seeing more investment right now in Alberta."

Aided by the approval of two pipelines and by the construction of infrastructure, Alberta's oil and gas sector is set to rebound stronger than other oil provinces. That, Mr. Speaker, is a direct result of actions taken by this government. This growth has been led by value-added jobs that are taking our agricultural product and creating a finished product right here in Alberta. Beer and honey production, in particular, are growing.

Mr. Speaker, the economy is diversifying, oil and gas is recovering, and Albertans are seeing the benefits of the investments in infrastructure made during this economic downturn instead of carrying out the reckless cuts that the opposition proposes.

Instead of relying on 350-year-old books, we are relying on organizations like the International Monetary Fund, who have come to question the long-term value of austerity measures. We are relying on the former governor of the Bank of Canada, David Dodge, who recommended that investment in infrastructure during a downturn is good fiscal policy. We are relying on institutions and people who are firmly rooted in today's economies and today's economics.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Calgary-Bow.

Energy Industry Support for the Carbon Levy

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the great things about this Chamber and being an MLA is learning about Alberta's economy and how we fit into a world perspective. I have heard the opposition claiming that Alberta's climate leadership plan is destroying Alberta's oil and gas industry and putting them at a competitive disadvantage with the rest of the world, so I was very interested to hear about yesterday's event hosted by the Calgary Chamber of commerce.

Mr. Speaker, CEOs of some of Alberta's largest energy companies spoke in front of a crowd of businesspeople and said publicly that Alberta's carbon levy and related subsidies strike an appropriate balance. The CEO of Berkshire Hathaway Energy Canada stated that the carbon levy has not affected their company's view on Alberta and that they believe in the province and are bullish in investing.

Furthermore, the CEO of Cenovus, Brian Ferguson, was reported as saying that they have confidence in Alberta's carbon pricing policies, enough confidence, Mr. Speaker, that they felt comfortable investing billions of dollars more in Alberta's oil sands. He went on to reiterate that he believed the carbon pricing policy here in Alberta is a major factor in the federal government approval of the Trans Mountain and line 3 pipeline approvals and that these pipeline expansions would have a major benefit for Alberta and Canada.

Mr. Speaker, we all welcome debate in this Chamber, and we all know that the opposition must take an opposing view on many issues. They've certainly taken an opposing view on the climate leadership plan. However, when I heard the leaders of Alberta's oil and gas industry stand up at a Calgary Chamber of commerce event and say that our government's carbon pricing policies have struck an appropriate balance and that we are doing a good job in this area, I know whose expertise I will trust, and I know who I will listen to, and it is not the members across the way.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Stop Abuse in Families Society of St. Albert

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This coming Saturday night I will be attending an annual fundraiser in St. Albert called the Red Shoe Gala. The Red Shoe Gala is hosted by the SAIF society of St.

Albert. SAIF is an acronym for stop abuse in families. Since 1989 this St. Albert organization has offered services to people experiencing abuse and the devastating effects that abuse has on families. SAIF provides individual and group counselling, prevention programming to schools and communities, offers workshops and an intensive 22-week program for women and children who have experienced and witnessed abuse.

I'm sad to report that the need for this kind of support is in high demand all over Alberta, including St. Albert. We have much work to do. Fifty-one per cent of Canadian women have experienced at least one act of physical and sexual violence since the age of 16. Twenty-nine per cent of Canadian women have been assaulted by a spouse or someone claiming to love them. Add to this the astounding and disgusting abuse, shaming, and threats women receive online from people they don't know, and the picture is clear.

This doesn't make me a snowflake, by the way; it makes me a feminist.

What I would like to say to all of you is: be an example. Be a role model. Monitor your social media accounts. Set a standard. There is much we can do in this House to contribute to this massive public health crisis. Prevention will always be vital, as vital as addressing the root causes.

It's estimated that the measurable health-related costs associated with violence against women in Canada is $4.2 billion a year. We know that women and children leaving abusive relationships face economic hardships, poverty. This is why a higher minimum wage, school lunch programs, reduced school fees are some of the great ways that we are supporting women and children. I know St. Albert values the work . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The acting Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to request unanimous consent to allow the Routine to continue past 3 p.m.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

National Volunteer Week

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The third week in April is National Volunteer Week. Celebrated in all communities across Canada, it is a time for paying tribute to Canada's volunteers. It also increases awareness of the important role of volunteers and the nonprofit voluntary sector and encourages volunteerism. As the famous anthropologist Margaret Mead put it, "never doubt that a small group of thoughtful, committed citizens can change the world."

Volunteers like people. They relish new experiences and challenges to make a difference in their communities. Alberta Health Services says: "Volunteers are ... our most valuable [resource]. Their time and energy provide immeasurable support to our busy staff. They add extra care to the quality health care" provided by AHS.

Recently, at the announcement of the $61 million for renovation of the ER at the Misericordia hospital, I learned about the vital role that volunteers have played in improving patient experience there in less than satisfactory conditions caused by the infrastructure deficit at that hospital.

Another example is the Royal Alexandra hospital gift shop, which is entirely staffed by volunteers who manage and staff a complex small-business enterprise, organize enhancement of patient care in common areas, and contribute to vulnerable patient support.

My main place of work for 40 years has been the Cross Cancer Institute. The dedicated volunteers there, many of whom I call friends, are indispensable to the positive outcomes of my patients. Examples of contributions of CCI volunteers include providing patient information, running the gift shop, cafe, and tea cart [interjections] . . .

The Speaker: Hon. members.

Dr. Turner: . . . in the OPD and on wards, and driving patients to and from clinic visits.

Simply put, the Cross couldn't function without our great volunteers and all three groups of hospital volunteers, who, like this government, work to make life better for Albertans and are shining examples of what we should celebrate in volunteer week.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much. On behalf of the Government House Leader, pursuant to Standing Order 34(3) I'm rising to advise the House that on the next available Monday written questions 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, and 16 will be accepted. Also, on the next available Monday motions for returns 13, 14, 17, 18, and 20 will be accepted, and motions for returns 15, 16, and 19 will be dealt with.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table five copies of an article from the CBC that I referenced in my member's statement; namely, Energy CEOs Praise Alberta's Carbon Tax at Calgary Chamber Event.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have several tablings that I alluded to in my questions today, letters from Dale Christian from Red Deer county relating to the risks of gravel extraction in flood plains, including some aerial maps of areas that show significant risk, especially during flood periods.

I also have copies of the WPAC response to Alberta Environment and Parks' sand and gravel program review of March 2017, where they make eight recommendations, including stopping water extraction on flood plains.

In addition to those tablings, Mr. Speaker, I have a tabling from Jeanne Phéné, a registered engineer who is also concerned about the need for greater consultation on the labour changes coming up. She's a Calgary engineer with concerns about new restrictions on their practice.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite number of copies of the Metro news article I referenced in my member's statement. It includes a lot of discussion on the 20,000 new full-time jobs and, of course, includes the quote in my statement.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm just standing to table a copy of the letter that was sent to myself as well as the Minister of Ag and Forestry regarding the frustration of the Boychuk family with AFSC.

The Speaker: The Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the requisite five copies of an article from the Edmonton Journal published on April 10, 2017, that talks about the increased number of jobs in the Edmonton area. Particularly, it affects people who live in my riding.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. The first one I referenced in my question today. From Energy Efficiency Alberta, it's the page that says on one side that they're selling things; on the other side it says that they're not selling things.

My second one is the terms of service for Energy Efficiency Alberta, which, unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, you were too offended to let me read today.

The Speaker: The Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have four letters to table today, the first one being from the Progressive Contractors Association of Canada, the voice of progressive unionized employers in Canada's construction industry. They're requesting that the Labour minister consider extending and enhancing the review of the labour code. It's a letter from Mr. Paul De Jong and also was sent to the minister, I believe.

I have three other letters. This letter is from Silverado Site Services – this is in Fort Saskatchewan – from Les Brownlie, equipment manager, requesting an extension and enhancement of the labour review.

A letter from Golderado Contracting Corp., from Laura Wood, manager, is requesting an extension and enhancement of the labour review.

Also, a letter from PME Inc. This letter is signed by Dennis Johnston, general manager, requesting an extension and enhancement of the labour review.

The Speaker: Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have five copies to table of a constituent's letter regarding the changes to the Labour Relations Code.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a letter to table from Service Alberta. It's written by Tim Grant and Philip Bryden, deputy ministers, and it's regarding FOIP requests for all deputy ministers across Alberta.

The second one is a letter from Shauna McHarg regarding FOIP concerns that she's brought up several times over the last several years. It's important that we start to take FOIP more seriously.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I choose this opportunity to encourage you to have safe travels, those who might be travelling today.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 8

An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government

[Adjourned debate April 20: Mr. Hanson]

The Speaker: The opposition leader.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak today. I had an opportunity to go through my speech and prepare it and think about how I was going to deliver it. When I finally finished, I couldn't come up with, actually, a proper title for it, so I thought what would be best is to reflect generally about what's happened to my community, Fort McMurray in particular, Bill 8, and what it's planning on imposing on my citizens.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

I thought about a good title for the speech. Originally, I started off with How to Boil a Frog: They Don't Notice until It's Too Late, which is sort of like our community, Madam Speaker. As you may know, we've had a few things hit us lately. A frog doesn't really know when it's in the pot and there's boiling water. I've never tried this personally, but somebody can turn up the flame a bit, and actually the frog doesn't even notice. He thinks the water just gets warm gradually. All of a sudden, something happens, and the frog is not there any longer. I thought that was sort of appropriate because of what's happening in Fort McMurray and, of course, you know, the different things: the cap on the oil sands emissions, the fire, generally our economy, the carbon tax, and all of those other things. It's sort of like a frog in that situation. But then I thought: that's not really that appropriate.

I kept thinking about, you know, what else I could call it. I thought maybe How to Close Down a Resource Town in 10 Easy Steps. But I know that that song is already taken by the accelerated shutdown of coal that this government has brought in on five or six other communities across Alberta. I thought that song was already taken, and it wouldn't be appropriate to use it on a community like Fort McMurray when so many others already have that.

I looked at some music melodies that I thought would be appropriate, the Talking Heads' Burning down the House. I like the band; I don't like the song anymore. Paper Towns had Runaway, Burning, and Look Outside, three good songs that I thought would be appropriate. Then, of course, there's the Pretenders' My City Was Gone. That was another song that would be great to talk about today because that's ultimately what's happening here with the pile on that this government is doing to my community, my hometown, Madam Speaker. Like, it's my home. It's not just where I work. It's where I live, where I was raised, where my children were born, and where I plan on dying. It's my home, and they're not treating it with respect.

I kept going through the list, and I thought that, well, John Mayer's Please Be Patient with Me would be a more appropriate song because, Madam Speaker, I'm not really worried about my house burning down anymore; I'm worried about this government. I'm worried about what they're doing. They are treating my community and the citizens like frogs in a boiling pot of water. That's what's happening. They don't even see it, and that's one of my major problems with this government, not only their lack of any accountability whatsoever but their lack of actually talking to people and getting out from under the dome and recognizing the pain that they're inflicting upon their citizens.

That's why I thought, you know, that the most appropriate would be something along the lines of Audio Adrenaline, who came up with a song called Goodbye. I went through the lyrics, and I thought that that would be an appropriate song because what I'm planning on working on full-time is to overthrow this government. I know that's what my citizens want me to do. A recent poll in my community said that 80 per cent of my community members are in favour of what Wildrose and its leader and our shadow minister of Health are doing for the people of Fort McMurray. So Goodbye would be the most appropriate melody.

In fact, I looked at it a little bit more, and I wanted to send this song out to the people of Fort McMurray because I believe this government owes the people of Fort McMurray answers, answers to why the fire happened in the first place, why the protection was not there for them, and then to the response to that fire. We're going to get into that, Madam Speaker, I promise you. There are going to be many opportunities in the future, and we will get to the bottom of it, and there will be blame. There will be blame. [interjections] They can say what they want, and they can laugh and snicker, but there will be blame thrown on this.

It is the government's responsibility to keep their citizens safe. You know why I get upset, Madam Speaker? Because they don't recognize the importance of the actions they do here today, that happen to the people of Alberta. They don't. It sickens me. [interjections] They're making fun over there. They should come and see my community, talk to those people, but they're too afraid. They should come and talk to them. As it says in the song Goodbye by Audio Adrenaline, "You'll be fine tomorrow, the sun will [shine]." And it will, because the sun will shine again on Fort McMurray when the NDP government is gone. It will shine again on Alberta. The light will be back on Alberta, the light of prosperity. We will be a beacon on the hill again, the example to the rest of the world of what good governments can do.

Now, Madam Speaker, it is my pleasure to talk about Bill 8, An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government, and I'm hoping that's their long-term plan. Unfortunately, the melody that they keep singing is: boil the frog, and let's see if they notice. Well, I notice, and the people in Fort McMurray are awake, and they notice too, as do the people of Alberta. That's why the polls are so bad for this government, why the people of Alberta have rejected them, rejected them everywhere, just about. It's soon going to be very much close to this place that they will reject them, because I know Albertans are smart, and they see that this government is not serving them well at all.

Now, I have the privilege of being from Fort McMurray. I love the place. I do believe it's the greatest place in the world to live, to raise a family, to work, to have dreams, to fulfill those dreams. It does that for many, many people, thousands of people. People right across this province and people right across this country recognize how important Fort McMurray, the oil sands, and, generally, the quality of life there are.

When I moved there, there were 1,700 people. Most people don't recognize that Fort McMurray is, by itself, quite a ways away from any major population. In fact, it's quite a ways away from any other population except for the citizens of the regional municipality or Fort MacKay or Anzac, Conklin, Fort Chipewyan, many of the small communities that surround Fort McMurray. For the most part, we do our shopping in Fort McMurray because you have to make a five-hour car ride to be able to shop in Edmonton, the only other large shopping centre outside of Fort McMurray.

You know, the people of Fort McMurray are resourceful. They're entrepreneurial. They're hard working. They're creative people.

There are a lot of patents that come out of that area. There's a lot of work that comes out of that area. There are a lot of taxes that come out of that area, a lot of premiums for unemployment insurance, lots of premiums for the Canada pension plan that come out of the workers in that area, that they don't see. It's not really an insurance plan. It's just taking money to give to Ottawa so they can decide who gets it. That's what unemployment insurance is in this country. You know and I know, Madam Speaker, that only 38 per cent of Albertans actually get coverage for unemployment insurance while other parts of the country, including Quebec and others, get 58 per cent or 100 per cent in some cases.

Now, that's because, Madam Speaker, we've been treated less than well in northern Alberta for some period of time by not just this government but by previous governments. That's why I came back to government just a few years ago and wanted to have the opportunity to run again for the people of Fort McMurray, so I could see if we could make a difference: a difference in health care, a difference in education, a difference in a long-term facility for our seniors.

In fact, I made a list. I was trying to think of all the things that the province and the federal government have ignored for the people of Fort McMurray for some time. You're not going to believe this, Madam Speaker. I know there was a recent investment in a long-term care facility in Leduc, for instance. I don't begrudge that at all. I think it's good to invest in long-term care because our governments in the last 15, 20 years have really ignored our seniors, have done a terrible job, a horrendous job of managing our seniors' care. I went through a list, and the first one where we've been ignored and, frankly, not treated right was in long-term care.

The second one was highway 63, Madam Speaker. For many years it was called the highway of death. In fact, in 2005, when I was a federal MP, I asked my citizens to come forward and sign a petition. About 6,000, 7,000 people signed a petition in less than two months. I took that petition, and I gave it to the Premier at the time here in Alberta, and I also gave it to the Prime Minister. I tabled it in both Houses, got it to both levels of government. You know what? Within five months of that being tabled, we had a $150 million commitment from the federal government to twin highway 63. That was supposed to be done in four years. I was the parliamentary secretary of Transport at the time. I was very proud to make that announcement. The provincial government at the time was putting in about 55 per cent of the total funds. It was supposed to take four years to be done. It took 10 years. The PC government was not the greatest at efficiency. This government is no better. In fact, I would say it's worse. But we finally got most of it twinned, and it's a good highway.

I believe that as a result of that twinning and as a result of governments in February 2006 coming forward with the funds to twin that highway, lives were saved. Lives were saved. We drove against the traffic leaving the fire, my friend the shadow minister of Health and I. He was actually driving. I was in my seat belt, and I was pretty nervous. Five lanes of traffic coming toward us. There's no way we would have had no loss of life, in my opinion, without that twinned highway. That's because policies matter and politics matter, and if that fire would have happened three years earlier, I believe there would have been deaths, a serious number, and I believe most experts that have analyzed the fire would believe that as well. So that's number two.

Land prices. Let me tell you about land prices. In 1997 we had a PC minister come to Fort McMurray, and she asked a group of people whether they wanted more land released. The group of people, Madam Speaker? Landowners. Good one. Let's ask all the landowners if they want more Alberta government land to be released to the public. That should be a really clear answer: no. No?

Why? Because they have a monopoly on the land, just like this government and the previous government had a monopoly on the land around Fort McMurray. They managed it so badly that for a lot in Fort McMurray, a small zero lot line, you pay $450,000. Now, this isn't downtown city centre. This is out in the boonies. You know, in 1993 I paid $81,000 for a house in Fort McMurray. That house sold for $570,000 about 10 years later. I bought one for $185,000 in 2003 and it sold for $750,000 just about 15 years later. Those houses are not affordable for normal people. And they're not big houses. They're normal, little houses. The one that I bought for $81,000 was about 800 square feet on the main level, a very humble home.

Albertans are put in this situation, Fort McMurray residents are put in this situation by this government and the previous government. Bad management of our resources and bad management of tax dollars: that's what it is. As a result of that, our land prices are too much, and they don't want to release land because then – guess what? – land prices go down, and everybody gets mad because they paid $750,000, a million dollars for a home that in Calgary would be worth $500,000 and in rural Alberta maybe $150,000. Like, these houses that we buy in Fort McMurray: the high average price of houses and land is a result of the negligence of this government and the previous one. And I'm only on number three, Madam Speaker.

Congestion. When you have 20,000 or 30,000 people that go down the same highway every day, back and forth 35 kilometres for work, maybe – just maybe – a government could plan better so that people, my citizens, my family don't have to wait two hours in line to go 35 kilometres after a 12-hour workday. Maybe before a 12-hour workday they wouldn't have to wait two hours in line. Maybe a government that has the ability to understand how many workers are going to be coming to Alberta and to Fort McMurray specifically for the oil sands, which is every single government because they lease the land and they approve the plant, so they must know what's going to happen. Why wouldn't they build enough infrastructure so that those people that have to travel that 30 or 35 kilometres don't have to wait two hours in traffic morning and night? That's four hours of their work life after a 12-hour shift. Now, that's happened for years, Madam Speaker.

I didn't put this on my list, but I just thought of how many times I've had an opportunity to get a Tim Hortons coffee in Fort McMurray. Well, Madam Speaker, I can do it now, but two years ago: 20 people in line ahead of me. In fact, it was so bad that they had to stop allowing people to line up on the major artery because it was causing traffic problems with a major piece of road.

Infrastructure. Congestion is not just when going to work and back. It's everywhere. There is a lineup to get through town to get to the highway to get to the plant sites. It's crazy. I invite you to come and see crazy. It's lack of infrastructure, lack of planning, lack of good management.

Health care. Now, the plant sites are required to have their own health facility, and they do, but if you go to the emergency room in Fort McMurray – wow – bring your sleeping bag because it's going to be a while. That's what we've had to deal with not just in the last week or the last month or the last year. We've dealt with that for 15 years. Not enough government management. Well, maybe I should rephrase that: not enough good government management. Our health care is important, and when your child is sick and you've only got one regional hospital – one hospital – you would like some timeliness for the fact that your child is ill. You would like the opportunity to know that you can get into the emergency room in Fort McMurray faster than you can in Edmonton after a five-hour drive, but that's not the case, and it hasn't been the case. That's what people do; they go to Edmonton instead of waiting in our emergency area. That's crazy. That's crazy, especially when we're supposed to have universal health care. Now, a lineup for a waiting list is not universal health care. That's universal waiting list. That's not real.

That's why the job these folks do – maybe snickering and giggling is good for them, but it's not good for the people that listen and watch this. They want this government to take it seriously because it is their life, and their life is hurting. They are in pain. Right now a record for Alberta: a hundred thousand people collecting unemployment insurance. Wow. What a record to brag about after only two years in government. Twenty thousand jobs last month? Seriously? Madam Speaker, there's at least that number of people, a hundred thousand people, that are unemployed in Alberta that are not collecting unemployment insurance, and they don't even have it in the records that they're unemployed. There are way more than a hundred thousand Albertans unemployed. Go to the real world. You can see them there.

Now, number five is about a tax increase, and that is hurting people, too, because the tax increase, of course, is going to be on the municipal taxes that we're talking about here. At one time this government said that it would be an indefinite grandfathering of the people of the municipalities that are currently under their ratio. Then it went: well, maybe not indefinitely. Now it's to the point where we're changing the legislation so we can sneak in late at night and do it when you're not watching. That's what they're doing. That's what regulations mean. They don't have to bring it back here. They just do a regulation to say: when nobody is watching, we're going to change the law, and we're going to make sure, for the people of the Wood Buffalo municipality, that their taxes go up. They won't even know it. That's not transparency. That's not good governance. That's not accountability. That's hiding what you're doing to the people. It's disgusting, Madam Speaker, especially after the fire, especially after what they've done with income taxes, the cap on oil sands emissions.

Cancelling the Northern Gateway. That was number 7. People say: well, we got two pipelines. Well, I haven't seen any pipelines in the ground. I haven't seen any shovels anywhere. I've been looking for that social licence; can't find that either. But I do know one thing for sure. The NDP in B.C., if they get elected, are not going to allow that pipeline. Madam Speaker, we all know and you know, of course, that the NDP are one big, happy party right across the country, and they plan these little fun sessions about strategy together. We know that. The Northern Gateway pipeline would have brought a lot of investment, a lot of investment into Alberta and a lot of investment into Canada. It would have been very good for the people of northwestern B.C., very good for the aboriginal communities there. I've seen the success in northern Alberta, working side by side with the aboriginal communities. It's incredible to see. The benefits are amazing, long term, and great. I'd like to see those benefits in northwestern British Columbia. I think both the Prime Minister and this Premier missed a tremendous opportunity. A tremendous opportunity.

Now, Madam Speaker, number eight was getting both B.C. parties mad at them. These are our neighbours. These are the people that we need to talk to in relation to laws, in relation to pipelines going through their province, in relation to having their energy come to us if necessary, good relationships. But it's not just the Liberal Party of B.C., that's currently in power, that is mad and doesn't like this government, based upon their comments. They more or less said just a few weeks ago, when kicking off the campaign, that the Alberta NDP is just spending money like crazy and is going to put our province into the drink, and that's what's happening.

It's not just the Liberal government in B.C. that can't get along with these folks. It's the NDP government in B.C. as well, so with both governments, no matter which one gets elected in B.C., we're not going to have good relationships. That's not what we need to do in politics. Although my job is to be Mr. Negative here in this place – that's what I was elected to do, to oppose and to be Mr. Negative – I'm a very positive person, so it's difficult for me. Madam Speaker, how do you make both left-leaning governments in B.C. mad at you at the same time? Like, it's bizarre.

Now we've got number nine, not talking to the Saskatchewan government. Now, that's the people on the other side of our province. On the west side both parties are mad at us, and the only party that really has a realistic chance of winning in Saskatchewan is the Saskatchewan Party, and they don't even talk to them. They don't get along. Now, if you don't get along with your neighbours, maybe it's time to pack up and move, and I could think of nothing that would please Albertans more than these folks packing up and leaving government.

Now, Madam Speaker, I did have number 11 as the cap on oil sands emissions. You know, it's already oversubscribed. They've already sold more leases and approved more projects than can be done under this cap, so there's going to be some more legal battles. The NDP government, this government, is famous for it. They even have Alberta companies suing Albertans. That's amazing. I can't believe that, but that's what they do.

Number 13 was business taxes. They do hurt, Madam Speaker, businesses taxes. It's very expensive to employ people in Fort McMurray, and when you pay more for people's wages and when you pay more for taxes, it makes you less competitive. It often means that because of some of the other challenges that face them in Fort McMurray – and there are some tough challenges to being in business – they're not going to be in business there. They're going to pack up because they can sell from Edmonton all their products in Fort McMurray. That's what we've been fighting for a long time in local businesses. I heard some talk today about a priority on local hiring. I think that's a good practice. I can't imagine anything more important than the people of Fort McMurray getting the first shot at all the jobs in Fort McMurray, just like I hope the people of Edmonton get the first shot at all the jobs in Edmonton and Albertans get all the jobs in Alberta. Definitely they should get the first shot and then, I would suggest, Canadians and others if the need is there. Hopefully, the need is not there if the government is managing things properly.

Now, Madam Speaker, they've also brought in increased regulation on the oil and gas sector and, of course, increased taxes. Those all hurt.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. leader, I'm having some difficulty tying all of your comments to Bill 8, so I would encourage if you could just kind of, you know, be a little more direct to the bill. Thank you. Please continue.

Mr. Jean: Sure, Madam Speaker. You see, this bill is actually bringing in place a tax system that is not fair for the people of Fort McMurray, just like all these other things are not fair for the people of Fort McMurray.

I was on number 13, but I'm going to go to number 15 because that's the carbon tax. It's very similar to this situation, where they come in and they say: yes, we're going to do something. Or they don't mention it. Like, in this case, the carbon tax is very similar because they said that we were going to be grandfathered because they recognize the extraordinary circumstances of communities like

Fort McMurray and Cold Lake and others, but they snuck it in. They didn't campaign on it, like the carbon tax that's going to cost Albertans $3 billion, $5 billion in just a couple of years. That's $2,500 out of each family's pockets in Alberta. That's how it's similar; of course, they said one thing and did the exact opposite. They're trying to sneak it in through regulations so nobody notices and they can do whatever they want.

That's why it's so similar, Madam Speaker, just like number 15, the GST on the carbon tax. They never even checked it out. They didn't know there was going to be GST on the carbon tax. Did they know that the MGA was going to bring in regulations that actually change it in the dark of night, when nobody's watching? Just like the carbon tax, just like the GST on the carbon tax: they didn't even know it was going to be applied, yet we now find that it could be over a hundred million dollars that the people of Alberta are stuck paying because this government didn't do their homework, because they didn't understand what the ramifications are, even the Minister of Finance suggesting that. Shocking.

Now, number 17, Madam Speaker, was the fire burning down our houses. That is another one very similar to the MGA, where we have a government that's responsible to bring in an act, responsible to bring in regulations and be transparent with the people of Alberta and protect the people of Alberta, protect their economy. Now, the Municipal Government Act specifically says, if you want to know the relevance, "to provide good government." It does. It says that in section 3. It outlines the purposes of a municipality, and I can't imagine a more important purpose for this government than to prevent fires from burning down houses and to take all steps possible. That's a pretty tough blow to take, and the people of Fort McMurray really have a lot of questions on that.

I did a town hall the other day, and it was so oversubscribed that the phones shut down. They shut down, Madam Speaker, because there were too many people on the line and too many people wanted to talk. I can tell you that I heard it very clearly from people that they could not believe that this government was not held to account for what happened in Fort McMurray. They just don't understand it, and they want answers. They're not getting them, and I think that they've been more than patient.

Now, the Municipal Government Act also talks about what the relationship between the provincial government and municipal government should be. The provincial government is in charge. That's why it's called the Municipal Government Act, because the Premier, the province are in charge of the municipality and in charge of delegating authority to them. Madam Speaker, it's ultimately the province's responsibility to keep the people of Fort McMurray safe and to keep the economy of Alberta in good shape. It's important that they do that. They're not doing that, and they haven't done that.

Madam Speaker, the biggest shock in all of this and the most obvious negligence that I've seen in this place since I've been here and in governments before is the amount of time it took for them to approve the rebuild. They seem to forget that there are 2,500 families that don't have homes. Not only that, but probably a thousand of those people didn't know when they could rebuild their houses.

How would you like it if today your house was burned down and you didn't know for five and a half months that you could even rebuild it? What do you think you would do? You're the frog in the pot of boiling water. You know what you're going to do? You're going to leave town, and that's why right now 10,000 to 15,000 of my family, friends, and residents and the people that count on me to fight their fight here are not going back to Fort McMurray. I believe most of it is a result of this government not allowing us to know when to rebuild our homes, when we could rebuild them, and when we were allowed to get back in. I believe it was their responsibility, Madam Speaker, and I blame them, and I'm going to make sure that the people of Fort McMurray know that, because it is.

Certainty in your government is just like stability in your government. Those are signals you can send to the people, and this government has screwed that up. They should have got on the ground, let people know when it was safe to come back, and allowed them certainty in the regulations and the understanding: "My house was burned down by a fire. I'm not allowed to rebuild it because of a flood. Now I can rebuild it because of a flood after five and a half months under certain conditions. I never started the fire. I never let it burn. Why should I not be allowed to rebuild my house the same way it was for 30 years before that?" Because of governance. Because of this government. Madam Speaker, I don't think that's fair.

Now, I'm on 11, but I want to talk about business taxes. That's number 12. Business taxes, Madam Speaker, are the highest – highest – of all the prairie provinces in western Canada. Those business taxes, we heard today, are about $830 a year. Because it's a 20 per cent increase in corporate taxes, it's going to come out of people's pockets. It does affect the people in Fort McMurray a lot because when corporations don't have enough money to pay their staff, they find solutions to it. Right now their solution is: let's fly them in and out of camps to work in the oil sands. That's not a solution. That's a Band-Aid, and it's a Band-Aid that is hurting the people of Fort McMurray and, I think, in my mind, creating a lot of instability. I understand why the oil sands companies do that, because they have to answer to their shareholder, but I think there needs to be an incentive for people to stay in Fort McMurray and to live there and build families and to create a beautiful environment. It is the greatest place in the world to live, but people need to give it a chance, and when their government is not on their side, they won't give it a chance. That's why people have left. That's why people are not happy there.

I know some people there that have been there 50 years, Madam Speaker. She told me a few months ago: I can't live here any longer; I don't feel safe. Their house was not burned down, but they don't feel safe. Fifty years. Her husband is a bush pilot and had a bush pilot plane company that flew in some of the most dangerous places and weathers that is imaginable for a small plane, and his wife doesn't feel safe in her home after living there for 50 years. The stories go on. The increased regulations from this government are slowing down the oil sands and are causing a tremendous amount of problems on the ground.

Now, Madam Speaker, I know I only have an hour and a half, but I do want to talk a little bit about what we have seen in Fort McMurray because I know everybody wants to hear from me for the next 90 minutes. From 2000 until 2015 the population of Fort McMurray grew by 143 per cent – 143 per cent. Wow. That's like taking the population of Alberta today, 4.3 million people, and in 15 years it would be 10.5 million. Can you imagine a population growth in Alberta by that much? It's staggering. The entire province of Alberta in the same time period only grew by 38 per cent, just by way of comparison. Those changes, that boom-bust cycle in Fort McMurray, causes other problems. That's why we need to be treated differently, just like other resource communities. We do because what we have is, all of a sudden, a tremendous amount of pressure on our infrastructure, and nobody comes to our aid, including the provincial government and especially the federal government. That's why we feel like a frog boiling in a pot of water. We're just not sure how close we are to seeing that water boil.

I've seen both booms and busts in our town, and I've seen the impact of bad government policy. I remember one policy that I never thought would be outdone, the policy of the national energy program by Pierre Trudeau. I didn't think we would see anything worse. As you know, Madam Speaker, I sold office supplies and printing and office furniture door to door during that period of time in Fort McMurray, and almost no businesses survived that. In fact, many people moved out of town, and many people lost their homes and their houses. They lost all hope, and that's what bad government policies do. As I mentioned, I never thought I'd see a worse one until this carbon tax came in with no plan. It was not campaigned on, and now the federal government has almost doubled it. I think it's a bad tax because it's going to cost everybody so much money.

I've seen the local stresses that are caused by lack of involvement by both the provincial and the federal government levels. It's easy to look down on the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo and say: "Oh, those folks have lots of money. They have lots of infrastructure. They have everything they could possibly need." Let me tell you a little bit about my house, my house that was built in Uranium City. It was built in Uranium City, Madam Speaker, out of cedar. It was an older house. It was built in the '50s, I think in '54. The back alley: not paved. It was a dirt road. Front street: the strip was paved but right in front of my house was not paved. Dirt. Now, it's a small lot: 44 feet wide, 130 feet long. I promise you that it was nothing special, but it was my home, and my infrastructure doesn't compare to any infrastructure I've seen around this province, not the municipal infrastructure.

We've now seen some changes, some good changes. We've seen the MacDonald Island complex. That is an incredible beacon of success, I believe. It was a very expensive bit of success, but it's an indoor facility for the people of Fort McMurray to enjoy some of the hockey activities they like and swimming and a water park and a whole bunch of other things, and it was partially paid for – you've got it, Madam Speaker – by oil companies because their employees used it, and I thought that was good partnership between the private sector and the public sector on that.

But, Madam Speaker, we didn't get the support we needed, and as a result of that, when our population went up to 125,000 from just 51,000, we all suffered. We suffered, notwithstanding that the government knew that it was coming. I saw all the reports. I saw people come to the chamber of commerce, who said: "It's coming. It's coming. It's coming. It's going to happen." I saw it in the '90s. Everybody knew what was coming on. I saw reports from all the plant sites. The federal government, when I got there in 2004, knew it was coming. The provincial government knew it was coming, yet nobody planned for it. They just thought we would just take it and be done with it.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. leader, again, your speech sounds like it's more of a response to the throne speech or the Budget Address, or I could even see it in the context of maybe Bill 10, but with Bill 8, An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government, I'm just really struggling to find a connection, so if you could please keep your comments more on point, I'd appreciate it.

Mr. Jean: I will, Madam Speaker, and thanks for pointing that out. In fact, in section 3 of the Municipal Government Act it specifically says "to provide services, facilities or other things." This is a facility, so talking about MacDonald Island in Fort McMurray is exactly what the Municipal Government Act is supposed to do, and that's why it's relevant to today. MacDonald Island: a great facility, but it's one shining light out of the entire community that doesn't feel like they're treated properly.

You know, the infrastructure is, of course, under the Municipal Government Act because it is governed by the province of Alberta, and the Alberta government is in charge of the Municipal Government Act and puts that authority down to the local municipality to administer, but it doesn't mean that just because the Alberta government gives up the authority, they don't have the responsibility, Madam Speaker. That's what I'm talking about today, under the Municipal Government Act the responsibility of this government. When they do a bait and switch, when they say one thing and do another, that doesn't show good governance. It doesn't at all.

I would say that it does also say, "to develop and maintain safe and viable communities." Now, speaking of safe, we have one of the largest RCMP detachments in western Canada, I think number two largest, about 170 officers or so. We have one of the largest, during the boom times, crime rates of any city our size. Yet the average experience for an officer in Fort McMurray, when I was there practising law, was three years out of depot – three years – because, Madam Speaker, of the tax situation in Fort McMurray and the other investments, the services, and facilities that we have there that aren't adequate, that aren't anything like the ones here in Edmonton, nothing like the ones in Calgary.

That's why I'm saying to you, Madam Speaker, right now – right now here – and I'm saying to the government: please, hold back the legislation that enables you to bring in regulations in the middle of the night to impose a dramatic tax increase to my citizens. Give them certainty. Give them stability. Let them know that this government is going to stand behind them after the great fire. Let them know that they're not going to see a tax increase that's double or triple for their house that they can't afford at a time when they're picking on the people in the oil and gas industry. Yes, I say "picking on" because that's exactly what this NDP government is doing. They are trying to boil the frog and shut down the oil sector. Now, they think the frog doesn't notice, but I'm noticing. I'm going to do everything I can every single day here to stop them from turning up the heat. Madam Speaker, I can't wait to sing that song Goodbye, just like I think most Albertans want to sing, too.

It's no secret that our party believes firmly in getting better value for taxpayers' money. I believe that. I don't believe that we should just willy-nilly throw money around. I think that it's important to have a good system and to have good management of that money. But there are other issues here: the long-term predictability and stability that this government could give the people of Fort McMurray right now to understand that they're not going to stab them in the back, Madam Speaker. They're going to have their back. They're going to protect them. They're going to make sure that they can continue to work and live in Fort McMurray and in northern Alberta.

Cold Lake has the same issues. Madam Speaker, we can't all move to Edmonton and Calgary because a lot of jobs are outside of there. There are jobs like the resource sector that create a lot of wealth. There are jobs like our coal sector that did create a lot of wealth until this government shut it down. Our farm sector: that was doing extremely well, but, of course, Bill 6. It's the lack of consultation and trying to sneak something through in the middle of the night. It doesn't help. Trying to create regulations so they can do whatever they want doesn't help. It doesn't send the stability to our community.

But it is the government, this government, the Alberta government, that's ultimately responsible for what happens in Fort McMurray and for all of Alberta, what happens to our municipal government rate of taxation, what happens ultimately for people moving out of Alberta or staying in Alberta. They talk about 20,000 jobs. Well, you have to look at the 100,000 they lost and look at it in its totality. They lost 80,000 jobs since they got elected, Madam Speaker, and it does change month to month, but overall we've seen one of the highest unemployment rates we've ever seen in Calgary, 10 per cent. It's the highest rate of any city in Canada: 10 per cent in Calgary.

That's primarily as a result of this government's policies on the oil and gas sector. We know Saskatchewan is still the fourth-best place in the world to invest in the oil and gas industry. Alberta is not even in the top 40, and that's because of government policies. We use the same pipelines. We have almost the same laws, the same constitutional obligations. Yet Saskatchewan is doing so well, and we're doing so poorly. It is the government, Madam Speaker. It's the NDP government. It's either negligence, or they're trying to boil the frog. I don't think it's good because I don't think people like it, and I think people see clearly what's going on.

Given what we've done as far as contributions to the entire country, Madam Speaker, those lineups, those 12-hour shifts, the lack of infrastructure, all of those things are reasons to look at this situation differently. One of the reasons why I got back into this was just simply to try to get a fair shake. We don't want anything special. We just want to be treated fairly, and "fairly" means that when you have a situation where a population can explode in 15 years by 150 per cent, you have to treat it differently. We had a previous government that didn't release enough land, so the land prices skyrocketed, and almost no one in the world could afford a house there. I think we should be treated differently as a result and managed into a situation over time, and giving long-term, predictable changes to that legislation and regulation would be a good start.

Now, in Bill 8 we see how the government is giving itself the power to decide a change to the 5 to 1 ratio. With all due respect to my colleagues on the other side, I don't think there's a lot of trust from the people of Alberta. I can assure them, if they haven't heard it, that the people of Fort McMurray do not have any trust for this government anymore. They don't. They don't feel like they can take this government at their word right now. That's why I'm saying to them: "Back up a little bit. We know what you're going to do, and the people of Alberta and Fort McMurray know what you're going to do. They're very upset. We know that this signal that you send will have long-term ramifications, just like the royalty review did." That's right, Madam Speaker. You know.

I went to Toronto, I went to New York, and I went to Washington. I talked to business investors there. They said: "Only one way you're going to get us to invest in Alberta again. Change the government." That's what they said, Madam Speaker.

An Hon. Member: Really?

Mr. Jean: Yes, that's what they said. They did say it.

In fact, not just one but every single one I talked to knew what was going on in Alberta, and they said: if you want us to invest there, get rid of the government. Now, the fact is that we need this government to change course. We need it to go in a different direction. We need it to, honestly, Madam Speaker, do what they say and say what they do.

Now, they say that they have the backs of the people of Fort McMurray. Show us. Show us that you have the backs of the people of Alberta. Reverse these taxes. Eliminate the carbon tax. Stand up against the Prime Minister and say: "Justin Trudeau, no. If you want to come and take away our rights, our resources, which belong to us under the Constitution, you have to go through us first." Have a Premier that actually has our back. Have a Premier that actually stands up and fights for us.

Bill 8 is just another example, Madam Speaker, of a government that's ignoring the issues that we've had to deal with for years, the issues of not just Fort McMurray, not just Cold Lake but the issues of many communities around Alberta. The signals that are sent to the AUMA and many other organizations, municipal organizations, are the signals that are causing so much distrust, so many situations that are not very friendly to this government, and something that I personally find not the best step forward for democracy. If it's not handled properly, if this is not implemented correctly and managed appropriately, there will be more significant consequences. Those consequences will be foreclosures on houses, on businesses, just like in Grande Cache a few months ago, where a couple moved from their home into their car. I saw it in the '80s. It's happening now again.

This government needs to be there for them, to send the proper signals, to make sure they don't send the wrong ones, and to understand that we are in a unique position, like many areas around the province, and respond accordingly. Let's remember the amount of pain and the frustration that the people of Fort McMurray actually went through last year, the shock. Madam Speaker, I can assure you that it's not over. It's not. People are in pain, and how this government has responded has not been mature. It's not been a good way to respond.

But it's not too late. They can turn the corner. They can support the people of Fort McMurray, and they can support the people of Alberta through good policies on municipal governments. Madam Speaker, there is still time to correct this problem. I know the Minister of Finance was listening to me with passion earlier. I'm hoping maybe he'll reverse his decision on this. There is still time to do it, to amend the legislation, and to ensure that the residents of Wood Buffalo are not punished for what I consider to be terrible management of our economy. It's not too late. We all learn from mistakes.

I would really hope that they reach out to the opposition, which has two members here in the House from Fort McMurray, and that they have an opportunity to listen to us. Five hours' drive away is a long way away. I know the Premier is busy, I know the ministers are busy, but these are real people, with real lives and real families. They just want something positive to happen instead of something negative. This government is just bringing a whole bunch of negative, and I wish they would just stop.

Now, Madam Speaker, I am done with my speech, but I'd like to move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 10 Appropriation Act, 2017

[Debate adjourned April 20: Mr. Hunter speaking]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner. You still have 11 minutes.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I was in the middle of talking about Bill 10 and talking about the municipal transit and transportation grant programs, that they've jumped almost five times in value this year over last year, from $125 million to over $619 million this year. The largest piece of this is the GreenTRIP, coming in at over $484 million. This is because the province needs to partner with federal public transit infrastructure funds worth almost $285 million in Alberta. We can expect lots of light rail transit expansion in Edmonton and Calgary as well as new buses in other centres like Cold Lake and Lethbridge.

With GreenTRIP sunsetting, a new replacement program for transit has come along. The Alberta community transit fund has $40 million in it. I look forward to hearing the details of what this all entails. The minister denied that this is his rural Greyhound replacement. He also indicated that more details are to be worked out on existing rural handibuses like the Rocky View handibus service and medical transportation.

A favourite program of municipalities, the strategic transportation infrastructure program, is back, with $35 million for community airports, local road bridges, resource roads, and local municipal initiatives. The minister indicates he has 170 requests, totalling $140 million, vying for the only $35 million that they've allotted.

Another municipal favourite is the municipal waste-water program, coming in at $50 million. Water for life, at $55 million, along with partnering money from the federal clean water/waste-water fund worth $165 million, and another $25 million for First Nations water: record amounts of money are being spent on water infrastructure in Alberta, $295 million in total. Even at these levels of funding, places like Okotoks can't get confirmation of provincial funding for a waterline from Calgary. Rural water co-ops are still ineligible for water grants or getting funding for hooking up to existing municipal systems. Add on over $94 million in debt-servicing charges, and there you have it, Madam Speaker, over $1.77 billion in operating expenses for Alberta Transportation.

But that's not the whole picture. There's still over $1.2 billion in capital investments to be made. We have some office hardware like computers and stuff in strategic services getting over $4 million in funding. Then we have the Edmonton and Calgary ring roads getting over $273 million in funding this year. Most of that is for the southwest Calgary ring road, a project that has been on the drawing board for decades. There is $30 million for highway 63 twinning work that needs to wrap up, stuff like the second-stage paving.

But the big money this year goes to highway twinning, widening, and expansion projects. I asked the minister about two important projects: the Ray Gibbon Drive and highway 2 realignment around St. Albert, and the highway 3 twinning, like, the Fort Macleod bypass or through the Crowsnest Pass. While some of highway 3 is on the radar, much remains to be done.

We in southern Alberta have been asking for highway 3 to be twinned for over a decade. Here we are the least impacted by the energy sector downturn, with a strong, sustainable, and growing agricultural base, and we're being left in the field, as it were. I just wanted to be on the record as reminding the minister that we pay our taxes, too, down in southern Alberta, and we need to be able to have this road twinned. Funding the Edmonton and Calgary ring roads is important, but so, too, is funding the twinning of highway 3.

We watched with envy as highway 63, albeit only 200 kilometres of it, got twinned. Though the traffic counts weren't there, the accident count was. The lack of action on highway 3 is causing resentment against this government throughout southern Alberta. With the minister making waves in the Castle area touting tourism and new metallurgical coal developments proposed in the Crowsnest Pass, push is going to come to shove. There will be people killed on the highway, and eventually this road will get the scream that it needs to be twinned. I implore the minister and his department to do the right thing and get on with this project from the west end and work their way east.

What Transportation also did this year was that they cut the budget for interchanges, intersections, and safety upgrades by over $32 million over two years, to only a little over $61 million. This will barely buy one and a half diamond interchanges. Meanwhile Chestermere needs three, and the Balzac one on highway 2 needs to be fixed, the one that the minister made CrossIron Mills pay for in order to install a partial interchange to relieve congestion. The CrossIron Mills fix wasn't enough.

Bridge construction projects has $68 million in it this year. The minister and I in estimates discussed at length the new twinned bridge for Fort Saskatchewan, teasing out details, and the minister admitted in so many words that Alberta Transportation messed up by not twinning this bridge sooner.

Remember when I was talking about crack filling? If the crack filling does not get done in a timely fashion, it results in a higher rehabilitation cost. Here it is up almost $111 million over two years. Provincial rehabilitation will run $388 million this year. There is a lot of paving that needs to be done.

My colleague the MLA for Battle River-Wainwright managed to tease an answer out of the minister about the building Canada fund national and regional projects component. Of the $476 million remaining, there is $18.7 million for bridge renewal, $25.8 million for intersection reconstruction projects, and $21 million for highway rehabilitation. The minister is waiting for federal approval to spend this money for projects that include the Springbank off-stream reservoir to protect Calgary from flooding; the bridge in Peace River; Sandy Lake water treatment; projects on highways 2, 19, 43, and 63; and major pavement rehabilitation projects in central and southern Alberta.

This leads me to water management infrastructure, the dams. There is over $39 million on this, and it is not for Springbank or McLean Creek to protect Calgary. The minister says that it's in the Environment department's budget, but we know that the Infrastructure department is waiting for approval from Ottawa to spend building Canada fund money to pay for this project. The minister might want to clarify on the funding for Springbank his department's role in delivering on various parts of the budget. The minister will also want to clarify around the murky nature about this building Canada fund money and the lack of transparency until my colleague for Battle River-Wainwright asked the questions in estimates.

Finally, there is an $18 million line item to help with flood mitigation and recovery from the 2013 flood in southern Alberta, for a grand total of just over $1.2 billion in capital. But there is more. You see, there are financial transactions that are recorded and that occur. Salt, sand, and gravel are needed for the roads for $50 million as is the debt repayment on the ring roads for just over $45 million, for a total financial transaction of just over $95 million.

There is a lot of spending here, Madam Speaker. While efforts are under way to find ways to reduce costs, the industry is going to have to find ways to deliver infrastructure at better prices.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a) any questions or comments for the hon. member?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to Bill 10? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I just wanted to enter some questions into the record on this particular portfolio. This is under line item 2.3, ticket processing, and this is in respect to photoradar. This line item was stated in the business plan. Under line item 2.3, for processing photoradar tickets issued by municipalities, my questions are as follows in that respect: what provincial oversight is there to ensure that sites for these locations are following the automated enforcement guidelines; has the minister been approving the locations listed in appendix A; has the minister ever rejected a location; and finally, when was the last time appendix A was updated, and why isn't it listed in open data?

My next questions, Madam Speaker, are to the Minister of Service Alberta. This is under outcome 2, that government is transparent and information is secure, and this is with key strategy 2.4, to enhance the availability and usability of information on Alberta's open data portal. My question for that is: why are the photoradar locations not listed in open data?

There were some corrections systems that had come under fire for certain cultures which discourage females from entering the workforce. This is under line item 8.2, with the adult remand and correctional centres, and I have a couple of questions with that. What is the female-to-male ratio of management and supervisory level FTEs? My second question is: has your ministry asked the Minister of Status of Women to conduct any GBA plus analysis to ensure that procedures and cultures are creating respectful workplaces for all employees? My third question with that is: has your ministry established an anticorruption task force to address serious drug smuggling allegations, amongst others, within corrections? Then I have two more questions. Are Narcan kits available to our corrections staff in the prison system? The next question is: how many Narcan kits have been administered in the Edmonton Remand Centre and the Calgary Remand Centre?

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? Any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

Hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs, I believe you had moved second reading of the bill on behalf of the Minister of Finance. Did you wish to close debate?

Mr. S. Anderson: We don't want to close debate on it, no.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay. Then I will call the vote.

[Motion carried; Bill 10 read a second time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. acting Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Seeing the progress we have made today and the fact that it is Thursday afternoon, I move that we call it 4:30 and adjourn.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:05 p.m. to Monday, May 1, at 1:30 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 29th Legislature - 3rd Session (2017)

Activity to Thursday, April 20, 2017

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 1 to 200 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 201 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

* An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at 780.427.2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned chapter number until the conclusion of the Fall Sitings.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let each of us reflect or pray, each in our own way. Hon. members, National Day of Mourning took place on Friday, April 28. Allow us to take a moment to remember and honour those who lost their lives and those who are injured due to workplace tragedy. Let us be reminded of our commitment to continue to improve the health and safety of all workers in our province and in our country. Let us ensure that we take action to prevent any further injuries, illnesses, and deaths.

Hon. members, as is our custom, we pay tribute to members and former members of the Assembly who have passed away since we last met. With our admiration and our respect there is gratitude to the members of the families who share the burdens of public office and public service.

Mr. Bohdan (Bud) Zip
March 5, 1929, to April 19, 2017

The Speaker: Bohdan (Bud) Zip was with us from March 5, 1929, to April 19, 2017. Mr. Bud Zip served one term as the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, from November 2, 1982, to May 7, 1986. Born in Saskatchewan, he completed his master of arts in economics at the University of Toronto in 1951. He drew upon this knowledge to contribute to the various committees on which he served during his term in office, including Public Accounts and the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Committee. Mr. Zip was active in Alberta's Ukrainian community, serving as treasurer and president of St. Vladimir's Ukrainian Orthodox congregation and president of the Calgary Ukrainian-Canadian committee.

In a moment of silent prayer or reflection I ask you to remember Mr. Zip.

Hon. members, ladies and gentlemen, we will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Mr. Robert Clark.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
 True patriot love in all thy sons command.
 Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
 Il sait porter la croix!
 Ton histoire est une épopée
 Des plus brillants exploits.
 God keep our land glorious and free!
 O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
 O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Thank you. Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, with our admiration, respect, and gratitude to the members of the families who share the burdens of public office and public service, today I would like to welcome members of the Zip family who are present in the Speaker's gallery. Please rise as I call your name and remain standing until all members of your family have been introduced: Mr. David Zip, son of Mr. Zip; Catherine Zip, daughter of Mr. Zip; David Michael Ford, grandson; Theresa Zip, daughter-in-law of Mr. Zip. Please accept our appreciation and thanks.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure that I rise today to introduce to you and through you students and staff from Westbrook school. Nestled away in the northwest side of my riding, the school strives to celebrate diversity in learning, to encourage students to think critically, and to develop lifelong thinkers. I get a great group of students whenever I meet with this school. I'm very pleased to have them here today, and I would ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you very much. A great privilege and pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you to the House the very special community school of Sunnyside school in the constituency of Calgary-Mountain View. Along with their teachers and staff – I'd like to introduce the principal, Sandra Trumper; Anne MacQuarrie, staff; Laura Clarke-Brubacher, assistant – a special welcome to Robyn Wanner, your daughter, Mr. Speaker; Kirsten Archuleta, my daughter, and her son, my grandson, Kace Archuleta, his second visit to the Legislature; and Tracey McLean, another parent, along with Steff Stephansson, another volunteer parent. Please stand – and all the students rise – and receive the warm welcome of the Legislature.

The Speaker: If you would allow me a special welcome here today. It's interesting that as you're in this activity, we cross paths in so many different ways. It's what makes us strong.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Merci, M. le Président. C'est avec fierté que je me lève à la Chambre aujourd'hui pour vous présenter une classe d'étudiants de l'école Monsignor William Irwin school in Edmonton-Whitemud. Pendant cette semaine ils vont participer à l'École à la Législature. Les étudiants et étudiantes sont accompagnés par leur enseignante, Mme Carol Dyck. Veuillez-vous lever, s'il vous plaît, pour recevoir la bienvenue chaleureuse de l'Assemblée.

The Speaker: Welcome.

You're going to be working on that language, right, hon. member?

Are there any other school groups, hon. members?

The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three guests that we have today in the gallery. First of all, Lieutenant Colonel, retired, Mr. Ray Hook, who has 40 years of proud service in uniform. With Ray is his wife, Elaine, and they have with them this afternoon Mikkel Storm Møller, who is a 17-year-old from Svendborg, Denmark. The Hooks have hosted Mikkel as part of the Camrose Rotary Club, so when Mikkel rises, you'll see all of the pins and buttons that he has as a proud Rotarian international exchange student. Today's visit is part of Mikkel's must-do of things to do while in Alberta, to come to our Assembly. He is also a guest of the Sergeant-at-Arms, and they've had the tour. If they would please rise – they have; thank you very much – and if we could greet them with the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome. I hope you see this as an opportunity and not necessarily a burden.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Stephanie Shostak. Stephanie is a dedicated community volunteer. She's a board member with TESA. She's an active, politically engaged citizen and has most recently brought her skills to help organize with the Alberta Party. If I could ask Stephanie to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Environment and Parks and minister responsible for the climate change office.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Scouts Venturer youth and Rover youth from Lac La Biche. Scouts Canada provides coed youth aged 5 to 26 the opportunity to enjoy outdoor adventures, to care for the environment, and to learn about teamwork and leadership. Today in the gallery we have Evan-Lee Alook, Zoe Bourassa, Leanne Cote, Madison Gawryletz, Tialandis Guinand, Aywastin Lewis, Sakastew Lewis, Dominic Simpson, Meagan Theroux, Christian Guinand, and Scott Lloyd. If they could rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The Minister of Labour and minister responsible for democratic renewal.

National Day of Mourning

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Every year on April 28 we honour and remember those who died from workplace-related illness and injury. It is known as the Day of Mourning. While I'm glad that we set aside a day each year to honour and remember those who died from workplace-related illness and injury, it's heartbreaking that this day is necessary and that every year some Albertans do not make it home at the end of the workday. Every worker has the right to come home safely at the end of the day, from the very first shift through to retirement. My hope is that the Day of Mourning motivates employers, workers, and government to continue working together to improve occupational health and safety in all industries across this province.

In 2016 there were 144 deaths related to workplace illnesses and injuries. These 144 people died because they went to work, but they were more than just workers. They were someone's grandparents, parents, siblings, spouses, children, and friends. They were children's sports coaches and community volunteers. They touched lives and made their communities better places. Their contributions made our lives richer, and their absence makes our lives poorer. It's tragic to see families ripped apart, friends left heartbroken, co-workers traumatized, and our communities suffering. We can and we must do better. I believe employers, workers, and government all have a responsibility to create healthier, safer workplaces and a better world.

Mr. Speaker, this year's Day of Mourning also marks the 25th anniversary of the Westray mine disaster in Nova Scotia. On May 9, 1992, a large explosion in the Westray mine, in Plymouth, killed 26 underground miners, that day's entire shift of workers who were underground. A subsequent public inquiry blamed mine management and government regulators for what was deemed a preventable disaster. In response to the Westray mine disaster the federal government amended the Criminal Code to allow criminal charges in serious cases of workplace fatalities or injuries. That law applies to anyone on a work site who directs the work of others.

Mr. Speaker, I was proud last Friday when our government signed the Westray memorandum of understanding with 10 police services across the province. This memorandum will define protocols between occupational health and safety officers and police officers when investigating serious workplace incidents to help determine if criminal charges are warranted. By defining roles and protocols, police can focus on any criminal activity that may have occurred and investigators can ensure that their time is spent on the incident investigation, to the benefit of all Albertans. This was an important action for our government to take because it will help OH and S and police better serve and protect Albertans and help ensure that every worker comes home safe at the end of the day.

Mr. Speaker, I encourage all members of this Legislature and all Albertans to take a moment and remember those who lost their lives due to workplace illness or injury. And as we go forward, I encourage all Albertans to commit to working together to create healthier, safer workspaces.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Work is an important aspect of daily living. Having a job, earning one's own living, and being able to provide for our families and others plays a large part in life satisfaction and personal fulfillment. By working, people serve their communities and create value in this world. All jobs and all workers matter and make a difference.

Unfortunately, sometimes accidents at work have long-term or even fatal consequences. We must remember and honour all of those who have died, been injured, or made ill while on the job. In 2016 we, sadly, lost 144 Albertans to workplace illnesses or injuries. As a community we must take care of those who, while working, were victims of an accident that made them unable to continue to work, and we must also support the families who have tragically lost a loved one to a workplace incident. Let us as a government, as an employer, or as a worker learn from these tragedies and do better going forward. All people should feel safe and be safe when they go to work.

The first National Day of Mourning was held in 1991 in Canada, and I'm grateful for this annual opportunity for us to pause, reflect, and remember those lost to workplace injury or illness. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to request the unanimous consent of the House to allow the leader of the third party and the two independent members to respond to the ministerial statement if they wish to do so.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. I rise today on behalf of my Progressive Conservative colleagues to speak to the National Day of Mourning for workers killed on the job, which, of course, took place on April 28. Mr. Speaker, 144 Albertans were killed as a result of workplace injury or illness last year, and this is a devastating number, a number made all the more heart-wrenching because 19 more Albertans lost their lives on the job in 2016 than in 2015. It is more than just a statistic. It's 144 people with wives and husbands, children and parents, siblings and friends, people whose lives are forever changed by tragedy.

These 144 people also made invaluable contributions to the fabric of Alberta. Regardless of what job they did or what industry sector they worked in, they were a part of what makes Alberta great, and we are all poorer for their loss. Mr. Speaker, one death, illness, or injury on the job is always one too many, and whether our workplace is an office tower, a construction site, or the open road, we all have a right to expect that we'll make it home safely at the end of each day. That is why workplace safety is so important and why all of us – employers, employees, and government – have a role to play in eliminating workplace fatalities once and for all. It's clear from the 15 per cent increase in these fatalities that we have more work to do.

On the National Day of Mourning I can't help but also remember our colleague PC Member Manmeet Singh Bhullar, who was on his way to work at this Legislature when he was struck and killed in a tragic motor vehicle accident. His loss left a hole in our caucus and in our hearts that will never be filled. We know intimately the pain of losing a colleague, and our hearts go out to the colleagues and family and friends of these 144 Albertans as they begin their journey in life without these important people.

Mr. Speaker, I'm honoured to stand in this House and remember 144 people whose lives were cut too short as a result of workplace illness or injury in 2016. Let us all honour their memories by working together to do more to reduce and, hopefully, one day put an end to these senseless and unnecessary deaths.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Having attended the Friday memorial service in Lethbridge, a very emotional tribute to the workers lost in the Lethbridge area, I'm pleased to stand with a response to the ministerial statement on the National Day of Mourning. At this time we pause to remember and mourn Albertans who have suffered injuries, disease, and death in the workplace. The risk, especially for inexperienced and summer workers, is significant, and each worker must know of their right to refuse unsafe work. This upward trend simply cannot continue, especially given that these workplace incidents are all preventable. If we're to avoid further tragedies, we must strive to create a culture of safety.

By the way, Mr. Speaker, this is the first year that the deaths of paid farm workers are included in the WCB statistics, a result of the much-delayed Bill 6. For far too long farm workers went without the basic legal protection that every other worker in the country has. However, more work needs to be done to reduce barriers to claiming WCB coverage for ranch and farm workers and to encourage both workers and employers alike to file claims for incidents that occur.

By remembering the injuries and deaths of Alberta workers and by supporting the families they leave behind, our commitment to building a safe work environment will be strengthened. It is our solemn duty in this House and the responsibility of each one of us to do all that we can to ensure every man and woman who goes to work returns home safely.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. One workplace death is too many. On the National Day of Mourning, last Friday, I thought about everyone who lost their life on the job, and I thought about the families they left behind. Many Albertans put themselves in danger each day simply doing their jobs, and every single one of them deserves to come home safe to their families. As we reflect this week on the tragedy in Fort McMurray, I think of first responders across the province who put their lives on the line every day. I also think about the 144 people who did not come home last year as a result of a workplace fatality or from illnesses contracted in the workplace. These numbers are too high, and there's now a missing piece in the lives of their loved ones that will never be filled.

Alberta occupational health and safety does important work promoting workplace safety, and I'd like to thank each and every worker and student in the field for their contributions to safer work sites. Creating a culture of safety on the job is paramount. I reflect on my own time working in the oil and gas industry, watching the safety culture evolve and grow in importance. Although recent workplace incidents show there is still work to do, it's heartening to see safety taken so seriously in one of Alberta's riskiest industries, and I know safety is an important issue for business owners all across Alberta.

My thoughts are with those who worry each and every day about their loved ones on job sites across the province, who fear hearing devastating news each time there's a workplace accident. I have faith in Albertans to take workplace safety seriously because even one workplace death is too many.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Fort McMurray Wildfire Air Tanker Use

Mr. Jean: One year ago the Horse River fire was discovered just outside my home in Fort McMurray. A year later many families are rebuilding but are still searching for answers. Everyone in Fort McMurray has questions about whether or not there was more that could have been done to prevent the fire and better prepare for evacuations, but Albertans are still waiting on reports to be released by this government. Flight logs show that only two air tankers were battling the fire the day before the evacuation, less than half from the day before. To the Premier: why did this happen?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Of course, a year is a short period of time, especially when you're dealing with a tragedy like we all witnessed in Fort McMurray, and to the member and to all of his friends and neighbours, our hearts are with you. That specific day decisions needed to be made by firefighters on the front lines, including protecting pilots, and the airspace was limited because of the smoke. Of course, they weren't going to dispatch more air tankers into the airspace if it was going to cause increased risk for those pilots and other firefighters.

Mr. Jean: When we asked forestry officials about this in Public Accounts, they blamed a temperature inversion for trapping smoke, causing safety issues, but if safety was a concern, how did two planes still perform 23 separate bombing runs? The fire chief noted that there was a temperature inversion on the morning of May 3 as well, but the government sent 12 tankers into the air to fight the fire that day. I'll ask again: how is it possible there were only two planes attacking a fire that was just outside one of Alberta's most populous cities?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thanks again, Mr. Speaker. The decisions that are made around specific decisions are made by people who have the expertise, including the firefighters, who are working to make sure that they protect all cities, all citizens, and all parts of our province. What they have explained to us is that they chose to have two of the biggest water tankers deployed to make sure that there was safety, that as much water could be transported as possible without putting increased pilots or firefighters at risk. Politicians don't make these decisions. We make sure that the resources are available, and it's up to the front lines and those who have the expertise to make the decisions about how to deploy them.

Mr. Jean: No, Mr. Speaker, but politicians are responsible for what happens.

On May 2 Alberta had four wildfires and only five planes fighting all of them. The next day, on May 3, we had 20 planes in the air fighting fires, including 12 in Fort McMurray. This is a huge discrepancy. It raises real and serious questions that people all across Alberta want answered by this government. There is no question that this fire was somewhat unique, but Albertans deserve to know if more should have and could have been done. How, then, could there only be five tankers fighting fires in the entire province on May 2 when our province had 16 tankers at their disposal?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Again, we are proud to have the backs of those who make the decisions to ensure the safest deployment and to protect Albertans, including Albertans who could have been fighting the fires in airplanes, that could have been unsafe if there was not a clear flight path. Making sure that we have the resources available, which were there, and that they were deployed by the people who were in the best position to make decisions on the front lines: that's their job. They're experts. They did an excellent job. I wish more houses could have been saved, but I'm very proud of the work that happened and the lives that were saved, and I think we should all owe deep gratitude to the people who did lead the charge.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
Second main question.

Carbon Levy

Mr. Jean: Alberta's GDP decreased 3.8 per cent in 2016, after a similar drop in 2015. The last time that the GDP in Alberta fell for two consecutive years occurred in 1982 and 1983, and for only the second time in 21 years Alberta had negative net interprovincial migration. The NDP government's solution to a shrinking economy: to impose a $3 billion carbon tax, that hurts Alberta families and businesses when they can least afford it. This is not reasonable. Will the Premier acknowledge that Albertans can't afford this carbon tax during the worst downturn in over 30 years and scrap the tax?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm proud of the fact that our government is working to protect Albertans and to make their lives better. That's one of the reasons why I am so thrilled that we're up a hundred per cent in drilling ... [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet.

Ms Hoffman: ... by 210 rigs. That's over the numbers at the same time last year. That's why I'm proud that exports are up 37 per cent. That's why I'm proud that wholesale trade rose for the fifth month in a row and reached the highest levels since June 2015. Our jobs plan is working, and I'm proud to continue supporting Alberta families.

The Speaker: I would again remind the members: let's keep the volume and comments to a minimum, please.
First supplemental.

Mr. Jean: Ignoring the facts won't solve them, and under the NDP world view you don't face the facts; you throw more money at the problem consistently. The NDP government's solution to the overwhelming discontent with their carbon tax is to try to buy off Albertans with their own money, with overlapping and ill-conceived programs. If the Premier actually listened to Albertans, she'd know that they are more than capable of screwing in their own light bulbs. Will the Premier agree that Albertans deserve better than her government wasting their tax dollars on duplicate programs and cancel the Ecofitt boondoggle?

Ms Hoffman: You know, Mr. Speaker, the families that are accessing this program: they say thank you. They are glad to have the opportunity to save over $100 a year, to be able to reduce their energy costs. I wish we would honour the fact that good work is happening. It's the last jurisdiction in Canada to finally catch up and make sure that we have an energy efficiency program available to Albertans. We're going to keep working to make sure that we protect Albertans, make their lives more affordable, and have the opportunities with our initiatives under the climate leadership plan to get two new pipelines built, which are fundamental to having tens of thousands of jobs to support our economy moving forward.

Mr. Jean: The NDP government thinks it's okay to siphon money away from Alberta families and put it into a pool of money, where they can have a free-for-all at taxpayers' expense. In the latest iteration of the carbon tax slush fund the NDP government is giving instant rebates without any checks or balances whatsoever. With direct rebates at the till, no limits on how many times products can be purchased, and no measures to stop purchases by non-Alberta residents, this program is ripe for abuse. Will the Premier face the fact that Albertans know how to spend their money better than government and scrap the tax?

Ms Hoffman: It's pretty rich, Mr. Speaker, that in the first question the member says that Albertans can buy and install their own light bulbs, and then in the third question he says that we shouldn't be letting them buy their own light bulbs. You can't have it both ways. I myself was out this weekend at Costco, and there were lots of people buying reduced-price light bulbs as well as signing up for the in-house program. This program is working. People are accessing opportunities to save money. I am proud that Albertans are stepping up to the plate. It's time for the Official Opposition to acknowledge that Albertans deserve a government that's on their side, helping them save money, and that's what they've got.

The Speaker: The third main question.

2:00 Labour Legislation Review

Mr. Jean: Wildrose continues to hear the very valid concerns of business owners and employees surrounding the NDP government's labour review. It's almost as though maybe just a month wasn't long enough to hear from Albertans about how changes will affect their province. Now there are rumblings that legislation will actually be coming forward to overhaul our labour code as soon as this spring. Will the Premier assure Albertans that her government will not introduce legislation until consultation has truly occurred and Andy Sims has completed his report in full?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We are talking to Albertans about what needs to be updated and modernized in our labour and employment standards legislation, and we've received almost 5,000 survey responses, with over a thousand from employers, 340 written submissions. We've held round-table discussions across the province with employer groups, labour organizations, municipalities, academics, First Nations, and we continue to engage with Mr. Andrew Sims to make sure that we are bringing legislation that makes sense for Alberta and make sure that we have legislation that works for all workers.

Mr. Jean: The NDP's idea of consultation equals online survey and closed-door, invite-only consultations. That is seriously lacking any substance. Thankfully, the Calgary Chamber of commerce did the work for the NDP government, and blankly the NDP government should have done it. When it comes to removing secret ballot for union certification, the feedback couldn't be more clear. Seventy-four per cent believe that eliminating the secret ballot would have a negative impact. Only 4 per cent think it would have any sort of positive impact. Will the Premier guarantee that the NDP government will not eliminate a secret ballot? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We have received a great deal of submissions on both our employment standards and our Labour Relations Code review. We are currently reviewing the feedback from Albertans, from employers, from employer representative groups. We will be reviewing that and making sure that we bring forward fair and balanced legislation that makes sure that Alberta is the strongest business economy in the country and also has fairness for Alberta's workers.

Mr. Jean: Employees in Alberta have every right to be concerned that intimidation tactics would be used during the union certification process. Secret ballot protects their rights, which is incredibly important when you consider how much the NDP world view impacts unions in this province. Just this weekend at an AFL conference sometimes NDP spokesman and Progress Alberta head Duncan Kinney said, "We're the [organization] that kicks conservatives in the teeth." Will the Premier denounce these remarks, or is this NDP world view the treatment conservatives can expect during a union certification process?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very proud that our government has engaged in a fulsome review with employers, workers, labour organizations, that we've put out a survey that allowed nearly 5,000 Albertans to provide their feedback, that we've heard from Albertans like Amanda, who sent in a letter to my office, writing: my employment was recently terminated because I requested compassionate care leave after my seven-year-old son was diagnosed with leukemia. Amanda has lost her job. We have heard stories from Albertans across the province. I look forward to reviewing the feedback and bringing forward discussion to Albertans.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Progress Alberta Executive Director's Remarks

Mr. McIver: Thank you. Let's try again, Mr. Speaker. Our party has rightly denounced violent rhetoric directed towards the Premier. While we strongly can disagree on issues, there's no need or place for such language, which is why I was also disturbed to hear the words from the NDP's propaganda arm this weekend. At the Alberta Federation of Labour's convention executive director Duncan Kinney stated: "You may be wondering who @ProgressAlberta is . . . We're the [organization] that kicks conservatives in the teeth." To the Premier: do you stand by these comments from your surrogates at Progress Alberta, or will you denounce them?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, I'm glad to hear that the member plans on denouncing comments around violence against any individual. Certainly, it would be useful if that was done in a timely fashion. With regard to this I would be happy to look into further details, but certainly we don't condone violence toward anyone. It doesn't reflect language that this side of the House chose to use, and we wouldn't condone that language being used towards any individual.

Mr. McIver: Well, that's good, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad that the Deputy Premier doesn't condone it because he is connected to the NDP, appearing on a carbon tax discussion panel on CTV's Alberta Primetime last December. Host Shawna Randolph gave us a glimpse into Progress Alberta's links to the NDP. I quote: we did ask for a few cabinet ministers in the provincial government to join us, and we were told that actually nobody from the government was available, and the province referred us to Duncan Kinney with Progress Alberta. Hardly independent. To the Deputy Premier: will you denounce Mr. Kinney in Progress Alberta or will you be kicking . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. [interjections] Hon. member.
The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This side of the House has certainly been referred to in ways that were demeaning, disrespectful, and had death threats. We don't condone that for anyone on this side of the House or anyone in this House. It's important that we treat each other with respect and dignity. No matter what question the member opposite asks, I will continue to treat him with respect and dignity.

The Speaker: The second supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. There's something that the Deputy Premier and our party can agree on: there's no place for this. We know Mr. Kinney's comments because the Alberta Federation of Labour found them so acceptable that it was the AFL that live-tweeted them on Saturday afternoon. The NDP cannot claim they have no links to the AFL because the AFL has specific representation enshrined in the NDP's constitution. So to the Deputy Premier: will you live up to your words, condemn these remarks, and condemn the person that said them?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, after the week that we've all spent in our constituencies, I hope working to find out ways that we can continue to support our constituents and make their lives better – I've made it very clear in my first two responses that I do not support those remarks or condone them. I'm going to say that we're going to continue to focus on making life better for Alberta families. That's one of the reasons why I was so proud to talk to constituents and residents from Alberta across the province about the work we're doing to cut school fees, the work we're doing to support health care and education, the work we're doing around making sure that 20,000 more Alberta workers have jobs this month than did last month. There's lots of good work happening. I wish the members opposite would keep focused on the things that matter to Albertans.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Condominium and Housing Co-operative Governance

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many of my constituents are condo owners or members of housing co-ops. Of those, many of the condo owners in my riding have expressed concerns in relation to decisions being made about governance models or issues surrounding management companies. To the Minister of Service Alberta: what safeguards are in place to ensure that these boards and management organizations are accountable to their members?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Our government is dedicated to ensuring that we have condo legislation that balances the relationship between boards and owners and provides the tools necessary for condominium corporations to govern strong condo communities. This means we believe all Albertans deserve to be protected as well as know all of the facts when they make a purchase as large as buying a home. Currently we're looking into amendments to the Condominium Property Act and looking specifically at ways to ensure more transparency and accountability. One of the main priorities for the condo act amendments will be to provide efficiencies to the day-to-day governance of condominium corporations. We encourage any and all constituents to send their contact information through . . .

