Highlight Labour Market Recovery. It shows things that are looking up in Alberta. Jobs are up, and the publication states that “more Albertans continue to find employment” as the “downward trend in EI recipients is expected to continue.”

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table a document, a letter that I penned to the Minister of Transportation. It says: “Do you recall on April 23, 2014, when you [said] the following . . .?” I just might add, “Mr. Premier, will you please stop the bafflegab” — that’s my favorite part of the letter — “and admit that your government is interfering with the freedom of information process?”

Motions under Standing Order 42

The Speaker: Hon. members, I think we’re at the point where there was a motion earlier. I would call upon Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, the Leader of the Official Opposition.

Provincial Response to Federal Policies

Mr. Nixon:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to immediately develop a co-ordinated strategy responding to the government of Canada’s recent policies that detrimentally affect Alberta including but not limited to the proposed amendments to income tax legislation that impacts small business and its positions regarding the assessment of upstream emissions that encroach on Alberta’s constitutional jurisdiction with respect to the development of Alberta’s natural resources.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 42 I would like to ask for unanimous consent to move the following motion. I have the appropriate number of copies for the page.

The Speaker: Hon. members . . .

Mr. Nixon: I get to speak to it. I was trying to wait and make sure that it was okay to speak.

The Speaker: Okay. I thought you’d finished.

Mr. Nixon: Am I okay to continue?

The Speaker: Please.

Mr. Nixon: Thanks. For months Alberta’s small-business professionals and farmers have expressed grave concern with the Trudeau Liberals’ proposed changes to the tax code. I’m sure my colleagues in the government have heard the same thing back in their constituencies. I know my colleagues in the United Conservative Party have heard a lot of concerns from Albertans, a lot of concerns about the need to urgently deal with and address this issue, concerns particularly on how this move by the federal government, the Trudeau Liberals, will impact their small businesses in Alberta, farms here in Alberta. I know there were town halls held all across this province for months, well attended. I’m sure you had the opportunity to be at a couple yourself, Mr. Speaker, to listen to some of the concerns your constituents in Medicine Hat probably have with this.

The reason this is urgent, Mr. Speaker, is that small businesses are the engine of our economy. Ottawa’s changes, the changes that are being brought forward by the Trudeau Liberals, are risking derailing any sort of economic recovery here in the province of Alberta. Constituents that I have spoken to and that many of my colleagues have spoken to believe this is an extremely urgent matter. They are very disappointed to see that so far the NDP government has not addressed this issue at all, has not taken the time to stand up on this issue. The reason why I bring this to this House is because of that urgency, the urgency that I’m hearing. I know you are probably hearing from your constituents as well that there be a firm stance from this place, from this Legislature, standing up for Alberta, standing up for small businesses, standing up for farmers, standing up for Alberta families against what is clearly an attack.

Now, you know, Mr. Speaker, I’ve talked a lot about the fact that the government has been silent on other areas of intrusion into Albertans’ rights that are urgent, in my mind, stuff like upstream resources, et cetera.

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order by the Government House Leader.

Point of Order Speaking to Urgency

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I hesitate to stand on a point of order, but section 42(1) clearly indicates that the person proposing the unanimous consent to bring forward the motion can speak to the reasons why it is “of urgent and pressing necessity.” The hon. member is arguing the case. He really should wait for the vote before doing so.

The Speaker: To the point of order?

Mr. Nixon: I’m responding to the point of order.

The Speaker: Go ahead.

Mr. Nixon: The Government House Leader may not have heard how clear I was on how urgent this is for constituents and for Albertans. That’s what I was speaking about. I appreciate that he may want to downplay the urgency that Albertans are feeling on this issue, but clearly I’m speaking about the urgency of the matter.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I tend to agree with the Government House Leader. Your requirement is to speak to the urgency and the pressing matter. If you could get to that. I hadn’t quite heard it yet.

Mr. Nixon: Well, Mr. Speaker, I will try again, then.

Debate Continued

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, without a doubt, this is an urgent issue because small businesses, farmers, Albertans, hard-working Albertans are under attack by the federal government. They’re urgently asking — and I know they are asking the members across the way — for this place to stand up for them, which is why we’re bringing forward this motion. We’re giving the government and this whole House an opportunity to show that level of urgency, and I would ask all members to show that they actually stand up for Albertans like their Premier says in this House every day. If they don’t, then clearly they don’t stand up for Albertans.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the hon. member has asked for unanimous consent to proceed to debate the motion.

[Unanimous consent denied]

Orders of the Day
Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Conflicts of Interest Amendment Act, 2017

The Chair: We are on amendment A1. Are there any further speakers to this amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to stand on this amendment to Bill 27 as the Member for Calgary-Hays. The amendment actually talks about striking out section 23.97(1)(a) and substituting:

- (a) the person holds
 - (i) a senior official position, section 23.925 applies, or
 - (ii) a senior official position referred to in section 23.926(1), sections 23.925 and 23.926 apply, or

by striking out subsection 23.97(2)(a) and substituting:

- (a) the person holds a senior official position, sections 23.925 and 23.926 apply, according to their terms, to the person.

Madam Chair, I've no doubt that the bill is well intended, and I expect that members from all sides of this House are interested in making sure that the way we do our business meets a high ethical standard of business, but there are certain questions I think we need to consider. One is whether the people on the agencies, boards, and commissions are going to be allowed to have the skill sets, the experience, the business background in order to make informed, quality decisions that are always in the interests of Albertans. I have no doubt that whoever is on the committees will do the best that they can, but again it's the informed, quality decisions that you will get from having people with experience in the different endeavours that the agencies, boards, and commissions look after.

Of course, the obvious dichotomy here is that if you have someone in a particular line of work and they're speaking on rules and regulations about that line of work, it might be able to be said that they are feathering their own nest or trying to make things better for themselves. That's actually a legitimate thing to think and to worry about. This is not criticism. The government may well consider also that if you don't have people that work in that line of endeavour, that business, that industry, that profession, you may well not be getting the best quality of information from that agency, board, or commission. So I'll acknowledge that that is a bit of a catch-22 or a dichotomy or something not obviously and easily solved.

We need to think, Madam Chair, about whether the price of having somebody involved in these areas of endeavour is worth it to get the best quality of advice. I think, in my view, there is a place for people that are actually working in the different areas of endeavour that will actually be able to make rules, regulations and advise the government on things more effectively and provide better advice and make better decisions than those that are from other areas of endeavour. No matter how good those people are, there's nothing like actually having your hands in a particular area of endeavour in order to give good advice.

I acknowledge that this is something that will probably always be a struggle. I guess I would ask that we consider what is in the best interests of Albertans, at the end of the day. I think this amendment is designed to support that.

Madam Chair, I think there are other sections – no. You know what? I'll just stick to what I think is before us now, and I will ask members on all sides of the House to consider what, at the end of the day, is going to get a better decision made for Albertans.

For that reason, I will be supporting the amendment and would ask other members of the Assembly, respectfully, to do the same. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. I will keep my comments brief. I just wanted to mention that, really, in many respects this piece of legislation is about trying to strike the right balance, to make sure that agencies, boards, and commissions and those who serve on them are also held to the appropriate levels of accountability and responsibility, and I think that it's incumbent upon all members in the Assembly to ensure that that happens.

However, what we don't want is to get to a spot where the pendulum swings so far in the opposite direction that those who are experts in a field are going to be put in a position where they are unable to serve on an agency, board, or commission, particularly on some of those which are voluntary. The heart of the amendment is to try to get closer to that balance.

I think, from my perspective, that this amendment works in that direction. I can't tell that it would also be a perfect scenario, but in so many cases we are working to the best-case scenario and the best solution possible, and I think it's very important that we make the appropriate considerations to legislation. I think that's what this amendment does in trying to strike a better balance so that we aren't limiting people's ability or desire to participate in agencies, boards, and commissions but also making sure that the Ethics Commissioner will have the ability to have some guidance and oversight.

I think that at present inside the legislation it is a little less than certain in that respect, and I think the amendment before us now provides some clarity and some certainty. I encourage all members in the Chamber to go ahead and support the amendment so that we can move forward to have a better balance involved in this particular piece of legislation.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you. I would just like to further contribute to what's been said, and I would like to add some specifics, actually, some concrete examples, I suppose you could say.

Let me begin, though, just by referring to section 23.926(1) of the act before us, which states that "if any of the . . . senior officials is involved in any appointment, business, undertaking or employment, including self-employment," then they are in breach of this act. If you consider that the kinds of people who are allowed to sit on boards are not allowed to have any appointment, business, undertaking, or employment, including self-employment, related to the commission that they might be sitting on, then my question specifically becomes: who are we to appoint to the Safety Codes Council?

The Safety Codes Act, quite frankly, is a fairly technical document, and the only people who really know anything about it are either the tradesmen, the contractors, or municipal officials who, in fact, actually work with that act and who are involved in the safety codes industry in this province. If none of them are allowed to sit on that council because they, in fact, do have an appointment or a business or any kind of undertaking or any kind of employment, including self-employment, that puts them in breach of sitting on that council, then my real question is: what kind of people are going to be allowed to sit on the Safety Codes Council who will even understand anything about it?

The same goes, for instance, for the Alberta Boilers Safety Association. Boilers are extremely complex, highly dangerous, require various levels of steam tickets in order to even operate them based on the size of the boiler, et cetera, et cetera. Again, only the tradespeople, the contractors, the industry owners who are involved with those kinds of things would even understand the nature of what it means for a boiler to be run safely. But now, in terms of overseeing this, all of those people are hereby exempted from having anything to do with boilers because, again, if they have any business, undertaking, employment, or self-employment that has anything to do with this, which would in fact give them the knowledge to qualify them to sit on a boiler safety association, who is going to sit on that association? Where are we going to pull people from that have any idea about this? Are we restricted to simply retired people, maybe students who are just learning?

What about the elevators that we go up and down every day? There is an association that governs the regulations, the maintenance, the operation of those things. Once again, it's the tradespeople, the companies that run these businesses, some of the regulators that understand this. But by section 23.926(1) all of them are in fact excluded, and they are in breach of the act if they seek to become a chief executive officer, a chairperson, or a person holding any other position identified under this section.

So I don't quite understand how we're going to get qualified people to actually manage these important safety associations – building codes, boilers, elevators, and all kinds of others that we could name – where they're going to come from.

We could also talk about the Alberta Securities Commission. We've already been through this a little bit in recent history. Are we going to appoint people who know nothing about securities? The people who actually understand how securities operate, how the markets operate are the people who are involved as brokers and traders and businesspeople and bankers and all of the people who, quite frankly, actually have some other form of business or undertaking or employment in this industry. They're the only ones who actually know what the Securities Commission should be doing, and we're going to now exclude them.

We could take this one step farther, which I'll ask about. How about the Labour Relations Board? Is anybody involved in labour relations now going to be excluded? That could include union people. That could include employers. It could include contractors. All of these people now are not allowed to sit on or engage in labour relations. It could include the lawyers that work in this area. There are all kinds of people, but if they are employed in that field, they're now excluded.

I would really appreciate the minister explaining to me how we're to get qualified people on these agencies, boards, and commissions under these rules. Because of that I think the amendment warrants some serious consideration, maybe a little retweaking if you want to do that. But I would really appreciate the answer to some of these questions for these agencies, boards, and commissions.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's my pleasure to rise in the House this afternoon to speak in support of the government amendment to Bill 27. I'm glad to see that members of the opposition see the merits in the amendment. It's always a pleasure to see the House transacting business the way that it ought to be doing. Well, with a couple of exceptions here, perhaps. Yeah. Just to sort of, unfortunately – well, I guess I can't refer to my absence.

Now, my understanding is that this amendment that was introduced is focused on the transitional provisions, and it shouldn't be understood as impacting the broader policy intent or the impact or effect of this bill. I think it's important that that is very clear. Instead, what it does is that it deals primarily with the application of transitional provisions to board chairs.

Now, of course, great care goes into drafting bills, but, you know, there's always a chance for improvements, and, like I said, that's why we're here. I mean, if bills could be drafted perfectly on the first go, there wouldn't be much work for hon. members, would there?

I think that, like I said, it's welcome that discussion and debate have helped us to improve this. Now, the broad bill, I think, we have some good consensus on, and it's good that we clarify this, you know, partly because of some of the points that the hon. members have brought up as well.

Now, this proposed amendment is composed of two changes, clause (a) and clause (b). Referring first to clause (a), first, it amends transitional provisions under 23.97 to make it very clear that the concurrent employment provision in the original bill was limited to CEOs and other designated positions as currently worded, and we have to grant that. It would have applied to all chairs as well, and applying to all chairs would have caused some of these issues, you know, potentially excluding qualified personnel and qualified personnel that couldn't otherwise be attracted to these positions. I think that clarity is welcome.

Secondly, it amends section 23.97(2) to ensure that the chairs who are not subject to an employment contract are also covered by this transitional provision. Now, unless we amended it, this transitional provision, not the broader bill, would have misapplied, certainly, these provisions to board chairs and, you know, basically undermined the intention of the bill itself, of some of these legislative requirements.

I don't know if I need to belabour this point. It looks like we have, you know, broad consensus around accepting this amendment, so I do hope that we do have your support on this amendment and on the larger bill.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A1?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Chair: Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Yes. Thank you, Madam Chair. I just wanted to take the opportunity to respond to some of the issues that the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake brought up earlier this morning regarding this particular bill, and of course our other colleagues in the House have brought up issues as well regarding specific industry players and their participation in some of these agencies, boards, and commissions.

I want to state specifically that we are not prescribing the codes of conduct by which these agencies, boards, and commissions would address some of the issues. I want to make it abundantly clear that it's the responsibility of these agencies, boards, and commissions to come up with the codes of conduct themselves.

Now, I think that we who have been in the House know when there is a conflict of interest, and we also know when there is a perceived conflict of interest well enough so that we know, as has been done by a few members in this House when we're debating particular bills – they have excused themselves from the House, and they have left because they understand knowingly that there could be, if not a conflict of interest, at least a perceived conflict of interest.

Now, the great thing about this is that on these agencies, boards, and commissions the people involved themselves would be coming up with these codes of conduct. Now, again I want to stress that we are suggesting things that they have to look into in terms of establishing the codes of conduct, and those are a requirement to conduct themselves impartially, restrictions on acting in self-interest or furthering a private interest by virtue of one's position. Notice how it says "restrictions," right? We understand that. We want to have people who are involved in the industry playing an instrumental role on the agencies, boards, and commissions when they apply, especially if they're volunteers, right? Especially if they're volunteers.

The other aspects there are restrictions on gifts, including monetary limits; limitations on concurrent employment or other offices. As we've already debated and moved, the amendment has clarified specifically what we were talking about in those instances.

Of course, this isn't like a one-size-fits-all, and all the agencies, boards, and commissions are going to have to apply the same rules or, better stated, the codes of conduct. However, they're using the Conflicts of Interest Act as a base from which to establish those codes of conduct as they continue to move forward.

I remind all the members of this House why it's so important in order for us to move this particular piece of legislation. It's because we're trying to create greater transparency. We're trying to work towards more diversity on our agencies, boards, and commissions. We want to make sure that people are remunerated appropriately for the work that they're doing, of course, and therefore continue to strengthen these institutions that further complement the work that we're doing here in the House, which is at the service of all Albertans as we try to move this province forward.

I believe that those were the main concerns that members of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition expressed during the discussion on the amendment and the discussion on the bill itself. I hope that that satisfies, at least to some degree, the questions, the inquiries that they had.

I also want to remind the members that, as was discussed this morning, we will be reviewing the Conflicts of Interest Act. We know that eventually it will be handed over to the Resource Stewardship Committee, where I look forward to discussing that in great detail so that we can further strengthen the piece of legislation itself, now knowing that it will also specifically apply to agencies, boards, and commissions of the government of Alberta.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Chair. Yes, I would like to actually speak to the bill itself here in Committee of the Whole. Bill 27, the Conflicts of Interest Amendment Act, 2017, has been brought forward as a way to create a more consistent set of rules for the province's 136 agencies, boards, and commissions, which I will just refer to as ABCs for short. The bill will affect, actually, all of the ones that fall under the Alberta Public Agencies Governance Act. It includes many of the health agencies and other groups as well.

As a United Conservative Party member, as a conservative, quite frankly, I support anything that contributes towards good governance, clear rules, transparency, and accountability, especially when it comes down to these government agencies. I think this is extremely important, and I think many of my colleagues would support also the respect for taxpayers' money and just the accountability of government to citizens for the spending of money and the use of it by members who are servants of the government.

While I get the value of rules – as just sort of a personal thought aside, I guess, sadly, I wish that laws would actually solve the problem – unfortunately it seems too often that laws don't actually constrain those without morals. It's really only people of character and integrity who will act honourably. But having said that, we still have to do the best we can. We still have to be clear about what the expectations are and trust that people will actually of their own volition choose to act with honour and respect.

In terms of the actual content of the bill, clearly it does ask for the ABCs to write a code of conduct, which is good governance practice on the part of all boards, quite frankly.

Senior officials will be asked to make regular declarations to the Ethics Commissioner of their involvement and their potential conflicts, and there will be some restrictions on them for up to a year after in terms of what jobs they might be eligible or able to apply for.

Within four months of proclamation of this bill it will enforce that all ABCs and their subsidiaries submit a written code of conduct to the Alberta Ethics Commissioner for review. The commissioner will then review them by March 31 and report on all the findings a month later. All the ABCs within Alberta Health Services, postsecondary institutions, Alberta Securities Commission, Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission, and others will be included in this required submission.

Across government this bill will provide, I think, some increased clarity and consistency around what conflicts of interest might be. What are the rules? What are the procedures? Hopefully, it should close any loopholes with regard to conflicts of interest. The government does need to increase the public's trust when it comes to the hundreds of thousands of tax dollars that are being used in some cases, quite sadly, to line individual members' pockets.

I do have the concern, though, as has been voiced and somewhat resolved, I suppose, by this amendment, that it will be harder to find good people in some cases because of the limitations on their other involvements, because of the – I don't know – challenge of filing with the Ethics Commissioner. We know that the Ethics Commissioner has been fairly strict or fairly narrow in interpretations of what conflict might look like and the limitation on work for the year following service. I do think it's going to make it harder for good people to step forward because of these concerns. I guess that is the question that will need to be sort of resolved in the working out of this.

It's something that we've already raised: the deep concern within many communities that the bill will affect the ability of industry experts to serve. We've heard that from ranchers, farmers, with the farm commissions. Many of them were really not entirely clear on, at least in the administration of this, how Bill 27 will affect the many expert boards and commissions: the Wheat Commission, the Barley Commission, the canola, Chicken Producers, egg producers, many others, just to name a few. Our concern is that it will prevent industry experts from serving on these boards, especially in a voluntary or quasi-volunteer role, yet allow them to maintain their employment or their business or their job that pays for their living while they're trying to serve on these commissions.

Can the canola commission not have canola farmers or marketers? They're really the only ones who know the market. Can the chicken producers' commission actually have chicken producers because they're in conflict? No one else really knows what's going on, and unfortunately raising two urban chickens really doesn't qualify a person to know anything about the production of commercial chickens for the marketplace. So there is a question about who will be able to serve on these agencies, boards, and commissions as we go forward.

My question, I guess, in simple boils down to: is this bill actually finding the balance between ethics and expertise? I do think that is the challenge. How do we balance the ethics versus the expertise? I hope we're not trading one for the other, because that wouldn't move us very far ahead. How do you provide for the many ABCs that depend on expert knowledge in their area in order to contribute knowledge and leadership that's needed for the ABCs?

The main Conflicts of Interest Act, not just the amendment here but I'm going back to the original act, as has been mentioned, does call for a special committee to be struck every five years starting from December 1, 2012. Five years is 15 days away, quite frankly. Why is this bill presented now, when, in fact, we're 15 days away from a required committee being entrusted or committed to looking after this bill? I really think we probably would have been wise to actually let it go to committee, have a full and thorough review, a deep look at it, take time to engage with stakeholders. I guess I raise the issue of stakeholders at this point, too, because a number of these boards and commissions, their mandate responsibilities actually require that certain industry stakeholders have a seat at the table, so there's a real question there of how that will work for them on these things.

I think actually having waited the 15 days, allow the committee to begin to do its work, begin to speak with stakeholders to consult with them to actually do a really good job of this: being as it's only 15 days away, it would have been a better thing to do. Why is it introduced now, 15 days in advance? I wonder if it's political staging. Or is it an attempt to upstage the proper, mandated work of a legislative committee? I do have concerns about the timing of this thing being presented.

But, all in all, the principle, the intent of the bill, is moving in the right direction. I might have preferred to see it presented in a slightly different way, but I will support the bill, and I do think the intent is one that we need.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other questions, comments, or amendments with respect to the bill? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 27. I spoke earlier, but I didn't have the opportunity to speak at second reading, so I'll just maybe provide some comments of a more general nature with respect to the bill.

I think it's important to recognize that here in the United Conservative Party we support good governance and improved clarity for agencies, boards, and commissions, and at the end of the day we want to make sure that we get to a spot where this legislation has provided a real framework for that to happen. You know, we've seen over a long period of time that there have been examples of high-profile agencies, boards, and commissions where the behaviour of some of those individuals who have been appointed to that hasn't been ideal, and there's been little to no recourse to rectify that situation. So it's my hope that that is exactly where we can arrive on Bill 27.

It's important to note that the United Conservative Party strongly supports transparency and accountability, and we want to work to make sure that we get that across the line. Accountability is a core function of the United Conservative Party. I think that was made clear in question period today, where a number of members on our side of the House highlighted some of the challenges that the current government is having with respect to openness and transparency, so it's my hope that over a period of time this government will heed some of their advice and ensure that we do remain open and transparent.

We've seen this government engaging in political interference at the highest levels, including in the Premier's office and directly interfering with access to information requests. It is of key underlining importance to the United Conservatives that we have openness and transparency in government, so it's my hope that we can get there for some of the agencies, boards, and commissions on Bill 27. We have been founded as an organization specifically with reference to respect for taxpayers' money and greater accountability from government to its citizens, and hopefully that is exactly what Bill 27 will provide.

I'll conclude my comments on that and look forward to some continued debate and look forward to hopefully being able to continue the discussion around this and around the review at committee as well, as that is an important step.

The Chair: Just before I recognize the next speaker, hon. members, I've had a request to revert to introduction of guests very briefly, for which we need unanimous consent.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Madam Chair and to all the members for indulging me. It gives me great pleasure to introduce a few people who are really important to me, a couple of very young conflict-of-interest enthusiasts who are joining me after school today. First of all is my daughter Opal Schmidt. She is in grade 5. She's learning the cello. She's quite a skilled athlete, and she has her dad's sense of humour if not his good looks. I ask that Opal Schmidt please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Joining her today is her brother Gus Trefz. Gus is seven, in grade 2. He's learning the violin. He's a video game enthusiast. He can play Minecraft like nobody else. He also really likes Batman, and it's my pleasure to call him my son. Gus, if you would rise and please receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Joining them today is my assistant Karlie Hanoski, who kindly shepherded them safely from school to the Legislature because child care in this province doesn't meet the demands of a legislator's schedule. Karlie, it's a pleasure to include you on my team, so would you please rise and receive the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: A hard act to follow, Madam Chair, indeed. It's nice to have them with us today.

I will move that we adjourn debate on Bill 27 and that the committee rise and report progress.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Hinkley: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 27. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? Say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Any opposed, say no. So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 29

An Act to Reduce Cannabis and Alcohol Impaired Driving

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It is an honour to rise and speak to Bill 29, An Act to Reduce Cannabis and Alcohol Impaired Driving, for second reading.

Impaired driving injures or kills thousands of Albertans every year. Any form of impaired driving is unacceptable and dangerous and puts everyone on our roads at risk. This government has made a commitment to improving safety on Alberta's transportation network. In order to maintain safe roads and deter impaired driving, we must have a robust program of provincial administrative sanctions and roadside detection processes in place.

This is particularly true as the country prepares for the legalization of cannabis. By amending and updating the Traffic Safety Act, we would continue to honour our commitment to promote safety on Alberta's roads. Too many Albertans have lost loved ones or seen loved ones suffer injuries that alter the course of their lives forever as a result of an impaired driving incident. We've heard from Albertans concerned about what legalization of cannabis will mean for the safety of our roads. The vast majority of Albertans support robust impaired driving laws to ensure the safety of everyone.

The proposed amendments that I will speak about today are the result of consultation with Albertans and our traffic safety, law enforcement, and industry stakeholders. They reflect the changes being proposed by the federal government to the Criminal Code of Canada and ensure that we would have the provincial sanctions in place that reflect the new federal impaired driving laws when they come into force in the near future.

What this bill means for Albertans is that our law enforcement organizations would have the tools they need to sanction impaired drivers to get them off the road immediately, with consequences that are serious enough to deter drivers from getting behind the wheel impaired by any substance in the first place.

In April 2017 the government of Canada introduced legislation that would legalize the use and possession of nonmedical cannabis in Canada – that's Bill C-45 – and make changes to federal transportation-related laws, including impaired driving laws, in the Criminal Code of Canada. That's Bill C-46. These federal changes include three new impaired driving offences specific to cannabis, to cannabis-alcohol combination, or other illegal drugs.

In addition, in May 2017 the Alberta Court of Appeal ruled that section 88.1 of Alberta's Traffic Safety Act is unconstitutional. This section imposes an indefinite licence suspension on a person charged under the Criminal Code with impaired driving, a suspension that lasts until the disposition of the Criminal Code court proceeding, an indefinite period of time, Madam Speaker. This indefinite licence suspension must be changed, according to the court direction, to a fixed-term suspension no later than May 18, 2018.

To respond to these changes, we are proposing amendments to Alberta's Traffic Safety Act. Currently the government of Alberta uses a combination of tools and sanctions to encourage drivers to make safer choices. These provincial administrative sanctions include licence suspension, vehicle seizure, remedial education, and ignition interlock device installation among other requirements.

The administrative sanction programs include zero tolerance for alcohol for drivers who are in the graduated driver licensing program; the immediate roadside suspension program, an escalating series of sanctions for drivers found with a blood-alcohol concentration between .05 and .08; and the Alberta administrative licence suspension program, a series of escalating sanctions for any driver charged with a Criminal Code of Canada impaired driving offence, such as driving with a blood-alcohol content over .08. Two of these programs, the zero tolerance program and the Alberta administrative licence suspension program, would be updated as part of these amendments.

The first amendment to the Traffic Safety Act addresses the Alberta Court of Appeal decision from the Sahaluk case. At issue was the indefinite term of a licence suspension for drivers criminally charged with a blood-alcohol concentration over .08. When the law was put into place in 2012, the licence suspension remained in place pending the outcome of criminal court proceedings, a process that could take anywhere from three to 24 months.

The new suspension will no longer be tied to the criminal charge. We propose changing the term of the licence suspension for these drivers to 90 days, followed by a year of monitoring through the ignition interlock program. This would succeed in addressing the court's ruling, which also included a recommendation to establish a monitoring system for demonstrated high-risk drivers. At the same time, we would provide a way to take impaired drivers off the road, along with a serious enough sanction to deter impaired driving in the first place.

Madam Speaker, the next proposed amendment reflects the overwhelming response that we received from Albertans during consultation about zero tolerance for drivers in the graduated driver licensing program. GDL drivers are new to driving and have yet to build the driving skills that more experienced drivers have attained. This program is designed to give novice drivers an opportunity to gain driving experience while limiting known risks. This proposed amendment would allow a zero tolerance policy for GDL drivers for cannabis, cannabis-alcohol combination, and illegal drugs in exactly the same way that we currently do for alcohol.

The next proposed amendment would expand the Alberta administrative licence suspension program to reflect the three proposed new federal Criminal Code offences for drug-impaired driving and drug-alcohol combination impaired driving. These offences relate to new blood-drug concentration limits and new blood-alcohol concentration limits.

Drivers reasonably believed to be at or over any of these new concentration limits would be subject to the sanctions laid out in the Alberta administrative licence suspension program. The program includes immediate licence suspension for 90 days followed by one-year participation in an ignition interlock program as well as other consequences. This means there would be the same consequences whether a driver was impaired by alcohol or cannabis alone, cannabis-alcohol combinations, or other impairing substances such as illegal drugs. This reflects what we heard from stakeholders; namely, impairment is impairment and should be treated the same even if the substances causing impairment are different.

This is important because drug users rarely use drugs alone. Drugs, particularly cannabis, are often paired with alcohol. Research shows that combining two impairing substances like cannabis and alcohol greatly increases the level of impairment beyond the level that would be achieved with one or the other alone.

Having the same sanctions for all kinds of impaired driving, especially the requirement to use an alcohol ignition interlock device, would help to ensure that high-risk drivers cannot combine drugs and alcohol and place themselves and others at greater risk. Ignition interlock devices are one of the consequences that effectively work to deter any form of impaired driving, and courts already order ignition interlock monitoring for drug-impaired drivers convicted under the Criminal Code.

The following proposed amendments reflect the reorganization and renumbering of all transportation-related offences as part of the federal Bill C-46, part 2. These proposed amendments update references to the Criminal Code of Canada in the Traffic Safety Act. Additionally, they correct a previous legislative drafting error, ensuring that all peace officers who are properly trained and appointed can enforce impaired driving laws. If these proposed amendments are not made in advance of the federal legislation, sections of the Traffic Safety Act would become unenforceable.

We're also taking this opportunity, as we make amendments to the Traffic Safety Act, to update and streamline some of the processes and procedures of the Alberta Transportation Safety Board. The board is the final administrative authority for decisions about drivers' licences for motor vehicles. They review the conduct of unsafe or high-risk drivers, including impaired drivers, and determine sanctions and hear appeals of decisions made by law enforcement and the registrar of motor vehicle services.

The first proposed amendment would clarify how the board would reconsider its decisions. Upon application, the board would have to grant one reconsideration but only if the circumstances of the appeal have substantially changed since the original decision. Decisions already reconsidered would not be reconsidered again, which, Madam Speaker, is the current situation. That said, drivers always have the right to appeal a board decision to the courts.

Another proposed amendment would remove the authority of the board to hear appeals on court-imposed drivers' licence suspensions. This would align with other quasi-judicial boards in Canada. Drivers may always appeal their court-imposed suspensions to a higher level of court.

Finally, the Minister of Transportation – that's me – would be authorized to make regulations respecting the use of electronic documents and e-signatures.

Additional proposed amendments are administrative in nature and would clarify incorrect references and processes. The Alberta Transportation Safety Board has both requested and is in support of these proposed changes.

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, the amendments proposed under Bill 29 are not only necessary to ensure continued safety of all users of Alberta's roads but vital. These proposed amendments anticipate changes to the federal Criminal Code while providing a made-in-Alberta program of administrative sanctions that would send the message that impaired driving in any form cannot and will not be tolerated. Our stakeholders and our constituents have made it clear that this is the response they want to see as we prepare for cannabis legalization in this country.

Thank you, Madam Speaker, for this opportunity. I look forward to debate on these proposed amendments, and I encourage all members to support Bill 29.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak to Bill 29, An Act to Reduce Cannabis and Alcohol Impaired Driving. This bill makes necessary changes to Alberta's Traffic Safety Act to reflect the pending federal impairment laws, which are before Parliament in the form of Bill C-46. Bill C-46 establishes standards for impaired driving under the influence of cannabis. It also allows for a saliva test with an approved screening device, but more on that in a minute.

With the legalization of marijuana arriving on July 1, a little more than seven months from now, Alberta needed to amend its own provincial administrative impaired driving sanctions to reflect those changes. This bill makes those changes and, in doing so, treats cannabis, our new legal drug in Canada, the same as alcohol in our province's existing administrative sanctions. These sanctions, which all provinces add as an added level of deterrence to driving impaired, can include licence suspensions, impounding vehicles, and requiring interlock devices.

I am pleased to see that Bill 29 extends zero tolerance to new and novice drivers for marijuana. This is an important point because the majority of these drivers who hold what we call graduated licences are young, and driving while impaired takes a disproportionate toll on them. While Alberta is proposing zero tolerance for these novice drivers, some provinces have set their zero tolerance level at 21 and under, and MADD Canada is requesting the age level to be 22 across the nation. As we discuss Bill 29 further, I would like to hear why government has chosen to focus on drivers with graduated licences rather than following other provinces who have set the age at 21.

Another target of zero tolerance laws elsewhere is commercial drivers. Ontario has proposed this in its legislation. The Alberta Motor Transport Association has indicated it supports zero tolerance for its industry, but it prefers government to wait until a roadside screening device for marijuana is available. That's an interesting proposal and one that we would have time to discuss in a committee but not here in this Chamber, where we cannot invite stakeholders to address us.

Now I return to a very important issue, and that is that the legalization of marijuana is not Alberta's doing. The federal government has thrust it upon our country and left provinces to figure out the rest. Bill 29 is just a small part of that although impaired driving is such an important part of legalization that the government has smartly pulled it into a separate piece of legislation.

Let's address a key issue the province faces in keeping Alberta safe on the roads come July 1, 2018. Police have a dependable roadside screening tool to test drivers for blood-alcohol levels now. It has been tested in the courts and is used for roadside suspensions as well as licence suspensions if drivers have a blood-alcohol level between .05 and .08, which is common in other provinces as well. But while there is a dependable screening tool for alcohol for officers who suspect impaired drivers, no such device exists today for marijuana. A saliva test is in the works. The federal government hopes to have it ready to go on July 1, but at this point it's unlikely. Even if it can approve one in time, these devices will be fraught with challenges because testing impairment through THC levels is much different, with some being less effective than testing blood-alcohol levels. Everything is fluid when it comes to drug-impaired driving right now, and it will remain so for some time.

To detect impaired drivers without a saliva test, Alberta will need more officers trained to do the standard field sobriety test at the scene, and the province will need more drug recognition experts who can perform the next step, which is blood testing. Today that specialized training is only offered in the United States. Other provinces say that they will need to double the number of officers who can perform the kind of testing required to enforce these new rules when marijuana is legalized. That training and the anticipated additional officers will cost millions of dollars. It is quite a load on the province, and that is a lot to prepare for before legalization becomes a reality.

I was pleased to hear the minister say yesterday that a public awareness campaign will be an important aspect of its strategy.

There are a lot of unknowns about marijuana and impairment, as I alluded to before. One of them is: how long should someone wait before they drive? Experts are saying 24 hours. Albertans need to know this.

Medical marijuana use is another question for many people. The truth is that if someone is taking the prescribed amount, we understand that screening devices, which, as I mentioned, do not yet exist, should not red flag them. However, they do need to know that if they imbibe too much, whether they have a permit for medical marijuana or not, they will be charged if they are impaired. It's no different than someone impaired by prescription drugs.

Another myth is that marijuana is less impairing than alcohol. In fact, it affects drivers' reactions and depth perception, among other factors. They are a hazard behind the wheel. We know that most Albertans do not want to get behind the wheel impaired, and with so much uncertainty about this newly legalized recreation drug, the government needs to help them understand the dangers of using marijuana and driving. They also need to know about the new federal and dovetailed provincial rules for combining alcohol and marijuana. Because there is an elevated risk if a driver has both alcohol and marijuana in their system, both levels of government are proposing rules that target the combination.

Bill 29 addresses something else that has been on the sidelines for Albertans, which is the court ruling that struck down Alberta's indefinite licence suspension. Bill 29 reverts to defined terms for licence suspension, a move that needed to occur before May 2018. As we can all see, Bill 29 offers the provincial government an important opportunity to stress the dangers of drinking and driving, smoking marijuana and driving, and taking illegal drugs and driving.

As I said, Madam Speaker, on the training of the officers, to get them all trained in time for July 1 is a huge expense and probably not even possible. My concern is that in rural areas and remote areas of Alberta that expertise will not exist, so I'm not sure how they will be able to enforce these laws. But that's something that the government is going to have to work out, and it's going to be very expensive, and it's going to take some time.

Legalization of marijuana clearly offers a lot of challenges to provinces, but it is important that the government do its best with this legislation for the sake of all Albertans. Our goal in the next few days is to help ensure that Bill 29 becomes the best legislation for our province for dealing with this important issue.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Today I rise in support of Bill 29, An Act to Reduce Cannabis and Alcohol

Impaired Driving. Bill 29 has really been brought in to respond to the federal government's legalization of marijuana, but the responsibility has been imposed on the provincial governments to implement sanctions for impaired driving. The province has decided to align their deterrence sanctions for impaired driving with those of the federal government's Bill C-46, where part of the act amends the provisions of the Criminal Code that deal with offences and procedures related to drug-impaired driving.

Alberta needed to amend its own provincial administration impaired driving sanctions to reflect those changes as well. Bill C-46 establishes those standards for impaired driving under the influence of marijuana. In this legislation it states that more than 2 and less than 5 nanograms of THC per millilitre of blood is a summary offence and that more than 5 nanograms of hybrid is a hybrid offence. The legislation allows for saliva testing, which authorities can use to prove that a driver should go for more definitive testing. One problem with this is that saliva testing for marijuana levels does not yet exist. These are some of the issues that will need to be hashed out before legislation becomes effective on July 1, 2018.

We've seen that other provinces have been experiencing an increase in impaired driving incidents after legalization, which goes against myths about cannabis being not as impairing as alcohol. Something needs to be done so that police officers and authorities on the road can quickly measure the amount of THC in someone's system and at what level it is considered an impairment. I believe it is the government's responsibility to ensure roads are safe, and when we come to July 1, 2018, we may not have the road saliva testing available. Has this government thought about the repercussions of not being able to test this way?

Public awareness is also very important. We need to not only train our police officers but increase the public's awareness of the dangers of and the repercussions of driving under the influence of cannabis. Does the government have a plan in the works to include public awareness, and what kinds of campaigns would you be considering? All of these questions need to be answered.

Another question is: has this government considered the cost to implementing this act? Authorities will need specialized drug impairment training. There will be a need for increased enforcement on the roads and at this point in time a greater ability to test higher volumes of blood. Bill 29 states that blood testing will be streamlined. If the government has considered this, what is the estimated increase in costs, and how will this affect other blood tests? What will take precedence, and at what cost?

We know for sure that there will have to be increased enforcement on the roads. Other provinces have stated that there needs to be double enforcements on the road. Not only that, but not having enough officers with required sobriety and specialized DRE training in rural Alberta, where there are fewer officers already, could lead them to not being able to respond quickly, which will no doubt increase the time for them to get to accident scenes or pull someone over who is under the influence. How will the province address the many unique issues, ensuring Alberta's rural roads are safe? Without the added support, how will the government cover this cost? The money will have to come from somewhere. It will cost millions to implement legalization, and we know that the federal government will not help cover the costs to the provinces.

Bill 29 will treat cannabis and illegal drugs the same as alcohol in its administrative sanctions. As well, administrative sanctions will be extended to drivers who choose to combine alcohol and cannabis. One of the rules set out through provincial legislation is that it will set zero tolerance for new and novice drivers. This is great, but some of the provinces have included all drivers under the age of 21, and MADD Canada asks that the legislation be set at the age of 22. I would like to know what process this minister went through when considering the rules and if they've even considered an older age. This does not have nothing to do with the legalization of marijuana but has everything to do with road safety. I'm hoping that perhaps the minister will rethink that one through and weigh the pros and cons regarding Alberta's safety on the roads.

Other provinces are also proposing zero tolerance for commercial drivers such as truckers and transport operators. Why was this not considered when there were discussions regarding road safety? If it was considered, what was the rationale behind not including commercial drivers? While I am pleased to see that new and novice drivers will see zero tolerance, we also need to think seriously about the consequences and rules we all set out. The Alberta Motor Transport Association has indicated that it will also support zero tolerance for their industry but prefers that we wait until there are adequate roadside cannabis screening devices. In my estimation, this is responsible thinking. We need more time. We could possibly have had greater discussion regarding the need for cannabis roadside screening and more.

However, given the time we've been allocated for discussion, it has been really difficult to seek stakeholder input and hear what others might have to say about the legislation. We need to really ask a couple of questions here. How are we going to keep all Albertans safe on the road, whether through legislation, policing, or public awareness? When are we going to be able to use roadside screening and not just rely on blood testing? How much will blood testing cost the province? How will we be able to test blood-cannabis levels quickly and say what is and what is not impaired? What are the consequences of the rules that we have set out? Should we tighten the rules for drivers? What's the cost of all of this going to be, and how is this cost that is forecasted to be in the millions squeezed out of the taxpayer?

Madam Speaker, there are a lot of unanswered questions that really should have been hashed out in committee. My hope is that in the next few days we'll be able to discuss and perhaps bring forward some solid amendments to ensure the very best legislation for the citizens of Alberta.

Thank you.

4:10

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of questions and comments if anybody has any.

Seeing none, any other speakers to the bill? The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm honoured to have the opportunity to cosponsor a bill that will make the roads in our province safer. Bill 29, An Act to Reduce Cannabis and Alcohol Impaired Driving on Alberta roadways, comes to us as a result of a new period in Canadian substance consumption laws. We are happy to work with the federal government to usher in this new era, but we are aware of the major risks that accompany it. The purpose of this legislation is to make avoidable death and injury a thing of the past. As the minister has said, impaired driving is the leading cause of criminal death and injury in this country. This is wrong. It breaks my heart knowing that so much pain and suffering for families and friends is easily avoidable.

Impaired driving is an avoidable and short-sighted decision that hurts the driver and many more around them. Legislation reminding people that impaired driving is an avoidable and unnecessary choice is a worthwhile pursuit for this government. Times are changing, so with the times legislation must change as well.

Our government is happy to work with the federal government on the legalization of recreational cannabis, but that also means working in tandem with them to address the risks that this brings to our community. Often people consider impaired driving to mean driving under the influence of alcohol. Madam Speaker, I was shocked to learn that according to a 2013 study of fatally injured drivers in Alberta over 55 per cent of them tested positive for drugs, and 25 per cent of them tested positive for having consumed cannabis. This is unacceptable. We are proud to educate Albertans on the risks of driving impaired, but in order to make sure that they understand the severity of this issue, we need to move towards fostering the idea that making these decisions will put your life and the lives of others at risk. These changes are necessary to deal with the reality of increased risk with the legalization of cannabis.

Other jurisdictions across the country are working on legislating changes to impaired driving laws in response to the federal government's decision. Without this legislation we could be left with a void in the legal system when dealing with increased risks of impaired driving. The changes we are making to the Traffic Safety Act are going to hopefully save lives. By moving towards a 90-day fixed-term suspension period for impaired driving, our government is making it clear that there are consequences for careless and unnecessary dangerous choices. While we don't want to be heavy handed in our approach, we know that this will be a major deterrent in taking the careless risk of driving under the influence of alcohol, cannabis, or other drugs.

This legislation stems from concerns that everyday Albertans have regarding the new cannabis policies coming forward next summer. Over 45,000 Albertans had shared their input and concerns regarding the impacts of cannabis legalization, including their concerns over impaired driving. Albertans made clear that this is a serious issue for many of them, and we are proud to have taken their feedback seriously in drafting this legislation.

Over the summer we also had frequent consultation with major stakeholders such as law enforcement and industry players. Bill 29, An Act to Reduce Cannabis and Alcohol Impaired Driving on Alberta roadways, is a piece of legislation I am proud to put my name behind. Road travel is an essential reality for the majority of Albertans, and this bill will help give more people peace of mind when it comes to getting on the road. Our goal as a government that prioritizes safety is to have no impairment-related collisions or fatalities. Although this is a lofty goal, the legislation I'm speaking on today will help us get that much closer and make great strides in making our roads safer.

Madam Speaker, I'm sure many of us in this room have been touched by a story regarding impaired driving. This is an unfortunate reality, but it doesn't need to happen. Reminding folks to think twice before turning the key is an effective way to make sure they make the right decision. There will still be instances of impaired driving, but we hope that with Bill 29 we will be able to make people more aware that the risk is not worth the consequence.

When you drive impaired, you're making an extremely selfish decision, and I'm not shy to say that. Too many families have been broken as a result of impaired driving, and Bill 29, An Act to Reduce Cannabis and Alcohol Impaired Driving on Alberta roadways, will make these gut-wrenching stories less and less common. As a mother, a grandmother, and someone who values safety, whether it be in the workplace, at home, or, in this case, on the roads, I'm eager to get this bill into becoming a law so that we can make life safer for Alberta and its drivers.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the government. This is extremely complex, and I can't even fathom having to deal with all of the information that's coming from the federal government and then trying to apply it here. So thank you for all of the work that's been done so far.

I just wanted to talk a little bit about Chestermere-Rocky View and just the areas around our schools. As the minister well knows, we have some very interesting issues on our roads near the high school in Chestermere, and I've talked at length in this House about all of these youth that are travelling across a divided highway. The speeds have been reduced, and there are all sorts of other things that are going on. Add to that an afternoon where kids – especially if the age, as I understand it, here in Alberta is going to be 18, Madam Speaker, which is younger than in some of the other provinces, you can imagine that there are going to be youth partaking in some cannabis, potentially, before getting into their vehicles and crossing the highway out near Chestermere.

This is one of the things I wanted to talk about, and hence the complexity lies in trying to figure out how to deal with this. I bring this up because I'm not sure how the age was brought in in this province, but it is just something to consider. As my colleagues have mentioned, Mothers Against Drunk Driving is looking more at the age of 22 simply because, as I understand it, the incidence of serious accidents under that age tends to be higher than post age 22. Just something to take into consideration. I am sure it's probably being discussed amongst you as well. But the best way for me to understand that is to have the image of that going on, and being in a rural area, I'm sure that my school is not one of the only ones that would have this situation.

Along with the education that, obviously, needs to come with the complexities of this, as the member had mentioned – I don't think I would call it ushering in a new era, but if that's the language that we're using, then ushering in a new era it is. But also with that has to come the immense amount of education not just for our youth, obviously, but for anybody who's going to be using.

I have to say again that I have zero experience with any sorts of drugs at all, so I can't even speak to the impacts of that other than medicine that has been prescribed to me. I can assure you that with anything that has made me slightly loopy, I've been in the hospital. I haven't actually been outside of a hospital with anything that would alter the way that I think or feel, so I come at this with really, really – I'm asking the questions because I don't know.

On behalf of the young people that are going to be partaking in this, I would ask that the government take a look at these ages to see how the body takes it and to see how they react and, along with that, at the immense amount of education that has to come along with that. It's one thing, of course, to say: don't drink and drive. We know all of these things. These are long tried-and-true opportunities to try and stop people from doing the wrong thing at the wrong time. However, as all of us know, all of us have stories of people in our own families and close networks that have not always done the right thing.

I love to hear the words “zero tolerance,” all of those kinds of things. That's wonderful. But as my colleague mentioned, we don't have the methodology as to how to test for this. As I understand it, a sobriety test is going to be basically walking down a line and touching your nose and making sure that you're able to drive.

There are so many things that are going to be happening around a situation like that on these busy roads, especially out on highways near my area. Truthfully, Madam Speaker, I don't even know how they patrol that. They can't even patrol it right now to keep the kids safe going across the highway . . .

Mr. Gill: That's 791.

Mrs. Aheer: Yeah, 791 and highway 1.

. . . let alone patrol it, forgetting across the highway, for slowing down the speeders and making sure that kids that may have had some cannabis before getting into their vehicles are going to be safe to cross that highway and get home. Not that the government can control that. You know, you can't control every person in what they're going to do, but I really, really think that, with the complexities along with that, we have to take into consideration that these things are going to happen. Like I said, I can't even fathom the amount of work that's going to go into this to try and handle legislation that has been put upon you by the federal government.

With respect to the graduated licence program – this has been mentioned a couple of times – it also includes new and novice drivers and newcomers to Canada as well. Is this education as well, Madam Speaker, going to be provided to newcomers coming to our country? I don't even know what happens with respect to alcohol with that, how that's transferred. We have a lot of people coming from all over the place that may not always understand. Of course, because the legislation provincially is different from province to province, how is it that we're going to make sure that not only our youth understand but that our new Canadians, new Albertans understand and understand, actually, how cannabis is going to impact their bodies? That part of the education.

To the point again: are we actually going to be able to provide enough officers on the road to manage this on July 1? I'm not sure how that's possible. Again, I'm so grateful that this legislation is being brought up now. I'm sure I'm not saying anything that you haven't already thought of, but it's important to discuss it.

I just want to state one more time that the education piece of this is going to be, I think, probably more important even than the enforcement of the behaviours. We have an entire generation of young people here that are going to be, unfortunately, for lack of a better word – I don't know if this is the right word – guinea pigs, you know, for a new substance. Well, probably not; maybe they've had the substance in their bodies before. But as far as we can tell, a new substance in the open. On top of that, we're going to have to make sure that they understand what that substance does to their bodies and the severe consequences that that could cause them down the road should they decide to not follow the laws.

With that, again, I don't think that I've brought anything new to the discussion, but I appreciate the opportunity to talk about it in the Legislature with my colleagues. I would really like to thank the province for jumping on this as soon as you have, to bring this legislation forward so that we can take a look at this societal shift – that is probably more what I would call it – in less than eight months. Thank you for the opportunity to speak to this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Like many others, I haven't had a great opportunity to research this important bill yet. I think it's one that we're going to have some lengthy discussions about, with, hopefully, more and more of the evidence brought to bear on the whole question of the timing of substance use, the combination of alcohol and marijuana and other drugs and their impact on capacity to drive safely, the age at which we in Alberta are going to see legalized use of cannabis.

What I am aware of, mostly through medical journal articles and interviews that I've heard, especially around the whole use of opiates and the combination, often, of some of these opiates with marijuana and indeed the synergistic effects of alcohol and cannabis, is that they are real concerns.

Having said that, I think we're all aware that we're embarking on new territory in Canada, including Alberta. I am one of those who feel that it was important to move towards legalization of cannabis, that prohibition has not historically been effective, and that the criminalization of this drug has contributed to a lot of suffering, a lot of crime, and a lot of damaged individuals when, in fact, it's a very mixed bag. Cannabis has some significant medical benefits, and it has some significant harms when it's misused and when it's started too early.

I guess I'm influenced to some extent by the recent Canadian Medical Association Journal reporting that there appears to be very limited support for legalizing cannabis use or for regular use of cannabis under the age of 25 in the medical literature. That's partly because, especially in males, the frontal cortex development is slower than in females. It is the area of administrative control. It's the area of judgment. It's the area of second thought. There is evidence that under 25, especially in males, there is much more significant risk of cannabis use. So I think it's an area that we're going to have to hear more research on, I hope, and have more discussions about.

Certainly, 18 is the very minimum where one would consider legalizing this, and I would argue and will argue that we should be having a very serious conversation about moving that up beyond 18 simply because of the immature brain and the susceptibility of that brain to the harmful effects, in some cases psychiatric effects, certainly serious psychological impairment associated in younger people with regular use of cannabis. It's an important discussion to have.

I think it's timely that the government has brought this forward, and it's important that we have some pretty solid evidence presented here in this bill to help us make rational decisions about how we're going to monitor and enforce standards of safety on the roads, measurements and penalties associated with the use and abuse of these substances.

There's no question in my mind that our culture has come to the point where we have to take responsibility for the array of substances that we're all having access to that have the potential for addiction, have the potential for harm, have the potential for some benefits. It's finding that balance and ensuring that we invest really well in the educational process, both for young people and for older folks, who maybe think they know something about cannabis, who think they know something about the combinations and impacts of the combination of alcohol and other substances. I'm here referring to some of the psychiatric meds – sedatives, hypnotics, painkillers – that are being consumed by people in conjunction with, for example, alcohol or cannabis. Tobacco: another one that's increasingly being associated with cannabis, with the mixing of the two and some of the harmful effects there that may or may not be recognized.

We're in a brave new world. We've got a lot of important risks and benefits associated with this new wave of tolerance, I guess, and permissive use of these substances, and it behooves us to take our time to hear the best of the evidence.

It's certainly increasingly being researched around North America. I heard a researcher recently at the University of Calgary speak about the fact that there is no safe level that she's aware of of cannabis use in young people. She was referring to under the age of 25. She said that the evidence simply isn't there yet that we know how to predict safe levels of cannabis in youth under the age of 25.

That's somebody who has spent her life researching primarily adolescent addictions and rehab programs for young people with mental health and addictions problems, including cannabis. She was very cautious in her recommendations at the nursing school about the earlier onset of cannabis use in young people.

While we're debating the principle of the bill, I can fully support the direction we're taking. I hope we can take the time to pull in some of the very latest evidence and that we will seriously look at the age of restriction and that this government might consider extending beyond the age of 18 because I think the evidence is not there for safe use at that age. Understandably, with the alcohol legal age being 18, it may in some ways send an inconsistent message, but until we know more about some of the negative impacts of cannabis on the young brain, I think it behooves us to really be careful and consider raising the age beyond 18 at this stage. We can always lower it later. It'll be a lot tougher to raise it in the future.

I think erring on the side of caution would be my one recommendation, that we look at all the evidence and start to address the whole question of: what is the appropriate age, and what's the evidence from around the world where they have had some different age legalization standards?

I look forward to the debate. I think it's one of the most important bills that I've seen come before this Legislature, and it's going to have long-term implications, as we're all aware, since there's nothing that has caused more suffering and death on our highways than alcohol and drugs. We're now being asked to look very critically at this new dispensation under federal law that's going to allow legal access to cannabis.

Thank you, Madam Speaker. I look forward to further debate.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other speakers to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to support Bill 29, An Act to Reduce Cannabis and Alcohol Impaired Driving. Like the previous speakers, I think this is one of the most important pieces of work that we as legislators can be doing. What we're doing today is trying to affect behaviour, and the behaviour that we're trying to affect is the perception that you can operate a motor vehicle after having consumed either alcohol, cannabis, or other drugs. We need to drive home the point that you should not be operating a vehicle in that situation, particularly if you're combining alcohol and cannabis. Very dangerous.

I'm privileged to be a cosponsor of the bill, and I'm also privileged to represent the citizens of Edmonton-Whitemud. Edmonton-Whitemud is a great area. We've got great schools, great rec centres, great community leagues, and good roads, pretty well, yeah. I asked the Minister of Transportation to get Terwillegar Drive fixed, but he hasn't gotten to that yet.

My neighbours in Edmonton-Whitemud are very concerned about impaired driving. There was a tragic case a few years ago in which a small child was sitting on a patio of a restaurant in the riding, and an impaired driver actually caused the death of that child. It has had reverberations throughout the city of Edmonton and, I dare say, the province of Alberta, maybe the country. That was a case of obvious impaired driving, and we need to make sure that we get our laws changed so that we can tell people that that sort of behaviour is not acceptable and that we won't tolerate it. In that case there was some confusion about the rules around refusal to blow – I'm using a generic term for the legal concept – but I'm pleased to note that in this legislation that legal option is no longer available. In fact, it wasn't at the time of this terrible accident – I shouldn't call it an accident – this terrible event. I know that the citizens of Edmonton-Whitemud are very pleased to see us acting on this.

Now, we're also acting on it because the Court of Appeal of the province of Alberta has given us a deadline. We have to have this legislation in place by May 2018, so while we may wonder about what the legal limits should be for cannabis and for other things, we need to get the roadside suspension laws changed.

This event and other similar events have changed my personal behaviour. I now routinely am taking a taxi home from social events, and I am routinely taking advantage of friends who don't consume intoxicating materials and can be designated drivers. This is important. Actually, my wife is on my case all the time about this. The example she uses is: do you want your name as the MLA to appear in the newspaper as having been charged with impaired driving? Now, that's one impediment to me doing this, but I have to say that the major impediment is that I don't want to be in the situation similar to the driver that caused that event in Edmonton-Whitemud.

Any form of impaired driving is unacceptable, dangerous, and puts everyone on our roads at risk. Impaired driving kills and injures thousands of people in Alberta every year, and we have to fix this. We have to get to the point that we've got as close to zero impaired-related collisions on Alberta roads as possible. I think this legislation is going to help in that. It's a universally accepted fact that alcohol impairs motor skills and judgment and must not be done in conjunction with driving. The same is true for cannabis as well, particularly as the combination of cannabis and alcohol and other drugs causes an enhanced impairment of driving. These new impaired driving laws will help to educate people about the consequences of cannabis and drug impairment and deter people from driving after consuming.

We've consulted with Albertans about cannabis legalization and its implications. The majority of Albertans express concern that there will be increased drug-impaired driving following the legalization of cannabis, and those folks support robust impaired driving laws to make sure that everyone is safe on the road.

We are aware that the federal government is proposing legal limits for cannabis and the combination of cannabis and alcohol, the same way they've done with alcohol, with the .08 blood alcohol limit. We want to update the Traffic Safety Act now to ensure that Albertans are ready to apply provincial administrative sanctions that would reflect the new drug-impaired driving offences under the Criminal Code. The changes will also include zero tolerance for cannabis, cannabis-alcohol combinations, and other drugs for drivers in the graduated driver licensing program, as currently exists for alcohol.

We want to make additional changes to the act to align with the Alberta Court of Appeal ruling, to apply additional federal legislation changes, and to clarify existing processes and policies as part of the province's impaired driving approach.

Alberta's use of a system of immediate provincial sanction is currently one of the greatest deterrents for impaired driving. Proposed changes would be the first step to be ready for the legalization of cannabis. We're going to continue to look at best practices across jurisdictions. We anticipate that Canada's provincial and territorial governments will be updating their administrative programs as well in order to reflect the changes in the Criminal Code of Canada, and maybe we can look to Ontario for what they've done already.

The purpose of administrative sanctions like roadside licence suspensions, vehicle seizure, and ignition interlock programs is to get impaired drivers off the road. The second and every bit as critical purpose of the province's administrative sanctions is to deter people from driving impaired in the first place. Administrative sanctions like the licence suspension program are proven to reduce impaired driving. They are also in place to provide consequences for new drivers with any level of alcohol in their blood and for all drivers whose blood-alcohol content is between .05 and .08. While not a criminal offence in the Criminal Code of Canada, administrative sanctions for these lower limits are common across Canada. Studies have shown that drivers with a blood-alcohol content of .05 or greater are impaired and are much more likely to be involved in collisions.

Serious consequences and strong deterrents are needed to keep impaired drivers off the road. That's why organizations like MADD Canada, whose pin I'm proud to wear today, the Alberta Motor Association, and the Alberta Motor Transport Association support Bill 29. And I can tell you that my colleagues in the Alberta Medical Association, particularly the colleagues that work in emergency medicine and in surgery and in the intensive care units, are also strongly in favour of these sorts of measures.

In closing, I'm very proud to be a cosponsor of this bill and believe that it's taking an important step to making our roads safer. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? Go ahead.

Mr. Mason: I just wanted to ask the hon. member if he is aware that the Whitemud is a city road.

Dr. Turner: Thank you for the question. I'm actually pleased to get the name of my riding in Hansard once again. In fact, I was referring to Terwillegar Drive, which is a road that I think the province could help us with.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other speakers to the bill? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. To close ...

The Deputy Speaker: Are you closing debate on the bill?

Mr. Mason: Yes.

The Deputy Speaker: Go ahead.

Mr. Mason: Okay. I appreciate very much the comments on all sides of the House. I found them very useful, and I look forward to the discussion in committee, potential amendments, and further opportunities to answer some of the questions that have been asked. A number of really interesting points have been made.

Madam Speaker, I think what's important is that we're moving as quickly but as carefully as we can to implement these measures before the deadline in the middle of next year, when cannabis becomes a legal substance. It's very important that we get ahead of that and not be caught out. The federal government has, to be very honest, made it somewhat difficult with the timelines that they've put in place. There are unanswered questions about the distribution of financial benefits, taxes, and so on as well as the additional costs borne by provinces, which, quite frankly, are outside the scope of the bill, but they are real and important questions as well.

The important thing here is to put in place a strong and robust system to minimize the dangers of extending legalization to cannabis. We already know that there are very significant and ongoing problems with accidents related to the consumption of alcohol when driving. One of the points that I think we need to make very clearly is that impairment from cannabis is just as serious as impairment from alcohol. Impairment is impairment is impairment, and we need to take steps to make sure that impaired drivers are kept off our roads. That is the objective of this legislation. In every real respect the treatment of impaired drivers using cannabis or other drugs parallels the treatment of impaired drivers with alcohol, and that's one of the overarching principles that we've established in this bill.

I want to thank all the hon. members for their comments. I've taken good notes, and I know that my department has also been listening attentively, so hopefully those questions can be addressed during the committee stage. I do thank all the hon. members for their support in principle.

With that, Madam Speaker, I'm happy to close debate on second reading of the bill.

[Motion carried; Bill 29 read a second time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Well, I know that many members are interested in participating in some of the events of the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, which is here in Edmonton right now. Since we have concluded successfully the debate on this bill, I move that we call it 6 o'clock and adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:47 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, November 16, 2017

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

Prayers

The Acting Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us reflect or pray, each in our own way. Hon. members, this morning we commemorated the life and efforts of Louis Riel. As we head back to our homes throughout Alberta, may we remember his words. "Deeds are not accomplished in a few days or in a few hours. A century is only a spoke in the wheel of everlasting time." Let us continue to be diligent, determined, and thoughtful in the work we do for the people of this incredible province.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I have two introductions today. It's a privilege to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly your parents, Gary and Leslye Sweet, and your constituency office staff, Page Moniz and Kevin Aulakh. Gary and Leslye are visiting all the way from Campbell River on Vancouver Island. They are here to see you and their future son-in-law Paul settle into your new home, assist with wedding preparations, and watch today as you ensure that all hon. members are on our best behaviour. Page and Kevin are not only your constituents, but they work at the Edmonton-Manning constituency office, ensuring that all constituents are heard and have the information that they need. I would now ask all of your guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I have two introductions today. It's a privilege to rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Nathan Collins, an ambitious social work student who is studying at Grant MacEwan and currently doing his practicum placement in my constituency office. Nathan has a keen interest in learning about government policy and how it can relate to his future career.

Second, I introduce a group of Grant MacEwan social work students, including Mikhayla Patterson, who my office had the pleasure of hosting last year for her practicum placement. She's here today with fellow students Trevor Buttery and Louise Speakman.

I'd ask my guests now to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Drever: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all the members of this Assembly the grade 6 class from the Calgary French & International School, which is joined by their teachers, Catherine Bernard, Isabelle Gauthier, Chantal Fyfe-Hudon, and Benoit St-Arneault. Ranked as a top French immersion school in Alberta and one of the largest independent French immersion schools in Canada, I'm proud to say that students at the Calgary French & International School are amongst the brightest and well-rounded individuals, benefiting from a diverse and rich curriculum that includes global focus, cultural diversity, and international perspectives. I'd ask them now to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my great pleasure to stand today and introduce to you and through you a great friend of mine for a long time, a great local southeastern Albertan, who has just been elected to Cypress county and has already shown that he is very, very willing to be involved in hearing what his constituents' needs and ideas are. I salute him for that, and I also salute his fellow county councillors for immediately stepping in with funds to help alleviate and help do the cleanup after the serious wildfires. Please, colleagues, extend the traditional warm welcome to my friend and newly elected Cypress county colleague Councillor Robin Kurpijuweit.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's an honour to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly Ken Kobly. Ken is the president of the Alberta Chambers of Commerce, a very important role, no doubt, but he's also a constituent of mine and a fine, fine member of our great community of Leduc-Beaumont. I know that Ken is well known to all members of this House. I'm very proud to have him as a constituent, and I'm very proud to work with him to make Alberta's communities stronger. Ken is seated in the members' gallery this afternoon, and I'd ask that he stand and you all join me in giving him the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's an honour today to rise on your behalf and to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly members of my constituency. Seated in the Speaker's gallery we have Peter Rafa, the reeve of the municipal district of Acadia; William Vandeligt, deputy reeve; Tim Peers, Ron Hoyt, Aaron Skappak, all councillors for Acadia; and their CAO Brent Williams. Would they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

For my second introduction I have members who are here today from the special areas, again, in the diverse constituency of Drumheller-Stettler. It's my privilege to introduce to you and through you, indeed, to all members of the Assembly, representing the Special Areas Board, one considerably younger chairman, Jordon Christianson, and advisory council member Travis Foot along with Oyen town councillor Doug Lehman. Would they please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre and Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I have two sets of introductions today. My first is some constituents of mine from Rocky Mountain House, Laura Andreas and Paul Andreas, and along with them some friends of ours from Red Deer, Brad Vonkeman, Brenda Vonkeman, and Heidi Vonkeman, who do a tremendous amount of work with parent councils all across Alberta. That's how I know them. I'm glad to see them here today visiting with us, and I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

For my second set of introductions, Madam Speaker, I have a large group of people from Sundre and Mountain View county here today, including His Worship Terry Leslie and Bruce Beattie. Terry Leslie is the mayor of Sundre and has been here many times. Bruce Beattie is the reeve of Mountain View county, my home county. He's actually my councillor, and I would like to tell you whether I voted for him or not, but he keeps getting acclaimed, so I don't have to answer that question.

Along with them are several councillors from Mountain View county and the town of Sundre along with Dr. Eugene Landsbergen from Sundre; Teddie Tanguay from the Nurse Practitioner Association; Jared Friesen from the Nurse Practitioner Association; Gerald Ingeveld, the chair of the Sundre hospital committee. Several citizens from the communities of Sundre and Mountain View county are here today with Tammy Surbey, who is a nurse practitioner in our community who, because of certain circumstances associated with the funding model, which we will talk about later today, will no longer be able to practise in our community, and it's causing 350 patients to not have access to their nurse practitioner. They're here today to show their support for Tammy and that important issue.

I would ask them all to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Thank you for this opportunity to introduce my four visitors today, who are in the members' gallery. I ask that they rise as I introduce their names. Cooper Pirtle is also here with his mom, Arla, and his grandparents Fae and Morris. Cooper wants you all to sign up to be organ donors. He's been working to raise awareness about the importance of organ donation since his grandpa's double lung transplant in 2011, and we are so glad that he's here today. Cooper was named 2016's Canadian Transplant Association youth ambassador, and I'm so thankful for people like Cooper standing up to raise awareness and encouraging all of us to register and have those conversations with our families as well. Please join me in welcoming these guests to our Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a privilege to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly your aunt and uncle Robert and Nancy Sweet. Robert and Nancy are visiting from Hinton, which is located in my constituency of West Yellowhead. I would like them to now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to stand in the House today and introduce to you and through you to members of this Chamber a school group from the wonderful constituency of Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, with their principal, Mayor Moghrabi. I call them students because it's the brand new, newly elected council, all brand new faces, of Lac La Biche county. They're here in town to attend the AAMD and C for the first time, and they were also here, most of them, to attend the Métis Week ceremonies in the House today. If you'd please rise as I mention your names – I hope you're all here – Jason Stedman, Lorin Tkachuk, Sterling Johnson, Darlene Beniuk, Colette Borgun, Charlyn Moore, Colin Cote, George L'Heureux, and, of course, Mr. Moghrabi, the principal. I hope you all enjoy your time here in Edmonton. I will ask everybody else to please help me in giving them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is my distinct privilege to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly some folks from my riding of Little Bow, Mrs. Serena Donovan from the Mossleigh area and Mr. Ryan Smith from east of Champion. Both of these folks were recently elected to Vulcan county council in the fall election, and they are, of course, now in the process of figuring out how municipal politics works. I met Ryan over at AAMD and C this morning, and I'm pleased that Serena decided to come with him. They thought they'd come over to the Legislature during their trip to Edmonton from the deep south and watch question period today. My guests are sitting in the public gallery. I'd ask both Serena and Ryan to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Calgary Cancer Centre

Connolly: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm honoured to stand in the House today as a member of this government and a Calgarian to talk about just how proud I am of the new Calgary cancer centre, that will be built on-site next to the Foothills medical centre. Just last month our Infrastructure minister and I visited the site of what will be the brand new cancer centre. Work on this project is well under way. My colleagues proudly stood with the Premier a few weeks ago and made history by breaking ground on this facility. With shovels full of dirt we are already ahead of schedule on what will be a leading international facility for cancer care and research.

Madam Speaker, Calgarians have been waiting a long time for this badly needed facility. Klein, Stelmach, Redford, Prentice: promise after promise after promise after promise for a cancer centre in Calgary, and time after time these promises were broken. For more than a decade Conservative governments announced and then welshed on this vital infrastructure project. None have delivered on giving Albertans the medical care they deserve.

During the 2015 election campaign the NDP promised to build a cancer centre for Calgary, and we are delivering on that promise. Our $1.4 billion investment will bring 160 much-needed in-patient beds, more than 100 chemotherapy chairs, research laboratories as well as an additional 1,650 new parking stalls on-site. In addition to the much-needed care this facility brings to Calgarians, I am very pleased to say that by the time it opens, this cancer centre will add 1,500 jobs to Calgary's economy.

Madam Speaker, we know that this project would be among the first to be cancelled under Jason Kenney's reckless and extreme cuts. This government has the right priorities. We are following through on our promises, we are bringing hope to those fighting cancer, and we are making lives better for generations of Albertans.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Nurse Practitioners

Mrs. Pitt: What if Alberta had an opportunity to dramatically improve the delivery of health care, especially in rural parts of the province, and achieve significant cost savings at the same time? It sounds crazy, right? The government has been telling Albertans for over two years that it simply can't be done. They argue that any attempt to reduce the amount of money we spend on health care in this province would result in deep, punishing cuts to front-line services. But what the government isn't telling Albertans is that they have had an effective, common-sense solution for improving access to high-quality health care right under their noses the whole time.

The solution, Madam Speaker, lies with nurse practitioners. These highly trained health care professionals can perform many medical services to Albertans at a reasonable cost. Yet despite the evidence and despite promises from this government to develop and implement a sustainable funding model for nurse practitioners so that taxpayers could save millions, we have seen no action.

Madam Speaker, the community of Sundre provides us with a perfect example. The local nurse practitioner has approximately 350 patients, that this particular nurse sees and treats on a regular basis. To date she has been paid by local doctors who hire her to work out of their offices to assist with their large caseloads. But that funding model simply isn't sustainable. The doctors can no longer afford to pay her out of pocket for her work, and as a result her 350 patients will now have to join long wait-lists to see a doctor for the same service. This serves no one, not doctors, not nurse practitioners, and certainly not patients.

I can't for the life of me understand why, when faced with a golden opportunity to improve front-line services while simultaneously reducing costs, the NDP still refuses to act. It's yet another example of a government focused on ideology rather than on what's best for the people it serves. It's yet another reason why Albertans are already shopping for a new government.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Sexual Violence and Harassment

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Thirty-three out of every 1,000 sexual assaults are reported to police. Me Too. Twelve of those have charges laid. Me Too. Ninety-nine per cent of people arrested for sexual assaults are men. Me Too. Eighty per cent of women with disabilities will be sexually assaulted in their lifetime. Me Too. Indigenous women suffer sexual assault at three times the rate of other women in Canada. Me Too. Forty-three per cent of Canadian women have been sexually harassed at work. Me Too. Sexual violence costs the Canadian economy $4.8 billion every year. Me Too. Hope that we can make the world a safer place. Me Too. Hope that we can take this from a meme to a movement. Me Too.

Gratitude that the RCMP is allowing women to report anonymously through third-party organizations. Me Too. Gratitude that we are talking about harassment and consent in schools. Me Too. Gratitude that Tarana Burke had the foresight to start. Me Too. Harassment depicted as love in movies. Me Too. Every day a new accusation: Harvey Weinstein, Woody Allen, Al Franken, Kevin Spacey. Me Too. A lifetime of catcalls, drunk men with bad intentions, feeling unsafe after dark. Me Too. Climate Barbie. Me Too. As bad as it is here, we're safer than women in developing countries who face sexual violence used as a tool of war. Me Too. People who want to move on from Weinstein, like they moved on from Ghomeshi, like they moved on from all the ones before. Me Too.

It's not about sex. It's about power, and it happens to men and women, boys and girls. It happens every day. It happens everywhere, including right here. Me Too.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Northern Hills.

Calgary Region On-It Transit

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. Founded and funded by the Calgary Regional Partnership, or the CRP, On-It transit is a public transportation service in the Calgary region, furthering the smart growth envisioned by the Calgary metropolitan plan. On-It Regional Transit reduces traffic emissions and congestion while connecting communities. It also enhances the region's economic competitiveness by allowing employers to access a broader employee base.

In October 2016 the CRP launched a two-year pilot project providing commuter service from Black Diamond, High River, Okotoks, and Turner Valley to the city of Calgary's Somerset-Bridlewood station.

This past summer a weekend pilot project linked the existing On-It Regional Transit system to Cochrane, Canmore, and Banff. The service carried approximately 12,000 passengers, or about 450 a day, for each of the 26 days the pilot was in operation. For $10 passengers could take On-It from Okotoks to Banff and Lake Louise, reducing emissions and the number of vehicles on the road.

Madam Speaker, On-It has not required heavy provincial or municipal capital investments for facilities and buses. The annual grant of $1.25 million to the CRP subsidized the pilot program in a cost-sharing arrangement with participating municipalities. In addition, On-It involved a public-private partnership with Pacific Western. As Ettore Iannacito, the regional transit program manager, said: the costs of designing and working one regional system are far less than the individual systems working independently.

Madam Speaker, the On-It system continues to grow in popularity, and I hope that it continues to set an example for other areas of the province that need to relieve traffic congestion and emissions while adding transportation alternatives for their residents.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Acting Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health Care Professionals in Rural Alberta

Mr. Nixon: It's nurse practitioner week. Nurse practitioners provide high-quality, cost-effective services. They could play an important role in alleviating pressure on Alberta's health care system and help to improve rural health. Unfortunately, one of our visitors here today, Tammy Surbey, has about 350 patients that will soon be without a nurse practitioner because the system doesn't fit practitioners within existing funding frameworks of rural health care delivery. Premier, do you recognize the importance of the cost-effective role nurse practitioners play in rural areas, and will your government change the funding model to acknowledge the various types of health care professionals?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. We are certainly working to make life better for Albertans by investing in health care and improving services that families count on. In Alberta right now we have about 510 nurse practitioners, that are a valuable part of that health care team. We are working to find ways to continue to expand their role in the system, and we certainly wouldn't be able to do that if we followed the advice of the Leader of the Official Opposition on cutting 20 per cent from the budget. Instead, we're working with our health care professionals to find ways to expand scope and increase opportunities for them and all Albertans.

Mr. Nixon: Right now in many communities throughout rural Alberta there are no doctors accepting new patients. Instead, there are wait-lists just to have a doctor, let alone to see a doctor. This is unacceptable in a province that spends $59 million per day on health care. Recruiting and retaining doctors, nurses, and nurse practitioners is a never-ending battle in rural Alberta. It's not that medical professionals don't want to live in these rural areas; it's that they keep having to overcome political red tape while what they should be able to do is focus on taking care of their patients. Premier, what is your government doing to address their frustrations and ensure that rural Alberta gets efficient and effective health care?

The Acting Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you again, Madam Speaker. I was proud this morning to be at AAMD and C and have meetings with a number of folks. We know that attracting and retaining health care professionals is an important priority for this government and one that we take very seriously. We've been able to revisit the RPAP program, I think, with great effect. Just this morning I met with folks from the Fairview area and Worsley and was happy to make sure that we informed them that we've been able to secure a new doctor who is a Canadian-trained medical graduate who will be starting there this summer. We'll continue to make sure that that happens in all parts of the province, that we get the best care in the best place.

Mr. Nixon: Ms Surbey has lived in the community of Sundre for decades, and she wants to stay there, but her employment as a nurse practitioner in her community won't last much longer. Just to maintain her licence, she would need to commute to Calgary or Red Deer to practise. All the while people in her local rural community need her services. It's outrageous, Madam Speaker, and it makes no sense. There are people in our gallery today and hundreds of people in Mountain View county that are about to lose access to their practitioner. Premier, will you work with your minister to solve the problems with the funding model that are affecting people like Ms Surbey and her patients and get nurse practitioners working all across rural Alberta?

The Acting Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you again, Madam Speaker. I'd be certainly happy to meet with the constituent of yours, hon. member, and to have an opportunity to discuss this. We do work with our primary care networks on a model that gives them $62 per patient per year to ensure that they have the wraparound services for all of their patients. I'm proud that primary care networks have stepped up to work on a new governance framework, but we definitely are giving those resources to the folks that are closest to the ground to make the best decisions for their communities. Again, I'd be very happy to meet with this constituent and have a conversation, but we do trust the local primary care networks to use those resources as best possible.

The Acting Speaker: Second main question.

Health Care System

Mr. Nixon: Madam Speaker, day in and day out this government would rather talk about the opposition than about what they are doing. When it comes to health care, Albertans need results and not ideological rhetoric. Here are some facts. Alberta spends billions more on health care than it did only a few years ago, with worse results. Albertans are waiting longer for surgeries. The system is failing our seniors who need long-term care beds. It's failing our most vulnerable children as they suffer waiting for mental health treatment that they need. When will this government take health care seriously, and can this Premier tell us what she's actually going to do to make our health care system better?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Let me just say that our government is absolutely committed to ensuring that we protect and preserve and, in fact, improve upon our important – important – public health care system because we know it matters to Alberta families, and we know that it matters to Alberta communities. It is not something that will be done, though, if someone takes 20 per cent out of the system or if someone starts experimenting with new ways to privatize, which, of course, are both things that the members opposite have already talked about doing. We have work to do, we know. We have many challenges we inherited, but we're going to get the job done.

Mr. Nixon: I'm not surprised that the NDP anger machine is choosing to deflect from their abysmal record. However, notable professor Dr. Tombe said in response to the NDP's fearmongering: "Goal by [Jason Kenney] to balance by [2023] is entirely credible. Doesn't (necessarily) require any spending cuts. Certainly not drastic." Jason Kenney has said that we need to grow our economy to get it balanced. We need to encourage our private-sector job creators to get our economy going again, something this NDP government just does not understand. Will the Premier tell us what she is doing to get our health care system back on track for Albertans? Stop dodging the question and tell us what you are doing, not what you think Jason Kenney is going to do.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. What we are doing is ensuring that our front-line health care workers have the support of their government to do the important work that they do for their patients each and every day. So in order to do that, we've ensured stable and predictable funding while at the same time moving away from the up again, down again chaos that had been created under the previous 10 years of the PC government's administration. We are absolutely committed to providing good-quality health care to Albertans in the right place and the right time by the right person, and we will continue to work on that because we know it's important to Albertans.

Mr. Nixon: What this government is doing is that it's continuing to act like the rules do not apply to them. Earlier today the NDP candidate for the upcoming by-election in Calgary-Lougheed appears to have used his patient list to send what was clearly a campaign e-mail to his patients. Does this government believe that this is an appropriate use of patient information? Madam Speaker, I'll remind you that this is a government that has been found in contempt of this Legislature, it's continually under investigation by commissioners and independent officers, and now this is the behaviour of their candidate in Calgary-Lougheed. Albertans are tired of it, Premier. When is your government going to start acting ethically and following the rules?

Ms Notley: Well, Madam Speaker, first of all, the whole sort of allegations about contempt of the Legislature: actually, I think that the first person to be penalized for breach . . .

Mr. Nixon: Point of order.

Ms Notley: . . . with respect to conduct in this House is actually a member opposite, not anyone here.

But with respect to the matter that the member raises, we can certainly look into it. I'm completely unaware of the issue, so we'll certainly be happy to look into it.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Health Care Costs and Service Delivery

Mr. Yao: Madam Speaker, a new report from the Canadian institute of health reconfirms that Alberta continues to see high per capita costs in our health care system. Amongst provinces we're second highest in the country. However, our population is the youngest in the country. These numbers don't add up. To the Premier: with sky-high health costs accompanying our young population, how will this government deal with the exponential growth of seniors in Alberta?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I am definitely proud of the fact that under this government we've worked to provide stability to the people of Alberta in terms of health care and education, and I'm not going to apologize for that. We know that in the past former governments had costs go up, you know, 6 to 10 per cent a year. We've certainly gotten that much more under control. We're working with our health care providers to make sure that we have sustainability for all Albertans, and I'm proud of the fact that we are working with Alberta Health Services to deliver quality services, including the expansion of home care and building 2,000 new long-term care and dementia care spaces.

Mr. Yao: Madam Speaker, Alberta is not just the biggest spender in Canada but also internationally, with terrible results. We spend more per capita on health than the U.K., Australia, Netherlands, Germany. In fact, of the top 11 developed nations in the world we're only more cost-effective than two other countries, and we have the lowest results to show for that. To the Premier: what are you doing to ensure that the funds allocated to health are spent efficiently and effectively?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. We certainly inherited that spending record from the colleagues of the member opposite, so I suggest that he ask them some of those questions. But I'll tell you that over the last two years we've made significant progress. If you read the CIHI report further, you'll see that we actually have the third-lowest projected increase among provinces. That's because we're taking a steady hand, a stable approach. We're working with front-line providers. We're protecting and investing in nurses; they would fire them. We're building the Calgary cancer centre; they would cancel that project. We're making sure that 24-hour access is available in communities like Airdrie. We don't know where they stand other than that they want cuts and privatization. On this side of the House we stand with health care. [interjections]

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, just a reminder. If we could please listen to the question and the answer.

Mr. Yao: Madam Speaker, privatized health care. Well, this minister needs to explain to Albertans why she is supporting and promoting the very thing that she accuses this loyal opposition of. She needs to explain why 90 per cent of physician funding, 100 per cent of primary care network funding, 50 per cent of lab services, 60 per cent of diagnostic imaging, and 100 per cent of air and ambulance service funding all goes to private institutions and corporations. What is this government talking about when they're the ones that are supporting privatized health care?

Ms Hoffman: Madam Speaker, be still, my heart. I am very grateful to have an opportunity to collaborate with the hon. member and talk about what we're doing to actually protect public universal access and expand opportunities for public investment and public delivery. I'm very grateful that the member opposite highlights the track record that his colleagues have created in terms of privatizing a number of services across this province. But we're working in partnership with health care professionals to make sure that we're expanding opportunities for public investment and making sure that we take care of one another. On the opposition side they would be slashing budgets, firing, and privatizing. On this side we're protecting, investing, and supporting Albertans.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Addiction Treatment Facility Oversight

Mr. Clark: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Thousands of Albertans continue to struggle with addictions to opiates and other substances. Not surprisingly, this has led to an increased demand for residential treatment facilities, several of which I'm proud to say are in Calgary-Elbow. But in conversations with some of the highly professional addiction treatment agencies in Elbow and beyond, I learned that there is no provincial regulation in this area. Anyone can just hang a shingle and call themselves an addiction treatment facility. To the Associate Minister of Health. It is amazing to me that Alberta doesn't regulate something as critical as addiction treatment. Do you have any plans to address this, and when?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker and to the member for the very important question. We certainly are moving forward to expand opportunities for opioid-dependency treatment and for supports for those who are struggling. Just yesterday the associate minister and our colleague from Strathcona-Sherwood Park were in that community to announce that there is a whole new range of opportunities for opioid-dependency treatment, something that we know is going to save lives. We're working to ensure that we can continue to expand access in communities as close to home and through the patient's established medical home, whenever possible.

Thank you.

Mr. Clark: With respect, Madam Minister, this question is about regulation. We've already had one particularly egregious case in this province when Addiction Canada facilities in Sundre and Gleichen were shut down following the suicide of one of their clients. Later it was revealed that the facility's owner was facing drug-trafficking and fraud charges in Ontario. Again to the Associate Minister of Health. You said over a year ago that you would make changes to ensure that addiction treatment facilities are regulated and that Albertans are protected. What specifically have you done this past year to address this, and when will we see regulation?

The Acting Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. We are certainly in partnership with the Minister's Opioid Emergency Response Commission working to address a number of factors, including ensuring the safety and oversight of all these facilities. In terms of exploring additional supports, we have invested significantly in opioid-dependency treatments, supervised consumption services and are continuing to expand opportunities for all Albertans to have the care they need where they need it. We want to get to the point where, just like you can with smoking cessation and other areas, your first stop is your patient health home, your family doctor, with additional supports available from there.

Mr. Clark: Let's try one more time. You're not anywhere close to answering my question. Madam Speaker, there are many industries in this province that are regulated by the government. They include hairdressers, auto mechanics, massage therapists, and so many more, but for some reason addiction treatment remains totally unregulated. The job of government is to ensure that unqualified or unscrupulous operators don't take advantage of vulnerable people, again, such a critical area. Residential treatment is proven to work, and I am a big proponent of facilities that allow people to recover with dignity in a community setting. Again to the Minister of Health: will you commit here and now to requiring addiction treatment centres to be accredited by Accreditation Canada or another reputable agency?

The Acting Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. We'll certainly take the member's advice under advisement. We're working to make sure that we've got opportunities for all, and certainly when public funding is available, it should be put in a way that ensures safety for all as well as when individuals are reaching into their own pockets. Like all Albertans, I want to ensure that when somebody I care about needs medical help, it's done in a safe and respectful way. I welcome the recommendation from the hon. member and will be happy to report back on progress to this House.*

Age 55-plus Residential Buildings

Ms Goehring: Madam Speaker, I firmly believe in the rights of Albertans to not face discrimination based on their age. Older Albertans should also be able to live together in a community of people who are at a similar stage of life. I have personally advocated for the residents of Edmonton-Castle Downs by bringing forward the importance of inclusive legislation while respecting the 55-plus adult-only condo request of constituents. To the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General: what is the ministry doing to support 55-plus adult-only condos in Alberta?

The Acting Speaker: The Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker and to the member for the important question. Based on our consultations over the summer, we know that many Alberta seniors choose to live in seniors-only buildings, both condos and rental. That's why we've moved forward ensuring that our legislation protects those sorts of buildings so that those folks can continue to live together. I'd like to thank all members of this House and the member in particular for advocacy on this issue in terms of buildings in their constituency and people they've been hearing from. I think we were able to strike a good balance here.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Given that this change will affect something as important as housing for thousands of my constituents, to the same minister: for those who are in a 40-plus adult-only condo building, can they transition to a 55-plus adult-only condo building?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker and to the member for the important question. We know that many Albertans have made significant investments on the basis of bylaws in place at the time when they purchased those condos. That's why we're protecting the status quo for existing age-restricted buildings for a 15-year transition period. Those buildings will be able to transition to 55-plus if they feel inclined to do that, and they can make that transition whenever they like. At this point those individuals who are living there who would be below that limit will be grandparented in for a period of time, and we think this strikes a good balance between the rights of Albertans.

The Acting Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I have also heard concerns about when these proposed changes would come into effect. To the same minister: can you please provide a timeline of when residents would see these changes take place?

The Acting Speaker: The Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Madam Speaker and to the member for the question. If the legislation is passed by this House, the new rules will apply immediately to rental buildings. However, when it comes to condo buildings, as I've mentioned, we are proposing a 15-year transition period. We are also protecting benefits for seniors and youth so that those programs can continue to provide a benefit to those groups.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Methane Emission Regulations Alberta Energy Regulator Application Timelines

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. After promising an imminent release of draft methane regulations three times, the Energy minister has announced that discussion groups will go back to the drawing board with new committee members. This oversight committee has invited CAPP, CNRL, Ecojustice, and the Environmental Defense Fund to the discussion table for the first time, so clearly these regulations are nowhere near ready for release. This process has dragged every step of the way with promises of draft regulations in the summer, then September, then November, and now who knows when? Will the minister finally admit that the draft regulations are nowhere near completion and commit to a timeline for release?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. What I will admit is that we've worked very hard with industry to develop industry and environment groups to develop a 45 per cent reduction in methane. I mentioned last week and I'll mention again that these regulations are about to come out very soon. There will be a period of reaction to them before the final regs come out. This second group is just a last look before these regs come out.

Dr. Starke: Well, Madam Speaker, with respect, very soon was last summer, the first time we heard that promise.

Given that Lloydminster is the heavy oil capital of the world and our innovative producers developed the cold heavy oil production with sand extraction technique, better known as CHOPS, and given that the new methane regulations could jeopardize CHOPS production, resulting in massive job losses and economic damage to Lloydminster and area, to the minister: will you commit to reviewing the proposed new methane regulations with Lloydminster-area producers in order to minimize the impact of the potential negative impact of these regulations?

The Acting Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, we are working, as I mentioned, with industry and a number of groups such as CAPP and many of the oil and gas industry players for a made-in-Alberta solution because the alternative is that we will get an Ottawa-imposed solution if we do not do that. We are taking steps to reduce that pollution. We know that we have to balance industry needs with the certainty they need, but we also have to get this done. We're using facts, science, and innovation to accomplish this.

Dr. Starke: Well, Madam Speaker, let's talk about innovation. Given that the producers in the Lloydminster heavy oil region have already begun the process of transitioning to a less methane intensive thermal flood extraction process and given that seven of these new thermal plants have recently been approved, all in Saskatchewan where the approval process takes 12 to 18 months compared to the AER's record of over four years, to the minister. This discrepancy hurts heavy oil production in Alberta and certainly doesn't make life better for Albertans. Will you commit to streamlining the AER's approval process?

The Acting Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The AER has had the lead on this along with my department, along with the Ministry of Environment and Parks. We have worked with industry, both heavy oil, traditional oil, oil sands, and we have the regulations coming, as I've said, very soon. I invite any of you folks over there to have your constituents look at these regulations, provide feedback before the final regulations come out.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Lacombe Hospital and Care Centre

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Health minister will recall that in the spring there was a standards of care audit at the Lacombe long-term care centre. This was triggered because nursing students on practicum were so concerned that they spoke out. Eighty standards of care at the facility were breached. Management personnel were replaced. Families were notified. The Alberta Health Services deputy chief of staff assured me that a public report of findings and, more importantly, solutions to the crisis would be made public. It's now half a year later. When will that report be released?

The Acting Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker and to the member for the question. Albertans deserve to be treated with dignity and respect. Our focus now is and always will be on our residents. We're grateful to the Red Deer College students who came forward with the concerns. That's why immediate steps were taken to investigate the concerns and conduct an audit to ensure that quality care is provided to all residents. PPIC also conducted an investigation. Any Albertan with concerns is certainly asked to raise those. I would be happy to elaborate on additional steps that were taken in the member's supplemental questions.

The Acting Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Given that at the time of the investigation long-term care managers were put on a leave of absence and interim managers were brought in, then later I was advised by the AHS deputy chief of staff that the managers have been permanently let go and that a search was on for new managers, now six months have gone by, the interim team is still there, and permanent managers are not hired: when will the managers for the long-term care centre be installed, and why has it taken so long?

Ms Hoffman: Madam Speaker, the member is right that three staff were fired in this situation. AHS and Alberta Health auditors have been on-site weekly for six months to monitor facility progress and continue to monitor the situation very closely because we take the safety of all residents very seriously. Thorough health assessments on all 75 residents have been done. A thorough cleaning of the site with guidance from infection prevention and control professionals occurred immediately, and we're continuing to work to make sure that we have the best care long term and in the immediate term for the residents and their families. I'm proud of all the steps to date and look forward to continuing to have great health outcomes there for the years to come.

Mr. Orr: Given that at the time of the crisis the long-term care centre was full and that since the crisis there has been an intake freeze – now there are 19 beds sitting empty, but no new residents have been accepted; applicants would like to get in; patients in the critical care wing should actually be transferred to the long-term care wing but are not; a 90-year-old ailing man's wife has phoned me looking for answers and help – with 19 waiting spaces available, why are patients in need of placement being refused care by AHS? Is this the right care in the right place at the right time?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. We certainly aren't going to do anything that would create any concern for any of those patients. That's why we're making sure that we're moving forward in a thoughtful way to make sure that the staff have the opportunities to be retrained. We've launched a re-education awareness program at the site for all clinical staff. AHS has met with the residents, families, local stakeholders, and community leaders to advise them about the investigation and the actions. We're moving forward thoughtfully and carefully to ensure the safety of all residents. I'm proud of that. I know the members opposite want to rush quickly towards deep, drastic, brutal cuts that would jeopardize the care of patients, but we aren't going to let that happen. [interjections]

The Acting Speaker: Just a reminder to all members of the House that I can actually hear some of the heckling, and the "tell the truth" part needs to stop, please.

Supportive Living Facility Food Preparation

Mr. Stier: Madam Speaker, earlier this week I asked the current Minister of Health why AHS has been ignoring the order of the previous minister that required supportive living facilities to discontinue reheating frozen meals from off-site and instead bring back on-site fresh food preparation. The response received questioned the validity of my information, with no commitment to order the facilities to immediately begin to serve fresh food. Minister, this problem exists under your watch as the person ultimately responsible for these facilities for the past 31 months. How could you allow this appalling situation to continue for so long?

Ms Hoffman: Well, the member is right that I did question the validity of his statements, and let me tell you why, Madam Speaker. In the past these kinds of accusations have been made, and they have not been accurate. Yet, again, at Willow Creek continuing care centre in Claresholm today 60 per cent of the meals are prepared on-site for residents. That's an increase from the 40 per cent under the previous minister.

Mr. Stier: Well, Madam Speaker, given that both the minister and I recently received a disappointing letter from a relative of a patient in such a facility and given that her father was told that he must wait for fruit as he was the 11th on the list, that he only received three salads in four months, which are supposed to be available six days a week, that beef is either scorched, smells bad, or cannot be eaten, and given that complaints to the advisory councils there are ignored and they seem unconcerned, Minister, what more evidence do you think you need to take action on this issue and restore fresh food?

Ms Hoffman: Well, what the member didn't hear was the answer to the first question, which was that under the former government, his new best friends, 40 per cent of the meals were made locally. We've increased that to 60 per cent. I'm proud of the progress we're making, Madam Speaker. I know he's happy to dance with his new dance mates, but we're working to protect Albertans, including those living in Claresholm. In this instance we've met with the resident and their family. They've been given a tour of the kitchen and talked to about the food and nutrition program on-site. Residents and families in Claresholm are participating in tasting of a new menu and new menu items. Based on their feedback, items may be added to the menu or modified to meet the individual residents' tastes.

Mr. Stier: Madam Speaker, given that regular seniors' lodges serve fresh food without problems but that in AHS facilities there are numerous complaints about poor food quality and given that so far the minister seems uninterested to address the substandard food problem in these facilities and given that the minister has been frequently bragging that her ministry has made promises to provide over 2,000 new supportive living beds, Minister, please kindly tell this House: will those new facilities provide their new residents fresh meals prepared on-site, or will they, too, have no alternative but to eat previously frozen, reheated, mushy food?

Ms Hoffman: Madam Speaker, I said it in the first question and the second question. We're working with residents and with their families to increase opportunities for their tastes to be addressed and met. That's why it's gone from 40 per cent fresh food to 60 per cent fresh food in this facility in particular and why we're continuing to work with residents and their family members to make sure that their tastes are catered to in a local manner and another reason why I'm so proud we brought forward legislation to ensure that resident and family councils are available throughout Alberta. I'll continue working with families, working with residents, and working with health care providers to provide good-quality, safe living environments for all residents.

Health Care Service Integration

Mr. Barnes: Madam Speaker, for 25 years the government has been saying that integrating physician services with other health professionals will lead to cost savings and better service. Costs have gone from $4 billion to $21 billion, and costs are still climbing. Alberta now has some of the longest wait times amongst OECD nations. For many procedures in Alberta the family pet gets better service. To the minister: when will the minister admit that the system is failing, sit down with doctors, and fully integrate their services and fix the problem?

Ms Hoffman: Well, I have to say how proud I am of the work that we've done sitting down with doctors. As a result, one of those doctors is running for us in the by-election, Madam Speaker. Just to clarify for anyone who was wondering, as they were earlier, the doctor did send a note to all of his patients to say that he was taking a leave of absence because he was running. He did clear that with the College of Physicians & Surgeons, and he's proud to let them know what he'll be doing for the next month while they'll be seeing other expert health care providers. But we're working to make sure he has an opportunity to keep giving back in this Chamber.

Mr. Barnes: The Alberta government, going back over two decades, has talked about integrating physician services to better serve Albertans. Given that Al Gore created the Internet in the early 1990s but for some reason our health system still cannot manage to share a patient's medical records unless they're running for the NDP, to the minister: when will the doctors and patients be able to access their patients' medical records on a timely basis?

The Acting Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I imagine that there's an emoji being created up in the press gallery right now to match that very question. We've been working hand in hand with physicians and with patients to make sure we're increasing access to their electronic medical records. That's why we're investing to make that project move forward, so it can be a seamless ownership of information. Just like when your child gets a report card, parents and students have access to that information; it's the same principle that we're moving forward to ensure that patients have access to their information. Instead, the Official Opposition is proposing 20 per cent cuts, which would deeply damage health care, all of the information. None would be there because the . . .

The Acting Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Barnes: When Alberta Health Services was created, it was lauded as a masterpiece of efficiency and the ultimate in integration. It's become a monster, which Health ministers repeatedly have been helpless to combat. Given that the Auditor General's report on health care states that one of the problems is that the health care system is monitored by administrators and government officials, to the minister: when will this minister stop interfering and increasing bureaucracy and let local experts and allied health care professionals get involved and fix our system?

Ms Hoffman: Madam Speaker, if you want to talk about fixing a mess, ask your own party members because you guys are the ones that created this system. I'm proud to be the one at the charge of fixing it, and I am so proud of the fact that this morning at AAMD and C one of our constituents – one of our constituents – walked up to the mike and said that for the first time he feels that AHS, the department, and the minister are on the same team. That's the side of Albertans, and I'm very proud of that. [interjections]

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Northern Hills.

Calgary LRT Green Line

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Last week my constituent the Member for Calgary-Greenway stated that I was, quote, surprising constituents by telling them that the provincial portion of the green line funding was coming from the carbon tax. It's true that I would never have said that. However, I did say that the funding is coming from the carbon levy. Could the Minister of Infrastructure please clear up the confusion for the member and clarify how the carbon levy will fund the green line and when the provincial funding was announced?

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Well, Calgarians told us that they want to see the green line built, and we are doing exactly that. That's why our government announced $1.7 billion so that the city can start work on phase 1 of the green line. The majority of funds are coming from the carbon levy. Don't take my word for it, though. Here's what the LRT on the Green Foundation had to say about it: "One of the main reasons the City of Calgary can now begin construction on stage 1 of the Green Line is thanks to ... the Alberta Government."

The Acting Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would not want to be accused by the Member for Calgary-Greenway of providing, quote, misleading information, so for the benefit of Calgarians could the Minister of Infrastructure please tell us the exact funding breakdown for phase 1 of the Calgary green line?

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Well, our government was proud to support the green line LRT with $1.7 billion in investment. We're getting good help from the federal government. One of their biggest fans, of course, is the Member for Calgary-Greenway, who was quoted as saying on Twitter: God bless Canada for the Liberal government, and it's about time Mr. Sohi got rid of the CPC. [interjections]

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members. [interjections] Hon. members. You can tell it's Thursday.

Second supplemental.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Given that I attended nearly every green line consultation on the north end of the project and given that I did not once see the Member for Calgary-Greenway at any of these consultations, where the member could have seen for himself how engaged Calgarians were designing their green line with city planners, could the Minister of Infrastructure please provide us an explanation as to why the project took two years to plan and explain the advantages of using revenues from the carbon levy?

Thank you.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the member. I did not see the Member for Calgary-Greenway there either.

This project is a project that was approved by the city of Calgary. They needed to do the appropriate planning work. We trust the city of Calgary and, of course, all of the folks they consulted with because it is a made-in-Calgary plan for Calgarians who are using this green line. The reality is that without the revenues from the carbon levy the city of Calgary wouldn't be able to begin construction on phase 1 of the green line. Calgarians wanted that green line. We're building that green line. That is exactly how it was supposed to be.

Hospital Heliport Capital Funding

Mr. van Dijken: Madam Speaker, the judge overseeing the fatality inquiry has called for the restoration of helicopter landings at the Fort McMurray hospital with all due haste after the landings were discontinued a decade ago for upgrades and compliance as Transport Canada shut down numerous Alberta hospital helipads in 2007. Former Premier Prentice announced a new 5 and a half million dollar helipad for Fort McMurray's hospital in October 2014. To the minister: what is the holdup?

The Acting Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It is absolutely true that we care deeply about ensuring that all Albertans have access to the EMS services they need in all parts of this province, and that means that we have to have newer, faster, safer air equipment and safe places for individuals to be able to land.

With regard to this very specific helipad I'll be happy to get further details and table in this House with regard to this very specific question. If there are other specific questions, I certainly welcome members to call my office about their specific local issues. We definitely have an open line in the Alberta Health office.

Mr. van Dijken: Given, Madam Speaker, that Budget 2013 allocated $26 million over three years to fix the provincial heliports and given that Budget 2015 allocated $23 million over two years to fix the provincial heliports and that now Budget 2017 has $10 million over two years to fix the provincial heliports, to the minister. The heliports were supposed to be fixed in 2015. Instead, the NDP kicked the can down the road, and now a judge has called you out for the delay. What is going on in your department preventing you from getting these things fixed?

Ms Hoffman: With regard to the first question that was asked, let me make sure I update the information that the hon. member has. The truth is that AHS announced that construction would begin this year in the spring, so the construction is moving forward. It is true that this didn't happen for decades under the former Conservative governments in this province. You might want to ask your caucus mates about that. It's also true that we're continuing to invest to ensure that Transport Canada's regulations are in accordance with what's in the best interests of Albertans, which are safety and ensuring that they can land helicopters at health care facilities. But, really, with your issues about the past you need to ask your colleagues.

Mr. van Dijken: Madam Speaker, given that CN can replace a major bridge near Mayerthorpe in all of 20 days, a lot faster than this province takes to fix hospital helipads shut down by Transport Canada in 2007, and seeing as how the judge said, quote, there are many circumstances under which rapid helicopter transport to the hospital would contribute greatly to the saving of lives, end quote, why is the minister contributing to the increased risk of death and poor health outcomes in Fort McMurray and other communities by increasing travel times and delaying access to care?

Ms Hoffman: You know, Madam Speaker, over the last two years we've worked diligently to make sure that there is investment to ensure the proper health care services and opportunities throughout the province, including in a number of opposition ridings, including in the community of Fort McMurray. At the same time, the members opposite vote against those budgets that put those very dollars into providing that safety. It's pretty rich for the members opposite to advocate for 20 per cent cuts and tell us that we're not moving fast enough, but – you know what? – I don't care. I'm going to move forward taking care of Albertans, providing them the very best care, including that helipad in Fort McMurray, that's already been announced.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Opioid Addiction Treatment in Central Alberta

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Speaker. This government does not understand the serious drug problem consuming our province and its impact on central Alberta. Vulnerable Albertans are reaching for drugs, destroying their families and their own lives in the process. They need our help, they need our compassion, yet the NDP refuses to declare the opioid crisis the public health emergency that it is. Minister, there are 440,000 people in central Alberta facing a lack of services and a lack of a plan to address the drug problem. Why doesn't this government care for them?

Ms Hoffman: Madam Speaker, nothing could be further from reality. For years Sylvan Lake was promised better health care services by the Conservatives. Nothing was delivered. I'm proud that we're finally bringing better access to health care to the town of Sylvan Lake. You know what? We're doing that in other towns across the province as well because we care about all Albertans and ensuring they get access to the care that they need, where they need it. You know what drives our decisions? Taking care of people and making sure we've got their backs. You know what drives opposition decisions? Headlines and 20 per cent cuts. There is no way that I'm going to allow that to happen. I'm going to make sure that we continue to move forward protecting Albertans, protecting the front-line providers that serve them, and making sure that we give them better health outcomes.

Mr. MacIntyre: Drug use and abuse is a serious issue destroying families. Given the associate minister's remarks here earlier this week that "substance use is a medical condition that requires a health care response" and given the fact that central Alberta has been neglected by this government and is still not receiving anything close to an adequate health care response, to the associate minister. Central Alberta doesn't need empty words; they need action. When will you provide the health care response that the families in my riding need?

Ms Hoffman: Everyone who is using substances is loved by somebody. That's why, Madam Speaker, we're moving forward to make sure that we do have a health care model to provide that increased support, just like yesterday's announcement of new opioid dependency treatment options. You know what? We're not going to stop there. We're going to keep moving forward to make sure that Sylvan Lake has opportunities for the urgent care that they need so that they don't have to travel to specific isolated communities. Here's what Susan Samson, who's chair of the Sylvan Lake and Area Urgent Care Committee, said:

I cannot put into words, how exciting and momentous this news is – that this government has recognized our community's need, and reinforced [the community's] commitment to providing enhanced health [care] services to our region.

I'm proud to do that work for all.

The Acting Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you. The question is about drug use and abuse, Minister.

Given that drug-fuelled dependency can escalate to increased social and health concerns, which further strain our already maxed-out health care system, and given that this government talks about having the right treatment in the right place at the right time but misses on every one of those metrics in a health care system that habitually ignores the health needs of rural Alberta, to the minister: when can central Alberta expect the same level of treatment as big cities?

Ms Hoffman: Well, the mayor of Sylvan Lake, Sean McIntyre, said, "Today, the provincial government has proven that not only did they hear us, but they've listened [to us]." These are the kinds of municipalities in the hon. member's riding that we are proud to be working with, proud to be making sure we're giving them the care that they need, where they need it. We are moving forward with actions and with real results and with a budget that shows that we care about communities. That's why we have a reasonable path to get to balance in 2023, that's why we won't be firing nurses and teachers, like the members opposite are pushing, and that's why we're continuing to improve access for opioid dependency treatments through a patient health home model, all of which I'm very proud of.

Alberta Health Services Laundry Service

Mr. Hunter: Madam Speaker, a little over a year ago the government interfered and stopped an AHS decision to use a private contractor to take care of their laundry services. AHS was concerned about the decaying state of their infrastructure. In order to stop the creation of private-sector jobs, this government had to spend what was estimated at between $54 million and $200 million in order to keep the laundry in-house. That would equate to between $400,000 and $1.5 million of taxpayers' dollars per full-time job. Minister, how much did it end up costing taxpayers to keep the laundry service facilities in the public realm?

Ms Hoffman: The previous government left Albertans with a significant amount of deferred maintenance in our hospital laundries, as they did with many parts of our health care system. And you know what, Madam Speaker? When the hon. member talks about creating jobs in the private sector, he's talking about firing people working in hospitals, washing our sheets, and making sure that the environments that our residents and our patients are living in are safe and clean. I'm not going to apologize for providing the same level of care, the same jobs, and the same opportunities for Albertans in rural communities, just like we are in urban communities. I'm proud of the fact that we're working in a sustainable way to provide consistent service for all Albertans.

Mr. Hunter: Madam Speaker, given that it was more than the Official Opposition pointing out that the NDP were making an ideological decision when it came to laundry services and given that outsourcing laundry services does not pose a threat to the public health care system and given that doing so would have actually saved taxpayers' money, which could have been spent on the health care system, it begs the question: does the minister value public-sector jobs more highly than private-sector jobs even if they are providing the same service?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Let me explain what the member opposite is advocating for. He's advocating for me to lay off hundreds, probably thousands of laundry workers in rural communities throughout our province and centralizing that service to a private provider in the big cities. To those women and men working diligently to clean the sheets, to make sure that the residents have a safe place to live and work, I say thank you. We respect you. We respect the work you do in your local communities, and we've got your back. The members opposite should take note.

Mr. Hunter: Madam Speaker, given that it is impossible to sustain a stable public sector without a vibrant private sector that is growing and creating tax revenues and given that this government's spending is saddling taxpayers with enormous debt that will need to be paid off and given that this government has stated that they will balance the budget at some future date, how does the minister plan on balancing the budget while still decreasing wait times?

Ms Hoffman: Let's remember what the member opposite is calling for. He's calling for us to fire hundreds and thousands of local workers in rural communities and to move those jobs to the private sector in the big cities. Instead, we're working on a site-by-site basis to ensure these services are protected. This, hon. members, is an attack on working people in our health care system. It's the same old angry name-calling and outsourcing that they've done in the past. We believe hospitals need to be clean. They need to have clean sheets, equipment to keep patients safe. Jason Kenney isn't hiding what he said time and time again. They want a private health care system in Alberta. Instead, we're protecting the one we've got.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

2:40 Postsecondary Education Funding

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Alberta's postsecondary students and administration are worried. With no indication about what will be happening with tuition for the coming year, institutions are being forced to plan for significant cuts because of no backfill. To the Minister of Advanced Education: how long does the government plan on keeping students, administrators, and academics in the dark?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Perhaps the member thought that he was asking the Minister of Health a question and didn't realize that it was theme day, but I'm happy to talk about postsecondary education. We've kept tuition frozen for three years because we're making sure that every Albertan has access to an affordable education regardless of the amount of money that they have in the bank, and we are committed to continuing to do so in the future. We're looking at a number of ways to continue to promote accessible, affordable education for our higher education system in this province.

Mr. W. Anderson: Well, Madam Speaker, given that Alberta's colleges, universities are planning for the future – well, they're trying to – and given that they do not know how much base funding this government will provide and they do know that if they will be able to raise tuition, they don't know when they might, and they don't know what to do, would the Minister of Advanced Education please enlighten us as to when the students and institutions will have the indication of their future funding?

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Of course, we are going to be making those announcements very soon. I would like to inform everybody listening about what Jason Kenney's plans for higher education would mean. It would mean shutting down the University of Alberta. It would mean shutting down the University of Calgary. It would mean shutting down NorQuest College. It would mean shutting down Bow Valley College. In fact, it would shut down every university and college in this province, and they still would need to find money in the budget because that's how big the cuts that they're proposing are.

Mr. W. Anderson: Madam Speaker, given that 19 months ago this minister stated in this House – and one can read it in Hansard, April 7, 2016, at 2:40 – that the tuition review would start “in the fullness of time,” well, to the Minister of Advanced Education: what does the “fullness of time” mean to you? Please enlighten us.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, Madam Speaker, I don't know what the member's problem is. We are committed to keeping the deadline that I gave them on April 7, and we are still committed to doing that. We will be making the announcement in the fullness of time. We're still on track to meet that commitment, but I would remind everybody again that if they had the opportunity to get their hands on the budget of the postsecondary education system, they would close down every university and college in this province.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. members.

Minister of Health, did you want to appoint a supplemental to the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I just wanted to confirm for the Member for Calgary-Elbow that there is indeed a process under way to ensure that we do have regulations. It is proving to be cumbersome for that specific project, but we're working on it. We look forward to being able to update this House and all Albertans about our progress.*

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. I'll give you 30 seconds to leave.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

2017 Football Championships

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's November in Canada, which means football playoffs are under way. The talk of the town has been the University of Calgary Dinos win over UBC and Niko

DiFonte's 59-yard field goal. This game came with a lot of excitement, interceptions caused by balls bouncing off body parts, and a fourth quarter that saw both teams trade off the lead. But with no time left on the clock, DiFonte broke a U Sports record and broke social media by successfully kicking a nearly impossible field goal without the wind to assist. Credit to Coach Wayne Harris for having faith in his players and to quarterback Adam Sinagra for his amazing play, that propelled the Dinos to a 44 to 43 win. The Dinos will have a rematch this Saturday against Laval Rouge et Or to determine who will advance to the Vanier Cup in Hamilton.

Madam Speaker, further to this, I look forward to attending the 105th Grey Cup in a few weeks. During this festival many great groups from Alberta will showcase our hospitality, including the Spirit of Edmonton and the Calgary Grey Cup Committee. Since Calgary's original Grey Cup win the Calgary Grey Cup Committee has showcased western hospitality by visiting schools, conducting public outreach, and holding its annual pancake breakfast, a Calgary tradition. They are also responsible for the horse in the hotel lobby that is seen every year, and I thank them for their hard work.

On a final note, one absolute, with the CFL west final occurring, is that for the fourth straight year Alberta will be represented in the big game in Ottawa. This shows the first-place Stampeders battling against the Edmonton Eskimos, who had a record seven straight wins to open the season.

There is one thing, however, that overshadows these games and the remarkable Canadian players who participate in this. "Edmonton Eskimos" is a serious concern, the name, for some of our indigenous leaders. I support the league, and I am attending the Grey Cup for the ninth time, but I do call on this community-owned team to take this concern seriously.

With that said, I look forward to an exciting weekend as Alberta prepares to play host for the Grey Cup in Edmonton in 2018.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Political Action Committees

Drever: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Albertans deserve to know who is trying to influence their elections, and that's why our government's first act was to take big money out of politics and make our election system more fair and transparent by banning union and corporate donations, imposing strict spending and contribution limits, and bringing in new accountability measures for third-party advertisers.

But despite all this work, there are folks out there who are dead set on returning Alberta back to the same system of entitlement that Albertans rejected last election, and the person who thinks that they're the most entitled to take Alberta backward and make their own rules is Jason Kenney. I've heard from constituents who've told me that they want elections decided based on the ideas, not corporate money and the size of a bank account. Our government answered their calls, but maybe Jason Kenney missed the memo since he's been accepting big corporate donations to his PAC from outside of the province since day one. Madam Speaker, Albertans deserve better than Jason Kenney's and the Conservatives' dark-money PACs trying to spend their way back to power.

What's clear is what the Conservatives' priorities are. It's not what's best for Albertans; it's only what's best for them and their wealthy friends and insiders. Even though Jason Kenney and the Conservatives have claimed that they don't have any policies, we all know, based on their actions lately, that that's just not true.

With the by-election coming up, I thought I'd help them out a little bit so their leaflets aren't empty. Jason Kenney told us that his first priority is massive tax giveaways for their richest friends and insiders and brutal cuts for everybody else. Next on the agenda: outing kids in schools who want to join a GSA. But one of his biggest priorities of all is refusing to release his donors and ensuring that dark money and big money stay in politics.

Madam Speaker, Albertans have a choice in front of them. Do they want a government that's making life better and more affordable, or do they want those Conservatives' entitlement, with one set of rules for wealthy insiders and another set for everyone else?

Thank you.

Presenting Petitions

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Today I rise to table a petition containing nearly 2,000 signatures from Alberta residents, that's been approved by Parliamentary Counsel. The petition reads as follows:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to declare a moratorium on logging in the Upper Highwood near the junctions of Highways 541, 40, & 940 immediately and urge the Government of Alberta to assess the impact of clear-cutting in all of Kananaskis.

Over the long-term we ask the Government of Alberta to invite conversations with Albertans to consider the environmental value of our wild lands and watersheds for water quality, tourism, low-impact recreation compared to clear-cut logging.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to table a petition today, two of them, actually, having 326 online signatures and 1,233 paper signatures in support of the use of more nurse practitioners in our rural communities right across this province.

Introduction of Bills

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

An Act to Control and Regulate Cannabis

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's a privilege for me to rise today and introduce for first reading Bill 26, An Act to Control and Regulate Cannabis. They tell me that Weed Control Act was already taken.

Madam Speaker, cannabis is set to become legal across our country in July 2018. Despite the tight timeline our province is on track to meet that deadline. We have developed a framework to legalize cannabis that Albertans told us they support. With the input of tens of thousands of Albertans we developed a system that reflects their views and values and will protect our children, prioritize our health and safety, and limit the illicit market. The amendments in this bill mark one of the first important steps in establishing that system.

I'm proud of the work we have done so far, and I ask that we move first reading of Bill 26. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 26 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first one – I have the appropriate copies here – is from the Greenwood Family Physicians, in support of the increased use of a sustainable funding model for nurse practitioners.

The second tabling I have is from the AAMD and C, in support of a sustainable funding model for nurse practitioners in Alberta as well.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I would like to table in the House on behalf of the hon. Premier the response to Written Question 14, which was accepted May 2017.

The Acting Speaker: The President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am pleased to table the required number of copies of the Report of Selected Payments to the Members and Former Members of the Legislative Assembly and Persons Directly Associated with Members of the Legislative Assembly, also known as the MLA report. This is tabled for the year ended March 31, 2017, pursuant to the Legislative Assembly Act and the Conflicts of Interest Act. The disclosure of MLA payments ensures that we remain accountable for public dollars, that they are spent responsibly and in accordance with legal and ethical standards. Information listed in the report includes salary, expenses, benefits, allowances, fees for serving on standing committees of the Legislative Assembly, and travel expenses while travelling on MLA or government business.

I have several other tablings as well for written questions. Madam Speaker, it's my pleasure to table the response to the MLA for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills' Written Question 11: "What is the total dollar amount of public property lost due to theft in each Ministry in each fiscal year from 2012-13 to 2016-17?"

Madam Speaker, it's my pleasure to table the response to the MLA for Strathmore-Brooks' Written Question 12: "What groups were given an invitation to the Government's Budget 2017 consultations?"

The next one it's my pleasure to table is the response to the MLA for Strathmore-Brooks' Written Question 13: "As of March 1, 2017, how many individuals were employed by the Government, and of that number how many were classified as managers or above?"

The next one it's my pleasure to table is the response to the MLA for Strathmore-Brooks' Written Question 15: "As of March 1, 2017, what was the unfunded liability for each of the following public sector pension plans: the Local Authorities Pension Plan, the Public Service Pension Plan, the Management Employees Pension Plan, and the Special Forces Pension Plan?"

Mr. Mason: You don't have to read them all.

Mr. Ceci: The House leader wants me to hand these over, and I will.

Mr. Mason: You have to say which ones, which questions they are.

Mr. Ceci: Oh. Okay. This is on Written Question 16. It has to do with money on carbon offsets the government of Alberta spent.

The last one is Motion for a Return 17 for the MLA for Strathmore-Brooks, requesting copies of the budget restraint memos issued by the government between April 1, 2013, and March 1, 2017.

It's my pleasure to table all those.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and table five copies of the Conference Board of Canada's Metropolitan Outlook for Edmonton. It shows that things, indeed, in Edmonton are looking up: retail jobs are up, jobs are up, housing starts are up. The report states, "Edmonton's real GDP is expected to increase by 3.9 per cent in 2017," the first increase in three years and, I think, due to the steady support of our government.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to table five copies of ATB Financial's economic and research team's publication titled Restaurant and Bar Receipts Continue to Impress. It shows that things are up in Alberta. In this publication it states that restaurant sales are up. "Albertans spent $771 million at restaurants and bars across the province . . . [That] total was more than $1 million higher than the previous record set the previous month."

The Acting Speaker: Oh, sorry, hon. member. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Starting to feel like a gopher.

Thank you. I'd like to table a document titled The Interactive Impacts of High School Gay-Straight Alliances (GSAs) on College Student Attitudes toward LGBT Individuals: An Investigation of High School Characteristics, authored by Meredith G. F. Worthen. I referenced this during the Bill 24 debate earlier this week.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: On behalf of the Hon. Ms Notley, Premier, response to Written Question 14, asked for by Mr. Fildebrandt on May 1, 2017.

On behalf of the Hon. Ms Phillips, Minister of Environment and Parks and minister responsible for the climate change office, return to order of the Assembly MR6, asked for by Mr. MacIntyre on May 1, 2017.

On behalf of the Hon. Ms Ganley, Minister of Justice and Solicitor General, pursuant to the Legal Profession Act the Law Society of Alberta annual report 2016; pursuant to the Fatal Accidents Act, review of damage amounts, fall 2017; responses to written questions 4 and 6, both asked for by Mr. Cyr on May 1, 2017.

The Acting Speaker: I believe there was one point of order. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Speaker, for the opportunity to rise on this point of order. I rise, for the benefit of the Government House Leader, on 23(h) and (i). Earlier today in response to a question from me to the Premier – at the time that I raised the point of order, the Premier was, from my perspective, certainly implying that I was misleading the House or not telling the truth in regard to her government being found in contempt of this Legislature. Certainly, she was making an allegation against me as another member of this House when she said that, and she was also imputing false motives as to my question.

The reality – and I don't want to belabour the point of this on Thursday afternoon – is this. If you look at page 1609 of the November 1, 2016, Hansard, Madam Speaker, you will see a ruling from the Speaker of this Assembly that makes it very clear.

In this case pursuant to Standing Order 15(6) I find that there is a prima facie question of privilege, which may be called a question of contempt, as the dignity of this Assembly was offended by the actions of the government in publicizing certain aspects of Bill 20 and presuming its passage prior to the bill making its way through the legislative process.

This government was found in contempt of this Legislature for its actions. I was there when that decision was made. I certainly would appreciate why the Premier would not want to talk about it, but the reality is that in no way was I misleading with the facts. It was a dark day in our legislative history and certainly a day, I'm sure, the government would like to forget, but the reality is that they were found in contempt.

With that said, they clearly were offended by me raising that, so I will happily withdraw my point of order.

Mr. Mason: Well, Madam Speaker, that's a neat trick, to stand up and put on the record a point and then withdraw the point, which has no basis at all. I don't know what we can do in the future to prevent that kind of manipulation of our rules, but I suggest that we do put our minds to it, because if you want to make a point of order in this place, you should stand up and you should be clear that you're making a point of order and not claim to be making a point of order just to make some kind of a member's statement.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister and Government House Leader. At this time it has been withdrawn, but I hear your concerns, and we can discuss it in the future.

Orders of the Day

Government Motions

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Committee Referral for Conflicts of Interest Act

32. Mr. Mason moved:

Be it resolved that:

1. The Conflicts of Interest Act be referred to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship, and the committee shall be deemed to be the special committee of the Assembly for the purpose of conducting a comprehensive review pursuant to section 48 of that act;
2. The committee may without leave of the Assembly sit during a period when the Assembly is adjourned or prorogued;
3. The committee may take into consideration any material prepared for or submissions provided to the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee;
4. In accordance with section 48 of the Conflicts of Interest Act the committee must submit its report to the Assembly within one year after beginning its review, and that report is to include any amendments recommended by the committee.

Mr. Mason: Thanks, Madam Speaker. As background I should indicate that the Conflicts of Interest Act currently in place includes a requirement that a committee of the Assembly undertake a comprehensive review every five years.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

In accordance with section 48 of this act this review must begin by December 1, 2017. Motion 32 allows for that review to begin in time to meet that obligation.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the motion?

Seeing none, the hon. Government House Leader to close debate?

Mr. Mason: No. Thanks.

[Government Motion 32 carried]

Evening Sitzings

33. Mr. Mason moved:

Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 4(1) commencing November 27, 2017, the Assembly shall meet on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evenings for consideration of government business for the duration of the Third Session of the 29th Legislature 2017 fall sitting unless the Government House Leader notifies the Assembly that there shall be no evening sitting that day by providing notice under Notices of Motions in the daily Routine or at any time prior to 6 p.m.

[Government Motion 33 carried]

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

School Amendment Act, 2017

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to move second reading of Bill 28, the School Amendment Act, 2017, here this afternoon.

Through Bill 28 our government intends to make life better for Alberta students. The Alberta School Act has served our province's students, schools, and communities for over three decades. The amendments within this bill will help to ensure that it continues to do so well into the future.

The amendments included in this legislation align with the government's commitment to make life better for Albertans in general and for our students specifically. Building on the strengths of our school system, we will continue to build a modern, inclusive education system that prepares students for success, ensures fair and equitable access to education, and continues to support the closing of the achievement gap for First Nations, Métis, and Inuit students.

The amendments have been arrived at through careful consideration as well as consultation with stakeholders and education partners. In short, these amendments will help to bring the School Act up to date with other pieces of legislation and pave the way for future changes that will further support students' success.

A key theme in these amendments is changes that will help to ensure that schools and school authority leadership are supported in leading modern, inclusive, and prudently administered schools. Bill 28 does this in several ways, but the primary focus is on changes that would support enhanced professional practice standards for principals, superintendents, and school jurisdiction leaders.

This act will help us to establish a set of certification requirements for principals and superintendents in the province. Once these standards, which would describe the leaders' professional competencies, are also in place, we will be on our way towards more consistent practice and therefore more consistent outcomes for Alberta students.

The amendments related to principal and superintendent certification will come into force on September 1, 2019, if the bill is passed, ensuring that school authorities and school leaders will have time to prepare and adapt for the certification process. I believe, Madam Speaker, that this could be the very first set of standards for superintendents and district leaders in the entire country of Canada.

Bill 28 also specifies that school boards will be required to develop and implement a code of conduct that applies to school board trustees. The minister will be able to set out a set of principles for these codes of conduct and must specify sanctions for those who breach the code. While we respect and appreciate the amazing work done by elected school boards across the province, this amendment would ensure that provincial legislation recognizes the importance of work done by the trustees. These changes would also better align the expectations of trustees with the expectations of other elected officials as outlined in the Municipal Government Act.

These amendments would come into force on September 1, 2018.

Another one of the priorities in this bill is to ensure fair and equitable access to the education system for all students. That focus on equality of access will begin at kindergarten, and the bill will establish a common age of entry for students beginning their schooling. Right now the age at which a student may start kindergarten is set individually by local school authorities and varies across the province. Bill 28 would set a consistent standard that students must be five years of age by December 31 of the year that they are entering kindergarten.

Madam Speaker, there is research that shows that older children perform better academically than their younger peers in the same grade. By setting a common age for all students across the province, we will better set up all students for success no matter where they live in the province. We have set a date of September 2020 for this change to take effect, leaving school authorities and families plenty of time to plan for this new standardized age of entry for kindergarten.

We know as well, of course, that we're building new kindergarten curriculum and so forth, and we're building new curriculum in keeping with sort of age-appropriate material. This will help to align our teaching in kindergarten for the kids at a specific age.

Access to the education system stretches well beyond kindergarten, however. Alberta has a very large and growing First Nations population, and for some of the families and students in these communities, attending a provincially funded school may be preferred. In cases like this, where students living on-reserve want to attend a school in a public, separate, or francophone school jurisdiction, an education service agreement, otherwise known as an ESA, is signed between the First Nation and the school authority or school authorities. These ESAs currently vary widely across the province, Madam Speaker. As a result, how these agreements deal with accountability and reporting, renewal practices, and dispute resolution is not consistent from one geographic area to the other.

Bill 28 will allow the Minister of Education to set standards for these ESAs to ensure that students are able to access the provincial education system on equitable terms no matter where they live in the province of Alberta. Giving both school authorities and First Nations clear expectations on how ESAs operate will break down one further barrier that may exist between some students getting the sort of education that they expect and deserve.

But it's also important for me to note that these standards would still allow for significant flexibility to permit the First Nation and the school authority the room to negotiate an agreement that is in the interests of all parties involved. The draft standards have actually been previously consulted on, and they have been widely supported, with some stakeholders utilizing these draft standards to help guide their current education service agreements. Improving the education outcomes of First Nations, Métis, and Inuit students is one of the ministry's highest priorities, Madam Speaker, and I believe that this will help to do exactly that.

Madam Speaker, we are also changing the School Act to increase collaboration around transportation for students, especially in the process around establishing separate school districts. It's important to note that both Catholic and public school board associations, the main voices for issues on this matter, were driving forces behind developing this process outlined in the updated act. They should be commended for this. Certainly, I was very pleased with the outcome. This would provide a consistent approach with standardized timelines and specific steps throughout the process. It will also encourage all parties to work together in close co-operation with the communities in which the establishment is taking place.

We are also updating our financial reporting requirements for private schools to bring them into alignment with practices in public schools. While many private schools already provide this information to Alberta Education, this change would ensure that all schools that accept public dollars are subject to consistent financial reporting expectations, and it would go to ensure greater accountability for public funds that go to our schools.

Madam Speaker, the bill that's before us today also includes a legislative change that is the first step in reviewing transportation eligibility criteria across the province of Alberta. We've heard from stakeholders and parents that the walk limit was too far, especially for young children, and now we're looking for ways to fix this challenge. School boards would still have the legal obligation to provide transportation to students that live within a certain school board boundary according to the specific criteria set by the province.

Our government is committed to working with our education partners to ensure that updated student transportation regulations address the concerns that we have heard from parents, students, and school boards. It's important to note that for the 2017-2018 school year school board obligations won't change. Once the regulation has been put into place, it would be in effect for the 2018-19 school year. We aim to have these eligibility criteria set out early next year so that schools, families, and others will have time to plan for and implement any changes that must be made.

Finally, Madam Speaker, there are a number of small amendments in this bill that are largely administrative in nature. Many of them focus on bringing the School Act up to date and to align with other pieces of legislation. For example, this includes matching the changes to the Municipal Government Act that have changed election timing for school trustees. These smaller amendments would come into force upon passage of the bill.

Madam Speaker, I hope that this provides a useful description of the amendments proposed in Bill 28 and explains how these changes will be able to bring improvements to the students, who are at the core of our education system. Ultimately, these changes are done to ensure that education remains strong, accountable, and serves the public of Alberta in the strongest way possible.

I hope that you will stand with me and support this bill as it supports the students of our province. I look forward to constructive debate on this particular bill, Madam Speaker. With that, I move that debate be adjourned on this bill this afternoon.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms. Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 29
An Act to Reduce Cannabis and Alcohol
Impaired Driving

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Madam Chair. It is my pleasure to rise to start the deliberations of the Committee of the Whole on Bill 29, which is an act to reduce cannibal – I think we want to reduce cannibalism, too, don't we? I don't know. Can you get that corrected in Hansard or not? I'm going to be labelled as being in favour of cannibalism, aren't I? These guys aren't smiling over there. I don't know why.

Mr. McIver: We weren't listening.

Dr. Turner: Anyways, Bill 29, An Act to Reduce Cannabis and Alcohol Impaired Driving. I'm pleased to be a cosponsor of this along with the MLA from Red Deer-South. You know, this is an update of the Traffic Safety Act, that will ensure that Alberta is ready to apply provincial sanctions when the federal government gets its act together in terms of the legislation that's going to have to be in place by next July.

I think an important thing to consider is that impaired driving is impaired driving no matter what the substance is that is impairing the physical or mental capacity of the driver. Albertans have expressed concern about a perceived potential for an increase in impairment when cannabis and other similar agents are combined with alcohol. It's important that this province basically have a robust program of penalties and roadside detection processes in place. Impaired driving is unacceptable, dangerous. We know that it's a plague, and it kills and injures thousands of Albertans every year.

Our government's goal – and this would be shared, I'm sure, by all members of this Legislature – is to move as quickly as possible to zero impairment-related collisions and fatalities on Alberta's roads. It's the first step to being ready for the legalization of cannabis. There are going to be more steps coming. The details that are in this legislation are basically what are needed to prepare our law enforcement agents and the justice system as well as the Transportation ministry for the federal government's legislation.

I think one of the things that I wanted to bring up today is that these administrative penalties are also being changed as a result of the decision of the Court of Appeal of the province of Alberta, in which the Court of Appeal said that having an indefinite licence suspension was not constitutional. Our government, at least the Ministry of Justice and Solicitor General, decided not to appeal that decision; therefore, by early next year we have to have administrative penalties that would fulfill the mandate of that court decision. I think that having a fixed administrative penalty, as is in this legislation – if a driver is found to be impaired by alcohol or by any other substance and, following that fixed suspension, if the driver does want to go back to driving, to have an interlock system that would prevent someone that had consumed alcohol from operating the vehicle is very rational.

As I mentioned in second reading on this, it's important to also recognize that this legislation also applies even if the operator of a vehicle who is thought to be impaired by law enforcement refuses to provide a blood sample or a breath sample. The refusal to blow will not circumvent the intent of this legislation. It's not so much to get those drivers off the road as to really put into Albertans' minds, who are considering going and operating a vehicle after they've consumed intoxicating substances, a second thought. Perhaps they should think about not driving, to use a taxi, to use the help of a designated driver, or to organize their social activities such that they don't involve using a vehicle.

It's that attitudinal change that I'm hoping will pervade this province. I think that if we can get people's attitudes changed about the acceptability of operating a motor vehicle after the consumption of intoxicating materials and make that, basically, a moral and ethical situation where it just is unacceptable to do that, I think that will be one of the best outcomes of this legislation.

There are particular situations in which this legislation I think really is going to make a difference, too, and one of those situations is with the young person who is acquiring their first driver's licence. That situation you can call the graduated licence situation. Basically, in that context there is zero tolerance for the consumption of intoxicating materials before one operates a vehicle. If a person in possession of a graduated licence does break the rules in that situation, there are going to be significant repercussions for that individual. If we can catch these 18-year-olds, 17-year-olds, 16-year-olds and get their attitudes changed, that's going to reverberate over the years. They are going to be the role models for their younger brothers and sisters coming up or their friends who haven't yet acquired a licence and will make our roads a lot safer.

I think that this gets around this concern about: well, is cannabis really as intoxicating as alcohol, and, you know, are illegal drugs really the problem? I think what we'd want to focus on or what I'd like to focus on in this bill is making it unacceptable and, in a sense, illegal to operate a motor vehicle and put the general public at risk of significant injury and harm, not to mention the terrible toll in property damage, not to mention the terrible toll that I can speak to personally of posttraumatic stress disorder, dealing with the carnage that some of these terrible motor accidents lead to among our first responders, among our nurses. They are the ones that have to deal with most of the quote, unquote, dirty work in this. I mean, we doctors get to come in and look like we're running the show most of the time, and most of the time the nurses have done all of the work. I think the Member for Banff-Cochrane can back me up on that.

It isn't just the fatal accidents on the road; it is all these other repercussions of impaired driving. Again, I mentioned this the other day: Mothers Against Drunk Driving, MADD, the folks that have the red ribbon that I've got on my lapel, the victims, the survivors, if you wish, of these terrible accidents that have to live with the consequences for years and years and years. I think it's really important that we get on with this.

Now, there is part of this that we didn't discuss in great length in second reading, but this refers to the Alberta Transportation Safety Board. We're also taking the opportunity as we make amendments to the Traffic Safety Act to update and streamline some of the processes and procedures of the Alberta Transportation Safety Board. The board is the final administrative authority for decisions about drivers' licences for motor vehicles. They review the conduct of unsafe or high-risk drivers, including impaired drivers, and determine sanctions and hear appeals of decisions made by law enforcement and the registrar of motor vehicle services.

The first proposed amendment would clarify how the board would reconsider its decisions. Upon application the board would have to grant one reconsideration but only if the circumstances of the appeal have substantially changed since the original decision. Now, in the past there have been repeated appeals to this board, and it has basically delayed – it's like deferring your taxes. This is basically that you're delaying a judgment here. I'm really pleased that this loophole, that some of the defence bar has utilized to allow impaired drivers to continue to operate vehicles, is going to be closed. Decisions already reconsidered would not be considered again. That said, drivers always have the right to appeal a board decision to the court.

Another proposed amendment will remove the authority of the board to hear appeals on court-imposed driver's licence suspension. This would align with other quasi-judicial boards in Canada. Drivers may always appeal their court-imposed suspension to a higher level of court.

Finally, the Minister of Transportation would be authorized to make regulations respecting the use of electronic documents and e-signatures.

Most of the other amendments are administrative in nature and would clarify incorrect references and processes. It's important to note that the Alberta Transportation Safety Board has both requested and is in full support of these changes. These amendments are absolutely necessary to ensure continued safety of everyone who uses Alberta's roads. The purpose of the bill is to make our roads as safe as possible for all road users and to prevent impaired driving as this country prepares for the legalization of cannabis. As I said before, the goal is to see zero impairment-related collisions and fatalities on Alberta roads. This is a process. We're going to work towards that. It will come in the fullness of time, as has been suggested in response to one of the questions during question period, but the fullness of time will hopefully be as short as we can make it.

A robust system of immediate sanctions has been proven to be one of the greatest deterrents for impaired driving. Updating the Traffic Safety Act now ensures that Alberta's impaired driving sanctions reflect the new proposed federal offences, and Alberta would be able to continue to effectively deter impaired driving.

Anyway, in conclusion, I would encourage all members of the Legislature to support Bill 29, and I look forward to the ongoing discussions of this bill. Thank you.

The Chair: Any other questions, comments, amendments? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. Bill 29, An Act to Reduce Cannabis and Alcohol Impaired Driving. You know, I just want to note that it does seem that we're rushing this process, and I'm not blaming the Alberta government and the NDP for this. I am blaming our federal counterparts, the Trudeau Liberals.

Now, I'd like to start off this speech with a quote based on a press release done by the Alberta government. Alberta to Bolster Drug-impaired Driving Laws: that's the name of the release. I'd like to quote the Minister of Transportation.

Impaired driving due to alcohol, cannabis or any other impairing drug or combination of drugs, is the leading criminal cause of death and injury in Canada. These tragedies are entirely avoidable. Alberta's impaired driving laws aim to reduce the number of impaired drivers on our roads, encourage safe driving behaviour and strongly discourage impaired driving.

Those are very strong words, and I wholeheartedly agree with our Minister of Transportation that this is something that we need to identify, that we need to move forward.

Now, the problem that we've got here is that impaired driving is a societal problem, and we do need to address this. I do go to a report done by Stats Canada. The report's name is Police-reported Crime Statistics in Canada 2015. I'm going to quote this throughout my speech here.

Drug offences involving cannabis continued to decline in 2015. In total, the overall rate of police-reported offences involving the possession, trafficking, production and distribution of cannabis decreased by 15% between 2014 and 2015.

So we're actually seeing a decrease. Now, I'm not sure if it's just that the law enforcement is deciding that cannabis is no longer a priority that they need to start cracking down on or that maybe, possibly, the harder drugs are something that they need to focus on.

It goes on to say:

In contrast, offences involving the possession, trafficking, production or distribution of methamphetamines grew 25%.

These are the fentanyl and the other things that are really, really terrible, the ones that are actually killing people. So I understand why the RCMP would shift their focus away from a drug that probably isn't killing people to drugs that are killing people, killing lots of people. I think we're over 300 as we speak right now. Now, what's interesting about this is that we're seeing a decrease in the conviction rate of cannabis charges.

It goes on to say:

We see that the vast majority of these convictions for impaired driving are alcohol related. The vast majority. Is it because we can test for alcohol and we can't test for cannabis? I believe that is the true problem here. What we've got here now is a drug that we have no way of being able to really test impairment on. This goes back to my point on the reckless actions of our Prime Minister, Prime Minister Trudeau. By bringing in legalization of cannabis with no way of being able to make sure that our roads are safe or our job sites are safe, this is a problem.

Now, this bill goes on to state a lot of important things like saying that it's important that we identify that driving under the influence is wrong. Well, if we're not coming up with how this is illegal and in what way for the individual, we're putting a law forward where we have no way of actually holding people to account. This is not like alcohol, where we can give them a test, take that test to a court, and then they lose their licences. They may lose their family's income. But there is a result from this impairment: we get them off the roads. We put the public's safety first.

Now, it goes on to say:

Unlike the overall decline in impaired driving between 2014 and 2015, the number and rate for almost all drug impaired driving violations increased.

They're actually saying in this article that driving under the influence of alcohol is decreasing right now but that drug impairment is increasing. Now, does that mean our society is possibly moving away from alcohol impairment and going to drug impairment? This is something that can only get worse.

In total, there were 2,786 drug impaired driving violations in 2015, 268 more than the previous year. Despite a 10% increase in rate...

That's alarming, a 10 per cent increase in rate.

... the rate of drug impaired driving (7.8 per 100,000 population) remained low compared with the rate of alcohol impaired driving [which is] 193 per 100,000.

We're seeing again that wonderful difference I was telling you about, that 96 per cent right now are being charged with alcohol convictions, 4 per cent with drug convictions. That's, I would argue, in my opinion, because we can't test for marijuana impairment or cannabis impairment.

The low rate for drug impaired driving may be partly explained by the fact that determining and measuring the level of drug impairment can be more difficult and less reliable than the measures used to detect alcohol impaired driving.

This is within the report that I'm quoting right now. It is actually acknowledging that right now we have a gap. We can't test reliably for the amount of impairment with drugs. Now we're legalizing this and we are going to be putting people behind the wheel, saying: we're still working out how this is going to play out.

What we've got here is that, overall, Alberta has decreased by 9 per cent when it comes to our impaired driving rates, declined by 9 per cent. This is within the same report. So we're seeing all impairments going down, but our percentage of drug related is going up. At some point we have to acknowledge that cannabis use behind the wheel and not being able to test for any sort of impairment with a reliable test is a problem, a problem that needs to be addressed.

I would like to see our Minister of Justice ask the Prime Minister to slow down this process. Where did this arbitrary number of July 21, 2018, come from? Why are we rushing towards that date?

Now, I understand and I have been told that when the Prime Minister was elected, we saw a spike in convictions of cannabis use right after the election. That's because what happened is, from my understanding, that just because Prime Minister Trudeau was elected, suddenly cannabis use was legal. Obviously, that's flawed because we need to go through the legislation. This is more complex than just suddenly being elected and cannabis being legal.

Now, I'm very sad to see that we're moving at such an alarming rate. We need to identify how to close this gap before we start to legalize, and again we need to push back on the federal government, saying that it's not just taxes that are a problem with this. I hear that the province is pushing back on the fact that there is going to be a 50-cent tax per gram on each side. Why should the province, who does all of the work, only get half the tax? So we're pushing back on taxes, but why are we not pushing back on the date that this is all moving forward on or it becomes legal?

The Prime Minister needs to demonstrate that we can ensure that our roads and our work sites are safe. He needs to demonstrate that, and the only way to demonstrate that is to have a reliable test to hold people to account. We have seen that there is already a disproportionate number of people that are being charged under impaired driving convictions for alcohol use, and again that's because we can test. Until we can test this, why would we move forward?

Now, again, I stated right off the bat that I do have sympathy for the Alberta government because they're told by the federal government that this is the route that we have to go. We have to legalize by July 1. But we do need to acknowledge that there is a serious gap. We are putting people at risk, and until we can test for this, I am going to say that we're probably going to find that we're going to see a spike in potential fatalities on the roads.

I had a constituent come to me about a month ago. Their family was leaving the Bonnyville area – this is a sad story – going to Edmonton, driving to Edmonton. What happened was that a young 24-year-old who was impaired, from my understanding, both with alcohol and drugs struck them head-on. Tragically, out of this family – there was a father, a mother, a child, and a grandmother – the grandmother passed. It's a terrible story. Now, the day that this constituent came to my office was a year from the date that his mother had passed. He was saying that he really feels that there is a problem in Alberta. He also felt that our victims of crime fund was not actively being able to represent them as well, but that's a different problem.

We have examples of impairment that are causing deaths within Alberta. We also have another quote stating that impaired driving is one of the leading causes of death within Canada. So we're now going to be adding a whole new genre or group of people that are going to be impacted. I understand why MADD would be upset that we are now allowing the potential for more impaired drivers. We've got concerned people that are saying that marijuana, or cannabis, is something that needs more time. We need more research. We need to be able to make sure that our job sites and roads are safe so that an example like that young family within my constituency doesn't happen within your own constituencies.

To strengthen this legislation, what we need to start doing is looking at how we put in limits. Let's start by making sure that if a person is suspected of being under the influence of cannabis, we are able to ensure that they're not on a job site unsafe and they're not on the roads unsafe as well. Again, you know, I think that we all want to get home safely. Every Albertan wants to be able to go to work and come home and be able to hug their families and spend that time. But when you've got a literal bullet on the highway, where somebody is unable to make reasonable decisions within a snap of a finger, you end up with fatalities, and I don't think anybody wants that.

It's not that I'm saying that Bill 29 is a bad bill – actually, I probably will be supporting this bill – but I will say that we need to ensure that there is a rule to hold people to account. If we can't hold people to account, then all that's going to happen is that we're going to have a large spike in fatalities, and we're going to say: well, we saw it; we saw this coming.

And you know what? Really, it's the federal government's fault. Well, I don't think that we can solely put the fact that we've got a problem here on their shoulders, but we do need to acknowledge that the Trudeau Liberals are a big part of this. Why is your government not pressing harder? Why are we not sending delegations to Ottawa to ensure that that July 1 deadline gets pushed back so that we have the time to make sure that we get these appropriate tests done so that we can ensure that our roads and our job sites are safe? This seems to be a gap within the government.

Now, I have to commend the Premier for going to B.C. to promote our pipeline, but we also need that Premier to be going to Ottawa and speaking with the Prime Minister, explaining that this is an unreasonable time frame. Let's bring safety and accountability and integrity back. We can't allow something like this to move at an accelerated rate just because the Prime Minister feels that we can pick an arbitrary date out of the air to somehow be able to, I guess, fulfill a campaign promise that was made before thought was put into it. I can say that there were a lot of people that were pressuring the Prime Minister to have this done a lot earlier, which is even more shocking.

What I'm trying to get at here is that we really need to ensure that our roads – our roads – are safe. If we can't test for impairment, then we are taking the risk that people are going to be driving unsafely on that road, and we are unable to take them off when they are unsafe on the road.

Madam Chair, I just want to reiterate, in final, that it's not just our local MLAs that need to be debating this. It needs to be something that we take as a serious thing going forward because lives in Alberta matter.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Hon. members, before we proceed, would there be any objection to returning briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

The Chair: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly council members from Mackenzie county. If you would please rise, we would like to give you the traditional welcome applause of all members of the Assembly. Please rise.

Thank you.

The Chair: I love it when I have visitors from my constituency. It doesn't happen often.

Bill 29
An Act to Reduce Cannabis and Alcohol

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to briefly make some remarks this afternoon with respect to Bill 29, an Act to Reduce Cannabis and Alcohol Impaired Driving. In September of this year there was a 40-year anniversary of the class of 1977 of Queen Elizabeth composite high school that was attended by one of the members of that class who is a member of this Legislature as well, that being the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster. Now, I wasn't a member of that graduating class, but he was. He was in grade 10 when I was in grade 12. I thought I might attend that reunion last September, but I wasn't able to.

There was somebody else who was not able to attend that 1977 40-year class reunion from Queen Elizabeth composite high school. That individual was the graduating class president for that year. That individual, who was the grad class president, had been killed in a car accident in a collision caused by a drunk driver six months after he graduated from that high school. That individual was my brother Kevin Dach. Kevin was my younger brother, and in that criminal collision his 17-year-old life was snuffed out.

I can tell you that we've been talking about the effects that drunk driving or impaired driving has on families, and I don't think there's a family represented by the members in this Legislature that has not been touched by impaired driving. I can tell you honestly that the family that my brother belonged to remains deeply touched by his death and the tragedy of that lost promise that was created by the reckless action of somebody who got behind the wheel while impaired. The individual was charged and convicted of drunk driving and received a $1,500 fine and six-month licence suspension. There possibly was marijuana involved – I'm not sure – but as we've said in this legislation, impairment is impairment. I'm very pleased to see these measures go forward.

I know that the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster remembers my brother well. He was attending Lakeland College, wanting to be a park warden. Of course, that never came to fruition, but we were able to place his ashes in Jasper national park, above the place where they had a field trip during his class training at Lakeland College. I do manage to usually get there every year and visit the site, knowing that they're placed in a spot where he would have hoped to have worked, had he had the opportunity to live a normal lifespan without it being cut short by somebody's reckless actions.

Members opposite talk to me about whether this legislation is happening too fast, whether maybe we should be waiting for an adequate test to be determined before we move forward with it. I agree that the timelines are tight – I think that all provinces across this country know that the timelines are tight – but I don't say: too fast. I say: giddy-up.

Members opposite like to talk about business opportunities and letting private business find solutions to problems. Well, guess what? Here's one. Let's get private business and/or government labs going on this right away. There's a heck of a business opportunity. If you solve the issue of testing for cannabis in a person's blood system and come up with a good test solution, you're going to have a very profitable business on your hands.

As we approach Grey Cup day – November 27, 1977, was the date that a drunk driver killed my brother as well as two others in the same car. So three dead, one injured for life and changed forever. It happened on Grey Cup day in 1977. All were students at Lakeland College, full of promise, and every family affected horribly by it. Every member of this Assembly knows how it affects families, and those that have been directly affected, really never forget and always are affected by the death or tragic injury of a loved one.

I seldom will have a drink if I'm going to drive, and I do ask myself whenever I'm at a function: how many joints or drinks would I like my airline pilot to have before they get into the cockpit? That's the question we should be asking ourselves and Albertans when we talk about how much tolerance there should be for any alcohol or impairment substances we might put into our system before deciding to get behind a wheel. Personally, I'd like to see zero tolerance extended to everybody who happens to get behind the wheel. That may be a point we get to at some point. Ultimately, I'd hope we get there.

But for the moment I'm glad to support this legislation. I do hope that we do elicit the business community to recognize a business opportunity and develop a test system very quickly, and I hope that we are able to find something that satisfies the scientific needs for proving charges in court. In the meantime implementing the legislation now will act as a deterrent and save lives even as we seek a reliable test method.

So enjoy yourselves this holiday period, Grey Cup period, but I suggest that you employ zero tolerance in your habits when you decide to get behind a wheel for all the reasons that you've outlined or have seen outlined before you today.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to thank the Member for Edmonton-McClung for sharing that very personal story and also all of the other members who have participated in the debate this afternoon. This bill is very wide ranging. A lot of us would also benefit from continued conversations with our constituents.

With that being said and seeing the hour, I would move that the committee now rise and report progress.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 29.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur on the report?

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Just seeing the hour and the incredible, robust debate we've had this afternoon – I also understand that the roads around the province might be a little bit icy today – in consideration of that, I'd like to move that we adjourn the House until 1:30 p.m. on the Monday following the constituency week.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 3:59 p.m. to Monday, November 27, at 1:30 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 29th Legislature - 3rd Session (2017)

Activity to Thursday, November 16, 2017

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 1 to 200 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 201 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

* An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at 780.427.2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned chapter number until the conclusion of the Fall Sitings.

1:30 p.m.

Monday, November 27, 2017

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome back.

Great game, sad score.

Please join me in the singing of our national anthem by Mr. Robert Clark. Sing in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
Il sait porter la croix!
Ton histoire est une épopée
Des plus brillants exploits.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, if we might reflect and pray. As we gather today, let us not forget that this Assembly, Alberta's Assembly, is an institution created to represent every person who calls this province their home. We are all here. We are all Albertans. In our deliberations today we must be mindful of how each person's identity is shaped by many different things. Thus, we must keep in mind how each would be affected by the decisions that we will make.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Rural Albertans are incredibly concerned about crime, so much so that over 100 of them are in our gallery today to show their concern to this government. Included in that group are Alison Marshall, who has done a lot of groundwork in preparation for today; Red Deer county's Mayor Jim Wood and councillors Richard Lorenz, Dana Depalme, and Christine Moore; Raven Crime Watch executive members Richard Foesier, Fred Grono, Richard Gundersen, and Margaret Lowe; and my beautiful wife, Maggie MacIntyre. I'd ask them to stand now and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce some of the finest, brightest, wildly intelligent, competent, capable, incredible, fantastic students from Prairie Christian academy. They're joined today by a good friend of mine, their teacher Michael Robertson, and Bill Redifer. If they would all rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you 30 students, who are seated in the galleries today, from St. John XXIII Catholic elementary school, a school in my constituency, the most beautiful constituency,

I think, and probably some of the smartest students in the entire province. I had the pleasure of opening that school with the Minister of Education. They are accompanied here today by their teachers Mme Jennifer Steedsman and Mme Ashley Stevens along with their chaperones Mrs. Debra Somani, Mrs. Nicia Gerhard, and Ms Jodie de Moissac. If they'd please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other school groups here today?

Seeing and hearing none, the Minister of Labour and minister responsible for democratic renewal.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much. With your indulgence, I do have three sets of introductions. First, I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Mr. Dennis Malayko and his family – Merrilou Malayko, Mark Malayko, Erin Angelstad, and Mya Angelstad – who are seated in your gallery, Mr. Speaker. In 1974 the Alberta government established the Gale commission to provide advice and recommendations on how to prevent workplace injuries and deaths. As the first occupational health and safety officer in Alberta Dennis worked on that commission's recommendations, advice that would form our province's first health and safety system. He advocated strongly to the Lougheed government for improvements and to Lougheed himself directly in meetings, and while much of this work was done, his advice to form mandatory joint work-site health and safety committees was not taken. Today is a testament to the old adage that you should never let them tell you that it can't be done, even if it takes over 40 years. He is now retired, but his hard work on health and safety will benefit all Albertans for decades to come. I'd like to ask him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to also introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Shirley Hickman and Donna Van Bruggen from Threads of Life. Workplace tragedies don't just affect the workers involved; they have a profound impact on families. After losing her son in a workplace tragedy in Ontario in 1996, Shirley cofounded Threads of Life, a national registered charity dedicated to helping families affected by workplace tragedy. Many families have been helped by Threads of Life, families like Donna's. Donna, too, lost her son in a workplace tragedy, in 2012. Now Donna is a volunteer speaker for Threads of Life. They work every day to lead and inspire a future where all workplaces are safe and workplace injuries, illnesses, and deaths are unacceptable. I would now like them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms Gray: For my final introduction, I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Alyssa Smith from the Workers' Resource Centre in Calgary. The Workers' Resource Centre is a charitable organization funded through the United Way of Calgary and Area, the Alberta Law Foundation, and donations from individuals and organizations across Alberta. They assist and support Albertans by helping them to complete applicable forms, writing letters, initiating claims and complaints and appeals when workers are injured. She helps in representing them at appeals and hearings and referrals to appropriate agencies. I'm very pleased to have her here with us today. I'd like to ask her to rise and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Health and Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you a group of advocates from the Alberta chapter of the Canadian Hemophilia Society. November 26 marked the 20th anniversary of the Krever inquiry, which investigated contamination of the blood supply with HIV and hepatitis C. Thousands of Canadians with hemophilia and other blood disorders were impacted through the use of tainted blood products. We continue to honour the memory of those who were impacted. The tainted blood tragedy remains one of Canada's worst-ever public health disasters, and it stands as a reminder of why patient safety must be at the heart of our public health care system. I ask the following guests – Carmen Nishiyama, Cleaven Pagani, and Joanna Halliday – who are seated in the Speaker's gallery, to please rise and receive our welcome and our gratitude.

1:40

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a friend, mentor, and my former boss, Yvonne Fast. Yvonne worked in health care for many years before becoming involved in the labour movement. She held many positions, including president of CUPE Alberta, the national staff representative for CUPE national, and, recently, provincial director. I came to know Yvonne when I worked with CUPE negotiating for workers in nonprofits and women's shelters all across our province. Yvonne was a caring boss and always challenged me to sharpen and refine many of the skills that have helped me in my role in this House. After a career spanning over 30 years fighting for the rights of workers in our province, Yvonne is retiring as the regional director of CUPE Alberta, and she will be missed. Yvonne is joined here today by her husband, Mitchell Fast. I wish them both well in this new chapter in their lives. I hope that they spend time, of course, during their retirement travelling around this province and spending some tourism dollars. I ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a visiting delegation from Lakeland county crime watch. They are part of a group of over 100 Albertans here today upset and concerned with the rise of crime in rural Alberta. I would ask that they please stand as I call their names: Gabrielle Bayduza, Myra Bochon, Trevor Dunham, Levina Ewasiuk, Lillian Ewasiuk, Dennis Heffernan, Erna Holliday, Deborah Lawrence, Wray McCoy, Jonny Nielsen, Carolyn Onusko, Louise Poirier-McCoy, Orest Sereda, Lyn Young, Dolores Zacharuk, and Lawrence Zarowny. Please join me in extending my guests the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, you have a second group. Is that right?

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise today and introduce some wonderful constituents from the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. They've travelled here to watch the proceedings today. Well, they have some significant concerns about rural crime and the continual victimization that's going on in rural Alberta with the amount of crime that is taking place. There are seven folks from the constituency here today. If they will rise as I call their names: Glenn Bishell, Connie Huelsman, Bryan Kasha, Richard Ross, Dave Stauber, and Lorraine Richards, who, I might add, has been broken into seven – seven – times. These guests are seated in both galleries. I hope that they will be here and that the minister will accept our request for an emergency debate on this very important issue of rural crime.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to rise today and introduce to you and through you a number of folks from the central Alberta area who are here because they are very concerned about rural crime and violence that they are experiencing. From 2012 to 2015 Lacombe county experienced an increase in total crime offenses of 141 per cent, reported by the RCMP, and a property crime increase of almost 200 per cent. I would ask that as I call out your name, you would please stand: from Lacombe county a member of the Burnt Lake crime watch, Harvey Buit; Lacombe county councillor Dana Kreil and Edward Kreil; the Benalto crime watch president, Jim Morton; a citizen from Lacombe county, Joan Smith; the mayor of Alix, Robert Fehr, who has also been a past crime watch president and is still actively involved in crime watch; Lacombe county's deputy reeve, Ken Wigmore, also a member of the Lacombe rural crime watch, that he serves on; from the city of Lacombe a citizen, Garth Campbell; the mayor of Amisk, Bill Rock; and, lastly, from Battle River-Wainwright crime force organizer Blake Moser. If you would please all receive the warm welcome of the House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any other guests, hon. members? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly a group of concerned Albertans. Rural Albertans are tired of living in fear. They're tired of having police on speed-dial, they're tired of being robbed, and they're tired of being forgotten. Included in the over 100 people here today looking for answers are Mr. David Hamilton, Kayli Henrikson, Mary-Ann Henrikson, Clarence Jobs, Inez Jobs, Lorie Johanson, Edith Kaiser, Arnold Kaiser, and Carol Lawson. I'd like to invite them to please stand and to receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you today a group from the over 100 people that are here today to bring communication on the concerns that they're seeing of crime in rural Alberta. These people that I'm introducing to you are from Red Deer county, one of the beautiful counties that I have the privilege of representing in this place. Sadly, it ranks as number 5 in Maclean's magazine's most dangerous places to live in Canada, and the people that I'm about to introduce to you know why. I would like to ask them to stand as I say their names.

The Speaker: Hon. member, you're not introducing all 100?

Mr. Nixon: No, Mr. Speaker. I'm not introducing all 100, but I suspect all 100 will be introduced before we're done. I have Kent Anderson, Lynn Hambly, Pamela Davidson, Jim Loughheed, Terry MacKenzie, James Martin, Sandra Martin, Elgar Newsham, Linda Nielen, Doris Norman, and Gerald Oxtoby. I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.
Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, it is an honour and privilege to introduce to you and through you again a group of individuals who are very frustrated Albertans. Their friendly communities have turned into communities of suspicion, and instead of relaxing at home, they are on edge and here with us today. Included in the group from Red Deer county are Fred Andersen, Bernice Andersen, Tammy Cocke, Robert Bilowus, Jeremy Crossman, John Marshall, Allan Erickson, Garth Fitch, Wendy Wilson, Kenneth Rogoza, and Mabel Hamilton. If they could please rise, we can extend to them the warm welcome of this Assembly. Thank you for being here.

The Speaker: Welcome.
The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Rural Albertans are being victimized and revictimized by criminals. They are openly frustrated and scared, and many of them have come here today because of that. I'd like to introduce to you and through you – and I'd invite them to stand as I mention their names – Vincent Lohman, Cameron Lohman, Lisa Newton, Jack Oszli, Catherine Perry, Edward and Alfred Schatschneider, and Judith Winn. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.
The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and a privilege to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly concerned citizens from a group of over a hundred who have joined us here today. I can assure you that we would have more, but there are not enough seats. Living in fear is no way to live. Being afraid to stay in your home and afraid to live is an impossible situation. I'd like to invite Kellyann Rude, Brian Rude, Sandra Smith, Margo Staniforth, Edward Whitehead, Kenneth Whitehead, Roderick Strong, Dwayne Tyrkalo, Gary Wagers, and Glen Wordie to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I rise to seek unanimous consent of the Assembly to continue with the introductions, to postpone question period, until they are finished and to extend the time for the Routine until it's completed.

The Speaker: Are there any other introductions here today, hon. members? The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I was going to do this introduction later, but I believe that my guests are in the gallery. I'm honoured to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly some of the amazing occupational health and safety and legal team that has worked hard on the legislation being introduced today, Bill 30, An Act to Protect the Health and Well-being of Working Albertans. We have with us Diane Radnoff, Elizabeth Chung, Melinda Yiu, Amanda Stephenson, Ray Cislo, Ann Laing, Teresa McKinnon, Mark Rice, Chelsea Evans-Rymes, Jill Willis, Candice Kinal, and Mark Greene.

Mr. Speaker, lots of hard work goes into proposing positive change, and we couldn't be here without the knowledge and expertise of our civil servants in Alberta Labour. They work hard every day to ensure that Albertans have safe and healthy workplaces, and they have my utmost gratitude for the work that they do. I'd like them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Provincial Response to Pipeline Opposition

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, we've been urging this government to step up and start defending our energy sector, and good on them for at least trying to do so this last week. They say that imitation is the sincerest form of flattery, so I guess the Hon. Jason Kenney should be quite flattered to see the Premier borrow some of his language. But talk is cheap. To the Premier: if her Trudeau Liberal allies refuse to actually advocate in B.C., will she rescind her support for Justin Trudeau's 67 per cent hike on the carbon tax? The job-killing carbon tax, I might add.

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member opposite for giving me an opportunity to talk about our government's continued and ongoing support of our energy industry and about the work that we've been doing over the last week and a half and that will be going on next week, which, of course, is a continuation of the work that we began months after we got elected. It's very, very important for us to deliver the message to all Canadians that our energy industry supports all Canadians and that our energy industry provides stability and good jobs for working families across this country. And, quite interestingly, another message that I will . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Nixon: If you think that a 75 per cent tax on natural gas is bad now, just wait until Ottawa's carbon tax hike comes into place, with Justin Trudeau demanding a 67 per cent increase to the NDP's own job-killing carbon tax and the Premier conceding to that without a fight and without one inch of pipeline actually being built. In fact, Ottawa has killed two pipelines since then. I previously tried to pass a motion demanding that Ottawa rein in the National Energy Board's decision to include upstream and downstream emissions in a pipeline assessment. Unfortunately, the NDP government blocked my efforts. But since the government is again following our lead, will the Premier now . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Anyway, carrying on with what I was saying before, our government was very proud to work with and stand with our energy industry from the point when we got elected and moving forward. One way we started doing that was by working with those progressive leaders in the energy industry who understood that we needed to position ourselves as the most sustainable and responsible energy producer in the world, which they have successfully done, and they have my great support. But what they need is for the members opposite to stop calling them down, stop political grandstanding, and start pulling together with the rest of the . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, this Premier is the one who called Albertans embarrassing cousins. I'm glad to see that she doesn't think that anymore. But let's talk about this. The last time the Premier visited with her friend John Horgan, who is now the B.C. Premier, the B.C. NDP Premier, he said that she had no intention of persuading him when it came to pipelines. It's a simple question. The Premier will visit Vancouver later this week. Will she meet with her old comrade John Horgan, the NDP Premier of B.C., and will she actually defend and stand up for pipelines with him? [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, I know that you're all glad to be back in this happy, joyous place and you're looking forward to exchanges with each other. Let's make sure that we are quiet, and we can enjoy this time together.

The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Just to begin, when it comes to past references to awkward relatives, let me be entirely clear. That reference was with respect to the Conservative Party and their predecessors over there and their record, the record that they have in not succeeding in terms of getting pipelines built. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Ms Notley: The message that I've been delivering this week to the federal NDP is: a climate plan that doesn't understand and support working people is bound to fail. The message to the federal Liberal government is: stand up and get the job done. And the message to the Conservatives is: stop playing politics about something that's so important to all Canadians.

The Speaker: Second main question.

Keystone XL Pipeline Project

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, on this side of the House we are sincerely pleased to see Keystone XL approved in Nebraska last week. On this side of the House we support pipelines for Alberta oil in every direction. Unfortunately, the NDP can't say the same. When in opposition the Premier said that they were against it when asked about Keystone XL. When in government the NDP abandoned the fight for Keystone. When Hillary Clinton came out against the pipeline, the Premier agreed. Now we hope that the NDP has had a genuine about-face when it comes to Keystone. Will the Premier admit that her party's previous opposition to Keystone was wrong headed?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I indicated last week, our government was pleased to see the progress that was made with respect to Keystone because we understand that it is important for our energy industry. It's important for ensuring that we reduce costs and ultimately increase returns for Albertans and for Canadians. Of course, the allegations about things that our government did were in fact something that's two sword lengths, one nose length in between here and there. I will say that we've been standing up for the Alberta energy industry, and the members opposite need to start acknowledging it. [interjections]

The Speaker: Calm it down, folks. Calm it down.

Mr. Nixon: The hon. Rob Merrifield, Alberta's former envoy to Washington, DC, revealed last week that the first order he received from this incoming NDP government was to stop advocating for Keystone. I'll remind you that at that time Keystone had not been rejected by the White House. In fact, there was a major effort to get congressional approval, and the NDP scuttled that effort. The government has denied Merrifield's claims. To the Premier: if you have nothing to hide, will you table your communications between your office and Alberta's mission to Washington in 2015?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I've said before, the assertions made by Mr. Kenney and his political friends are absolutely, deeply, profoundly untrue. The reputation that the members opposite are starting to develop with respect to their relationship with facts is something that all Albertans are beginning to worry about. You know what? You've just got to stop making stuff up. That's what the member opposite is referring to, something that was made up, and that's all I have to say on the matter.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I gave the Premier an opportunity to provide facts. She did not. Instead she insulted the hon. Rob Merrifield, insulted the Hon. Jason Kenney. Instead of standing up in this House and proving that what she says is true, she continues to use decoys and to go out of her way to insult people. The question is: table the documents and prove that what you're saying is true, or it's not. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. There's snow in Toronto, but it's very nice outside today here, so you want to make sure that you get out there and enjoy that fresh air.

The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, I can't table documents that don't exist. But had I ever given direction to Mr. Merrifield, what I would likely have said was something along the lines of, "Stop using your diplomatic position to promote the political aspirations of your former party," much like he's doing right now.

Interestingly, though, what I can say is that I am very proud that this government appointed a professional diplomat who has been working on behalf of the people of Alberta and supporting our energy industry in Washington ever since. We've gotten success, there will be more, and I'm very proud of that.

The Speaker: Third main question.

Rural Crime

Mr. Nixon: Rural Albertans across this province are expressing their concerns about the dramatic increase in crime in their communities. They're being victimized, they're being abused, and the Justice minister for this government says that everything is okay and the system is working okay. The people in the gallery and the people back home in my constituency and across rural Alberta disagree, so today I will move an emergency motion before this House. I ask through you, Mr. Speaker: will the Premier and her caucus support that emergency debate motion so that we can stand up for the people that are victimized by criminals in this province?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member opposite ought to know that the proposal that they're putting forward is undoubtedly outside of the rules of the House although we'll see what happens when the matter is discussed.

Mr. Cooper: Point of order.

Ms Notley: That being said, it doesn't take away at all from the importance of this issue to all Albertans and especially to rural Albertans. We know that they want to feel safe in their communities, and we know that crime is going up in certain communities across the province. That's why our government is continuing to invest in policing. That's why our government is supporting the rural integrated crime unit. That's why our government is continuing to support all the funding that prevents crime.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I'm glad to see that the Premier thinks that she's you and she can decide what's in order in this House, but that is ridiculous.

Here are the facts. The people that she's talking about are in this gallery today. The people that she's talking about are being robbed, are being abused, are being victimized, and are scared to be in their own homes. I am tired of going home on constituency breaks or on the weekend and hearing the abuse that the people that I represent are going through. Again, I will ask through you, Mr. Speaker: will the Premier stand up, vote with us, declare an emergency debate? Let's get down to work for the people of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As you and most other members of this House know, that's not exactly the way the process works. That being said, I'm very pleased that our acting Minister of Justice will be having the opportunity today to meet with a number of the people who are here today, and we are also very pleased that over the course of the last week and a half we've been able to have even more meetings through AAMDC and AUMA. We have in fact heard the head of AAMDC, who said that he trusts that this government is working as hard as it can to address the issue that we know is a very serious problem for rural Albertans. But one thing that I will definitely say . . .

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, if you're not in support of this motion, you may as well be with the criminals that are victimizing my constituents. [interjections]

Mr. Speaker, here are the facts. People are being robbed in our communities. People are being victimized in our communities.

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

Mr. Nixon: They're here . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I just want to caution the use of words by implication with respect to criminals in the House. I did not hear the preamble as clearly as I wanted because it was too noisy. However, I hope that wasn't the case. Please, continue with your question.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, is this government going to stand up for Albertans or hide behind the ridiculous procedural arguments that this Premier is trying to bring forward? We will bring forward a motion where we can stand up for Albertans in this House today. Is the Premier with Albertans, or is she against them? It's that simple.

The Speaker: Government House Leader, did you make a point of order?

Mr. Mason: I did.

The Speaker: Thank you.
The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What the people of Alberta need is a reasoned debate, reasoned government actions to deal with this crisis. What they do not need is grandstanding and name-calling of the sort that we just saw. That won't help anything. I'm pleased that the minister will be meeting with these folks. We are very pleased that we are continuing to fund these important, important programs. You know what won't help this problem? Cutting it by 20 per cent. How in heaven's name does the member opposite expect to make progress with the kinds of cuts that they keep demanding?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Springbank Reservoir Flood Mitigation Project

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Study after study after study has shown that the Springbank off-stream reservoir is the cheapest, most effective, and most timely way to ensure that the downtown Calgary and river communities are protected from flooding like we saw in 2013. My constituents and everyone who cares about the economic engine of downtown Calgary were very concerned when the Canadian Environmental Assessment Agency sent back a long list of questions about the Springbank environmental impact assessment. To the Minister of Transportation: given that your department has put a lot of resources into preparing that EIA, why are there still so many outstanding questions?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much to the hon. member for the question. He's been a solid advocate on behalf of the Springbank reservoir, which is something that is strongly supported and continues to be strongly supported by this government because it is the right answer to protect Calgary from future major flood events. We have not wavered. We are not wavering now. Now, having said that, there are a number of deficiencies in the EIA, as has been pointed out, but these kinds of requests for further information are normal and part of the normal process. We're working very hard to supply the additional information.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This spring will represent five years since the devastating southern Alberta floods, and every year that goes by brings more risk, so it's incredibly frustrating to see that there may be yet another delay on this project. The timeline has already been extended, and I'm worried this latest setback will put the people and businesses in southern Alberta at risk for even longer. Again to the Minister of Transportation: what impact will this information request have on the project timeline, and what are you doing to ensure that your department will work quickly to answer the CEAA's questions and keep the project on track?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to assure the hon. member and the House that the department and I are working full out to make sure that these deficiencies are remedied as quickly as possible and as thoroughly as possible. We think that any delays will be measured in weeks and not months.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week it was revealed that the few remaining landowners opposed to this project are coming up with new and creative ways to try to block it. Most recently they've proposed a development in what appears to be an attempt to frustrate the province's legitimate plans to acquire the land. Again to the minister: will this tactic have an impact on the project costs or timeline, and can you reassure the countless thousands of people who would benefit from this project – including my constituents, everyone who lives or works in downtown Calgary, the people downstream of the city, including those in Siksika, Medicine Hat, and rural Alberta – that you remain committed to the Springbank off-stream reservoir?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I want to assure unequivocally that we remain committed to the Springbank off-stream reservoir as a solution to the protection of Calgary from future flood events. I want to assure him that we are doing everything possible. This particular proposed development will not change the value of the land, and we don't consider it a serious proposition. It's an attempt to drive up the cost of the land, and we're making sure that we do everything possible to make sure that does not happen.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Bow.

Sexual Violence Survivors

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know that sexual violence predominantly is a gendered crime. The vast majority of survivors are women, and our government is making good progress on this, but there's still more work to be done. We have all seen the flood of disclosures of gender-based violence on social media with the Me Too hash tag. To the Minister of Status of Women: how can we support survivors of sexual violence who have disclosed abuse that's happened to them?

The Speaker: The Minister of Service Alberta and Status of Women.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have certainly been humbled by the outpouring of disclosures of sexual violence. All Albertans deserve to be free from the threat of violence. We know that the root cause of gendered violence is gender inequality, and that's why our government has taken a number of steps to address violence against women in this province and to shift the culture, including investing over $800,000 over three years to fund the I Believe You campaign, because it's important that survivors know that if they come forward, they will be treated with respect and dignity. By tackling women's equality, we tackle violence against women. That's why for the first time in Alberta's history we established a ministry dedicated to advancing women's equality.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've had many survivors of sexual abuse come into my constituency office to share their stories and seek help. One constituent in particular was sexually abused at a very young age and was put into various foster care arrangements, where the abuse continued for many years. To the same minister: what is our government doing to protect and support sexual abuse survivors?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With some of the highest rates of gender-based violence in this country, we, unlike our friends opposite, understand how critical it is to invest in women's safety. We boosted funding for women's shelters by $15 million to help ensure that women and their children fleeing from violence are not turned away. We increased access to the legal system for survivors of domestic violence by removing the time limit to bring forward civil claims. We made it easier for survivors of domestic violence to get out of dangerous situations by allowing them to break residential leases without financial penalty. Even with these important steps we on this side of the House know that there is much more work to do. We will continue to work with our valued community and . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We want to make sure that survivors are feeling empowered to come forward and get help. To the same minister: what is our government doing specifically with initiatives to help empower survivors?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Survivors of sexual violence deserve to be believed, feel safe, and be supported. Our government is taking action to make life better for women and girls in Alberta. We've invested more than half a billion dollars in front-line policing and established guidelines for police to help ensure a consistent response to domestic violence incidents. We've increased funding by $25 million to help family and community support services address issues like sexual violence and to promote healthy relationships, and we've promoted sexual assault prevention programs with stable funding. We've invested more than $21.7 million in family and community safety grants to support programs which focus on preventing domestic and sexual violence, all things that . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the diverse constituency of Drumheller-Stettler the community of Donalda has started to put together a rural crime watch to help deal with the ever-increasing problem of rural crime. They understand that the RCMP have vast areas to patrol. They have concerns that even when it's common knowledge about who the problem citizens are, police resources are so sparse that they can't properly investigate. To the minister: what are you doing to support these small communities beyond telling them to request additional officers? If that actually worked, why would rural crime be so rampant?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to answer all of these questions on behalf of the Minister of Justice today. I want to first of all reassure the members of Donalda and everybody in the galleries today that our government takes the issue of rural crime very seriously. We believe that every Albertan deserves to live in a community that's safe, and our government has invested significant resources in policing all across this province.

An Hon. Member: How much?

Mr. Schmidt: Five hundred million dollars a year to be exact, Mr. Speaker.

We continue to look forward to the opportunity to meet with some members of the gallery after question period to discuss some additional steps that our government can take to reduce rural crime.

The Speaker: Thank you.
First supplemental.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Given that known criminals with lengthy criminal records are committing crimes such as petty theft in these areas and given that when these criminals are finally brought to justice, they are given a slap on the wrist by the courts, Minister, Albertans want to know what your government is doing to promote minimum sentencing in order to ensure that these habitual offenders are taken off the street and out of our communities.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, it's my understanding that the issue of minimum sentencing is a federal jurisdiction issue and not necessarily one that the province would deal with. With respect to getting notorious criminals off the street, the integrated crime reduction unit in central Alberta has already been successful at taking three extremely well-known individuals off the streets. These people have been responsible for over 300 calls over the last few months. Our government continues to support the RCMP in their work to reduce crime in central Alberta and in rural areas all across the province.

Mr. Strankman: Given that these Albertans are fed up with what seems to be a common practice of the Crown to drop cases over an overtaxed court system and given that the recent ruling on the Jordan case has compounded this troubling issue and given that justice delayed is justice denied, Minister, your government claims to be doing everything it can to alleviate these issues. Will you table the performance measures that you're using to track how effective your policies are at combatting this troubling situation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we continue to push the federal government to fill the additional judicial spaces that we created, and I'd be pleased to table a copy of the letter that the Minister of Justice sent to her federal counterpart after question period today. We've also hired 50 additional Crown prosecutors. We've hired additional court staff. We're confident that those measures will accelerate the processes through the courts and make sure that these cases are dealt with as quickly as possible.

Crime and Public Safety in Airdrie and Area

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, Airdrie has a vibrant business community that has grown significantly over the past decade. We've also had the CrossIron Mills mall open nearly eight years ago, and another new megamall is set to open up right beside it. The business community is getting increasingly concerned about the rising incidence of crime in the area, particularly theft, property damage, and criminal mischief. The Balzac Business Community Association and local RCMP have identified and communicated a need for increased manpower to handle the larger population. The Airdrie and area RCMP remains at eight members, same as it was eight years ago. What is this NDP government doing about this very major problem?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, our government is committed to making sure that the businesses in Balzac as well as the residents of every community feel safe in their homes. Our government is working diligently to do that. We continue to provide over half a billion dollars in funding to police services all across the province to make sure that we have adequate resources on the streets. In addition, our government has taken meaningful steps to reduce the red tape that police officers have to deal with so that they can spend more time on the streets and less time pushing pencils behind desks.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, this situation isn't improving, and this government isn't helping. With the business park near CrossIron Mills mall experiencing a 24 per cent increase in property crimes in one year and given that multiple businesses have actually been broken into multiple times and given that owners have taken to sleeping in their shops overnight out of fear for their property and livelihoods and given that this shouldn't happen in a democratic, orderly society, again, what is this government doing to address my constituents fears and concerns?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the Minister of Justice's office has already heard from the people of Balzac that the hon. member referred to, and we've provided them some additional information, some steps that they can do to enhance crime prevention in their communities. Of course, our government continues to provide adequate financial resources for police officers all across the province, financial resources, I would remind you, that those members voted against.

Mrs. Pitt: Oh, Mr. Speaker, I sure hope that those criminals get that memo.

Given that the province of Alberta is responsible for ensuring that an adequate and effective level of policing is maintained throughout the province and given that crime is on the rise everywhere – we're seeing it in rural areas, and we're seeing it in urban areas – and given that this is not just about material possessions but that people are fearing for their personal safety, their physical safety, and given that we live in a first-world country, what is this NDP government doing to keep people safe?

Mr. Schmidt: Well, Mr. Speaker, of course, I've heard from many rural Albertans from all across the province about their concerns about crime, and our government is committed to making sure that our communities remain safe places to live. What we are doing is providing stable funding for police services all across the province during the worst economic downturn in a generation, financial resources that those members continue to vote against and are in fact proposing to cut.

Mr. MacIntyre: Mr. Speaker, rural Alberta is under siege. Rural residents are in constant fear of coming home to find that they have been robbed. But they are not only concerned with the loss of property; rural Albertans are also concerned about themselves and their loved ones being physically harmed at the hands of these criminals. Rural Albertans do not feel safe. I know one friend personally who was attacked in his home by five assailants, and he was beaten with a baseball bat. What is this government going to do to ensure that rural Albertans receive the same level of protection as those in cities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've very concerned to hear these stories of crime happening all across the province. Our government is committed to making sure that every Albertan feels safe in their home, and that's why we continue to provide resources for police services all across the province. Additionally, the new deputy commissioner of the RCMP in Alberta has undertaken a number of initiatives to tackle rural crime, which include a crime reduction strategy, renewed focus on the intelligence program, continued focus on traffic services as well as the development of the call management strategy so that police resources are used as efficiently as possible so that we can tackle these issues of rural crime.

Mr. MacIntyre: Rural Albertans, frankly, are fed up with the exorbitant wait times for police to arrive on the scene. Given that just last year the Red Deer area topped Stats Canada's crime severity index, if the government will not protect rural Albertans, who will? Does it fall to rural Albertans to protect themselves? Is this government prepared for the implications of that? Nobody wants to see people physically hurt or even killed. What is this government's plan to address this severe injustice?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll tell you who they can't trust, and that's Jason Kenney because he wants to cut the police budget by 20 per cent, which would take half of all of our police officers off the road. In fact, he has a track record of making these cuts as a government member in cabinet in Ottawa. He cut funding to ALERT and will continue to turn his back on Albertans. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members. [interjections] Hon. members.

Mr. MacIntyre: This NDP government has done nothing but fail Albertans on the Justice file. Given that triage protocol from this NDP government has meant violent criminals have gone unprosecuted, further endangering victims, and given the known high incidence of recidivism and corresponding danger that rural Albertans now face as a consequence of this gross inaction, will this NDP government finally listen to Albertans that enough is enough and get tough on crime?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, our government is in fact investing resources in dealing with criminal processes. We've invested in hiring 50 more Crown prosecutors, we've increased court staff, and we're building a new courthouse in Red Deer so that we can deal with these cases in a timely manner. Our record shows that we are, in fact, tough on crime. A 20 per cent cut in the budget would be tough on police and would leave these people in the galleries to continue to be victimized by the criminals roaming rural Alberta.

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, it's no secret that rural crime is rampant in areas of Alberta, and quite frankly citizens are sick of it. I've reached out, and I have some questions from victims. It used to be rare, you know, to know someone that had something stolen out on the farm. Now it's rare if you know someone that hasn't. Minister, does the NDP even know or care what's happening outside the large cities, and what are they doing about it besides asking the AUMA to write their local MP for more RCMP resources?

Mr. Schmidt: Well, Mr. Speaker, of course, I have many friends and family who live in rural Alberta communities all across the province, and I've heard from them how scared they are in their homes and how fearful they are that they could be potential victims of crime. That's why our government has continued to invest in police resources. I'm not sure, if the members are concerned about theft, why they're endorsing Jason Kenney to steal money from the budgets from police so that they will no longer be able to do their jobs.

Mr. Cooper: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order noted.

I want to caution everyone with respect – we've heard on at least two occasions from each side of the House references to personal character, words like "criminals," "theft," and "stealing." I want to remind you all that . . . [interjection] Hon. member.

The first supplemental.

Mr. Schneider: Given that these rural victims feel alone after crimes perpetuated against them and given that the police don't come sometimes for a day to investigate, if they come at all, and given that law enforcement don't let victims know and the public know if they actually catch anyone or try to, Minister, does this government intend to direct law enforcement to keep the victims of crime informed during the investigation process instead of increasing their sense of isolation and uncertainty by not informing them whether the perpetrator is still at large?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. All I can say on this issue is that we continue to provide the supports to police through providing half a billion dollars in funding to make sure that the police are on the streets fighting crime. In addition, like I said before in an answer to a previous question, we've reduced the red tape the police have to deal with so that they can spend more of their time fighting crime and not dealing with busywork behind their desks.

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, given that a constituent had his truck stolen and tools and equipment within the back of it in one week and then the criminals came back to try to steal his son's truck the following week and given that insurance rates rise rapidly once claims are made and given the lack of communication by law enforcement which would keep victims in the loop and given that self-defence makes criminals out of law-abiding citizens, Minister, he wants to know: when will this government stand up for the victims and ensure that these criminals are prosecuted to the full extent of the law, not given a slap on the wrist?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, I would remind the member that the federal Conservative government was in power for 10 years and they did nothing to increase the number of judge positions here in Alberta. They also, with Jason Kenney as a member of that cabinet, cut funding to ALERT. They continue to turn their back on Albertans and created this. We stepped up with funding. We replaced the federal funding that was taken away by Jason Kenney. Our government is supporting rural Albertans. We're tackling crime. Those guys, when they had the opportunity, actually made it worse.

The Speaker: I'm sorry. You have a point of order?
The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Rural Police Service and Crime Prevention

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Rural Alberta policing is in a crisis. The RCMP are the lowest paid force in the province. They cannot get enough recruits. Member morale is at an all-time low. I know ex-RCMP members who quit the force. Ottawa doesn't care, and we are not getting value for the contract money we pay. Will this government tell us how much money we spend on the RCMP's policing contract and how much of that actually goes to real Alberta community policing versus federal national security and non-Alberta administrative expenses?

Mr. Schmidt: Well, Mr. Speaker, what I can tell the member is that we provide over $500 million to support policing all across the province. If the member opposite is concerned about what the federal government was doing with funding police in this province, he should probably ask his friend Jason Kenney what he did on the issue because what we know is that he actually made the issue worse by cutting ALERT funding, funding that we had to step up and fill in because the federal Conservative government wasn't willing to, money that we could have used to further prevent rural crime and reduce rural crime, but we were given no choice because Jason Kenney turned his back on Albertans when he was in Ottawa.

Mr. Orr: Mr. Speaker, one woman writes: "Our new business in a fenced, locked compound has been broken into four times in four months. I can't sleep at night worrying, waiting for the next hit. Another victimless crime? I don't think so," she says. Given that she went to a Citizens on Patrol meeting in Rimbey and 230 crime-affected, fearful, and frustrated community members filled that room, does this government intend to leave citizens to enact their own patrols? If so, how will you assist them, or will you just abandon them to fend for themselves?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very sorry to hear about this case. Of course, I've heard concerns about crime from members of rural Alberta from all across the province, and our government values safe and caring communities. That's why our government is stepping up to continue to fund police officers across the province.

In answer to his previous question, the RCMP contract salaries went up this past year, and we pay 70 per cent of the RCMP costs. I will endeavour to get further information for the member if he should so request.

Mr. Orr: I would appreciate that information. Thank you. Helpful.

Given that the justice system protects the rights of violent criminal repeat offenders, sends them laughing through revolving doors so they can continue to revictimize with their violence, and given that the rights, the safety, the civil security, the peaceful possession of law-abiding, unarmed, defenceless citizens are continually threatened, families are terrorized by gun-toting invaders while children literally hide under their beds – these are real and repeating events – when is this government going to fix a broken system that in real consequences actually tramples all remnants of safety and justice to rural, law-abiding citizens?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you. Like the member opposite, I, too, have heard these kinds of stories of people being victimized in their own homes in rural Alberta. Our government doesn't find that situation acceptable. That's why we've taken steps to make the court system work more efficiently by hiring more Crown prosecutors, more court staff. We're also building the new Red Deer courthouse so that we can deal with these in a timely manner so that the criminals are off the streets and that people feel safe in their communities.

2:30 Opioid Use Prevention and Treatment

Cortes-Vargas: Mr. Speaker, I could tell you many heart-wrenching stories about many individuals who face a complex path when trying to break the cycle of abuse. It is one of the many reasons I came into politics. The opioid crisis is affecting every community in our province, and rural communities face the additional barrier of limited access to services. To the Associate Minister of Health: how are you working to support Albertans' substance use issues in rural Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The number of Albertans that we have lost to this issue is so high, which should remind us all that the opioid crisis is serious and requires a government that is taking action. We have brought in thousands of new treatment spaces in every part of the province, including clinics in Cardston, Ponoka, Strathcona county, and expanded telehealth into the central zone and also to remote areas. As a result, the number of Albertans getting help has more than quadrupled this year. That's thousands and thousands of people out of harm's way, and that's good news.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. PCNs like the one in Sherwood Park play an important role in addressing this issue. To the minister: how are you working to ensure primary care networks have the expertise and resources to provide substance use treatment to patients?

The Speaker: The associate minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our response to the opioid overdose crisis is guided by a diverse and committed group of Albertans. One of the commission's recommendations is to provide funding to bring substance use treatment into doctors' offices at primary care networks. We know that primary care physicians are on the front lines and are often in a position to provide early interventions and care. That's why I've accepted this recommendation, and we will be working with our physician partners to implement it.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that last week the Canadian Institute for Health Information noted that Alberta dispenses opioid medications to patients at a higher rate than other provinces and given that this story of how addiction to opioids starts is all too common, what are you doing to help the medical profession evaluate their opioid prescribing practices?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We supported the College of Physicians & Surgeons of Alberta when they changed their standards of practice for opioid prescribing in March. Overprescribing is a serious problem, and I know that physicians understand that. They are changing their behaviour as a profession, and the early data shows that we are turning a corner on opioid overprescription.

Southern Alberta Wildfire Recovery

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, the wildfire that devastated southeastern Alberta may be officially extinguished, but the devastation it caused continues to impact thousands of people. In Saskatchewan the provincial government is committed to matching private donations up to $100,000 in support of wildfire victims. Here in Alberta our government is silent, and there is no such help. To the minister: will you commit to following Saskatchewan's lead and support Albertans devastated by wildfire by matching private donations?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the question. Our government is committed to working with municipalities around the province to do our part to ensure that communities are protected. We know that wildfires in southern Alberta had significant impacts on the communities, and that's why we're continuing to work with them in their recovery.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, given that while the immediate danger from the fire has dissipated, many of the people that were impacted by the southeastern wildfires are now facing significant water quality issues and given that wildfires can cause a number of concerning changes to water quality such as increased sulphates and dissolved solids, including organic carbon, chloride, and iron, changes to pH level, and changes to the colour, taste, and odour of the water, again to the minister: what is being done to ensure that those impacted by the fire have safe drinking water for themselves and their livestock?

The Speaker: The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. The member is right that, certainly, we have seen these effects on drinking water quality both in Fort McMurray and southeast Alberta and elsewhere, so that's why as a government we're committed to ensuring that we invest in water and waste-water treatment facilities.

As for the specifics of the question, I'm very pleased to follow up with the hon. member and any of the municipal officials or other ranching families or other landowners that might be affected by this.

Thanks.

Mr. Barnes: Okay. Thank you for that.

Given that in order to be eligible for DRP funding, a disaster must be extraordinary, insurance not reasonably or readily available, and that there is evidence the event is widespread and given that after talking with constituents affected by the wildfires, I understand that insurance for agricultural fencing and livestock is available but not widely purchased, to the minister: shouldn't it be considered unreasonable to expect farmers and ranchers to purchase a product that isn't widely purchased by their industry? Help these affected producers.

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I did meet with some folks last week at AUMA and, actually, previously at AAMD and C on topics like these, the wildfires and insurance. I'm working and my ministry is working with Ag and Forestry. Our administration folks are working with municipal officials in their areas as well. We're always trying to help Albertans, especially in times of need like this, and trying to figure out the existing programs we have, how they work, and how, you know, we could make sure that we're looking out for all Albertans. We'll continue to do that. Like I said, I've met with many municipal officials, and I'm happy to continue to do so going forward.

Crime in Carbon and Area

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I recently received a letter from a constituent in Carbon, Alberta, about the continued challenges in crime that they are facing in that community. In the month of September the grocery store was robbed four times along with vandalism and robberies at the gas station, the east campground lockbox, the garbage dump money box, the car wash change machine. This is on top of multiple vehicles that have been stolen from local farms along with fuel, tools, and equipment. How does this government expect the people of Carbon and surrounding area to feel safe in their homes and in their businesses when crime is so rampant?

The Speaker: The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we want the people of Carbon as well as people in communities all across this province to feel safe in their homes. That's why we're continuing to invest in police resources in rural areas all across the province. In addition, of course, we continue to invest in the court system so that we can move these cases, when criminals are charged, through the courthouse so that criminals are off the streets and people will continue to feel safe.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, given that in late September the grocery store in Carbon was robbed twice in a 48-hour period and that at one point in time the door was ripped off its frame by a truck and dragged down the street, causing significant damage, and given that following that incident the store owner, a civilian, had to camp outside the hole in the wall of his own business to protect that business because the RCMP was unable to intervene or attend, does this government expect civilians to act as full-time law enforcement officers, or what exactly is it planning on doing to provide communities and business owners the resources they need?

The Speaker: Hon. member, thank you.
The Acting Minister of Justice.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, I'm very sorry to hear these stories. We want every Albertan to feel safe in their homes and in their businesses, and that's why we've provided stable funding for police services across the province in the face of the worst economic downturn in the province. [interjection]

The Speaker: Hon. member.

Mr. Schmidt: I will remind the members that, of course, the answer to crime isn't to cut the police budget by 20 per cent so that there are fewer cops on the roads to put people behind bars.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, given that Lorraine Richards is in the gallery today and given that her home has been broken into seven times, including the loss of thousands of dollars of property, she asked me to ask directly the Minister of Justice: is Alberta Justice and the Sol Gen incapable of responding effectively and responsibly to the growing wave of crime in rural Alberta? Yes or no?

Mr. Schmidt: Well, Mr. Speaker, of course, to Lorraine, I'm very sorry that she suffered so many break-ins. You know, I don't think that any Albertan should have to go through that, and that's why our government wants everybody to live in a safe and caring community. We continue to provide resources for police services across the province, and like I said, we continue to cut red tape so that police no longer have to take bail hearings or deal with tickets and can spend more time on the streets reducing crime.

2:40 Cold Lake Air Weapons Range Agreement

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. ID 349, more commonly known as the Cold Lake air weapons range, had its municipal revenues agreement lapse at the end of 2016. Many of my constituents in Bonnyville-Cold Lake are concerned that this agreement is 11 months overdue and that the Municipal Affairs department is deciding between transferring the funds to Alberta's general revenues or keeping the funds in my constituency. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: can you confirm that this agreement is done and that the property tax revenues for ID 349 are staying in the Bonnyville-Cold Lake region, that I have advocated for for a long time?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. It is critically important that the revenue-sharing agreement for ID 349 go forward. It did expire, as the member said. We've been working on it in conjunction with the municipalities in the area. We asked for feedback on that. I will say that the money will stay in that region because that's what it's meant for.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that last week the mayor of Cold Lake stated that he was blindsided and treated with disrespect by this NDP government due to a lack of consultation on the new ID 349 agreement and given that the unilateral decision made by this minister has the city scrambling to make sustainable budgets, reprofile capital projects, and potentially places the development and buildup of the only city in my constituency on hold, to the Minister of Municipal Affairs: how did you determine the new redistribution of the funding agreement for ID 349?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. You know, everything I try to do in my role is to try to be fair and equitable. What we did was that we got feedback from the municipalities in the region. I've met with the mayor of Cold Lake multiple times since I've been appointed, which was last January, as well as with other folks in the region. We asked for input from them. We got that input; we looked it over. We asked for different people to give us even more input from the public. We brought forward this proposal to them last week. Frankly, sir, we've been in contact quite frequently, so "blindsided" is an interesting term to use for consultation with them.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the La Corey north resource road, better known as highway 41X, is 50.3 kilometres long and is handling approximately 3,000 vehicles per day, well above the threshold for paving, and given that many residents in Cold Lake drive the road to and from work in ID 349 but that the MD of Bonnyville is responsible for the road and received no revenue to pave this road until just now, can the minister outline the details of the new ID 349 agreement that apply to this road, and should it have been made a provincial highway?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. It's a good question. Actually, what the MD of Bonnyville had advocated for were the funds to make sure that they could take care of the road. They were okay with it. What we did do, through the new proposal, is that we've allocated them $2.2 million, which is more than enough for them to make sure that that road is adequately paved and redone. We know that there are a lot of vehicles that go across there, and we want to make sure that those folks have a good, safe road to drive on in all conditions.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I've had a request for unanimous consent to introduce some guests.

The Speaker: The Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to, please, call upon a few people that are coming in from rural Alberta. They have been targeted by criminals, attacked, had their property stolen. When I mention your name, if you could please stand: Bruce Calder, Robert Erickson, Candice Gardiner, Walter Haupt, Michelle Hayden, Lori Taylor, Lawrence Howell, Ronald Jarvis, Leslie Johnston, and John Lemke. If the House could please give them a warm round.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, in 30 seconds we'll continue with Members' Statements.

Members' Statements

International Day for the Elimination of Violence against Women

Ms Fitzpatrick: Mr. Speaker, November 25 is recognized as the International Day for the Elimination of Violence against Women. In 1999 the UN General Assembly chose this date to honour the Mirabal sisters, three political dissidents who were assassinated on November 25, 1960. Each year we remember and honour the contributions and sacrifices of the sisters and of those who work to eliminate violence against women and girls. The date marks the beginning of 16 days of activism against gender violence, and it ends on December 10, international Human Rights Day. The 16 days present an opportunity to change the conversation, change attitudes, and change behaviours to prevent gender violence.

Last year Alberta abusers victimized 10,030 women and children and forced them to utilize women's shelters. Despite our government's increased funding for shelters there are still many women out there who are abused and may need our help. This is unacceptable.

We are responsible to stop gender-based violence. Each of us has the power to create a culture where healthy relationships thrive. I challenge everyone here today to start by paying attention to the words you use and the tone of your conversations. Are they respectful and valuing, or are the demeaning and condescending? Do your words and actions empower or diminish? Do you use your privilege to make another feel less than? Do you understand the importance of consent? Do you laugh when a friend makes a derogatory comment, or do you challenge the behaviour?

Change starts in each of us today, and it must continue well past December 10. It's time to step up, reach out, and speak out. It takes all of us. I will do my part. Will you?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Rural Crime

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Frustration about rural crime has risen to a boiling point. That is clearly in evidence today, when we look up and see the galleries filled with residents who have driven hours to send a message to NDP government members who do not seem to understand their concerns or their very real fears. Alberta's population has grown substantially, and with it has come crime. Especially alarming are the guns, the gangs, the drugs, and the violence that have become prevalent in rural Alberta. Citizens are here today because they openly fear for the safety of their families and friends. It is that simple.

Rural Albertans' victimization is different than urban Albertans'. Opposition members have been trying for at least a year and a half to underline the point to the Minister of Justice, but she continues to brush us off. The truth is that while everyone is vulnerable to crime regardless of where you live, rural residents do not see the same response times as do urban residents, and rural detachments confirm this fact. That is why they are encouraging neighbours to look out for each other and also suggesting that they invest in video surveillance systems. Now, those are good measures; however, there is a potential unintended danger of vigilantism, which nobody wants.

Police know that the people they work so hard to protect are at risk, and despite their best efforts they worry about their ability to keep them safe. What has the minister done to acknowledge this rural crisis? Time after time she lays it at the feet of the municipalities. She says: if you want more officers, then hire them yourselves.

This is a province-wide crisis, Mr. Speaker, and the answer is unacceptable. If you don't believe me, then just ask all these people that are in the galleries today.

Thank you.

Krever Blood System Inquiry Anniversary

Dr. Turner: November 21 was the 20th anniversary of the release of the final report of the Commission of Inquiry on the Blood System in Canada, known as the Krever report. I've been a hematologist involved in transfusion medicine in Alberta since 1977. A safe and adequate blood supply is vital for patients with bleeding disorders in particular, but blood products are also used in obstetrics, surgery, and for chemotherapy patients. I testified to the inquiry and have been involved in applying its recommendations to the blood system in Alberta ever since.

The inquiry was called by the federal government to look into the tainted blood tragedy of the '80s, which is widely recognized as our nation's worst-ever preventable public health disaster. The Krever inquiry set a high standard for public inquiries and recommended that all victims of tainted blood receive compensation. It publicly named those who had failed in their duties. Héma-Québec and Canadian Blood Services are a direct result of the inquiry's recommendations.

Because of sophisticated testing and screening anyone now receiving blood products from a Canadian donor can be assured that the risk of viral transmission is very, very low. The final report emphasized the importance of Canada being self-sufficient in its procurement of blood products and that our health care system must remain public and reject the risks of private, paid blood collection. Today our blood system is accountable to Canadians and is founded on the generosity of nonremunerated blood donors from across Canada.

The 20th anniversary of the Krever report reminds us of the time our country came together to change the blood system for the better. The collaboration of funders, regulators, patient groups, and other stakeholders has resulted in a safer and more sustainable blood system for all Canadians. I'm proud to be a part of a government committed to doing everything we can to avoid such a tragedy from ever happening again.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Rural Crime

Mr. MacIntyre: Imagine that you chose to raise your family on a quiet, sprawling plot of land in the kind of place where helping your neighbour is a priority and where the word "community" finds its meaning. Now imagine the morning where you've been gone for less than an hour, and as you drive down your driveway, you start to notice that your property isn't how you left it. The bolt locking the shed has been cut. The shed doors are open, and the tools are all gone. The truck you left parked in the driveway isn't there. Your front door is kicked in.

You walk in the house, and your personal possessions are strewn across every room. You panic and search for the things you hold most dear. Maybe you're like Lois Gordon from Strathcona county, and it's your recently deceased mother's urn or maybe the wedding ring that's been passed down from generation to generation. You find those irreplaceable mementoes are gone.

Imagine knowing that someone has been watching you, planning this violation for weeks. Imagine the desperation. Imagine no longer feeling safe in your own home, how it might leave you feeling scared to leave your wife and children on the farm as you go to work in town. Imagine how scared you would feel to be alone, how you might start to sleep with a baseball bat or something even like a gun next to your bed.

For too many Albertans these traumas aren't imagined; it's their daily reality. And for many it's been repeated multiple times. Rural Alberta is facing an epidemic of increasingly violent crime. Today I rise on behalf of the good people seated in the gallery behind me and in front of me. They deserve an emergency debate on this epidemic. They deserve solutions from their government.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Emergency Medical Services and Health Care Funding

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this month I had the pleasure of meeting with some Health Sciences members representing EMS workers across the province, including some former colleagues of mine. They were here in Edmonton to argue EMS funding has largely been forgotten and are now faced with significant shortfalls both in personnel and equipment. Calgary and Edmonton alone are facing a shortfall of 12 ambulances each. This may come as a surprise to Albertans who have continued to receive world-class health care from our paramedics and emergency medical services, but to maintain that high level of service in our major cities means calling in trucks from other surrounding municipalities. Of course, this is only a temporary fix and also very expensive.

If we as a province choose to invest much-needed resources into our EMS services, we would see cost savings from reduced overtime, reduced job-related trauma, and reduced hospital wait times. Investing a little to save a lot is a common idea, but it is especially apparent when we're talking about health. Mental health supports, preventative care, addiction treatments: these are all based on the idea that we can not only help people by making these investments early but save public money in the long term.

We need to take that same sort of thinking and apply it to the health system right across the board, and we need to be better at communicating and demonstrating the connection between investing and saving, with targets and tracking measures to gauge that success. When the investments we make in our health system show benefit over the long term, we need to be vocal about that and see where else that investment might apply. When investments aren't successful, we also need to be vocal about that and get back to the drawing board.

Maintaining current levels of health services is expensive, and it isn't going to get any cheaper if we don't start getting smarter about how we deliver them. Failing to act on increasing costs will have real, negative consequences for our health sector and the Albertans it serves. We need to look no further than EMS funding to see why that is. The unrestrained growth in health costs means that even as the health budget jumped significantly year after year, EMS still did not receive the badly needed additional funds. So let's start by addressing the concerns of our front-line EMS workers and move to the next major challenge in our health care system.