2:10

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that I have heard concerns expressed about conflicts of interest within some condominium boards, to the same minister: what are the government's plans to ensure that these boards are transparent to their members?

The Speaker: The Minister of Service Alberta and Status of Women.

Ms McLean: Again, thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. These are important issues to our government and to the member, obviously. However, it's clear the opposition, with their laughter, does not take these issues as seriously. More transparency from condo boards is definitely something that we are hearing from everyday Albertans. These new changes we'll be bringing in as a direct result of the feedback we've heard from our consultations. We've heard loud and clear that an accessible dispute resolution process is essential to condo living, and we're working towards establishing a tribunal to resolve condo disputes between condo boards in a more efficient and cost-effective manner.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that housing co-ops are governed differently than condos and given that when a housing co-op mortgage is finished, it is no longer accountable to the CMHC, to the same minister: what strategies are in place that ensure that these co-ops do not run into governance issues?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker and to the member for his question. Our government cares about everyday Albertans and believes Albertans deserve to have transparency and accountability on their housing boards. Co-operatives are governed by their own bylaws and articles of incorporation by their directors and members of the co-op. Unlike other co-operatives, housing co-operatives are required by legislation to address dispute resolution in their bylaws. Amendments to bylaws must be voted on by co-op members. There are two associations in Alberta, Northern Alberta Co-operative Housing Association and Southern Alberta Co-operative Housing Association, that provide guidance to boards and members to assist with best practices. We understand that housing governance is a real concern for many people, so I encourage anyone to write or call my office.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Unharvested 2016 Crops

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, we have talked about unharvested crops with the minister for about a month, now. We talked about mechanisms laid out in the AFSC regulations that are impeding resolve to this problem. It's now been brought to our attention that adjusters could be weeks away from getting out into fields to complete a preharvest assessment. Minister, you had the power under the act to dismiss an entire board. Do you have the power to override these regulations under these extraordinary circumstances and help these affected farmers to get this preharvest requirement done?

The Speaker: The Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Without a doubt there are some farmers who have varied concerns. With the weather conditions we're looking for some warmer, drier conditions this week. I hope yet that those farmers are able to get out in the field. No farmer looks to farm for insurance. They want to farm, put the seed in the ground. I have asked AFSC to streamline a lot of their processes, to speed up so that when and if those drying conditions don't improve, they're able to hit the ground running and able to make those claims as speedy as possible.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Schneider: Given that it was apparent last fall the possibility that there could be millions of dollars in unharvested crops still lying in the fields come spring and given that there is a large number of farmers dissatisfied with AFSC progress to date and given that waiting for warm weather to help the situation out is hardly a viable contingency plan, Minister, why have the adjusters not been allowed to use a triage approach to the problem and determine large areas where there is no question as to crop quality instead of being forced to use the case-by-case, time-consuming status quo?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. There are 120 inspection staff, all boots on the ground. All of them have been directed to go onto those areas that are most badly affected. I'm happy to announce that unharvested acreage claims are all but complete. Those inspectors now will focus on wildlife and preharvest inspections. I'm very proud of the work the AFSC is doing right across the province, especially in those inspected areas, and continues to do so.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Schneider: Given that waiting for good weather is not an appropriate contingency plan and given that every day that goes by shortens the growing season and yield potential of the 2017 crop, Minister, despite your talk last week about streamlining the policies for inspections, there have been complaints of little to no communication to farmers or AFSC offices beyond web updates. Can you answer this question that I'm getting from farmers: where is the communication failure here between AFSC and farmers, and who's going to fix it?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and the member for the question. If he has incidences of a communication breakdown, a very specific interest, I'm more than happy to address those. As such, AFSC has been directed to tweak the programs. As an example, inspectors have cut by half the number of inspections they have to do for wildlife and preharvest inspections. AFSC is doing a good job. I'm proud of the work they're doing.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a little repetitive, but that shows how important it is. Last week the minister of agriculture met with the Alberta crop commissions to discuss farmers' concerns about the unharvested crops. There are at least one million unharvested acres still in the field, and producers have called for immediate action to help them through this. With the late snowfalls, harvesting is still not an option in some areas due to wet conditions. To the minister of agriculture: how are you changing things, specifically, based on these meetings with the commissions?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and the member for the question. It's important that we expedite the crop insurance claims with the premiums that farmers make all across the province. Without a doubt this year, last year, and the beginning of this year it's been challenging, with moisture conditions way above normal in some areas. AFSC has been instructed to make many changes. I mentioned before with the previous member the question of the number of inspections. They are forgoing grain samples on harvested acres. Preharvest inspections on severe lodged crop were low to pick up equipment because it was unharvestable, and other...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

First supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that there are still ongoing crop insurance claims unresolved and given that you've committed to providing farmers with a plan to streamline the remaining crop insurance assessment process, to the same minister: specifically, how will you be streamlining this process moving forward?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and the member for the question. There are a number of examples that AFSC is streamlining the process. I am happy to report that unharvested acreage claims are all but complete. Now those same inspectors can concentrate on the wildlife and preharvest inspections. Again I ask every producer out there: keep in contact with AFSC. Whatever the options they so choose, make sure that they contact AFSC so that they have best option possible going forward. I'm happy that we have farmers' backs and that we're making Albertans' lives better, including producers'.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that we are now into May and given that it is still too wet to get out in the field to seed new crops and given that if this situation continues, it is becoming a crisis, to the minister of agriculture: how are you helping farmers get through the setbacks from last year and ensure that this year's crop is viable?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and the member for the question. Without a doubt, we need to get past the problems and the concerns that carried over from last fall and start concentrating on the new growing season. With that, AFSC has streamlined their process, and they have all 120 inspectors, boots on the ground, to be able to do so. I have confidence in the AFSC programs, the suite of programs, as most producers do. They're looking forward to that good weather to ensure that we can get that crop in the ground and, whatever options those farmers pick, the pick that works best for them.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oil Price Forecasting

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, this NDP government is making really bad bets with Albertans' future. They foolishly bet on oil to average $55 a barrel this year, a price we haven't seen since 2015. Now, with the first fiscal quarter coming to a close, WTI has yet to hit $55 even once, never mind average $55. Today oil sits at just $48. Why is this government betting the budget on these long-shot projections that are falling flat right before our eyes?

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much for the question. You know, this government is committed to building Alberta's economic recovery, creating jobs, creating tax revenue for this government. We're confident in our oil and gas sector in this province. They're a key driver of the economy, and it is the people of Alberta themselves that are our most treasured resource. This is going to be a government that will build for the future.

2:20

Mr. Barnes: In NDP fantasyland it's all blue skies ahead, but Albertans are experiencing a very different reality. Given that these irresponsible oil forecasts are exposing hard-working Alberta families to more debt, more deficit, and even more tax increases and given that we're already on track for an unthinkable $71 billion of debt by just 2019, Mr. Speaker, how much more debt will Albertans owe by 2019 if this reckless NDP government keeps swinging and missing on oil prices?

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much for the question. You know, we created more than 20,000 full-time jobs last month. Despite the doom and gloom on the other side, the people that don't have faith in the future of this province, rigs are drilling up to a hundred per cent more from the year 2010. Our exports are up 37 per cent. This Alberta economy will lead the country to recovery. The policies of this government are rebuilding our economy, putting people to work, and creating prosperity.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Barnes: Given a reality that an energy executive recently told me about, that international companies are fleeing Alberta because our regulatory conditions don't allow for them to make money at a basic stress test of $30 a barrel, and given that these companies, who weren't lucky enough to make backroom exemption deals with this NDP government, are suffering because of the carbon tax and the cap on emissions, Mr. Speaker, why is this government making a bad situation unbearable for international companies, who are planning to leave Alberta for good under this NDP government's watch?

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I think we need a bit of a reality check for the opposition over there because, you know, Steve Laut, the president of CNRL, says that this is a very exciting time, that we're moving back to a more stable time, and that Canadian companies are well positioned. That's from the horse's mouth. I want also to say that the Financial Post has said, "Canadian oilfield services companies ... are reporting higher prices, buoyant business activity and robust bookings for the remainder of the year." If Albertans believe the opposition, they're just going to get depressed.

Fixed Election Dates

Mr. Fildebrandt: Alberta's fixed election date legislation was passed so that governments could not manipulate the timing of elections for their own narrow, partisan advantage. All parties voted for it as a big step forward for fair elections in Alberta, but as we know, the letter of this legislation did not live up to its spirit when an early election was called last time around. Even though most Albertans would love a chance to vote right now, the law is the law. Will the Premier commit right now, unequivocally that she will respect our fixed election date legislation and not call an early election before 2019?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The question is really exciting, especially coming from somebody who is such a close dance partner with the party that called the last election a year early, so I have to say that we certainly do not intend to call the election early. We have dates in line in the legislation. The question is coming from nowhere, so to be honest, I'm not prepared to answer at this time. But I'm going to keep working hard for my constituency, and I am proud to have the mandate that we do to make life better for Alberta families, and we're going to keep doing that.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Well, riddle me this, Mr. Speaker. Given that you can't help but get the impression that this government is afraid of facing Albertans – they don't face them at town hall meetings ...

The Speaker: Hon. member.

Mr. Fildebrandt: ... and they don't face them when they write their legislation. Given, Mr. Speaker, that the NDP got just 2 per cent of the vote in recent Calgary by-elections and, as you know, 1 per cent in Medicine Hat, this all gives me the impression that the NDP are terrified of facing a single, united Conservative Party in the next election. Will the Premier commit unequivocally that she will stick to the fixed election date and not delay the election until 2020?

Speaker's Ruling Preambles

The Speaker: Hon. member, again, you seem to need more direction, consistency in terms of preambles that you use and the manner in which you do it. I must tell you that there are several people on your side of the House that are excellent at making preambles, and I hope you might get some advice from them.

The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, thank you for the feedback from the member opposite as well as from the third party, which we know called the snap election. Certainly, we are happy to heed his advice with regard to this matter, but at this point this question is coming from nowhere. Again, we're focused on delivering the mandate that Albertans elected us to do, and we are happy to do that. We're not going to address hypothetical scenarios. We're going to keep working to make life better for Alberta families by fulfilling the mandate they gave us, including lowering school fees. We're proud of that.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Well, we're going to have to try again, Mr. Speaker. It's not that the NDP are lying; it's that everything they said made absolutely no sense and they refuse to answer a simple question. I'll ask it again: will they or will they not respect our fixed election date law and commit that they will not delay the next election until 2020?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The only ones talking about election dates in this House are the members opposite. On this side of the House we're working to make sure that we're implementing the mandate that we were given, and we're going to keep doing that. Of course, there are no plans to deviate from the legislation. We're going to keep working to make sure that we make life more affordable, that we protect health and education, services that the members opposite are always pushing us to cut and make sure that we pull $9 billion out of infrastructure, which would impact projects that are happening in the member's own riding. I bet you that he doesn't want to be advocating for that in the middle of an election. If he does want to keep pushing for deep cuts, feel free.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, it's likely this week that we will see the passing of the government's 2017 budget, and the government will accuse us in the opposition of not supporting necessary spending on health care and other essential services if we choose not to vote for their budget, but this is simply untrue. When we vote against the largest debt and deficit in Alberta's history, we're simply representing Albertans across the province who want this government to do a better job, prioritizing fiscal prudence and living within their means. To the Deputy Premier: do you truly believe that this budget respects the priorities of Albertans who believe that fiscal prudence is important?

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, the budget that was tabled by the Minister of Finance has very, very important and clear priorities. It's important to note that these were the priorities this government was elected on, and those are to protect our basic services, to protect our health care, unlike the party that's asking the question, who would have cut $1 billion out of health care on the budget that they ran on and lost the election on.

Mr. Fraser: Given that this government has chosen to tip the scales in favour of unions versus quality private companies when it comes to laundry services and vital plasma collection and production in this province despite the huge potential savings for taxpayers and given that the increase to the corporate income tax is taking $830 a year out of household budgets despite providing less revenue than it did previously, to the same minister: if your priority is really making life more affordable for Albertans, why does it seem that life is becoming more costly for the middle-class Albertan?

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, nothing could be further from the truth. This government is committed to making life more affordable. That's why we froze tuition fees for the third year in a row, unlike the previous government that kept increasing them. We are reducing school fees. We are capping electricity prices, unlike the roller-coaster electricity ride that the previous government took us on. This government is clearly committed to making life more affordable and better for Albertans and their families.

Mr. Fraser: Given that your government has no plan to pay down the debt during your time in office and given that Alberta's GDP shrank by 3.8 per cent in 2016 after shrinking by 3.7 per cent in 2015 and given that a shrinking economy and ballooning debt-servicing costs are going to have a lasting effect on the ability of future governments to appropriately fund important programs, to the same minister: have you given any thought to how your budgeting is going to hurt future generations, and is future generational debt actually a priority for your government? [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. What is important to this government is making sure that in the future our kids have good schools, that we have health care there when we need it, that people can afford child care, that people can make sure that their aging parents are well cared for. I want to say that the Conference Board of Canada, just on this question, projects that Alberta will lead the country in growth in 2017, quite the opposite of what the member is trying to suggest.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Energy Efficiency Programs

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While two-thirds of Albertans are eligible for the carbon levy rebate payments under the climate leadership plan, many of my constituents are concerned that they're not eligible for this rebate. Given the need to support all Albertans affected by the carbon levy, to the Minister of Environment and Parks: what opportunities are there for all Albertans, including those who don't qualify for rebates, to benefit from the carbon levy funds and save money?

The Speaker: The minister of environment and climate change.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. All Albertans do have a chance to save money from the recently announced energy efficiency programs, which include rebates for rooftop solar panels, rebates of up to $3,500 for home improvement products such as insulation, tankless water heaters, and triple-glazed windows. Albertans can also receive in-store and online rebates on a number of products, and the full list of those products is at efficiencyalberta.ca.

Thank you.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that many of my constituents have also been inquiring about how these programs might help their local community organizations with long-needed renovations, to the same minister: how do these programs help community organizations to green their common spaces?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some weeks ago we announced the nonprofit energy efficiency grant which allows nonprofits to undertake audits. In addition to that, we do have the business, nonprofit, and institutional energy savings program, which offers incentives to encourage organizations to choose high-efficiency products. Once an organization has installed those products, they can apply for the rebate to receive a cheque. Once again, all of the details are at efficiencyalberta.ca.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the interest my constituents have shown towards reducing their energy consumption, to the same minister: how can people who are interested in these opportunities sign up?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For example, the residential no-cost install program: many people are taking advantage of that, including people with disabilities, elderly people, new Canadians, and very low-income Albertans. You know, the members opposite continue to make fun of those people for availing themselves of those programs and looking to save themselves money over time, but on this side of the House we want to make life more affordable for everyone. Efficiencyalberta.ca is where people can get more information on those things.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Renewable Energy Land Leases

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last week I had farmers sharing some of their serious concerns about renewable energy projects. Wind and solar energy companies, through unregistered landmen, are approaching these farmers and trying to lock in their property for renewable energy production on their land. Many of these farmers are being simply shown the rich lease payments and royalties, and they are not being given the basic information as to how these leases work or any of the possible negative consequences of these lucrative leases. To the Minister of Energy: what's being done to protect farmers from what have been called terrible contracts?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe I was asked this question last week. A similar answer. We know that there are many farmers and landowners who are excited about the possibilities and opportunities for wind and solar. We've had groups of folks going around the province to advise that there is help available through the AUC or through the Farmers' Advocate. We have some resources out, a nice little checklist of what they need to know before entering into contracts.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that negotiating a lease with a renewable energy company is not the same as negotiating with the oil and gas industry and given that there is no right-of-entry or expropriation process for renewable energy in Alberta, which means that farmers approached by a wind or solar company have the right to say no to wind turbines or solar panels being installed on their land and given, however, that once a contract is signed, their neighbours have no right to stop that same company from building infrastructure on their land to tie the project to the grid, to the minister: what's being done to ensure that these hard-working Albertans are informed of their rights prior to signing any contracts?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, as I mentioned, there are some resources available through the AUC and through the Farmers' Advocate, or have them contact my office, and we can walk them through the process. I would say that if you know that your neighbours are planning or have an interest in that, as a neighbour you'll also find out about your rights. To be clear, contracts do not need to be signed, nor do landowners have to take a project onto their property.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Hanson: I think this would be a great place for a wind turbine, Mr. Speaker.

Given that unlike oil and gas leases landowners involved with renewable energy projects are not able to appeal to the Surface Rights Board if the developer stops paying its leases and given that there is not currently any orphan program that would fund reclaiming old turbines and solar panels in the event that a company became insolvent and given that people have been told by legal counsel that these are the worst contracts they have ever seen, to the Minister of Energy: has this government put ideology and the NDP world view ahead of protecting property rights in Alberta?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, there are resources available. In addition to those resources, I would suggest that if people are interested, they talk to the counties of Vulcan, Cypress, Stettler, the town of Carmangay, Pincher Creek MD, and others. Those are all areas that have these projects, and they all have very positive things to say and would be glad to provide advice on future projects.

Workplace Legislation Review

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, countless employers and business organizations have contacted us expressing serious concern with the consultation process used by the NDP to gather input for changes to the labour code and employment standards. The minister rushed this process, and many stakeholders have expressed concern that this government already knows what the legislation looks like and simply hosted obligatory consultation in a failed attempt to appease them. To the Minister of Labour: will you be introducing legislation which changes either the labour code or employment standards during the current spring sitting of the House?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member opposite for his question about consultation. Whether it's for the MGA or royalty review, our government is getting consultations right. We've heard from hundreds of stakeholders on both consultations, and we will continue to listen to them as we review what we've received.

I'd like to read a quote from a former PC Minister of Labour: my department has embarked upon a six-week consultation process to review the Alberta employment standards legislation. Six weeks, Mr. Speaker, and only an online consultation. The opposition is talking out of both sides of their mouth . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, given that an inadequate consultation process has left many stakeholders feeling that this government is only listening to labour bosses and given that they also feel the government's close relationship with union leadership means that the changes to the labour code and employment standards will lead to heavy-handed, undemocratic changes such as removing the anonymous balloting process, again to the minister: will you be pushing removal of the democratic private ballot currently used to certify unions? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We have received information from nearly 5,000 Albertans, including a thousand employers or employer representatives, countless numbers of written submissions, and we continue to engage. The principles that we are keeping in mind through all of this are fairness and balance, making sure that we can implement process improvements for the benefit of all. I continue to review the feedback we've received to date, and I look forward to making sure that Alberta has fair and updated, modern labour legislation and employment standards.

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, we'll take that as a yes.

Given that the government has yet again failed to properly consult stakeholders holding opinions that do not align with the NDP world view and given that introducing sweeping changes potentially impacting the survival of many businesses across Alberta with little or no consultation shows that this government puts the interests of big labour ahead of small to medium-sized job creators, who have yet to be directly engaged, again to the minister: will you do the right thing, reopen consultation, enhance it, and extend it at least until the end of the current calendar year?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I've been very pleased to engage with small, medium, and large businesses throughout this consultation, including personally meeting with the Alberta Enterprise Group, meeting with chambers on this, and engaging to make sure that we are working with all stakeholders to ensure fair, balanced, and effective workplace legislation for all. We need workplace legislation that works for both businesses and workers because this legislation has not changed since 1988. We have a responsibility to make sure that we have legislation that works for Albertans. The previous government did consultations . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Ray Gibbon Drive

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Half of working residents in St. Albert commute to Edmonton every day. With only a few transportation options and routes this leads to frustration during their daily commute. Given that the Capital Region Board has recognized the significance of twinning Ray Gibbon Drive and given that they have included this project as a top priority, to the Minister of Transportation: how do the priorities of regional bodies like the CRB impact the consideration of projects like Ray Gibbon Drive?

The Speaker: The Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for his pertinent question. Many factors are actually taken into account when we decide long-term road infrastructure plans, including the priorities of municipalities, so I meet regularly with mayors and reeves in the capital region and, for that matter, throughout the province to better understand their infrastructure and transportation needs. As part of the government of Alberta's $29.5 billion capital plan, Transportation is investing more than $5 billion in our provincial highways network to help connect communities and improve safety and travel on our roads.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

First supplemental.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, given the importance of Ray Gibbon Drive to St. Albert and the region, to the same minister: how is the province supporting this vital infrastructure?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given the importance of Ray Gibbon Drive to the plans of St. Albert and region going forward, I want to say that, first of all, it is something that we've been discussing with the city. I've talked to the mayor about this, and they have a plan, a proposal to take over the ownership of Ray Gibbon Drive, and that would result in highway 2 being transferred to the city of St. Albert.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Second supplemental.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that increased routes would facilitate the development on the west side of St. Albert and support the development of local businesses, to the same minister: how is the government supporting my constituents' transportation needs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Well, thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. This government is committed to making sure that the transportation needs of Albertans in St. Albert and throughout the province are met, and that's why we're spending so much money to upgrade the infrastructure throughout the province. We made several investments: building public transit with park-and-ride, funding for electric buses, repaving, and roadwork in a number of areas as well. We're going to continue to invest in this infrastructure so that Albertans can get safely to and from work and family meetings.

Thanks.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, we'll commence in 30 seconds.

The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Agricultural Supply Management Marketing System

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2015 supply-managed commodities accounted for $891.6 million of our agricultural production in Alberta. As a New Democrat I am proud of our dairy sector along with all of our supply-managed industries, that are an important part of our agricultural mix, and as the Albertan MLA representing Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, I'm proud of the many farms that make our province strong. When I put cream in my coffee, when I put cheese on my burger, I know that my food is safe and that it's been produced locally and that it creates good, family-supporting, stable jobs.

There has been a lot of international news lately about supply-managed agriculture in Canada, so it has been with great interest and concern that I have been listening to our leaders.

Working together to determine what supply is needed from the farm to match the demands of families around the table creates a made-in-Canada system, that producers count on for economic sustainability. I visited locally owned farms like the Scotford colony to see what their modern dairy production looks like, where cows and technology come together to create clean and incredibly efficient operations. On the Glasman farm Lenora and Robert from Strathcona county are proud family farmers and continue to farm dairy, beef, and grain on their home quarter while raising three children and volunteering in their local community. They can do this because they have a stable source of income and because they love and take pride in what they do.

On April 21 Alberta's dairy stated: "We're not going to shy away or be bullied from promoting our proudly Canadian product."

Mr. Speaker, our government and our agriculture minister know that our marketing system works for Canada, and I know that we will continue to fight for our farmers and that agriculture will continue to be a centrepiece of a diversified Albertan economy.

Access to Information

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, this NDP government will be remembered as one of the most secretive governments ever to hold office in Alberta, and their track record is only getting worse. November 2016: Privacy Commissioner Jill Clayton states that access to information is nearing a crisis situation in Alberta. February 2017: Clayton again says that the NDP are failing Albertans by imposing unacceptable processing delays, showing a complete lack of respect for freedom of information and for transparency. April 2017: Alberta's Privacy Commissioner states that she is angry and frustrated, with the government working so hard to prevent her from doing her job. Now we have evidence that this government's political staff are systematically meddling with FOIP requests made by the media and opposition parties.

Last month, Mr. Speaker, the Wildrose released a report with 10 recommendations that could help to fix Alberta's broken FOIP system, but did the NDP adopt any of these common-sense solutions? No. Why? Because they aren't serious about improving access to information and transparency. They tried to turn the temperature down on this issue by hiring a few new FOIP staff, but similar to the AIMCo scandal, senior government staffers have been caught with their hand in the cookie jar yet again, this time obstructing and interfering with the FOIP system. The NDP is halfway through this mandate, and all they've done is cultivate a toxic culture of secrecy.

What's worse, Mr. Speaker, is that they're actively working to embed the deplorable actions they once decried. Instead of delaying and interfering with the release of information, they should prioritize making it public. How many times does the Privacy Commissioner, the media, the opposition have to catch this government in the act before they start taking transparency seriously? Albertans are tired of it.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Provincial Election Second Anniversary

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This week will mark two years since the NDP won the right to form government in Alberta: good for the NDP, bad for Alberta. A lot has changed in two years. In two short years the NDP government has taken us from a $1.1 billion budget surplus to two consecutive deficits over $10 billion, with more than half of that going just to keep the government lights on, leaving our children and grandchildren to foot the bill for light bulbs that will long since have burned out by the time they even become taxpayers.

The Finance minister likes to brag about green shoots. I saw green shoots in my wife's garden this weekend but not one as a result of anything this government has done.

In two years the Finance minister's favourite fiscal metric, the debt-to-GDP ratio, has soared from 3.4 per cent in May 2015 to the mind-blowing 13.8 in this year's budget. He brags about maintaining Alberta's tax advantage while actively and systematically destroying it. He has no plan to repay the $71 billion in debt he will strap on the backs of our children, yet he promised in estimates to exactly balance the budget to the dollar in 2024.

In two years Alberta's unemployment rate has gone from 5 to well over 8 per cent. This represents a loss of well over 100,000 full-time jobs compared to 2015. At the same time, there are 61,400 more part-time jobs than there were when this government took office. For all this government's rhetoric about making life better for Alberta families, the only thing they've done is to replace good, mortgage-paying jobs with part-time jobs. For the 88,470 Albertans that are surviving on employment insurance today, a number which is double from what it was two years ago, it's clear the NDP's efforts are not good enough.

Mr. Speaker, things sure have changed in Alberta over the last two years, and we still have another two to go before Albertans can throw this government out of office, as they intend to do. But based on what I hear from people across the province every day who are fed up with the NDP and their massive failures, I am confident we will be in a position to start cleaning up this mess in 2019.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater Constituency Update

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we approach the second anniversary of our government and my own as an MLA, I'd like to take a few moments to reflect on some of the progress that's been made in my own riding of Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

When I was first elected, there were many outstanding issues, some long overdue, that needed to be addressed. For instance, the bridge over the Athabasca River on highway 813 had been in need of replacement since my father was the MLA. Now, thanks to the commitment of our government to make good on years of previous neglect, this is finally happening. The completion of highway 63's twinning and the multiple upgrades and curve reductions on highway 28 have made driving much safer for my constituents and indeed for all those who live and work in northeastern Alberta.

Two years ago Athabasca University's status was uncertain. Now, thanks to our new government, a sustainable future has been assured for the university and for the community that depends on it. Happily, I would need more than two minutes to list all the improvements to health care facilities, schools, and seniors' facilities that we have been fortunate to receive as well. These investments speak well to the government's commitment to the health, education, and well-being of rural Albertans.

The Industrial Heartland is not only of utmost strategic importance to Alberta's long-term prospects; its local importance cannot be overstated. Thanks to our continued support for the North West refinery's phase 1, our petrochemicals diversification program, and, of course, our success in reframing our reputation as a responsible energy producer, investor confidence has been restored and new projects announced. But with increasing development in the Industrial Heartland, traffic has reached critical levels, severely impacting workers, local residents, and jeopardizing future growth. Working closely with municipal and industry partners, we have introduced badly needed intersection improvements to help clear congestion and improve safety.

We've made great progress on these issues and on many others, of course, but there's always much more work that needs to be done, and we will continue . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

National Day of Mourning

Mr. Rosendahl: Mr. Speaker, April 28 was the Day of Mourning. Every year we reflect on and mourn those who have lost their lives or have been injured or disabled as the result of workplace injuries or occupational diseases. We extend our condolences to the family and friends who have lost loved ones and to the co-workers who worked by their sides.

Mr. Speaker, we know that workplace accidents do happen. In 2016 alone Alberta lost 144 men and women to workplace injury or illness. Of those 144, 27 were directly caused by mesothelioma, 19 from asbestosis, and one from silicosis. It is heartbreaking to read of the many workers who have died due to exposure to asbestos because the health risks of asbestos exposure were known for years before the government and industry moved to stop its use. This is why it's so important that laws and regulations regarding the workplace are reviewed and updated constantly.

It is also why I support the current review of our employment standards and labour relations law. Some of these codes have not been updated since 1988. This is simply wrong, Mr. Speaker. It's shocking that some of the opposition members want to delay its review even more. I would also strongly support a review of the Occupational Health and Safety Act. No one should have to fear for their life while they do their job. Our government is committed to this belief, and we've been working to extend safety legislation to workers who were previously exempt. Many workers in my riding of West Yellowhead work in high-risk jobs.

To recognize this Day of Mourning, we should do everything . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

HALO Medical Rescue Helicopter Funding

Mr. Barnes: On July 25, 2016, in southern Alberta a large truck rear-ended another large truck on a country road. HALO air rescue helicopter was called in to save lives that day. When Deandra Zeller was thrown from her horse while caring for cattle, she suffered a brain injury in the middle of a field in the rolling hills of Cypress-Medicine Hat. Travelling by ambulance on bumpy, unpaved farm roads could have put her at risk of further injury, but HALO air rescue was there to transport Deandra to the hospital safely.

In my years representing Cypress-Medicine Hat, I have heard time and again about the heroic work that the front-line responders from HALO do to service my region. HALO rescue shows up when they are needed and saves the lives of critically injured or ill southern Albertans. Rapid rescue response times decrease mortality and increase patient success. HALO rescue is the only dedicated medical rescue helicopter stationed in southern Alberta which can respond within a reasonable time frame.

Mr. Speaker, HALO fills STARS ambulance's blind spot. The only reason that HALO can help people is because of the generous contributions from the corporate, private, ranching sectors and caring donors. This government refuses to cover the high standby costs, only contributing a fee for service. Not only is this life-or-death service underfunded by this government; the NDP's war on economic prosperity and implementation of the carbon tax have only made it more difficult for Albertans to give generously to charities and not-for-profits.

Cypress-Medicine Hat has given so much to this province monetarily with the development of our natural gas resources, so I am left with just one question for the NDP: why is my part of the province treated with so little respect? The Medicine Hat region and HALO air rescue deserve to be a priority.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Private Bills I would like to report that the Standing Committee on Private Bills has had certain bills under consideration and wishes to report as follows: the committee recommends that Bill Pr. 1, Calgary Jewish Centre Amendment Act, 2017, and Bill Pr. 2, Paula Jean Anderson Adoption Termination Act, proceed in the Assembly. I request the concurrence of the Assembly in this report.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Do the members concur in the report? All those in agreement please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Speaker: All opposed say no. So ordered.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I think we'll almost make it here, but in an abundance of caution I will request unanimous consent from the House to continue past 3 o'clock to finish the Routine.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to table five copies of a petition sponsored by KAIROS urging the government of Alberta to implement a curriculum for K to 12 that is in line with the Truth and Reconciliation Commission of Canada. They recommend consulting and collaborating with survivors, indigenous people, and educators to make mandatory age-appropriate curricula on residential schools, treaties, and indigenous people's history and contemporary contributions to Canada.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Notices of Motions

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my colleague the hon. minister responsible for democratic renewal I would like to give oral notice of a bill to be introduced tomorrow, that bill being Bill 11, Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Amendment Act, 2017. I never thought I would be introducing a Bill 11, but here it is.

3:00 Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table five copies of written answers to questions which I was required to take notice of during estimates for the Ministry of Energy at the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship on April 11, 2017.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. One is a letter from Synergy Projects construction professionals Senior Vice-president Barry Robertson sent to the Premier requesting an enhancement and extension of the Alberta Labour Relations Code review.

My second tabling is from Darryl Wiebe of Kerr Interior Systems Ltd., the president of that organization, sending a letter to the Premier requesting an enhanced and extended review of the Alberta Labour Relations Code.

The Speaker: Any others? Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising to table five copies of a letter I wrote to the Government House Leader on the 9th of March quoting something he said on the 16th of March, 2004, where he refers to the Public Affairs Bureau as a Tory propaganda organ.

Thank you.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Ms Hoffman, Deputy Premier, Minister of Health, pursuant to the Regional Health Authorities Act the Alberta Health Services 2015-16 annual report.

Orders of the Day

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to request unanimous consent to waive SO 8 to allow immediate consideration of third reading of Bill 202, Protecting Victims of Non-consensual Distribution of Intimate Images Act.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 202 Protecting Victims of Non-consensual Distribution of Intimate Images Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure and pride to rise to move third and final reading of Bill 202, Protecting Victims of Non-consensual Distribution of Intimate Images Act.

I want to first thank members on all sides of the House for their support for this private member's bill.

Mr. Speaker, I originally proposed this bill after discussions with my oldest daughter, Amelia. I hope that this bill will make Alberta a little better for all Alberta children across this incredibly great province.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

I and many members have spoken at length about the harm that the non-consensual sharing of intimate images can inflict on victims. This bill aims through tort law, school discipline, and other measures to limit the harm that is caused. This Assembly has all spoken in support of standing on the side of victims and giving them recourse when their trust has been violated in the worst possible way.

As I have mentioned, this bill creates tort law for victims of this crime so that they can get reparations from those who commit such acts. It contains provisions so that financial gains that were a result of distributing these pictures can be awarded to the victim, not to the perpetrator.

Earlier I believe someone from the other side of the House noted that a website founder distributing such images was making $30,000 a month on advertising revenues from distributing these pictures. Thankfully, that particular website was shut down, but many more have sprouted up to take their place, unfortunately.

I also want to thank the members on the other side who proposed an amendment which will have the effect of tightening up this aspect of the legislation. I think that the amendment is a good example of how we can improve legislation by carefully considering what has been proposed.

Lastly, this bill will encourage fair and consistent punishment across Alberta schools for students who engage in such behaviours. This will discourage students who engage in distribution, and their suspension will send a message to other students who engage in such behaviour that this will have real consequences. This message will be sent in a fair and consistent manner, Madam Speaker.

The number of images that we capture today in this modern world is both astounding and, to be honest, a little overwhelming. In 2011 it was estimated that Facebook had over 10,000 times the number of photos that the Library of Congress does, and this was six years ago. The advent of camera phones means that we are also capturing more images than ever. This has had some undesirable effects such as people becoming addicted to their phones and the easy sharing of some images that were never meant to be shared, Madam Speaker.

The unwanted sharing of intimate images can have a devastating effect on people's lives. I have already outlined previous cases in Canada of young persons taking their own lives because intimate images of them were shared. It is unacceptable, Madam Speaker. We shall not and will not stand for those types of outcomes.

The passage of this bill will send a message that this Assembly and all Albertans stand with the victims of this heinous practice. I want to make it clear, Madam Speaker, that although within this debate we have spoken a lot about juveniles both as victims and perpetrators, they are not the only ones that are affected by this. Anyone of any age can be affected by such behaviours.

Unfortunately, there is not much data on this subject in this country, Madam Speaker, so please allow me to cite a study from our neighbours. McAfee in the U.S. conducted a study in late 2012 which surveyed 1,182 adults who were aged from 18 to 54. The study revealed that even amongst adults, when relationships break down, some partners, about 1 in 10, had threatened to send intimate images of their partners or their ex-partners to their ex-partners' friends and employers. About 6 per cent of those partners actually followed through with this threat. This is truly tragic. In addition, 13 per cent of the survey participants have had their personal content leaked to others without permission. This may be a password, bank account number, social security number, in addition to intimate images.

Despite the seeming prevalence of these unfortunate acts, the legislation has not kept up with the technological and societal change that we have experienced. This legislation will let us close the gap just a little bit and make Alberta a safer place for our children and indeed all Albertans.

However, legislation is not the only recourse, nor is it a sufficient recourse. We must impart upon our children safe online practices to help them navigate this increasingly complex world. That is not only the responsibility of parents but schools and other mentors as well. Operating safely online these days is just as important as teaching children how to cross the street safely.

As I've mentioned, Madam Speaker, the inspiration for this bill came in conversations with my daughter. It is a parental responsibility that we all should take seriously, and I think we can all agree that it is something that destroys our youth's lives. I'm hoping to see that this bill will come to fruition.

I want to thank the members opposite and the members in the third party and the other independent parties for their support of this bill. I'd like to also think that this highlights that together in the House here we can benefit Albertans' lives and make Alberta a safer place.

With that, Madam Speaker, I move to end my speech. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Madam Speaker. And, once again, thank you to the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake for Bill 202, which I have said before in this Chamber I think is outstanding. I particularly love the fact that his first consultation was with his daughter. I think that it's incredibly important to bring in the voices of children and, well, of course, to listen to your daughter.

Bill 202 fits nicely with the intent of Bill 2, actually, introduced by the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General, and is consistent with our government's commitment to supporting survivors of sexual violence. I think it's really important to be careful with the language that we use, and it's important to use the word "survivor."

By working together, I think we are sending a very clear message that these extreme violations of trust, as described by the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, are violations of trust and privacy, and they are completely unacceptable. This is particularly true for youth and members of the communities that have historically been marginalized. We hope this bill will go a long way towards helping to comfort survivors of this type of behaviour and discourage others from engaging in these terrible violations of trust and privacy.

Bill 202 also follows in the steps of the federal government's Protecting Canadians from Online Crime Act, which made it a criminal offence to distribute these images without consent.

As I mentioned earlier, the bill aligns nicely with our government's commitment to support survivors of sexual violence and reinforces the commitment made in this session when we introduced Bill 2, An Act to Remove Barriers for Survivors of Sexual and Domestic Violence. Amongst other things, Bill 2 removes limitation periods for sexual misconduct where the victim is in an intimate relationship, a dependant, or a minor. Coupled with Bill 202, this would ensure that someone who may not feel comfortable pursuing a lawsuit immediately when intimate images are distributed without their consent – we all know that survivors may indeed need extra time until they feel they are healed enough to pursue this.

Bill 202 also creates many good tools for survivors to seek remedies from people that share images without their permission. Just the sharing of the image without their consent is enough. They don't have to show that it led to public shaming or job loss or even mental anguish, and this is a positive move. Madam Speaker, this bill is a very good initiative. It provides additional tools for survivors of revenge pornography to seek damages against the person who distributed the images.

However, I'd be remiss if I didn't point out that I was also concerned by the headline in the Wildrose press release on this bill. The headline warned that a picture lasts forever. While this is certainly true and the warning caution is appropriate for youth, we should ensure that our primary message is clear. It is absolutely unacceptable to exploit someone's right to privacy by distributing intimate images without their consent. The focus of this bill itself is in the right place, on empowering survivors after a serious violation of trust, but we need to send a very clear message, and we need to support survivors with that clear message. And that message is that the people who are in the wrong are the ones that share the images. It's not the people that choose to share the images or send the images.

You know, I also want to say that I think one of the really reinforcing things about this bill is that it is one more step towards combating cyberbullying. I think, obviously, as the member said earlier, that social media and smart phones are very popular, very addictive – in fact, I see lots of people using them at this very moment – but I think that it's important that we address some of the problems that are associated. I think about how easy and disturbing and hurtful it is when people steal images from our own sites to create stupid memes with stupid headlines on them to insult opposition members or government members. I think about how much that hurts. Translate that to a very intimate and private image, the kind that we're referring to when we talk about this revenge porn.

I think this is a very good start. It sends great messages to our children and, hopefully, to all of us. Once again, I would like to thank the member for Bill 202 and again commend his outstanding consultation with his daughter and his community and, of course, other organizations and just say that I'm very happy to support this, and I can't wait for it to pass.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's with great pleasure that I rise today to speak on Bill 202, Protecting Victims of Non-consensual Distribution of Intimate Images Act. I'm proud to stand and offer my support for this common-sense bill brought forward by my hon. colleague from Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

In a consistently and ever-advancing technological world now more than ever it is important that our laws match real-life circumstances. It is a simple reality that children and some adults choose to use their smart phones for snapping intimate pictures of themselves for whatever reasons those may be. And while, obviously, these private pictures should stay just that – private – in this day and age there are very few things which do not end up on the Internet. When intimate images are shared without the person's consent, the effects can be extremely traumatic. We have seen what online bullying attacks have done to victims like Amanda Todd. Young people are increasingly exchanging intimate images, which may later become fodder for humiliating cyberbullying attacks, with these images spreading quickly and often uncontrollably.

This is something the former Harper government recognized when they brought in the federal Criminal Code violations against acts of cyberbullying. This bill expands on the Conservative principles of putting victims first by creating the provincial tort law necessary to seek financial compensation and return any profits from said photos to the victim.

This bill also recognizes that these are serious incidents which are happening within our schools by creating legislation which empowers the principals and individual school boards to deal with issues of nonconsensual image distribution.

I would like to read a passage from the government of Canada's website on cyberbullying and intimate images. This passage helps to provide the context of just how widespread the issue is. I'll table a copy tomorrow, of course.

A recent survey of adults between the ages of 18 and 54 found that 1 in 10 ex-partners have threatened to expose intimate photos of their ex on-line, and according to the survey, these threats have been carried out in 60% of the cases. With respect to young people, an online survey of 1,280 respondents (653 teens ages 13-19 and 627 young adults aged 20-26) in 2008 commissioned by the National Campaign to Prevent Teen and Unplanned Pregnancy found that 20% of teens and 33% of young adults had sent nude pictures of themselves via text or email (a practice referred to as “sexting”). A 2012 study published in the American journal Archives of Pediatric and Adolescent Medicine that surveyed 948 high school students in Texas, also found that 28% of the respondents had engaged in sexting. A third recent study of 606 high school students at a single private school, representing nearly the entire student body, found that nearly 20% sent a sexually explicit image of themselves, and that 25% indicated that they had forwarded such an image to others.

This information clearly highlights the need for the laws to catch up to the technology.

As shadow minister for Justice and Solicitor General I’ve been proud to see how all parties in this Assembly have worked together to move forward to help put our victims first. It has been refreshing to listen to the thoughtful debate and hear some personal experience of Albertans and members of this Assembly.

I again urge all my colleagues in this Assembly to rise and support the MLA for Bonnyville-Cold Lake’s private member’s bill, Bill 202. Together we can help create the legislation necessary to protect victims of nonconsensual distribution of intimate images.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you. It’s a pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 202. You know, it’s not every day that the Assembly has the opportunity to work so well together, but I think that when it does happen, it is always a pleasure to be a part of. We’ve seen this take place on a number of occasions. I think that on an issue of such importance, when it comes to providing protections for those who are involved in such horrible crimes, involved in ways that some of the most intimate and sensitive portions of our lives are exposed publicly, it is good to see that our legislation here in the province of Alberta is catching up with many other jurisdictions.

I’d like to thank my colleague from Bonnyville-Cold Lake for spearheading this initiative. I’d like to thank members of the Chamber for supporting what really is a good idea. It’s just so important, whether it’s raising the level of conversation, whether it’s changing legislation, that we do everything that we can in this Assembly to protect those who are survivors of crimes like this and that we collectively raise the bar and ensure that we do our part so that these types of horrific acts can’t take place in the future.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I look forward to the passage of the legislation.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak?

Seeing none, I’ll call on the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake to close debate.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I have to say that hearing some of the insights that all of the members within this Legislature have brought forward to Alberta, Albertans specifically, regarding the sharing of intimate images with nonconsensual, I guess, direction is something that is heartwarming, that we can all work together as a group. What happens is that it shows that in Alberta when all of us work together, we can actually strengthen legislation to the point where we’re excited to pass this legislation. I myself am honoured to be the one that brought forward Bill 202. [interjections] Thank you.

The fact that the idea stemmed from a conversation I had with my oldest daughter is something that shows that real-life issues come forward that we are not thinking may affect us, but we don’t realize that it affects others so much. I will tell you that when I look at this bill and the fact that we had one of the members from the government put an amendment forward and that we also had suggestions from both the Ministry of Justice and the Ministry of Education on strengthening this bill, it is something that we can all take pride in moving forward, the fact that we can really move together as a cohesive group.

I would encourage everybody in this Chamber to vote for this bill. I believe that we will all be strengthened because of it, and I look forward to seeing this pass and put into legislation and that protection for victims is put forward in Alberta regarding the sharing of intimate images. I thank everybody for their suggestions and look forward to seeing how this turns out.

Thank you. I move to close debate.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Written Questions

[The Acting Clerk read the following written questions, which had been accepted]

Public Property Theft

Q11. Mr. Cooper:

What is the total dollar amount of public property lost due to theft in each ministry in each fiscal year from 2012-13 to 2016-17?

Budget Consultations

Q12. Mr. Fildebrandt:

What groups were given invitations to the government's Budget 2017 consultations?

Government Staffing

Q13. Mr. Fildebrandt:

As of March 1, 2017, how many individuals were employed by the government, and of that number, how many were classified as managers or above?

Public Affairs Bureau Managing Director

Q14. Mr. Fildebrandt:

Was an open competition held to fill the most recent vacancy of the managing director for the Public Affairs Bureau, and if so, how many days was it advertised, where was it advertised, and how many applications were received?

Pension Plans

Q15. Mr. Fildebrandt:

As of March 1, 2017, what was the unfunded liability for each of the following public-sector pension plans: the local authorities pension plan, the public service pension plan, the management employees pension plan, and the special forces pension plan?

Carbon Offsets

Q16. Mr. MacIntyre:

Has the government spent any money on carbon offsets, and if so, what is the amount, broken down by ministry, in each fiscal year from 2013-14 to 2016-17?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Automated Traffic Enforcement Tickets

Q3. Mr. Cyr asked that the following question be accepted.

How much has the government spent on administering municipal automated traffic enforcement tickets in each fiscal year from 2010-11 to 2016-17?

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak about my written question regarding how much the government has spent on administering municipal automated traffic enforcement tickets. This government has talked the big talk when it comes to transparency, and this serves as yet another example of the government failing to provide Albertans with their own information. These numbers should not be hard to find. They are line items in the budget and should be able to be tracked. In all of my years and experience there has been one fact that I've come to learn, that the government is very good at determining what you owe the government. Why are we not tracking and reviewing our government programs to evaluate cost-effectiveness? It should go without saying that the government should know its administration costs. How else do you plan a budget? I hope the minister endeavours to find this information out. When they do, please table it in this House.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I am rising to ask for this written question to be rejected. My department does not have a way of accurately determining the answer to this question. Court clerks are involved to varying degrees in processing tickets but also carry out duties on other court matters. There is no way for the government to track, or they do not track at the time, the amount spent on administering specific types of tickets. Rather, we track the total amount spent on administering all types of tickets. If the member is interested in the answer to that question, it's found in our budget.

Government staff at all levels are essentially involved in this, but their duties will involve some ticket processing and some other processing. Furthermore, judges and justices of the peace deal with a variety of matters, including traffic tickets, but all of their time can't necessarily be attributed to these matters. All of this makes it difficult to determine the specific amount spent; therefore, I ask that this question be rejected.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake to close.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's very sad to hear that this question is going to be rejected when it looks like we're being burdened by our photoradar system. It is important to understand the cost and the fact that this system seems to be something that really needs to be reviewed. I believe in putting forward this question that this is something the government should know, and if it doesn't know it, then I believe it's something that the government needs to close the gap on so that we can understand or better understand the implications that photoradar have on our entire Alberta justice system.

Please vote for my written question.

Correctional Services Protocols

Q4. Mr. Cyr asked that the following question be accepted.
What are the protocols for Alberta correctional services staff when dealing with an inmate in isolation?

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak on a written question regarding our correctional services staff when it comes to inmate isolation. Our corrections staff play a vital role in our justice system. They put their lives on the line just like our police officers, and it is important that they keep our corrections facilities running efficiently and safely. I'm a great believer in training, and the correctional staff, both sworn and nonsworn, can never get enough. We have all heard at one time or another that learning is a lifelong process, and this is an adage that is important for all of us to remember as legislators and policy-makers. This question will provide the Legislature with information into how we deal with our most violent offenders and the procedures they use to secure them in prison. We want to ensure that our front-line staff are properly trained and that the procedures they are using are in the best interests of everyone.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm proposing that we amend this written question. The amendment is simply to replace the word "isolation" with the word "segregation" as "segregation" is the term used in correctional services. As the question is currently worded, nothing would be responsive to it because that's not the term that's used.

Madam Speaker, I'd also like to note that I'm very pleased to see the members opposite, you know, referring to the important and vital work that our correctional services officers do. They work very hard each and every day to ensure that they're keeping the population of this province safe. With an expanding inmate population and increasing incompatibles in the populations, their jobs are very, very difficult. We work hard to ensure that they are trained in all matters to deal with all aspects of their job, but despite that, their jobs can be incredibly stressful and difficult for them, which is why it's so important that they have access to things like different forms of peer support for the difficult job that they do, which can often cause sort of emotional difficulties for them. So I thank the member very much for noting that.

That being said, the reason we're looking to amend this is because "segregation" is the term used, so then there will be policies responsive to that. Inmates are placed in either a disciplinary or administrative segregation under certain circumstances. We'll be happy to answer that question.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to Written Question 4, moved by my colleague from Bonnyville-Cold Lake. I would just like to thank the minister for the amendment. I think it's reasonable. I think, you know, that any time the department or the government works to try to find a solution to get the answer to the question that we're asking for is always appreciated. I know that this information is very important, not only to my colleague from Bonnyville-Cold Lake but to Albertans, to see the work that's taking place in our correctional facilities.

I might just add that I have a sneaking suspicion that the government isn't going to be quite as co-operative with some of the other written questions and motions for returns. I would just like to point out that the Minister of Justice has found a way to find a solution to get the information that's so critically important to Albertans. I encourage all members of the front bench to seek her guidance and leadership on these sorts of issues. Hopefully, as we progress today to what are some very important issues before the Assembly, we will be able to find compromises.

I encourage all members of the Assembly to vote in favour of the amendment.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak?

The Acting Speaker: Back on the original. Are there any members wishing to speak on the amended question?

Impaired Driving Charges

Q5. Mr. Cooper asked on behalf of Mr. Cyr that the following question be accepted.

Does the government collect information on the number of impaired driving charges that are due to marijuana, and if so, how many charges have been laid in each fiscal year from 2010-11 to 2016-17?

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise on behalf of my colleague from Bonnyville-Cold Lake to speak to Written Question 5. As you know, we have seen significant progress, if that's what you'd call it, from the federal government with respect to the Prime Minister's commitment to legalize marijuana, as we all know, next July 1.

There seems, unfortunately, to be a lot more questions than answers with respect to the announcement that we just saw in the last 10 days or so around what legalization is exactly going to look like, and I think it's very important that we progress in a manner that is reasonable with as many facts as possible. It sounds like a lot of the questions that people are asking with respect to federal and provincial jurisdiction, many of those will wind up on the shoulders of the provincial government, so it will be interesting to see how this government navigates what will certainly be some very interesting waters.

The heart of the question in many respects is to try and identify information and the hard facts about keeping our roads safe, and it's critically important that no matter what happens through the legalization process of marijuana, that is one of our primary concerns, we keep the roads safe. We need to find ways that we ensure that we're keeping impaired drivers off our streets and keeping all of those others safe.

It's important finding out how many driving charges are currently being issued for marijuana impairment. We need to be able to monitor the situation to see how trends may be increasing or decreasing. It is particularly important as we move toward legalization to see if, in fact, those sorts of impaired driving charges would increase postlegalization, so it's very important that we have a point to measure now.

I understand that this data may not be readily available and that it's possible that our current laws might not differentiate between the types of impaired charges, but I think that it's critically important that we do whatever work we can to ensure that we have the best information possible so that the Justice minister has the best opportunity to make the best available decision, not just for the Assembly but for all of Alberta in ensuring that our roads are kept safe.

It's my hope that the Justice minister can in fact provide this information, and I look forward to the response.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I am rising today to ask that this written question be rejected. As the hon. member quite correctly pointed out, all impaired driving charges regardless of reason for impairment, whether it's due to cannabis, alcohol, or any other drug, would fall under section 253(1)(a) of the Criminal Code, which means that those charges would encompass everything. That would require us to go through individual cases to determine what those exact numbers are.

Impairment charges can also occur due to a number of substances and/or a combination of substances. For instance, we know from speaking with authorities in Colorado that after legalization they noticed that impaired drivers suspected of cannabis impairment were also frequently impaired by other substances such as alcohol. As a result, it's difficult to separate these out. It's also true that officers may not know the drug of impairment despite laying charges based on signs of impairment, so that also makes it difficult to come up with these exact numbers.

It would be difficult to provide accurate numbers. However, I have to note that the hon. member is actually also correct in saying that we are going to have to figure out, going forward, a way to handle this better. We will be working on that with my officials as we work towards legalization. As he has pointed out, there are a significant number of issues, and there is a lot of work to do in the timeframe we have been provided. One of our top three priorities is to ensure that we are keeping our roads safe as this legalization process occurs. We're very glad to see that the federal government shares this goal, and we will keep working with them on this.

Unfortunately, Madam Speaker, we don't have the information available at this time, so I'm asking to reject this question, but we will be working in future to ensure that we have adequate data to keep Albertans and our roads safe.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak?

Seeing none, I'll ask the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills to close.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I guess it's a pleasure to rise and speak to Written Question 5 in closing debate. I think it's rather unfortunate that we don't have this type of information. It's very clear, as the minister pointed out, that there are various forms of impairment, and it would be reasonable that we take the necessary steps to focus our attention on those various types of impairment.

We see significant work done by organizations like MADD, specifically about driving impaired by alcohol and about the risks of drinking and driving, but without this sort of information, without this very critical information about how other forms of impairment affect the safety of our streets, it doesn't allow for that same sort of advocacy. It doesn't allow for that same sort of baseline information that's so critically important to good policy-making. I think it's a real disappointment that we're not going to be able to get this information, that we're not going to have access to these very important stats.

Madam Speaker, you'll know that this government has a horrible track record when it comes to access to information. While I can appreciate that this particular piece of information may not be solely in their purview in terms of them not providing it, at every turn we see this government really letting Albertans down when it comes to access to information. Now we have another case where it's going to be difficult to make policy decisions because we don't have the statistics on impairment with respect to marijuana or other forms of impairment.

I encourage, implore, call upon the Minister of Justice to consider these sorts of questions as she may be making decisions in the future with respect to the data that they do or don't collect and how through the legalization process it's going to be critical to finding out if trends are increasing or decreasing, if our roads are more safe or less safe. We all have a duty to ensure that that is the case.

While I can appreciate the fact that the information may not have been kept, I'm certain that with the appropriate amount of research we could go back and find that information. Perhaps that would be cost prohibitive. As such, I certainly encourage the government to keep this very, very, very important information so that we can all make the best available decisions on a go-forward basis with respect to keeping our streets safe.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[Written Question 5 lost]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Inmate Injuries

Q6. Mr. Cyr asked that the following question be accepted.

In each fiscal year from 2010-11 to 2016-17 how many incidents were there in Alberta correctional and remand centres that resulted in serious injury to inmates?

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is important for the public to know that our prisons are being monitored and that people charged and convicted are safe from violence. Understanding how the systems work and what the current state of our prison system is is as important for us as parliamentarians as it is for Albertans. We need access to this type of information so that we all can make a better decision when it comes to keeping our guards and inmates safe. Public scrutiny of this data will add further scrutiny to a very important piece of the judicial system.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm proposing an amendment to this written question. The amendment is simply to add the word "assault" before the word "incidents." Unfortunately, "incidents" is a broad term that would not provide meaningful results. It would also potentially capture some things that we maybe don't want to capture, which includes, you know, people who've had an accidental fall or people who've had a medical incident in the correctional facility, which does happen sometimes as well. My understanding is that specifying “assault incidents” is acceptable to the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake and would provide the information that he is interested in. Therefore, I am proposing that we move forward with this amendment.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, Minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd like to thank the Minister of Justice for moving forward with clarity for this. I think that it would have been, I guess, unfortunate information if we would have gotten a massive lump of incidents. It would have really meant very little in the grand scope, so I thank the minister for moving forward and ensuring that we get the information that we are looking to get out of this written question.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on the amendment.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Acting Speaker: We are now back on the amended question. Anybody wishing to speak?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake to close.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm looking forward to seeing exactly the serious assaults that are happening within our correctional facilities so that we can see the results of what exactly is going on within our facilities. I know that there have been two written questions that we weren't able to get answers to, and that's unfortunate, but we got two that we did get answers to. Again, I would like to thank the Minister of Justice even though I didn't get everything I wanted.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[Written Question 6 as amended carried]

Motions for Returns

[The Acting Clerk read the following motions for returns, which had been accepted]

Carbon Levy Impact

M6. Mr. MacIntyre:

A return showing copies of all economic impact assessments and consultation reports prepared by the government between May 24, 2015, and March 1, 2017, regarding the carbon levy.

Policy Co-ordination Office Deputy Minister

M13. Mr. Cooper:

A return showing a copy of the current job description for the deputy minister of the policy co-ordination office.

Ministerial Travel

M14. Mr. Cooper:

A return showing copies of all current protocols surrounding the proposal and selection process for approving ministers' out-of-province travel plans.

A return showing copies of the current job descriptions for all positions in the Public Affairs Bureau.

Midwives in Alberta

M20. Mrs. Pitt:

A return showing copies of all documents prepared by or on behalf of the government between March 1, 2015, and March 1, 2017, relating to plans to increase the number of midwives practising in Alberta.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

FOIP Request Processing

M1. Mr. Cooper moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all documents relating to Alberta Justice's role in processing requests made to other government ministries under the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to Motion for a Return 1. Over the past number of days and weeks we have seen significant toing and froing from this government speaking specifically about how incredible they are with respect to the FOIP process and how much better they are getting, yet we continue to see the Privacy Commissioner tell a very different story. We have seen the Department of Justice described as rogue. I had the opportunity to provide a member's statement today about this government and the way that they have interacted with the FOIP system.

We have seen the Privacy Commissioner speak about a crisis situation. We've seen the Privacy Commissioner speak about unacceptable processing delays. She refers to two departments in her report, one being the Premier's office and the other being the Department of Justice, engaging in the freedom of information requests process in a manner that some would say is unbecoming of the government. They are putting in place large amounts of unacceptable processing delays: those are the Privacy Commissioner's words, not mine. The Privacy Commissioner has also spoken about how she's angry and frustrated with respect to how the government is preventing her from doing her job.

I know I asked a question the week prior about the importance of access to information. This government likes to blame the last government. But, Madam Speaker, what happened and what's happening is that the Privacy Commissioner in her report said that she had hoped that when there was a change in government, there would be a change in culture around secrecy and access to information, but in fact it's gotten worse. I'm just speculating here, but given the fact that it doesn't sound as though we're going to get full co-operation around this particular issue, again, it's this troubling trend around a lack of transparency, a lack of desire by this government to be open and transparent about freedom of information. This type of information is very important.

One of the reasons why we asked this question is because we actually FOIPed this information, and Justice had said that it's not possible or it came in a very redacted form. The great thing about the Assembly, Madam Speaker – and you'll know this better than anyone in the Chamber – is the ability that the Speaker has to call for documents or the ability that the Assembly has to call for documents. And if it's the will of the Assembly, it can happen even if Justice has some reservations, even if cabinet has some concerns. If people inside the Chamber, if members that are speaking on behalf of their constituents are concerned about issues around access to information, this is the opportunity to ensure that we can get the access to information, that is so important, that Albertans are calling for.

I know it's hard to believe because from time to time FOIP isn't the most interesting topic of the day, but in fact there are people in the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills that, because they know I'm a passionate advocate on this particular issue, have come to the office and are starting to share stories on an individual level about how they are having such a hard time getting access to information and how they're disappointed that the government isn't as open and transparent as they ought to be. Certainly, I hope that whatever the government has to say about this very important question, they will be able to in fact provide the information just specifically about Alberta Justice's role in processing the requests made.

[Mr. Sucha in the chair]

Not only is it important today, but just today in a CBC article, that has been widely shared on social media, it speaks very specifically about Alberta Justice's role. I'll just pull up a quote from the article about Alberta Justice's role in running political interference on freedom of information. The journalist FOIPed a number of questions, and it actually took over a year for him to get that information back. He thought that was ridiculous – I share his opinion in that case – so he actually FOIPed his FOIP about how this was possible, around why it took so long.

One of the things it says – and I'm happy to table the article in a written format tomorrow – is: "My ADM, Gerald Lamoureux, has advised me that the Ministry's Office would like to receive [copies] of records release packages for Access to Information Requests made by Opposition Parties and the media," reads an e-mail from Richard Marks, the director of FOIP records management. If this isn't a clear example of Alberta Justice politically interfering with the FOIP process, I don't know that there has been a more clear example of this. It should be concerning to every member of this Chamber.

At one point in time members of that front bench spoke adamantly in this House. I remember a pointed exchange between the now Government House Leader and the then minister, the Deputy Premier at the time, Mr. Lukaszuk, and them having some very heated exchanges about the Premier's office at the time engaging in political interference in the FOIP process. Now we have evidence of that taking place under this NDP government. They promised to do things differently, Mr. Speaker, and what we have is them doing the exact same.

We have it in the form of FOIP requests. We have clear evidence of political interference, in this case the ADM suggesting that all requests from media or the opposition parties need to go through the ministry. A FOIP request should be blind to the writer. It shouldn't matter if it's coming from the media or the opposition or members of the public. They should be treated the same, not that they should be going back to Justice officials or any other, the Premier's office or otherwise, to manage the political risk.

It is more than a bit disappointing. I hope that the information that we've asked for will be provided in its fullest extent. I hope that they won't hide under the guise of solicitor-client privilege. We've already seen them using a wide swath to protect themselves and the Privacy Commissioner speaking out at length about that. We spoke about that in the last 10 days as well.

I look forward to hearing the minister provide a full and robust response to providing all the information that is so important to the people of Alberta.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak to this particular motion, and I'm thrilled to get a chance to address all of the comments that the member opposite made. Certainly, it is the case that the CBC published an article today. They've quite helpfully included a link to the e-mail in question, which says that here is a copy of the information "released" – past tense – clearly making the case that, you know, the minister's office was being told that information had been released at some time in the past. Absent a time machine, that makes it pretty much impossible for me to interfere with anything at that stage.

Mr. Speaker, I think I'd like to make it clear, given the allegations being made in the House today, that there is no political interference occurring. It's not possible to interfere with something that has happened in the past. If they say that this is information that was sent out in the past, we can't possibly be interfering. [interjection] Yes. It does say that. In fact, helpfully, the article links to the e-mail in question.

Mr. Speaker, I think these allegations are just a little bit absurd. You know, there have been concerns around privilege for a long time. I absolutely agree that that has been the case. I can absolutely tell the House full stop that there has been no political interference. It is the case that ministers' offices get a heads-up on already approved documents. There is no asking for what they think about the documents. There's none of that. They're simply provided, potentially, with a package, in certain circumstances, saying that this is the information that has been approved and is going to whoever the claimant is. There is no political interference at that stage, and I don't think that's a very fair allegation.

It certainly is the case that sometimes ministers are called to respond to such documents, and we like to be prepared to do so because we have a great interest in transparency and ensuring that the public gets all of the necessary information. So, Mr. Speaker, I think it's totally fair for ministers to be versed in their portfolios and prepared and ready to speak to and address any concerns that come up in the public because, honestly, I think that's our job.

I am proposing today an amendment to this, and I'll just go a little bit into detail on why I'm proposing this particular amendment. As you will be aware, Mr. Speaker, Justice provides lawyers who provide legal advice on a lot of subjects. It is often the case that access to that legal advice would be, obviously, extremely beneficial to parties on the other side of cases. It's often the case that the government will have some very pricey litigation. I think specifically of tobacco litigation. That has been at issue a lot. That litigation is worth billions of dollars to the taxpayers of Alberta. At the end of the day, that billions of dollars is important. We're in a situation where, you know, those health care costs have gone out the door. We've paid for those health care costs, and potentially there can be some recovery. That's in the interest of all Albertans, having that money come back from tobacco companies, who caused the injury in the first place, instead of having taxpayers bear the burden of that. I think that all sides of the House should be able to agree that it is in the interest of Albertans to ensure that that litigation proceeds and that the government is on its best foot to be able to proceed in that litigation.

Mr. Speaker, it's obviously the case, you know, that opposing parties are seeking privileged documents about those cases in order to improve their position in litigation and to impact negatively the position of not just the government but all Albertans, which is who, at the end of the day, the government acts for. We have an interest in protecting that information. It's absolutely critical. The interests of Albertans and billions of dollars in various litigation suits are important, and I think that they would expect us and do expect us to protect those interests. That's exactly what we're going to do, which is why we are amending this.

The amendment would add to the end of the motion the phrase "excluding documents containing legal advice." Essentially, what we want to exclude is any documents that contain legal advice. I think I've outlined in fairly graphic detail the reasons for that. I have no concerns with providing the documents relating to the role of Justice and Solicitor General in assisting other ministries with the FOIP requests they receive, subject, obviously, to those documents which contain legal advice. Again, the amendments are only to ensure that documents which are subject to privilege are not included in the motion.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I'm actually quite happy with the work that Justice officials have been doing. I instructed them over a year ago to go through and try to take a more reasonable and holistic approach to claiming privilege. There had been some concerns that privilege was being overclaimed, that documents that were not in fact subject to solicitor-client privilege – just to be clear, solicitor-client privilege occurs when actual advising is occurring, when somebody is asking questions of their lawyer, when the lawyer is giving them advice or answering those questions. It doesn't occur every time someone who's a lawyer happens to be in a room or on an e-mail. I have asked them to make sure that they're claiming privilege in an appropriate way and that they're claiming privilege in a consistent and rational manner so that it's applied the same to everything, so that there is equal application so that we can protect Albertans' interests in certain types of litigation while simultaneously ensuring that we're also protecting their interests in ensuring that they have access to information that they have a right to. We've been doing, I think, a better job of balancing that.

I think another critical piece of this has to do with staffing. Over the past number of years the number of FOIP requests received by the government has increased by several hundred per cent. Several hundred per cent with the same number of bodies doing the work: obviously, that results in backlogs. I don't think it takes a rocket scientist to figure that one out. What we've done in my department is that we've increased staff from 10 to 18, and that is to ensure that we're able to deal with these things in a timely manner. Mr. Speaker, that's an approach that we've taken across government to ensure that we have the individuals available to do the work in order to provide this information to Albertans because it's important to us. When something is important to you, you invest in it, and that's exactly what we're doing.

Mr. Speaker, I do find it a little rich that while the opposition calls for us to cut these sorts of jobs, to cut these sorts of what they call administrative jobs, at the same time they're asking for the people who are there to do hundreds of percentage points more work while doing it in the same time frame. I mean, that's obviously just not going to work. So we had to make a choice. Because we feel that the interest of Albertans in this information is so critical, we made the choice to increase that staff, and we're starting to see higher clearance rates.

Obviously, you know, backlog takes awhile to build up, and it takes awhile to take care of, so as we have more and more of those people in those positions, more and more of that work will get done, and we will move forward in a more transparent manner. I do understand that the Information and Privacy Commissioner has been frustrated, and we certainly hope that, again, as we bring in the number of staff that's appropriate to the number of requests that the government is now getting that we're able to do that in a much more timely manner.

I think that pretty much covers most of what's going on. Again, as I've said, you know, subject to ensuring that we are protecting Albertans' interests in a lot of different litigation matters that the government has going on currently and ensuring that we're protecting Albertans' interests in future or past matters, essentially matters where the opposing party might be interested in the legal advice being provided, we are protecting that legal advice because that information, at the end of the day, allows us to pursue the interests of Albertans.

We are moving to add the phrase "excluding documents containing legal advice" to the end of this, but with that, we are happy to accept it and move forward.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to the amendment. I guess I appreciate the minister again trying to find a way to get some of the information out.

One of the challenges that we still face is that there is no check or balance on whether or not we'll know if they've provided all of the documents excluding the ones that contain legal advice and to what extent the legal advice will be applied and how robustly that will be applied. I'm, on one hand, thankful that they're trying to get us some of the information, but on the other there will be no way for us to know if we have in fact received all of the information. I am sympathetic to or understand the minister's point in that there are some pieces of information that are difficult to release around legal matters and matters that are currently before the courts and that would not benefit the province of Alberta, so I can appreciate her comments in that regard.

Part of the challenge, again, is around no way of knowing how the department is going to apply this exemption, no way of knowing the breadth and the width of that. While I appreciate us moving in a better direction of trying to get the information, I hope and implore the minister to ensure that it's not prohibitive in any regard around information that possibly should have been released but, in fact, is legal advice that would have a negative impact on our province.

With that, I will reluctantly vote in favour of the amendment, but I think, again, we need to make sure that we're taking much more proactive steps around this particular file, Justice already having a bad reputation for not being as forthcoming as they ought to be.

The Acting Speaker: The Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do have some concerns regarding this amendment. I understand where the government is coming from when putting forward this amendment. They are trying to protect privileged documents. That is actually admirable.

I guess my concern here lies in that they're actually using solicitor-client privilege on us as a defence against what we're looking for. I guess the question that I've got is: if there is advice between two government agencies not regarding any specific Albertan or corporation or whatever entities out there, will that be considered to be legal advice? Let's say that we've got Service Alberta asking for advice on how to move forward with some of their policies and we get specific advice on that. I'd like to see where the minister and the ministry are coming from. If that is included within this group, then that's fine, but if it's excluded from this group, it's these exact discussions that we're trying to find so that you will bring forward a finished document, that the government already doesn't seem to be following.

I guess the question here is that when we've got solicitor-client privilege, that is apparently being used within this, excluding documents that contain legal advice, we again have Justice deciding on, I guess, what paperwork they're going to be releasing. And with them not being responsible, in my opinion, in this area – and there's frustration across, I would say, all of Alberta when it comes to accountability and transparency – I would say that this is disparaging that we see this amendment come forward.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

I will vote for this amendment because in the end it does release some information, but if this does exclude advice between the government agencies that have nothing to do with Albertans specifically, I don't believe that that correspondence should ever be excluded.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on the amendment.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Acting Speaker: We are now back on the original motion for a return. Anyone wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you. I'd like to reference the April 2017 Privacy Commissioner's report, a special report and request for legislative amendment submitted to the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. Now, we've heard from the Minister of Justice that she's given direction to her ministry on exactly how she should be handling solicitor-client privilege. A quote that I would like to mention here from this report, directly from the Privacy Commissioner, is:

I am requesting that the FOIP Act be amended to explicitly state that I have the power to require public bodies to produce to me records over which solicitor-client privilege and other similar privileges are claimed, when in my opinion it is necessary to review those records (such as when a public body does not provide enough evidence to satisfy me that the records are privileged).

Right now I haven't heard that the minister is looking to bring forward any amendments to the FOIP Act, and this is a concern which means that our policy is all the more important, which is what this motion for a return is trying to get at. It's saying: "Okay. Fine. If you're not looking to amend the FOIP Act, then explain to us how it is that you're coming to this because in the end you're denying information from going to the Privacy Commissioner." If that is denied, then we have a real problem because now what we've got is a government that is more or less its own guardian, if you will, and there's nobody that is doing independent oversight on this, which is what the purpose of the Privacy Commissioner is.

I'll read this second quote from the same report. "The Legislature established the position of Information and Privacy Commissioner to provide for an accessible, affordable and timely process for reviewing access to information decisions made by public bodies."

Now, this is important when we go on to this next part. Bear with me here.

Access to information enhances citizens' trust in government.

Transparency in the functioning of government permits citizens to participate in their democracy and promotes government accountability. For this reason, the right of access has been deemed quasi-constitutional by the Supreme Court of Canada.

This is important. This is very important.

Here is the actual quote that sums this all up. "For nearly 18 years, public bodies accepted that the Legislature intended . . . that my predecessors and I could review records over which solicitor-client privilege was being claimed."

I believe that when we look at legislation, we need to also look at what the intent of that legislation was. In this case we set up a Privacy Commissioner. The Privacy Commissioner was to look into ensuring that we have accountability and transparency and bring, really, a confidence to Albertans when it comes to our government bodies. By allowing the Justice department or the Ministry of Justice to start to review what documents it feels are privileged and which ones aren't, we put in a process where we end up having a gatekeeper that may be acting more in its own self-defence than in the best interests of Albertans.

Now, I'm not pointing fingers at the Minister of Justice because I do believe that when the minister gave direction to her staff, it was well intended. But then we have the e-mail – this was tabled on the last Thursday we were in the House – where we actually see that the Deputy Minister of Justice and the Deputy Minister of Service Alberta were creating rules that contradict what the Minister of Justice is saying. So I am curious about the timing of when she gave that decision because what we're looking at here is that if she said that it happened a year ago – and this was in May – this memo came out in June, so right after . . .