And on a note, Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that four paramedics were exposed today to a fentanyl crisis. My thoughts are with them and their families today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Rural Crime

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Rates of crime in rural Alberta continue to climb, leaving Alberta with 12 of the top 50 most dangerous places to live in Canada. According to a recent Maclean's article the city of Cold Lake came in at an astounding number 21, which means that the city I live in has almost twice the crime severity index of the Canada-wide average. This is unacceptable.

I often hear accounts from my constituents about crimes they have fallen victim to, including one person who had his truck stolen three times – three times, Mr. Speaker. This is unacceptable.

A Facebook page called Lakeland confessions provides a link for people to confess anonymously. One such post reads in part: "I've already targeted an admin on the neighbourhood [watch] page. And coming for anyone else who thinks they know what's going on . . . You're all a bunch of next victims." This is unacceptable.

People are being brushed aside because that is what insurance is for, yet some of those same people are turned away by insurance companies because they've had too many claims. This is unacceptable.

My constituents and countless others across rural Alberta are frustrated. They're scared, and they've lost hope in this NDP government keeping them safe in their own homes. This Friday a local regional crime forum is set up in my constituency of Bonnyville-Cold Lake because of the clear inactivity of this Justice minister when it comes to rural crime. I'll be attending that forum to hear the concerns of my local residents. Will the Minister of Justice join me to hear the fear, the frustration, and the hopelessness? If not, what answers can I take to them? So far this NDP government is: the right place at the right time, but anywhere but in rural Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation and Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to give oral notice of a motion for tomorrow's Order Paper, that motion being:

Be it resolved that pursuant to section 11(1) of the Electoral Boundaries Commission Act the Legislative Assembly concur in the recommendations of the final report of the Alberta Electoral Boundaries Commission entitled Proposed Electoral Division Areas, Boundaries, and Names for Alberta: Final Report to the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, October 2017, which was tabled by the Speaker of the Assembly as an intersessional deposit on October 19, 2017. It is listed as Sessional Paper 456/2017.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to provide notice that at the appropriate time I will move the following motion today.

Pursuant to Standing Order 30 be it resolved that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance, namely the growing incidence of property-related crime and an accompanying escalation of violent crime in rural communities and the resulting fear for safety that is felt by the residents of such areas, which now constitute a state of emergency.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour and minister responsible for democratic renewal.

Bill 30
An Act to Protect the Health and Well-being of Working Albertans

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table Bill 30, An Act to Protect the Health and Well-being of Working Albertans, for first reading.

Mr. Speaker, every year hard-working Albertans are killed or injured on the job, and these incidents don't just affect the workers involved. They affect families, communities, friends, co-workers, and employers. But workplace illnesses and injuries and fatalities are not an inevitable part of life. They can be prevented with proper precautions, public awareness, training, and effective enforcement of legislation. This legislation would ensure that Alberta's health and safety system is continually improving to better prevent injuries from happening, respond to changing hazards, and support an injured worker's return to work. Bill 30 updates both pieces of legislation, Occupational Health and Safety Act and the Workers' Compensation Act, for the workplaces of today and tomorrow and respects the rights of all workers.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to say thank you to all of the Albertans who contributed to this bill. Thank you to the staff, who have put in countless hours to get this legislation here. Thank you to my guests in the gallery for their contributions as well.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 30 read a first time]

3:00 Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The Acting Minister of Justice or Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the appropriate number of copies from the Minister of Justice to her federal counterpart, the federal Minister of Justice, the Hon. Jody Wilson-Raybould, pushing the federal government to fill the vacant Court of Queen's Bench positions. She highlights that Alberta was left under the previous federal government with the lowest number of superior court judges per capita of any province in the country, and we're asking the current federal government to fill those positions as quickly as possible.

The Speaker: The Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am going to table the Lakeland confessions anonymous post on Facebook that is pretty much calling out everybody that's on the local watch.

I have several e-mails from local constituents that are saying that rural crime is a real problem in Bonnyville-Cold Lake and that this is something that is not being addressed.

Lastly, I have an article in the Bonnyville Nouvelle: RCMP Combating Rising Crime. This is something that is very, very disappointing to see, that we had no answers today.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table documents with respect to the Airdrie provincial rural detachment, letters from the Balzac business community, as well as a letter that was received from the Minister of Justice with respect to things that were going on in Balzac and that community as well as the RCMP enhanced policing services, which was what was recommended to the people of Balzac given the fact that there is not enough policing to help with their current situation. This is with respect to the CrossIron properties. Since 2013 to 2016 there has been a 280 per cent increase in crime.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three sets of tablings today. The first is from a hard-working couple in the Spruce View area in my constituency in Red Deer county, expressing their absolute disgust with the way that crime is being treated in their community.

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is also from Red Deer county from another hard-working family that has been robbed over half a dozen times, again, while this government sits on their hands.

The last tabling, Mr. Speaker, is from the Eckville and Lacombe county area, from another family who has been robbed repeatedly and is looking for help from this government.

The Speaker: Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings, all letters from individuals who are extremely frustrated, fearful, and concerned about rural crime. One references the fact that the best response time in the particular area where they live is 45 minutes, and in many cases it's actually four to five hours. How that is supposed to curtail crime, I don't understand. Anyway, I provide the three letters as constituents have asked that we do that.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the requisite copies of a number of letters from constituents of mine who have been writing in regarding the multiple times that they have been robbed. This one is from Lisa: "It disgusts me that just because we're in a rural area, some people think that they can trespass on our property" and take what they want.

Here is a letter from one of my constituents. Their farm has been robbed five times in the last 12 months. This is unacceptable.

I have another one here where they are concerned that: if we try to defend ourselves, we will be called the criminals by this government. Five copies for you.

Here is a family who was robbed, and then the day they went to the police station to finalize their statements, their home was robbed again.

Here's another one from people within my riding. They're concerned that the same people that robbed them are now back on the street robbing some more.

Another one regarding the same kind of thing, the revolving door at the courthouse. I have hundreds of these coming in. I'm not going to give them all to you today, sir, but you will be getting them all.

It's time to bring back front licence plates. How can we see who's coming in our yard on video camera? They want the front licence plate on that vehicle noted.

Here's another one. They're afraid the legal system is just releasing and releasing criminals back out into the public. This has to stop.

Another one from my riding to the minister again. A copy was sent to me regarding the reckless and dangerous behaviours of criminals who have vandalized their place and, I believe, injured their dog.

Here's another one from Jim from my area regarding crime being totally out of control: it's like anarchy; what happened to my Alberta?

Another one. They just go on and on. It's the same thing over and over. All of these letters, Mr. Speaker, are from multiple robberies, not just one.

Another one. Their truck was broken into in the church parking lot.

I'll give them all to you. This is an epidemic, and we need a debate on this. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I have two tablings today. The first I would like to table are five copies of the DVD and attached letter to the 87 electoral division boundaries from the 2016-17 Alberta Electoral Boundaries Commission final report.

Second, I rise to table five copies of the 2016-17 annual report of the Child and Youth Advocate, received in my office on November 27, 2017.

Chestermere-Rocky View-Three Hills. Excuse me.

Mr. Cooper: Whichever. It's okay. She's better than me anyway.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table a copy of a letter from Lorraine Richards and her husband, Jerry, of Olds, Alberta, who state, "In our opinion, Alberta Justice and Solicitor General is the weak link in a failing justice system in Alberta." They raise some significant concerns about the amount of times that they have been broken into, the amount of property damage that they have sustained, and the fact that it has come at a significant cost to their personal financial well-being.

I also will table two documents from the village of Carbon that highlight a number of the concerns that I raised in question period today with respect to the continued break-ins at the grocery store as well as other local businesses and the fact that the community is doing a security block party to try to find some solutions that certainly aren't coming from the provincial government.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Mr. S. Anderson, Minister of Municipal Affairs, pursuant to the Government Organization Act authorized accredited agencies summary, April 2016, Alberta Elevating Devices and Amusement Rides Association annual report 2016-17, Petroleum Tank Management Association of Alberta annual report 2016, pursuant to the Safety Codes Act the Safety Codes Council annual report 2016.

The Speaker: I believe we may be at points of order. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Point of Order Language Creating Disorder

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The first point of order I rise on today is under 23(j), "uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder." The Premier, in response to a question to me at the time that the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, I believe, called that point of order, implied – no; it didn't imply. She outright stated that the motion that we are going to vote on shortly was in fact out of order. But the fact is that written notice has been provided to you, the Speaker, in accordance with Standing Order 30(1), and it has met the conditions of Standing Order 30(7). It's stamped. It's up at the table right now. In fact, you are going to put that question to the House at some point today and make a decision.

She was wrong, and by implying and answering that question with that I was misleading the House or had some sort of a motion that was not in order, it's ridiculous and is exactly the Premier and her government running away from the fact that in a few moments they'll have a choice, the choice to stand with Albertans on a serious issue or to vote against it and run and hide.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To suggest that it is against the rules to say that someone believes that a motion may not conform with the rules of the House and to attempt to equate that with accusing a member of misleading the House is absurd. This is one of the silliest points of order I have ever seen. The Premier is entirely within her rights to suggest that their motion is out of order. In fact, I'll think we'll see some further arguments to that just a bit later in the afternoon, and I hope he doesn't stand up on a point of order about that.

The Speaker: Well, hon. members, I do have the Blues. This is what it said, and I won't read all of it: "the proposal that they're putting forward is undoubtedly outside of the rules of the House although we'll see what happens when the matter is discussed." In this particular instance I don't believe there is a point of order. It may have been a difference of opinion, but nonetheless I don't believe it's a point of order in this instance because what we've always talked about is context.

I'm prepared to hear point of order two, which I think is you, Government House Leader.

Point of Order Allegations against Members

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise on this. I'm rising on a point of order under Standing Order 23(h), (i), (j), which read as follows:

- 23 A Member will be called to order by the Speaker if, in the Speaker's opinion, that Member . . .
 - (h) makes allegations against another Member;
 - (i) imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member;
 - (j) uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder.

Today in question period the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition made the absolutely outrageous claim that if the government does not support his motion, we are in some way standing with criminals. To accuse the government of being on the side of criminals is offensive and extreme, Mr. Speaker. The government has taken a number of actions on this important issue, actions that have been outlined by the Premier and the minister today in question period.

Mr. Speaker, this reminds me of the equally outrageous claim made by the Member for Calgary-Elbow where he claimed that due to the actions of the government "whoever murdered Serenity is walking free today." At the time I wrote on a matter of privilege to argue that such overblown rhetoric impinged on the privileges of the member in question.

Mr. Speaker, I want to reiterate that one needs to watch one's language when it comes to members of the House, and to suggest that the government's position relative to their order, which we only heard about just a few hours ago for the first time, is somehow equivalent to being on the side of criminals or supporting crime in some way offends the standing orders, it offends the practices of the Assembly, and it is beneath the hon. member to make those statements.

Mr. Nixon: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is clearly a matter of debate. I did not, in my question, accuse anybody in the government or the Premier of being a criminal. What I said very clearly was that either the government was going to stand with my constituents and the people of rural Alberta who are being victimized and abused every day or they may as well be standing with the criminals. You know what? I stand by that fact one hundred per cent. Either you're going to stand with Albertans, or you're going to continue to allow them to be abused on your watch. That is extremely disappointing, and it's disappointing to watch the Government House Leader try to defend the ridiculous actions of this government this way.

The Speaker: Well, the hon. member may recall that at the time I heard the comment, I rose in the House, and I cautioned. I do now have the Blues. In fact, what was said was: "Mr. Speaker, if you're not in support of this motion, you may as well be with the criminals that are victimizing my constituents." [interjections] Hon. member, I'm making the decision now. It's irrelevant to me whether or not you believe it's true. The important part is what I decide.

Mr. Nixon: I believe it's true, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I do believe this was a point of order, and I would ask that you withdraw the comment.

Point of Clarification

Mr. Nixon: I rise for you to explain your ruling, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I'm sorry. I didn't hear you.

Mr. Nixon: I rise on a standing order for you to explain your ruling. Just to clarify, Mr. Speaker, I rise on 13(2) for you to explain your ruling because it's quite a contradiction from most of the rulings that you've made on this issue before the House.

The Speaker: Well, I think I did explain my reasoning on this. You might have noticed that I also drew attention to the word – I can't exactly remember, but there was a minister that I cautioned at a different point in the House. When we are alleging, making comments in this House that other members are associating with criminals, it seems to me that you've crossed a line, and that is my reasoning. That is my reasoning, and it shall stand.

Point of order number 3. I think that is yours.

Mr. Nixon: That is mine, Mr. Speaker. [interjections]

The Speaker: I'm sorry. I would request that you withdraw the comment.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I will certainly withdraw and apologize for pointing out that the government is standing with criminals and not with my constituents. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

You withdraw your comments, and you apologize to the House. Is that right?

Mr. Nixon: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I withdraw and apologize for pointing out that the government is standing with criminals against my constituents.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I would have preferred a more sincere apology, but it seems to me that there might be other objectives in play.

Nonetheless, the Leader of the Official Opposition. Point of order number 3.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on 23(h),(i), and (j) in regard to a comment by the Minister of Finance at the time that that point of order was raised, at which point he used what I would call swear words and certainly, actually were swear words. I won't repeat them in the House, but he used some language with the word "bull" in front of it and then a swear word. It's disappointing, at a time when these galleries are full of people, again, who are being victimized across rural Alberta, that a minister of the Crown would stand in here and use that language and treat it like a joke. I would ask him to stand up, withdraw, and apologize for his words.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I didn't hear the words that were allegedly spoken by the hon. Finance minister. I don't know if the hon. Opposition House Leader at this point is looking to qualify for an acting school, but the grandstanding today is pretty outrageous. If indeed – if indeed – the Minister of Finance uttered words that are unparliamentary in this House or insulting to members opposite, then on his behalf I will withdraw those words and apologize to the House.

The Speaker: Thank you. Nor did I hear the comment, but I appreciate that you have acknowledged and apologized.

Number 4, I believe, is also the Leader of the Official Opposition's.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on this one on 23(h), (i), and (j), also on Beauchesne's 493. At the time that this point of order was raised, the minister of postsecondary and Acting Minister of Justice accused the leader of the United Conservative Party, the Hon. Jason Kenney, of stealing. He used the exact word "stealing." In fact, at the time you cautioned him on the way he was going down that road. It is completely ridiculous that, again, at a time that the people of Alberta, hundreds of people, have driven here to be able to express their concerns about what's happening in their communities, another minister would stand and accuse a leader of another political party of stealing instead of standing up and defending their record. It's ridiculous, and I ask that the minister stand and withdraw and apologize for those comments.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, these rules apply traditionally when directed at a member of the House, but I'm also aware of the rulings that have been made many times in this place by Speakers, yourself included, that people who are not in the House and can't defend themselves require a certain degree of caution on the part of members. Now, having said that, Mr. Kenney is, of course, the leader of the party that forms the Official Opposition and is a very political figure.

But, having said that, Mr. Speaker, I did hear the word "steal," and in my view that word was inappropriate. On behalf of the Minister of Advanced Education I would withdraw that and apologize to the House.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. I did hear "stealing," and I appreciate the thought that the minister – that's thus the reason why I cautioned in the first instance.

If I might bring closure to the matter, these are two examples of what ought not to happen in this House.

Request for Emergency Debate

Rural Crime

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to propose a motion under Standing Order 30. I should note before I begin that written notice was provided to the Speaker in accordance with Standing Order 30(1) and has met the conditions of Standing Order 30(7). The motion reads as follows:

Pursuant to Standing Order 30 be it resolved that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance, namely the growing incidence of property-related crime and an accompanying escalation of violent crime in rural communities and the resulting fear for safety that is felt by residents of such areas, which now constitute a state of emergency.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak to the importance of this issue facing rural communities across Alberta, facing rural communities that I live in and rural communities that the people in the gallery, that are here today, live in. Skyrocketing crime rates across rural Alberta have been a source of major concerns for residents in these communities for several years now.

The Speaker: If I might, just a moment.

For the sake of all of the House members, the thrust of this discussion and the objective on your part at this point is – and I quote 30(2) – “The Member may briefly state the arguments in favour.” So the issue at hand here is the urgency of the matter, and I just want all members of the House to be aware of that.

Please continue.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It’s gotten to the point where a great many rural Alberta families no longer feel safe in their own homes. That is simply unacceptable, and I would say that that’s urgent. As I got in my car to drive up here last night and spend the week with you, I worry about my family back home in rural Alberta because of what’s happening. I would say that that’s urgent. That’s why today the United Conservative caucus stands united with victims from across the province to urge this government to allow emergency debate on a provincial response to what has fast become a crisis in our rural communities.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, this issue is not before this House in any form of bill debate, and the most reasonable opportunity for debate is today. I would like to reference Beauchesne’s 387 to 398, regarding motions to adjourn the House to discuss an important matter. Standing Order 30(7)(a) states, “The matter proposed for discussion must relate to a genuine emergency, calling for immediate and urgent consideration,” as you were pointing out. If the sharp escalation in crime across rural Alberta doesn’t constitute a genuine emergency, I don’t know what does. Over the last year alone breaking and enterings are up more than 130 per cent in Bonnyville and 94 per cent in Innisfail, just to give two examples.

Beauchesne’s 390 also states that a motion for emergency debate must meet the test of urgency; that is, “when the ordinary opportunities provided by the rules of the House do not permit the subject to be brought on early enough and the public interest demands that discussion take place immediately.” Our caucus believes that when it comes to the well-being of Alberta’s families, when the safety of Albertans is at stake, nothing is more urgent than this. Over the last number of years members from both of the UCP legacy caucuses have raised this issue in the House over and over again, yet we have not seen any meaningful action from this government at all. It is our hope, Mr. Speaker, that an emergency debate will bring much-needed attention to this critical issue that is affecting so many of the communities that we represent.

Beauchesne’s 389 states that the matter “must be so pressing that the public interest will suffer if it is not given immediate [action].” I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that this issue, if not dealt with in a real and comprehensive way, will be nothing short of a suffering of the public interest. I think that the fact that we have over 100 rural Albertans here in the gallery today demonstrates just how much this debate is in the public interest. Quite frankly, it’s a sad state of affairs indeed when that many concerned citizens need to descend upon this Legislature in order to get this government to pay attention.

I’ll continue with a quote from Beauchesne’s page 113. “Most decisions based on these conditions are bound to be subjective and few clear cut decisions can be made. In making his ruling, the Speaker may, on occasion, take into account the general wish of the House to have a debate.” Mr. Speaker, hundreds of families have been victims of crime in rural communities, and they are depending on your decision that this matter is urgent enough to proceed. I consider this to be an emergency. I would suggest to you that you consider the last point, where Beauchesne’s says, “In making his ruling, the Speaker may, on occasion, take into account the general wish of the House to have a debate.”

However, in one exceptional circumstance, an application was approved for an emergency debate on “the sudden and unexpected revelation of events which [had] taken place in the past [and] that . . . might precipitate a course of conduct which, if allowed to continue unchecked, would certainly classify itself as an emergency and a matter of urgent consideration.”

Mr. Speaker, the system is failing Albertans in rural communities, who now live their lives in fear of not if but when their homes will be broken into and their property stolen. They live in fear that they might be home with their children the next time these criminals show up. They’ve lost sleep waking at every noise and wondering if this is the moment that they have dreaded.

We need to do everything in our power to make sure that the problem does not get worse, and that can start right now. This is a public crisis, and it must be dealt with in this Assembly as a state of emergency. I ask you to rule in favour of this important motion, Mr. Speaker. The people that I represent are depending on you. When I went home this weekend, if you want to hear about urgency, I heard of four more people in my community that suffered through home invasions, including some having firearms pointed at their heads in front of their children. Every day that members in rural Alberta go home, this is the number one thing that we hear from our constituents. They are sick of being victimized, and they want a debate in this Assembly right now so we can see some solid action to get ahead of this issue once and for all.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I can say unequivocally that the issue of crime and safety in our communities is very important to the government, and it’s a matter that we take extremely seriously. We believe that all Albertans deserve to live in safe and strong communities. Now, I know that the Acting Minister of Justice is meeting this afternoon with many of the representatives here today, and we have, as he pointed out, made changes to ensure that police officers are on the street instead of doing paperwork. We’ve funded ALERT, which last week laid more than 120 charges against 11 suspects for dealing drugs. The ICE unit is going after online sexual exploitation of children, and the new integrated crime reduction unit is targeting property crime and break-ins in rural Alberta. This is indeed a very important and, in fact, critical issue across the province.

I can relate to the feelings of people in rural Alberta who are represented by some of the people in the gallery today. In our family our vehicle has been broken into twice in the last couple of months, and I can tell you that that provides a feeling of insecurity and violation, so there's no doubt. And I know that other members in the House on both sides have probably had some similar experiences.

So being a very serious issue, Mr. Speaker, doesn't necessarily satisfy the criteria for this particular Standing Order 30. It must meet a number of conditions, including that it "must relate to a genuine emergency, calling for immediate and urgent consideration."

An Hon. Member: Wow.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the House of Commons Procedure and Practice – you know, I know that I'm wowing you, hon. member, but I sat quietly through your application, and I would appreciate it if you would do it as well for me. [interjection]

The Speaker: Hon. member.

Mr. Mason: The House of Commons Procedure and Practice provides further guidance.

An emergency debate should be on a topic "that is immediately relevant and of attention and concern throughout the nation."

That, of course, applies to the federal House of Commons.

Thus, matters of chronic or continuing concern, such as economic conditions, unemployment rates and constitutional matters, have tended to be set aside whereas topics deemed to require urgent consideration [have not].

Beauchesne similarly states that the item must be so pressing that the public interest will suffer if it is not given immediate attention.

Another significant factor has to do with whether there are further opportunities to debate the matter. Beauchesne states that an item must deal with a matter within the administrative competence of the Government and there must be no other reasonable opportunity for debate.

And that is the significant piece, Mr. Speaker, that I want to draw attention to.

There must be no other reasonable opportunity for debate.

It also states that emergency debate provisions cannot be used to debate [such] "items which, in a regular legislative program of the House of Commons and regular legislative consideration, can come before the House by way of amendments to existing statutes, or in any case will come before it in other ways.

That's on page 694.

Speaker Kowalski put it well on May 26, 2008, regarding gas prices.

I guess the whole question in here: if it's urgent today, why wouldn't it have been urgent a month ago?

Well, that's interesting, Mr. Speaker, because that is the point that, unfortunately, in the rules and in the precedents of the House I believe the Speaker has to consider. Whether or not it's serious or even extremely serious is not the question. The question is: is it an emergency happening now, or is it something that's happened over a longer period of time, in which case there are ample opportunities in the House to debate this?

He went on to say that:

Actually, I understand that this is of great interest to a lot of people, but in terms of is it an emergency today when it was not an emergency a month ago and will it be an emergency of the same latitude in a month from now, it's quite interesting.

[interjection]

The Speaker: Hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Additionally, Mr. Speaker, when there are other avenues in which to debate a matter, it does not qualify for Standing Order 30.

Speaker Zwozdesky set a very high bar in 2013, when he allowed debate to proceed regarding medevac services.

I'm taking into account that the move of the medevac [to the] . . .

Airport is occurring tomorrow.

There's the difference. It's occurring tomorrow.

Therefore, I find that there will be no other opportunity for this Assembly to debate this issue, which is of importance to many Albertans.

Speaker Kowalski again made the same case in ruling that the allegations of conflict of interest involving Premier Redford in the choice of lawyers for tobacco recovery lawsuits should not proceed, and he said:

Urgency deals with whether or not there are other opportunities available to raise the matter. Now, I want to clarify for you that there are several vehicles available for you to do a variety of things. One of them is question period, where a well-crafted question that meets the rules and proprieties of this House and of Houses across the world that are part of the Commonwealth parliamentary system – that exists there as one of those vehicles.

Secondly, a carefully crafted motion for return might accomplish something very similar, or a carefully worded written question might accomplish something similar. There is room for some debate within some of these vehicles.

That was November 28, 2012.

I might also add that the opposition has opportunities to introduce private members' bills and to introduce private members' motions, and time is set aside on Mondays for exactly that purpose, so they have ample opportunity to raise this. In fact, Mr. Speaker, they raised it extensively today in question period. That can be certainly supplemented, but they have other opportunities which do not require the setting aside of the regularly scheduled business of the House.

Mr. Speaker, having established that whether emergency deals with a matter or not, there are other opportunities available to raise the matter. I can indicate that there are a great many avenues of debate in this Legislature. The opposition has raised this matter a number of times in the past in the spring sitting of the Assembly, but in reviewing Hansard, it seems that until today the Official Opposition has chosen not to raise this matter in question period during this fall sitting. However, the fact that the members opposite chose not to avail themselves of those avenues does not mean that it should be considered under SO 30.

Mr. Speaker, if I could just conclude . . .

The Speaker: Brevity.

Mr. Mason: Obviously, it is your job and your duty under Standing Order 30 to rule whether or not the request for a standing order is in order, and should you so rule, Mr. Speaker, the government caucus will be prepared to debate the motion.

The Speaker: Hon. member, you're rising to what?

Mr. Cooper: To speak to the matter of emergency.

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

The Speaker: Yes, go ahead.

Mr. Mason: It is the custom of the House and has been as long as I can remember that these matters are not debated before the Speaker. The person who makes the motion has a chance to state it, and then a member of the other party has a chance to respond, and other parties, if the Speaker uses his discretion, are also invited to respond. But it is not a debate, and you don't get to refute the arguments that have been made endlessly in the House.

The Speaker: There is a leader of the third party. Any wish to speak to this? Private members?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I'll be very, very brief. I do believe that this is a matter of great urgency. Notwithstanding the fact that the Official Opposition has raised several questions here today in the presence of so many Albertans, I do believe that given the data and statistics that have been presented today and the stories that I've been told as leader of the Alberta Party caucus from talking with not just my constituents but with many Albertans, this is a grave concern to many people. I would really encourage you to allow this debate to proceed because I do believe that not only is it important, but it does in fact constitute an emergency.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The independent Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, to be very brief, I would certainly also agree that this is a matter of urgency and it is, in fact, a pressing emergency, and I felt that perhaps while the hon. Government House Leader said that we shouldn't engage in a debate as to whether this is an emergency, I found his arguments to be extremely weak on behalf of saying that this is not an emergency.

I'd just like to quote a statistic that was raised at a town hall discussion on this issue, that I hosted in Mannville on October 25, in which the Vermilion RCMP detachment announced that while the number of incidents of property crime in our constituency from June through August averaged 48 per month, in the month of September that number had risen to 169.

Now, the minister argues that this isn't an emergency. Try and tell that to the people that are sitting in the galleries, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. member, is there any additional information that you can add to the discussion that speaks to the urgency of the matter?

Mr. Fraser: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. We're elected in this House to represent our constituents. When a number of constituents come with a concern to this Legislature, it is abysmal that the Government House Leader is not taking this opportunity to show how government can be nimble and address this concern.

Now, the hon. Government House Leader mentioned that there were all these courses that we in the opposition could use to address this issue. They did mention the statistics, whether it's funding of ALERT, going back and forth – Mr. Speaker, bear with me – at the end of the day, what the heck are we supposed to be doing here other than representing the constituents? And exactly like the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster said, tell that to the people who are afraid to go down their driveway, worrying if they're going to get hit with a bat. I don't know any other reason why or what we would be debating this afternoon that's more important than protecting these fine people.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I believe this is the second issue that I've needed to deal with as this kind of incident in this Chamber. As with all of the decisions that we make in here, none of them don't rank up in terms of importance, and each causes us to listen not only to our own arguments but to each other.

I am prepared to rule on whether the request for a leave for motion is to proceed under Standing Order 30. The Leader of the Official Opposition has met the requirement of providing at least two hours' notice to the Speaker's office by providing the required notice at 10:47 a.m. this morning. The motion reads as follows.

Pursuant to Standing Order 30 be it resolved that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance, namely the growing incidence of property-related crime and an accompanying escalation of violent crime in rural communities and the resulting fear . . .

[interjections] Hon. members. Hon. member, if we could focus on the listening part.

. . . for safety that is felt by residents of such areas, which now constitute a state of emergency.

The relevant parliamentary authorities on this subject are pages 689 through to 696 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice and Beauchesne's paragraphs 387 to 390. As is noted on page 690 of the second edition of the House of Commons Procedure and Practice:

matters of chronic or continuing concern, such as economic conditions, unemployment rates and constitutional matters, have tended to be set aside whereas topics deemed to require [emergency] consideration have included work stoppages and strikes, natural disasters, and international crises and events.

This House, I believe, and certainly we all appreciate that there is no doubt that Albertans' safety and feeling of safety in the province are absolutely important issues. The member notes in his motion that crime in rural communities is increasing, but the member did not point to any particular instances that would give rise to a genuine emergency as required by Standing Order 30(7).

Accordingly, I do not find the request for leave in order, and the question will not be put.

Autopsy Completion Times

Q18. Mr. Ellis asked that the following question be accepted.

In each of the calendar years from 2013 to 2016 what was the average completion time for an autopsy and what was the longest time spent completing an autopsy at the office of the Chief Medical Examiner?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I can tell you that this specific question arose out of the tragic incident of little Serenity, which, I believe, has affected everyone in this Legislature. I think we all, as a matter of public record, understand that Serenity's autopsy investigation took two years.

If we're going to do our jobs as legislators, if we're going to make the system better, I believe that this is a question that needs to be answered. We need to know how long an autopsy investigation is going to take or what the average is for an autopsy investigation to find out if it is comparable to other jurisdictions and whether there are efficiencies that we can do to make the system better. It's not about, you know, pointing fingers. It is about doing what is right for people who are victims of homicides and, of course, their families to ensure that we get proper numbers to understand how long an autopsy investigation is taking within this province and figure out what measures we can take to correct that and make it better.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Minister of Justice I would be pleased to move that Written Question 18 be amended by striking out “an autopsy” wherever it occurs and substituting “a death investigation.” The amended written question would read as follows:

In each of the calendar years from 2013 to 2016 what was the average completion time for a death investigation and what was the longest time spent completing a death investigation at the office of the Chief Medical Examiner?

Madam Speaker, on behalf of the minister I want to make just a few comments. A postmortem autopsy is a specialized surgical procedure that consists of a thorough examination of the deceased by dissection to determine the cause and manner of death. Routine postmortem examinations can take one or two hours, with complex cases taking upwards of four to six hours. A death investigation involves a complete review of the history, circumstances, and autopsy findings, with additional laboratory investigations by the medical examiner. Death investigation cases may require additional time for consultation with external experts such as in neuropathology and consultations with the police if the case is part of a criminal investigation.

As the term “death investigation” is inclusive of all of the steps taken from the initiation of the investigation to case file closure, this amendment is intended to provide a more fulsome response to the question.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader has moved an amendment to Written Question 18. Would anybody like to debate the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you, Government House Leader. I believe that we're at least on a co-operative path to finding a solution to this actual question. I guess my concern about the words “death investigation” is that at the time, of course, of somebody's passing, you know, we have an investigation that occurs, and then the completion of the investigation, from my perspective as a former law enforcement officer, would ultimately be the time when we essentially hand it to the Crown prosecutors' office, which would be the length of the investigation.

For me, I certainly understand, upon reflection and looking at the original question where it says, “How long does an autopsy take,” okay, well, is it from the time that the doctor conducts his initial investigation until the time he concludes it? You know, is that a matter of minutes, hours, or longer? The way I see it is: how long does the autopsy investigation take place? So, really, from the time that the Chief Medical Examiner's office receives that request from the law enforcement officer, how long does it take for them to conclude their investigation?

There are some variables, but I think it is important to know how long not the entire death investigation is but, the way I see it, and I'm only one person here, the actual autopsy investigation conducted by the Chief Medical Examiner's office, from the time they get the request to the time that they are able to provide that information back to law enforcement, which either supports the suspicion of a homicide taking place or basically says that it's nonsuspicious.

Is it possible, Government House Leader through Madam Speaker, that we amend this even further to say:

In each of the calendar years from 2013 to 2016 what was the average completion time for an autopsy investigation and what was the longest time spent completing an autopsy investigation at the office of the Chief Medical Examiner?

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. As I am acting on behalf of the expectant hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General, I'm not in a position to respond to the suggestion, unfortunately. So I have no choice under those circumstances but to suggest that we need to proceed with the amendment as I have put it forward.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-West, I just need to clarify that the initial amendment had been approved by Parliamentary Counsel. A counteramendment to the amendment, the subamendment, would have had to have gone through Parliamentary Counsel. So we can't accept a subamendment as of now, but we can still debate the amendment.

Just a reminder to all members of the House that you can only speak once to the amendment. I do see that the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays would like to speak.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm grateful for the opportunity to stand on Written Question 18 from the Member for Calgary-West. I think most people at home listening to this would find it quite reasonable that he's asking: “In each of the calendar years from 2013 to 2016 what was the average completion time for an autopsy and what was the longest time spent completing an autopsy at the office of the Chief Medical Examiner?”

Madam Speaker, I think that if there was ever a question that was worthy of being answered, this is it. For each of the cases in those years, of course, each one represents a life that has ended and a life that has ended in circumstances that would actually require the medical examiner to do an autopsy, I would suggest a much more than normal examination other than determining that someone is dead and why they're dead because autopsies often – sometimes it is a medical issue, but very often it's also to get details for what might have happened as the result of a crime or a violent act or some other . . .

Mr. Mason: An accident.

Mr. McIver: Or an accident. I agree with that, Government House Leader. Despite the fact that I've got the floor, I'll actually take that with gratitude. That's a good suggestion.

Madam Speaker, for each of these instances I'm of the belief that the medical examiner would have both the record of when the file on the deceased person arrived in their office – I'll be surprised if they don't already have a record of all the seconds, minutes, days, and hours that they spent working on the autopsy. I realize that when you see these things on television, it's all automated, and that may or may not be the case, but whether it is or not, I would be surprised if the medical examiner did not keep a very detailed logbook of which deceased person they were working on and for exactly how long and their impressions and their learnings from the work they do.

It occurs to me that this should be almost, if not completely, readily available information. In each case it represents the final determination of how a life ended. Because it deals with how well we determine our investigations at the end of a life, I think it really speaks to how important it is.

I don't know what purpose the government would have for not wanting to provide this information unless there's something in there that they don't want the public to know. They may have a different explanation, and I welcome that if they offer it. All I'm saying is that from my viewpoint that's certainly what comes to my mind, that there's something that's true that the government doesn't want the public to know about. Again, I will repeat that I welcome the government to give a different explanation. But without the explanation to be offered, Madam Speaker, I don't know what other conclusion the public would draw here.

If I might go there, every life matters, and as a consequence every death matters. During this period of time there is certainly the file that's been talked about a lot in this House, the file of young Serenity. I think that all members from all sides of the House – I would be surprised if they didn't all unanimously believe that Serenity's file was not handled well, surely not as well as it could have been and should have been.

My belief is that the hon. Member for Calgary-West is trying to cast a light on this and any other files that take place in order that this House might understand it better and in order that this House might make either budgetary recommendations, legislative recommendations, policy recommendations either for ourselves or to the different police services or to the different medical examiners or indeed to the medical system at large to such an extent that it may have an effect on the autopsies and how long they take to be completed.

Of course, the facts surrounding how someone dies when the medical examiner does that in some circumstances may well affect how a court case goes on an untimely, criminal, or accidental death. It may well affect recommendations that get made by the Legislative Assembly or by the medical examiner about the safety, perhaps, of a piece of equipment, of a place, a time, a business. It could be anything from playground equipment to the way that the police do their business to a whole range of, in every case, important issues when they indeed affect how someone's life comes to an end.

Madam Speaker, I would sincerely hope that the government would actually draw back from their amendment and support the original written question from the Member for Calgary-West because I think any other decision will unfortunately cast aspersions on what might be hidden. That's why I would be in favour very much of answering the original question rather than trying to reformulate it, redocument it, switch it around, particularly, if I might, since it was from – with all due respect, it's not from me; it's from the Member for Calgary-West.

Why is that important? Because the Member for Calgary-West has served as a police officer for a long time, and his knowledge of what's important and what's not about what the medical examiner's office does I would suggest to you is, I know, far above mine. There may be a few members of the House that have knowledge as good as the Member for Calgary-West's but, I would suggest to you, not very many of us. So when he asks this question, it's not a random question. It's actually a question more informed than most of us would be able to ask because of his professional background; all the more reason to indeed answer the original question rather than some other question that the government has concocted.

Thank you.

4:00

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I just wanted to make a couple of comments in response to the Member for Calgary-Hays. Unfortunately, we do have very tragic events that happen in our constituencies and in our constituents' lives. I had the honour of having a local constituent talk to me about an investigation that was going on with her daughter that was on its way through the courts and about the incredible pain that I witnessed in this mother's experience with that. I completely understand, especially losing two members of my own family in the last couple of weeks, that having closure of a death in your family is one of those final pieces that are important to finding some peace and being able to move forward and have that person's memory be fully intact.

I just wanted to draw attention to something that I had learned in going through this story that this mother had to tell me. One of the important things in talking with those that are on the other side, that deal with these cases, is that "death investigation" is the term used by the office of the Chief Medical Examiner and that this office does not have data for something that would be an "autopsy investigation." It's my understanding that the term "death investigation" is the term that will provide the member opposite with the information that he is seeking.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment?
Seeing none.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Acting Speaker: We are now back on the original question, Question 18. Are there any other members wishing to speak to the question as amended?

Seeing none, hon. Member for Calgary-West, would you like to close debate?

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know what? As I previously indicated through you to the Government House Leader, this is a nonpartisan issue. I do thank the Member for Calgary-Hays. A lot of thought went into this particular question. I think it is very important to get an answer to this question so that we can have an understanding of the system so that we as a group of legislators can better the system for victims of homicide such as in little Serenity's case.

I thank you for the response and the terminology that the Chief Medical Examiner's office uses in regard to death investigation. I will state again through you, Madam Speaker, that it is important to know the information: from the time that the Chief Medical Examiner receives that request to the time that they conduct their autopsy investigation, or, as you indicated, death investigation, to go back to the police officers so that they can conclude what they need to do to determine if something is indeed an accident or indeed a suspicious event. So thank you; I think this was a good co-operative test. Hopefully, the rest of the week will play out in that way as well.

I'd like to thank both sides of this House for supporting this question. I hope we get the answer that we are looking for to better the system. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 207
Regulatory Burden Reduction Act

[Debate adjourned November 14]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak to Bill 207, Regulatory Burden Reduction Act. The purpose of this bill is to protect businesses and, actually, government, too, from excessive red tape. As members of this Assembly our job is to make new legislation that is in line with the developing needs of our constituencies and, in fact, all Albertans.

As society evolves, our laws must also adapt, but that begs the question: what should be done with the dated regulations that only serve as an obstacle to growth? Well, Madam Speaker, the short answer is to repeal them. Bill 207 proposes that for every single new regulation implemented, one or more regulations are eliminated. Now, we know that the free market regulates itself more efficiently than government can, so there are obviously a lot of these regulations that have been in place for many years that need to be reviewed.

Now, as far as just a little bit of history about myself, one of the reasons that I'm here in the Legislature today, that I've gotten deeply involved in politics, was a small business that I ran myself that involved exporting products. The exporting of products required both a provincial permit and a federal permit. At the time I started my business, I could go into a local office and get both permits. The information required for those permits was the exact same for both the provincial and for the federal, so the provincial government at the time had decided that they would take care of both of those permit processes in one office at one time. I could walk in there with the information, and I could walk out with both permits.

Well, somewhere along the way somebody decided that the provincial government wasn't going to do the federal government permits anymore. What they did was that they put that back into the hands of the federal government in Ottawa. So the process right now is that I go to the local office with this information to get a provincial permit, and then I send the exact same information to the federal government in Ottawa and wait six weeks for the permit to come back. Here we have a situation where regulations don't make sense. The government has refused to take back that process. Now, if I went to British Columbia and did the exact same thing, I could walk into one provincial office and walk out with both the provincial and federal permits. It only makes sense because it's the exact same information that's needed for both permits.

Somewhere along the way somebody said: well, the provincial government doesn't want to pay to do this permit process for the federal government. But what was forgotten in that comment is that no matter where that permit process takes place, it's paid for by the taxpayer. It's paid for by me, by all of us, so why not do it in the most efficient way possible? Whether it's done in the provincial office or the federal office, I have to pay for it. We as taxpayers have to pay for it. Wouldn't it make sense that you walk into one office once, get the permits, walk out? That's the most efficient way. It actually adds to the cost two to three times, the government dealing with it by having it done at two different places.

In business there are the three Ws: walking, waiting, and working. With those three Ws, there's only one of those that generates revenue, that actually gets anything done. You're not getting anything done when you're in business walking; you're not getting anything done when you're in business waiting. Only when you're working. Regulations, burdensome regulations that don't accomplish anything: we need to reduce those so that small business can be spending more time working, being productive.

Now, some of these regulations you could compare to, let's say, Betamax videos or eight-track tapes or anything like that. I mean, is there any advantage to having a Betamax video player in your home if you don't have any Betamax videos to play in it? Do you need to have an eight-track player in your truck if you don't have any eight-track tapes? It's the same with a lot of these regulations. It makes no sense to have them if they're so outdated that they're unusable, that they have no purpose.

Here are a couple of Canadian regulations that you might find interesting. If you live in Souris, Prince Edward Island, it's against the law to build a snowman taller than 30 inches. Having an Internet connection faster than 56 K is illegal in Uxbridge, Ontario. Well, there are a couple of good regulations. How about this one? This is right at home here. You cannot paint a wooden ladder in Alberta according to 2009's occupational health and safety code. This is apparently to ensure that you can tell the condition of such a ladder. "A wooden ladder may be preserved with a transparent protective coating." That's according to the code. You can't paint a ladder here in Alberta. There are just a couple ideas of some regulations that, you know, don't make sense. I'm sure there are lots more.

Anyway, in this bill for each regulation created, one or more regulations will be eliminated. The federal Conservative government saved Canadian businesses over $32 million in administrative burden as well as 750,000 hours in time spent dealing with red tape each year. Now, that's substantial. Regulatory compliance costs are disproportionately borne by small businesses and small and medium-sized firms that constitute the largest segment of the Canadian economy. A one-size-fits-all approach to paperwork does not necessarily work, and it hobbles small business.

I think we see it a lot in government, too. In government they have layers of bureaucracy and layers of paperwork that's redundant. We don't need that. The people that are there to serve us in government, the front-line people, need to be serving patients, serving the people, serving students, whatever that is. Shuffling paper is not a service. Doing regulations that don't make sense anymore is not a service to the people. That's one of the biggest things. We see how expensive things are in Alberta in government compared to other jurisdictions. Some of that has to do with the amount of regulation that we have to deal with here that isn't necessary.

Of course, we have to have some regulations. There's no doubt about it. That's our job here, to create, you know, bills that help Albertans, but we need to make sure that we don't have a burdensome number of regulations in place.

Now, stakeholders like the Canadian Federation of Independent Business support legislation that reduces the administrative burden on businesses. Outdated regulations are a silent killer of jobs. Canadian business owners spend over $30 billion a year on regulatory compliance; $30 billion a year. Other provinces have set up red tape reduction panels or task forces. British Columbia has reduced 36 per cent of regulations in three years and reports annually. Of course, British Columbia is one of the jurisdictions that spends substantially less per capita than Alberta, so I think we could learn something from British Columbia in this regard, as far as how they reduce red tape and regulations and how that can actually save taxpayers money. The money, even if it's not saved, can go to more productive things in government instead of being wasted on wasted regulation and bureaucracy.

Now, even a former federal NDP consumer affairs critic, Glenn Thibeault, said: looking at ways to eliminate unnecessary paperwork and save small companies time and money that they should devote to their business is a good idea. That's right from an NDP colleague of this government. We need to change the government culture to come up with solutions that don't involve more rules.

Of course, we have lots of opportunity here to do good work. This is our job, to come up and debate bills and come up with these things to make life better for Albertans. That's our job here. We don't need to keep these regulations in place that are not doing any benefit for Albertans. All they do is that they take time and they take money away from small business. Small businesses generate in the economy, and we should protect that.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? Oh, we're on private members' – you can tell it's Monday. I apologize again.

All right. Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure this afternoon to rise today to speak to Bill 207, Regulatory Burden Reduction Act. Our government is committed to working with businesses to make it easier for them to create jobs and get Albertans back to work. We know that Alberta businesses have a bigger economic impact than businesses anywhere in the country. Between January and August 2017 over 29,000 new businesses were incorporated in Alberta, a level that is 10.5 per cent higher than the same period in 2016. That's great progress. We've created tax credits that other provinces have enjoyed for decades, restored training programs for new entrepreneurs, and added an array of supports for established ones. We're helping businesses diversify and expand to new markets and increasing their access to capital. Albertans pay the lowest taxes in Canada, billions less than in Saskatchewan, and we recently cut the small-business tax by a third.

Madam Speaker, our government has made it clear that Alberta businesses have a bigger impact than businesses anywhere in the country. However, this bill will not improve Albertans' ability to do business or help protect the health and safety of Alberta families and workers, so I cannot support this bill.

We know we have the best businesses in the country, and that's why we are listening to them to make sure that Alberta continues to be the best place in the country to do business. I'm proud of the work our government has done to ensure that we create a more resilient and diversified economy. Our government is committed to working with businesses to make it easier for them to create jobs and get Albertans back to work. That's why we created a Department of Economic Development and Trade, a one-stop shop that breaks down barriers and silos that existed under the previous government.

As part of phase 1 of the agencies, boards, and commissions review we are amalgamating 11 agencies, boards, and commissions and dissolving 15 more, creating efficiencies and saving $33 million over the next three years. We're already incorporating into our behaviour and practices as a government the spirit of the bill that's being proposed today without creating unnecessary burdens on the administration of government in the process.

As part of that review I mentioned earlier, we've created the single, nimble Alberta Innovates to ensure that our research and innovation system is much more quick to react to changing processes and procedures in the world of business and ensure that every research dollar is wisely invested. We understand the role businesses play in this province's long-term economic outlook while enhancing Albertans' quality of life and making life more affordable for Alberta families and communities.

Madam Speaker, I fully understand, having been a small-business man all my business career, all my adult life, what the benefits are to ensuring on an ongoing basis that so-called red tape or government regulations are reviewed as part of the normal part of a government's administration. It's the responsibility of any government to do that on an ongoing basis, but to hamstringing a government on an ongoing basis with a one-for-one type of requirement is in excess. It's something that would create problems and make it more difficult for government to operate and doesn't actually solve the problem you're trying to address.

We are committed as a government to working with businesses to make it easier for them to create jobs and get Albertans back to work, and I'm proud of the ongoing work our government has done to make sure that good jobs stay in Alberta. In fact, some of Canada's most respected business and economic experts are forecasting Alberta to lead the country in economic growth for the next two years. This summer RBC pegged GDP growth at 4.2 per cent this year, far higher than Alberta's average growth rate of 2.6 per cent, Madam Speaker, between 2005 and 2015. Their reports have cited Alberta's historic infrastructure build and the increased investor confidence that comes with pipeline approvals as contributing factors to our economic recovery. Albertans have no control over world oil prices, but strategic investments from government and industry have helped to cushion the blow and stimulate growth. There were over 70,000 more jobs in Alberta this summer than in summer 2016. Alberta also continues to have the highest employment rate in the country and the highest weekly earnings.

I'm very proud of the work the hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade has done to ensure that businesses succeed. The CFIB presented our hon. minister and other trade ministers in the Canadian free trade agreement with the golden scissors award, which is presented to those involved in helping to eradicate red tape for Canada's small businesses. Madam Speaker, the process is already under way within the administration of our government, and Bill 207 is certainly not a necessity to prod that effort. As noted by the CFIB, the Canadian free trade agreement was a major step towards resolving often conflicting rules and regulations across the provinces. Thank you to the hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade for having the backs of Albertan businesses and ensuring they have the best landscape to succeed.

Now, we know that regulations have an important role in protecting the health and safety of Alberta's families and workers. Regulations also help to ensure that businesses are competing on a level playing field and ensure that clients and customers are getting a fair deal. One-for-one rules are overly simplistic because the number of individual regulations doesn't correlate with the burden imposed by the regulations. One could easily create five new regulations that have minimal administrative costs or one new regulation that is extremely onerous to comply with.

This bill proposed by the hon. member also lacks the specifics needed for this type of change. For instance, if government creates a new environmental regulation, would this bill necessitate removal of another environmental regulation or a regulation from any other field? It's important to ask: what constitutes a new regulation that needs to be offset? Some regulations could be needed to include agency guidance and to help clarify earlier regulations or to assist businesses. Other regulations might include enforcement policies, interpretations, directives, memoranda, et cetera. Again, this bill lacks the specificity needed.

One-for-one rules also create more work for regulators and slow down bureaucracy, Madam Speaker, because trying to reduce the number of regulations will only make new regulations more dense and complex. In addition, having to identify regulations to eliminate and performing comparative CBAs for existing regulations versus the proposed new regulation are extremely time intensive. Let me reiterate that enforcing a one-for-one rule increases bureaucratic inefficiency and lag time because policy-makers must spend time identifying regulations to repeal and replace as well as drafting new policies.

One-for-one rules make it more difficult to co-ordinate our regulatory regime with that of other jurisdictions and therefore complicate trade for Alberta companies. For example, if an Alberta small or medium-sized enterprise wants to access another market within Canada or internationally, it will need to comply with foreign regulations before it can export. This is one reason why streamlining Alberta regulations with other jurisdictions simplifies this process for individual businesses. One-for-one rules also hamper the ability of public agencies to create regulations.

Let me be clear. Reducing regulations, whether they are environmental, financial, or otherwise, exposes the public and the environment to risk, and our government remains committed to mitigating public risks and having strong oversight systems in place. While we understand that regulations and bureaucracy may be frustrating at times, they exist to protect the public and the environment from unnecessary risk.

So, Madam Speaker, while I cannot support the bill, if the opposition has examples of existing regulations they believe should be removed, I know that the Minister of Economic Development and Trade would be happy to discuss them, and I'd be happy to hear from them.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is imperative that we take a look at some sort of red tape reduction priority in this province, and that's the reason that I'm pleased today to stand up in the House and not only speak to but support Bill 207, the Regulatory Burden Reduction Act.

Alberta is the only province in Confederation that doesn't have a plan or a procedure to reduce red tape in our province. This is the only province that is so backwards and so far behind on this that we're willing to blow smoke and claim, "Oh, we're just going to do it privately," that it's too much work, that it costs too much energy. We're the only province that still has our head in the sand and doesn't believe that it's important that we take a close look at the regulatory burden that businesses have to endure in this province. Why are we so far behind in this? I really don't understand that.

We need to start with some sort of a basic principle of commitment, and we can do that by implementing this piece of legislation to restore the ability of our businesses to be competitive, to restore foreign investment, and, I also might say, to restore the innovation that has driven Alberta's economy, that has driven our prosperity, made families do well. But as long as we're going to say, "Oh, it doesn't matter" or that there's some aspect of this that takes too much work, it's like being a hoarder, quite frankly. If you don't want to clean out your house because it's too much work, then the regulations just pile up higher and deeper and higher and deeper till, finally, no one can even move in the house. We need to take a look at the competitiveness, the foreign investment benefits, and the innovative benefits that would come from reducing some of the regulation that, quite frankly, is obsolete and redundant. That's the regulation that needs to be looked at.

Interestingly, British Columbia did this. They didn't decrease their taxes at all to attract business. All they did is to decrease their red tape burden by 43 per cent, and it doesn't seem to have hurt them in any way. They didn't find it too expensive or taking too much effort or that it somehow bound them as a government that they had to get rid of one when they put a new one in. They got rid of 43 per cent of their regulation, which is a severe cost to business, and that severe cost to business is what will limit our competitiveness, our investment, and our innovation. It's a substantial amount of money that goes to the administrative costs that both small, medium, and large business have to carry on top of the other burdens of an economic downturn and other things.

You know, running a business is hard. It takes a massive amount of work. All the business owners that I know spend probably twice as much time and effort at running their business, work late at night at home, back there first thing in the morning, in order to survive. They don't have a nice, cushy, safe 8-to-4 job and get a guaranteed pension and all that stuff. Running a small business is extremely hard. Do you know that the average small business – 50 per cent of small businesses will not survive their first five years. Fifty per cent of them will not survive the first five years.

Then you can go to the big businesses. I know that people across the aisle here think that big business is the evil monster, that somehow they're destroying everybody and sucking their blood and that they're unkind and everything else. But did you know that the biggest businesses in North America, the Standard & Poor's 500, on average will only survive 15 years? Company mortality is extremely high in North America, and part of the reason is the regulatory burden that they have to face.

Not only do they have to face economic changes and economic ups and downs, changes in markets, competitors, and all the rest; they have to deal with the weight of outdated and overregulation, that costs them immense amounts of money.

We've already heard that in Canada $30 billion a year goes to basically complying with regulation, much of it obsolete, much of it outdated, much of it utterly ineffective in accomplishing any kind of good for the public. The numbers of hours and the employee contributions that have to go into paperwork and compliance and reporting and testing and all these different kinds of things: they all overlap.

These things are truly a burden upon business. I think we need to think of it as a bag of rocks, quite frankly. Every time you create an unnecessary burden, you put another rock in the bag that that business has to carry. Every step they want to take, they have to move that bag of rocks first. It's not in any way efficient. We are killing our businesses, which is killing the job opportunities, the employment opportunities by maintaining and keeping unnecessary regulation and by burdening businesses with these heavy weights, which in many cases are truly obsolete and redundant and do nothing to promote public safety in any way, shape, or form.

The Canadian Federation of Independent Business has been so clear in issuing their report card during Red Tape Awareness Week. This report card has graded the provinces and the territories on their commitment to red tape reduction. It looks at political leadership, public measurement, constraints on regulations, and guess what this province gets? Every year we get an F, a failure. We have completely failed in this. It's unbelievable. B.C. gets an A. Quebec gets an A. Alberta gets a complete failure on this. We are adding not just rocks but big stones to the burdens that businesses have to carry in order to try to survive. It's no wonder that the majority of small businesses fail within five years and that even the big ones don't make it past 15 years on average.

Running a business is extremely hard. We should be making it easier for business. Business is what earns tax revenue for this province. Business is what provides jobs for people. Businesses are the ones that provide services and even charity donations and all the rest of it. If we continue to burden them with excessive amounts of obsolete and redundant regulation, they don't stay. They leave.

The member across brags about how many new businesses have been started this year. How many actually left, and how many of those new businesses were started because people lost their jobs due to the policies and regulations of this government? They don't have any employment, and they have no other choice but to try and create a new business. Then let's remember that more than half of them are going to fail within the next five years. People will have lost even more.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but under Standing Order 8(7)(a)(i), which provides up to five minutes for the sponsor of the private member's bill to close debate, I would like to now invite the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner to close debate.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The goal of this bill was to give the government an opportunity to address the burden of red tape on our society. When business costs increase or are high, that cost is always passed on to the consumer – always – unless they leave the jurisdiction and go to another jurisdiction, which is equally devastating to our society.

Now, B.C.'s success, in which they were able to do a 36 per cent reduction in three years, should be reason enough to support this bill. Receiving an F from CFIB every year should be enough to support this bill. The fact that we are the only provincial jurisdiction in Canada that doesn't have a red tape reduction strategy should be reason enough to support this bill. The fact that red tape disproportionately hurts small businesses should be reason enough to support this bill. The fact that this government has no idea how many regulations are on the books, called the regulatory baseline, should be reason enough to support this bill. The fact that a majority of the members opposite have never signed the front of a cheque should be reason enough to support this bill. The fact that the jurisdictions to the south are reducing red tape and that this makes us uncompetitive should be reason enough to support this bill. [interjections]

According to the Conference Board of Canada we have lost . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, if we could please let the member close debate. Thank you.

Mr. Hunter: As I was saying, Madam Speaker, according to the Conference Board of Canada we have lost $36 billion of investment in our province due to – and they state it – high regulation and regulations that this government has put on businesses.

Now, I had cited before, when I introduced this bill, Canada's Oil and Gas Sector at Risk? How Excessive Taxes and Regulations Undermine Our Competitiveness, by Germain Belzile. I just want to quote once again for the members to hear. She says:

As governments in Canada increase the regulatory burden and corporate taxes in the oil and gas sector, the U.S. government is moving in the opposite direction.

. . . Canadians should be aware that Canadian competitiveness is already being affected by measures that have been adopted, and could be affected even more if other reforms succeed [in the United States]. The relative equilibrium we've enjoyed with our southern neighbour will be thrown off kilter, and will only be re-established if governments in Canada follow suit.

The problem, Madam Speaker, is that this government is going in the opposite direction of where we should be going. When we have a jurisdiction to the south of us that is lowering taxes, lowering regulatory burden, then we need to do the same in order for us to be able to compete with foreign investment. This is where this government seems to fail. They seem to fail in being able to understand that we are in global competition not just with other jurisdictions in Saskatchewan or in B.C. but that we actually compete globally with the United States, with Europe, with Asia especially, in order to be able to sell our products.

When B.C. decided that they were going to approach this issue, what they decided was that, yes, they could lower taxes. Instead, what they said was: we're going to try to just decrease regulatory burden. They did that, and they saw such success with GDP growth in their own province that they decided to keep on doing it year after year. When it was all said and done, they were able to decrease the regulations by over 43 per cent.

This is not asking to decrease regulation. This is actually just taking a baby step, which is to say a one-for-one rule. I heard members this afternoon. I heard the Member for Edmonton-McClung saying that we don't want to hamstring the government. The problem is that if you don't give yourself something to work towards, a goal to work towards, then you're not going to achieve anything. At least, we have the opportunity to be able to say: here's the problem; let's fix it.

I would implore all members of this Assembly to vote in favour of this bill. This is a good first step in being able to help our small businesses, especially, to get back to work.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion for second reading of Bill 207 lost]

Bill 208
Government Organization (Utilities Consumer Advocate) Amendment Act, 2017

The Speaker: The Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very happy today to introduce debate on second reading of Bill 208, the Government Organization (Utilities Consumer Advocate) Amendment Act, 2017.

Electricity in today's modern communities is a necessity, and consumers need to know that the government has their back when they are dealing with companies that distribute and market electricity. They cannot be left to fend for themselves on their own in a market where the terms and conditions of electricity contracts are often hard to understand. To protect those consumers and to provide them with the information they need to make informed and safe choices for their families, it is important to create an easily accessible information source that gives them the background they need. Providing electricity to their families is one of the most important choices that people can make. We need to ensure that we are doing everything we can to protect Albertans from undue and unanticipated costs.

I've had many conversations with people in my communities who have raised questions about electricity marketing and how their bills work. The fact is that there are many elements to electricity pricing, and we need to take as much guesswork out of the equation as possible. The bill will ensure that consumers have the information they need to make good deals in the energy marketplace.

Specifically, Mr. Speaker, this bill will give the Utilities Consumer Advocate the authority to gather records such as complaints made under the Alberta Utilities Commission Act or the Electric Utilities Act and the outcome of any recommendations, hearings, or settlements; also investigations, orders, administrative penalties, or convictions conducted, awarded, or made under the Fair Trading Act, the Electric Utilities Act, or the Alberta Utilities Commission Act; also compliance records of a distributor, provider, or retailer in adhering to the standards and codes prescribed under the Electric Utilities Act, the Alberta Utilities Commission Act, and the Fair Trading Act; and any other matters that the Utilities Consumer Advocate considers necessary to carry out the purposes of this clause. It will also ask the UCA to make the information they gather public in an easily understandable format. This will help consumers when they go to purchase electricity contracts.

I've also had the opportunity to meet with the Utilities Consumer Advocate and hear about some of the fantastic work that that office does to help energy consumers in Alberta. This bill will enshrine the role of the Utilities Consumer Advocate in law so that the UCA can be there for Albertans for the future.

The Utilities Consumer Advocate is an important resource for Albertans. Every year they handle some 30,000 to 40,000 inquiries. They produce educational material and run outreach events across the province. They provide mediation services to consumers who cannot reach agreement with their utility providers, and often their intervention is enough to settle most disputes. They run a program every year reconnecting utilities for people who have had their services disconnected so that some of Alberta's most vulnerable do not suffer through a winter without heat or power. They conduct research and represent consumers at proceedings of the Alberta Utilities Commission. Since 2013 the UCA's intervention at commission hearings has helped save more than $800 million on energy bills.

This is an important role, Mr. Speaker, and I am proud to be putting forward a bill that will allow this valuable office . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but the time limit for consideration of this matter is concluded.

5:00 Motions Other than Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Carbon Levy Impact on Seniors' Care

509. Mr. Gotfried moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly establish a special committee to assess the financial impact of the carbon levy on organizations that provide front-line care to seniors in Alberta, including but not limited to for-profit organizations, not-for-profit organizations, faith-based organizations, and government-owned and -operated facilities, and in conducting its review, the committee shall consult with key public, private, and nonprofit stakeholders and make recommendations for the mitigation of any impacts deemed a threat to the provision of front-line care.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During my time as Seniors and Housing critic for the legacy PC caucus I had the opportunity to sit down with many care providers from all across Alberta. The one thing that continued to come up with them and with the seniors affected by it was the negative impact the carbon levy was having on organizations which provide front-line seniors' care. This motion is deliberately broad in nature, including for-profit, not-for-profit, faith-based, and government-owned and -operated facilities because it's not just one type of provider that is experiencing difficulties because of the carbon levy; quite frankly, it is all of them. These difficulties extend all across the spectrum of operators in Alberta.

Many seniors are on fixed incomes, whether that be government support, savings, family supplements, pensions, or some combination of the above. These fixed-income seniors who live in facilities which have the ability to raise rates to protect their ability to provide appropriate services along with operating and facility funds, life cycle maintenance, and in some cases, yes, a modest profit are concerned about the affordability of accommodations and services as well as their ability to remain self-reliant while enjoying life in their golden years.

Mr. Speaker, we all know seniors who have moved from their homes into some type of seniors' housing. These are the people who built Alberta into the place it is today. They're our parents, our grandparents, and soon it will be many of us. All they want is to be able to age in comfort with respect and dignity. Layering the additional costs of the carbon levy onto facilities which have the ability to raise rates irrespective of carbon rebates may price some seniors out of facilities that they are happy, welcome, and engaged in and in which they have become a part of those communities.

I think studying the impact the carbon levy has on these organizations, had had, and will have and the individuals affected by such increases driven by increases in operating costs for all facilities only strengthens what is a flagship policy of this government, whether I agree with it or not. Mr. Speaker, refusing to study something because you're afraid the results might not be all that flattering, sunshine and rainbows, is no way to govern.

Other accommodation, service, or care providers do not have the latitude to raise rents or fees to cover the impact of additional costs brought on by the carbon levy. They operate under a fixed-price environment. If they're able to raise their rates to cover the increased costs, it means they have to cut somewhere in order to stay afloat. We have heard from such organizations that they're facing costs which could escalate into the hundreds of thousands of dollars and severely impact their ability to meet the needs and expectations of their residents and clients, senior Albertans who have given their blood, sweat, and tears and hard work in building our great province.

In a seniors' facility which cannot raise rates, the things which will suffer will be things like the food options and recreational activities they offer. Do you want to be the one who does not understand or appreciate the impact on their lives? Is it the fresh salad, fruit, or vegetables on Tuesdays, Thursdays, or Saturdays, the podiatrist or massage therapist on Wednesdays and Fridays, or the thermostat setting that leaves them chilled in the winter? Should you decide, or should we understand it and appreciate that impact, as this motion asks our government to do? These quality-of-life components should not have to suffer because of the carbon levy.

Not only has the carbon levy affected the ability of these organizations to provide the same quality of life for their residents; it is threatening the financial viability and sustainability of many for-profit, not-for-profit, and co-operative seniors' accommodations and care and service providers. I know that some members opposite have made public statements that they would like to see the government own and operate all facilities, but that is not the case today. Quite frankly, we need all the operators, including the government facilities, to be operating to meet the needs of our seniors. There needs to be robust consultation with the faith-based, nonprofit, and private-sector providers with respect to the sustainability of their facilities, operations, and services. The lives and dignity of our seniors depend on it.

As noted by the Ministry of Seniors, Alberta's senior population will almost double in the next 14 years, reaching approximately 920,000 by 2031. The baby boomers are about to explode the demand for seniors' housing and services, and it's important that we understand the consequences of our actions and policies on these growing demographics. We cannot afford to lose beds, facilities, programs, and professional services provided by these compassionate independent providers. These organizations do great work across Alberta. The vast majority of them provide high-quality care and work extremely hard to keep their residents and clients happy and to improve their quality of life. Mr. Speaker, I have seen that in action.

Mr. Speaker, the carbon levy is, again, increasing by 50 per cent on January 1. This will further increase the cost. That will mean that seniors' care, accommodation, and services will be under further pressure and, quite frankly, will be severely challenged to provide the same services that they'd been doing in a cost-effective manner. The minimum wage increases we have seen, which will escalate further in the years ahead, only compound the impact and challenges for many of these organizations. As legislators we need to be fully cognizant and be willing to be transparent with respect to the unintended consequences the carbon levy is having on front-line seniors' care. It is our responsibility to these vulnerable Albertans, and we all need to be concerned about their care, housing, and well-being and to help them thrive in their golden years.

It is absolutely having an impact on the financial health and quality of life for our seniors, who by 2031 will represent fully 25 per cent of the population. Do they deserve your attention, concern, and compassion? I would argue that they do. I know that the members opposite often accuse us of using the carbon levy as a bogeyman, but that is just not the case. Every policy put forward by the government has an effect [interjections] – laugh at the seniors if you will – intended or unintended. In fact, we consulted broadly on this issue over the past year. We have communicated with the Alberta Seniors Communities and Housing Association, ASCHA, some of their members and residents of their facilities, and know that they have passed a resolution hoping that the impact of the carbon levy on housing operations would be reviewed and addressed. In fact, I am certain that housing and services providers would be happy to roll up their sleeves and work with all key parties collaboratively in a nonadversarial manner to ensure that front-line services are not impacted for their guests, their residents, their clients.

Additionally, the Alberta Continuing Care Association, which represents over 14,000 residents in supportive living and long-term care, has brought the issue of the carbon tax implications for congregate living care providers to my attention and fully supports this motion, which brings me back to one of my previous points. We as legislators and representatives of our communities need to be able to take the time and look at how the things we do in this House affect everyday, normal, hard-working Albertans, particularly those seniors that built this province. We need to ensure that the legislation and policies implemented in this House improve the lives of Albertans and allow them to thrive and live a dignified life and not make it more difficult for them to do so. I do not see the harm nor any risk to anyone other than Alberta seniors if we don't do so in taking the time to look further into this issue and the impact.

It is clearly an issue for a wide variety of front-line care providers across Alberta, and arming the government with additional information can only serve to improve a policy which affects every single Albertan in some way, shape, or form, indeed, the seniors we respect, love, care for, and owe so much to. It is for these reasons that I would encourage all members of the Assembly to think about the seniors in their lives, to think about the seniors in their community, to think about the seniors of the future, that doubling of the number of seniors, 25 per cent of this province's population. I would encourage you to think about them when you're voting and to vote for this motion.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to thank the MLA for Calgary-Fish Creek for his passionate defence, and I really want to thank you for your passionate caring for seniors and your emphasis that we need to be nice to our seniors. That's why I am on the government's side, because our government has invested so much in seniors. That is why we started building more long-term care. That is why we invested in the infrastructure budget. I am thinking that you are very much supportive of the efforts of the government and in investing in the seniors projects that we are doing such as in my own riding and in Calgary and so on.

I'm not going to be supporting this motion for a number of reasons. First of all, our government is providing services that families and seniors need. I want to emphasize time and again that our government has made a priority of ensuring that we have the funds to support seniors and families and that we are not planning to do any cuts, as the members of the opposition randomly tweet about.

I also think that this motion distracts from the government's goals of carefully reducing the deficit while strengthening Albertans' priorities in health care, education, and seniors' care. As a senior I am very well aware of the needs of seniors and the investment that our government has already made around seniors. We have also taken action to protect and support jobs, build new roads and hospitals, support the energy industry by securing approval of new pipelines, and build more long-term care units, assisted living, and now facilities like the affordable housing that seniors need.

Our government is making life more affordable for seniors. At the moment a quarter of a million Albertan seniors are eligible for a maximum of $300 annually from the carbon levy rebate, Mr. Speaker. That's almost half of the seniors in the province. I know, having talked to the same housing providers as the previous speaker has, that the housing providers are very well aware of the $300 carbon levy that seniors have received and have adjusted their rates to take into account that rebate. Nearly all seniors in government-owned and -supported seniors' facilities are receiving the rebate. Our plan is working.

Our government also supports seniors by protecting more than $800 million in seniors' benefits over the last two years. I am sure you've talked to a lot of seniors who have available health care and receive health benefits and receive dental care and so on. This is an important program that provides the monthly income supplement to federal income sources for seniors. I am proud that we maintain this commitment through challenging economic times, and I plan on making sure that we are committed to continuing, to maintaining support for our seniors rather than the 20 per cent cutback which the opposition, the UCP, keeps talking about.

Mr. Speaker, our government knows that every Albertan has the right to access safe and stable housing, and that's why we have built almost 3,000 new homes for seniors in Alberta. We also know that by building new homes in Alberta, we've also provided jobs for a lot of Albertans. We're also helping seniors around low-income equity loans, and a lot of the seniors have been using their loans to become more energy efficient.

Mr. Speaker, I kind of wanted to talk about those nonprofit and for-profit organizations which the previous speaker has spoken about. Having talked to a lot of these organizations, one of the things that always interests me is that these organizations are interested in becoming energy efficient and in using renewable energy and in upgrading the facilities to be more energy efficient. I'm really hoping that the previous speaker . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, come on.

Ms McKittrick: . . . has made sure the agencies in his own riding have access to the government grants to support them to do that. One of the purposes of the carbon levy is to make sure that those organizations have the opportunity to reduce their energy needs and reduce their monthly outlay in energy costs. You know, a lot of seniors are very interested in that issue. I have a sustainability committee in my own riding, and I would say that three-quarters of the members of this committee are seniors because they know that the investment in the carbon levy and the investment in energy efficiency is not only good for them, but it's good for their grandchildren, and . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet, hon. members.

Ms McKittrick: . . . it's good for all of Alberta.

I also think that we have to really believe that these organizations that take care of seniors are themselves invested in reducing their energy. In September there was a conference in Calgary, 400 nonprofit organizations whose purpose is to be more energy efficient and to ensure that the nonprofit sector becomes more energy efficient. I think it's disingenuous of the opposition not to pay attention to the fact that the same people who provide care for our seniors are also themselves invested in energy-efficient use and in reducing their carbon footprint.

Mr. Speaker, two years ago, when the economy was in free fall, we refused to make a bad situation worse by making cuts to services that families count on. Instead, we got down to work to help Albertans weather the storm. This means that we're not only maintaining existing provincially owned facilities but we are building new facilities to support the communities who need housing the most. One of the really great things when we're building new facilities is that we're making them more energy efficient.

Our government has never wavered, also, in their commitment to protecting public health care. I am so proud that we have not just maintained but we have increased funding for home and community care, bringing the total to more than $2 billion. This funding will give seniors and Albertans with disabilities services such as nursing and personal assistance, day programs, respite care, palliative care, and wound care so that they can continue to live at home and participate in their communities. Now, we know that things were not always easy for Albertans over the last few years, but one of the things that we've done as a government is to support seniors and low-income Albertans, and we have committed to that. We've also committed to supporting families.

One of the things I think we really need to talk about, Mr. Speaker, is how, unfortunately, the opposition has been spreading misinformation and blatant falsehoods about the carbon levy and the contrived 75 per cent hike to home heating bills, all to incite a climate of fear and confusion. I end up spending so much time on Facebook and Twitter having to counteract and give facts to people. [interjections] That's really what disturbs me the most about this . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member.

Ms McKittrick: . . . fear for seniors that this motion is calling for. I think we have to be honest and say facts and not put out so much misinformation.

As we also have seen – and one of the things that I'm really starting to find so frustrating as an Albertan is how often the opposition wants us to fail. Every single time it's always negative. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. member.

Ms McKittrick: Why don't we be positive sometimes? Why don't we think about what's happening around the carbon levy . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, if you'd direct your comments through the Speaker, it would be appreciated. Thank you.

Ms McKittrick: Sorry, Mr. Speaker. I'm feeling very energized about this issue because I really don't like to have to spend so much time every single day on Facebook and on Twitter trying to say the truth to people, okay?

I think it's really good for us to kind of remind ourselves about some of the true facts. For example, current gas prices are so low that Albertans are paying less than they have in over a generation. As I've travelled all over Canada, our gas is one of the lowest throughout Canada. At its peak Albertans were paying between $140 and $160 a month to heat their homes and run their businesses.

Often, with my constituents, I spend a lot of time reminding them that they have options as to who they can use for providers of their gas and electricity. The average household is paying less than $100, and that is not to mention the rebates we are giving to low- and middle-income families and our seniors. As I mentioned before – and I think it's good – so that everybody is reminded, low-income seniors in Alberta are eligible for a $300 carbon levy rebate. I would like to take the opportunity to remind all seniors to make sure that they fill out their income tax in January so that they can be eligible for a rebate. This goes for families, too.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak to Motion 509. The actions behind this motion have been needed for the past year. Yes, it's been a year. This NDP's job-killing, non social licensing carbon tax – and I will not call it a levy; let's put it on the record – has created the need for me to rise and for my hon. colleague for Calgary-Fish Creek to introduce this motion. Motion 509 calls for this Assembly to study the financial impact of the carbon tax on seniors' care in Alberta. If this is a godsent carbon tax, why are we afraid of doing an impact study on it? What are we trying to hide from the seniors, the seniors who have built this province, who have done so much? Why are we trying to hide from them what this government is taking away from them?

I also ask this Chamber to launch a thorough and comprehensive consultation with the public, private, and nonprofit stakeholders; in other words, every single organization and business that is involved in seniors' care. We know that the NDP's poorly-thought-out and unnecessary carbon tax hurts seniors and everybody else living in this province. It hurts them at every level. My colleague the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek became concerned about the impact of this tax on the accommodations and services offered to seniors when he was the critic for Seniors and Housing. Since then, I have taken over the role, and I plan to continue his crusade to have a proper and fulsome discussion about how this carbon tax affects seniors' care. This is step one.

It must be disappointing to Albertans who voted for this accidental government, Mr. Speaker, to learn of the NDP's lack of concern for seniors. It must be disappointing for them. They talk it up fine, buying headlines every single day, front-line this, front-line that, but in the end there's no concern for caring for Alberta's vulnerable citizen. It's like – I'm trying to remember the saying – it's an all hat but no cattle kind of thing, right? It's all talk but no care. We all know that seniors are among those citizens – you would think an NDP government would put their care as a top priority because they claim to be champions. Instead, they are targeted like everyone else when it comes to this indiscriminate carbon tax. Again, not a levy, a tax.

It is a warning to all Albertans, for all of us will become seniors. One day we're all going to become seniors. Some are going to become sooner than later, but we're all going to become seniors. For many of us our parents are already there or on the verge of becoming seniors. We can't escape that. It should be a quieter time, a time to reflect, not a time to worry daily about paying bills, not a time to worry: what will become of me if the carbon tax forces an increase in my price of accommodation? It's cruel to even consider the consequences. To be in a position to do something about it and to not do anything but increase the price for the sake of an unnecessary tax is crazy.

My colleague's motion is a common-sense one. Common sense, as we know, is not the NDP's strong suit, but we continue to hope that they may see value in it one day. This motion asks for an economic impact study. That should have happened before imposing the tax, like all the other bills, Bill 6. We can talk about those things that the government claims they have done consultation on but haven't, but since they didn't, it doesn't mean we brush it off now. [interjections] The members on the other side think it's funny. It's not actually funny, and we should not be laughing at seniors who are going to be impacted by the increase in this tax. This is not funny, actually.

Why not do the study? What are we trying to hide from the seniors who have built this province? Why not meet with the organizations and businesses that provide services to the seniors, who understand how this year-old tax is affecting our older citizen in a very real way? Why not find out if changes to the tax, such as exemptions for certain sectors, make sense? There are always common-sense ways of mitigating the impact of government policies. Wouldn't the government want to know what these policies are? Why are we not doing that?

If this government claims that we have Albertans' backs, let's show Albertans that we actually do have their backs. We're not saying to stop or start anything. Let's do an impact study. That's all that this motion is about. Let the professionals do the impact study, and let's improve seniors' lives. That's all we're saying. But the government is not willing to do that. There must be a reason why they're not supporting this motion. There must be a reason why they don't want to share the information with seniors and Albertans. I don't understand why. Perhaps these changes, these policies would be easy to implement. Perhaps they'll make sense. But we'll only find out when we do this economic impact study of it.

This motion, Motion 509, from my hon. colleague from Calgary-Fish Creek is especially crucial now, with the tax slated to increase at the end of this year. That's only a month away. Actually, 34 days, 35 days, Mr. Speaker. The UCP has promised Albertans that, yes, we will repeal this tax, and that will happen. [interjections] Don't laugh. That will happen. I'm telling you.

But in the interim it continues to exist. You would think that an NDP government who claims to care about people would vote in favour of this motion. Again, they don't want to do it because maybe they're trying to hide something from seniors. What do they have to lose? Apparently, these days – you have all seen the polls in the newspaper – they have very little to lose, actually, right? They don't have much to lose. We've all seen the polls.

Still, let's stick to the motion. At the very least I'm asking the government: let's pretend that they actually care about seniors. Let's pretend. They pretend when they buy the news headlines. Let's pretend, by supporting this motion, that they actually care about Albertans and they care about seniors. But they don't want to do it. For these citizens it could be suffering as a result of this poorly-thought-out tax. Again, not a levy, a tax.

If they don't do this consultation, this NDP government will never know the truth. Or maybe they do know the truth, and they don't want to share it with seniors and Albertans. Is that the reason? Is that the reason? I don't know why members aren't laughing about this now. You must know the truth, but you're afraid to share it with Albertans. If you have nothing to hide, let's support this motion, and let's do the economic impact study. That's all we're asking. But perhaps their plan in making policy and actually denying it: they don't want to accept that it's actually hurting people, because it is. It is hurting. That's why they're just, like, busy buying headlines. That's why they're denying the fact that, you know, this carbon tax is impacting people in a negative way. That's why they're trying to hide the truth from . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise this afternoon to speak to the motion before the House. It's interesting, having listened to the most recent speaker from the Official Opposition, who spoke very eloquently about the entitlement that he thinks the members of the Conservative Party still have to govern this province. He predicted an election outcome which was one where he believed forcefully that his party would win the election. Well, we don't deign on this side of the House to predict what Albertans will do. We certainly do everything we can every day to earn the right to govern once again.

Mr. Malkinson: That's leadership right there.

Mr. Dach: You better believe it.

As far as assuming what direction this province will go in in 2019, we believe strongly that we are going in the right direction, that we're on the right track, that putting a price on carbon is a forward-looking policy. Not doing so, allowing the federal government to set that policy for us, is a rear-view mirror attitude. That's exactly the type of attitude that the members opposite express time and time again, driving looking in the rear-view mirror. To be able to go back in time, as their leader has said that he'd prefer to do – if he could have any power that he wanted, he would choose to go back in time.

Well, I'll tell you what. We're not going back in time; we're moving forward in this province. We protected the seniors' benefits so that seniors have up to $280 a month when they really need it. Jason Kenney's Conservatives would cut the seniors' benefit, making life harder for low-income seniors. We are strengthening the public services that seniors count on, like health care. They would make extreme cuts to health care and other front-line services, going back in time. We're working to make life better for everyday families. They want to give big tax giveaways to those ... [interjections]

Mr. Dach: Our government works hard to protect the public services that families count on. Our priority is investing for the future, not forming committees.

As you have heard previous speakers talk about, in addition to all sorts of investments that we are going to be making as a result of being able to have a carbon levy at our disposal, we've invested $88 million in much-needed repairs to fix furnaces, windows, and roofs for Albertans living in affordable housing. We're investing in new projects like the Sakaw lodge in Edmonton, Bow River lodge in Canmore, and Gilchrist Gardens phase 2 in Calgary.

For home care, we've increased funding for home and community care, bringing the total to more than $2 billion. This funding will give seniors and Albertans with disabilities services such as nursing and personal assistants, day programs, respite relief, palliative care, and wound care so they can continue to live at home and participate in their communities. That's what a carbon levy gets you, Mr. Speaker.

Long-term care. We're committed to building 2,000 long-term care and dementia spaces, and we're on track. In the first quarter of this year we opened 388 continuing care beds. Ask our seniors in this province if they like those kinds of statistics, Mr. Speaker.

We are making life better and more affordable for seniors through the carbon levy rebate and, as I said, investing $88 million for housing riders for upgrading furnaces and windows. All the opposition is focused on is cuts proposed by their leader that would make life harder for seniors. A 20 per cent cut would mean as many as 30,000 seniors losing their benefits and 25,000 Albertans losing their housing supports.

We continue to work for seniors, not against them, by protecting more than $800 million in seniors' benefits over the last two years, investing in almost 3,000 new homes for seniors in Alberta, and providing access to low-interest home equity loans. We appointed a new Seniors Advocate to bring seniors' concerns directly to government, to continue working with seniors to make their lives better.

Now, I could go on at length, but I will talk a bit more about the reference to front-line seniors' care that seniors are receiving in Alberta. I'm proud of our government record that we continue to protect supports and services for seniors across the province; not only that, but we are making life more affordable for seniors. Approximately 260,000 Alberta seniors are eligible to receive a maximum of $300 annually from the carbon levy rebate. Mr. Speaker, that's almost half of all seniors in the province.

The conclusion that I wanted to come to is to know that in the last few years we understand in this province that it's not been easy for people. Our plan, however, is working. Alberta is moving forward, and things are looking up. Supports for seniors and low-income Albertans are stronger. We're protecting the services that families count on, and this will continue, Mr. Speaker, to be our focus.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, in the last few weeks we have seen the opposition spreading incorrect information about the carbon levy and a contrived 75 per cent hike to home heating bills, which bears no resemblance to reality, all to incite a climate of fear and confusion, which is really unfortunate, especially when we're dealing with seniors, who really want to know what the actual numbers are. We know they would cut the benefit for Alberta seniors, making life harder for hundreds of low-income seniors. They would make extreme cuts to health care and other front-line services, putting many vulnerable Albertans at risk. These reckless cuts to health and education will hurt Alberta's economic recovery and do real damage to Albertans.

The direction this government is going in is one that is protecting seniors and their health care and their housing, and the carbon levy that we have implemented is helping us do that. We are looking forward and putting a price on carbon, and the opposition wants to drive looking in the rear-view mirror, and they'll put that blue truck in the ditch every time.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very honoured to rise tonight to speak on Motion 509, which was put forward by my colleague for Calgary-Fish Creek. I just wanted to clear something up about the carbon levy, tax. The fact that it's called a levy also means that the federal government can tax that tax. I just don't understand in anybody's world how that helps out Albertans. Just to be clear, that's $3 billion that goes from this province to the federal government because this government chose to call it a levy instead of the tax that it actually is, just to get the math straight there for a second.

We have continually seen that this government lacks forethought with rushed legislation, and the rule for the last few years under the leadership of this government is to legislate first and consult second. One of the prime examples, of course, is what we're talking about right now, which is the carbon tax. Maybe the government hasn't figured it out, but it is contentious, it is unpopular, the government did not campaign on this, and it takes money out of the pockets of every single Albertan, including seniors. The province has failed at social licence because they're buying it with our tax dollars, and there has to be buy-in from people in order for that to work.

When it was introduced last year, the members on this side of the House fought extensively to the bitter end to advocate for Albertans to ensure that their interests were represented. We begged the government to reconsider and to do the economic impact study, Mr. Speaker. We would really, really like to understand the real-world impacts. That's actually all that we're asking for. There's a lot of rhetoric that's going on. We're actually just looking to have the numbers and the metrics. Actually, during the debate over the carbon tax in the first place it was one of the main things that we asked for: within a year show us the metrics, show us the changes, and show us how the footprint has been altered.

We also pointed to other jurisdictions across the world, Mr. Speaker, to see that the carbon taxes that have been put in place have been reversed because the legislation proved to be ineffective in actually changing consumer behaviours, which I believe is actually the whole reason for having a carbon tax in the first place.

We also pointed out that in rural Alberta there's not always the ability to take public transit, which was one of the things that I believe the Premier pointed out, to just go take the bus. Well, for some of the seniors in some of the areas that I happen to represent, I have a feeling that that might be a bit difficult, so I think a different solution might be necessary. Again, the consumer needs to buy in. That does not make life better for seniors.

We have pointed to the fact that there would be a tax on every consumer good since Alberta is landlocked. Guess what? We rely on trucks and rail to ship goods and services. Yes, we do. And because of the rising cost of fuel and because of the carbon tax, it will now be substantially more expensive to move those goods and services to Alberta. That impacts our seniors, especially because a good chunk of them are on fixed incomes.

We pointed to the fact that this was a backdoor PST, and at a time of recession and struggle it was crippling to add these further expenses to the bills of Albertans that are already struggling to balance their chequebooks around their kitchen tables. Unfortunately, even though there were cries of exasperation and desperation, they fell on the deaf ears of this government.

One group in particular that we're talking about, the seniors, are amazing Albertans who built this province, who should now be enjoying their well-deserved retirement, Albertans who are largely on fixed incomes and may not be capable of earning more money to offset the costs of the carbon tax and who may not be even capable of changing the consumer habits that they have. Many seniors in Alberta are already taking the bus, and they also live in eco-friendly group housing, but they are vulnerable and on fixed incomes. Those who are not able to make further changes to their lifestyles: we're just going to penalize those folks so that they have less of a carbon footprint, that the government is refusing to show metrics on to show that it actually is working?

What about the fact that there's no – so we're going to invest in green technology but not in the seniors. There are long-reaching implications caused by this. Our offices, my office anyway, were inundated with letters and e-mails and calls from seniors and seniors' advocates, stakeholders, care providers, who – again, I'm not really sure how they're supposed to take the bus in rural areas. I would like to know how that's supposed to happen.

It became so clear to Albertans that seniors were targeted unfairly by this tax, and despite their best efforts the care facilities at some point are going to have to face those rising costs, which will be downloaded onto their residents on a fixed income or the families and loved ones and caregivers that are taking care of those people. This caused an enormous amount of stress for seniors, who may already be depending on other people to help them be where they are. Their families and the administration personnel for seniors' care facilities asked the government to consider an exemption for seniors, and guess what? They were denied. For anybody who is a worker, who helps out with these people: are they supposed to drive us?

Oh, actually, speaking of that, I'd like to go over some of the commentary that was put forward about the carbon tax with regard to how you can reduce your carbon emissions. One of those was to drive less. Okay. I'd like to know how our front-line providers are supposed to drive less when we actually need them in the places where our seniors need them. What was another? Oh, fly less. So seniors who have spent their lives working are not supposed to now travel in their senior lives and visit their families? You tell them, especially people who are grandparents, to not go visit their families overseas. Ride-share: Uber doesn't exist in rural areas, Mr. Speaker. The other one that I loved that also came from the Premier is to just go buy an electric vehicle. Well, I'm sure that seniors, based on their carbon tax rebate, will be able to afford that, not to mention the front-line workers who are already putting everything they can into making sure that our seniors are protected.

Unfortunately, the government doesn't value the service that is given and chose to hike taxes on every aspect of seniors' care through the carbon tax.

One of the other things that I loved reading about from the government was that it's only $13.25 a month. Well, on a fixed income, with expenses increasing everywhere else – this isn't the only thing that they pay for, Mr. Speaker – this is more than just a few cups of coffee, and that does not make life more affordable for seniors.

The carbon tax makes it more expensive, in fact, to transport seniors, to make the food that facilities purchase to feed their residents due to the rising trucking fuel costs that are downloaded onto the consumer. How does that make life better for Albertans and especially our seniors, Mr. Speaker? It's more expensive to heat these care facilities. What's happening with that? That's going to get downloaded onto the seniors, the families, and everybody else who is helping them.

In the state of this current economy the seniors' care facilities are struggling, just like every other Albertan right now. The government cannot be this naive to think that they could put in place a tax – again, it's called a levy so that they can tax the tax so that our friends in Ottawa are receiving $3 billion in extra money that could have actually gone to helping our seniors into their pockets and actually everybody else's, including the caregivers and families who take care of these precious people.

The businesses are now going to have to absorb these costs, and they're going to price that out to their consumers. What does the government think about the fact that there are now seniors and families across the province struggling to pay these ballooning seniors' care facility fees? How is that going to be managed? We understand that dollars have been put into beds and all of those other kinds of things. Those are part of the equation, but we're talking about what is actually going out of seniors' pockets.

Mr. Gill: Let's do a study. We'll find out.

Mrs. Aheer: I agree. If we do a study, then everything the government is saying should be true. It should be true. Prove the equation.

Motion 509 seeks to remedy some of the damage already done by this government to our seniors and the front-line services by calling for a financial impact study. This should be an absolute necessity in any bill, especially a money bill, to prove that those dollars are actually doing what they're supposed to do, which was to influence consumer changes in behaviour, in what they're doing, and also to reduce the carbon footprint, none of which is expressly put forward in any of the regulations, nor is it being shown in any of the vulnerable groups that we are talking about with an impact study; specifically, seniors, people on any sort of fixed income like AISH or anything else like that.

This is a common-sense solution. If this is truly about making things better for Albertans, then show us. It should be easy. In fact, I would think the government would be jumping up and down, happy to show what they're doing and to expose that we're asking for something that is wrong. Please prove us wrong. We'd love that.

I think that one of the things we have to consider prior to implementing a tax like this and what we were hoping for, given the fact that the carbon tax is going to be going up in 2018, is that the government would understand that not only is this expensive for the average person but for our front-line services and seniors. This government will now not take any time to heed the warnings of the opposition and support this motion.

Cortes-Vargas: Mr. Speaker, I'm just standing to seek unanimous consent for one-minute bells.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Happy to stand and speak to Motion 509, and I thank the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for bringing it forward. You know, I really like the Member for Calgary-Fish-Creek. He's a swell guy. We share a lot of similar interests. We really have an affinity for Southeast Asia. We've talked about it many times.

Connolly: Facial hair, balding.

Mr. Coolahan: Whoa. I resemble that remark.

Anyway, unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, I find that this motion is not as genuine as he wants it to be. It's more of I'll call it a trial balloon, if you will, and it's done to, you know, incite the rage machine and the climate deniers inside and outside of their caucus.

I have many, many seniors' facilities in Calgary's greatest riding, Calgary-Klein, and I visit often. After they've thanked me for the muffins or the cookies, they don't talk about the carbon levy – and we talk about it – as a burden. They don't talk about it as a burden. You know what they thank me for? They thank me for the new windows they just got installed. That's what they thank me for. They thank me for the new furnace that was installed. You know what else they thank us for? They thank me for the carbon levy rebate that they receive.

You know, this government has put a great deal of focus on ensuring that seniors are healthy and that they have good facilities to live in. I think the opposition is ignoring the fact that the infrastructure deficit was massive in these facilities, which is why we had to put all this money back into them, and I'm very happy that we're doing it. You know what else the seniors that I speak to in my riding do? They understand that it was an issue over the 30 years, facilities just deteriorating. We're picking up the pieces, and it's not easy. One of the ways to do that is through the carbon levy.

You know, we continue to work for seniors and not against them, Mr. Speaker: $800 million in seniors' benefits over the last two years – $800 million – investing in almost 3,000 new homes for seniors in Alberta, and providing access to low-interest and home equity loans. Not only that, but we're making life more affordable for seniors. Approximately 260,000 Alberta seniors are eligible for the annual rebate from the carbon levy. That's almost half the seniors in this province. That's why we continue to build seniors' housing projects. Currently we're seeing almost 3,000 new homes for seniors in Alberta. Three thousand.

You know, the sad reality of this whole situation, with a lot of what the opposition puts forward and this motion, is that 99 per cent of what the opposition puts forward is very difficult to take seriously. Between the climate denying, the Rebel media appearances, the fake memes with fake numbers on them, I mean, it's really hard to take anything they put forward seriously because we're not sure if they're actually doing something with a genuine interest or just, again, to poke at the rage machine. Who knows? Does the opposition understand that for the provinces that don't have a climate leadership plan in place next year, it's going to be imposed on them? Really, do they not want a made-in-Alberta solution to this, something that we need to do?

Mr. Carson: They prefer Ottawa-imported, like their leader.

Mr. Coolahan: Ottawa-imported, like their leader.

But it's okay because they do have a plan for that. They're going to get rid of the Alberta climate leadership plan, they're going to take the imported, and then they're just going to sue the federal government. That always works. That's always a solid plan. Always a solid plan.

You know, when the opposition plays games and they mislead the public on many of these things and they make false statements, what they're doing is that they're rooting for Alberta to fail.

An Hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Coolahan: It is shameful.

You know, Mr. Kenney opposes absolutely everything we do. We know that they would cut Alberta seniors' benefits. They would make extreme cuts to health care and other front-line services. They'd put many vulnerable Albertans at risk, and their reckless cuts to health care and education will hurt Alberta's economic recovery and do real damage to Albertans. As my esteemed colleague from Edmonton-McClung said, it's rear-view thinking. I like that term. It's good. We're moving the province forward, absolutely, and in doing that, we're making sure that people don't get left behind – that's the important piece – including seniors. The cost of doing nothing for many years with these facilities was astronomical. This is why we're having to play catch-up, and it's shameful that that happened for so long.

Anyhow, Mr. Speaker, I'm going to end it there. I'm going to say that I won't be supporting the motion, but thank you for bringing it forward.

The Speaker: I'll call on the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek to close debate.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to start by saying that I am profoundly disappointed. I've worked hard for the past two and a half years to understand and appreciate the seniors-care ecosystem with diligence, spending nights in facilities and talking to seniors, so shame on the members opposite for not taking that time to understand the significant challenges being faced by seniors and seniors' service providers. Shame on them for being willing to blindly throw Alberta seniors under the bus, for blindly supporting a policy whose impact they do not even want to measure. As the saying goes, if you can't measure it, you can't manage it. But perhaps the lack of management acumen on the other side or ability to balance a budget should not surprise me. I have 10.3 billion reasons that prove my point.

My motion quite plainly and simply asks for us to better measure and understand “the financial impact of the carbon levy on organizations that provide front-line care to seniors in Alberta” and to mitigate “any impacts deemed a threat to the provision of front-line care.” Front-line cuts, indeed.

I’m disappointed that the members opposite are afraid that the study may yield results that could negatively reflect on the unintended consequences of their policies. Whether they agree with my assertions and that of my party and the majority of Albertans of the damage caused by the carbon tax, they are misguided in rejecting this motion, an opportunity to do the right thing by Alberta seniors, Mr. Speaker. Or are they more concerned about the impact on their personal standing with respect to their partisan futures? Let Albertans answer that question in the future. On the contrary, I believe that supporting this motion would actually enhance their political capital. But I guess they can face that music and Alberta seniors at the polls if they truly cannot see their way to protecting these same seniors and their well-being today and into the future.

I’m disappointed that they would even consider putting their own self-interest ahead of that of our seniors, Mr. Speaker, and I’m disappointed that we have a government who is afraid of measuring impact, doing the right thing, and taking the time to ensure that their policies are as strong as they can be and that the impact, positive or negative, and unintended consequences are understood and quantified. That is what good government looks like and acts like in the protection of vulnerable Albertans.

We have seen numerous government policies result in unintended consequences, to the detriment of making life better or more affordable for Albertans. This motion could have allowed for representatives from this House to come together, putting our differences aside for Alberta seniors, to see how we can work to ensure that the carbon tax does not and will not have a negative impact on the lives, health, and well-being of our seniors. Is that too much to ask, Mr. Speaker? Having this additional information on hand would have provided the government with valuable data as they move full speed ahead, albeit irresponsibly, in my mind, with a 50 per cent increase in the carbon tax.

Like it or not, we have a carbon tax until at least 2019. But refusing to study the impact that this policy is having on our seniors is not only profoundly disappointing but disturbing in its callousness toward the plight of our seniors, who deserve not only better but the best we can deliver in terms of affordability and sustainability with respect to housing, care, nutrition, and essential services. If this government is so afraid of studying the impact that one of their flagship policies is having on a population with a limited ability to pay for the increased cost of living it is impacting, they must already know in their hearts and intuitively in their minds the damage the carbon levy is having every single day on fixed-income seniors in this province. Failure to measure, failure to manage, indeed.

I know that many members opposite have convinced themselves that supporting the carbon tax somehow grants them moral high ground from which they can look down on the majority of Albertans who do not support this tax, but it clearly does not. It means that they would rather feel good about themselves than take the opportunity to measure and manage, in this case damaging and harming vulnerable seniors. The carbon tax is having real impacts on seniors across Alberta every single day, and refusing to study that impact despite numerous calls, in my mind, is irresponsible.

Tomorrow morning, Mr. Speaker, is the Alberta Continuing Care Association’s MLA breakfast, and I hope to see you all there. I hope that everyone who votes against this motion comes prepared tomorrow to explain why they voted against the motion, which the caring, compassionate, and community-spirited members of this association are supportive of.

Mr. Speaker, seeking information and supporting stakeholders and caring for and about seniors is something we should all have as a priority. Clearly, that is not the case with respect to this motion, and I’m saddened by that on behalf of all Alberta seniors.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I’m deeply disappointed that an ideological partisan dogma could not be put aside today in support of our Alberta seniors to ensure that their lives are as rich and as respected as we possibly can. There’s an incredible group of service providers, care providers we are blessed to have delivering compassionate care in our province. We should respect them and honour them.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta7:30 p.m.*Monday, November 27, 2017

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Good evening. Please be seated.Government Bills and Orders*Second Reading*Bill 26*An Act to Control and Regulate Cannabis*The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Don't be fooled by the clock on the wall. Even though that clock says that it's a little past 7:30, I can guarantee you that somewhere it is 4:20, which means that it is high time to move second reading of Bill 26, An Act to Control and Regulate Cannabis, on behalf of the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Now, Madam Speaker, this spring the federal government announced that cannabis would become legal across the country by July of 2018. That announcement gave Alberta and all provinces and territories just over a year to develop a system that would provide reasonable access to cannabis while protecting public health and safety. Our government immediately turned to Albertans to ask for their input. We needed their feedback to develop a system that would reflect the views and values of the people who live in this province.

In one of the most successful engagement processes in the Alberta government's history more than 60,000 Albertans responded. Their input guided the drafting of an Alberta cannabis framework, which will allow adults to legally and safely access cannabis while protecting Alberta's youth and public health, ensuring safety on our roads and in our workplaces, and limiting the illicit market. Albertans agreed that these are also their priorities. The framework and the legislation we are proposing to enable it are just part of a number of steps in establishing a system founded on these priorities.

Madam Speaker, our government is committed to taking an approach to legalize cannabis that works for Albertans. At the heart of Bill 26 is the intent to establish a system for legalized cannabis that Albertans can trust. That's why a number of the amendments it proposes are related to the role of the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission in the system. The AGLC has been a trusted regulator of Alberta's private retail model for alcohol for more than two decades.

We want to enable the AGLC to bring that wealth of experience to our system for cannabis. Bill 26 will empower that agency to oversee the distribution of cannabis, ensuring that all cannabis products that come to our province's retail market are legally produced and come from licensed producers. The bill will also grant authority to the AGLC to oversee the retail aspects of cannabis, ensuring that products are distributed to specialized retailers that only sell cannabis, not with tobacco, alcohol, or pharmaceuticals.

The cannabis retail market will be privately owned and operated, licensed, and strictly regulated by province-wide rules set by our government. The specifics of these rules will be outlined in regulations introduced in the new year, but they will cover such things as hours of operation, setback distances for stores, age of staff, staff training, and the requirement for all retailers to undergo background checks. The intent is to ensure that Alberta's system for legalized cannabis, its cannabis products, and the venues they are purchased from are safe and, more importantly, that Albertans are safe.

Madam Speaker, Bill 26 also lays the foundation for the sale of cannabis online. If this bill is passed, Albertans will be able to buy cannabis online from the outset of legalization. We heard support from Albertans for online sales, but we also heard concerns about verifying the age of those purchasing cannabis online. We want Albertans to be confident that we can meet their expectations about safety and security, and that's why our government will directly manage all online sales. This will allow us to know who our customers are and ensure that they are of legal age. It also gives purchasers more confidence that they know who they are buying cannabis products from. Establishing government-operated online sales will ensure that Albertans have access to safe, secure cannabis products even if actual retail storefronts are not yet ready to go or would not be economically viable in their communities.