The Acting Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, but the time limit for consideration of this item of business has concluded.

5:00 Motions Other than Government Motions

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Water Storage

503. Mr. Loewen moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to improve water storage in our ecosystems by consulting with the construction industry to develop requirements that provide for wetland remediation where development disturbs or removes a wetland, requires fill soil, or is designed to store water for industrial use.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm proud to rise this afternoon and move Motion 503. This motion calls on the government to engage the construction industry in developing wetlands remediation policy that incorporates industrial disturbances such as urban and industrial expansion, resource extraction, and road construction. Many within the industry are already actively doing this, and by engaging industry experts, remediation policies can be designed in a way that both creates wetlands and offsets the loss that occurs as part of the development process.

Wetlands are unlike any other naturally occurring water body because they come in many different forms and are not easily defined. When someone says that they went to the lake for the weekend, most people are able to envision the lake in their mind. Sure, not every lake is alike – a prairie lake will likely be shallower than a lake located in the Canadian Shield or the Rocky Mountains – but for the most part, a lake is a lake. Likewise, a river is almost universally understood. While there are differences between any two rivers – some of them are fast-moving currents; some are slow and meandering – most people understand what a river is and can quickly picture a river. A wetland, on the other hand, is something of a mystery to people, even here in Alberta, where so much of our province is covered by wetlands.

Wetlands Alberta defines wetlands as low-lying areas of land covered by water long enough to support aquatic plants and wildlife for part of their life cycle. Wetlands are highly diverse, productive ecosystems that provide a host of ecological services and form an integral component of Alberta's diverse landscapes.

While they are not clearly understood, wetlands are an integral part of our water system. They act as a natural filter. They reduce the impact of both floods and drought. They act as carbon sinks and support biodiversity. According to the Environmental Protection Agency "wetlands are among the most productive ecosystems in the world, comparable to rain forests and coral reefs."

You'd think that for something that covers over 20 per cent of Alberta's surface and provides so much benefit, protecting wetlands would have been a no-brainer, but too often wetlands were seen as a hindrance to development. Over time, as the benefit of wetlands began to be better understood, particularly how they reduce the impact of both flooding and drought, the agriculture industry has become leaders in promoting water and wetland conservation. Resource extraction, the construction industry, and urban and industrial development have shown they care deeply for our environment and understand the importance of wetland and water conservation.

Unfortunately, instead of being considered standard practice, wetland and water conservation requires wading through a myriad of red tape and bureaucracy. I recently had an opportunity to tour an energy company and their projects. What I found most interesting was that they had already created holding ponds that were designed to be more natural, not just straight-walled dugouts for holding water but a pond with shallows and structure. In order to build these water storage ponds, they needed to get approval from the government to design them in a way that was more natural. Unfortunately, the process they went through to create these natural-looking ponds should have been easy. It should have been standard procedure.

I think I can speak for most of us here this afternoon when I say that conservation efforts should never be held up because of bureaucracy, because bureaucracy hasn't caught up with industry yet. If government can be proactive and facilitate a conversation with industry partners so that building and development take into account conservation right from the beginning of the project, ultimately that is what I'm hoping to address with Motion 503. Too often construction and industry in general are seen as incompatible with conservation and environmental stewardship. This leads to the development of policies that purposely stifle development, usually through the addition of ever more layers of bureaucratic red tape. These added layers of red tape result in additional costs, which are ultimately downloaded onto the end-user, whether it be the taxpayers or consumers. Things like this reduce our competitiveness.

Motion 503 urges the government to start changing its relationship with industry and start treating them as joint stewards of the environment. By consulting with industry directly, we can ensure that the changes that are made don't create any further burdens while Alberta's economy looks to recover and we can reduce the burden of reclamation after the project is completed. Motion 503 would result in the seamless integration of wetland mitigation into the project.

Another reason Motion 503 is so vitally important is because Alberta has experienced loss of historical fish-bearing habitat and wetlands, and the current reclamation requirements for many industries fail to take that into account. By including permanent wetland creation as part of the development approval process, we can make water and wetland conservation easier and cheaper while increasing the number of fish habitat in our province, which ultimately leads to even larger fish populations and opportunities to pass along the gift of fishing to the next generation.

An example of where this could have a great impact is along highways. I drive highway 43 at least twice a week during the session, and what I've noticed is that along this highway there are a number of dugouts along the roadside where soil and dirt have been removed during the road construction process. When a highway is being constructed, in order to build up the base of the roadway, it is common for soil to be removed from along the construction site, leaving large dugouts. Instead of simply being left as a straight-walled pit, consider the opportunity to turn that into a pond with some wetlands and fish. It would not only provide great benefit to the local ecosystem; it would provide motorists the opportunity to stop and cast a few lines in a pond and catch some fish. Not only would we be conserving and expanding our wetlands; we'd be improving angling opportunities for people who may never have considered fishing before. This would not only create habitat for fish and other wetland species, but it would create water storage for a changing climate. All projects would be developed in a cost-effective manner that best represents natural wetlands and fish habitat.

Wetlands and our fisheries represent a large section of Alberta's ecosystems across the province. This motion would make water storage more natural and sustainable for fish and wildlife without adding any additional costs to industry. Where we have the opportunity, we should always ensure we are protecting these unique habitats across Alberta.

Motion 503 presents a real plan to improve our environment, and I hope it receives support from all sides of the Legislature. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak to the motion? The hon. Member for Calgary-Northern Hills.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm happy to take a moment to speak in support of Motion 503. I'd also like to thank the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky for bringing this issue forward. Our government recognizes the importance of wetlands, and we are committed to their protection. Ensuring our future water security through care for our wetlands is necessary to our health and well-being and to Alberta's economic prosperity. Industry, particularly the construction industry, is a key partner in the protection and conservation of wetlands. For this reason the hon. Minister of Environment and Parks has engaged extensively with representatives from multiple sectors, including the construction industry, via the Alberta Urban Development Institute, the recognized voice for Alberta's land development industry, along with the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties and the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association.

In 2016 our government identified wetlands as a provincial priority by implementing Alberta's wetland policy, developed through extensive engagement and collaboration. The Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky references in the motion the reality that development can disturb wetlands, but let me remind the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky that the Alberta wetland policy states that its intention is "to conserve, restore, protect, and manage Alberta's wetlands to sustain the benefits they provide to the environment, society, and the economy." The Alberta wetland policy indicates the need "to avoid and minimize [potential] impacts on wetlands." When all avoidance and mitigation measures have been considered, Alberta's wetland policy directs that wetlands which cannot be saved should be replaced. This replacement is usually achieved through compensation with the wetland policy directing that wetlands be replaced or compensated at the same or a higher level than the wetlands being lost.

In addition, Madam Speaker, the Alberta wetland policy acknowledges the importance of urban and constructive wetlands, allowing these urban and constructive wetlands to be considered for wetland offset programs. The Minister of Environment and Parks is working with the Alberta Association for Conservation Offsets to develop a wetland restoration directive and a wetland construction directive, complete with a technical guide informed by the association's industry stakeholders.

At a time when climate change threatens to disrupt reliance on known precipitation patterns, it's prudent to optimize the health of our wetlands and their ability to store and purify water. A well-managed landscape and healthy wetlands can help Alberta's communities adapt to a changing climate in which severe weather and unexpected precipitation patterns become more common.

Madam Speaker, it is evident that this motion is well intended, and again I'd like to thank the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky for bringing it forward. Although our government has already been working on the issues raised by this motion, we support efforts to strengthen Alberta's wetland policy and opportunities to collaborate with key stakeholders to promote environmental sustainability.

For that reason, Madam Speaker, I'd like to support this motion, and I encourage others to do so as well. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Why, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to Motion 503, put forward by my hon. colleague from Grande Prairie-Smoky. As the hon. member has pointed out, it is vital that we take proactive steps to work with industry to conserve one of Alberta's most important ecosystems. Strong wetlands yield a plentiful and healthy environment for our wildlife and for the people of Alberta. We all benefit when we have strong wetlands, strong riparian areas, strong streams and rivers.

Madam Speaker, as you know, on this side of the House we are conservatives. It is in our nature to conserve, and that includes . . . [interjections] I don't understand. We are about to pass a motion about conserving wetlands, and they don't think we want to do it. I don't get them.

Madam Speaker, you will know more than anyone that they're an interesting mob over there. There are some things about the government I will just never understand, and there are some things about this side of the House that the government will just never understand. I'm just so glad that we live in a place that doesn't result in parliamentary brouhaha, as we see in other jurisdictions around the world, and that we have the opportunity to robustly debate. Even with issues that we agree on, apparently, we get laughed at. But I digress.

Clearly, Madam Speaker, you won't be surprised that this portion of my remarks wasn't in my notes, but I do thank the government for the opportunity to again point out that we are about to, as an Assembly it seems, pass a motion about conserving wetlands, as put forward by my hon. colleague from Grande Prairie-Smoky, who is a conservative who's interested in conserving wetlands because at the heart of being a conservative is that desire to conserve. [interjections] I still don't understand.

It is integral that we maintain this natural treasure that is our province. I know that in the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills we have some fantastic wetlands and some areas that I know members of the community take great pride in ensuring are conserved.

What's integral about this particular desire is how we partner with industry. Part of this consultation includes that very critical conversation with industry and that conversation around the requirement for wetland remediation where development disturbs or removes wetlands.

I know that just in the past month I've had the opportunity to attend a number of fundraisers with some of the largest conservers of wetlands. Interestingly enough, most of the people in attendance at these particular fundraisers, that are often put on by Ducks Unlimited in the constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills – both in Olds and in Didsbury there's one; I invite everyone to come down – the vast majority of people that were there, that were concerned about conserving wetlands, weren't actually NDP voters but, in fact, were conservative voters because oftentimes – oftentimes, Madam Speaker – the thing that conservatives do much differently than this government is that conservatives put their money where their mouth is and do things on their own and don't just wait for government to come along. Literally – literally – hundreds of conservatives in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills were there putting their money on the line to help conserve wetlands because it is a critical resource for our province.

It has to do with partnership, so I'm glad that the government is going to be working on partnering with industry. It has to do with partnering with those who also like to use and recreate around those wetlands. Alberta's industry is a world leader at environmental remediation, with many industries already using the best practices. It's incumbent upon all of us and the government to engage with these leaders, to engage with these users to find the best way that we can utilize their experience to create policy that protects our environment while ensuring Alberta remains competitive with our neighbours as well. Failing to adequately consult with industry or stakeholders will not yield that competitive advantage. It will not yield the best practices, and it will not yield the conservation of our wetlands in a way that it ought to.

Mr. Rodney: So what are you trying to say?

Mr. Cooper: I'm trying to say that sometimes I get a little bit cautious about the government and their track record on consultation. We've seen a pretty shaky track record on consultation around Bill 6, a pretty shaky consultation around the labour review consultations, Madam Speaker, so I do have some reservations. It is of critical importance that we ensure that we are consulting with all of our stakeholders to ensure that we are working to build a stronger network of wetlands across our province, that we are working to build a stronger and more prosperous Alberta for generations to come. Conserving wetlands is part of that much bigger picture.

It's my pleasure to stand here today to support this environmentally friendly motion. It's important to support this motion, that respects industry and ensures that we will have the best possible – the best possible – go-forward plan, balancing all of those very, very key stakeholders while ensuring that the Alberta that we leave behind for our children is a better Alberta than we found when we arrived at this place. That is exactly what this motion has the opportunity to do, to create a framework where that's possible. It sounds like the government is going to be supporting it. I appreciate their support on behalf of my colleague from Grande Prairie-Smoky and encourage all members of this Assembly to come to Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills and meet fellow conservatives like me who also want to conserve the great resources that are here in our province.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the motion? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I, too, am very pleased to rise in support of Motion 503, which urges the government to improve water storage in our ecosystems by consulting with the construction industry to develop requirements that provide for wetland remediation where development disturbs or removes a wetland, requires fill soil, or is designed to store water for industrial use.

I was actually really enthused about this motion when the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky presented it. Then I listened to the member for the outstanding riding of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, and I am now really confused because I thought this was a motion about conserving our wetlands and doing everything we could to conserve our wetlands rather than some sort of contest about how big our environmental credibility is. I'm really surprised at that. In fact, I would advise the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills to maybe think about the impact of criticizing the good wishes of those people that would ordinarily support his colleague's motion. I think that maybe he should take some advice from this side of the House. When we see a good motion like the one that's been put forward by the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, like my colleague from Calgary-Northern Hills, we're fulsome in support of it. We haven't done any sort of ad hominem type reaction to it.

Having said all that, why are we limiting this to just the involvement of industry in this motion? It's probably one of my main questions. Just last Saturday I attended a phenomenal event in the outstanding riding of Edmonton-Whitemud. It actually was an event that was at the border of the outstanding ridings of Edmonton-Rutherford and Edmonton-South West. It was actually an outstanding event organized by the Edmonton and Area Land Trust. It was an event that saw the conjunction of the city of Edmonton; a private developer, Melcor; and a very generous and altruistic family donation from the Poole family, the owners of the Poole construction . . .

Mr. McIver: PCL.

Dr. Turner: PCL. You know what I'm talking about. Sorry.

. . . and in addition the Edmonton and Area Land Trust, which is a nonprofit organization, that's obviously centred here in Edmonton, that, I think, has 17 different projects similar to the one I'm going to describe. This project, which is in the fantastic riding of Edmonton-Whitemud, is going to enhance the quality of life of those that are living near it, is going to protect wetlands, and is going to add immeasurably to the mitigation of climate change. I was happy to hear one of the previous speakers talk about the importance of this wetlands mediation on our climate. If we can produce more land that will actually absorb some carbon dioxide from the atmosphere, this is going to be a big push.

Maybe I should go on and talk a bit more about this project. The main proponent of the project is Peter Poole, who is a businessman from Banff and who has inherited his parents' real regard for the environment. He was describing, actually, what his experience was just walking through this 59-acre environmental reserve or conservation area. He was describing seeing coyote tracks. He described seeing moose in this area, moose of all ages, actually, several moose. This is within the Henday. This is on the inside of the Henday. Just imagine what a schoolchild going for a walk through this area would experience if they could see the animals in their natural environment, undisturbed and how we could get those schoolchildren to get engaged and invested in preserving this environment. It's a fantastic result. I'm really pleased with that sort of thing. It's the kind of thing that I think that the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky is actually promoting here.

I'm going to give a little bit of history not about Edmonton-Whitemud but about Alberta and what's called the Palliser Triangle. The Palliser Triangle extends, with its vertex in southern Manitoba and its base basically along the Rocky Mountains. This was described by Palliser. He did this 150 years ago, and he was very concerned about the fact that it was basically a desert in this area. His main contribution was the recognition that we need to preserve our water resources in this area and particularly in Alberta, which was the driest part of the Palliser Triangle.

It's very important in terms of making sure that we have not only fish habitat and moose habitat and carbon dioxide sinks, but it's very important in terms of making sure that we've got headwater protection or water protection and that our aquifers are maintained. The Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act was a product of the Dirty Thirties, or, if you want to call them that, the dry thirties, where the federal government basically mandated that the farmers and the agricultural users in the Palliser Triangle area needed to build dugouts and build other structures that were going to maintain the water.

Now, sort of as a side benefit, Ducks Unlimited loves this. Ducks Unlimited has come to this area, to all of the Palliser Triangle area and have fund raised and helped with the conservation of wetlands. This is all going on now. Then you've got people like CPAWS, the Canadian Parks and Wilderness Society; Clearwater county; Vermilion county. There are a bunch of folks that are really working hard on this. This sort of work is ongoing.

This is why our government, our government members at least – I can speak on behalf of the members – are so fulsomely supportive of all of this. You know, I'm really pleased that we're able to basically express this support for this important measure.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my privilege to stand and speak on Motion Other than Government Motion 503. I'd like to congratulate the member that brought it forward.

You know, Madam Speaker, during the nine years I spent on city council in Calgary, we actually spent a great deal of time talking about wetlands. What I think I've learned from some of those discussions, where many times we brought in, really, environmental experts to speak to us, is that wetlands are very much nature's way of cleaning the groundwater, and they need to be maintained. They not only are responsible for how clean the groundwater is but also for how high the groundwater is, which makes a great deal of difference not only in the agricultural sector in rural Alberta but, certainly, in urban Alberta, too, where in this climate it's on average drier than a lot of places in the world. Having that groundwater charged up makes a big difference in the survival of trees and other vegetation that, certainly, in parts of Alberta are more complicated to grow than they are in an area with more rainfall, higher humidity, those types of things.

I think this is a thoughtful motion. The other thing that I think is particularly worth while, based on what I remember from my time on city council in Calgary, is that rather than have the municipalities have in place up to 350 different wetlands policies, I think that for Alberta at some point it does make sense to have an overriding, consistent, thoughtful wetlands policy for the whole province.

For those reasons and on that basis, I'd like to thank the member for bringing this motion forward. After passing it, I think it's going to be environmentally important if we do it right. I certainly will be looking forward to voting in favour, and I hope that other members of this Legislature choose to do the same thing.

Thank you.

Mr. Cooper: Madam Speaker, I'd like to request unanimous consent of the House to revert to introductions.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today, and I wouldn't normally do this because, as you know, my children have the opportunity to come to the gallery on a fairly regular basis, and it is always a pleasure to see their smiling faces in the gallery. But today is a very special day for the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills because accompanying the finest children in the history of the world is the best dad in the history of the world. And I'm not speaking of myself; I am speaking of my father, who joins us in the gallery today. It's always a pleasure to be able to introduce one of the two people who made this all happen. If he would rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Welcome.

Water Storage

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak?

Ms McKittrick: Madam Speaker, it's always hard to follow the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, but I did want to let him know that he does have some NDP members in his riding, not just conservatives . . .

Mr. Cooper: I know both of them.

Ms McKittrick: I think there are definitely a few more, and I could definitely introduce him to some.

Anyway, it's really an honour to rise and speak about a motion that protects Alberta's environment and especially its water resources. I really appreciate the motion from the member opposite. It demonstrates his support for the effect of man on the environment, including, I hope, his understanding of man's impact on the environment due to climate change.

Wetlands are among the most fertile, complex, and productive ecosystems on Earth. They play an important role in improving the quality and quantity of our water supplies in addition to providing valuable wildlife habitat. More and more, wetlands are recognized and appreciated for their contribution to the health and wellness of Alberta's environment, water quality, biodiversity, and economy.

I just wanted to talk a little bit about the economy because wetlands provide opportunities for tourism. I think that in most of our ridings we have wetlands where people go to bird-watch, to do nature photography, hunting, fishing, and other activities.

As many people in this Assembly know, I am an avid road cyclist. [interjections] Surprise, right? This allows me to see first-hand the wetlands and their importance to birds in their migration and a multitude of large and small animals. There's nothing like running across a moose when you're on your road bike. I enjoy watching how the wetlands in rural Strathcona county change over the months in terms of vegetation, water level, and type of wildlife. Cycling in the evening is particularly rewarding when it comes to watching wildlife in the wetlands.

The specialized municipality of Strathcona county has been very proactive in terms of ensuring that wetlands are conserved in both its urban and rural areas. When I worked for the county, I was first exposed to the Strathcona county wetland conservation policy. This policy works to ensure that no net loss of wetlands occurs in the urban and rural areas of the county. All development initiated by either a landowner or a third party, including Strathcona county, is subject to this policy.

I had first-hand experience of this policy as I sat in planning development meetings and listened to discussion on how developers had to mitigate the loss of wetlands in their development and the changes that they had to make to the subdivisions to preserve the existing wetlands. This is why throughout subdivisions in Sherwood Park developers have had to build new wetlands and ponds to remediate the destruction of wetlands when subdivisions were built.

The Strathcona county policy is clear as to the no net loss of wetlands direction and how degraded lands must be remediated. The county also works with residents to support the conservation of wetlands by suggesting that residents should recreate on trails and keep dogs on leash to maintain a safe habitat for birds and other wildlife, place litter in the garbage to make sure that it doesn't enter the water, reduce fertilizer and pesticide use to keep wetlands healthy and prevent algae blooms and odours, take unused chemicals to the enviroservice station for proper disposal to prevent accidental release, and ensure that the drains on people's property are not disturbed. The county also suggests that watering cattle and other livestock has to be done in another area than wetlands or dugouts.

Madam Speaker, the example of what Strathcona county is doing, linked to provincial policies and direction, is an indication of the importance of wetlands and their remediation and of the interest by both municipal and provincial governments in this issue.

I will vote in favour of the motion but would like to remind the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky that it's not only consultation with the construction industry that is needed but all sectors whose activity disturbs wetlands, including the users of off-road vehicles and other industries such as oil and gas and farming.

We are fortunate to have in Alberta a number of organizations whose mandate is to support the provincial and municipal governments' conservation efforts, including the Edmonton and Area Land Trust, which the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud talked about. The Edmonton and Area Land Trust is preserving a number of important wetlands in Strathcona county, including a wetland that is a very important migration resting site for migrating birds.

Madam Speaker, I would like to close by thanking the member for putting forth this motion, and I will urge everyone to vote in favour. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd like to thank my colleague from Grande Prairie-Smoky for his work in creating this motion. Obviously, in northeastern Alberta we have a lot of wetlands, and this is actually very important to my constituency.

I'd like to go back to an article that my local editor from Cold Lake had written, Wetlands "Pressured" by Development. This was written by Peter Lozinski. It was written on February 10, 2015, so for many of us this was before we actually took the House as new members. But some of us were here during this time.

It's important that I reference some of the points in this article because, you know, this development that is happening, especially in northern Alberta, is something that is impacting our wetlands, and it's important that we understand what it is that wetlands do. I'll read through parts of this.

To start off with, it says, "Local wetlands are 'pressured,' especially near development, according to Beaver River Watershed Alliance program manager Harry Keess. Feb. 2 was world wetlands day." Now, I didn't realize that there was a World Wetlands Day, but it does make sense that my riding would be celebrating that important day.

You know, I will say that I've been to a couple of the Beaver River Watershed Alliance AGMs. There are good people on that board that are trying to make sure that our local watershed is protected. This is very admirable. This is something that we all need to be conscious of. It's important that we are working with – and I'll go back to the original motion here. It says that we're "consulting with the construction industry," that is looking to grow. We need to have balance. We do need to recognize that there are road requirements that my riding needs. We do need to recognize that there are industry projects that need to move forward. That does mean that there are going to be disturbances. So how do we mitigate that?

Going back to this, we've got one way, and it's very admirable. The MD of Bonnyville has come up with an environmental reserve bylaw, and this allows the MD to designate an area of shoreline as an environmental reserve that is protecting the riparian vegetation from development and modification. Riparian or shoreline vegetation is a type of wetland that grows along the shore of a body of water, storing water and filtering out toxins. This is something that we need to be looking forward to, these really interesting ways that our local municipalities can look at in defending the wetlands. We are stewards, and we are all responsible in this House for the wetlands.

It goes on – and this is a direct quote from Keess – to say, "Restoring or preserving wetlands [is] an investment because wetlands are able to filter out and prevent pollutants from reaching water systems." Let's look at this. Cold Lake is our main regional source for water across my riding. This is something that is producing an incredible source for us to be able to feed our needs across our entire constituency when it comes to ensuring that we've got enough water. If we were to pollute that water source, that affects everybody, which is why, making sure that when we look at conservation, we look at conservatism, and we look at this as a goal for this government, that's admirable. The fact that my colleague was identifying this as a problem and saying, "Let's look for solutions; let's bring forward a motion that is going to show a direction for this government": this is responsible.

I will tell you that I take pride that this was a motion that was brought forward by the Wildrose Party. It was brought forward by the shadow minister of environment. You know what? This shows that we are looking to be as responsible with our environment as I know the government across is trying to be as well. When we're looking at moving forward in environmental conservatism, moving forward in wetlands, we are looking out for my riding, and I would like to say thank you to everybody in this Chamber for supporting that.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Madam Speaker, for providing me the opportunity to speak in relation to Motion 503. You know, it's funny. When you look at this from the outside and as an ordinary citizen – and I would have been even naive to this three years ago, before I started digging into this job as an MLA and learning a lot of new things – you would think that this is really a rural issue or an issue that small counties or small municipalities would have to deal with. It isn't, actually. I think the Member for Calgary-Hays kind of outlined some of that as well, that large cities have to tackle this and deal with this as well. Being near the outskirts of the city of Calgary and near the edge, it's actually been remarkable the number of times that I have had to have interactions and talk with developers in relation to wetland development and wetland remediation.

Recently we've had an area in my constituency of Calgary-Shaw, in Shawnee Slopes, where they're developing an old golf course. Unfortunately, some of the residents were unhappy about this. The development actually started when I took this role. There wasn't really much we could do to reverse any of it because pretty much the entire pitch had been torn apart, but the one thing that was remarkable is that there was actually a wetland there. The wetland was always there, and they made it part of the golf course.

Then subsequently, when they were developing the area, they had to start doing environmental assessments. They were going to move the wetland a little bit, but they had to make sure that they reclaimed parts of the space there as well. Moving forward, it was remarkable to see the due diligence that came from Environment and Parks when they were working with them, the long process, the environmental assessments that they had to do. It's great to see that the Ministry of Environment and Parks is looking to make sure that we are doing what we can to protect them further, making sure that we have the right amount of studies and that we're working with developers.

But I also have to underline what the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud pointed out, that as we move forward, it shouldn't just be with the development and the construction industries. I learned that right after the election. I probably alluded to this before in this House, about a challenge that we had with ATCO Gas running a natural gas pipeline through Fish Creek park. It was something I had to deal with literally two days after the election because (a) the challenge was that the residents in the area felt like they hadn't been consulted appropriately, and (b) there was a huge environmental output that was going to happen because of that, and there was a lot of concern in relation to how it was going to impact the park and actually some waterways as well.

The one thing that was remarkable about this is that while I had to make phone calls to the AUC to learn about regulatory law and I had to connect with the ministry of agriculture because part of that fell under their jurisdiction and I had to connect with some of the bureaucrats within parks, the most important information that I learned in relation to the impacts on the environment and the construction of this was actually from a bunch of old, retired people who had been involved in the industry for 40 years who happened to settle in houses adjacent to Fish Creek park. So I think it's important that we also make sure that we engage with residents because many of them are experts in their field regardless of where they come from.

You know, it's funny when you look at the city of Calgary, too, because early on in that city there wasn't a lot of care. It's no one in this Chamber's fault. Most people who made those decisions are long gone. But at the time the due diligence and the care weren't necessarily put in in relation to the wetlands.

I actually remember my elementary school teacher telling me that when she was visiting Calgary as a child, the area where I grew up, which is Marlborough Park, was a wetland. It was swampland. A lot of people actually attribute some of the challenges we have with our cracking – I shouldn't say "our" because I don't live there anymore. The issues that people have in relation to cracking roads and cracking sidewalks is because they didn't properly reclaim that land, and they didn't have appropriate stormwater ponds and areas for the water to go. Eventually they actually had to develop dry ponds in those areas, too, so that the water actually had a place to go when there was heavy rainfall, and that's something that wetlands protect as well.

Looking deep into the south, as we're developing some of the ring road and doing some of the alternative routes, there's a lot of work that's going on with our developers, with the city of Calgary, and with Environment and Parks to make sure that we aren't causing any negative ramifications towards the wetlands that are in that south end, just south of Stoney Trail along Macleod Trail, because that is a pretty pristine area of land, and I know that a lot of people would be upset to see that. It's also important, as we do further developments, that we also look at developing the stormwater ponds that we see on a lot of adjacent roadways, which are kind of the man-made wetlands that we have, and those can come from old gravel pits to many areas within the land that we see.

You know, it's a huge balancing act that we face within municipalities trying to balance the urban sprawl that we see in Calgary, the quality of life that people have come to expect, whether it's the garage and the yard and the large area that they have, with protecting our environment and protecting our wetlands that we have here as well. That's why with a lot of the newer developments we always see that mandates are made with the developers to ensure that they're protecting existing wetland spaces, or at least developing new ones, to ensure that we can actually clean the water, just as the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake alluded to earlier, using the environment and allowing nature to take its course to clean and purify itself, to make sure that at the end of the day, when we're having major storms and when major water events are happening, we find places for the water to go.

I think it's important to note that we've seen a ton of leadership from many of our oil and gas companies when we're dealing with this. Suncor and Enbridge have been huge supporters of Ducks Unlimited and the Nature Conservancy of Canada. We've seen some strong stakeholders that have already stepped forward and taken that leadership before we've even approached them as government to move forward.

With that, Madam Speaker, I want to thank the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky for bringing forth this motion. I think it really parallels some of the great work that our government is doing to make sure that we do what we can to conserve wetland spaces so that we can make sure we maintain a pristine environment for our kids and for future generations. So I will be supporting this motion.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the motion?

Seeing none, I will now call on the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky to close debate.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I brought forward Motion 503 to facilitate what is either already taking place or what industry is desiring to do. We already have wetland policies in Alberta, but we need to be able to streamline those wetland policies so that they make sense to all Albertans and to industry. I think that by discussing these issues with industry, we can come up with suitable solutions that protect our environment but aren't a burden to industry.

I guess what I noticed, too, was a lost opportunity when I toured that energy company that I talked about earlier and we saw the holding ponds that they had developed years ago, that were just straight-walled holding ponds, and we saw the ones that they've developed recently, where they had made shallow water into wetlands and created a little bit more natural holding ponds for water. It just seemed like it was a lot more suitable for wildlife, for waterfowl, and for fisheries. I just looked at that as a lost opportunity, where in order for that company to develop that natural-looking pond, they actually had to get permission from government, had to go through an extra process to get that done. That just didn't seem right. It seemed like that should be the way it should be done, not that these companies should have to go through extra work and extra bureaucracy to make it happen.

Another thing I thought of is that with these holding ponds, when they're finished with them, they may have to reclaim them, drain them and fill them back up. That just doesn't make sense when we have an opportunity to use these holding ponds as habitat for fisheries, for waterfowl, and for other aquatic life. It would be just great to have that water storage.

Now, I talked about the ponds along the side of the highway. There are some lakes that we have in Alberta that are great fisheries that are no bigger than those ponds, those dugouts, that are along the side of the highway. So it only makes sense that those things be designed in a way that people could fish them, you know, that migratory birds, ducks, geese, whatever, could nest on them. It would just make a lot more sense if these were designed a little bit more friendly to wildlife.

For those people that know me, they know I love the outdoors, that I love wildlife. Those that know me know I don't fish that much – I enjoy fishing once in a while – but I have a deep respect for people that do spend a lot of time on the water fishing, enjoying that pastime. There's no reason why we can't have more opportunity here in Alberta. By this motion, we could possibly have more fishing opportunity for the anglers in Alberta. There's a lot of opportunity. Like I said, some of the lakes that we fish now are no bigger than some of these ponds that are created by industry, so there's no reason why we can't use these ponds as fisheries and give extra opportunity for Alberta anglers.

There needs to be consistency in policy. Things need to be simplified when dealing with wetlands. Right now there's a lot of bureaucracy, a lot of red tape, and we can simplify those things. We can work with industry to make it so that they're more competitive in their businesses, and we still can protect our environment and protect our wetlands.

I appreciate the support from all sides of the House on this motion, and I appreciate hearing everybody's comments here today. My colleague behind me here talked about World Wetlands Day. My colleague from Bonnyville-Cold Lake talked about World

Wetlands Day on February 2. I thought we should probably call it world ice day because we don't have much that looks like wetlands in February here. Again, I appreciate the support, appreciate everybody's comments here today. I'll wrap this up and ask for everybody's support, and we'll vote on this now.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 503 carried]

Cortes-Vargas: Madam Speaker, seeing the progress today and the collaboration across the aisle, I move to call it 6 o'clock and adjourn the House.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Good morning.

Please join me in a moment of reflection. As we near the anniversary of the Fort McMurray fire, let us always remember the power of community and the strength that working together can bring. In times of crisis working as one, co-operating, is the only way we can make it through.

Please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 6

Northland School Division Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you. It's my pleasure to rise and move third reading of Bill 6, the Northland School Division Act.

Madam Speaker, since introducing this bill a couple of weeks ago, we have received a great deal of feedback from communities in the Northland school division, and our official trustee has continued travelling around to our 23 schools in the district to discuss this legislation with communities. Our partners in the region have largely recognized that this legislation is an important first step to improving education and support for our students in the Northland region, with the restoration of democracy and a democratically elected trustee board in said region.

It's very important to recognize that while this bill will move Northland to a more typical board structure, as we might see in the rest of the province, we also put in a great deal of effort on maintaining a community voice and building unique structures within this bill to address this. We will be working to establish the school councils, as described in the bill, in each of our 23 schools, and we will be as well establishing ward councils, that will be made up of the resident trustee, the school council members, and other members of the community as the population sees fit. We will also be enshrining jurisdiction-wide meetings at least once every electoral term to allow the community to come together and to have a collective discussion on protecting and improving education in the region.

As was described so well by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek, who has worked in Northland school division for many years, the people in Northland are very kind and caring and committed to students. There are deep roots in the community, and we must work with elders, youth, and others to effect change, to improve attendance, to improve graduation rates, to improve the sense of community that can reside in each of our schools.

As I said previously, this legislation marks the start of a larger plan for the division, and we will be introducing new funding and supports once we do have a new school board established. I'm looking, Madam Speaker, for us to use creativity and a sense of collaboration between all school boards in the region in northern Alberta to work together to improve those outcomes I have described – attendance, graduation rates, and the sense of belonging and community – in each of those schools. We'll be continuing to work with other ministries through the steering committee that has been established, working with Health, working with Children's Services and Infrastructure as well, you know, to look at some of the physical buildings that we have in the region that might require some assistance for the teacherages in each of the school areas as well.

All of us should feel very proud that we are taking action to restore democracy in Northland after seven years. We are turning the direction of education back to the community, and we will be here to offer guidance and support. The legislation, Madam Speaker, is about improving education for our students and about preparing them for future success, to be leaders in their community, and, of course, making life better for Alberta families throughout northern Alberta.

I ask for support from all members here for this bill, and I thank you very much for your time.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm very happy to rise to speak to this bill on third reading, and I really, really hope that this bill opens the doors to changing the rates of student success.

I'd also like to take a moment to thank the Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek again. When we were speaking about this bill last, I just thought it was inspirational, the way that you spoke about the people and, especially with your background in educational psychology, your tremendous work as a teacher throughout that region, the amount of work that you've done getting kids ready for university. You've done a ton of work out there. You're probably the best expert that could be in this space right now to make sure that this bill is everything that it is intended to be. Thank you so much for that. Again, it really, really influences a lot of us that don't maybe know those areas as well, and you're a great representative for those people. Thank you for doing that.

A couple of things I would like to add in as we go forward. As the minister said, and I agree completely: this is one step in probably a very long process – and I think, as the member had mentioned, they're called co-operatives if I remember correctly – in order to make sure that that is honoured and that those co-operatives work together to make sure that they have the best outcomes for those kids out there.

The question is: well, then, how do you ensure student success? This is a very, very fleeting comment, even. It's an easy political thing to say, but the actual question is: how do you do that within the structures of how you put those things together? Ultimately, at the end of the day, that's what we're looking to achieve. The questions, then, are: is it an administrative, legislative framework, or is it addressing those student needs that you spoke about? Do we focus on an electoral process, or do we get bums in seats, kids in the classroom?

As the member had also mentioned, a typical classroom in these areas may not be what we would typically see throughout the rest of the province. We have, I believe, a 95 per cent Métis and First Nations group of people out there. There's a massive amount of influence in that part, where we need to bring in elders and family and all of those different supports to make sure that the education is meaningful for these families and for these children.

My questions, I suppose – and this is not in any way not to support the bill. This is in ways – I'd like to ensure that the bill does what it's intended to do. Do we start at the furthest point from the students, or do we start with the actual students: their learning, their needs, their interests, their backgrounds, and their teachers?

An example that I'd like to use is a personal example. It's slightly different because my focus and the way that I teach are different because I only get my kids maybe for an hour and a half a week if I'm lucky, so the influence that you have is a little bit smaller. But in a community like where I'm from, Chestermere, where hockey is, like, the top priority – right? – in terms of extracurricular activities, as a music teacher trying to inspire young boys and girls to come to a music studio when sport is really at the top of the agenda, it was a very interesting dynamic, but it worked.

The reason is because you focus on what those kids need and what is meaningful. Sometimes if you're looking from a classical perspective – you have to learn your scales; you have to learn the theory and all that, and there are students and there are people that are prepped to do that. That's what they want to do, and they go through that process. But there are many groups of kids and their parents that want to see those outcomes as well. If you're wanting to learn a Tom Petty song, you're not necessarily going to go through all of the scales and everything that you would learn to be able to learn a Bach piano concerto, right? It's a completely different mechanism, and that meaning is going to be slightly different.

In order to learn a Tom Petty song at Christmas for the concert, for their parents to be able to see that this child can play and sing together, you're going to have a slightly different mechanism to make sure that that's meaningful, and that's not necessarily the structure of the building or the stairs going up to that building or the administration that you create around that. That actually is going to come, hopefully, from the teacher and the relationship with that teacher and that student. We just want to make sure that – we want these kids to be successful. We want the communities to be successful. We want them to end up in the classroom. I didn't focus on zoning laws when I was reaching out to students. You're wanting them to be engaged in music at whatever level that is.

Once the students are in your studio and you've got them all committed to you, you create these beautiful things together. It's such an overwhelmingly positive process. I could only hope that within the mechanism that's being put forward, that positive process will also engage and bring this group of very unique school boards together and produce something that they can all be proud of and that they can put forward and that we have the numbers to show it.

As I understand it, when the trustee that was elected went forward to meet with all of these schools, they're looking at trying to get a 5 per cent increase in attendance per year. I certainly hope that this structure is able to actually do that, but the bill doesn't give us any insight as to how we're going to build those. It just is an administrative piece of legislation.

We want to make sure that those resources for the students engage them in a meaningful way. We want to make sure that they want to show off to us and everybody else in their communities what it is that they're learning – right? – that they're engaged, that they're showing that, you know, if you're going to teach Cree, for example, if that's one of the languages that is important and meaningful, they're able to produce something that is worthy of those people and them and that those teachers are engaged and they've brought that together. Well, how do you do that? Is that through this framework? I don't know.

This is certainly a starting point, but what I'm really looking for is to see how this bill actually produces that end result, that outcome. I recognize the need to make sure that the administration is there and that the legislation is all in line, but as the minister said, this is truly a starting point, isn't it? We want to make sure that that best legal, administrative foundation is there, but if the students are not in the classroom, then we have failed. We want to make sure that that's not what happens here. It's already been unmeaningful. They've already seen that, so how do we get to this other side?

That's why I'm asking these questions, because in the AG report that came forward – and I don't know if those were listed in order of priority – the top of the list was student attendance and then, of course, monitoring and making sure that they're staying there and also making sure that there is a structure whereby these students will want to come to school, right? Like I said, I don't know if that was in order of priority, but it certainly would be for me, that student engagement piece.

I don't know. Maybe the minister will have an opportunity to answer this, but is there a reason, then, that the legislative framework took precedence over putting together the wards and the boards versus – and maybe this outreach was done also, along with presenting the administrative foundation, what it was that you were going to do to reach out and engage with these families, students, school authorities, and everything to make sure that children are engaged, that they are in their seats, because Bill 6 doesn't address the teacher or the classroom. With the legislative framework, where do we go from here?

I agree. The Minister of Education was saying that there's a strong appetite for improving educational outcomes across Northland, but this bill doesn't address low attendance, does it? It doesn't address student achievement rates. I understand that that is, hopefully, the outcome, but I really believe that in a piece of legislation, when you're bringing that forward, you want to also understand how that's going to impact the outcomes. It's one thing to say it; it's a whole other thing to follow through with that. Thank goodness that that member is there because I'm sure that you will follow through to make sure that that happens.

There's a lot of strength and wisdom that comes from reaching out to these areas. I support it, and I will be watching to make sure that those next steps are addressed in attendance and learning. I think there's a lot that we can learn from this area. I think that if the outcomes are shown to be positive and we're seeing that 5 per cent or whatever – sometimes these numbers are just random. Who knows what the outcomes will be, right? But let's hope that we see some change in outcomes and that some of those things can be applied to maybe some of the other situations. It might be very interesting to see because it is a unique area.

I believe all Albertans will be watching to see if this electoral change actually translates into student learning. I think that that, Madam Speaker, is actually at the guts of what needs to happen here. Are we actually seeing student outcomes? Are we actually seeing students in their seats? Are we actually seeing meaningful education that relates to the world around these folks? We really hope that the communities will rally around these elections and become engaged in their children's success. We also would expect and would demand that the teachers are supported and have the resources they need to ensure that their students are successful.

Again, I really do hope that this bill opens the door to changing success rates for the students of this school board. Thank you.

Mr. Rosendahl: Madam Speaker, tansi. That's hello in Cree, by the way. Hopefully, I pronounced it right. The elders that I work with in West Yellowhead are continually trying to teach me a few of the words to use.

Anyhow, through the Northland School Division Act we're continuing to make life better for children and families in Alberta, and that's the important aspect that we need to consider. We are committed to protecting and improving education in the Northland school division for the Susa Creek school, which lies in my beautiful constituency of West Yellowhead. I had the opportunity to visit that school a few days ago, and they were so excited that an MLA actually showed up to visit with the principal, the teachers, and the students in that school. It's quite a small school. It's made up of a collection of portables and that kind of thing. But they were really excited, and they had no idea what to do because they've never had an MLA show up there before, and they certainly wonder why nobody has ever been there before now. I don't know. I can't speak to that. But they were sure excited when I showed up there.

In looking at this, the students are really the most vulnerable in the whole region. Their social and cultural needs are very unique. Of course, most of the students that attend Susa Creek are totally indigenous. The community history and cultural heritage in that school must be considered, and their education needs must reflect who they are and the many additional struggles they continue to face. Their education must honestly address the multigenerational impacts of unfortunate government policies of the past like the issue of the residential schools and, of course, the '60s scoop.

Many parents in these communities have not completed high school and may not have had the best experiences with education. That's understandable when you look at what has happened in the past, especially with the '60s scoop and the issue of the residential schools and what's happened to those people right from the point when they were removed from Jasper national park and they settled in the area. Their trust in what the governments of the day did was not good, so a lot of them didn't even attend school for fear that things were going to happen and that the kids were going to be removed from them. That is something that is really difficult to work around because the parents really didn't have the education and they didn't understand, so it creates a whole problem in itself.

Many parents in these communities, like I said, have not completed high school at all. These factors have produced some of the lowest academic achievement scores and some of the highest dropout rates in all of Alberta. It's understandable when you look at what has happened to some of these people. So it creates a problem in trying to improve dropout rates and have the students continue their education. The school division leadership must be keenly aware of these struggles in order to move forward. They have to recognize that these problems are there and try to work through them. Cultural and community-specific responses are totally essential to working with these people.

Through the introduction of Bill 6, the Northland School Division Act, we are taking the step of re-establishing an elected board of trustees during municipal elections this fall. That is something that's very important, that we need to do. Specifically, the new Northland School Division Act will introduce a governance structure with between seven and 11 wards, each with an elected trustee. I think that principle is something that's very important. It will replace the existing local school board committees with school councils and have similar roles and responsibilities as other school councils in Alberta, so that structure will be the same as in other jurisdictions.

These school councils can include nonelected members, which is important for community involvement. In this way, elders, youth, parents, and other interested community people will be supported and become involved. That's one way in which we can try and improve things in the school division. If we have an inclusive society where everybody feels that they're involved, they will hopefully support education for their children.

This act will establish a formal engagement process that strengthens community voice, including the involvement, like I said, of elders, youth, First Nations, Métis, nonstatus, treaty, and all other communities for whom the division provides educational services. Like I said, we have to be inclusive. With these changes, we will be working as a government towards strengthening educational environments for Northland school division communities.

I personally support this bill because we are working towards building communities and schools. It's very important that these people recognize that this is the direction our government is taking, where First Nations people are included as equals and are supported in contributing to everyone's well-being – it's something that is very fundamental, that we need to ensure that we are doing – where schools work to teach everyone, not just aboriginal students, to understand and respect the indigenous culture. That is fundamental in order to keep the students going to school, because if we don't do that, they don't have a feeling of belonging, so subsequently they drop out and don't attend. It's where indigenous children learn about their people's history and practices alongside their nonindigenous classmates. Like I said, it's important that we promote that. It's where learning about indigenous history and practices is viewed as being of equal importance to passing along knowledge from nonindigenous societies.

It was important when I asked the principal at Susa Creek, for example, how they work with the culture in the area of Susa Creek, and he said that they have a huge input from the elders that attend the school regularly to ensure that the students there understand the culture and beliefs that they practise. It's important that we promote that so that the students have a feeling of belonging. It's where students of all backgrounds and abilities are encouraged to advance their knowledge of aboriginal cultures. That, like I said, is why I'd asked that question of the principal, to make sure that the students are getting a knowledge of the culture that exists in that area.

It's where teachers are given the books and resources that they want and need to include indigenous perspectives, history, culture, and stories in the curricula. It's where all school staff, for instance, can pronounce and spell the names of all local indigenous peoples, and in some cases that is a problem where the teachers can't pronounce their last names. It's a way of inclusion and of respect for them. It's where all teachers, for example, are able to explain the significance of indigenous structures and important indigenous community events. That is also important so that they feel included. It's where respect is shown for the indigenous peoples of each area by including elders from these traditional territories in important school events and, of course, a large part of forming the educational program.

It's where indigenous children, for example, are challenged throughout their learning to support them in reaching their highest potential. That is something that we really need to do in order to keep these students motivated so that they have the idea that school is a place of learning. It's where indigenous children are expected, for example, to graduate with full credentials and to pursue higher learning either at the college or university level or even, for that matter, to enter the trades. It's where indigenous students, for example, are supported in feeling that they are important, equal, and highly valued members of both the educational and the greater community. With that in itself, if we practise that, we may get higher attendance at schools where their cultures, like I said, are respected. It's where we all work together, both indigenous and nonindigenous, to build a better society that works for all of us. I think that's the goal that we need to really consider here.

Northland school division needs our support, and our government is committed to make life better for students and families in the northern region such as Susa Creek. Like I said, I recently visited Susa Creek school and met a lot of amazing kids who are hungry for knowledge but need specialized support to be able to continue with their education. The biggest problem they have is when they complete grade 8 and end up going to the public school in Grande Cache, for example. The transition issue is huge. Maybe somewhere along the line we can address that. I don't know if that's at this point, but it's certainly something that we need to look at doing.

I would like to take this opportunity to recognize the principal and teachers at Susa Creek school for their contributions and great work as part of this very unique school division. Like I said, I had a great visit with them, and they were very excited that I was there. Meeting in person and having the opportunity to see them at their school has helped me to better understand how special and important schools like Susa Creek are for the culture and for the community of Susa Creek. That was a very important aspect for them.

We will also be providing additional funding to the division in the years ahead and working to improve teacher retention. Of course, teacher retention is a huge problem in places like Susa Creek. How do you get teachers to move up to such a remote area and then retain them? That is a huge issue that we need to look at going forward. Transportation and other support services definitely need to be front and centre to help student learning.

Ultimately, the newly elected board will determine how this additional funding is used to support the students in their learning, to produce better outcomes, and it is important that we do that.

Our government launched three phases of community engagement regarding the Northland school division back in November. We held initial talks with community leaders to get a sense of their support for a path for Northland. There were sessions in nine communities from December 2016 to January 2017 as part of how the engagement process was carried out. We then held postengagements that involved one-on-one discussions with individuals who participated in the sessions to gain their personal feedback, which was important.

Finally, these discussions will continue over the summer as we work hard to encourage greater understanding and awareness of the plan, and that's important to promote the plan moving forward. By talking with everyone involved, we will be building relationships to strengthen and support community engagement.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of questions and comments to the hon. member. The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Yeah. The hon. member made some great points. I would care to hear the remainder of his conversation and hear if he could elaborate a bit more about his school division.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you very much. Like I said, the discussions will continue over the summer. It's important that we continue to do that so that we can make sure that we're looking out for the best interests of the school division itself and especially by supporting the Susa Creek school. Like I said, they were so excited that I showed up there. It was just something else. Our government is working hard to ensure that they're able to make the most of educational opportunities for all children living in the most remote regions of the province, and that is something that we need to continue.

I'd like to end with that. Thank you very much. I hope that we can all support this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Any further questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any further speakers to the bill? The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's a great joy for me today to be able to stand here alongside my colleague the Minister of Education in support of this legislation, that has been many years in coming. I was actually working as a researcher for the now Premier at the time this board was abolished, and it came as a surprise. I don't think a lot of people saw this as something that the government was anticipating doing.

When the announcement of the official administrator, or the not a trustee, for lack of a better term, was made to run the organization for what many thought would be a year or two, this was in 2010, right before the then school board elections. Colin was fantastic, I have to say. I think his heart, I think his expertise were all in the right place. I think he thought he'd be stepping up for a couple of years maybe to help them through a tough patch, to make sure that they hired a superintendent, that their student achievement got focused in the areas it needed to be, and to work with the community to develop a model that would be effective, moving forward, to ensure adequate participation, engagement, and voice for those who live in the region and who are parents, grandparents, friends, and neighbours of the children. I have to say that he sure served a lot longer than a year or two. I believe it was about six years, actually, that he was in the role. I want to thank him for the work that he did during that period of time and the now interim trustee, not a board member, as well, who has past experience, I believe, being an elected school board member.

But no matter how well intending they were, I think it was a disservice that the community didn't have an opportunity to be fully engaged and provide direction through an organized structure. I had a chance to ask, before I was elected to this House, the then Education minister about his plans, and I was deeply saddened that under former ministers it seemed like this wasn't even something that was on the radar, giving democracy back to communities that had had their voice taken away from them for so many years. So it is with great pride that I stand today beside our Education minister working to make sure that engagement is brought back to the community.

I have to say that in our mission for truth and reconciliation acknowledging the truths of residential schools is one piece, but true reconciliation is making sure that we do not have to say sorry twice. Today's bill is a step in that direction: making sure that we're engaged in having communities make decisions for their own children, making sure that we honour traditional knowledge and teachings, making sure that we acknowledge the historical legacy and the intergenerational trauma that occurred over generations. I have to say that if this were a school board in another part of the province, I don't think it would have taken a change in government to make this exercising of democracy come back to the people of northern Alberta who are First Nations, Métis, and Inuit, who, just like all other representatives in the province, deserve to have a voice in making local decisions to support their children.

Is this bill absolutely perfect? I think it's great. I think it's far better than where we came from today and the system that we have in place today, and I think that the community will continue to work to evolve the system. But I am very proud that we'll be bringing back a local voice. I think that the ward system will be well served in this community, and I think it's important for children that when their family members, their neighbours, and their friends want to be engaged in their education system, we put in every means possible for that to happen, because it's good for democracy but also because it's good for student achievement.

I recall many surveys and academic papers from my time at the U of A and as a school board member that showed that student achievement is higher when children know that their parents, their family members care about their educational success and when they're engaged in it. For some kids, that might look like sitting down with your mum and dad and doing your homework together at the end of the day. For others, it might be your mum waking you up in the morning and saying: it's really important that you go to school; I want you to be successful. For others, it might be having a parent volunteer. For others, it might be about being part of a democratically elected governance structure. But kids need to know that their family is engaged and committed to their achievement, and if they know that, they themselves are far more likely to achieve.

It's something that seems so basic, but when for generations we've stripped children away from their families and told them that their parents don't have the expertise to help make those decisions, when they were sent to residential schools and told that the system knew better, we certainly did not respect the role of their families, the role of their communities, or the importance that it was to that child's own success to have family members engaged in their education and their well-being.

I have to say again to my colleague the Education minister that it's such a proud moment today that we're doing this to respect the communities, to fulfill in a small way our commitments to reconciliation, to ensure that voice and opportunity for guidance and for kids to know that their community cares, that it isn't just about some outside experts making decisions about their education. This is about making sure that their own communities are involved and making sure that they have those opportunities. I do in my heart of hearts, as well as from looking at educational research, believe that this is going to make a difference for student achievement as well as honouring the many people who are committed to making sure that they have an opportunity to serve their children and the community.

I think it's going to be still a long journey, I think there are lots of challenges, and I think that Northland has been a great model. I hope that we're able to support these students in achieving the same educational opportunities as any other child in our province, and I think that this is certainly a very good step forward in that regard.

To the people who are thinking about running in the upcoming elections, because it's not that long from now – it'll be in the fall – it has been far too long since they've had an opportunity to do that. In 2010 they didn't have an election, in 2013 they didn't have an election, but this year they will have an opportunity to elect and ensure that they have a voice moving forward. I hope that there is great interest in Northland school division for participation in this regard, and I would encourage anyone who is interested in being involved to reach out to their local school, possibly to an elections office, or to the minister's office to learn about how they themselves can be engaged in this democratic process. I hope that we have many contested opportunities to lead in this community and that all positions are filled in short order as well as with other elections that are happening in other parts of the province.

I think this is very good news. I think that the structure that's been created has enough voices at the table that it will be able to acknowledge the regional perspectives as well as a reasonable number to conduct a meeting, which is also important, I think, making sure that decisions can be made in an efficient, effective manner and that people can themselves participate in the meetings, whether it's through technology or face-to-face encounters.

I want to thank the minister and his team for the work they've done to prepare this, to work in partnership with the community, to honour the hopes and concerns that they have, and to make sure that we find a win-win, and I think that this bill certainly does just that.

Again, today is a great day of pride, and I imagine that many former trustees, who are watching this with great interest, are proud as well as we move forward today. Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other speakers to the bill?

The hon. Education minister to close debate.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I was struck by the wise and thoughtful comments by all members here this morning and indeed throughout the process of bringing this bill to fruition. Again, I hope that we might have all members voting in favour of this bill. We need to move forward to re-establish democratically elected trustees in Northland school division.

You know, this is a way by which we can restore decision-making power to the people in Northland school division, and I think that's very important. We know that strong leadership improves student outcomes from start to finish. We can track it very clearly from school board to school board across the province and, really, across the country as well. We have a lot to offer. We have a strong school and education system here in the province.

When you're trying to improve student outcomes in terms of attendance and achievement, I always aim for where you can find most improvement, and indeed in Northland school division there's lots of room for that. I believe that there are many students there in the region that will be going to school as a result of the work that we will do together with this new, democratically elected board.

The idea is for us to support and not just sort of hand back Northland and not provide the financial and logistical support to improve student outcomes. I've already made it clear that we are willing to increase our student funding in Northland over the next number of years. As well, we're working together with postsecondary institutions and so forth to provide more First Nation, Métis, and Inuit leadership in terms of teachers, administrators, and even to the highest level of superintendents, who have people from the region representing the school system at all levels.

Again, as my hon. colleague talked about the elections coming up, I encourage many people to run in this fall election. It will be an exciting time, a historic moment, and a very fulfilling choice to help to shepherd the new Northland school division and to build a brighter future and to make life better for Alberta families in the region.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 6 read a third time]

Bill 9

Marketing of Agricultural Products Amendment Act, 2017

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and move third reading of Bill 9, the Marketing of Agricultural Products Amendment Act, 2017.

I enjoyed this morning so far and the discussion on Bill 6, another great Bill 6, a bill that reintroduced a measure of democracy, as does Bill 9.

I would like to thank all my colleagues for their thoughtful questions and comments on this bill. We've had a number of MLAs here who have offered very valuable feedback on what this bill will mean for producers in the province. I was encouraged to hear support from my colleagues, from both sides of the House, for the important principles this bill brings forward. This government is well aware that the one-size-fits-all approach does not work for our diverse province nor for our diverse agricultural industries. That is why this government is restoring autonomy to agriculture commission members by providing them with a choice to implement the service charge model that works best for them, whether refundable or nonrefundable.

During the second reading debate we discussed several implications of the legislation, and I would like to address those questions in supplement to the answers provided by my colleague the MLA for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

The MLA for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock had a question about whether or not there will be any directive given to the commissions on what a service charge would be. No, there will not be. It is up to the commissions and their membership on what those charges look like. I would consider that to be included in the issues that ought to be left up to producers to decide on.

There was another question by the member about the frequency with which a commission's membership can hold a plebiscite. In the legislation there's no limitation on how often a plebiscite can be held. As outlined by the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, plebiscites could be held for a variety of reasons beyond issues to do with service charge models. This is clearly enabling legislation meant to give members the choice they're entitled to on what occurs within their commission. To put any sort of limitation on how often they should be able to make those choices at a membership level would go against the intention of this bill, which is to provide flexibility and autonomy. While the marketing council can disallow a plebiscite, they are trusted with the responsibility of ensuring that commissions are run in accordance with legislation in the best interests of the membership. That said, a plebiscite is a laborious undertaking for a commission and its membership, and producers understand that. I do not think it is something that will be taken lightly or overused.

The Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock also inquired about how eligible producers are determined and by whom. I want to clarify that the section of the Marketing of Agricultural Products Act the member cited referred to determination when a new commission is first established, which outlines how eligible producers are determined through the Alberta Agricultural Products Marketing Council. However, for existing agriculture commissions eligible producers are defined in the commission's plan regulation, which is specific to each agricultural commodity.

As for decisions around the criteria needed to meet the minimum requirements of a plebiscite, the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville discussed those criteria in detail. As the MLA for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock noted, there is some flexibility in those criteria, including the role of the minister and Lieutenant Governor in Council. The important purpose of these criteria is to provide a clear framework but not to be something so rigid that the legislation starts to stray into the one-size-fits-all territory. Each commission's membership and industry is completely unique, and the variability between them absolutely must be considered when deliberating a plebiscite's conditions. Once again, this process honours the diversity of industry and puts power and choice in the hands of producers, who could help communicate what those unique conditions may mean for a plebiscite.

Last month I appointed a new marketing council. The board members were selected as a result of a thorough recruitment process. They have a wealth of experience in agriculture, agribusiness, governance, human resources, interpreting legislation, financial management, and risk management that will serve them well as they help ensure that the marketing council continues to meet the needs of the 20 marketing boards and commissions and the agriculture sector. The experience, diversity in representation, and skill that they bring to the table are what gives me the utmost confidence in their ability to work with the commissions.

With the passing of this bill there will be a strong expectation that the marketing council will be working together closely with the commissions. I as minister will want to see evidence of robust consultation with the commissions by the council, and board membership at the commission level in turn will be expected to consult with their membership. It's important that it's ensured that the plebiscite process is open, fair, and transparent and gives producers a clear voice in the decision.

Members' support of Bill 9 reinforces the commitment of this Assembly to the importance of flexibility for agriculture commissions and our respect for Alberta's agricultural producers.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you. Madam Speaker, I very briefly rise today to lend my voice in support of Bill 9, the Marketing of Agricultural Products Amendment Act, 2017, commonly referred to as MAPA. As discussed through all readings of this bill, the MAPA amendment applies only to agricultural commissions. This proposed amendment to MAPA will once again allow the producer membership as a whole to choose via plebiscite either a refundable or nonrefundable service charge model for their individual commission. That's why allowing a plebiscite to change the funding model or to remain with the status quo is so, so important. Each commission will be given the wherewithal to determine the method and the rules around the individual plebiscites or if indeed there is even a desire by the members to hold one. The ability to determine the direction that each commission will ultimately take will reside with the membership. It will be those folks as a membership that have the ability to initiate change or not.

Our caucus and our party have always believed in letting grassroots members determine their own path, and members on this side of the House understand the role that these commissions play. Actually, we have members of the beef, barley, canola, wheat, and pulse commissions represented right here. These groups operate in a self-funded model, where service charges assessed and collected from members are often the main source of income for operations. There have been some concerns raised by colleagues in opposition, but despite that, I believe that it's time we returned Alberta to the pre-2009 model.

This amendment to MAPA will now bring legislation in line with other jurisdictions in Canada. Additionally, this amendment returns commission members to a state of self-determination with their respective commissions. It is for these reasons, Madam Speaker, that I will be supporting this bill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, it's my honour to rise and speak in relation to Bill 9 and my support of Bill 9. I know that there are a few eyebrows raised about this person who lives in suburban Calgary speaking about something that really impacts the farm. Well, I am the grandson of a farmer who settled in Innisfail from Slovakia.

I've had this very unique opportunity to actually sit with the Member for Little Bow as the chair of the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future, and we looked at ways for us to explore the expansion of value-added in the agrifood sector. When we were doing deliberations, it was quite fulfilling. I felt like I was sitting on a metaphorical yacht because we all kind of worked together, just as we have been today, to find some very positive feedback that came in relation to what we proposed. It was similar to when we were talking about wetlands earlier today and speaking in relation to Ducks Unlimited, how they protect ecosystems, protect things like frogs, and many of those other facets.

Reflecting on when we were in deliberations for diversifying the agrifood and agribusiness sector, one of the things that was very important was that we could actually seek out information from many of these commissions, and they were very key stakeholders that brought us a lot of feedback. It was great because they brought feedback from grassroots members. You know, while we're wearing our sandals and relaxing in the summer, they are bringing forth the food that we put on our table and are working extraordinarily hard to ensure that we are all well fed and well organized.

They outlined some very important things. They outlined the importance of us looking into expanding into foreign markets, and they provided us with significant feedback. They provided us and the ministry a lot of support while the government has been doing tours of the Asian markets. These commissions provided us with significant feedback to expand the continental drift to the European markets and the Asian markets while we deal with a lot of the uncertainty in the U.S. We continue to expand this industry, an industry that's been growing by 7 per cent year over year despite the fact that there's been some uncertainty coming from the U.S. markets while they determine what direction they want to go in relation to trade.

You know, I've heard comments in relation to a one-size-fits-all model not necessarily working. I think that's why it's important for our commissions to have that autonomy to make the decisions on what direction they want to go in relation to the refunding of these monies. Another thing that we outlined when we were in our meetings was the need for education, especially domestic education, in relation to what we're doing in farming.

To share a story of what I've seen from some of these commissions, just recently I went to Aggie Days in Calgary. The Calgary Stampede puts it on. It's an agricultural fair that educates students, and schools will bring kids to the grounds to learn about this. It's put on for free by the Stampede board, and some of the key partners that actually help support this are some of the commissions as well. When I went there with my kids on the weekend, I saw big bristol board signs that talked about things from pulses to beef producers, chicken producers. Basically, almost any field that's covered within our agriculture sector was covered at this event. I think one of the most empowering things about this was that it was the grassroots memberships, really, that were providing us with a lot of this education, really educating my kids and letting them know something that they took for granted, which is the food on their plates and where it comes from, and sort of providing that important respect that they need to have for the farms in Alberta.

One of the things we also look at as we diversify our economy locally is that buying local has become a huge, huge factor for a lot of the restaurant industries and for a lot of the commercial industries, and some of the important people that we really need to rely on for distribution and to support this growing trend are a lot of the commissions. Allowing them to have that grassroots feedback that they can provide, allowing them to have these votes on how they want to direct themselves, how they want to direct their funds is crucially important because, at the end of the day, they need to have that support, and they also need to be the experts in their fields because they're the ones talking to a lot of these individual producers.

You know, when we were in deliberations on diversifying the agrifood sector, one of the things that was most remarkable was when we were talking to a distillery operator. It was remarkable because he's over capacity. He stopped taking orders because he can't produce any more. He said that one of the most remarkable things that he can do is to talk to local farmers, actually go across the street and just have those conversations with the farmer about his barley purchases and the direction that he wants to go in expanding his business. So it's a very collaborative approach that we have, whether it's the individual farmers or whether it's the commissions actually talking to producers, whether it's value-added foods, the processing of food, whether it's the manufacturing of our craft industry, whether it be craft liquors or craft beers. It's really putting us on the map, and a lot of that is led by the individual commissions that are really driving this process.

One of the most fulfilling things I saw when we were talking about this and what I was learning about when I had the opportunity to sit in our six-month deliberations looking at value-added within the agrifood sector was how much information and how much feedback and how much these commissions support our economic development. You know, it's easy for us to say one day that we want to set up a Freezies factory, but at the end of the day we need individual stakeholders, individual commissions to really drive the narrative and really provide us with positive feedback for their stakeholders and be stakeholder directed to help us really grow our industry and grow our economy here in Alberta.

You know, if there's anything I can really say to a lot of these commissions and to a lot of these individual farmers – and I don't think they get the praise and the appreciation that they need – it's: thank you for that support and, honestly, thank you for providing us with that crucial feedback during the deliberations. That really helped us to come together as united members and to pass 13 motions unanimously. I can only envision that if they weren't in that united form how unproductive we might have been, but because they brought so much information to the table and provided us with data-based feedback, we were able to get a lot done in that committee and move forward and actually see a positive direction with our already growing and influential agrifood and agribusiness sector.

With that being said, I'm happy to support Bill 9, and I encourage all members to do the same as well.

11:00

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

No other speakers to the bill?

The hon. minister to close debate.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Madam Speaker. There are many life and work experiences in this House. We have doctors. We have businesspeople, including farmers, social workers, nurses, educators. The list goes on. Now we are politicians, and once in a while we get to reintroduce a level of democracy, perhaps in a little way but I think not insignificant. This bill, Bill 9, does just that.

I've heard from every commission in the province, many individual producers. All to some degree do not oppose this; they were supportive of it. Some of the individual producers and commissions welcome this change with great enthusiasm, and I have to tell you, Madam Speaker, some with a level of emotion attached to that. This is something they've been looking for, well, 10 years now, I suppose. It's something that they felt was needed, as I do.

I really welcomed the discussion and the debate in the House and the support of everyone in the House for this. We all recognize that if you're looking for a level of democracy or a level of governance, it's best done closest to the source. This brings this closer to the source, to the producers themselves, and is able to shape their check-offs, to refund or nonrefundable, to their commissions.

There are some that will work hard at this to make what they feel are those necessary changes with the voice from their membership, from the producers, and there are others that won't, so it's going to be a mixed bag. It's going to be interesting to see this development over the next year or so about where folks go. I'm looking forward to continuing working with these commissions on this, on how the marketing council will assist them with their plebiscites and other issues that they have, knowing that the commissions are, I believe without a doubt, doing the best they possibly can for their membership in marketing their products and doing research and the many things that they do with this check-off money. It's not just check-off funds to run their organizations; it's to do the good work that they've all done.

We live, you know, in somewhat uncertain times, I suppose, if I could use those words, in marketing to our largest trading partner, but it's still our largest trading partner. It remains vital. I think this change for some of the commissions will go a long way in standing up to some of those challenges and looking for those opportunities, whether it is to our, you know, great big neighbour to the south or marketing abilities right across the globe, including Asia and Europe.

There are, I think, some great emerging markets. It's funny how we still talk about China as an emerging market. It's not. It has emerged, right? It is there. We are marketing a lot of our products, you know, not just agriculture but other products as well to Asia, including China, but I find India to be a very fascinating market. It is in line to become the third-largest economy in the world here in a few years. Having the ability for our commissions to have the funds necessary to take advantage of that I think is important and to bring that democracy to their producers, to be able to do that. Other commissions perhaps aren't going to be looking for a change because that's what their producers want.

I want to thank everyone in this House for the support of this Bill 9 and welcome them if they have any questions or concerns past this, perhaps from their own commissions that maybe some people from across the hall belong to. I'd be welcome to answer those questions.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 9 read a third time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 10 Appropriation Act, 2017

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today to speak on Bill 10, and I want to put on record that I'm not in favour of Bill 10 because . . .

Mr. Cooper: That's for sure.

Mr. Taylor: That's for sure, yeah.

I'm not in favour of Bill 10. We're looking at a $10.3 billion deficit, and that frankly is a lot of money that we'll be going into debt for. There's a consequence to debt. As debt grows, so do interest payments and servicing the debt. When we have more debt, the expenditures grow over time and over time will not go to services. The money will not be going to services if we have too much debt because we're servicing that debt. To me, frankly, that gives me certain concerns, concerns over: where is the money going to be for schools? There will be less money for schools. There'll be less money for teachers. There's going to be less money for front-line staff as we service that debt, and that's a problem.

Albertans pay taxes for services. They expect good return for their hard-earned taxes, that hard-earned money that they worked for to compensate for what they've given to the government. That's just a fact. It's not an ideological statement. Those are monies that are being taken away from Albertans and being used just to pay for interest. In exchange for the money they expect hospitals, schools, roads, law enforcement. All these things are important to Albertans.

The debt servicing is unsustainable. We'll be at $71 billion by the next election, and this is being passed to future generations, so it's going to be our children, our grandchildren that will be paying this debt because it's frankly unlikely that I'll be living long enough to be that person that's going to be contributing. By the way, I have a grandchild as of April 21. I don't know how indebted my grandson is, but it is part of what the process is. My grandson will be having to pay for part of this debt that we are now building up.

I had some questions that were not able to be answered during the estimates process. There was not enough time. I was going to use some of this time to be able to ask these questions, to be able to put them into the record. Some of the questions that I would like to get into there also dealt with health facility questions. At the time I was told by the Minister of Infrastructure that these were questions that dealt with Health and that he was not able to answer them as opposed to being able to give me an answer at the time.

The infrastructure. Being out of Wainwright – this is a question that he may remember. There's a hospital in Wainwright. We need to have one, but a hospital takes between seven and 10 years. That's just a fact, that they take between seven and 10 years from the time that they plan a hospital to the time that they actually have the patients ready to move in, they're ready to do the work, and they're ready to carry on and have patients going through the hospital. That's 10 years after it's been given the green light to build, so we're talking a substantial amount of time, Madam Chair, for this.

On the list on page 46 of the capital plan for 2017 to 2021 there's something missing here because the Wainwright hospital was there. The Wainwright hospital went from number 2 on the project list for Alberta Health's capital list to not appearing at all, so I would like to know if the minister, the Minister of Health or the Minister of Infrastructure, can explain to the people of Wainwright and area why they are not a priority and why there isn't at least a little dribble of planning dollars sent to this.

Another question here. Why have facilities like the Wainwright hospital been identified and addressed as a major priority then later on removed from being priority projects at all? There must have been a rationale. There must have been a purpose as to why they were put up to that part of the list, but now, like I say, they are removed from that list. I'm sure there are probably explanations because part of the staff that are probably sitting in the government right now would have known what the hospital was like when it was number 2 on the priority list, so they should be able to help give an explanation for that to the minister as part of that question.

The Minister of Infrastructure – this is another question – mentioned that this next question would have to be directed to the Minister of Health. Since there's nothing designated in the budget for more beds for the Red Deer hospital – 96 acute-care and 18 emergency beds have been needed since 2015 – does the ministry realize that the patients are waiting for days for an in-patient bed at the emergency ward and surgeries are being cancelled, causing a huge backlog in the system, which causes rural residents to be redirected towards cities, increasing costs of transportation via ambulance and increasing delays in the Calgary and Edmonton hospitals?

I see it in our hospital. They're regularly being taken via the ambulance to Edmonton, to Red Deer, to Camrose. That's a costly expense when they could have a room, they could be in a room in Wainwright and be looked after, but instead we're being transported out, which causes another problem. When the ambulances are transporting patients out, they're not there in Wainwright; they're just now shuffling people back. But if we have an emergency and the ambulance is, like I say, taking patients from Wainwright to Edmonton or to Red Deer or to Camrose, we're leaving ourselves exposed, exposed to a code red. Again I ask: does the ministry realize that patients are waiting for days and that these delays are causing problems in Calgary and Edmonton hospitals?

Another question that I, frankly, didn't get an answer to and one that was directed to the Minister of Health is the constant struggle to attract and keep medical professionals in these communities when there isn't proper infrastructure and equipment provided in rural communities. You know, time and time again we hear from doctors about a lack of adequate infrastructure and equipment that is holding them back from taking a position in many of our rural areas. What is the ministry doing to address the infrastructure deficits in hospitals in central Alberta?

We have a wonderful ability in our hospital to be able to have cataract surgeries done, but because of a lack of infrastructure in Wainwright we cannot do those cataract surgeries. That was brought forward. It was passed. Everything was good to go. We were green-lighted on that until they looked at our operating theatres and they looked at the infrastructure of the hospital itself. Infrastructure deficits in hospitals in central Alberta: a huge question for us.

Now, if we go to estimates on page 176, ministry support services, let's discuss ministry support services. Well, I can see here that if you look at the whole, there's been a slight decrease, and if you look back to 2015, this section was increased by $1.6 million. Then if we go to line 1.4 in 2015, there was a $137,000 increase in human resources. You mentioned at that time that the reason for the increase was "due to the finalization of the reallocation of budgets that are [being] associated with the . . . reorganization," which you mentioned would "ensure that the organization is designed, structured, and aligned properly to fulfill the mandate," understanding that this may occur when there's a switch of governments. Now, since the switchover is done – we've got a new government; you've been there for two years – why are we still seeing these slight increases?