Finally, Madam Speaker, Bill 26 includes amendments that will protect the health and safety of Alberta's youth. Our legalization establishes provincial offences related to youth possession, smoking and vaping cannabis in prohibited areas, and consumption of cannabis in vehicles. We heard concerns from Albertans about the health impact of cannabis consumption around young people, and indeed keeping cannabis out of the hands of children and youth is one of the main policy priorities of Alberta's cannabis framework. To that end, Bill 26 proposes a zero-tolerance approach to youth possession.

We are also addressing concerns about exposure to second-hand smoke, especially by children. Bill 26 prohibits smoking and vaping of cannabis in any place where a person is prohibited from smoking tobacco under the Tobacco and Smoking Reduction Act. It also makes it an offence to smoke or vape in any outdoor spaces typically frequented by children such as playgrounds, spray parks, and on school and hospital properties. Madam Speaker, Albertans were clear that we don't want people high as balls around our kids.

Another major concern we heard from Albertans was related to drug-impaired driving. The Transportation minister has introduced important legislation to help address this serious issue. Bill 26 also includes amendments to reduce the risk of impaired driving, including prohibiting any consumption of cannabis in vehicles. This includes by the driver and by any passengers. In addition, any cannabis products must be stored away from the reach of drivers and passengers. Just to repeat, keep your roach out of reach while driving.

Quite frankly, Madam Speaker, the legalization of cannabis represents a huge change in our province and in our society. We are absolutely committed to getting this right. Make no mistake; we still have a lot of work ahead, and members of this House will hear more about this as it unfolds.

I'm proud to see the work that's been done to date and in such short timelines. It has resulted in the legislation I have shared with you today. Bill 26 puts in place the many pieces that will allow our government to create a system for legalized cannabis in our province that Albertans can trust and will ensure the safety and well-being of the people who live here. I hope that members on both sides of the House will support this legislation.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak to Bill 26, An Act to Control and Regulate Cannabis. Now, I think it's very important to note while I speak to this bill that this discussion is not about whether or not cannabis should be decriminalized. Criminal law falls under federal jurisdiction. Whether we agree with it or not, smoking or vaping cannabis will be legal this summer. Our Constitution does not allow provinces to define and establish crimes, so provincial governments, without a lot of time, have to regulate cannabis to prevent a legal vacuum. This is our duty as legislators, to be responsible and do the best job that we can in the implementation and regulation of this new law that the federal government has passed down to us.

Overall, I think that the government's response to this is actually quite reasonable. Now, we do have some concerns, as I'm sure that all members of this House do – I do; our caucus certainly does – and we do hope to receive some clarification on this because we are responsible to our constituents as well. This is information that we can be helpful in passing along and, of course, helpful as we debate this bill.

As legalization begins, it would be better to start off strict. That way we can gradually loosen restrictions as people in law enforcement adjust to new realities. It's important that we keep a lot of this in check. I imagine there will be quite a few bumps and bruises along the way, and we will need to come back and look at this and make changes and that type of thing. We're going to be smart about the regulation of this product that we had nothing to do with the legalization of, so we're going to ease into legalization carefully, monitor the implementation and the successes and failures of the regulation, and make adjustments.

Now, some people are already doing cannabis illegally, and we know the sorts of effects that cannabis has on them. They know the effects that it has on their bodies. With it being legalized, there will very likely be some people that will try it for the first time, and those who were doing it illegally might get a little bit bolder. As we know from discussions earlier today on the crime crisis in rural areas, our police are already stretched pretty thin. It's a big concern that we have on this side of the House. I'm sure everyone in this House has a concern about crime and the lack of resources that we have, which is a bit of a concern when we're decriminalizing something that has caused so much criminal behaviour in the past and when police have very few resources at their disposal.

In saying that, what is the plan to equip and train police officers? I've spoken with many police officers that just really aren't prepared. They're quite concerned, actually, with the implementation of this. I'm not saying that it's this government's fault, but this is something that we need to address. Do we have public education campaigns planned? What is that? I've heard some on the radio from MADD Canada. They're trying to get out ahead of this impaired driving, which is great, but there is way more to the education component than MADD Canada on the radio, and this government certainly has a responsibility when it comes to education.

Now, with regard to distribution we're extremely pleased to see that the government is allowing private retailers to sell cannabis. That's exactly what we heard from the industry that is to be. It's something that makes sense, and I'm really happy to see that moving forward. I think that's, like, bang on with what you guys were hearing as well, so kudos.

I'm pretty happy that it's not co-located with alcohol, tobacco, or pharmaceuticals. I think that's a great way to start the regulation here. We don't want to be encouraging people to consume or try cannabis, so we're not going to try and tempt people as they're picking up medications, gas at the gas station, that type of thing, or people who are buying cigarettes or alcohol and cross-using these products. So that's really, really great to see.

Now, as far as I can tell, this legislation allows cannabis accessories to be sold at these retail outlets, which seems reasonable, and that's also some of the feedback that we've heard from industry in this regard. There are going to be different tools and accessories that you need to be able to use the cannabis, and I think that having those trained staff members in these stores with all of these products is a good step towards education. So we think that's quite reasonable.

I'd be interested to see what the rules are around advertising and the promotion of cannabis. We know that this is somewhat similar to the implementation of tobacco in our province; however, it's not like tobacco. The distribution model is a bit more similar to our liquor distribution model. It's a bit of a hybrid of both, but we need to understand what advertising and promotion is allowed or planned or how that works.

Can you have a poster that children can see on the outside of the store with somebody smoking marijuana or whatever that might be, for example? We know that there were similar strict advertising rules around alcohol in the past. There are certainly stricter rules around tobacco in this day and age even from when I was growing up. I mean, tobacco companies used to sponsor tennis tournaments and other sporting events, which was kind of ironic. I think that that's important, and we need some clarification on that.

As for the government-run online stores, this is where we need a little bit more detail. I think that it's reasonable to see where you were going with the online portion of this in regard to government running this. Perhaps it's not a bad idea coming out of the gate to do it this way, just given the multitude and the magnitude of the regulations that are needed right now. There's so much.

I do expect, you know, that down the road that could very easily be pushed back into the private sector, where a lot of the experts are already operating and running their businesses. It makes a lot of sense, especially in terms of relationships with customers. There are a lot of users that will be going into these cannabis stores and buying their products and getting the information, the education, and the expertise from the people that work in these stores. They're going to have relationships with them, and I think that they would feel comfortable ordering online from that particular retailer as well because that's just the society that we live in.

We see a lot of retail stores closing down right now, malls closing down right across North America because people aren't going into the retail stores anymore. I know that's probably one of the reasons why the online purchasing component is so important in this implementation of regulation, because you do need to allow access. If we're going to try and combat some of the criminal element, we need to make sure that people have access. If they're not comfortable walking into a retail location, they can purchase it online. For now that's the government, but I foresee down the road that that would be something that would very much make sense to be in the hands of private retailers in, obviously, a very controlled and regulated way. I think that would be responsible.

Some of the questions. Because the government has chosen that the online purchasing portion be done through the government, the questions I have are: how is the age verification process when ordering online going to work? Do you put in a driver's licence number? Do you take a photo with your camera, and your picture proves who you are? Who's to say that minors aren't using mom and dad's ID or a brother's or sister's or any of that kind of stuff? I know you can't stop it all, but when somebody is on a computer, you don't know who's on the other end. When it's delivered to the house, how are those packages, how are those deliveries accepted? What is the process for that? I need some clarification there.

Speaking of minors, the bill prohibits smoking and vaping cannabis within a prescribed distance of areas frequented by minors such as a playground, zoo, or outdoor pool. Awesome. Great. We've all smelled cannabis. If you don't smoke it right now, it certainly stinks, and our children shouldn't be subject to any of this. So that's really great. But less harm would be caused by someone smoking cannabis in the playground in the middle of the night than by somebody smoking beside a minor in an area perhaps not usually frequented by minors. I'm hoping we can have some clarification on that. That can very well simply be walking down the street. I just need some clarification on that. It's not an area frequented by minors, but there very well may be minors there.

Now, the research. As you know – I know that the government knows this certainly – the human brain hasn't finished developing till the age of 25. There are arguments, certainly, for ages higher than that as well. Allowing cannabis consumption that may expose a larger number of Albertans to negative health outcomes that could result from cannabis use is a bit of a concern. I do understand that it's consistent with the legal age for alcohol and tobacco in our province, and I certainly believe in personal responsibility. When you're 18, you're an adult, and you definitely have the right to access and use these products. But, again, we need to see that educational component in this, and I'd like to see a big stress on this. I imagine that's probably something in regulation, or the minister is certainly going to answer all of these questions and ease some fears and that type of thing moving forward.

Another note on the online store, that it reduces the chances of people falling prey to falsified or illegitimate websites: again, like I said, I do see the logic in initially implementing the government running the online portion of this distribution. That absolutely makes sense, but I think that when some of these kinks get worked out, we could see that maybe passed off or at least revisited and go from there. We're also going to have to be concerned about fraud and that type of thing.

Now, with regard to growing cannabis at home, I understand that illegal grow ops completely destroy a house. Is there a risk – an honest question – of four plants destroying a home? I don't know. I know four spider plants or four ficus plants in my house are not going to damage anything. I know that we're not talking about grow ops in a home, but these are legitimate concerns that landlords in our province do have, and these need to be addressed. The landlord right now has a right to say, "No pets" or "No smoking." They can no longer say, "No children." But will they have the right to say, "No cannabis plants grown in this house for whatever reason"? I understand it's a legal plant, but it is a controlled substance, and I think the landlords need to have that ability even just for now.

I mean, there's so much that's going to be changing with the implementation of this over the next years, and it's going to evolve and grow. Like I said and stress again, we'll be back here, certainly, fixing things, and it's not because it wasn't done right the first time. It's just that this is a big, big deal, right? We'll be back here one day. Landlords have a lot of questions around this and how this is going to go.

The other question that we would have in regard to cannabis plants growing in the home. Right now, when you buy or sell real estate, there is a declaration form that needs to be signed if you've ever grown marijuana in the home. With every home purchase you need this to be signed. How does that fit into this? Is that addressed somewhere in here?

I certainly look forward to discussion on this piece of legislation. I think there are a lot of Albertans watching what's going on. These are really interesting times. For now, you know, I'd just like to say that I really don't think you guys did a horrible job on the first piece of this legislation. I think it's very likely the best-case scenario. I will probably never say this again. I look forward to working with you down the road as this will need to be adjusted, as I'm sure you can agree – I think the minister already said that – in a thoughtful, respectful manner so that our children are safe. This is hopefully going to have fewer problems than it will create down the road. I'm hoping that you can address some of my concerns, and I look forward to this discussion on Bill 26 as we move forward.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Yeah. Thank you for the opportunity to rise and speak to Bill 26, An Act to Control and Regulate Cannabis. We're all aware that this is legislation that has been drafted in response to the federal government's legalization of cannabis, Bill C-45. I won't read it because it's a long title. In short, it's the cannabis legislation. It was introduced April 13 of this year, and the sales and distribution of cannabis will start immediately following legalization in July of 2018.

It will make legal the distribution and various aspects of the marijuana trade, including the questions of at what age a person can legally consume and possess it. People will now be allowed to grow up to four plants, as has been said, in their homes. There will be an online way to purchase it. Sales should be ready to go this coming summer with private retailers, with the whole question of public possession limits being set at 30 grams and discussions about the questions of where cannabis can be consumed. We understand that the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission will be the authority to carry out the compliance function and the oversight issues. They'll also manage wholesale distribution of cannabis to licensed sellers, which I think is a very good thing.

I do want to say that we will be supporting this bill. There are lots of questions in everybody's minds, of course, but I do think that the general public recognizes the need for us to be in line with what the federal government is doing. Even though there are lots of questions out there about implementation and regulation and who does what and who's allowed to do what – and it will probably take a few years to sort it all out – we do need to have something in place before July of next year. There are questions, though.

I think one of the real issues that this bill is intended to resolve is to take the cannabis trade out of the hands of criminals. I think we really have to think that through, though. Will it, and how? Taxes will drive up the price a little bit, and the black market, quite frankly, can cut prices in order to gain market share. After all, it is a business to them, and they will respond accordingly.

I also think there is the question of the fact that there is a segment of our culture which is antiauthority, the "government can't tell me what to do" attitude, that is very much a part of the cannabis culture and that will continue to thrive in the minds of many people who are sort of antiauthoritarian and that sort of thing. Will this legislation actually make the enforcement of illegal cannabis even more difficult in some ways? There'll be illegal and legal stuff, and who knows which is which? There are no clear ways for the police to sort that out without doing a lot of work on it. I actually think it's not going to be as easy as everybody hopes it might be.

Another aspect of this, of course, is to try and keep cannabis out of the hands of minors, to keep it away from children, a very important question that I think has to be addressed. I'm not sure that we have the answers figured out there either. How do we guarantee that minors will not be making those online purchases? We already know that minors go on all kinds of Internet sites that they're not supposed to be able to have access to, and they do. They do get identities, and they do share identities, and they do all kinds of things. I'm not sure that you can regulate that in a way that's safe. So I'd like to hear more about those kinds of security measures that might be put in place to safeguard our youth.

Well, in many ways, I guess, it's an arbitrary decision to say that 18 is the magic age. This is a decision that on the surface seems reasonable. It aligns with tobacco regulations, with alcohol regulations. But I think that with cannabis it's more complex than that. We've already heard that many doctors and AHS have expressed some serious concerns about the risk of legalizing cannabis for those who are under the age of 21 or 22, 23. There's pretty good science out there that demonstrates that the human brain really hasn't developed fully under the age of 24 or so. There is a risk of giving a social licence to young people. On the one hand, we say: you shouldn't do it because it's not good for your health. On the other hand, we create a social licence that says: well, in fact you can do it because it's legal.

I think that's going to be extremely confusing for young people who are trying to decide what the right thing is for them to do, particularly with the risk of early-onset schizophrenia. I think that's a concern that we really have not wrestled with here. And in the process of asking that question, have we wrestled at all with the spinoff medical effects that might happen? Have we wrestled with the realities of the social costs that will come with increasing psychotic issues, with young people that maybe get drawn into this and it not being the best thing for them, for their health? I think these are real concerns. I personally wrestle with that one because I have family members who started out with early use of marijuana. It has led to schizophrenic issues, and it has completely impacted their lives in very negative and harmful ways, so I think we really have to ask questions about these particular items.

How do we help families who are trying to keep their young people safe, keep them healthy? We say: "Oh, it's legal. It's okay. You can go ahead and do it even though it might harm you." I just find a contradiction in saying, "We want to protect young people" but, at the same time: "We're going to make it legal for you. You can do it if you want." There's a contradiction there. There's a cognitive dissonance there that just doesn't quite add up. I think we have to wrestle with that more deeply. Maybe as we gain more experience with this over the next few years, we'll see appropriate opportunities for amendments and corrections.

What about the issue of smoking and vaping? We have huge concerns about second-hand smoke in our society, about the health impacts of that. [interjection]

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member.

Please continue.

Mr. Orr: Thank you. What about second-hand smoke and even the possibility of second-hand intoxication for young people? We realize that there will be some prohibition against smoking or vaping in public places and, particularly, a restriction against doing it in proscribed places such as close to schools, other public areas. But, again, I just think that we haven't quite figured out yet how we do this in a way that's truly safe and truly does protect our young people. So we need to ask some of these questions.

What about the whole issue of being forced to roll this out? I think there is a need for education, for teaching, for explaining, for awareness to people so that they understand what's happening, so that they understand the dangers, the magnitude, the significance of this, what they can and cannot do. We really don't want people getting charged for something that's still illegal when they thought it was legal or things of that nature. We definitely need to have something in place to help people know what really would be the right thing to do here.

The regulations around no sales at co-locations with alcohol or tobacco: I think that is a great decision, putting it out there in places that have to be specifically dedicated to that. While it may be a business challenge, I think it's a wise social health decision, and I think we need to actually continue to support that particular piece of it.

While there are lots of questions about the social aspects, there are also some questions about the legal side of it, the enforcement side of it: how are we going to enforce some of these regulations, and how are we going to train the police officers as they move forward? We have another bill to talk about, the issue of driving, and we'll get to that later. We have a lot of work to do in terms of preparing our police forces, in terms of preparing our municipalities, in terms of helping them discern what they can and cannot enact in terms of their own regulations. We've already seen at the recent AAMD and C and AUMA conventions that there are positions all over the map from different municipalities on how they should approach this. I think municipalities as well are going to need some real help in terms of coming up with something that actually works. Again, I guess that to a certain degree we'll learn by trial and error. We'll see what works and what doesn't, and that's just the reality that we're forced into.

I personally am not quite as concerned about the issue of people being able to grow four plants in their house. I really don't think it's going to destroy their houses. I don't personally think, in contradistinction to some others, that it's going to destroy the market value of your house. Four plants is four plants. I do think, though, that if that gets carried away and the police aren't able to keep it to that and you end up with a house that's got 400 instead of four, you're into a totally different situation, and, yes, there could be real estate issues, health issues, legal issues on the sale of properties. Again, I think that's something that has to be wrestled with because it's probably not going to be as straightforward and simple as it might look on a piece of paper.

What about landlords? What about those who rent, those who share properties? What about apartment buildings, where you've got multiple people in the building, yet it's their own personal residence where they live? We already know that there are issues in some seniors' complexes just between those who smoke and those who don't and about the tensions and the problems that that creates in the building. Will this impact rental properties, apartments, condo buildings where people are forced to live close together physically, geographically? How is that going to impact them in these kinds of places? Again, I think this is going to lead to a lot of conflict and tension amongst people in their different places. So lots of questions on that one as well.

I just think we need to really be careful where we go here. I think we need to not be in a hurry about this. I realize there's a deadline coming. But I definitely think that we need to put this up for review in a couple of years or so because I think that as we get into it, we'll see that there are things we didn't quite get right.

Hopefully, the government will be open to reviewing the legislation as we move forward, really, really consulting with people in our province and listening to what their concerns are and making sure that it is actually safe, that it does get it out of the hands of criminals, that children are protected from it, and that it's a positive experience.

We already know that it's probably not going to be a very financially positive experience for the government. The relationship with the federal government is not going to give us much cash. I hope the government is planning to have some budget money available to manage this whole thing because it is going to be difficult to manage moving forward.

With that long list of concerns and questions, I will conclude. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I will now recognize the Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to have the opportunity to rise tonight and speak to Bill 26, An Act to Control and Regulate Cannabis. I spent about 12 years working as a musician and studio engineer, so certainly I am well familiar with the scent of cannabis and with its use in many respects. I've been around many people who have used it for a variety of reasons. I think it's important to recognize that this is, in fact, a substance that has been in use in our society and by many for some time. What we are dealing with here is not something, I think, that is a radical shift for us as a society. I think it's a reasonable one to make. I think we've seen it happen in other jurisdictions around the world where it's been done safely and reasonably and led to good outcomes, and I believe that we as mature adults in a democratic society have the ability to manage this transition in a wise way.

Indeed, I would say that Minister Ganley, in putting together this bill after having done considerable consultation across the province, having spoken with stakeholders on many sides, has come forward with a very balanced piece of legislation. Indeed, we've heard the same from across the aisle, so it's my hope that we'll be able to move this forward with a minimum of acrimony and make improvements where necessary and be able to work well.

One thing I did want to note, Madam Speaker, is that there has been some comment about decriminalization. It's important to be clear that what we are dealing with here with the federal government is not decriminalization, which would be simply not charging people for something which would still technically remain illegal. This is, in fact, legalization, so with cannabis itself we are removing it from being illegal, and it is now a legal substance to possess as of July 1 of next year. So just to be clear on our terminology.

The principles that we've looked at, that the minister looked at, and that as a government we indeed wanted to ensure through this legislation were the four policy priorities: first of all, keeping cannabis out of the hands of children; secondly, protecting public health; thirdly, promoting safety on roads and workplaces and in public spaces; and lastly, limiting the illegal market. Again, Madam Speaker, I do feel that the provisions that have been put forward in this legislation after robust consultation across the province achieved those four goals very well.

Indeed, what we see in the legislation here is that the minister has chosen to propose setting the age limit at 18. Now, one of the members opposite did raise some concerns about that, did note that some doctors and others have suggested that we go with a higher age limit for access to cannabis. The important thing to recognize, Madam Speaker, is that Canada already has one of the highest youth usage rates for cannabis in the world, so we already have a large number of young people that are managing to access and make use of cannabis. For us to set a higher age limit, say at 21, would go against one of the principles that we are looking at here, that being limiting the illegal market.

Right now we know we have a robust illegal market. Anybody who is interested in purchasing and obtaining cannabis does not have difficulty in doing so, and that includes youth. So it's very important, Madam Speaker, that in the rules that we put forward and in the steps that we take, we are eliminating that illegal market. Setting the limit at the age of 18, which is the same age at which young people can access alcohol, can access tobacco: that, to me, seems reasonable. That eliminates any need for a black market to continue whereas if we set it at 21, we have youth that are drinking, that are smoking, and that are looking for ways to access cannabis, which, as I said, we know they already do in large numbers.

I recognize what the member opposite was talking about in terms of concerns with health and safety, and indeed I agree with him one hundred per cent that we need to have good education and awareness as part of this, Madam Speaker, as we have good education around alcohol and recognizing the damage that that can do to young minds and young bodies and overindulgence and that sort of thing, the costs that can be associated with that. We work very hard to educate both before youth reach the age of 18 and afterwards. Indeed, in terms of tobacco we're quite clear about the health effects that that has and, again, work towards that education and continue to improve education around that area. I think we can do the same in terms of cannabis use. I think that setting the age at 18 is indeed a reasonable restriction.

There were some concerns raised by a member opposite around public consumption, and indeed I recognize, Madam Speaker, that in terms of public consumption cannabis is – how can I say it? – fragrant. It has a strong aroma. Indeed, it's something that we need to be considerate of in terms of how people are exposed to it, but I believe that we have come to a reasonable place in this legislation in limiting it in the same way that we limit tobacco. Recognizing that tobacco itself and second-hand smoke can have health hazards, we have reasonable restrictions around where tobacco can be consumed. We are regulating cannabis on the same level as tobacco in terms of recognizing that second-hand smoke from cannabis can indeed also have similar health effects.

Now, there was a comment made in regard to second-hand smoke and what's known as a contact high in terms of cannabis. It's important to note, Madam Speaker, that there was a recent study, conducted in 2015, by the Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine in which they had volunteers sit in an enclosed space and be exposed to heavy amounts of cannabis smoke, second-hand, for an extended period of time, over an hour, and those individuals showed a mild impairment, extremely mild. They reported feeling slightly pleasant and a little bit hungry. Now, individuals who were exposed to the same amount of cannabis smoke in a ventilated room showed no symptoms and no presence of THC or any other metabolites in their bloodstream.

So while there is some mythology around contact highs and that sort of thing from second-hand smoke, there is no credible scientific study that shows there would be any concern about that in a well-ventilated space. Indeed, in the public spaces where the consumption would be allowed similar to tobacco, I would dare say that there would be next to no chance that anybody could possibly become even mildly impaired by exposure to smoke in that space.

Now, that said, Madam Speaker, municipalities do retain the right to further enforce and create additional regulations or bylaws around where cannabis could be consumed. For example, here in Edmonton-Centre, just over by city hall, we have Churchill Square. Recently the city of Edmonton added additional bylaws restricting the use of tobacco in Churchill Square. Under this legislation, then, cannabis would also be regulated in that space, so it would not be allowed to be consumed.

While I recognize, again, Madam Speaker, that some have concerns about the odour, I can tell you that, for myself, I am a person who is scent sensitive, so the bane of my existence, for example, is being caught in an elevator with someone wearing a large amount of perfume. However, the fact that I don't enjoy the scent of perfume doesn't mean that I need to regulate whether or not people wear it in a public space near me. I choose to avoid it, I may not like to be around it, but again I don't think it's something that we need to take further in that respect. I do think that this is a reasonable step in terms of how we regulate the consumption of cannabis and the spaces where it may be used.

Now, there's also been some discussion, I guess – and I have had this concern raised to me as well when I visited some seniors' residences, and I've heard it from some constituents – around the consumption of cannabis, indeed, in multi-unit, multi-resident buildings. Certainly, I recognize that that can be a challenge in some respects. Having served as president of a condominium board in a condominium building where I used to live here in Edmonton-Centre, I recognize that that can be a challenge, but there are already rules in place which allow a condominium board or indeed a landlord or a property management company to address such issues within such buildings. All individuals living in suites, whether they own or rent, have the right to peaceful enjoyment of their suite, and if that's being interfered with by other residents within the building, there are means available by which that can be addressed.

Certainly, again, this is something that's going to take some time to adjust to. It's going to take some time for everyone to get used to new rules. Those mechanisms are available.

Similarly, Madam Speaker, with landlords. If I'm a landlord and I'm renting out my suite, I have the ability, with proper notice, to conduct an inspection of said suite or said property, and if I find that my tenants are indeed undertaking actions of any sort that may damage that property, I have rules and regulations that I can make use of to address that. So if they were, say, growing tomatoes indoors and they had a small greenhouse space and the moisture from that was damaging the walls, I would have the ability to take action to address that.

Similarly, while I recognize that, yes, we do need to have proper enforcement to ensure that people are not going beyond the four plants that are allowed under federal regulation, I believe we have much of the structure and mechanisms in place already to be able to address this. There may be some small adjustments and things that we have to tweak over time, but I think, again, that as a democratic society of mature adults we're able to engage this process, and we're able to move forward, I think, with a minimum of difficulty on this.

I was pleased to see, Madam Speaker, that the minister opted to move forward with private retail sales of cannabis. That was certainly something, again, that I heard from many constituents about. Indeed, we saw that from Albertans, I think, in the surveys and that that were conducted, that they prefer to see the sales of cannabis regulated in the same way as our sales of alcohol. We do allow that in private retail spaces, so indeed we are doing the same with cannabis. I think it's reasonable that we also make use of the mechanisms that are already available through the AGLC, the distribution, et cetera, that they have already perfected – well, perhaps not perfected; there's always room for improvement – that they have set up over time, that they've got to a place where they work fairly efficiently, make use of that infrastructure, make use of those regulatory powers that already exist, and use them then for the regulation of cannabis.

I appreciate the steps that this legislation takes in terms of saying: you know, yes, cannabis should be sold in a stand-alone store; it should not be sold alongside other products so that indeed for anybody that is going to purchase the product, it is an intentional purchase. They are going there for that purpose. They know where it can be found, and they know why they are going there. Selling cannabis and cannabis-related accessories alone in these locations, Madam Speaker: that seems to me to be a reasonable step to take.

Of course, in the future we're going to have the opportunity to consider how we might then license or regulate this in terms of use in cannabis cafés or lounges or other such opportunities. I think it's reasonable that this legislation at this time chooses not to allow those as of yet but to give us the opportunity to take some of these initial steps and see how things might go from there.

Indeed, Madam Speaker, I think these are good first steps. I think this is a good first direction. We recognize that, you know, come July 1 this is the beginning of a process. We are not hurtling or rushing towards an imposed deadline. Instead, I think we're acting reasonably for what's going to be that initial legalization that's going to come forward and setting the framework in place that will allow us to begin the journey of seeing how we as a province are going to be able to regulate and allow the legal sale of cannabis, how we can do that safely in a way that's going to keep it out of the hands of youth, in a way that's going to protect Albertans. Indeed, we have another piece of legislation which we're considering which will ensure that we're kept safe on our roadways. This is going to allow us the opportunity to continue to have that conversation and continue to move forward as a province and a society.

I look forward to further debate and the thoughts of other members on this bill. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak to 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

Seeing none, I will ask the hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane to close debate. Oh. The minister. My apologies. The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker, for finally recognizing me after searching so hard.

Madam Speaker, I appreciated the discussion. You know, the province of Alberta is going on a trip to legalize cannabis. The members opposite, of course, have raised some concerns, and I want to thank the Member for Edmonton-Centre for allaying a number of those concerns that have been raised in his eloquent speech.

Madam Speaker, I think that at this point we have to recognize that both our police enforcement officials as well as our AGLC officials are new to this legalization of cannabis. You could say that they're green as grass, but I think we have to be patient as we try to get this right. That's why I would encourage all members to puff, puff, pass this bill into Committee of the Whole so we can really get down into the weeds around the issues that are of concern to members with respect to this legislation.

With that, I close debate on Bill 26 at second reading.

[Motion carried; Bill 26 read a second time]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Madam Speaker. We've made some great progress tonight and had a great debate. I would move that we adjourn the House until 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.

[Motion carried; the House adjourned at 8:21 p.m.]

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

Prayers

The Acting Speaker: Good morning.

Let us pray and reflect, each in our own way. As Canadians and as Albertans we give thanks for the precious gift of freedom and peace which we enjoy. As Members of this Legislative Assembly we rededicate ourselves to the valued tradition of parliamentary democracy as a means of serving the people of our province and our country. Amen.

Please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 28 School Amendment Act, 2017

[Adjourned debate November 16: Mr. Eggen]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak to Bill 28, School Amendment Act, 2017. Bill 28 addresses a number of issues surrounding education and is in this sense an omnibus bill. The fact that the minister continues to delay the proclaiming of the Education Act and instead has chosen to amend the School Act is, on this side of the House, concerning simply because it continues the trend of a lack of clarity regarding the Education Act.

If the Education Act has serious flaws in the eyes of this government, then it should make it clear to Albertans that this government has no intention of proclaiming the Education Act. It should then be willing to articulate the reasons why it believes that the students of Alberta would not benefit from its proclamation. It is time for this government to not simply amend the School Act but to also explain to Albertans why it is unwilling to proclaim the Education Act.

Bill 28 makes a number of changes to the School Act that will affect a wide spectrum of educational delivery across this province. However, let us be clear: these amendments would appear, once again, to give the Minister of Education more power at the expense of local autonomy of school boards. It also places important elements of education outside of the School Act and into the regulations. Both of these are serious issues, the first because it continues the trend towards a distant and far-off minister deciding what is best in education for local parents, for students, and for educators.

I believe and this party believes very strongly that local boards and local schools and parents are best positioned to make decisions which affect their day-to-day activities in education. These individuals understand their own schools and their communities far better than the Minister of Education does. Continually eroding the responsibilities and the ability of local decision-makers to make decisions for themselves does not improve the education system in Alberta.

Secondly, this piece of legislation once again asks this Assembly to have faith, faith that the regulations will reasonably reflect what the people of Alberta want as represented through the informed consent of the MLAs in this Legislature. Regulation is important – don't get us wrong – but legislation, the part that is most directly controlled by the people of Alberta through their representatives, must first and foremost speak to how education will run, not simply regulation.

The lack of clarity provided by this legislation is very apparent as you read through a number of the major changes made by this legislation. For example, this bill introduces professional practice standards for principals, superintendents, and certificate-holding central office staff. Now, this has the potential to be a great addition to the School Act. This side of the House is in agreement when it comes to the setting of professional practice standards. We have some of the best teachers, we have some of the best principals and superintendents anywhere in the world, and this portion of the legislation will allow Alberta to prove that. However, we are concerned for how these standards will be developed and what they will look like and who will oversee them, for none of this has yet been decided. This bill pushes that off to regulations.

This bill allows the minister to establish standards for educational service agreements and to allow increased access to education for on-reserve First Nations students. That is a concept that our party wholeheartedly supports. Every student in this province has the right to a high-quality education no matter where they live or what their background is. However, we are not sure what these agreements will actually look like, if there will be federal funding available to school boards, and when these standards will be finalized.

This bill also moves the walk limit into the school transportation regulation. That is also something that we can support as that is probably, in our view, a more appropriate place for the walk limit. However, what will replace the current 2.4-kilometre limit? That has not yet been decided, and we have heard concerns from some of the major stakeholders and school boards that they will not be given enough flexibility to meet their local needs.

This bill introduces a trustee code of conduct. This is also an idea that our party can support. It is my understanding that many boards across this province already have codes of conduct that they have developed and that they are pursuing, but the minister once again took a good idea and shrouded it in regulation and asked us to trust him as he works out the details in private. We don't know what mandatory elements the minister will impose on trustees, we don't know how or when these codes of conduct will be made public, and we don't know how much flexibility local boards will be given when they develop these codes of conduct.

There are also parts of this bill that we believe will need to be addressed through a series of amendments that would help to make this bill better for Albertans. The United Conservative Party will be able to support a standardized age of entry, the creation of educational service agreements with First Nations, and most of the technical amendments and administrative amendments suggested for Bill 28. These are common-sense proposals, and I think everyone in this House can get behind them.

The professional standards of conduct for principals and superintendents and the code of conduct for trustees are, as I previously stated, ideas that we can support. Some of the details we have some issues with, but we will have some amendments to address some of our concerns at a later stage in the debate.

The transportation piece of this legislation is worthy of discussion, but we would caution the minister to ensure that local decision-making on distances and the scope of co-operation between the diverse school jurisdictions in the province be addressed in this debate and that respect for local autonomy of school boards be presented in this debate. Forcing school boards to co-operate is a dangerous precedent as we've heard some very good reasons as to why boards do not currently co-operate, including the most obvious, that some school boards already run all of their buses completely full.

Lastly, we look forward to the debate in this establishment on the establishment of separate school districts. Bringing clarity and balance to the process of establishing or disestablishing Catholic education, especially in light of the antifaith, antichoice paradigm of this government, is a good thing. In light of recent decisions and comments by the Premier and the Minister of Education it will be important that Bill 28 actually bring clarity and reinforce to Albertans that this government believes in choice in education, especially choice based on something as important as faith and the creation of faith-based separate school boards.

We will speak to our desire to ensure that education in Alberta will continue to respect choice in our education system here in this great province, and we would ask the government to support the amendments that we will put forward at a later stage in the debate as we believe that they will help to bring clarity and in turn make Bill 28 a stronger piece of legislation that will benefit Albertans and Alberta students moving into the future.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for . . .

Mr. Hanson: Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

The Acting Speaker: Sorry.

Mr. Hanson: That no longer exists after next week.

Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise to speak to Bill 28, the School Amendment Act, 2017. I want to thank the hon. Minister of Education for bringing forward this bill as there are some very good things in it. Ultimately, though, the legislation simply gives the minister and Alberta Education the platform to work with various stakeholders and professional associations to implement changes over the coming years.

But I'm a little confused, for not too long ago the Assembly passed a bill known as the Education Act. The Education Act was supposed to replace the School Act. The Education Act remains unproclaimed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council, which leads me to wonder why on earth we are here tinkering with the School Act again.

As with any bill from the hon. Minister of Education, the United Conservative Party has to question, with all those actors around the NDP who advocate for one public system and the end to the separate and charter schools: can we trust the Education minister to act in good faith with the powers being requested in Bill 28? The Education minister denies any wrongdoing and malevolence towards separate and charter yet has been caught twisting and construing concerns expressed by these institutions for their curriculum rewrite.

Bill 28 continues a troubling trend of consolidating power by the Minister of Education, and this is one of the biggest issues I have with this bill. A number of changes over the past two and a half years has increased the power of the minister, which in turn decreases the power of local decision-makers. This trend needs to stop. Our school boards are elected by parents to reflect their views, and this needs to be respected.

Let's get into the bill and take a look at what the minister is asking for. Bill 28 will require mandatory notice to the local public school board of the establishment of a separate school district. I can already see the public boards howling in outrage of a competitor for education showing up. They already do.

When the city of Edmonton asked the public board what to do with undeveloped school sites, the board was okay with releasing the sites to the city. When charter and independent schools showed up wanting to buy the undeveloped school sites, the public board very quickly changed its tune about releasing the assets. I'm seeing the same situation up in Lac La Biche right now, where the public school board is dragging their feet when it comes to releasing the Dr. Swift school to the Catholic board and also another school to the francophone school board.

Bill 28 changes the nature of student records and financial records, which need to be kept by private and independent schools. Increased transparency and accountability is a very positive step; however, these changes could be cost prohibitive for small schools with a limited number of financial and staff resources.

There are also going to be professional practice standards that will be implemented for principals and superintendents. This, again, is probably a good idea to mandate a consistent level of training for principals and superintendents. Now there's also going to be a school board trustee code of conduct developed that will mirror the code of conduct found in the Municipal Government Act. In principle and concept this is also a good idea, but the devil will be in the details when the regulations the minister creates come out.

It's very good to see education service agreements with First Nations in order to enable access to provincial schools for on-reserve First Nations children. This plan will ideally increase the graduation rates and educational success of on-reserve First Nations students in Alberta, so I applaud that.

Standardizing the age of entry for kindergarten – children must now be five years old by December 31 in the year they are entering kindergarten – is also a step in this bill.

Now, the fiscal conservative in me likes this provision around busing co-operation. I've already been working toward that end with some of the school boards in my area, trying to consolidate busing where it's practical. Bill 28 gives the minister more power to compel school boards to co-operate with respect to the transportation of students. I don't know about the urban MLAs, but I'm sure that just about every rural MLA hears from people that have three or four buses going through their area, and they don't see the economics in that.

There have been transportation concerns for children in both rural and urban Alberta, and these changes seek to solve some of those issues. Currently there is a 2.4-kilometre walk limit in the School Act, which means that if you live within 2.4 kilometres of your designated school, the school is not responsible to bus your children as it is assumed that they could walk. Bill 28 drops this, but again there is a ministerial power grab here to compel when the minister could simply be the facilitator. It should be up to the individual school board to determine the walk limit before busing begins.

This is how I see Bill 28. I look forward to productive debate and potential amendments.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak to 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise in the House this morning to speak to Bill 28, the School Amendment Act, 2017. While the School Act was last amended in the spring, Bill 28 proposes some of the most substantive changes to the act that we've seen in many years. Some of the changes are long overdue. Some could be problematic.

In particular, this legislation mandates a one-size-fits-all solution for transportation that does little for students enrolled in alternative school programs. Students in traditional learning and French immersion, for example, not to mention their parents, are completely sidelined by the bill, and many will have to continue walking, driving, or taking the bus long distances in order to reach the school of their choice. The government seems to be under the impression that every kid goes to their designated school. While they may see this bill as a case of the needs of the many outweighing the needs of the few, they should recognize the nuances of school transportation in the province. Of the several families that have contacted my office in the last few months, very few would be helped by the bill.

The value of standardizing the age at which students enter kindergarten makes a lot of sense from an administrative perspective, bringing all the school boards in the province into alignment with one another and ensuring students moving from other jurisdictions within the province will be held to the same standard. For example, if a young person in Grande Prairie is eligible to start kindergarten in the fall and their family moves to Calgary, they're still able to start their studies on the same timeline in their new home. Similarly, students who move within their own municipality, join another school district are all held to the same mandatory age of entry.

But what about students who move to Alberta from other provinces, particularly students who have already started kindergarten in their home province? This is not in step with other jurisdictions. For instance, Newfoundland and Labrador's Schools Act allows school boards to admit a kindergarten student who is less than five years of age if they are enrolled in kindergarten in another jurisdiction or will be five years of age before the end of that school year. That's from their Schools Act, 1997. Unfortunately, Bill 28 does not instantiate any mechanism by which the Ministry of Education or any of the province's school boards can use their discretion and allow a student to enrol in kindergarten in Alberta who is eligible to do so in their home province but will not turn five by New Year's Eve.

There are certainly many positive changes proposed in Bill 28. I'd like to particularly commend the government for establishing and strengthening education service agreements with First Nations communities and for putting a mechanism in place to establish a code of conduct for school board trustees. As elected officials, like MPs, MLAs, and municipal council members are, trustees should be held accountable to their constituents and for their actions, especially since their conduct has an enormous effect on our children.

As we are still in the early stages of debate on this legislation, the Alberta Party is not taking a firm stance on Bill 28 at this point. What we will do is ask questions, pay close attention to amendments, and possibly propose some of our own. In the end, we'll see where the bill goes.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak to 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm happy to rise today as a cosponsor of this bill to speak to it at second reading. As many people know, I think, and certainly when people ask me why I decided to run for politics, I got into politics because of education. Education was the primary reason and primary driver for me getting into this because, you know, over my five years in the Calgary board of education I saw the previous government not valuing education to the degree that I thought was necessary and often what I saw as playing politics with education.

I'm a firm believer in equitability in education and equitable access to education. For me it's incredibly important that every kid in every school in every part of Alberta receives the same education as any other kid, that they have the same chance to go to university or that they have the same chance to pursue a trade, that their education prepares them for whatever it is that they want to do in life. It's one of the things I'm proud about Alberta because we actually do a really good job of this. We're not perfect, certainly. There is often a perception in Alberta that your kid will be better off if you go to one school instead of another school in one part of the city instead of another part of the city.

The fact of the matter is that we really do an excellent job in Alberta of educating every kid in every school in every part of the province. It's not perfect, but we're working on getting there. That's one of the reasons that I support this bill, because it really does help to support equitable access to education on a number of fronts here in the province of Alberta. Largely this is an enabling piece of legislation. It enables the minister to do things going forward that will help to solidify and improve our school system in Alberta.

The first thing that several people have spoken about already is that it makes the age of entry standard for kindergarten all across the province, which I think is really important. My son actually entered kindergarten this year. I was a little unsure about putting him in kindergarten this year because he has an October birthday, and I know that some people like to hold their kids back from school, boys especially, if they have a later birthday because there is all sorts of evidence that shows that children who are older in kindergarten have a tendency to do better, especially boys because they learn a little bit differently than girls at that age. They like to run around, and they like to roughhouse. That's not always an environment that is allowed in kindergarten, but that's another thing that we're working on.

Mr. Mason: When will that change?

Ms Luff: Soon, I hope.

It's wonderful to see that, like other members have suggested, the age is the same, so if you move from one place in Alberta to another place, it's easy for you to make sure that your child is entering kindergarten at the same age as others. An important part of this, I think, is that this is an amendment that's being grandfathered in. There are four years, I think, to make this shift, so people who have already planned to put their children in kindergarten, who have planned kindergarten around child care schedules and things like that have time to adjust. You know, if your child is being born now, you know that for sure by the time they're entering kindergarten, they're going to be entering at the same age as everybody else. That helps us support equitable access to education.

The other part that I am really excited about is the strengthening of First Nations education service agreements. Unfortunately, we know that it's a major problem that we have in Canada that First Nation students don't receive the same amount of funding as other students in provinces. It's a fundamental inequity that we have in Canada. We've had it for a long time, and it's something that we really need to work towards fixing because saying that someone is less valuable through the amount of money you provide to them for education when education is one of the most important things that we do and one of the most important things that we can do for the future of our province is just fundamentally unfair and wrong, actually. Hopefully, through the strengthening of First Nation service agreements, what we're going to be able to do is provide more equitable access to all of our First Nations kids in Alberta to make sure that they have the same access to education as other children in Alberta. It's going to help close the achievement gap between First Nations students and other students in the province, which is something that our school boards have been doing a really good job of lately. It will help further with that.

The other thing that helps promote equitability is the professional practice standards for principals and superintendents. All teachers have to follow the teaching quality standards, the TQS. It's something that is drilled into you as you exit teachers' college to make sure that you are upholding a particular standard of professional practice. Up until now this wasn't something that had been necessary for principals or superintendents. Although I know that all principals and superintendents are doing the best they can, what it meant was that you might have a varying quality of principals or superintendents across the province. What this does is work to help standardize that principals have the same quality standard all the way across the province. You can be assured that, again, whatever school your child is in anywhere in Alberta, their principal has to follow the same quality standard as any other principal and that your school board superintendent has to follow the same quality standard as any other superintendent. I think that's really important.

I've heard some concerns about making sure that school boards still have the autonomy to do what they need to do. I absolutely agree that school boards do need to be allowed to have the autonomy to do what they do. In developing these amendments, the ministry has worked very closely with school boards to ensure that school boards are okay with these changes and to make sure that this is something that they're going to be able to deal with and to address.

The school transportation walk limits. Taking that out is actually the result of some consultations that we've had with school boards. Various school boards have said that the 2.4-kilometre walk limit was inappropriate; it didn't work for them. What that does is it allows some flexibility to be able to work with school boards to decide what will work for them. I know that transportation has absolutely been a struggle. It's been a struggle in Calgary for a wide variety of reasons. Hopefully, what this will do is help boards to plan and help them to figure out how they can move forward with transportation.

Another example of how we worked with school boards. I was talking to some folks from the ATA in Calgary last week who asked me why the age of access wasn't extended. That was something that was in the consultations. People were considering extending access to education to the age of 21. What school boards told us in those consultations was that they prefer to be able to offer that option on a case-by-case basis rather than making it the norm. That's, you know, an element of flexibility for school boards that we chose to leave out of this legislation because that was what they told us they wanted.

Overall, this is just enabling legislation that will help to improve equitable access to education in the province. You know, I'm going to be happy to hear from the opposition what amendments they have proposed coming forward. I will leave it at that for right now.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any hon. members wishing to speak to 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thanks, Madam Speaker. Good morning, everyone. I am very happy today to rise and speak about Bill 28, the School Amendment Act, 2017. There is a lot in this bill that I'm extremely happy to throw my support behind. Obviously, there have been positive changes that have been made in standardizing the age of entry for kindergarten, implementing the trustee code of conduct, providing additional support for First Nations children that would like to attend provincial schools, and increasing collaboration and co-operation around school transportation, which, as we know and as other members have spoken about, has been an extremely contentious issue not just in the urban areas but in the rural areas especially.

We elect these boards because they understand the thumbprints of the schools that they are privileged to work for. It's absolutely imperative that they are included in those discussions beyond consultation but actually to understand what is necessary for each of those schools.

I'm also very encouraged to see that Alberta will be leading in Canada as the first province to set professional practice standards for the principals and superintendents. Thank you very much for having that in this bill.

Many of these changes are obviously widely supported by our caucus and seem to be supported by stakeholders across the province as well.

One of the things I'd like to mention is that, as we all know, 50 per cent of the folks that are working in these jobs now are new, so there's a lot of transition that needs to happen between the previous trustees and the new trustees coming in, something that I think we need to consider as we're pushing through legislation. A lot of this transitional information that is going between previous trustees and new trustees hasn't quite been solidified between these folks. I have spoken with some of ours, and that is of some concern with respect to regulations that will be put forward with this bill.

Unfortunately, though, we also see in this legislation a continued pattern of behaviour where the government puts forward legislation that actually doesn't have a whole lot of content and then promises that all of the concerns will be addressed during the regulations phase. I can tell you that from the perspective of the trustees and the school authorities, that is a little bit concerning.

Madam Speaker, we have to consider democracy when we're talking about these things. Obviously, things need to be left up to regulations, but if the meat and bones of the bill are not descriptive enough for the folks that are actually being impacted by this bill, I think we need to relook at the information that's coming forward. We have a crucial job in holding the government accountable and asking tough questions, but it's hard to present and ask questions when a bill is vague and to debate and question them on this and then just to have the legislation rammed through and the real work, the nitty-gritty work, done in regulations. Those regulations have real-world implications for Albertans.

The question, I guess, I'm asking is: how am I supposed to ask the government pointed questions about their plans if the programs that roll out essentially give the Minister of Education the platform to do whatever changes that he may deem necessary? I mean, if you look at what boards are required to do and what their responsibilities are, they know what the communities need, so generally speaking a government will delegate the authority to the boards.

That's why they're elected in the first place. They know what their communities need, they know how to use the resources, they understand the educational practices of the communities they represent, and they keep education in line with today's world. They also evaluate the school board superintendents and understand that they have to work within the annual budgets, and they guide the goals within the district and within the communities. They're also responsible to make decisions regarding the health and safety of their students.

When you have vague legislation like this that gives the minister this level of oversight, we have to understand that – the question, I guess, is that if the minister believes so strongly that people are going to support every aspect of this legislation and that there's no contentious hidden agenda, then why would there not be a comprehensive plan brought forward, Madam Speaker, so that we can actually debate the bill and debate the intentions and this massive oversight and understand how it's going to be regulated so that we understand going forward, going to our communities, what their intention is and what the minister's intention is for the future?

The reason why this is concerning is because this isn't just one bill where this is happening. This has been a continued pattern with this government, where a piece of legislation comes forward, you look at it, and you can widely support it, but it's hiding other legislation under that legislation. So it's incredibly frustrating to me as a legislator, Madam Speaker. I love the practical ideas that are in a piece of legislation like this – and I don't want to vote against legislation – and there are so many fantastic pieces that are in this bill that I'm encouraged, but then there are several other pieces of this legislation that are really, really vague. It's very concerning even though there are pieces that all of us can agree on, that are necessary changes.

But then why does the government insist on putting almost like deal breakers in each one of these pieces of legislation that go against the practicality of the intention of the bill? There are so many significant changes that would be brought on by this bill that are not contained within the bill itself, and that's ludicrous. How are we supposed to debate that? How are we supposed to bring that information to the public, which is actually our responsibility, with the vagueness of the bill? There are actual pieces that I've spoken about, that we've all agreed on in here, that are good, are excellent, but there are chunks that are concerning with regard to this oversight.

Giving a minister, any minister within the government this much power without the decisions having to actually come through this House, Madam Speaker, is very concerning for me, and I think it erodes democracy in our province. Part of the necessity of having a strong opposition and having government is to be able to vet any of those concerns in this place, in this House.

Whether you're on the government side or the opposition side, I think we can all agree that regardless of what ends up happening with the legislation, we all learn a lot about that legislation by being able to go through that process. That's why this is concerning, because the more information that the government can bring forward – I mean, we may not agree on everything, but at the very least the discussion is opened up and the discussion becomes something where we can all understand where everybody is coming from.

But the vagueness that is supplied in this bill at this point in time: I'm not really sure why there are so many pieces that will be left up to regulation, that aren't being brought forward in this Legislature to actually discuss. The concern is if there's a workaround in the process of this legislation because maybe it's just – I don't know – for lack of a better word, Madam Speaker, inconvenient to bring it in here. I don't know. But the question always needs to be: why would the government not bring it forward so that we can actually debate it and speak about it?

Also, again I need to speak about the timing of this bill. I realize that the government did do outreach with stakeholders and all of that, and thank you for that. However, again, with 50 per cent of our trustees being new, the timing of this bill is difficult because a lot of the new trustees would love to be able to put their input in. The trustees that have left may not have had the chance to transpose all of the information coming from previous trustees to new trustees, especially if there is a lot of oversight by this minister to actually take power away from the boards and the trustees. Like, that's why this is really important, to make sure that all eyeballs have had a chance to really look at this legislation before we put it through.

There were also very significant efforts undertaken by previous governments and this current government to consult and inform stakeholders. However, has the government taken into account the fact that our province has had this significant turnover? It's just something, I think, that we need to think about. I'm not sure what the right solution to this is at this time. The bill didn't come forward as a result of timing. That wasn't done on purpose, but I think it's something where there's a sensitivity that needs to be there with respect to actually going forward with how this legislation is going to present itself, especially because so much of the legislation will not actually be debated in this House.

I'm sure that we're going to have many more opportunities to discuss this bill. I would like to thank the government for the significant changes that they have made, that, again, I really appreciate. However, I am concerned. We will be bringing some amendments to it.

Thank you for the opportunity to speak.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I would like to call the committee to order.

Bill 29 An Act to Reduce Cannabis and Alcohol Impaired Driving

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Madam Chair. I do have an . . .

The Deputy Chair: Oh, sorry. I didn't see you, hon. Government House Leader. Go ahead, please.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. Before we begin on the main bill, Madam Chair, I have an amendment to propose.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, if you could just wait until I have the original and the copies, please. Your amendment will be referred to as A1.

Government House Leader, please proceed.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I propose a government amendment to Bill 29, An Act to Reduce Cannabis and Alcohol Impaired Driving, that the bill be amended as follows.

Section 14 is amended in the proposed section 88.11(1) by (a) striking out “the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2017” and substituting “An Act to Reduce Cannabis and Alcohol Impaired Driving,” and by (b) in clauses (a) and (b) striking out “the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2017” and substituting “An Act to Reduce Cannabis and Alcohol Impaired Driving.”

Madam Chair, the naming of the bill came towards the end of the process. The original working title of the bill was the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2017. When the official name was adopted, a drafting error neglected to correct the name in the bill, and this is simply an amendment to make sure that all references in the bill refer to the actual name of the bill as presented to the House. It's as simple as that.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any comments, questions on the amendment?

Seeing none, I will call the question on the amendment.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Deputy Chair: We are now back on the original bill.

The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Madam Chair. I do have an amendment as well if I could present it to you.

The Deputy Chair: Please wait till I have the original and the copies.

Thank you, hon. member. It just needs to be sent to Parliamentary Counsel for approval.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

Mr. Ellis: Are you asking for speakers?

The Deputy Chair: Yes. Are there any other members wishing to speak?

Actually, hon. member, the amendment that was just introduced is out of order at this time. It needs to go back to Parliamentary Counsel.

Do we have any other speakers that would like to speak to the bill as it is right now? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate this very much. You'll forgive me because I thought the amendment was before us. But you did explain that quite nicely, so I'm grateful for that.

First of all, let me say that we recognize over here that the government is in what I would call a bit of an awkward situation inasmuch as they didn't make the decision over there on the other side of the House to legalize cannabis. We certainly will not give them either the credit for it or the blame for it, depending on your viewpoint. We recognize that that was something that was foisted upon them by the federal government, and they are merely trying to do their duty to manage the situation. We're grateful that they are indeed trying to step up and do their duty to manage a situation that's been put upon them by the Trudeau government. Even to some extent we recognize that it was a promise that the Trudeau government made. I guess it's always a little bit difficult to criticize people for keeping their promises, so we'll recognize that, too. [interjections] They're making fun over there, so I'll take the opportunity to point out that the carbon tax was never promised yet delivered.

But we are on the marijuana bill right now. It is truly incumbent upon provinces to take safeguards to protect as much as possible the public in their areas of jurisdiction when the federal government makes new rules. Bill 29, by the now corrected title, deals with impaired driving, and our government needs to take this most seriously. Protection of every member of the public is of utmost importance.

Madam Chair, in 2013 a study found that more than half of the drivers killed in automobile collisions in Canada tested positive for drugs, with 1 in 4 of those people consuming cannabis. Interestingly enough, 1 in 4, not necessarily the same 1 in 4 statistically, also tested positive for alcohol and drugs in that 2013 study. Another statistic out of that study which is, I think, worthy of mention this morning is that nearly half of all the licence suspensions were due to drug impairment.

The Traffic Injury Research Foundation found in 2012 that drugs were detected in 41 per cent of fatally injured drivers in Alberta. While it maybe knew that cannabis is going to be legal here next year, it surely in no way knew that people consuming cannabis have been behind the wheels of their automobiles for some time and, via the statistics that I just mentioned, sometimes with dangerous and even tragic circumstances resulting.

Statistics compiled by the Canadian Centre on Substance Use and Addiction show that cannabis impairs psychomotor skills and judgment. Of course, its effect on driving includes deficits in tracking of objects, reaction time, visual function, concentration, short-term memory, and the ability to respond to multiple sources of information and to react to unexpected events. This, of course, responding to multiple sources of information and reacting to unexpected events, is a fairly constant requirement for anybody driving.

Surely, even on a calm day with low traffic and good weather and on a sunny day with bare, dry roads there are certainly lots of things to keep track of just in terms of vehicle speed, the dials on the dashboard in front of the driver, the objects on the road, the width of the road, lane changes, speed changes, signs on the road. There are multiple sources of information to be kept track of even in the best of circumstances and, of course, indeed when we go from the best to normal but not best circumstances, where there might be heavy traffic, people leaving the lane, coming into the lane, bad weather, change in speed, maybe mistakes by other drivers, perhaps an animal coming onto the road. Under less than ideal circumstances someone unfit to respond appropriately and in a timely way to multiple sources of information would be, obviously, more likely to be at risk of getting into a collision.

Since all of the above are critical to driving and problems occur when unexpected events happen, maintaining people's wits about them is an important aspect of driving, and on this I am fairly certain that there is agreement on all sides of the House. Studies on driving performance show that marijuana use results in an increased likelihood of swerving and difficulty maintaining speed and maintaining a safe distance from other vehicles. Studies also show that an increased risk of collision begins at very low levels of marijuana use and escalates quickly. One recent study concluded that cannabis use doubles the risk of collision for drivers.

The message to drivers I think has to be that we always need to be careful, and of course now the difficulty that I'll acknowledge that the government has is in trying to set up a set of rules during this time in history, when there isn't really a generally accepted way of measuring the amount of cannabis that is in a person's bloodstream or in their body. It doesn't seem to be that there is — although some number is out, I don't believe that there is widespread agreement on what amount of cannabis in the bloodstream will be the equivalent of making the driver impaired.

Again, the government is not at fault for any of this. These are just facts that we're all presented with and that we're all dealing with. It does make it awkward in a situation where (a) you don't have a good way of testing cannabis use and where (b) you don't even have widespread agreement on how much is too much or if indeed any amount is too much. We don't have agreement on that either. I acknowledge that the government is in a difficult situation. Nonetheless, they are trying to wrestle with this issue that's been foisted upon them, and our job is to help, as always.

The government has said that it will launch a public information campaign about marijuana and driving. We on this side think that's a good idea. Really, my opinion, Madam Chair, is that zero tolerance should be an important part of that campaign. Now, the day may come, not unlike with alcohol use, where the science is there and the testing is there and you can say, "This amount of marijuana use will not have you impaired, and it's safe to drive," similar to how in our law today it says, "This amount of alcohol in your bloodstream means that you're not impaired and that you're okay to drive, and once you go over that line, you are impaired and you're breaking the law, and if you go over it further, you're impaired and you are criminally breaking the law."

It would make me happy when we can agree on the science and the testing, where we can get to that point with marijuana, now that it's going to be legal. I don't see any signs that the federal government has dropped any hints, either broad or small, that they're changing their mind. In fact, the signs that I see are that the government is completely committed to doing this and completely committed to doing it on July 1 next year despite the fact that police services across this great country of ours, Canada, have said to the government repeatedly: please don't. At least, they've said: "Please don't yet. We're not ready. We don't have ways to know whether drivers are safe. We don't have ways of testing drivers to know how much marijuana they've used, and we don't even have agreement on how much is too much."

With these really awkward and unfortunate circumstances before them, if marijuana becomes legal before these situations are sorted out, the police services in this country are going to be in a terrible position, and frankly, Madam Chair, the drivers on the road and the pedestrians on the road and the children crossing the road and the seniors crossing the road and people going to their jobs in businesses crossing the road are all going to be at risk when the availability of cannabis will be greater because of the fact that it will be legal and be readily available.

You know, I don't think anybody is going to argue with me on this. The fact is that today it's not legal, but it's surely readily enough available. When you've got half of the people in accidents and deaths having marijuana in their bloodstream, I don't think you can reasonably argue that the illegal status of marijuana has made it any less available. Sadly, it's often said – I don't think it's scientific knowledge; it's probably generally accepted – that if you're looking for marijuana, you can probably find it in the average high school or junior high. That's a sad statement although it's probably a true statement.

I would ask the government about – and I would be interested in hearing their opinion on it – zero tolerance as a standard, at least until such a point where we have good testing, at least until such a point where the police are comfortable, at least till such a point where there is agreed-upon science about at what level of marijuana in the bloodstream we could still have a person unimpaired and a good way of testing it. If you don't know how much makes you impaired and you can't test it, I'm not sure what level the government could possibly make legal.

At this point, even if they did figure out at what point it was legal, with no way to test it, you're leaving the poor police with no way to enforce it and, by extension, the public at risk. I would be interested in having somebody from the government side, perhaps the minister if he sees fit, stand up and address this issue. Frankly, the Transportation minister, as the lead on this thing, is in a terrible position because of the facts that I have talked about here. I don't know how he can make any other decision although if he has something in mind, I would certainly be grateful to hear his thoughts on it. Again, I'll acknowledge that this awkward and terrible position that the minister is in is none of his own making but, rather, has been put upon him by the federal government.

Another thing to think about is that the existing system allows for drivers to obtain a temporary licence and appeal a suspension on some things, and for zero tolerance that could be something that's considered tough but fair.

Madam Chair, if you look at this, the government is in a tough position. The police have said publicly and, I think, responsibly that they're not ready, and it's not for lack of them wanting to be ready. There is an existing device, as I understand it, a saliva test or cheek swab, which can determine the presence of THC in someone's system. The device may be ready for use by July 1, 2018, but there are no guarantees. If it's not, then police are left in a position where they have to seek a blood sample.

Now, the federal government has set levels for cannabis in a driver's blood, but unlike with alcohol, I don't believe that it's generally accepted whether the limits the federal government has set are the right ones and what they actually mean. So there's another problem for the courts. You could end up with a situation where the provincial government allows a certain level of cannabis to be used. I don't know how they could do it, but again my mind is open, and I will be interested in what the government or the minister says.

I don't know how the courts are going to enforce it when there's not a reasonable way, really, of determining that, and I'm not sure that the police are going to be anxious to run everybody down to the police station to take a blood sample every time someone is under suspicion or is found using cannabis while they're driving. I think the only sure way to make sure that the public is safe is to just say: "You know what? Cannabis is legal. If you're an adult and you want to use it and you make that choice, that's up to you, but please don't endanger your fellow citizens." I actually think that's a reasonable thing to ask responsible adults to do.

When we consider all the unknowns, when we consider what the police have agreed is a lack of time for them to prepare and make way for the safe regulation of cannabis on the roads, it certainly makes sense to our caucus to delay the regulation, but we also recognize that for our provincial government that's not their choice. The federal Trudeau government has said that they're not going to delay it, so we acknowledge that our colleagues across the floor have a difficult, almost impossible, and time-limited decision to make. We're going to try to help and give the best advice we can along the way.

Now, Quebec, interestingly enough, has gone the zero tolerance route, as I understand it, with their legislation. They have said publicly that they also believe that the federal government is acting too quickly. My understanding is that they haven't necessarily said that they're against the federal government legalizing it, but they've said that the building blocks to create a safe environment are not in place and that they don't believe they'll be in place by July 1, 2018. That's something I think we should take seriously and consider carefully here in Alberta. Rather than have what could be a dangerous free-for-all on the roads, Quebec has decided to do what I think is a responsible thing and go with zero tolerance, at least at this point. It seems like it's the safest route for everyone.

Madam Chair, I'm not suggesting that it's going to be safe because the roads aren't safe now. Marijuana is illegal for all users, yet with the statistics that I laid out earlier, there is a very high percentage of deaths and accidents and injuries that happen right now with drivers with marijuana in their bloodstream. So to think that any rule that the province puts in place – any rule – is going to completely eliminate that would be unfair to expect. To be clear, the government is not at fault for that because, of course, they have nothing to do with, you know, people driving illegally right now, using an illegal substance right now. Those people are indeed causing death, injuries, and a certain amount of mayhem on the roads.

For all the people that may be watching or listening that have had a loved one injured or killed by someone with marijuana in their blood, I'm sure they're looking at this very, very carefully today and certainly hoping that the government and all of us in this important place do the right thing to keep them safe and their loved ones safe.

The delay is not going to occur, I don't believe, with the federal government, so I believe that it's incumbent upon us to set the highest level of safety on the roads that we can. I believe that's what Albertans at home would want us to do. Here's a quote from the Quebec health minister who is in charge of the marijuana file. It says: the proposed measures aim to limit risk and mischief linked to the abuse of this substance and to fight the trivialization of this product; we will be prudent and restrictive from the start. I would suggest to you, Madam Chair, that that is a responsible attitude for the Quebec minister to have taken. I would suggest to you that that would be a responsible attitude for our Alberta government to take.

We are hopeful that our government here in Alberta takes a responsible, careful tone and spirit on this, similar to what Quebec has done. Again, the day may come when there is science agreeing on what level of cannabis use makes you impaired or not impaired, and we may also some day have a test where you can actually test for when someone has reached that level when they're impaired or not impaired. When that bright and shiny day comes, I think we can have another discussion, but until that bright and shiny day comes, I don't believe there's any safe, reasonable, or responsible position to take other than to say that you can't drive when you're using.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I see that my colleague from Calgary-West has now got his amendment with a legal blessing, but before he introduces that, I do want to respond to some of the comments made by my colleague from Calgary-Hays.

One of the problems that we're struggling with as we move towards the legalization of marijuana in the middle of next year is the perception that impairment by cannabis is less serious than impairment by alcohol. Setting aside for a moment the question of the uncertainty of what the levels are and the variability of the levels of impairment that might be produced in different individuals, I can say that the statistics show that there is considerable mayhem on our roads that is caused by impairment due to cannabis and often cannabis in combination with alcohol, which worsens the impact of both drugs on a person's ability to operate a motor vehicle.

I've certainly been hearing from people on social media and elsewhere that, in fact, they don't believe that impairment by cannabis is really quite as serious. So we'll be taking steps, as the member has indicated, to try and correct that through public communications. It's an important thing to do, I think, and badly needed. I wanted to just set the record straight on that.

The issue of levels and the amount of impairment caused is still not definitive in the research. There's, I think, no question of that. There's debate about that. There seems to be some evidence that impairment levels vary by individual. As the member has pointed out, a good roadside screening device is yet to be perfected although we understand that the federal government believes that one will be in place by the time that their legislation is implemented, so we very much look forward to that.

In any case, the bill provides the opportunity for an immediate roadside appeal of any sanction by a person demanding a blood test, which is then considered definitive one way or the other. If the blood test shows lower than the prescribed limits in the federal legislation and in this legislation, the sanction is dropped. If it shows a higher level than corresponding to the charge, the higher level is then utilized. That is an opportunity for everyone to demand an appeal of any sanction under this particular piece of legislation.

Now, the hon. member has referred to the federal limits – the per se limits is what they call them – of two to five nanograms. Just for the record the proposed federal legislation makes it a criminal offence at two, and at five the sanctions are just higher. In the federal Criminal Code that is being proposed, anyone found with a level of two nanograms per milliliter in their blood is going to be charged with a criminal offence.

The per se limits for alcohol are .05 and .08, and I remember when the previous PC government under Premier Redford introduced the .05 because the Criminal Code is just .08. Administrative sanctions were introduced by the previous PC government for a lower level. I remember and quite enjoyed the fierce opposition of the Wildrose opposition to that legislation. I used to love it when the PCs and the Wildrose would tangle because it reminded me of dinosaurs fighting, you know.

An Hon. Member: Well, dinosaurs and cavemen.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Dinosaurs and cavemen.

Okay. Enough of that. Enough of that.

Mr. Strankman: But you digress.

Mr. Mason: Yeah. I do digress.

What that bill did – and we did support that change – was supplement the Criminal Code with some administrative sanctions because the government believed, and we agreed with them, that it would keep our roads safer. It provided opportunities to provide sanctions that were not criminal in nature, that would not create a criminal record on the part of the offender. We are mirroring that with one important difference in this particular legislation as it relates to cannabis.

Evidence shows that immediate administrative sanctions have a better deterrent effect than a prolonged criminal proceeding. It has a greater effect. It can in many ways lessen the collateral damage to families and so on. So it's a very effective way to keep people off the roads because it has a better deterrent effect, it's quicker, and it does not leave people with criminal records. It's a useful tool, and we're mirroring it here when it comes to cannabis. The difference is that the previous legislation with respect to alcohol provided administrative sanction at a level below that prescribed for a criminal act; in other words, .05 instead of .08. In this case we're using limits that correspond exactly to the Criminal Code; that is, .02 to .05 and higher.

Getting back to my previous point, which is that there is some unsettled science with respect to impairment, I've heard this – and I know some of our members have, and I'm sure members opposite have as well – why did we pick that? Well, it wasn't based on the fact that we had made the determination of what constitutes impairment. The administrative sanctions are meant to supplement and to dovetail with criminal sanctions. That's always been the case, so it's important that we use the same limits as in the Criminal Code. It will in some cases provide a peace officer with an alternative to laying a criminal charge. That is the direction that B.C. has gone in, and it's proven quite effective.

I just wanted to make it perfectly clear that it's critical that our administrative sanctions contained in this act correspond to the levels of impairment set out in the Criminal Code as is proposed by the federal government, and that is why those limits are there. I can't see any other way to go but to make sure that we use the same standards as the federal government does.

I just wanted to put those facts and those points on the record, Madam Chair. I appreciate some of the comments by Calgary-Hays about the difficulty that our government has been placed in by the federal decision. We are working very hard and as quickly as we can to make sure that as marijuana becomes legal in the middle of next year, we've done everything possible to keep our roads safe. That's what this bill is about.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you very much, Madam Chair, and thank you to the Government House Leader for those comments. I do believe that this government is taking this bill seriously and is trying to do what is in the best interests of the people of Alberta, so thank you for those comments.

Madam Chair, I do have the necessary stamped requisite copies for you.

An Hon. Member: Details, details.

Mr. Ellis: Details, details. I know.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member. Your amendment will be referred to as A2.

Mr. Ellis: Great. Thank you very much. I move that Bill 29, An Act to Reduce Cannabis and Alcohol Impaired Driving, be amended by adding the following after section 29.

29.1 By December 2019, and every 5 years after that, a special committee established by the Legislative Assembly must begin a comprehensive review of this Act and must submit to the Legislative Assembly, within one year after beginning the review, a report that includes any amendments recommended by the committee.

I do have the necessary copies for you, Madam Chair, of course.

Madam Chair, really, the only point I want to highlight is that this amendment looks for a review after two years instead of the traditional five years. That is to ensure, of course, that we can address any issues that arise with the legislation of cannabis. I just want to say, really, just to piggyback, actually, on the Government House Leader, that I believe that everybody here is working in the best interests of the people of Alberta, and we're talking about safety. This is really, truly an unknown at this time.

To put this in perspective, this is an industry that is currently, for the most part, owned and operated by organized crime, so there is a paradigm shift in the way that we are thinking. It's a cultural change in regard to cannabis and marijuana, and I think that it is only reasonable that the Legislative Assembly after two years just reflect back with a report to make sure that the legislation being put forward is satisfying the needs of the people of Alberta and, certainly, if there are any recommendations as a result of that after two years, to make sure that that legislation can be improved upon to make things better. Again, I think that this is a very reasonable amendment, and I certainly hope all members of this House support this common-sense motion.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak to amendment A2? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to my colleague from Calgary-West for putting forward this amendment in relation to this legislation, Bill 29. You know, as we have this legalization of marijuana thrust upon us from the federal government, there are many different aspects that this government is responsible for in terms of public safety in our province and certainly on our roads. So here we are today amending legislation to update these changes.

The amendment put forward by my hon. colleague created quite a discussion – and I'm sure everyone in this Legislature has had this discussion – around, you know, how the safety on our roads is extremely critical. Everyone here drives quite a bit. We're on the roads all the time. We see all sorts of different drivers, and a lot of them aren't great. It's even more concerning to think that some of them might be impaired regardless of age. We certainly know that there's maturity to one's driving ability when it comes to age and length of time they've been driving. Certainly, actuaries calculate this with insurance rates, those types of things, so we know that age matters and that maturity of the driver certainly matters. It's important that we recognize that in all types of impaired driving.

Now, it's interesting that Bill 29 is actually very much so putting alcohol and cannabis into the same level of impairment area. I suppose that's okay a little bit, but I think it's not the same. We know that cannabis is not the same. We know that its effects are not the same. It's not calculated the same. We don't have all of the information, to be fair. That's no fault of this government by any means. I think it would have been great to have more time from the federal government to sort some of this stuff out, you know, when the technology actually catches up with where we need it to be to have cannabis fully legalized and integrated into our society.

I suppose they had the same problems with alcohol many, many years ago, when drinking and driving was not frowned upon or looked at in any way. It just wasn't a thing. Then people just started dying all over the place from getting into crashes and that type of thing. So the laws have since evolved from there. As with Bill 26, I believe that Bill 29 will be amended and updated as the technology catches up and the training catches up.

I have many concerns around the training of our police officers when it comes to road safety and simply just the vast amount of training and knowledge that our officers need to have in recognizing cannabis impairment in our drivers. I know we've heard from these organizations, police organizations across this province, and they're very, very concerned about the lack of resources and training and information and all of that stuff that will come around this. I mean, it is what it is, and, you know, we're just going to have to do the best job that we possibly can making sure that they have all the resources and tools that they need to ensure the safety of our citizens and, more specifically in relation to Bill 29, the safety of our citizens on our roads.

In saying that, where marijuana and alcohol are not the same type of impairment, it's hard to put them into the same type of category. I would honestly like to see zero tolerance straight across the board with no age limit. We don't know what this impairment on the roads does. You know, you can have one or two beers and get into a car, and you're not impaired in any way, shape, or form. You're able to operate that vehicle, no problem. It's a small amount, a very small amount. I suspect some can have more than others, which is obviously a factor. But with marijuana, like, how much marijuana makes you impaired? Some of that will come up the ranks. I think we'll have more information on that by the time this is actually implemented or the legalization comes into effect. But, I mean, is it one puff on a joint and you're impaired? Probably for many people.

I think that right off the get-go there are going to be lots of people who have never indulged in the cannabis products, and they're going to be trying this for the first time. There might not be that level of education there where they know that, you know, they can have a smoke and go for a drive or whatever this might be. I mentioned the other day in the Bill 26 debate that I think we should go really tough off the get-go and then ease back from there as we get more information and try things out and that type of thing. But under 21 zero tolerance is certainly a good step. I like that this is in line with the GDL program in our province. MADD Canada certainly sort of likes that correlation. I know that they would like to see it under 22, zero tolerance across Canada. This is a little bit more in line with the laws that already exist here in our province. In saying that, the GDL does take into account the age and experience of the driver and how they might react to using cannabis as a product.

However, I mean, there are a lot of people that will get a driver's licence in their 20s and 30s, and they're going to adhere to the GDL, but they're not necessarily good drivers after that period is up. So there's lots to think about there. I really hope that there's going to be an education component to this and that, you know, there's a lot of information out of there and a lot of training for the people who are handling and distributing these products and that type of thing.

I think it's really important that this legislation comes back for review, mandatory review, not just, you know, old laws kind of on the books and that type of thing. It's important that we thoroughly go through this legislation and figure out what works and what doesn't, as with anything, right? We've all been through elections, certainly, of our own, and one of the important things that happens after an election is that we sit down and we go: what went wrong, what went well, and what do we do next time? That's just a very small example and not as serious as impaired driving legislation in this province.

But it's very important that we really do take a thorough look at this because our kids are on these roads, right? Our parents are on these roads. Our loved ones, our friends, family everywhere need to know that we are doing the best job that we can to keep everybody safe, and for us to be able to bring this to a special committee to undergo review of the legislation and make sure it's the best that it possibly can be – I think that there should be more regular updates on this, as I'm sure any responsible government would do, reacting to the inner and outer workings of the realities in the province. You know, if there are lots of reports of impaired driving incidents in the province, I would certainly hope that the government would take immediate action and make those changes where they see fit. However, I think it's really good with any legislation, to be honest, to have a sunset clause where we are forced to review legislation.

I know the city of Airdrie still has a law on the books that says that you can't tie your horse up in front of city hall. There's maybe no need to really get rid of that law. There's also one that says that you can't store your dynamite underneath the stairs. I would suspect that that probably needs a bit of updating, and maybe we shouldn't be storing dynamite in our homes at all. I would suspect that that's a great example of where to update our legislation and review it.

First and foremost, I think that everyone in this Legislature can certainly agree that safety on our roads is absolutely paramount, and whichever is the government when this review comes up, I'm sure that they'll be responsible in the undertaking of this review. But that certainly doesn't take away from the fact that if issues arrive in the meantime, there will be a swift call to action to make the necessary changes that need to be done to ensure that our friends and family members that are travelling on the roadways or anywhere near them are safe and secure.

This province used to have a very good reputation for checkstops. I know that we're going to have the very few highly trained police officers when it comes to impairment detection in these checkstops placed across the province, and that's going to be great, and I certainly hope that they'll have support from the government. I am fairly certain that they will, absolutely, and we the opposition will fully support checkstops in this province. I just really hope that we can get the training across to the officers that we need, if we can afford to do it. As well, it's a bit of a challenge. I know that it's costly to put these officers through that type of training, but it's very necessary to make sure that we have the proper procedures in place to detect impaired driving or impairment in general.

That education component: I can't stress this enough. As I said yesterday, MADD Canada has put out some advertising about impaired driving, and they're really pushing across that zero tolerance component, which is great. Maybe that's the way we go. We know that Quebec has done zero tolerance for driving impairment, and I think it's a great way forward. I mean, again, you can go too hard coming out of the gate and be safe, be on the safe side, and then make changes as necessary as you move forward.

I think that we have, you know, a very responsible population here in Alberta, but there are always those that don't necessarily think before they do things. I had a friend who died in a drinking and driving accident, and he was the one that was drinking. I said to his widow, "This is unfortunate, this is tragic, and I'm so sorry, but you know that there are a lot of people that are going to learn from this in the future." She looked at me and said: "They're never going to learn because they're drunk when they're doing it. This is when they're making these decisions."

What I'm trying to say is that we're still going to always have those people that make really dumb decisions because they are impaired, but if we can get that education piece in front of it – and I know that for my generation it was ingrained in us, certainly, by my parents: "If you ever need a ride, you just call us, right? Think ahead so that you're not tempted to take your car home if you're impaired," that type of thing. We really need to get that message out. We need to do it in our schools. The re-enactments that Crime Stoppers and MADD Canada do in partnership with our emergency workers in the community – EMS and the RCMP – are imperative and really important in that education component when it comes to our youth, who are sometimes not necessarily stuck in their ways.

I really hope to see that piece come forward, because this is something new. This isn't alcohol. This is marijuana. This is very, very different, and I hope that we can all recognize that. It'll be important in this conversation, right? This is a controlled substance, but this isn't like tobacco. There are some of the same dangers in it. This is a controlled substance, but it's not like alcohol. There are a lot of similarities, but they're not the same, right? They're sort of pieces of all, and you can see in the legislation that's been brought forward bits and pieces of all of that type of thinking. As this thing evolves, this sort of hybrid, regulated product that's being decriminalized, legalized in our society will need to be treated as such, the hybrid product that it is from the controlled substances that we currently have in this province.

All in all, I feel like there's a willingness to work together, but I certainly hope that I have been able to stress enough the importance of reviewing this piece of legislation in particular. I think it's important. I think that it's probably not easy to disagree with. We can work together in special committees, and this is a nonpartisan issue. There's not a single person in here that doesn't agree that we should do everything we possibly can to keep our citizens safe, our residents in Airdrie, and those travelling and visiting here, whoever it is on the roads. We all have a personal vested interest, and we certainly have a duty, as representatives of the people that elected us to be here, to ensure their safety. They expect us to do that, and I think that they would expect us to make sure that we're properly reviewing legislation.

At the end of the day, it doesn't cause harm to put a sunset clause in this legislation to review it and to really sit down, bring in experts, anyone that we may need to give us the feedback and the knowledge to tweak where there are problems. I think we can all see the advantage of doing that, really, with any legislation but certainly, in particular, with our driving impairment legislation. I'd like to see that.

I mean, we've seen it. The minister had a great example of when the government changed the limit from .08 to .05, right? It was not an automatic review, but it was an example of revisiting the legislation and making changes where the government of the day felt that it would benefit the residents in our province, the citizens in our province. That's really great to see, but, you know, it would be nice to see nonpartisan committee work. This is a great piece of legislation that would work really well in an all-party, nonpartisan committee, where we can bring in the experts and the people that know how and where and what to tweak.

I mean, this is something so new and so kind of crazy, a little bit. I still can't believe we're legalizing marijuana, but it's here, and it's on us. It's our responsibility to do the best job we possibly can in ensuring that this legislation is right for the people of Alberta. I know that every single person in here would certainly agree with that.

With that, I humbly ask that you support this amendment as it is important that we be responsible and that we put this in there. Let's bring this back for review.

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair, and I want to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-West for his amendment. I believe that it is a well-intended amendment. Certainly, it's very important that the legislation is reviewed, and it will be reviewed in about a five-year time frame.

One of the things that I've talked about with my department rather extensively and with the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General with respect to this legislation is the fact that not all the data that we need is currently available. We're going into some uncharted territory with this legislation. There's no question about that. I freely admit that that is the case, and quite frankly it's just unavoidable. As we go forward, we will gather more data, and it will inform our review of this particular piece of legislation. That has to be an ongoing process, and it has to be conducted by government, by law enforcement agencies, by organizations that represent I guess what used to be called the motoring public, and so on. A lot of information will be garnered as we go forward that will help us evaluate the bill and make changes as required, and that process needs to take place.

However, we don't know for sure when the information will be available, so it has to be an ongoing process. This is not an ongoing process. It's an every-five-years kind of a process and done strictly at a committee level by the Legislative Assembly. That's not normally how we develop and evaluate legislation, Mr. Chair. But I want to assure all members that this will be an important priority for the Transportation department, for the government as a whole, and, I'm certain, for law enforcement agencies.

There will be ongoing review of this legislation; I want to assure the House of that. I also want to undertake that when we have sufficient data, which may not be according to the schedule set out in the amendment – and that's, I think, a key point – it will be shared with members of the House. If there are additional changes and amendments to this legislation to be brought forward, that will be done, and it will be scrutinized here in the House. We will be gathering the input of our partners in keeping our highways safe.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

With respect, I do appreciate very much the intent of the amendment, but it is not how we propose to proceed with the ongoing review of this legislation, so I would urge hon. members to defeat this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I'm pleased that Drumheller-Stettler gets a chance to be recognized. Due to some miscommunication on my part when you mentioned Airdrie, I thought maybe you were just describing the diverse constituency of Drumheller-Stettler incorrectly.

It's a pleasure to talk to Bill 29, An Act to Reduce Cannabis and Alcohol Impaired Driving. I rise, respectfully, as one of the members of the former Wildrose caucus and perceived in some circles to be of a generation previous to what we have here, in some circles referred to as dinosaurs, which is not necessarily the case but stronger, different versions of a conservative sort of government.

I'm wanting to support my colleague's amendment here, which talks about: "By December 2019, and every 5 years after that, a special committee established by the Legislative Assembly [would] begin a comprehensive review of this Act." Simply to build on what the Government House Leader has said, we are going into in many ways uncharted territory in the establishment of this legislation in regard to this new ground that we're reaching, not to approve or deny the acceptance of the medicine or the product that's being regulated in this case but to approach it in the spirit of a regulatory review and/or therefore a potential reduction of it.

I looked at a piece of legislation that was handed to us yesterday, described as Bill 30, and respectfully, with the greatest respect, it's 150 pages of legislation. But the last page, Madam Chair, of the legislation talks about a review of the act. With that depth of going into this situation, I can read from it: "shall, on or before February 1, 2021 and at least once every 5 years thereafter." Now, this is a proposal by the government to effect a review. This is quite onerous legislation, so I fully understand and I believe that it's appropriate that this legislation would be reviewed. I think it's only due diligence that we do this sort of thing.

My friend and colleague from Airdrie talked about – and I was pleased that she talked about it – an old act in the town of Airdrie that would take away or add or have legislation that you can or cannot have a facility where you may or may not want to tie up your horses in front of a place of business or appropriately or inappropriately store your dynamite. In a modern world these things are not necessarily needed.

There needs to be a process where this type of legislation can be brought to a review by the people as it goes forward. I think that it's important that we have this process. The government has presented that, in fairness, for one of the most onerous pieces of legislation that we've seen in this session, Bill 30. We're already at 30 pieces of legislation. Should we be at three, or should we be at 50? I don't know. But this is what the government is bringing forward. I think that on the technical side of things it's a self-cleansing way of re-establishing, reapproaching these bills in a committee of this Legislature, not unlike what we do for budgets and estimates, where the opposition gets a chance to question the government on their approaches to budgeting, et cetera. It's an annual occurrence that takes place. I think it's important that we as government in respect of taxpayers' dollars have a legitimate process, that we can review the activities that go on in here in an open, public, and transparent way. The recent government legislation talks about that.

I think that the amendment before us is simply a reiteration of a process that the government has already initiated. I'm in favour of the government's model, and I'm in favour of the amendment to continue on with the government model.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to speak on the amendment. I'm sincerely hoping that the Transportation minister reconsiders his opposition to it. The amendment actually makes sense, particularly in the context of what the minister said.

The minister did say that the government has promised that there will be a device to measure cannabis content by July 1 of next year. I don't know whether that's true or not. I'm sure that when he said it, he meant it. I'm sure he believed it, and it may actually be true. [interjection] No. I appreciate that. I'm not questioning the minister's integrity at all here. I'm just saying that he was told that, and I believe that he's telling us what he believes to be true.

But just the fact that he hasn't got it yet – and considering the fact that even if indeed it does come, we're so new in the legalization of cannabis situation here, there are bound to be more and more improvements on ways to measure the amount of cannabis. There's bound to be more and more science available on determining what level of cannabis is in the bloodstream or some other method of testing. Who knows? They might find something that tells the level of cannabis in your hair follicle. I'm just making that up. My point is that there are people working in laboratories all over the place now looking for ways to measure the amount of cannabis in a human body in order to, by further extension, determine what level actually is impairment and which one isn't.

This is all so new. It seems to me that the most responsible thing we can do is to commit to reviewing the legislation at an early date. In this particular case, it doesn't even cast any aspersions on what the government is doing here. It just seems like the responsible thing to do. There is so much – and the minister agreed – in flux here. He also agreed with me that what the federal government has set as a standard, between two and five nanolitres or something – it's between two and five.

Mr. Mason: Nanograms.

Mr. McIver: Nanograms. Thank you, Minister. I appreciate it.

Perhaps the minister has more experience with cannabis than I do because he seems quite specific about what's high and what isn't or what level is a lot and what isn't, but I'll just take his word for that.

Mrs. Littlewood: At least somebody knows what's going on here.

Mr. McIver: Well, we've got somebody from Fort Saskatchewan that seems an expert on cannabis, too. I hope that she'll get on her feet and enlighten us more.

Mr. Mason: Point of order, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: A point of order has been called.

Point of Order

Allegations against a Member

Mr. Mason: I like a little jocularly in the House as much or more than anyone, but the hon. member seems to be casting aspersions on the personal lives of members, which I think crosses a bit of a line.

11:50

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. I had the floor, and members were volunteering information across the floor, including the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, that just said: at least somebody around here knows what they're talking about.

Mrs. Littlewood: Sorry. Point of order.

Mr. McIver: No. That's what she said while I had the floor. So if she doesn't want it talked about, then perhaps she should leave the person with the floor to discuss the issue at hand rather than say something that she doesn't want reported back. And I think that's a good warning for all of us in this House because all of us at times say things across the floor.

So with all due respect to the Government House Leader, let's get back . . .

Mr. Mason: Let's get back to the matter.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. With your co-operation, Government House Leader and those on that side, I'd be very happy to get back to the topic at hand, which I will now do.

Debate Continued

Mr. McIver: I think the hon. Transportation minister did say that even the federal government standards, that they've set as a level to determine what is impaired and what is not – and I agree with him, just for the record. My understanding is that that's not fully and generally accepted. It's a standard they set. I'm sure that it's based on some research, but there are certainly a lot of people that may not agree with that. My understanding is that it's not generally accepted as the right number. I'm sure the federal government is doing the best they can, too, with the science, such as it is, and probably using a number that they believe is the best available today. My point with this amendment is that since the science is still unfolding, since the technology for measuring impairment due to cannabis use is unfolding, I think it might even be seen as a little bit irresponsible.

But I will say that it definitely would be seen as responsible to review the legislation at an earlier stage rather than a later stage, knowing how much is unfolding right now, because that will give us an opportunity to look at it and make adjustments. We may pick a different level for impairment. There may be a different piece of technology to approve rather than the cheek swabs and the blood test and so many other things. In this area of newness, uncertainty, and constant research going on right now, it makes the amendment extremely responsible, and I would hope that the government would reconsider their position on that.

Again, it's not even to slag or knock their legislation; it's just a recognition of an area with a lot of moving parts here for all of us. It would be good for all of us in the House to be able to review it at an earlier rather than later stage in order to make sure that we can adjust something that I think is probably a pretty good piece of legislation under these tough circumstances with more information. There's almost for sure going to be a way to make it even that much better, not because the government has necessarily made a mistake right now but, rather, because more information will become available that is in no way available to the government now. For that reason, I would hope that they will support the amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2? The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: I would like to speak on this amendment, please. Thank you so much. Madam Chair, I'm here to amaze and dazzle you with my experiences in emergency services over the last 20 years in regard to this bill here. This is a good bill, and this is a fair amendment. I guess what I'm trying to say is that there's a lot of diversity, and people are going to take these things that inebriate them in different ways. Some people are just wired differently. Some of these things, these narcotics and other things, might not even affect them, but we have other people who are at the far end of the spectrum that are very susceptible to the influences of these supplements, if you will.

With this bill, the act to reduce cannabis and alcohol impaired . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member.

Mr. Yao: Yes.

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt, but pursuant to Standing Order 4(3) we shall now rise and report progress.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 29. I wish to table copies of all the amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur with the report? All those in favour, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Acting Speaker: Those opposed, please say no. So ordered.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I move that the committee rise and report progress. [interjections] Did you just do that? Well, then let's go for lunch. I move that we adjourn until 1:30 this afternoon.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Government House Leader, you are now calling it 12 o'clock, and you would like to adjourn until 1:30 this afternoon?

Mr. Mason: Yes. That's what I said.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 11:57 a.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, November 28, 2017

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of very bright young students from Beacon Heights school in my constituency of Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. They are accompanied today by their teacher, Meryl Roberts, along with one of their chaperones Emily Robertson. I must say that I had an opportunity during Read In Week to go and talk to this class. I speak to Ms Roberts' class every year, and I can tell you that she's got a very bright young group of students this year that are very interested in learning all about our democratic system. So they've spent the day here at the Legislature and are looking forward to question period. I'd ask them to rise and please receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my distinct pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly what I argue are the most beautiful and some of the smartest students in the entire province, 35 students from Dr. Lila Fahlman school seated in the public gallery today. They are accompanied by their teachers, Scott Slatter and Sean Falkner, today. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly 10 staff from the Ministry of Culture and Tourism. Every day I witness the passion and commitment that our Culture and Tourism team has, members of the Alberta public service delivering programs and services that contribute to making our province such a great place to live, visit, and invest in. This afternoon I'm proud to welcome them to observe first-hand the work that we do in the Legislative Assembly. C'est après-midi je suis fier de les accueillir pour observer le travail que nous faisons ici. I'd ask them to rise as I call their names: Lucie Beauchamp, Catherine Braun-Rodriguez, Karin Buchanan, Nathan Cross, Lisa Gauthier, Brandon Nadeau, Alexis Nelson, Heather Northcott, Christina Harbak, Jessica Yu, and Mary Gilev. I'd ask my colleagues to give them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other school groups for introduction today?

Seeing and hearing none, Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Great honour for me today to rise and introduce to you and through you to the House a constituent, an active environmental protector with the Alberta Wilderness Association, Carolyn Campbell, here on behalf of the Wilderness Association and the Canadian Parks and Wilderness Society. AWA's work will be familiar to many of us in the Assembly, the oldest wilderness conservation group in Alberta, seeking a network of representative protected areas throughout the province for caribou. Founded in 1965, AWA has a proven history of raising awareness and achieving conservation actions for wildlands, wild waters, and wildlife. Carolyn is a conservation specialist with AWA, and in her 10-year tenure she has taken the lead on caribou conservation and continues to work tirelessly with her colleagues throughout Alberta and across the nation to see habitat protected, just as the caribou need to be. She has now risen, and I'd ask that we give her the warm welcome of the Assembly.

I have a couple of more introductions, Mr. Speaker. Sorry; I'm just not quite finished. Today we are tabling a petition and over 300 postcards highlighting the threats to caribou in northern Alberta. Among those signatories is Robert Bateman, the famous painter from the west coast. I'm afraid I've left the other names back in my office, but I'll submit those to Hansard for the record.

Thank you.

The Speaker: There's another time in the agenda when you could table that document.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all the members of the Assembly four Calgary-Bow residents: Marnie and Richard Deschenes and their sons Hudson and Nathan. Recently I met with the Deschenes to discuss their experience of pediatric autoimmune neuropsychiatric disorders, also known as PANDAS and PANS. I will speak more of PANDAS and PANS later today with the intent to bring increased awareness and education on this serious and devastating disorder. I'd ask my guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my sincere pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly an organization representing very skilled and fine entrepreneurs in Alberta, in fact, I think the most skilled and finest entrepreneurs in the whole province. Mr. Brad Mitchell, CEO designate of the Alberta Real Estate Association, and approximately 47 additional members of AREA are attending their annual Government Liaison Days conference. AREA provides a wide range of advocacy, professional development, and member services, which benefit both professionals in the industry and the clients they serve. I thank my guests for their great work and service to Albertans. I'd ask them now to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. I rise with two sets of introductions today. The first is Art and Sandra Heinrichs. Actually, I'll ask them to stand. First, I will thank them through you, Mr. Speaker. They are the parents of Brianna, my long-time legislative assistant, who is one of the hardest working people that I know. They are also, interestingly enough, constituents of Calgary-Lougheed, and I will say that I was happy to see a picture the other day where they do have a Mr. Kenney lawn sign on their lawn, which is excellent. This is their first time at the Legislature, and I would ask that they receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The second introduction, Mr. Speaker, is two fellows that I am very close to and always happy to see here. One is no stranger to this House. He's been here before and has friends in all parties, and that is my dad, Pat Nixon, who's by for another visit, and I'd ask if he'd stand up. With him today is my little brother Shane. As I've told you before, I have five brothers, and if you think it's hard keeping control of me, you can imagine what it's like keeping control of six of us. Shane is back from gallivanting all over the world. Recently I think he's been to about 38 countries. I know this because he's been gone a long time and he leaves his dog at my house. But I'm happy to see him here at the Legislature for the very first time. I would ask that they both receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome. I appreciate that you had your hands full. The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of this House three Calgary-West constituents who are working hard on behalf of their community. Elio Cozzi, Suzette Pereira, and Fiona Christiansen are all members of the Springbank Hill Community Association. They are here today to learn more about plans for the southwest ring road as it pertains to their community. I'd ask my guests to please rise – they are sitting in the public gallery – and I'd ask them to receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you Amber Ruddy, who is the director of provincial affairs for the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. Based out of Calgary, Amber has been an advocate on behalf of members in Alberta, working with governments on files like finance, labour, and – you guessed it – red tape. Amber and I had a great meeting today, discussing the challenges facing small business and the ways that we can respond as a government in terms of her advocacy work. It is my hope that all of our colleagues in the Legislature can mark the third week of January on their calendars as Red Tape Awareness Week. If I could ask Amber to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of introductions. It is my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House a number of citizens who work very hard advocating for seniors in Alberta. I'm pleased to introduce Roy Avery, Julie Ali, Ed Lonsdale, Irene Simpson, Jack Masson, Kerry Modin, and Ruth Adria. They're all right there. I was going to ask you to stand, please, and if I could have all the members give them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Athabasca – I'm sorry.

Mr. Gill: No problem. Thank you, sir. Once again it's my honour to rise and introduce my dear friend Sanjit Singh, who is a past president of the Appraisal Institute of Canada, Alberta chapter. We went to school together. He's attending the Alberta Real Estate Association MLA meet-and-greet today, and unfortunately he lives in Calgary-Foothills. I'd ask him to rise. On behalf of my colleague from Calgary-Foothills and I we welcome you, and I'd ask all the members to give him the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: All right. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly George Ellen, Dennis Schmidt, and Seth Gulevich. George and Dennis are the president and vice-president of my riding association as well as my good friends, and I appreciate all the hard work that they do for us in Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater. Seth has a keen interest in politics, and I'm very glad that his grandfather George was able to bring him to the Legislature so he can see what we all do here. I would ask that they now rise – I see that they are seated in the gallery – and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two people who are visiting us today. The first is Bill Moore-Kilgannon, who has been my chief of staff in Advanced Education for the last 11 months. He is visited by his son Neil Moore-Kilgannon, who is turning 25 today. And to celebrate his birthday, he decided to leave the drab and dreary city of Vancouver, a city which I would note is an excellent place to build a pipeline, and come and spend his 25th birthday visiting us here today. I would ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today on your behalf to introduce to all members of the Assembly members from the Medicine Hat Real Estate Board: Garry Ruff, past president and current director; Jeff Lanigan, political action representative; Randeem Bray, executive officer; and Jennifer McKenzie, the AREA director for Medicine Hat. The Medicine Hat Real Estate Board was chartered in 1955 and serves 140 realtors in 11 brokerages. They are members of the Alberta Real Estate Association and the Canadian Real Estate Association. Medicine Hat is Canada's sunniest city, and its realtors offer their services with an equally bright disposition. They are seated in your gallery, and I'd ask that they now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome. Thanks for coming.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I had a guest who was already introduced by the Member for Calgary-Greenway, but he thinks he's fortunate to live in the beautiful, fantastic, outstanding riding of Calgary-Foothills. His wife, Jimmi Singh, is also running a retail business. They have three beautiful sons, and they call Calgary-Foothills home. I'd ask everyone to give them a warm welcome.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce Les Landry. Many of you have introduced him and have seen him here. He is an advocate for human rights, special needs, PTSD, and service dogs. Can we please give him the warm welcome of the House?

The Speaker: Any more introductions, hon. members? The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly advocates with Muscular Dystrophy Canada seated in the members' gallery. We're truly fortunate to have organizations like Muscular Dystrophy Canada. Our government was proud to declare September as muscular dystrophy month in Alberta. Their advocacy and fundraising efforts are vital to improving the lives of individuals and families living with this condition. I'd ask that Fraser Hall, services specialist in Alberta, along with Cedric Way, Adeline Way, Meagan Klatt, Tami Klatt, Nathan Dyjur, Shanon Brausen, Louann Perry, Heather Forsyth, and Pyper Whitecotton rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Support for Small Business

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Small businesses in Alberta make local communities across our province hum. They fuel local economies and are the lifeblood of rural Alberta.

In my constituency are cafés like Kinny's Sweet Retreat, which serves eggnog lattes and turkey brie sandwiches in a warm, inviting space in downtown Fort Saskatchewan; pubs like Two Sergeants Brewing, which continues to expand their business reach with new access to local farmers' markets made possible by recent government regulation changes; Vegreville's local country music radio station, 106.5, which connects the region to the latest news, community events, and the trading post; local value-added food like Stawnichy's meat in Mundare, which sells back bacon and pepperoni out of their storefront and distributes their world-renowned Ukrainian sausage to grocery retailers across Alberta.

Ventures like these, created by passionate people willing to take on the risk of making a living for themselves, make up 95.5 per cent of all businesses in Alberta and 35 per cent of our GDP. This is why it is crucial for our government to support them by doing things that matter like reducing the small-business tax by one-third, to 2 per cent, providing $1.5 billion in small-business loans to Alberta Treasury Branches, creating Alberta's export expansion package, and continuing to scrutinize each and every regulation to determine if it is easy for businesses to understand and if it is still relevant in a quickly changing world.

Mr. Speaker, small business provides hundreds of thousands of jobs to working families, and they inject $100 billion a year into our hometowns and communities. They are our coaches, our volunteers, our neighbours, and they are the engine of Alberta's economy.

Merry Christmas, Mr. Speaker, and remember that Santa shops local.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin.

Fort McMurray Wildfire Recovery

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was just over a year and a half ago that I got a call from my nephew Phil Jean that my home and the homes of many Fort McMurray residents were on fire. It was an event that would become the most expensive natural disaster in the history of Canada and would devastate my hometown, claiming my home and the homes and businesses of 2,400 other families. It forced the evacuation of 80,000 people, and the cleanup and rebuild is estimated to be in the range of $5.4 billion. The temporary shutdown of the oil sands alone due to the wildfire impact led to a $1.4 billion loss to our oil industry here in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, the fire has not just taken an economic impact but has also taken an enormous personal toll on the residents of Fort McMurray. As of this month AHS has received over 36,000 requests for help with addictions and mental health since the wildfire, and in-patient beds for people at risk of harming themselves are always full. That is up dramatically from previous years, where they fielded approximately 1,000 calls per year. The effect of this fire will go on for decades, if not generations.

The Speaker: Take your time, hon. member.

Mr. Jean: Policy decisions by the people in this place are important and have a dramatic impact on people's lives.

While the damage done to Fort McMurray is undeniable, our community has also persevered with grace, courage, and compassion. Homes are springing up in areas all around Fort McMurray that were reduced to ash. Not-for-profit groups are actively working to rebuild the homes of the under- or uninsured. School enrolment in both the public and Catholic school boards is back to prefire levels. Business engagement is growing through the chamber of commerce, and unemployment, which is a serious concern, is falling.

Mr. Speaker, I am very proud of the people of Fort McMurray. While we may have been knocked down, we are not knocked out, and we are well on our way to being back in fighting form.

Thank you. [Standing ovation]

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Tax Policies and Provincial Revenue

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, the latest numbers from this government yet again show the foolish assumptions of the NDP's plan. The NDP insists on raising taxes, supposedly to raise more revenue. The results? They bring in far less than anticipated: $330 million less in personal income taxes, $43 million less in corporate taxes. It's clear what happened. The NDP brought in ideological tax hikes and drove away economic activity. The question to the Premier is this: will the NDP admit that their ideological tax increases were wrong and that they've actually damaged the province of Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms. Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That is certainly a very creative interpretation of the numbers that were released today by the Minister of Finance. In fact, we know revenues are down because the price of oil dropped from over $100 a barrel to below $30 a barrel, and over 100,000 Albertans lost their jobs. We know that Alberta families are suffering and were suffering, and that's why our government made a choice to stand with them. Our government made a choice to invest in Alberta, to stimulate economic activity, to support job growth. The other thing in the report that the member opposite quotes from today is that it's working. Our growth is up by 4 per cent and . . .

Mr. Nixon: In the middle of a recession the NDP hiked taxes on job creators by 20 per cent. They keep wanting to hide from their tax hikes. It's ridiculous, Mr. Speaker. They hiked taxes on income, they hiked taxes on property, and of course they brought in the largest tax increase in Alberta's history, the job-killing carbon tax, which they hid from Albertans and did not campaign on. Yet revenues from taxes are consistently lower than planned for. The question is simple. Will this government, will this Premier admit that they made a mistake, they're actually damaging the province, they're damaging our economic growth, and they're causing problems for the people of Alberta?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, what I will admit is that growth is up, jobs are up, manufacturing is up, retail sales are up, small-business confidence is up. The last thing on the planet that I would do is take advice from the members opposite so that we could see the kind of negative outcomes that we see just one province to the east of us. We made a decision to support Albertans and to support Alberta and to support Alberta businesses, and I am proud to say that it is starting to work.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, a minute ago the Premier said that business was down. Now she says that business is up. I'm confused.

The NDP are now hilariously claiming that the deficit is shrinking. And how is it supposedly shrinking? Let's be clear, Mr. Speaker. The NDP is taking a quarter billion dollars from the risk adjustment fund. It's a shell game. Will the NDP and this Premier admit that the deficit would have actually modestly increased if not for using the risk adjustment fund, or will they continue to deceive Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, in our budget the Minister of Finance projected that we would deliver a $10.3 billion deficit this year as a result of our government making a choice to invest in jobs, to invest in important public services, and to invest in making life more affordable for regular Alberta families. That plan is working. Jobs are up. Investment is up. Growth is up. We are turning a corner. We didn't turn our backs on Albertans like the members opposite would have had us do, and I am very proud that it was our government that was in charge when this crisis hit.

The Speaker: Second main question.

Carbon Levy Questions to the Premier

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, earlier today the Premier took calls on CBC Radio. A job creator named Norm called in. Norm said that the NDP's carbon tax is costing his business $40,000 a year. Norm asked the Premier how she thought that was justified. The Premier's response: in short, she told Norm that he must be mistaken, that the carbon tax was not hurting his business, that it was actually helping. She had the nerve to tell the man what the carbon tax was doing to his business. It is appalling. Will the Premier take back her answer to Norm, apologize for what she said, and stop insulting Albertans as she tries to defend her ideological policies?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Once again the members opposite are really taking liberty with the facts. What I indicated this morning was simply that the carbon levy has not yet been applied to most of the oil and gas sector. That's all I said.

Mr. Speaker, what I also did was talk about how it's a fundamentally important part of our plan to help leaders in the energy industry reposition our industry as the most sustainable and responsible in the world. It is that plan that is going to help us do what the members opposite were unable to do for 10 years, which is get . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, what she told Norm was to take the bus, basically, like she told Albertans already. The Premier was dismissive of this hard-working Albertan, who's been walloped by her carbon tax. Let me read his question in full.

I operate an industrial business here in Edmonton. We get most of our work from the energy industry. The carbon tax this year has resulted in an increase in cost to our business of $40,000 roughly, and I'm curious to hear your thoughts on how that is justified. And why does that make sense?

The Premier's response to that was to tell Norm that he was wrong and that his business was not being impacted by her ideological, job-killing carbon tax. Will the Premier take that back and . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What I will say is that the member opposite should simply stop making things up. I think he is learning some very bad practices from his brand new leader, and I would suggest that he probably ought to stop it.

The other thing that I will say is that as a result of our climate leadership plan one of the things we were able to do was to drop the small-business tax by one-third. That is something that arose as a result of the climate leadership plan.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of programs that support businesses which are trade exposed that have significant impacts as a result of . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Nixon: It's interesting with this NDP government. They're always right; everybody else is always wrong. When they're called on the things that they're doing, they then call their opponents liars. It's shocking, Mr. Speaker.

But here are some facts. Norm says that the carbon tax is costing his business $40,000 a year, and that will of course increase next year as a result of this government's policies. This Premier on the radio today – it's very easy to get; you can get it on the Internet anytime that you want – insulted this man, this job creator in our province, did not acknowledge that her job-killing carbon tax was having a negative impact on this man's business and on the people that he hires. It's disappointing, and she should . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said before, our government is proud to have brought in a climate change leadership plan, which was the fundamental reason for why the Kinder Morgan pipeline was approved by the federal government. That is why we are able to work successfully to get a pipeline to tidewater, something that will improve economic activity throughout this province, something that will improve the outcomes for the energy industry throughout this province, and something that will also contribute to the level of growth that we're already seeing in this province amongst businesses.

The Speaker: Third main question.

Rural Crime

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, yesterday over a hundred people, victims of crime in rural Alberta from where I'm from, particularly in central Alberta, came to this House, drove for hours, to get results from this government, to look at this government and say: what's happening to us is wrong. The opposition brought forward a motion, a motion for emergency debate, to help those people, and this NDP government stood in this House and spoke against that motion. They refused to help the people of Alberta that are being robbed and abused, and I can tell you that I've had a lot of phone calls about it. They're tired of it. Will this government reconsider and finally call a debate so that we can stand up for the victims who are being victimized by criminals in our communities?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As you well know, it was actually you who made the decision. As well, we never actually debated the motion, so we certainly didn't speak against the motion. But what we will say and what we said throughout question period all yesterday is that we understand that people in rural communities are concerned about crime, and that is why we are continuing to invest in crime prevention, whether it be through the over half a billion dollars that we put into policing, whether it be through the additional programs that we're seeing with the RCMP, with the integrated crime unit, with ALERT, and the many . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, let's be very clear. You made a decision, but this government across the way spoke against this motion. They spoke against getting results for the people of central Alberta in this Chamber. They provided no alternatives to those people. They completely refused to acknowledge that they are being victimized. They, the Government House Leader, had the nerve to say that it wasn't urgent. Well, I can tell you that people in my communities that are being robbed daily at gunpoint or having home invasions think it is urgent. Will this NDP Premier and this NDP government finally do something about it?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think it's fair to say that providing more grandstanding opportunities for the member opposite to make untrue statements and call people names over on the other side of the House is not going to deal with the legitimate crime concerns that people feel in a number of different communities. However, the work that our government is doing will. That is why we supported the ALERT program even after the federal Conservatives pulled the funding for it. That is why we continue to support well-funded policing in our rural communities. That's why we will continue to do it notwithstanding calls for massive cuts.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Nixon: Let me be very clear. I will stand in this House every day and defend the people of rural Alberta. I will stand in this House every day and defend Albertans while they're being victimized. Mr.

Speaker, through you to the Premier, if the Premier wants to call that grandstanding, that's ridiculous. It is time for her to stand up as the Premier for the people of Alberta. This is not a partisan issue. They are being robbed. They are being victimized. The crime rates in rural Alberta are an epidemic. The police are appalled. They're asking for help. We're asking for help. Will this Premier stop blaming people, stand up, do her job, and help the people of Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Thankfully, it's not my job to yell and scream, and frankly that's not actually going to be what gets outcomes. What is our job is to protect the important funding to our justice system that would be significantly jeopardized were we to move ahead with the 20 per cent cuts that the members opposite want us to pursue. The members opposite constantly refer to B.C. as the standard that we should be following. The members opposite might be interested to know that in B.C. rural communities of 5,000 and less have to levy their own taxes to pay for 50 per cent of their policing costs, yet in Alberta it's fully funded. Those are the kinds of decisions that we chose . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Provincial Fiscal Update

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today's fiscal update shows that despite the government's best attempt at budgeting, Albertans face $248 million in unplanned increases in operating expenses and a $247 million revenue shortfall, largely because of lower corporate and personal income taxes, which reflect Alberta's fiscal health. This is after two and a half years of budgets which have all missed the government's own mark. When will the Finance minister learn from these mistakes and make accurate and realistic budgets that Albertans can trust?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, our plan is working. The plan of compassionately reducing spending is working. We are pulling that spending down. In the meantime the economy is growing. We had the backs of Albertans. Now the economy is growing. We can look at our budgets more closely now, and going forward, we will reduce that spending. [interjections]

The Speaker: Keep calm, folks.

Ms McPherson: Today's fiscal update revealed very large capital plan reductions, including $359 million from Transportation, $258 million from Education, $126 million from Health, $69 million from Infrastructure, and $30 million from Seniors and Housing. To the Minister of Infrastructure: which communities will not get the desperately needed schools, health facilities, and seniors' facilities that the government promised, and how can Albertans trust any Infrastructure promises this government makes in the future?

Ms Jansen: I thank the member for the question, Mr. Speaker. One of the things that I think is always important to remember is infrastructure in this province and that what we have been doing with a monumental infrastructure build, almost $30 billion over four years, is repairing the damage that was done during the Klein years, when, of course, we had some folks who are on the other side who made the decision that it was actually more important to have a fiscal bottom line . . .

The Speaker: Please stop the clock. [interjections] Order. Now. [interjections]

An Hon. Member: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order. [interjections] Hon. members, please. Fortunately, at least one of the school groups left.

Ms McPherson: This government promised major changes to the way government operates but shows no sign of doing things differently than the previous government, including basing its budget on nonrenewable resource revenue, cutting school and hospital construction, and repeatedly failing to manage operational spending. When will this government abandon the Conservative playbook of endless infrastructure cuts and arbitrary political decisions about critical program spending?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, well, that's a bit rich coming from the conservative party over there. My understanding is that that party has just been taken over by the PCs because the Wildrose took over their party, so I don't know where the Alberta Party people are going to go.

But you know what? On this side, Mr. Speaker, we made investments when it was time to make investments. We made good investments, and we got great support from the municipalities. I was just at the AUMA and the AAMD and C, and the support was wonderful. But you know what? It's time that we take another look at it and look at the budget and look at the debt and the deficit and fix it. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members.

The Member for Red Deer-South.

School Nutrition Programs

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've been a long-time advocate for school nutrition programs. Children cannot learn if they are hungry. I also understand that school nutrition programs cost money. To the Minister of Education: is there adequate funding for the number of students involved now?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, our school nutrition projects across the province of Alberta have been an unqualified success. Last year we had 14 school districts, with about $250,000 to each of them, move on school nutrition. It was so successful that we expanded to all 62 school boards now in the province of Alberta. We can definitely see measurable increased attendance rates, and students' behaviour is improving. Their focus is better. It's better for physical and mental health as well. The school nutrition program here in the province of Alberta is working, and our government is very, very proud of it.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister: are schools saving money by utilizing community partners, and if so, is that money supporting local economies?

Mr. Eggen: Well, yes. It's been very interesting because we gave plenty of latitude for school nutrition programs to unfold across the province. For example, in the Livingstone Range school division they have a farm-to-table approach, which is using local food and existing programs that were already there. The Medicine Hat school district is using the science curriculum as part of their programming as well. In the Northern Lights school division we have elementary school students being fed by the high school cooking program. So, Mr. Speaker, yeah, there's been a lot of creativity, a lot of latitude. The school nutrition program is working, and it's something we should all . . .

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. How many children are being supported by the program expansion now, and have we seen improved learning outcomes for these same children?

Mr. Eggen: Well, yes. The pilot program from last year was feeding about 5,000 students per day. Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud to say that with our recent expansion we are now feeding more than 22,000 students per day across the province of Alberta. It's something to be very proud of. We see increased attendance, more healthy food choices. There is education associated with those healthy choices, so students can be learning not just to eat on that day a healthy choice but to have those habits for the rest of their lives.

Emergency Medical Services and Worker Supports

Mr. Fraser: I spoke yesterday about the pressing need for more EMS funding. Providing adequate resources for our emergency medical services seems like an issue we can all agree on. It will increase the level of care provided to Albertans in medical emergencies and save the province money in the long term by reducing expensive EMS hospital wait times and allowing rural ambulances to stay closer to home. While this problem won't be solved overnight, we need to take the first step in bringing EMS funding to meet the current demand. To the Premier: will you commit, at the very least, to provide enough EMS funding in the next budget to add an additional ambulance in both Calgary and Edmonton, or can you do better than that?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, it's very important for us to ensure that EMS has proper coverage, not just in the cities but right across the province of Alberta, and further to that point, we have seen that there's been plenty of consultation in regard to how EMS people on the ground can help us to make those decisions. I mean, that's part of the budgeting process. For example, they are just equipping more than 350 ambulances with power stretchers. This was a direct result of advocacy from EMS personnel on the ground to make their jobs better and, thus, to make life better for Alberta families.

Mr. Fraser: Given that paramedic services are in high demand, with year-over-year increased call volume, and given that paramedics are highly trained and competent practitioners – they could be doing more to treat and refer nonemergent patients to more appropriate care facilities rather than the most expensive, the emergency department – and given that hallway waits kill paramedic morale and that it's also substandard patient care and costs millions in wasted resources, to the Premier: when will you allow paramedics to practise to their full scope to provide the care Albertans deserve, and will you commit to ending the practice of EMS hallway waits?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, these are issues that are being dealt with in consultation with EMS workers on the ground. We know that to utilize the full scope of practice of any health care worker will help us to reduce wait times, to improve health outcomes, and to save money as well. So in consultation with EMS providers and the unions that represent them, certainly I believe that AHS is working to achieve that full scope of practice for paramedics to treat patients immediately and to ensure that we have the timely dissemination of health services.

Mr. Fraser: I want to thank this government for offering presumptive coverages for cardiac events under the Workers' Compensation Act for paramedics. Given that a cardiac event took the life of my friend, colleague, and mentor David Sartorelli just hours after his last EMS shift, which highlighted this issue – Dave was a loyal servant to this province for over 32 years – to the Minister of Labour: would you be so kind as to name this new clause that protects paramedics the David Sartorelli clause?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is because of stories like David's that we did adjust that clause within Bill 30. I appreciate very much the recommendation, and I'd like to follow up with the member after question period.

Thank you.

Tax Policies and Economic Development

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, earlier today the Finance minister released the second-quarter update, and it shows yet again that income and corporate tax revenue are down significantly despite the NDP raising those same tax rates. And the NDP's union bosses are demanding: raise taxes higher. On this side of the House we know why higher taxes don't result in higher incomes and more wealth. To the minister: do you understand why raising income and corporate taxes results in less revenue overall?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you. You know, it sounds very much like the question that was posed to the Premier just a few seconds ago. What I would add to her answer is that we went through the toughest recession in a generation. People were out of work. People's incomes were lower. Corporations were not doing as well. Mr. Speaker, those are the reasons why corporate and personal income taxes weren't as high. But they will come back because the economy is coming back as a result of the work of this side, not that side.

Mr. Barnes: Given that the Fraser Institute released their Global Petroleum Survey, which surveys petroleum managers regarding barriers to investment in oil and gas in various jurisdictions around the world – and the good news is that Alberta isn't last. NDP, you have your B.C. cousins to thank for that. While the B.C. government is openly antipipeline, Alberta's NDP has purchased social licence. To the minister: are you embarrassed that your government's social licence has resulted in the same weak investment climate as British Columbia's?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you. I think what the speaker should be embarrassed about is the fact that he's quoting Rebel media and he's quoting the Fraser Institute. You know, take a huge grain of salt, a barrel of salt, when you listen to those quotes, Mr. Speaker.

What I can tell you is that the economy is coming back, jobs are up, wages are up, growth is up, crop and livestock sales are up. Up, up, up: what about quoting that? [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Hon. minister.

Mr. Barnes: Given that I'm prepared to answer Albertans' questions, why won't you answer mine?

Given that when asked to identify why they weren't investing in Alberta, investors blamed the tax rates, the tax regime in Alberta, and all the new climate change regulations that your government has put in place – so much for social licence – to the minister: when will this government come to its senses, abandon these foolhardy and impulsive tax increases, and return Alberta to the place it should be, the best place to invest in the entire world?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Let me tell you who has invested in Alberta in the last six months: Amazon, RocketSpace, Swoop, Champion Petfoods, Pinnacle, Google, Cavendish Farms.

Let me get back to my "up" list, Mr. Speaker. Retail sales are up, housing starts are up, exports are up, restaurant sales are up, business incorporation is up. Up, up, up.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Opioid Use Prevention and Treatment

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Associate Minister of Health spoke about the latest opioid data in the province, saying, quote: the most important thing we can do is to keep doing what we're doing. End quote. That's a real poor answer since opioid overdoses have increased 40 per cent from last year. To the government. Albertans don't want more opioid-related deaths; they want to see significant action and decline in those numbers. When can Albertans start seeing a multifaceted and co-ordinated approach to reducing these unnecessary deaths?

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, the number of Albertans who are losing their lives is very high in regard to this opioid crisis, and it should remind us that the opioid crisis is very serious and requires serious action. This government is opening thousands of new treatment spaces across the province, expanding telehealth to more remote communities. As a result, about four times as many Albertans are getting the treatment that they had last year. It's a grave situation, and we all need to work together to find a solution.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, this issue needs a unified and co-ordinated approach, and we, the Official Opposition, are here to help. Some questions for you, sir. Are you looking at empowering families, encouraging them to be involved in the rehabilitation therapy? Are you screening and providing a risk analysis of potential opioid users in our system and providing them with oversight and education? Are you incorporating law enforcement, the courts, and social workers in the solution? What are you doing to combat the opioid crisis other than discouraging gentrification in Edmonton's Chinatown with injection clinics?

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, this is an unprecedented emergency, and it requires many different responses, something that has not been perhaps done in the past. The response is being guided by an emergency commission of public health leaders, physicians, law enforcement, parent advocates, people with lived experience. If the opposition wants to help with that, that's fine, too. We've certainly accepted all the recommendations from this commission, and we're looking to implement those as quickly as possible.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, simply throwing money at this situation will not get things better. Has this government identified treatment solutions that bridge the gap between detox and addiction treatment to prevent overdoses? Have you investigated drug courts and rehabilitation as opposed to incarceration? Has this government looked at re-educating not just physicians but orthopaedic surgeons, pediatricians, and dentists to ensure understanding and education about opioids? Will this government heed advice from so many reports and provide a solid plan to Albertans that encompasses a multifaceted and co-ordinated approach to this crisis?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, another important addition to that is to have supervised consumption services in Edmonton, Calgary, and Lethbridge. I think the members opposite should take a serious, hard look at their opposition to these things because it's certainly part of a way by which we can help to work on this crisis. We have also distributed more than 31,000 naloxone kits and $3 million in funding to indigenous communities and organizations for their supports. I mean, this is a very challenging situation. It's important that we all work together and work with vigour to ensure that we reduce deaths and injury from opioids.

Publication Ban on Children Who Die in Care

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, last year, in response to the tragic handling of Serenity's file, the opposition proposed a robust motion that would have seen a select special committee of the Legislature review the safety and security of children in government care. The government chose to form a ministerial panel instead. Now, we all tried to work hard on that, but so far the NDP does not want to talk about the publication ban on children who die in care. The panel has been operating for a year. To the Children's Services minister: when will the panel be allowed to talk about the publication ban regulation?

The Speaker: The Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I will be able to respond to the question once I have the opportunity to discuss this further with the ministry, and I'll be happy to report to the Legislature.

Thank you.

Mr. Cooper: Where's Sabir?

The Speaker: Hon. member, remember about names.
First supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. That was the same amount of discussion the committee has had just for the record.

Given that in 2014, when she was in opposition, the Premier had an amendment passed in the Legislature requiring that changes to the publication ban regulation be made through a committee of the Legislature and given that the minister's panel is not an actual committee of the Legislature, to the Children's Services minister: will you admit that instead of being transparent, you've put politics and self-interest ahead of good policy, as the Premier recommended, when it comes to the publication ban issue?

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We care about what happens to children in care in this province, and we're going to do the work that is necessary to ensure that we arrive at a process that reflects the needs, that we are meeting the needs that are being presented to us. We're going to be able to do that if we put aside the partisan politics and actually get down to working on ensuring that we arrive at a situation where everybody who is involved is comfortable with the way forward. But the cuts that the members opposite would propose would make that work very difficult.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, the fact is that it's the government that's stopping this from being talked about. Everybody but them has been nonpartisan on this issue. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. member.

Mr. McIver: Given that back in 2014 the Premier herself expressed deep concerns about the publication ban regulation as it still stands this day, two and a half years after the NDP have been in government – they have done nothing on it – and given that the panel hasn't been allowed by the minister to address this issue even though the expert members of the public want to, to the minister: what will you do to fix concerns that Albertans and your own Premier have with the publication ban? Will you do something?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again, what we need to do is to come together and work as a Legislature. We are going to do that by ensuring that the collaborative process, that we have already started, continues. We're going to listen to the advice that we're going to receive and make decisions going forward. But, once again, trying to turn this issue into a hyperpartisan situation is not going to get us results. I ask them to please put that aside and start looking at a collaborative way because these children are depending on all of us to get this right.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Public Libraries

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Libraries play an important role in communities right across Alberta. Beyond just lending out books, they provide meeting and study spaces, administer exams, and support Albertans in their pursuit of acquiring new skills. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: how does this government support libraries across Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member. Our government understands the crucial role that libraries play in their communities as hubs. That's why we've continued to fund libraries through these economic times rather than slash like some other provinces have. This year alone we've provided $30 million in operating grants to 225 public library boards. Our government also funds SuperNet connectivity and funds and provides e-content such as e-books to libraries across the province. This government is committed to maintaining and continuing the resources and services that Albertans rely on, and that includes libraries.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the growing use of online tools in job recruitment and given libraries' role in Internet access for many low-income Albertans, to the same minister: is this important function in job-seeking supported by the province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member. As previously mentioned, the GOA does support access to SuperNet connectivity for all public libraries in Alberta. This happens through an investment in SuperNet of between $1.5 million to $2 million a year. In addition, the province also invests and provides access to e-content such as Mango language learning so patrons can develop language skills and prepare for jobs. We also provide resources for people with print disabilities through our investment in the National Network for Equitable Library Service, and our government is also expanding services to people in indigenous communities.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that while demand for online digital services is increasing, at the same time the demand for brick-and-mortar library space is also increasing, to the same minister: what options are available for communities as they struggle with limited space in their libraries?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member. Providing space for public libraries is a municipal responsibility. The province supports public library services by providing $30 million in operating grants and over $4 million in network support. However, due to the infrastructure deficit, communities were left with years of inaction. Our government did recently provide a one-time $10.7 million grant in capital funding to six regional library systems to renovate their headquarter buildings. This investment will help regional library systems better serve their rural libraries and support the communities and regions around Grande Prairie, Spruce Grove, Lacombe, Strathmore, Medicine Hat, and Lethbridge.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Electricity Power Purchase Arrangement Lawsuit

Mr. MacIntyre: The court has ruled in favour of Calgary's Enmax yet again, compelling the once independent Balancing Pool to fulfill their legal obligation to assess and verify that the NDP's tax increase on electrical generators violated the government's contracts by rendering Keephills more unprofitable, just like every other thermal PPA. Minister, why did your government interfere with what is intended to be an arm's-length agency when it prevented the Balancing Pool from doing its legally mandated job?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, first of all, I'm going to make no apologies for standing up for Albertans against unfair electricity charges that resulted from bad deals made by the previous government. To be clear, this legal decision has no bearing on whether or not Enmax has the legal right to return the agreements in the first place. For the record, Enmax is the only company that has not settled with us on this matter, and we are confident that our legal position is solid. We will still fully participate in proving this in court, that they have no ...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. MacIntyre: The court disagrees with you, Minister. Given that this decision confirms that injunctive relief is available to parties where a statutory body fails to perform its legal obligations and given that Enmax isn't the only job creator in Alberta that this NDP chose to tar with mistruths about violating the terms of a long-held government contract, how many more dollars will it cost taxpayers on account of your government's misguided decision to interfere with the Balancing Pool's independence?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we took action on this side of the House to protect Alberta families. The other side of the House would continue with a broken system that favours industry over Albertans. We're not going to do that. We negotiated with companies and gave the Balancing Pool a loan. They continue to defend the backroom deals that the previous government did, and they're standing up for industry. Rather, on this side we're standing up for everyday Albertans.

Mr. MacIntyre: In granting this injunction, the court held that Enmax had proven that they would suffer irreparable harm because of the Balancing Pool's inaction. Given that Albertans have now seen multiple rulings demonstrating the incompetent manner in which one of Alberta's most critical files has been managed and given the clear record of political interference with what is meant to be an arm's-length Balancing Pool, Minister, when can Albertans expect your letter of resignation over these billion-dollar mistakes?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to commend the Minister of Energy for the job that she's done. This is an outstanding Minister of Energy who has worked very hard on a number of very critical files. One of the important things to remember here ... [interjections]

The Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Mason: One of the important things to remember here is that this minister and this government stand up for consumers in this province to protect them from unrealistic and unreasonable prices, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Agricultural Society Funding

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has almost 300 agricultural societies whose work enhances the lives of hundreds of thousands of rural citizens. These societies operate arenas and community halls, and they host rodeos, fairs, festivals, and trade shows, all of which enrich their communities. To the minister of agriculture: do you support the work of our agricultural societies?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for his very important question. Our government very much values and recognizes the important work that ag societies do all across this province. We understand that they make life better for Albertans in small towns and rural communities across this province. Our government has been in the process of assessing the current budget to find savings in order to fairly and responsibly reduce the deficit, but I can tell you that we know the great work that ag societies do. That is why we are completely funding them at the exact same levels as we did last year.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister deserves thanks for finally giving ag societies the grants they were expecting this year and given that ag societies went through a lot of unnecessary worry while they waited to learn if they could continue to operate their recreation centres and other community amenities, to the same minister: why did you leave them hanging so long?

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the question. I mean, it's interesting that, you know, depending on who pops up over there to ask a question, some want cuts; some want spending. I think it's just a whole lot of confusion going on on that side of the House.

What I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, is that our government is very thoughtfully, compassionately, and prudently looking at ways that we can reduce our spending. We recognize, as the Minister of Finance has pointed out, that we are moving toward a path to balance, but we did recognize the important work that ag societies are doing in this province. That's why the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry has decided to fund all of our ag societies.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that I know that the minister of agriculture is working hard to secure next year's grants for ag societies – and I thank him for that – and given that it is actually the Minister of Treasury Board and Finance who dictates the ag minister's budget, to the Minister of Finance: can you please tell the volunteers today if their grants will be available for them as they prepare their budgets for next year, not halfway through their operating year?

The Speaker: Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the member will know from when he served in government, it's a little premature to be talking about next year's budget. This is one of the processes that we're going through. However, we do recognize the valuable and important contributions that ag societies make to all of rural Alberta and, in fact, all of our province. That will be one of the factors that the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry looks at when he looks within his budget under the direction of the Minister of Treasury Board and Finance.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Calgary Southwest Ring Road Construction Concerns

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Calgary-West constituents are very concerned about the design and plan for the portion of the southwest ring road that is adjacent to their communities. The Springbank Hill Community Association along with the Slopes have both expressed concerns surrounding noise attenuation and quality of life. Can the minister confirm that his department has addressed these concerns, which the communities have specifically brought to his department's attention?

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I can assure the House that our department has been very open with respect to meeting with communities, and I've been very open about meeting with members of the opposition and of the government who are representing their constituents on these matters. Construction, unfortunately, has been planned by the previous government very close to existing neighbourhoods, and that presents a number of operational problems during construction. We've done our very best to mitigate all of the concerns relative to dust, noise, and odour.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, thank you. Given that the minister has met with me on two previous occasions for ring road concerns only after I have asked him questions in the House and given that here I am again, having received no correspondence from his office about these ring road concerns, again to the minister. The quality of life of these communities is suffering. Will you please commit to building the berms and the sound attenuation walls they are requesting?

Thank you.

The Speaker: The minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member knows that I am always available, open to meeting with him and other members. All he has to do is ask instead of referring to some correspondence. I don't know where it comes from.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Because your office isn't responding.

Mr. Speaker, thank you. Given that when I have the opportunity to meet with the minister, our conversations have been professional and respectful – and I appreciate that – and given that I would like to continue that relationship on behalf of the people of Calgary-West, Minister, will you commit today to meeting with the Springbank Hill Community Association and the representatives from the Slopes and personally address their concerns?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, our department and my ministry have been open to meeting with community members and their representatives here in the Assembly. That has not changed, but if the hon. member wants to represent his community in a more effective way, he should just pick up the phone, and I'll fix his problems if I can.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Carbon Levy Revenue and Rebates

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This NDP government added its carbon tax to the price of fuel, household heating, and many other basic supplies, but it pats itself on the back for providing a small rebate to Albertans. Minister, can you please tell Albertans how much it costs to administer the rebate program? Minister, Albertans are looking for a number, not the rhetoric, not the anger machine, not what we have done or what we're going to do, just the number.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, the fact of the matter is that two-thirds of Albertans are receiving a rebate for the carbon levy, which is being administered through Treasury Board and Finance. Two-thirds of Albertans will get a rebate on the carbon levy. It will increase on January 1. If you're a couple who makes less than $95,000, you're getting a $450 rebate. If you have two kids, you'll get $540.

Mr. Gill: Again the same rhetoric.

Given that this government's budget figures indicate that it expects to collect over $1 billion this year alone and the total will jump to $1.4 billion after the carbon tax increases again in, like, a few days and given that the government is taking Albertans' money from one pocket and resending a portion of it back into the same pocket, Minister, how does this sleight-of-hand manoeuvre possibly allow you to claim that your government has the backs of Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the rebate system is being administered by the Canada Revenue Agency, and the Minister of Finance did confirm at estimates debate, if the member was paying attention, that it's about $1.5 million. Now, the question before us is not about whether we have a price on carbon; it's about what kind of plan we have. The position that we've taken as a government is that it's going to be a made-in-Alberta plan that moves our energy industry forward. It won't be a plan that's made in Ottawa. I know that Mr. Kenney is very fond of Ottawa, but on this side of the House we're going to be standing up for Albertans.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It took me two questions to get an answer.

Given that as of January 1, which is just around the corner, the carbon tax on diesel will increase to 8.03 cents per litre and given that a constituent of mine has told me that this NDP's unfair carbon tax is costing his trucking company almost $3,000 per month and he's not getting anything back from this government, Minister, why is this government taking money from families and businesses who could better use it now to reinvest in their businesses and in their children's futures?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
Hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we have recycled carbon levy revenues back into reducing the small-business rate by a third. Certainly, that represents about $180 million worth of benefit to our small businesses. If you're a couple who makes less than $95,000, you are getting a $450 rebate. That will increase to $540. Low-income seniors in Alberta are getting a $300 carbon levy rebate. That is in addition to a number of energy efficiency programs and a made-in-Alberta plan that got us two pipeline approvals, not a made-in-Ottawa plan.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I have a request for unanimous consent to introduce guests who have arrived.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. member.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly representatives of the Insurance Brokers Association of Alberta. The IBAA is a nonprofit association representing over 4,200 members in 250 brokerages across the provinces and territories. We have with us this afternoon Gerry Baert from Blue Circle Insurance Brokers in Calgary, Ken Holst from Saunders Insurance in Taber, Mitch Holst from Saunders Insurance in Taber, Jonathan Brown from Peters Insurance in Wetaskiwin, Scott Romans from Ing & McKee Insurance in Red Deer, Jody Lohr from Blue Circle Insurance Brokers in Calgary, and we have George Hodgson and Rikki McBride from the Insurance Brokers Association Alberta proper and, finally, Chad Leibel from Leibel Insurance Group here in Edmonton. These folks are at the Legislature to meet with the MLAs and to advocate for the insurance industry and their clients. Having worked in insurance myself, I know the critical work insurance agents and brokers do to manage risk and to help make life better and more secure for all of us. I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, in 30 seconds we'll continue with Members' Statements.

Members' Statements

Alberta Real Estate Association

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak to you about an industry and an organization in which I am proud to have served. Prior to being elected as the MLA for Edmonton-McClung, I had a 30-year career in real estate and was a proud member of the Alberta Real Estate Association. Seated here in the gallery today are 48 members from that same association attending their annual Government Liaison Days conference.

The Alberta Real Estate Association was incorporated on February 11, 1947. Then, as now, property ownership is one of the cornerstones of the high-quality life that Albertans enjoy. As their part in maintaining that quality of life, the Alberta Real Estate Association provides professional development for their realtor members as well as advocates on behalf of their membership to ensure that industry professionals are able to serve the Alberta public effectively. They advocate for realtors and their clients on issues like land transfer taxes, the land titles registry system, standards for home and property inspections, marijuana grow op remediation, and Alberta's Condominium Property Act regulations. In fact, the association was an important contributor to the recent consultations on the Condominium Property Act and age-restricted condos.

The Alberta Real Estate Association is a valued and constructive stakeholder on government issues related to real estate in Alberta. I know because I've been on both sides of the equation as a property owner and as a realtor. The Alberta Real Estate Association and the Alberta government share the same desire to protect and promote the interests of Albertans by making sure that there are rules and guidelines in place to help make significant real estate decisions, like purchasing a home or selling a subdivision, easier and trouble free.

I hope you'll all join me in congratulating the Alberta Real Estate Association and its member realtors for 70 years of dedicated service to our province and its people.

Rural Cellphone Service

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, recently the Western Producer ran a story on rural cellphone coverage, and the picture they painted was condemning. It found that many developing nations have better cell coverage at a lower cost. Another study conducted by the think tank New America found that when it comes to voice service, Canada was the most expensive on the planet. The sad part is that many of my constituents would gladly pay the outrageous fees if they were just able to get even half-decent service. Unfortunately, outside of the major centres cell coverage is spotty at best. The Western Producer found that even along the Trans-Canada highway there are extended dead zone pockets.

The issue isn't about rural Albertans having the same luxury as our urban neighbours. This is quickly becoming a serious health and safety issue. When someone has an accident on one of Alberta's many gravel roads and no one else is around, it is critical that when they take out their cellphone to call 911, they actually have service.

When it comes to notifying Albertans of potential or ongoing disasters in their area, Alberta has an established alert service, which pushes out important information. Unfortunately, in many places there simply isn't any Internet or cell coverage through which you can receive these important and often life-saving alerts. Alarming, during the recent wildfires that tore through my constituency, many people were caught completely off guard due to the lack of Internet and cell coverage. They may as well have been on the moon.

As we have all heard loud and clear yesterday, rural crime is a growing problem, and often the police are hours or even days away. In fact, the issue is even worse since in many areas of rural Alberta you don't have the cell coverage to make 911 calls anyway. This is a serious problem that needs attention now.

Instead of capping oil sands development, unionizing family farms, or establishing a job-killing carbon tax, this government should be working with the telecommunication industry through its regulatory and legislative tools to improve basic service in rural Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, when disaster strikes, help should be just a text away. [interjection]

The Speaker: Hon. member. [interjection] Hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Pediatric Neuropsychiatric Disorders

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On October 9, 2017, our government declared it pediatric autoimmune neuropsychiatric disorders associated with streptococcal infections, also known as PANDAS, and pediatric acute-onset neuropsychiatric syndrome, or PANS, awareness day in Alberta. I'm wearing the PANDAS shirt in honour of this member's statement.

This happened after two of my constituents, Marnie and Richard Deschenes, brought to my attention that their two sons were diagnosed with PANDAS. The Deschenes struggled for a long time to have their first son appropriately diagnosed after a sudden-onset mental illness. The Deschenes have organized a group of Albertans to spread awareness among patients, parents, physicians, and community members about PANDAS and PANS. The group meets in Calgary regularly. I was happy to not only help facilitate a declaration to bring awareness to PANDAS and PANS but to also do a member's statement in order to raise more awareness as this is not a well-known disorder.

PANDAS occurs when streptococcal, or strep, bacteria triggers a misdirected immune response resulting in inflammation of a child's brain. The child quickly begins to exhibit life-changing symptoms such as obsessive compulsive disorder, anxiety, tics, personality changes, decline in math and handwriting abilities, sensory sensitivities, restrictive eating, and more. PANS has the same symptoms, but there is no associated infection. We need to continue to take steps in promoting awareness to help ensure children receive a timely diagnosis and treatment.

Supporting the mental health of Albertans is something our government takes very seriously. Our government is committed to helping all Albertans. That includes those with multiple and complex needs such as children diagnosed with PANDAS and PANS and those who love and care for them. I would like to thank the Deschenes family for bringing this to my attention.

Thank you very much.

George Frederick John Gosbee

Mrs. Aheer: George Frederick John Gosbee left us on November 12, 2017, at the age of 48 years. George was born in Kingston, Ontario, on August 30, 1969. He and his family moved to Calgary, where he would go to school, start a family and a business, and touch the lives of many. The brevity of George's life is no indication of its vibrancy. No matter the endeavour, George approached it with gifted resoluteness and inspiring curiosity. When not sporting a suit and tie in downtown Calgary, George was an avid mountaineer, a practising yogi, philanthropist, and, above all, a loving father, husband, son, and brother. George's abrupt end affects many around the globe. He considered himself to be an international world traveller who embodied the three-pillared philosophy of explore, experience, and educate. His legacy and benevolent relationships he leaves behind are a testament of his character.

Prior to founding AltaCorp Capital in 2010, George was the chairman, president, and CEO of Tristone Capital Global Inc. As a corporate, financial, and philanthropic leader his accolades include vice-chair of Alberta Investment Management, chair of Arcadia Biosciences, co-owner of the Arizona Coyotes, alternate governor of the NHL, chair of the School of Public Policy at the University of Calgary, adviser to the Haskayne School of Business, director of the Chrysler Group, member of the economic advisory council for the present Prime Minister, and positions on numerous other organizations.

George will be remembered dearly by his wife, Karen; their three children, Carter, John, and Isla; his parents, John and Edna Gosbee; sister and brother-in-law Jean and Trevor Marks and their three children, Ty, Jessica, and Tayden; along with countless other family and friends he has touched. He was a gifted visionary, a pillar in the community, a philanthropist, a force of nature, a leader, a man of compassion and energy, a hockey fan, a motivator, and a dear friend. George left a giant hole in our lives and hearts when he left us far too soon.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to present – as I noticed in the introduction of the AWA and their advocacy for caribou, we passed off over 300 postcards with a statement to the Premier. "Wild caribou belong in Alberta, not just on our quarters.” That is our money. “Protect Alberta’s caribou habitat now!”

In addition, there were five specific ones I wanted to mention, including one from Abigail Hadden in Calgary: caribou need a home, too. And from Treaty 6, Crystal Lamamen: caribou mitigation, conservation, and protection fall within the body of inherent treaty rights, original peoples of the land, as long as the sun shines, grass grows, and the rivers flow.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have four letters here from concerned constituents regarding rural crime. This one is from Edie, who says: “We clearly are not winning the battle over rural crime.” She’s seen a significant increase in her area.

This one is from Melvin and his family: we feel like we are the “victims with no voice or provision to protect ourselves in our community.”

This one is from Fern in Red Deer county. Her son has had his truck stolen twice, and her neighbours had their truck stolen from the field where they were combining.

This one is from Tara from Red Deer county. She’s a working parent and leaves her teenage son home alone until she gets home after work to their acreage, and she is desperately afraid for their safety.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have three letters. One is from 75-year-old Mildred, where she lists all of the personal irreplaceable items that have been stolen from her in the last six months.

The second letter is from Trevor, who states that he’s been broken into five times between July and October of this year. Five times. In one he had a bush camera set up where they took pictures of the guys loading rifles as they came onto his property.

The third letter is from Connie, and I’ll just read a couple of statements that she makes. She says that she’s a grandmother. She says: “I’m angry that I have to worry about self-defence in my own [house]. I’m angry that my peace of mind has been stolen. I’m angry that criminals have more rights than their victims.”

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. [interjection] Table the document. [interjection] Hon. member. [interjections] Members. Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’d like to table today documents containing a petition of over a thousand signatures presented by Grant Ferby, a long-time fisherman in Alberta. The title of it is Save a Perch. It says:

Together, with the support of the Beaver River Fish & Game Association, we are requesting the ESRD of Alberta to initiate an enhanced cormorant control program in the Lakeland area. Our goal is to reduce the number of cormorant colonies in the Lakeland to help restore our fisheries. Our yellow perch fishery has been decimated over the last 25 years due in large part to the increased cormorant population. It is estimated that the current Muriel Lake cormorant population alone removes one million lbs of fish per year from our local lakes.

I have five copies of that.

The Speaker: You have another?

Mr. Loewen: Yes. I also have the appropriate five copies of some maps regarding the boundaries commission and how the boundaries could have been redrawn simpler to fit in the parameters of the populations that the boundaries commission was set with.

The Speaker: Any others? The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Nixon: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I have the appropriate number of copies here of a tabling in regard to comments in my question that the Premier asked me to do a tabling on in regard to her interview earlier today on CBC and her comments to a gentleman named Norm that I spoke about in which clearly the Premier disregards Norm’s comments about what the carbon tax is costing and even implies . . .

The Speaker: Come on, hon. member. Table the document. [interjection] Hon. member, excuse me. When I say, “Table the document,” that means you stop talking when I stand up and please sit down. Thank you.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, it’s my job to speak for my constituents, and you can’t stop me.

The Speaker: Excuse me. Could I ask that you rise and apologize for that last comment.

Mr. Nixon: I apologize for the comment.

The Speaker: Thank you.

I believe that we had a point of order, but it was withdrawn.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I’d like to call Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 29

An Act to Reduce Cannabis and Alcohol Impaired Driving

The Chair: We are considering amendment A2. Are there any further speakers to this amendment?

Mr. McIver: This is the amendment moved by the hon. Member for Calgary-West?

The Chair: Calgary-West. This is the amendment.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. All right. I’m grateful for you making that clear. Thank you.

The Chair: I’ll recognize you to speak. Did you wish to speak to it, hon. member?

Mr. McIver: No. I already did.

The Chair: Okay. Any other members wishing to speak to this amendment? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you. Just to confirm, this is the amendment to Bill 29?

The Chair: Yes.

Mr. Hanson: Okay. Yes. Perfect.

I just wanted to, you know, stand up and speak in support of the amendment. There are a couple of things. This is brand new legislation that's coming out. It's new law coming from our federal government. It hasn't really been tested anywhere other than a couple of the states down in the U.S. and over in Europe, in Amsterdam, where it's legal there. Again, it is certainly new to us, and I think that putting a clause in there where this legislation has to be reviewed – I think the private sector, when they realize the potential here, if you come up with a testing device or some sort of testing that can prove impairment by marijuana, the wheels are probably turning already out there. I think that in the very near future we may see something that could substantially change this legislation, so I really think that it is imperative that we put a clause in there that gives us the option to reinvestigate this at the end of 2019 and then every five years after that.

For that reason I will be supporting this, and I think that everybody else should as well. Thank you.

The Chair: Any other speakers to amendment A2?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: We're back on the main bill. Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question? [interjections] We're on Bill 29, yes. We're back on the main bill. Are there any questions, comments, or amendments? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Madam Chair, while our friends across the hall sort things out, I just want to take a little time to talk about what a wonderful bill this is, and I hope that if there are further amendments, they will be forthcoming shortly. I think it's important to move ahead with this bill. I think we know that the pressure from the decisions of the federal government is bearing down upon us all, and it's incumbent on all of us to do our utmost to make sure that we are taking every step possible to protect the lives and safety of the people who are travelling on our roads.

That's one of the things that we've been trying to do in this particular piece of legislation. It reflects changes to the Criminal Code that are being proposed by the federal government and also conforms with the decision of the Alberta Court of Appeal which struck down a section of our Traffic Safety Act as it related to the length of suspensions under the act. We are required to bring forward these changes in order to do that.

With that, just a little reminder of the wonderful virtues of this bill, which I know has been supported by the Alberta Motor Transport Association and by Mothers Against Drunk Driving, so I commend it to all members of the House.

The Chair: Questions, comments, or amendments with respect to the bill? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Yes. Thank you, Madam Chair. Now, I'd like to focus on one of the press releases that the Alberta government or the NDP brought out. The press release is regarding Drugged Driving is Impaired Driving. It's August 5, 2016, so this was an older press release. We just heard the Minister of Transportation speak on the importance of this, and I have to agree that impaired driving is something that we all need to be very cognizant of. The quote that the hon. minister has put forward in this press release:

It comes as a surprise to many people that drunk driving and drugged driving carry the same criminal charges. This is because both substances impair a driver's ability and increase the likelihood of being involved in a collision.

That seems pretty self-explanatory. If you have impairment, you shouldn't drive. I think that everybody can get that lesson in life, saying that it doesn't matter what it is that you are doing; if you are planning on taking a vehicle and going out into the public, you need to be very clear that you are one hundred per cent in charge of that wonderful vehicle.

Now, just below the minister's quote is a quote from Andrew Murie, the CEO of MADD Canada.

Impaired driving is Canada's leading cause of criminal death in Canada. The number of drugs present in motor vehicle fatalities in Canada continues to grow. It is absolutely essential that when you are using drugs that you not drive and create that risk of death or injury to yourself or others.

Again, this is common-sense stuff. We should be making sure that people do not go out and drink and drive or be drugged and drive. When we hear some of the facts – and there are some facts here that we need to be very cognizant of, saying that these are important.

Now, the last time I spoke in second reading, I brought some important Stats Canada research that came forward, and one of the Stats Canada research is called Police-reported Crime Statistics in Canada, 2015.

Drug offences involving cannabis continued to decline in 2015. In total, the overall rate of police-reported offences involving the possession, trafficking, production and distribution of cannabis decreased 15% between 2014 and 2015.

This is something that is important because I believe that a lot of our enforcement are starting to see that cannabis is something that's important that we keep out of children's hands, but with the change of government we're starting to see that the Trudeau Liberals are more cannabis friendly, so we're seeing a decrease in drug offences happening here.

What's important here is it says that "in contrast, offences involving the possession, trafficking, production or distribution of methamphetamines grew 25%." We're seeing that maybe people are moving away from cannabis and maybe potentially moving towards some of these really bad drugs, so what is it that we need to be continuing to be cognizant of here? We need to be very clear that driving under the influence of any drug, whether it's alcohol, whether it's cannabis or it is some other drug, is not okay.

Now, going further, almost all police-reported impaired driving incidents continued to involve alcohol in 2014 at 96 per cent while a small portion of 4 per cent involved drugs. I would say that when we start to legalize marijuana or cannabis, we're going to see that this number should spike, but it's not going to spike. The reason that it's not going to spike significantly is because we have no way to test for this drug, no way to test for impairment of this drug. It is important to understand that in the end we need to be always moving forward with being able to bring these impaired drivers off the road. If we go back to MADD and our hon. Minister of Transportation, it's common sense. It is common sense in the fact that we need to make sure that these individuals are not on the roads. I have a hard time making it from point A to B here.

Right now we're at a place where we can't test for this drug. We're going to legalize it, which means we're putting people behind the wheel potentially that could hurt Albertans. Now, blaming the NDP for the fact that our federal Liberal colleagues are bringing through or ramming through legislation at an alarming rate without preparing our provinces – it's not their fault. I can understand that. But I will tell you that what we do need to do is make sure that if we have no way of testing for this, then we need to start looking at a zero-tolerance policy when it comes to our roads. We need to start saying that until we can test for cannabis in a way that prevents impaired driving, we are not going to allow people on the road who are utilizing this drug. It may be legal, absolutely. The federal Liberals are pushing us in this direction, but in the end we need to maintain safe work sites, we need to make sure our roads are safe, and we need to make sure it doesn't get into the hands of our children.

Now, I'm just going to go through some more of this press release that was done on August 5, 2016, because there are some interesting facts here when it comes to impaired driving.

- The Traffic Injury Research Foundation determined that in Canada during 2012, drugs were detected in 40 per cent of fatally injured drivers.

Forty per cent. So when we start looking at the fact that Canada has a real problem already when it comes to impaired driving causing fatalities, why would we add a new drug that we can't test for and allow for people to be able to drive under the influence? This is not okay. This is one of the flaws that we have when it comes to this bill. We need to be making sure that Albertans are safe on the roads. We need to make sure that Albertans are safe on job sites. That's why it's so important that we start doing some research into making sure that we have the appropriate test.

Now, I hear that the test right now is more or less going to revolve around sobriety tests. Well, fair enough. So now we're bringing back walk the line and touch your nose, that kind of stuff. I believe that we moved away from sobriety tests because they were largely subjective, and what happens is that people are able to do a lot of things when they're under the influence of drugs that a normal person may or may not be able to do. When we start to look at the fact that sobriety tests are more likely to be challenged in court and the fact that our officers haven't pursued sobriety tests for a number of years, we're actually going to have a long period of time where people are going to be able to be caught underneath this impairment and then get away with it when it hits the courts.

As we have heard, the government so far hasn't been so good at rural crime. Now let's add impaired driving into that.

Now, let's talk about the next impaired driving facts.

- Alberta is slightly above the national average at 41 per cent. This represents 82 drivers who were killed in collisions during 2012 who tested positive for drugs. For perspective, 71 fatally injured drivers tested positive for alcohol during that same year. Of those, 34 had both alcohol and drugs in their system.

We're seeing some very large numbers here that are already proving impairment when it comes to drugs. What we're seeing here is a group of Albertans who have decided to put others at risk. This is something that is not acceptable, and we need to address the fact that we cannot prevent these people from going onto the roads. We have no way of testing, no way of making sure that our roads are safe. Now, I do again sympathize with the current NDP government because this is something that is being rammed down our throats. There is no doubt about it.

Now, another point that's brought up here:

- Mixing alcohol and drugs of any sort is also a concern. Combining impairing substances has major risks. Always use substances responsibly.

It could be that they are just underneath the legal limit for alcohol, but they also have cannabis, or THC, within their blood. What we're saying here is: is that person legally impaired or not? We don't know, because we don't know how the two drugs interact with each other within a person's system. We do know that there is an effect on those people's systems. So we need to be making sure that we not only are testing for cannabis within the individual who's potentially impaired, but we also need to be making sure that the combination of drugs is not impairing them even though they're below the levels that have been prescribed by the government.

Here's the next point.

- Studies of driving performance (both simulated and on-road) show increased likelihood to swerve, following distance, and speed as a function of cannabis use.

What I am reading into this is that cannabis use affects your response time. I don't know if anybody would disagree that cannabis or, in many cases, alcohol is preventing your ability to be able to swerve if that child gets in front of you or if that family pet is in front of you. What happens here is that we've put somebody at real risk, and it's all because we can't get that person off the road.

Now, in the case of my constituency – and I will go back to my constituency – I had a couple come into my constituency office. They were a family driving to Edmonton, actually to Fort Saskatchewan. This couple was hit head-on by an individual who was impaired by drugs and, I believe, alcohol. In this tragic situation what we've got here is that their family was in this terrible accident, but they also lost the individual's mother. So a person died. There was a fatality. This woman was a statistic within the 2016 year. This is tragic, and nobody wants to hear this. I'm not blaming anybody on this other than that individual that got behind the wheel and decided he was going to drive impaired.

Now, let's say that that individual had been pulled off along the side of the road by an officer. He had the THC in his blood, and he was impaired, but we have no way of being able to remove him from the road. That accident still would have happened, cause and effect. Cause and effect. What we're looking at here is an individual we could not prevent from the actual fatality. Now, at some point as a government we need to acknowledge that we have a responsibility to take that individual off the road.

Let's say, for instance, that this individual had been pulled over, had been given a sobriety test by that officer, that that person passed that sobriety test, like we had described before, that the officer – obviously, this is a very subjective test – decided that that individual was okay to drive. Then let's say that half an hour's drive down the road that person runs into a family and that somebody is a fatality at that point. The question is: is the Alberta government liable for that? Is this something where we are putting our province at a particularly large chance of liability payments coming out of the Alberta government?

Is this something that we could have prevented but didn't? Now, I'm not questioning an RCMP officer or a peace officer, questioning the decision they made at that time, because – you know what? – unless you're that officer, it is too hard to know what's happening with that individual. But I can tell you that with that person hitting that family, causing the death of a loved one, us then finding out that there was THC in the blood and that maybe this death could have been prevented had we had a better testing system: that is the true question here.

If this is something that we can actually bring forward, that is a fault within the Alberta government system, are we looking at a whole lot of lawsuits? When we start looking at this – they said that 41 per cent of the national average are fatalities due to drugs detected in their systems – are we opening up a class-action suit against our province because we jumped too quickly at this? Is this something where, in the end, we should have slowed down?

Again, it's important to say that zero tolerance when it comes to marijuana, when it comes to our roadways I think is something that we need to consider.

Now, my colleague put forward a sunset clause, and it's shameful that this Assembly voted that down, specifically the government. In the end, what we need to be doing is reviewing these important pieces of legislation and then updating them. I would say that the fact that we don't have a good way of testing should automatically trigger the need for a sunset clause to this legislation. We should be reviewing this. You know what? My colleague put it at five years; I would put it at two, not five. Two years. We need to be making sure that this law is more or less protecting our residents.

What we're looking at here is Bill 29, An Act to Reduce Cannabis and Alcohol Impaired Driving. That's admirable. The act is named that. But what we need to be looking at here is an act that actually prevents deaths if it's possible. I don't see that in this act. This is not something where we can say that this act is acting responsibly to protect our roadways. We need to address the fact that there could be impaired people driving on our streets, putting our families – my children, my parents, my brother and sister, my nieces, everybody that I know – at risk just because we can't get this right in the fact that we have no way of ensuring that a person who is impaired gets off the streets. This is critical.

We need to have a way of testing. If we can't test, this shouldn't be moving forward. I will say that when it comes to our government, it does seem that we are moving a little fast in this direction. But, again, I don't think that it's something that can be prevented as this is being brought forward by the Trudeau Liberals.

Now, from that survey, the impaired driving facts:

- In the 2014 driver ... survey, seven in 10 Albertans agreed that too many people are driving under the influence of legal or illegal drugs.

Again, this is a government press release. So we have a very large portion of Albertans already saying, back in 2014, that there are a lot of people already doing this, driving under the influence. This is shameful, but this is something that we are going to see jump very, very sharply as soon as we legalize cannabis within our province, and it is going to be even larger once we can't test for it and get it off the roads.

The next point:

- The 2014 Driver Attitude Survey also noted only 55 per cent of Albertans make other driving arrangements when they have taken drugs which can affect their ability to drive.

People think of drugs differently than alcohol – this is important – whether it's prescription drugs or methamphetamines, opioids. What we've got here are people that are saying: I am okay to drive ... [Mr. Cyr's speaking time expired]

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I just want to correct a couple of things with regard to that. The hon. member talks about the lack of a test for THC. He doesn't, I don't think, quite have it right. What we have are roadside screening devices that are still under evaluation. There is a test for the per se limits of two and five nanograms set forth in the amendments to the Criminal Code, and that's a blood test, and that is accurate, you know, for measuring the quantity of THC in the blood. It doesn't measure impairment, but it measures the amount of THC in the blood and can do so quite accurately.

The question is on roadside screening devices; for example, the breathalyzer. If an officer suspects that you've been drinking, he gives you a screening device to blow into. It's not sufficient to determine your blood-alcohol content, but it does detect, with a certain degree of accuracy, that you have consumed alcohol in a certain amount. Then you're taken down to the station or to the on-site station that they've set up for a breathalyzer, which is a similar device but much more accurate, that is then used in order to lay a charge.

We have that for cannabis, and that is the blood test, but the roadside screening device to detect the presence of THC is still under evaluation.

I do have a little bit more information with respect to that. If I can maybe take a minute to read that. Oral fluid drug screeners are devices that are able to detect the presence of some kinds of drugs in saliva, including THC, the main impairing component in cannabis. The device is inserted into the mouth of a driver, and once saliva is collected, the device indicates the presence or absence of drugs. These devices are fast, noninvasive, and accurate. Bill C-46 proposes legislation that will authorize police to use an oral fluid screener at a roadside if they suspect a driver has a drug in their body.

The government of Canada is in the process of reviewing roadside testing devices for use in Canada. Once roadside testing devices are approved, should a driver test positive for the presence of a particular drug on such a device, the blood test will also be taken to show whether the level in the blood is over the new limits in the proposed act.

At present oral fluid screening devices have not been approved for use in Canada. The Drugs and Driving Committee of the Canadian Society of Forensic Science has recently examined the performance of oral fluid screening devices and determined that they have an acceptable degree of accuracy in the detection of cannabis, methamphetamine, cocaine, and opioids, some of the major drugs of concern to road safety. These screeners will be evaluated by the federal Drugs and Driving Committee and approved by the Attorney General of Canada.

While it's not a hundred per cent certain, it looks like we are well on the way to approving a roadside screening device for THC. The federal government has indicated to us that they fully expect that one will be approved for use in Canada prior to the proclamation of the changes to the Criminal Code.

I just wanted to set those things on the record. There are tests for THC levels. They have set out per se limits of two and five nanograms. That is not definitively established as impairment in all drivers. That part of the science is still a work-in-progress, I guess you could say. But, in actual fact, I think we're well on the way to being able to detect cannabis at the roadside, and we already have the ability to measure the concentration of THC in the blood.

The Chair: Hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, you wish to speak to the bill?

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's an opportunity for me today to address Bill 29. I wanted to just relate a couple of specific areas of concern that I have with regard to the bill, and, you know, as we're moving through the committee stage, we can address these. But I do want to back up just a little bit to give some of the reference or at least my frame of reference with regard to impaired driving in general, whether that impairment is due to alcohol or, in the case that we're discussing today, alcohol and drugs.

Last Thursday the Member for Edmonton-McClung told the Chamber about his brother Kevin. Kevin was my grad class president. The Member for Edmonton-McClung and I both attended Queen Elizabeth high school here in Edmonton. He was two years ahead of me, in my sister's class, and he was grad class president of my sister's class. Then two years later I actually ran against Kevin. I'm not sure if you even knew that. I ran against him. He trounced me thoroughly in the election for grad class president, but we were friends in high school.

As was related by the Member for Edmonton-McClung, tragically Kevin's life along with two other young women, who were attending Lakeland College in Vermilion – it's ironic that I would eventually end up representing that institution in my constituency. Kevin was attending Lakeland College along with two other women, and they were travelling back to Lakeland College before highway 16 was twinned. A drunk driver came across the road, and in a head-on collision all three young people were killed. Our first high school reunion happened about three months after we left high school. It was at Kevin's funeral. I can tell you that that experience had a profound effect on my view towards the whole question of impairment and driving. I appreciate my colleague bringing up the question of his brother, and he really honoured Kevin in what he said.

It would be 30 years later, in the middle of the night in May, that I received a phone call from some good friends of ours, and in a stammering voice I heard the voice of a good friend who said: "The RCMP are here along with victims' services. They've just told us that Devin has been killed in a car accident." Now, who was Devin? Well, Devin Racz was a speed skater that I had the privilege of coaching for a number of years. He was my son's best friend. In addition to being an outstanding speed skater, Devin was also an outstanding high school football player, and that was sort of a combination of athletic pursuits that was unusual. You had the big, tough football player, and then you had also the guy who wore a spandex outfit and 18-inch-long, razor-sharp blades and could skate like the wind. That was Devin Racz. After graduating from high school, Devin returned, and he helped me coach at our speed skating club in Lloydminster.

While returning to Lloydminster from a concert in Saskatoon, a drunk driver came across the road and struck Devin in his truck head-on. Devin was killed, and Devin's sister Melissa was very badly injured. Thankfully, she has recovered since then. For the next week I worked with Devin's mom and dad to help arrange Devin's funeral, to help the mourning process in our community because Devin was a very popular young man. He was very well known as one of the captains of the football team and very popular amongst speed skaters as a coach that everybody loved. Over 1,200 people were at Devin's memorial service.

That's the kind of carnage that drunk driving has caused in Canada. Sadly, despite the best efforts of organizations like Mothers Against Drunk Driving and other organizations the message is still not fully getting through. Canada, especially western Canada, has some of the highest levels of impaired driving anywhere on the planet, and it's completely unacceptable. Taking the wheel of your vehicle after you have had too much to drink is an act of supreme selfishness, and it reflects a wanton disregard for not only your own safety but the safety of others on the road. Too many families in Canada, too many families in Alberta have had to endure the heartache and the suffering that have been suffered by the Dach family, by the Racz family, and by so many others.

Understandably, Albertans are concerned that now there's another substance that we know causes impairment that is going to be legal. We know that on July 1 cannabis will be a legal substance in Canada, and we also know that cannabis affects your ability to do things in a way that requires split-second decision-making and fine motor skills. I would not want a surgeon who was impaired by cannabis doing an operation on me. I would not want a backhoe operator digging around gas lines and power lines who was impaired by cannabis in doing that operation. But as of July 1 it will be quite legal in Canada for people to recreationally use cannabis. Now, we can debate whether we are in agreement with that position or not. I think that that's obviously a debate – in fact, we have another bill that we are discussing that in.

But when it comes to the operation of a motor vehicle, that is potentially the most lethal weapon that anyone is allowed to operate, we don't yet have good, strong guidelines for exactly what constitutes impairment. Unlike alcohol, which is rapidly metabolized in the body and has a linear destabilization curve in the body, THC and cannabinoids do not. I have considerable concern as to how we are going to make those assessments.

Now, I know that there's work being done, and I'm glad that there's work being done. I'm a little bit concerned that we are first throwing the doors wide open and then trying to figure out how we're going to regulate all this, but that's the hand that we've been dealt. I'm glad to hear the Transportation minister when he says that there is work that is going to be ongoing. I certainly encourage the government to leave the doors open on this issue to make sure that we can continue to have the kinds of regulations and legislation put in place to make sure that this happens.

You know, back in 2012 the government that I was part of introduced a lower restriction, .05, for alcohol impairment, 50 milligrams per 100 milliliters of blood. It was vehemently opposed by the opposition party of the day. I remember being asked about it, and I told some folks in a group that was very much opposed to the .05 limit about Kevin and Devin and that if they were looking for someone who was going to advocate for more lax regulations for impaired driving, they were talking to the wrong person, that I would never advocate on behalf of more lax regulations.

In this regard, I am concerned, as I know many Albertans are concerned, that come July 1, we are going to see an increase in the number of drivers who are impaired by a substance which unfortunately – and the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake is quite correct. Sadly, there's an impression, a false impression, that while alcohol certainly causes impairment, the consumption of cannabis does not. I've even had some people try to tell me that they're better drivers after they've consumed cannabis. [interjections] You know, I hear some laughing over there. It's not a laughing matter. That's part of the public education process that has to go on. You know, I'm very concerned that we will see more drivers who are operating motor vehicles, one of the most dangerous things that you can do to public safety, under an impaired situation after July 1 of next year than we currently have now, and that, quite frankly, is the last thing we need to have happen.

I mean, overall, motor vehicle accident rates are on the decline. Certainly, fatality rates and major injury rates are on the decline, and those are positive things. There are a lot of factors involved. One of them is that our vehicles are safer than they used to be. You know, with some of the advancements in technology, our vehicles are safer, but the wild card in so many fatal and injury-causing collisions is the driver. If the driver is impaired, if the driver does not have the motor skills and the ability to make the kinds of split-second decisions that have to be made in the operation of a motor vehicle, then there's a problem.

From my standpoint and speaking certainly from my, you know, past experience with these two young men, these two young men who had tremendous promise, both of them, these two young men who would have been leaders and already were leaders in their peer group and would have become great leaders, because of them I will always be a very staunch advocate in favour of any additional restrictions to reduce the incidence of impaired driving, whether that be by cannabis, by alcohol, or by any other substance.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Other members wishing to speak? Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Chair. Pleased to add my comments to this very important piece of legislation, that has been obviously accelerated as a result of the federal decision to legalize cannabis, a decision I support. Clearly, it has risks. Clearly, it has caused lots of suffering already, especially in young brains. Clearly, too, we have to come to terms with it, as we have had to come to terms with other substances that alter our mental capacity and alter mood. We're moving ahead into this brave new world.

I think I want to recognize that the government is putting forward some reasonable legislation, apart from my concern still that the age at which it should be legalized should be raised. My colleague from Vermilion-Lloydminster has alluded to the fact that young people are more vulnerable, certainly, behind a wheel, where they have limited experience, using substances that they have limited experience with and being subject to peer pressure in a way that other age groups are not. I don't think we should be following the federal guideline of 18. I think we should set our own standard.

Given that the research on the young developing brain and the impacts of cannabis – there's still a lot of mystery. There are still a lot of unknowns around the impact on motor control, on judgment, on executive functions, on attention, and the tremendous variability in the young developing brain. Quite frankly, the male brain – it's clear from the research I've read – developmentally is slower than the female brain. Therefore, there is more concern about an 18-year-old male than there is about an 18-year-old female, but we can't distinguish those in terms of our legislation. They have to go together, and frankly it'll be safer for both males and females with an older age range.

The Canadian Medical Association has suggested 25. I don't think that's realistic, frankly. If the rest of the country is using 18 or 21, I think the best we can do is to push it to 21. That's three years of maturing, three years of experience with some degree of alcohol exposure and, hopefully, a recognition, both through educational and through life experience, that this combination of alcohol and cannabis is absolutely lethal for the young brain in terms of its ability to judge and to make sound decisions.

Bill 29 proposes to amend the Traffic Safety Act to comply with the May 18, 2017, Alberta Court of Appeal ruling that found it unconstitutional for the province to impose an indefinite licence suspension on a person that is charged with an impaired driving offence. The court gave the Alberta government until May 2018 to fix the legislation. That was the result of the previous government's attempts to try to be very, very clear and strong about reducing the carnage related to alcohol. Now we're going to have to amend that. That's fine. I think this is appropriate given the constitutional challenge.

The bill also updates the Traffic Safety Act to reflect the impending legalization, as I mentioned, pursuant to Bill C-46, specific to cannabis, cannabis-alcohol combination, and other combinations of drugs. People charged with impaired driving in Alberta will now face a 90-day licence suspension. Once that period is complete, drivers can get their licence back if they join the ignition interlock program for a year. That was a decision of the previous government that I supported.

This bill imposes expanded provincial administrative sanctions for drivers with a blood drug concentration or drug-alcohol combination over the new criminal limits proposed by the federal government in Bill C-46. The sanctions will be the same as those imposed on drivers suspected of being criminally impaired by alcohol. This bill adds impairment by cannabis, cannabis-alcohol, and other illegal drugs to the zero-tolerance rules for new drivers in the graduated licence program.

Parenthetically, there are a lot of medications out there now that are going to add to impairment: psychotropics, sedatives, hypnotics, drugs that many, many Canadians are taking for other reasons. This really requires a tremendous amount of, I guess, preparation of our police to be able to assess impairment quite apart from our ability to measure it in breath or blood. We're going to rely heavily on our police force to assess impairment by behavioural means and observation. That's going to be a challenge, but given the cocktails that are out there and that many people are using for important medical purposes as well as for recreational purposes, we have to be, I guess, recognizing that we're putting a lot of onus on our police force.

Just for the record, over the 10 years from 2006 to 2015, 1,000 people died in Alberta, approximately 100 per year, as a result of alcohol- or drug-impaired driving, and 15,000 people were injured. The ratio of deaths to injuries is staggering. The costs to our health care system, to our productivity, to our family life, to our employment are staggering. Mixing alcohol and drugs such as cannabis results in significantly increased impairment. In 2013, the last date that I have data for, 24 per cent of fatally injured drivers tested positive in lab tests for both alcohol and drugs, so about one-quarter of those fatalities were associated with a mixture.

Under Bill C-46 drivers will now face a maximum $1,000 fine if their blood tests positive for two to five nanograms of THC per millilitre of blood, the main psychoactive compound in cannabis. For drivers with more than five nanograms per millilitre of THC on a first impaired driving a minimum of $1,000 will be imposed, with increasingly harsh penalties such as jail time for subsequent offences. We can debate the rigour or the severity of these consequences, but there's no question that we need to send a strong message with any levels of impairment. The rules also impose penalties for combined alcohol-cannabis use of 2.5 nanograms per millilitre of THC with a blood alcohol of .05.

I guess I stand, Madam Chair, in general support of this bill.

I do hope that the government will seriously look at the legal age of use of cannabis. I think that we could set our own standard here; we don't need to follow the federal standard or that of our neighbours. I do caution that there is a tremendous lack of research on the young, developing brain and the use of cannabis. We're sending a certain message, I guess, to young people if we legalize it at a certain age, suggesting that we believe that people under the age of 18, in this case, have the maturity to decide not only whether or not to use the substance and the substance perhaps in combination with another substance that we know to be risking injury and death, but we are also saying that we believe that at 18 these individuals understand the consequences and can perceive, have the insight, have the personal maturity to see and recognize the risks that they're taking. I don't believe that's appropriate at a time when we are, if anything, seeing research that indicates that under the age of 25, certainly under the age of 21, young people are going to be at risk of having not only some significant impairment but are at risk of not recognizing the potential for addiction, the potential for this being a gateway to some other inappropriate drugs and risky behaviour.

Again, I guess I would remind the government that when we get to the other bill on legalizing cannabis, we look at the age and get the best possible research at the time because I know it's ongoing and there are new studies being reported almost weekly in the literature about some of these extra risk factors associated with younger brains and cannabis.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the words from the Member for Calgary-Mountain View. I certainly recognize his long work and expertise in the medical field and certainly respect his thoughts and his opinions on this. Though I recognize that, indeed, on this bill we're not specifically debating the question of age of access, though it does come into some of the discussion here, I did just want to respond to some of his remarks.

I can certainly appreciate the concerns he brings forward regarding, I guess, youth access, but I would note that in Canada we already have one of the highest rates of youth access to cannabis and usage of cannabis in the world. This isn't a question, I think, where if we set a higher age limit, that's suddenly going to disappear or that's necessarily even going to reduce that amount. Under the system that we currently have, with no restrictions in place, youth are already freely accessing cannabis.

Now, that doesn't mean, Madam Chair, that I think that youth at the age of 14 or 15 or 16 or those that are currently accessing it at these younger ages should be doing so. Absolutely not. But I think setting a higher age limit at 25 or 21 is simply then going to encourage the continuance of that black market that exists. They will continue to look for ways to purchase it from older people, who maybe are going to purchase it and provide it to them, or other ways that might happen. I don't see that setting that higher age would necessarily prevent that from occurring.

Those are just my own thoughts on it. That's why I support the current age limit that we're bringing forward, 18. Certainly, I recognize that youth at that age are still developing and are still learning decision-making skills, but we do trust them to make those decisions around alcohol. We trust them to make those decisions around tobacco. We trust them to make their decisions around driving a vehicle. I think that we can continue to provide education, support, understanding to make sure that at the age of 18 they understand better the implications of some of the decisions they may choose to make. Indeed, we can continue on research and looking into effects, but I do think for the reasons that I stated that we do need to move forward with the age limit of 18.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? Rocky Mountain House-Rimbey . . .

Mr. Nixon: And Sundre. Can't forget about Sundre.

The Chair: Don't forget about Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: It's a pretty important place. I do love Sundre, Madam Chair. The Government House Leader likes Sundre as well. I do enjoy that he comes and visits every once in a while. He leaves a note when I'm not around. He's very considerate, as I have always said.

Madam Chair, I actually have a couple of questions for the minister – the minister may be able to take a brief moment to answer them – just in regard to this bill. One of them is that some provinces are proposing zero tolerance for commercial drivers, as the minister would know, such as truckers. I guess my question to him: was that a consideration for Alberta? Is that in the works for the future, when roadside screening is available?

I would also point this out or ask it this way. Because there's no approved roadside device for THC yet, which of course the minister would know, it's not very clear how dangerous our roads may become on July 1. I don't think anybody could fully determine that yet. Other jurisdictions, though, have seen an increase in impaired driving incidents after legalization, which the minister also knows. I guess maybe if he could comment a little bit on what he foresees as the ability to be able to test for THC as this legislation goes forward.

Then my last question is that there are many myths that are associated with cannabis not being as impairing as alcohol when people are driving. Maybe the minister could comment on some of the plans for public education around that issue. I think all members of this House agree on the importance of not having people driving impaired or operating equipment in an impaired way. I think we all agree on that, but the fact that that myth does exist: it would be interesting to hear what the minister's thoughts are on how public consultation, public education would go forward on that important issue, I think, Madam Chair.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much for those questions, hon. member. Yes, we have been in discussions with the Alberta Motor Transport Association. They are supportive in general of zero tolerance for people operating large trucks, but they've indicated that they want to await a reliable and approved roadside testing, just as the hon. member has said. We'll certainly be considering that when that comes forward. It is not something we've ruled out at all, but we'll continue to have discussions with them on that matter.

With respect to advertising going forward and the communications side of this in general, I also agree that it is a very important thing. I think there are misconceptions with respect to cannabis, and I think we've got a bit of work to do in terms of public awareness and perception of that question. So we will be initiating a public education campaign supporting the implementation early in the new year, and the message is that cannabis is an impairing substance and is going to be treated by the federal government under the Criminal Code and by us through our administrative initiatives in the transportation safety act as seriously as alcohol is.

There are going to be a number of approaches, hon. member, including bought advertising. I'm currently in the process of being briefed by the department with respect to specific messaging, specific media buys, that sort of thing. But we are going to be working on that and taking that as an important priority in the new year. There will be sort of a very vigorous, I think, public information campaign around this legislation and around the dangers of impaired driving involving drugs.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Yes. Thank you, Madam Chair. As I spoke in second reading, I support the bill, and I realize, you know, the provincial government is forced to rush this through because of the federal Bill C-45. You know, that still leaves some questions, and I'm sure the minister has questions as well. He has talked about them and, hopefully, having a roadside test available by July 1. I always hate to count on hopes, but hopefully he does.

Even if we do have a reliable roadside test, then you have to take them back to the police station for blood tests. That's a little bit unclear to me, but it sounds like it's the police station. So you have to train people to take the blood, and I know from what I've been told that the training is only in Arizona, in the States. I could be wrong, but that's what I've been told. In order to get enough people trained in order to take that blood, even once you get the roadside test approved, you know, who's going to be taking the blood, and what's the cost of this? There's going to be quite a bit of cost if you've got to send people to Arizona to take the course. Are you going to have access to that expertise in rural Alberta and all over? Like, that's a lot of work to get done in a hurry.

Quite frankly, with no disrespect to the police, obviously, I don't think I'd ever have to. I'm quite confident in myself not having to do it, but I don't think I'd ever want a police officer jabbing me with a needle to take blood out. Even some of the professional nurses have trouble doing that once in a while, so I don't want him doing it either. You know, then you run the risk of infection. Like, there are a lot of questions. I'd sooner have Starke doing it than Ellis. Well, we're not supposed to talk like that.

You know, it just leaves a lot of questions. In a hurry, usually when you're rushed through something like this, it's when mistakes happen. But I know it's not your fault. You're forced to do that. I don't know if you can answer any of those questions.

Also, there's the question about that even if a blood test shows THC in the blood, there's a challenge. Does that mean you're impaired? It can stay in the blood for a long time, the levels, so then it's going to be challenged in courts, I'm sure, and this could drag out for quite a while.

You know, I think the whole thing here in this bill is to take impaired drivers off the road and to keep our roads safe. I know that's what the minister is trying to do, and I think that's what we all want. It's just how we do that. It has been mentioned, the combination of drugs and alcohol. There are a lot of questions. I know our friends from MADD want it to be 22 years of age with zero tolerance.

You know, I just can't see having enough people trained quickly enough by July 1 to be taking the blood tests even if we do have a roadside screening test that sends them there. I know that's putting the minister on the spot, and I know he's forced there by the federal government.

In the end, we'll support this bill because we need legislation to keep our roads safe. There are still a lot of questions around it. That's all.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much. Madam Chair, I'm very sorry. I need to attend at the Premier's office right away, but I'm going to answer these questions. I have my cosponsors here to answer other questions.

First, to deal with the question of impairment, you know, the federal amendments to the Criminal Code are quite clear. They are using a per se limit, as we have done in this country with the .08. So if you are at .08 blood-alcohol content or higher, you are deemed to be impaired without any further proof required. The federal government is adopting the same approach with the two- and five-nanogram limits. A more serious penalty is applied if it's five or higher, but it is also a criminal offence at two and higher. In the act there's not a requirement to prove actual impairment. It's a simple per se test, and that's how they're going to proceed.

With respect to costs, there are costs associated with this. As you know, we are not in agreement with the federal government's position on the splitting of the revenues because all the costs come to the province and to municipalities and very few of the costs accrue to the federal government, yet they're going to take 50 per cent of the revenue from the sale of cannabis. We don't agree with that position.

Costs to us have been estimated at about $10.1 million over five years. We expect $6.6 million for one-time costs and $3.42 million in ongoing costs, and the cost recovery is estimated at $190,375 annually. Those are preliminary numbers. We are certainly going to have to train additional people. One of the things you didn't mention, hon. member, is that in addition to technicians that will be required to administer the blood tests, we are also employing drug recognition experts and training them to recognize the symptoms, and that will be considered sufficient in order to lay a charge under the transportation safety act that we're proposing, perhaps not a criminal charge.

As the Member for Calgary-Mountain View has indicated, the range of drugs available that aren't captured by this legislation or by the federal Criminal Code that cause impairment require the kinds of tests that aren't necessarily a chemical blood test or, you know, a saliva test or a breathalyzer or something. It requires the ability to recognize impairment. Yes, it is somewhat subjective, but actually the evidence shows that people properly trained have a very high success rate in identifying not just impairment but the drug causing the impairment. It's not perfect, but that is something we're going – so those will be costs as well. My experience is that when they bring you the first set of numbers, they may not be the last set of numbers. Just an observation, watching government for a long time. But those are the numbers we have now.

The Chair: Any other comments, questions, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to move an amendment. I have the requisite number of copies.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A3.
Go ahead.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Chair. This amendment is an important addition to Bill 29, An Act to Reduce Cannabis and Alcohol Impaired Driving. This amendment will save lives, I believe, as our province deals with a newly legalized recreational drug which our police services are not necessarily ready for at this time. I recognize that "saving lives" is a strong statement, but this amendment will do just that by implementing zero tolerance for any driver found with marijuana in their system.

I would seek guidance from the chair. I can read the amendment in its entirety into the record, or I can essentially highlight the part of the amendment for members to take notice of.

The Chair: Hon. member, it's not necessary to read the whole amendment. If everybody has got a copy, they can follow along as you highlight for them.

Mr. van Dijken: Okay. Thank you, Madam Chair. Essentially, what we're dealing with here in amendment A3 is on page 3 of the amendment under item D, where

Section 15 is amended as follows:

You'll see a line there entitled

(a) the heading preceding section 90(1) is amended by striking out "re novice driver";

(b) in clause (b) by striking out the proposed section 90(2.1) and substituting the following:

(2.1) If a peace officer reasonably suspects that the driver of a motor vehicle, having consumed a drug, drove the motor vehicle, the peace officer may require that the driver forthwith provide a bodily substance sample for analysis by approved drug screening equipment.

When we look at the current bill, we see that novice drivers would have zero tolerance. But our UCP caucus has many concerns with the way our federal government has forced legalization and legalized marijuana on us, and we recognize that our provincial government has to be prepared for it. My concern with Bill 29 is that our government should be taking maximum measures to ensure safety on our roads once this drug is legalized.

Madam Chair, there is no approved roadside device at this time to measure cannabis impairment, and even if the Trudeau government manages to sanction one in time for July 1, 2018, many court challenges are expected to follow. Despite this, our Liberal government in Ottawa is forging ahead, but my question is: are we ready? That is why our UCP caucus is asking our provincial government to join Quebec in setting zero tolerance for all drivers on our province's roads.

Currently Bill 29 proposes only to extend zero tolerance for drugs to novice drivers, but establishing zero tolerance for every driver sends Albertans the strongest message possible about the dangers of using marijuana and then getting behind the wheel. I believe it also sends a firm message to Ottawa that fast-tracking legislation is not acceptable, especially when the objective is solely to cross a campaign promise off a list.

We must be ready before we move forward, and I believe that we need to ensure that we are proceeding in the safest possible manner and sending the signal to Albertans that the provincial government is ready to take a firm stand on the use of cannabis and the operation of motor vehicles. We need to ensure that our roads are safe. We might not be able to slow down legalization, but our UCP caucus believes that zero tolerance is vital for the safety of Albertans, particularly when legalization is, I believe, occurring prematurely.

I do want to point out that zero tolerance is an administrative sanction for low levels of THC or, for that matter, any legal drug that's in a driver's system. If police deem a driver is impaired by drugs and they lay criminal charges, the driver would face another layer of administrative sanctions. Of course, they would have to deal with the criminal charges in court, but zero tolerance is the same kind of system that is in place now for novice or inexperienced drivers, and I hope that all members of this House view this amendment as taking a strong stance that is needed as we deal with a newly legalized recreational drug in Canada.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A3? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm actually pleased to rise again to discuss this important bill. I rise basically for many reasons, some of which I outlined in my comments on second reading. We do need to keep our roads safe in this province, and we do need to be able to respond to what is coming down the road – sorry for the pun – in terms of federal legislation. We can't put our heads in the sand and not react to what the federal government is proposing. Basically this province is showing a great deal of anticipation and innovativeness in dealing with this and giving our police services as well as the public clear messages about how we are not going to tolerate impaired driving on the streets and roads of Alberta.

I'm speaking, actually, in opposition to this amendment. I think it is well intentioned, and I appreciate the words of the Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, but I don't think it deals really with the reality of 2017. The reality is that cannabis is an important part of the medical armamentarium for many people, and as of July of 2018 it is actually going to be a legal substance. To say that all drivers, adults as well as persons with graduated licences, cannot have any cannabis in their saliva or in their blood if they're operating a vehicle really is not realistic. I'm particularly concerned about my patients that I prescribe medical marijuana for. If we would follow the reasoning of the UCP opposition, those people would actually be denied the opportunity to operate a motor vehicle because, as has been said several times by several speakers here, cannabis actually persists in the body.

You know, I go back, actually, to the Winter Olympics – I think it was 20 or 25 years ago – and I know that some of my colleagues remember this. Ross Rebagliati was initially denied a gold medal that, in my opinion, he richly deserved for his efforts, and it was subsequently replaced because it may be the situation – I don't think we know all of the details of this – that he was at a party in which he absorbed some second-hand cannabis smoke and that this material actually persisted in his urine for a long time.

Dr. Starke: It's okay. Ross isn't sure either.

Dr. Turner: He's forgotten about the episode.

But that's an example of this sort of thing. Certainly, my patients who I prescribe medical marijuana for would be subject to the same sort of limitations.

I think that to burden this act with this sort of legislation would be very short-sighted. For sure, the defence lawyers are going to be taking this to the courts, and it will go all the way up to the Supreme Court, and it will take years to do this. In the meantime our ability to enforce a reasonable legislation in this province will be hampered, in my opinion.

You know, the Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock talks about forced legalization by the feds. Well, I really disagree with that sort of verbiage. It is and was in the power of the federal government to do this. This sort of so-called forced legalization has occurred in many jurisdictions in the United States and elsewhere, particularly in Europe, and there doesn't seem to be the crisis that is being implied by that verbiage.

There's also concern that there isn't an approved roadside device. Well, apparently, those roadside devices are being developed, and I think we have to take the assurances of Health Canada and the federal government that those devices will be available by July 2018.

The fact that Quebec has decided on zero tolerance I have some problems with, too. I mean, I don't understand why they didn't support the Energy East pipeline. I don't understand their approach to human rights with persons wearing the niqab, et cetera. I'm not sure that I want to join with Quebec in this kind of legislation, which I think is also very short-sighted.

You know, the point of this legislation – I'm going to come back to the main point of this legislation – is to get Alberta ready for the legalization, and that means that we have to have procedures and practices in place that are going to be able to withstand at least most of the court challenges and keep our roads safe.

In today's Globe and Mail, actually, there is an obituary of John Bates. He was actually the founder of MADD Canada, and he was the son of Dr. Bates, who was Canada's original anti drunk driving advocate. It was actually a story that's very similar to the story that was told by my colleague from Edmonton-McClung and my colleague from Vermilion-Lloydminster that led Dr. Bates, the father of John Bates, to develop this. This was the death of a friend, a 17-year-old son of June Callwood, who's a famous Canadian author and publisher. This led to the development of an organization, primarily in Ontario and Quebec, that agitated for improvements in the prevention of impaired driving through legislation as well as public education things. Basically, John Bates continued throughout his life. He was 90 years old when he died, so much of the work that he did was 20, 30, 40 years ago.

What MADD Canada would tell us to do is to get ready for the inevitable, which is that there is going to be cannabis being utilized in a recreational manner as of July 2018. The other thing that's important that MADD would want me to be reminding folks of is that this particular bill that we're discussing, Bill 29, is also going to be correcting a hole in the Alberta legislation in regard to mandatory suspension of driving privileges. I think that to try to tinker with what we're doing at this date rather than waiting for next year, when we know that the devices are going to be available and what the various impairment things are, is very short-sighted.

For all of those reasons, I'm going to basically urge my colleagues not to support this legislation – to not support the amendment. I'm opposed to amendment A3.

The Chair: Thank you for that clarification, hon. member.

Any other speakers to amendment A3? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. As I had said earlier, before A3, I believe that we need to do a better job of making sure that we can take impaired drivers off the road. I can tell you that my colleague has brought forward a very important piece of legislation, an amendment that will actually take into account that right now we just don't have the ability to protect our roads from drivers that are under the influence of drugs. Now, what I will say is that this is something that we can change once the tests are in place. Once we have the ability to be able to test for this drug, then we'll be able to move forward and say that we've got a good, strict set of guidelines to be able to do that.

Now, obviously, Quebec is not one of my favourite provinces right now as they have had some trouble with our pipelines, but I will say that they did bring forward a clear direction for their roads. They saw the problem. They saw that this is a result that could cost the province millions if not billions of dollars in liability, which is something I just brought up in the speech before, saying: because we have no way of testing and getting impaired people off the roads, will our province become liable, when it comes time, from the fact that these people could be caught and that we let them go and that then they create a heinous crime? Quebec has seen this as a problem. I don't know why we would not see this and give this the same gravity that they are giving this same issue.

Now, I hear the concern from the government member saying that he feels that we're in the right spot and that we should just trust the federal government because they're going to do the right thing. I would say that Prime Minister Trudeau and the Liberals made a campaign promise, realized that they had to fulfill the campaign promise, and now we're stuck with a rushed-through piece of legislation with no ability to be able to deal with the fact that we have unsafe job sites, that we're going to have unsafe roads, and that we have the potential of this getting into the hands of children.

Now, if this is something that the federal Liberals wanted to move towards, then they needed these solutions ahead of time. That is what a responsible government does. We can either accept that our roads are unsafe, or we can use zero tolerance as a platform to move forward, and this is where our amendment before was so important. We had a request for a sunset clause put into this because we can always go back to correct this. With the first few deaths that come through where it can be shown that they may have been preventable, this is on us as legislators for not saying right off the bat that driving under the influence of marijuana is not okay under any circumstance until we have the ability to test for impairment.

Now, I understand the Transportation minister – and I thank him for his answers and the clarity brought forward after my last speech – saying that we do have the ability to do a potential roadside screening eventually, but I'll tell you that it doesn't fill me with a warm, fuzzy feeling that we don't have that technology here now. We also don't have the ability to be able to say: "Hey, you know what? This is where an impaired person's place is once we've caught them." Now, I understand that there are some certain milligrams of THC's in the blood and that kind of stuff, and again I do share some sympathy for the current government from the fact that this is being rammed down our throats even though the member from across feels that this is something that has been long in coming, probably.

I will tell you that, in the end, we are looking at unsafe roads. This is something that is incredibly unbelievable and irresponsible for us as a government to move forward with. That's why A3 is so important. It is so important. How many tragedies are we going to see, moving forward, until we realize as a government that we need to prevent them? Are we going to be going back in a year from now? The government has done this several times. If you look at the debt cap that was put on there, three months later we got rid of it. It's because what happens is that if you don't fully think out how this is going to impact Albertans and the safety of Albertans, the risk outweighs what the benefits are here, and I don't see any benefits. I just see a whole lot of risk. Zero tolerance is the clear way to go. It is the clear way for us to be responsible parliamentarians, to be ensuring that our citizens are safe.

Now, I see that we do have other provinces that are moving along in the same direction, but in the end are they going to run into the same problems that we are running into when we are having people, potentially, on our roads that are very, very unsafe?

Now, the one thing that is brought up by the Minister of Transportation is that we don't have the swab ready to be able to test for it quite yet – that's at the roadside – so then we are going to the next part, which is a blood test. I am always concerned when you start jabbing people with needles, and we heard that from one of the other members, saying that we need to be careful when we start putting needles into people.

Dr. Swann: I don't like it either.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you to my colleague, who agrees that being stuck with needles is not a favourite thing of his.

But you know what? I have to say that we are seeing a movement these days that shows that we constitutionally have the right to have our own bodies. Is it something that we're going to see someday, where you're going to need a warrant in order to get blood out of a person? If we need a warrant, how do we get to that blood? Even if for some reason, let's say, this test comes through, the swab test on the road, this test to be able to decide whether or not this person has some impairment – let's say that the government of Canada, the federal government, is able to bring that forward before July 1, fully train all of our police forces on how to do it responsibly even though I hear it's something like $18,000 per officer to do that training, and somebody can correct me if I'm wrong – what we're looking at here is an incredible cost, but we're also looking at a person's rights. When we start to say that if a warrant is needed, then we will know for a fact that that person is impaired, but we are not able to test to be able to get to that impairment, this is a problem. We really need to ensure that we have people that are impaired off the roads.

Now, I don't know if the solution is ever going to be a breathalyzer like alcohol. That is something that I would say that someday we might get to. I do believe that we're probably in the long term going to be looking at blood tests when we look at impairment when it comes to our marijuana use. So until we have the science in place, zero tolerance just makes sense. It makes sense. It is something that we need to start investigating right now. We need to start saying that at this moment we agree that the federal government is moving towards legalizing marijuana, cannabis. It is looking at moving in this direction, fine, but let's keep our roads safe, let's keep our jobs safe, and let's make sure that this stuff is out of the hands of our children. As we have seen repeatedly, this is something that is completely destructive for youth.

When we start looking at what's happening these days, we're actually having people on the roadside refusing to provide breathalyzers. I can only assume that same response is going to happen with marijuana. If we're looking at the fact that denying or refusing breathalyzers is something that is out there at present and that they know that at the end of this a blood test is going to be there for marijuana, will we see a ton of people refusing these tests right on the roadside?

Now, I fully have confidence in our RCMP, I have full confidence in our sheriffs, I have full confidence in our peace officers that they will use every tool they have to keep our roads safe. All confidence. But if we don't give them the tools, they can't do the job, so it's not their fault when this stuff happens, when terrible things happen. It comes down to us as legislators making the right decisions, making sure the roads are safe.

My colleague has brought forward a reasonable amendment that this House needs to see, needs to move forward, and actually needs to put into this legislation. Let's not think about this right now. Let's think about this a year from now, when this government realizes that it made a mistake and will be looking through Hansard and seeing my comments saying: why do we not do this now, before it becomes a real problem to correct later on down the road? For some reason the federal government rushed through the process – that's what it looks like they're doing – for roadside screening, and you know what ends up happening? We throw out all of the cases for six or eight months because it's not a responsible way to roadside screen.

That is awful that we have people that have victimized Albertans and that have put Albertans at risk that have no chance of seeing justice. This is exactly what's happening with the Jordan case that moved forward, that our courts are holding criminals in them for too long without actually following through with the case. This is the same kind of thing that lets criminals onto the streets that should be in our prisons or our correctional facilities, our remand centres. These people who drive under the influence need to be held responsible for the crime of driving under the influence. That is just a fact. Until we can do roadside screening, until that happens, until we see the federal government has had proven cases through the courts, until we see that the blood tests will always be available to us, we need to step back, we need to re-evaluate, and we need to go zero tolerance for marijuana when it comes to driving.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other speakers on amendment A3? I'll recognize Red Deer-South.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm standing to speak against the amendment. I'm sure everyone in here has a friend, a loved one who has been affected by an impaired driver. It doesn't matter if it's cannabis or if it's alcohol or any other kind of drug: zero tolerance for cannabis isn't going to stop people who don't believe they are impaired.

I'm a total nondrinker, so I don't personally understand how someone would choose to get behind the wheel when they've been drinking. It's just something that's foreign to me. But you've got people like Brad Arsenault, who was 18, Kole Novak, who was 18, Thaddeus Lake, who was 22, who were killed by an impaired driver going 243 kilometres in a 70 zone, and he pled not guilty because he didn't think he was impaired.

It doesn't matter what substance you're impaired on; it's your choice whether or not you're going to drink and drive, drug and drive, or drink and drug and drive. In the end it is the person who is imbibing the substances that is putting the people at risk. It's not saying that it's zero tolerance, which it is for GDL licences. Saying that we're going to put people at risk because everybody isn't at zero tolerance, that's just wrong. It's the person who is drinking or drugging and driving that is putting the people at risk. That's not right to blame it on all of society. It's the perpetrators who are the guilty ones.

Thank you.

The Chair: Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. It is a pleasure to stand and speak to this amendment in regard to zero tolerance. I think it's widely known, of course, that I do have a background in law enforcement. You know, I've been listening both in my office, of course, and here now, and I would really at this point like to take my partisan hat off and speak to you as a former sergeant with the Calgary Police Service. This is not an amendment that is taken lightly. I agree with my colleague from Bonnyville-Cold Lake. I mean, what we're talking about here is saving people's lives.

I heard a comment earlier, and I agree that there's a cultural shift, and I agree that it is going to be legalized. But there are many prescriptions, there are many opioids that people are prescribed where it specifically says: do not operate heavy machinery; don't drive. I mean, we have to understand the impairment of tracking, reaction time, visual function, concentration, short-term memory, the ability to respond to multiple sources of information, and reaction to unexpected events. I mean, these are all parts of a human being that are impacted by marijuana.

I've certainly had an opportunity to do my homework on this subject as well and talk to law enforcement from around the province, not just the Calgary Police Service but around the province. I've talked to high-ranking officials. So let's take a step back here and talk about how this would play out. Right now there is nothing to test whether somebody is impaired. I know that there is a swab test that is potentially in the process that is hopefully going to be done by the federal government by July of next year. Let's just make the assumption that that swab test is going to be approved.

Okay. Great. Now we're assuming that we're dealing with co-operative individuals. I can tell you as a former certified breath technician with the province of Alberta that when we're dealing with people that are impaired, they're not always co-operative. When I read somebody a breath demand, I cannot tell you the number of times that I've been informed that – of course, they say it with a slurred tone when they're talking to me – the instrument is broken or defective in some way.

But let's just assume – let's assume – that this swab test is going to work and it is going to say that the person has THC content in them, which, of course, will give that officer reasonable grounds now to lay the arrest when it comes to impaired driving by drugs. Okay. Now what do we do? Well, I've heard numerous people, even in my investigation here, say: well, we'll just go and get a blood test. Who's going to conduct this blood test? What resources do we have to take blood? Let me tell you – I'm going to correct, with all due respect, my friend from Bonnyville-Cold Lake – that taking somebody's blood is the most invasive thing that law enforcement or any government can do.

Yes, you need a judicial warrant in order to take anybody's blood. So, okay, let's assume now that I go and I get that judicial warrant. God knows how many hours it's going to take to get that warrant. Are we going to take these people to the emergency room? Are we going to have all of our hospitals now filled with impaired drivers by drug? Are the doctors going to need that warrant in order to extract that blood?

Then I heard a possible theory, and the theory goes: well, we'll just have law enforcement do it. Well, let me tell you that all the high-ranking members of the law enforcement community that I spoke to, when I told them this, met me with complete and utter laughter: "You're kidding me. There is no policeman that's going to extract anybody's blood." There is no law enforcement community in this province that, even if you say that this is something they can do, will do it. I'm telling you that right now.

Okay. So let's assume that you've now decided that we are going to take these people to the police station. Okay. Now we're going to have to set up some sort of infrastructure with somebody that we're going to have to pay or on a call-out basis to extract blood, which is obviously going to be some technician, some nurse. I don't know, right? These are things that we have to consider, but I can tell you that it is not going to happen that the law enforcement community is going to extract people's blood.

We do that right now for impaired driving by alcohol, and we do it when somebody has been involved in a very dangerous accident, like was previously mentioned by my colleague on the other side, where the person has been unconscious or unable to give a breath demand. Yes, when the person is taken to the hospital, we do get a blood sample from them. However, that is done through a judicial warrant. There is, again, nothing that this Assembly can do that will likely not require a judicial warrant to extract somebody's blood, not to mention – and I think it was previously mentioned. Let's figure out how this is going to play in court, shall we? I can tell you right now that numerous defence attorneys that I have spoken to are salivating right now at the challenges that are going to occur with this.

So when we talk about lives, when we talk about saving people, really, from a nonpartisan perspective, honestly, zero tolerance is really the way to go on this. You know, when we now put the partisan hat on, I can't believe that we're the ones arguing for zero tolerance and that the other side is not.

I'm sorry, but I have attended so many traffic accidents. I'll give you one. When I first attended district 2, which is the community in which I live, the first call I went to as a sergeant in that specific district was a 3 o'clock in the morning incident whereby these two lovely people were driving people home who were too impaired to drive a vehicle. They were minding their own business. They had finished dropping off the people that were impaired, and they were driving. I don't want to give too many details because I don't want to. They were driving people home. Along comes Mr. Offender in his brand new $100,000-plus Mercedes-Benz doing 200-plus kilometres on the road and, bam, nails them, T-bones them. Both people died. The poor lady that was in the vehicle was flung from the vehicle. The top of her head was decapitated. That's not just alcohol, you guys. That's impaired. That's marijuana as well. That's opioids. It's anything that can affect one's ability to operate a motor vehicle.

You are putting lives at risk – I swear to you – by not accepting this amendment. This isn't just me talking. This isn't a partisan person talking as part of the Conservative Party. Now I'm going to speak on behalf of my friends in the law enforcement community, who I am proud to unofficially represent, and say that you're affecting them. You are affecting their ability right now, and you are putting lives at risk.

I have been to the impaired accidents. I do not want to see – and let me tell you something. I have charged people with impaired driving by marijuana because you can obviously smell the burned marijuana, right? The signs, the indicia: the bloodshot eyes, the slow and deliberate movements.

Yes, it is a choice. I agree. It is a choice that they make, and people make poor decisions while under the influence of alcohol and while under the influence of drugs. Sadly, in the world in which we live, we need to help them not make those poor choices. That is through education, that is through prevention, and that is through intervention. That's why it is actually very important to support this amendment, not because, you know, you think you're going to give the UCP a win here and that somehow it's going to advantage them in some way. No, no.

This was thrust upon you guys. It was thrust upon us by the federal government. This was a law that was not thought through. I gave the House leader credit – didn't I? – earlier today because I know that they care. I know that you guys are doing the best that you can do. Nobody in this world is perfect, but we can do it better together. We did it in Bill 205. I give you guys as much credit as I get for Bill 205, and I'm happy to give you guys credit for this. You guys were given this. I don't want to swear here and use my police language, but you guys were given a sandwich that doesn't look very good, and you guys are trying to make something out of it. I get that.

An Hon. Member: It doesn't taste very good either.

Mr. Ellis: Yeah. I get that – right? – and I give you guys credit.

But this is something that, quite frankly, we can do to make this better. Yeah, we have GDL drivers, and, yeah, we have, again, you know, all different types of commercial drivers, but I can tell you right now that, from marijuana to opioids to alcohol, specifically here in regard to marijuana, there has to be a zero tolerance because, as to my previous amendment here, this is just an evolving sphere, an evolving process that none of us – I don't expect you guys to get a grasp on this.