This is the next question. The October 2016 AG report states that Infrastructure needs better processes to prioritize projects that ministries submit. This recommendation has been outstanding since 2007. This long overdue recommendation has had obvious costly ramifications because it's not been properly taken care of. Has this government come up with a rational plan and better processes to prioritize these projects? This is the next question. What has the ministry done to correct this problem in the current budget?

Another question. The Wildrose government would support local decision-making and take all Albertans' health care needs into consideration and devise a capital project list to benefit all Albertans to fix these issues. Now, where is the Infrastructure sunshine list that the ministry promised during the campaign, and will they prioritize that list so that we know what is going to be on the top of the list and what is going to be done maybe in one, two, four years from now?

Are there any building Canada fund projects in Alberta being held up waiting for federal approval? How much of the building Canada fund money remains unallocated? Did they transfer the money to the ministry or Treasury Board and Finance, and is it sitting in some sort of investment vehicle? Albertans would like to know that if their money is sitting there, it's sitting in some kind of investment vehicle at least making some kind of return so that we can offset some of the money being lost with all the interest payments that we, frankly, are paying out. How much interest has the money sitting there generated? Can you please provide me with a number?

This is on a different part of the budget. You went and talked about a deeper greening project for Infrastructure. I would like for you to be able to explain to me what that deeper greening project is because I couldn't frankly find anything on the Internet that explained what that was.

Next question. Infrastructure has received some of the funding. What is the funding used for on the deeper greening? What kind of infrastructure projects would you be looking at funding with this? Can stakeholders also apply for this funding?

Finally, in the capital plan 2017-2021 page 2 of 10 details the 200 new and modernized school projects. We see a grand total of $1.5 billion will be spent over the next four years. Why is there no detail? The pages, frankly, are blank. There's no detail as to what's going on with it. Can you explain how much money will be spent on each of these schools? I'm just asking you to be able to fill in those blanks.

For the reasons I've explained beforehand and some of these questions, I will not be supporting Bill 10. Thank you.

The Chair: Any other questions, comments, or amendments?

Any members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. Thank you for this opportunity. You know, this government has said that it has Alberta's back, but when we have a budget that is in around $55 billion, with no pretense that it has even tried to find efficiencies to reduce government spending in any way, it's somewhat disingenuous at best. In reality it's insulting to Albertans for this NDP government to claim that it's doing them a favour with its out-of-control spending.

I haven't even touched on the fact that this is the NDP's third multibillion-dollar deficit. This is the latest budget that will put us a further $10.3 billion as we soar towards a whopping $71 billion debtload by the end of the NDP's only term in office. We know it's likely to run even higher than $10.3 billion because, as we've seen in the past, if more revenues unexpectedly come in, the NDP finds unexpected ways to spend the funds.

In the latest round of government estimates a number of trends became very clear. For one, we see a lot of blaming the past government for a fiscal record that ironically was in some perspectives the envy of North America. Let me remind everyone that when the former PC government left office, it bequeathed the NDP a $1.1 billion surplus, a $6.5 billion contingency account, a triple-A credit rating, and a 3.2 per cent debt-to-GDP ratio. Now Alberta has no savings, a $45 billion debt by the end of the fiscal year, an alert that our credit rating is going to fall once again, and a debt-to-GDP ratio of almost 14 per cent. Please explain how this is helping Albertans.

The NDP's deflect-and-blame game became very evident to me when the Justice minister cut the Alberta Crown prosecutor's office budget by $5 million over two years. A year ago she proudly pointed to reducing the prosecutors' budget through finding efficiencies, which included leaving 35 prosecutor positions open. Then the Supreme Court brought down the Jordan decision, and Alberta had to scramble. So while this budget injects needed dollars into the justice system to hire more prosecutors, this government refuses to take responsibility for its role in causing the backlog in the court system. Let's go back over that tactic once again. It cut the prosecutors' budget, got caught, and then blamed the past government.

If that doesn't shake your faith in its ability to budget, here's another one. In estimates for Children's Services I asked the minister to please explain how our government came up with the figure of $25 a day for affordable daycare, and she did not have an answer. As a father of three, of course I fully support the concept of affordable child care. As a former police officer who has seen parents in all levels of society struggle to raise their families, of course I support programs that assist them. But the NDP government has $10 million in this year's budget for its $25-a-day daycare pilot project, that is an experiment. If this experiment works, the government wants to roll it out across Alberta. But the plan has no foundation. They are going to try this, they're going to try that, and they will see how it all unfolds.

I asked the minister why she settled on $25 a day. Why not $20? Why not $30? Why not $10? I discovered that $25 a day is truly just an arbitrary number. They picked something that sounded really good and built an entire program around it. Furthermore, this new program is supposedly aimed to assist families most in need, but clients are not income tested. So how does this government know it's helping those who really, truly will benefit the most out of this?

Another experiment involves, of course, the infamous light bulbs. The NDP proudly pointed out the, quote, we'll change your light bulb program as a success because so many Albertans signed up for it. Of course they did. They're free. Who wouldn't sign up for this? People want some of their money back that the NDP took from them. It only makes sense.

I could go on, but you get the point. Albertans know that the NDP are experimenting with their money. While the government may not see it that way, the budget is just one of the many indications of how out of touch the current government is with the people of Alberta. That's why I will not support this NDP budget.

Thank you, Madam Chair, for this time.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to Bill 10? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's an honour to be able to rise today and speak with respect to this budget and some of the concerns that I have and some of the concerns that I'm hearing from my constituents and Albertans on a broad basis.

Madam Chair, it's interesting when we look out there and we talk to Albertans and they tell us that they try and use common sense in their households and they would expect us to use common sense and bring that entrepreneurial spirit and prairie work ethic to the table when we're trying to decide not only what's best for us but also what's best for them, their ability to not only sustain their families today but to look out for the future generations ahead, their children and grandchildren to come, that they are so concerned about and so concerned about the future of this province.

Madam Chair, I'll draw a picture here because when we hear about $55 billion and $45 billion and $10.3 billion, those numbers, that number of zeros, are overwhelming for most people, for most Albertans. It's hard to comprehend and hard for us to grasp that we could drive this province $10 billion into debt every year.

Let's take a look at a typical Alberta household. Let's just say that we've got a household that owns their own home, a modest home, and have 10 per cent equity in that home. Let's say that it's a $400,000 single-family home in one of the major cities. They've got 10 per cent equity in that home, about $40,000, that they've worked hard to save, to invest in that home and to build up over a period of time. It's a young family, say, a family of four. They've got a net household income of around $45,000, but they've found that to try and sustain their family in a reasonable lifestyle and to provide for their children, they have to spend about $55,000 a year. Their annual deficit for that household is about $10,000, Madam Chair, $10,000 that they're spending that they're not earning every year. Let's add some zeros to that. It kind of sounds like $10 billion.

It only takes them four years, four short years, to burn through the entire equity that they've got in their household, which means that they have no assets left, no net equity left. Let's say that that goes on for another four years. They now are going into deeper debt just to try to put groceries on the table, perhaps, and keep their kids in sports and various other things.

Madam Chair, those are the kinds of numbers that scare me. If we add all those zeros back on, that's the household we live in. That's this House. We've got $45 billion in income and $55 billion, give or take, in expenses and a $10.3 billion deficit every year, and we're already going into the hole.

Madam Chair, I like numbers. I look at the numbers, and I try to see the impact and what the implications are on Albertans. We're looking at a $71 billion debt by 2019-2020 and a population projection of about 4.4 million people. That works out to about $16,000 of debt per person. For a family of four that's about $65,000 worth of net debt that they own on behalf of this province, on behalf of this government. These numbers are a little bit frightening when I start doing some extrapolations on them. For that $65,000 the family of four would have to pay about $378 a month to pay that off. Guess for how long? For the next 25 years. That's $378 a month for 25 years. That's paying back the $65,000. There's another $48,000 in interest that they're going to pay over that period of time, for a total of $113,000 that it's going to cost them for irresponsible spending today. That means that their children born today will be 25 years old. That may limit their ability to do some other things like put money into an RESP for those children, like pay off debt.

Now, Madam Chair, I did some numbers on this. If they took that same $378 a month and put it into long-term savings for their retirement, for their family at a nominal interest rate — let's say that they're very lucky in the investment marketplace with their RRSPs and they get a 5 per cent annualized compound return on investment – they would have $227,000 of savings at the end of that 25 years instead of having paid $113,000 to pay off that debt that they took irresponsibly in year 1.

Madam Chair, these numbers – when we again look at a household, we look at common sense. We look at the way, I think, that Albertans expect us to live, the way that they would live, the way that they would live in their households so that they can sustain their family today, so that they can invest in their family for tomorrow and they can know that the future of their children and grandchildren is something they can count on without being buried in debt.

I was just at the Calgary Counselling Centre. We know that debt is having a huge impact on people in terms of their mental health, their physical health, and the crises that they're facing in terms of losing their homes and other things.

Madam Chair, we need to be more responsible in this province. This budget: last year $10.8 billion, this year $10.3 billion. This keeps on mounting and with no plan to repay any debt. When you take on a mortgage, you start paying it the next day so that you make sure you're being responsible with that asset. I've got no problem with us investing in good assets for Albertans, but we need to have a plan to pay them off, and we need to start that plan today. We need to be responsible with those dollars.

I'm worried on behalf of this House, on behalf of this government, on behalf of Albertans that we've got a shovel – and it's a big one – and we don't know when to throw it away. That hole keeps getting bigger and deeper, and we just don't seem to have that common sense to know when to throw that shovel away or to maybe get some people around us with some more shovels and fill that hole back in the way Albertans expect us to.

So, Madam Chair, I will not be supporting this budget because I believe it's an irresponsible attack on Albertans today and into the future. Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Chair. I want to talk about this appropriation bill that's before us and specifically to the issues regarding the fiscal plan and carbon taxation. I've read through this fiscal plan. I see a lot of mention of the climate leadership action plan that this government has brought upon Alberta. There are projections within this fiscal plan that indicate an increase in carbon tax revenue over the years, but it's based on the premise that our industries are going to somehow magically rebound and that we're going to see this huge increase in economic activity and, therefore, an increase in revenue through carbon taxation.

But I want to talk a little bit about something this government doesn't like to look at, and that is trade exposure and carbon leakage. I see this line item for carbon tax, and I see it collecting revenue as it's already been enacted, yet this government still hasn't clarified who is going to receive the industry-wide best-in-class benchmarks and thus be exempted from this tax. We were told in the climate action plan that the best in class across industries would be exempted from paying the carbon tax. It was boasted about extensively as a way to reward efficiencies, the idea being that the very efficient, the most efficient in an industry sector would become the benchmark, and then any companies who were manufacturing or emitting pollution to a level that was worse than that would be subject to carbon taxation. Those companies that were best in class would be the benchmark, and they would be exempted.

But we've never seen such a list, and I have had industry coming to me asking: where is this; how do we know; where is the analysis?

They've asked the government, too, and they get no answers. Every time I speak with industry, they still do not know who will be exempt and who won't be and where these benchmarks are.

Now, as an Alberta MLA and the MLA for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake I am deeply worried about the impact this is going to have in my province and specifically in my community. I'm worried about the jobs. I'm also worried about our legacy of clean air and water, and I know that carbon leakage is a very real threat to our legacy. It is a threat that pushes jobs to other jurisdictions. It pushes wealth to other jurisdictions. But it also pushes pollution to other jurisdictions that do not have the responsible environmental legacy that we here in Alberta have had for decades. Yes, decades. Because contrary to the NDP's world view, our people, everyday Albertans, have been actively environmentally responsible for decades.

I want to speak about three such responsible industries that were part of Alberta's diversification drive a generation or so ago. Again, contrary to the NDP's world view, Alberta was diversifying, has been doing it for a long time. One of the industries I want to talk about is the cement industry. Here in our province we have only two cement producers, and they are major employers. They give back to their local communities, supporting all kinds of projects and community activities. They pay significant amounts in taxes. They significantly diversify our economy. They bring millions of export dollars into our province. They are significantly trade exposed. The two producers also happen to be two of the most energy-efficient cement producers in Canada, and because they operate in Alberta, we know that their reclamation standards go above and beyond what is done in most other jurisdictions and that their concern for things like water safety and usage are paramount to them.

Now, these two companies export something in the order of half of everything they produce. A lot of it goes to British Columbia for now – for now – and across the border into our neighbouring U.S. The reason they export to B.C., by the way – that's at the moment, at least – is because B.C. had introduced a carbon tax and Alberta hadn't. That effectively doubled the cost of natural gas to B.C.'s cement producers. It resulted in an almost instantaneous 40 per cent increase in imported cement from Asia and other jurisdictions, and these B.C. producers became very disadvantaged. That is carbon leakage at work, and there is a direct relation between the introduction of a carbon tax in B.C. and the loss of business to B.C.'s cement producers. Here we are going down the very same path.

Look, this is an industry that relies heavily on coal and natural gas, and like all industries in Alberta, they need power and a lot of it. To give you an idea of how much, the Exshaw plant alone consumes as much electricity as the entire city of Red Deer. Coal has a dual use for them. Along with the heat that it produces, it also produces fly ash, which is a significant contribution to the cement recipe.

Now, the United States isn't going to be implementing a carbon tax, and the United States happens to be a huge market and without a carbon tax. Now our Alberta companies are not going to be competitive. Given the amount of export that these companies are involved in, this is a significant threat. It's a threat to jobs. It's a threat to even the amount of money that they can give locally to community functions. It's also a threat to the taxation this government expects to be raising from our heavy industries. The thing about this carbon tax is that because it's not implemented evenly across all jurisdictions, our government, by imposing it, is giving the competitive advantage to everyone outside of Alberta. This carbon tax is sending away jobs, it's sending away wealth, and it's sending away pollution.

There'll be no global reduction in greenhouse gas emissions. This government might be able to wave some kind of a green flag in here and say: look, we've reduced greenhouse gas emissions here in the province of Alberta. Meanwhile every jurisdiction where we've sent jobs and wealth and economic activity that doesn't have the environmental responsibility we do: those jurisdictions' pollution is going to increase. So there's no net benefit of this carbon tax globally. That's why places like Australia and France are ditching it. Our own government might as well be providing a subsidy to American cement producers and Asian cement producers because that's what this tax is doing. You're penalizing Alberta companies, which then gives an economic benefit to companies outside of this province to send their products here.

Now, let's talk about global greenhouse emissions a little bit more. We're going to be actually increasing them while we're harming Alberta's economy. How intelligent is that? Does anyone on that other side over there have any sense of how globally counterproductive this carbon tax is on pollution and how locally counterproductive this carbon tax is on jobs and economic activity?

Within this government's fiscal plan we see revenue from the carbon levy, as they call it. I'm going to call it a carbon tax because it's a tax. If you look at that carbon tax, this government is estimating it to increase every year. This government has failed to meet every projection they have made since coming to office. I have no reason to suspect that there's going to be the economic recovery that this government is hoping and praying for. This government is counterproductive. It is no longer a business-friendly environment in this province. We've seen billions, tens of billions, of investment dollars flee. We've seen hundreds and hundreds of thousands of Albertans out of work now, and this government continues to blame low oil prices, but again, repeatedly, we look around the globe at jurisdictions that are paying the same commodity prices we are, that are getting the same commodity prices for oil that we are, and guess what? They're busy. They have economic activity that we do not have.

What we're going to do with this very counterproductive carbon tax is that we're going to move production to jurisdictions that do not care about their water like we do. They don't care about abatement technologies that clean their air like we do. They're going to be in jurisdictions that care less about site reclamation than we do. It's not even just GHGs, Madam Chair. You're just going to move production, and we don't want to talk about these particular industries. So it's okay to ship those industries someplace else and let them pollute someplace else. That's okay to do so that you can wave your flag here in Alberta about the great job you're doing here. Look, less-developed nations that don't have our historical environmental heritage are happy about us having this carbon tax. It's going to be providing them lots of jobs and wealth. The developing world is not a dumping ground for industries that are energy intensive, that you don't like and that you don't understand.

Let me make this really clear to this Assembly. Alberta does heavy industry better, cleaner, and more responsibly than anywhere else in the world, right here in this province, and this government has put the whole thing at risk for nothing more than ideological blindness. Blindness. You don't get it. This government does not understand basic economic activity.

Now, the cement industry is just one of a number, and it needs certainty. It needs to know who is going to be exempted. They need to know what the benchmark is going to be because the fact of the matter is that they can import cement into this province. The price of cement coming out of Asian countries to the North American market is already lower than what it can be produced for here. There's already a competitive threat. We're making it worse by having this carbon tax in this province. This government really needs to ask itself a question: is refusing to provide a full exemption to Alberta's cement industry really the best thing for the global environment? Do you really grasp the concept of carbon leakage? I don't see any evidence of this in this bill, this fiscal plan, or in your policies.

Let me talk about another industry, the fibreglass industry. I don't know if this government realizes it, but about 60 per cent of the glass consumed by the fibreglass manufacturing plant that we have in this province is recycled glass, and that recycled glass is spun into glass wool and used to make insulation, which is an energy efficiency measure in all of our houses here. So here we have an industry that is part of the recycle, reuse system within this province, which is great. We've got somewhere for our glass to go to be turned into something very useful, insulation for our homes. What a great thing that is. Yet this company, this industry is being penalized because they use huge amounts of natural gas in the process of creating fibreglass wool.

I didn't see any impact assessment from this government ever on this carbon tax. I didn't see any indication whatsoever that this government took the time to look at all of the consequences of carbon taxation on our industries, our industries that were already contributing to diversification, to greenhouse gas reduction, to waste avoidance to our dumps, taking all that glass and making something good out of it. Well, here's an impact on an industry that is a significant contributor to economic diversification and a significant contributor to our recycling industry in our province. Sixty per cent is recycled glass bottles. It reduces, it reuses, it recycles. It's the mantra we teach our children, yet here we are with a government policy that hurts this industry and risks its closure. It takes huge amounts of natural gas to make this fiberglass. They're also very trade exposed domestically. They're a multinational corporation that could take their technology and go anywhere with it.

Let me take just a second to talk about net book value. Some of these industries that we have in this province that have been here for a full generation, they have depreciated away the capital expense to build them. They're approaching zero on their books for the value of that plant. So now the corporate head office, wherever it may be located, is looking at a plant here in Alberta and saying: hmm, well, it's going to take $100 million to refurbish that plant, but is that worth doing? And when they do the analysis, they will do a comparative risk analysis. They'll compare the risk of doing that investment here or doing it at another plant in another jurisdiction, and the risk analysis is going to include competitive advantage or disadvantage.

Mr. Orr: Political risk.

Mr. MacIntyre: Yes, political risk is part of that formula. Thank you.

They will look at that, and right now we're not faring so well in this province because of this government's policies, because of this government's attitude toward heavy industries and this government's carbon taxation. So these companies that need huge amounts of energy, whether it be natural gas or electricity, and are hugely trade exposed are at risk. Alberta jobs are at risk. If we have a few more of these closures, that's all it's going to take and this government's projections aren't worth the paper they're written on.

Carbon taxation is never going to be homogeneous across Canada, and as a result of that, Alberta is going to be put at a very significant trade disadvantage, and we will lose industries as multinational corporations look at Alberta and say: we may as well locate in Wyoming, or maybe we need to upgrade that plant in Buffalo, or maybe we need to upgrade that plant in Saskatchewan instead. They're just going to leave. They don't have to stay here. There's nothing forcing them to remain here. They go where there is the best economic advantage, and at one time Alberta had that advantage. It was right here in this province.

Let's talk about another diversified industry. We have in this province a manufacturing plant that takes grains and converts it into pet food. It's a multinational corporation and, of course, a great value-add to our agricultural sector. But they also use huge amounts of natural gas for dehydration, for baking, and for processing to create dry pet food. Just like Johns Manville, they too are a multinational, and they don't need to be here. They don't need to stay here. There's nothing we can do to force them to stay here. They will stay here or not based on the best economics.

Again, we have a factory whose net book value is probably approaching zero. It's been here for a generation now. So the decision is going to be made in Europe whether or not to remain here, refurbish, rebuild, upgrade, or simply move production to another existing factory somewhere else in Canada or the United States. A comparative risk analysis is done. They look at the taxation situation, the policy and regulation situation, and they take a look at the whole risk involved in that, whatever hundreds of millions of dollars it's going to be to invest, and they do what is best economically for them. They don't do what is best economically for us. We have to create the environment that is business friendly, and we had that at one time. That's why you saw so much diversification happening in this province.

If we don't have things produced here, we become subject to other jurisdictions. For example, we had a tainted dog food scandal that affected pet owners right across North America because of Chinese tainted grains. That should tell you everything you need to know about the globalization of the pet food industry, and with globalization comes the very real risk of carbon leakage.

We've got to understand that there's nothing whatsoever forcing these companies to operate here in Alberta. It is very simple for them to just leave, especially when the net book value of these factories is approaching zero. It means that the longer they have been here, the more integrated they are into Alberta communities, the less likely they are to stay because the value of the plant has diminished over its lifetime. They don't have to be here.

I put forward a couple of amendments – multiple amendments, actually – to shield sectors of our economy that this government hadn't thought about. While they rejected those amendments en masse on the floor here, it appears that in some sectors at least you've come to your senses, especially when we saw the partial greenhouse exemption.

The Chair: Hon. members, pursuant to Standing Order 4(3) the committee will now rise and report progress.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Ms Woollard: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 10.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Madam Speaker. We've discharged our duties for this morning, so I will move that we call it 12 o'clock and adjourn until 1:30 this afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 11:56 a.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, May 2, 2017

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The Minister of Environment and Parks and minister responsible for the climate change office.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House members of the Cement Association of Canada. They are led, of course, by Michael McSweeney, their director. Representatives of the Cement Association of Canada have been meeting with MLAs to discuss environmental sustainability and the leadership of their members. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to introduce to you and through you a wonderful school that is within my constituency of Bonnyville-Cold Lake. This school is incredibly large. We have over 90 children here today. It's great to see such a large showing from a school within my riding. I would like to ask the teachers to stand as I name them: Vonda, Kelly, Dustin, and Travis. I'd also like to ask the chaperones to stand as well: Karla, Krystal, Kathie-Lee, Mandy, Kerri, Mark, and Tracy. I'd also like all of the students to stand now as well. I thank them and encourage them to come back and see us again, and please enjoy this wonderful place.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other school groups today?

Seeing and hearing none, the Member for Stony Plain.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly the family of Noreen Walker. Here today is her daughter Katherine Walker, grandchildren Matilda and Maizie Walker, sons Ken and Richard Walker, and daughter Sharlene Van Etten. Noreen was a founding member of the Alberta Association of Midwives and was instrumental in having midwifery recognized and regulated here in Alberta. Katherine is following in Noreen's footsteps and continuing her mother's practice, Passages Midwifery, in Stony Plain. I would ask that they now receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two guests from the constituency of Vermilion-Lloydminster who are joining us today. They are good friends of mine. They have been tireless advocates on behalf of social justice causes for many, many years in rural Alberta, and it's indeed my privilege to have them here and to introduce them today. Would you please extend a warm welcome to Grant Bergman and Peggy Smith, seated in the gallery.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Midwife Noreen Walker

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This Friday is the International Day of the Midwife, and I rise today to pay tribute to a woman from my constituency who literally touched the lives of thousands of Albertans over the span of her career, Noreen Walker. Noreen was a heroine to many and a pioneer that helped shape maternal care in this province and will be missed by friends and family and the almost 4,000 families that she served.

Noreen's career as a midwife spanned more than 40 years. She was one of the founders of the Alberta Association of Midwives in 1986 and operated Passages Midwifery in Stony Plain. The profession itself was not formally recognized and regulated in Alberta until 1991, and it was Noreen's charge in 1990 of practising medicine without a licence, of which she was acquitted in 1991, that contributed to this recognition. A September 1991 article in the Canadian Medical Association Journal speaks to Noreen's dedication to her profession, reporting that "she felt 'honoured to be the last midwife in Alberta to be prosecuted' under the Medical Profession Act."

Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that the birth of a child and what that looks like is so very important, with each soon-to-be mother having their own deeply personal vision. I am profoundly grateful that here in Alberta we have options as a result of the hard work and advocacy of pioneers like Noreen Walker and other midwives. It is women like Noreen that make a difference and improve the lives of everyone they touch, and this is clear from the words of those she served. "You provided such beautiful care to the mothers in labour, you became a part of their family, you loved their kids as if they were your own," and "She gave us the gift of beauty and calm on the most special days of our lives." She was "so brave, so honourable, and loved" according to her patients.

Mr. Speaker, the loss of Noreen has left many saddened, and I offer my condolences to her friends, family, and the birthing community. I invite the members of this House to join me in honouring her and the legacy she leaves behind.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Education System

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Education Week gives us the opportunity to reflect on the history of our education system to assess where we are today and to look to the future. The backbone of our education system is the amazing professionals who devote countless hours to empower our students and prepare them for life – the teachers, the aides in the education system, the countless other individuals behind the scenes – who see the value and potential of each and every student and who want to see them grow and flourish to the best of their abilities.

Of course, no child stops learning when the bell rings to mark the end of the school day. The moms and dads, the grandparents, and guardians across the province who were their child's first teachers and who are there with their children every step of the way are a key to a child's success.

What sets our school system apart from others is the array of choice that we enjoy. No two students are the same, and different education models work best for different students. Choice in education empowers parents to find the schools that work best for their child.

We are at a crossroads in our education system with the current curriculum review, and if we don't get it right, it could hurt generations of Albertans. Changes made for change's sake do not serve our students, nor does treating them like guinea pigs with the latest educational fads. For parents across this province numeracy and literacy have to be a focus for our curriculum review, and we must ensure that the curricula provide a solid foundation and a meaningful foundation of basic skills – the standard algorithms, how to add and subtract, how to multiply and divide – and lay the foundation for students' success.

We have a real opportunity here to return Alberta to the top of the country and indeed the world when it comes to our education system. It is imperative that we trust and engage our parents, our teachers, and our students, and that is how we will get there.

Thank you.

29th Legislature Midterm Reflections

Mr. Clark: As the halfway point of this Legislature approaches, I've been reflecting on what it means to be an MLA. I think about the tone of the Assembly and about whether private members, both opposition and government, really have a say in how our province is governed. Mr. Speaker, I think I might be having a mid-term crisis.

In my optimistic moments I'm encouraged. Just today I sat down with a minister who reached out to me to offer me 20 minutes of her time to replace the time I missed in estimates when I was out sick. The first phase of the Ministerial Panel on Child Intervention was very effective, with MLAs from all parties freely discussing an urgent issue by bringing their own ideas and experiences, not just talking points. And in this House we've unanimously passed private members' bills and opposition amendments to government legislation.

Unfortunately, those examples are far too rare. Most days the opposition will ask rhetorical questions designed to look good on YouTube, and the government will respond with rhetoric and accusations of their own. Then the yelling will begin, and the schoolchildren will wonder if this is how adults really are supposed to act.

If you think I'm only talking about other opposition parties, I'm not. At times I have stepped over the line, and in the second half of this term I will try to do better. Now, that isn't to say that I will agree with the government on everything because I absolutely won't, and there will be times when I get angry because I believe their choices are hurting Albertans. But I will never assume that this government doesn't want the best for Alberta even when I disagree with their policies. I will never assume that the opposition doesn't want the best for Alberta even when I disagree with their approach.

My hope is that this House can return to being what it is supposed to be, a place where private members are elected to represent the interests of their constituents and their province in equal measure and where we have a government that genuinely listens to their input while charting a course for our province through difficult times. We've proven it's possible. We've seen it in this House. Now we just need to do it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Northern Hills.

Brown Bagging for Calgary's Kids Lunch Program

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Brown Bagging for Calgary's Kids lunch program works with 210 schools, impacting 3,200 kids a day who would go hungry without it. Since 1990 volunteers have formed the backbone of this organization. Today I am honoured to highlight the contribution made by volunteers from Harbours of Newport Retirement Residence in Calgary-Northern Hills.

Since 2011 residents have gathered twice a week to make lunches for hungry kids in Calgary. I recently dropped by to see the current Harbours of Newport team at work. They can put together 100 lunches in half an hour. Tanya Koshowski, executive director of Brown Bagging for Calgary's Kids, explained that lunches include each of the four food groups recommended by Canada's food guide. Whole wheat bread is made into sandwiches containing protein. Raw carrots, orange slices, and yogurt tubes, with the appropriate Star Wars and Finding Dory themes, complete the lunches, which are packed into bins and delivered to six area schools by Marie-Pier Fortin, lifestyle and program manager.

Anne Janke, 94, has been helping since the program began at the residence six years ago. She does a lot of volunteering and says that it's another way to be helpful. Ann Bradshaw has been volunteering for three years now, saying that packing lunches is a good way to help out, that it's something to do, and that it's constructive. Rose Seranillo, Mary Dueck, Isabel Michie, and Pat Stack complete the team. Also volunteering that morning were Communications and Special Projects Co-ordinator Jessica Zutz and Community Co-ordinator Jill Birch.

Mr. Speaker, by participating in the Brown Bagging for Calgary's Kids lunch program, seniors at Harbours of Newport have forged a strong bond with the community's schools and its kids. Former marketing and communications manager Stacey Senger set up this volunteer opportunity saying, "When you mention children in need to seniors, the desire to help is instant." Feeding hungry kids is now their passion.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

March for Science

Ms Renaud: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. In 500 cities on seven continents scientists and their supporters gathered to march for science. People marched because there is no planet B. Failure to expend political capital to address the catastrophic implications of climate change will result in massive damages to property, infrastructure, lost productivity, and mass migration.

Some of the March for Science signs said it best. Here are a few: The Good Thing about Science Is That It's True Whether or Not You Believe in It; At the Start of Every Disaster Movie There's a Scientist Being Ignored; Without Data You're Just Another Person with an Opinion.

I know it's tough for the Wildrose and PCs, or whatever they're called, to accept this, but global warming is settled science and denial is the hoax. More carbon dioxide equals more warming. The permafrost is melting. As one of the March for Science signs read: Ice Has No Agenda; It Just Melts. Storm intensity is growing. There is and will continue to be negative impacts on our lives. Negatively impacted agricultural productivity is but one example.

On April 22, just outside this House, I stood with hundreds of scientists, one of which is my son, as they mused and discussed the sad reality we now find ourselves facing, the need to march for science. Also heard at this march: "You know it's bad when nerdy, introverted scientists demonstrate publicly,” “I’m not a mad scientist; I’m absolutely furious,” and “I evolved; have you?”

All joking aside, the one sign and message I most want to highlight today is that science is evidence based, peer reviewed, and it’s fact. Climate change is real. It threatens our economy, well-being, and future. Funding denial films isn’t supporting free speech; it’s denying true challenges that are facing us, and it’s playing cheap politics that will have a hefty price.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I’ve had a request for unanimous consent to introduce a guest who has just arrived.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a constituent of mine, Bernice Hoi. In 2005 Bernice moved to Canada from Hong Kong with her daughters, Kylie and Yani. She settled in St. Albert while her husband stayed in Hong Kong to work. Bernice is a project leader for an IT company. As the mother of our head page, Kylie Kwok, Bernice is in the Speaker’s gallery today to watch Kylie in her role as page, a position she’s held since 2003. I’m sorry. Since 2013. I don’t think you were even born then. I would ask her to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Prescription Drug Coverage for Rare Diseases

Mr. W. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, on several occasions in the past two years various members of my caucus and myself, including the Leader of the Official Opposition, have questioned this government about Haley Chisholm, a young teenager in Highwood whose extremely rare kidney condition, called C3 glomerulopathy, requires treatment with the rare drug Soliris. This drug is currently unavailable to her because of its cost and its off-label status.

When I questioned the minister in March, I brought to light that the previous government waived the rules for a similar case and made sure funding was available through the specialized high-cost drug program, and I asked the government to do the same. To date I’ve heard absolutely nothing. The girl and her family are suffering.

The minister stated previously that she wanted to work with medical professionals for the best outcome. Well, the medical professionals have spoken, and they say that Soliris is a treatment recommended for patients like Haley. In March the Health minister stated that manufacturers are putting impediments in place, but that they may be able to increase access. Well, guess what? I’ve contacted my federal counterpart in Highwood, and he assured me that he’ll be speaking with the federal Minister of Health to open the door to have a conversation with our provincial Health minister because, as I’ve stated before, the precedent has been set where if both ministers create an open dialogue with the drug manufacturer, a compromise can be made. By working with the manufacturer, critical barriers may be mitigated. Adjustments based on population and need in Canada can and should be made for this drug to make it affordable and available through a specialized high-cost drug program.

I’m once again requesting that this government follow up and do the right thing for a young girl who’s suffering and call the federal Health minister to get the ball rolling so that Haley and her family can once again return to a pain-free and normal life.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour and minister responsible for democratic renewal.

Bill 11

Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Amendment Act, 2017

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I’m pleased to rise today and introduce Bill 11, the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Amendment Act, 2017.

This bill will help ensure government accountability, ethics, and transparency in Alberta. It will do this by helping to increase the chances of wrongdoing being both reported and addressed. I’m proud to say that the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee reviewed the existing legislation and put forward a number of recommendations, all of which we seriously considered, and I’d like to thank the committee for their work. I’m confident our proposed legislation will be among the strongest in Canada.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 11 read a first time]

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Oil Sands Advisory Group Co-chair

Mr. Jean: We know the Premier has helped the B.C. NDP in a past life. We know she’s stood hand in hand with Thomas Mulcair. We know that most of her staff, including her chief of staff, have helped build up the NDP in B.C. for decades. It was good politics to ask her staff not to help out on the B.C. election campaign, given the antipipeline crusade her former close colleagues are on, but now her chief oil sands appointee, Tzeponah Berman, is campaigning for the B.C. NDP. Will she stick to her promise and fire her?

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, the member opposite is really reaching for straws. Do you know who else is on the oil sands advisory committee? Dave Collyer, former head of CAPP. Do you know who else is on the oil sands advisory committee? The VP of CNRL. Do you know who else? A VP of Suncor. You know what? In none of those cases would I purport to suggest that I can tell those people what to do in their free time, political or otherwise. It is ridiculous. The members opposite are really, really reaching.

Mr. Jean: The Premier broke her promise. Albertans are not going to tolerate this anymore. The Premier has literally put the fox in charge of the henhouse. There’s no way these antipipeline extremists should be anywhere near our oil sands or making decisions, but the Premier and her government continue to defend them. The environment minister seems to think that agreeing on the importance of reducing emissions in the oil sands makes Berman somehow qualified. That’s absolute nonsense, and everyone over there should be ashamed of themselves. People’s livelihoods, their jobs, their quality of life are at stake. Why won’t the Premier listen to Albertans and fire Berman?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. All of the members of the oil sands advisory group are working on the issue of how we responsibly distribute the space underneath the 100-megatonne cap, and the reason they're doing that is because that's part of our climate leadership plan, the very climate leadership plan that the federal government cited when they approved Kinder Morgan, a pipeline that would never have seen the light of day under the leadership, so-called, of the members opposite.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, that's not even the worst of it. Berman and other antipipeline extremists sitting on the oil sands advisory group are being paid – listen for it – $600 a day for every single meeting, with full expenses on top of that. It's sickening to think that rig workers right now, who have seen their hours cut or have been laid off, are paying even a penny to these people. But the NDP are more interested in impressing Leap Manifesto authors than regular working people in Alberta. If the Premier won't fire her, will she tell Albertans right now how much money out of their taxpayer dollars these people are getting?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I believe the member opposite just cited what the advisory panel members are receiving to be on the panel. They are working very hard on a critical component of our climate leadership plan, which is in and of itself a critical component to our goal, which we are very close to meeting, of repositioning Alberta's energy industry so that we are more successful at diversifying our markets and getting our product to the Asia Pacific, something that will be good for all Albertans as we move this province forward.

The Speaker: Second main question.

Trade with the United States

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, Edmonton Oilers fans did more for Canada-U.S. relations by singing the American national anthem this week than anything that's ever been done by this NDP government. The fact is that under the Premier's watch, her cabinet has been largely silent on the pressing issues related to NAFTA under President Trump. These are serious issues. As a major player in trade, with exports of energy, agriculture, petrochemicals, and lumber to the United States, having our voice heard is absolutely crucial. Why, then, is the Premier dropping the ball and allowing other jurisdictions to dominate the trade conversations with our closest ally?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I was very pleased, actually, to be the first Premier to go to Washington under the new administration to make the case on behalf of our energy industry, our forestry industry, our manufacturing industry, our agricultural industry, understanding how important it is to maintain those important trade relationships.

At the same time, what we need to do is diversify our markets. That's why I'm so proud to have been to China with our minister of economic development, who led the largest ever delegation to Asia in the history of this government, because when we say that we're going to diversify, Mr. Speaker, that's what we do. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.
First supplemental.

Mr. Jean: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I know she went to Washington. I was there a week before, meeting with pretty much exactly the same people.

Our neighbouring provinces and Canada's federal government understand the significance of Canada-U.S. relations and the threat of NAFTA being tweaked or withdrawn. It's why B.C. Premier Christy Clark has vowed to fight for the forestry industry over the renewed softwood lumber dispute and is using every single tool at her disposal to do so. I wish the NDP government right here across from us would do the same thing, but instead they have been largely silent on the topic. Why does the Premier refuse to stand up for Alberta's interests and jobs and be an effective voice for . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Let me begin by saying that I reject categorically the assertions that the member opposite has said about what our government has done on the softwood lumber agreement as well as how it compares to what's been going on in other jurisdictions. One of the key things that we need to do, of course, is to diversify our lumber markets. That's what we were just working on doing as this matter came to a head, something that we, of course, knew was going to happen. We're working with the Forest Products Association. We're funding Canada Wood to help them grow their market in Japan. We're meeting with investors in Japan and China to grow our market to help our industry through this difficult time.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Jean: The facts speak for themselves, Mr. Speaker, and our economy is suffering under this NDP government.

It's absolutely crazy to think that Alberta can ignore our trading relationship with the United States by focusing on other trade partners. China isn't investing in our oil sands right now, and 90 per cent – 90 per cent – of our energy exports today head stateside. The Premier treats Keystone like it's a dirty word, and all we've got from this NDP government is a $45,000 taxpayer-funded trip to get second-rate meetings in DC. When will the Premier realize that economic prosperity in Alberta depends on a strong relationship with the United States and that she should work on it? [interjections]

The Speaker: Order, please.

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, it's not that it's actually true that the member opposite met with all the people that I did, but it is interesting that he just referred to the people he met with as second rate. I'm sure that's going to go a long way to building relationships with our important trade partners. Thankfully, he's not in charge of it; we are. We're working very hard on it, and we will stand up for Alberta jobs.

The Speaker: Third main question.

Provincial Credit Rating

Mr. Jean: Speaking of whoppers, Mr. Speaker, the Finance minister delivered a few more whoppers yesterday on the state of Alberta's finances. He said that he had heard no concerns about further downgrades from credit agencies. In fall 2015 he said the same thing, with only four downgrades to follow. Maybe he should try reading their press releases. According to Moody's his budget puts, quote, significant pressure, end quote, on Alberta's rating.

DBRS has said that “Alberta’s debt may exceed levels acceptable for the current ratings.” How can the Premier seriously believe that no credit downgrades are coming to Alberta?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, I know the member opposite’s favourite pastime is to cheer for the failure of Albertans. There’s no question that that’s what he really loves to do. Nonetheless, what our government is doing is having the backs of Albertans in tough economic times. We made a choice. We made a choice to invest in jobs, to invest in schools, to invest in health care, to invest in infrastructure because we would stand with Albertans. We would not tear them down during this time. I still believe that choice is the right one, and more and more we are seeing evidence that things are turning around because we did make the right choice.

Mr. Jean: Here’s another whopper from the Finance minister, Mr. Speaker. He said that while a downgrade would be disappointing, Alberta’s balance sheets are still in rosy shape. Here’s a wake-up call. Despite being debt free not just so long ago, Alberta will soon have more debt than the province of British Columbia. Alberta will soon be spending $2.3 billion in interest payments each and every year to big banks instead of on services or tax cuts in Alberta. A credit downgrade will only make life worse for every single Albertan. Why doesn’t anyone over there, including the Premier, understand this?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, as I said, it’s all about making choices. Now, the member opposite wants to compare us to British Columbia. In British Columbia, if you are disabled, you earn slightly less than two-thirds of what you do in Alberta. You would get about $400 a month less. So my question to the member opposite is: as he focuses on this path to getting us through these difficult times, which disabled Albertans is he going to cut by 30 to 40 per cent? Which ones?

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, fewer jobs, higher taxes, higher interest payments, and higher spending ultimately are going to be extremely bad for the people of Alberta, all the people of Alberta. This is the NDP record. More credit downgrades and higher interest payments mean less money for hospitals, for schools, for teachers and nurses for the long run so that the NDP can binge on billions for things like new light bulbs or a carbon tax ad, maybe, and killing jobs in our coal industry. That’s all they’re doing. Promising to maybe balance the budget in a decade if oil prices skyrocket isn’t a plan; it’s a fantasy. It’s a game of Russian roulette with our finances. Why does the Premier continue to refuse to make any real cuts?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I’ve said before, we are focused on making life better for Albertans by making it more affordable, by creating jobs, and by investing in those important public services that Albertans need more than ever. We will not cut AISH by one-third. The members opposite may think that that’s the plan to follow, but it is not the way we will go. We will not close half the libraries in this province. We will not roll back Advanced Education by 8 per cent. We won’t do that because in the long run Albertans pay, and that debt doesn’t go away. We have a moderate, managed plan to get to balance. It is the responsible way to go and . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
The leader of the third party.

Teachers’ Working Time

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, someone has leaked the new teachers’ agreement to the Edmonton Journal. It’s reported that instructional hours have been capped in the agreement. We understand a zero per cent increase means our hard-working teachers are not gaining anything in extra pay or benefits. As a result, school boards will now have less flexibility in how they deploy teachers to get the best results for our kids. To the Education minister: as a result of agreeing to a cap on assigned time, which includes instructional hours, how many more teachers will you now need to hire to do the work done today by the teachers already in the system?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, the collective agreement has not been ratified yet. We still have a few weeks for the teachers and for the school boards to ratify it, but I can say that we’re very proud that, at least on paper, so far we have negotiated two zeros for the next negotiating period for salaries. Teachers recognize that they will make improvements to the classroom and classroom conditions for children their top priority for our government and for themselves as well. School boards recognize this, and I think that we have the makings of a very sound deal.

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Journal reports that there will be a cap on instructional hours for teachers in Alberta. I will table the Journal column today. I know teachers are committed to students and want to make students as successful as possible. I wonder if those teachers who often work long hours to assist kids in need of extra help will now be prevented from doing so as they bump up against the cap. To the minister: is there any chance under the cap that teachers will be told they cannot give extra help to kids when they need it after they get past their maximum assigned hours?

Mr. Eggen: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, the agreement, as I said, has not been ratified yet, so I don’t want to discuss too many of the details save to say that the hours that have been negotiated that are in the agreement are very sound, and we’ve seen very positive reaction from the school boards and from the teachers as well. We know as well that we have to be very fiscally responsible during these times, so potentially I’m very excited about this teachers’ agreement because – you know what? – it shows that when the chips are down, teachers and parents and school boards are there to make life better for students.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, we know that teachers and kids won’t benefit from the cap on assignable hours. If a parent calls a teacher outside of assigned hours, we don’t know whether the teacher will be allowed to take the call. Now, we know that teachers, kids, and parents all lose as a result of this agreement. The obvious question is: who gains? Certainly, the union will collect more dues for educating the same number of kids. To the minister: since you’re putting your union-boss friends ahead of kids, parents, and teachers in the education system, are there any benefits for Alberta kids with capping assigned time?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Education has already said, this is a matter that is still being considered for ratification, so we’re not going to get into the details of it. But we’re quite proud, and we look forward to being able to talk about it.

One thing I can say, Mr. Speaker, is that kids would have had less access to their teachers if they'd been fired. You know what else? They would have had less access to education if their special-needs assistants had been fired, and that is exactly what the outcome would have been under the budget proposed by the third party across the way. So it's a little rich right now. Nonetheless, we are very proud of our record on education. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Postsecondary Education Funding

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On November 21, 2016, the Minister of Advanced Education committed in this House to provide "predictable, sustainable funding for every university and college in this province." That sounds pretty good. But during estimates he admitted that although backfill funding was provided for the first two years of the tuition freeze, a third year of backfill funding is nowhere in sight. Now, this has left Alberta's postsecondary institutions in a bind. To the minister: will you provide backfill funding to ensure stability for postsecondary institutions?

The Speaker: The Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a government we believe that investing in learning is one of the most important investments we can make in the future of our province, the future of our students, and that is why we are providing stable funding to Alberta colleges and universities, with a 2 per cent annual increase to their base operating grants. We have taken a number of steps that will help students. We are working with our partners, university partners and student bodies, to make sure that students have every opportunity to learn and be successful in this province.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let's talk about the tuition freeze. It's interesting that neither student groups nor the institutions themselves ever asked for a tuition freeze. That's because they didn't want to sacrifice quality due to budget constraints. Students are concerned that when the freeze ends, they will be faced with a massive tuition hike. Now, there's a simple solution: legislate a tuition cap that increases by no more than inflation. To the same minister: will you take the advice of postsecondary stakeholder groups, cap tuition increases, and move the tuition regulation back under the Post-secondary Learning Act?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said, we are committed to working with student groups, universities, and, in particular, those 250,000 students who are benefiting from that tuition freeze. We are working to make life better for Albertans, and these are 250,000 students who are benefiting from this freeze, and we are proud of our work that we are doing to make life better for Albertans.

Mr. Clark: Well, let's try again. I'm going to talk about mental health this time. Mental health is one of the most urgent issues across campuses in Alberta, but funding is allocated haphazardly, with some institutions receiving more than others and some getting none at all. The Alberta Students' Executive Council recommends that mental health funding be based on a per-student model. At $25 a student it would cost only $6.7 million, and that would include the 115,000 students who currently do not receive any support. Again to the Minister of Advanced Education: why have you not committed to stable, predictable, and sufficient funding for postsecondary mental health?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

2:10

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said, we are working to make life better by protecting the things that make a difference, and that includes mental health supports. In Budget 2017 we have $3.6 million in funding to support the mental health supports, and we are also working with the Minister of Health on this issue. That's a priority for us, to provide the supports that Albertans need to be successful, and certainly we are doing just that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mountain Pine Beetle Control

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past winter was fairly warm with no sustained periods of cold. This has led to a spread of pine beetles in the Hinton area, which poses a serious threat to the area's pine forest. Given that if left unmanaged the infestation could spread to surrounding areas in West Yellowhead, to the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry: what is the state of pine beetle infestation in Hinton, and what areas in my constituency are currently infected?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Mountain pine beetle remains a substantial and imminent threat to the health of Alberta's forests. Infestations threaten Alberta's social, economic, and environmental resources, which is why we take this issue so seriously. The infestation is affecting a quarter of Alberta's pine forests, with the most severe concentrations being in the west-central pine belt. This does include areas within the member's constituency, the Hinton area being of the greatest concern. We are working closely with our stakeholders and are taking a number of focused approaches to managing the spread.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the spread of pine beetle threatens the livelihoods of many of my hard-working constituents in the forestry sector, to the same minister: what has this government done to address this additional spread?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I mentioned, we take this issue very seriously, which is why this year my department has allocated substantial resources to manage the infestation and minimize the impacts caused by mountain pine beetle. Priority objectives are to minimize the spread of beetles north and south along the eastern slopes and prevent beetles from spreading further east in the boreal forest. Other objectives include rehabilitating stands with significant tree mortality and the protection of endangered tree species and critical habitat. Removing infested trees is our most effective tool to control the spread of pine beetles in our forests. Another principal tool is industry harvest of pine stands to decrease the spread of infestation.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this unforeseen pine beetle spread was a result of inaction within Jasper national park, to the same minister: how is this government working with Jasper national park to ensure proper mitigation strategies are in place?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're working closely with all of our stakeholders, including park officials and the federal government, on how to effectively control the spread. In recent years my department has built a strong working relationship with Parks Canada, identifying and assessing the impact and spread of mountain pine beetle. Through this co-operation and monitoring we have been able to strategically act based on that data. We support the implementation of Jasper national park's mountain pine beetle management strategy, specifically the goal to slow or limit the spread of mountain pine beetle through Jasper national park. We will continue to engage our federal counterparts to ensure that everyone is doing their part to protect our forests.

Job Creation and Retention

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, yesterday we learned that one of the largest property development companies in Alberta for 35 years, the Walton International Group, has received creditor protection. Investors in Calgary and Edmonton are worried they're about to receive pennies on the dollar invested. Walton laid off 370 people. How does the Premier think her piddling job programs will help investors about to lose their pensions and retirement savings?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the question. I mean, first of all, let me begin by saying that it's always disappointing to hear of job losses. We know that this has a significant impact on families, on everyday Albertans. In these tough times families need a government that has their backs and that is working to make life better, and that's exactly why we've been focusing on economic diversification and job creation. I want to point out that the approval of two new pipelines means the creation of up to 22,000 new jobs in western Canada and will provide increased market access.

In addition, Mr. Speaker . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, given the current recession having a direct impact on the Alberta real estate market, the steep drop in new home permits and starts, fewer people moving to Alberta, and high unemployment and given that Alberta's GDP contracted 3.8 per cent in 2016, the second year in a row and not seen even since the NEP era, how do the Premier's reckless policies – the high taxes, debt-financed operations, and corporate welfare – actually get Albertans back to work?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do want to point out a couple of other things. Last month alone, Alberta created more than 20,000 full-time jobs, leading the country. I can tell you that rig drilling is up a hundred per cent from last year, to over 210. Despite what the opposition may say, in 2016 we led the country in private capital investment at $53.8 billion. We know that Alberta continues to remain the best place in the world to invest, and this is why investment continues to be attracted to our province.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, given that the approvals are in place for expansion projects in the oil sands like CNRL Kirby North, Suncor Meadow Creek, Cenovus Grand Rapids and given these three companies are the Premier's new BFFs, singing the carbon tax Kumbaya, and are taking the lead in consolidating the oil sands assets, is the Premier going to beg these companies to get the projects started, or will the Premier continue her job-killing reign of economic terrorism?

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, I'll attempt to respond to the member's question. Again, first of all, drilling forecasts for our province are up to 2,700 wells from the original estimate. Husky Energy raised its production forecast to 320,000 barrels per day and increased its capital expenditures to $2.7 billion. CNRL reported that they're committing $1.35 billion to restart the Kirby North SAGD project, which will produce 40,000 barrels a day. Cenovus is boosting their capital spending by 24 per cent. Baytex is increasing their capital spending by 70 per cent. Companies are . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Government House Leader, was there a point of order?

Mr. Mason: There sure was.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Oil Sands Advisory Group Co-chair (continued)

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When Tzeponah Berman was appointed co-chair of the NDP's oil sands advisory panel, the Premier defended her decision by insisting that despite Ms Berman's past as a vocal anti oil sands, antipipeline advocate, her voice would add value to this discussion. Now Ms Berman is once again actively campaigning against Alberta's interests by campaigning for the B.C. NDP, a party that has vowed to do everything in its power to permanently cripple Alberta's economy. To the Premier: do you still think it's appropriate for Ms Berman, a B.C. resident, to serve on your oil sands advisory panel?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On this side of the House we believe that a strong economy and a clean environment go hand in hand. That's how we secured two pipelines. New pipelines mean a brighter future for our oil and gas industry, with 22,000 jobs associated with those projects, and opportunities for tens of thousands of working families, billions in new investment. That's what happens when you have a government on this side of the House that understands that climate change is real, for starters, wants to work with the oil and gas industry, the oil sands operators, that also sit on the oil sands advisory group, and find a way to reduce the carbon in the barrel, and that's what we're doing.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that it's no secret that Ms Berman is no fan of the Alberta oil sands, disparaging our industry at every possible opportunity, and given that these views are in direct contradiction to what you say your government wants when it comes to the future of the oil sands, again to the Premier: what possible benefit does her presence on the panel serve since she continues to demonstrate she's not receptive to other points of view?

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we have an oil sands advisory group, that is comprised of First Nations: indigenous representation, something that the PCs don't seem to care is also there. We have an oil sands advisory group that has municipal representation: again, not listening to those communities in 44 years of government over there. We have Cenovus, Suncor, CNRL, other oil sands companies on that oil sands advisory group. They have told us they want to reduce the carbon in the barrel. We want to work with them. That government did nothing.

Mrs. Aheer: Where's the report?

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that just a few weeks ago the Premier issued a directive that banned NDP MLAs and staff from participating in the B.C. election campaign and given that the Premier gave the direction because she knew that having NDP staffers support the election of a party that has vowed to block any pipeline carrying Alberta oil to the west coast would destroy her credibility when she claims she supports our oil and gas industry, again to the Premier: will you prove that your government has not been misleading Albertans from the start and fire Ms Berman from the oil sands advisory panel today?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's not at all surprising that the PC caucus does not want Alberta to succeed in this matter. Of course, they did not get pipelines approved, and this government did. It's also not surprising that they don't want to take action on climate change. After all, their new leader questions the science of climate change, and over here we have a caucus where, you know, we have many, many opinions on climate change. Their leader for now tends to condone them. We'll see about the future. We never know. These are the same people who spent over a decade shouting down those with different views. We're not . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.
The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Police Disclosure of Homicide Victims' Names

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While the RCMP in Alberta has become increasingly transparent in releasing the names of homicide victims, some police services have begun to withhold more and more names. As a result, this information is being released inconsistently. Almost half of the victims of homicides in Edmonton in 2017 have had their names withheld. At its core this is an issue of transparency. Does the Minister of Justice believe that this is a troubling trend, and are changes being made?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Police services do make operational decisions independent of the ministry. I do know that they consider very carefully a number of different factors, including transparency but also including the fact that in some instances where there is no danger to the public, the family and particularly the children of the victim may be negatively impacted by releasing the names. This is obviously a complex issue, that's very difficult for both families and for the public, and we understand that the service takes their responsibility very seriously.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When families choose, that's one thing; when the police choose to not release the names, that's another.

Given that withholding information from the public can pose a significant threat to Alberta's communities and even limit the investigative efforts of the police and considering that, as Sergeant Jack Poitras with the RCMP K Division says, "the community wants to know what's going on, we try to get those names out there. It's a concern for the citizens when heinous crimes occur that they are informed," does the minister believe that transparency and openness should be the default, and if not, why not?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, as I've said, police make these decisions considering several factors. Transparency is absolutely one of those factors. Additional factors include the safety of the public. When there's an issue of safety, obviously the name needs to be released. But one of those factors is, in fact, the victims and the families of the victims, and their needs need to be taken into account as well. You know, they have a very difficult decision to make, and I think they take their obligations very seriously in making those choices.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, given that it's really no secret that Alberta Justice is the worst department when it comes to withholding information and that Albertans need to have confidence that critical information is being appropriately reported and given that section 32 of FOIP states that a public body must not keep secret any information "the disclosure of which is, for any . . . reason, clearly in the public interest" and given that Albertans have the right to expect consistency for critical issues like this one but that there is some confusion here, Minister, this is your opportunity. Show some leadership; provide clarity. Albertans want transparency on this issue.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I've said twice before, these are very challenging cases. These are very difficult decisions for police to make. They do absolutely consider the interest in transparency. They do absolutely consider the interest in public safety. But in an instance where the perpetrator is already known, as in an instance of two people in the same family where the children may ultimately be harmed or other family members may ultimately be harmed by the release of that information, sometimes they make a difficult choice.

The Speaker: Lacombe-Ponoka.

Minimum Wage Increase and Nonprofit Organizations

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This one is tragic. We warned that raising the minimum wage would hurt charities. We begged the government to do an economic impact study before going ahead with their ideological plan. Now we have charities telling us that children, seniors, and those with disabilities will suffer from this minimum wage increase unless something is done. Helping families out of poverty is critically important, but hurting charities is the absolute wrong way to do it. Will the minister continue to raise the minimum wage on the backs of nonprofits since it actually hurts children, seniors, and disabled people?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. All hard-working Albertans deserve to make enough money to support themselves and their families. Research tells us that we have 300,000 Albertans who are earning less than $15 an hour. The majority of them are adults; 100,000 of them have children. The majority of them are women. These are hard-working Albertans who go to work full-time and sometimes need to stop at the food bank on their way home because their minimum wage does not allow them to take care of their families. We are committed to a $15 minimum wage.

Thank you.

Mr. Orr: Well, there's no compassion there for the disabled.

The Lacombe action group compiled the data to show how much more the minimum wage will cost their group to take care of adults and children with disabilities. Given that they've already been subsidizing staff wages from their own administrative budget, now they'll have no other option because they will soon be over $120,000 a year in the hole. Given that they are going to have to reduce services for those with disabilities, will the minister allow this to happen by continuing with the minimum wage increase?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We will continue to work with businesses throughout Alberta to make sure that we are supporting them by decreasing small-business taxes, by making sure that there are grants available. At the same time, we need to make sure that we are taking care of the lowest earning Albertans in our province. Many business owners have said that they're in support of the increase in minimum wage for various reasons, including improved employee retention and making sure that their employees do not have to stop at the food bank on their way home from work.

Mr. Orr: I'm ashamed and the minister should also be ashamed that it's come to this.

Given that these are the services that the Lacombe action group will not be able to fully fund in the years to come – personal care aides, domestic child care, extraordinary child care, behavioural care, and specialized care for the disabled – and given that the unsustainable raise in minimum wage means that the Lacombe action group cannot fund all of these programs, will the minister tell them which program is the least important so they know which program to cut?

2:30

Mr. Sabir: As a government we are absolutely . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet.

Mr. Sabir: . . . committed to making sure that persons with disabilities get the support they need, and that's why we have increased funding for the AISH program, for the PDD program. Under their plan they would have cut $2.6 billion. Under their plan everyone would have suffered, including persons with disabilities. We are proud of the work we have done in this sector.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

School Trustee Election Campaign Finance

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When the NDP removed large union and corporate donations from provincial politics and the Justice minister claimed that they had put the power back in the hands of Alberta citizens rather than those with the deepest pockets, our caucus voted for that bill, and I would hope that the government will support this cause at all levels of government. Now, previously when I asked the minister about unions funding trustee elections, there was no answer, so let's try this a different way. To the Minister of Education: will you ensure that the same laws introduced in Bill 1 in June 2015 will be applied to the upcoming trustee elections?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we know that the municipal level of government, including trustees, is a very important part of our democratic process, and we know that it is a level of governance and so forth that has very modest campaign money that is attached to it, so the procedure for this level of government at this time remains the same as the last election.

Mr. Rodney: Wow.

Now, given the degree to which large financial donations can alter elections is amplified at the school board trustee level due to the relatively small number of voters in these elections and given that even trustees who have received large union donations in the past have signed a petition banning union donations for trustees as put forward by Kids Come First and the Calgary Association of Parents and School Councils, again to the minister: if trustees who took large union donations are supporting the intentions of this petition, why won't you commit to doing the exact same thing?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our government has been proud to take action on democratic reform on critical issues like taking big money out of politics and making real change within this system. In many cases legislation that impacts our democratic system had not been updated in decades, much like workplace legislation, much like legislation throughout this government. We will continue to work with Albertans to make sure that our democratic institutions and systems are as strong as they can be.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet.

Mr. Rodney: Given that the bill, which abolished large donations for provincial parties, was introduced two years ago and given that the Minister of Municipal Affairs' spokesperson has stated that it was too close to election time to implement the requested donation limit changes for trustee elections and given that the NDP should have acted much sooner if they truly did not agree with large donations in elections because they impair democracy and concentrate power in the hands of those with money to spare, to the Minister of Municipal Affairs: why did you or your predecessor not address these concerns in the past two years, and will you act now, before it's too late?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We believe that Albertans should decide elections, and that is why we introduced the Fair Elections Financing Act. That is why we are taking real action. The previous party benefited from a pay-to-play system for 44 years without lifting a finger to make important democratic changes to give the power back to everyday Albertans. PC entitlement was in play for decades. We are taking action to make changes to our democratic system and to return power through legislation like the public interest disclosure act amendments introduced today.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Fort McMurray Wildfire Recovery

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At this time last year a fire was burning that would devastate the hard-working communities of Fort McMurray and the rest of Wood Buffalo. Given that families there are still re-establishing their lives after the loss of their homes, being displaced, sometimes for months, and still dealing with the struggle of rebuilding and given that every penny goes a long way, especially when your life has been so entirely disrupted, to the Minister of Municipal Affairs: what is the government doing to support the recovery of families who had their homes destroyed during the wildfire?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. When Fort McMurray was in need, this province banded together to support those families. Our commitment to the people of Wood Buffalo is unwavering. This week we announced an additional $7.1 million in education property tax relief for both 2016 and '17. Recovery is never a short road, and our government and the people of Alberta are committed to the people of Wood Buffalo to ensure that they get the support they need every step of the way.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms McPherson: Thank you. Given that stressful circumstances like losing your home make navigating complicated systems more challenging, prolonging the amount of time to rebuild and feel settled, to the same minister: how will the residents of Wood Buffalo know if they are eligible, and how will the monies be dispersed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. One of our goals in the recovery effort is to ensure that we support the people of Wood Buffalo in the rebuild of their community, and therefore the tax relief will be given to residents who are still in the process of rebuilding their home and have yet to receive their occupancy permit. The Wood Buffalo council will set the criteria for administering the compensation to residents. The relief is just one of the ways that our government is standing with them in the recovery, and to date our government has allocated $743 million in disaster assistance for Wood Buffalo.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms McPherson: Thank you. Given that for any support program to work, it needs to actually reach the people who are eligible, again to the Minister of Municipal Affairs: how is the government ensuring that residents are aware of the support so that they can take advantage of the program?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. I was in Fort McMurray yesterday, where I made this funding announcement. This funding was requested by the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo and will be distributed on the ground by the municipality. Yesterday I was on the ground, and it was hard not to be proud. I saw homes being rebuilt, stores getting back to business, and kids heading off to school. It's that resilience that makes us proud as Albertans, and our government will continue to support this community going forward.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Union Certification and Strike Voting Procedures

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2012 Ontario's Tim Hudak unveiled the labour reform package calling for the implementation of secret ballots when organizations vote whether to unionize or not, to which Ontario's minister of agriculture responded: what a joke. The secret ballot prevents intimidation and thuggery against employees that disagree with unionization. Does our esteemed Minister of Labour also agree that secret ballots in union certification are a joke?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I've been very proud to engage with Albertans about our outdated workplace legislation, which has not been updated since 1988. We've received nearly 5,000 submissions, we've had people participate in round-table discussions, and I'm currently reviewing the views of Albertans. I look forward to bringing forward more ideas and discussion to this House after I've had an opportunity to review what Albertans have had to say.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, given what we have seen in Ontario and given that multiple cases such as Graham Brothers Construction Ltd. versus Labourers' International Union of North America clearly show unions bullying people into voting in favour of unionization and given that this is just one case in dozens where this intimidation and bullying by unions has occurred, will the minister do the right thing and protect Alberta workers from this form of bullying and thuggery by assuring us that she is not going to do away with the secret ballot?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. After engaging with Albertans on the topics around labour legislation, employment standards, making sure that Albertans have access to job-protected sick leave, and key issues, I'm now reviewing the feedback that we've received from Albertans to make sure that we can have fair and balanced workplace legislation, legislation that offers improvements and effective workplaces for all Albertans, something that works for employers and employees. I look forward to discussing this further.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, Minister.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, given that Alberta NDP's BFFs in Ontario believe that a secret ballot for elections and strike votes is regressive and given that these fellow NDP world viewers also think that a secret ballot is part of a race to the bottom, is it the current minister's labour plan to stop the bottom feeding in Alberta and embrace a hug-a-thug union world view in order to eliminate the right to a secret ballot? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given the member asking the question's BFFs did study after study and never changed workplace legislation, I have to know if it's the member's hope that we never change anything in this province. We need to make sure that we have up-to-date, fair, and balanced workplace legislation, that we make sure that we can support a strong economy and fairness for our workers. This is important to our government. We have Albertans' backs. I will review the feedback we've received and be happy to move forward.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Oh, I'm glad that's over. I can hardly wait for tomorrow.

Hon. members, in 30 seconds we will continue with other business.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Hon. member, go ahead.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today, letters. One letter is addressed to the Premier with regard to the consultation on the Labour Relations Code from McSween, Nelson Martin, CET, the operations manager of McSween Custom Fabricating, asking for extended and enhanced consultation on the Labour Relations Code.

My second tabling is addressed to the Minister of Labour. It comes from Willbros Canada, Jeremy Kinch, asking again for the Labour minister to consider an extension on the labour code review.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thanks, Mr. Speaker, I've got two tablings. The first is a letter from the Calgary Herald complaining about an NDP Holocaust speech at a synagogue where the 6 million Jewish victims were not mentioned.

The second one is the newspaper article from the Journal that I made reference to in my question today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have five copies of a letter to table that I wrote to the hon. Government House Leader on the 9th of March, 2017. This is my 14th day of fabulous tablings. It says, "I think these professionals are being utilized for clear partisan political benefit of the government . . . particularly in the areas of electricity . . . gas prices, education." That sounds pretty familiar, doesn't it? This is for the benefit of the Government House Leader.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table a document written by the Alberta Students' Executive Council entitled Post-Secondary That Works for Students. It advocates for a stable, predictable tuition funding model – not a tuition freeze – funding for mental health, postsecondary education governance changes amongst many other things.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is a cover letter from the executive director of the Lacombe action centre which basically ends by saying that unless the issues around minimum wage are resolved, services to individuals will need to be cut.

The second is a spreadsheet detailing the hourly rates for various positions as it applies to the years 2016, '17, and '18 and which, by the time we get to '18, shows a $120,000-a-year deficit.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have five copies to table of constituents' letters regarding changes to the Labour Relations Code.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have four letters here addressed to the Premier from Rob Wierenga, Neeralta Manufacturing Inc.; Barry Robertson, senior VP and COO, Synergy Products Ltd.; Nancy Bach-Hansen, Slimdor Contracting Ltd.; and Darryl Wiebe, president and CE, Kerr Interior Systems.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I believe there was one point of order today. If I could clarify with the Government House Leader, if the point of order was made with respect to a comment made by the Member for Calgary-Foothills concerning economic terrorism, I've received an apology from the member.

Mr. Mason: I would like to make my point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Very briefly, then.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Mason: Okay. Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, at about 2:16 the Member for Calgary-Foothills used words to the effect: would the Premier continue her reign of economic terrorism? So I'm rising under 23(h), (i), and (j), and I want to just read you the definition, very briefly, of terrorism in the Oxford dictionary: "The unlawful use of violence and intimidation, especially against civilians, in the pursuit of political aims." I think that we can agree that terrorism is a heinous criminal act, and for one hon. member to suggest that another hon. member, in this case the Premier, is engaged in terrorism is far beyond the pale, and I ask you to rule so.

The Speaker: Member for Calgary-Foothills, I believe you have a statement to make.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, my question was about job-killing policies, and I was talking about the extreme economic pain faced by the residents of Calgary-Foothills. In that context I was asking the Premier if she could use her good offices to talk to those companies that she claims every day to be her supporters. I said: would you please request those companies to bring those projects back so we can have jobs? In that context I said that word, but I meant to say: extreme economic pain. If my word is unparliamentary, I withdraw that, and I apologize unconditionally.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Bill 8

An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government

[Adjourned debate May 1: Mr. Jean]

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to have the opportunity today to rise to speak to Bill 8, An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government. You know, certainly, the opportunity for partnership and collaboration with municipal governments across this province is one of the most important opportunities and indeed responsibilities that we have as a provincial government. There is so much, I have found for myself, of course, being the representative of Edmonton-Centre, which is right here in the heart of the city and home to Edmonton's city council and city hall, in having the opportunity to work very closely with my municipal colleague. I've certainly seen the value of those opportunities in how we're able to co-ordinate so many things together.

Certainly, I've heard many good things from our city council here in the city, both from the mayor and many members of council, about the good work we've been able to do as a government in building a more collaborative relationship with municipalities across the province. Indeed, I'll note that Lisa Holmes, the president of the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, stated that "collaboration ensures strong communities and increased quality of life for Albertans."

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to note that just today Edmonton city council passed a motion and approved writing a letter of support for safe injection sites here in the city of Edmonton, something that's going to go forward along with the work we've been doing as a province and that the Edmonton Police Service and many others have stepped forward to support. That's just another example of how collaboration between municipal and provincial government can indeed make life better for many Albertans. I think that's an important step forward, and I'm very proud to be part of that.

In much the same way, Mr. Speaker, I'm very happy and very proud to be supporting Bill 8, which continues the good work that our ministers of Municipal Affairs have done. Indeed, Mr. Ken Kobly of the Alberta Chambers of Commerce called the MGA review "the gold standard for government consultation." I'm very proud that our government has been so thorough and worked so hard on this and that indeed we have the opportunity now to bring forward yet another piece of legislation which will continue to improve on that work, reflect what we heard back from Albertans, from our stakeholders in municipalities, and make some further changes which are going to continue to improve that opportunity for relationships and collaboration that we have with our municipal partners, at the same time providing them with additional tools which they can use to do the work that they do in service of Albertans in many jurisdictions across our province. Again, very happy, very proud to have the opportunity to take part in supporting this bill.

Indeed, one part of this bill, Mr. Speaker, that I was looking at and was happy to see was the intermunicipal off-site levies. Now, I know that the city of Edmonton and the surrounding municipalities have been very forward thinking in working through the Capital Region Board and trying to build that collaboration, indeed building those relationships as an economic voice for our communities, and in finding ways that we can work together as municipalities to benefit everybody. Currently municipalities may collect off-site levies from new developments that are within their municipal boundaries in order to pay for land facilities that are related to things like water service or sanitary sewage or storm sewage drains or municipal roads or some of these important services.

Now with the MMGA, with this new piece of legislation and indeed some of the amendments that come forward here in Bill 8, we're expanding that list to include off-site infrastructure like libraries and police stations, fire halls and community recreation facilities. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, I know we do share many of those things in common, and I know that we have many in our communities around Edmonton who come in to work in our city and take the opportunity to participate in many of the great activities. Indeed, some of this key infrastructure benefits more than just one community.

It also implements mandatory regional planning mechanisms that allow for land-use planning. That requires municipalities, then, to work together to figure out the best way to provide these services and to share the costs. Mr. Speaker, I think that's an important step forward, again, as I spoke about, with us being able as a provincial government to be better partners and collaborators with local municipalities. Indeed, it's great to see these steps, moving forward, to help municipalities be able to collaborate with each other.

I am also very happy, Mr. Speaker, to see the pieces of this legislation which are enabling joint-use and planning agreements for schools. Currently the MGA provides the flexibility for municipalities to be able to enter into joint-use agreements with school boards, but they aren't mandatory. Those agreements, then, outline how the different pieces of land that they're working with will be allocated between the municipality and each school board within the boundaries, but in the absence of a joint-use agreement, the subdivision authority then has to determine both the needs of the municipality and the school board. Instead, now moving forward with mandatory joint-use and planning agreements will allow school boards and municipalities to be able to work together more effectively. It establishes a process by which they can discuss some of the matters that are involved with planning and developing, making use of school sites on municipal reserves, school reserves, and the municipal and school reserves in each municipality. It allows for the transfer of municipal reserves, school reserves, and municipal and school reserves within a municipality.

It allows for easier disposal of school sites. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, I know that here in downtown Edmonton we have a former school site which has been able to be moved on. We're now having opportunities within the Oliver community, and the Oliver Community League and others are involved and having discussions about redeveloping that now as a housing site, possibly particularly as an affordable housing site. These are incredible opportunities that come forward when we provide and make it easier for school boards to collaborate with municipalities to dispose of former school lands.

This also provides, then, for the servicing of school sites on municipal reserves, school reserves, and municipal and school reserves in the municipality as well as for the use of school facilities and municipal facilities, the use of playing fields on municipal reserves, and it includes matters related to the maintenance of the facilities and the fields and the payment of fees. It outlines how the municipalities and the school boards can work together collaboratively as well as a process for resolving disputes. It also provides a time frame for them to have regular review of these agreements as well as any other provisions that they consider being necessary.

It's wonderful, Mr. Speaker, to see that both the AUMA and the AAMD and C, both the cities of Calgary and Edmonton, the Alberta School Boards Association, and developers that we spoke with were all supportive of this piece of legislation.

I look forward to the opportunities that are going to come forward with this. You know, Mr. Speaker, I've heard members in this House who have spoken of the opportunities for collaboration between schools and municipalities; for example, building a new school and having a public library as part of that school. That's something, then, that benefits the community, gives people from the community more connection with their local school, more opportunities to make use of that space, and saves money for both school boards and for the municipality.

There are many opportunities. Indeed, public health clinics in our local schools could be very beneficial as well, Mr. Speaker, particularly in areas where we may have families that are lower income who may have difficulty with transportation or being able to get to many of these other locations. Having municipal services consolidated in a site where their children are also going to school can be greatly beneficial for these families.

Mr. Speaker, again, I'm very happy to see the changes that are coming forward through this act. I greatly appreciate the work that the new Minister of Municipal Affairs has done in getting up to speed on these issues. I think he's done yeoman's work in learning the issues, working on these files, and, indeed, getting out and speaking with stakeholders in the community to ensure that when he brought forward this piece of legislation, in fact it was what was being asked for.

Lastly, I'd just like to talk about another great thing that's coming forward in this bill, that being provisions for parental leave. Now, we've talked quite a bit in this Legislature about trying to make our Legislature more family friendly and trying to provide more opportunities for members to be able to look after their children. Indeed, we've had the pleasure of having some of those children here in this House, and I look forward to seeing many more because, as you've noted previously, Mr. Speaker, that may in fact help sometimes with the tone. Nothing calms a room down like a young child, well, depending on the mood of that child, I suppose.

That said, Mr. Speaker, currently municipal councils have the authority to permit extended councillor absences without disqualification on a case-by-case basis, but they don't have the clear authority to actually just establish an ongoing standard that would provide for extended parental leave on a system-wide basis. Right now they can decide it on a case-by-case basis, but they don't have the ability, actually, to just create a new rule, much like we've done through some of our committees here in the Legislature.

We've heard from stakeholders that they're, in fact, interested in opening up this discussion and giving that opportunity. Municipal councillors are interested. Certainly, Mr. Speaker, as we are coming up on municipal elections, I know that many members on both sides of this aisle are working to see increased diversity in our public life. There are some great campaigns that are happening right now in this province to encourage more women, of all political stripes, to get involved in the process to help increase the diversity of our province. I'm very proud that with the election of this current Legislature we saw a great increase in the number of women here. Of course, we're still only at about one-third in this Legislature, so I look forward to that diversity continuing to increase in the future until it reaches gender parity perhaps, much like our current cabinet. We almost reach it on this side of the House.

Indeed, the opportunities for more women to be involved in politics – not to say that women are the only ones who would be taking parental leave, but certainly this is something that provides more of a barrier, I think, traditionally for women than men. This opportunity now in Bill 8 provides municipalities with the opportunity to be enabled to provide for extended parental leave for councillors by bylaw. This means that municipalities now will actually be able to enact specific policies and indeed pass a bylaw which would provide for extended parental leave. We're making the move now to amend that, therefore allowing local councils to have more opportunity to locally determine their parental leave process, addressing any concerns that might come up about extended absences.

This was something that was requested indeed by the city of Edmonton, and it's been supported by the AUMA, the AAMDC, and also by the city of Calgary. Once again, Mr. Speaker, I'd just like to say thank you to the minister for his work on this. Thank you to those who have served in that position previously for their work in moving this act forward. I look forward to seeing this bill passed in this House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, under 29(2)(a) for the Member for Edmonton-Centre?

Seeing and hearing none, the Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising on Bill 8, the changes to the Municipal Government Act. I think, as I said earlier in the House, the act on balance is worth supporting, but it would be good to remind the government of some of the shortfalls in the bill, not as . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I'm advised that, in fact, you have already spoken to this bill, and I therefore need to rule you out of order.

Mr. McIver: I'll wait for another reading, Mr. Speaker. There is so much to say.

The Speaker: I'm sure there is.

Are there any other members? The Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Is it still possible to speak under 29(2)(a)?

The Speaker: No. You're to speak to the motion now.

Mr. Dach: All right. Then I would certainly be glad to speak to the bill itself, Mr. Speaker.

I appreciate the opportunity to rise today and talk about An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government. Our government is delivering on its promise to modernize the Municipal Government Act in time for municipal elections this fall. We're making the MGA a responsive and forward-looking piece of legislation that gives municipalities practical tools and resources to support strong and sustainable communities.

One of the things that I'm really quite pleased about is the forward-looking effort at collaboration between ourselves and municipalities and indigenous reserves, that formerly were really disregarded when it came to expansion of municipalities into adjacent lands neighbouring reserves or when there were developments on reserves that required tying into municipal services that ended up in protracted negotiations which really had no framework to lead the discussion. What comes to mind is the negotiations that took place between the Enoch reserve and the city of Edmonton with respect to providing water when the hotel and casino were built a number of years ago. There still is, I think, an ongoing debate over the road that is bordering the northern portion there. Hopefully, that'll be settled through negotiations, which will be made much easier by the collaborative effort and framework that's provided by the legislation that the minister has brought forward.

I truly believe that this recognition is long overdue. I think that it's being welcomed by the indigenous communities. The ones that I'm most familiar with, of course, are close to the west Edmonton border, where my riding is proximate to. I know of the difficulty that has been experienced over the years, the long time it's taken for development to actually occur after very difficult, tense negotiations which really didn't go anywhere for a long time.

The act itself is definitely a result of lots of consultation and respectful talks and discussions with indigenous communities throughout the province. To their dismay, I think, they are finally being respectfully recognized in legislation as equal partners in negotiations when it comes to municipalities looking to interact with them on developments which have effect over their lands when municipal developments encroach on their borders. It gives economic opportunities that wouldn't have been available to the municipalities and the indigenous body, that they wouldn't have had opportunities to proceed with because the mechanisms weren't there. The respectful channels of communication weren't open. Now this opens up a lot of opportunity for a lot of economic development that would have been stalled because the communication lines weren't there.

It really gives me great pleasure to know that a lot of the projects that people have wanted, both municipalities and indigenous groups, for many, many years will now bear some fruit. I don't know how many millions and millions of dollars of economic activity this change will result in, but I venture to say that it will be a very healthy amount of economic activity and benefit for the province that is going to happen as a result of this change to the MGA and this invitation for municipalities and indigenous groups to work together in a respectful way that benefits them, the province, and the indigenous groups in terms of employment, economic development, social improvements, and infrastructure improvements, I would say, for both the nonindigenous and indigenous communities on either side of the lands that are affected. That's one element of this piece of legislation that I'm most impressed with, and I really think it's going to go a long way to improve the relationship between indigenous peoples in this province and the municipal level of government as well as our province.

I would leave it there for now. I may comment on other elements of the legislation later on, but I was particularly impressed with this piece of the legislation. I think it's something we should be very, very proud of.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Questions or comments under 29(2)(a) for the Member for Edmonton-McClung?

Seeing and hearing none, hon. members, are there any other members that would like to speak to second reading of Bill 8? The Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to get up and speak on Bill 8, An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government. You know, we made many changes a year ago, actually, in the form of 40 additional amendments to modernize the Municipal Government Act last fall as it was passed unanimously in December 2016. Today is about the rest of what we heard from the municipalities, from municipal leaders, from families, from young people, school boards, indigenous communities, small business, and industry, which includes new ideas for how the MGA can support sustainable and collaborative communities. We took those ideas back to all municipalities, school boards, and indigenous communities last fall, and we've heard strong support for nearly every policy proposal. With this bill we are delivering on those ideas that we have heard from Albertans.

Now, one of those new amendments, Mr. Speaker, relates to indigenous communities. A key focus of the MGA modernization is the municipal collaboration that we believe all Albertans benefit from when municipalities are good neighbours working together to provide services and strengthen the economy, including with our indigenous neighbours. The amendments tabled today would require that municipalities give First Nations and Métis settlements the same notification and opportunity to comment on statutory plans that is provided to all other adjacent municipalities. These changes would set a Canadian precedent to build a stronger relationship between municipalities and First Nations and Métis settlements and just mean that municipalities are being good neighbours. It also is a small but significant step to strengthen relationships between indigenous communities and municipalities and further implement the UN declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Another amendment, Madam Speaker, is that we are also aiming to make political life more accessible for women and Albertans with young families by making amendments that would enable councils to make parental leave bylaws for councillors. Our elected councils need to better reflect the communities they serve, which include young people, new families, and women, which is why in QP today we heard from Calgary-Lougheed, for example. He essentially asked questions in QP today to the effect of: why haven't you fixed all our problems that we ignored for 44 years? While he was looking in the past for all that he and his party didn't do over the last 44 years, we were looking forward when it comes to new families and women.

Our budget supports women, families, young men and women who are starting their new lives. We're doing things like $25-a-day daycare, new schools, reducing school fees. All the while the opposition talks about why they didn't fix municipal elections, something which I'm sure would be addressed at some point in the future. Again, they look at the past, about why they didn't take action in the last 44 years. We're looking forward.

The opposition again speaks against our oil industries. Cypress-Medicine Hat finances climate change denial films, and just today Innisfail-Sylvan Lake spoke about how denying climate change is somehow not going to hurt our oil industry, asking to stay behind and to be run over instead of leading. Well, Madam Speaker, one of those ways we are leading is with this Municipal Government Act because we believe that our municipal councils should have parental leave. Half of Alberta's population is women, but right now in Alberta women only make up 26 per cent of municipal councillors, and 23 per cent of municipalities in this province do not have a single woman on them.

Policies that this government brings into the House it seems like every day of the week – again, the opposition wants to look to the past or to deny climate change or to talk down our oil industries, wanting us to get run over by the future instead of boldly leading into it. That comes from having a diverse background on this bench.

That is what we want to encourage through this Municipal Government Act.

One of the other new amendments is schools. Our government, of course, is committed to building schools to serve our young and growing province and to protecting and improving education for Alberta students. Again, just today, when we were debating our budget earlier, we heard from the opposition doom and gloom, about how we must instantly cut back, about how a temporary deficit to act as a shock absorber in this downturn, which keeps men and women of this province working, is somehow a bad thing.

The cutbacks that would be required would hurt teachers. It almost seems to me, Madam Speaker, like the opposition's solution to every problem is a fiscal one, and it relates to: if it's a downturn, the solution is to lay off your neighbour just because they happen to work in the public service or happen to teach your children. That's shameful, which is why, again, I'm so happy to speak in support of this bill. The education of our children is incredibly important to the well-being of our communities and our schools and is at the heart of our neighbourhoods.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, if I could have your attention. We're not in committee, and each member is expected to be in their own seat.

Please continue, hon. member.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. We heard from municipalities and school boards that we can do better in how school sites are planned and serviced for our communities. This bill proposes joint-use planning arrangements to work together on integrated, long-term planning for school sites and facilities. This would benefit students, families, and all communities, and again it's a small part about how this government is working to make life better for all Alberta families.

An Hon. Member: It got left to charities.

Mr. Malkinson: In conclusion, while the opposition beaks off about our $15 minimum wage, it is raising the quality of life for those Albertans who are working at minimum wage, who now will no longer have to go to the food bank when they come home from their job and, hopefully, will not have to use the charities that that minister is talking about because they are getting paid a fair wage. They can have the dignity to work for themselves and to raise their family or do other activities that they choose to do as dignified individuals. We are doing real change here in Alberta.

These amendments and the rest of An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government are designed to make life better for Albertans no matter where they live. Albertans can go online and see these amendments and how they reflect the ideas we heard, and I encourage them to follow this debate as we move forward as well as all debate in this House. I believe Albertans will see quite a contrast in how we approach governing in this province.

With that, Madam Speaker, I encourage all members to support this bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Northern Hills.

Mr. Kleinstuber: Yes. Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise this afternoon to speak to Bill 8, An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government, at second reading. Our government is delivering on its promise to modernize the Municipal Government Act in time for the municipal elections this fall.

The changes in this bill come directly from Albertans. We consulted, and we consulted, despite what the opposition contends. I would suspect that is why Ken Kobly, the president and CEO of the Alberta Chambers of Commerce said that the MGA review is the gold standard for government consultation. The changes in this bill come directly from Albertans. We're making changes to improve things based on the feedback and ideas we have heard. Last summer our government held 21 sessions across the province. Years of hard work have brought us to this third and final round of legislative amendments. Madam Speaker, Bill 8 is about what we have heard from municipal leaders, young people, families, school boards, indigenous communities, small businesses, and industries. There were also new ideas on how the MGA can support sustainable and collaborative communities.

Madam Speaker, I'd like to now take a moment to discuss some concerns I heard from the Calgary school boards last summer. As the MLA for Calgary-Northern Hills I heard less than favourable comments about some of the existing school sites and the design of neighbourhoods when the communities were built. This is related to the current joint-use and planning agreements for schools. The MGA currently provides flexibility for municipalities to enter into joint-use agreements with school boards, but they are not mandatory. In the absence of a joint-use agreement, the subdivision authority determines the needs of the municipality and the school boards. We heard from municipalities and school boards that we can do better in how these sites are planned and communities serviced. Albertans also agreed. This proposal received 72 per cent support in our survey.

In this bill mandatory joint-use and planning agreements would be required between municipalities and school boards through amendments to the MGA and the School Act. This change would require all municipalities to have joint-use and planning agreements with school boards operating within their borders. This would result in integrated, long-term planning for school sites and facilities. Madam Speaker, this is what school boards and trustees asked for in Calgary, and I'm confident that this will benefit students, families, and all communities.

I know that schools represent the central networking hubs of the community. They provide after-hours programming, after-hours child care in some cases, sports opportunities, neighbourhood cultural performances, among others. It's important that these school sites are planned in prominent locations in future neighbourhoods. Current issues with school sites in Calgary-Northern Hills could be adequate street parking, slope, topography considerations, and how close these sites get to neighbouring houses.

To sum things up, Madam Speaker, these amendments and the rest of the act will strengthen municipal governments. They're designed to make life better for Albertans, whether they are lucky enough to live in Calgary-Northern Hills or elsewhere in the province. Of course, I will be supporting this bill, and I encourage others to do the same.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), any questions or comments for the previous speaker?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs to close debate.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the members who stood today to speak on some of the most pressing issues that are in this bill that we are trying to address. I appreciate that one of the most important ones for me was the collaboration with indigenous communities. To me, you know, it's 2017. These are our friends, our family, and our neighbours, and it's about time that we give them the dignity and respect that they deserve. You know, I've had a lot of conversations with First Nations and Métis around the province, and I've had some really good feedback. It's been really quite a positive experience for me.

I just want to say thank you again to everybody that's been involved with this. My staff have worked tirelessly. It's been quite the process. I mean, it's ongoing. It's the second-largest piece of legislation in Alberta. The biggest is insurance, which is quite boring compared to the MGA. I'm slightly biased, I would say, but there is a lot going on in the MGA. It's quite comprehensive. I'm proud of everything that's gone on with the consultation. I know that there's a lot of work to be done going forward, and I know that we will have lots more to say in Committee of the Whole.

With that, I will end debate and call the vote.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion for second reading carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 3:21 p.m.]

[Fifteen minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

[Motion carried unanimously; Bill 8 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 8 An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to speak to Bill 8, An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government. The Municipal Government Act, or MGA, is the second-largest piece of legislation in the province, and it touches the daily lives of every Albertan. It ensures that our children have a place to borrow books and play hockey, that our communities are protected by police officers and firefighters. It ensures that local governments are responsive to the needs of their citizens. The government believes this bill will give municipalities and businesses the additional tools they need to maintain and build strong and sustainable communities.

As members of this committee have heard and will hear, modernizing the MGA has been a journey. It came to a crescendo in the summer of 2016 when the department, led by my predecessor, the former minister, toured the province to ask Albertans for their input on Bill 21, the Modernized Municipal Government Act. They had heard a lot, but a lot of what the team heard fell outside the scope of that bill, so the team composed a discussion guidebook called Continuing the Conversation. This book was a compilation of ideas that they heard directly from Albertans, and the department posted it online for feedback back in November. Well, Municipal Affairs received more than 1,100 responses and 35 official submissions. Those responses are detailed in the What We Heard summary that can be found on the MGA review website.

We heard strong support for many of the amendments in Bill 8. Strong support for these ideas came from Albertans. The result of this consultation informed the basis for Bill 8, An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government. I present it here for your discussion, and I'm looking forward to a lively debate.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other questions, comments? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's my pleasure to rise and speak on Bill 8, An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government. One key area of this bill I would like to talk about is the changes to the assessment and taxation that this bill proposes. The exemption from taxation for provincial bodies is a sore point for our rural areas and our cities. Currently, as the MGA is worded, any property interest held by a provincial agency is exempt from taxation. Yet, of course, these provincial offices or agencies still use the municipalities' services for things like sewage, garbage collection and so on and so forth, imposing a service burden on those municipalities in which they reside.

While the province currently provides a grant in place of taxes to municipalities, the province can decide on a whim that it simply does not wish to continue funding the grant. We have seen this very thing happen by this government when they, with total disregard for their municipal partners, ended the grants in lieu of taxes program on provincial housing and seniors' facilities. This bill purports to improve this a little bit by stating that properties owned, leased, and held by provincial agencies, as defined by the Financial Administration Act, are now taxable. While this is an improvement, it doesn't go far enough as AHS buildings, housing management bodies, schools, colleges, universities are still exempt.

As I mentioned, there is a grant program that exists to offset some of these costs, but the real issue is that there remains today the issue of stable, predictable funding for municipalities, and without that, municipalities are at the whim of the province. So you're left with the situation where, for example, a seniors' facility utilizes municipal services, yet the province shirks its responsibility and refuses to pay its fair share. The average homeowner, however, is forced to take on more of the burden, resulting in higher property taxes for everyone else. This is just another example of this government making life more difficult for Albertans.

A better proposal would be to establish a funding model that provides stable, predictable funding for municipalities. This would go a long way in showing that this government is finally taking responsibility to fund its fair share of the costs of municipal services. This would have the effect of giving our municipalities more certainty and ensuring that our municipalities will thrive into the future. Anything we can do to improve certainty for our municipalities during this low oil downturn is worth while, Madam Chair.

One other change that I wanted to talk about, Madam Chair, is the access to designated industrial assessment information. The MGA as written currently does not allow municipalities to access information regarding how designated industrial assessment is prepared. The new changes will allow a municipality to request information regarding the assessments of designated industrial property. In this case a provincial assessor would have to comply with this request except when there is an active complaint on a property by the municipality.

As the legislation is written, the municipalities can ask for all DIPs except where a complaint is registered. Therefore, they can ask for most assessments, and I assume they intend to. The provincial assessor cannot say no to these requests, so this begs the question: what is the purpose of asking this person to provide this information if they can't say no? That being said, this is an improvement over the current system, where the municipalities do not get this information in any manner.

Thank you for listening to my concerns regarding this bill.

The Chair: Any other questions, comments, or amendments? The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure to speak to Bill 8 in Committee of the Whole today. I have a couple of things I'd like to mention, and I'd also like to talk a little bit about the municipalities in my constituency.

Municipalities like Canmore and Banff are on the leading edge of green initiatives, and I'm really proud of the activities that they've undertaken to take their responsibility for the environment seriously. A couple of examples of things that they've done are investing in public transit. There's a regional public transit system that travels between Canmore and Banff. Banff also has a transit system that runs within the town's boundaries, and the town of Canmore has just recently brought in a transit system within the town. This is not only a unique way to save money for transit, but also it helps to connect these two towns.

The mayors of Canmore and Banff are quite friendly with one another, and it's great to see them collaborate. They say: it's two towns but one community. There are a lot of people that live in one town like Canmore and they work in Banff or vice versa. People travel back and forth all the time. Folks that have made the trip before know it's maybe about a 20-minute trip or something like that, so having the transit system go between the two municipalities, where people travel back and forth quite a lot, is really handy.

The town of Canmore did a pretty unique thing that I applaud them for. When they first brought in the transit system, they had free fares for at least a month, maybe two months, because they wanted to get people used to trying the transit out and, you know, seeing how it works, to make sure that people understand where the routes go and sort of get them used to travelling on transit. That seemed to be pretty successful, and they've done quite well with that.

I'm really proud that our government gave them, the Bow Valley corridor from about Exshaw to Lake Louise, about $14 million in GreenTRIP funding, Madam Chair. This is a pretty significant investment in green initiatives. It takes cars off the road.

Another big thing: it really helps with tourism. We all know that this summer the entry fee for Parks Canada is free, and the town of Banff is really anticipating a huge influx of visitors, and they're really quite concerned with how they're going to manage all that traffic.

As people know, the experience a visitor has is partly dependent on the municipality and the work that they do. A municipality is charged with wayfinding, signage in town, and the costs that it undertakes to show visitors where to go. Banff has a unique challenge in that they get a lot of international visitors that may not speak English, so they have a challenge in terms of – you know, you have to have signage that's understandable for visitors that may not speak English or French to find their way around and to make sure that that's visible to visitors. There's a balancing act because you can't have massive signs everywhere – it's sort of unsightly – but you also have to be able to show visitors where to go.

Banff also has some restrictions in terms of the design criteria. Because they're in the national park, there are design and architectural requirements that they're required to abide by, so this is another added expense for municipalities and another level of planning complexity that they have to consider when they have their deliberations at municipal council.

The town of Banff has done a remarkable job in terms of making the visitor experience the best they possibly can. I'm really proud, too, that they've worked very collaboratively with Parks Canada to ensure that the visitors that are expected to come this summer have the best possible experience.

We know that last summer, even when the park entry fee was in effect, tourists were actually getting turned away at Lake Louise. Could you imagine if you came from anywhere, really, in Canada or around the world, if you had taken your whole family and said, "We are going to go see Lake Louise. Finally, our dream vacation: we're going to go visit Lake Louise. We've always wanted to do this," and then you get there, and they say, "Sorry. We're full. You're going to have to turn around"? It's a daylong thing. You know, people park in the morning, and then they go hiking, might have lunch there, and they spend pretty much the entire day in the town. Once the town is full first thing in the morning, nobody else can come in. So it's quite frustrating for visitors because they spend a lot of money to get here, and they want to have a good experience when they're visiting.

You know, municipalities, especially tourism municipalities, are tasked with – the mayor of Banff has a saying. She says: we flush toilets for 40,000 people on a tax base of 9,000 people. They have a significant challenge. They have to have more frequent garbage collection, a higher capacity for drinking water and waste water, and these are things that they have to take into consideration. I was really interested to learn, talking to the CAO of the town of Banff, Robert Earl – he told me that they actually have a 100-year capital plan for the town. They think so far ahead that they've costed out all their capital requirements and all that kind of thing well into the future. It's that kind of planning that keeps municipalities vibrant and really sets a good example, too. I know that in the town of Canmore they're quite an innovative group as well.

Affordable housing is a huge issue in the Bow Valley in particular, and I was really pleased just last week, actually, that the Minister of Seniors and Housing was visiting Canmore and Banff. We made two significant announcements, that I'm quite proud of, that really helped the municipalities out. First of all, in Banff we broke ground on a 132-unit affordable housing project called Deer Lane. It was fantastic because this is something that the mayor and the council have been working on for many, many years. In particular, this situation was a collaboration between all three levels of government. Parks Canada chipped in. They gave the land to the municipality at a very reduced cost. The provincial government contributed nearly $12 million, as did the town of Banff. This is a significant milestone in the history of the town of Banff. They've typically had about a zero per cent vacancy rate.

It's an interesting paradox because sometimes people say that the Alberta economy isn't doing all that great, but, you know, we're set to lead the country in growth this year thanks to the hard work of our government. The tourism industry in particular, especially in the Bow Valley, is booming, particularly because of the low Canadian dollar. This is good news in a way, but the problem is that the employers, the hotel and food and beverage industries, have a challenge getting workers to come and stay. The pay is decent, but it's not that great. You know, I'm glad that we're committed to the $15 minimum wage. That's going to help people out there for sure, although they tend to get paid more than minimum wage just because you have to in the Bow Valley in order to afford housing.

What I'm getting at is that the difficulty for the employers there is that they need housekeepers, they need servers, and in order for those folks to be attracted – a lot of the time it's their dream job to work in Banff. They don't care what job they do. They could be doing anything. They just want to live in Banff. The problem is that they can't find a place to live. This creates some difficulties in terms of potential social problems as well and health and mental health. People sometimes live in their cars because the draw and attraction of living in this spectacular mountain paradise is so strong that people are willing to wait it out and live in their car while they're waiting for housing. What I'm really proud of is that this government has worked so closely with the municipalities that we're helping them address these significant issues.

The town of Banff exists within the national park for the sole reason of tourism. That is everybody's focus in Banff. You know, certainly, there are ancillary services, but everyone there is dedicated to supporting the tourism sector. We have a role to play in that as well: diversify our economy. We have to support these types of towns so that they can do the work that they need to do.

Just last week I was also mentioning another project in Canmore that the Minister of Seniors and Housing was there to announce. At the Bow River seniors' lodge we are providing funding for a second phase. They're just about finished the renovations on phase 1, but phase 2 funding was just announced last week. Thank you to the Minister of Seniors and Housing for that commitment. Sixty new long-term care spaces at the dementia care standards are going to be built in Canmore, and this is a significant investment in this municipality.

You know, there's kind of a misconception sometimes that people that live in Canmore and Banff are all wealthy. If you tour around the town, you see these beautiful, beautiful homes. The downtown and the town look really, really nice, so there's sometimes a misconception that everybody is well-to-do and that we don't need to direct provincial funding to these types of municipalities because – like, the former government didn't invest in these communities. They said: "Ah, they can afford it. They don't need our help. They've got a big tax base. They can figure it out on their own." Well, you know what, Madam Chair? That's just not true because in the Bow Valley, like I said, a lot of people work in the service industry, and those jobs don't pay all that well. Those people have got families to feed, and the rents are astronomical. If you can imagine having such a low vacancy rate, you know, sometimes landlords can charge almost whatever they want, and people are lining up to pay for it.

I'm really proud of our Minister of Municipal Affairs, that has worked so closely with these municipalities to support them. It's a broad array of supports that have been provided: you know, public transit, affordable housing. I know that last summer we provided funding for Canmore's waste-water facility and upgrading that to meet future demands.

You know what? Another thing. I like to talk about Canmore and Banff a lot because not only are they beautiful towns, but they've got some very innovative policies there, too. Actually, in Canmore and Banff the mayors of those two towns were validators and endorsed our climate leadership plan. They were actually on the press release, Madam Chair. I'm really proud that they stood up and they said: look; we're proud of taking action on the environment. They don't have any misconceptions or misapprehensions of whether climate change is real; they know that it is. When visitors come from abroad to places like that, they want to know that not only the municipalities but also the businesses take their responsibility for the environment seriously.

People like to shop for Alberta products, locally raised food. For businesses to be able to market themselves as being locally driven is a huge draw for tourists. They come in, and they say: "I want to try Alberta beef. I've heard that Alberta beef is the best beef in the world." It is, and they have a great chance to try that out.

The towns of Banff and Canmore have also created initiatives in terms of solar panels. Those two municipalities also provide incentives for folks to put solar panels on their homes, and those programs have been oversubscribed. They're so popular, just like the programs that the minister of environment has proposed. Albertans are very excited about these, very similarly to the way the citizens of Banff and Canmore are about those local initiatives.

In the municipal district of Bighorn, which is neighbouring Canmore, the Stoney Nakoda reserve as well as the town of Cochrane, a local councillor there – I can't think of his name right now, but it'll come to me – is the chairperson for what's called the Southern Alberta Energy from Waste Association project. The acronym is SAEWA. This is a collaboration between many municipalities in southern Alberta as an innovative way to deal with their waste stream. They're in discussions. It's a partnership, like I said, between municipalities in terms of: what do we do with our solid waste? If you bury the solid waste, it can create methane emissions, which we know is a very potent greenhouse gas that's even more powerful than CO₂.

One of the ways that they've thought of to innovatively deal with their waste is to incinerate the waste and generate energy from that. It's interesting in this example because a lot of times there's this "not in my backyard" approach to dealing with solid waste. Most municipalities say, "Well, we don't want that. People don't want that in their backyard," but the SAEWA project is actually quite the inverse of that. A lot of the municipalities are vying to have this facility located in their municipal district. The reasons are manifold. Of course, they pay taxes on their property, but also it actually generates a lot of economic activity. You know, you're burning the waste to generate electricity, so that's good news.

There's also waste heat that's generated through the incineration of garbage, of course. What they can do with that waste heat and the CO₂, for that matter: one of the things they're proposing is to have greenhouses next to or located relatively close to the – I don't think incineration is maybe the right technical term, but that's what comes to mind. Anyway, with the waste heat and CO₂ from the plant, they can ship that over to the greenhouse, and they've got free heat, and the CO₂ helps the plants grow faster.

You see, municipalities are clamouring for this project to be put in their municipality because there's a lot of economic activity that's generated through that. I'm pretty happy about the leadership that's demonstrated in the municipal district of Bighorn. Paul Ryan is the councillor's name. It just came to me. He is a very dedicated individual. I meet with him on a regular basis. It's great to see the enthusiasm and how municipalities from across southern Alberta are coming together to support this initiative.

You know, to talk about collaboration a bit, I'd like to talk about FCSS services and how they relate to municipalities. Most people know that FCSS is kind of a three-way collaboration between the province, the municipality, and the FCSS entities themselves. I'm really proud that for the first time in many, many years our government increased the funding to FCSS. It's an essential service to the towns that have this, and what I find particularly interesting is that it's all locally driven. Each FCSS is different from the next because they make decisions based on what's best for the municipality that they're located in.

I'm really fortunate. Actually, the FCSS directors are having a provincial meeting in Canmore on Thursday this week. They're all getting together to learn from one another about things that they've noticed in other parts of the province and learn from one another and share best practices. FCSS is a really unique way that municipalities can have boots on the ground, and they stimulate volunteer activity. They provide food hampers.

A really interesting thing in Banff and Canmore is that there's a very young population there. Unfortunately, that also means there's a lot of sexual activity amongst these young individuals, and sexually transmitted infections are a serious problem that has to be dealt with. FCSS and the primary care networks in the Bow Valley have a really important role to play in providing community health teaching and providing condoms for folks. It's a really neat program.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm incredibly happy to get up again, well, to get up for the first time during Committee of the Whole, to speak to Bill 8, An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government, and certainly to speak in support of this bill. I'll begin by saying two initial things. The first is to give my heartfelt congratulations to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and his staff for the incredible work they've done on this act. Thank you. The second is to say that I am so pleased with the amount of consultation that has occurred and how the amendments are based on feedback received from Albertans and stakeholders through the discussion paper Continuing the Conversation.

Now to my comments. First, a huge municipal issue in Lethbridge. We have been entertained during the current WHL hockey season, and I offer my hearty congratulations to the players and management of the Lethbridge Hurricanes for this incredible season, a season which gave so much energy and delight to the citizens of Lethbridge and surrounding communities. Thank you.

Now to another area of the bill, parental leave. As you probably know, I have been an activist on women's issues for a large chunk of my life. I heard throughout my life that women have equal access to any job for which they are interested and have the qualifications; however, my life experience did not show this to be true. Those experiences were one of the reasons why I had not considered political life until 2014, when my family was grown and I was so ticked off with the state of affairs in our province at the time. I have advocated for almost 30 years now for equal pay for work of equal value. I have advocated for women to have equal access to participate in political life. Political life should be more accessible for women as well as Albertans with young families. We are aiming to make that political life more accessible through this amendment as it would enable councils to make parental leave bylaws for councillors. Right now 23 per cent of municipalities in this province do not have a single woman on them. This amendment will open the doors to many more women who are of child-bearing age. One more barrier has been removed.

One of the questions that came to me about parental leave was: why should people who choose to run for office be able to opt out of their work for a long period of time? Other working Albertans are entitled to unpaid leaves for the birth of a child or to care for the newly born or adopted child, as laid out in the existing Alberta employment standards legislation. This proposal enables municipalities to create a policy that gives elected representatives more flexibility, and I say: about time.

The next item I'll speak about is the incredible collaboration that occurs in my community and Lethbridge county and, in fact, all of the municipalities of southern Alberta. On the first Friday of every month in the morning there is a meeting of all the communities along highway 3. The purpose of this committee is to eventually twin the highway. This committee has been in existence for 25 years. As I said, this meeting happens in the morning at the city hall in Lethbridge. In the afternoon most of the people who attended that morning meeting stay for the meeting of the mayors and reeves of southern Alberta, again a collaboration of all the municipalities, to discuss issues common to all, to suggest some solutions, to take action. Fabulous collaboration. I go to as many of those meetings as I can, so I know how collaborative they are.

I will reiterate what I said in the second reading of this bill. There are several specific examples I'd like to point out to you. Lethbridge and Lethbridge county have already collaborated to develop a new intermunicipal development plan, and they are collaborating on an airport master plan. If we're going to grow, it's important that we do that so we have an airport that will sustain the economy that we want to have. Lethbridge also provides various other services to the county from time to time as they are needed. I am really delighted to see this bill as it affirms collaboration that is already happening between our municipalities.

Another piece on the collaboration spectrum is a requirement for municipalities to have joint-use agreements with school divisions regarding allocation and use of school grounds and fields. As I said before, during the second reading of this bill, I believe Lethbridge has been a leader, and I say that because there has been a well-established practice in Lethbridge since 1959, long before many people in this room were born. That collaboration continues so that we have joint-use agreements.

The next piece that I'll speak to is that Lethbridge has already begun engaging with our neighbours in the Blackfoot Confederacy on our new municipal planning that's under way. This fits with the new requirement to notify adjacent indigenous communities when proposing new municipal development plans or area structure plans. What a great step between the Blackfoot Confederacy and my city.

Now I'll sit down, but I may get up again if something else comes up that I want to speak to. Thank you.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak? The hon. Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Madam Chair. I, too, am rising to speak in favour of this bill. I'm standing partly to talk a little bit more about the issue of parental leave for elected representatives. I have the distinct honour of being the second sitting MLA in the history of the province of Alberta to give birth while in office, and I have to say that the first happened six months before me.

You know, when I was making the decision to run for election in 2015, nearly two years ago – wow. Time is flying. When I was making that choice, my husband and I had actually been planning to expand our family. I think that sometimes people have a misperception that a person wouldn't possibly want to have a baby while they're in office. I'm here to say that maybe I'm just that crazy. But the fact of the matter is that people decide to expand their families at all stages of their lives. Frankly, the decision about whether or not to run for office really shouldn't be made based on whether or not you're going to be able to provide care for your child should you be successful in your election bid.

By allowing municipalities to set their own parental leave policies, this act is going to enable municipalities to set up bylaws that make sense for their community and bylaws that are going to be able to provide that little bit of clarity for potential and would-be city councillors or town councillors that I didn't have when I was making the decision to run. You know, like, when we were talking this over as a family, there wasn't – no one had ever done this before in the province of Alberta. There was no model. There was no discussion in the standing orders for the Legislature about: what do we do with children? What happens if an MLA has a baby and needs to perhaps nurse their baby while they're sitting in the House? What happens if that baby needs a diaper change? All of these little pieces. Or what happens after giving birth in those first couple of weeks when that bonding is so important?

By enabling municipalities to make these decisions and set policies that are right for their communities based on their own individual municipality, it's making political life that little bit more accessible to all Albertans. I think that, you know, Madam Chair, that also helps to make life better for Albertans. I truly believe that governments do better when they're more reflective of the people they represent, and I'm really proud to be part of a caucus that looks a lot like the people of Alberta. We've got that range of ages, from our friends who were just in the middle of their university degrees when they came here to folks who are towards the end of their careers. We have that diversity of experience, from different incomes and different employment sectors that we all came from. You know, we also have that gender diversity and sexual identity piece, things like that, that I think help us as a caucus and as a government to better represent those people whom we're serving.

Madam Chair, I have to tell you that it's a little disconcerting for me to hear that only 26 per cent of the city councillors, municipal councillors, across our province are women when more than half of the people in our province are women. I actually have to say that as an Alberta woman I found it even more concerning that 23 per cent of municipalities have no women representatives at all. I think that there are some systemic barriers that exist there, and I think that by doing things like enabling maternity and parental leave policies, we're able to encourage more people to take that bold step of putting their name on a ballot, of stepping forward to serve their communities.

Madam Chair, I know that every person in this Assembly and every elected representative across our province gives up time with our families to do these roles because we believe so strongly in making life better for Albertans. We know that, you know, we're not going to see our kids, our grandkids, our spouses, or, in some cases, our cats and dogs quite as much as we used to, but we do that because we believe in our communities. We believe that it's important to serve. Frankly, I think that anything that we can do to help enable that and to help enable that for people no matter what phase of their life they're at is so much more important. You know, our conversations here in the Legislature are better informed when we have people who are currently trying to figure out how to make child care payments, who are figuring out how to balance young children and working full-time. That is the reality of Albertans across this province.

Madam Chair, I remember, you know, right before Cassidy was born talking to some people who were like: wow; how are you going to make it work? Ultimately, I'm not that different from many other mothers across our province. Mothers across Alberta go back to work shortly after the birth of their children, maybe taking a couple weeks off to heal from some of the medical aspects of their childbirth. Mothers across this province are breadwinners. Mothers across this province are working, some of them struggling with more than one full-time job, trying to make ends meet. That's why I'm also proud of a government that has decided to address the issue of minimum wage and bring it closer in line to the living wage.

Madam Chair, I've heard some people, some people in this House even, saying things like "If you're going to run for office, you shouldn't have kids," or "If you're going to run for office, you should wait till your kids are older," and I categorically reject those statements. I think that's telling Albertans that, you know, some people who aren't them know better than they do about what their life choices should be. It's like saying that – you know what? – if you're a woman of child-bearing age or maybe a dad who wants to be involved in your kid's life and you have young children, you have no right in these halls, and that is not true. This is our government, and it belongs to all of the people in Alberta, and there is a spot for everyone at this table.

Now, Madam Chair, there are some logistical questions, of course, that come along with having a baby when you are an elected representative, and let me tell you that over the last nine and a bit months I've learned a lot about that process. Certainly, one of the questions that might come up is: how are constituents represented when an elected representative is on their parental leave? And I have to say that I think, again, that's why it's great that these policies are going to be determined at the local level.

I mean, here in the House we have the rules around missing only a set number of sitting days. We've also done simple things to help expand access and ensure that parents with young kids are able to still be part of it and still represent their constituents. We have things like, you know, mobile devices. We have our phones, our tablets, and these have been really great in terms of being able to keep that representation going.

It's also things like allowing infants into our Chamber and making it so that a parent with a young child that they're caring for is still able to be a part of the debate and the discussion here in the House whilst simultaneously looking after their little one. Now, I have to say that around nine months mine has kind of reached the age where she'd probably be crawling all over the place, so she does a little bit better when she's not hanging out in here. That said, I think it's a really important thing to consider, and there are these little tweaks that can be made.

Another piece that we've done, of course, is limiting evening sittings as well as bringing the hours of our sessions in line and more consistent with regular business hours, which then enables elected representatives with young children the opportunity to use traditional child care options and not just limiting choices to maybe family members or friends or private nannies.

The other thing that I certainly benefited from – and I'd like to take this moment to publicly acknowledge them – is the support of my colleagues. I think, you know, we have an incredibly supportive government around this and, certainly, members of my caucus. I've had so many offers for babysitting from this caucus. They're all wonderful. I've even had members across the way saying that they'd be happy to look after kiddo for me, so I have to take this moment to say thank you. I also wanted to extend a very special thanks to two members of my caucus in particular, who in the early days after my daughter was born did a really great job supporting my constituents in co-ordination with my constituency office and my really fantastic team there. I'd like to take a moment to thank the Member for Calgary-Shaw and the Member for Calgary-Glenmore, two neighbouring constituencies, for all the support that they were able to offer my constituents.

Madam Chair, I think there are a lot of really fantastic things in this bill, and I think my colleague the Minister of Municipal Affairs has done an excellent job putting together a bill that has some really great pieces that are going to really help make life better for Albertans. I just really want to say that this piece in particular is fantastic, and I really hope that should this bill be passed, other municipalities and other levels of government will move forward with creating parental leave policies.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm going to open up by saying that I proudly call myself a feminist, and I say this in a very self-interested sort of way because being a feminist has empowered me as a father to be more involved in my children's lives than the previous generation before me. Credit to all those who paved the way and stood up, especially all the women, for equality because, at the end of the day, it gave me more opportunity as a man than I would have had 20 or 30 years ago.

Now, as has been alluded to by a couple of members before me who have spoken in relation to the issue within the MGA related to parental leave, I've alluded many times in this House that when I ran in 2015, I was actually on parental leave. It was a decision that was made with the scales of economy in mind and with the fact that I wanted to be involved in my daughter's life early on in that part, but everything changed full stop and was turned around on May 5. It's easy for one to campaign and carry a stroller or carry a little one with you, and it's easy for you to be at those announcements with a baby in your arms. Unfortunately, for a lot of our city councils at the time of my election and in this Chamber I had to stop being that full-time dad because there was just no system in place to allow us to raise our children, to be that involved parent.

I heard the Associate Minister of Health thank me for the supports that I provided in her constituency, and it was my thrill because she and the Minister of Service Alberta have paved the way so that what happened when I became an MLA doesn't have to happen to any other father moving forward. I'll admit that it was a very huge struggle and it was very lonely and it was very depressing right after the election because you go from seeing your child every single day, seeing these milestones, being involved with her life to literally seeing her maybe just on weekends and not knowing if it's appropriate for you to bring your kids to events and being worried about being stigmatized as a father in doing so.

It's been remarkable because in the last year I have seen so many members involve their kids in this job in a very positive light. I've seen the Member for Calgary-East bring her children to many great events, expose them to many great things, that in the last few months I felt it's okay, and I've had the opportunity to share this part of my life, this remarkable privilege that I have had of being the Member for Calgary-Shaw, with my kids' lives and have had them meet and interact with some amazing people and allow the community to get to know me as an individual MLA a lot better as well.

With that being said, unfortunately, the system that we have in place has not translated yet to the municipal governments until now. You know, I was on Twitter a little bit earlier, and I saw that I think his name is Nate Erskine-Smith, who's a Liberal MP, brought his child into the Chamber for votes. I wish that I had had the opportunity to be that involved parent when we initially started this process together because I think it would have made the transition a lot easier and a lot smoother. Don't get me wrong. I have no regrets in relation to this process, but as many newer parents can attribute to, it is very tough to transition into an already very intense role when you're having to leave your family behind and when there are many situations where you can't bring them with you.

I think that it's important that we take these next steps to move forward with all levels of government. The federal government has already taken steps, the provincial governments have already taken steps, and we have now allowed our municipal governments to take steps to empower them to be progressive and to have a full range of voices throughout communities. There are so many stigmas that exist out there that prevent people from either getting involved in the system or being involved parents, and there's no reason why those two can't go hand in hand and can't go in tangent. At the end of the day, it makes our system a lot stronger moving forward.

Now I want to touch base on a couple of other items that have been brought forth, specifically some of the concerns that we've heard in relation to the school boards through the MGA process. Going back to the process, I thought it was pretty remarkable to see how it unfolded. Fortunately, I had an opportunity to be part of the consultations. When the deliberations of consultations were moving through the province, the Minister of Municipal Affairs had the full intent of being heavily involved. Unfortunately, the wildfires in Fort McMurray prevented her from being able to attend all of the meetings, so she relied on many of us to carry some of the load and to go out.

I had the opportunity to head out to Hanna and to talk to many of the people within the counties there. It was remarkable because there were certain elements – and I've talked about this before. Whether it be with the agriculture or the parks or the energy sectors, it was remarkable to learn about some of the challenges that smaller municipalities face, things that we in the urban centres take for granted. You know, when we were at the AUMA meetings, we heard about how crucial provincial support is for water and bridges whereas in a large city these things just kind of happen. In cities like Calgary and Edmonton they just figure it out.

You know, as we move forward, it's great to see that our government is fully in support of the water for life program and our infrastructure funding. That's going to allow us to get really caught up with a lot of our bridges. The Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater and the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville will always allude to how great and how overdue these projects really were. In a city like Calgary these projects probably would have happened because there's the huge tax base and there's the huge support to move forward with them right away. But I digress. I've sort of gone off on a tangent in relation to it.

Going back to the consultation hearings, there were so many elements that were brought up on issues in relation to brownfields, but one of the crucial things was that we heard from a lot of our school board stakeholders. It was one thing going into this process that I was taken aback by. I didn't know the implications that the MGA had for school boards and the way that we could really, really improve some of the collaborations.

I want to really take this opportunity to give praise and thanks to my Catholic school board trustee, with whom I've had a great opportunity to build a two-years-strong working relationship with, Mary Martin, who had the opportunity to take on the position as president of the ASBA just recently. She, credit to her, came to me very early on. She's always done her due diligence to make sure that she reads any legislation that will impact her, and in return, if there's any legislation that's going to impact any of our 61 school boards, I make sure that I forward it to her.

She commented just recently:

We appreciated working closely with [the Ministry of] Municipal Affairs on this legislation. The government has heard our concerns and acted on them – in particular, introducing mandatory joint use and planning agreements. It benefits Alberta families and communities when municipalities and school boards work together on integrated long-term planning for school sites and facilities. Further clarifying exemptions for off-site levies is also good news for schools boards, because it means more dollars remain in our classrooms.

The Calgary Catholic board is a pretty unique one, and it's similar to many other boards that you see, for example the Palliser boards, because they don't cover just one county and they don't just cover one municipality. They actually go outside of other jurisdictions. You see them specifically within the Foothills region, in municipalities like Airdrie and Chestermere, and then also covering the greater Calgary area. It's important that we really provide some of these clarifications because it's so difficult for them to negotiate with both the city of Calgary and then, on the other hand, trying to keep caught up with some of their school builds, with individual counties.

To try to create a situation in which they can have long-term planning is very difficult when they have to consistently deal with different regulations and different rules and different ways that things are being done, not to mention that we always have to deal with changes in government and the challenges that come in relation to building new relationships with different partners altogether, not to mention multiple different partners. You know, at the end of the day, it's really great for us to make sure that we're moving forward with a joint-use partnership agreement to really ensure that everyone is coming to the table in this discussion and that they're working collaboratively to do what is best for our kids, ultimately.

You know, at the end of the day, one of the things that's really remarkable – and this is something that we've dealt with heavily within the city of Calgary – is that as we see new developments, there are commitments made in relation to new schools. The thing is that "commitment" is a very loose term. We've heard where in some developments it is said: come move to this community because there's going to be a new school here. In reality, there's allotted land from a developer, that has to be allotted because of the MGA, for a school to be built on that site. Now, the challenge is that there are so many other parameters that could delay a school from being built there, prevent a school from being built there, or even ultimately create a lot of challenges in relation to them moving forward. Having a strong joint-use partnership between a municipality and a school board can ensure that as we move forward with some of the developments of these sites, we can ensure that these schools are being built effectively and efficiently and on time.

Also, in relation to off-site levies, this has been a huge discussion that's moved forward, and as we develop new areas and new communities, especially small municipalities that tend to grow really, really fast like your Cochranes, your High Rivers, your Chestermeres, your Okotoks – I only say them because they're really close to where I am – they're crucial for ensuring that municipal infrastructure can move forward and that we can stay caught up in relation to it. Because in sprawling cities like this – and I include Calgary – it's very easy for you to fall behind on these developments.

With that being said, the exemptions to schools are, I think, a very crucial thing to make sure that we're moving forward on and that we're allowing a lot of the capital to stay within the classrooms and stay with the students. I appreciate the support that has come from the AUMA in relation to moving forward with this.

You know, speaking in relation to this, I think that it's great that we're moving forward, that we're strengthening this, that we've come back to the table with a second set of feedback and amendments to the MGA to make sure that we continue to strengthen it. I think it's very relevant that we ensure that we're coming forward with new ideas in relation to some of our legislation. The way we do things, the way communities are built, technology, the way we educate our students, even how individuals are working changes over time, and cultures change over time. So it's important that we always ensure that these legislations are happening.

Now, before I take my seat, I want to comment in relation to the Member for Lethbridge-East on her WHL team. I think it's great that they've moved forward. I like the H because there's another WHL team that starts with H that is phenomenal and that's probably going to do a lot better next year.

Thank you, all, very much. I'm glad to support this bill.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'll be speaking today on Bill 8 in my role as shadow minister for Indigenous Relations. That being said, I'd like to recognize that we are standing on Treaty 6 territory today. Very happy to be here.

An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government is a massive bill that suggests changes to many aspects of the Municipal Government Act, and it will have quite an impact on communities in my area of Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills and all across the province. The bill brings forward many different changes to the MGA, and I will highlight the changes being made specifically in regard to Indigenous Relations.

Last year's Bill 21 sought to increase collaboration amongst adjacent municipalities by having municipalities create co-operation agreements. This bill further sets that goal of collaboration by asking municipalities to voluntarily work towards similar agreements – and that is taking place throughout my area quite regularly – but also with neighbouring indigenous communities. Some areas of the province are quite successful at that, and others are just kind of starting to get on to that. But it is worth noting that it is voluntary due to the fact that the province really doesn't have any jurisdiction over First Nations or to enforce this collaboration. While this could result in improved communication and dialogue between municipalities and indigenous communities, it's crucial that we ensure that all the communications are respectful of their customs and traditions.

The changes encourage, for example, municipalities to voluntarily work with First Nations reserves or Métis settlements on their borders. The only mandatory step is a notification requirement that mandates municipalities to notify indigenous communities of any statutory plan changes to communities within their jurisdiction that are bordering on indigenous communities. That includes infrastructure plans, waterlines, that kind of thing. It would be a surprise to me if a lot of these municipalities aren't already doing that kind of a notification. It makes it more of an aspirational goal of sorts.

It's important that we recognize that many municipalities already have excellent working relationships with their neighbouring indigenous communities. Many of them are already surpassing the requirements laid out within this act. I would like to offer my appreciation to those municipalities, and I hope that they offer their advice and insight to municipalities that are seeking to strengthen their relationships with neighbouring indigenous communities. I know that the county of St. Paul and the town of St. Paul are trying to work collaboratively with Saddle Lake and Goodfish Lake First Nations on some joint initiatives that may be of benefit to all the people in all the communities.

There is a need for further clarification to define neighbouring community and adjacent. This could potentially add complexity as to which indigenous communities are to be included and if this also applies to traditional indigenous lands. Furthermore, there will need to be appropriate dispute resolution processes available to ensure the development of fulsome relationships between indigenous and nonindigenous communities. Again I have to stress the respect for the unique communities that are our First Nations. More nations are not actually considered in the same right as a municipality.

This change could encourage municipalities and indigenous communities to work collaboratively to find and improve efficiencies in the delivery of services to both indigenous and nonindigenous communities. I think that is a common goal that everybody can work together on if it's done respectfully. In Alberta there are 140 reserves, 45 First Nations, eight Métis settlements spread across three treaty areas. These groups are not homogeneous. We know that just from interactions we've had with First Nations up in the north and, for instance, Siksika down in the south. Their demographics, their conditions, their treaty lands, their native lands are totally different, and they need to be treated that way and with respect as well.

The bill fails to recognize that Métis settlements and First Nation reserves are not simply an extension of municipalities. They are distinct in nature, and they need to be respected as such. Again, I'm going to stress that we need to make sure that we're communicating to our municipalities that they're not just dealing with another county that's adjacent to their borders, that this is actually a nation in its own right and that it has to be treated with that respect and is due that respect.

I would argue that indigenous awareness training would be a good step towards helping develop respectful communications between indigenous and nonindigenous communities. I was a little troubled by seeing that that is something that has been taken out of this act. Respect and understanding are paramount when it comes to building and developing relationships, and this is particularly true for relationships between indigenous and nonindigenous communities. I would hope that the government communicates to municipal governments, both urban and rural, that any interactions they are having or expect to have with First Nations are done very respectfully and through the proper channels, and that would ensure their chances of success.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you. Just a couple of points I'd like to touch on from the member there. I really appreciate the words that you brought up, especially as you spoke about the indigenous peoples and Métis. We are working closely with Indigenous Relations because they are their own nations. You are completely right. It's a different way. You know, we need to make sure we respect their traditions and the way that they want to do things, for sure. The conversations I had, which were very good, were positive, and they understood that it's a first step, just saying: "You know what? We need to respect you guys. You guys are our neighbours, our friends, our family. It's about time that we treat you how you should be treated, which is just like one of us, because you are."

As for the education part of it, you're exactly right. That's something that we had discussed, but once we started kind of sussing out the information with some of the nations, we knew that we wouldn't have time to institute it before the municipal elections, so it is something that we are going to be working with Indigenous Relations on. It's extremely important because we need to make sure we get the nations and the Métis involved to make sure from their side. I mean, we don't want to come from the top down. We want to make sure that it's a collaborative effort and that education is there, because it's sorely needed and a lot of people want it, for sure, on all sides of the spectrum. Yeah, that's a huge one for us, and I appreciate you bringing that up because it's very important to me as well.

I'm looking forward to those discussions. I think they're going to be really good. As well, what we're doing here with the MGA as far as making sure that we inform First Nations and Métis peoples, just like we would any other municipality, hasn't been done in Canada yet, so we're leading the way again. Alberta is leading the way, which is fantastic. I am very excited about that, and I know it's something, as you said, that across the board we can all get on the same page on. I think it's a very positive turn of events, and I'm looking forward to the work ahead.

You know, there's a lot of hard work to be done, but I never shy away from hard work. I tell people that it's a lot of fun to do this, and sometimes they look at me a little different, but I'll tell you that it is a lot of fun. Municipal Affairs is quite the amazing ministry to be involved in because it touches every Albertan out there every day. So, yeah, we have a lot of work to do, and there's a lot more to go through this session, and I'd like to hear discussion from a lot of other members.

Thanks for your feedback.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Madam Chair, and good afternoon, everyone. I have a matter that is of significance on Bill 8 that I think many people on the government side may or may not be aware of, but it is a fairly important issue. As we talk about a lot of the topics we have in Municipal Affairs, of course there are so many topics that affect so many lives and so many people in different ways. It's a huge, huge ministry, and I compliment the minister for his work on the ministry so far. It's a great undertaking, and it's a fabulous ministry to be involved with. I've enjoyed it for many years as a long-time municipal councillor and appeal board member and all the other committees I've served on. It's probably been the best experience of my life.

With the Bill 8 segment that I'm going to be speaking on today there is a certain amount of difficulty that can be involved when government decides to change the manner in which they tax or have their municipalities decide how they tax. Of course, it's probably one of the most sensitive areas for taxpayers. In this regard I'm speaking about one particular issue, and that is the proposed changes to the difference between the residential taxes – the mill rates, in other words – and the nonresidential taxes, the mill rates for those. In the previous bill last fall the government raised this issue and decided that they should set a limit on the difference of the rates from those two types of developments. Once again, I'm comparing residential to nonresidential. In Bill 21, that we reviewed last fall, the government said that they would like to see all municipalities conform to a new maximum rate, a ratio of, in fact, 5 to 1. In other words, no taxes and tax rates – mill rates, in other words – should be set at a ratio of more than five times what the residential rate would be.

This is problematic because around Alberta there are all kinds of different industrial improvements to a lot of lands. There are all kinds of commercial improvements. There are all kinds of huge, huge manufacturing and oil and gas processing facilities, and these kinds of operations can cause a municipality an awful lot of added work and maintenance and costs to have them within their district, so taxing these kinds of facilities in the appropriate manner helps to offset some of the burdens that they bring.

Anyway, to get into a few points that we've got on this, it's not a new topic, Madam Chair. Before the current Municipal Government Act, or the MGA, was enacted in '95, actually, the municipal act then mandated that residential property taxes – and I say: residential – could not be less than 75 per cent of the nonresidential property taxes. That's the way they did it then.

But they removed it in '95, and nonresidential and residential property tax rates have remained unlinked since that time. It was left up to the municipalities with the new MGA in the mid-90s, when I first got involved, to look at how they could set their levels with respect to the various classifications they had in their districts. But that changed, as I said earlier, this past fall when Bill 21, the modernized act, came along and proposed this cap of five times the lowest residential rate in that municipality.

When you looked at the existing ratios of most municipalities at the time this was introduced, actually, there were a large number of municipalities that were compliant. In fact, although I don't have the exact number, I believe it was only around 19 municipalities that had nonresidential rates, or industrial, let's call it, or commercial, that exceeded five times their lowest residential. These municipalities that we're talking about, though, have been overwhelmingly involved in large oil and gas resources and facilities within their boundaries and all other kinds of different industries. While every municipality is different and unique, one of the underlying issues, again, that has caused so many problems is that there are a lot of different things that occurred during the boom of the past few decades, and it's put a huge strain on a lot of municipalities with regard to infrastructure: their roads, their water, their waste water, all the other kinds of services they have to provide.

They were ultimately, you know, faced with an issue where there was an awful lot of stuff that had to be upgraded and expanded or replaced, but they could not necessarily do that on the backs of everyday Albertans, who even in the boom times could not afford a five-digit property tax requisition. In order to balance the personal and financial well-being of its citizens with the need for critical infrastructure and services, municipalities were left with virtually no choice but to place the burden on the nonresidential tax base; in other words, the commercial and industrial sectors.

This would seem fair. If a large amount of industry comes into a municipality, just like any other developer, when you're developing land for whatever purpose, normally speaking, the municipality seeks to have the developer or the developer's investors provide some sort of support in the nature of local road improvements, local utility improvements, et cetera, et cetera, depending on the complexity of the development.

With that being the case, though, and the current climate we're in businesswise, it can be something of a bit of an issue. We understand, you know, that one of the major pillars of what once was the Alberta advantage was that Alberta at one time had a competitive tax environment. The property tax rate, though, in some municipalities has begun to impact their ability to attract and retain investment now with the changes in the new government and the new government's intentions on tax rates.

We need to ensure, though, that after all this is said and done, we figure out a way to remain attractive to companies and businesses that are considering doing business here. Now, how do we do that? Well, Bill 21, which was, as I said, passed last fall, proposed this limit of 5 to 1. In that bill, actually, I think they did some good in that respect because they said that those communities that exceeded that ratio were going to be called nonconforming municipalities. Now, for those of you unfamiliar with the term, we have in the Municipal Government Act a lot of different sections that use those kinds of bits of language: nonconforming buildings, various other kinds of nonconforming improvements. That means that when it was approved many years ago, although the new laws might have changed, that building, because it was approved prior to the change in the law, would be deemed to be nonconforming.

Normally those are thought of as something that can carry on for an indefinite period of time because they were built or improved upon or developed prior to that law change that I mentioned. In this case the government with Bill 21 said that nonconforming municipalities, then, would not be required – would not be required – to meet the ratio of 5 to 1. That meant that they were going to be grandfathered. We call that a grandfathering clause. They did stipulate, however, that they could not increase their ratio any higher than what it was, and if the ratio was ever lowered, that would establish a new cap, set at whatever the lower ratio eventually would be, whether it was 17 to 1, or 7 to 1, or 6 to 1. In the case of a huge, huge industrial area like Fort McMurray, they're actually at 18 to 1.

Now, with what has taken place, McMurray was extremely concerned. As a lot of people are probably aware, they've had some difficulties in the past year, of course. We're on the anniversary week of the famous fire, the horrible, horrible fire. Now the government has decided to come along and change the bill that they just passed in the fall. They have more or less thrown out the grandfathering clause. They have said, in fact, then, that they are going to require that these municipalities become compliant to the 5 to 1 ratio. They've also included that the minister is to become the sole decision-maker of when a nonconforming municipality would have to become compliant.

There's no actual definite time set in the bill for this change. The bill says here under section (31)(b)(3.1) of Bill 8, and it's referring to section 358.1 of the MGA:

If in any year after 2016 a non-conforming municipality has a tax ratio that is greater than 5:1, the non-conforming municipality shall reduce its tax ratio for subsequent years in accordance with the regulations.

I do say, in all fairness, that they say that they will have to do that in subsequent years with regulations.

They go on to say in section (31)(d)(8):

The Lieutenant Governor in Council may, for the purposes of subsection (3.1), make regulations establishing one or more ranges of tax ratios that must be reduced to 5:1 within a specified period.

At least they're talking about some sort of specified period, but we don't know when, and they're talking about doing it by regulation, not in this bill. So we don't have any clear, definite time frame for those municipalities affected – and probably the most affected would be Fort McMurray – for the council and the administration to plan for how they're going to work with this new requirement.

We're not opposed to the idea of moving to 5 to 1. Wildrose is not opposed to that. But we do think that there must be a delicate balance, and we must first and foremost look out for Albertans. Rushing a noncompliant municipality into complying with the 5 to 1 ratio could possibly have devastating effects on families and communities. One is that, some might say, if a noncompliant municipality has got a much higher tax ratio and they have to reduce the higher tax ratio, which is the industrial type of development, then the other types of classifications will be negatively impacted by having to face the burden of paying more. In other words, we could have in some of these places – and let's use McMurray because it's probably one of the biggest ones that we can talk about that will be affected the most. If the tax ratio is going to move eventually to 5 to 1, homeowners are going to have to pay much higher taxes: three, four, five times over. Who knows what it would be?

It's an extremely difficult thing to imagine, with all of the things that Fort McMurray has gone through, that we're going to put into place, possibly, if this bill passes as written without amendments, a huge, huge tax increase to residential owners in that municipality. I think this would be a disaster for the Alberta families that live there. They're already struggling with their economy. How are they going to possibly be able to even sell, if they wanted to get out from underneath their property, if it is known that they're going to be faced with a huge, huge tax increase like that? That's where the problem arises for us with this.

As I've stated earlier, each municipality is unique, and there are unique reasons for why their property tax rates are where they are. The underlying issues that need to be addressed are not things that can easily be fixed in only one, two, or even five years when you have situations like this. Just imagine that you're in your own home and the municipality sent you a note that said: "Oh, by the way, just to let you know, the government has imposed a new rule in terms of tax. We now have to charge you at least three to four times more for your taxes because the government has decided to change the ratio." Some municipalities will not be burdened so much by it, but a lot of them will be. How do they address this? That's the key. And it's going to take some time.

We would have liked to have seen some kind of date set so that there could have been some certainty and some predictability in this legislation. If this has to be done – and we don't disagree that perhaps it is the right way to go – I think it would have been much better if they had set some sort of dates, some sort of method to phase this in over a certain amount of time so that those municipalities that have to do three-year plans, five-year plans have, when they're doing their financial plans, some way of understanding where their targets are going to have to be in terms of revenues and how they're going to get those revenues when they have to alter their mill rate so drastically.

How do you provide that certainty? You know, to the minister: five years may be enough time for some. But I think it would be appreciated here, Minister, if you could address what the purpose was of changing the bill this way just so recently after the last bill was passed. I might remind you, Minister, that your predecessor had sent a letter to the people in Fort McMurray and the local media that said: "Not to worry. This is not going to apply to you. You're going to be grandfathered. This is something that you don't have to worry about for a long period of time."

Perhaps the minister could provide a little clarity on how long a timeline you're thinking of here, how that's going to work, and what happened with regard to the grandfathering clause. If that could be addressed, Minister, I'd really appreciate it.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you. For sure. You know, I knew this was something that was going to be brought up. I was well aware of that. Just to make it clear, there are no changes from this bill. This is simply a regulation enabling the ability to do this going forward. So when we talk about timelines, what we are looking for in this bill is the flexibility to create this regulation in consultation with the RMWB among the, I think, 22 municipalities that are above the 5 to 1 ratio.

What's happening here is that we want to take the time to get this done right. That's the whole point. I've had very good discussions with the RMWB. I was there yesterday, spoke with them. I spoke with the chamber of commerce there. I spoke with many people about it when I was at the AAMD and C conference. We want to make sure that we do this right and that we find a balance and have something that's sustainable, obviously. We know that when the energy industry does well, Fort Mac does well, Canada does well. We want to make sure that we have a plan going forward in conjunction with the RMWB, who is basically the benchmark because they're at the highest right now, to see what that's going to look like.

Right now this regulation – there's no time frame on it because we want to make sure that it gets done right. We've been in discussions, as I said, with RMWB. We aren't going to have this in place by the municipal election this fall. We knew that. If it takes six months to get this regulation done right, it takes six. If it takes a year, it takes a year. We're waiting for feedback this spring from these municipalities, once these regulations are posted, to hear what they say, to see what kind of time frames they have. I don't want to sit here and mandate because there are unique circumstances all across the province. RMWB is the big one, but there are other unique circumstances as well.

We want to make sure that we have something that's accountable, sustainable, that isn't going to hurt the local residents, obviously. That's a big concern of ours. We know that it's going to take some time, and we know that, you know, there are certain ways that we can look at things – the capital plan, for example, or assessment growth, things like that – in these municipalities. But, as I said, nothing is changing right now. There's nothing to worry about in that sense. I know there was some concern, but I did alleviate those fears yesterday when I was in the RMWB. We want to make sure that during the economic downturn that we've gone through, and especially in RMWB, we are aware of residents' concerns.

So we haven't set that timeline because we're waiting to hear that feedback from them, what they say. I know the member had mentioned something about five years. While that might work for one jurisdiction, it might not work for another. We'll see what we hear. As I said, there are 22 municipalities above that ratio. There's going to be a lot more feedback coming in. We've received, you know, a fair amount already, but we are anticipating a lot more once the regulations get posted here, and then we'll go from there.

Yeah. Any time I can clarify, or if there are any other questions in that respect, I'd always be willing to do so and get some information back to any of the members that are looking for it.

So that's where we're at right now. Nothing is set in stone in that respect for the timelines. We've got to make sure that we listen to the people. The MGA has been like that all along – right? – and I'm not going to change that. I want to make sure that the consultation is done right and that we hear from everybody who's involved and make sure that we get a balanced, sustainable decision going forward.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Yes. Well, thank you, Madam Chair. Thank you, Minister, for that great response. I appreciate your frankness in the response you gave to us. I'd just like to explore a little further if I could. You know, there are a lot of things going on with Fort McMurray. And you're quite correct that there are other municipalities that are affected by this. One of the problems with having no set kind of timeline or no set kind of knowledge of what the regulations might look like and so on and so forth is that the speculation market starts going crazy, and people with uncertainty and unpredictability can be negatively impacted by that.

Typically, this time of year is your construction season, when people throw their house up for sale. All kinds of different things happen. With this kind of a cloud that, frankly, has been promoted and distributed a lot by the media, of course locally, it puts a different perspective on the situation, I might suggest, sir.

I would also like to take into account some of the comments from the two large associations we have, the AUMA and the AAMD and C. Perhaps you're aware of what they have said, but I'd just like for the rest of the people that are listening here this afternoon to perhaps be aware of that. I'd like to start with the AUMA. The AUMA has suggested that although they have been advocating for the removal of this 5 to 1 ratio – they have not been happy with it, in other words, they're saying – they are supportive of this amendment in some respects “as it will reduce the potential for inconsistencies across the province.” Certainly, that could be true if you have 22 municipalities that are significantly different than the rest. That would make sense. But they also suggest that there should be an allowance for the minister to set a schedule to account for the lowering of that tax ratio, with local needs taken into perspective and a timeline for that. They also suggest that the minister should be provided “with the authority to exempt a municipality indefinitely from the 5:1 ratio as this would allow for specialized municipalities,” and they use the example of Jasper, “to be accommodated under the framework.”

So they are talking about a timeline. They're talking about what kinds of different things could be done. They're not fully supportive of this move, but they see where you're going. But they again, as I have said, are indicating that a timeline would be appropriate. I've seen timelines used in the act in other areas where some kinds of changes are being considered, but this one at this point is not.

I'd like to move on to the AAMD and C comments, where they, too, say here in their submission – and this is their most recent document, April 2017 – that they support “the ability for municipalities to be exempt [from] the 5:1 ratio where [deemed] appropriate.” Where deemed appropriate. “The AAMDC will look to be involved in the development of this regulation.” They're offering to assist with the regulation change. They're also saying that “the previous iteration of the proposed legislation found in the Continuing the Conversation document,” that was distributed earlier, “included the option for the Minister to exempt” and that they will be looking for that same exemption to be in the regulation.

So my point to the group here today and to the minister and to you, Madam Chair, is that my statements in this regard are not the only statements. They're supported by the two major associations, the AAMD and C and the AUMA. I would urge you to take this back to your department and give this proper consideration.

We will be bringing forward, by the way, Madam Chair – I believe this is up again tomorrow at a certain time – a couple of amendments to this particular section of this bill, and we will look forward to hearing comments after we have put these amendments forward.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: All right. Thank you, Madam Chair. It's my pleasure to rise in the House today to speak in support of Bill 8. As I've mentioned before, this is a bill that – well, I mean, in its different formulations I've been privileged to be the cosponsor with, well, at least one minister. I'm very proud to be associated with this bill because I think that – and this is something that's been reiterated by organizations such as the Alberta Chambers of Commerce and municipalities – this is going to be the gold standard for consultation and how to get good legislation passed.

I mean, part of that is, you know, that when you propose something, there are always going to be some unanticipated consequences. Sometimes you can't put a timeline on things because it's just simply the matter that to do so would be to artificially foreclose options and inadvertently cause discomfort to the stakeholders you're working with. I think that throughout this entire process our minister and the ministry that he represents have taken a wise tack in that.

Now, what I wanted to talk about more specifically in my comments today is that, first, I wanted to just maybe touch on a little bit about centralized industrial assessment because I know that's something that has caused a little bit of confusion in some municipalities, not so much because of the – and I say not so much, but I'd say that it's not because of the messaging coming out of Municipal Affairs. I mean, in an ideal world, of course, everybody would understand every single aspect of the Municipal Government Act, exciting as it is, you know, the scintillating reading that there has been. But, unfortunately, not everybody has a full and accurate grasp of the entire bill, and I think that would actually include some assessors who are out there. As well, sometimes you might have journalists that might get things confused; say, for example, linear assessment and centralized assessment.

For the record and to make this a hundred per cent clear, when it comes to linear assessment, there is no intention whatsoever to be pooling those revenues provincially. If there is anyone out there, you know, who thinks that's what is afoot, please rest assured that there is no intention of this happening, so just to be very, very clear. I know our minister has made that point many times. I know other members have. But there are still situations that I've come across where that confusion kind of still exists. People can rest assured that that's not going to happen.

Now, when it comes to centralized assessments, just to be clear, there is no pooling or anything like that involved with that as well. We're just talking about working on the very, you know, basic requirements for industrial development, for continuing industrial development, that there is a level playing field for industry where, well, to put it one way, you don't have essentially exactly the same industrial equipment being assessed one way in one municipality and another way in another municipality. That's really what this is about.

I think that as it proceeds, we'll see that there is no agenda whatsoever with that and that, in fact, this is something that's going to be to the benefit of municipalities. That's, of course, because industry has stepped up and said that they're going to be paying for these assessments. This is something that they've asked for, so I think this is actually a positive development for municipalities and for the continued prosperity of the province as a whole.

Now, just moving on from that, recently we were fortunate to have Doug Griffiths come and do a presentation in Boyle. Now, I'm sure that many members of the Assembly have had Mr. Griffiths come out, and the presentation he does is 13 Ways to Kill Your Community. Of course, he's not really giving advice on how to kill your community – it's a way to get attention – but how he's framed it is really as how to avoid killing your community. Of course, Mr. Griffiths was a previous Minister of Municipal Affairs, you know. Plus, growing up in Coronation, he has, I think, some insight into it.

You know, I was happy to attend the presentation, had a good chat with Mr. Griffiths. I'm not sure if I agreed with him on everything, but I think that he made some really valid points, that were in accord with my understanding and experience. What made me reflect on that and bring it up today is that a lot of the points that he makes in his presentation are indeed points that I think the MGA amendments speak directly to and help to facilitate communities making the kind of changes that have been recommended.

Bear with me for a moment. I'm just going to go through those 13 points. Now, the number one that he talks about is water quality, saying that if you want to kill a community, one of the best ways of doing it is to not pay attention to your water quality, right? Bad water: people don't move in; people move out.

Now, how does this speak directly to the type of changes that we're making? Well, I mean, I think that by putting forward the ICFs and associated tools for encouraging collaboration, we're making it easier for communities to be able to co-operate with their neighbours to get high-quality drinking water. There are successful water commissions around the province that are run by joint municipalities, but you don't see co-operation in other areas where it might be needed. In particular, you don't necessarily see that co-operation with adjacent indigenous communities. With the concentration on collaboration and indeed the requirement to sit down and talk to your neighbours and work out any issues that might be in the way, I think that that's going to help more communities improve their water systems.

I think that also speaks to, of course, some of the big bills that many of our smaller municipalities are going to be facing in the upcoming years to renew their sewer systems. I mean, you have some systems out there that have wooden pipes. You have other systems that are, you know, 30 or 40 years beyond their date, and you have communities that might not have the tax base to be able to afford to rebuild those systems. That's definitely something that's a strike against sustainability.

With the whole ICF framework, I think that there's a better chance that some sort of equitable sharing arrangements can be worked out between municipalities to be able to help address some of these along with, of course, the provincial programs – you know, the water for life program – the federal government, and MSI funding. But a more equitable sharing, with agreement, of revenue for municipalities at their own discretion, facilitated by the types of change we made in the MGA, I think could be something that can help bring that forward.