This is a cultural shift in our society. This is an industry that is currently owned and operated by organized crime. Organized crime is who deals with this industry. So we need to work together on this for the people of this province, for the constituents whom we represent, for the people who could potentially become victims of impaired drivers through marijuana no differently than impaired drivers through alcohol.

I was proud to hear earlier today – it was before my time – that the previous NDP caucus under the House leader did support that .05. I had some influence on that, and I'm proud to say that I did – right? – because I understood what was happening in our court systems in regard to impaired drivers. I saw the lives of the people who were victims of impaired drivers. That couple that I told you about: I haven't even touched on their families, that were impacted.

Yeah, that guy: he pled not guilty. He pled not guilty not because he thought he wasn't impaired; he pled not guilty because, quite frankly, that's the system which we're in right now. Sadly – sadly – quite frankly, it's become a running joke amongst our law enforcement community that for $10,000 or $15,000 you can get off an impaired driving charge. Sure. Does that make it right? No, right? Sometimes it's over technicalities. I've heard of technicalities where somebody alleged that their shoes were the wrong size, which is why they were walking a little awkwardly. Come on. You guys know as well as I know that that was probably not accurate, again trying to be really nice here. However, these are likely people that got off impaired driving charges.

So what can we do to help protect this community, to help protect the people we represent? I think that we work co-operatively on this bill, which I think we are doing, from what I've seen, and we actually support this zero tolerance. We support it. I don't think there's a person over there that doesn't want to save a life. Otherwise, you wouldn't have supported Bill 205. I think that by supporting this bill, you can have another chance to say again that you did something and that you've done it before and you'll do it again. But this is another opportunity to say: hey, we did something good today, and we can save some lives.

I want to thank you, Madam Chair, for the opportunity to speak here. I don't think I even touched any of my notes. I spoke with passion because I care, and I believe – I believe – that you guys will do the right thing here. I really do, and I say that with the sincerest, sincerest part of me. You will do the right thing. I believe that zero tolerance is the right thing here in this particular case.

Madam Chair, thank you very much for your time.

The Chair: Any other speakers to amendment A3? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Yes. I'd just like to take a few minutes to speak to this amendment, too. Obviously, this situation that we're in here now was brought on, of course, by the federal government. This government and we in this Legislature are forced to come up with something to deal with this issue that's been brought forward. I think it's very unfortunate that the federal government put the cart before the horse. They didn't come up with the proper way to do this. I mean, here we are, where there's something that's going to become legalized that creates impairment, that could create many safety issues on our streets, and this government hasn't fully thought this out and doesn't have a plan in place. There's no strategy here to deal with the situation of safety on the highways and on the streets in our cities and towns and across Canada.

I wanted to read here just a little bit from a CBC article. It's from a July 2017 report by the U.S. Department of Transportation. Now, the spokesman for this organization, the Canadian Centre on Substance Use and Addiction, says:

Tests alone are not good indicators of cannabis impairment.

"The thing about cannabis is the effects are quite variable . . . You can find impairment at very, very low levels, as well as higher levels."

According to this report

THC levels in blood drop dramatically – as much as 80 to 90 per cent – within 30 minutes after ingesting.

But, the report said "peak impairment occurs at 90 minutes after smoking while the THC level has declined over 80 per cent from the peak level."

What this report concludes is:

THC level in blood (or oral fluid) does not appear to be an accurate and reliable predictor of impairment from THC.

Here we have a situation where this person who would be considered an expert, far more expert than myself or anybody in this room because this is what they do, has concluded that "THC level in blood (or oral fluid) does not appear to be an accurate and reliable predictor of impairment from THC." We're sitting here in a situation where this will become legal on July 1 according to the federal government. We talk about: "Okay. There are blood tests. There are saliva tests. There are all these different things that are coming about that supposedly work." But we have experts saying that they don't work, so we don't have anything that's reliable. We don't have anything that's for sure, but of course the federal government is going to push this through anyway.

We have an opportunity with this amendment to have a safety net, basically, for the people of Alberta until something comes up that is reliable, that is proven, that they can rely on. We can have that safety net in place by passing this amendment until such a time as there is something to accurately gauge these substances and their effects on people and their driving. I think we need to support this amendment. We need to carry on with the business of protecting Albertans. This is all about impairment. This has nothing to do with the legalization of marijuana, because that's a federal issue, and that's what they're bound and determined to do. This has to do with protecting the public of Alberta on the streets and highways, and this amendment allows us that opportunity to have a greater influence on the safety of Albertans.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other speakers to amendment A3? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Yeah. And I will be brief. I promise you, Madam Chair. The other reason that hasn't been, in my view, talked about today is the uncertainty. There have been different comments about how good the tests are for marijuana, knowing whether you're impaired. I think it's fairly documented that there are strong legislation and well-accepted tests for alcohol. What we haven't really talked about, which is another reason to pass this amendment, is the uncertainty about the combination of alcohol and marijuana. If you're under the legal limit for alcohol and you're under the legal limit for marijuana, combined are you impaired? I don't know. If somebody in this room thinks they've got the answer to that, I wish they'd pop up when I'm finished and tell me. But if nobody in the room does have the answer, then perhaps you should pass this amendment in order to keep the roads safe and to not, by virtue of not asking the right questions, put the roads at risk of being unsafe.

So I'll ask the members of the House to think about that. I haven't heard anybody suggest that they had the answer to that question along the way here, and without that answer I'm not sure what choice we have but to vote for this particular amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other speakers to the amendment? The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you, Madam Chair. With respect to the combination – and I'm not sure that this is the answer he's looking for because it's right in the materials – in case there's some confusion about it, the federal Criminal Code amendments include limits for combined alcohol and marijuana use, and they are 2.5 nanograms per millilitre or more of THC combined with 50 milligrams per 100 millilitres or more of alcohol. The first offence is proposed at a minimum $1,000 fine and a criminal record, a second offence is a mandatory 30 days' imprisonment, and a third or subsequent offence is a mandatory 120 days' imprisonment.

With respect to some of the comments made by the hon. Member for Calgary-West with respect to difficulties involved with collecting blood, blood samples have always been available without a warrant at the hospital pursuant to the Criminal Code blood demand. Bill C-46 greatly expands police power to obtain a blood sample by creating qualified blood technicians – and we have money budgeted for this expense, which I answered in response to the hon. member earlier today – who can take samples which would not be taken at the hospital. Bill C-46 will allow these samples to be made without a warrant whenever an officer has reasonable grounds to believe the person is impaired, over .08 or over the blood drug concentration. And an accused can request a sample for independent testing if it is taken pursuant to the code.

I just want to indicate that while I recognize the experience of the hon. Member for Calgary-West, under the current regime the rules are being modified in the new legislation, which will make it considerably easier to utilize blood samples.

I just wanted to provide that, Madam Chair and, with that, hope that we can proceed, then, to a vote on this amendment.

The Chair: Any other speakers on amendment A3?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Chair: Any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to Bill 29?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

[The remaining clauses of Bill 29 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Bill 27

Conflicts of Interest Amendment Act, 2017

The Chair: Hon. members, are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to rise this afternoon to continue debate on Bill 27, the Conflicts of Interest Amendment Act, 2017. Alberta's public agencies play a pivotal role in regulating, managing, and delivering important programs and services to Albertans on behalf of government as well as providing oversight and advice on provincial issues. The amendment to the current Conflicts of Interest Act will strengthen the legislation, expanding it to apply to the senior staff of our province's agencies, boards, and commissions.

At this time I would like to propose a House amendment to Bill 27. I would like to explain the purpose of this amendment.

The Chair: Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you. This contracted service provider, Covenant Health, has been included with three subsidiaries of Alberta Health Services as four health entities under the Conflicts of Interest Amendment Act, 2017. However, Covenant Health is not defined as a public agency under APAGA, the Alberta Public Agencies

Governance Act. In fact, it is a nonprofit health care provider that provides contracted health care services to Alberta Health Services. Covenant Health should still be covered by the legislation. In fact, as a publicly funded health care provider it has assured the government that it supports being part of the conflict-of-interest framework.

However, we have determined that we can capture this another way and ensure that Covenant Health is still appropriately covered under a conflict-of-interest framework while also providing room to add other similar entities in the future. We propose to remove Covenant Health from being specifically named in the act. Instead, we would develop a description of nonprofit health care service providers that would take effect through an order in council such that Covenant Health would still be subject to the act. This is important as it means that Covenant Health would still be subject to the same requirements as APAGA agencies. It would still have to develop codes of conduct as well as core and additional requirements and be subject to review by the Ethics Commissioner. The Ethics Commissioner would still have the same oversight. This oversight would include the statutory authority to investigate breaches or report on the sufficiency of the organization's code of conduct requirements.

We also recognize that in the future there may be similar organizations to Covenant Health that could be captured in a broader description, depending upon the financial threshold that is established. Government will develop a definition that includes nonprofit health care service providers that receive a substantial amount of public funding for their operating budgets. This amendment will provide greater flexibility should we determine there are other similar organizations.

I'd also like to point out that this amendment does not impact the broader policy intent or effect of the bill.

With that, I would like to address the proposed House amendment that is before the committee today, the proposed amendment amending section 1(4) in proposed section 23.921(1) by striking out clause (b) and then in clause (d) by adding "or described" after "identified."

I look forward to your questions and ask for your support on this amendment to the bill itself so it would say:

- (d) any other body, whether incorporated or not, that is identified or described by the Lieutenant Governor in Council, by order, as a public agency for the purposes of this Part.

And above on page 5, (b) would be struck out.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any members wishing to speak to amendment A2? I'll recognize Calgary-Mountain View first.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm just a little bit confused at why we would single out one of many, I assume, organizations that are under the rubric of nonprofit or charitable services contracted or supervised by, in this case, Alberta Health but the government of Alberta. Does this not unnecessarily complicate the whole range of organizations that would now be under question if they're not included in this bill?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you. Actually, what we're doing is not singling out Covenant Health. We're putting a more general description in clause (d), and we will take time to appropriately define what those services should be that are covered under clause (d). In future there may be additional entities that need to be included, and clause (d) as it's amended, I'm suggesting, would allow us to bring those entities in. In fact, we met with Covenant Health, and they requested this change. We were agreeable to undertake it because, really, Covenant Health and other entities might be the ones we want to include in this public agency for coverage under the conflicts of interest.

I think this is more comprehensive than what we had identified here. We'll follow through with that to define appropriately those entities that need to be covered under conflict of interest and to give us some time to do that.

Dr. Swann: Can I just follow up? It's not clear at all to me why we are singling them out for exclusion, and who else – I mean, are you asking us to trust you that you're going to go forward and include this and other such agencies? I thought we were talking about all agencies, boards, and commissions that are currently under the auspices of the government of Alberta. Why would we even single out Covenant Health when we've been talking about all agencies, boards, and commissions in addition to the government? It's not clear to me why this is needed.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you. If you have the bill in front of you, they were singled out under this clause (b). What we are endeavouring to do is to say that agencies like Covenant Health will be included under the Conflicts of Interest Amendment Act.

Mr. Mason: This is not just Covenant Health.

Mr. Ceci: Yeah. This is not just Covenant Health. This is all entities that receive public dollars that are APAGA and non-APAGA, but we will have the ability to describe them now in (d). Going forward, there may be additional agencies we want to put in there, so the description will be broad enough that it can include those agencies that receive public dollars. Covenant is one of those.

The Chair: Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thanks to my colleagues for presenting this amendment and the colleague from Calgary for helping with a clarification. I guess one of my concerns, though: when we go to (d) and we're talking order in council, "is identified by the Lieutenant Governor in Council," we're talking cabinet. We're not talking the 87 representatives of Alberta's people. Obviously, your government has had a long time since our last break to get this organized – okay; an important oversight – but it's going to be viewed by fewer Albertans, by fewer elected representatives.

You also said, hon. minister, in your comments that you would be looking or cabinet would be looking to include more, hopefully, than Covenant Health. Now, I think back to some of the earlier concerns that I and my colleagues had with this bill, and it was a fact that agricultural practices was the big one. We heard the answer that maybe it was working because no committees had been struck to ensure that agriculture had its given right to do what it needed to do to put food on the table for Albertans and for the world. We had an opportunity to understand each other better and to understand where that could go, but that doesn't happen in cabinet meetings. That happens here in the Legislature.

I guess I'd like to hear from you, sir, your thoughts on how big clause (d) may get and why we couldn't have done this with an amendment here today. Or let's hoist the whole law, and let's take some time to do it properly. I mean, there are other things, there are other ways to do this other than behind the closed doors of cabinet.

I'd appreciate an answer.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. On behalf of the hon. Minister of Finance we are on the amendment specifically, so if the hon. member has some other sections that he wishes to address relative to the authority of Executive Council versus the Legislative Assembly, you know, I'm happy to address that.

This is in the act. It's called Application, 23.921(1). It basically says that this Part applies in respect of the following public agencies:

- (a) a public agency to which the Alberta Public Agencies Governance Act applies and the subsidiaries of the public agency.

So those are the APAGA agencies that the minister is referring to, and that's (a).

(b) Covenant Health and the subsidiaries of Covenant Health, which are named specifically in the act.

Then others are:

- (c) regional health authorities and subsidiary health corporations under the Regional Health Authorities Act;
- (d) any other body, whether incorporated or not, that is identified [or described] by the Lieutenant Governor in Council, by order, as a public agency for the purposes of this Part.

That may be what the hon. member is referring to. It is not being amended by this amendment, which simply strikes out clause (b) and adds "or described" under clause (d). So clause (d) is amended but not in the part that the member is suggesting.

You know, there's always this conflict or tension between what's appropriate for legislation and what's appropriate for regulation. We have in legislation many responsibilities. It's my view that a body that is identified or described, whether incorporated or not, as a public agency is not something that we want to come back to the House for a bill on every time we decide that a particular clinic or some other health organization should come under the Conflicts of Interest Act. I don't think that's practical. These kinds of things are normally left either at the discretion of the minister or of cabinet as a whole, and then it would be subject to an order in council.

If we adopted the principle that all of these things had to be brought before the Legislative Assembly, we would be meeting in continuous session throughout the year and into the evening. I'm not sure that we would actually be able to focus on the important legislation that we're responsible for.

With the greatest of respect, hon. member, I don't think that the suggestion that this should be done by legislation in the Assembly is a practical suggestion.

The Chair: Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to my colleague for that answer. Again, I'm concerned. We're going to have a gap in time until an order in council puts Covenant Health and others there.

Why I mentioned that agriculture incident is because it was originally included in this bill. We heard from several Albertans that it was a problem, that even though a committee hadn't been struck since 2011, maybe a committee hadn't been struck because the law was working, that access to the Farmers' Advocate office, I believe it was, instead of a more expensive court system maybe was a check and balance between urban development and the opportunity that we need for that and agricultural practices and the ability to do best practices.

I guess I would say again that this, to me, looks like a step to putting more decisions in the hands of cabinet and fewer in the Legislature. You know, my hon. colleague talked about that, well, we shouldn't have to come here if we want to do clinics. Well, maybe you should. I mean, thank goodness that we were able to shed some light on the agricultural practice part.

I guess that at this point in time – I mean, we had a nice long break. You had lots of time to get this organized, and I appreciate that there's maybe a change there. But, again, my preference is to have the 87 of us have the opportunity to debate these, to have the 87 of us have the opportunity to debate it when some media are here rather than in cabinet.

For that reason, at this point in time I think I'll be against the amendment.

The Chair: Any other questions or comments with respect to amendment A2?

Seeing none, are you ready for the vote?

[Motion on amendment A2 carried]

The Chair: We're back on the main bill. Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to Bill 27?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

[The remaining clauses of Bill 27 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'll move that the committee rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Northern Hills.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills with some amendments: Bill 29 and Bill 27. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Mr. Mason: Madam Speaker, if I may, I want to thank everyone for their great contributions this afternoon and for the efficiency with which we conducted public business, and I would move that we adjourn the Assembly until 7:30 this evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:24 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Tuesday, November 28, 2017

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good evening. Please be seated.

Government Motions

Electoral Boundaries Commission Final Report

34. Mr. Bilous moved on behalf of Mr. Mason:
Be it resolved that pursuant to Section 11(1) of the Electoral Boundaries Commission Act the Legislative Assembly concur in the recommendations of the final report of the Alberta Electoral Boundaries Commission entitled Proposed Electoral Division Areas, Boundaries, and Names for Alberta: Final Report to the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, October 2017, which was tabled by the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly as an intersessional deposit on October 19, 2017, Sessional Paper 456/2017.

The Speaker: Hon. members, is there anyone wishing to speak to the motion? The Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to all gathered here in the Assembly and the millions and millions and millions watching around the world. It is a pleasure to rise and speak to such an important topic as Government Motion 34, the Electoral Boundaries Commission motion.

Mr. Speaker, you'll know that there are tens and tens of people who are very, very interested in exactly what is about to take place here with respect to what really is a very important report. All too often in this place and around the province some of the really, really important things that take place are also not that interesting. From time to time the electoral boundaries and where those lines are drawn on the great map of Alberta don't engage the people of Alberta, but it is very, very, very important. In particular, this report that we have before us is very important.

I'd like to just begin by thanking those Albertans who served on the commission over a 12-month period. I know that they gave a lot of their time, talents, and energies to that report and to that work, and for that we should all be thankful.

Having said that, there are a lot of challenges in that report, and I would like to spend a few minutes speaking about some of those challenges and why I would recommend that all members of the Assembly not accept the report that was presented. I've heard that the Government House Leader has proposed this particular motion, and I hope that they'll consider making some adjustments and reconsider that because I really firmly believe that the commission, unfortunately, didn't get the report right for our entire province. Certainly, there were some significant winners and losers in this report. I believe that the legislation that is provided gives the commission the ability to have winners all across the province, and unfortunately that wasn't where they arrived.

Many of my remarks today will focus around some of the remarks that were made in the final report by Commissioner Gwen Day. I would just like to say a very special thank you to Commissioner Day. I know that she worked very diligently and hard on her report and in many respects in isolation as well. I know that that can take a lot of time and energy. I think we all owe each of the commissioners a debt of gratitude but in particular Commissioner Gwen Day because of the important work that she did and how that affects all of our province.

Mr. Speaker, I think of our province as a family table, if you will, and each person and each constituency around that family table has a very important voice. One voice shouldn't be greater than the other based solely on one factor, and I think that's what Commissioner Day spent a significant amount of time trying to identify. I want to highlight a number of things from her report that should bring us all to pause and consider whether or not the report is what's best for Albertans.

Commissioner Day speaks about some of the challenges that the commission faced right at the beginning of the work, and she refers to:

The Majority began the work with the priority of population carrying the most weight, which of course led to the desire to have a minimal deviation from the average number of 46,803 people per constituency.

Her view at that time and in the final report began with the premise that effective representation is comprised of many factors of which population is but one . . . [that should be considered but that there is] discretion to use variances by the Supreme Court and the Electoral Boundaries Commission Act.

This is where Commissioner Day began her work, but there was a divergence between her and the majority. As such, not an ideal outcome was achieved.

I'll quote briefly from the report here.

The Majority began its work by using population to justify a new riding in both Calgary and Edmonton. I do not believe that this was necessary given the discretion allowed for variances and additional considerations besides population in the Act.

I might just add and I'll point out in my remarks this evening that it's not just in the act. Certainly, there have been a number of Supreme Court rulings that allow for those variances and discretion.

I think it's important that Commissioner Day took the time to review some of the historical Canadian foundations around the variances in the size of electoral boundaries and constituencies. She said:

We need to honor our Canadian historical standard of "representational democracy," which has served us well, all across Canada for 150 years. In the Dixon decision, Justice McLachlin wrote that "the rights and freedoms guaranteed by the Charter must be defined against the wider historical and philosophic tradition of Canadian Society."

Commissioner Day points out that from the beginning of our Canadian history our forefathers made a conscious effort to balance these two things, effective representation as well as proportional representation or the representation of populations, as factors to create constituencies and that this has taken place both at the federal level as well as the provincial level. In fact, it has taken place since nearly the beginning of Canada.

In 1872 Sir John A. Macdonald commented on readjustments of constituency boundaries [at the time], "While it will be found that the principle of population was considered to a very great extent, other considerations were also held to have weight; so that different interests, classes and localities should be fairly represented."

I think it's important to know that not just at, essentially, Confederation but all throughout Canadian history we see this very important piece of effective representation being taken into consideration. In fact, I'll quote briefly from section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Commission Act. The reference is the provincial electoral boundaries Saskatchewan 1991 ruling, where it says:

Historically, the drawing of electoral boundaries has been governed by the attempt to achieve voter equality with liberal allowances for deviations based on the kinds of considerations enumerated in s. 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Commission Act.

This is an example of a court ruling that provides these very important variances.

From the outset we've seen Commissioner Day state that the majority was focused solely on population. I think if you go back, Mr. Speaker, and review the first press conference, you would have seen Justice Bielby speak specifically and, in fact, I would suggest possibly even brag about how close they got to voter parity with respect to population.

We see time and time again, since the dawning of Canadian Confederation, this importance of representation. I'd like to quote a couple of situations which are supported by the Charter as well as case law around this important preference for effective and equal representation.

I will quote from the 1991 ruling again.

"The broader philosophy underlying the historical development of the right to vote must be sought and practical considerations, such as social and physical geography must be borne in mind" and "The purpose of the right to vote enshrined in s.3 of the Charter is not equality of voting power per se but the right to 'effective representation.'" The right to vote therefore comprises many factors of which equality is but one. The section does not guarantee equality of voter power.

It goes on in page 33 of that ruling to talk about some of the examples to be considered.

These are but examples of considerations which may justify departure from absolute voter parity in the pursuit of more effective representation . . .

It emerges therefore that deviations from absolute voter parity may be justified on the grounds of practical impossibility or the provision of more effective representation.

It is important, Mr. Speaker, that these considerations are given fair weight, and Commissioner Day goes on to say:

In fact, the concept of "one person, one vote" is not a Canadian construct.

The concept of one person, one vote: not only is it not a Canadian construct, but it is not mentioned anywhere in the Charter. So we've seen the commission act essentially focusing on one key priority, which I will admit is valid, but the act provides a number of opportunities for variances.

Let's just speak briefly about that act, the mandate of the Electoral Boundaries Commission Act. Section 14 asks the commission to consider the following factors:

- (a) the requirement for effective representation as guaranteed by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms,
- in it's priority placed in (a),
- (b) sparsity and density of population,
- (c) common community interests and community organizations, including those of Indian reserves and Metis settlements,
- (d) wherever possible, the existing community boundaries within the cities of Edmonton and Calgary,
- (e) wherever possible, the existing municipal boundaries.

There are a number of other factors, but for the sake of time I will proceed.

So it is very clear that the commission had, one would say, a duty to consider multiple factors, yet we see the justice that is chairing in this case on numerous occasions, including in the draft report and at the first press conference, speaking about how this commission had done the best job, better than the last commission, because they had gotten closer to parity. In fact, equal representation or effective representation is just as important. We see a number of folks and the commission saw a number of people coming to the commission trying to highlight – desperately trying to highlight – this to the commission.

In fact, AAMD and C clearly communicated their presentation to the commission that:

the process or means through [which effective] representation is achieved [is] by balancing population and demographics, community interest and characteristics, existing municipal and natural boundaries, and other relevant criteria. Over-reliance on absolute voter parity may not achieve the desired outcome and may inhibit the ability of Albertans to be effectively represented – effectively weakening Alberta's democratic institutions.

That is a quote from the submission of AAMD and C that Commissioner Day also included in her minority report.

I think it's a very important fact to consider, that AAMD and C, who I know this government and the Minister of Municipal Affairs are huge fans of and really, really respect the great work that they do there, are calling out and saying that, effectively, not paying attention to the difference between effective representation and equal representation essentially is weakening Alberta's democratic institutions.

In fact, just two weeks ago we saw at the AAMD and C's fall conference that they voted to support a motion to maintain the rural ridings. I think it's important that because of the commission's zeroing in on the major urbans and their desire to achieve this elusive goal of absolute parity, the cost will come to rural Alberta.

It's important that we truly understand the variances that are allowed in the legislation. The critical provision in the act around variances is to ensure that effective representation is granted to all Albertans through the use of variances. So we shouldn't be afraid of variances. In fact, we should embrace variances.

The Act states:

15(1) The population of a proposed electoral division must not be more than 25% above . . . [or] 25% below the average population of the proposed electoral divisions.

I'll quote again briefly from the minority report that Commissioner Day provided.

To this point on variances, in the Charlottetown (City) vs. Prince Edward Island (1998) case, the majority of the Court concluded that the variances were well within the tolerances accepted by McLachlin. In the Saskatchewan Reference "there is considerable acceptance in Canada for a variance of +/-25%," which is exactly what we have in our legislation, which should not be feared, Mr. Speaker, but embraced.

This is the quote from Commissioner Day:

In spite of the provision for up to +/-25% variances, a priority by the Majority . . .

She's referring to the majority of the commissioners.

. . . was set to achieve the lowest variances possible, particularly in Edmonton and to some extent in Calgary, thereby justifying an additional riding in both cities. The average variance in Calgary and Edmonton for the proposed electoral divisions is +/-5%. This is a full 20% below that [amount] allowed by the Act.

As I've already highlighted, it was very clear from the beginning of the commission that the majority were primarily focused on this goal of voter parity, which, in fact, is an unachievable goal because the census isn't perfect. The census on which they base their data is a head count of all folks in the constituency; it does not provide an absolute number. So it's a myth, at best, that we can achieve voter parity.

Commissioner Day references a very, very smart man – no relation – whose name is Mr. Cooper. In his submission EBC-2016-17-2-610

Mr. Cooper gives the following example which illustrates that the percentage that the eligible voters is of the total populations is not consistent from one riding to the next: "the entire population of any riding is not the electorate. The electoral list (Elections Alberta web site) tells us that Lesser Slave Lake has 19303 registered voters (67% of the population) while Calgary-South East has 46555 (51% of the population)."

This is one example of how achieving voter parity is actually not possible because it is not the same in every constituency. We're chasing after a number that is not possible and at the same time not providing the variances that the act allows, and as such, there is a significant challenge for rural Alberta in the continued diminishing of that voice around the family table, that family table, the table that I spoke about at the beginning, of equally important voices both in urban and rural Alberta.

This continues to have an impact on our province. As we see, cities continue to grow at a greater rate than the population in the rest of Alberta, Mr. Speaker. There is this perceived notion that we need to achieve voter parity when, in fact, the results are going to be the ongoing erosion of rural ridings. Alberta won't be sustainable if all Albertans are to be effectively represented. If Alberta continues to grow at such a rate in the areas of the city, we run the risk of losing significant history and culture, and other economic drivers could potentially be lost in rural Alberta because of the lack of effective representation.

It's not to say that a city MLA is less or more busy than a rural MLA but that their roles are sometimes very different. We see in the city the interchangeability of MLAs at certain functions whereas in rural Alberta, for example, in the constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills there are over a hundred elected local officials. There are 14 municipalities, and there are nine high schools, all that require a certain level of attendance by the local MLA, but we see fewer and fewer of them able to impact their local communities because of this erosion of the number of MLAs in rural Alberta, and we run a significant risk that we put rural Alberta at risk.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I was really enjoying that speech from my colleague. Just on a little bit of a more personal note, I'd like to talk about the boundary commission's report and the submissions that we were allowed to do over the summer. It was quite frustrating. You know, I listened to a lot of them. There were a lot of MLAs from both sides at a lot of these commission functions, a lot of municipal government people, reeves and mayors. They all had the same message, and by the look of things from the final report that came out, it fell on deaf ears. It was basically a waste of all our time going to these things.

One of the most concerning was when I was at the session in Vermilion after the interim report. I was given a five-minute opportunity to do a submission. After that submission the commission questioned me for about 20, 25 minutes. In the very first question out of the chair's mouth – and I believe she is a Provincial Court judge – she asked me to explain why there was a relationship between the Saddle Lake reserve and the town of St. Paul. Now, the gasps from all the other people that were there were deafening, and I know that some of the members opposite were there as well and were quite shocked to hear that this person, who is in charge of these significant changes to the boundaries in the province of Alberta, had that little touch and that little connection with what goes on in rural Alberta. Saint Paul de Métis was established in 1909. Those two communities have been interacting within 30 miles of each other for over a hundred years. That's the connection. In the first version, the interim report, they were separated into two different constituencies after all this time. These are the kinds of things that we were looking at. These are the kinds of arguments we made.

Now, they argued that it was going to be based on population and on the fact that every vote in Alberta should have the same power. Well, I agree with that. For every voter that comes out to vote, you know, we should be electing members with the same amount of power.

But I'd like to also point out – and I did point it out to the commission – that if you look at the Elections Alberta report from the 2015 election, the average voter turnout in Edmonton or Calgary varies anywhere from 25 per cent to 50 per cent maximum. Out in rural Alberta it's 60 per cent plus. So you tell me whose vote is more powerful: that person living in Edmonton, where there's only a 25 per cent voter turnout, when they're selecting a member for this Legislature or the people out in rural Alberta, where they're actually getting out and travelling sometimes 20, 30, or 50 miles to a voting station – but they're getting out there to vote – and have a 60 per cent voter turnout and get to select one MLA? There's a lot more to equal representation and equal power to a vote than just numbers on a sheet.

Let's talk about rural versus urban. My colleague from Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills touched on it. In my constituency I have 23 communities. Some are smaller; some are bigger. You know, they vary in size. I deal with 10 municipal governments – 10 municipal governments – that all want you there at this function or that function. Especially after this municipal election I was invited to the swearing-in ceremonies. I mean, you have to turn some of these guys down.

I represent over 20 schools in my area. I attended nine graduation ceremonies. This is all stuff that we do when we're not in the Legislature at the end of May and into June. There's a big difference when we talk about representation and how easy it is for an MLA to get around their constituency.

I've got five hospitals in my area. There are some of the MLAs that live in Edmonton and Calgary that may not have one high school in their area or one hospital in their area. How is this equal representation? All of these things need to be considered, not just numbers on a census. There's a lot more to representation and effective representation than a bunch of numbers on a piece of paper.

Along with the 20 schools, 10 municipalities, and 23 communities, unnumberable nonprofits, ag societies, women's shelters, seniors' groups, and 4-H clubs all want a piece of their MLA. It's very difficult to spread yourself around. There are times on a Saturday where I have five functions to go to between Lac La Biche and Elk Point, St. Paul, Two Hills. There are days when I put 400 kilometres on on a Saturday just trying to get around to represent all of these people.

Mr. Gill: Take a bus.

Mr. Hanson: I should take a bus, I guess, or hire a driver. Wasn't that what we were told, to hire a driver?

Mr. Gill: Make better choices.

Mr. Hanson: Make better choices.

These are the things. It's very upsetting when you go and present two submissions and at each one of those there were probably 20 people doing submissions. They all had the same message, Mr. Speaker – all of them – yet here we are. We've got this slam dunk, with no changes, the loss of three rural ridings, the loss of three rural voices. The northeast part of our province and indeed the entire province outside of the urban centres are the economic drivers of the province, all of the oil and gas, agriculture, forestry, tourism – well, other than West Edmonton Mall, which is a big tourist attraction.

All I'm saying is that in these areas we may have a population of 35,000 people, but on a weekend, on a long weekend, some of these communities can double in size overnight. Bonnyville during an oil boom can have a shadow population of 25,000 to 30,000 people that show up in a two-week period. With all of that infrastructure, all the things that go with that – the hospital access, the school access – people not only come and work there, but they bring their families down, and they rent properties. It snowballs, right?

We want to talk about fairness to Albertans. Every Albertan not only should have the same power in voting; they should have the same access to their MLA. Is it fair that an Albertan, just a regular voting Albertan, that lives in Edmonton can jump on public transit or on his bicycle and ride down and be at his MLA's office in 10 minutes while another Albertan with the same vote has to drive 200 miles on sometimes sketchy roads in the wintertime or that a senior is trying to get from place to place to go and deal with the MLA to get some help with some paperwork? Is that fair? How is that fair? How is that fair and equal representation?

Now, I know that there are a lot of MLAs across the way that agree with some of this stuff. This is an opportunity for you to show Albertans that you actually stand up for them. I know that there are rural MLAs. You know that this is what you're hearing from your folks. Let's stand up. There was really no reason. The only recommendation or requirement by law was that a commission had to be set up to look at the boundaries. The boundaries as they were could have been easily redistributed.

There are constituencies in Edmonton and Calgary that are, you know, close to matching or maybe plus five that will never ever – ever – see the potential growth to bring them over the limit. There's no possible way unless you're going to change the whole system and build high-rises in residential areas. There's no possible way. They're already maxed out. You can throw a few infills into some of the old areas in Edmonton and Calgary where they have big lots, and you can split one house into two, but there's no way that you're going to increase the population by 10,000 people in the next 10 years. Impossible. Yet our rural areas are being sacrificed for this. We could have easily juggled some numbers in Edmonton and Calgary and equalized the numbers in Edmonton and Calgary and left the rural alone.

We still have that possibility, that option. All we need is for the people in this House to see the reality of it, see the fairness of it for Albertans, vote against this motion, and vote against this report by the commission. Unfortunately, I think it was a waste of time.

That's about all I've got to say. I really hope that some of the folks across the aisle that I know agree with this, because I heard their submissions at the interim report submissions – I know that they agree with it. I know that their constituents do, so I hope that they stand up for their constituents.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any questions under 29(2)(a) to the hon. member?

Seeing and hearing none, the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have to say that I'm very disappointed with these proposed electoral division areas, boundaries, and names for Alberta. It makes me feel like my constituency is now the doormat of Alberta. Literally, the decisions that were made that revolve around my constituency of Bonnyville-

Cold Lake are quite upsetting, upsetting to the point where I believe that someday, should these boundaries be challenged in court, they will actually use the constituency of Bonnyville-Cold Lake for that constitutional challenge. This is how bad it is when it comes to Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Now, I put a little bit of time into writing an article for my local constituents to know, and I want to read parts of it because it's important that they understand how poorly this government, if they consider this report to be a reflection of Alberta's ability to have effective representation – it's so false. It's so false. We need to vote this down. This is a terrible report. I have to say that it's disappointing to see that they even put this together in northeastern Alberta.

Now, the article that I wrote I put on my Facebook page. It's called Erosion of the Rural Voice in Alberta. I put a lot of effort into this, a lot of thought.

Electoral Boundaries Commission final report came out last Thursday and it does not provide adequate provincial representation for a wide swath of Albertans. To be clear, it's disappointing that such a large focus was placed solely on population when there are so many other factors outlined in the Electoral Boundaries Commission Act that should go into developing riding boundaries.

Rural Alberta has been overlooked and is grouped together in piecemeal ways that don't reflect our communities. It appears that the Commission only focused on population and ignored many of the requirements that they should have taken into consideration when making the new boundaries for Alberta that lay within the mandate given to the commission.

This is important because we've got a commission that focused only on population. This is upsetting. This is upsetting because we are using Stats Canada numbers during a decline in my constituency. We were hit, one of the worst in all of Alberta, up in northeastern Alberta, up in my constituency with mass vacancies in all of my housing, mass layoffs, and that's when they did the figures for population. This is shameful. This is truly shameful.

Now, we've got this section 14. I don't want to go too far into it, because I could read that word for word, but there are a lot of things in section 14 that determine the fact that what we've got here is a lack of following what, I would argue, was clearly set out as a mandate for the commission.

Now I'm going to read a little further here.

On July 24, 2017, I stood before the Electoral Boundaries Commission and presented that our constituency of Bonnyville-Cold Lake had very unique struggles that apply mainly to northern Alberta. My presentation was broken into four... points. I have four points I'd like to address. These are covered more thoroughly in the report to the commission that I've... handed you, but I will attempt to highlight them quickly in my presentation today.

This is a presentation that I gave to the commission. This is something that I sat and took the time to prepare for the commission to understand my constituency and the struggles within my constituency. I do know that there were several – that is, mayors and reeves – that also went out and took that same time.

The first point is about the communities served in Bonnyville-Cold Lake. The interim map shows that they are looking to add an additional 25 communities, which can be visibly seen on the map, along with two reserves.

Now, this was at the time of the interim report. We were looking at already increasing my constituency by a large number. The interim report doesn't look exactly like the final report because, I'll tell you, they did a big increase in the actual amount of population within my constituency.

I will read on. This is more about the interim report, but it is still reflective of the final report.

This [means] a total of 40 separate communities, two settlements, and five reserves within my constituency. Considering that each area is . . . comprised of a mayor, council, chief, reeves, and community leaders and elders, this would mean almost tripling the number of communities within my riding. Increasing the size of [my] constituency will make it extremely hard for an elected representative such as myself to properly represent the people within the constituency.

It comes down to size. It comes down to size. It's a large constituency with a lot of people packed into it.

I will say that the commission actually went on to say that it's a small rural constituency so it's okay to grow this to the size it is now. That's ludicrous, just truly ludicrous.

The second point surrounds shadow population.

My colleague from Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills touched on this.

In the report entitled Shadow Populations in Northern Alberta, which was prepared by the Northern Alberta Development Council . . .

This is a council that is dealing with just northern Alberta. We actually have our Deputy Speaker sitting on this council.

. . . the author looks at the prevalence of shadow populations and highlights how current federal census data does not accurately reflect the true population of the region. According to the report the percentage of the population for Cold Lake region is approximately 29.5 per cent higher.

Twenty-nine point five per cent higher: that's crazy. That's shadow population. That's population that Stats Canada is not capturing.

While I recognize that [this] committee is making a decision on the federal data, I would not be doing my region a huge service by failing to state that the shadow population is a real problem. It is a substantial part of my community. I believe that this [is a dramatic] increase [that] will result in people having an MLA who is serving a significantly larger population than purported.

This is important. Shadow population needs to be considered when we're doing this.

The third point is about the population being represented by the community. On page 36 of the interim report it [says] that the majority believes that the variance above 7 per cent of the population "can be supported as . . . an area where future population growth is likely to fall well below the provincial average." This is an issue that I would like to address. In the constituency of Bonnyville-Cold Lake there are several major projects that are currently in the process of being started. I would specifically like to mention a few of the companies for these announced projects: [we've got] Cenovus, Husky energy, Imperial Oil, Osum, and CNRL.

All of these companies have large projects that are in the process or along in the process of starting.

Mr. S. Anderson: So the economy is picking up.

Mr. Cyr: No.

The government is all happy saying that it looks like it's starting up. No. These projects are actually put on hold till – you wouldn't believe it – 2019. Is that a time frame where you hear, like, maybe an election, a change of government maybe?

An Hon. Member: A coincidence?

Mr. Cyr: I think there's a huge coincidence there, that we've got all these projects put on hold. I do hope that these projects move forward. I have stated that to the Energy minister, that these projects are important to my constituency.

But what's important here to recognize is that these projects contributed a huge shadow population and a population within my constituency. When we did the StatsCan population count for my constituency, we did it at the lowest possible time for my constituency, when there were no projects going or almost no projects going. Then suddenly this commission unilaterally, with no backup, says that my area is declining, and that is why it is okay for them to shove a whole lot of population into Bonnyville-Cold Lake. That's shameful, just shameful.

The commission's own statistics show that the region has not been declining [but], in fact, has been increasing. This is echoed by the completed report by Stantec for a regional waterline.

I will state that that is something that I take pride in. I was able to work with the Minister of Transportation to help get a waterline from Cold Lake to Bonnyville. This is a huge thing that adds to it.

Mr. Mason: You're welcome.

Mr. Cyr: He's as ecstatic as I am, which is good.

But what's important here is that that very report that he used to base his decision on in deciding whether that waterline was needed showed big population growth within my constituency. Big population growth. We've got a boundary commission that unilaterally made a decision – unilaterally made a decision – to say that my constituency is decreasing and therefore it's okay.

The fourth surrounds common community interests.

I'll say that I won't go too far into this because my honoured colleague from Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills did a great job explaining that the St. Paul region is its own little region. Putting this region into my constituency was really something that shouldn't have ever happened. This is a wonderful community, there's no doubt. I am fortunate if they are added to my boundary, but I will tell you that, in the end, this is its own area, its own region.

What we've got here is a commission that unilaterally decided, with no proof that I could see, that my area was declining. They couldn't come up with any reasonable boundary lines. They decided to almost double the size of my constituency. They made my constituency of Bonnyville-Cold Lake the largest over the constituency average of all of the constituencies. The largest. We're 15 per cent over. After this interim report, after I presented to them telling them that 7 per cent was too much, they added 8 per cent more. Eight per cent more. I have to say that it's very disappointing to see that, in the end, you see that a rural boundary – a rural boundary – has the largest constituency for population over the average. That's unbelievable, truly unbelievable.

When I started off, I said that if there is a reason to challenge this in the courts, if we challenged because of the boundaries, it is going to be Bonnyville-Cold Lake that they're going to use because, in the end, this whole commission made an error when they made some facts that were, in my opinion, misleading. In the end, what we've got here is a constituency that is vibrant. We're growing. We are an incredibly strong constituency. Yes, we had a hard time. We had low oil prices. There's no disputing that. You know what? When we change government, I will tell you that my constituency will end up with 70,000 or 80,000 people. That is significantly larger than what this boundary report is saying, and that is tragic.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any questions under 29(2)(a) to the hon. member?

Seeing and hearing none, the Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's great to see you here this evening at this hour. I will say, through you, good night, Austin and Chyanne Nixon, and I will go ahead and move an amendment. I have the appropriate number of copies for the page.

I'll just wait for the amendments to make it to the table.

The Speaker: They're just handing it out. In the interest of time . . .

Mr. Nixon: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I kept a copy with me, which should help me do this briefly.

This amendment changes the names of some constituencies that are in the current report. Each of the constituencies proposed to be changed in this amendment had lost towns that are in their current names right now under the current boundary districts that were then removed during the first draft, but then those communities ended up back inside these constituencies. This amendment simply returns those original names back to those constituencies. I think I speak as a rural Albertan about how important it is for these towns to be still within their constituency with their names, how proud they are to be part of that.

The other thing, Mr. Speaker, is that it actually shows the full jurisdictions and, I think, just corrects a minor error that will help these constituencies out. I would ask all members to support this amendment.

The Speaker: With respect to the amendment that the House is dealing with, the hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I can certainly support these amendments. I think they are sensible, and they reflect the communities. I think that's the right approach for the naming of constituencies, to focus on the communities and the municipalities, the jurisdictions that may fall within the electoral boundaries of that unit. All of these reflect that. I have no difficulty in recommending to government members that we should support this amendment.

The Speaker: Any other members under 29(2)(a) to the Government House Leader?

Any other members that would like to speak to the amendment, which we will call A1?

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Speaker: I believe we are now on the motion as amended. The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure to speak out on this vitally important topic. I'm not going to restate a lot of the points that were made by my colleagues from Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills or from Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills. These comments were reiterated many, many, many times over during the course of the public hearings, and I know they were also repeated during the course of many of the written submissions.

I will say that as a representative of a largely rural riding I am very disappointed with the Electoral Boundaries Commission in what I would describe as their tone-deafness to the concerns of rural Albertans. The recommendations that they list in the final report both on pages 61 through 63 and also on pages 26 and 27 under what are called rural concerns, or broadly lumped into rural concerns, are extremely disappointing because they reflect a total lack of understanding of the challenges of representation of a geographically large rural riding. It's not like they weren't told. Many of the members of this Legislature presented to the commission, and they detailed the kinds of challenges that the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills talked about. We know what those are: representing, for example, nine or 10 or 12 or more municipalities, each with its own municipal council; representing four or five school boards; representing 13 or 15 or 20 ag societies, as I do in my constituency.

The thing of it is that each one of these bodies has a board, has a president that expects to have some face time with their MLA, and when the MLA simply cannot provide that face time, then it's equated to poor representation. That simply is unacceptable. But effective representation is a two-way street. It's not just the ability of constituents to get to the MLA, but it's also the ability of MLAs to get to their constituents and get to their constituents where they live. In large, geographically diverse constituencies that becomes a real challenge.

I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, that over the five and a half years that I've represented the people of Vermilion-Lloydminster, I've been fortunate to attend dozens and dozens of summer festivals, high school graduations, university convocations, and a number of other events, but one thing I have noted that I find interesting is that when you attend, your attendance is appreciated. When you fail to attend, it is noted and remembered. It's a dichotomy there, but it is a reality of representation that there is an expectation.

I was personally shocked to read in the final report on page 26 where the majority of the commission felt that rural Albertans are going to have to accept a cultural shift. You know, to me, that's just an insulting thing, that they have to accept that a cultural shift toward making an appointment to see an MLA or making contact by telephone or e-mail is a more balanced means of addressing voter access than a reduction in the geographic size and population of the constituency.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I will tell you that my constituents expect to see the whites of my eyes, and they want to know that they can see my reaction, not do the communication via e-mail, not do the communication via Skype. They expect that representation, and when they suggest, "Well, open satellite offices," I've already got two satellite offices in Vermilion-Lloydminster, and I know of other members who have three and four constituency offices. While that is helpful, it doesn't lessen the workload. It, in fact, makes it greater.

Mr. Speaker, the report by the commission indeed is an extremely disappointing document, and I certainly concur with the conclusions of the minority report by Commissioner Day. Commissioner Day brings to the commission considerable experience as a representative. You know, I will tell you that I was certainly very, very disappointed with the report, and I would encourage members to vote against it as well, but in anticipation that that may or may not happen, there is one specific request that I would make. I would like at this time to move an amendment, and I'll hand the requisite number of copies over to the pages.

Mr. Speaker, I'll wait to have that read into the record, but it's very much following along the lines of what the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre – that's with regard to the naming of a constituency. In my case it's a little bit of a different situation in that the interim report called for the constituency of Vermilion-Lloydminster to be expanded to the west to include the town of Vegreville but to not include the name of the town of Vegreville. As anyone who's familiar with Vegreville – and I know the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville is very knowledgeable of this – Vegreville has had a tough year. Their name was dropped from their federal constituency. They, of course, are still advocating for the retention of the case processing centre, and their name was now to be dropped from the provincial constituency, so I suggested that it should be added.

Now, there was a shift between the interim and the final report to orient the constituency on a north-south axis to add the community of Wainwright. That's fine. That makes sense. But where I do have a problem is that the new name of the constituency was going to be Vermilion-Wainwright and that the city of Lloydminster, by far the largest city in the constituency, the city whose population is nearly half the total population of the constituency, was to be dropped from the constituency name. I can tell you that I heard a great deal from the residents of Lloydminster, from the mayor and council of Lloydminster.

All I'm asking in this amendment – and I will read it into the record. I move that Government Motion 34 be amended by adding the following after “Sessional Paper 456/2017”:

except that the name of the proposed electoral division of Vermilion-Wainwright be changed to Vermilion-Lloydminster-Wainwright.

Mr. Speaker, these are the three largest communities within this constituency. They represent a large proportion of the population, and they, in fact, reflect that two constituencies have been melded together, Vermilion-Lloydminster and Battle River-Wainwright, and certainly Wainwright is the largest part of that constituency that is being added in. I would argue that that provides some consistency and some clarity, and it also acknowledges the fact that these three communities are all very important in their own way to the constituency.

I would ask my colleagues to support this amendment. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a)?

We'll refer to this as amendment A2.

I recognize the Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Okay. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I think the hon. member has made the case that Lloydminster is the largest community by quite a bit within the constituency, and the omission of its name doesn't sit right with the people of that community, and rightly so. So I have no problem in urging my colleagues to support this amendment.

The Speaker: Any questions to the Government House Leader under 29(2)(a)?

[Motion on amendment A2 carried]

The Speaker: On the amended motion, are there any other members who wish to speak? The Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to speak to this motion. I guess I want to start with a little bit of the process involved with this boundaries commission and the work that they did. Now, what happened in our communities up in northwestern Alberta, Grande Prairie-Smoky and Grande Prairie-Wapiti in particular, is that the interim report came in. Of course, it had the city of Grande Prairie receiving its own constituency, and it had taken Grande Prairie-Wapiti, a significant portion of the farming community west of Grande Prairie, and put it up with Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley.

Of course, when that interim report hit the communities, there was substantial backlash to that. The communities west of Grande Prairie didn't feel that there was any kind of correlation between their community and the communities that they were lumped together with in the interim report, so they all spoke against that. It was odd, too, because in order to go from Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley in the north to the west in the interim report, they would actually have to travel through two other constituencies to get there. It didn't make a lot of sense to have it that way, and of course there was lots of backlash. The suggestion that most had was to leave the constituencies as they are.

Now, I think what was very surprising is that when we received the final report, we found out that instead of taking Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley and taking the west side of Grande Prairie and putting it into that constituency, they changed it and put the area east of Grande Prairie into that constituency. Of course, the people in those communities east of Grande Prairie – Valleyview, DeBolt, Crooked Creek, Ridgevalley, that area there – never had an opportunity to express any concerns over that because they didn't find out about that until the final report came out. So, Mr. Speaker, I think it was quite alarming to the people to find out that the final report was so substantially different than the interim report. Obviously, that doesn't give an opportunity for communities to have a say in the matter. It completely negated their opportunity to have a say in what happened. What's happened is that we have a substantial chunk of what used to be the Grande Prairie-Smoky constituency now lumped together with Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley, and of course they now in the final report have called it Central Peace-Notley.

This new constituency is 400 kilometres long. On the map alone there are 66 different communities listed. Now, I've gone through, and I actually found I think at least five other communities that aren't listed on the map, so that brings it up to about 71 different communities in that constituency. There are four First Nations reserves. For two, I believe, it doesn't include the whole reserve because the reserve is split into two parts, with part in one constituency, part in this constituency. There are eight MDs and counties and, of course, not the complete eight: half of some, all of another, kind of a random hodgepodge of how the MDs and counties got split up into these constituencies.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Now, as a matter of interest, I don't live in the farthest corner of the constituency, but the Legislature is actually just as close to my home as the farthest community within this constituency now. Downtown Edmonton is just as close for me to drive to as the farthest community, not the farthest area in the constituency but the farthest community from me in the constituency. That's a three-and-a-half-hour drive.

Now, it appears that what the commission did was that they used populations to justify giving more urban seats or, actually, I guess, more accurately, to remove three rural seats. Of course, they actually removed more rural seats than that because they gave some cities their sole constituency. Before, some of them were split into rural and urban. They've actually taken away four, maybe even more, rural constituencies.

Earlier today I tabled in the Legislature some maps. Now, it's as simple as eight maps to redraw all the constituencies in Alberta and have them populationwise fall within the parameters of the current legislation. That affected only 21 constituencies, which means that 66 constituencies remain completely unchanged. To me that makes sense, but unfortunately we have a situation here where we've changed 87 constituencies, some dramatically – some disappeared altogether – when we could have adjusted 21 and had the same result.

Now, the problem with some of the constituencies, in fact the Central Peace-Notley constituency, is that there are no natural trade corridor similarities in that constituency. The people of Fox Creek or the Fox Creek community have nothing in common with the community of Clear Prairie or Worsley, yet they are lumped into one constituency.

Now, I don't think anybody should feel sorry for an MLA that has to represent their constituency and their constituents no matter how big the constituency is, no matter how diverse it is because we're here to do a job. We're all happy to do our job. I know I am happy to do my job. I don't mind driving. I don't mind getting up early, and I don't mind staying up late to do my job. I'll drive across Alberta. I'll drive through the night. I'll do whatever I have to. I'm not asking anybody to feel sorry for me, but what I would ask is for somebody to take just a little bit of consideration for the people in these communities, these 71 communities, that want to feel like they're represented. That's what I want to have. That's what I would like somebody to have just a little bit of consideration for.

With the existing constituency I had to make a decision on November 11 between four different November 11 Remembrance Day events. With the new constituency I don't know how many it could be. It could be six or seven. I'm not even sure. Now, if you have three or four in your constituency, I guess in a four-year cycle as an MLA you should be able to hit each one at least once, but if you have seven or eight, some of these communities will never see you on November 11 because you won't have an opportunity to get to them all. The same with Canada Day. Most of these communities would love to see you on Canada Day. I've done it where I've hit two or three or four events in a day, but with over 400 kilometres in between it's going to be hard to hit multiple events.

Now, I know that when I look at the map that this final draft has put forward, I think all anybody would have to do is look at the constituency of, I believe, Cardston-Siksika and look at the shape of it. I mean, it's absolutely bizarre. I don't know the dimensions, but I'm going to guess it's close to 200 miles wide at the bottom and close to 200 miles wide at the top and is probably five miles across in the middle and right in the middle.

An Hon. Member: Alberta hourglass.

Mr. Loewen: Hourglass or number eight, whatever you want to call it, two triangles stacked on top of each other point to point. Now, does that make any sense to anybody? I'm sorry, but what this looks like is gerrymandering. When you have bizarre stuff like this, that's what it looks like.

Madam Speaker, there's been a lot said about this already, but there's going to be more said. My colleague from Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills had several comments. He was looking at the minority report. I just want to read a couple of parts from it.

1. The eroding number of MLAs representing Albertans outside of Calgary and Edmonton as discussed above. This concern was expressed consistently throughout our hearings in both rural and urban settings and in a great many of the submissions.

This is something discussed both inside and outside the cities, the eroding number of MLAs representing Albertans outside of Calgary and Edmonton. That was a great concern that was brought up many times. Like I said, the most common submission in our area was: leave it the way it is.

I'm going to go on.

2. Sparsity and density of population 14 (b). The increasing geographical size of some rural ridings has made it even more unmanageable for the MLAs to effectively represent their constituents as we heard repeatedly in our hearings. Conversely, in the densely populated urban divisions MLAs are more able to well represent their population even with a larger positive variance because of easier communication and travel logistics, shared responsibilities amongst neighboring MLAs, ease of access to other levels of government officials and the availability of other resources to meet the constituents' needs. In our hearings, I don't recall hearing concerns expressed by urban MLAs and their constituents that their riding was not sufficiently and effectively represented.

Clearly, the concerns were on the rural representation, not on the urban representation, on the rural representation, but that didn't seem to affect what the commission came up with.

It goes on to say:

Both types of MLAs work tirelessly to represent their constituents; I acknowledge and respect that their roles are very different and equally important. On February 21, 2017, urban MLA Ric McIver at the Calgary Public Hearings said: "I think the expectations are in many cases harder on the rural MLAs because in Calgary there are 25 or 27 of us, and if you can't get McIver, you can get somebody else. If you can't get somebody else, you can get McIver. I think that in the public's mind there is an element of interchangeability whereas in Rocky Mountain House: That's our MLA. We want you there."

8:40

I think it was already mentioned here today, too, how much these communities actually appreciate their MLA showing up. I know that because that's what I hear and that's what I feel when I'm travelling around in the constituency. People appreciate it. I'm not sure why. I don't think I'm that special. But for some reason they appreciate their MLA showing up. I guess it shows that there's some care, some concern for that community, so they want to see that.

3. Unnecessary disruption. In spite of population growth, many existing ridings could have remained unchanged . . .

Like I said, 66 could have remained unchanged, 66 out of 87.

I'll carry on.

. . . and been within the allowable variances both positive or negative. Because of the perceived need to reach voter parity, the final maps include significant changes to most rural and urban boundaries. This disruption, in my view, was unnecessary given the provision in the Act for justifiable variances.

4. The effects of increasing the geographical size of the ridings. Sections 14 (b), (c), (d), (e) and (f) mandate a Commission to consider many factors, including sparsity and density of population, community interests and organizations, community history, First Nation reserves and Métis settlements, number of municipalities and local authorities, urban neighbourhoods and municipal boundaries. I am concerned that we may have joined together disparate communities in the pursuit of lower variances. This joining together of disparate communities puts pressure on MLAs to meet the diverse needs of unique communities and the key economic industries like agriculture, oil and gas, forestry, mining, recreation and tourism. Additional organizations, municipalities, hospitals, First Nation reserves and Métis settlements, schools and school boards often increase in numbers along with the geographical size of the riding.

That's one thing I haven't gone through and figured out, how many different school divisions that will be in this new constituency. Obviously, it will be many.

I do want to go on to another part here. Just bear with me. [Mr. Loewen's speaking time expired] Aw. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Just before I recognize the hon. member for 29(2)(a), I remind all hon. members that we don't use individual surnames in the House. Even when quoting or reading, use the constituency name, please.

The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake on 29(2)(a).

Mr. Cyr: I think that that was a great job you were doing there. I would love to hear how your constituency is being impacted by the fact that it's growing so much and how diverse it is, so if you would continue, Member.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Loewen: What I would like to do is – and this will maybe help answer that question – read from one of the submissions. It's from the county of Grande Prairie, from the reeve Leanne Beaupre. In this letter to the commission she says:

Section 3 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, as well as the Supreme Court decision on the topic of Electoral Boundaries (Sask) (1991), states that effective representation takes into account "factors like geography, community history, community interest and minority representation" . . .

With this in mind, the County's preferred option is to maintain the status quo – an option also supported by many of our neighbours. Our region, under the current electoral boundaries of Grande Prairie-Wapiti and Grande Prairie-Smoky, has been very effective at developing partnerships that promote shared goals between our municipalities, while supporting each municipality's autonomy and perspectives. This is a formula that has proven to be very successful. It can be measured by our region's strong economy – one of the most robust and fastest growing in the nation – an unemployment rate that sits below the national and provincial average, and our competitiveness on a global scale.

Obviously, this is from the reeve of the county of Grande Prairie, right there in the heart of this previous constituency. That's what they requested from the commission, and obviously this voice went completely unheard or unrecognized.

I did want to go on to one other one here. Just let me find this here, too. Now, this is a quote from another presenter.

Although the commission argues in the report that respecting urban and rural balance per se is not listed in the legislation as a factor for consideration, that the commission has the authority to assess all factors deemed appropriate is indeed explicitly provided for. In fact this distinction is acknowledged by previous commissions as we see here. Otherwise, how are we to make sense of the 2010 recommendation on rural representation . . . referenced above? Setting a precedent for ever increasing the size of rural ridings due to the lower proportion of rural residents to urban ones impacts effective representation in other ways as well. Making rural ridings even larger than at present and thus even more time consuming to represent effectively while being able to maintain anything approaching a work/life balance will deter [the] quality people from considering running at all – especially those with family responsibilities, mobility challenges and so on.

Now, what's interesting about that one there is that that was brought forward by the MLA for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater, so I'm presuming that he can't be very pleased with what's happened with this commission either as far as what they've brought forward. I would hope that he'll be voting along with us against this.

Now, I just want to read from the conclusion of the minority report. She says:

I admit that I am not able to fully address all the possible results to potential boundaries and variances applying my perspective. The opportunity was not available to explore this.

As an Albertan, I believe that we are very fortunate to have such a variety of electoral constituencies: rural ridings that also encompass towns and villages, 16 small cities, city/rural blends, and two metropolitan cities. We need to focus on the gift that this social mosaic brings to us as Albertans and recognize that we are in fact interdependent. Working hard to preserve effective representation for all Albertans, as we review boundaries, will best maintain better government as a whole and preserve our strength as a leading province in Canada.

The Majority's final report reflects a great deal of thought and diligence. The resulting maps and report have been an immense amount of work. Using the lens and fully believing in the primacy of population, the results of the report are understandable.

But obviously we have issues here.

She goes on to say:

Respecting our Canadian historical style of representative democracy sets the foundation for effective representation, which is further affirmed by existing legislation and case law. It is clear that population needs to be balanced with the other elements of effective representation. In conclusion, I believe it would have been in the best interest of all Albertans to adequately consider all mandated factors and, where justifiable, preserve existing ridings using allowable variances. Adding ridings to the cities of Calgary and Edmonton could have been avoided, which would have resulted in much less reconfiguration throughout Alberta while still providing effective representation for all Albertans.

Very interesting.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I want to respond just to one comment made by the hon. member who just spoke, and that is that the suggestion that what the commission . . .

The Speaker: I'm advised that if you were to speak, it would be to close debate.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I certainly forgot that it's a motion and that you can only speak once except to close debate. As tempting as it is, I'm not going to do that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville. She taught me a lot about memes.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak about the boundary commission and its final report and just a little bit about the interim report. The way that the constituency of Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville looks right now is – I'll describe it to you. There are 12 municipalities, including villages, towns, and cities. There are four county municipalities. There are more than 10 agricultural societies. There are more than 20 schools. There are seven high schools, which means seven high school grads, seven high school awards nights. There are schools across the constituency, which is sometimes a lot of fun because you get to do Read In Week all across rural Alberta. Because there are so many municipalities, there are three Legion branches.

You know, everything in rural Alberta has an exponential factor. Each municipality has lodges, libraries, Elks clubs, Lions clubs, fish and game associations, ag service boards, Boys & Girls Clubs. Every summer is a tour of rodeos, parades, ag days. All year it's perogy dinners, steak fries, fish fries. I probably go to a hundred hot dog fundraisers a year, the same when it comes to pancake breakfasts – this is how a lot of fundraising is done in small municipalities – seniors' drop-in centres, fire departments both hired and volunteer, EMS services, junior trap shoots that take place in different rural areas. There are cemetery blessings that take place in many of these communities. There are rotating church services all across. It's a really, really diverse way of life. Anyone that thinks that it is sleepy in rural Alberta is quite mistaken. It is a nonstop way of being able to represent a constituency.

I'm just going to read a little bit out of the final report here and just comment on a few things that are mentioned here. The first line: "It is recommended that the boundaries of the electoral division . . . be as shown on Map 62." And it calls it, of course, Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, which is nice because in the interim report Vegreville had been dropped, and it was on a drawing that pulled in St. Paul north of the river, which made no sense.

The commission had been asked to pull together constituencies that were based on shared interests, and what that did was that it pulled St. Paul away from its shadow communities and families and people and business dealings. It made no sense. We went to the commission I guess it was in late summer, and it was what everyone said. I love St. Paul. It's a great place. I love to visit it. But it makes no sense to be pulled in, away from its communities with shared interests, from above the river. It's tough to argue against pulling some people in, but sometimes you have to look at what that bigger picture is. I made sure that I spoke to the county of St. Paul and the town of St. Paul before I argued against those communities being included in that new redraw, and they felt the exact same way, that it just didn't make any sense.

Also, the name Vegreville being pulled, as was mentioned earlier: it's 6,000 people, which may not seem like a lot, but it is currently the second-largest municipality in the constituency. To make no mention of why this community was being moved between constituencies, why there was seemingly no reason to mention 6,000 people being moved made absolutely no sense, and it added insult to injury in a year that has been devastating with the continued moving forward of the closure of a federal government centre there that does case processing for refugee, citizenship, and immigration claims. It is the worst man-made disaster in a generation, and they didn't even deserve a mention in the report.

I'll go on. It talks about the variance. The new variance of population would be 11 per cent above the provincial average. As much as I understand that it is a real challenge across the province to try and find an ability to balance populations and figure out how that works – because once you change one, you know, an east, west, north, or south boundary, it has a knock-on effect across the province. I understand that that's a challenge. But when you pull it 11 per cent above – and in the report it says that it's justified because the growth is expected to drop – it is very difficult to have a report that sounds like it is counting on rural areas to depopulate. I find that very, very troubling.

The commission was told that the average age of residents in parts of the electoral division is well above that of other Albertans. That is absolutely true. There are municipalities that are not having new families the same way as they once were. It's difficult to move away from your community sometimes because you don't have the same socioeconomic means as other families. So we have communities that do continue to age, and it brings with it a lot of needs, a lot of one-on-one needs that these people have, where they need to come into an office and be provided a service. Knowing that there are different challenges when it comes to growing, booming young populations, as I have seen in Fort Saskatchewan with an incredibly young average population, there are other needs on the other side of the spectrum when you're talking about aging populations. I just wanted to address that.

I am glad to see that the request for counties to be kept whole was brought more together, not completely together but brought more together, in some cases. The new boundaries of this constituency pull Minburn together, pull Two Hills in, keeps Lamont whole, so I appreciate that work.

It talks about a public concern of travel distance. Absolutely. In the interim report they wanted a constituency that went from Fort Saskatchewan all the way to Saskatchewan. That makes it really difficult, to know that you are putting someone on a highway potentially in the middle of winter to come to your office because they don't have the same connectivity that people in urban areas enjoy.

Part of the interim report was talking about Internet connectivity. It said, you know, that we're in a changing dynamic of having more people online, more people able to access offices through e-mail. Well, that's really nice if you have connectivity. But in the report itself it says that they're hoping that everyone gets connectivity by 2026. So we would be changing these boundaries knowing full well that we are hoping for some distant date in which we would have more farms, more rural municipalities connected into our offices, into our Internet. That was also quite frustrating to hear.

But there are some very good things with this. Like I said, it keeps some of the counties whole. It focuses on the highway 16 corridor as being more taken in because those are areas, municipalities with shared interests. I know that, representing Fort Saskatchewan and getting to know so many of the families there and getting to know families in Vegreville and around Strathcona county, people live, work, and play between those communities very much so. They live in Vegreville and work in Fort Saskatchewan. They live in Fort Saskatchewan and work in Vegreville. It's a very, very fluid area, where people travel and are connected. And when people move and sell their farm, it is often one of those communities that they choose a home to retire in. The families that I meet in places like Fort Saskatchewan have really deep roots, very recent roots to farming communities that are just outside in the region.

It was said earlier – and it is quite true – that with all of these events and places that you are graciously invited to, your attendance is appreciated, but your absence is noted. That's because you are the only representative for your constituency. You don't have the same ability to call on your neighbour to come and fill in for you if you can't be there. Truth be told, they often don't want to see someone else; they want to see you. You are their connection to the government, to the Legislature. You are their voice.

I absolutely love the constituency that I have the privilege of representing. You know, it's big. There are a lot of people, there are a lot of municipalities, and there's a lot to do, but I am privileged at the picture of what my position affords me the opportunity for, to get to know so many incredible people doing so many incredible things all of the time. It is just second to none.

I don't begrudge the growth in the area or the growth in the population. It will have its own set of challenges, but I absolutely support the changes to this constituency. I know that there was a lot of work put into this report, so I will be supporting this motion.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Any questions to the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville under 29(2)(a)? The Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Just a pleasant warning to the Speaker that from the way she described her riding when she started – it's not a criticism but, rather, a warning. If you describe your riding that way, you might have 87 people running against you for the riding. You made it sound pretty good.

That's what I had to say, Mr. Speaker. Outside of that, if the hon. member has something to say, I'd be glad to hear it.

The Speaker: Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It pleases me to rise this evening to speak to this important topic. I did want to make a couple of comments and agree with many of my colleagues on both sides of the House that rural voices have always been incredibly important to our province and remain especially important as we continue to grow. Even with the advances in technology there will never be a substitute for a handshake or a face-to-face meeting over a cup of coffee, as the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville spoke to and, as well, the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster talked about. That can be a challenge as an MLA, especially when these people are as far away as three hours, as we've seen proposed in several of the new maps.

However, to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the recommendations of the commission were tantamount to gerrymandering, as suggested by the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, I think is overstretching things. For example, if you look at the riding of Camrose, you can see that that socialist bastion now includes such communities as Loughheed and Hardisty and the Tofield area. There's no evidence to make the suggestion that the commission is dipping into the field of gerrymandering, and I really think it's beneath the dignity of this House to suggest that the commission has conducted themselves in a way that would be considered contriving the ridings other than in a way that they saw fit, following the rules and the mandate they were given. We may not be completely satisfied with the results, but to go ahead and suggest that gerrymandering was involved is, I think, something we should all avoid in this House, being respectful of the commission, that did very hard work in a very difficult situation, as it always is when you come up with new boundaries for the electoral divisions in the province. Let's please avoid those types of accusations in the future.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Any questions for the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing and hearing none, the hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have an amendment to move, and I have the requested copies.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I basically want to move that Government Motion 34 be amended by adding the following after "Sessional Paper 456/2017":

except that the name of the proposed electoral division of Calgary-Falconridge be changed to Calgary-Bhullar.

As you know, Calgary-Greenway got divided into a few other ridings, got redistributed, and the new name is, like, Calgary-Falconridge. My humble request to all the members of this Assembly is that we change the name of Calgary-Falconridge to Calgary-Bhullar to honour the man who passed away coming to work, representing his constituents, and who, in my humble opinion, was the best public servant I have come across, a personal friend. Still, to date, there isn't a day when I go into my constituency that I don't come across anybody who gives me a reference to Manmeet, about how he made him feel, how he treated him, how he helped his constituents. Whether they were part of Calgary-Greenway, whether they were part of Alberta, whether these Sikhs were in Afghanistan, he was there to help.

Mr. Speaker, you always tell me to keep quiet in the House and tone it down. I can't even speak today. It's one of those things for me, knowing him personally for over a decade. You've all worked with him. We have all known who this person was, what he meant for this province, for this land. And it's really, really hard for me to carry on and talk about Manmeet.

In the end, Mr. Speaker, I just ask all the members to support this amendment so that we can honour his legacy for the future generations, so that they know who Manmeet Bhullar was, what he did, what he meant, what his legacy was. That's all. Thank you very much. I wish I could speak more, but it's emotional for me to talk about my friend.

I hope I can get support from all of you. Thank you.

The Speaker: Any questions under 29(2)(a) for the hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway?

Are there any other members who would like to speak to the proposed amendment A3? The Member for – how could I forget? – Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will just rise briefly to offer a very small token of support to what I think is a very important amendment to the motion. You know, we were all present in the House together as a large family when we experienced such a great loss together. I think that we have a unique opportunity to honour and respect that unique public servant that was Manmeet Bhullar.

You know, I would just like to point out that we aren't deviating at all from the traditions of this Assembly when it comes to honouring and respecting those who have lost their lives during their public service. I know that the government side will be very aware of that case. I think that this is another opportunity for us to take a really appropriate step and provide an appropriate honour to a public servant who tragically lost his life doing what he did best, and that was helping other Albertans. On that tragic day just a little over a year ago, on the side of the road, on his way to this place, on his way to work, he so tragically lost his life. I think this is just a small, small step to be able to honour and respect that sacrifice and that service that he made to Albertans.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Are there any other members that would like to speak to the amendment?

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I want to thank the hon. member for his words, clearly delivered with a great feeling of respect and friendship for his friend. I worked with MLA Bhullar as well across the aisle, and I have to say that I did respect the work that he did, particularly as Minister of Children's Services. He certainly opened up the process and provided, I think, significant improvements in a very bad system. I recognize that.

I note, however, Mr. Speaker, that the commission's report deals specifically with this issue, and we have moved that the report should be adopted. I'll just read this:

While the Commission acknowledges the sincerity behind those recommending that Calgary-Greenway be renamed Calgary-Bhullar as a memorial to MLA Manmeet Bhullar, who died in [a tragic] accident while on his way to the legislature, it continues to believe that his legacy will receive a more enduring and effective tribute when recognized in other ways, as for example, by way of the naming of a Calgary elementary school for him, a school that opened in August 2017.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this is a very difficult issue to address because I know that all hon. members were very deeply touched by the death of Manmeet Bhullar. As Minister of Transportation I was one of the first to be informed of the tragic accident and had the unpleasant duty of informing members of the Progressive Conservative caucus about the accident involving their colleague although the death was not confirmed for several hours. I recognize the deep feelings that people have and the emotions that this stirs up.

I have a concern – and I’ve expressed this in the past – that the public would rather have the constituencies named for them reflect the communities in which they live, whether they be urban communities or municipalities within a rural constituency. I continue to believe that very strongly.

We have a number of instances of members who have died in office. For example, the Justice critic of the NDP opposition, Gordon Wright, passed away while a Member of the Legislative Assembly, and that was very tragic. There are others, Mr. Speaker. My concern is that if we continue to name constituencies after politicians, whether they be deceased or alive, as the case was with Ralph Klein when that riding was renamed for him, very soon we’re going to have a fairly confusing situation for citizens and so on. I think we now have one constituency named for a Social Credit member, being Ernest Manning, two named for Progressive Conservatives. We have one named for Laurence Decore, the Liberal leader, and one named for Grant Notley, the NDP leader. That naming took place 20 years or more after Mr. Notley’s death and was introduced by the Progressive Conservatives and very much appreciated.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the practice has got to have some limits, and unfortunately, with regret, I don’t believe that we can support this amendment.

The Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a) to the Government House Leader?

Any other members who would wish to speak to amendment A3? Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise on this amendment. I guess I would respectfully ask the Government House Leader to reconsider the position he’s just taken. I don’t think it’s any stretch to say that Manmeet was a special individual. You know what? I recognize that we’re all special individuals, and I mean that in the most sincere way. Everybody that’s here has their place in history and does things that those that sent them here will be proud of along the way.

But Manmeet was a little bit different in many ways: the first turban-wearing Sikh to be a minister, I think, in the British Commonwealth – I think that’s historically a little bit more remarkable, as remarkable as the rest of us are – certainly, somebody that, in my view, was probably bigger than one political party, with the way he conducted himself during his time here. I’m not sure that all people on all sides of the House think that I’m their teammate. I had the feeling, though, when Manmeet was here that members of all sides of the House felt like he was their teammate. I mean that with the most respect. Historically he certainly did some difficult things during his time in office, including the work that he did on the children in care file. He was an icon and remains an icon in Calgary and, I think, in other parts of the province, and that’s a status that not all of us elected people get to achieve. On top of all that, he lost his life on the way coming to work here while trying to help somebody else in difficult circumstances. He put himself at risk.

For all of those reasons and more that don’t all need to be said, I sincerely hope that the Government House Leader will change his position and support this amendment, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a) to the Member for Calgary-Hays?

Seeing and hearing none, the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, I too feel compelled to rise on this and encourage the Government House Leader and members of the government caucus to reconsider their position on this. I don’t think anybody in here disagrees with just what Manmeet Bhullar brought to this Assembly and brought to the province of Alberta. That’s not up for debate here.

Really, the question boils down to, you know: how do we appropriately honour and remember one of our colleagues? The minister brings up some good points. There have been other MLAs who’ve passed away while in their term of office. Tragically, we learned just a couple of weeks ago that an MLA that the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat and the Member for St. Albert and I met in Charlottetown last month, Kevin Phillips, the MLA for Melfort, Saskatchewan, passed away suddenly in Saskatchewan. I don’t believe for a moment that there should necessarily be any expectation that the Melfort constituency be renamed in his honour. I don’t think that’s an expectation.

But I do think there are special circumstances in this particular case. It’s already been pointed out very clearly that in this situation Manmeet was travelling to the Legislature to work. I will never forget for the rest of my days that that morning he was on the caucus conference call with us. He was scheduled to give a question that day, and as House leader I told him to not rush, to take his time, that we would have somebody else cover his question slot, and that he could have a question the next day. Well, as we all know, that next day never came. You know, there are still times when I wonder if that was advice I should have given, but the reality of it is that Manmeet is not with us.

Specifically in the political realm, the naming of a constituency is one of the very small things that we can do as a group of colleagues, as a nonpartisan group of colleagues, to honour a former colleague. I know that the constituency name has already been changed. Falconridge is not known to anybody other than the folks that maybe have specifically read the report. The idea that there is proposed to be a constituency called Calgary-Falconridge is not known by a large number of people.

We already have a number of examples of not just members of specific political parties, as was pointed out by the Government House Leader, but of other figures from Alberta history: Alexander Rutherford, Nellie McClung. You know, these are all folks that have a place in our history. I think we have a unique opportunity here as the colleagues of Manmeet to honour him in this very special way, because I’m not entirely sure that as time passes and as the natural passage of time occurs, some Legislature 20 years from now who never had that privilege of working with Manmeet will ever make that decision to rename a constituency in his honour.

Manmeet was the quintessential public servant, the quintessential representative, and I think that we can all feel very privileged to have worked with him and worked alongside him. I know that I feel that way. While I respect, certainly, the opinion of the Electoral Boundaries Commission on this issue and I know that this was no doubt a difficult decision for them to make as well, they didn’t know Manmeet Bhullar. But we did, and because we did, Mr. Speaker, I would urge members of this House to honour his memory by renaming Calgary-Falconridge to Calgary-Bhullar.

The Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a) to the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster?

Any other members who wish to speak? The Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: This is to amendment A3?

Mr. Gotfried: To the amendment, yes, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to speak very briefly on this. You know, I knew Manmeet before I was given the privilege of serving in this Legislature. Through much of the great work that he had done in the community, he had become a friend, a contact, someone I respected. He was a young man. At the time he was the youngest legislator in this House. That floor has been broken, and I'm glad to see that. Maybe it will be broken again, but at the time he was the youngest MLA to be elected in this province. I know that not only was his community proud of him, but I think that all Albertans were proud of him for doing so.

He was a mountain of a man, and with great power came great responsibility. I had the pleasure – he sat right here beside me. I posted a picture the other day of the Alberta flag and some flowers and a holy book that was sitting in here, and it reminded me of the time that I was able to spend with him here and to sit with him, as a younger man, some probably 20 years younger than me, and to take the time to learn from him. And I think that we learned much by living and working with him and embracing him as a colleague.

But I think we also learned on his death that his commitment and his passion and compassion for people allowed him to put himself in danger on that fateful day, the one day that we had bad weather on the Queen Elizabeth II highway, Mr. Speaker. I look back on that. We had two winters in a row where we hardly had any bad weather, and that was that one we did. He took the time. He could have kept on going. As the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster noted, he didn't have to come back. He had given a speech to a group that morning on, I think, children and youth rights. He didn't have to come back, and we urged him not to come back. But he chose to come back because of his sense of duty, and he chose to stop to help those people because of his sense of compassion.

Here's a chance for us to honour that memory, Mr. Speaker, not just the memory of someone who died while they were helping someone and who served in here but a young man who, by any imagination, was in the prime of his life, with a young wife and no family started yet. We all run into his family back in Calgary. You know, I think that some of this is not just about us in the House. This is deeply personal when we run into them. He is still being missed every day.

As I think the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster said, this is an honour which we have one chance to do here. He may be forgotten in future Legislatures. This is a chance for us to honour that memory. I think there is precedent to say that we can do this. We don't have to do this. We're not compelled to do this.

I would ask you all to reach into your own hearts today. It's just over two years ago now that he passed. It seems like just yesterday that I was listening to him giving his whoops and hoots and hollers and being quite an unusual seatmate here, and I miss that. Let's think and reach into our hearts, think about his family, think about the legacy, and let's give him the honour of that, as we would hope for any of us who distinguish ourselves as he did, both in service to this Legislature and service to his constituents but in service to strangers on the streetside. This is an opportunity for us to honour that. We have one chance to do that.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, under 29(2)(a), are there any questions or comments to the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek?

Are there any other members who wish to speak to the amendment as proposed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway?

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Speaker: Back on the motion as amended, the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm speaking to Government Motion 34. I wish we'd passed that amendment moved by my colleague from Calgary-Greenway.

Anyway, I'm speaking to the main motion here for now. Mr. Speaker, I do not concur in the recommendations of the final report of the Alberta Electoral Boundaries Commission. I would like to echo the comments of my colleagues on both sides of the House who are facing substantial increases to the size of their constituencies across rural Alberta. The increases are so big that some of the constituencies are even disappearing.

I currently represent the constituency of Calgary-Foothills. Under the redistribution plan my constituency as it exists would be redistributed among three new constituencies: Calgary-Edgemont, Calgary-Foothills, and Calgary-Beddington. It's going to be three ridings. While certainly the new Calgary-Edgemont contains the Calgary community of Edgemont, this constituency is the largest part of the old Calgary-Foothills. It provides spectacular views of those foothills and the mountains to the west, and residents there have lived in Calgary-Foothills for decades and decades.

The new constituency of Calgary-Foothills is up on a plateau, largely north of Stoney Trail and west of Panorama Road. The growth of the new suburban neighbourhoods will happen here, where the plateau slopes down into the Symons Valley and across Nose Creek. These are the newer communities and are collectively known as Symons Valley.

Mr. Speaker, I firmly believe the new constituency of Calgary-Edgemont should be properly named Calgary-Foothills. I also firmly believe the new constituency of Calgary-Foothills should be appropriately named Calgary-Symons Valley. For these reasons, I would like to move an amendment, and I have the requisite copies.

The Speaker: Please proceed. Are there comments you'd like to make in reference to amendment A4?

Mr. Panda: Yeah, Mr. Speaker, speaking to the amendment. I'm just waiting for the copy. Thank you.

Mr. Speaker, the amendment. I move that Government Motion 34 be amended by adding the following after "Sessional Paper 456/2017":

except that the name of the proposed electoral division of Calgary-Foothills be changed to Calgary-Symons Valley and Calgary-Edgemont be changed to Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Speaker, I look forward to the debate and trust that the members opposite will agree with my assessment and adopt this proposed naming convention for the future constituencies in the north end of Calgary. I actually spoke to my neighbouring MLAs who represent those affected constituencies. Also, for the reasons the Government House Leader mentioned, people would prefer the names of the communities where they live.

Today we actually approved a few other changes through a few amendments, so I hope the Government House Leader and all members of this House use the same logic as when they agreed to the amendments from the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster and also from other members today.

There are already examples, so I'm asking everyone to support this amendment. Thank you.

The Speaker: Any questions or comments to the Member for Calgary-Foothills under 29(2)(a)?

Any other members who wish to speak to amendment A4 as proposed by the Member for Calgary-Foothills? The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With regret, I don't believe we can support this particular amendment. The hon. member has referenced some of the amendments to names that we did support, but these were simply a matter of restoring names that had been previously attached to those constituencies as opposed to creating new names.

You know, we certainly haven't had the opportunity to look into the appropriateness of this name. For example, Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre: there was a proposed name change, and the proposed amendment changed it back to the same name. In the case of Bonnyville-Cold Lake, St. Paul was added. In the case of Highwood a different name altogether was proposed, and the amendment just moved it back to Highwood. So in these cases, Mr. Speaker, it's pretty straightforward. We didn't have any difficulty making these changes. But in this particular case it's a new name, not one that was recommended by the commission and not one that we've had a chance to look at. So, unfortunately, I don't believe we can support this amendment.

The Speaker: Are there any questions or comments to the Government House Leader under 29(2)(a)?

Are you ready for the vote on amendment A4 as proposed by the Member for Calgary-Foothills?

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

The Speaker: We're back to the main motion as amended. The Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to Motion 34, that's before us, on the Electoral Boundaries Commission's final report. Similar to the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, I do believe, as she felt, that the interim report was a failure by the commission. I believe that the final report is failing to allow effective representation for all Albertans. I concur with a lot of comments that have been made already with regard to rural representation and the need to recognize the different dynamics within communities, but the thing that I will highlight that we need to also recognize is that effective representation needs to recognize the effective representation of industries throughout the province also.

When we move in a direction that has considerations primarily on population for representation, we fail to recognize that MLAs that are in the rural ridings not only represent people, but they represent industries. Many of us are working with industry in bringing forward the concerns from industry and the concerns that they have on being able to successfully compete in a global environment, and these are very significant concerns that need to be properly represented.

When we look at the need for proper representation for industry, I believe that when we have proper representation for industry, whether it's from the oil and gas industry, mining, forestry, agriculture, tourism, which largely takes place in the rural areas of our province, when we have effective representation for industry, then we also have very good looking out for the best interests of all Albertans.

I believe that when we talk about effective representation, we have to recognize that industry and all of those that are working in industry create jobs down the line. In my riding last week I received a report of a mill that was shutting down, Mr. Speaker, a mill that had not a lot of jobs right at the mill, but when you take a look at all the jobs that it affects down the line, from the loggers to the truckers to the equipment suppliers to everything that has played into it, it affects a lot of jobs. Good representation for industry is important, and I believe that MLAs are not only representing constituents, people, but they are there representing the industries that are within their ridings also. To spread that MLA too thin makes it difficult for the representative to do a good job for their constituency.

I look at the constituency that's been proposed, and I'm thankful that we were able to add the name "Westlock" into the Athabasca-Barrhead constituency. I live in the county of Westlock, and that is the proposed riding that I would desire to represent if the people so choose. It extends all the way from Swan Hills in the northwest right into St. Paul county. If I was to drive from St. Paul to Mallaig – and you can google this and get a better understanding of the kind of drive that would be faced. According to Google it'd be three hours and 38 minutes without traffic. You take a little bit of moderate traffic: all of a sudden you add half an hour. You take some poor weather and driving conditions: you add even more. For context, the distance from Swan Hills to Mallaig, that driving distance, is the same as driving from St. Albert to Okotoks, south of Calgary, which, in my mind, just doesn't make sense. This type of constituency, with those types of distances, makes it very difficult to have effective representation.

You know, we look at the legal requirements that the commission was given – the requirement is effective representation as guaranteed by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, to ensure that – and we go through a lot of the decisions that were made and that the commission talked about with regard to Madam Justice McLachlin. The primary goal of effective representation: this is very important to consider in being able to have a vibrant economy as well as a vibrant society and social aspects within our society. I am quite disappointed that we now have a riding that's Athabasca-Barrhead-Westlock and many other rural ridings that I believe are going to have a very hard time receiving the effective representation that the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms is demanding for us to have in our democracy.

The other thing that I'm quite concerned about is that the commission decided that representation by population was the target and then didn't have enough foresight in their final report to see that having a riding, such as my colleague here with the Cold Lake-St. Paul riding, that would be 15 per cent above the recommended number, a rural riding that is the largest by population, has all the difficulties of a rural MLA trying to represent all of those people and all of those communities.

You know, it's necessary to take a look at what the commission talks about. They talked about it in their interim report, but they also talked about it in their final report. With regard to 10 years from now because of slower growth, I don't believe this was in the commission's mandate, to decide or to try and interpret what the growth was going to be in these constituencies. They were supposed to be looking for effective representation now, not for 10 years from now. Yet they made a decision that they feel that that riding was going to grow slower than the rest and that in 10 years it would probably meet the requirements. Well, that wasn't their mandate. That wasn't what they were charged to do. They were charged to do a job, to find effective representation not 10 years from now but for those people in that region now. So I believe that they failed in their job.

You know, I can take a look at the new riding of Athabasca-Barrhead-Westlock. They took and split many of the counties, little corners off here, little corners off there. There are now nine counties in that one riding and several towns, summer villages, hamlets, and just in county and town councillors well over 100 individuals that the rural MLA needs to build a relationship with and get an understanding from of the needs within their municipality. These are significant concerns.

The new riding has 232 townships, Mr. Speaker. Two hundred and thirty-two townships. If you take a look at a township, that's 36 square miles.

An Hon. Member: The township count?

Mr. van Dijken: Two hundred and thirty-two. An urban riding is likely to be smaller than one township. How does that make any sense? It boggles my mind that they were able to feel that this commission, that this report was in the best interests of effective representation within our democracy that would serve us well well into the future.

Now, with that, Mr. Speaker, I'm going to move forward. I have an amendment to move, so I would like to move forward with that at this time. I have the copies necessary, but I didn't keep an amendment.

The Speaker: In the interests of time, hon. member, please proceed.

Mr. van Dijken: Okay. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The amendment that I've put before you now was a request from Sturgeon county. It's a county within my current boundaries; I represent them. They came forward with concerns that the name "Sturgeon" was being dropped in the commission's report. The amendment is that I move that Government Motion 34 be amended by adding the following after "Sessional Paper 456/2017":

except that the name of the proposed electoral division of Morinville-St. Albert be changed to Morinville-St. Albert-Sturgeon.

In consideration of the fact that Sturgeon – there's always been a riding of Sturgeon. All the way back to 1905 we have had a riding of Sturgeon within the province of Alberta. The name "Sturgeon" is in the current riding of Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater, and we have an understanding that, moving forward, from this point on there should be a consideration for the names of original electoral districts and that, out of respect for Sturgeon county and the request that they're putting forward at this time, this House would recognize the name as being Morinville-St. Albert-Sturgeon.

I would submit that this meets the requirement of the commission and also meets the requirements of the naming advice that's put forward, so I would ask that this House consider it and allow this to move forward. Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any questions under 29(2)(a) to the Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock? Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, with respect to 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Cooper: Correct. Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Through you to my colleague the esteemed Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock: I'm just curious to know if you've had the opportunity to speak to the Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater or anybody else in that region that may be affected by this and if they had the opportunity to provide any comments to you with respect to this particular amendment as well as some of the changes in that region and how they may affect some of the neighbouring MLAs that are, you know, quite likely to be affected as well and if they had the ability to provide comment either to the House or to you or some of the other counties in the region as well.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you for the question. The request that came forward to me also came forward to other MLAs that are representing Sturgeon county, so the Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater received the same e-mail that I got. The Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert: there's some of his riding that is part of Sturgeon county. We actually had a quick little talk about it when the e-mail came forward, and it was agreed or we had considerations that, yeah, it's worth making a request known to this House and trying to work towards the request from Sturgeon county. Hopefully, that answers your question.

I encourage everybody to vote in favour of this amendment.

The Speaker: Any comments or questions to the Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock under 29(2)(a)?

Any other members that would speak to the amendment, which we will identify as A5, as proposed by the hon. member?

[Motion on amendment A5 lost]

The Speaker: I believe we are back to the motion as amended. The Member for Chestermere-Westlock.

Mrs. Aheer: That would be a big riding, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: So many names. That's big. Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: It just takes a little bit of country, a little bit of rock 'n' roll.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very honoured to be able to speak to the commission. There have been so many interesting things that have happened. One of the more interesting parts that I found when I was able to participate was actually going to the boundaries commission and sitting and listening to so many of the groups that came in and spoke.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

One of the things that was really noticeable was that when so many of these communities, especially even in the urban communities, would come in, their discussions around the boundaries were a lot around people who shared community centres and had a lot of interesting things that were similar about their communities. A lot of these folks that came in were volunteers on these committees that had been put together to actually talk about their particular ridings. It was very passionate; it was very thoughtful. The amount of work that went in when these folks would speak about what was important to their ridings: I actually found it quite overwhelming at times to listen to all the information, Madam Speaker, and all of the things that were put into putting together the information on a particular riding.

What I found also really compelling was that so many of these people that came together actually had to reach out to many of the areas that they hadn't normally spoken with and would come together to the commission to speak about the various changes that were happening and how it was going to impact their communities, their children, the schools, a lot of different things. As a person who's rural, I guess, being Chestermere-Rocky View, it was very, very interesting to hear their information.

A lot of changes have come down, and we've heard a lot of discussions around name changes, around the way that we should look at the way the lines are being drawn. One of the things that was also very interesting was that the commission had originally proposed that they wouldn't be going past natural boundaries and all those kinds of things. Actually, just before the last part of the commission was put through, there were a bunch of different ridings that had gone past the natural boundaries. The people that had come forward from these various areas to speak about their ridings had very compelling information with respect to natural boundaries that actually had not been taken into consideration when those lines were being drawn. Thank goodness so many of the people that volunteered their time to bring that forward had the ability to be able to speak about this.

I have an amendment, but before I go on to the amendment, one of the things I'd like to mention is that all of the people that are coming here into the House to talk about the changes to names and all those things: these haven't come lightly. They've come with a great deal of thought behind them. All of the MLAs in here who have had concerns have done a great amount of outreach into their communities to speak on behalf of the municipalities, on behalf of the people that live there. There's emotional attachment to some of these names. I think it's very, very important that we take that into consideration.

With that, I'd like to move an amendment. I move that Government Motion 34 be amended by adding the following after "Sessional Paper 456/2017":

except that the name of the proposed electoral division of Central Peace-Notley be changed to Peace-Notley.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? Seeing none, another speaker to amendment A6? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Just under 29(2)(a).

The Deputy Speaker: Did you want to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Mason: I do. Yes, please.

The Deputy Speaker: Go ahead.

Mr. Mason: Why?

The Deputy Speaker: Sorry, hon. Government House Leader. I was confused. Did you want to speak under 29(2)(a), or did you want to speak to the bill?

Mr. Mason: I did. I've already done that. The question I asked was: why?

The Deputy Speaker: All right.

Hon. member, we're still under 29(2)(a). You don't choose to respond, hon. member?

Go ahead.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. The reason why this amendment is brought forward is that I think we can tell now that there's hardly anybody in Alberta that's really happy with this commission's report. It changed so many boundaries, so many names, created so many issues that there isn't a lot of love lost for this.

Now, one thing that happened here is that because of the commission and how they changed things, I guess they proved how little they knew of these constituencies and how little they knew about Alberta in how they were reworking it. For one thing, in the commission's report they've done away with Grande Prairie-Smoky. Well, in the final report they couldn't even spell "Smoky" right. So that gives you just a bit of an idea.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Now, what happened is that when they created this new constituency, Central Peace-Notley, what they didn't realize, I guess – I'm not sure what went through their heads at all, actually. They added in a huge chunk of the Grande Prairie-Smoky constituency. Now, the Grande Prairie-Smoky constituency included a town called Fox Creek. Fox Creek is not in the Peace Country. Valleyview, DeBolt, Crooked Creek, that area there, is considered south Peace. The existing part of Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley is Central Peace, and of course the northern portion of this new constituency is north Peace. By having this constituency still called Central Peace, it does not at all reflect what the constituency is, which is Peace plus part of Fox Creek.

It may have been more accurate to call it Dunvegan-Smoky because Dunvegan has such a rich history along the Peace River, over 200 years, in fact. Dunvegan-Smoky would have represented the constituency much better because Dunvegan would have taken in the Peace River, and Smoky would have covered the Smoky River and the Little Smoky River, which actually runs fairly close to Fox Creek, which is about as close as we could get to having a name that's actually representative of the area. By having Central Peace in this name when south Peace, north Peace, central Peace, outside of Peace are all in the constituency – I think it is a simple change, you know, maybe to give some sort of satisfaction to the people from these areas that have been so disrupted by this process. I think it would be a simple thing to support this amendment to the motion and have this called Peace-Notley.

Thank you.

Mr. Mason: The hon. member, if he ever loses an election, certainly has a future as a geography teacher, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, I don't think the hon. member has made the case, so I would urge my colleagues to vote against the motion.

The Speaker: Hon. members, anyone under 29(2)(a) to the Government House Leader?

Mr. van Dijken: Simply, why?

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much for that question. I was looking closely at the map, and while the hon. member certainly did do a job of sorts of expressing the extent of the riding, essentially it still covers the central Peace, Mr. Speaker. That's why.

The Speaker: Are there any other questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Are there any other speakers?

[Motion on amendment A6 lost]

The Speaker: Back to the amended motion.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I just rise to tell you that I think that if you seek it, you will find unanimous consent to move to one-minute bells.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: Are there any other members who would like to speak to the motion as amended?

The Government House Leader to close debate.

Mr. Mason: I know that the hon. members would like me to close, but I'll pass, Mr. Speaker.

[The voice vote indicated that Government Motion 34 as amended carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 10:04 p.m.]

[One minute having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[Government Motion 34 as amended carried]

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to all members for their contributions to this debate. It's not always easy and not perfect. Nevertheless, we now have the basis for bringing forward a piece of legislation to implement the changes recommended by the commission.

Having completed the evening's work, I would move that we adjourn the Assembly until 9 o'clock tomorrow morning.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Good morning.

Let us reflect. From our forests and parkland to our prairies and mountains comes the call of our land. From our farms, towns, and cities comes the call of our people. We as legislators must act with responsibility and sensitivity towards our province and its people. May we have the wisdom to meet such challenges.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 26

An Act to Control and Regulate Cannabis

The Chair: Any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to move an amendment. I have the requisite number of copies here. Would you like me to wait until you receive the amendments?

The Chair: This will be amendment A1.

Please proceed, hon. member.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Chair. The United Conservative caucus strongly believes that this amendment is important because it aligns the public use of cannabis with the same rules pertaining to alcohol along with some of the prohibitions in Bill 26. Let me read the amendment in.

Mrs. Pitt to move that Bill 26, An Act to Control and Regulate Cannabis, be amended as follows. A, section 7 is amended by striking out the proposed section 90.28 and substituting the following.

Use of cannabis

90.28(1) Except as provided in this Act, no person may use cannabis

- (a) in a public place,
 - (b) in any area or place where that person is prohibited from smoking under the Tobacco and Smoking Reduction Act or any other Act or the bylaws of a municipality,
 - (c) on any child care facility property,
 - (d) any area or place other than a residence, temporary residence or a place or class of place prescribed in the regulations where cannabis may be used.
- (2) Despite subsection (1), a person may consume cannabis with food in a picnic area designated by the owner or operator of a public park during the hours designated by the owner or operator if a sign is posted that
- (a) states that a person may consume cannabis with food in the designated picnic area,
 - (b) sets out the designated picnic area, and

- (c) sets out the hours when cannabis may be consumed with food.

(3) A person must stop consuming cannabis in a designated picnic area if a peace officer on reasonable and probable grounds believes that the person is intoxicated or is not consuming food while consuming cannabis in a designated picnic area and the peace officer requests that person to stop consuming cannabis.

B, section 27(i) is amended by striking out the proposed section 129(x.7) and substituting the following:

(x.7) respecting the use of cannabis in any area or place;

Madam Chair, this bill mirrors liquor laws in section 90.28(1)(a) and (d) and subsections (ii) and (iii). The other clauses are already in Bill 29, specifically that marijuana falls under Alberta's smoking laws and municipal bylaws.

Marijuana is a controlled substance. Alcohol is a controlled substance. It makes sense to treat these intoxicating substances the same in the law. To do what the NDP is proposing and treat marijuana as if it's no different from smoking a cigarette would not be responsible. Tobacco is a restricted substance; it is not a controlled substance. It's not the same as marijuana. You do not get high from smoking tobacco, but you do with marijuana. In that way this amendment injects common sense into the NDP's proposed legislation.

The government will tell you that they are adding more restrictions for marijuana to ensure that children aren't affected by the fumes, but why would any adult who doesn't want to smoke marijuana have to breathe in second-hand smoke, especially if there is no evidence to show that they might not also feel its effects? This evidence does not exist. One of my colleagues across the way even likened smelling perfume in an elevator, which we don't control, to marijuana. It is not the same at all. When members of this Chamber make that kind of remark, it shows you how little they are concerned about the second-hand marijuana smoke. I can assure you that my colleagues on this side of the House are extremely concerned about second-hand smoke, especially with marijuana.

Bill 26 as written also allows someone to walk down the street smoking marijuana and partake in a myriad of other public places. You can't walk the street with a beer or a glass of whisky. Why would we allow it with marijuana?

This is the crux of the amendment that I am making here today. It will treat marijuana like the controlled substance that it is and provide more safeguards for the general public, and I think the public would agree. This is the kind of common-sense amendment that recognizes that while legalization is going ahead, which is no fault of this government – everyone understands that – we need to do everything that we can right from the start to provide Albertans with the protections that they have from alcohol and that they certainly deserve from marijuana, too.

I hope that all members in the House view this amendment as an important one to include in this bill. I look forward to your thoughts. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I want to thank the hon. Member for Airdrie for her suggestions. One of the things that's important to consider: you know, the member opposite suggested that cannabis has properties that are more similar to alcohol than tobacco. The effects of cannabis are certainly more intoxicating than tobacco. I will grant her that.

One of the significant differences, though, between alcohol and cannabis consumption is that there are no public buildings with bylaws that prohibit people from drinking in their own homes, Madam Chair. I can point to any number of apartment buildings or condominium buildings in this city, in the city of Calgary, probably in the city of Airdrie where the bylaws of that building prohibit the tenants or the residents from smoking cigarettes, which is fine. There is nothing in the legislation that is before us this morning that alters the ability of the owners of buildings to prohibit people from smoking on the premises.

The issue, though, that that creates, Madam Chair, is that people who live in these buildings will have no place to consume cannabis outside of their homes if we pass this amendment. This amendment prohibits smoking of cannabis in any public place. So I ask the Member for Airdrie: where does she think that somebody who lives in a condominium or an apartment building or some other facility that prohibits smoking within the building, a person who will be able to consume a completely legal substance on July 1, 2018, where does she propose that those people go other than the parks, that may or may not be designated under subsection (ii)?

The Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd be happy to respond. I think perhaps the hon. minister is misunderstanding the text in this amendment. This is about walking down the street smoking a joint and having no laws around that. I think it's an extremely reasonable amendment. We know that this is an intoxicating substance. This is not like cigarettes. We already have a movement towards smokeless places in general, so it would be extremely reasonable to assume that the public would certainly want safeguards around public places where our children are, which is not addressed in this legislation. I think that it's a completely reasonable amendment and safeguard to put in so that we don't have (a) intoxicated persons wandering around, (b) the extremely unpleasant smell and smoke of the marijuana use.

I understand that members opposite – perhaps Calgary-North West enjoys smoking down the street or smoking a joint down the street, but the children who walk around you are not going to be okay with this. [interjections] Perhaps it's my turn to speak to this amendment. I'm trying to clarify a very reasonable amendment that protects children in this community. If this government is not interested . . .

Mr. Feehan: Point of order.

The Chair: A point of order has been raised, hon. member.
On the point of order go ahead, Minister.