The second point that Doug Griffiths makes about killing communities is: don't attract new businesses; you know, don't facilitate new businesses. Now, we don't have to go over there, but we do have increased flexibility for municipalities in how they attract new businesses and how they work in new areas. I think that kind of speaks directly to that.

Youth involvement. Basically, one way to make a town die is: don't provide space for younger residents to participate. This is where – and I think I mentioned this at second reading – I think the parental leave facilitation, where municipal councils will now have the ability to put in provisions for parental leave, will facilitate the inclusion of more younger residents directly in decision-making. For communities that are trying to attract and retain young residents, it's really hard to do that when you don't have any direct insight into how they think and feel about things. You don't have that direct insight potentially because you don't have any younger members actually on these councils. Part of that reason could well be because, you know, they have young families that they need to work with, or they're planning to have more children, and this is seen as an impediment. Anything that can be done to facilitate having younger families involved in municipal governance is something that I think is going to really help with having greater youth retainment.

The next one is basically failing to assess what your community needs are and what your assets are. As we've gone through sort of a process – and this is something that has been controversial at points, basically due to, I think, a lack of understanding of it: the necessity for even smaller communities to do, you know, these municipal development plans. This is something, I think, that is critical for a community regardless of its size because if you don't know what you have and you don't know where you're going, chances are that you're really not going to get there, right? If you're at a stage where, I mean, you're not even together enough to be able to make those basic determinations, that doesn't speak well to the long-term viability of your community. This is something that I think is great, and I'm very happy to see that with the amendments coming forward, these aspects have been retained.

Now, the other ones are maybe not quite as relevant. It would have been nice if it had gone through the same 13. I'm not sure if it speaks directly to shopping locally or not. It would be nice if we could put something in there on that, but that's something that we can't really do.

Since this is Committee of the Whole, I guess I can, you know, maybe stop right there for the moment. Actually, it looks like we might have a bit of time. I might be happy to contribute again in a little bit.

The Chair: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I move that when the committee next rises and reports, it report progress on Bill 8.

[Motion carried]

Bill 10 Appropriation Act, 2017

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. It is my pleasure to get up and actually speak to Bill 10, our appropriations bill. You know, it was actually very interesting. In the debate we just had on Bill 8, I actually had a chance to talk a little bit about the work our government is doing on the budget. We've heard a lot from the opposition, that they are not wanting to support this budget, and I wanted to respectfully disagree with them and talk a little bit about the good that our budget is indeed doing.

As many of the opposition would know, this is now the third time I am standing up in support of another NDP budget. I've debated our last three NDP budgets very proudly in this House, against the opposition's different view of how the province should go forward, because this is a budget that makes life better for Albertans, for the residents of Calgary-Currie. It focuses on jobs, affordability, protecting the services that families depend on. These are the priorities of Albertans, and these are the priorities of this government.

Over the constituency break, Madam Chair, I had a chance to knock on doors and visit several local businesses. When knocking on those doors, you know, I heard about the good that our government is doing there, things like the almost $1.3 million invested in Calgary-Currie alone for housing and seniors. This means that in Calgary-Currie people are able to have a home, that seniors are able to live in dignity. That $1.3 million is just one small part of a much larger budget that is possible because of this. It means that seniors are getting new windows in their facilities. There are new boilers and other much-needed maintenance for affordable housing and seniors' housing in Calgary-Currie and across the province.

The reason why we are having to step up and do that is because it is the right thing to do for our seniors and those low-income individuals who need housing. It is also something we need to do because the previous government for so long had neglected our seniors and those who need housing by failing to invest in and maintain that much-needed infrastructure.

It was very interesting. In question period earlier we, you know, heard a lot of talk about how their government did so well. It was interesting to hear that because it was almost as if in question period the questions they were asking us about our budget and about the work we're doing were asking us how come we haven't fixed the things they hadn't bothered to fix. I know that the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek likes to bring up that point on a rather regular basis as well.

Going around my routes, let's see some of the other stuff that's happening in my riding. This budget is reducing school fees for young families in Calgary-Currie. That is something we talked about on the campaign trail. That is something every member on this side of the House talked about on the campaign trail and something I talked about when I had not one, not two, but three all-candidate leadership debates. When it came election time, the constituents of Calgary-Currie decided that they wanted to go in a new direction, one where a government actually keeps their promises and focuses spending on the need to make life better for Albertans as opposed to just building a budget by waiting for, you know, oil to rescue them, spending haphazardly with the rise and fall of the price of oil. That's not the way to run a province, Madam Chair.

Another thing I'm very happy about is that our government is now completing the southwest section of the Calgary ring road. I was very happy to be at a job fair there, where there will be at a minimum, at least in its first wave of hiring, 200 jobs as a direct result of that project and as a direct result of the infrastructure spending that is in this budget, Madam Chair.

It's something we hear the opposition speak against on a regular basis. How many times have we been in this House during question period where a member of the opposition, particularly the Official Opposition, gets up and says: "Why are you spending money? We want you to magically spend less, yet we want a hospital in our riding. We want schools. We want you to magically roll back wages of the public sector until the deficit has been solved." What they are actually saying is a fantasy. You can't do that. When I go to the doors and talk to people on the doorstep, they understand that because they can see the direct benefit that this budget is providing to them, everyday Albertans.

Now, I know the opposition, of course, really likes to talk about debt. In particular, the previous party, of course, likes to talk about it as well, which is always quite ironic because they were the government that couldn't balance the budget at $100 oil.

Mrs. Littlewood: They couldn't what?

Mr. Malkinson: They couldn't balance the budget at $100 oil.

Mrs. Littlewood: That's shocking.

Mr. Malkinson: It is most definitely so.

Connolly: That's kind of staggering, isn't it?

Mr. Malkinson: It's quite staggering. [interjections] I would say that that wasn't the best example to follow. You know it's good when their Wildrose friends are agreeing with me on that one.

Mr. Hanson: How many hospitals are you going to build with $2 billion in debt servicing?

Mr. Malkinson: Talking about that debt, you know, we have been able to bring forward a plan that focuses, again, on Albertans, and we have a plan to go back to balance prudently, Madam Chair. It involves no fee or tax increases. There are no fee or tax increases in this budget.

You know, we often hear the opposition talk about the tax advantage. I remember last year they talked often about how they loved Brad Wall, especially the Wildrose opposition, how we should follow Brad Wall's example. Well, Brad Wall's example seems to involve a 5 per cent cut across the board: cutting libraries; cutting transportation, that's much needed by their rural constituents to go to medical appointments; cutting teachers. And not only do they have a PST in Saskatchewan; they most recently raised it.

Mrs. Littlewood: And they're raising taxes on children.

Mr. Malkinson: Raising taxes. That's something the Wildrose supports, it would seem.

You know, one of my favourite pages in this budget, Madam Chair, is in the fiscal plan on page 93. There's an excellent graph in there, and it talks about Alberta's tax advantage. [interjections] On that page, if you're all following along, it shows our tax advantage relative to all of the other provinces, and what it shows is that we have an $8.7 billion tax advantage.

Mr. Westhead: How much?

Mr. Malkinson: An $8.7 billion tax advantage over our provincial friends. [interjections]

Of course, as we speak, you know, there's lots of beaking from the previous party, that, again, couldn't balance the budget at $110 oil, couldn't on $110 oil. Not only could they not balance the budget at $110-a-barrel oil; they couldn't invest in schools, Madam Chair. They couldn't properly fund all the students that were entering into the public school system. They could not do that. The former party over there, again, continues to beak about how great they were, yet there they sit.

Let's talk about another part of our budget. While we are spending on much-needed infrastructure and services that make life better for Albertans, we are also restraining spending, Madam Chair. We are holding spending at a rate that is under inflation plus population growth because that is a prudent fiscal thing to do. [interjections] As I say this, the former governing party is again beaking off and laughing, yet they couldn't do it. There were increases sometimes of up to 8 per cent a year as they rolled with the royalty roller coaster. Shame. We have clear, restrained spending, spending on things that matter to Albertans.

You know what? We are starting to see green shoots in the economy. When I was out in Calgary-Currie, I visited many local businesses, Madam Chair, and the questions I asked them: "How's business going? How are things going?" Well, what I am hearing from everywhere, from the pizza place to the machine shop to my former employers in the oil and gas industry, is that things are picking up again.

I'm going to give you just one example. I visited my local machine shop. This is a sole proprietor, a single owner that has always been a sole proprietor of this particular shop. This particular person specializes in machining components and doing custom work that other shops can't do. As you can imagine, this is the type of shop where business flows with the economy. A couple of months ago I was there, and that particular shop had work, but he was saying: you know, it's a little bit slow. But I was there just last week, and I was asking him: how's it going? He's like: well, you know what, Brian – I apologize, Madam Chair. I'm naming myself, which I realize is against convention. He's like: "You know what? I am busy. I was working last Saturday, and in the last couple of months my business has increased. My shop is full. Things are looking up for me."

Although, of course, that one particular shop is not an indicator of the overall economy, it is a sign that I see throughout my riding that business is picking up, green shoots are sprouting, and I believe that Alberta is beginning to lead the way from a recession that was caused by the unprecedented drop in the price of oil and only by the unprecedented drop in the price of oil. This government through previous budgets has put in the things we need in order to lead, Madam Chair, lead on climate change as we come out of this recession, on getting our oil products to market. Let's not forget that we got not one but two pipelines.

Mrs. Littlewood: Three. Keystone.

Mr. Malkinson: Sorry. I forgot about Keystone, Madam Chair. How could I forget about Keystone? Three pipelines. [interjections]

You know, again we hear lots of beaking from the opposition, and they ask the question of: well, how many barrels are going out of those pipelines? Well, Madam Chair, because we've been working co-operatively with our neighbours to get a pipeline built, something that that opposition did not do, we got approval for pipelines. We got approval for our pipelines.

What that means, Madam Chair, is that as we move into the building season – I expect by the time our election happens that those pipelines will be under construction, providing valuable jobs for all Albertans, providing valuable jobs for my constituents in Calgary-Currie. When that happens, I hope that all the members of this House, including those of the opposition, will most definitely be singing our praises at that point. I hear some pounding of desks of the opposition. I really do appreciate their support on that particular matter.

Madam Chair, I believe I've said enough on our budget for the moment, and I'm going to sit down. I will of course pop up later should the need arise, but at this point I'd love to hear from other members of the House on what their views are on our budget.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

[The clauses of Bill 10 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

The hon. Acting Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that we rise and report on Bill 10 and rise and report progress on Bill 8.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Hinkley: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 10. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 8.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Acting Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Seeing the time and the progress we've made today, I would move that we call it 6 o'clock and rise until tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:43 p.m.]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Good morning.

Let us reflect together. May we always continue to be inspired by the communities we serve and appreciate their passion, their commitment, and their willingness to make changes as we work together for the betterment of this province.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 10

Appropriation Act, 2017

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's my privilege to rise today to move third reading of Bill 10, the Appropriation Act, 2017. I along with my colleagues here in government am proud to implement Budget 2017 and its initiatives. Those initiatives will make life more affordable for Albertans. They will assist in creating jobs and diversifying our economy, they will protect and improve services Albertans rely on daily, and they will invest in infrastructure.

During the course of this debate we've heard two broad visions of the province and a fair amount of debate about deficits and debt. There's no doubt low oil prices have had a dramatic effect on government revenue and, of course, on the daily lives of regular Albertans. Madam Speaker, faced with the worst recession in a generation, now is not the time to abandon Albertans and make reckless cuts to programs and services when they are needed most by Albertans. Now is the time to support Albertans and support the recovery in our province.

As I've made clear, Budget 2017 is a commitment to education, health care, social services, and needed infrastructure throughout this province. It's our commitment to Albertans. We have a plan to return to balance by 2024, a short six and a half years in the future, and we're committed to staying on that path. At the end of the day, we are controlling what we can by restraining operating expense increases below population growth and inflation while still preserving the vital programs and services Albertans count on every day. Following this approach, the deficit is forecasted to climb significantly over the next two and a half years.

Our plan also supports economic diversification and jobs to get Albertans working and build an even stronger economy as our province recovers from the downturn, and recovering we are. As I've made clear, we are going to continue with our infrastructure plan. That plan will help build badly needed schools, hospitals, roads, and bridges throughout the province, all these things that were neglected for far too long under previous government.

Madam Speaker, I want to wrap up these brief remarks by saying that we have and will continue to have the backs of Albertans during this downturn, and each and every day our government is squarely focused on making their lives better. As we continue to roll out our fiscal plan, let me add that our plan is working. As we have all heard, Alberta is focused to lead this country in economic growth this year and next. Jobs are starting to return to Alberta, and all of the key economic indicators are starting to move in the right direction. Now is not the time to reverse course. Now is the time to continue investing to make life more affordable for Albertans and support economic recovery in this great province.

On that note, Madam Speaker, I ask all members of the House to support this bill so that we can get on with the important task of implementing Budget 2017 and assisting in the recovery of this great province. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I want to thank the Minister of Finance for joining us today. I welcome him from his time in Toronto, and I'm glad he can be here for this phase of the budget debate. The minister's time in Toronto very specifically highlights the fundamental flaw with this budget. This is a budget that papers over virtually every single difficult decision the government was faced with. Instead, they have taken the tough decisions of today and made our future generations make even tougher decisions.

The Minister of Finance was meeting with credit-rating agencies and financial institutions in Toronto. Now, I recall last year when the Minister of Finance went to meet with credit-rating agencies. They were so disturbed by the lack of any plan for a return to balance that within 24 hours we suffered credit downgrades. Within 24 hours. The Minister of Finance believed that Alberta just deserved a triple-A credit rating but didn't have to show any math about why we deserved a triple-A credit rating. We simply said: "We deserve it. We're entitled to it. We once had a strong fiscal position. We're good for the money."

It reminds me of the time – I think it was almost 20 years ago. There was a Simpsons episode where Lisa Simpson was President, and she was cleaning up after the mess of President Donald Trump, who left the United States bankrupt. She had to deal with the creditors in China and other countries, so she hired Bart Simpson to come along because he was so good at explaining his way out of debt. He would just say: I'm good for it, man; trust me, dude. That is effectively the strategy of this government. This is a Bart Simpson fiscal plan.

There is absolutely no path to return to balance in this budget whatsoever. The minister is simply not telling the truth if he says that there is a path to return to balance by 2024. It's very simple. Anyone can open up this budget, open it up right now, and you will see the last year for which there is even a fiscal projection is 2019, fiscal year 2019-20. March 2020 is the last year for which there is a single projection of any number in the entire document, at four years – four years – short of where the minister says that they're going to balance the budget. So I'm curious to know why they say that they're going to balance the budget by 2024.

I recall an exchange that we had in the estimates process. I like estimates because unlike question period, you really have the ability to pin someone down and get questions – if you're tough, you can stop them from wiggling off the hook, and we actually got some enlightened answers. We actually enlightened the situation a bit with our questions and answers with the Minister of Finance. I was asking about this topic very specifically, and I said: do you know what the deficit will be in 2024? You say you're going to get to a balanced budget in 2024. What will the surplus be in that year? And he said: zero. So by that calculation the Minister of Finance has reached all the way into the future and calculated our expenditures and our revenues down to the penny, and we are going to have a precisely balanced budget. Not a surplus, technically, not a deficit, technically, but a zero-dollar balanced budget. I mean, that is impressive. That is impressive if anyone can reach that far into the future and pinpoint to the dollar an exact balanced budget. The Minister of Finance said this with a straight face.

But I had a hard time believing that he'd done this, so I said: okay; if you've figured out that you're going to have an exact balanced budget, not a surplus, not a deficit, but an exact balanced budget, what is spending going to be in that year? The minister couldn't tell us. If I'm wrong, the minister should stand up right now, when I'm done here, and tell us what spending will be in 2024. I asked him what revenues would be in 2024, and he couldn't tell us. If I'm wrong, the Minister of Finance should stand up and tell us what revenues will be in 2024.

You know, these things are not difficult. This is pretty basic stuff. For the better part of two decades in Alberta, when Ralph Klein and Jim Dinning took hold of the finances of this province, they brought in strong financial reporting legislation to ensure that the fiscal disasters of the Getty years couldn't be repeated. For the last few Premiers we've seen our financial reporting legislation successively weakened, until this government completely did away with it altogether.

They only project out for three years. If the Minister of Finance was worth his salt on these projections, he should be able to tell us really simple numbers. I'm not asking for a lot of detail here but really simple numbers like: what will expenditures be and what will revenues be? If he can tell me that the budget will be balanced that year, surely he knows what expenditures will be that year. Surely he knows what revenues will be that year. But he doesn't. He doesn't know what they are.

I asked the minister: fine; do you know what the debt will be by then? We know that by end of fiscal 2019-20 the debt is projected to reach $71 billion. I think there's a significant chance it'll be even greater than that because we'll be approaching an election period, and the NDP will be spending every last dollar that they can borrow to try and save themselves. Under current projections we will have an accumulated deficit of $71 billion by 2019-20.

The minister says that, you know, if these guys were theoretically re-elected in some nightmare scenario, they would balance the budget by 2024. So what would the debt be by 2024? If you're saying that 2023 is the last year for which you're going to borrow money and you're going to balance the budget in 2024, surely you should know how much money you will have borrowed by the time you stop borrowing money. Any simple, rudimentary, and elementary projection of a balanced budget plan would tell you how much debt will be accumulated by the time you stop taking on more debt.

The minister first said that he didn't know, but under repeated questioning in estimates he finally came up and said: yeah, we do know; we do know how much it'll be. I said: how much? He said: I won't tell you. The minister admitted that they know how much Albertans are going to owe on the provincial debt by 2024, by the time they've theoretically balanced the budget, a date that they probably won't meet anyway. He says that they know how much it will be. I said: "Will you table how much that number will be? What is the number? How much debt will Albertans owe before the budget is theoretically balanced?" He refused – he refused – to table that number. The minister is withholding vital information from this Legislature and from Albertans. Taxpayers, who are going to have to pay for this for generations, have a right to know how much debt we will owe by the time their pixie dust balanced budget plan is finished, but he refuses to disclose this information.

Albertans apparently don't have a right to know how much money they're going to owe. They don't have a right to know how much we're going to be spending in 2024. They don't have a right to know what our revenues will be in 2024. You know why? It's because they don't know. They don't know. They say they know; they probably don't.

I'm interested to know what information the credit-rating agencies asked the minister for a few days ago. They said: we need more information. You know, if I was a credit-rating agency and I'm talking to Bart Simpson, I'd say: "Okay. You say you're going to balance the budget by 2024. All right. If we're going to believe you on that, you're going to have to show us your math. You're going to have to show us what your expenditures are going to be and what your revenues are going to be, even a ballpark number. We're going to have to know how much debt you intend to accrue by that time because how much debt you accrue by that time is going to be the decisive determinant in how much interest you're going to be paying at that time. That's going to figure into your bottom line of your fiscal capacity to actually manage debt safely." Any credit agency would ask that of Bart Simpson when he comes and says: I'm good for it, dude.

I've got a pretty strong suspicion that when the minister sat down with DBRS and Standard & Poor's, they said: "Okay. Dude, how much are you going to be spending in 2024? What are your revenues going to be, and how much are you going to owe?" If we don't get a credit downgrade within 24 hours, then I bet the minister probably told them. But if our credit-rating agencies have a right to know what our debt level will be, surely Albertans who have to pay for it have a right to know.

We also recall that when we were debating the budget at this time last year, included in the budget was repealing the NDP's own legislated debt ceiling. Now, I remember. This Legislature was new. We all kind of got along for a brief little Kumbaya moment of a few months. Most of us were pretty happy that we had turned a page in Alberta, and we'd hoped that if the NDP wouldn't at least be sane economic managers, they would at least believe in accountability and transparency.

They imposed a debt ceiling on themselves of 15 per cent of GDP. We warned them that it was a meaningless debt ceiling. They were continuing to weaken our fiscal accountability and discipline legislation. This debt ceiling that they brought in was actually a significant increase in how much governments had been allowed to borrow previously. We warned that it was toothless. It would mean nothing, just like the United States' debt ceiling, which Congress has increased about twice every year on average for the last 100 years. We warned that like Congress, they would throw this debt ceiling away at the earliest sign of inconvenience. I thought they'd at least last a year.

Apparently, we give them too much credit sometimes, no pun intended. Within less than a year of introducing their own 15 per cent debt-to-GDP debt ceiling, they repealed their own debt ceiling. They repealed their own legislation within less than a year. What happened while we were debating? I stood right here, and the Minister of Finance stood right there, and I said: "If you do this, you're going to jeopardize our credit rating. Repealing our already weak and largely meaningless debt ceiling is going to result in a credit downgrade." The minister stood over there and said: "You're being Chicken Little. You're playing down Alberta." What happened? The next day we came in here with a credit downgrade, and the minister had nothing to say for it other than, "I'm good for the money, dude."

Also, speaking of governments breaking the law, at that time they repealed their own law before they would technically break it, but just a few months ago they broke their own laws. The new equivalent of the fiscal accountability act states that government is not allowed to exceed a certain amount of spending every year that is not budgeted for. Governments are allowed to spend about 1 per cent on operations every year that's not budgeted for. It's at least, in theory, supposed to be for emergencies and whatnot. But, boy, we had a curious case of what might be considered an emergency this year. As a part of the government's climate leadership action plan, the CLAP, they are phasing out coal. This is not only going to drive the real cost of electricity through the roof in Alberta; it's not only going to destroy communities like Hanna, but it is going to cost taxpayers a bundle of money. We have to pay these guys out for the early phase-out of coal, between $1.1 billion and $1.4 billion. That's a pretty hefty chunk of change.

I drove past Sheerness just on the way up here on Sunday afternoon, and that big plant – boy, Hanna is just a little outside my community, and we are going to save Hanna. We're going to save Hanna and keep it open. This government might not care about Hanna because there are not very many NDP voters, if any, in Hanna, but we're going to save it regardless of what this government does.

They're going to pay $1.1 billion to $1.4 billion for the early phase-out of coal. Now, that's not just a waste of money, though, but it's illegal – it's illegal – because that money was not budgeted. That money was not budgeted. They booked it in a single year. They had an option. They could be in violation of basic public-sector accounting standards, or they could be in violation of the fiscal transparency act. They chose to be in violation of their own piece of legislation. The Minister of Finance has admitted that he broke the law.

Not only did he break the law – all of us speed from time to time – he broke his own law, a law that he wrote. Now, if I was writing a law and I thought, "Maybe I'm going to break it," I'd probably carve out an exemption for myself in advance. I'd say, you know, if we're talking speeding, that the speed limit is 110 on this road except for highway 1 between Brooks and Strathmore. I'd say that if you drive a red truck between Brooks and Strathmore and you get pulled over, you don't get a ticket. I'd have carved out a little something.

But these guys instead have brought in a law that they didn't even think ahead to carve out how they would break it. So the Minister of Finance illegally spent $1.1 billion to $1.4 billion of taxpayers' money without the consent of this Legislature. Now, the opposition in our structure is not given very much formal power. The Legislature, especially in a majority government, is controlled by the executive, and the Legislature – well, we're really just supposed to be here to rubber-stamp all the money they want to spend, but at least we have the pretense that we are the ones who authorize spending in the budget. The English fought civil wars and chopped off kings' heads for this right hundreds of years ago, but apparently we don't have the right to that anymore. Now the government has asserted the right of ancient kings to spend money without the consent of the Legislature. That is a slap in the face of hundreds of years of parliamentary tradition and the history of Westminster.

The Minister of Finance has not apologized for it. He merely acknowledged it. There's no penalty for breaking the law, apparently, when you're the politician who writes the law. The Minister of Finance: we asked the Minister of Finance in estimates: what's the consequence for you breaking the law? He said, "We just have to acknowledge that we broke the law." Well, jeez, I would love that. If I got pulled over for a speeding ticket, I get to say, "I'm sorry, officer." He says, "Do you know how fast you were going?" I say, "Yes, I do," and that's the end of the story. "Yes, I know how fast I was going," and he says: "Carry on. You're a politician." Well, that's effectively the way it works with this government. All they do is that they acknowledge: "We broke the law. What are you going to do about it?" The only accountability, it seems, that will be levied will be at the next election.

Now, the government is also deceiving – very intentionally deceiving – Albertans about spending in this budget. The Minister of Finance is falsely claiming that they're keeping operational spending below the combined rates of inflation and population growth. Bollocks. I believe "bollocks" is a parliamentary word.

An Hon. Member: I don't think so.

Mr. Fildebrandt: We'll have to test that.

His assertion that they are keeping spending below inflation and population is bollocks because the Minister of Finance has written the budget to take all of the spending associated with the CLAP out of the budget. He has a mini budget.

Now, I remember that when the former leader of the NDP, now the Government House Leader, was in opposition, he got very upset when the previous government started cooking the books. You'll remember that they divided one budget into three budgets, and they played a bit of shell game and moved everything around. It confused everybody. He was very upset about that, and he had a right to be upset about that. We actually got along on that issue, I think.

Now their government is doing the same thing, but instead of breaking out a savings, capital, and operational budget, they've instead taken an operational budget and taken out the CLAP. They've taken out all of the spending and the revenue associated with the carbon tax. Under questioning the Minister of Finance gave a very interesting albeit not enlightening answer as to why that was. I said: "Why is all of the spending associated with the CLAP taken out of operational spending? If you include all of the spending from the carbon tax and the CLAP in operational spending, which it clearly is, it is . . ."

Mr. Mason: Madam Speaker.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Am I over time?

The Deputy Speaker: Point of order?

Mr. Fildebrandt: Okay. If you take all of that spending out, it becomes . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, we have a point of order.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Mason: Well, the hon. member has been pushing for one, so I'm going to raise these. He's used a couple of words that I think are unparliamentary, "bollocks" and, referring to the climate leadership plan, "the CLAP." Madam Speaker, I think these are unparliamentary, and under 23(h), (i), and (j) I ask you to so rule.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone wish to respond on that side to the point of order?

Mr. Hanson: You know, the use of acronyms is quite common in the House, used all the time. CLP: it's a pretty innocuous little descriptor, but I'll just look quickly in unparliamentary language for – is it "bollocks"? It doesn't appear to be in the book.

Ms Jansen: Google it. It means testicles.

Mr. Hanson: All I'm saying is that it's not in Parliamentary Rules & Forms. It doesn't show up. We can't keep inventing words in the House that somebody finds . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, there is a list of unparliamentary terms. However, as we know, language does change over time, and it's all about the context and how it's used.

However, I think you were using some terms that are perhaps questionable and inappropriate, somewhat vulgar, so I would suggest: temper the use of your language, please, and let's move on.

Debate Continued

Mr. Fildebrandt: If you'll pardon me just this one time: never mind the bollocks. It's a Sex Pistols reference for the new kids.

Madam Speaker, this government is intentionally hiding operational spending in the budget. They are keeping the entire climate leadership action plan, if you will, out of the operational spending. Now, under any sane definition that counts as spending. Now, the minister said that his reason for excluding that was: "Well, we bring in all the money at one end, and we spend it on another. Because it's a dedicated tax, it doesn't count as spending."

Well, how does the tobacco tax work? How does the alcohol tax work? These are taxes on specific things the government collects revenue for and largely, at least in theory, is supposed to spend on measures related to the collection of that revenue. What about the lottery fund? The lottery fund is money collected and money distributed relative to the source of the revenue. It is the exact same as the carbon tax or the climate leadership action plan, if you will, and the minister should be honest about the spending in this budget.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you. Under 29(2)(a)? Oh, there is no 29(2)(a).

The Deputy Speaker: No. It doesn't apply until the third speaker.

Mr. Shepherd: I apologize.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley . . .

Mr. Smith: Devon.

The Deputy Speaker: Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I guess, while I understand that I do have trouble sometimes remembering where other members serve, it seems like every speaker can't remember that Devon is in my constituency. But that's okay. Thank you for allowing me to rise today and speak to Bill 10, the Appropriation Act.

You know, seniors are the fastest growing population in the province of Alberta. They're the fastest growing demographic in Alberta. In light of a $42 billion budget that is borrowing approximately $10 billion worth of debt and helping to balloon the provincial debt, the seniors portion of the 2017 budget would appear to be quite reasonable, a quite reasonable expenditure of funds, at a steady $533 million. But in all budgets, Madam Speaker, the devil is in the details. The seniors portion of the 2017 budget, the $533 million, must always be held up to the light of the costs of the provincial debt and the deficit spending of this NDP government.

Seniors are definitely one group in our society that understands the meaning of financial sacrifice. I don't know too many people that, after having lived most of their lives, haven't had to make wise choices with their finances, to sacrifice for their kids, for education. They've had to learn to balance budgets. They've had to learn to make those hard choices and those hard decisions about how they're going to manage their funds. They've had to learn to live within their means, and they've had to learn to plan for the future.

Perhaps of all the groups in society, definitely, seniors are one that understands that debt and deficits cannot continue forever. Seniors in this province therefore want a budget that takes care of their needs, absolutely, but not while sacrificing the birthright of their grandchildren. Seniors understand that when a government racks up billions of dollars of debt and has deficits year after year and when a government budgets on $55-a-barrel oil and then is shocked when oil prices are consistently under that price, provincial debt is actually going to be far more than reported.

Seniors, we know, believe that it's really the vulnerable in society that get hurt when we do not responsibly balance budgets, when we're not fiscally responsible. It's the seniors, it's the poor, and it's the young that are affected the most by the poor decisions of this present government. And while seniors and the poor want and deserve a responsible budget that will meet their needs, they also understand that creating a massive debt for future generations to pay off is not compassion; it's irresponsibility. Creating a massive future debt, that by 2019 will number somewhere around $70 billion and will cost future citizens somewhere around $2.3 billion in interest payments each year, is fiscally irresponsible. Madam Speaker, I believe that Albertans demand better of this Legislature and of this government. Seniors demand better. Albertans that depend on affordable housing understand that if you want to continue to have access to quality affordable housing and that if seniors want to continue to have access to affordable quality continuing care that the government must make wise and fiscally responsible budgets.

When I consider the Seniors and Housing budget lines, this budget has set aside $167 million for capital investment. Approximately $100 million of that is for home management bodies and seniors in affordable housing, and another $67 million is for the rental assistance program. No one will argue the necessity of housing our seniors or renovating seniors' lodges or providing adequate affordable housing for Albertans, but we need to make sure that this government has proper oversight and distribution of the economic resources that Albertans have provided them with.

The Minister of Seniors and Housing has said that $120 million is being set aside to provide affordable housing for off-reserve indigenous populations in the province in the five-year capital plan, and commendably the minister is embarking this month on a listening tour with First Nations indigenous people. It's a good thing. But there are no details and no policies in the budget plan for how we're going to ensure that this key strategy of the government will be achieved in a cost-effective manner, no details on the cost of the tour, no details on how they're going to move forward on this five-year capital plan, just a raw figure provided by the minister. The lack of detail is concerning.

Line 2.1 of the budget, program planning and delivery, covers the cost of training on elder abuse, again, a very worthwhile program as we have had a constant stream of e-mails coming to the opposition from concerned family and seniors regarding how seniors are being taken care of in both private and public facilities. The problem is real, yet we could not ascertain how much of the seniors' budget was set aside for this training program on elder abuse. It's even more concerning when the performance indicators provided by the government themselves for awareness of elder abuse appear to be declining even in spite of the training program. It's concerning when the ability to respond to elder abuse by the people who have that responsibility tell us that they believe, by the indicators of this government, that it's in decline. So we're spending money on a very worthwhile program and project, but the indicators are telling us that this government is failing.

When you have a budget that is going into debt and is producing deficit after deficit and when they are spending money on worthwhile programs but appear to be failing, it's a concern that this government needs to be aware of and that we have pointed out to them. The hard-earned tax dollars that this government is responsible for at the very least need to be spent in effective ways, and the minister has had this brought to her attention.

It is clear that this budget is ill prepared to deal with the increases that the home management bodies and the continuing care facilities are going to face with the implementation of a carbon tax or, for that matter, with the increase in the minimum wage. I know that we've received many e-mails from concerned Albertans and from people within the industry wondering how they're going to cover things like the carbon tax and the minimum wage. While the minister can make the case that she's set aside $57 million for energy efficiency efforts and another $500,000 for energy audits, the fact still remains that the people that are charged with taking care of our seniors are telling us that in most cases these efforts of the government will not cover the real-time costs of the carbon tax. They are telling us that there's been little or no attempt by this government to build into this budget a method for how to address the impact of the minimum wage increases that they have to deal with. In a budget that has, for seniors at least, pretty much held the line, this government has increased the costs. That's a concern.

How will the people that are charged with taking care of our seniors, who have to ensure that they are getting quality care, going to cover the increased costs of the minimum wage, and how will they cover the increased benefits that will accompany the increases in the minimum wage? They have not built it into their budget. And they have told the people responsible in many cases, essentially: deal with it. But they have not given them the resources to deal with it.

There are some issues that we've identified for the minister in this budget when it comes to the SHARP loan program and the SHARP grant program. This budget has set aside $10 million for the SHARP loan program and another $2 million for the SHARP grant program. Seniors that have come into my office and into many of the offices in this province are telling us that they're often very confused. They want to apply for a SHARP grant, but they have to first apply for a loan. I've had many conversations with seniors that say: I don't want a loan; I don't want a loan. They see that house as the nest egg for either when they get a little older and they need the money that comes from the equity that they have built up in that facility, that house, or they see it as a nest egg that they can pass on to their children, something to help their children and their grandchildren. They're very concerned and they're very confused: why do I have to ask for a loan in order to get a grant?

So we've had the conversations with the minister in budget estimates that the minister should try to take the time to review the administration of this program to see if there is some way of separating the two so that seniors do not have to wade through the front-end confusion that comes with trying to meet their needs with this program. While we were happy to see that a Seniors Advocate is in place to help seniors as they try to manipulate and manage their way through the bureaucracy of government, this minister needs to remember that 70 per cent of the calls for help that the Seniors Advocate receives revolve around the complex system of services and financial information programs that are available through her ministry. Seniors get lost in all of the pages and web pages. Trying to figure out how to manipulate and work through them is, for many seniors, a chore that is just beyond them. The minister needs to consider that a reallocation of resources may need to occur within her department in order to address this problem for seniors.

One of the things that we have talked with the minister about is transportation . . . [Mr. Smith's speaking time expired]

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) comes into effect. The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I have a question for the member. He talked a lot in his speech about caring for seniors and housing for seniors, and I really appreciate that. I think that's admirable. But I guess I have a question for the member in terms of that in this Chamber last November he talked about how he and his neighbours opposed a group home for troubled youth in their neighbourhood. So I find it a bit rich that he would, you know, promote seniors' housing on one hand and oppose group homes for troubled youth on the other. I just wonder if the member can walk us through his thought process on how he chooses which vulnerable groups to oppose and which ones to support and the various criteria he uses to pick winners and losers when it comes to helping vulnerable, disadvantaged individuals.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. If the hon. member would like to come talk to me about that particular issue as there are times when a dialogue needs to take place – and he needs to get his facts. I guess the only thing I'll say about that is that the concerns that the neighbourhood and the community had with regard to this were backed up at a panel of appeal. Maybe he needs to come talk to me about getting some of the facts straight.

If he wants to talk about hypocrisy, Madam Speaker, let's bring the hypocrisy of the NDP government to the forefront. Let's remember that they like to talk about compassion, they like to talk about serving the needs of the people, and then they saddle the generations of children in this province with future debt. How can they, after having this brought to their attention time after time after time, be so hypocritical as to suggest that they are the only party in Alberta and they are the only people in Alberta that actually seem to have compassion when all they can really do is saddle Albertans with debt after debt after debt and deficit after deficit after deficit simply because they are unwilling to make the hard choices in life? They were elected to govern. They do govern, just not very well, in the minds of many Albertans, and a part of that reason is because they refuse to make the hard choices and to understand that there are fiscal realities in this province that not even the NDP can ignore.

So the hon. member can talk about hypocrisy, but like many things we are told, he had better look in the mirror first, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Edmonton-Centre under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, the member that was sharing here spoke quite a bit about speaking with seniors in his constituency and the concerns that they've brought forward. Last week I had the opportunity to visit eight seniors' residences here in Edmonton-Centre. I have a number of them here. I still have not had the opportunity to visit them all, but I did visit eight of the many that I have. At each of those I took the opportunity to share a bit about the work our government is doing and share a bit about our budget, and I did also give the opportunity for all those seniors to ask questions and have discussions about their thoughts on these issues.

I can tell you, Madam Speaker, that none of those seniors I spoke to raised the concerns that this member did. In speaking with those seniors, in fact, here in Edmonton-Centre, those seniors are very appreciative of the work our government is doing. Those seniors spoke in favour of our choice to spend on important things. They spoke in favour of investing in infrastructure, of not saddling their children with schools that do not have adequate teachers or with failing health infrastructure, which we are still catching up on from the last Premier, which many of these members love to speak about in hagiography, who left us with a balanced budget but with a crippling infrastructure debt, which we are still to this day recovering from, who left us with many of people that are currently on the streets of my constituency, who were turned out of mental health care and support and for whom we must now account and for whom we must now be investing to build the supportive housing that's needed to provide these people with the care and the services which were cut.

These are apparently the tough choices that they want to speak about but which, Madam Speaker, they do not wish to actually detail. They love to talk about them in the abstract, absolutely. They love to stand and talk about how they would make these important choices.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Before I begin my speech in support of Bill 10, I wanted to talk about rational thoughts and about the opportunity that I've had to learn how to make sure that my arguments go from A to B to C. I wanted to address some of the remarks made by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon because he spoke a lot about how he is worried about people living in poverty and seniors, but then he went on and on and on about how raising the minimum wage was a really bad thing and how the programs that the government has put in place for seniors were a really bad thing. I was left with the conclusion that while the member spoke about his interest in supporting people living in poverty and of seniors that, in real fact, he didn't really understand that the budget is supporting these people that he talked about.

For example, we've put quite a lot of money into long-term care and into seniors' housing. We've raised the minimum wage because people who live – even at the minimum wage people very often are still living in poverty. So I would really like to encourage the member, if he's talking about people living in poverty, that he should be supporting our minimum wage, the efforts to have child care at $25 a day, the money that we've put into the SHARP program, and so on. I'm always amazed at how irrational the thoughts from the opposition are as they discuss the budget and the debt.

I want to talk about the debt. I've often wondered, when we talk about leaving the debt for our children and grandchildren, if we understand how much education costs for our children and our grandchildren. I haven't had the time to do all the additions, but I would encourage the members opposite, especially some of them who have new children – I understand the Member for Strathmore-Brooks has a new child – to really add up the amount of funding that the provincial government is spending in terms of education, health care, roads, and so on, that are going to benefit your children and grandchildren. You know, how lucky we are to have all these supports in our province and in Canada.

Now, I really want to speak about my support for Bill 10, the Appropriation Act, 2017. I want to remind everyone about the minister's words as he introduced the budget on March 16, 2017.

"Budget 2017 is about making life better for everyday Albertans." I talked a little bit about how the budget is making life better for people who are living in poverty and for seniors, but I wanted to especially talk about how the budget is impacting people in my constituency. A reduction in school fees will allow parents to not be so panicked every September as they struggle to set aside the funds. As a parent I know what it is like to figure out over the summer how to pay for summer camps, summer child care, school clothes, and sports fees and then remember that in September I still have to pay. Members opposite have often told us that they're really concerned about people living in poverty, so I would really like to urge them to remember that the budget is going to help those people living in poverty by the reduction in school fees.

The government is continuing to fund increased enrolment growth in each school district. Everyone involved in the education of our K to 12 students knows the importance of small teacher-student ratios, supports for students needing additional supports, and how this investment is and will continue to ensure that our children will have the skills needed in the future. It's not only our kids who will benefit, but it's the economy of Alberta. There is ample research that shows that investment in education is going to pay off in terms of economic development for our province.

I am so pleased that the young people in my riding will have their tuition frozen for a third year. We know the importance of postsecondary education to future employment and earning a good wage to support a family. I would like to remind the members of the House that we will soon be getting the data from the national census, and that census data will have some really good information on how education is coupled with increased wages.

Seniors in my community, as in other communities, face challenges in accessing accommodations that they can afford. Just like the Member for Edmonton-Centre, I hear this every day as I door-knock, meet constituents, and casually meet residents on the street or at the supermarket. I am so thankful for the investment our government is providing in funds for housing authorities and other bodies to build low-cost seniors' housing. One of these investments is in my own constituency. Like many of the projects supported by the capital plan, I can assure the members of the opposition that this much-needed project has been on the list of needed projects for a very long time, and it wasn't built under the previous government.

I want to talk a little bit about the SHARP program. The reason the SHARP program is in place is to allow seniors to stay in their own home, so that we don't need to build specialized housing for them because they can stay in their own home, continue their gardening, be with their friends and close to the neighbourhood that they know, and they can have the adaptation that they need. It's a great program, and I really hope that more and more seniors take the opportunity of the SHARP program and enjoy the benefits of living in their own home, among the things that they know. This budget also provides an increase in home care, allowing seniors to stay in their homes longer.

The government investment and diversification project is not going unnoticed in the Industrial Heartland, an area that I share with other MLAs and that is a key region for the economic recovery and growth in Alberta. Last week I attended an event which involved the major industries as well as elected officials and community members. The government's support for industry diversification was mentioned by a mayor and points out how welcome the government's support is for the oil and gas sector. The support for new apprentice and training opportunities through $14 million in the budget will ensure that industry has the needed trained workers and that young people and those workers seeking retraining and seeking to invest in a career in one of the trades will have the support they need.

I would like to really suggest to all members of the House that instead of always telling negative things about our budget and so on, they encourage the young people in their ridings to take up the opportunities that the government is providing because – you know what? – if you don't tell them, they'll be missing out, and it's our job as MLAs to really encourage everyone to know what the government is doing. I happen to know the riding of the Member for Strathmore-Brooks quite well, and I'm really hoping that the member is telling people in Brooks and Strathmore and the rural communities that there are projects in the area that are going benefit them.

A bill passed in the fall session provided a path for tax credits for investors. In this budget $71 million supports job creators with two tax credits to encourage investors to support eligible small and medium-sized enterprise in Alberta and encourage businesses to make capital investments. Please let's remember how much of the budget is going to really support the industries in all of our communities, not only just in mine. The CARES program has already provided support for regional economic development initiatives and will provide a total of $30 million to communities to diversify and expand their economic initiatives.

A program dear to the Finance minister and to many of my fellow MLAs is the support for small breweries. This program has already seen great results, and I hope that many of the members of this House have tried the local beers and spirits which are a benefit of this program. I myself wish that the climate in Alberta would support growing grapes and the wine industry, although I do note that we have at least two fruit winemakers, one in Barrhead and one in Strathcona county, so I may actually lobby the Finance minister for some tax credits for winemaking, too.

The Minister of Finance has stated that Alberta's economy is stabilizing and that jobs are returning. As our economy recovers, we will continue to bring the deficit down to balance, and we will do so without sacrificing the supports and services families need. And it appears that not only the Minister of Finance is optimistic about the economy. I don't want to give a whole list of newspaper articles and media reports that have also indicated that the economy is recovering. We should be optimistic, and we should really stop always saying negative things about Alberta and what's happening, because it's not doing anything good. [interjections] It might really be funny to members of the opposition but – you know what? – in my riding people are optimistic. We are building. The industries are building.

I want to address government spending because I know that the Finance minister and all ministers have taken important steps in reducing government spending. The budget includes a new agreement with physicians that saves up to half a billion dollars over two years. We have amalgamated agencies, boards, and commissions or have cut them, have limited salaries, and have removed perks such as golf memberships. We have also frozen salaries for politicians, political staff, and management in the civil service. We have streamlined programs such as Alberta Innovates, and we have streamlined community partnership grants and suspended other nonessential programs.

As important as it is to cut waste and reduce the growth of government spending, I am glad I am part of a government that sees it as critical that through this downturn in the economy it remains focused on supporting families, supporting education, building the needed infrastructure, and growing the economy.

Madam Speaker, I would like to take the opportunity to thank the civil servants in the Treasury Board and Finance department, who have worked long hours to prepare the budget documents, the fiscal plan, and to ensure that the information is accurate. I think sometimes we don't really honour our civil servants enough, who really work hard to make sure that we have the information that we need.

10:00

Madam Speaker, I would like to encourage all members to support Bill 10, the Appropriation Act, that will support Albertan families, seniors, people living in poverty, encourage diversification, build the needed affordable housing and seniors' lodges, and support accessible postsecondary education. I would also like to ask all members to be positive and really try to understand that Alberta is doing quite well – and we are leading in many indicators – because negativism isn't going to be helpful.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), I'll recognize Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am so sorry the opposition has said mean things about the budget. I'm sorry that we couldn't find very much positive in $71 billion of debt to leave our children. I'm sorry.

Mr. Hinkley: Speculation.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Speculation? It's in your own budget.

Madam Speaker, I am tickling with laughter at the government this morning. One of the government members here just said that the $71 billion of debt in this budget is speculation. Let me print a copy of the budget for him, or maybe someone could pull up a page number while I'm talking here and hand it to me and we'll share a page number, one of the dozens of page numbers that show $71 billion of debt before Albertans get to throw these guys out in 2019.

Mr. Hinkley: Future speculation. Exaggeration.

Mr. Fildebrandt: I will get the page number for him in just a moment here.

But, yeah, I'm very sorry to the Member for Sherwood Park that the opposition has mean things to say about the budget. Because you know what? We can't find very much good in this. She said that she is grateful for the things that the government is doing. She's a part of it. Is she grateful to herself? What kind of self-congratulatory universe is this government living in where, you know: "I'm grateful that I bought myself breakfast this morning. I'm grateful that I could put my tie on." This government is grateful that it can spend money.

The member talked about the minimum wage, about the minimum wage and how it's necessary to bring up the minimum wage to fight poverty. I'm sure she's well intentioned in this respect but economically illiterate. She said that at $15 an hour you're still living in poverty, and for many people that would certainly be true. But they believe that by raising the minimum wage, you will instantly raise people's incomes without any negative effects on the economy. If that is so, why don't they just double the minimum wage to $30? If raising the minimum wage has no negative effect on the economy, why not have a $100 minimum wage? At what point do we stop raising the minimum wage? If there is zero negative effect on minimum wage, we should just have a $1 million minimum wage. They know their arguments don't hold water. It's pure ideology to cover up for economic illiteracy.

The member talked about how my child will probably be so happy to inherit all the debt. Now, I did the numbers. On the day my daughter was born, March 11 at 10:04 p.m., I calculated that she was born with exactly $6,929.29 of debt the second that she was born. She doesn't really understand very much right now, but I think one of the first lessons that we're going to teach her is that socialism is theft. The problem with socialism is that eventually you run out of other people's money, and this government is spending other people's money. They're spending other people's money who are working for it now, and they're spending other people's money who don't even have a right to vote yet.

I also did the math. By the time my daughter is old enough to even vote, when she turns 18, on her 18th birthday, she will owe more than $50,000. Fifty thousand dollars of provincial government debt, just Alberta. Forget what the federal government is doing or municipal governments. Fifty thousand dollars of provincial debt alone by the time she is old enough to vote.

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: Point of order. Go ahead, hon. Government House Leader.

Point of Order

Question-and-Comment Period

Mr. Mason: Madam Speaker, the 29(2)(a) rule is to provide for a brief comment or a question to the member who has just finished speaking. It is not an opportunity for a member of the opposition to stand up for five minutes and continue his speech. So I would ask you to rule on the way that we use this rule, in a way that's fair and is consistent with the intention of the Assembly when the change to the standing order was made, which is that it would allow for a brief comment or question from a member of the House to the person who has finished speaking, and it necessarily, in my view, entails a right of response by the member who is being asked the question.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Madam Speaker, you well know the sheer hypocrisy in the Government House Leader's argument here. He has been doing this for decades. Government members still do it during 29(2)(a). They will stand up. They will make comments. Sometimes they're short comments; sometimes they're longer comments. You know, they do this regularly themselves. They can give it, but they can't take it. They might be a little sad that the opposition has mean things to say about the budget, but that is . . .

Mr. Mason: Point of order, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Fildebrandt: . . . the job of the Official Opposition, to criticize . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Another point of order?

Point of Order

Points of Order

Mr. Mason: Yes, and along a similar line. The opportunity to respond to a point of order is usually an opportunity to actually respond to the point of order and not to continue the speech of the member. This member doesn't seem to know what the tools are in this Assembly and how to use them. Each thing is merely exploited in order to continue his tirade with respect to the issue that is on his mind. I think it's an abuse of his right to respond to a point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills on the point of order.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's a very interesting Wednesday morning. I'm very glad that I stood in for my counterpart the House leader for the opposition. Points of order, responses to points of order. We've been called out on using acronyms today. We've been called out on the extent of the time period for responses under 29(2)(a). The Government House Leader knows full well that members on his side – actually, his assistant or deputy himself has stood up on 29(2)(a) and railed against the opposition and the third party, totally off topic for the full five minutes. You know, we can easily go back into Hansard and find this if you need it. We can definitely do that. We'll get somebody in research to look up some of this stuff.

But some of these points of order are just approaching ridiculous this morning, and I think we should carry on with debate.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, on a number of occasions we have dealt with the question of what is appropriate under Standing Order 29(2)(a), and the tradition of this House has been to provide a great deal of leeway to all hon. members rather than holding to the strict interpretation of that rule. I do believe that the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks was addressing comments that the Member for Sherwood Park had made. There is no requirement on time or whether there's a response. It is comments, could be questions. The intent is to have a dialogue, though, so I would encourage all members to allow for that when you do make your comments so that the previous speaker would have the chance to perhaps comment.

Continue, please.

Debate Continued

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I actually do look forward to the Member for Sherwood Park's response to my comments here. You know, they're talking about saddling future generations with debt, and they never mention it whatsoever. They talk about the nice things for the short term, right now only. I value education and health care for our children, and all members of this House support that, but we want these things to be sustainable. They are talking about funding these things only in the short term, right now for the short cycle of an election, for an election cycle only, and then it's someone else's problem to pay for it. Perhaps many of them don't expect to be around long enough to actually have to clean up the mess. But members on this side of the House know that we're going to have a very tough job after the next election cleaning up.

Thank you.

10:10

The Deputy Speaker: On Bill 10, I'll recognize Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's an interesting time to rise here in debate to talk about the budget bill. What I find fascinating about this place is that things seem to be completely binary. The choices are either: we are the only people in the world who could possibly care about anyone, and the only possible way to go forward is with our budget; and the only other choice is dramatically on the other end of the spectrum, that only they will be able to save our province from the dastardly NDP and all the terrible things they've done.

There is actually a middle way here, Madam Speaker, and I'm going to talk about that. There is actually a middle way where we cannot incur massive, massive amounts of debt and where we cannot devastate our public services. It is about choices. Every budget is about the choices that we make. Those are not easy choices. But this government has very clearly laid bare for all Albertans to see what their values and what their priorities are. It's about options. [interjections] They're over there desk-thumping, saying that only they care about people, but the people of this province ultimately have to pay back this money.

My question for the government, in all seriousness, is: where does the money come from? Where does the money come from to pay for your programs? Well, you have some choices. You borrow the money, if you don't raise enough from tax-paying Albertans, but ultimately Albertans have to pay the freight. Ultimately, Albertans have to pay the freight.

They're talking about caring only about people and the environment and caring only about the economy over on this side. I care about both. It is not a binary choice, one or the other, because eventually you're going to hit the wall. You're eventually going to hit the wall.

Look, I want to be very clear that when oil prices drop as precipitously as they did just before and just after this government was elected, no government in the world – no responsible government, anyway – would balance the budget instantly. I understand and I appreciate that. But it doesn't need to be as bad as you've made it. It really does not need to be as bad as you've made it. You have not even made an effort to find savings anywhere in government. And when you have more revenue from unanticipated increases in oil prices, what do you do? Your health care spending goes up, greater than the fiscal management act says it should. So you break your own laws, that you yourself have brought in and amended.

By 2019 government will have grown by 20 per cent, in the face of one of the greatest recessions in Alberta history. Debt will be at $71 billion in what was once a debt-free province. Interest costs, debt-servicing costs will be more than the combined spending of Children's Services, Culture and Tourism, and Indigenous Relations. Combined. The choices that this government is making, ironically enough, will ultimately hurt Albertans. I understand that what they're trying to do, they think, comes from a good place: we're going to look out for people. I get that, and that's what government should do. I understand that. But there are choices you have made that have made things worse than they needed to be.

There are some things in this budget that I agree with. There are some things that you've done in this budget that I agree with. I agree with increased spending in the Ministry of Justice and Solicitor General to ensure that our justice system continues to work well. I agree with substantial investments in capital to catch up on Alberta's infrastructure deficits. I do question how much money gets reprofiled from one year to another and whether, in fact, we have the capacity to actually deploy the capital spending that's in the budget. I agree with attempts to reduce school fees. I think the physician deal makes sense although I do have questions about whether that premise or concept could and should be applied to other areas. When I talk about choices, these are things where I think the choices this government has made have not gone far enough in many areas, that being one of them.

We have an Official Opposition that feels, and I think the Member for Strathmore-Brooks had said, that our job is to oppose the government. Half of our job on this side is to oppose the government and hold the government to account. The other half of the job is to propose ideas and tell Albertans what we would actually do here on this side. It's actually really easy. It is really easy: when the government says black, we say white. It's actually really easy to do that. It's really easy just simply to oppose, that whatever the government says, we just go against it.

Well, that's not my style. There are a lot of things this government is doing that I think are not on the right path – and I've been very clear on what I think some of those things are – but what I haven't heard from anyone else on this side of the House, aside from me and the Alberta Party, is: what would they do any differently? I think the government, rightly, will criticize on certain days when one question is about where spending cuts need to be made and the next question is about where a particular project in a constituency needs to be done. It doesn't hang together.

I think that the Official Opposition owes Albertans an explanation of where they would make cuts specifically, of how they would ensure wait times don't get out of hand, of how they would ensure that front-line public service workers would not be cut. Their $10.6 billion in cuts that would be required to balance the budget would devastate Alberta's public service. That's 20 per cent of the public service. It's irresponsible to suggest that it's a simple matter of, quote, unquote, finding efficiencies and that that's all that's needed. That's not all that's needed, but it's certainly part of what is needed.

The Alberta Party's shadow budget, our third shadow budget by the way, the only party in this Assembly that produces a shadow budget, is 45 pages long. We've gone into great detail, line item detail, about what choices we would make. We put that out to Albertans, and they've provided feedback. It's been a really interesting process because not every choice that we've made is a choice that every Albertan would make. And that's good. That's what we ought to be doing on the opposition side, putting out our ideas, proposing ideas, not just opposing the government. That's not what Albertans expect of us. Our job in opposition is to tell Albertans how we would put Alberta back on a pathway to prosperity, to shared prosperity, across this province.

We believe we can find 1 per cent savings across the $53 billion budget that this government has put forward each year for four years. I think it is absolutely possible. In fact, it's irresponsible not to try to find at least 1 per cent in operational spending savings across government. It's not easy, but it's also not that hard. It's certainly more difficult if you don't even try, if you don't even challenge the public service and say: "Folks, it's a difficult time. We need to find ways of doing more with less. We need to find ways of continuing to deliver high-quality public service, in fact maybe even deliver higher quality public service more efficiently, more effectively." I see little or no effort from the government to actually find efficiencies.

Our shadow budget, Pathway to Prosperity, ensures core services receive funding increases for the major front-line service areas to match population growth. That ensures that class sizes stay small, that health care wait times are reasonable, and that we look after our vulnerable neighbours. We would ask our dedicated public servants to take a negotiated pay freeze that is cost neutral to government. We'll have to see the details of the teachers' agreement to see whether, in fact, it meets that test, but in a very difficult economic climate I don't think it's too much to ask of those dedicated public servants to get paid the same next year as they got paid this year, at a time when Albertans all around this province, more than a hundred thousand Albertans, have no job at all, when others have taken a pay cut, and when others have taken reduced work hours.

We would also continue to make big investments in infrastructure. The Official Opposition's plan would replace a fiscal deficit with a human and an infrastructure deficit. That's not what Albertans want. That is not in the best interests of Albertans. We would invest in economic capacity in this province. That's what infrastructure does, both social infrastructure and physical infrastructure.

The other big concern I have with this government is the fact that they continue to rely on nonrenewable resource revenues as the only saviour for any sort of budget deficit that we have in this province. Their entire plan is crossing their fingers and hoping to goodness the price of oil goes up. Every government, leading back decades in this province, has done the same thing. This House leader has railed against the government in the past for overrelying on nonrenewable resource revenues. That's not a responsible budget plan. The Alberta Party would cap the amount of nonrenewable resource revenue that we assume we would ever have at $3 billion. Anything above that would go to debt repayment, go to capital spending, and ultimately go to the heritage fund.

We would make the carbon tax, which, by the way, I believe in in principle, revenue neutral. If we believe that climate change is (a) real, (b) a problem, and (c) something we ought to do something about – by the way, I believe climate change is real, I believe climate change is a problem, and I believe that climate change is something we ought to do something about – let's use the least economically damaging way of doing that. Let's create a frame for innovation, for Alberta companies and Alberta technologies to be sold to the rest of the world to help address the carbon emission problem. That can be Alberta's contribution to solving climate change.

Unfortunately, the way this government has gone about it has created devastating economic consequences. It's highly political. They're hiding what is ordinary operational and capital spending under the climate leadership plan, and I'm worried that this government may have spoiled what could be a very sound policy in the minds of Albertans. They may have turned Albertans against what can be a very, very sound policy. The Alberta Party would make the carbon tax revenue neutral through cuts to personal and corporate taxes, through innovation tax credits, ensuring Alberta remains a leader in the current economy, that our oil and gas industry remains strong, and that we take a step into the next economy. I believe very much that Alberta can be part of the "and economy": oil and gas and innovation and green technology.

We also would review the entitlements delivered by government to ensure that those who really need help get help and that those who don't will no longer receive tax dollars when they don't really need them.

Those are the choices the Alberta Party would make. We believe that they're balanced, that they are fair, and they prove that we are the only party on this side of the House that has a long-term plan for Alberta. I would argue that the Alberta Party is the only group that truly has a compelling, believable, long-term plan for Alberta. That is the very least that Albertans should expect from their political leaders on both sides. It's a shame that no one else in this House seems to agree.

I can't, in the end, Madam Speaker, support this budget because budgets are about choices, and the choices this government has made are not good for Alberta. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), I'll recognize Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I really appreciate the member's speech. I appreciate that he is the only opposition member to propose some alternatives, and I think that's admirable. It's interesting that the Member for Strathmore-Brooks earlier talked about economic literacy, and he's the one who can't write a shadow budget, talking about economic literacy.

The Member for Calgary-Elbow talked a bit about not having cuts in the budget, and I think that's a bit disingenuous because, you know, we can look at examples. The Finance minister has taken great leadership in reforming salaries for ABCs and cutting out golf club memberships, these kinds of perks, the outrageous CEO salaries. I'd like to hear from the Member for Calgary-Elbow. He said that there's no attempt at cuts, and I find that a bit disingenuous, so I want to give him a chance to address that.

I'd also like to ask him about his plan to balance the budget, because from what I understand, a lot of that balance is predicated on imposing wage freezes on public-sector workers. I'd like to point out that collective bargaining is called collective bargaining for a reason. It's not about going in and imposing on one side or the other. You know, the former government tried that with I believe it was either Bill 45 or 46 – I can't quite recall – but it didn't work out very well for them when they tried to impose those public-sector wage freezes in a unilateral fashion. I wonder if the Member for Calgary-Elbow can tell us about his plan to balance the budget on the backs of our hard-working public-sector workers.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'll address the first question first. He talked about the entitlements, the ABC review. Absolutely, I support reviewing those salaries. It seems outrageous and old-fashioned that golf course memberships would be part of any compensation package paid for by Alberta taxpayers, so absolutely I agree with that. How much money is that going to save? And it should. I'm not saying that we shouldn't do that. Absolutely, we should. I think the number that I've heard is $28 million. That's not nothing, but it certainly isn't $10.3 billion.

I also think that there's a very important question in all of that: how do we ensure that we attract and retain top talent to run what are large, complex organizations? There could be some unintended consequence there of finding people who are actually less skilled and qualified to run highly complex organizations that is to the financial and operational detriment of our province. While these reviews are a good idea and I support them one hundred per cent and I think we do need to look at entitlements to ensure they're modernized and it fits and makes sense and is a defensible use of public dollars, I also think we need to look at the scale of what that's actually going to deliver.

You talked about the public-sector wage freeze, and the one word that you missed in my speech, which I'm one hundred per cent certain will be in Hansard – and it wasn't before, it will be now – is that it must be a negotiated wage freeze. It must be negotiated, where you actually sit down with public-sector unions and their representatives. We lay all the numbers on the table, and we talk with them about what the situation is that our province finds itself in. Look, the answer is that at some point we run out of money, right? You know, this government talks a lot about debt-to-GDP ratio and that we're so much better than every other province. The number we're at today matters, of course. The number, though, that we're going to be at in the future matters just as much if not more.

Our credit rating is absolutely under threat. We've already seen it fall under this government. We're going to see, I think – and I don't think this is a radical prediction – the credit rating of this province drop again. Well, what that means is that the $2.3 billion in debt servicing, the $2.3 billion in interest payments that our province is going to have to pay in just two years' time, that number is going to go up, and we live in an environment where interest rates in general are going up. So now all of a sudden our debt-servicing costs start to outstrip our larger departments, not just some of the smaller departments. Those are choices that this government has made to put us in a very, very difficult position.

So, no, I don't think that we need to impose wage freezes or rollbacks on the public sector, but I do think that public-sector workers of all kinds understand the challenge that our province faces. I don't think that this government has tried nearly hard enough to sit down with them and engage them in a genuine way and say: look, folks, when your neighbours are ... [The time limit for questions and comments expired] Oh. Darn. We'll have to come back to it.

The Deputy Speaker: On Bill 10, I will recognize the Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Madam Speaker. I want to make a few comments with respect to Bill 10 and, in particular, would like to respond to some of the comments made by the opposition Finance critic in his speech.

I want to go back to the situation that this province found itself in at the time of the election two years ago. Leading up to that election, of course, there was a dramatic fall in world oil prices as a result of actions by the Saudi Arabian government and other governments to basically flood the world markets with cheap oil in an attempt to push out higher cost production, including shale gas and oil in the United States and, of course, the oil sands here and others in the world.

That resulted in a dramatic drop in revenue. In fact, in the first year before our government took office, $2 billion of government revenue was vaporized, just vaporized, $2 billion that the previous government had used to fund program expenditures. At that time, before that happened, about 30 per cent of program expenditures in this province were paid for by nonrenewable resource revenue. I sat in opposition when the previous Premier, Premier Stelmach, put together a blue-chip panel, headed up by David Emerson, that identified this as a huge problem, the lack of diversification not only in the economy but in the resource base of the government and its overdependence on very volatile royalty revenue. That was in 2007. Well, nothing was done, Madam Speaker – nothing was done – by the previous government to correct that situation.

When the election happened, Mr. Prentice in his budget recognized some of the problems that were lying ahead, but he laid out a plan in his budget that clearly was not going to satisfy anybody on any side of the question. It included a billion-dollar health care user fee being restored. It involved a billion dollars of cuts in health care. It involved no money to hire new teachers for thousands of new students that were entering the system and so on and so on and so on.

The result is that in the election people had a clear choice between one party that wanted to cut services, impose unfair taxes, and go back to the same old way that this province had been governed by for many years or a new approach, which was to protect the services that people really cared about. That was the basis of the decision. That was, in fact, basically the ballot question in the last election, and the result was the election of a new government, a majority government, with a mandate from the public in the election to protect public services, to protect our health care, to protect our education.

The Wildrose also ran in that election, of course. Somewhat to the PCs' surprise they managed to displace them. They thought they were dead, but they weren't. Their plan was for about a 20 per cent reduction in government spending. That's about $9 billion on the operating side and about a $2 billion cut to capital expenditures. Now, the Wildrose likes to pretend that you can find $9 billion in this budget, about a 20 per cent reduction, without doing anything to front-line services. They seem to think, even after the years of Ralph Klein and the austerity and so on that we went through, that there are so many bureaucrats just spinning their wheels that we could just trim that all up and it won't affect service delivery. Madam Speaker, that is disingenuous – and that's a very polite word – because that is, I would say, something that completely, you know, is at variance with the truth. They would like people to believe that, but they know that they can't deliver that.

I know why, and that's because they haven't been able to deliver a shadow budget. They have refused so far to say exactly what they would do in terms of the budget. We know that the Alberta Party has done that. It's an interesting document. I've looked at it. But I know that the Wildrose . . . [interjections] It's not that I think that they're incapable, Madam Speaker. I don't think that the Finance critic, who is busy chirping at me over there, is incapable of developing a shadow budget, but here's the thing. If they did a shadow budget and they cut $9 billion out of the budget, they would have to show massive cuts to services, and they don't want the people to know that that's what they're planning to do. So that's why there's no shadow budget. It's not because they're incapable of doing one. No. But it would show what they really stand for. It would tip their hand, and the public would really know what they're going to get if they elect whatever monstrous creation is formed by the union of those two parties. The act of creation is something I shudder to even think about.

You know, governments have choices. There are only three. It's actually very basic in terms of trying to deal with budgetary issues. They can raise revenues, which is very difficult in an economic situation. You can raise taxes on corporations, but if because of a recession they're not earning profits, they don't pay any taxes no matter what you set it at. High or low: it doesn't matter. Or you can borrow. Or you can cut. I just want to make the case. I know that they don't agree with the approach this government has taken. I know that many conservatives don't agree with the approach that we've taken, but both alternatives – well, three alternatives – were put forward to the public in the election. The people chose and gave us a mandate to do as we are doing. That has never been respected by the people opposite. The expressed will of the voters in the election has never been respected by the Finance critic in the opposition or the Official Opposition generally.

Now, Madam Speaker, we have talked quite a bit in question period in response to questions about the state of the Alberta economy. There's no question that we've gone through a difficult recession, but we've created new jobs, and these are full-time jobs, not part-time jobs, as they would like to tell us or would like the public to believe. Leading economic think tanks, banks, all of the people in the actual economy, in the oil industry itself are saying that this province is on the right track and that we're going to create more jobs and we're going to lead this country back to prosperity. The opposition is beginning to realize that that's happening, that our program is working, and the fact that Alberta is going to come back from the recession, create new jobs, and lead the economy of the country once again is something they hate. They hate that because it proves us right. It proves them wrong. It creates a situation where we're actually doing better economically than they are.

I would make the statement here. It might shock some people, but I don't really think the people opposite understand business. I don't think they do, because every day in question period they stand up and they contradict what business leaders are saying. They contradict what the oil companies are saying. They contradict what the banks are saying. They contradict every economic think tank. They don't get business. I think that's the problem. That's the problem. When the NDP has got a better handle on business and the economy than the conservative parties, it's a sad day for the conservatives indeed, Madam Speaker.

Just to conclude, different people draw on different economists, different financial people for their guidance in terms of things. Some go back to Adam Smith, a classical economist. Another one: David Ricardo, another of the classical economists. Some people draw on him. Some, with a little more modern outlook perhaps, draw on John Maynard Keynes for inspiration, and some conservatives even draw upon people like Milton Friedman and so on. The Finance critic for the Wildrose is busy applauding the name of Milton Friedman, whose program, by the way, was put in place by the Chilean junta after the coup and resulted in a disastrous economic situation for the country of Chile. That at least would be a real economist, but no, Madam Speaker, the Wildrose Finance critic draws on The Simpsons for his inspiration. I think that if you dig a little deeper into his inspiration for Wildrose economic policy, you'll find at its heart is Mr. Burns.

Madam Speaker, Albertans have a choice: a sensible government that's going to protect public services, make life more affordable for Albertans, and lead this country back to recovery and full employment, or The Simpsons. I think the choice is clear.

As a result, I've concluded my comments, and I would move that we adjourn debate.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 7 An Act to Enhance Post-secondary Academic Bargaining

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I rise to speak to Bill 7 here at committee. I just want to open my remarks by saying that in principle I will likely support the bill, but there is one particular aspect of the bill that I've heard from a couple of different stakeholder groups is a concern to them. So with that brief introduction, I will propose an amendment.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A1.

11:00

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I move that Bill 7, An Act to Enhance Post-secondary Academic Bargaining, be amended as follows. In part A section 1(2) is amended by striking out the proposed section 58.7 and substituting the following:

Transitional provisions

58.7(1) On the coming into force of this section, collective bargaining that commenced under an agreement entered into under section 87 or 96 of the Post-secondary Learning Act continues subject to the Labour Relations Code.

(2) If, before January 1, 2020, a dispute that arises during the negotiation of an agreement is referred to binding arbitration pursuant to an agreement under section 87 or 96 of the Post-secondary Learning Act or referred to binding arbitration under section 88 of that Act, the arbitration continues as the dispute resolution process for that dispute unless the parties agree to terminate the arbitration.

(3) If, on or after January 1, 2020,

- (a) a dispute that arises during the negotiation of an agreement is referred to binding arbitration pursuant to an agreement under section 87 or 96 of the Post-secondary Learning Act or referred to binding arbitration under section 88 of that Act, the arbitration is terminated and any award made is void, and
- (b) a provision in an agreement under section 87 or 96 of the Post-secondary Learning Act that requires disputes that arise during the negotiation of a future agreement to be resolved by binding arbitration is unenforceable.

(4) An agreement under section 87 or 96 of the Post-secondary Learning Act that operates for an unspecified term is deemed, despite section 129 of this Act, to provide for its operation for a term of 3 years beginning on the date the Bill to enact An Act to Enhance Post-secondary Academic Bargaining receives Royal Assent or for a shorter period agreed on by the parties.

(5) For greater certainty, nothing in this section prevents the parties from referring matters in dispute to voluntary arbitration under section 93.

(6) A party to an agreement affected by this section may apply to the Board for a determination respecting the application of this section, and the Board's decision is final and binding.

Under part B section 4 is struck out.

That's a long amendment, Madam Chair, and I will take a moment to do a couple of things. First off, I want to just formally thank Parliamentary Counsel for their assistance in drafting that amendment. As you can see, it's not the most straightforward or simple amendment, so thank you very much to them for their usual great work in helping my team draft that amendment and their responsiveness and professionalism in doing so.

This amendment comes from a concern raised by stakeholders in faculty associations, one of which is in my constituency, and also another faculty association that I'm aware of. They support the bill in principle and general terms. I obviously don't want to speak for them, but generally I've heard some supportive words as they relate to this bill from stakeholders in faculty associations. But the concern is that the changes take effect immediately and that that will change the rules for negotiations that are already in progress currently without providing necessary time for those faculty associations to transition to what a strike/lockout world might mean. One of those things, of course, for them would be to build a strike fund.

I'm just going to read a brief quote from one of the stakeholders who sent me a letter that said that the real risk is that, at some institutions, bargaining could be harder than otherwise would have been the case on the premise that lack of sufficient preparation could be viewed as an opportunity to achieve concessions by the other party.

Now, they are quick to note that they don't anticipate necessarily that that would be the case for them and don't necessarily see that, but they do raise the concern that that is possible. They believe that what I am bringing forward in an amendment here, again on their recommendation – they see it as a pragmatic compromise. They see it as a win-win for both stakeholders and the government. It doesn't alter the substance of the bill. Ultimately, the goals of Bill 7, which they agree with, are still achieved, but it does in fact address their concerns as a stakeholder.

They've talked about a phase-out period under what is called the statutory reset option. They believe the January 1, 2020, date is appropriate. In practical terms, what this means is that any bargaining that's started on or after the reset date would occur under the strike/lockout regime, essentially after January 1, 2020. Bargaining that occurred prior to that reset would occur under the compulsory binding arbitration provisions that are currently in place. This is a concern that I've heard. I imagine the minister has heard those concerns as well.

We did share this proposed amendment with the minister's office, so I will take my seat and eagerly anticipate the response from the minister.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to stand and speak to this amendment. Our government will not be supporting this amendment. We certainly have been engaged with our stakeholders in extensive consultations. We began consulting with stakeholders on this issue in October 2015. The faculty associations and grad students were a part of the broader consultations that we engaged in with respect to public-sector employee relations, broadly speaking.

Of course, Madam Chair, all of this was prompted by the Supreme Court's decision in the Saskatchewan Federation of Labour case that came down in early 2015, that deemed that all public-sector employees had the right to collectively bargain and the right to remove their labour as part of free association in a trade union, a faculty association, or some kind of collective bargaining agent.

It should come as no surprise to any faculty association here in the province of Alberta that we will be moving to a strike/lockout model because we've been moving in this direction for the last two years, Madam Chair. Some faculty associations have expressed concern to me, and they expressed concern throughout the consultation process about the transition time. Other faculty associations are well prepared to take on the role of bargaining on behalf of their members under a strike/lockout model immediately.

We believe, Madam Chair, that because of the length of time between the introduction of this bill, the lengthy consultation process that we've engaged in with our stakeholders since October 2015, and the fact that this decision came down in early 2015, the faculty associations have had approximately two years to prepare for a transition to this strike/lockout model. We believe that the transition time that has been given and is recognized in this bill is appropriate and just.

The other point that I would like to raise, Madam Chair, is that, you know, what the member opposite is proposing is denying their rights under the Supreme Court ruling, the rights of faculty association members to freely bargain and freely associate as members of faculty associations. They're denying them those rights for an extra three years, and I don't see and our government doesn't see any good reason to continue to deny faculty members in this province their Charter rights, that have been guaranteed by the Supreme Court, for an additional three years. They've been waiting far too long for these rights, and it's time that they received the rights that they're entitled to. That's what this legislation does, so we will not be supporting this amendment.

I thank the chair for her time.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you. I just want to briefly respond to the minister's comments. I can tell you that although he says it doesn't come as a surprise to faculty associations, I'm aware of two for sure that this comes as a great surprise. It's quite different from what they heard or the feedback they've provided to the minister during consultation.

For the minister to say that they consulted starting back in October 2015 so that none of this comes as a surprise – when you consult, I think the idea is that you're asking for input, and then you take that input and put it forward in legislation. That is the point at which everyone knows what's happening. For you to expect that faculty associations should have assumed back in October 2015 that, by virtue of being asked a question, the outcome is preordained, well, that's unsettling. If we talk about labour legislation, is the outcome preordained on the, quote, unquote, consultation that has happened on employment standards and the labour code? I sure hope not. Should employers be making provisions to change based on feedback provided by a certain subset of stakeholders? I sure hope not. That's not the way consultation is meant to work.

It is unfortunate that the minister has taken the position that he has. To his comment that transition provision would deny rights, I think that it's very clear that faculty associations can still freely bargain under the binding arbitration provisions which exist today. In no way, in my opinion, does that subvert the Supreme Court ruling. All this does is provide a reasonable transition period to allow the faculty associations to prepare to bargain in a new way. It's not that they're not able to bargain, remembering that this comes as a request from a faculty association who, I would argue without any hesitation, understands what is best for them and their members. Remembering that this comes from them, I think it's important to understand that that is the source of this amendment, so I would ask the minister and the government to reconsider.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Madam Chair, for the opportunity to respond to a couple of the points that the Member for Calgary-Elbow raised in his supplementary comments.

First of all, we were quite clear from the outset of the consultation process that we were moving to a strike/lockout model. That outcome was absolutely established as our goal from the outset, so we were not asking an open question as to whether or not we should grant faculty associations the right to strike and institutions the right to lock out their employees. We were clear from the very beginning of this consultation, Madam Chair, that that's what we wanted to end up with, and that's absolutely what we've reflected.

The consultations were around how we move to that model, right? That was the open-ended consultation that we had. So for the member opposite to say, you know, that we're not engaging in genuine consultations and not listening to our stakeholders I think is a comment that's beneath the Member for Calgary-Elbow, and he knows full well the scope of the consultations that we undertook. And then for him to jump to conclusions about the process that we've undertaken with respect to the Employment Standards Code and labour code is, I think, a political cheap shot and not pertinent to these discussions.

With respect to the transition period and saying that they currently have the rights to collectively bargain and freely associate: they don't, Madam Chair. The Supreme Court of Canada was quite clear that the labour relations model that exists under the Post-secondary Learning Act is not compliant with the Charter rights. Faculty association members don't have the rights right now. So to say that the transition period grants them their rights right now is patently wrong. The member opposite is wrong when he says that they can freely bargain. The Supreme Court says that unless faculty association members have the right to remove their labour, they don't have the complete right to freely bargain and freely associate. We're giving them their rights now. We don't see that there's any point in waiting for an additional three years. Faculty association members deserve the rights that the Supreme Court of Canada has said that they deserve all the way back in 2015. It's time that they were given those rights.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A1?

Seeing none, I'll call the vote.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Chair: Back on the bill, are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Chair. Again I rise to speak to Bill 7, an act to confuse postsecondary bargaining. This bill is not ready. It's a complete overreach, and as usual the government can't seem to keep their ideologies out of a piece of legislation. We agree that some changes to bargaining are needed to comply with the 2015 Supreme Court of Canada decision guaranteeing workers the right to strike unless, of course, they are essential, but this bill far overreaches what is needed in such a way that it's just to satisfy the ideology of this government. The question that remains is why they decided to completely overhaul the legislation and take it completely out of the Post-secondary Learning Act. This seems to be overkill.

Now, let's set the record straight. In no way am I opposing granting the right to strike. This is a constitutional right. In fact, we believe that this mandatory arbitration across the public sector has led to higher costs. So when I go to oppose this bill, it's not to the right to strike but to the overworked way this government is trying to implement it.

Moving associations from PSLA to the labour act is really creating a huge headache for all involved, particularly because things are being done way too quickly. There are many issues in the interim which, hopefully, won't affect the institutions and employees negatively. However, what is really mind boggling is that this government has admitted in its own discussion document and consultation that all of this could have been dealt with within the existing Post-secondary Learning Act. Here we are discussing something that they themselves also agree is contentious. That, my friends, is our government starting to understand the consequences of what they've done, but they go back to the realization that they need to keep in line with their ideology. Perhaps some more time should have been taken to iron out all the details in getting ready to make a difference in this legislation.

We know that certain universities and colleges think that this is an overreach, and after talking to a few that are supporting these fundamental changes, we concluded that even they would like to see a more mindful approach towards their colleagues and institutions who either are in active bargaining currently or would be actively bargaining fairly soon. There is worry that because there is no phase-out period for compulsory binding arbitration, bargaining could become an issue due to the lack of sufficient preparation from either side. We, too, agree that those who are currently in the middle of negotiations shouldn't have the rules changed so radically partway through unless, of course, the government has some really good explanation for this haste. I'd like an explanation on that.

Without a phase-out period or a short transition period to allow everyone involved to get up to speed, we could very likely see an erosion of the employer-employee relations, which could cause and breed mistrust and then labour tensions on campuses. This is not something we wish to see happen given how many stakeholders hold the line on this very issue. That in itself should be an indicator to this ministry that they should amend their bill to reflect at least these changes. I mean, granting the right to strike doesn't mean much when you've never had a reason to build a contingency fund or prepare properly and put safeguards in place.

We, on the other hand, also see this bill as a way for government to impose their ideological agenda and force union mentality. If it wasn't so, why did they have to take this bill to such an extreme? There was enough room in the PSLA and built into the 2015 Supreme Court decision without transferring this to the labour act.

You know, large successful organizations tend to make slow, methodical changes and sometimes take years to accomplish this. The reason they do this is to first consider the overall cost and the subsequent impact to make changes, mitigate risk, and create unity amongst all those in the change. It's called change management. At present institutions have not had the time to develop any protocols in case of a strike. Some may be worried that faculty associations are no longer going to be perceived as academics, intellectuals, and leaders that, perhaps not right away but in time, will be labelled with the union mentality. Over time this could possibly diminish who they distinctly are. Of course, again, only time will tell. I'll mark the date.

Obviously, a huge problem I see with this bill is that trade unions could very well replace faculty associations after the five-year mark stipulated in the bill. With worry that the bill will take more time and become more combative and with things moving too quickly, with no phase-out period to deal with the act of collective bargaining, and the government itself admitting in its discussions document that this could have been sorted out with the existing postsecondary act, government beginning the process to turn associations into labour unions, ideological decisions – I'm sure you get what I'm alluding to – I have no other option than to oppose this bill in its current form and ask to make some necessary changes. I want these changes to reflect the wishes of those whom this bill will ultimately affect.

Madam Speaker, at this time I would like to bring forward an amendment to the bill.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A2.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. W. Anderson: I move that Bill 7, An Act to Enhance Post-secondary Academic Bargaining, be amended in section 1(2) in the proposed section 58.2(2) by striking out "2022" and substituting “2027.” The amendment here is to propose that faculty associations remain the representative academics for a 10-year period instead of the five-year benchmark this government has established. If the government’s intent is not to replace these faculty associations with unions, they shouldn’t have a problem with this amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I’m just waiting for the copies of the amendment to be distributed. I hope that our diligent pages are – excellent. You know, I think it warrants mentioning again the good work that the pages do here in the House. We are certainly privileged to be served by them every day, and I want to thank them again for diligently ensuring that I have a copy of the amendment that the Member for Highwood has brought.

I rise, of course, to speak against this amendment, Madam Chair. If I understand the amendment correctly, the Member for Highwood is proposing delaying the point at which faculty associations and grad student associations could freely choose their bargaining agent from 2022 to 2027. Of course, the Member for Highwood expresses some concerns about our government moving forward with an ideology to unionize everybody and their dog in the province. Of course, nothing could be further from the truth. We simply want people to be able to have the right to choose who their collective bargaining agent is, who is representing them when they’re dealing with their employer. Right now, under the legislation that exists, faculty associations and grad student associations don’t have that choice. Of course, they won’t have that choice until 2022 as we recognize that there is some need to transition faculty associations and grad student associations into the new model so that they are well positioned to represent their members at the bargaining table.

Madam Chair, once 2022 rolls around, if the members of those faculty associations and grad student associations feel that their associations are not doing a good job of representing them at the bargaining table, they will have the right to choose somebody else that they think is more capable of doing that. You know, our government firmly believes that people have the right to access the best bargaining talent that’s available to them and, certainly, to choose to have the best people representing their interests at the bargaining table. Faculty associations and grad student associations will have that right consistent with every other jurisdiction in the country and, certainly, consistent with the way other bargaining agents are certified and decertified in this province. We’re very consistent, of course, with the approach that is taken by every other jurisdiction in the country on this matter and, certainly, bargaining processes that exist for other sectors in the province.

We feel that 2022 is certainly an adequate transition time. Five years will give every faculty association and grad student association ample time to prepare for that date. We see no reason to extend that date to 2027, Madam Chair, so we will be voting against this amendment.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2? The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. W. Anderson: I just wish to respond to the minister and to thank him so much for his answer. I just don’t recall mentioning anything about canines or anybody else in the animal kingdom, but if the member opposite wishes to attempt to unionize them, I guess it’s well within his right.

Just as a reference point several academics and academic institutions have reached out to me and suggested merely that a temporal frame to be expanded to 10 years would be much more appropriate than the five-year term, hence the reason for my amendment.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2?

Seeing none, I’ll call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A2 lost]

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: We’re back on the bill. Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I have heard some of the discussions that have been going on in the Chamber, and I did a little bit of looking on the government website at some of the consultation that has been put forward by the government. The document that I’m referring to is work.alberta.ca/documents/essential-services-psla-what-we-heard.pdf. I did that for Hansard, by the way. [interjection] That was very impressive, I understand.

I think we all can agree that the Supreme Court ruling said that we needed to make some changes. One of our concerns is that we may be moving this in too fast a direction, so I went and looked at the concerns that the Alberta government had posted on their own website here. The impacts of a strike and lockout came to me as something that – there seems to be widespread concern at all levels that work at these postsecondary institutions.

I’m going to read through the points really quickly and comment as I go. The first one under Impact of Strike/Lockout is:

- Notwithstanding whether academic staff members are essential, stakeholders broadly expressed concern regarding the impact of a strike/lockout in this sector.

We've got some of the academics themselves that are showing some concern, and this is something that I think – we heard the member from the independent party bring forward an extension saying that maybe we need to be looking at possibly going further and my own colleague from Highwood saying: "You know what? We're making some great changes here. Why wouldn't we want to give these groups the time to be able to move forward with this?"

Now let's talk about the different groups. We've established that there are concerns.

- Students in particular worry about the impact of a strike . . . and believe that tuition should be refunded in the event of lost class time. In addition, students strongly argued that even a refund of tuition fees would not adequately compensate them for the negative impact of a strike/lockout including, for example, the cost of delayed entry into the labour market for students who miss graduation due to a strike/lockout.

These are the students. They're saying: "Okay. Fine. We understand that there's going to be this process." But what are we putting in place for the students themselves that are caught in this time frame? I don't know if that is caught up by the minister by saying how they're going to be dealing with the students who are caught in a strike or lockout situation.

Now, let's go on.

- Delayed graduation may impact students who have obtained employment that is contingent on their graduation, classes delayed into summer can affect students' ability to complete summer work/study arrangements and the visa status of international students could be put in jeopardy.

Now, again, we've got more students here, but these are nearing the end of their careers normally when it comes to graduate students. When we start looking at what the impacts are going to be, moving forward with this, how exactly is the Alberta government going to deal with continuing these programs so that our students aren't put at a disadvantage compared to, say, other jurisdictions? I think that is a reasonable concern.

This one here is actually one that will affect my riding probably more directly.

- The impact of a strike or lockout on apprenticeship training would be more severe than for other forms of post-secondary training due to the shorter duration of training, which typically lasts for 6-8 weeks such that a strike of 2 weeks' duration could be sufficient to cause a cancellation of an entire training period. Capacity issues within the apprenticeship training system are such that an apprentice whose training period is cancelled would likely be forced to wait until the next academic year to re-enroll in training.

Now, I have to say that when it comes to our area, a lot of the students try to get into apprenticeship training when the oil sands aren't actually building. When we've got these apprenticeships, they've really got a very short of window of time to be able to get into these classes. I'm curious if the government has put in any real thought when it comes to our student population. I'm sure they have because, obviously, this is their document, the document that they are bringing forward.

What we're looking at here is a group of stakeholders that are asking to be heard and who would like to know exactly what our minister is going to be able to move forward as a solution to ensure that they're not put at a disadvantage going into their careers, and I think that that is a reasonable concern. Again, I'm not here to argue about the fact that this legislation does need to move forward – the Supreme Court made it very clear that this needs to move forward – but maybe not in the way that it is being moved forward, the vehicle, as my colleague for Highwood has mentioned. Maybe we could have done this in the Post-secondary Learning Act. Maybe we could have done it in a few different ways. But what we're looking at here are the impacts to the stakeholders that are going to be involved in this. While we're doing this, are we actually going to be harming some of our student population that is going to be moving forward with their careers?

Now, I myself have gone through postsecondary, and I can tell you that, for myself, disruption by a strike that was, say, three or four months long for my teachers at the time would have probably added an additional year to my education. For myself, I ended up with a management degree from the University of Lethbridge, and it was a five-year program because I had a double major in accounting and finance. So that would have added another year, a sixth year, to that program. Now, we already know that a lot of times students have to get student loans and they have to work summer jobs, but what happens is that by deferring this, we could possibly create some real issues.

What I would like to hear, again, is that we are going to be bringing stability within the system, that we are going to see that these strikes and lockouts, possibly, are dealt with in a professional manner, and that we are making sure we have alternate routes to be able to provide our students who are within the system the ability to continue with their education if they've got that strike or lockout happening. In the end, by disrupting that earlier part in your life, that could mean that we have students who end up not going back to school. I believe that that would harm all of Alberta because education, in my opinion, having gone through the system, is important for your future career. By putting elements or barriers in front of our students by creating times where they are no longer able to get their education or by possibly disrupting more than one semester, maybe two or even three semesters, that would be very harmful to I think our entire postsecondary system.

I would love to hear what the minister has to say regarding our students, and I'm sure, having seen the same document that I'm looking at here, he's worked out some solutions. Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake's concern about supporting students. Of course, our government has made several investments in students through this budget, that was just the topic of discussion earlier this morning.

Madam Chair, I think it's appropriate for us to review the good things that we're doing through our budget to support students, to allay the concerns that the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake has raised. Of course, we're providing predictable, stable funding for each university and college in the province, and we're also freezing tuition for a third year. That will give students access to an affordable education at the university or college of their choice. Of course, if the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake is concerned about supporting students, he would vote for our budget because our budget supports students greatly.

With respect to expanding access to classrooms, I was just in Cold Lake on Monday, Madam Chair, announcing an investment into some planning resources for the expansion of the Portage College campus in Cold Lake, and if that goes forward, that will provide students in the Cold Lake area with higher education opportunities that are currently not available to them. Of course, the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake would be wise to vote for those investments to support the students in his own community so that those students have the opportunity to get the higher education in their hometown that they currently are denied. I look forward to the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake putting his money where his mouth is and voting in favour of our budget so that students in his hometown have the opportunity that he says he wants them to have.

With respect to supporting students in case of a strike or lockout, Madam Chair, the labour relations model that we're proposing under this legislation, of course, gives the government of Alberta the opportunity to convene a public emergency tribunal in case a strike or lockout drags on too long and academic years are put at risk. If the government feels that students will be unduly harmed by an extended strike or lockout, we will have the option of convening this public emergency tribunal to make sure that students' interests are protected.

The Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake raised some concerns about the costs that will be refunded. You know, I find it odd that a party that wants to jack up tuition is concerned about student costs. But with respect to costs that may be lost during a strike or lockout, the government is invested in exploring options to make sure that students don't lose out in case of strikes or lockouts, labour relations problems that are beyond their control.

He raises the issue, particularly, of apprentices and the enrolment thing. Of course, enrolment in apprenticeship training periods is rolling. Apprenticeship period training happens every eight weeks, so we're confident that there will be ample opportunities for apprentices who may lose a period of technical training due to a strike or lockout. We hope that's never the case, but should that ever happen, of course, there are ample opportunities for those apprenticed students to enroll in further technical training shortly after because of the availability of apprenticeship training opportunities.

Certainly, the member opposite also referred to some faculty concerns about what happens in case of a strike or lockout. That's why we've decided to require faculty associations and grad student associations to negotiate essential services agreements, Madam Chair. Consistent with the approach that we took to public-sector employment relations, faculty associations and grad student associations under this legislation will be required to negotiate essential services agreements before they can engage in collective bargaining to make sure that the operations of a university or college can continue in the event of a strike or lockout. That should allay some of the concerns that the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake has raised in terms of maintaining the operational integrity of the university or college.

I believe, Madam Chair, that I've addressed concerns. You know, I just want to restate that our government is deeply committed to making sure that students have access to high-quality, affordable education, which the member opposite says that he's also interested in. Not only do I look forward to the member opposite voting in favour of this bill, but I also look forward to the member opposite voting in favour of the budget, that we were discussing earlier this morning, because it does so much to support students in his hometown and, of course, all across Alberta.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Pursuant to Standing Order 4(3) the committee will now rise and report progress.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 7. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. This is good progress, so as we are just very few minutes from adjourning anyway, I move that we call it 12 o'clock and adjourn the Assembly until 1:30 this afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 11:56 a.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, May 3, 2017

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome.

I would just remind the House that a year ago today some very tragic events happened in our province. I know that each and every one of you share and appreciate the strength that those good people have had and continue to have.

Thank you. Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three state senators representing the Council of State Governments – West, or CSG – West, of which Alberta is an associate member. They are Montana Senator Sue Malek, Washington State Senator Sam Hunt, and Idaho Senator Bart Davis. They are accompanied by Martha Castañeda, program manager for CSG – West.

Mr. Speaker, CSG – West is a regional multilateral forum that brings together legislators and government leaders from 13 states as well as a number of U.S. protectorates. Alberta first became a member in 2000, and we appreciate the opportunity CSG – West offers to meet face to face with state lawmakers of our largest trading partner. The CSG – West region is an economic powerhouse, with a combined annual GDP of more than $4 trillion. This economic activity drives job creation on both sides of the border. In fact, there are 172,000 jobs created in the CSG – West region as a result of U.S. merchandise and service exports to Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, we welcome the visit of senators Malek, Davis, and Hunt. It's a chance to build on our important trade relationship with the United States. I would ask all members of the Assembly to give them the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome, neighbours.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you several groups from River Valley school in my hometown of Sundre. I believe that there are three classrooms here today. With them are a lot of chaperones. I will try not to name them all, but there are two chaperones that I want to briefly mention. The first is His Worship Terry Leslie, who is no stranger to this Assembly. I have introduced him here before. He is the mayor of Sundre, but today I want to introduce him in his old capacity, which is as an educator in the community of Sundre. In fact, he was a teacher of the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills for a while, so if you're looking for some advice on how to keep the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills under control, His Worship may have some advice. With him, of course, is the deputy mayor of Sundre, Chris Vardas, and several chaperones from River Valley school.

I will also briefly mention that River Valley school is the school that all of my children are attending or have attended. I'm just happy to see that we have so many people from home here today, and I'd ask that they all rise – stand on up – and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome. There might be mixed opinion in this House as to how well you did at the teaching job.

Are there any other school groups today, hon. members?

Seeing and hearing none, the Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Connolly: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the Imperial Sovereign Court of the Wild Rose. I'd ask them to rise as I say their names: board of directors secretary, Michelle Pederson; Amateur Drag King 2014 Angelo Mercy; Miss Mary Christmas 2016 GiGi Gaynor; Imperial Crown Prince XLI Jack N. Ginger; Imperial Crown Princess XLI Morgen Fair; president of the board, Rob Browatzke; Majesty Emperor XLI Bull Dozr; and Majesty Empress XLI Ruby Hymen. I'd like to thank them for their dedication and support to our community and the fundraising they do to support charities and LGBTQ-plus organizations here in Edmonton and around the province. I'd ask them to now receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise today to introduce to you three constituents who live in the wonderful riding of Edmonton-Rutherford. Not only do they call Edmonton-Rutherford their home, but they have also established two thriving businesses there. The Stone and Wheel Pizzeria and Square 1 Coffee have a notable presence in the riding, initially for serving, of course, the adjacent neighbourhoods delicious food and coffee, but they also have committed themselves to fostering community spirit and hosting a variety of events in the community and collaborating with the local community leagues in their area. I can truly testify that my staff and I enjoy attending at their businesses and meeting with them on a regular basis. I'd like to personally congratulate Jonathon, Brandy, and Sarah Brozny for having their successful businesses, and I'd ask them – they have already risen – to receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other guests today? Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Lindsey Marofke and her parents, Sandy and Don Van Tetering. Lindsey's daughter Greta is three years old and is currently fighting her second battle with liver cancer. In her three years Greta has endured many rounds of chemotherapy, multiple surgeries, and has had 70 per cent of her liver removed. She needs a liver transplant, which is not available in Alberta. Greta has to travel to Cincinnati to receive this life-saving operation, which is currently not funded. The brave little girl's family is here, and I would ask her mom and grandparents to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

Oil Sands Advisory Group Co-chair

Mr. Barnes: This NDP government has spent two years claiming that they're doing what Albertans want. They say that young people who can't find work want a carbon tax, they say that business owners in the red want to double their labour costs, they say that young families struggling to keep a roof over their heads want higher personal taxes, and they say that energy companies who are leaving in droves want ideological caps on production. They're wrong. The evidence is everywhere. Just go out and actually speak to the families and businesses who are suffering.

No part of this NDP government is more ideological or out of touch than the extremists on the Premier's oil sands advisory group, particularly Tzeporah Berman. Ms Berman is the Premier's top adviser on the oil sands or, as she calls them, the tar sands and even Mordor. She's been working around the clock to kill Kinder Morgan and Keystone XL, and she just officially endorsed the B.C. NDP's plan to cripple Alberta's economy. To make matters worse, today we learned that the taxpayers of this province have paid her $23,000. This NDP government is actually subsidizing the killing of pipelines with taxpayers' money, paying Ms Berman while she works to elect the B.C. NDP, and our Premier is complicit. Shame on them.

I can think of only one positive to Ms Berman being here. The fact that she hasn't been fired tells Albertans everything they need to know about this government. From the Education minister, who chanted, "No new approvals," to the Environment minister, who helped pen a how-to guide on sabotaging pipelines, this government truly doesn't want pipelines to succeed and doesn't want our energy industry to thrive. If they did, they would have shown Ms Berman the door a long, long time ago. Fortunately, Albertans will soon get what they want, to fire this NDP government and restore the Alberta advantage.

Thank you.

1:40 Fort McMurray Wildfire Anniversary

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak about a difficult topic that is still fresh in the minds of Albertans and will be for many years to come. One year ago today the world watched as more than 90,000 residents of Fort McMurray, including my family and friends, were forced to flee their homes as a massive wildfire quickly descended on their community. In that moment we learned just what Albertans are made of, and I would like to extend my gratitude and the gratitude of this government and the entire province to those who assisted the community.

I would like to thank the first responders, who fought in the few short days leading up to the evacuation to contain the fire as it broke. Individuals like Dave Mulock and firefighter brothers Scott and Kent Jennings were in the thick of the fire from the beginning. Once it was clear that evacuation was necessary, first responders, many of whom were volunteers, ensured that residents were removed from danger and then remained in the city and forest to fight the fire and protect infrastructure and property. We owe them all a great deal of gratitude and appreciation for their incredible hard work.

I would also like to thank the numerous individuals like the social workers and other front-line service providers who continue to work with the community as Fort McMurray rebuilds. The work you do and have done so far is no small task. Know that the province and this government is here to support you all as you recover and rebuild.

I would also like to thank Albertans, who came out in support of their neighbours by making donations, taking evacuees in, and volunteering at evacuation centres. The generosity and selflessness displayed on May 3 and in the following weeks was nothing short of amazing.

Finally, I would like to thank our fellow Canadians, who donated almost $200 million to the Red Cross to support residents, businesses, and community groups.

Mr. Speaker, we know there is still much to be done as Fort McMurray rebuilds, but I invite all members to reflect on all that there is to be grateful for and to offer thanks, especially to our first responders and front-line service workers who ensured that one year ago today an entire city was evacuated.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Industry Environmental Initiatives

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to share with you some of the innovative ways of how companies in my constituency of Grande Prairie-Wapiti are reducing their carbon footprint. The Weyerhaeuser pulp mill is one of the biggest electricity users in our region, but now they generate 140 megawatts of green energy, which is enough to power not just their own project but also to add 25 megawatts to Alberta's grid.

Canfor's green biomass cogeneration facility provides 18 megawatts of renewable electricity for their Grande Prairie sawmill and to the provincial grid. They not only use their own wood waste but also use wood waste from other forest producers in the region. Canfor strives for self-sufficiency of their mills by making smart investments to reduce their dependence on natural gas and using wood residues to dry lumber and heat their facilities.

Aquatera's bioreactor landfill gas-to-energy project is reducing greenhouse gas emissions by capturing methane gas from their decomposing landfill waste. This project alone is reducing greenhouse gas emissions by 63,000 tonnes per year, or the equivalent of taking 14,000 vehicles off the road. Aquatera is producing 15 million kilowatt hours, which is enough electricity to power 14,000 homes per year, and 33,000 gigajoules of heat annually, or enough to heat 200 homes.

Mr. Speaker, companies like Weyerhaeuser, Canfor, and Aquatera in my constituency have done way more on their own to reduce Alberta's carbon footprint than this government's carbon tax and light bulb handouts.

Thank you.

Bullying in the Workplace

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a teenager I spent every Saturday morning watching Stampede Wrestling from the old Ogden Legion hall and hearing fabulous commentary from a young man named Mauro Ranallo. He was a big part of the appeal of this revitalized promotion, so I was more than excited when I heard this Canadian commentator make his debut on WWE SmackDown over a year ago. This great commentator, with ties to Calgary, added an extra flair to an already exciting product.

However, my thrill soon turned to disappointment because of his absence from WrestleMania this year. At first it was reported as a personal challenge, but the situation has now led to many media and online allegations around workplace bullying in the WWE. It appears now that Ranallo dealt with substantial hazing and abuse from co-workers in this promotion. More people have since come forward talking about the culture in the company and the fear of one losing their job should they come forward.

The WWE has been a leader in many things from substance abuse control to charitable work. Last year, when I was attending the Special Olympics awards lunch, the director of marketing and communications for the Olympics told me that the WWE has been a tremendous partner and a huge support to their Olympians. They are also an employer to many Albertans, including Calgary's Natalya Neidhart, Tyson Kidd, and the number one contender for the WWE title, Jinder Mahal.

I have spoken to many people involved in the wrestling business like Alberta's Prairie Wrestling Alliance, and they have assured me that this conduct is unacceptable and that it should not occur and that they would not tolerate it in their organization. When events like these happen, it is an important reminder that we must stand up to workplace bullying and violence and harassment. Hazing is not okay.

Our government has demonstrated leadership on this front, and when the WWE comes to Edmonton on June 16, I would be happy to introduce them to some of the policy-makers who have shown leadership on this matter, including members like the Member for Calgary-Klein, who had a private member's bill on this issue. We should all work together to smack down bullying in the workplace, no matter where it happens.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

National Organ and Tissue Donation Awareness Week

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. April 23 to 29 was National Organ and Tissue Donation Awareness Week, which is dedicated to encouraging conversations about organ donor practices. The discussion about donating organs and tissues can be a difficult conversation to have, but it is the only way to ensure that your wishes are known. The gift of life is the greatest thing we have been given, and to pass that along to someone is an amazing opportunity. Being an organ donor takes courage and empathy, but it's a small gesture that can make a huge impact in the lives of many others. A donor can save up to eight lives and enhance the lives of 80 others through tissue donation. Donation programs can save and improve the lives of others who otherwise wouldn't have a second chance.

Historically Canada has one of the worst organ donor rates, and Alberta has been the worst province, but awareness programs like ultimategiftalberta.ca are making a difference. Since its launch three years ago more than 350,000 Albertans have registered. This is a great step in the right direction, but I think we can build on this momentum. Let's continue to look at the possibilities that are created through organ donation, and let's recognize that it can be a great thing for a family or individual in need. As just one example, my husband will get a new cornea because of this initiative.

I implore my colleagues in this House and all Albertans to consider starting a discussion about donating organs and tissues in the hopes that more lives are saved in the future. We should all extend our warmest thanks to the families who have made the difficult decision to donate a loved one's organs and tissues in order to make someone else's life better.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Fort McMurray Wildfire Anniversary

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A year ago today the Premier called the Leader of the Official Opposition a fearmonger simply because he had asked a question about the cancellation of water bomber contracts during one of the driest springs on record. That very afternoon, while the leader was asking his questions, unknown to any of us, his neighbourhood, his home, and his city were on fire.

May 3, 2016, saw the beginning of the largest mass evacuation in Alberta's history. A city of over 80,000 was forced to flee at a moment's notice. Entire families, not even allowed to go home and grab essentials, headed down highway 63, some north but mostly to the south.

The rest of Alberta responded. In Lac La Biche, Boyle, Athabasca, and Grassland people immediately realized that those fleeing would not have had time to stop for fuel, water, and supplies. While four lanes of traffic headed south, a convoy of regular Albertans headed north, at their own expense, hauling gasoline, diesel, fresh water, and food to help those that were stranded along the highway and to supply the first responders and firefighters, who had stayed behind to battle the inferno.

Entire communities opened their doors and their hearts and set up evacuation centres for the thousands of individuals, families, and even their pets. Donations poured in from all over the province to the point of overabundance. Volunteer fire departments from communities all over Alberta headed north to assist fellow Albertans in their time of need. I'm very proud of the generosity shown, especially by the great people in the community of Lac La Biche, who saw the immediate need and dropped everything to help out.

To all the volunteers, firefighters, and first responders that put their own lives on hold and at risk: the community of Fort McMurray and our province owes you a great debt, and we thank you. One thing we have learned over the last year and something I have always known: Albertans are very generous and resilient. Alberta and Fort McMurray will survive this tragic event, and we will even survive another two years of NDP government.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Deaths of Children and Caregivers

Mr. Cooper: A government is often judged by how it treats the most vulnerable, and there are few as vulnerable as the children who are placed into the care of the province. When a child dies in care, it is a devastating tragedy, and we need to balance transparency with family privacy. It was shocking to hear that bureaucrats were pushing for publication bans to not be discussed at the child death review panel. Will the minister explain to Albertans how the refusal to discuss this very important topic is accountable to victims that have died in care?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the very important question. Obviously, it is a great tragedy when any child dies, particularly the ones that are entrusted to the care of us as a province. We would like to thank all sides of the House for putting Alberta's vulnerable children first in doing this important work.

The first part of the work of the panel has wrapped up. Investigations and considerations around the publication ban, as highlighted by the member opposite, will be done in phase 2 of this panel's very important work.

Mr. Cooper: One little girl who was failed by the system was Serenity. The death of any child is an absolute tragedy, but when it is the result of violence, it's a crime. I can't help but compare the tragic death of Serenity to the little 19-month-old boy who was found outside of a church in Edmonton in April. Both of these children were covered in bruises at the time of their death, but only one case has seen charges laid. Why is justice more available and moved upon more swiftly for children not in the care of this province?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, both these cases were incredibly difficult for the public, for this government, and I think for all members of this House. Ultimately, these decisions are made by the investigating body, who is the RCMP. I do believe that they take their responsibility to all children and to all communities to keep them safe very, very seriously. You know, we will have to await the outcomes of their investigations.

Mr. Cooper: It seems like one case is going to be held accountable and the other is getting swept away.

Just as we need to be doing more for our most vulnerable, we also need to ensure that those who care for the most vulnerable have the tools that they need. That includes caregivers who put themselves in situations that can be dangerous. We've seen the most extreme examples of what can happen when a worker is alone, like the tragic death of Valerie Wolski and the traumatic attack of Heather Vanderzee. What concrete steps have been taken, not what have you talked about but have been taken, to ensure that what happened . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Obviously, these are very concerning cases. Every worker, wherever they work in our province, has the right to come home safely at the end of the day, and that is why our government has worked in collaboration with members across the way on the Ministerial Panel on Child Intervention as well as the work that we're undertaking within the departments to ensure that people's safety comes first as well as to ensure that the rights of all Albertans are protected.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mathematics Curriculum and Assessment

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. The Minister of Education has announced a large-scale curriculum review that is going to span up to six years and will reportedly offer more chances for consultation although the minister will not share who is involved in the working groups. A student in kindergarten now will be halfway to graduation by the time this review is complete if it's done on time. Parents just want common-sense solutions to common-sense problems. They're tired of wishy-washy methods, bad testing practices, and indecipherable report cards. The math section of the review is critically important. How long will Albertans have to wait till they see the results?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you so much for the question. Yes, we are undertaking a very comprehensive curriculum review because it was long past due. Some of our curricula were more than 30 years old. Certainly, during the six-year process of building curricula, it doesn't mean that the best practices that we find along the way will not be implemented immediately. For example, I have put in a no-calculator portion into the grade 9 PAT exams, and I've reinstated the written portion of the math 30 exam. So whatever best practices we have, we will use immediately to improve numeracy, basic math skills, and . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mrs. Aheer: While the NDP curriculum survey questions were with a bunch of sort of meaningless buzzwords, one message did manage to break through: Albertans are frustrated about math scores and outcomes for our students. The only reason that we can track performance is because of standardized testing. Without these tests parents are given less information on top of increasingly fuzzy standards for report cards, that are handed out each year. Premier, the student learning assessment model is failing students. Will the government reverse their decision and reinstate provincial achievement tests for grade 3 students?

Mr. Eggen: Well, certainly, Mr. Speaker, we have been working hard together with curriculum and assessment to build a stronger system and to make sure we have accountability every step of the way. You know, the best way by which to do that is to make sure that you fund education properly, which is something that our government has chosen to do. You can't do that by cutting. You can't have it both ways. We have chosen the way to make life better for Alberta's children.

Mrs. Aheer: Well, the mathematics review prepared for the Education minister and the Premier last fall recommended that there should be "an increased availability and access to high-quality professional development and training opportunities specific to the teaching of Mathematics." In December the NDP announced a math bursary program for teachers to support further postsecondary courses in math and that the details of the program were to be finalized. We asked about this program in estimates, and we found out that the funding fell into the large abyss line item 2.7 with no further details, so to the minister: what are the details, how many teachers are planning to participate, and how many teachers are enough?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we believe that ongoing training for teachers and for new emerging teachers is very important. That's why I've been working with postsecondary institutions to set up specific math training programs, especially for division 1 student teachers, because we believe that we must ensure the very best quality. We have a very high standard of education here in the province of Alberta, and as long as you have a strong New Democratic government here, it'll continue to grow and become stronger every step of the way.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Fort McMurray Wildfire Anniversary

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, a year ago today QP didn't start out very well. The Premier called the Leader of the Official Opposition a fearmonger when he questioned cancelling water bomber contracts during the driest spring on record. Luckily, Albertans did their best to respond to the fires that tore through Fort McMurray. To the firefighters, first responders, volunteers, and even this government: a heartfelt thank you to everyone that worked so hard to protect Fort McMurray. Can the Premier update this House and all Albertans on the progress of the rebuild and recovery in Fort McMurray?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today certainly is a day of remembrance for all of us in this province. We are making the most of a very difficult time in Alberta's most tragic natural disaster and indeed in Canadian history. We're marking the bravery and mourning the loss of two Albertans. Many homes were lost, and lives were changed forever. In tough times like this, people expect their government to stand with them, and that's exactly what is happening today in Fort McMurray and every day as the recovery continues.

Mr. Hanson: Mr. Speaker, a year ago today there was a massive, out-of-control fire within a stone's throw of a major community, yet no special efforts were being made to allocate additional resources to the fire in the days leading up to the evacuation. You would think we would have learned something from the disaster at Slave Lake. You would think that we would have implemented lessons learned from that fire. To the Premier: has the policy changed so that we have as a first priority the protection of our northern and remote communities?

Ms Hoffman: I am so proud of the work the firefighters, including those who were in the best position to make the lead decisions about recovery, were making on that day, a year ago today, and on the days leading up to it and on the days that followed as well, Mr. Speaker. I have to say that the support has been well received by the mayor of the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo, who said:

We are pleased that the Government of Alberta has agreed to provide this much-needed support to [residents of the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo]. We appreciate the Province's continued assistance as we navigate the impacts of the 2016 wildfire and work towards long-term recovery.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Hanson: Thanks again, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's been a year. Fort McMurray is still struggling, yet later today, on the anniversary of the largest mass evacuation in Alberta's history, this government will be debating a bill that kicks Fort McMurray in the teeth again. Fortunately, Fort McMurray has shown that it is very resilient. Can anyone over there tell me what policies have changed so that next time a forest fire starts near a town or city, that community will be better protected?

Ms Hoffman: I have to say how disappointed I am by the disrespect that's coming from that side of the House towards both this government as well as those who worked diligently to make sure that families had the opportunities to be well received and supported through the evacuation, Mr. Speaker. [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet, please.

Ms Hoffman: Even the Leader of the Official Opposition, that member's leader, has commended the Premier for her leadership and co-operation at a time of unifying us to stand up for Albertans in an unparalleled challenge for this community, Mr. Speaker. We continue to move forward in protecting Albertans in Fort McMurray and in all parts of the province, and I'm proud to do so.

The Speaker: I do this as a general oversight, hon. members. We've talked about this many times, but use of certain words which depict violence such as "kicking in the teeth" ought to be avoided in this House. There are clearly other words that are used, but I would ask that we avoid use of that kind of language.

The leader of the third party.

Out-of-country Health Care Funding

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last November I rose in the House to acknowledge and honour the brave fight that well over 160 Alberta families will wage annually when they hear the word that their child has cancer. Today I introduced you to Lindsey Marofke, whose three-year-old daughter, Greta, is fighting for her life. While she has been afforded the very best care we have in Alberta by oncologists at the Alberta Children's hospital, her parents now have to take that fight to Cincinnati to get the life-saving treatment and liver transplant that she needs to survive. To the Minister of Health: why has this government not done more to date to help pay for wee Greta to get this liver transplant?

Ms Hoffman: Our hearts and thoughts go out to Greta and her family during this incredibly difficult time. I want to thank my colleague the Member for Calgary-North West for meeting with the family and bringing their heartbreaking situation to my attention. My office has also reached out to the family, as has the department, to ensure that they are aware of options that are available to them. Of course, this is a very tragic situation, a very difficult one, and we continue to provide options, including information about other medical opinions that might be available to the family. We'll work with them to ensure they know what options are available to them. This is, of course, very difficult, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Greta needs an operation, unfortunately, not pamphlets.

Greta's doctor in Cincinnati believes she has a good chance of survival with this transplant, which is not available in Canada. On Friday she was placed on the transplant waiting list, but it will cost this family a million U.S. dollars in order to get the surgery done using a live donor and thereby pushing the surgical procedure and her treatment ahead of the slow pace of progress for children with hepatoblastoma. To the Minister of Health: do you think it's okay for her parents and grandparents to risk bankruptcy and rely on sympathetic Albertans to fund raise for Greta's transplant?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thanks again, Mr. Speaker. Of course, as I've said previously and in other situations, it's incredibly important for health professionals to be making these decisions. That's why there is a committee of physicians, the Out-of-country Health Services Committee, which is comprised of physicians that review these specific circumstances. We've talked with the family about options that might continue to be available. I have to say that I understand the desire to do everything possible to try to create an opportunity to save a child's life – I would probably do the exact same thing the parents are doing – but we need to make sure that physicians are the ones driving these decisions, and we have the physicians in place that do that. Again, we'll work with the family to consider other options.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, it takes the will for the government to do the right thing. There are rules. They don't have to be written in stone. The Health minister could give permission to fund the surgery and thereby give Greta a chance at life. Without the surgery there is little hope except for a miracle, and there is no time for miracles. We need the government to act. Let's get our priorities straight. To the minister. You have the authority. Will you promise to meet with Greta's mum today, and will you make everybody's day by promising to fund this life-saving surgery?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a politician I respect that doctors must make treatment decisions that sometimes are very difficult based on effectiveness for specific patients on a case-by-case basis. The Out-of-country Health Services Committee is an arm's-length committee comprised, again, of physician experts. My office has been in contact, as has my MLA colleague. Of course I'd be willing to meet with the family. We will continue to provide support to them. Again, thank you to my colleague from Calgary-North West for her work to make sure that this family is supported.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Provincial Credit Rating and Fiscal Policies

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. When Alberta borrows money, the amount we pay to borrow is based on our credit rating, which is determined by how risky it is to do business with Alberta. We used to have the best credit rating in the country, but thanks to decisions made by this government, our credit rating has dropped, and it costs Albertans more to borrow money. Debt-servicing costs are already forecast to be $2.3 billion a year, and these interest payments will not go to front-line health care, to kids in the classroom, or to helping our most vulnerable neighbours. To the Minister of Finance: when Alberta suffers our next credit-rating downgrade, how much more will it cost Albertans?

Mr. Ceci: Well, thank you very much for asking about the meetings that took place on Monday down in Toronto. Those meetings were productive, Mr. Speaker. We're choosing to bring down the deficit thoughtfully and prudently. We had a choice with Budget 2017. We ensured that we invested in infrastructure, we protected services, and we ensured that teachers were in classrooms and that nurses were in hospitals. Our budget, TD Economics says, will be stimulative in nature, and we will grow the most of any province, by 2.6 per cent, in 2017. That is the message I took down to Toronto. That is the message credit agencies and investors heard from me.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, Alberta has relied for far too long on the price of oil to save our budget bacon. What do credit-rating agencies have to say about the NDP's oil price forecasts? They say that they are wildly optimistic. They say that the government's oil forecasts are at the upper end of or above agency forecasts, so unless the NDP gets incredibly lucky, our deficit will be higher than planned yet again. To the Minister of Finance: what happens if your forecasts are wrong?

Mr. Ceci: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have Q1, Q2, Q3, and Q4 to adjust our budget, and we have done that in the past. It's important for us to go to Toronto to talk to people – investors, credit-rating agencies, economists – to ensure they know the full story of the plan we have, which is a plan to clearly balance in 2024 by bringing down our spending to the point of inflation plus growth. That's our commitment. That's what I shared with them.

Mr. Clark: The minister shared a plan with credit-rating agencies. I hope he shares it with the House.

Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Party has long argued that our province needs to get off the resource revenue roller coaster. The Alberta Party's pathway to prosperity plan would cap royalty revenues at $3 billion a year for operations, with the rest going into debt repayment, infrastructure spending, and the heritage fund. If by some miracle oil exceeds expectations, I want to know what the government is going to do with the money. Again to the Minister of Finance: if you get lucky, what are your plans? Will spending skyrocket, or do you have any real plan to get Alberta off the resource revenue roller coaster?

Mr. Ceci: Thank you again for the question. I'd note that you probably have the only shadow budget available of all this group. Mr. Speaker, we have a plan. That plan is to diversify our economy. Our economy is showing green shoots already. We're showing that the petrochemical diversification program had great uptake. We will get investment. We will diversify our economy. Our Economic Development and Trade minister was in China, and that country will be able to support the exports that we want to send there. There will be diversification. That's our plan.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

2:10 Industrial Heartland Transportation Infrastructure

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The sweet area northeast of Edmonton known as the Industrial Heartland is a growing centre for industrial investment. It is home to 40 companies, several of them with international reach. Given that this region's growth has resulted in increased traffic volume, to the Minister of Transportation: what have you done to ensure improved road infrastructure in this area?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for her question. As part of our $29.5 billion capital plan Transportation is investing more than $5 billion in provincial highway networks to put Albertans back to work, connect communities, and improve safety and travel on our highways. That includes the twinning of the highway 15 bridge over the North Saskatchewan River into Fort Saskatchewan, and it will support economic development in the Industrial Heartland. We're also making significant intersection improvements at highways 15, 37, and 825 as well as at highways 28 and 37.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

First supplemental.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the entire Industrial Heartland area requires road infrastructure supports now and into the future, to the Minister of Transportation: how are you determining the best way to manage growth in this area?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much for the question, Mr. Speaker. To proactively address these concerns, we have three studies under way. These include a study of the northeast river crossing; a provincial high-load corridor study, which is critical to support the heavy industry in our province, including in the Industrial Heartland; and a study for the entire northeast sector. We're going to be developing long-term infrastructure and developing a plan for the Industrial Heartland, with a focus on making life better and to build our economy and create jobs for Albertans.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that some proposed long-term projects could result in further loss of valuable agricultural land which produces some of the province's highest quality produce, to the Minister of Transportation: what steps are you taking to ensure this land is protected and will continue to thrive as it is an important resource?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker, and thanks for the question. We know that there is extremely valuable farmland northeast of Edmonton. It's a very special area with its own microclimate that produces all sorts of market garden products, so I had the study revised, the terms of reference, to require that there would be environmental sustainability and that protection of prime agricultural land will be included in the terms of reference of the study.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, before we begin, I'd like to point out that I've sent you my questions written in advance.

I'd like to welcome the Minister of Finance back from Toronto, where he was meeting with credit-rating agencies, who are rightly concerned with the ability of the minister to competently do his job. But the minister must not have done his homework because they sent him away, asking for more information to determine if Alberta will face yet another credit downgrade. What information that wasn't in the budget did they ask for, and will the minister disclose it to Albertans?

The Speaker: Thank you to the member. For the record I just received a note from the hon. member, but I have not had an opportunity to read it.

To the Finance minister: please proceed.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. You know, I said that those were productive meetings. I meant that. They were an opportunity to clarify what our plan is to ensure we have the backs of Albertans by the programs and services we are funding, to make sure they're strong. They wanted to know more about the diversification, they wanted to know more about oil pricing and our forecasts, and we were able to share that information back and forth. That's what these meetings are all about, and when they come out to Alberta, they'll do further clarification.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, given that when the minister met with credit-rating agencies last year, they had all of the information they needed to make a credit downgrade – just meeting the minister was seemingly enough for a downgrade that costs taxpayers hundreds of millions of dollars a year, but to the minister's credit it's been 24 hours, and we haven't had another downgrade yet – and given that credit-rating agencies are saying that this government's reckless borrowing program puts downward pressure on our credit rating, can we expect another downgrade?

Mr. Ceci: You know, the difference between last year and this year is that we are in recovery in Alberta. We are going to be growing the most by GDP of any province in this country, 2.6 per cent. The Conference Board of Canada says 2.8 per cent. I like their numbers better, Mr. Speaker, if we had a choice. TD Economics is also saying that our budget is stimulative whereas other budgets are austerity and they're not stimulating their economy. We are now leading the nation in terms of new full-time job growth in March, more than the rest of Canada. We have housing starts growing . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Fildebrandt: I'll take that as a yes.

Given, Mr. Speaker, that under current projections Alberta's debt will reach a blistering $71 billion by 2019 but that the government refuses to even provide an estimate of what our debt will be by 2024 and given that under questioning during the budgeting process the minister admitted that he does in fact have an estimate of what the debt will be by then but that he refuses to make that number public, my question is simple: will the minister tell Albertans how much debt they will owe by 2024? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Or we could focus on the things Albertans want, and those things are making sure that the classrooms their children go to aren't huge like this place. Those things are making sure that health care is delivered in a timely fashion. That's what Albertans tell us. [interjections] They want to make sure that their programs and services are strong, and we're keeping them strong.

The Speaker: Hon. members, you were doing so well.

Fort McMurray Wildfire Recovery

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, today marks one year since the wildfires that devastated Fort McMurray. Now, the response to that crisis by thousands of Albertans was both heroic and heartwarming, but, as we know, the recovery will extend for many years. Now, earlier this week the Municipal Affairs minister made a welcome announcement regarding property tax relief, but other government ministries must also be involved in providing wraparound, co-ordinated support to the ongoing recovery effort. To the Associate Minister of Health: what ongoing mental health supports have been put in place for those requiring assistance in the aftermath of the Fort McMurray wildfires?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We know that anniversaries such as this can trigger additional mental health concerns for people, so I would encourage anyone living in the Fort McMurray area or throughout the province who's experiencing any concerns to please contact Health Link and ask to be connected with a mental health professional.

Additionally, our government has invested over $24 million through the wildfire recovery task force in psychosocial health supports such as mental health supports, particularly for people within the Fort McMurray area.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the environmental impact of the wildfires was profound and will last for many years and given that Alberta Environment has been extensively involved in monitoring the environmental impact and the condition of land, air, water, and wildlife in the region, my question to the environment minister: what is the status of ongoing assessment of the environmental impact of the wildfires, and when might Albertans expect to see a comprehensive report detailing those impacts?

The Speaker: The Minister of Environment and Parks and minister responsible for the climate change office.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, during the Fort McMurray wildfire Alberta Environment and Parks staff were no different from the rest of the Alberta public service in that they responded immediately. I know that I received many stories of staff that were redeployed, working hundreds of hours to assist in the response to that fire. During the fire Environment and Parks collaborated with monitoring partners. We enhanced our monitoring during the fire. From what I have been briefed, we have not detected any long-term, enduring negative environmental impacts beyond what happened during the fire.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, I hope there's a more comprehensive report than that coming.

The wildfires also had profound impacts on education in Fort McMurray. Now, given that returning to school life and having to return to some sense of normalcy is not only necessary but very important to the recovery effort and given that students face additional challenges due to displacement from their homes, friends moving away, and attending, in some cases, different schools, to the Education minister: what additional supports are being provided to students and staff of Fort McMurray schools, and are provisions in place for supplemental mental health supports for Fort McMurray students?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the very insightful question. Yes. Certainly, we recognize that the impact of the fires on our education system in Fort McMurray was not insignificant. We have put in $4.3 million of stabilization money this year to offset perhaps declining enrolment, which actually didn't go down that much. It's a good sign that families did move back to Fort McMurray. In addition to that, we have put in a $1.7 million funding allocation for training for professional development for educators, specifically in regard to dealing with psychosocial supports.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

2:20 Emergency Medical Dispatch Services

Mr. Stier: Mr. Speaker, the problems in Alberta's centralized ambulance dispatch system continue to go from bad to worse. A major problem with this broken system is the new $370 million radio network, that is creating vast communications dead zones across rural Alberta. Plus, paramedics are actually forbidden from using former backup radios. Province-wide EMS workers are speaking out, saying that this system causes frighteningly long wait times, puts the public at risk, and will cost lives. Can the minister explain what is being done to fix this faulty and failing system?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much to the member for the question. Certainly, he has raised this topic with me, as have other members, including the Member for Banff-Cochrane. We are working to make sure that, no matter what, when you call, there is an ability to get that support that you need. Transition times can be challenging. I'm certainly aware of the AFRRCs requests, and we are considering ways that we can best support everyone in having the assurances that they need as we move forward, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stier: Mr. Speaker, given that a recent meeting with the minister resulted in the Foothills Regional Emergency Services Commission being refused in their request to dispatch directly to fix that while the Banff area, which is represented by an NDP MLA, was granted a request to leave this faulty system, can the minister explain why the good people of Banff were exempted from this broken dispatch system but not the great people of Okotoks, High River, Turner Valley, Black Diamond, or the MDs of Foothills and Willow Creek?

Ms Hoffman: The member should have a review of some of the facts. I'd encourage him to lean over to his dance partners sitting beside him and ask about dispatch and how important it is to make sure that we get it right, Mr. Speaker. We have definitely experienced a lot of change over the past seven or eight years when it comes to emergency dispatch. Our job on this side of the House is to make sure that those challenges and changes actually make life better for Albertans, and that's what we're doing. The two issues that the member is referring to are conflated. They're not at all tied together. I'm proud to continue to work to make life better for all Albertans and ensure their safety.

Mr. Stier: Mr. Speaker, given that I have fought this issue for five years now and seen that it hasn't improved and I've realized that central operators, who just don't understand southern Alberta's unique regional transportation landscape, are putting lives at risk and given that this is causing EMS workers to show up at local fire halls in search of proper directions after being sent on wild goose chases, can the minister stop this chaos, remove the entire Foothills region from this broken dispatch system today?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given how much time the members opposite are spending in the backrooms of the Federal building talking to each other, I'm surprised they're not ready to defend each other's records. They themselves and their new dance partners are the ones that pushed this process forward. We're making sure that we have the right safety and supports in place for Albertans. I encourage the members opposite to . . .

Mr. Cooper: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order noted.

Canadian Free Trade Agreement

Mr. MacIntyre: In Alberta's highly trade-exposed economy free trade agreements are of paramount importance. That's why I was shocked to find the makings of a trade war in the recently signed Canadian free trade agreement. Ontario has reserved the right to discriminate against any renewable energy project from Alberta in response to the Alberta NDP discriminating against all other provinces. To the Energy minister: why be so foolish as to risk making your estimated $30 billion transition to renewables even more expensive?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know what? I'm quite proud of the work that we did in negotiating a new Canadian free trade agreement that finally levels the playing field for Alberta companies to have the same access to other provinces as their companies have enjoyed for decades because of the poor negotiation that previous governments did. We reached an agreement. It took about two and a half years. It finally levels the playing field, and I'm quite proud that Alberta businesses finally have the same access other provinces have enjoyed for decades.

Mr. MacIntyre: Anti free trade measures hurt more than just consumers and taxpayers; they put Alberta-headquartered companies at risk. Given that Alberta companies have made significant investments in run-of-the-river hydro and wind energy in Ontario and given that further investment of these types of renewable developments are now at risk because of anti free trade actions taken by this government, does the Energy minister understand the risk to Alberta-headquartered companies from her government demanding protectionist measures against renewable projects?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, I mean, not only am I proud of this agreement; our government is working to diversify our economy through a number of ways. One of those is by phasing out coal, which the world is moving past, and investing in renewables. There's an incredible opportunity for Alberta companies to participate within our electricity system and within the renewable space. I'm quite proud of the work that we're doing through our trade agreements and look forward to the thousands of jobs that will be created right here in Alberta because of our action on climate.

Mr. MacIntyre: Fact: this NDP government put up more annexes to trade barriers than any other province in the entire free trade agreement. Given that Alberta is a province with an economy dependent on exports, meaning that we'd benefit greatly from the removal of trade barriers, and given that these anti free trade measures put Alberta businesses at risk of facing costly retaliatory measures, to the minister of trade: how does provoking a trade war with other provinces help Alberta's fledgling alternative energy industry?

Mr. Bilous: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'll encourage the member opposite to look closely at the previous AIT and the Canadian free trade agreement. Unlike that party, that would continue to leave Alberta disadvantaged to the rest of the country, we've now levelled the playing field, where Alberta companies have the same access to other provinces that other provinces have enjoyed for decades. Quite frankly, it's quite frustrating that Alberta businesses have been shut out of other provinces because of previous trade agreements, that clearly this member and that party would continue to do. What we've done is that we've levelled the playing field and ensured that Alberta businesses have the same opportunities.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Calgary-South East.

Sexual Assault

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As many of us are aware, May is Sexual Assault Awareness Month. The need for that awareness is demonstrated by the fact that while rates of other violent crimes are decreasing, the incidence of sexual assault is on the rise. The statistics show that we are actually failing to address the issue of sexual assault and failing to protect Albertans from these crimes. While this government has made some progress in making civil prosecutions easier and abusive relationships easier to escape, more needs to be done to prevent these crimes from occurring in the first place. To the Justice minister: what are your plans to address the rising incidence of sexual assault?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our government is proud of our record in dealing with survivors of sexual assault. We passed Bill 2 quite recently, as the hon. member quite rightly noted, which helps survivors access the justice system. We also think that it's important that survivors know that in a criminal system when they come to court, they will be protected. That's why when a judge didn't do that for a survivor of sexual assault, we filed a complaint, and that complaint ultimately resulted in the removal of that judge. We think that all survivors deserve to be respected.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Fraser: Given that an important aspect of preventing sexual assault is education and awareness and given that the government can assist by including a greater awareness of gender-based issues when making policy and given that during the recent Status of Women estimates the minister and I discussed the benefits of gender-based analysis plus, to the Deputy Premier: how is your ministry working toward increasing awareness to try to address the rising number of sexual assaults, and how many of your colleagues have you convinced to take the GBA plus training?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On this side of the House we do take gender-based violence very seriously and all women's health issues. That's why we're moving forward very carefully to make sure that we have integrated responses to a number of situations, including women's health options. We're proud to make sure that we're moving forward in that regard as well as working with health practitioners to ensure that they're well supported and in supporting those who have survived sexual assault as well.

Mr. Fraser: Given that as elected representatives we can be powerful voices for bringing attention to the issues when we have the right educational resources and given the Legislature's long tradition of inviting groups to the lower rotunda to share information with members and given that such a presentation would only be an introduction to this complex topic but it would still help all members better advocate for survivors of sexual assault, to the same minister: will you consider extending an invitation to some of the many organizations doing great work around educating about sexual assault to the Legislature?

Ms Hoffman: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. We are always interested in making sure that we have opportunities to support a variety of opportunities for education. Regularly we bring in colleges of professional associations to share information about the work they do. Perhaps we'll reach out to the College of Social Workers or others who are directly involved often in supporting survivors and making sure that they have the supports that they require.

There are also extensive supports online for anyone who's available so that they don't have to wait for that to be arranged. We'd be happy to e-mail that information to the offices of all MLAs so that they can continue to inform themselves about the supports that are available.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Electric Power Costs to Consumers

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When I door-knocked in my constituency last week, the top concern I heard was utility bills. Albertans have traditionally been exposed to volatile electricity rates, and given that my constituents are concerned about their ability to pay their bills if those rates spike again, to the Minister of Energy: what is the government doing to protect Albertans and ensure that electricity is affordable?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, all of us, I think, on both sides of the house hear often in our constituency offices about utility bills. What we're doing is fixing the system that we inherited of volatility in the energy-only market. We're capping electricity rates because previously bills could fluctuate up to $70 a month just on the electricity prices alone. In the long term Albertans deserve a system that is stable and predictable, and we're reforming that system.

The Speaker: Supplemental.

Ms Miller: Thank you. Given that my constituents are also concerned about other components of their bills such as delivery charges and rate riders, to the same minister: how is this government ensuring that these charges are fair and that consumers are not being overcharged for their utility services?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, Albertans are concerned about the whole bill. We're working to reform the electricity system, but we're also looking at the transmission costs and the transmission policies to see if there are some changes we can make. We have the AUC and the UCA, who work together to make life more affordable. What isn't affordable is if the opposition keeps making the promises of reversing everything done and returning our province to a volatile system. [interjections]

The Speaker: In case any of you forgot, when I stand up, please stop talking.

The Member for Red Deer-South.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that utility bills can also be complex, can change without warning, and have various fee lines that may be hard to understand and seem unfair, to the Minister of Service Alberta: what options do my constituents have if they're concerned about their utility bills?

The Speaker: The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to respond on behalf of the Minister of Service Alberta to my hon. friend's question. The Utilities Consumer Advocate can not only explain the various components of a gas or power bill but can also serve as the go-between if a consumer is in a dispute with a company over a bill. The UCA's website has detailed explanation of sample bills and a new feature that they added last year, a cost-comparison tool that allows consumers to comparison shop between companies for natural gas and electricity. We're very proud of the work that the UCA does, and Albertans can feel confident that if they have any uncertainty, discomfort, or any worry about their bills, help is only a phone call away.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

School Fees and Education Funding

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Wildrose applauded the government's intent of Bill 1 to ease the burden of school fees on parents. We understood that the government would increase funding to school divisions for this change. Since some school divisions had already begun reducing fees and others had not, how will you fairly distribute the funds to replace school fees across school divisions given the disparity in how different divisions handled school fees?

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank you very much for the question. This is a central point to Bill 1, and the key here is that we are trying to clean up the school fees situation, which was basically like the Wild West over the last 20 years or so. The opportunity now to reduce school fees for instructional supplies and materials and for busing to a designated site really will put money into the pockets of parents when they need it most, certainly, and we certainly will over time look at the irregularity between school divisions so that we have a level playing field.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Loewen: No answer on how they're going to do it fairly.

Given that school authorities have been contacting us with concerns that they will not be able to offer the kinds of courses students need because this government has decided to cap funding at 45 credits per student per year and given that school authorities do not want this reduction, how will this funding cap reducing education opportunities fulfill the government's mandate of meeting the best educational interests of students?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, to the point where we allow schools and school boards to make choices where they're best for students, the majority of high schools are now on the high school redesign programming so that the whole credit way of financing is not relevant in that regard. In other ways, I mean, certainly, this side always talks about looking for efficiencies and making choices, so that's what we did in Education. We made some choices and efficiencies so that we could reduce school fees here in the province of Alberta and make life better for Alberta families.

Mr. Loewen: Well, that sounds like a cut to Education to me.

The Speaker: Hon. member, try to remember to not preface your comments.

Mr. Loewen: Given that the dual credit, work experience, RAP, and green programs are programs that are helpful for students who are looking into trades or wanting to get a head start on their postsecondary education and given that this government has capped credit funding that is likely to affect these programs and given that school authorities say, contrary to what the minister said in estimates, that your department has cut the funding for the dual-credit program, why would you take away opportunities that have been helpful to give students a head start?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we recognize the value of the dual-credit program, and we are taking steps to not just continue it but to strengthen it very substantially. So we're working with postsecondary institutions, working with our schools as well. They know that we are going to carry on with the dual-credit program, and they're very excited about that. This is a good-news story for us to be moving forward to make life better for Alberta families and to improve education, as we have always been doing here on this side of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Forest Industry Concerns

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The new 24 per cent tariff on Canadian softwood lumber exports to the U.S. hurts Alberta's forest producers. The ongoing dispute will hurt industry, hurt jobs, and harm Alberta's export growth. One of the biggest problems for Canada to negotiate the new agreement is achieving consensus amongst all provinces. To the minister of forestry: how are you working with other provinces and the federal government to resolve the softwood lumber dispute?

The Speaker: The Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Our government is standing shoulder to shoulder with the forest industry and the communities that rely on lumber as we go through this dispute. We will defend ourselves vigorously and work closely with our industry and other Canadian governments to mount the most effective defence we can. The Alberta Forest Products Association has praised our government's attention to this file by saying: "We greatly appreciate the dedication of Premier Notley and her government to this very important file." We want to see a long-term solution, and we'll continue to work with my colleagues right across the country to do so.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The first supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the big uncertainty caused by having no softwood lumber agreement and given all the other uncertainties faced by the forest industry such as the caribou management plan, mountain pine beetle, cutblock retention, and the carbon tax, to the same minister: what can you do to work with the industry to help relieve some of these other uncertainties?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Together with the federal government we're exploring options about how we can support those important jobs in the forestry industry in Alberta, but there are also other things that can mitigate some of these issues like increasing our trade to Asia, for instance, which we continue to do. The Minister of Economic Development and Trade and the Premier just came back. We're promoting all our trade in Asia. We'll continue to do that, those trade missions. I take part in a federal-provincial task force, as do the deputy minister and the assistant deputy minister as well, to ensure that we get these programs the best we can to support our industries here in Alberta.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the forest industry needs to expand to markets around the globe to diversify Alberta's export market for forest industry products and given that the United States' tariff on Canadian softwood lumber enhances the urgency to find new markets, to the minister of forestry: what are you doing to find other markets for Alberta forest producers so that we aren't so reliant on the U.S. market?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. There's more we can do right here in Alberta to encourage more use. We've initiated a wood charter here in the province to encourage more use of wood within building projects here in Alberta. Trade missions to Asia: we continue to support Canada Wood, for example, in Asian markets to support our industry in those markets. We have increased our trade with Asia, and we can do more there. We fundamentally disagree with the United States' stand that we somehow subsidize our industry. This is the fifth time we've had this fight. We're going to be successful.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices and in accordance with section 22 of the Auditor General Act I'm pleased to table five copies of the following report: the report of the Auditor General of Alberta for May 2017. Copies of this report will be provided to all members.

The Speaker: The Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a couple of tablings today. The first one is from the High River and District Chamber of Commerce. It's sent with concerns with regard to the review on the employment standards and Labour Relations Code. They believe that "the current time allocated to this discussion is seriously insufficient" and would like to see an enhanced and extended review.

I have five copies of a letter that I received from Karen Lisoway of Dynamysk with very similar concerns, that the Labour Relations Code review was needing more time and to be enhanced.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, there was a point of order, but the point of order has been withdrawn.

Mr. Rodney: I stood up, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I'm sorry. I only heard one point of order.

Mr. Rodney: We rose at the same time.

The Speaker: At what point in the agenda did you raise a point of order?

Mr. Rodney: At exactly the same moment as the Opposition House Leader. We were raising it at the same time. It's very quick, sir.

The Speaker: Okay.

Point of Order Language Creating Disorder

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, earlier today – and I don't think we need the benefit of the Blues; we all heard it – there was a reference by the government side to conversations in a bathroom.

Some Hon. Members: Backroom.

The Speaker: Quiet, please.

Mr. Rodney: And that makes my point. Thank you. Under 23(h), (i), and (j) a Member will be called to order by the Speaker if, in the Speaker's opinion, that Member . . .

(h) makes allegations against another Member;

(i) imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member;

and especially this:

(j) uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder.

We just saw disorder. The disorder occurred at that moment, and it's occurred, Mr. Speaker, with great respect, in the last number of weeks when references are made to "dance partner," "slow dancing," "BFFs." [interjections] Yeah, think about it, folks.

This side of the House must be accountable, Mr. Speaker, to you. The government side must be accountable as well. We have had from Albertans the point that this sort of language is immature at best. It's unprofessional, it's undignified, and it's unbecoming of an elected official. I'm going to guess that there will not be a point of order here, but what I would ask for you to do is to ask the government side to use words that do not contravene 23(h), (i), and (j).

Thank you.

Mr. Mason: Well, perhaps the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, would prefer it if we used the term "courtship," but there's no question – and I don't know why he's even trying to deny it – that there are talks . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, get to the point.

Mr. Mason: Well, the point is that it's a ridiculous suggestion that this violates any of those three clauses in the standing orders that the hon. member mentioned. This is entirely within the scope of parliamentary language and is not different – it's, in fact, much milder than many of the allegations, suggestions, and connotations that the opposition uses. I just would submit, Mr. Speaker, very humbly and with respect that it is an absurd point of order, and I don't know what they're trying to hide.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. member, I have been provided, if I understand correctly – and I apologize if I didn't see the point of order initially. I thought it was withdrawn by the Opposition House Leader. I believe you might have thought that the comment was: the bathrooms of the Federal building. I do have a copy of the Blues, which say, "the backrooms of the Federal building." I would use that as a reminder that when there are fewer comments made, clarity of the actual fact is easier to hear. You're corrected. Be conscious of that so that all members can hear.

I think we are now at Orders of the Day.

2:50

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 7

An Act to Enhance Post-secondary Academic Bargaining

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: Yeah. I'm privileged to rise in the House today to speak in favour of Bill 7, an amendment to postsecondary labour relations legislation. I think it's very fortunate that I get to do this because, well, as one reason, I have a major university in my riding. I'm very happy that Athabasca is the home of Athabasca University. As well, I have experience teaching at Alberta postsecondary institutions. I used to be an instructor in Education at the University of Alberta, so I not only have that experience; I've had the opportunity to make a lot of friends that share similar experiences. So I'll, you know, maybe give a bit of insight into why this is, some elements in particular, so necessary.

What Bill 7 does is basically to put Alberta in accord with the law of the land and with every other province in Canada. It, you know, restores to instructors at postsecondary institutions their constitutionally protected right to strike. How it does that is actually pretty straightforward. What it does is to repeal sections of the existing PSLA and create a new postsecondary sector, a specific division within the labour organization.

It impacts bargaining in the following ways. Number one, mandatory binding arbitration provisions in the PSLA will be repealed. Going forward, academic staff, graduate students, and postdoctoral fellows, which is something I'm going to highlight a bit later, will be moved under the LRC. This extends the right to strike to employees but also restores lockout provisions for institutions as well as brings them at the same time under essential services legislation. The academic designation process will be updated to include more consultation with academic bargaining units and will also add the provision to take disputes to the Labour Relations Board. There will be a five-year minimum transition period provided for bargaining agents. As it stands now, all current bargaining agents will retain their membership, and no outside agents will be allowed for that five years. This can actually be extended at the discretion of cabinet.

Now, this bill has been, you know, sort of out for a bit now. I have to say that the reaction has been pretty positive from the feedback that I've been getting. Of course, there are some concerns. There's no legislation change that's going to be able to make everybody absolutely happy. This is really fundamental to the nature of change itself. The existing system: no matter how dysfunctional, no matter how much change is overdue, you're always going to be having some parties within it that benefit from the old way. The people that would benefit from changes haven't experienced those changes yet. That's why change tends to be very controversial.

Now, the fact that this isn't, I think, speaks very well to just how fulsome the consultative process has been. When you have a situation where stakeholders feel heard and respected and where the minister is, you know, fully engaged in ensuring that they take people along the way with them, that tends to cause a lot of concerns you would otherwise see to get diminished.

The minister is actually in the House right now, and I'd just like to extend . . . [interjection] Oh, is that unparliamentary? Okay. I would like to congratulate the minister on the very hard work that I know he has done in his consultation process and in reaching out to faculty and students across the province. I was actually at a recent meeting with university students from across the province, and one of the delegates from the University of Alberta made the comment:

you know, we've seen Minister Schmidt more often in the past year than we've seen the last two Advanced Education ministers. I think that speaks very well to just how hard-working our minister is, and I think that the results are being shown in how generally accepted this legislation is.

Now, I know that my colleagues are going to go into some of the other details of the proposed legislation. I'd just like to spotlight the provisions around postdoctoral fellows. I think this is a change that's long overdue and one that's desperately needed. Now, for those in the House, you know, who are unsure what postdoctoral fellows do – usually we call them postdocs – right now it's an occupation that was meant to be very temporary, where you might have someone who's finished their doctorate. It's very, very difficult in many fields to get to a tenure-track position. Sometimes even contract teaching positions might be hard to get.

As anyone who has taken an advanced degree is aware, if you're not working within that field and within academia, if you're not out at conferences presenting, if you're not being active in research, if you're not engaged with your faculty, your credentials age very quickly. You can find yourself where seven to 11 years of your life, tens of thousands of dollars basically make you overqualified for the jobs outside of your field. You're aging out. What that means is that without any protection, you are very vulnerable to being exploited, exploited in the sense where you can feel compelled to accept, you know, long working hours with inadequate pay, no benefits, and with not very clear means to deal with disrespect and harassment from supervisors.

This is sort of going back in time to where, you know, most workers were in that sort of marginal circumstance where they were at the mercy of their employers in huge part. Now, how did other workers get out of that? Well, they organized, right? They worked collectively, they developed unions, and, through that, they were able to negotiate some basic employment rights. They were able to ensure that they got benefits, that they'd be eligible for pensions, and so on. With the change, extending that provision to postdoctoral fellows, the general hope is that over time they'll be able to regularize this activity so they no longer face potential exploitation and these other issues.

Now, that being said, I don't want to paint all postdoctoral fellowships and supervisors with that type of brush. Of course, there are many, and I know them, right? I've known professors that had postdoctoral fellows, and I've worked with them myself. You know, it's just one of those bad apple type of situations. It just takes a few to ruin it for other people. For those that are caught in that precarious position, I think that this is something that is long overdue and very welcome, and I think it speaks very well to our government's ongoing commitment to make life better for people. I do hope that my colleagues feel that same way.