Point of Order Allegations against a Member

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just noted that the previous speaker made a comment about a member on this side of the House smoking a substance which is illegal at this time and indicated that the person on this side of the House is engaging in that behaviour. I think that is a violation of the code of conduct in this House.

The Chair: Do you have a citation, hon. minister?

Mr. Feehan: Sorry?

The Chair: A citation, please.

Mr. Feehan: Yeah. Sorry. Under section 23(i) and (j), "imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member" or "uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder," I would ask that the member rise and withdraw her comments.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mrs. Pitt: Madam Chair, thank you very much. I can appreciate that there was an assumption made from myself to another member in this House, but the words that were used were: perhaps the member may enjoy smoking marijuana walking down the street.

Mr. Feehan: Madam Chair, I think we are walking a very dangerous slope here if I can simply say anything I want about the opposition members by introducing the word "may." I am more than happy to provide a variety of examples right here in the House right now if you'd like me to, but I imagine the House would be upset about the ways that I would suggest for the people on the other side of the House. I ask again that they simply stand up and withdraw what is clearly a violation and a comment which is intended to cause disruption in the House and is clearly a violation of Standing Order 23(i) and (j).

Mrs. Pitt: Madam Chair, this is simply hypothetical. There is no point of order here.

The Chair: Any others wishing to speak to the point of order?

Hon. member, I heard the comments that you made, and I listened to the minister speak to the point of order. I, too, was concerned with the implication, and I would rule that this is a point of order, that you be cautious with the language and the potential accusations that you may make. Did you wish to offer an apology to the House or withdraw the statement?

Mrs. Pitt: Madam Speaker, I will apologize if anybody was offended with the comments that I might make, but I would ask that members opposite use respectful language as they heckle across the way when I'm making a reasonable amendment to strengthen legislation to protect children in this province.

The Chair: Hon. members, the Member for Airdrie has apologized. We'll move on.

The Chair: Continue. The next speaker is the hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just want to urge all members of the House. We've got a lot to get through. We have very little time. I know that these kinds of comments are frustrating and annoying, but let's focus on the work at hand here and get down to acting in the best interests of Albertans and acting like we care about the best interests of Albertans.

You know, I asked the hon. Member for Airdrie for an answer to the question. She didn't clearly provide one. She did, however, raise a concern that she wanted to protect children from exposure to cannabis in public places. Madam Chair, it's our belief, it's our government's strong belief that the provisions in the legislation that have already been brought before this House without amendments adequately provide for the protection of children in public places. Section 90.28(c) already says that no person may smoke or vape cannabis in or within a prescribed distance from

- (i) a playground,
- (ii) a sports or playing field,
- (iii) a skateboard or bicycle park,
- (iv) a zoo,
- (v) an outdoor theatre,
- (vi) an outdoor pool or splash pad, or
- (vii) any other area or place that is prescribed or otherwise described in the regulations.

Mr. Cooper: What about a prescribed distance?

Mr. Schmidt: If the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills would limit his comments, perhaps he would be able to hear what I have to say about this issue.

Madam Chair, we consulted with Albertans on this particular issue twice. Albertans told us loudly and clearly that the provisions that we were proposing in this legislation adequately protect children from any potential exposure to cannabis, and we believe that these provisions in the legislation as presented to this Legislature strike that right balance between protecting children from a potentially harmful substance while allowing people to enjoy a substance that is completely legal if they don't have the ability to enjoy that in their home.

What the Member for Airdrie failed to answer and was the original question that I asked her: where does a person who lives in an apartment building or a condominium or some other facility that prevents smoking on the premises – where is that person supposed to enjoy a completely legal substance? The amendments as presented would prohibit them from enjoying it anywhere outside of their home. Now, perhaps they would have friends whom they could visit and they could enjoy this perfectly legal substance with friends in the privacy of their friends' homes, but that's a severe limitation on their freedoms, Madam Chair.

We think that our legislation as presented strikes the right balance between granting people the freedom to enjoy a perfectly legal substance under reasonable conditions while protecting children from the potentially harmful effects of being exposed to that substance, Madam Chair. We think that the amendment presented here by the Member for Airdrie is unreasonably curtailing the freedom of people to enjoy a perfectly legal substance, and for that reason our government will not be supporting this amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Chair. Good morning. I would like to just speak a little bit to what the member was just speaking about, a couple of different things. Just to clarify, this amendment is talking about public spaces, not private spaces, just to be clear. So if we're talking about condos or anything like that, those are homes. If there are bylaws already that stop people from smoking, then marijuana falls under smoking. If you're smoking and there are already bylaws in a private condo or any places like that, it's a significantly different thing from what we're talking about here.

On top of that, the interesting thing is that the comparison that was made by the member is that we're talking about a couple of different things here, a couple of balls up in the air. I really, like, can't imagine the difficulty there is to create legislation under this because we're talking about a lot of different balls in the air. We've got two controlled substances, right? We have cannabis and we have alcohol, both of which fall under legislation of consumption because of the substances that they are. Then we have smoking, which is legal; however, in places like condominiums, certain buildings, things like that, there is legislation and bylaws that disallow you from being able to smoke within a building. There is a balance there, I suppose, that needs to be struck, and that's potentially with a condo board or anything else like that that could be determined at that time.

I think that what we're trying to accomplish here is to understand that there are going to be people – and I think the member across the way actually said it. You were talking about limitation of freedoms. Well, when we're talking about limitation of freedoms, that's not only the person who's smoking but also the person who's smelling that and the person who is having to be in the same space as the smoke, which is why legislation was changed in the first place about smoking in public. It's the same sort of thing. It is a fine balance because you do have a substance that's being legalized. I agree that if it's legalized, people should have the freedom to be able to enjoy that. However, to the point of the minister, the thing that we have to look at here as well is that along with enjoying that – cannabis also has many forms. Maybe it's a matter of a condo board making the decision that you can vape and not smoke or whatever that is, whatever the decisions are made.

Again, we're talking about completely different things here, and this amendment is specifically to make sure that we are having the ability to maintain distance from children and people who have allergies or whatever that is. There was another member who had spoken about perfume. In my studio when I was teaching music, one of our accompanists that was in our house was completely allergic to absolutely everything, any kind of perfume, lavender, candles, all that kind of stuff. I have lots of candles, so that was a major issue. But in order for her to be able to teach in my home, we had to make sure that the space that she was working in was conducive to her being able to do her job. I think we're talking about some common-sense aspects here.

I don't think the amendment goes as far as what the minister is entailing.

Mrs. Pitt: Condos are private.

Mrs. Aheer: Yeah. Condos are private.

I'm not quite sure what the minister was trying to put together here because I believe, if I'm understanding the amendment correctly, that one has nothing to do with the other. However, I think that the points that the minister brought up are very worthy of discussion. I think that even with all the stakeholder outreach that we have done, Madam Chair, the finer points of this are some of the things that we haven't really had a chance to hash out and talk about. I think that though it may be difficult to legislate, we have to make sure that legislation is there in order to help people out who may be exposed who are not wanting to be exposed with a legal substance that, as the minister said, should be enjoyed by those who would like to partake.

The Chair: Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Madam Chair. I can't support this amendment, and I'll tell the House why. One of the things that the Wildrose, or now the UCP opposition, continued to talk about was local autonomy, and one of the things that we've really addressed and that we've committed to doing when we brought forth this legislation was to allow local municipalities to be empowered to have that local autonomy in decision-making. One of the things that we have allowed within this is that we have found nuances and caveats where the using of cannabis shouldn't be allowed. These were talked about to us by the public, and it was overwhelming feedback that we received that said that they don't want this being done on hospital grounds or in playgrounds or within vehicles, very similar to what we deal with in smoking.

The other thing I have to suggest here, too, is that there is an exception to this. This is still a pharmaceutical in some fashion. People are still using this to treat anxiety, cancer-related illnesses, or any challenges in relation to that. One of the things that we've done with our legislation and through regulations is that we are empowering municipalities to make these decisions, and an amendment like this would take away the spirit of that, so I cannot support that, to allow local autonomy in decision-making.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak? Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Chair. Just to speak to the member again about local autonomy, we couldn't agree with you more. However, again, this amendment isn't in any way impeding on that. I'd like to speak about the nuances of medical versus recreational marijuana. We are going to be seeing quite a different piece of legislation. We are all going to be having to deal with this on July 1, and as much as I can appreciate the nuances of medical marijuana, I would assume based on local autonomy that in those places that are making those decisions based on smoking, consuming, however medical marijuana needs to be used, common sense will prevail in those situations. Otherwise, the legislation provided already allows for those things to happen, so to the member: I believe that the comments that you made with respect to this amendment are in no way in respect of what this amendment is trying to accomplish.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak?
Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A1 lost]

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Chair: Back on the main bill. Any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure to rise today in the House and speak to Bill 26, An Act to Control and Regulate Cannabis. Many of my colleagues have spoken at length already about this issue, and I thought that I would like to just provide some additional comments as well as I'm sure that we will be working on that this morning. I just hope to be able to provide a little bit of insight, particularly from the people of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills on some of the things that are important to them during this period of time.

I know that there is a wide range of opinions on exactly how this legislation should be implemented. As we all know, the federal government has made their decision and has said what they have said and are going to do what they're going to do, so we need to make sure that we take the appropriate steps to try to implement this particular direction provided from the federal government with respect to cannabis.

I know that in the constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills we have already seen some significant expansion inside the economy with respect to medical marijuana. We have a couple of facilities there that I'm sure are looking forward to their ability to produce additional revenue that will come along with the legalization of cannabis. While there are certainly a lot of concerns in the constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills and while some folks are quite apprehensive about the decision that the federal government made, we are moving forward.

I think that there are certainly some pros and cons around this particular issue. You know, as we look around the province, Madam Chair, we see an economy that has really taken a lot of blows over the past number of years, both from the fall of oil prices as well as from the economic policies that have been implemented by this government. I recognize that those are two separate things with respect to the fall of oil prices, but certainly the government . . .

Mr. Schmidt: One of them is true, and one of them is false.

Mr. Cooper: Madam Chair, a point of order.

Point of Order Language Creating Disorder

Mr. Cooper: I hear the minister making an accusation that what I am saying is false. I don't know that that is adding to the decorum inside the House. The Acting Minister of Justice said that one of them is true and one of them is false. I think that this afternoon we'll be able to see in the Blues, now that we've identified exactly what he has said, whether or not he said that. In 23(h), (i), and (j) it talks specifically about language that's likely to create disorder here inside the Chamber, and making accusations that what one member is saying is false is very likely to create disorder. It's a pretty simple process. He can withdraw and apologize.

Mr. Schmidt: In the best interests of moving this process along, I withdraw my comment, Madam Chair.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you. I appreciate and fully accept your withdrawal of your comments.

As I was saying, there is a lot . . .

Mrs. Pitt: He didn't apologize.

Mr. Cooper: That is also true. He withdrew his comments. That's exactly what happened, but I have accepted him withdrawing the comments, and I think we can all move forward.

Debate Continued

Mr. Cooper: As I was saying, there are significant challenges that have been before the province, from the fall of the oil prices as well as through a number of very, very wrong-headed decisions that the government has made in the implementation of their economic policies. We've seen significant increases in our unemployment rate, and recently they've been the highest in the country. We've seen the highest spending that the province has done. We've seen significant challenges with respect to our economy in many areas of the government. All of these things are a direct result of the NDP's ideology and the decisions that they have made, with the exception of the international price of oil. We have seen a lot of challenges that have been placed before the people of Alberta, many of which are a direct result of the NDP not making great decisions.

You know, I think the implementation of the minimum wage is another example where we've seen significant job loss across the economy, particularly in the food and beverage industry. I know that I had the opportunity this summer to meet with Restaurants Canada. I'm more than happy to table the information from Restaurants Canada that shows significant job loss. I personally met with the owner of Hudsons tap house. Their company laid off over 300 employees as a direct result of the minimum wage. They're now willing to speak out. My point is, Madam Chair, that there are lots and lots of situations that the NDP has made worse.

The good news is that it appears at first blush that they're not going to make the implementation of cannabis significantly worse for our economy. I think that we have seen some signals and certainly inside the legislation some opportunities for industry, like some of the ones that are in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills that have already seen some positive job creation and investment in the region. We have seen some real positives in that regard, and I would just like to say thank you to the NDP for not making a mess of this particular piece of legislation as well. Now, there's still a lot of time, and certainly we've heard the minister speak this morning about the regulations and how fantastic they're going to be, so there's still an opportunity for the NDP to make a mess of something that they've done a good job of so far with respect to the regulation.

But I think that we are certainly on the right path. You know, there was a lot of concern in the early days of their consultation around just exactly how cannabis would be sold in the province of Alberta. Certainly, we were, or I was at least, pleasantly surprised when they made what I'm sure was a very difficult decision for them, particularly with some of the pressures that they would have been receiving from a lot of their big union friends and colleagues around how cannabis should be sold. I think that I'd like to commend the government for making the right choice with respect to engaging private industry on selling cannabis.

Certainly, we have seen some successes around private industry and the sale of restricted substances, particularly in the privatization of liquor stores by the provincial government. Of course, we all know that that took place in 1993 and was really, in many respects, a real net positive for our province. In the last 24 years we've seen that the Alberta Liquor Store Association, that, of course, is governed by the AGLC, has grown to represent 1,400 liquor stores in the province. We are open for business, if you will.

I just hope that the government is finally getting the point that private industry, small and medium-sized business are the real driver of our economy here and that competition and strength in the marketplace are really what provide great service to Albertans. We see that people have the opportunity to purchase liquor where they'd like. We have some of the best selection all across the country. This is really a driver, if you will, these small and medium-sized businesses that literally employ thousands and thousands of Albertans. There's an opportunity that has fallen in the lap of the government because of the federal government, that they have addressed as a chance for small business to succeed within the cannabis industry as well.

As we know, the ALSA and the AGLC have been successful in creating safeguards for minors in communities through policy development in conjunction with the provincial and municipal governments. I believe that it is very important that we do everything we can to keep our communities safe, that we do everything we can to make sure that we are moving forward in a positive direction but also working with retailers, with the regulatory bodies to make sure that we are in fact keeping minors safe and that communities are kept safe and that we aren't going beyond the scope of what is fully intended.

I think that's one of the reasons why we should be having conversations around: where is it going to be okay to consume cannabis and where is it not going to be okay to consume cannabis? I think that really was the heart of my colleague from Airdrie's amendment when she rose to talk about restricting the public use of cannabis. You know, we see that with the restriction of the public use of alcohol. Now, not everyone agrees that that is the best path forward, but certainly it is something that at present as a province we do have a value on. You can't just sit in a park and get hammered, perhaps, or you can't just walk down the street with beer and alcohol. I believe that the intent of the amendment from my colleague from Airdrie was to have restrictions on just exactly where you can and cannot consume cannabis.

As we all know, cannabis has a significant effect on the individual that's taking it. As well, there is some effect or at least impact on those who are close by when that individual is smoking cannabis, whether it is a direct result of the second-hand high or it is just the impact of the scent, as has been spoken about here in the House. I think that, you know, we've seen significant progress made around smoking legislation, but in many respects I'm just not sure that we've struck the right balance here in Bill 26 around the public use of cannabis.

Back to my primary point about making sure that we're doing what we can to ensure safety as well as engage with private industry. We need to make sure that we're providing the right checks and balances without overburdening the small and medium-sized business owner that's going to do that. I think that, generally speaking, people across Alberta are interested in this as an opportunity in a recessive economy.

But I will just add that I have had a number of comments and folks from the Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills region that have significant concern about, frankly, the federal government's decision to make cannabis legal in the province, so I think that it's fair that I acknowledge that there are a large number of constituents in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills that would prefer us to take a much more aggressive stance and try to push back against the federal government. While I'm not entirely sure, personally, that that is the best path forward, I do want to take the time to acknowledge that individuals, quite a few individuals, have contacted my office to express their concern with what exactly this will mean, particularly in their communities and in rural Alberta.

I think that as we move forward, it is important that we do all that we can to navigate these very important viewpoints and that we do what we can to empower municipalities to ensure that they can provide the safeguards that they feel are important in their community with respect to cannabis use. I think that goes beyond just what's currently in the legislation. I think that one of the things that will be important – and I'm just speculating here, but I believe that my colleague from Drumheller-Stettler will be providing us an opportunity to build in some structure where we will be able to review this legislation to find out: just how is it working for communities and for Albertans as we move forward?

One of the other things that I did just want to briefly touch on is the government's decision to regulate online sales of cannabis. I know from some interactions that I've already had with private industry, particularly those in the medical marijuana business, that they are already providing a lot of secure online sales of cannabis.

So I get a little apprehensive or a little concerned any time the government says, "We can do this better than you," because there are so many examples of the government making a mess of that exact mindset where they say, "We can do it better than you." I mean, liquor sales, insurance sales, utility sales: you know, there are just so many examples where the government has actually made things worse. I don't just specifically mean this government although they have made a lot of things worse; I mean that government generally has a bad track record of being in business, and that's exactly what the online sales are going to be.

I know that there's a wide variety of opinions on all sides of the House about whether or not the government should be implementing the online sales, but I do have some significant reservations about that. Perhaps it's a fine way to get started, and then as we can provide some additional checks and balances or we move forward with being more comfortable with exactly how it's going to be rolled out, I think that it is a potential spot where we could review and then turn that over to the hands of those who do that the best as well.

Madam Chair, I think that as we move forward, we need to make sure that we're partnering with business, that we are applying appropriate regulation but not to overregulate all at the same time. We need to balance those two things and ensure that we're protecting our communities, making sure that they're safe, and respecting what the federal government has decided on this cannabis legislation.

You know, private industry has a keen interest in this opportunity, and I think that that is quite important. I think the setting up of bricks and mortar operations that the government has proposed, which is going to require no upfront costs to the government, certainly was the right choice. We've heard from some of my colleagues about keeping the sale of multiple products separate and a pretty widespread support for that particular decision. It will be interesting to see what else winds up taking place in locations where cannabis is sold in terms of the other products that they may wind up selling and things that will continue to drive their business as I know that private industry will do what it can to be competitive, and that means providing good service as well as the right products. I think that it's something that we need to keep an eye on as we move forward.

You know, one of the questions that I think that a lot of folks have with regard to this particular piece of legislation and, as such, the regulations is on just exactly what the licensing process and application is going to look like, and how is the government going to implement those regulations? I think that it is a really, really important piece of this very big and complex puzzle. These particular licences have the potential of being quite valuable, so I'm always apprehensive in the early days of this sort of change in industry with who winds up becoming the winners and who winds up becoming the losers and just making sure that that process is going to be as fair and as open and as transparent as possible.

I want to strongly encourage the government to make sure that that is exactly what happens with the licensing and application process as we move forward because what we definitely don't want to see is the government picking either people close to the government or not close to the government but just really making sure that this process is as open and as fair as possible so that Albertans have the best opportunity to win, not the government.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm very, very honoured to be able to speak to this bill, An Act to Control and Regulate Cannabis. I really do, from the bottom of my heart, understand what a tough spot that this government has been put in, especially that this is a really, really unbelievable timeline that you've been saddled with to implement absolutely humongous changes to society through this regulation and legislation. So I would just like to commend the members opposite for the work that they have done so far. I can't imagine how humongous this is and the effort that has gone into creating this legislation.

I'm encouraged that there are priorities around the following goals during the outlining of this legislation. For obvious reasons I think it's worth speaking about keeping cannabis out of the hands of children and youth and protecting safety on the roads and in workplaces and in public spaces, protecting public health, and limiting the illegal market for cannabis.

Madam Chair, the legislation that has been passed at the federal level will make Canada the very first G-7 country to legalize cannabis and the second in the world after Uruguay. The ultimate goal of this initiative is to eliminate or at least reduce the black market for drugs in our country, and I understand this aspect. I mean, the damage that a drug dealer has on our streets and to our youth is staggering. Obviously, it's not as connected, but I still feel that this is an important point, that we see drugs like fentanyl being laced into other recreational substances, and they are killing our fellow Canadians at an unprecedented rate. So I truly believe that anything that we can do to limit the drug dealers' contact with Canadians is definitely a step in the right direction although it's a bit of a digression from what it is that we speak about.

There are so many opportunities to have philosophical discussions about this, the pros and the cons, philosophical, moral discussions, but the federal government has made the decision to go ahead with this initiative, and it falls on the shoulders of government and the opposition to ensure that we've covered all of the bases by putting in laws and regulations that keep Albertans safe during this transition. So again, thank you for all the work that's been done so far.

Of course, like usual, I'm sure you won't be surprised that I have questions around this. One of the things I wanted to talk about was the legal age of consumption at 18. Obviously, I understand that it correlates with alcohol consumption, but at some point if the minister could elaborate on what the factors were that went around considering that other than the obvious age of choice because of alcohol. The reason I'm asking is because there is no shortage of science to point out about the development of a brain at 18 years old, and I'm sure, I'm absolutely positive the government has looked into this. However, in the legislation or even in the discussions have we taken that into consideration at all? It would be nice to understand how that was put forward.

I think in order to have people buy into the legislation, to understand that, it's an important part of the discussion because we, of course, have the MADD groups, we have other people that have brought information forward that tells us, actually, that 25 is the better age for cannabis in terms of development of the brain. Having said that, I'm not sure that knowing that would change the way that people would consume or anything. But I think that it's necessary in order for the public to understand the differentiation so that as the legislation goes forward, as you're making decisions about what you're going to do with your precious brain, at least we have some understanding of what's going on with that.

I do appreciate how comprehensive this legislation is, Madam Chair. My primary concern with regard to regulations – again, this is a pattern that is concerning – is that those regulations will be implemented after the fact. Though I understand that it's difficult to understand how to do it at this point, there are so many things that could happen within regulations that aren't going to be discussed and debated fully here in this House. I would like to highlight some of the questions and concerns that I have that I imagine will be taken within the regulations; however, I'd like to bring them forward here.

It's really encouraging to see that the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission will be granted the oversight and distribution authority, and of course, as we all know, they have a tried-and-true record of overseeing the compliance and distribution of liquor in Alberta and already have the facilities and logistical abilities to take on this task. Given that the AGLC will be tasked with overseeing directly how cannabis gets from the producers to the retailers, will they be expected, Madam Chair, to build the new distribution centres?

A couple of questions that at least have come across in my constituency, anyways, are: are they going to be housed in the same facilities as alcohol? I know that we've had these discussions around the table. Will cannabis be housed in the same facilities as alcohol before it is shipped out, or will additional separate facilities need to be built? What are the expected costs for the AGLC taking on these additional responsibilities? I would imagine that there is going to have to be a humongous change in staff in order to be able to handle this because there's a lot more that is within cannabis legislation than even with alcohol because it is also for medicinal use as well.

For example, does the government have an approximate idea of additional staff, transportation for distribution centres? How many are we going to bring on, and how are those costs going to be offset so that the taxpayers aren't subsidizing distribution of cannabis? The reason I'm asking this is because there's nothing in the legislation that actually explains how that's going to work. While we're grateful that there have been discussions about the private sector being involved in this, there's an entire other part of this equation with regard to distribution, transportation, all those kinds of things. It's not really clearly laid out in the legislation, and understandably some of that will come with regulations, but I think Albertans need to know how that's going to come forward.

We have delivery drivers of on-sale cannabis as well. Actually, the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills brought up online. This is actually a really big deal for me personally because if you're delivering to the door – I have a friend who has purchased the tinctures and has done the vaping. It just comes to his door. That's the thing. For the online sale of cannabis, how are we going to identify and verify the age at doors? Is that going to be left with the driver that comes to – the Purolator courier guy is going to come and have to ask you your age. I mean, if it's my son, who's got a real baby face, obviously, they're going to ask for his ID. But how do you prove that that ID is legit? I mean, all of a sudden you're giving a driver the same responsibilities as what? We don't even have a police force yet to deal with it. There are a lot of things that come to your door, obviously, that are age appropriate, but this is serious. This is a substance, right? [interjections]

I'm just asking these questions. I'm not trying to aggravate the government. I just think these are legitimate questions. These are things that people have asked me. I'm sorry if it upsets you, but I think it's legit. If you're upset, maybe you have a solution. I'd love to hear about it. That's why I'm asking. It's not to anger you in any way. This is what people are asking me. I'm sorry if you're frustrated, but I think it's a legitimate question. We're not talking about just a regular item here. We are talking about cannabis. On top of that, we don't even know, we're not even sure what products, particularly, are going to be coming to the door either. On top of that, is there a liability, then, to the driver who maybe doesn't check? What happens then? What if your 14-year-old looks like an 18-year-old? The assumption is made. The product is given. What happens then? You can be as angry as you want about that, but that could happen, right? I'm just asking the question because I think it's something that we need to discuss here maybe previous to the regulations, and if you have a solution, great. That's why I'm asking. So identifying the age at the door: how will this be addressed?

What if the individual who orders this cannabis is not at home? Is another individual not ordering the cannabis able to sign for that like you can with other products at the door? My kids can sign for pretty much anything for me. That was before they were 18 years old. If no one is home, then, would the package be just left at the front door? [interjections] You can say no, and that's great. Again, it's not in the regulations. That's why I'm asking. Like, these are the questions that I'm asking. That's great if you know the answer, and again that's wonderful that it's in the regulations, but I think that it's worthy of a discussion in here. We can't assume; Albertans just can't assume that government is just going to have all these answers. These are actual questions that are coming across my desk.

Now, is it sent back to central distribution, then, if it doesn't end up at your door, and then how does one go about doing that? Is it just the same as a normal package? Like, you just go pick up your cannabis at the cannabis distribution centre, show your identification and whatever it is, and away you go? I just don't know. There are security risks with both these options. If people want to get away with it, these folks are savvy, right? They are going to know how to do this. I'm asking these questions not just for everyday Albertans but because there are going to be people that need and want these products that may not be able to afford them for whatever reason and may be looking to steal them from other people's homes. There are a lot of different things. I could go on and on because every household is different and every situation is going to be unique. There are a lot of things that are caught up in just those small little things. Again, I'm sorry if I have angered the government, but I really think these are legitimate questions.

For example – I just wanted to give a personal example – if I order a package from Amazon and they come to my house to deliver it and my husband or children are home, they can sign for it. Then that package is taken on my behalf. If no one was home, they've left a note, or do they plunk it right in front? It doesn't matter what it is. Or Canada Post or another mail provider will come and pick up the package, and you can go and pick it up by a nearby post office. Is Canada Post involved with cannabis distribution as well?

Again, these are really, really legitimate questions, and they're expensive questions, too, because distribution is going to be very costly, especially if it's not being done through the mainstream, for the obvious reasons of making sure that said package is ending up in the hands of the person that is actually requiring or needing or paying for it or of legal age.

Will local pickup centres be established? I'm asking this because of rural areas as well. There are not always local distribution centres in some of these areas. We were just talking about how large some of these ridings are going to be. For those people who are wanting to partake or for their medical marijuana, now are they going to have to drive to the city of Calgary from way out at the edges of some of our ridings or to the larger centres in order to be able to pick up their products? Are the drivers required to return to the same home and deliver that order? I mean, aside from the aspect of cannabis itself this could become a really, really expensive endeavour. All of a sudden, you know, your dead costs on a product and all of those other things have quadrupled as a result of distribution and all these other kinds of things. Again, if this is being done through regulations and under the auspices of government and that's not part of the private sector, we could have some problems there.

We have heard from some organizations such as the Alberta Liquor Store Association that have for several decades sold liquor safely and already have the trained staff and protocols in place to ensure that minors do not have access to controlled substances. And while I understand that the federal government has recommended that cannabis not be sold in the same location as tobacco and alcohol, will owners who have the experience running those stores be considered and prioritized, I suppose, in the licensing phase should they wish to open up a separate or private retail facility?

The only reason I ask that is because it's not about prioritizing a particular group of people, but they do have the knowledge and the background and the wherewithal. I'm just curious if that outreach has been done with those folks simply because they do have the knowledge of how to distribute this appropriately. Maybe there's going to be training. I'm not sure. This is another thing. I don't think that people understand quite how this is going to be done.

Will there be measures put in place to track individuals buying large quantities of cannabis? Now, I'm asking this because, as I understand it, adults can only possess 30 grams – that's great – but how do you know that Cannabis R Us driving up to your house every day isn't delivering 30 grams every day to you? Is there a tracking mechanism to do that? What if you have four people in the house consuming or eight, for that matter, or eight people order it from that house and it's going to one person? Like, are we going to be able to track that?

We have four plants in the home. That's fine. But, again, are there going to be limits? We understand that there's a limit to how much you can possess, but are there limits as to how much you can purchase? That's the question.

Again, if your neighbour is growing it and has a licence to grow it, are you allowed to have more and purchase even though technically speaking you're only allowed to have 30 grams? Then are you allowed to distribute it after that – what about that? – especially, you know, if that truck is rolling up to your house every day and you have the account and away you go?

Just a couple of things to consider. These are all, I know, small details, but these are the things that are really going to matter as we transition, and these are life-altering changes to how we function here in Alberta.

The Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills was talking about the online store. What's that going to look like? This is a substantial undertaking from a technology perspective. Is the government also going to take steps to protect personal information on those sites in the form of personal order information? I'm assuming that, again, some sort of personal identification will have to be submitted to the website in order to verify age. This isn't just your credit card now; this is your driver's licence or your passport or whatever piece of identification you need to prove that you're 18. How are we going to verify age online? What's that going to look like?

Given the fact that firewalls and other protective measures will have to be in place in the development of the websites, this is extremely, Madam Chair, sophisticated and complicated and again will be an extremely expensive process and will likely take regular maintenance and updating. The cost implications of the government taking on the oversight of online sales: will the cost be offset by the sales, or is there a risk that the taxpayers will be subsidizing this online store as well? Again, I really think that for the sake of the taxpayers we need to make sure that they understand what we're getting into here.

Madam Chair, one of the things that I heard about specifically was: do rental owners have any say over any damage that could be done through smoke of cannabis? I'm assuming that based on the type of smoke that it is, it's probably significantly different than tobacco smoke. What we'd heard of is that – are we understanding that the government will be taking steps to prevent renters or condo dwellers and residents of multifamily dwellings also from growing cannabis?

As the Member for Airdrie had mentioned, it might not be different than having four ficus or four whatever. However, as I understand it, there are hydroponics that may be involved with growing cannabis. I'm not sure. Again, I think that for those folks we have the smoking piece, which, of course, is up to that condo board, those people, the folks that are living there, but the damage that's actually done in the space: is that taken into consideration should there be damage done? Are there going to be regulations in order to make sure that those people are protected, too, as well as protecting the rights of the people that are wanting to partake in cannabis? You know, we already have the ability to prevent people from smoking cigarettes.

When an individual is selling a home in Alberta, will they be required to disclose that they grew cannabis in their homes or smoked cannabis in their homes previous to selling their home? When I was young, my mom smoked in our house, and so did my grandparents. I can tell you that when we painted the walls, there was an obvious, obvious colour change about four feet up to the top of the ceiling when I purchased my first house from my parents and painted that house. Bless my mom's heart – I love her to bits – but there was a really, really significant change in colour on the walls where she was.

I was curious. As parents, like, if your children are young and you're looking at buying a home, is there an impact to the environment of that space having had people smoke cannabis in there for a long time or growing it, for that matter? You know, we, obviously, when we're moving into homes, take adequate safeguards to protect our children. What if there are any leftover substances or residue? I think that could substantially change the price of a home.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you, Madam Chair, and good morning, all. Interesting conversations so far this morning. I rise this morning to speak to Bill 26, which is An Act to Control and Regulate Cannabis, as we all know. I'd like to begin by saying that, frankly, I'm not in favour of legalizing marijuana myself, but I understand that it is a federal issue, and I'm not here to debate that particular point. But there are many times in your life when you don't get what you want, and ultimately you use what means you can and deal with an issue that you'd rather not deal with sometimes. But as the old saying goes, when you're given a lemon, you make lemonade. So that's exactly what I intend to do.

Unfortunately, for us here, though, the Prime Minister has legalized marijuana and, much as he has done with a lot of other things, in a somewhat rash manner, perhaps ill advised and perhaps, I dare to say, half baked. But because of his lack of a coherent approach, much of the responsibility to implement the safeguards has been delegated to the provinces and to us. So that has led to the bill that's before us today.

Unfortunately, the government here appears to have somewhat followed in some respects the Prime Minister's example, I think. While the government is quick to explain that it's doing everything it can to protect Albertans, when we take a moment to dig into this legislation, what we find is that there is a whole lot left yet to be desired, in my opinion.

I speak on behalf of many members of my constituency in southern Alberta who contacted me regarding this. A lot of my constituency, as many people know, is made up of small towns, a lot of older citizens there, and they're just not acquainted with this particular situation. And I don't blame them. They didn't have it when they were young. So I'm trying to convey what they're telling me in my remarks today.

One aspect of their concerns and of my concern is the ability to use marijuana in public places similar to cigarettes. I will admit to being a bit out of my area of expertise here, folks. I really want you to know that. I don't have a lot of experience when it comes to these products. I never participated myself, nor do I wish to participate in the consumption of these products. I've never felt the effects of marijuana personally. I cannot personally attest to whether being intoxicated from this product is a similar experience to being intoxicated from alcohol.

But what I do understand, though, is that tobacco is a restricted product or substance and alcohol is a controlled substance. Restricted versus controlled is what I've just been speaking of. When marijuana is officially legalized, apparently it will be as a controlled substance if this bill goes forward. This leaves me to believe that it should probably be treated in a similar manner to alcohol because it's a controlled substance.

Likewise, I don't believe anyone in this House is making the claim that marijuana is not intoxicating. I think that most people are aware that it has effects on the human mind. It might not be the best use of the word, but the word "intoxication" immediately brings to mind someone drunk on alcohol. That's what we normally think of when we talk about intoxication.

Again, while I've never experienced the effects of marijuana, as I've said, according to Health Canada, though, the effects of marijuana or, more specifically, the chemical THC include confusion, drowsiness, anxiety, fear, or panic and/or impaired ability to remember, concentrate, and pay attention. I often wonder why someone would want to do all of that to themselves. According to Health Canada, again, THC also affects co-ordination, reaction time, decision-making abilities, and your ability to judge distances.

How does that compare to alcohol? Well, going back again to the Health Canada report, they list the effects of alcohol as drowsiness, dizziness, slurred speech, reduced inhibition, loss of co-ordination, inability to think clearly, inability to estimate distances, decreased reaction times, amongst others. Again, one wonders why someone gets involved with alcohol as well in many of those types of situations.

There appears to be similar circumstances or an overlap, which I believe further demonstrates why we should be treating marijuana, therefore, the same as we do alcohol. Why wouldn't you do that? Again, let me be clear. I don't believe that marijuana and alcohol intoxication manifest themselves in the same way. What I believe and what Health Canada clearly supports is that they are both intoxicating substances. And while it is not a perfect solution, I believe placing the same restrictions on marijuana as are placed on alcohol is therefore the best course of action that we could take.

Currently under Bill 26 – and I'm not an expert on this bill – it is my understanding only that it proposes to prohibit smoking or vaping marijuana in any area where a person is currently prohibited from smoking under the Tobacco and Smoking Reduction Act or any other act or bylaw that a local municipality may undertake. I'm actually happy to see that municipalities are going to be empowered to create bylaws governing the use of this substance in their communities because as we've seen in the past, different communities have different needs and preferences. I think that is a good thing, and I'm sure the Minister of Municipal Affairs would agree with me.

However, where this bill currently falls short is that it doesn't appear to prohibit the public consumption of marijuana, and I know we've discussed that at length this morning. Again, it's my understanding that if this bill is left unamended, it would allow anyone legally allowed to consume marijuana, which is what we're intending to do, I understand, to do so in any public space where they are currently allowed to smoke tobacco.

Now, part of my background, by the way, includes working for over 25 years, roughly, in an environment known as the business world of downtown Calgary, in oil and gas. So many times I've seen where people in the public are required, if they're smoking, to stand aside from the outside of the building for several yards so that they don't hamper the enjoyment of the fresh air outdoors of the people going in and out of those businesses. I know, too, that what Health Canada seems to say is that marijuana smoke can, it sounds like, be even more impactful to people that may be out in the public air, where this is possibly going to take place.

Again, what it seems to me to mean here, from what I've read of the bill, is that on a sidewalk or at a park or any other public space in Alberta consumption of this product would be allowed, and that is what concerns me, if the public is going to be negatively impacted by this. And that is what concerns a lot of my constituents.

This isn't necessarily about the effects of second-hand smoke, therefore. I believe that some members from across the aisle have mentioned that there isn't any research that supports the claim that second-hand marijuana smoke results in bystanders getting intoxicated, but I do think that there would be some negative impacts. I think it's undeniable that when someone is vaping or smoking marijuana, they could have an adverse effect on those immediately around them, no matter where they are. However, if we limit the use of marijuana in a public place or any place other than a residence, temporary residence, or a place approved through regulations, which we've talked about, that would limit the negative impact of marijuana to only those who make the choice to be around someone consuming that product. That seems to make sense.

No one is claiming that being around someone who is drinking is going to result in a person nearby getting drunk. That is not why public consumption is limited. However, all Albertans have a reasonable expectation that when they go out in public, they won't be exposed to alcohol under our current rules. I believe Albertans should have, therefore, the same reasonable expectation when it comes to marijuana. It just makes simple sense. That is why I've been supporting amendments to limit its public use. The current laws in this province prohibit people from consuming alcohol in a public place or any place other than a residence, temporary residence, or place approved through regulations. Why can't we do that with this?

Therefore, Madam Chair, I believe an amendment should be passed that would extend that same provision for alcohol, a provision, I might add, that has, in the case of alcohol, withstood the test of time and enjoys the support of all Albertans and from many provinces across Canada. Should such an amendment be supported, I think it would be great because it would treat controlled substances – controlled substances – the same.

As I have already mentioned more than once, marijuana is an intoxicating substance like alcohol, so ensuring that users of this newly legalized controlled substance would comply with the same kinds of laws that are currently in place for alcohol would provide the greatest protection for Albertans and their children and families, who have a reasonable and, I think, natural expectation that they are not going to be exposed to marijuana when they are in public places.

Madam Chair, to conclude, I think I've made my points with regard to the use of marijuana in public spaces very clear. I think that although the previous amendment, which was a little bit detailed, did not get passed, I believe that without such an amendment being made and passed, I will have great difficulty in supporting this bill.

Thank you very much.

Mr. Strankman: Madam Chair, could I have two minutes, please, to revert to Introduction of Guests?

The Chair: We've had a request for unanimous consent to revert. Is there anyone opposed to this request?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Chair: Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Strankman: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. It's with great pleasure that I would like to lighten the atmosphere in the Chamber here today to introduce various guests that are up in the Chamber. We have a young gentleman by the name of Porter, who is 10. We have Paxton, who is eight, and Peyton, who is four. I've got a secret message here that says that tomorrow Porter is getting a puppy. With the greatest of respect, ma'am, I want to introduce our caucus leader's dear wife. Her name is Tanya. If she'd please rise and receive the respectful, warm welcome of this Chamber, because I think she absolutely deserves it.

Bill 26

An Act to Control and Regulate Cannabis

Mr. Strankman: I'd like to revert to speaking to the bill, ma'am.

Madam Chair, I rise today to initiate an amendment to Bill 26. If any of the pages could present this, I'll speak to it briefly.

Bill 26 is an important piece of legislation, and we need to be as respectful as we can going forward here. It's important. With respect – and I talked about admonishing respect to our visitors here in the gallery today – legislation, which is what we do in this place, can be here for many days, hours, years, months, and that's part of the reason why we have the recording body here, known as Hansard, to record every word that we use.

You know, in the case of this substance, as my colleague from Livingstone-Macleod said, it hasn't been controlled. It's been outside the boundaries of legislation prior to this time. The federal government has sought to try and bring some sort of control to it, I guess, if you will, and we in the provincial jurisdictions have to try and manage the presentation that the federal government is bringing forward.

As the pages distribute this piece of legislation, I'd just like to read into the record, Madam Chair, if I could, the amendment. I move that Bill 26, An Act to Control and Regulate Cannabis, be amended by adding the following after section 27:

27.1 The following is added after section 130:

Review of the Act

131 Within 5 years of the coming into force of this Act, and every 5 years after that, a special committee established by the Legislative Assembly must begin a comprehensive review of this Act and must submit to the Legislative Assembly, within one year after beginning the review, a report that includes any amendments recommended by that committee.

Now, Madam Chair, I spoke the other day to the significance of the potentiality of a review to legislation. This review would be a comprehensive process, and that's because this is the attempt to legalize a substance. Some would call it a drug; some in the past would call it an illegal drug. My colleague from Airdrie talked about locations. It's unfortunate that it created a condition in the Legislature where the Member for Calgary-North West took offence at the presentation of that, and they went through a whole harangue, I guess, if you will, in that case.

The idea of this amendment, Madam Chair, is not without precedent. As I said the other day when speaking to Bill 30, that we have in front of us in the Legislature, in the short period that I've been in this Chamber, since 2012, I believe this piece of legislation to be one of the most in-depth and, some would say, onerous. It's approaching 150 pages of legislation and changes thereto, but at the end of that act it specifically talks about the possibilities or the requirement for a review, and I think that's important.

There are many jurisdictions in the U.S. and many precedents set here in Canada and indeed in this Chamber about review. Some would use the slang term "sunset clause." It's not talking about the legislation actually going off the books at the end of five years; it's talking about the need for a clear, comprehensive review going forward. We have that, Madam Chair, in bills that have come forward from this Assembly: the disabilities advocate act, the Child and Youth Advocate Act, the Conflicts of Interest Act, and the Missing Persons Act.

Madam Chair, I'm asking for the indulgence of the Chamber to understand that this is not a new precedent. This is quite standard. I believe that this government or any government would try and keep, as many of us have, talking about red tape reduction and the potentiality of keeping the bills, legislation that are created in this Chamber fluid but current to the people that we represent, whether it be in the diverse constituency of Drumheller-Stettler or I think it's the fabulous constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Outstanding, actually. Outstanding.

Mr. Strankman: Outstanding. My error, ma'am. We see that by some of our fabulous, outstanding guests that we have in the Legislature here today.

You know, to go back to seriousness, this isn't an approval or denial of the subject at hand. This is a legislative change that I would like to see brought forward when it comes to all legislation. This isn't approval or denial of the societal issue of cannabis. It's an admission that we cannot see every possibility or include, possibly, every liability and not force that onto the courts or the legal system to be the final judge of that so that it can come forward.

Madam Chair, it's a point of timing, I guess, to bring this forward. I spoke of it the other day as a form of cleansing of the legislative bureaucracy that we have here and a way to create or, if you will, incentivize modernization of the work that we do in this Legislature.

I'm open to hear discussion on this, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2? Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Madam Chair. I want to thank the Member for Drumheller-Stettler for bringing forward this amendment. I got taken aback because there's so much pot talk here, and I thought this was out of order because we had this amendment yesterday, but I realize that that was Bill 29, so my apologies.

Mr. Strankman: Good morning.

Mr. Sucha: Yeah. Right. I have my coffee, so I'm good.

Nonetheless, you know, this is one thing where we're setting up a framework to really continue to evaluate. I'm very reluctant to be very prescriptive about specific reviews to the act.

One thing that I reflect on is that Alberta has been down this road in a different fashion before, in the '30s, which was Prohibition, on the legalization of alcohol, and since that time we have never stopped changing the way regulations are done. We have never stopped changing elements of the act. It's something that is continuously going on. Even today we just got a press release, that everyone probably got in their inbox, about the AGLC handling special-event licensing and the fact that that's already changed again.

Really, this is going to be something that is unprecedented, that's very new for our province and for our country. In some ways five years doesn't go far enough. In some ways we're going to be continuing to watch within some of the ministries, and we're going to continue to be questioned during question period. I think that there are many different ways that we'll be able to address members' concerns of being able to review this within this House on a regular basis, even within discussions between ministries and feedback that we receive and also even through the AGLC, that is empowered to help recommend, through Treasury Board, regulation changes about distribution and sales of marijuana.

With that being said, at the end of the day, even looking as we move forward, as our ministries are going to continue to re-evaluate this, both Justice and Treasury – with it being part of AGLC, it will fall under their purview – I think we will already be making sure that we can regularly monitor this, that we will be responsive to the House, and that their annual audits will be issued publicly for people to review.

So I don't think that this amendment, while well intentioned, is necessary. Thank you.

The Chair: Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'll just rise and speak briefly to this. You know, when I saw this amendment, my first thought was: well, that seems entirely reasonable. As I listen to the debate and think more about it, if anything, five years is perhaps too long, given the scale of the change that is before us here. While I am certain that the Member for Calgary-Shaw is not incorrect when he says that changes and tweaks and reviews and analysis will go on on an ongoing basis – I'm sure that will happen – I think it is important for us as a Legislature to put in some firm timelines to actually do formal reviews of something so substantively different.

If anything, frankly, I would suggest that a three-year timeline might be better than five, because what this really says is that within five years of coming into force, we'll appoint a special committee that then has a year. We're now two and a half years into this Legislature. On this timeline there's a reasonable possibility that this wouldn't even come up for review in the next Legislature. So, you know, if anything, perhaps we could be looking at three years or even one year in sitting down and tasking one of our committees with doing that work.

I think this is an entirely reasonable amendment. You know, while I'm certain and have no doubt that the government will do their part in reviewing this as it rolls out over time, it seems entirely reasonable to me that we would support this amendment and hope the government will reconsider.

Thank you.

The Chair: Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Chair. I want to thank the Member for Drumheller-Stettler for bringing this very, very important amendment forward. Just to clarify, there is a huge difference between a legislative piece like this and looking at evergreening our reviews, which is very, very different. Obviously, with legislation of this magnitude, evergreening is necessary. Within the AGLC and any of the other bodies that are required to participate, there are going to be tweaks along the way. We understand that. That, in essence, actually, is where your regulations would come into play, to actually help with those kinds of things.

However, when we're looking at a complete review, especially at a time when things are changing so much – we can talk about Prohibition. We can talk about alcohol. We still don't even have that right. We're talking about a situation where we don't even know how our police forces are going to deal with this on the roads. We don't even have a mechanism yet to test for this. There are so many unknowns, Madam Chair.

Personally, instead of being reactive and just going into question period and asking questions after something has already happened, I would prefer to err on the side of being prescriptive and preventative versus being reactionary. This isn't a game, right? This is a serious change in how lives are going to be impacted in this province. With all due respect to the member, I do believe that it's imperative – as a body in here we have the absolute responsibility of transparency – to be able to show to the people of Alberta how we're doing and how things are going, not just about little tweaks and changes but actually looking at the legislative piece of this to see if things need to be changed.

Again, I'd like to thank the Member for Drumheller-Stettler for bringing this amendment forward. I think it's very necessary. I'll be supporting it.

The Chair: Any other speakers to amendment A2?

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: Back on the main bill, the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. One of the questions that we in the Alberta Party caucus have, between my colleague and I, is around the online sales component. As the government, I think wisely, has done, the retail sales aspect of Bill 26 is being allowed to happen within the private sector, and I give the government credit for taking that step. It's a wise one. Our analysis had showed that at least $168 million would have needed to be spent to stand up a government retail system. So, again, I give them kudos for listening to that feedback and the feedback of many thousands of Albertans who shared that view.

However, when it relates to online sales, they have gone with the government monopoly model, and that creates, potentially, a number of challenges in a number of different areas: in online security, public safety, and, I think, most importantly perhaps – well, if not most importantly, at least the challenge here is maybe most acute – in government costs. We don't have cost estimates yet, to date, from this government on what it will cost to stand up the online system, and my colleague the Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill and I along with our diligent, thoughtful, and incredibly hard-working staff have thought about whether, in fact, it is justified to do a government model on the online sale component.

With that, Madam Chair, I will move an amendment. I have the requisite number of copies here and will hand those to you.

The Chair: This will be amendment A3.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that Bill 26, An Act to Control and Regulate Cannabis, be amended as follows. In part A section 7 is amended in the proposed section 90.08 by striking out subsection (2) and substituting the following:

- (2) Subject to the federal Act,
 - (a) no person may sell cannabis online other than a department, agency or cannabis licensee designated by the Minister, and
 - (b) no person may purchase cannabis online except from a department, agency or cannabis licensee designated by the Minister.

In part B section 27(c) is amended by adding the following after the proposed clause (i.1):

- (i.2) respecting qualifications and conditions for cannabis licensees that engage in online cannabis sales pursuant to section 90.08(2).

Madam Chair, this actually is an amendment conceived by my colleague the Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill, whose idea this was, who, unfortunately, is out... [interjections] Thank you very much. Despite her commitment to public health by having received the flu shot, one wonders perhaps if she's managed to get the flu anyway. She's out – she's not out. [interjections] I'm going to just move on. This is when you've hit rock bottom and you start to dig.

The amendment, Madam Chair. Our concerns revolve around the concerns about online sales. We recognize that online sales are particularly important to help undercut the black market in rural and other communities that may not have a retail presence at least at the outset of legalization or perhaps may just not support a retail presence in those communities. That's a concern that was raised by municipal councillors in the AAMD and C in particular and, I believe, AUMA as well. The question is: will the government model, a monolithic one-size-fits-all government model, in fact satisfy that desire to undercut the black market by providing a quality product in a timely way cost-effectively to rural consumers as well as urban consumers anywhere in the province?

This amendment seeks to allow the minister to make certain regulations around the safety and security of online information as well as regulations around storage, transportation, purchase, and authentication for purchasers. It allows for the government to designate cannabis licensees as online vendors alongside government departments and agencies, which will, we believe, mitigate some of the risk regarding online information being stored in one location. We've had some quite serious hacking incidents of government computer systems in the postsecondary sector and in other areas. When we have all of this information in one place, I think Albertans are right to be concerned about their information security. It also mitigates the risk of overhead when it comes to government supplying and delivering online sales.

As I said in my introduction, our concerns are threefold: online security, public safety, and the government cost. When it comes to online security, there is going to be a large volume of information, including people's contact information, their address and location, payment options, age verification, and other identifying factors. This creates a particularly high risk if that information is the target of a security attack. We know that the government is a fairly obvious target, a large target, for hackers and online security threats – we've seen those breaches before – given that the information shared is of a particularly confidential nature. In addition to personally identifiable information, it relates to the consumption of a now legal but intoxicating product.

We feel that the time required for government to ensure that these regulations are in place and meeting certain safety thresholds is going to be challenging to meet if they're relying exclusively on a government model. Adding additional vendors as an option helps spread the risk both from all that information being in a single location online and from being a less desirable target because there are many of them. Also, it reduces other risks in terms of the timely rollout of online sales.

From a public safety perspective some of the concerns that we have have been expressed, I believe, previously by other members. Online sales will require storage and transportation. Neither Canada Post nor FedEx nor any of the others are security agencies. Age and identification verification, a signature required upon delivery: those could be challenging. Certainly, there are risks, then, of minors obtaining cannabis illegally.

In addition, there are concerns around storage. First, the government is likely going to have to stand up some sort of distribution warehouse. Perhaps the idea is for it to come out of the central warehouse. I don't know if the government would set up their own online retail location in the same way that the physical retailers would be set up and there would be that wholesale model or if the government would simply take it out of the central AGLC warehouse. That's, obviously, to be determined, but if there is to be an additional warehouse, again, there is a cost.

If there are locations outside of the warehouse, especially as we see in rural Alberta, we've heard much in this House, quite justifiably, about the increase in rural crime. Will a government online retail model risk an increase in being targeted, say, at post offices or PO boxes in rural Alberta? If you've got the local drug store/post office, are we going to have boxes full of cannabis for delivery behind the counter at the local post office? If so, how are they going to handle the climate control or the quality control aspects of that? More importantly, how are they going to handle the security aspects of that? Is that even an option? All of those potentially in one place create a very attractive target for criminals, in particular in rural Alberta. That is mitigated if multiple stores or multiple organizations are making online orders in smaller communities, as opposed to all of that being in a single location.

Finally, a grave concern we have about the online component being run exclusively by government is both the start-up and ongoing costs. How will government determine the market for this and therefore the amount and types of cannabis? How are they going to measure demand? One of the things the private sector does incredibly well is understand and react very quickly to consumer demand. With tremendous respect to the wonderful people in Alberta's public service, if we look at other government-controlled liquor models in other provinces, they're not world renowned for being responsive to consumer demand. It tends to be one-size-fits-all. That will take time, it will take research, and, most importantly, it will take money, so if the government does want to do an online approach, they should not rush it and also consider spreading the risk, the workload, and the cost to other, private-sector vendors.

Again, we've talked about storage. Government storage for online sales would need to be regulated, temperature controlled, and monitored in order to maintain the quality of product and make sure products don't expire, et cetera. Again, we have a real opportunity here to leverage local vendors, who will already have those facilities, and those facilities will be spread throughout the province.

We're very concerned about the cost of government online sales. This is a cost that could easily be borne by the private sector. In the absence of any sort of details it's quite difficult to evaluate this bill, and it raises significant concerns for us. What we're seeking through this amendment is to expand the options that government has in terms of rolling out online sales to include the private sector if they choose. This does not preclude the government from setting up their own distribution system, but I do have concerns that both the cost of this as well as the quality and responsiveness of a government online system may not meet consumer demand, may not satisfy the government's desires to undercut the black market, may not be any more secure, in fact may risk being less secure because all of that information that Albertans will submit to the system will be in a single location and vulnerable to online attacks.

I would hope that the government would give some thought to passing this because it just simply expands the options. It does not restrict or tie their hands, as they have in the current legislation. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A3? Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Madam Chair, and I want to thank the Member for Calgary-Elbow for bringing forward this amendment. I know that he and myself have had copious amounts of debate online on Twitter about this and what the right models are, and it's been very wholesome.

I think it's important that as we move forward on this legislation that, to be frank, we're forced to enact because of federal legislation that's coming into force July 1, 2018, we have to be very cautious and concrete with how we're moving forward. That was why the first thing that we did was hear from 60,000 Albertans, who helped us develop our cannabis strategy.

As we moved forward with developing this, one of the key issues that we've heard and, to be frank, the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View even alluded to this in some of her questions, was age verification. Age verification is a huge concern of mine, specifically because I know that my son is growing like a weed, and he, within a matter of a few years, could potentially look like he's 18.

Mr. Coolahan: No pun intended.

Mr. Sucha: Oh, I didn't even realize that. Thank you, Member for Calgary-Klein, for that comment.

With that being said, there are two elements in which that has to be verified because there are two potential markets. There's point of sale, and then there's point of delivery. We have already seen from the liquor market that we have here in Alberta that we are going to be able to manage the point of sale. I feel wholeheartedly that while there may be some hiccups from here and there because we've dealt with that with the AGLC, I feel very confident that the point of sale is going to be well managed and well regulated, especially with oversight from the AGLC because they really hold a hard line when it comes to sales to minors and suspending licences whenever instances run the risk of occurring. Even if individuals are over 18, if they don't have proper identification, failure to provide that or failure to ask for that has some swift penalties to the salesperson.

The main concern that we've been hearing is the point of delivery for the online mailing system. You know, I've heard from some key stakeholders – and to be frank, some of them are within the private sector – that there is a lot of concern in relation to drug trafficking through online distribution sales, that it is harder for us to manage quality control, and that sometimes things can be masked through that fashion. That's why we looked at safety as the top concern and keeping this out of the hands of kids when we move to a public model.

Now, with that being said, I don't have the crystal ball. Down the line we might not have the public model. Down the line we might be able to address these concerns, and they might be able to be managed. But at this moment, right now, from all the evidence that we have received and from all the feedback that we received from the public, the public model seemed the best way to go to ensure that it stayed out of the hands of kids.

You know, Jeff Mooji from the 420 Clinic said in our news conference that we had that the online sales were just as effective as the private bricks and mortar sales for the age verification. Further to that, he said: there are some concerns in that the public model is the only way we feel that we can ensure age verification at point of sale and point of delivery. It's also a way for us to have a centralized system, where if we're running into issues, we can manage it accordingly. That's why we've committed to going for a public model.

Now, I want to remind members of when we went to the private model for liquor stores in Alberta. That was in 1993, and that was the Liquor Control Amendment Act, 1993. When we opted to change from doing a public model to a private model of liquor sales, it went through the House. I think that in the spirit of this, this amendment, while well intentioned, recognizing that down the line we may have to change the way we're doing things: I respect that. To be frank, we will. You know, I can't predict what that will be, but down the line there will have to be amendments to whatever legislation we create. To be frank, we'll be doing it with liquor, as I alluded to, 20, 30 years from now as well. With that being said, this empowers it to be through regulations, not legislation, and I think that if we were to shift from the publicly formed online distribution model, if we were going to move that to a private model, it would need to go through the House. So I can't support this amendment because I think that if we do go down that path, it should be debated in the House.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A3? Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you very much, and thank you to the Member for Calgary-Elbow for this amendment, which I will be supporting. I just want to clarify a few things. This isn't about changing the centralized nature of the way that cannabis will go into the centralized piece and then be distributed from there. Just to be clear, this is actually specifically about who can sell and how it gets in there.

Again, the safety piece of it: as the member pointed out very well, with the safety of this and all of the complexities that go into having an online rollout of this, there's no doubt that this is going to be extremely complex and is going to take a lot of tweaking to get right; hence, the reason evergreening will happen; hence, the reason that the Member for Drumheller-Stettler also put forward a piece of an amendment to look at this within the next five years to make sure we're actually on the right track with this.

This actually isn't about that centralized piece. We're actually talking about different vendors that have nothing to do with the centralized oversight. This is about making sure that everybody who wants to be involved in this particular venture is actually able to come forward. I don't know enough about cannabis to understand quality control or all of those kinds of things. I imagine that within the regulations those will be fairly standard.

However, when we're talking about regulations versus legislation, again here comes a new concern, hence the need for the amendment. If this is happening within regulations without any outreach to the public who are actually consuming this product, who actually might want to be able to sell this product to that centralized group of people under the same auspices as any public choice that may be made by the government – to the member's credit, I think that that's a very, very important piece of this.

To your point, Member for Calgary-Shaw, I completely agree with you. Things are going to change rapidly in this. But I think that to kibosh the ability of the private sector to have a say and, at the very least, participate so that it's all coming into this centralized model – nobody is talking about changing it to a private model. It's about having that centralized piece for safety and all those other kinds of things but making sure that vendors also have the opportunity to participate, because if things do change – let's say that five years from now it ends up going private sector, you know, in some capacity or other. Well, those folks aren't going to have had the ability to understand what the regulations were in the first place in order to be able to participate, and then we're going through this whole mechanism again of quality control, of understanding the appropriateness of how it's going to be distributed, all of those pieces.

I think it's very important to understand that the Member for Calgary-Elbow is actually helping with legislation to make sure that it's all-encompassing so that as we tweak, as we move forward, we've actually covered bases that are imperative to the go-forward with this particular substance.

I will be supporting. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Yeah. Thank you, Madam Chair. Just briefly, one piece I wanted to mention which I didn't mention in my first round of comments. I will be brief. There is also a question about the markup that the government would apply to their online system. I'm very curious if the government will charge their own retail markup for the online delivery, which potentially, obviously – it's a markup – would increase costs. Would the government online retailer be a retailer and therefore charging a retail markup, which, again, would increase costs to the consumer and perhaps not achieve the black market reduction? Or, vice versa, would they not charge a retail markup, therefore undercutting the private retailers? That's a very important question that I don't have an answer to and, I think, that those who would seek to invest in the private retail model deserve an answer to.

The other point I'd like to make about the online delivery piece is that medical cannabis is already delivered through Canada Post. There are many people in this province who use that service quite safely. There are age verification processes that do work, and that is done through a private model. So we already have that. It concerns me that the government would be reinventing the wheel as it relates to their own government online model.

Those two brief comments: I just wanted to get them on the record as well. Thank you, Madam Chair.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Chair: We are back on the bill. Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak to the bill. I actually don't support the idea in principle even though the federal government has forced it upon the provinces. I think it's a social and economic experiment that is not likely to succeed as well as promoted. I'd like to speak to those two issues, the economic side of it, partly, and also the human cost of this.

Clearly, this is a tax grab by the Liberal government. They're taking 50 per cent of the revenue, have very few of the costs. It's economic piracy. Ottawa wants more money, and the provinces, quite frankly, are the losers. I don't think that we as a province should be necessarily just submitting to that. While we do have to make regulations to govern it because we have no option, I do think that we should be speaking to the other Premiers. We should find out where they are at. I think we should be challenging Ottawa on the wisdom of this, on the benefits versus costs that this will cause to our society and to our culture.

This is supposed to be some kind of fantastic economic boon for governments. Really? I don't think it's going to be. Nobody has done a serious business plan on this thing yet. What actually are the revenue streams? Do we have any idea what the revenue streams are going to be? Have we looked at the competition? And I'll come back to that in a moment. Have we looked at what the costs are going to be? And I'll come back to that in a moment.

Let's talk about the competition for the moment, which is the black market, the illegal trade. You know, the black market does this for one good reason. It's a good business plan for them. Let's look at it from a business point of view. The black market doesn't have to pay taxes. They don't have to pay WCB. In most cases they don't have to pay for any capital expenditures on land or buildings. They don't have to buy business licences . . . [interjections]

The Chair: Hon. members, Lacombe-Ponoka has the floor.

Mr. Orr: In many cases they don't pay for power. Beat that with a business model.

Anybody who tries to do this legally is going to have to pay all of these expenses, and you think you can compete financially on that level with them? I don't actually think you will. Now they'll actually have the opportunity to blend into the legal market. The police are in many cases not even going to bother to investigate, and we'll actually see an increase in black market activity.

I'd like to refer to an article that comes from Washington state, written by Austin Jenkins, published on November 21 of this year by Northwest News Network in Olympia, Washington. He points out that while cannabis may be legal in Washington and Oregon . . . police [there] continue to bust illegal marijuana operations that are not licensed by the state.

They have a business model that will overpower the legal model.

The latest numbers from the Washington State Patrol show that [in the last year there were] 89 illegal marijuana growing operations . . . shut down.

There were over 24,000 marijuana plants seized, over 100 weapons seized, over 100 arrests made. This actually represents a significant – well, I should quote it correctly.

This represents a big jump from 2016 . . . arrests and things,

. . . except in one category . . .

where it doesn't increase, and that's

. . . the number of plants seized.

Why is that? Well, it's because that [particular] number is down significantly this year. The State Patrol said that's because federal funding for marijuana eradication on public lands was cut.

They don't even bother to look for it anymore. It's not that there are fewer plants out there; it's just that they're not even spending the money to look for it. It's still there. Usually they identify it from airplane or helicopter. They quit spending money on it, so it went down.

In recent months, U.S. Attorney General Jeff Sessions has expressed concern about black market marijuana operations in states like Washington and Oregon.

There's a business model on the black market that will continue to prosper. In fact, it's increasing in Washington state, and anybody who tries to sell this or tell me that this is actually going to eliminate the black market is delusional. It's not going to happen. Look at Washington state. It is going to continue to increase. If you just look at it from a pure business plan, the black market has every advantage. They don't have to pay all of the costs that real businesses do, and they just continue to prosper from it. The black market and all of the effects of the criminal element have not decreased at all in Washington state. In fact, they have increased over the last year.

What about the business plan costs of this for the Alberta government, for the people of Alberta? We're now going to have administrative costs. We're going to have warehousing costs. We're going to have potentially difficult and increased enforcement costs, especially when you think about the traffic side of it and other aspects of it. There are going to be increased medical costs, psychiatric costs, increased costs for education and awareness of the public, and we're supposed to cover all of this with a supposed great revenue gain in taxation? I don't actually think that it's going to turn out that way.

I think that we should be very careful about just jumping on some kind of joyous bandwagon that says that all of a sudden this is the best thing that ever hit North America. How much has our government actually budgeted to pay for all of the associated costs to the province that go with this experiment in chilled-out delusion of intoxication? I don't think we know, and I think we're going to have some serious surprises. So, from a purely business point of view, I have serious questions about how well this is actually going to work out for Alberta.

But, then, I also have serious concerns about the human cost of how this is going to work out. The member just down to my right here spoke a few minutes ago about how Health Canada defines the effects of both alcohol and marijuana. I was actually going to take a slightly different angle on it. His was more detailed, but if you actually look up the dictionary definition of intoxication, there are two primary ones. First of all, it's an abnormal state that is essentially a poisoning. I'd like to know how developing a culture where we continually poison ourselves is going to make a better society, better families, better business environments, safer roads, and all the rest of it.

The second definition is that intoxication is the condition of having physical or mental control markedly diminished by alcohol or drugs. You know, you can't perform well when you are physically or mentally diminished. How are we going to make a society that prospers, a society that does well in sports, a society that's good for families, a society that does good in innovation and business and prosperity when we have both our physical and our mental control markedly diminished on a regular basis and we create a social licence that says that it's perfectly fine, that it's okay? I don't understand how that's going to benefit us as a society.

I do think the federal government is making a serious mistake for Canadian society. I recognize there are lots of people out there who want to support this – and they may; it's a free world; they can make that choice – but in the interests of others who look at it from a different point of view, I don't think that this is going to be a beneficial thing for Canada as we look at it over the next 100 years or so. I think we have yet to hear how our society will be diminished and the capacity of our people – our employees, our governments, our individuals – will do better when we have that diminished effect both mentally and physically.

Let's all just chill out. Let's all get high, sit on the sidewalk, and become unable to earn a living. [interjections] Don't mock me on that. I've worked in drug rehab centres. I've seen the fear. I've seen the delusional thoughts. I've seen the inability – I have it in my own family – to even go to work, where mothers and fathers can't even care for their own children. Why? Because their mental and physical capacities are so diminished that they're afraid to go outside of the house. There's an incredible isolating effect that happens with drug addiction, and people find themselves lonely, unemployed, dysfunctional, unable to survive. The human social cost of this is going to be astronomical, and nobody has taken a moment to think about it.

I'd like to draw a historical parallel. If you go back to another culture and another time – I'm going to refer to China and the opium trade that occurred in China – you know, when opium first began, it wasn't a whole lot different. There's actually a direct historical connection here. When opium first began in China in about the seventh century, it was brought forward and first discovered as a medical piece, and it was presented that way. I won't argue that there may be some medical benefits to very carefully understood and prescribed marijuana as well, but the problem is when it moves from a medical product into a social, entertainment kind of piece.

The direct historical connection is that towards the end of the opium era in China, most of the opium trade moved into Southeast Asia. In the 1960s and '70s 20 per cent of Vietnam-era soldiers that came back from Vietnam were addicted to opium. Many of them came back – and we were in the 1960s. I actually was part of it, the psychedelic age. Everybody was experimenting. A lot of that came with U.S. soldiers coming from Southeast Asia into the States, bringing with them their addictions, looking then for an opportunity to obtain something else, which became marijuana and, at the time, LSD. It's grown in our culture partially from that.

But here's the thing about the opium trade in China in the early days. It began as a medical thing. Then it started to become something that was a fashionable, refined pastime, especially among the young. We have today a fashionable, refined pastime amongst the young, which is smoking marijuana, and unfortunately now it leads to other things that are much more dangerous and much more destructive.

It got to the point where that 17th-century recreational turn to opium became a great economic opportunity for a bunch of people. We see many people today just lusting to profit off the drug trade. We see governments standing in line, supposedly, to get this great economic boon that probably won't happen. In 17th-century China the opium trade – by the way, when it first began, it was sort of like marijuana. It wasn't nearly as strong. It wasn't nearly as concentrated. It was just a flower. How can that hurt you? It was smoked like marijuana is smoked. But it became an addiction that was rampant across Chinese culture. It actually led to a number of serious wars over the trade and because of the trade. Governments became utterly dependent upon the taxes that fuelled the human crisis and the addictions. The Chinese culture was decimated by up to 10 million opium addicts. Ten million opium addicts.

It wasn't until the 1950s that China began to seriously eradicate the opium trade, the opium business, the opium tax revenue, and all of these wonderful things that are supposed to be generated from recreational use of drugs. They actually got so serious about it, their whole society was so broken down and debilitated by it, that it contributed to the Chinese Cultural Revolution under the Communists, with the execution of thousands of people. Dealers were executed. Fields were plowed under and planted with real food.

I, for one, am not really willing to go down this road. The human tragedy of what's going to happen with this has yet to be revealed.

Yes, opium smoking, like marijuana, was a fashionable, refined pastime, especially among the young. But I'll tell you something: it doesn't lead to the good life. It's an escape. When you sit in a drug rehab centre and you talk with the people and they're shaking and they're afraid and they can't hold a job and they can't go to work and they know they don't have the mental capacity or the physical capacity to even function in life and they can't look after their children, you tell me how that makes a good society.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I would like to put forward an amendment relating to location of use and will speak to it when appropriate.

The Chair: This will be amendment A4.

It appears the amendment is in order, hon. member, so go ahead and speak to it.

11:40

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I know there are some similarities to a previous amendment that was suggested, but this has some different dimensions to its public use and the protection of child health.

I move that Bill 26, An Act to Control and Regulate Cannabis, be amended in section 7 in the proposed section 90.28(c) by striking out "or" at the end of subclause (vi) and by adding the following after subclause (vi):

- (vi.1) a public park,
- (vi.2) an event that is open to the public, or

This follows both from some discussion earlier on concerns about making more consistent application on environmental tobacco smoke and the exposure of children and now cannabis smoking in public places where children would be expected to be present.

I have a letter from the Alberta Recreation and Parks Association that addresses specifically their concerns about children and access to parks and exposure to second-hand smoke, both tobacco and cannabis. I'm quoting from the letter.

The approach taken in Bill 26 is of concern for two reasons. Firstly there are a number of events that are not listed [in Bill 26], such as festivals, fairs, rodeos . . . and other public events where children could be exposed to second-hand cannabis smoke. The section also does not prohibit smoking cannabis in other public places such as trails and parks. Secondly, as demonstrated in the attached chart, there is an assorted range of restrictions that currently exist regarding smoking tobacco in a number of Alberta's municipalities. Such a patchwork approach through municipal restrictions may result in a gradual erosion of the protection of children as communities are compared and pitted against each other.

We encourage the Government of Alberta to consider alternatives such as:

- (1) Prohibit tobacco and cannabis smoking and vaping in all public places and events where children can reasonably be expected to be present; and
- (2) Allow municipalities to exempt by bylaw certain events where they are of the view that children will not [likely] be present.

That would be evening events, events where alcohol is being served, for example. They could individually exempt those where they don't believe there's a reasonable risk to children.

This approach will ensure consistency in the protection of children from . . . carcinogenic smoke across Alberta in all venues and events, and at the same time allow municipalities to exempt certain events based on local circumstances. It would also be appropriate to require signage for events where... carcinogenic smoke has been permitted to allow other individuals... [including] pregnant women, to be informed in advance of the exemption. We find this approach to be consistent with the current medical evidence on the issue.

While I know you discussed earlier some of the exemptions, I think the particular concern here is: where children are expected to be present. The protection of, in this case, children and pregnant women from carcinogenic second-hand smoke, whether it's tobacco or cannabis, would be the goal of this particular amendment.

It's not a big issue. It should be relatively easy to ensure that people can consistently expect public places like parks and festivals would be free of tobacco smoke if children are likely going to be there. On the other hand, municipalities can exempt those activities where children are not likely. The onus would be on exempting rather than a blanket acceptance of second-hand smoke, whether it's tobacco or cannabis. That would also require, when the new tobacco amendments come in, that we ensure they're consistent and that children and the protection of children's health are kind of the overriding concern.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A4? The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Madam Chair. I know that my views in relation to this amendment – I want to thank the Member for Calgary-Mountain View for bringing this forward and his well intentions to this. He expressed many concerns in relation to second-hand smoking or vaping, from that area. I'd like to remind members of the House that right now some of the provisions that are currently in this bill that we have here include any place where a "person is prohibited from smoking under the Tobacco and Smoking Reduction Act or any other Act or the bylaws of a municipality," and then further it talks in relation to playgrounds, sports fields, skateboard and bicycle parks, zoos, outdoor theatres, outdoor pools, splash areas, and any other areas or places that are prescribed or otherwise described in the regulations. So it does allow us, down the line, as we continue to hear feedback from a lot of respondents, to further regulate this.

We've also spoken earlier about allowing our local decision-makers and our local municipalities to be empowered to make further regulations and restrictions should they deem fit, so I'm hesitant to support this amendment. I will be voting against it just so that we can continue to allow our local decision-makers to be making those calls.

Dr. Starke: Well, Madam Chair, you know, I certainly take the comments of the Member for Calgary-Shaw with some interest because he references the Tobacco and Smoking Reduction Act, large sections of which remain unimplemented by this government. That bill has been on the books for four years, and yes – agreed – the first couple of years of that was when our party was in government, but they've had two and a half years to implement it, and they have done precious little.

In fact, it's rather interesting that that act actually does have a five-year review clause in it, and we're four years into the act. Pretty soon we're going to be reviewing an act that hasn't even been fully implemented. So if you're relying, as the Member for Calgary-Shaw indicated, on the provisions of the Tobacco and Smoking Reduction Act to provide the same protections for the use of cannabis in public places, maybe you should get around to implementing it. Maybe you should get around to proclaiming those unproclaimed sections and to closing some of the loopholes.

You know, it seems to me that what this government has done is that in a certain amount of rush and pressure to implement cannabis legislation, they've kind of forgotten that tobacco smoke is far more dangerous, that tobacco smoke kills far more Albertans than cannabis smoke does. Now they're rushing to go ahead with cannabis, and the tobacco legislation is languishing. That's problematic. I mean, if they are in fact interested in preventive health care, if they are in fact interested in bending the cost curve on health care, then one of the easiest ways to do it, one of the easiest and lowest hanging fruits on the branch, is to do more to discourage young people from smoking and to discourage young people from smoking all products, not just cannabis but tobacco as well.

There are a number of loopholes left open in the Tobacco and Smoking Reduction Act, that, again, curiously comes up for review in a year and hasn't even been fully implemented, that remains unimplemented. So I can't take any consolation, I can't take any confidence from the Tobacco and Smoking Reduction Act, that somehow that's going to provide the necessary protections.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, with his considerable medical experience and experience in the field of public health, you know, certainly identified that there is a need to protect children from all forms of smoke, not just tobacco smoke but also from the smoking of cannabis.

One of the things that is interesting in Canada, curiously, is that of all the nations in the world cannabis users in Canada have a higher percentage of people using cannabis by smoking it than in just about any other nation in the world. There is no real explanation for that. Somebody said that it's to keep your hands warm when you're lighting your cigarette or your joint. But, quite frankly, whatever the reason is, the statistics show that Canadians who use cannabis predominantly consume cannabis by smoking. So not only do we have the potential health effects of the actual active ingredients; we also have the health effects of inhaling a combustible product into our lungs.

Now, we've had discussions before. I know the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud has worked very hard in terms of reducing those negative effects and that he has worked, unfortunately, with patients who have suffered from the negative effects of tobacco usage throughout his career. I've had a little bit of experience with that myself in my career. Sadly, I've had to treat some of my patients that have lived their lives in homes where tobacco was used widely, and curiously, with the short lifespan of most of my patients, I did have to deal with instances where my patients suffered as a result of second-hand smoke. I also dealt with some patients who inadvertently consumed their owner's cannabis supply. It's an interesting, shall we say, client-patient-veterinarian confidentiality situation when you have to deal with that.

Nonetheless, I can tell you that there's nothing positive that comes out of being in an environment where tobacco is being smoked or where cannabis is being smoked. This province rightly took some steps to protect workers, to protect youth, and to protect people who didn't want to be exposed to second-hand smoke. I can remember, in fact, in youth parliament in the '70s arguing on behalf of legislation to restrict smoking in public places to reduce the second-hand smoke deleterious effects.

My hon. friend the Member for Calgary-Mountain View has put forward a very reasonable amendment that addresses some of these issues. You know, I find it curious that a government that purports itself to be interested in the health of Albertans, that purports itself to be interested in the health of workers, in the health of youth would not at least consider supporting this very reasonable amendment to this bill.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A4? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I won't be long. I would just like to be on the record speaking in favour of the amendment from the Member for Calgary-Mountain View. As I stressed earlier today, it's our duty to ensure that public spaces are safe and free from cannabis exposure, especially in regard to children, and I think that whatever we can do here in this legislation is important. What I heard from my hon. government colleague that spoke to this was that there's actually no disagreement with an amendment like this. This, in fact, will be something that is put into regulation. This in no way, shape, or form takes away local autonomy and decision-making from the local municipalities.

I think it's a good step forward in the right direction, and I will encourage my colleagues in this Legislature to vote for this amendment.

The Chair: Any other speakers to amendment A4? Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Madam Chair. Just briefly, similar to my hon. friend from Airdrie, I want to be on the record as supporting this amendment. I think it's important that we do everything we can to keep any harmful effect of cannabis second-hand smoke away from children.

I just will take this opportunity to comment that it is fascinating that the approach this government has taken to public consumption of cannabis is intended to align broadly with the consumption of tobacco and not with the consumption of alcohol. I find that quite interesting. Where the second-hand effects of both tobacco and cannabis smoke can be felt by others around us, notwithstanding some of the more negative social consequences of the behaviour of those who may be consuming alcohol in public, the simple act of having a single drink somewhere outside of the four walls of an establishment, in and of itself, does not have a detrimental effect on others around them. Again, I just note it's an interesting approach that the government has taken here to cannabis.

But, you know, specifically to this amendment, I think it does seek to protect any potential harmful effects on children and others in terms of second-hand smoke. I echo my colleague from Vermilion-Lloydminster's comments on the tobacco reduction act, if I have that correct, and would encourage this government to look very carefully at implementing the outstanding provisions of that act as well to reduce the harmful effects of tobacco on our society and potentially cannabis as well going forward.

Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Pursuant to Standing Order 4(3) the committee will now rise and report progress.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill, Bill 26. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: I just want to confirm, hon. member, that you said: report progress.

Mr. Hinkley: Okay. There is another sentence I would like to add. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 26.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the committee concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Seeing the progress of the House, I would just move to adjourn until 1:30 p.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 11:56 a.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, November 29, 2017

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of bright young students from Belmont elementary school in my riding of Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. They are joined today by two of their teachers, Selynn Buchan and Marissa Chankasingh. As well, they have four chaperones with them today: Lynn Allison, Breanne Dagnone, Nikki Ringma, and Melissa Squarek. I'm thrilled that they are joining us here today. I apologize to them. I wasn't able to make it down in the rotunda for a photo with the school, but I do look forward to coming and visiting them some time throughout the year. Now I'd ask them to rise and please receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly today 52 students from Hilwie Hamdon school. They're here with Mrs. Amy Badger, Mr. Perry Allan, Lena Berjawi, and Cindy Frewin. This is a very special occasion because this is the first school group from Hilwie Hamdon in the history of the school because, of course, it just opened this fall, so I'm super proud. It's in Edmonton-Calder, and they deserve the very best. Let's give them a warm welcome, everyone, please.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other school groups today?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you a group representing the Canadian Finals Rodeo and Northlands. Here today are Tyler Riopel of the Canadian Finals Rodeo committee; Geoff Oberg and Tony Payne from the Northlands board of directors; Northlands vice-presidents Kevin Gunderman and Shiva Dean; and last but definitely not least, Tim Reid, president and CEO of Northlands. I sit on the Northlands board of directors as a provincial appointee, and I am proud to introduce this group to you today. I would ask that my guests please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gottfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you Mr. Iggy Domagalski, CEO of Tundra Process Solutions, an Alberta-based supplier of innovative process technologies that employs 150 Albertans. Tundra provides the mechanical, electrical, measurement, and automation solutions that help make the energy world safer, cleaner, and more productive and is recognized as one of Canada's 50 best managed companies.

Tundra also recently opened a new 15,000-square-foot facility in Grande Prairie.

Iggy is passionate about innovation, leadership, and his community. Last year he launched the acceleration centre for entrepreneurs, which helps green tech entrepreneurs to get their products rapidly to market. He also launched Tundra University, which helps young leaders advance their careers, and he sits on the board of the Kids Cancer Care Foundation of Alberta as fundraising chair. Iggy has recently been featured on CBC, in the Calgary Herald, Oilweek, Alberta Oil, is one of Calgary's top 40 under 40, and was featured on CTV's The Entrepreneurs, which is filming its second season. Tundra will once again be featured nationally, showcasing Alberta's innovative and entrepreneurial spirit. I would ask Mr. Domagalski to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mr. Carlier: Mr. Speaker, it is my sincere pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly this year's 4-H Premier's award recipient. This young woman from Bashaw, Alberta, has been a member of the Central Lacombe 4-H Beef Club for a decade. She has held executive positions in her club and in her district and has attended numerous forums and trainings. This young leader is currently a first-year student at the University of Alberta, where she's enrolled in a preveterinary program. I would like to ask Alyssa Henderson, her parents, Arleen and Greg Henderson, and her grandparents Donna and Stan Johnson to now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Coolahan: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Dr. Debbie McKenzie, who is one of the coleaders of the Genome Alberta research project focused on chronic wasting disease among Alberta's deer, elk, moose, and caribou population, which we'll be hearing more about in my member's statement today. I would ask that Dr. McKenzie please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my incredible honour to rise and introduce to you and through you some members of the Jewish community. Today we have leaders from the Centre for Israel and Jewish Affairs and Calgary Jewish Federation, the Alberta Jewish federations. I'm proud to introduce to you Adam Silver, Judy Shapiro, Jeff Smith, Jared Shore, Debby Shocter, Ellery Lew, Matt Godwin, and Ariella Kimmel. I want to thank my guests for their work in fighting anti-Semitism and discrimination in our province. I ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Bonnie Gostola, Val Whelen, Barbara Brolly, and Somboon Eggen. They are here today representing the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees' Pay and Social Equity Committee. The committee has been working hard on the issues of wage inequality, gender income gaps, and the underlying systems in place that put women at a disadvantage. I will speak more to this in my member's statement later today. I ask now that my guests rise to receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other introductions of guests? Seeing and hearing none.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Carbon Levy and Pipeline Approvals

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to highlight a major failure of this NDP government, specifically the so-called social licence the carbon tax was supposed to buy us. Since the NDP rolled out the tax in 2015, a tax which they did not campaign on during that year's general election, the justification used by the members opposite has been that it will get us the social licence we need to get pipelines built. This, they argued, is the trade-off we have to make to gain acceptance for our oil and gas industry from environmental zealots and eco-warriors that have vowed to shut Alberta oil down.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there's no disputing that Alberta is one of the most responsible energy-producing jurisdictions in the entire world, and this has been true for decades. Moreover, Canada's human rights record speaks for itself, especially when compared with the likes of Saudi Arabia or Nigeria, who are more than happy to take our market share. There's no question we are doing more than our part and have been for a very, very long time.

But enter the NDP, who called Alberta and our industry the embarrassing cousins of Confederation for our supposedly poor environmental record. That's when they sold Albertans the false bill of goods that is the carbon tax. Yet more than two years after that announcement and almost one year since the carbon tax was implemented, not one shovel is in the ground on a pipeline to tidewater, and the very same eco-warriors that the NDP said it would bring onside with this carbon tax are fighting tooth and nail to block the one pipeline that has been approved. The carbon tax has not deterred them one bit, nor has it softened B.C. NDP Premier John Horgan or the mayor of Burnaby, who both also vow to use every tool at their disposal to block this project.

I don't know about you, Mr. Speaker, but I don't see any more social licence today than we did before the NDP was elected. That's because social licence is a myth, a fairy tale perpetuated by the NDP for the sole purpose of justifying the imposition of a new tax on Albertans.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Chronic Wasting Disease

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On to something factual.

Right now Alberta researchers are on the land collecting data and samples while consulting with First Nations people. They are part of an ongoing research project to deal with chronic wasting disease, or CWD. CWD is a fatal disease affecting deer, elk, moose, and caribou.

Since it was first discovered in 1967 in Colorado, it has spread into 24 U.S. states, Alberta, and Saskatchewan. B.C., Manitoba, and Yukon are also at risk. This disease could spread through 2 million animals in Canada that are susceptible to CWD. A sustained outbreak would affect those that rely on animals for food or for traditional practices such as First Nations people, and it would threaten biodiversity and ecosystems and have an impact on Alberta's reputation as a wildlife destination.

The 11 and a half million dollar project was made possible with cofunding from the Alberta Prion Research Institute, Alberta Agriculture and Forestry, the University of Alberta, and the University of Calgary. The work is being led by University of Alberta researcher Dr. Debbie McKenzie and Genome Alberta. The research team is developing tools that can be used to identify strains of CWD and predict the spread of the disease. The project has been ongoing for a year, and while there is still no direct evidence that CWD can transmit to humans, early results reveal that further research is needed to investigate the potential for CWD transmission across species. The team will also assemble kits for use by First Nations, hunters, and managers to help identify disease and prevent its spread.

Genome Alberta funded projects such as this one make a point of involving end-users of the research and those most likely to be affected by the project results. This model ensures that funding dollars have the best chance of having real-world impact.

This is just one more example of how collaboration and science are making life better for all Albertans. Thank you.

High River Flood Disaster Recovery Program Claim

Mr. W. Anderson: June 23 was a devastating time for the town of High River, yet today there still lingers the remains of several who have yet to have fair compensation for their loss. Orvella Small is a pillar of the community, someone who works with disabled people, volunteers countless hours, and organizes fundraising and community events so those affected by the 2013 flood may recover in a graceful way. She is a wonderful lady who is a victim of this government's bureaucracy. She has had personal financial loss and has yet to receive fair and adequate compensation from disaster recovery program administration.

Orvella owned and operated a small business in High River. When it was wiped out by the flood, a DRP application was filed and rejected. When she appealed, it was denied because they took the total household income, but her business was incorporated, so that should never have happened.

Recently DRP changed their policy regarding how small businesses are compensated. The DRP stated that the changes would be retroactive, but for Orvella this was too little too late, and she was told that she was never going to be allowed to file another appeal. Another reason for denial was that they stated that she did not invest any of her own money. Ridiculous. Orvella tried to show them her bank statements, but they clearly didn't listen.

Small-business owners in the town were given poor advice, saying that if they wanted DRP to assist them, they would need to invest in starting up their businesses all over again. Well, Orvella maxed out her credit cards and line of credit to start up her business again. At this rate she will not be able to retire any time soon. She continues to work at other jobs to pay her debt.

Orvella believes that her individual circumstances were not even considered. She received this message, and I quote. In regard to your small-business file it has proceeded through the complete appeals process after independent review by both the managing director of AEMA and the Minister of Municipal Affairs. The minister has final decision-making authority on our legislation. I regret to inform you that there are no more avenues to appeal. Your file is closed.

The DRP bureaucrats need to just simply follow their own policies and guidelines and do what's fair for Orvella. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Northlands

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to talk to you with pride about an institution that has served Edmonton, northern and central Alberta for close to 140 years. On October 15, 1879, 275 people gathered in Fort Edmonton to exhibit their best livestock, grain, vegetables, and crafts. They were a collection of farmers, ranchers, and agriculturalists eager to volunteer their time for the greater good, to serve the community in a way that would benefit everyone. This is what we now know as Northlands.

As a provincial appointee to the Northlands board I've had the privilege of being part of this fantastic group, who carry on the legacy of community service every day.

The Canadian Finals Rodeo and Farmfair International are hosted by Northlands every November, and both events are very important to Edmonton. The 2017 Canadian Finals Rodeo boasted an attendance of 90,268 people over five days and six performances and showcased over 108 professional rodeo athletes, all competing for a whopping $1.5 million in prize money. In 1989 they established the Edmonton Rodeo Cowboy's Benevolent Foundation, and in 2003 they established the Bill Kehler memorial scholarships. Together these initiatives have helped more than 300 members of the rodeo community deal with financial hardship or continue their postsecondary studies.

Farmfair International is one of the premier agricultural events in Canada, with over 101,000 people in attendance as well as 140 international buyers from 14 different countries.

Combined, these two events bring in an estimated $50 million in economic impact to the city of Edmonton and the province of Alberta every year.

I want to congratulate the CFR committee, the executive of Northlands, and the Northlands board for 44 years of the Canadian Finals Rodeo and their continued hosting of Farmfair International. This organization has a profound impact in making lives better for Albertans, and we should all thank them for their hard work.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Castle Downs. Excuse me. Wood Buffalo. [interjections] A pretty big constituency.

Mr. Yao: Those lines changed more than I thought.

Opioid Use Prevention and Treatment

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, we have a strategy and we need to execute a plan to deal with this opioid crisis. There have been enough studies done on this, not only here in Canada but around the world. We need to do something that encompasses all supports available and enables people to engage, intervene, and help. It starts at home. We need to empower families by helping them identify the issue, then help and guide them in dealing with it through counselling and other supports.

Police, our courts, and social workers have very unique, practical views on these victims of addiction. They need to be part of the conversation. They can provide guidance on the critical times between detox and rehabilitation, as an example, when so many overdoses do occur. Law enforcement in other jurisdictions has supported drug courts for more immediate remediation of abusers, with sentences consisting of stays in rehabilitation facilities. It helps clear up our court system and allows for more immediate interventions with our drug-stricken population.

Rehabilitation isn't just about beds. It's about an environment that supports these victims with art, job training, and home economics. It's also about taking cultural attributes into consideration when designing these facilities and programs.

Education is at the forefront, and from elementary school right up to universities and colleges we need access to accurate information on opioids. Education also includes the health professionals. It's not just the family doctors. It's the sports practitioners and physicians, the orthopaedic surgeons, the nurse practitioners, and the physician assistants. It's the dentists and the pharmacists. They all need to step up, provide reasonable advice and guidance as well as education, especially for the patients.

This education must also recognize that over the last few decades doctors have been misinformed by the pharma companies, who claim that their product is the best for pain management with none of the addictive qualities. Re-education for all providers should be mandatory, and this education must be continued as pharma continues to develop the next best thing.

Ultimately, we need to hold these victims of addiction accountable and support them accordingly every step of the way. We need a multifaceted attack on this very real crisis, so I hope this ...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Women's Income Equality

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Later this afternoon I will be tabling documents that contain over 9,000 signatures from across the province as part of a campaign by the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees' Pay and Social Equity Committee. The public urgently needs to be aware of this issue. Alberta has been leading the nation in wage inequality, with a gender income gap of 41 per cent compared to the national average of 33 per cent.

Over the years income equality for women has become worse. In 2000, when the previous government replaced graduated personal income taxes with a single rate, this shifted disproportionate amounts of the province's annual tax share to women and lower income Albertans in order to fund tax breaks for corporations and high-income individuals. Our NDP government reversed this regressive system and since then has taken a number of important steps to continue addressing inequality in our province.

By creating the country's first gender-balanced cabinet and establishing Alberta's first-ever Status of Women ministry, we are putting women's equality at the forefront of our work.

By increasing access to affordable child care, we are supporting women in gaining a better foothold in the job market to be able to meet the needs of their families. Resources from Alberta's Status of Women and Economic Development and Trade are supporting women entrepreneurs to advance their careers and improve their economic security.

We know that the majority of part-time and minimum wage jobs are held by women and that increasing the minimum wage has a direct, positive impact on our lives and on their lives. Through continued investment in postsecondary education and the establishment of the Alberta child benefit, our government is helping Alberta families to succeed, but we also know that the problem of gender inequality is rooted in cultural expectations and that it's going to take much more work to end women's inequality and the wage gaps that exist.

I want to thank the AUPE's Pay and Social Equity Committee members for all the important work that they are doing to bring this issue to light.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Carbon Levy Questions to the Premier

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, yesterday I raised the case of Norm, who confronted the Premier on how the NDP's carbon tax is costing his business $40,000 per year. Sadly, the Premier was dismissive of Norm. In fact, she went as far as to say that he was mistaken and that the carbon tax did not apply to his business. Only an NDP politician would tell a businessman that they knew more about his business than he did. The question is very simple. Will the Premier and the NDP acknowledge that their job-killing carbon tax is having a negative impact on all sorts of different businesses and nonprofits, from simple shops to homeless shelters to kids' swimming pools? Acknowledge it.

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the member opposite probably does know, Alberta continues to be the lowest taxed jurisdiction in the country, by a country mile in fact, and the differential is between around $7 billion and $8 billion a year on a per capita basis. Now, our climate leadership plan was part of a very clear decision to help support the energy industry as we move towards creating a more sustainable and more environmentally responsible product for a world that is looking for just that kind of product. We work together with the energy industry. We believe very strongly that it's going to result in growth, and so do members of the energy industry, and we're proud of it.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I asked the Premier, through you, a very simple question. The Premier went down a whole different road, which she does quite often here in this House, and Albertans, quite frankly, are tired of it.

The question is this. She dismissed a businessman's, a job creator's concerns on the radio with her yesterday. She dismissed him. She told him he was mistaken. She refused to acknowledge the impact that her job-killing carbon tax, the NDP's job-killing carbon tax, was having on him. Will she take the time, recontact Norm – I'm sure it'll be easy to do – and find out what is going on and finally acknowledge what she is doing to everyday Albertans, what is happening because of the consequences of her carbon tax, stop denying it, and stand up and tell the truth?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I will say that the member opposite again is making things up in terms of his characterization with respect to the interview in question.

That being said, Mr. Speaker, in terms of business leaders and their view of our climate leadership plan, the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers had this to say:

Alberta's Climate Leadership Plan provides direction that will allow the oil and natural gas industry to grow, further enhance its environmental performance through technological innovation, and is expected to improve market access to allow Canadian oil to reach more markets.

That's what some business leaders actually think about the program, and we think they're right.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, again the Premier will not answer the question. She will not acknowledge what her job-killing carbon tax is doing to everyday Albertans. She doesn't want to talk about it. I don't blame her. I wouldn't want to talk about it if it was my tax either, but it's not. It is her number one policy, something she's brought through that she says she's proud of, but when asked about the consequences to the people of Alberta as a result of this ideological tax, she won't answer the question. She completely dodges it and goes in a completely different direction. The fact is that this is a tax on everything. It's hurting nonprofits. It's hurting homeless shelters. It's hurting swimming pools. It's hurting you at the grocery store. It's hurting you at the gas pump. It's killing jobs, and she needs to stand up and acknowledge it.

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the member opposite knows, the carbon levy came into effect January 1, 2017. Since June 2016, actually, the alleged job-killing carbon tax has been around while we've created 70,000 new full-time jobs for the people of Alberta. So the evidence doesn't seem to support the assertions. That's hardly anything new. It never really does with these folks.

The Speaker: The second main question.

Carbon Levy and Pipeline Approvals

Mr. Nixon: Again the Premier does not want to talk about her job-killing carbon tax. She told us that she was going to get social licence and that this was going to help us. She told us that this was what's going to create pipelines and that all of this was going to happen. But we know what's going on in B.C. We see politicians and people lining up to be able to fight against the Trans Mountain pipeline, that this Premier touts as being built – it's not built – touts as going to be built. Here's the question, Mr. Speaker. Can the Premier stand up and tell us of one politician on the other side there, in B.C., that has had their mind changed as a result of Alberta's carbon tax?

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Interestingly, the politician that ultimately had to approve the pipeline did so because of our climate leadership plan, and that's the politician that matters.

I'll tell you that I'm not going to take advice from the UCP on this pipeline. Their new leader spent 10 years in Ottawa and did nothing, and now his plan is to yell, much like the guys over there, and to make trade threats to British Columbia. Every day Mr. Kenney sounds more and more like Donald Trump. That's not how you get pipelines built. You get them built by having adult conversations. I'm pleased to report that earlier today the federal government announced that it is supporting Trans Mountain . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Nixon: I can tell you what Albertans are sick of, Mr. Speaker. They're sick of the NDP and their Premier calling people names in answers to questions.

This is what the NDP told us would happen: they told us that we would get social licence and that things would change. Here we have a carbon tax that's impacting my constituents and your constituents. This is the plan: we're going to get social licence. But the Premier can't stand up and show us anybody who has changed their mind in B.C., where they need to change their mind for this pipeline to happen, as a result of that carbon tax. Here's another question. Can the Premier name one environmentalist that has changed their mind on Trans Mountain as a result of her job-killing carbon tax? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I don't think I had a chance to quite finish my answer to the last question, so I will do that now. I'm very pleased to report to all members of the House that earlier today the federal government announced that it is supporting Trans Mountain and the government of Alberta in the appeal at the NEB around the decisions being taken by the city of Burnaby. That is the kind of thing that happens when you have adult conversations with your colleagues across the country. Mr. Kenney's brand of economic isolationism will not work. It will cost jobs, it will cost our reputation, and it will get us the same kind of results that they already got . . .

The Speaker: Third question.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, again the Premier avoids the question. The question was about B.C. She has no answer to it because nobody has changed their mind in B.C. This is the problem. This is the serious problem that we have. Will the Premier acknowledge that problem, acknowledge that her carbon tax has not made any changes, as a result, to the west of us, that we are still in a serious situation where many people, including her friends, former advisers of hers, former people that she put on government panels that are extreme environmental activists, are trying to block these pipelines, and will she acknowledge that her carbon tax has not actually got us any social licence and is not building any pipelines?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'm pleased to be able to talk about what I am going to be doing tomorrow, which is going to B.C. and making the case for our strong energy industry and making the case that working people must be included in all efforts to combat climate change, something that is absolutely fundamental to this government, that we need to do both. We need to combat climate change, we need to join with the rest of the country and not turn our backs on them and pretend that they don't have real concerns, and we need to stand up for working people, and the pipeline is part of that plan. That is the case I will make on behalf of the people of Alberta. I'm working for something, not against it.

Rural Crime

Mr. Nixon: On Monday the United Conservatives requested an emergency debate on the rural crime crisis. It's just been a few days, but we've heard more stories justifying that emergency debate, that was blocked by the NDP. The mayor of Alix sat in this very Chamber on Monday defending his community. When he returned home, he learned of another shocking case. A gas station owner, a Korean immigrant, was robbed again. The front of his store was rammed with a truck, a worker was assaulted, and thousands of dollars were stolen. Sadly, this is the new normal where I live in rural Alberta. This is an emergency. This must be debated. Will the Premier finally stand up for rural Albertans and stand up against this crime crisis?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, any time any Albertan is a victim of crime, we are concerned. We know that it creates stress and anxiety for the communities, and we know that people want to feel safe. That is why our government has remained committed to maintaining funding for our police services, why we have increased funding for our court services so that we can be more effective in terms of getting these things through the courts and ensuring that people are held accountable for the crimes that they commit. We will continue to work on these things. We will not grandstand, nor will we cut hundreds of millions of dollars from the justice system.

Mr. Nixon: What this NDP has done is to say, "It's not urgent" to the people that are being victimized.

This hard-working business owner has been victimized multiple times. He actually had an employee sleeping in his business at night because of the threat of repeated robbery. Nobody should have to live like this. Criminals, sadly, know that rural Alberta is ripe for the picking. The problem is just getting worse, and this government won't even have a debate on this matter. They won't even acknowledge the urgency. In fact, they continue to deny the urgency. They won't stand up and acknowledge what's happening to the people that they represent. They won't stand up for people that are being robbed and abused. Instead, they say that it's not urgent, and they deny them the ability to get justice here. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members.

An Hon. Member: He's got to ask a question.

The Speaker: Hon. member.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, yes, there wasn't really a question in that. But what I will definitely say is that we know that Albertans do deserve to feel safe in their communities and in their own homes. That's why, as I've said before, we are committed to ensuring stable funding. In fact, in many respects we've increased funding to support action to combat crime across the province. One of the things most recently that the RCMP has put together is the integrated crime fighting unit, which actually looks at specific communities where there's a spike in crime and then looks at the ways in which they can work with other communities to look at the big crime motivators. Anyway, they're doing . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I guess at some point there's almost no point asking the Premier the question. She's just sitting here laughing at rural Albertans and not answering the question.

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

Mr. Nixon: That's what she was just doing there, Mr. Speaker, actually laughing. Let's be clear. This is not a partisan issue.

The Speaker: Point of order noted.

Mr. Nixon: I know my rural colleagues in the government are getting the exact same phone calls that I am getting. I know that their constituents are being abused the same as mine, and I know that they are just as disappointed that their Premier and their leadership have fought against an emergency debate in this House and have fought against being able to stand up for rural Albertans that are being abused. Again I will call on the Premier to do the right thing, listen to the people in this House that know that their constituents are being abused, stand up, give us a debate.