In conclusion, I'd like to commend our minister and his ministry for, I think, coming up with a good, balanced approach to respecting the collective bargaining rights of postsecondaries while taking other stakeholders' concerns into careful account. Because of that, I think we've come up with a good, balanced approach that respects academic traditions and culture, protects research but at the same time, you know, makes sure that workers in our postsecondary institutions receive the same constitutionally protected rights that other workers do.

I urge members to support this, and I hope that we can receive unanimous consent for this bill. Thank you, Madam Chair.

3:00

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Just a cautionary reminder to all members that we do not refer to the presence or absence of another member in the House, and as well we do not use proper names or surnames of members.

I'll recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure to rise today to speak to Bill 7, you know, because I'm proud to say that my constituency of Edmonton-Centre includes three of our city's postsecondary institutions, the first being Grant MacEwan University, of which I'm personally a proud graduate, who will be opening their new centre for the arts and communications in Edmonton-Centre in September. I'm very excited for that growth and for those new students that that's going to bring. Of course, that being sort of the program I came out of, having gone through the Grant MacEwan music program, I'm very happy to have that coming now to my doorstep.

We also have NorQuest College. NorQuest College, Madam Chair, is an institution I've had a real pleasure getting to know, particularly for the amazing programs and supports that they offer for new Canadians and for indigenous students. NorQuest College does a lot of work in the community helping people who are a lot of times struggling with different issues or are working on low income to be able to access new careers and to be able to work towards new economic opportunities. I truly appreciate the work that NorQuest does.

Then also in Edmonton-Centre, over at Enterprise Square, we do have some departments of the University of Alberta.

I also know, Madam Chair, from correspondence that I've received at my office and from doors that I've knocked on and indeed from some who have contacted me through social media that I represent a large number of staff and faculty from these institutions. These are hard-working Albertans that are dedicated to providing quality postsecondary education and conducting world-class research here in our province. So it's an honour to have the opportunity to rise and stand as cosponsor of Bill 7, legislation that I truly believe will make their lives better.

This bill represents our government's belief in a fair and balanced collective bargaining process that respects both the workers and the employers. Now, Madam Chair, of course, as you're aware and as we've discussed, in January 2015 the Supreme Court of Canada released a ruling that workers in all occupations, including essential services, must be allowed the right to strike. Of course, we brought forward our first piece of legislation last year to enact the necessary steps to comply with that Supreme Court ruling. At that time we did not have the opportunity – well, we chose not to include academic employees at postsecondary institutions. We recognized that that was an area that we wanted to do more consultation on, that that was something where we needed to speak with the stakeholders and get more input on how that legislation would work to best represent them. That was critical. That was very important because we wanted to be sure we really understood all of the unique details of labour relations in the postsecondary sector and the needs of all the stakeholders involved. Indeed, we have conducted some excellent consultation in that regard.

I think it's important just to stop after some of the discussion we've had today, concerns being raised about folks not being heard or not having opportunities to fully understand the steps that were being taken or the directions things were going – and I think the minister did a good job of outlining some of that, but I'd like to outline some of it again.

The Minister of Advanced Education built on the foundation of the initial consultations that were started in 2015. So we started with the initial conversations about essential services, which post-secondary was invited to be part of. Then we recognized that further work needed to be done, so the hon. Minister of Advanced Education built on that initial foundation. There was a period of six months, from August to December of 2016, that included an online survey, face-to-face meetings with ministry staff, and round-table discussions that were facilitated by Mr. Andy Sims, an individual we've spoken of many times in House, a well-respected expert in labour law who's authored hundreds of reported decisions in both Canadian and Alberta Labour Relations Board reports and labour arbitration cases. Following that consultation and having had those conversations in person, through surveys, and having had many opportunities, the minister has brought forward now Bill 7, An Act to Enhance Post-secondary Academic Bargaining.

There had been some concerns raised by some members across the aisle this morning. I wanted to take a moment, Madam Chair, to address a few of those. First of all, there were some concerns that were raised by one of the members, I believe the Member for Highwood, and he commented on this several times and on his personal belief that this was an ideological bill. Now, ideology, of course, runs both ways, and we're certainly aware that there is, perhaps, some animosity amongst some members on the other side of this House towards unions. Certainly, words like "thuggery" have been tossed around this House recently.

Madam Chair, personally, I see that there are benefits on both sides of that equation. I think we need to have good, strong companies with the opportunity to look after their workers, with the freedom to make some good choices. At the same time, I think unions can serve a very useful purpose. I've had the opportunity to work in many occupations where there were unions, and you know, I was very thankful for the excellent benefits and the good pay I was able to enjoy there that enabled me to build the life and career that I now enjoy today. So I think it's important that we have fair balance on both sides, much like what we're looking to achieve with this bill.

In terms of this particular bill, of course, the accusations that were being flung were that this bill was created specifically for the reason of unionizing academic staff associations at our universities. But the fact is, Madam Chair, that the basic rules for academic staff associations do not change under Bill 7. They remain established as statutory associations under the Post-secondary Learning Act, and they have the same bylaw powers and rights with respect to the institutional governance that they do now. The only thing that changes is that the same basic labour rules that apply in every other part of the public and private sector would now apply in Alberta.

Now, again, Madam Chair, one of the things with this bill is that this generally just puts Alberta on the same playing field and brings us up to the same level as every other province in Canada. Of course, we've seen that there are some strains in this House, certainly, I think, amongst some members, of what I would call an Alberta exceptionalism, believing that Alberta has to be absolutely different on absolutely everything, being very proud of that fact in many respects. Indeed, there are times when one should be proud of being unique and standing alone and doing things differently, but there are some things on which you have to look and say: why is it that we do things differently from everywhere else? There are times that it is because previous governments have chosen not to deal with issues that should have been dealt with far longer ago. Other governments have instead taken the leadership on that, things like, say, perhaps, farm workers' rights, where those were covered in many other parts of Canada long before they were covered here in Alberta.

In this case, Madam Chair, we are simply bringing Alberta in line with other jurisdictions. We're meeting the requirements of the Supreme Court. This provision is simply now saying that these academic staff associations will fall under the same coverage as any other organization that is being asked to fairly represent their members and is bringing in rules prohibiting unfair labour practices. So I just wanted to address that.

Now, in regard to the consultations, I did touch on and speak about, you know, how thorough the consultations were that the minister carried out. I'd like to just note indeed that in regard to that, in regard to folks that may feel they've not been heard, there was one stakeholder actually in an editorial – so it's publicly spoken. We've certainly heard members that have spoken of people they've spoken with, but, Madam Chair, so far I have not heard them actually identify any of the groups they've spoken with or even, in fact, how many different organizations they've spoken with. That might provide some helpful context.

But I will note that in a recent editorial one of the stakeholders stated:

This is legislation that is long overdue, and it is clear [that] the extra year of consultation and research . . .

Again, Madam Chair, an extra year of consultation and research.

. . . resulted in the government getting it almost exactly right. After 43 years of fake and contrived after-the-fact "consultations," it is refreshing to see a government consult genuinely with all stakeholders and actually integrate what they heard into legislation.

That is one of the stakeholders who participated in the consultation, Madam Chair. I will note that. [interjection] I am sorry that one of the members of the previous government feels that that's laughable. Perhaps he did not actually take part in their previous consultations. But that is the perspective of an actual stakeholder.

Moving on, Madam Chair, there were some concerns that this would take away some of the rights of folks during the bargaining process. Particularly, I think the concern being raised was that for those who are currently in the middle of negotiations, this might take away their right to binding arbitration. Now, the fact is that nobody will lose the right to use binding arbitration if Bill 7 is passed. In fact, it remains available on a voluntary basis, with agreement from both parties, under section 93 of the Labour Relations Code.

Certainly, Madam Chair, what we often hear from the other side is that they are in favour of choice and providing people as much choice as possible and allowing them to choose, you know, which organizations they choose to work with, where they choose to send their children to school, many other things. This simply provides those who are in these associations with further choice.

What Bill 7 does is that it ensures that associations and institutions are no longer compelled to use binding arbitration to resolve their disputes. I think that's a fair thing to do. Indeed, I think it's a fiscally responsible thing to do, and it's required in light of the Supreme Court decision and legislation. Again, Madam Chair, I think it's a fair provision and one that will not, in fact, unduly disadvantage anybody in this process or through these negotiations.

In terms, then, of clarifying a couple of the things, Madam Chair, that this bill will do and being clear, again, for those who raised some concerns about what the bill is in fact not doing, I'll just take a moment to recognize some of the other things that this bill will do. Basically, Bill 7 is proposing that some sections of the Post-secondary Learning Act would be repealed and then creating a new division in the Labour Relations Code for the postsecondary sector. If passed, as we've discussed, academic staff, graduate students, and postdoctoral fellows – again, this is offering more opportunity to more members of the academic field to have better protection and to be able to better advocate for themselves in their positions and to have better choice in who they choose to have advocate on their behalf. It gives them the right to strike as required by the Supreme Court, and they then become subject to essential services legislation.

Of course, as we've discussed here in the House today, we do recognize that postsecondary education is indeed an essential service. We've talked about the great value that it brings to students. We've talked about the importance that it has in building their careers and opportunities. Certainly, Madam Chair, we recognize that it has great importance, too, for the research which goes forward. So it's important that we have the essential services piece and that we consider it in that light so that essential research, things that are ongoing, so that if there does need to be a strike or something else, those things are still protected so that people are still able to look after necessary research and ensure that it can continue while they may not be able to actually be there at work. Again, this is the first time in Canada that postdoctoral fellows would fall under the legislation, and I think the Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater certainly spoke well of that. I'm sure some others will as well.

Madam Chair, our government believes in the collective bargaining process and in a process that respects both workers and employers, as indeed we are demonstrating as we go forward with negotiations with public servants in many areas of government at the moment. That's why postsecondary institutions would be required to negotiate essential services agreements with their bargaining units, again, making sure that those things are in place to protect students, to protect research and other essential things which need to continue. This means that postsecondary institutions will also then be covered by the lockout provisions under the Labour Relations Code.

With these proposed changes, basically, graduate students and postdoctoral fellows associations would have the responsibility and the opportunity to bargain with the institutions for mutually beneficial collective agreements. By ending compulsive arbitration, by not making that mandatory, by making that now a choice for those who are negotiating and those who are bargaining, it will allow the faculty, the graduate students, postdoctoral fellows, and the institutions to come to more prudent agreements that respect workers' constitutional rights. That will protect students. That will ensure affordability for taxpayers.

Over the next five years we're going to work closely with these institutions to help them transition. There have been some concerns that have been raised today, Madam Chair, regarding that transition period. Again, I think the minister was quite clear that he was very clear throughout the consultation process about the model that they're moving towards. Indeed, that model would be the model that we've brought forward here today, and the discussions were about how we could best implement that model. The stakeholders that were involved were aware this model was coming, but now we're giving an additional five years where we have the opportunity for us to work and to help transition the postsecondary staff in terms of the collective bargaining process to ensure it addresses their unique needs.

The faculty associations now, who are effectively serving as the bargaining units, are going to have the opportunity to indeed, if they wish, work with their members to develop a strike fund, to put together other things which may be needed, other things which may be necessary to prepare themselves, then, for the bargaining process over the next five years.

That's why it's important for us, I think, as government to continue to work with institutions to ensure that adequate plans are developed to address any potential strikes or lockouts and to make sure that impacts, in fact, would be minimal for students. As the minister noted earlier today, I think that's going to include making some contingency plans, if necessary, to address student aid, grants, and bursaries. I think that's absolutely important, Madam Chair. Indeed, not only do I represent many staff from these institutions; I certainly also within Edmonton-Centre represent a large number of students. It's very important to me to ensure that, in fact, they are protected, to ensure that they are not put in a bad situation, that they're able to continue their education, and indeed that all necessary funding that they may be receiving from the government, funding which, I'm proud to say, we have continued and, in fact, in some respects increased, I believe, will continue to remain available to them so that they will be able to continue their schooling.

Madam Chair, in general I'm just proud that our government is taking, I believe, a very careful and measured approach to provide stability. It's yet another reason why I support this legislation, because I truly believe this is something that will make a positive difference in the lives of our postsecondary staff here in the province and indeed of students as well. Indeed, given our current economic climate I think it makes sense that we try to find labour negotiation models that are going to ensure that we use public dollars responsibly.

We know that compulsory arbitration in the past has at times tended to result in higher wage increases. That's something that's not sustainable, and we certainly recognize that it is not the direction to be going in for the province right now as we are just beginning to recover from the effects of the recession, which has generally, as some economists noted, concluded, and we're beginning to see some upturn. But we still have some time where our province is going to need to work towards recovery, so controlling our costs where we can through the negotiation process with the folks that work and are paid through government I think is a smart and prudent thing and something that is truly to be supported through this legislation. I think this bill truly demonstrates, again, our government's work to make life better for all Albertans and all people who are both involved in the postsecondary industry and, of course, all those who are simply paying taxes, who may have children in school, who may have relatives in school, or who may themselves even be considering going back for further postsecondary education, as, in fact, I did myself at a late stage in life.

With that, Madam Chair, I believe I'll conclude my remarks, but I'd like to thank the minister again for his thoroughness in working towards this legislation and consulting with the community and for bringing forward what I believe is a fairly and truly balanced piece of legislation.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'm very happy to get up and speak on Bill 7, An Act to Enhance Postsecondary Academic Bargaining. I really would like to thank the hon. Minister of Advanced Education for bringing this bill forward. I'd also like to thank my colleagues from Edmonton-Centre, who just spoke at length about the importance of this particular bill, as well as the Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater, who also talked very passionately in support of this bill as well.

You know, our government is committed to fair legislation that makes life better for hard-working Albertans and complies with the recent Supreme Court ruling. Our government believes in a collective bargaining process that respects both workers and employers. As such, this bill considers the unique nature of the postsecondary sector. While our government extended these rights to the Alberta public services and the health care sector in 2016, we gave postsecondary stakeholders additional time to transition and establish, through consultation, their issues in their particular field. Our government has taken a careful, measured approach to providing stability during the transition period.

Now, in my riding of Calgary-Currie, Madam Chair, Currie Barracks, which is the namesake of my riding, is actually just on the other side of the road from Mount Royal University, which actually has a long history with Currie Barracks and a long history in the riding as well. If you go back in time to the many boundary redraws that, you know, happen every two elections in this province, Mount Royal University is either in or out of my riding – it seems to be about once a decade – so I very much consider it a part of my riding, and considering that mine is by name one of the oldest ridings in Calgary, Mount Royal has been a part of the riding since the '70s. Even though Mount Royal is, like I said, just across the street from my riding, of course when I'm out and about knocking on doors and at events, I run into many of the students and faculty of Mount Royal University.

I've also been able to go to several events at Mount Royal University hosted by their student association, which I did a member's statement on recently, actually, talking about some of the great work they do for the students of Mount Royal University and some of the interesting and thought-provoking events that they do. They did one recently on Black History Month. Also, when there, I get to talk to the faculty, the staff.

They have a great communication and broadcast program there. I actually got to go to the graduation ceremony for that, where Marc Chikinda, who had been leading that program for many years and is now retired – I got to be there for one of his last convocations. If you've ever heard Marc Chikinda talk, he's got quite the boisterous voice, that I think would rival our singer who does the national anthem here in this House on Monday.

Also, you know, I got a book, actually, from a history professor who recently got his tenure that was about Mount Royal University and World War I and how Mount Royal University helped recruit and train students and helped promote and encourage men in 1914 to join up for World War I, with their proximity and historical connection to Currie Barracks, which is, of course, part of my riding. It was a very interesting essay about that, and it was well researched and speaks to the pleasure that the faculty of Mount Royal University take in teaching students. As it was described to me by this particular professor, he often gets his students to help him with research. He regaled me with stories of going through archives. I'm sure that is interesting, but as you know, I'm a mechanic, so the idea of spending hours upon hours in an archive is not necessarily my cup of tea.

I think it speaks to the importance of this piece of legislation to make sure that those faculty members, you know, have the ability to strike should they choose to.

I'm going to do one more example of the fine work that the Mount Royal University faculty does. Actually, there's a class at Mount Royal University called controversies in science, which I feel is often our debate in the House on a rather regular basis. Mandy Sobhanzadeh – I'm sorry for mispronouncing that, of course – every semester invites me and members from the opposition party to speak at her class as a guest lecturer, and she invites members of all the parties. I was there recently. The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks from the Wildrose opposition caucus has spoken at the same class, when I was there as well, as well as the representative from the Liberal Party in this House.

It makes for, I think, a very engaging class for the students each week to have a different perspective on the particular unit they do, which is on climate change and the science around it and what the challenges are that we as elected officials face when addressing that problem. They get to see various perspectives about it, and it's one of the three units in that class, and it makes for a very engaging discussion. When I'm there, I always get some very good, hard-hitting questions, and it's a very lively discussion. Every time I'm there, I speak for an hour and a half with the students and take questions for the remainder of the class, and it's quite an engaging debate, actually. I encourage all members of the House, should they ever get invited to speak at that class, to do so. It's quite enlightening.

I'm going to circle back a bit to the legislation here. You know, why did the postsecondary labour model need to be updated? Well, as you know, the previous speakers mentioned at length that our government is committed to fair legislation that gives all workers the right to strike and also complies with the 2015 Supreme Court ruling on this particular matter. Previous provisions for academic staff and graduate students in Alberta in postsecondaries did not include the right to strike. These changes were introduced to take into consideration the unique nature of the postsecondary education sector while also extending the constitutionally protected rights to postsecondary faculty, graduate students, and postdoctoral fellows. Part of modernizing our labour model includes adding the right to strike in Alberta's postsecondary institutions, which brings us in line with all other provinces and, of course, complies with that Supreme Court ruling.

What is this bill changing? Well, this proposed legislation repeals a section of the Post-secondary Learning Act and creates a new postsecondary sector specific division in the Labour Relations Code. In general some of the changes include that academic staff, graduate students, and postdoctoral fellows will now fall under the Labour Relations Code, essentially giving them the right to strike and become subject to the essential services legislation. They will retain the right to arbitration as long as both parties request an arbitrated decision to a dispute.

As well, postsecondary institutions will be required to negotiate essential services agreements with their bargaining units and will have provisions for lockout under the Labour Relations Code.

As well, current associations will retain their current membership and will be protected from any changes to membership for a minimum of five years. This goes to the importance of having a transition as this legislation comes in, which was something that was spoken of at length by the Member for Edmonton-Centre as well as the Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater, who spoke earlier this afternoon on this.

As you know, I've spoken at length about how I talk to the Mount Royal faculty and students on a regular basis. Of course, I would be remiss if I didn't point out that the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow is, I believe, technically still a student at Mount Royal University, I think an excellent example of the fine calibre of students and people that Mount Royal University attracts.

I actually had a chance to chat with some of the faculty. The Mount Royal Faculty Association sent me a couple of notes on what their thoughts were on the bill. You know, they mentioned that in general they were pleased to note that Bill 7 conforms to almost all of their recommendations that they went through during the government's consultation, that happened in the fall of 2016, and they have actually extended their thanks in a letter that they sent to the minister and to the members of his ministry as well for their work on this bill. They mentioned that they greatly appreciate the meaningful consultation undertaken in advance of drafting of Bill 7, and they also mentioned that they are very thankful for the high level of availability and responsiveness shown by the ministry staff.

I think that that quote that I'm taking from the letter that they sent to the minister is, you know, an example of the great consultation that the minister and his staff put forward and of the approach this government takes to consultation when it comes to pieces of legislation, Madam Chair. We always try, whenever we have a new piece of legislation coming in, to allow opportunities for all members of the public and relevant stakeholders to avail themselves of the ability to consult, to write letters to the minister and staff as well as phoning them, and that speaks to our commitment to transparency and to consulting on pieces of legislation.

They go on to note that they welcome the move to a more extensive and well-tested framework in the Labour Relations Code, with its many benefits such as the codification of prohibited labour practices and the duty of fair representation, a statement of employee and employer rights as well as recourse to Alberta's Labour Relations Board should they not be able to work it out themselves.

3:30

You know, they also go on to say that they acknowledge that this change respects the facility's constitutionally protected right to freedom of association by removing the employer's unilateral power to designate employees as academic staff without recourse and therefore to decide who is and who is not in the faculty association.

Last, they welcome the restoration of the right to strike and of the employer to lock out as a fundamental aspect of meaningful collective bargaining, as confirmed by the Supreme Court of Canada.

Now, they did note that there was strike/lockout language that existed in the collective bargaining agreement that they had at Mount Royal University, that was there until 2004; however, that's when provincial legislation was changed to impose compulsory binding arbitration as the final dispute resolution mechanism. I think they got rid of that particular provision.

They do note that during that time they never had an actual strike or lockout. The Mount Royal Faculty Association and Mount Royal University, from my discussions with them, have had thus far an amicable relationship, where they have not needed to go as far as to strike or for Mount Royal University to lock out their teaching faculty.

Of course, as I mentioned before, their passion for academic disciplines and professional work, and they talk about – you know, Mount Royal University has got over a century of putting students and the quality of their education first. I think it speaks to their dedication to teaching and their dedication to their students. As I mentioned in a member's statement previously, the student union carries on that spirit as well from the students' side, putting on great events, working for their students as well as putting on classes and other educational opportunities to allow students to discuss and share ideas. I think it speaks to the value of education that Mount Royal instills in its students as well as the value of citizenship and working with their neighbours and the spirit of enlightened and respectful debate.

We talked a lot about what this means for the faculty. We've talked about what this means for postsecondary institutions such as Mount Royal University, but what would this mean for Alberta's students? Is there any potential that they could lose credits if there's a strike or lockout, for example? Well, Madam Chair, you know, we recognize that there are some concerns regarding the ability for academic staff, faculty members, and professionals to stop work. All other jurisdictions in Canada have similar strike/lockout provisions in their labour legislation, and in order to ensure minimal impact to students, government will work with postsecondary institutions to make sure that they develop contingency plans to address strikes and lockouts should they occur.

Government will also review and make contingency plans where necessary to address student aids, grants, and bursaries, and I believe that that work would of course be carried out and led by our Minister of Advanced Education.

In case there was a dispute, how will bargaining disputes be settled under this new legislation? Well, Madam Chair, the proposed legislation ensures that Alberta's postsecondary academic staff are extended their constitutionally protected right to strike and that institutions have provisions for lockouts, which will bring us, of course, in line with all other jurisdictions. If no agreement can be reached, the provisions for strikes or lockouts under the current Labour Relations Code do apply.

Another question that I haven't quite heard addressed here is: will our institutions be allowed to use replacement workers in the event of a strike? Well, essential services are those public services that, if interrupted, would endanger life, personal safety, or the health of the public, or the rule of law and public security. Postsecondary institutions are already required to work with their bargaining units to develop essential services agreements.

The proposed legislation will just add academic staff, graduate students, and postdoctoral fellows to this ongoing work. Similar to all other public sectors, postsecondary institutions that identify essential services will negotiate essential services agreements with their bargaining units, which will ensure that workers have the right to strike while essential services are maintained. Institutions with essential service agreements will not be able to hire replacement workers in the event of a strike. As well, institutions that apply and receive exemptions under the essential services legislation as having no essential services will be able to hire temporary workers in the event of a strike.

I understand that some postsecondary stakeholders do not want to move under the Labour Relations Code and want to retain mandatory arbitration provisions. The reason why we did this is that this is something that must be done. Our government is committed to fair legislation that gives all workers the right to strike and also to comply with the 2015 Supreme Court ruling. The easiest answer to, you know, that question, of course, is that the Supreme Court made us do it. As all members know, when the Supreme Court says so, that is a sign that there was a serious problem in the legislation that we need to fix.

Madam Chair, I think that with that, I will wrap up my comments here and encourage all members of the House to vote in support of this bill as well as in support of their local postsecondary institution, whether it be Mount Royal University, whether it be MacEwan, whether it be the University of Calgary or the University of Alberta or Bow Valley College or whatever the one may be that is local to your riding. I would encourage that after this debate we all take a moment to appreciate the hard-working faculty and teachers of our postsecondary institutions as well as, of course, the students, who are being taught and will be doing, I'm sure, great things in the future with the education that they learn from Alberta's excellent postsecondary institutions.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Bill 7, An Act to Enhance Post-secondary Academic Bargaining: with great respect, I wish the act did exactly what it purports to do.

Mr. Cooper: What does it do?

Mr. Rodney: Well, sadly, hon. members, in my experience, this bill demonstrates one more time that the government did not listen to Albertans in its so-called consultations. It seems the minister does not understand the needs or interests of the relevant stakeholders because, for one example, in a rare circumstance the presidents of Alberta's comprehensive academic and research institutions, faculty associations, graduate students' associations, and graduate students themselves disagree with the government's direction in Bill 7.

In brief, I can tell you that Bill 7 seeks to implement a Supreme Court ruling to enable Alberta's postsecondary educators to strike, which is a necessary change. No opposition whatsoever on that. The problem is that Bill 7 seeks to severely interfere with the way that our supposedly autonomous universities conduct their labour relations. Not only that, Madam Chair. This bill does nothing to address the actual concerns of university workers, including faculty promotion, job security, and tenure. It also completely and utterly fails to address the social concerns often raised by the government itself, including gender and other diversity, inclusion of indigenous peoples as leaders and students, improving work-life balance for families, or reliability of universities as partners in innovation and economic diversification. That shocks and surprises me.

Now, for decades governments have recognized that universities should be places of free thought, expression, and research and have refrained from dictating how publicly funded universities govern themselves. Governments have also recognized that universities are not just a usual cookie-cutter sort of industrial workplace that can be regulated under employment standards that would apply to most workplaces. They're different.

Now, universities' collegial governance models recognize merit and service and contributions in ways that are found almost nowhere else in labour management. Indeed, governments have been generally reluctant to regulate universities until requested by those universities themselves. Now, where most workplaces clearly draw lines to separate responsibilities among workers represented by different bargaining groups, the shared responsibility for teaching and learning at a university means that in many cases everyone shares in the work of everything. Having worked at a university, I have experienced this. That runs contrary to the usual idea that each union has exclusivity to bargain over their particular type of work at a shared workplace, but collegial governance in Alberta and abroad has ensured that negotiated agreements mean that usually no task is left without a taker.

Faculty associations of Alberta's comprehensive academic and research universities are not currently prohibited from striking. Now, currently the Post-secondary Learning Act mandates that disputes are resolved through compulsory binding arbitration. That decision to bargain away their ability to strike was made by faculty and management, recognizing that the practical ability to strike does not exist because of the unique collegial governance models at universities. Now, during consultations universities, faculty associations, and graduate students told the minister that they wanted to remain under the Post-secondary Learning Act, that would recognize the unique collegial governance models at Alberta universities. Almost every stakeholder advised against moving into the Labour Relations Code, which does not have the legislative authority or the expertise to protect academic freedoms, intellectual property, and rights of researchers, faculty, or students.

Now, even though most university staff are unionized into four or more groups on most campuses – namely, support staff, graduate students, faculty, and professional staff – the members of each group can routinely have responsibilities in teaching and research, administration, and management. Consequently, an introductory course may be taught by a department head who is also a senior researcher and include labs prepared and overseen by graduate students and seminars organized by a postdoctoral fellow, just for one example. The summer version of that same course may be entirely run by just a single contracted instructor. Now, a research laboratory might have chemicals prepared by support staff, with business administrated by a postdoctoral fellow and experiments operated by honours undergraduate students alongside research associates holding PhDs. Maybe some members here have had that sort of experience.

Understandably, though, not necessarily everyone thinks about this. The group with the least bargaining power is the graduate students, and they often get tasked with the least professionally rewarding responsibilities such as invigilating and grading student work and preparing labs and filing paperwork. Within that group, responsibilities and compensation of master's students, who are present at an institution for, say, one or three years, are often worse than PhD students, whose positions are typically secure for four or more years. That's just the way it works.

If Bill 7 is passed, teaching, research, administration, and management will become the responsibility of one more bargaining group, and that's the postdoctoral fellows' associations. While there are thousands of faculty and graduate students can number in the hundreds at each institution, there are an estimated hundred or so postdoctoral fellows at any time in all of Alberta. A postdoctoral fellowship might only be for one year or less. Guess which of the three bargaining units will have the least bargaining power. Undesired work will be pushed to the weakest union, the postdocs, who have the fewest numbers and the least experience and resources to bargain effectively.

Let's face it. Most postdocs have more pressing research priorities in their six to 24 months at an Albertan university, so the postdoctoral fellows' associations may not be representative or have time to build knowledge or experience to be effective when the negotiations roll around every three or five years. It's not even clear that the actual postdoctoral fellows themselves wanted to form new associations to represent them. As a matter of fact, it's questionable that government even effectively consulted with postdoctoral fellows since there was no plan to reach out to the then nonexistent postdoctoral fellows' associations. Indeed, many postdoctoral fellows are satisfied with being represented by the graduate students' associations or faculty associations in the few areas where their work is directed and funded by an Albertan university.

Despite two rounds of consultation that unanimously advised against moving universities from the Post-secondary Learning Act to the Labour Relations Code, Bill 7 proposes to move labour disputes from a university's board of governors, academic senate, faculty association, and graduate students' association to the Labour Relations Board, which has minimal experience and capacity to learn, understand, and resolve university labour disputes. At any given time up to 50 per cent of a university's faculty and graduate students perform management functions, and this bill does little to make it clear how management functions are to be treated at the Labour Relations Board.

Additionally, this bill would invalidate agreements freely reached between management and faculty and graduate students' associations about binding arbitration. Now, let's face it. Disempowering a university's democratically elected bodies to resolve their own issues strikes at the heart of the autonomy of a university to self-govern and substitutes a government overseer to judge that which it simply cannot understand. As administrators, faculty, and graduate students have rightly pointed out, all that's necessary to comply with the Supreme Court decision is to guarantee the right to strike for faculty and graduate students who are not performing essential services, full stop. Gutting a university's ability to determine its own labour relations is completely unnecessary to comply with the Supreme Court ruling, and it reeks of a government expanding its powers in an area where the government does not trust Albertans to act in their own interests. That's beyond unfortunate.

As all stakeholders other than the government agree, this bill needs to be curtailed to remove everything unrelated to complying to the Supreme Court ruling. If it did that, Minister, we'd be happy to vote for it, but it doesn't. Unfortunately, this government has chosen to use the Supreme Court ruling as an excuse to expand the scope of the LRB, making it the priority rather than putting university workers at the forefront of the bill, which I think all Albertans would have appreciated.

Madam Chair, the introduction of this bill and changes to collective bargaining come at a peculiar time. The postsecondary review will not be completed until later this year, obviously after the bill. Two major changes, not one but two major changes, to Alberta's universities doesn't lead to certainty for institutions or faculty or students. The prospect of disruptive strikes and denial of access to jointly owned research materials and equipment also does not strengthen universities' positions as potential research and collaboration partners with domestic and international businesses interested in innovation.

Madam Chair, for these reasons and others I implore all members from all parties to join me in voting against a heavy-handed bill that's fraught with a lack of consultation and obvious overreach. Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I do have to respond to the Member for Calgary-Lougheed. I'm not sure whether he was giving a lecture in creative writing or perhaps a lecture in drama dedicated to comedic performance, but what the Member for Calgary-Lougheed did not do was state a single fact pertinent to the bill that is before us today.

He alleges that we are meddling with collegial governance. There is nothing in this bill that affects or changes collegial governance at the universities or colleges in Alberta. In fact, universities and colleges in every other province in the country that are under this same labour relations model have a collegial governance system that's in place and has been functioning for a long time, Madam Chair.

With respect to binding arbitration, there is nothing in this bill that prevents employers and employees from choosing to go to binding arbitration if both parties agree to do that, Madam Chair. We are pleased that binding arbitration will continue to be an option for faculty associations and grad student associations going forward as long as all of the parties at the table can agree to do that.

Now, the member incorrectly states that we are moving people out of the Post-secondary Learning Act and under the Labour Relations Code. Of course, if he would take the time to read the bill, he would find that that is not true whatsoever, Madam Chair. All of the faculty associations and the grad student associations remain established under the Post-secondary Learning Act, and in fact the postdoctoral associations will also be created as entities under the Post-secondary Learning Act.

The member also went on to suggest that by allowing the Labour Relations Board to rule on disputes related to labour relations, we're turning it over to an entity that knows nothing about university or college governance. Of course, had the member done his homework, Madam Chair, he would have known that we are creating a special division of the Labour Relations Board dedicated specifically to dealing only with issues in the postsecondary sector. So all of these issues that will be arbitrated will be arbitrated by people with expertise and experience in matters related to labour relations on campus. We're confident that the legislation that we're bringing forward will continue to recognize the uniqueness of labour relations on university and college campuses, just as has been done up until this point.

Where the Member for Calgary-Lougheed really drove into the ditch, Madam Chair, is with respect to postdoctoral fellows. He started off his statement by saying that at any given time in the province of Alberta there are only 100 postdoctoral fellows, which, of course, is wrong by a factor of 10. So, you know, I'm glad that they're not in charge of the budget with those kinds of order-of-magnitude errors. Of course, we know that at any given time there are at least 1,000 postdoctoral fellows at our comprehensive academic research institutes.

I wish that that was the only error that the Member for Calgary-Lougheed had in his speech with respect to postdoctoral fellows, but it's not, Madam Chair. He claims that by setting up postdoctoral fellows in associations and recognizing them as employees, we're going to somehow weaken their bargaining position. That's the complete opposite of what we're doing. We are giving postdoctoral fellows bargaining power that they've never had, that that government didn't give them for 44 years. We are the first jurisdiction under this government to proactively recognize postdoctoral fellows as employees, something that no other province has ever done without being taken to court to do so. I'm proud of the fact that we are recognizing postdoctoral fellows as employees proactively and giving them the right to bargain on behalf of their members for the first time in any Canadian province's history.

An Hon. Member: It's like you're not afraid of academia.

Mr. Schmidt: Yeah.

Anyway, Madam Chair, I believe I have successfully rebutted every erroneous point that the Member for Calgary-Lougheed gave. If I were a faculty member, I would give him an F minus for his speech, and I would encourage the member to go home and do his homework before he continues to oppose this legislation.

Thank you.

Mr. Rodney: Congratulations. That's a new low for you. [interjections] Okay. I'll call a point of order. Shall we? Point of order, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Point of order. Go ahead.

Point of Order Intemperate Language

Mr. Rodney: Earlier today there was a point of order, and there was a reference to the fact that words such as "immature," "unprofessional," and "undignified" were unbecoming of an elected official. I know that the NDP is used to being in opposition. I know that being in government is new, but take it from us who are now on this side, to act entitled, to be personally insulting – I didn't do that in my speech, Madam Chair. There were many, many references that were personal attacks, where we could rise under 23(j).

I would suggest that – and I think this would be true of these folks before they were elected – when they look to a government, they look to a government that is calm and confident, clearly communicates, and consults. I would hope they would learn from mistakes of the past, as I would trust we all would, and I would just suggest humbly to every minister of every Crown that when speaking to others, you do so with respect. I would hope that it would work both ways. Perhaps just a little encouragement to stick to the facts and not make personal attacks.

The Chair: The hon. Acting Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: You'll forgive me, Madam Chair. I think this started as a point of order. I'm going to assume that we're under 23(h), (i), and (j). Obviously, there is a significant dispute between the members as to what the facts are. They both believe the other to be incorrect. I did listen with interest to what the hon. Minister of Advanced Education said, and what he critiqued was the argument. He was quite clear that he was talking about the argument. He didn't think the argument as regards postdoctoral fellows was correct. He didn't think the argument as regards the Labour Relations Board's lack of expertise to determine who is and isn't an employee was correct. He didn't think the argument with respect to the board of governors was correct. I think that this is quite clearly a dispute as to the facts.

I didn't hear anything that resembled a personal attack, Madam Chair. I certainly heard a very vigorous attack of the argument, which is, from what I understand, what we're all here to do today. With respect, I don't believe this is a point of order.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the point of order?

There is certainly a difference of opinion in how things are interpreted. Certainly, personal attacks are not in order in this House, and I would admonish all members to be very, very careful in their use of language to avoid that kind of thing, but certainly there can be a difference of opinion as to how things are stated. I would, however, caution all members to watch when you are attempting to use humour. Sometimes that can be taken in a very personal way. Let's just be a little more careful in the language that we use.

I'll call on the hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Debate Continued

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's my privilege to stand and speak in support of Bill 7, An Act to Enhance Postsecondary Academic Bargaining. This is an act that is further commitment from the government to ensure that there is fair legislation that makes life better for hard-working Albertans. It's a bill that would modernize Alberta's labour relations model for our postsecondary sector, and in 2016 it's something that would extend the essential services legislation that was introduced last year and passed in the House. It would be extending the bargaining rights of what that bill does.

What this does in part is that it is recognition of postdoctoral fellow associations' feedback. There was feedback that was received from Alberta's three existing postdoctoral fellow associations during the consultation process. That is what I am hoping to speak to today. For anyone that would like to look at the executive summary of the 108 pages that were provided to the government and to the public, because they were sought out for advice and for feedback during this consultation process, I have five copies that I will table. It is titled Postdoctoral Associations of Alberta Post-secondary Labour Relations Consultation Report for Alberta Advanced Education, January 2017. It is written in part by the University of Lethbridge Postdoctoral Fellows Association, the University of Alberta Postdoctoral Fellows Association, the Postdoctoral Association of the University of Calgary, and the Canadian Association of Postdoctoral Scholars. I will not try to pronounce what it translates to in French.

There are some very important things that are in amongst this. The time right now that we're at is that there was time that was needed for the postsecondary institutions to discuss more what the impacts of the Supreme Court ruling would be on this in guaranteeing these rights of collective bargaining to Canadians and by extension, of course, to Albertans.

I'm happy to stand and support these changes that are from the hon. Minister of Advanced Education. What this does is that it extends the constitutionally protected rights to postsecondary faculty, graduate students, and, for the first time in Canada, to postdoctoral fellows, who will be formally recognized as employees. Also, what it will do is to repeal and create a new division in the Labour Relations Code for the postsecondary sector. It means that for the first time in Canada we will be formally recognizing the status of postdoctoral fellows as employees so that they can have improved rights and protected rights and have fair and respectful workplaces.

Also, with the proposed changes, these graduate students' and postdoctoral fellows' associations would be responsible for bargaining with institutions for mutually beneficial collective agreements. These postdoctoral fellows would be able to come to prudent agreements that respect workers' constitutional rights. It's something that, going forward, is in the interest of the public dollars.

The introduction of this bill last week – we have heard from many stakeholders about the proposed changes. I have been reached out to by a constituent of mine from Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville. I will share that person's thoughts about this with the Member for Calgary-Lougheed because apparently he did not hear positive feedback from any postdoctoral fellows or ones that are part of that agreement right now with the postsecondary institutions.

I was contacted by a Dr. Miranda Brun. She serves in the department of agricultural, food, and nutritional science at the Li Ka Shing Centre for Health Research Innovation at the University of Alberta. She was someone that actually had reached out to me about a year ago because she was concerned that when we are looking at making sure that rights of women and opportunities for women and parents in general are being addressed by this new government in Alberta, we are ensuring that we're giving those opportunities to everyone. While she has started her family and won't be able to enjoy these rights, to finally be able to bargain for and ensure these maternity and parental rights, she wanted to make sure that this was something that I had been made aware of and that I advocated for because she wanted to make sure that it was something that was available for people after her, that would finally be able to have families while pursuing these fellowships at universities.

Some of the numbers that are in this very long submission to government. These people are of family age. I think the average age is 34. They're in these very long career tracks, trying to attain tenure at a university. We don't want these people to feel as though they have to put their entire lives on hold in the interests of having children.

Some of the points that are also in this submission. There's a group called the Canadian Association of Postdoctoral Scholars, which I will refer to from here on out as CAPS. In the CAPS 2016 survey data there were some very interesting and alarming statistics for those that are working as postdocs in Alberta: 16 per cent lack dental insurance, 29 per cent lack drug plan coverage, 34 per cent lack health insurance for their family, 35 per cent lack extended health coverage, 60 per cent lack vision and eye care, 76 per cent lack life insurance, and 84 per cent lack long-term disability. One of the other statistics is that only 31 per cent of these postdoctoral fellows have access to benefits from other sources such as a spouse, so the lack of standard employee benefits represents an additional financial burden for postdocs and their families.

I just want to pull out some very relevant information from their submission. I'll quote a bit from it. The presidents of the Postdoctoral Association of the University of Calgary, the University of Alberta Postdoctoral Fellows Association, and the University of Lethbridge Postdoctoral Fellows Association were bringing forward these concerns and aspirations on behalf of approximately 1,000 postdoctoral fellows and scholars who work in Alberta.

These postdocs do incredibly important work. They are highly skilled scientists and educators who hold a PhD, an MD, or equivalent, are members of the academic research community, and are critical drivers for our innovation-based economy. Due to their extensive training, postdocs are positioned to tackle complex research and innovation challenges in our province. Of course, Madam Chair, this is something that is incredibly important when we want to make sure that we have a strong, diversified economy, that we are making sure that Alberta is a valued place to come and do work. Due to this, it gives them the ability to tackle these complex issues in our province.

The typical duration of a postdoctoral fellowship has evolved from a temporary, one- to two-year position to a two- to five-year plus period.

Alberta universities attract many world-class postdocs.

The designation of the Alberta postdocs as trainees has resulted – in their opinion, they have ended up as a very ill-defined mixture between student and employee. The majority of Alberta's postdocs are precluded from contributing to EI and CPP. Their trainee status also makes them ineligible for many of the resources that are afforded to staff and students such as assistance with immigration issues, access to career services, and on-campus health and mental health programs.

It's noted that the challenges faced by postdocs at Alberta universities are not unique, that the labour relations boards in other provinces have also faced similar issues. In January 2012 the Ontario Labour Relations Board ruled that the University of Toronto postdocs were employees, and that enabled their group to unionize. In its decision the board rejected the university's argument that postdocs are academic trainees more similar to students than to faculty members. A similar ruling was also reached in Quebec in 2011, where the labour relations board ruled that postdoctoral fellows were employees.

Postdoctoral fellowship individuals across Canada and around the world continue to face these challenges. What this will do is that it will make Alberta a leader, and that is how we will continue to attract exceptional postdocs to Alberta and strengthen our economy through high-quality research and development in academia, industry, and the private sector.

You might ask what a postdoc is. Postdocs are highly trained and skilled individuals with a PhD, an MD, or an equivalent.

The postdocs help to drive the research and innovation and advanced education agenda of Alberta, and their work directly benefits their faculty supervisors and the institutions where they work, thus indirectly benefiting all Albertans.

Postdocs primarily work to gain experience and recognition in their field and in order to be competitive for highly coveted tenure-track faculty positions at postsecondary institutions. It makes it hard for it to be a career goal without enough faculty positions that can accommodate them, which is why they see these changes, being able to have CPP and EI, to have employment benefits, as being incredibly important.

According to the data collected in the CAPS 2016 survey, the average postdoc working in Alberta in 2016 was 34, married or living in a common-law relationship. A third of them, Madam Chair, were parents, and of those that were parents, a third had more than one child.

Of the postdocs surveyed, 35 per cent were Canadian citizens, 20 per cent permanent residents or landed immigrants, and 45 per cent were international postdocs holding work permits.

To give a bit of a snapshot of what an average postdoc makes – it's fairly humble – the gross annual income for postdocs working in Alberta was $49,530 on average, with a median income of $47,500.

It's worth noting that postdocs in Alberta pay full provincial and federal income tax, yet the vast majority of them are not classified as employees and are therefore denied access to social support programs, including employment insurance and the Canada pension plan. Based on tax forms collected, they saw that only 16 per cent of those working at the U of A, the U of C, and Lethbridge were classified as employees. Of course, in the absence of employee status some of Alberta's postdocs are also denied access to standard benefits such as dental insurance, drug plans, vision and eye care, and employee retirement plans.

They talk about the age of the postdoctoral fellows, postdocs, and it's saying that, you know, it's an age where people are saving for retirement. They're settling down, they're trying to buy a home, and they're trying to start a family. Of course, I'll just remind the House that this is why I received a phone call, because we are talking about maternity and paternal benefits for average, hard-working Albertans that are just trying to make a life for themselves.

There are a few notes here, in particular about postdocs that would be pregnant, and it's making mention of the fact that there is no guaranteed paid maternity leave and that expectant new mothers are typically reluctant to come forward and raise this issue publicly. As postdocs they generally lack any representation, support, or power to negotiate with their host institutions.

Also, part of it was a question on what these postdocs believe was the most important, and among those surveyed, the top three ended up being employment insurance, Canada pension plan, and parental leave, and then at the end was vision and eye care and a retirement plan.

There are just a few more notes that I would like to share with the House: 80 per cent of the 231 postdoc respondents working in Alberta in early 2016 indicated that asking for these statutory employment benefits should be an essential or high priority for those that are representing them right now, and it's for this reason that they provide this chart. It actually has some fairly alarming things to look at when we're talking about labour code amendments and Employment Standards Code amendments because it really gives quite a jarring picture of the things that some of us take very for granted.

Looking at the guidelines and policies for postdocs at Alberta's postsecondary research institutions, you'll see that what they have in common is that as their primary employment status they are mostly considered trainees; there is either very little or nonexistent access to EI and CPP; it's very difficult to get paid maternity leave unless you can get an external award for that and the same with paternal leave; there is either very little or no paid bereavement leave if a loved one dies; there is no paid sick leave, no job-loss coverage, no compassionate care leave; and there is no access to employer pension plan programs.

There are some arguments that they make in their submission if the Member for Calgary-Lougheed would like to look at it for his own information. It's talking about that Alberta postdocs believe they meet the requirements to be considered employees, and some of those reasons are that they have set hours of work, that they use the tools and equipment that are there, that they are part of the workplace, that they receive this training, and that they are included in most of the things that under normal circumstances make an Albertan an employee.

Some of the other numbers that they talk about are that postdocs spend the majority of their time engaged in research and academic work, which means that 92 per cent of their time is focused on research and academic work and that only 8 per cent of their time is focused on career development. What concerns them as a group is that if they fulfill their fellowship and they don't attain a tenure track in the university, not being an employee means that they are not able to take care of themselves and their family when they are unemployed.

The other key pieces here are that many postdocs working in other provinces are classified as employees, but that's only because the groups in Ontario and Quebec fought this in the courts. So I'm very proud and pleased that Alberta is going to be a leader in including these groups as part of the legislation and that we are being proactive, addressing these constitutional rights in a proactive way.

A couple of the other things that I found very important were . . . [Mrs. Littlewood's speaking time expired] Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the bill? Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

[The remaining clauses of Bill 7 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Bill 8

An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Stony Plain-St. Albert.

Mr. Horne: Spruce Grove-St. Albert. Crossboundary road, totally different community, but they do get along very well, so I suppose it's on topic.

As I was just commenting, I have these two cities in my riding, Spruce Grove and St. Albert. The two of them don't really interact too much, which creates a lot of challenges, but where they do interact a lot is with the counties and communities that are more direct neighbours to them. Spruce Grove has a rather well-known relationship with the town of Stony Plain, right next door, as well as the county of Parkland, that surrounds both of those communities.

These three communities, of course, have come together on various occasions in support of the community and to further various projects, most notably the tri leisure centre, which was supported by all three communities coming together with some assistance from other places, most notably TransAlta in the construction of the tri leisure centre. The centre, of course, includes a gym, and it hosts several events. Just last month there was the tri-community expo, which hosted a lot of small businesses, and they put on a bit of a trade show. Both myself and the Member for Stony Plain were present, and it was very well attended. This is just indicative of the type of events that happen in the community and that are supported by all three municipalities.

Now, Madam Chair, another great example is St. Albert. I don't know how many members in this House know, but historically St. Albert and Sturgeon county and at some points in history even St. Albert and Edmonton didn't get along that well, in part because Edmonton kept trying to annex it, but that's another story. After the last municipal election the county councillors began hosting some minglers for all of the elected officials. These communities have really improved relationships, especially at the administrative level, and there have been some discussions on how they can better support each other. These conversations, of course, include places like the towns of Morinville, Redwater, various other communities in Sturgeon county. I think that these two are models of municipal collaboration and co-operation, and I think they're great examples of the sorts of things that Albertans hope to see from their elected officials.

Now, on a bit of a larger level and kind of related to Edmonton trying to annex St. Albert are boards like the Capital Region Board, and much co-operation has grown out of that. You know, Madam Chair, there was a recent report on how the Edmonton region can become a global competitor, and there was a lot of discussion amongst several of the mayors. They commissioned a report, and it indicated a lot of very interesting things like collaboration on transportation and on economic development. I'm really glad to see that this is a growing trend here in Alberta and, as far as I can tell, across the country, and I think that there's a lot of reason for optimism there. You know, this is a great trend to see, this collaboration and move towards supporting all of our citizens in a co-operative manner.

Ms McKittrick: Why wouldn't you use the word "collaborative"?

Mr. Horne: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park is commenting on my use of the word "collaborative," but I think that's about the sixth time I've used it in this speech.

I think that's just a great, great suggestion or a great comment on the direction that we're starting to see in the area. We are by no means perfect, neither in the tri region nor in a relationship between Sturgeon county and St. Albert nor within the capital region. Indeed, I don't think any of the relationships across the province are perfect, but that, I suppose, is more of an indication that I don't believe there is such a thing as a perfect relationship. There's always room for improvement. There's always something that we could be working better on. Perhaps it's communication between, in this case, administrations, or perhaps it's trying to find a common project that both communities want and that we can work together on.

Another example of such a project is what is now Servus Place in St. Albert. This project, when it was first proposed, was originally proposed as a collaboration between St. Albert, Sturgeon county, and Morinville, but as these projects are quite expensive, these recreation centres, they really wanted to try to spread the cost out a bit. Now, there's a lot of insider baseball that happened. It went from being located just outside of St. Albert in Sturgeon county to being located in Riel Business Park inside of St. Albert. Very quickly the county and the town expressed their unease with this move, and both communities backed out. Now the citizens of St. Albert are left as the sole tax base for that facility.

This comes up a lot in my community. There are a lot of people who, you know, go to Servus Place and they see people from Morinville, from the county, and indeed sometimes they'll see people from Redwater or other communities drive in. There's nothing wrong with that; they're certainly entitled to. It's a great facility. If you haven't had a chance, Madam Chair, I would highly recommend checking out either the tri leisure or Servus Place. You know, when you have such an expensive project, it makes it a lot more challenging for citizens to stomach that when we're stuck with the entirety of the bill. Of course, there are user fees, but the actual construction of that we're still paying off.

We're starting to outgrow Servus Place as well. Across the capital region we're still seeing a lot of population growth. Spruce Grove had a 5 per cent growth rate last year, which is one of its slowest years in recent years. The population of Spruce Grove has doubled in the past 10 years.

Mr. S. Anderson: That would be Beaumont.

Mr. Horne: The minister is commenting on Beaumont, which, unfortunately, took the place of Spruce Grove as the fastest growing community, but that might be because they had a smaller population, I would suggest.

Mr. S. Anderson: It's because I live there.

Mr. Horne: I'm not so sure it's because the minister lives there, but indeed all three – Beaumont, Spruce Grove, and St. Albert – are among the best communities in the country to raise a family in. There are multiple lists that those three communities have made it to in terms of raising a family, starting a business. I highly recommend looking into those communities as examples of what we can do across the province.

Just as an aside, I think I would be remiss if I didn't comment that the mayor of Spruce Grove, at every opportunity he gets, tries to convince everybody to move to Spruce Grove. He has even tried to convince the mayor of Calgary to move to Spruce Grove. I don't think he's winning that, but he's very passionate about his community.

You know, I think that this bill really supports that co-operation between communities. It furthers it from last session's Bill 21. One thing I was really happy to see is the opportunity to include our indigenous communities in those collaborative frameworks.

You know, I represent the Alexander First Nation as well as those two cities, and I think that there are a lot of opportunities for us to include communities like the Alexander First Nation in conversations with Sturgeon county. Indeed, in the tri-community – they're outside of my riding; they're in the Member for Stony Plain's riding – you have the Paul band and the Enoch band. Just outside, a bit further north – I'm trying to remember the name of the county – in the minister of agriculture's riding, you have the Alexis First Nation. Those three communities work very closely with their cities already, and I think that there are probably a lot of opportunities there to support both the bands and the cities in their infrastructure.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. Horne: Whitecourt-St. Anne. Thank you.

I think that this is a great move. I think it's in keeping with the commitment to the Truth and Reconciliation Commission and to the United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples, and I really congratulate the minister on his work on that.

You know, we're starting to see that co-operation between those communities more and more. Just recently Spruce Grove had their first city-sponsored truth and reconciliation event. Some of the students out of the high school had done some artwork on the theme of truth and reconciliation, really focusing on the intergenerational trauma that the residential schools has caused. It was a really interesting event. It was hosted at the library.

The city brought out an elder from – I forget. I don't recall at the moment what band he was from, what nation he was from, but he came out, you know, understanding his audience and how new of an experience this was for a lot of the people there. He took the time to walk through what a smudging represents and how to do a proper smudging in his culture, and I think that was very well received. Certainly, it was one of the first times that somebody had walked through the symbolism behind all of it for me. It wasn't, of course, my first smudging, but it was one of the first times that somebody had walked through it. So that was good.

Then there were some speeches from the students on what their artwork represented, followed by a statement from myself and the mayor. The school board also participated in that as well, which is great, especially as it was the students' artwork that brought us there that day.

I think that events like that are starting to open up those connections between the cities and indeed between school boards and their First Nations, really trying to strengthen those relationships and come together not just in the interest of truth and reconciliation but also in supporting their communities. You know, there are a lot of First Nations people who make a lot of use of the local rec centres. I think cities and First Nations will really like to make use of that dialogue on that.

Now, moving a bit forward, we have a lot of opportunities here. I'm just really happy to see that we're moving towards co-operation between all of the different facets that make up the Alberta municipal world. You know, we're seeing groups like the Capital Region Board. I can never remember the name of the board in Calgary, but there's a similar organization that's starting to form. I think that's a great step forward.

You know, as I commented on the other day, Madam Chair, almost half of the working residents of St. Albert commute in to Edmonton every day, and a large portion of the population of Spruce Grove commutes into Edmonton every day, but they haven't always historically been included in the discussion on how Edmonton has to look at its transportation flow. I think having this co-operative framework, this collaborative framework, really opens the door to those conversations so that we can support the citizens of Edmonton as they plan and move forward with their planning but also so that we can support people in the surrounding communities.

A prime example is actually just kind of off to the east here, I believe it is. At the transit centre there is a St. Albert bus stop, and that was the bus that I used to take almost every day both when I lived a bit closer to the transit station in St. Albert and as a student. There's a direct line that runs from the St. Albert Centre station just outside of my riding, but I digress on that. That line runs straight from there, well, it used to run – the next stop was MacEwan University, so that was very convenient for me. After that there are, I think, two or three stops, and then it arrives here at Government Centre. I think that that's a good indication of just how much of the St. Albert population commutes into not just the downtown core but indeed to the government buildings.

Now, of course, Spruce Grove also has a lot of working, commuting population. I don't recall the exact percentage off the top of my head, but it is quite sizable. But it's also shifting, Madam Chair. Historically Spruce Grove was a farming community, but as it has been growing and as it has been – you know, it's one of the cheaper communities in the area in terms of residential housing prices, so there's a lot of growth in Spruce Grove. What we're seeing is a shift from a lot of retiring farmers and professionals that are supporting the farming community, and we're moving more towards people choosing to live there as a bit of a step between the big city and the small town, as they're moving to the Edmonton region, whether it's for work or to be closer to family. In some cases there are also students who are graduating, people just beginning to start their family, start their life, and they're choosing Spruce Grove.

That's driven a lot of the growth in Spruce Grove, I believe. This growth has meant that Spruce Grove is really kind of on the cusp of reflecting on their identity, on what it means to be Spruce Grove. Ten years ago, even, it was a lot older of a city in terms of its average age, you know, a lot of the people had an agriculture background, and you can still see that a lot today.

Thank you.

4:40

The Chair: Hon. members, before I recognize the next member to speak, I'd just like to remind everyone that the purpose of bill debate in Committee of the Whole is to actually look at the clauses of the bill, discuss portions of it, submit amendments, and that sort of thing rather than giving speeches that are sort of just generalities, that are perhaps more appropriate for a response to the Speech from the Throne or something like that. It's helpful, so we can get on with the business, if we do it in a more proper way.

I'd like to recognize the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I wholeheartedly agree that the MGA is fantastic and exciting and quite interesting. There's a lot in there and a lot we can talk about. As you know, we have consulted extensively on this, and we've heard from thousands of people and organizations.

What I'd like to do now is actually bring forward an amendment if I could.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A1.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Chair. We heard recently that we shouldn't miss the opportunity to make this change while the act is open, so we prepared an amendment regarding business improvement areas. Currently the status quo is that business owners pay the levy for the business improvement area. Municipalities and BIAs are asking for this change to improve community collaboration. The proposed change is to update the MGA so that business improvement area levies may be applied to property owners so that both business owners and property owners may be members of a business improvement area. This amendment is widely supported throughout the BIA community as well as by the cities of Edmonton and Calgary, where most of the Alberta BIAs are located.

We heard from the business improvement area council of Edmonton recently that while this is a small change around wording, it is critical to BIA success. We heard from the business improvement area in Calgary that this amendment will support BIAs in their work to improve a business area and increase property values. We heard from the city of Calgary and the city of Edmonton that they strongly support this amendment and that their local consultation revealed widespread support for it as well.

This is a consensus item among stakeholders, and I am happy to bring forward this amendment in response to their request. We've always said that this act is all about collaboration, and this amendment is in keeping with this spirit and will ensure that both business owners and property owners collaborate as members of BIAs. I would encourage all members to support this. I'm happy to explain or take questions where there are some.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to the amendment, to provide some additional time for us to consider the amendment. What I will do is speak to the clauses of the bill and, in particular, the clauses of this very important amendment that was moved by my colleague from across the way the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

You know, one of the things that from time to time can be a little concerning about the lack of use of the committee process here in the Chamber – and I know, Madam Chair, you will be familiar with me rising from time to time to speak to pieces of legislation where I make a recommendation that we send that particular piece of legislation to committee. One of the great strengths of that and one of the great strengths of the Westminster parliamentary system – most jurisdictions, in fact, use a much more robust committee system – is that it would have allowed an opportunity for all members of the Chamber to speak directly to the very stakeholders that my colleague from across the way the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Member for Leduc-Beaumont mentioned and those supporters of this particular amendment. It would have allowed them to speak to all members of the Chamber and, in fact, would have allowed the Official Opposition the opportunity to peruse and have a much better understanding of why they would be recommending an amendment like this.

Unfortunately, what we have before us is an amendment that is of significant length, and I know that my colleague from across the way, the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Member for Leduc-Beaumont, did have the opportunity to reach out to my colleague from Livingstone-Macleod very briefly yesterday and speak for just a couple of moments about some of the intention of the amendment. However, it was not, by any stretch of the imagination, a full briefing on this particular amendment but was, as I understand it, much more what we heard from the minister today.

It does present a bit of a challenge for the opposition when it comes to making decisions on the fly about supporting an amendment or not. I think many folks will be familiar with this quote: "Trust, but verify." While I appreciate the comments from my colleague on the other side of the House, the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Member for Leduc-Beaumont, and would like to take him at his word around his opportunity to reach out to the stakeholders of these different districts, I and, I would expect, members on this side of the House haven't had that same opportunity. So we're going to very briefly make a decision on this amendment based upon the comments from the minister and our ability, and I see my colleague from Livingstone-Macleod very quickly reading through the rest of the amendment. It would be helpful if we could do these things in a much different setting.

The other thing that I might just point out is that while I am a big fan of getting legislation right the first time it comes through the Chamber, I from time to time do find it curious that we see the introduction of a piece of government legislation that they assure all members of the Assembly they had consulted on widely. In fact, they'd released the Continuing the Conversation document during the last legislative session and, to their credit, did continue that conversation with a number of the associations and the rural districts and with business and industry. I know that we'll talk at some length about the need to balance those stakeholders, particularly around taxation ratios. While, you know, it's very important that we create certainty for municipalities, it's also important that we create certainty for industry, and I know that Bill 8 doesn't quite do that. To their credit, they have done a significant amount of continuing that conversation.

But I am a little surprised that this particular amendment was unable to be included in the original legislation. I'm wondering if the minister might just provide a little bit of context for us as to what exactly transpired between the introduction of the bill and whatever stakeholder consultation took place that would change the government's mind enough that they would then go ahead and decide to make a fairly significant change to the legislation only a few days after it was introduced. I wondered if he might provide a little bit more context as to how and why that happened.

Perhaps he could go into a little bit more detail as I understand that some of this particular amendment changes the way that a municipality may be able to tax – as you know, Madam Chair, I received it less than 30 seconds prior to standing – changing some of the structure around the way a municipality could tax a business inside a larger strip mall or mall, changing some structure around that. If he could provide some context, I know that members on this side of the House certainly would appreciate that.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. S. Anderson: Sure. Thank you very much to the member across for mentioning my riding multiple times. It is a fantastic riding.

This is not a massive, significant piece of legislation or amendment that we're bringing through. To be honest, it is simply that right now the status quo is that municipalities tax the business owners. All the BIAs and the cities and the municipalities have come forward and said that they would like the opportunity to do either business or property. It's simply an enabling tool for them so that they can come together around the table. For some of the property owners, if they aren't taxed, if they don't have that ability where people can get them, say, a vacant piece of land or what have you, it's really hard to track them down and find out who they are. This is one of the things the BIAs talked about with the property owners and things like that and said: "Well, this is a way that we could have you at the table. You want to be at the table. Municipalities want it; cities want it." To be honest, it is very straightforward. You know, you don't have to take me at my word. I know that. You want to get verification. But it's a pretty straightforward amendment that we're doing here.

We have heard from and I've had letters from the Alberta BIA council, Edmonton and Calgary. We do have a lot of feedback on this. It had come up, you know, before I was Minister of Municipal Affairs, way back in the day, not that long ago, I guess. It was something that I met with the BIAs on about two weeks ago. To be honest, I think it was just something where, with all the other things that were going on, the regulations and the legislation, somehow we just hadn't worked it in there. They came back to us and said: "Hey, you know what? This is a consensus issue. We're not really understanding why it wasn't added into it." We said: "You know what? You're right. This is a pretty straightforward amendment. Let's have a discussion."

So we got letters from some of the different BIAs just to confirm that that was what they wanted still, and they did, and we got approval from them. That's why we brought it forward. It's pretty simple. It is straightforward. You know, I talked to the member opposite yesterday about it, and we were waiting on some approvals and some of these letters to come in just for confirmation. We got those, and now here we are.

The Chair: Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. To my colleague from across the way, the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and Member for Leduc-Beaumont: I appreciate your remarks. I appreciate the fact that you've gotten some feedback from the BIAs and the municipality. If you can help me to understand, I would appreciate it. Does this change the way that a municipality is able to tax an individual business? Have you heard from industry, not just the BIAs? Have you heard from small-business owners that this change may or may not impact? I appreciate that while it might be a simple amendment, I don't necessarily have the full grasp of exactly how the change affects the end-user. Have you heard back from small businesses that may be impacted, or are they unlikely to be impacted? Or is it just feedback from the BIAs?

Mr. S. Anderson: It's actually a levy that the municipalities already have in place. It's not something we're introducing brand new. It's something where the municipalities have a levy on business owners in business improvement areas. So, yes, it's small business. It's all the businesses that are involved in these municipalities that would be involved in the BIAs. That's where it comes from. All it is is that instead of only pointing out particular businesses, you also have the opportunity to have that levy on a property; for example, if you have a vacant or destitute building, something like that. That's all it is.

It's just making it so that it can be either/or rather than only making it on business. That's how this works. Municipalities and small businesses who are part of these BIAs: these are the ones who asked us for this. It is quite straightforward in that respect. That's kind of why I say that. These small businesses are all involved in this, and these are the ones that are asking for it. That's really all it is. It's really quite straightforward, to be honest with you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A1?

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Chair: Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to Bill 8? The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Yes. Thank you, Madam Chair. Good afternoon, everyone, once again. I would like to first of all let the pages know that I am going to be introducing an amendment in a couple of moments.

Firstly, I'd like to talk a little bit about the area of concern I have. My topic this afternoon once again is going to be the 5 to 1 tax ratio which is part of Bill 8. We spoke about this at great length yesterday afternoon. With the results of those conversations, Madam Chair, I would like to therefore get back to that topic after all the other topics we've had today. I may be speaking a little bit at length here after we distribute this amendment. Basically, this is an amendment about the uncertainty of time and the lack of a specified time frame in the clauses referring to the 5 to 1 tax ratio. That's what this amendment is about.

I'll hand that over right now. I'll provide some time for the distribution, and then I'll be back up again.

Thank you.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A2.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Madam Chair. I guess I'll proceed. I know some members haven't received it as yet, but I think I can go ahead because some have. Basically, just to refresh everyone's memory, the 5 to 1 ratio, once again, is a change in the mill rate that a lot of municipalities have been used to in the past couple of decades, really, in most respects. Those 19 to 22 communities, and I'm not sure which is the correct number right now, where the communities have a tax ratio that's more than – I see 20 from the minister right now. [interjections] Okay.

Anyway, I'll just read it out loud if that's okay, Madam Chair. I move that Bill 8, An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government, be amended in section 1(31)

- (a) by striking out clause (b) and substituting the following:
- (b) by adding the following after subsection (3):
 - (3.1) If in any year after 2016 a non-conforming municipality has a tax ratio that is greater than 5:1, the non-conforming municipality shall reduce its tax ratio to 5:1 on or before May 1, 2029.
- (b) by striking out clause (d).

Just to give you an understanding of what that really means, we had said yesterday – and we are fairly firm on this – that we believe that the clauses in Bill 8 should have included, instead of an unspecified time, some sort of a time that municipalities know they can plan for in the future where these changes have to be made. We recognize that in terms of industry needs and all other kinds of things for the economy of Alberta, there needs to be some time when these tax ratios are in some regard remedied from where they are now, but we don't think it's fair to not specify a time because we don't think that municipalities and residents and Albertans can plan without knowing when the deadline is going to occur.

I would like, in that regard, to support this with a message. This might seem a little bit unconventional in some respects for today, but as you know, today is the one-year anniversary of the wildfire that devastated the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo. My colleague and friend the hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition is there today, actually, as are others, the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo as well, to participate in the festivities honouring all those who were displaced by the wildfire. Since my colleagues are unable to participate here today, they asked if I would read a letter into the record on their behalf, which I will do now, Madam Chair.

Good Afternoon fellow colleagues,

I am sorry that I am unable to be there in person with all of you today to participate in debate on Bill 8, An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government and more importantly to speak in support of the amendment my colleague has just moved.

The residents of RMWB are facing the prospect of our seeing our taxes being raised [by almost as much as] 300%. If the proposed amendment is defeated and Bill 8 is passed unamended, it would result in the residential property taxes in RMWB and 21 other municipalities being raised significantly, potentially without warning, on the whim of the Minister.

An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government, strength. I think if I was to describe the community of Fort McMurray and the Regional Municipality of Wood Buffalo in a word that word would be strength.

Strength – Is what you call loading up 60 frightened kids, whose parents were unreachable and evacuating out of Fort McMurray, not knowing where it was in fact you were going. Think about that. Fire is literally biting at your ankles and you've got 60 of your community's most vulnerable citizens packed on a bus, none of whom have been able to connect with their parents, you don't know what's happening, or even where you are going. Hours later you finally end up in Edmonton, 450 kms from where you began. Tired and hungry. Scared. But alive. That's strength.

Strength – Is hearing about the hundreds of people who fled their homes only to become stranded on the highway because they've run out of gas; and loading up your pickup truck with 500 liters of diesel and gasoline and driving towards the inferno. Think about that for a moment. Your first response to one of the largest natural disasters in our nation's history is to fill your vehicle up to the brim with gasoline and diesel and drive as close to the fire as possible and then spend the next 40 hours saving hundreds of your fellow citizens. That's strength.

Strength – Is fighting desperately for more than 24 hours without sleep, to save a stranger's house while your own home burns to the ground in front of you. When you finally get a moment to breathe you spend it calling your wife and telling her the house where you've made your lives together. The home in which your children were born into. The home you lived in. Laughed in. Cried in. Loved in was gone. That's strength.

A year has passed since my community was tested by "the beast". I am proud of the resilience of my community and the outpouring of support we have received from every corner of this magnificent province. Fort McMurray and the Regional Municipality of Wood Buffalo will rebuild, better, and stronger than before. But just as we needed your help and support during the devastating wildfire of one year ago, we need your help and support again today [here in this House].

It was signed:

Sincerely,

Hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

In closing, without the proposed amendment, the minister would be the sole decision-maker for when and how a municipality that currently exceeds a nonresidential-to-residential property tax ratio of 5 to 1 must comply. For any community that is unprecedented. For a community in the early stages of recovering from one of the world's natural disasters, the worst one in our nation's history, it is totally unacceptable.

This amendment balances the need for municipalities in the province to become a competitive and attractive place to do business with the needs of everyday Albertans to live in safe and viable communities. Unfortunately, the issues that are caused with this nonresidential property tax increasing beyond the 5 to 1 ratio are not easily fixed in one, two, three, or even five years. The process of lowering the property tax ratio will take time. Municipalities need certainty. Business and industry need certainty. The best way for the government to provide municipalities with certainty is to pass this amendment, setting a definite timeline, setting in some predictability, setting in some sort of balancing idea that will strike a balance between taxing and encouraging business to thrive and grow and prosper.

I would ask the House to seriously look at this amendment for setting a prescribed timeline so that it won't impact some of the speculative real estate market and all of that as badly as it likely will if it's not amended in this way. It is a 12-year timeline that we're asking for, and I hope that all of you can give it serious consideration and, hopefully, your approval.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the chance to stand and speak to this amendment, and I appreciate the member bringing this forward. I understand why he's brought this forward. One of the things I'd like to know is: why 2029? Why 12 years? I don't know where that number came from.

We committed to work with RMWB and industry on time frames, and we committed to wait until they were done working with industry on what would work for them. That's what I'm going to do. That was my commitment. I've committed that to other municipalities as well. I understand when we talk about certainty and things like that, you know, out there for these guys, industry and municipalities.

I do want to say that, you know, the point about residential taxes rising 300 per cent is patently untrue, Madam Chair. I'm not sure why that keeps getting said. It was said on the radio today, too, and it's unfortunate to spread misinformation. I don't like doing that. I don't agree with it.

You know, I'm going to work with the RMWB, and we will make sure that we find something that works for them. Maybe it's 10 years. Maybe it's 14 years. Maybe it's 15 years. I don't know yet until we've heard from them exactly what they think they can do, what time frame they think they can do this in and what would work for them.

I've been in Wood Buffalo a few times now. I've spoken with the council. I've spoken to industry. I've spoken with the chamber of commerce about this. You know, something that I want to make sure that I do is to hear from the people that are being affected by this. I was there on Sunday night and on Monday, and I talked to residents that were there. I talked to people that were affected by the wildfire, and it is a really tough day for a lot of them. A lot of them want to get over it, and they want to try to move forward in a positive way.

You know, I met with a fellow when I was there in February named Steve Menard, who's building his own house. He lost everything, and he's building his own house. I got to have lunch with him again when I was there on Monday. I'll tell you that I think everybody in this province needs to meet Steve Menard and hear the way he looks at things. He lost everything, but he remembers when he was young that he had a hockey coach that said: you're an ACE, Steve; you need to run your life like you're an ACE. That's attitude, character, and enthusiasm. That's the way he works. So when he meets people on the street that are having hard times or they've lost everything, he brings them up, he lifts them up, and he talks to them about the positive things that we can do.

For me, working with the RMWB and all the municipalities out there on these ratios is a hugely positive thing. Communication is key. That's part of who I am and what I do. I've always been that way. That's how I was brought up. You know, I look a person in the face, and I shake their hand. That's the way I am. So when I told these guys in RMWB that my commitment was to wait until they came forward with their recommendations, I was telling them the truth, and I will stand by that.

I appreciate where the member is coming from. I do. I understand what he's trying to say. But I have been there and have spoken with these people numerous times. My staff, my administration: it's a constant communication. I want to make sure that everybody knows that. I don't do things just on a whim. It's not who I am. I make sure I have facts. I don't speculate. I don't use assumptions. I don't get fears out there for people when they don't need that right now. They know that we have their back. They know that my Municipal Affairs ministry has their back, and I've told them I have their back. I'm not going to go out there and talk about apocalyptic things that are out there that possibly could happen in the future when I haven't heard back from them. Speculation isn't going to do any of us any good. Once we have information from the RMWB and industry, then we can make the decisions.