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I've lost count of the number of things within that last tirade that were made up, but there were many. That being said, however, we will continue to do the work that we have been doing. We will continue to support our police, and we will continue to ensure that our courts can move as fast as they can to make sure that when criminals are apprehended, we can prosecute them appropriately. This is what Albertans expect from us. What I will say is that you cannot cut 20 per cent from the provincial budget and not see those kinds of programs jeopardized. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Ms Notley: And the members opposite . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier. [interjections]
Order.
The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Provincial Fiscal Deficit

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It was almost exactly one year ago today that I asked the Premier what the government was doing to get off the resource revenue roller coaster. Here's what she had to say: "We are getting off the roller coaster, we are not tying our spending to the price of oil, and we are carefully bringing our spending into line." But here we are today with a budget that relies more on resource revenues than it did when this government took office. To the Premier I will ask the same question that I asked last year. Do you have any plan to get off the resource revenue roller coaster, or will you simply cross your fingers and hope that the price of oil goes up? [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. member. [interjections] Hon. member.
The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, you know, I think it's important to note that our credit rating remains the second highest in the country. [interjections] It also comes on the heels of the biggest recession seen since the 1930s. Alberta, notwithstanding that, is recovering, and things are starting to look up, even though we know there's more to do. Sales are up, wages are up, and we are forecasting growth of 4 per cent. [interjections] This is good news. The members . . .

The Speaker: Hon. members, I can't hear the information being shared. Would you keep the tone down, please?
The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The members opposite clearly want to drag us down. They also hate facts, but here's a big one. Since last June our economy has created 70,000 full-time . . .

Mr. Clark: Lots of things are up except our credit rating, Mr. Speaker. It's going down, and the numbers don't lie.

When this government took office Alberta needed 19 per cent of its revenues to come from resource royalties to balance. Today that number is 27 per cent. Economist Trevor Tombe said, "We have to be honest that policy choices led us here and that we are still very much along for the ride." DBRS agrees. They're concerned that a return to balance relies on recovery and resource revenues rather than a fundamental adjustment of the budget. Again to the Premier: what is your plan? How many teachers, nurses, and front-line employees will we not have because of the money now needed to pay the interest on the . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Interestingly, our plan is focused on ensuring that we protect our teachers and our nurses and our front-line workers. That's exactly the choice that our government made when we got elected and discovered the mess that had been left, so we are carefully working on that plan. You know, a couple of these credit agencies: what they actually want us to do is to raise taxes by $3 billion to $4 billion or cut spending by $3 billion or $4 billion. Neither of those things are going to help us get out of the recession. Those are not the things that are going to create jobs and stimulate economic growth; what we're doing is.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, unlike the NDP or the UCP, the Alberta Party has an actual plan. Our plan curbs government spending without hurting front-line services, reduces reliance on nonrenewable resource revenue, and not only balances but actually gets to a place where we get to pay back debt. Now, that is quite a concept, I know, but as part of our analysis in our shadow budget we modelled the NDP budget plan, and guess what? It never, ever balances. To the Minister of Finance. You claim that you'll balance the budget by 2023. Will you prove it by showing your work, including a detailed year-by-year plan to balance? [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet, please. Quiet.
The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We are engaged right now in the beginning of Budget 2018 preparations. There will be a web line. All Albertans can have an opportunity to tell us where more savings can be found at budget.alberta.ca. There are also going to be telephone town halls. There are also going to be opportunities for Albertans around the province to hear me, and I'll hear them. Budget 2018 is under way, and we have a path to balance. We'll be releasing it then.

Affordable Housing

Ms McKittrick: Mr. Speaker, Sherwood Park is a growing community. This population growth often means that certain groups of people have trouble finding safe, affordable, and accessible housing in their neighbourhoods, especially Albertans on a low income and seniors. To the Minister of Seniors and Housing: what are you doing to support residents of Sherwood Park who need access to affordable housing?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I'm proud to say that in June we launch the provincial affordable housing strategy, and this strategy is making life better for Albertans by improving how affordable housing is delivered and addressing the needs of current and future tenants in our province. The strategy includes our government's historic commitment of $1.2 billion over five years for housing capital needs. This summer I committed $32.4 million to replace the Clover Bar Lodge in Sherwood Park, increasing capacity for seniors to age in their community by 65 units. This project will be complete by the spring of 2019.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Ms McKittrick: Mr. Speaker, I was glad to hear of the provincial affordable housing strategy, that was launched this summer. A comprehensive and sustainable housing strategy was long overdue for this province. However, many stakeholders in my riding are still wondering what the next steps will be. To the Minister of Seniors and Housing: can the minister give us an update on what concrete actions have been put in place since the launch of the strategy?

Ms Sigurdson: We're making life better for Albertans by investing in safe and affordable housing. We're building over 4,100 homes for Albertans who are low-income through our capital investment in affordable housing. We have also invested $88 million in much-needed repairs to fix furnaces, windows, and roofs. New projects like the Sakaw lodge in Edmonton, Bow River lodge in Canmore, Gilchrist Gardens phase 2 in Calgary are under way. Our government believes that everyone should have access to safe and affordable housing, and we continue to protect the services families count on.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for her work. The economy is, however, still recovering, and many families and organizations in my riding are still struggling. What are some of the challenges and opportunities facing communities as they work towards establishing responsive and affordable housing systems?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've travelled across the province, and I've heard directly from Albertans regarding community needs. Many communities are struggling with significant outstanding repairs inherited from the previous government. As the economy recovers, I'm focused on Albertans' priorities, strengthening the public services families rely on. That's why we increased operating funding to housing providers last year to ensure they continue to help Albertans. Our $1.2 billion investment in affordable housing supports an effective and sustainable housing system that makes life better for Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Addiction and Mental Health Strategy

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With each passing quarterly opioid report it becomes painfully obvious that this government does not have a handle on the opioid crisis. A 9 per cent increase in fentanyl overdose deaths from last quarter and a 40 per cent increase over last year are a disaster. Despite these troubling facts our mental health and addictions system still lacks specialized leadership, early intervention in mental health and addictions. It lacks integration, navigation, and essential communication across the sectors. To the minister: when will Albertans see an integrated, comprehensive strategy to deal with this emergency?

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. The number of Albertans that we've lost to the opioid crisis is high, and it should remind us how serious this crisis is. It requires a government that is taking action. The Minister's Opioid Emergency Response Commission has brought forward 12 recommendations so far, and our government has accepted and moved forward on them all.

Dr. Swann: Albertans are dying at a rate of almost two a day. Clearly, the approach is not working. We need mental health and addictions specialist leadership. We need a more integrated and comprehensive action plan on mental health and addictions, and we need it now. We are four years into this ongoing crisis. How long will you allow this rising toll until you change your strategy?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the things that we've been working very diligently on is ensuring that there is access to treatment for Albertans when they need that. To that end, we have expanded access across the province so that Albertans, when they reach out for help, have a place to go. We've opened thousands of treatment spaces at communities across the province, ranging from Grande Prairie to Strathcona county, and expanded telehealth access so that there's that support there for Albertans no matter where they live.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Health Services third-quarter report suggests otherwise, especially in relation to mental health issues as they go along with addictions. Addressing the rapid increase in mental health concerns in youth and children, especially anxiety, depression, and traumatic experience, is crucial to getting ahead of this opioid crisis. It takes over two weeks for adults to get access to addiction services in the major service centres and over a month for children, especially in Edmonton and north. What are you doing to increase access for childhood mental health and prevent ...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are working with our partners in Education to expand supports for students at school. We've also done some great work with the Ministry of Advanced Education in terms of expanding supports for mental health services on campuses. I'm also really pleased that we were able to expand the Rutherford mental health clinic, which serves particularly children and youth in the southern Edmonton area as well as the surrounding communities. There is more work to do, and our government is going to continue to work to support Albertans living with substance use.

Support for Unemployed and Underemployed Albertans

Mr. Fildebrandt: Let me tell you a story about a young man I know in Strathmore. He came from a place in Nova Scotia where he worked for half the year and collected EI for the other half. He didn't want to be dependent on government or anybody else, so like so many other young men and women, he packed up and moved to Alberta. Here he could earn his bread and raise a family, but in 2015 he lost his job. What is this government doing to ensure that people like this young man are still able to enjoy the Alberta dream?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the question, a very good question. We recognize that the last couple of years have been very challenging for Albertans all across this province with the sharp decline in the price of oil. This has impacted every community, every business owner, and every family across the country. What I can tell you is that we had a choice, and our government chose to not only protect public services but invest in infrastructure and introduce a number of initiatives under our Alberta jobs plan. I can tell you today that that plan is working, with over 70,000 new full-time jobs in the past year. I'll tell you more in the next . . .

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, this man from Strathmore is back to work, but he's struggling to make ends meet for his young family as he is earning just a fraction of what he used to make before he was laid off. As we learned in the fiscal update, his story is not unique. Some Albertans are back to work, but for far too many these jobs just don't pay as much as they used to. Some Albertans have recovered, but for much of the working and middle class this has been an asymmetrical recovery. What is this government doing to ensure that this is a recovery for everyone?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour and democratic renewal.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We have been working very hard to connect unemployed Albertans and Albertans looking to retrain with training opportunities. We have increased funding to programs that allow Albertans to learn new skills as well as made sure that we understand the labour market so that we can provide the best advice to an Albertan trying to understand what's happening within the labour market and where their best place may be.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Given, Mr. Speaker, that there is no greater social ill than unemployment – if we have two men with the same income but one of them works and the other does not, which one will be more likely to succumb to depression, substance abuse, and domestic violence? There is value and dignity in all work. There are no dead-end jobs, just an end to hope, and too many Albertans have run out of hope. What is this government doing to give every Albertan the hope that they can still live and work with dignity?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Staff at Labour and Community and Social Services work with employers and laid-off employees to make sure that they have career counselling, resumé preparation, job search assistance, and information on retraining opportunities. These resources are out there for Albertans. I encourage all Albertans to contact their Alberta Works centre, to contact the resources that the government of Alberta makes available so that we can get them reconnected within the job market and get them back to work.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Provincial Credit Rating

Mr. Barnes: What a difference a day makes. Yesterday, when announcing the province's second-quarter fiscal update, the Finance minister couldn't stop gushing about how great a job the NDP were doing. Twenty-four hours later credit-monitoring agency DBRS downgraded, saying, quote: up until now they've been signalling that their intention is to return to balance, but we have not seen credible action or we have not seen a real meaningful plan to do so. End quote. When will the minister put away the smoke and mirrors and start making decisions that are in the best interest of Alberta families?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. You know, this side is dedicated every day to make life better for Albertans, make life more affordable for Albertans, and we'll continue to do that. Talk about a credit-rating agency. We heard from credit-rating agencies before, and they said that we would have to cut billions out of our budget or raise taxes for billions. That's what Saskatchewan did under the misguided direction of Brad Wall, the opposition members' buddy there. They cut postsecondary funding. They imposed a 6 per cent tax on construction. That's right: a sales tax they imposed. That's not leadership. We're not going to do that.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Barnes: Given that yesterday the minister gleefully announced that the NDP had reduced deficit spending by $300 million and are on pace to not spend $400 million by year-end and given that our debt is projected to be $71 billion by 2019 and at $400 million a year it would take this government 177 years to eliminate Alberta's debt – with a plan that bad it's no wonder the government has been down, down, downgraded six times. To the minister: are you aware that you will be 237 years old before Alberta's kids are out of debt?

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, we could all be so lucky.

I can tell you that our plan is working. Jobs are up in this province. We've created more than 70,000 new full-time jobs since last summer. Mr. Speaker, we're going to be sharing more about our path to balance with Albertans in the near future for sure. But this work takes time. We must be careful and compassionate about the spending that we do, and we're turning that down.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, given that every time the Finance minister makes an announcement or holds a press conference, it results in a costly credit downgrade for Albertans, to the minister: will you stop wasting taxpayers' money with wasteful ideological decisions like public ownership of linen services? Stop scaring away billions in investments with misguided attempts to manage the decline of our economy and make some tough decisions so Albertans are out of debt before the year 2194.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, I am so proud of the work of all of these front-bench individuals. I am so proud that our plan shows 4 per cent growth this year. I am so proud that we're leading the nation this year and next year in GDP growth. That side would stunt GDP growth. That side would throw us back into a recession. That side has no plan at all. They have no budget plan.

Oil and Gas Transportation to the West Coast

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, we lost a historic opportunity last night to name Calgary-Greenway after Manmeet Singh Bhullar. Now the NDP government has another historic opportunity to make up for two pipelines, Energy East and Northern Gateway, by supporting the Eagle Spirit Energy corridor in partnership with all the First Nations who are backing this $16 billion project. To the Minister of Energy: are you prepared to have a debate under Standing Order 30 on this new pipeline? Yes or no?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I can tell you, to respond to the hon. member's question, that there are ongoing conversations as far as other opportunities to get our product to tidewater. We recognize that this is absolutely critical, and that's why the Minister of Energy along with the Premier have been championing pipelines to tidewater. We know it's the safest way to move our products. We know we need to get it to tidewater. We're going to continue to make that our number one priority, and we will engage with all communities and look at all different possible routes.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, given that federal Parliament now has Bill C-48, the tanker ban bill, at the committee stage and the government of Alberta did not show up in person to defend Alberta's interest and given that all the First Nations backing the Eagle Spirit pipeline oppose the tanker ban, to the Minister of Energy again: instead of paying lip service to the indigenous people, will you stand up and defend Alberta's interest and support this all First Nations backed Eagle Spirit pipeline?

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, our government will never back down from fighting for Alberta jobs and Alberta's energy sector. We've been clear with Ottawa that economic development can coexist with environmental protection. One does not need to sacrifice the other. In fact, I believe it was the Minister of Energy that wrote to Minister Garneau to express our specific concerns with the federal tanker ban bill earlier this month.

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that our government is working collaboratively with other provinces and the federal government . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Keep it down.

Mr. Bilous: . . . unlike the opposition over there, that would jump up and down and scream and get no results.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, given that within 24 hours after returning from Europe I submitted a letter to the parliamentary committee arguing on the Canadian free trade agreement on constitutional grounds against the tanker ban and given that the Premier is the minister responsible for intergovernmental relations, can the Premier explain to this House what her back channels to the PMO are saying about the tanker ban and the social licence, and when will this discriminatory tanker ban bill be stopped?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know what, I'm not about to take advice from those guys over there. Their leader was in Ottawa 16 years, and you know how many pipelines to tidewater he got built? Zero.

What we are doing is – not only did we put forward a robust climate leadership plan to show that our energy sector is the most environmental and takes all precautions necessary to protect our environment, we're showing that energy and environment go hand in hand, Mr. Speaker. I can tell you that we will continue to work with the federal government to deliver results, unlike the opposition, which will continue to deliver hot air.

The Speaker: Thank you.

North American Free Trade Agreement

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, I recently asked the minister of economic development a question on NAFTA, and his written follow-up is most sincerely appreciated. In that response he stated that his officials "ensure the federal government is fully aware of Alberta's position" and that they are "actively promoting our interests in the negotiations" and policy positions despite introducing Bill 30, which we are hearing may not be NAFTA compliant. To the minister of economic development: what is Alberta's official position on NAFTA, how is that exactly being articulated to the federal government, and will you share your position with Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the question. We've been engaged with the federal government from the beginning. In fact, if I can just briefly walk us through time. Back when the NAFTA negotiations started and actually six months prior, the Premier brought together four different industry round-tables: with energy, with agriculture, with forestry, with manufacturing. From those round-tables we've been engaging with industry and ensuring that they're engaging on the other side of the border. We've also been working very, very collaboratively with the federal government to ensure that they know Alberta's position.

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, given the minister has publicly stated that the collapse of NAFTA is a very real possibility and given that we have a federal government which seems more intent on bolstering the Trudeau celebrity brand than actually negotiating a trade deal, at the expense of Alberta's interests, which he is not renowned for defending, again to the minister: how are you holding the federal government to account for recklessly jeopardizing NAFTA negotiations by leading with virtue signalling, image politics, which the American administration is highly likely to reject?

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, I would caution the member for making accusations on that which he does not know. To say that the federal government is not standing up for Canada is false. The federal government working with the provinces is ensuring things like chapter 16 and the dispute resolution chapter are not removed from NAFTA. I can tell you that the federal government has been very engaged with us. Our number one position is to do no harm and to increase trade and improve trade. I find it interesting that the other side keeps nattering, while our side is actually trying to govern.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're talking about standing up for Albertans, not federal politics.

Given that the minister has indicated that Alberta is preparing for the very real possibility that the NAFTA negotiations could collapse and given that this would have extremely widespread negative ramifications across Alberta's boundaries and given that having a fully functional backup plan is now an absolute necessity, again to the minister. Worst-case scenario: NAFTA falls apart. What is your backup plan, and how will your government support affected Alberta businesses in the event of such a collapse?

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, I'd be happy to sit down with the member to explain what happens should NAFTA go off the rails, but I'll tell you this much. Our government is continuing to work to ensure that the federal government is aware of Alberta's position and our interest in continuing this trade. Whether or not the members opposite know this, the U.S. is our largest trading partner and is absolutely significant. Although we are looking at increasing trade in other parts of the world, we are continuing to work with the Trump administration as well as the Mexican administration to ensure that this trade deal continues to move forward. We want to see borders reduced. [interjection]

The Speaker: Hon. member.

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, on Monday it was good to see the UCP join me in calling for greater action on rural crime. One might say that I lead, they follow. Now, this issue, though, is more important than politics. The Ministry of Justice and Solicitor General website states that the primary goal of its first core business is that Alberta's communities are safe. On this goal the ministry has had an epic failure. Since my constituents don't feel safe, what will it take for the minister to get engaged and actually deliver on this core promise?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the important question. Our government believes that all Albertans deserve to live safely and in strong communities. That is why we have worked with our law enforcement partners. We have started a new integrated crime reduction unit, which is focusing on the crimes in rural Alberta. We are also providing supports to law enforcement by providing them with $500 million every year to make sure that they can keep our communities safe.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, this minister has fallen into the same trap as all of his other colleagues, equating spending with results. Given that the time-honoured NDP recipe to just add money and stir isn't working and given that Albertans in both rural and urban areas are not seeing decreases in crime from the money that is being spent, to the minister. I am not advocating cuts to policing, but Albertans want to see results. When is this government going to show results?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are absolutely committed to making sure that Albertans are safe in their communities. That is why we are supporting our law enforcement. We are supporting police, we have increased funding for ALERT, we are working with the provincial rural crime watch, and we are working with community partners to make sure that we have communities which are safe. People can be assured that government is taking steps to make sure that safety of the individual is ensured.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the challenge of increased criminal activity is not confined to Alberta and given that the province of Saskatchewan recently announced a redeployment of over 250 police officers from other areas of enforcement specifically to battle rural crime and given that if this government would set aside its animosity against our neighbours to the east and actually do something to combat crime – here's my question for the day. Whoever is in charge of that file today, will someone over there pick up the phone, call the Saskatchewan Justice minister, or has the Premier's office told you not to? [interjection]

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker . . .

The Speaker: Hold on. Just wait.

Calm it down, folks.

Mr. Minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are proud of our law enforcement. We have full confidence in their capacity to deal with that. As a government we are providing them with the needed supports so they can handle that issue. The Alberta law enforcement response team is a key part of our integrated province-wide response to serious crimes. ALERT, which was previously funded by the federal government, was cut by that side under Jason Kenney's watch . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Affordable Child Care

Mr. Dach: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Families in this province have experienced the challenge of finding quality, affordable child care. Jason Kenney's Conservatives are out of touch with that reality. They've called it a waste of money. They said that our $25-a-day child care pilot is putting dollars at risk. Could the Minister of Children's Services please provide the House with evidence that suggests that spending tax dollars on child care is a good investment?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can say that moms and dads across Alberta know that making child care affordable is not a waste, and experts agree. The Conference Board of Canada recently released a report showing that every dollar invested in early childhood leads to $6 of economic benefits in later years. Investing in our children now leads to better development outcomes and reduces income inequality. That's why we're going to continue working to make child care more affordable, because an investment in a bright future for our kids is an investment in a bright future for Alberta.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister has invested $10 million into these early learning and child care centres and given that the other side of the House has said that that investment is ideological, what are Albertans saying about access to affordable, high-quality child care in their communities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Jason Kenney's Conservatives may want top-down quality child care, but that's not what everyday Albertans are saying. Moms and dads across this province tell me that affordable child care has been life changing for their families. One mom told me that she cried when she found out that her child care fees were reduced by more than half. Alberta families want to see more affordable child care in their communities, and our government is working to make that a reality.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake said that $25-a-day child care in his constituency shows that the government is looking out for northeastern Alberta, when can the opposition expect to hear more good news about the government's commitment to making lives better for families in their constituencies?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was truly a pleasure to attend the grand opening of a $25-a-day child care centre in Bonnyville with the member opposite, and I'm excited to visit more affordable child care centres as we work towards universal $25-a-day child care in Alberta. We're working with the federal government on a bilateral agreement on child care, and I'm excited to share details about that work with Albertans in the coming weeks. I hope that Jason Kenney's Conservatives will share our excitement for making child care more affordable for Alberta families.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On Monday over a hundred Albertans from rural Alberta drove to attend session to have their concerns heard about the rise in rural crime. We heard many stories about the escalating violence, theft, and even murder in rural Alberta. To the minister: what is it going to take for you to open up debate in this House so that we can all work together to come up with solutions to address this problem?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government believes that Albertans deserve to live in safe and strong communities. What Albertans want is action from this government, not debate. That is why we are providing half a billion dollars to law enforcement to make sure that our communities are safe. That is why the RCMP have started a new integrated crime reduction unit to make sure that we can provide safety to our communities, and that is why we have increased funding for ALERT.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Hanson: Given, Mr. Speaker, that Crown prosecutors in rural Alberta are known to have upwards of 2,400 cases each while the same prosecutor in Edmonton may have 600 cases and given that any of these numbers are unmanageable for any location but the Finance minister has seen fit to implement a hiring freeze for these folks, to the minister again. Crown prosecutors are begging for relief. What do you think is a reasonable caseload, and how are you going to achieve that number?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to Crown prosecutors we are proud of our record. We have increased Crown prosecutors so that their workload is reasonable and they can do their job. We have also created new positions for judges so that the judiciary can do their job. Last week the Justice minister joined ALERT to announce Alberta's largest drug bust in Project Offshore. ALERT laid more than 120 charges against 11 suspects. They seized two vehicles, one mansion, and more than 15,000 fentanyl pills.

2:40

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the state of the justice system has Crown prosecutors burning out, insufficient judges to hear cases, Legal Aid out of money, not enough police on the beat, and a rural crime epidemic fuelled in part by opioid addictions and fuelled by the NDP's bad economy and given that the Jordan decision is going to ensure that justice will be denied to people who have been robbed or held at gunpoint in front of their own children, Minister, how bad does the NDP's soft-on-crime approach have to get before the government takes action, cracks down, and gets the criminals behind bars, where they belong?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a priority for our government to ensure that our justice system functions in the most efficient way possible and protects the rights and interests of Albertans. That is why we have added new positions to the justice system. We do know that because of the Supreme Court decision, the Jordan decision, it's a marked change in the justice system, and some delays are expected. That is the reason we are increasing Crown prosecutors, we are increasing judges' positions, and we are making resources available to make sure that the interests and rights of Albertans are protected.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Great. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I do have a petition here in relation to a question I asked yesterday in regard to the southwest Calgary ring road. I have a petition here from 526 residents of the Springbank Hill community. They certainly have concerns that there will be an adverse physical and psychological impact on the quality of life of the residents in that neighbourhood, including unbearable levels of noise, vehicle emissions, and light pollution. As well, the proximity of the on- and off-ramps creates a risk of vehicles careening into residents' backyards, which, of course, is a safety issue. I'm proud to submit this on behalf of the people of Calgary-West and the Springbank Hill Community Association.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Introduction of Bills

Bill 31

A Better Deal for Consumers and Businesses Act

The Speaker: The Minister of Service Alberta and the Minister of Status of Women.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to request leave to introduce Bill 31, A Better Deal for Consumers and Businesses Act.

Mr. Speaker, over the summer months thousands of Albertans told us that they want to be protected when shopping or signing contracts, and businesses told us that they want to compete on a level playing field. Albertans deserve a government that protects their interests. That's why we're improving consumer protection laws. Stronger rules boost consumer confidence, and that's good for the bottom line. Bill 31 represents our government's commitment to protecting Albertans' pocketbooks and making life more affordable. We are also helping businesses succeed and grow our economy. I look forward to debating Bill 31 in the House.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 31 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to table five copies of a document that I mentioned earlier in my member's statement prepared by the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees' Pay and Social Equity Committee. This document represents the names of over 9,000 Albertans concerned about pay equity in our province. As a government and as a province we must work towards justice and equity for all Albertans. We must work together to address the wage gap.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite five copies of a graph by economist Dr. Trevor Tombe entitled Alberta Still Firmly on the Royalty Rollercoaster, which displays the resource revenues required to balance the budget as a percentage of total government revenue. That number is going up.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. The first is Alberta Health Services' performance report on wait times for addictions and mental health by zone. That was for quarter 1, 2017/18.

The second is from the Alberta Liberal Party, a brochure on political action committees, What is a PAC & Why Should I Care?

Thank you.

The Speaker: Edmonton-McClung, do you have a tabling?

Mr. Dach: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table a document I referenced earlier in question period today. I have the five requisite copies of the Bonnyville Nouvelle from which I quoted the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake when he said that $25-a-day child care in his constituency showed that "the government is looking out for northeastern Alberta."

The Speaker: Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table a letter that I received from Allan in my riding, from the town of Innisfail, stating that "in the last 90 days there have been 7 locations [around] my farm which have suffered break and enters," one of them on three separate occasions. Those were home invasions and break and enters.

Another one here from Glinys in my riding. She says that "we are very fortunate to have a caring and active group of neighbours" that have thwarted break-ins in their home.

Another one here from Ruth, the director of the Raven Crime Watch, stating: "With all the crime in rural areas why would [people] want to stay?"

And, finally, when this individual called in regarding this particular incident at their place, the people on the other end of the phone at the police station told them to go "get a dog." [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

The hon. Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite number of copies of annual reports for the Alberta Foundation for the Arts, the Alberta Historical Resources Foundation, and the Alberta Sport Connection.

Thank you.

The Speaker: I believe we have a point of order. The hon. Government House Leader.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise under Standing Order 23(i) specifically. A member will be called to order if he or she "imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member."

Sometime around 2 o'clock this afternoon during question period the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition accused the Premier of, quote, laughing at rural Alberta. Now, Mr. Speaker, I was sitting next to the Premier, and I was paying close attention. She did not in any way laugh or show amusement about the plight of people in rural Alberta with respect to the subject of the question, which was crime in rural Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, when another member stands in the House and makes a statement about another member that is not true and that has the effect when it's heard by the public and perhaps other members in the House of then damaging the reputation of the person about whom the false statements are made, it's a very serious matter. I think in future should that happen, it may give rise to a point of privilege, but in this case I'm prepared to raise this under 23(f).

It may be that the hon. member opposite does not like the answer that the Premier has given. In fact, I wouldn't be surprised if that was the case. He may even believe that the approach that the government is taking is insufficient and represents some sense of lacking in terms of what needs to be done. But the Premier did not laugh at rural Alberta. She takes this matter extremely seriously, as do all of us on this side, as does everyone in the House.

Mr. Nixon: Now I'll laugh at you.

Mr. Mason: Now, there the hon. member is laughing.

Mr. Speaker, I want to assure all members of the House that while we may disagree on how to proceed, the government has taken this seriously and does take it seriously and wants to ensure that we do everything possible to assist with this problem. However, to suggest that the Premier is laughing in this House when those questions are put to her is completely false, it is most unfair to the hon. Premier, and does a disservice to all members of this House.

So I would ask, then, that you find that the member's statement is out of order and that it be withdrawn. We should not have this kind of thing going on in the House, where people are standing up and saying that a member did something that they did not do, especially if that statement is believed outside this House, which then damages the other member's reputation. That is unacceptable, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I just want to clarify. Did I hear correctly? I thought I heard two subsections of 23 that you cited. You mentioned (f), I believe.

Mr. Mason: I apologize, Mr. Speaker. It's subsection (i), "Imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member." I think I got it right the first time and not the second time.

Thank you.

Mr. Nixon: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, this is quite clearly a matter of debate. I would suggest that the Government House Leader should be very careful considering that most of the comments that come from that side of the House are usually saying things that are putting words into our mouths or indicating that this side of the House is doing something that they are not. But that's what they continue to do, and that's fine. It is a matter of debate. You've ruled that way many times.

The fact is this, Mr. Speaker. I was asking a question on behalf of Albertans – just the other day hundreds of them were here – about something that is very, very serious, very serious for the communities that I represent and the people on this side of the House and some of the people on the other side of the House represent, that is causing devastation in those areas. I asked that question, and during the time that I asked that question, the Premier was laughing. That's a fact.

Now, I will respect that the Government House Leader may interpret her laughter in a different way than I did, but then, again, that would be a matter of debate. He was laughing himself at the time, Mr. Speaker, so maybe he didn't understand what she was laughing at. The reality is that when I asked that question, he was laughing. It was certainly our interpretation of that that he was laughing at our constituents and the people who we were asking the question about and without a doubt is a matter of debate. I respect that he disagrees with the way that we interpreted that, but from this side of the House they were laughing at Albertans. They were laughing at people that are suffering from the crime epidemic that we are asking questions about.

I think that's disappointing. You know, I think the Government House Leader even standing on this point of order to try to defend that behaviour is quite ridiculous.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'll choose to think about this one. I can only tell you at a general level that I shift it back to all of you about the degree to which you reflect on each other in this House and how those statements are interpreted. For that matter, I will defer . . .

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, can I say one more thing? Not an argument on the matter or anything, just a comment before you move on.

The Speaker: I think we're past that point.

Mr. Nixon: Well, I think I'll just save you some time.

The Speaker: You'll save me some time?

Mr. Nixon: Sure, Mr. Speaker. I think that this House has much more valuable work to do, and if the opposite side is extremely sensitive to us pointing out when they laugh and that that hurt the Premier, I will happily withdraw that comment so that we can move on with our day on behalf of Albertans.

Mr. Mason: Another point of order under the same section. The hon. member continues to . . .

Mr. Nixon: You can't do a point of order on a point of order.

The Speaker: Go ahead.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nixon: Well, then, point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I'm listening to another point of order here, hon. member. You'll get a chance.

You have another point of order, is that correct?

Point of Order

Imputing Motives

Mr. Mason: The Opposition House Leader continues to sneer at the rules of this House, Mr. Speaker, to disrespect this House, to stand up and engage in all kinds of disruptive and disrespectful behaviour with respect to important matters that are before the House. I did not laugh nor did the Premier today during his questions. That is absolutely false.

The Speaker: Do you have – are you speaking to a . . .

Mr. Nixon: Well, I'm responding to the Government House Leader's point of order. I will note that he didn't cite anything. I'm not really sure. I sense that you're probably confused, Mr. Speaker, about what the government's point of order is. But now who is declaring motives to somebody in the House? It's ridiculous that the Government House Leader is doing this. What is happening here is that the government is upset because they've been called . . .

The Speaker: I think I will retain my right to review the matter. This exchange is illustrative in my mind of requiring effort from everyone.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 29

An Act to Reduce Cannabis and Alcohol Impaired Driving

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased and proud to rise today to move third reading of Bill 29, An Act to Reduce Cannabis and Alcohol Impaired Driving.

This bill was proposed based on consultation with Albertans as well as with our traffic safety and law enforcement partners concerned about what the legalization of cannabis will mean for impaired driving in our province. This bill honours our commitment to maintaining safe roads and to deterring impaired driving through a robust program of provincial administrative sanctions.

By amending and updating the Traffic Safety Act now, we can ensure that Alberta stands ready to reflect the changes being proposed by the federal government to the Criminal Code of Canada. Bill 29 establishes the laws and procedures that our law enforcement organizations need to deter and to sanction any form of impaired driving as we prepare for cannabis legalization in Canada. This will help keep all road users safe as we move into this uncharted territory as a nation in 2018, not much more than seven months from now, Mr. Speaker.

I would like to thank the members of this House for their support for Bill 29. This bill ensures that we have the provincial sanctions in place to mirror the new federal impaired driving laws when they come into force. The bill responds to the Alberta Court of Appeal decision by providing a 90-day licence suspension rather than an indefinite licence suspension until the disposition of the court proceedings. What this bill means for Albertans is that our law enforcement organizations have the tools to get impaired drivers off the road immediately and consequences serious enough to deter anyone from getting behind the wheel when impaired by any substance. This legislation is vital to continued public safety in Alberta.

I want to thank you for the opportunity to take this very important step towards our goal to see zero impairment-related collisions and fatalities on Alberta roads, Mr. Speaker. I would now ask the members of this House to put their support behind this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to support Bill 29, An Act to Reduce Cannabis and Alcohol Impaired Driving. It is unfortunate that this legislation had to come forward so quickly and with so many unknowns about how our police services will actually enforce its provisions at roadside, but we recognize that it is not the fault of our provincial government. Our government has to be prepared for the legalization of marijuana on July 1, 2018, which is now only seven months away.

The Ministry of Transportation through Bill 29 has aligned Alberta's provincial administrative sanctions with the proposed Criminal Code amendments which are currently before Parliament. I support those alignments along with the way Alberta also dealt with the court ruling requiring it to alter its administrative sanctions for impaired driving.

I also want to take a moment to thank the Minister of Transportation for the time he has committed to be present in this Chamber during all the Bill 29 debate. He did a good job answering questions from this side of the Chamber.

Having said that, when I review the short time we have had to consider this bill, the greatest concerns that the UCP caucus has voiced during this debate have not been addressed. These are crucial concerns based on legalization occurring before our police services can be ready for it. We have heard police leaders in Alberta and across the nation express that point time and time again, yet here we are on the cusp of this new recreational drug becoming legalized and our police officers do not yet know how they'll identify drug-impaired drivers at roadside.

We keep hearing that a roadside device is going to be ready for July 1, but even if it is approved in time, it will only identify whether a driver has THC in their system. The roadside device that has been tested will not identify a driver's level of impairment in the way a breathalyzer indicates whether a driver is over .05 or not. So that leaves our officers to perform sobriety tests at roadside, and that requires them to undergo special training. Not all officers have that training, so they will have to call for a colleague who does to respond to the scene.

If it occurs and the driver is brought to the detachment for more investigation, a drug recognition expert would have to perform specialized tests on them. We haven't quite figured out, even with the discussions that occurred in this Chamber, who will be doing the blood testing and subsequent forensic work. But let's return to the drug recognition expert for a moment. These officers are even more specialized than those who can perform the field sobriety test, and right now they have to travel to the U.S. for that training. Does this all sound costly and time consuming? Clearly, it is.

While we are supporting this bill today, it is the implementation of it and in particular the implementation by July 1 that poses the greatest hurdles, and that creates hazards for all Albertans on our roads. This government has precious little time to train officers and ensure forensic testing facilities are in place in seven months. I strongly believe that Albertans deserve answers to this government's level of preparation for our police services.

I would also have liked to have heard more concern from our government. One 2013 study, which the government itself quoted, found that more than half of all fatally injured drivers had drugs in their system, and 25 per cent of those had consumed cannabis. As you can see, we've not been alarmist. These are the facts, and after a number of days debating this bill here, we do not know how our provincial government will ensure our police services can protect us on the roads postlegalization in the way they would want to.

The Minister of Transportation has talked about a public awareness campaign to address myths about marijuana use and driving and mixing marijuana with alcohol. That is within his purview, and he has promised that the government will do a fulsome job of communicating these dangers. I have no doubt that he'll ensure that his ministry does its best to do so, but I do ask him to make it a priority.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I support third reading of Bill 29, but I urge the government to address the gaps in training and the number of personnel and facilities that will be needed to properly address this new recreational drug. Many Albertans fear that it will make our roads that much more hazardous, and we have lots of evidence to prove that their fears could become a reality.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any other members who wish to speak to third reading of Bill 29? Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Great. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just want to thank the Transportation minister. I'd like to thank the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti for speaking just now. I, too, of course, will be supporting the bill.

You know, I spoke yesterday. I spoke very passionately, of course, in regard to some of the challenges that police services will be facing, especially when it comes to blood tests, and I talked about that.

One thing that I didn't touch on was what the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti brought up, which is the drug recognition experts. To his point, this is not a service that is actually provided here in Alberta or even Canada at this time in regard to training of these specific officers. This is very specialized training within a specialized unit within police services, which is the traffic unit, whereby somebody has to travel to Arizona in order to get this training. It is very challenging. It is extensive, it is a really, really difficult course – you must get 100 per cent in order to pass this course – and it is very, very costly. So to pretend that all officers are going to be trained as drug recognition experts is completely, absolutely false. That will not be happening.

My concern is not just the challenges of having a drug recognition expert available within a larger municipality. I can tell you as a former alcohol tester within the province of Alberta that there were times when the concern was that we were not always readily available. There were times when we did not have a tester that was available, and there will be times that a drug recognition expert will not be available. But if we go back into rural Alberta and we talk about the challenges that they are currently facing at this time, they will be facing challenges in rural Alberta when an officer pulls somebody over who has been stopped for impaired driving due to marijuana. There may not be a drug recognition expert available. At that point all we have are the signs or indicia.

You know, at this time is that enough to lay a charge under the Criminal Code? Yes, for impaired driving. But I can tell you that it's typically not enough. I mean, there's a reason why when we charge somebody with impaired driving for alcohol, we charge under 253(1)(a) and (b) of the Criminal Code. It's because we're laying two charges. We're laying one charge for impaired driving, and we're laying another charge for being over .08. Then that gives the Crown the opportunity to deal with the defence attorneys when it comes to impaired driving. It becomes very, very challenging if all we have are signs of indicia or the smell of marijuana in order to lay a specific charge of impaired driving when it pertains to marijuana.

Now, that being said, I am truly disappointed. I was very sincere in regard to the zero tolerance amendment that was made yesterday. The decision that was made by this Legislature: I certainly respect that, but I do believe it was a mistake. I believe that zero tolerance was something that we should have put in from a nonpartisan perspective for the safety of the individuals on the roads of Alberta.

The police are not ready. There are many police services that I have spoken to, many high-ranking members of police services that I have spoken to. They are not ready. They're not prepared right now to deal with this cultural shift.

I believe that there are going to be people at risk. I do believe that the Transportation minister as well as this government did the best that they could given the situation that they were put under by the federal government. However, I believe that we could have made this better. I mean, I know we don't have Committee of the Whole, but I certainly hope that the government, maybe through regulations, you know, takes zero tolerance in this bill very seriously, again from a nonpartisan perspective, in order to save lives of the people of Alberta.

In conclusion, I just want to say that, of course, I do support Bill 29. I support making these roads safer. I do believe that there are good things that are in this bill. However, I do believe that it could've been better.

I'd like to thank you again, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak, and I'd like to thank everybody for participating. Thank you.

The Speaker: Any hon. members under 29(2)(a)?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will concur with the comments from my colleagues from Grande Prairie-Wapiti as well as Calgary-West and thank the hon. Minister of Transportation for his approach to this bill and for hearing out the arguments and the case made by members on this side. With Bill 29, of course, we find ourselves here, whether we like it or not, both through the Alberta Court of Appeal ruling but also through the legalization of cannabis by the federal government.

I do stand also in support of Bill 29 here at third reading because it attempts to address some of the very serious challenges that our society faces with impaired driving of all kinds. It, of course, as we know, is a major contributor to fatal road crashes in Canada. Unfortunately, even before legalization, drug-impaired driving is an increasing safety problem. In 2010, the most recent statistics we were able to find, there were nearly as many road fatalities as a result of using drugs, about 34 per cent, as there had been as a result of alcohol, 39 per cent. Those numbers are striking and a very significant problem in our community.

I want to recognize the work of MADD and many other groups who advocate so strongly against impaired driving of all kinds. Unfortunately, they continue to have their work cut out for them, and I do worry that that will only get worse as legalization of cannabis is upon us.

Young people, of course, are the largest group of drivers who will test positive for alcohol or drugs, and they'll also be involved in accidents and crashes and fatalities.

The technology isn't the same when dealing with cannabis or other drugs as it is for alcohol in terms of roadside screening. The hope is that there will be a device that is able to be used at the roadside come July 1. Frankly, I suspect that we will be in a situation where that isn't the case, certainly nothing quite exactly equivalent to a breathalyzer, which creates challenges in terms of resourcing for police: the types of resources they need, the types of expertise to draw blood either at the roadside or at a precinct or perhaps in hospital. Those are not only scarce resources and officers that need to be trained up to do so, but of course there's a tremendous cost in doing so as well. Those police forces will require substantial resources. Municipalities around the province will require substantial resources. The RCMP will require substantial resources to roll that out.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, as seems to be the case in our world, the only winners in all of this are likely to be the lawyers. When we talk about the percentage, that 2 to 5 nanograms per millilitre of THC is our threshold, I strongly suspect this is the sort of thing that will be litigated here over the course of many years up to the Supreme Court in terms of figuring out exactly what impairment means. When we're dealing with cannabis and blood testing, that is detectable, as I understand it, for potentially weeks or even months down the road from having actually been consumed.

So determining exactly what impairment means: we've made an attempt to do so in accordance with the federal laws. Unfortunately, we are in a position where we're doing the best we can. While I have some sympathy for the position that zero tolerance would be the desired goal here – and that certainly is what the Alberta Motor Transport Association was pushing for as well – I do understand that that in itself may introduce some legal challenges and that in not adopting a zero tolerance approach, there is more likelihood of this legislation withstanding a legal challenge.

In conclusion, then, I will say that we do support this bill. Again, while there are some challenges with it, it is the best attempt I think that the government could make to address the challenge both with cannabis as well as with alcohol impairment, so we in the Alberta Party caucus stand in support of Bill 29.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any questions or comments to the Member for Calgary-Elbow under 29(2)(a)?

Are there any other members who wish to speak to third reading of Bill 29?

[Motion carried; Bill 29 read a third time]

Bill 27

Conflicts of Interest Amendment Act, 2017

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today on behalf of the Minister of Finance and Treasury Board to move third reading of Bill 27, Conflicts of Interest Amendment Act, 2017.

In 2015 we said that we would strengthen Alberta's Conflicts of Interest Act and expand it to the senior staff of our province's agencies, boards, and commissions. With Bill 27 we are fulfilling this commitment, ensuring public agencies are more accountable, protecting Albertans' tax dollars, and being governed transparently.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta's public agencies play a pivotal role in regulating, managing, and delivering important programs and services to Albertans on behalf of the government as well as providing oversight and advice on Alberta's issues. Public agencies are a significant part of Alberta's public sector and account for about half of government's total yearly budget. Quite rightly, then, Albertans have the same high expectations of their public agencies that they have of government: that public agencies are relevant, effective, transparent, well governed, and accountable to government and to them.

While some public agencies have conflict-of-interest requirements in place through their codes of conduct or their employment contracts, there is not a consistent and comprehensive set of rules being applied to public agencies. If passed, Bill 27 would create that consistency for the province's agencies, boards, and commissions as well as the confidence of Albertans to ensure positions are not being used to further private interests.

Our public agencies provide valuable services that make life better for Albertans, such as higher education, protecting vulnerable people, and delivering health services. They need to be held to a high ethical standard and governed with integrity. It's vitally important that our public agencies are held to the same high standards that we expect of our elected officials and senior public servants.

Bill 27 is part of numerous key changes that have already taken place for provincial agencies, boards, and commissions, including the ongoing review of all ABCs, executive compensation reform, enhanced compensation transparency, an improved online board application process, and greater transparency and diversity on Alberta's public agency boards.

I ask all members to now support Bill 27 in third reading. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, am pleased to rise to speak to Bill 27, the Conflicts of Interest Amendment Act, 2017, at third reading. I am pleased to see this government take initiative on improving transparency and accountability in government. As we know, this legislation will bring Alberta in line with Ontario, Manitoba, and the federal government, who have seen the benefits of similar legislation in improving their track records on accountability. I feel strongly that giving representatives of the boards in our province clear rules and guidelines is crucial to ensuring their compliance with those rules.

In the past different agencies and boards have had different rules and regulations, which has led to confusion and a lack of transparency about hard-earned tax dollars. The legislation will hold board and agency members to the same standards as elected officials and senior public service officials. There should never be a question of impartiality or personal gain when it comes to Albertans' hard-earned tax dollars. Albertans need to be assured that the decisions being made by their elected officials in any capacity, whether that be by MLAs, CEOs, or board members, are in their best interests and not personal vested interests.

As an elected official I have to comply with the guidelines and disclosures through the Ethics Commissioner that ensure that any decision I make is above board and that I have nothing to gain personally or financially from any dealings that I may partake in or legislation that I pass or gifts that I receive.

It would be nice if we lived in a world where personal interests were not easily corrupted, but unfortunately, as we all know, that is not always the case. In the last few years we have seen several examples of bad behaviour and dishonesty on our public boards and agencies that have led to entire boards being dismissed and that have seriously eroded the public's faith in these organizations and their ability to best represent Albertans. It is unfortunate, Mr. Speaker, that the actions of a few have tainted the great works that so many of our agencies do on behalf of Albertans. My hope is that this legislation will help to rebuild that trust that Albertans have lost in our system.

While I support this legislation and commend the government for their work on this undertaking, I also want to ensure that the government has considered all the possible ramifications of this bill, both positive and negative, given the far-reaching and potentially unforeseen consequences of this bill. This legislation would give an enormous amount of power and influence to the office of the Ethics Commissioner. While I have absolute faith in the integrity and judgment of that office, I think that it is also important to ensure that there are always checks and balances in our democracy. This will also download an enormous amount of work, on top of new responsibilities, to this office.

Mr. Speaker, there are also concerns regarding the impacts this legislation may have on CEOs' and board members' abilities to obtain employment in their field of expertise following the expiration of their terms. I hope that talented, bright candidates continue to seek out these positions. We need, Albertans need qualified and honest people to serve in these critical roles, and I know we don't want to be driving away prime candidates that bring valid experience to the table with some of these restrictions.

I understand the reasoning behind the policy to not have board members actively involved in the industries that could create a conflict of interest in their governance. For example, within my portfolio of Treasury Board and Finance are a number of boards that will be affected, including the public service pension plan, which is responsible for ensuring that the plan is properly funded, recommending changes to the plan's rules, and setting general policy guidelines on investment and management of the fund's assets, amongst other duties. The Public Service Pension Board has six members, three nominated by the government of Alberta, representing employers, and three representatives nominated by the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees, representing employees. I believe all the members of the Public Service Pension Board are highly qualified and morally upstanding citizens, but we need to ensure that we are not limiting these individuals' ability to find work in their related fields after their term of service to Albertans is complete.

Another example is Agriculture and Forestry. In Agriculture and Forestry is the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation, which has a number of farmers and agriculture-related businessmen and -women currently on their board. I don't think I'm the only hon. member in this House that believes it is important for the AFSC board to have very qualified individuals who understand farming and ranching, and who better than the farmers and ranchers themselves? I am confident that Bill 27 strikes the right balance between preventing individuals from unduly benefiting from their positions with their ability to find gainful employment once their term of service to Albertans is complete.

That is why I will be supporting Bill 27 at third reading and why I am encouraging all my hon. colleagues on both sides of the floor to support this bill as well. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much. I rise to support Bill 27 at third reading. What is encouraging and I want to give the government credit for, and it's nice to see in this Chamber, is that we're pursuing what I would consider to be the gold standard of conflict-of-interest legislation in our country. I think that it's nice to see. This afternoon's debate on the first couple of bills has been remarkably civil, and it's been kind of a nice change from what we saw earlier in the afternoon. Long may it continue, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure you would agree with that.

What I like about this is that consistency is very important in terms of applying ethical standards. As the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat said, we in this Chamber have certain rules that apply to us in terms of conflict of interest. Those rules are entirely appropriate. We have to comply with them and have a very active Ethics Commissioner's office, which is, I will also say, very responsive to any requests that I have certainly ever had of them and very helpful in clarifying and interpreting the rules and making sure that we stay onside with those rules.

The 140 public agencies that will be affected by this will not only be seen to be more accountable to Albertans but will be more accountable to Albertans. They will and, I think, correctly should be held to a high standard by the people of this province, and this legislation certainly helps them do that.

Mechanically the agencies will now have to submit their codes of conduct to the Ethics Commissioner for review within four months of the bill being proclaimed. My sincere hope is that the Ethics Commissioner's office is provided with the resources they require to process this rather substantial amount of work because, of course, that is a relatively short time frame, but that's going to ensure that this happens relatively quickly. The agencies themselves will be forced to update their own codes of conduct internally, to disclose conflicts of interest, and to have restrictions placed on gifts, for example. Again, that's work for those agencies to do. That work is not entirely new work but certainly worth while.

I will say that a question I did have when I was going through the bill was on what impact it may have on attracting and retaining high-quality candidates for these very important roles, especially at senior levels, and in particular the 12-month period after leaving a job, where future employment is subject to conflict-of-interest rules. In the end, I think that's a good rule. It is very important that no one use their position to benefit personally in an inappropriate way. I grapple and just raise a small concern that perhaps that would mean it would require us to increase the salary that would be required to attract qualified people or perhaps reduce the pool of qualified people, which are two sides of the same coin. I just encourage the government, of course, to keep an eye on that particular challenge, but given the two-year notice period or immediately after reappointment, which allows for people in those positions to make a choice, that seems to be fair.

Again, with really no hesitation, Mr. Speaker, and notwithstanding the small concerns that I have – I wouldn't even call them concerns, really, just questions or points to note in terms of implementation – I and the Alberta Party caucus are proud to stand in support of Bill 27.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a) to the Member for Calgary-Elbow?

Are there any other members who wish to speak to third reading of Bill 27, Conflicts of Interest Amendment Act, 2017?

Seeing and hearing none, then, Edmonton-Ellerslie, would you like to close debate?

Loyola: Yes, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Treasury Board and Finance I now close debate.

[Motion carried; Bill 27 read a third time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 26

An Act to Control and Regulate Cannabis

The Chair: We are currently on amendment A4. Are there any further questions or comments with respect to this amendment?

Dr. Swann: Are you wanting me to close discussion on this amendment, Madam Chair?

The Chair: Just to clear up any confusion that we're in the right spot, this is the information I have here. We're on Bill 26, amendment A4, which is a continuation from this morning's session.

Go ahead, Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Well, I'm just wondering if we're closing discussion on that amendment. I certainly think that in the interests of children's health we should be including parks, public events, festivals and that, again, the onus should be on municipalities to identify events that are not going to include children, to be able to give those entirely permission to go ahead and have open tobacco and for those private events that will not be including children to have open events that include smoking, whether it's marijuana or tobacco. Again, we need to make the two consistent. We need some changes in the tobacco reduction act to ensure that we have some consistency there, and I believe we need this amendment to ensure that children are protected.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any further speakers to amendment A4?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

The Chair: We are back on the main bill. Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

Dr. Swann: No. I have another one.

The Chair: Oh. My apologies, hon. member. I thought you were getting up to move. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'll cede the floor as I seem to have misplaced my amendment copies. I'll be right back.

The Chair: All right. We'll go to Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: If you've never seen a six-foot-two man tap dance, Madam Chair, you're about to see it.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View and I have had long discussions, and one of the topics of discussion as it relates to Bill 26 and the legalization of cannabis is what an appropriate age for consumption ought to be. I know this is something that the federal government has set as a minimum nation-wide, the age of 18, and then has of course allowed the provinces of this country to establish their own age limits for consumption. Every province that I'm aware of that has passed their legislation or proposed legislation has set the consumption age of cannabis at the same age as their consumption for alcohol and, I would assume, tobacco. I don't know that to be an absolute fact, but I believe it to be the case. This bill, Bill 26, proposes to do the same.

One of the questions that I had when the idea of legalizing cannabis was first presented was whether or not, in fact, that is the appropriate age. There's rather compelling scientific evidence that individuals' brains continue to develop not just through their teenage years but up to age 25. Anyone who's interacted with folks in their teens and early 20s would perhaps agree that brain development continues through their early 20s. We hope it does.

One of the great benefits of my youth, when I was in my early 20s, was that, in fact, there was no social media. Cameras were few and far between. You had to actually take a photograph and take the film out of the camera and then take it to a film laboratory in order to actually produce a photograph. If not, there's a reasonable chance that I would not be standing here before you if all that information was readily available online.

Be that as it may, in all seriousness, the science, I think, is quite clear that human neurological development continues until age 25, and there's a question as to whether or not it is, in fact, appropriate to have legalized cannabis at age 18. I know that's certainly a question I have. Perhaps we will have an opportunity to debate an amendment when it arrives. It's not here yet, so we'll continue to talk about this. I look forward to hearing from the hon. member.

I understand that perhaps the Member for Calgary-West would like to weigh in, so we'll allow him to do so. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. You know, obviously, I was just listening to the Member for Calgary-Elbow. He obviously brings up some excellent points in regard to age. When I was doing my initial investigation in regard to marijuana as well, the age of consumption was a concern. I brought this to our attention yesterday in regard to Bill 29. Again, we cannot compare alcohol to marijuana. It's not the same thing. If I spill some alcohol on you, you're not going to get drunk – right? – but the second-hand smoke, of course, is a different story.

In regard to age, though, there is scientific evidence. There are studies, and every study shows that under the age of 25 it significantly impairs the development of that person, that young person. So it is a concern. It is a concern. It's a deep concern.

Now, remember. Eighteen: why do we always have this number? In all the studies and all the books that I have read – right? – I mean, 18 was used, really, for criminal purposes. There had to be an age at which somebody can be charged with a particular criminal offence. But we're talking about the development of a young person. For any of you that have children and, especially, older children, it's not that they're the age of 17 and the second they turn 18, bam – you know what? – they're an adult now. No. They're still developing. They're still growing. They're still our young person. They're still our child.

In regard to the age, yeah, I have serious concerns and reservations about the age being 18 for the consumption of marijuana. Do I know what that age is? Is it 21? Is it 25? Talking to MADD, they suggested 22. I don't know. What I do know is that anything under the age of 25 – right? – significantly impairs the cognitive development of that young person.

You know, when we talk about this bill, certainly I want to reiterate that we were handed something from the federal government. I believe that with all the best intentions, with the work that was done by the government, for the most part they've done their best. I do. I really, truly believe that they've done their best. But we have to be so very careful here. Again, this is a cultural shift in the way that, really, Alberta if not Canada is going to operate.

I think the other thing that concerns me in regard to that age limit has to do with young people. If we are using the age of 18, how many young people are in high school at the age of 18? Quite a few. Can they bring their marijuana to high school? At that point, can they smoke it within five metres of a doorway? Now we're starting to impact children aged 17, 16, 15, 14 in those high schools. That's a concern. That is a deep concern.

We'll see what this amendment is that is certainly going to be coming forward from the Member for Calgary-Mountain View. I really, truly hope that in the best interests of the people of Alberta, especially the children, we actually, really reflect as a Legislature and do what we believe to be in the best interests of the people of Alberta.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Yeah. Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to continue to speak on the age issue in Bill 26. You know, I will take this opportunity, now that I have the floor here again for that rare opportunity, to say that I think that, on balance, as much as I believe that – no question – the science is clear that there is likely potential damage from, certainly, heavy cannabis use to developing brains, perhaps even to developed brains, as any intoxicating substance or psychoactive substance would have, having a differential age for a substance like cannabis, frankly, could be problematic. It's quite difficult to tell someone that they can purchase alcohol, they can smoke cigarettes, they can go represent their country in military service but not participate in a legal product like cannabis.

I understand the arguments. In fact, it's one of the things that my staff and I and that my wife and I – my wife is a physician – discussed and debated. Of course, we have one teenage daughter and another, a 10-year-old, who believes she's about 25. We discuss these things as a family in terms of the impact they may have on our lives and what might be an appropriate age for the legal consumption of cannabis. I will say that it is challenging and problematic to make that age different.

Having said that, I do look forward to hearing the arguments from the member because I think it is a concern that many Albertans have, a concern that parents have certainly expressed to me in my constituency as I talk with other parents at school. This is going to be something that we need to address with our children as, in my case, our kids get up towards the ages where these are the sorts of things that are going to be happening at school. To suggest that it isn't already in our schools, junior high even, unfortunately – it's just simply an unfortunate reality in many cases. Having said that, we need to make sure that we're having open discussions and that we have every opportunity to educate students, teachers, parents, and all Albertans about the effects of cannabis, legal or otherwise.

If I'm not mistaken, my hon. colleague from Calgary-Mountain View will now take the floor and present his amendment.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: If I may, Madam Chair, thank you for indulging me and to my colleagues for their willingness to stand and talk intelligently about this whole question. I think this is one of the key issues that we have to discuss around this bill. Everything else is absolutely important to deal with. This amendment, though, has a chance to make a significant difference and improvement in the bill, in my view.

Bill 26, An Act to Control and Regulate Cannabis, would be amended in section 7 by adding the following before section 90.01.

Definition of a minor

90.001 Notwithstanding the definition of “minor” in section 1(1)(w), for the purposes of sections 90.03, 90.04, [et cetera] “minor” means a person under the age of 21.

Thank you, Madam Chair. I’ll begin to speak to it immediately if you wish or await your direction.

The Chair: This will be amendment A5.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Chair. I wish I’d had a chance to present this evidence to the minister’s office earlier and to the members of the Legislature so that they would have some of the most current research that I have around age and health related to cannabis use.

First of all, let me say that I support the important federal shift in cannabis policy to remove the criminalization of cannabis and ensure quality control in both medicinal and recreational use of cannabis. While the drug has both risks and benefits, as with most everything that we provide in modern society, it’s important, as we saw with alcohol and tobacco, to regulate and use evidence to establish strong guidance for individual and public health. Precautionary principle suggests that, you know, we use whatever evidence we have and, in the absence of evidence, err on the side of caution. That’s part of what I’m proposing today. Where there is reasonable evidence of significant and increased risk in adolescents, let’s err on the side of caution.

With respect to my first argument, if we establish 18 as the age of legal access, we cannot go back if we find evidence to suggest that this is increasing harm and motor vehicle injuries, for example. If we start at age 21, we can go down after we see the evidence. One of my arguments is that since the Paediatric Society has suggested 25 and the government of Canada suggested 18, let’s at least start somewhere in the middle and potentially go down to 18 after a few years of monitoring what the impact is of legalizing.

All of the five U.S. states that have legalized marijuana have established 21 as their legal limit. In Canada we have a mix. Some across the country have gone to 18, and some have gone to 19, but here we would be a little bit of an outlier at 21. We would therefore be able to look at the data over the next few years and look at the provinces and where they have the different ages, and we’d be able to say: well here’s at least some evidence of whether the age was appropriate or inappropriate. By all means, let’s push it down to 18 if the evidence suggests there’s no difference across the country in the impact of this age of legalization. We have some important information and research to do that would influence both federal and international communities by establishing our own age.

All five U.S. states, as I indicated, established 21 as the legal access for use. Epidemiologists have found that 9 per cent of those smoking at age 19 or older develop dependency, about 9 per cent of those starting at 19. The dependency rate actually triples under the age of 18, so about 25 per cent of those who start earlier have a higher risk of developing a dependency on cannabis.

The Canadian Paediatric Society made this statement this year.

Cannabis use during adolescence can cause functional and structural changes to the developing brain, leading to [measurable] damage. Marijuana use in this age group is strongly linked to ... dependence and other substance use disorders; the initiation and maintenance of tobacco smoking; an increased presence of mental illness, including depression, anxiety and [even] psychosis; impaired neurological development and cognitive decline; and diminished school performance and lifetime achievement. Rates of acute medical care and hospitalization for younger children who have ingested cannabis [accidentally] are [also] increasing. Ongoing debate concerning cannabis regulation in Canada makes paying close attention to the evidence for its health effects and ensuring that appropriate safeguards are in place, vital public health priorities.

That’s the Canadian Paediatric Society, who is suggesting an older age for legalization.

The Alberta Centre for Injury Control & Research made the following submission to this government. I quote:

Jurisdictions that have legalized the use of recreational as well as medical cannabis have experienced increased rates of injury due to burns, pediatric accidental ingestion. Drivers testing positive for cannabis and alcohol and drugs have a 9 per cent increase where it’s been legalized and drivers testing positive for only THC a 6 per cent increase. Of greatest concern are traffic outcomes. Fatalities substantially increased after legalization in Colorado and Washington, from 49 in 2010 to 94 in 2015, almost a doubling, in Colorado and from 40 to 85, more than doubling, in Washington after legalization. These outcomes suggest that after legalization more people are driving while impaired by cannabis. Alberta can expect to see similar changes in injuries when the new laws take effect.

End of quote. That’s our own Alberta centre for injury prevention.

Here’s an Ipsos poll from across Canada, that was done in April of this year, polling Canadians on what they think about the appropriate age for cannabis. I quote the Ipsos poll: When it comes to age restrictions around buying pot, the polling data found that about 50 per cent of Canadians believe the minimum age should be 21; 5 per cent believe it should be 20; 18 per cent say it should be 19; and 23 per cent suggest that 18 is the right age for legalization. So most Canadians believe that an older age at legalization is appropriate.

That’s the evidence that I hoped to present and to have a robust debate about. As I said, I don’t think we can go back. If we set it at 18, nobody’s going to say in five years, “Oh, we should raise it,” because it will be totally inconsistent with the rest of our adult restrictions. We have some evidence that it’s going to increase injuries the younger the age, both personal injuries and, potentially, public injury. Let’s stand out a little bit in Canada and establish an older age group and actually have something to compare over time with the rest of the provinces and show the evidence within a few years that we were right in setting it higher, or we can relax the standard if the evidence contradicts that. But we can’t go back.

Those are my arguments. I know the minister’s office is now looking at this information, that I was only able to submit in the last 24 hours. I don’t know the extent to which we are all prepared to have the debate, but I think there’s good evidence for us to take a second look at this and make some minor change that will not have a negative impact on almost anything that we do and that potentially has a significant positive impact on the health of adolescents and the health and safety of our communities.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Madam Chair. I’d like to thank the member for your amendment. I know that you have the best interests of Albertans at heart.

We know that the federal government introduced the legalization of cannabis, and one of our government’s major concerns was making sure that we’re keeping cannabis out of the hands of children. That’s why we are going to be ticketing offences for youth under 18 who possess fewer than five grams, much like we do right now with alcohol. This builds on the federal government sanctions in the Criminal Code for possession of five grams or more. Our government set the age of consumption at 18 because it aligns with our age of majority for alcohol and tobacco but also because a substantial number of cannabis users are between the ages of 18 and 21 years old. We would rather have those Albertans access government-regulated cannabis through our government-run online retail system or government-regulated store. This way our kids aren't getting cannabis from their neighbourhood drug dealer. A drug dealer can sell them cannabis laced with other drugs. A drug dealer will also try to push harder and more addictive drugs on their young clients.

That's why we set the age of consumption at 18, something that was supported by the majority of the over 60,000 Albertans that our government surveyed. It was also supported by the Canadian Paediatric Society. Dr. Christine Grant from McMaster University coauthored the Canadian Paediatric Society position paper, and she wrote that young adults frequently experiment with marijuana. By aligning the legal age for cannabis use with that of other legally controlled substances, young adults will have access to a regulated product with a known potency. They'll also be less likely to engage in high-risk illegal activities to access cannabis.

Again, I would like to thank the member for his concerns, his advocacy, and his desire to protect our children. It's a concern that we absolutely all share. However, we will not be accepting this amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A5? The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you. Just to add this to my earlier comments before this amendment, I certainly want to support the Member for Calgary-Mountain View in this amendment. I do believe it is reasonable.

As I expressed earlier, my concerns really have to do with marijuana in the schools. Again, for an adult who is, let's just say, even 21 or older, that's fine. If you want to smoke marijuana, smoke marijuana. You know, even if you think of alcohol. If you're 18 or above, I get it. If you want to consume alcohol, it certainly is your right. It goes back to choices. Sometimes they're poor choices; sometimes they're good choices.

Really my biggest concern here is that there is going to be marijuana in the schools, in the high schools where young people who are 18 years old, in whatever grade they're going to be in, who are going to be legally allowed to carry this marijuana as well as legally allowed to smoke this marijuana as long as it falls within the smoking rules – well, that, to me, puts children at risk, and that's really too much. In regard to 21, you know, the likelihood of somebody being in a high school at the age of 21 is probably very rare. As far as age is concerned, I think that is a reasonable age.

So I would like to stand up and, of course, support the amendment by the Member for Calgary-Mountain View. I thank him for submitting it.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to this amendment? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

4:00

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today to speak to the amendment and to speak in favour of it. I have, as the House knows, spent many years in the education system. I have seen many kids make poor choices. I would speak to both sides of this issue. I've listened. I've heard the issues that were brought up, yet at the end of the day I have to fall on the side of protecting the young people in our society. I believe that there's merit in the comments that were just being made about how you're going to see marijuana introduced into the high schools, and that's very concerning to me.

I have never smoked marijuana myself, but I can say that I have seen the deleterious effects of drug use on many of the kids that I've taught over the years. I know that I've gone and volunteered at the Mustard Seed church on many occasions, and on almost every occasion that I've gone to this church and served food, I've had former students of mine come through the line, all of them with addictions issues. Because I know their lives and because I was with them in grades 10 and 11 and 12 – and sometimes I even knew them in grades 7, 8, and 9 – I can say that in almost every single case it started with smoking marijuana. [interjections] It's the truth. The other day I realized that four of the individuals in my community that were homeless were former students of mine, and it broke my heart. Again, in talking with them, in trying to help them, we sat down and were talking and reminiscing, talking about how they ended up where they ended up, and in every case it started with some poor choices in high school.

I want to thank the member for bringing some statistics into the House. We've had the conversation about the fact that the brain does not stop developing until around the age of 25. When we make decisions about the age here, I understand the arguments about trying to match it with the age for alcohol, but I'm not sure that this substance is the same as alcohol. I think there are some significant differences, so I don't believe that it is unreasonable to consider an age of 21. As a teacher that believed throughout their entire career that we should not be placing students at risk, I would suggest that the age of 21 is a reasonable compromise, maybe not a perfect one. But it recognizes the medical facts, it's a step towards trying to limit access to vulnerable youth in our high schools, and it will have my support.

The Chair: Any further speakers to this amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just wanted to clarify something for the Member for Calgary-West regarding schooling and cannabis. I'd like to point out that in section 90.28 of the proposed legislation under Smoking and Vaping Prohibited it specifically says: "on any hospital property, school property or child care facility property." We are suggesting that it absolutely not be allowed to be smoked on school property. Just to clarify.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other speakers? The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you. But they will be able to smoke on the perimeter, just on the sidewalks outside of school property. Look, I really, truly believe that both sides of this House are on the same page here. I think we all want to protect kids. Like, come on. We all want to protect kids.

You know, I have to talk about some experience here because there were a few moans and groans in regard to we'll call it the gateway drug, marijuana. [interjections] No, no. Let me just speak to this. I'm going to just speak to my experience in dealing with thousands – and I'm not kidding you – of people who have been in addictions. I had a unique opportunity. For two and a half years I worked in what we called the city jail. I got to speak to people who had mental illness issues, who had addictions problems. I was also the only law enforcement officer as part of the Alberta Secretariat for Action on Homelessness, in which I, again, spoke to people who had addictions issues, mental health issues. When I spoke to these people, quite frankly, I took pride in talking to them, getting to know these people. I wanted to know: what was the root cause? What led that person down that particular path of, let's say, addictions in these particular cases?

Now, I never met any person with an addiction that started with heroin. I never met anybody that started with crystal meth. I never met anybody who started with crack cocaine. But what I did meet – and, again, this is just experience talking – were people who started with marijuana, who started with alcohol at a young age. A lot of times as a young person you don't want to let the night end. You want to party all night. Marijuana along with alcohol are depressants. So in order to get that stimulant, what do you do? You go and take ecstasy, or you go and take cocaine, highly addictive substances that lead you down an even worse path.

One thing that people don't know about these drugs – and I'll use cocaine as an example – is that when you get that high, you never achieve that high again, ever. What happens is that all you want to do is try and get that high again, which you never do. It's called the chase. So then you progress to crack cocaine, and then you progress to crystal meth. But in all these cases, sadly – and it really, truly is sad – it all started with marijuana.

Ms Jansen: No. It starts with mental health issues.

Mr. Ellis: You're right. There are mental health issues, a hundred per cent. There are mental health issues. There are addictions issues. You and I don't disagree on that.

But marijuana is not the be-all and end-all. I accept that it's coming. I totally accept that it's coming. I just want to protect the kids, and that's why I believe that this is a very reasonable amendment. With the age at 21 it keeps it away from the kids that are in the schools. It's not going to stop that 18-year-old. Like, if we go back and we have it at the age of 18, that 18-year-old can still go and have it in his or her possession in the school and then step outside of the school property, no different than with smoking. It's still there. But we cannot normalize this for children. We cannot.

I get that young people experiment, that they try. A good friend of mine, the Member for Calgary-Greenway, called me the other day. He said: "Member for Calgary-West, you've got to help me out. I have a good friend of mine whose son went away." I think it was to British Columbia, but where it was in British Columbia is completely irrelevant. The fact is that, while away, he started consuming copious amounts of marijuana, and as he's come back to Calgary, he's experiencing psychological issues, at which point my advice to him was to take him to the doctor to get him treatment.

He does have some mental health issues. I'm not a doctor. I can't say that that's attributed to marijuana, but I'm sure it didn't help. You know, you talk about mental health, and you combine that now with an addiction problem. I think he indicated to his parents that he just could not stop consuming marijuana, that it was just something he had to do or that he felt he had to do.

Look, I think this is, again, a reasonable amendment. The age of 21 just helps to keep it away from the schools and not put children at risk. Therefore, I will stand up again and I'll continue to stand up and continue to support children.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you for the opportunity for me to rise and speak to this important amendment. As my hon. colleague from Calgary-West was mentioning, it's been almost two months. I did call him for help. Obviously, I don't want to share the name and the details and everything about this young child, full of life, you know, an A-grade student, a very good kid from a good family. Everything just fell into the wrong hands. He was dealing with a little bit of mental health issues. He abused this drug way too much.

Then I approached my colleague and said: "You know, I need your help. I need your advice. You have been exposed to these kinds of situations in your previous career as a police officer." He advised me that we take him to a doctor and hospital immediately. His parents ended up doing that. It's been just about three months now, and he still has not recovered from the withdrawal syndrome. The child still has mental health issues. This is the damage that this drug can do at that young age. The child is still suffering from the damage this drug has done to his brain, his mental capacity.

That's all we're saying. Let's rise above and, you know, put the politics aside and just think about, like: what is the purpose of us being here? It is to do the greater good for Albertans and our future generations, the generations who are going to be taking care of us and this province. Let's not make this a political issue. Let's think about it and do what is right to protect our youth.

I think my colleague the Member for Calgary-Mountain View's amendment is very reasonable, and I think we should all support that.

You know, the example I shared, Madam Chair: thousands of those are available. A lot of people are going through that in this province and probably in this country. The only reason I know is because I had to deal with that on a family basis. I can't even imagine what the family is going through. I can't even imagine what the child is going through. He had a bright future, and now his parents have no clue whether he'll be able to even finish university or not, whether he'll be able to even hold a normal job or not, just because the damage was so extensive to his brain that it may not be able to repair itself.

Please give good consideration to this amendment. I hope all my colleagues can support this.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other speakers to amendment A5?

Dr. Swann: Madam Chair, can I just make one final comment?

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: I appreciate the discussion. I know it's difficult to change from the other side once you've got a bill in place and you've already had directions from the minister. My last pitch is that in health behaviour we know that making the easy choice, the healthy choice results in adoption of more healthy behaviours. We know that making the unhealthy choice, the easy choice, increases the risk of unhealthy behaviours. So the question that we're debating today is: at what age are we more likely to get the healthy choice made? I think it's clear that we'll have healthier choices made at the age of 21 for the majority of young people who decide that they don't want to breach the law, because it is against the law if we made that. Most kids will not want to breach the law, and they will wait to make the decision about the use of cannabis a little later than if they are 18.

That's the final comment that I would make, and I appreciate that the government may choose not to follow that. That's kind of a compromise, it seems to me, between the national government and the health organizations that are suggesting we be a little more prudent in reducing the risk of adverse affects at the age of 18.

Thanks, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other speakers to A5?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Bill 28 School Amendment Act, 2017

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to present to you today an amendment to Bill 28.

I'll wait until it is picked up and distributed.

The Chair: You can go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. I speak to my first amendment here on Bill 28. Mr. Smith to move that Bill 28, School Amendment Act, 2017, be amended in section 19 in the proposed section 115(1) by striking out "The Minister may make regulations" and substituting "The Minister may, in consultation with boards, make regulations."

Madam Chair, I would like to first state that this is a good thing to enact this set of professional standards for superintendents and for principals. We have some of the best teachers and principals and superintendents anywhere in the world here in Alberta. Adding an additional layer of accountability allows the education system to ensure that the best people are in these very important positions of leadership overseeing our children.

My concern and the concern that was raised during my stakeholder outreach is that the current wording of this section of the legislation does not explicitly state that the school boards will be consulted, that they'll be consulted with when the superintendent leadership certificate process is being developed. Now, the relevant stakeholders indicated to me that they would be more comfortable if the wording in the bill was changed just slightly, as this amendment that we're speaking to seeks to do, in order to ensure that the school boards are consulted during this process.

Now, I'm sure that the minister would in all likelihood do this, but my stakeholders and the ones that I was talking to have indicated that they would feel more comfortable if this consultation process was written directly into the act itself. I don't think that this changes anything, really, in some ways. I don't believe it will impede any of the outcomes that the government has with this piece of legislation, what it's attempting to do. I believe that it will indeed strengthen this piece of legislation and will help it to achieve what the minister would want to see at the end of the day. I believe that by making this amendment, it is placing at the forefront of this legislation the thoughts of my stakeholders, of the stakeholders of Alberta, that want to see that the minister will indeed consult with school boards as they begin to put forward these standards for professional conduct.

I would ask this House to consider this amendment and to vote in favour of this amendment. Thank you very much.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A1? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I rise to speak in favour of this amendment. You know, one of the questions and the concerns that I have with this bill is the substantial authority that it grants to the minister. Much of the legislation as written strengthens the power of the minister or the ministry. Almost every amendment as we go through the bill allocates further authority, discretion, and power to the minister, and in parts that seems to be the only thing that this legislation does.

Now, in many cases that may very well be appropriate. It clarifies certain things and allows the minister some discretion and latitude to do what the ministry feels is necessary and to do so efficiently. But the question I have, really, actually, ultimately comes to: what exactly is the role of school boards? The powers of school boards have been eroded over the last number of decades, dating back to the changes in removing taxation authority from school boards, and gradually over time authority has been taken away. I think, especially when we're dealing with something like education, where the roles of parents and students and the unique characteristics of a given community are different around the province, it's very important that we have that local representation in some form or fashion.

My hope would be that in making regulations, the minister, when making those regulations, would consult anyway with school boards. I can only assume that the minister would tell us in fact what his intention would be, but we can never trust, unfortunately, future ministers. While I do trust this minister, I would like to trust but also verify that that is in fact the case. So really what this amendment does is that it seeks to require the minister, then, to consult with school boards. Now, that consultation doesn't need to be an onerous or long process. It could simply be a phone call with the school board. One would hope that that's something that the minister would do. There are also organizations that represent school boards, so it certainly would not be a requirement for the minister to make 61 phone calls. I believe that's the number of school boards in the province, similar if it's not exactly 61.

There are many opportunities. I know that the minister already interacts with the school board associations, public and separate and charter and private and francophone as well. I'm sure that it is something the minister is already doing. I know that that's something that he and his ministry do. They should just, I would hope, capture what is already happening within the ministry and certainly should happen going forward to make sure that school boards are always consulted on changes that impact them, ultimately because those changes would impact students, and that's really the entire objective here, to make sure that students get a good education throughout our province.

I do stand in support of this amendment and would encourage all my legislative colleagues to do the same. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Madam Chair. I don't believe that this amendment is necessary. I've looked at the documents that have been produced before this legislation was proposed, and it's been obvious to me that the minister has already consulted widely as he sought to make amendments to the School Act. Maybe I should go and list all the people that he has consulted with. I think that one of the groups that is very important to note is the superintendents themselves, who have their own organization. Superintendents also are teachers, so there is already a teaching association, the ATA, that the minister consults widely.

I'm just going to read for the record the people who have been consulted: the Fédération des conseils scolaires francophones de l'Alberta, the Council of Catholic School Superintendents of Alberta, the association of Alberta charter schools, the Association of Independent Schools and Colleges in Alberta, Indigenous and Northern Affairs, Rupertsland Institute, the Alberta Teachers' Association, Confederacy of Treaty Six, Treaty 8 First Nations, Blackfoot Confederacy, Tsuut'ina, Stoney Nakoda, Strategic Alliance for Alberta Students with Learning Challenges, Fédération des parents francophones de l'Alberta.

I think that this demonstrates that the minister, as he proposes amendments and seeks to make our schools even better than they are, always consults. Suggesting that the minister may consult with school boards in order to make regulations on superintendents' qualifications is not necessary.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today to move an amendment to Bill 28, School Amendment Act, 2017. I will wait for the amendment to be distributed before I continue my remarks.

The Chair: This will be amendment A2.

You can go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. My amendment reads: Mr. Smith to move that Bill 28, School Amendment Act, 2017, be amended in section 8(c) in the proposed section 51(3.1) (a) by striking out “boards” wherever it occurs and substituting “boards or operators of private schools” and (b) by adding “with any decisions concerning the sharing of costs to be decided by the boards or operators of private schools that are involved in the transportation arrangement” after “specific transportation arrangements.”

Madam Chair, I think everyone in this House agrees with the government that equity of access to education is extremely important and something to be sought after. Every student in Alberta, regardless of where they live or what school they attend, should have the capacity to be transported to their school of choice at a reasonable cost. Overall, we support transportation co-operation as long as local boards are not being forced against their will to make decisions which do not fit the needs of their local community. Working with these boards is extremely important.

No one wants to see empty buses driving past waiting kids, and no one wants to see four buses driving down the same road every day when one bus could transport all of the children, which is why we think that private schools, where it makes sense at the local level, should be included in the transportation co-operation arrangements the minister is looking to implement. These kids are, after all, Alberta students, and that is not to suggest that we think these kids and their parents should be given free transportation. They obviously need to pay their fair share, just like anyone else.

That portion is addressed in the latter portion of this amendment, which seeks to specify that decisions regarding the cost sharing of the school transportation arrangement, which will need to be negotiated by school boards and/or private school operators, should be left to local decision-makers. These boards and these operators are best positioned to make decisions on behalf of their communities, and they are the most connected to the local issues and to the nuances that they face.

I think that this amendment seeks to strengthen Bill 28, and I believe it promotes additional transportation co-operation, which should make busing more affordable for parents across Alberta. That is something I think, I hope, I believe that we can all agree on.

So I would encourage everyone in this Assembly to support this amendment. Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Just a reminder, hon. members, that we don't use surnames in this House. We always use constituency names even when reading or quoting. We've had a lot of that going on lately.

Mr. Mason: Even your own name.

The Chair: Even your own name.

Are there any further comments on amendment A2? Calgary-East.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Madam Chair. While I, you know, thank the member for bringing this amendment forward and the consideration of making sure that busing is affordable for all students in the province, currently the transportation regulation within the School Act doesn't cover or apply to private schools. Private schools are wholly their own thing. We also, in coming up with this bill, haven't consulted with private schools or private school boards. As such, we don't feel comfortable at this time accepting this amendment.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to A2?

The Chair: Are there further questions, comments, or amendments? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. Well, let's see if the third time is lucky here. I would move that Bill 28, School Amendment Act, 2017, be amended in section 10 in the proposed section 78.1 (a) in subsection (1) by striking out “, in accordance with principles set out by the Minister by order” and (b) by striking out subsection (2).

I have the amendment here. I will wait before I deliver my comments.

The Chair: This will be amendment A3.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. I know that I have said this before during the debate on this bill, but again I am concerned and I believe this side of the House is concerned that this legislation consolidates a great deal of power within the office of the Minister of Education. This is not a slight against this minister or any particular minister. Our caucus just does not agree that the centralization, or the centralizing of power, within the office of any minister at the expense of local decision-making is a wise course of action.

I would also like to state that introducing a trustee code of conduct is a good idea. It is my understanding that many boards already have these codes of conduct. School board trustees are elected officials, and introducing increased accountability for elected officials is always something that I and this party will support. However, the current wording of this bill along with the materials that the minister's staff distributed at the technical briefing indicate that the minister will have the power to include mandatory elements in the trustee code of conduct. We do not agree that this is the best approach to developing a document which will meet the needs of all of the affected parties in the various school boards across this province. This code of conduct, in our opinion, should be developed in a co-operative climate which allows local boards the flexibility to develop a code of conduct which works for them.

That is not to say that the minister should not have oversight or input. We just believe that if the minister has the power to implement mandatory elements that local boards may not want, it poisons the process from the outset by providing the minister with all of the power, and this leaves school boards at the mercy of the minister of the day, whoever that may be. We just don't think that this is the best approach to create the best possible trustee code of conduct.

It is important that all boards across Alberta get this right as this is a very positive step for the education system, and this is why I believe that moving this amendment, which was born out of stakeholder feedback, will make this a better bill. It's important to allow local decision-making and local school boards to be the authors of their codes of conduct. They take it very seriously. Many already have them. We do not believe that it is necessary for any minister to have the power to mandate. To have oversight, to have input: absolutely. To mandate: we believe that takes the power of the minister too far.

So it would be our desire that this House and this Assembly would support this amendment. Thank you very much.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A3? The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Madam Chair, and certainly I would thank the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon as well for his efforts here. In regard to the code of conduct provision here in Bill 28, I kind of went back and forth on it. Of course, these are democratically elected people, and it's important to have that autonomy built into the elected officials.

That being said, there was quite a strong provision put into the new Municipal Government Act – the MGA I think it's called – that had a code of conduct built into it for councillors and so forth, so, you know, to align us with that and the municipal level of government that trustees and councillors are a part of, I went along with the idea of having this.

A code of conduct, of course, doesn't include a provision for some kind of recall or, you know, other members voting somebody else off the board. I think that that's a line that should not be crossed because these are elected officials, and we can't have other elected officials somehow sanctioning, removing other elected officials. That's not on.

Certainly, this just lays out the groundwork for consulting with the various school board associations and individual school boards. You know, it opens submissions as to what the code of conduct would look like. So once we get that information, we put it together, and away we go. I mean, I have no sort of preconception about how or what might be included in such codes of conduct, but I'm kind of responding to surprisingly very favourable feedback of individual school boards and various school board associations actually wanting this, right? That's as simple as that.

I appreciate the member's interest in this, and, you know, we can watch it and help to shape it as it moves forward, building a code of conduct for trustees here in the province of Alberta. Thanks.

So I would reject this as it's written. Thank you.

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 26 and Bill 28. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? Say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Any opposed? So ordered.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I want to thank the opposition in particular for the progress that we've made tonight and for their contributions to the debate.

I want to indicate that pursuant to Government Motion 33 I wish to advise the House that we will not have an evening sitting tonight.

With that, Madam Speaker, I will move that we adjourn the Assembly until 9 o'clock tomorrow morning.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

9 a.m.

Thursday, November 30, 2017

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

Prayers

The Acting Speaker: Good morning.

Let us each reflect and pray in our own way. May each member of this Legislature maintain a strong and abiding sense of the great responsibility laid upon us. Give us a deep and thorough understanding of the needs of the people we serve. Help us to use this power wisely and well. May we be inspired to reach decisions which establish and maintain a land of prosperity and decency where freedom prevails and where justice rules. Amen.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 30

An Act to Protect the Health and Well-being of Working Albertans

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour and minister responsible for democratic renewal.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It is a pleasure to be able to rise to speak to second reading of this important legislation. It was a very good day for Alberta workers when the Assembly passed the Fair and Family-friendly Workplaces Act during the spring session of this past year. That act finally brought Alberta's 30-year-old labour relations and employment standards codes into the 21st century and in line with most of the country. Albertans will no longer lose their jobs if they get sick, if a child needs care, or if they have a death in the family. Workers will no longer have to wait a year to be able to take unpaid leaves or get full use out of employment insurance. But there's still more work to do. Other workers' rights need to be protected in today's workplaces, and that is where Bill 30 comes in.

Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to rise to move Bill 30, An Act to Protect the Health and Well-being of Working Albertans, for second reading.

Alberta's Occupational Health and Safety Act is important legislation. It sets the minimum standards for workplace health and safety and outlines the roles and responsibilities of all work-site parties to keep workers healthy and safe. The OHS Act came into effect in 1976. That was 41 years ago, before Wayne Gretzky was a rookie, before the Internet and cellphones, and two years before the Syncrude mine opened. The OHS Act has not had a comprehensive review since then, but over the last 41 years technology and social growth have changed our workplaces. They are much more diverse. There is more shift work, contract work, and more people working from home. The OHS Act must reflect these realities.

Then there's the Workers' Compensation Act. The last comprehensive review of that act was more than 15 years ago. Kids born back then are in senior high today and are starting to think about their career options. Our kids deserve to graduate into workplaces that are keeping them healthy and safe, and that should apply to all workers here and now. They have every right to expect that they will go home safely at the end of the workday. If people are injured or get sick on the job, they have a right to get help and get well and get back to work. They have the right to be treated with basic human respect, and that's what Bill 30 will accomplish. It will update both the OHS Act and WCB act to respect workers' rights to a healthy and safe workplace, to proper care and attention for job-related injury and illness, and to be treated with respect, Madam Speaker.

I'm going to speak briefly about Bill 30 and how it will update each of these two long-standing acts to meet these rights, starting with the OHS Act. Hard-working Albertans know that health and safety can affect their lives and the lives of their colleagues and families. These Albertans work at heights of over 15 storeys. They work with metals heated to more than a thousand degrees Celsius. They work with complex machinery and hazardous materials. They work at night, in severe weather, and under difficult circumstances every single day. No matter where people work or what work they do, every single one of these Albertans should be able to go home healthy and safe at the end of the day.

Sadly, last year there were more than 44,000 workers who were injured on the job, and 144 workers never made it home. Our most recent full set of data is from 2015. In that year Alberta was number 2 in the country for the number of workplace fatalities per million working population, and that's an unfortunate record, Madam Speaker. It's a record that Bill 30 is seeking to change. Workplace trauma and tragedies can change survivors' lives forever. They have a lasting effect on families, friends, communities, co-workers, and employers, and what makes workplace incidents even more tragic is that even if they are survived, almost all of them are preventable. They can be prevented with proper precautions, public awareness, training, and effective enforcement of legislation, legislation that is up to date with modern workplaces and practices.

Bill 30 will create a responsive system that can adapt to changing hazards, to better prevent illnesses, injuries, and to support a worker's return to work. Bill 30 does this first by clarifying the roles and responsibilities of everyone in the workplace, employer and worker alike, to ensure everyone's health and safety, each to the extent of their authority and control.

Bill 30 enshrines workers' rights: the right to know about workplace hazards, the right to participate in health and safety through workplace health and safety committees, and the right to refuse unsafe work. The bill would also ensure that workers have the ability to exercise their rights and fulfill their duties under the law without fear of reprisal or threat of reprisal.

In addition, the bill works to ensure our workplaces are free from violence and harassment because workplace violence and harassment are unacceptable, and we all have a role to play in building a safe and respectful workplace.

Bill 30 will also require that OHS laws be reviewed every five years to keep them relevant as workplaces continue to change.

All of these changes do more than bring occupational health and safety laws into the present. They also bring Alberta workplace rights and protections on par with the rest of Canada. That will make it easier and cheaper for employers to do business across the country.

Madam Speaker, a strong system of workplace health and safety programs saves lives, and it also helps businesses save money. When employees feel protected and respected, morale goes up, both performance and profitability increase, and that contributes to a strong economy because our economy does not exist without workers. This legislation protects our workers. Bill 30 will make it mandatory to promote a strong health and safety culture in our workplaces. As legislators we have an obligation to make it happen.

Bill 30 deals with OHS and WCB in the same legislation because the two are so closely related. When workers are injured on the job, the result is often a WCB claim. In 2016 the WCB accepted more than 44,000 claims. Of those, WCB accepted 144 fatality claims, and in 2015 Alberta had the fourth-highest total number of claims for injuries that resulted in lost time. Still, if a worker does get injured on the job or develops a work-related illness, then the Workers' Compensation Board is supposed to provide the medical and financial supports that person needs to return to work.

Albertans deserve a WCB system that is compassionate, accessible, fair, and easy to navigate. That's hard to do with legislation that had its last comprehensive review more than 15 years ago. Bill 30 makes changes to the WCB Act that will bring workers' compensation into the present and in line with the rest of Canada. These changes will improve existing benefits for surviving spouses and children and for injured workers' retirements. Injured workers will have more choice in selecting health professionals. Employers will continue to provide health benefit programs to injured workers under existing coverage for one year, and while compensation decisions are under review and appeal, employers and workers will be able to apply for interim relief.

Bill 30 also introduces new provisions: presumptive coverage for first responders, which can now be expanded to occupations like those recommended by the panel, correctional officers and emergency medical dispatchers. Coverage for psychological injuries, including posttraumatic stress disorder, will now be more easily available to all occupations.

Employers will have a new obligation to return workers to the job who have suffered work-related injuries and illnesses.

A new independent fair practices office will let people raise concerns and will monitor trends in the workers' compensation system.

The current WCB act caps maximum insurable earnings at $98,700 per year. Bill 30 will remove that cap, and workers will get fair compensation at 90 per cent of their earnings.

With Bill 30 workers will see a WCB system that treats them as people instead of a number, that helps them get back to work, and makes sure that they can take care of their families.

Employers will see a WCB system that is effective, sustainable, and has affordable premiums. In fact, Madam Speaker, yesterday the WCB announced the average premium rate will not increase for 2018.

Madam Speaker, the changes in Bill 30 to both the OHS and WCB acts are long overdue and deserve our full support. They are based on thorough reviews and extensive public input. They will better protect workers from injury and illness and also will better support workers if they do get hurt on the job. These changes and Alberta's workers deserve our full support.

I look very much forward to the debate on Bill 30. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Just a reminder to all members of the House, we are currently in second reading, so if we could just make sure we keep the volume down so those speakers can be heard.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to Bill 30? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you. Early morning. It's wonderful.

I actually want to preface my remarks by quoting one of the favourite writers of the NDP, Graham Thomson. This was in an article from the 27th of November, so I hadn't actually even had a chance to look at this, so somehow he must have gotten an inside track on this. I'll just quote to you one of the paragraphs that talks about this. He says:

The title of Bill 30 – An Act to Protect the Health and Well-Being of Working Albertans – says it all. This bill couldn't be more New Democratic if it was printed on union-made paper and included a picture of Tommy Douglas.

Now, after reading that, Madam Speaker, you can understand that on this side of the House we were a little nervous about this bill coming forward, so I preface my remarks with that little trepidation.

I rise in this House today to speak to Bill 30, An Act to Protect the Health and Well-being of Working Albertans. This bill intends to repeal and rewrite the existing Occupational Health and Safety Act and amend the Workers' Compensation Act in a single omnibus bill. As I understand it, the purpose of this bill is to modernize our current OH and S and WCB acts to address various gaps in the legislation that have come to light since they were last reviewed over 16 years ago, and I applaud the government in its initiatives to take these steps in an attempt to make our job sites and places of business safer for employers and employees. Disruptive technologies and innovations have changed the way we do work and do business, so a review was in order.

With that said, this bill includes a number of provisions that will have minor and in some cases massive unintended consequences, something this government seems to be famous for. As we review this bill, we must account for one overarching and fundamental question: how can we make sure Albertans' small, medium, and large businesses continue to operate efficiently while making a maximum effort to maintain the safety of our most valuable resource, the men and women of Alberta's workforce?

Madam Speaker, before my tenure as a member of this distinguished House I was in private business for 20 years, and during that time I learned that you can't put a price tag on sending each worker home safe to their families each and every day. To me these men and women weren't employees; they were mothers and fathers, husbands and wives, sisters, brothers, and, most importantly, my friends. Their well-being was paramount, and without them the business could not have survived. We created a symbiotic relationship that helped all parties.

Based upon the hostile business environment this government has produced, I would venture to say that there are few members on that side who have actually signed the front of a cheque. It's a privilege that is born of hard work and sacrifice. But from personal experience, I can say that it becomes increasingly difficult every time new unnecessary regulations are implemented to keep that symbiotic relationship between employer and employees going.

When I think of red tape as it relates to Bill 30, the implementation of joint work-site health and safety committees and representatives immediately comes to mind. In the previous OH and S Act these committees were only established at the recommendation of the minister. Now they're required for all workplaces with 20 or more employees. It is unclear to me why the government would require such a committee when they have been tested in other provinces and proven to be expensive, ineffective, and, worst of all, fail to make any workplace measurably safer.

In 2004 Just Labour published a paper by Aleck Ostry and Annalee Yassi that explained joint health and safety committees in British Columbia. It reads:

Mandatory Joint Health and Safety Committees for workplaces with 20 or more employees were legislated in BC in 1977. Nonetheless, despite the long-term existence of JCS, in the BC healthcare sector in 1998 the injury rate was 54% higher than the average rate for all workers in BC. And, from 1997 to 1999, direct claims costs were $180 million in BC healthcare.

Now, it's interesting that the minister likes to quote how long ago these acts were changed. In fact, I'm looking forward to finding out which movies were in the '80s here soon. This work that was done in B.C. was done back in 1977, so for them to say that we're bringing it up to where we need to be, unfortunately it's not true. This has been around since 1977 in B.C.

In principle I see the value of these committees as they attempt to engage workers in decisions pertaining to their health and safety, but industry doesn't work in principle; it works in practice. In practice they fail to meet their mandate of reducing workplace accidents and injury. In fact, stakeholders I spoke to on joint committees said that they actually reduce safety because the time and resources put into forming, training, and maintaining these committees takes away from resources needed to buy new safety equipment, conduct training, and inspect the job sites for real dangers.

They also take the burden of care away from everyone on the work site and place it on a committee. This decreases the overall safety of a work site rather than enhancing it. What I mean by this is that these committees meet and talk about safety when they could actually be out on the job site working to improve safety measures. The cost of these JCs cannot be discounted. [interjections]

Now, I know that the members on the other side are laughing about the safety of Albertans, but I can tell you that on this side of the House we do not laugh about the safety of Albertans. [interjections]

The Acting Speaker: You can tell it's Thursday. Can we please respect each other while each other is speaking? We are in second reading. If we could please let the speaker speak. You have times to rebut if you choose to, but for now we'll just listen to the speaker.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Safety measures sure can be expensive, and joint committees are no exception. All training for committee members is required by this bill to be covered by the employer. Workplace training for employees is usually covered at the expense of the employer, primarily because the knowledge and skills acquired will go to the long-term benefit of the business. However, committee members are entitled to an annual maximum of 16 hours of training at the expense of the employer for a committee that will only reduce workplace efficiency and fail to improve the safety of the workers.

Furthermore, the cost of these courses has not been determined, nor has the amount of travel required to attend them. Who will offer the courses? Will it be only OH and S, or will there be third-party providers who will be allowed to offer these courses? If just OH and S offers the courses, then I would say that this is going to bring a lot of money into the government coffers. What's stopping the government from increasing the cost of these safety courses, like they have done with the certification courses for EMTs? There are some large companies that would be able to absorb the cost for training committee members; however, small and medium-sized businesses are at a distinct disadvantage, and trying to estimate the overall expense to an employer is unrealistic.

While this bill contains positive elements, we are concerned that the sweeping and overly ambitious changes to the Workers' Compensation Act will make the system unsustainable. Jeopardizing a positive employment environment is certainly not in the best interests of Alberta workers.

Actuarial firm Eckler, retained by this government, estimated that the additional cost for WCB to implement the changes outlined in this bill will be $94 million annually; however, this is hard to believe given the sweeping changes, and an independent actuary has not crunched the numbers.

One area of particular concern is the government's decision to remove the maximum insurable earnings cap of $98,720.20 per year and increase the minimum permanent total disability payments from $900 per month to $1,640.90 per month. This cap allowed WCB to make cost projections based on average annual claims and average payouts; however, without a cap a person making hundreds of thousands of dollars or even millions of dollars would be eligible for massive payouts, and projecting these figures would be nearly impossible. Undoubtedly, premiums would rise and only further increase the burden on employers to cover the difference, especially small and medium-sized businesses. This is most certainly another unintended consequence that this government did not think about.

But it's not all doom and gloom, Madam Speaker. This bill does a good job of outlining the purpose of the OH and S Act and specifically protects a worker's right to comply with the act without fear of reprisal from employers. The current OH and S Act fails to clearly outline its intent whereas Bill 30 states that the purpose is to promote health, safety, and well-being of workers and prevent workplace incidents, illness, injuries, and disease. Bill 30 also includes a worker's right to know about dangerous or unsafe work hazards. This provision is not enshrined in the current OH and S Act. The benefit here is that workers are given an opportunity to be involved in decisions pertaining to workplace safety and OH and S practices.

Under this new legislation all OH and S claim appeals are heard by the Labour Relations Board rather than the existing Occupational Health and Safety Council. The reason given for this was that the board had more resources to deal with appeals than the existing council and can expedite cases quicker. Under the current act all OH and S appeals are handled by the Occupational Health and Safety Council. The council was comprised of industrial personnel. Now the Labour Relations Board will deal with these appeals, putting decisions in the hands of bureaucrats who have little or no industry experience.

We applaud the protection of worker safety but ask for empirical evidence for the change in wording. What is the difference between a right to refuse unsafe work practices versus a duty to refuse them? While Bill 30 removes the burden of proof for WCB claims, the onus is on the employer to prove that an injury was caused by other factors unrelated to the workplace.

Now, it has a section in there that talks about a fair practices office. This is quite a deviation from the way that we did things before. This provides an omnibus-type role for the workers' compensation system where workers and employers can raise their concerns about board process, administration fairness, and conduct code breaches. Fair practices offices have been established in other provinces, like B.C. They are seen as an obstacle to getting a claim addressed, and this is a concern that we have. What data has the government reviewed that indicates there was a need for a fair practices office?

Now, Madam Speaker, I have had the opportunity of being able to look through this bill. It's 150 pages. It is an omnibus bill. They have completely rewritten the Occupational Health and Safety Act, and they have revised the Workers' Compensation Act, and once again I applaud their efforts. The problem is that this government is notorious for the unintended consequences, and I have had very few short days to be able to consult with stakeholders, whether they be businesses, business owners, supervisors, stakeholders, labour organizations. The concerns that I hear from these stakeholders are that this government did not take into consideration those unintended consequences in their consultation process. With that, the problem with this bill – in fact, I imagine this bill will probably be rammed through this House within a week. A 150-page bill rammed through this House in a week. It's deplorable, what they're trying to do.

I look forward to the opportunity of being able to speak many times to this bill and hope that we have the opportunity to be able to bring forward some reasoned amendments that will allow this bill to be less bad.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to move an amendment to Bill 30, An Act to Protect the Health and Well-being of Working Albertans. I have the requisite number of copies for the Clerk and member distribution.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, if you can just wait until I have the originals, please.

Mr. Gotfried: I will. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, your amendment will be referred to as REF1. Please continue.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd like to move that the motion for second reading of Bill 30, An Act to Protect the Health and Well-being of Working Albertans, be amended by deleting all of the words after "that" and substituting the following: Bill 30, An Act to Protect the Health and Well-being of Working Albertans, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred . . . [interjections]

The Acting Speaker: Members, this is now the third time I've had to ask you to respect the speakers.

Hon. member, please continue.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'll start again:

Bill 30, An Act to Protect the Health and Well-being of Working Albertans, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

Madam Speaker, once again, here we are in the dying days of session, and the government introduces an extremely large – some might say overarching; others might even say overreaching – omnibus piece of legislation. As a PDF document this bill is 208 pages long, and here we are just beginning to talk about it, appropriately address it, and consult with constituents. We have a weekend ahead of us to do so, with just five days left in our session schedule.

This bill introduces sweeping changes to both the workers' compensation and the occupational health and safety systems in Alberta. These changes impact virtually every single person and business across this province. The impact will be extremely far reaching, and therefore any changes need to be considered carefully and extensively before they are introduced. And, yes, we are all interested in safe and healthy workplaces, all of us.

Taking the time to diligently review, consult, and study huge pieces of legislation like this should not be treated with hostility or derision by this government or the members opposite. We are, after all, all here to put forward the best possible legislation to advance the best interests of Albertans and by extension Alberta's employers, who contribute to the vibrancy, resiliency, and health of our communities and the economy.

If improving a piece of legislation means that it ends up being addressed in a more detailed manner in committee and then passed a few months hence with potential improvements through consultation, albeit slightly later than this government might have originally intended, truly, what difference will that make if the final legislation better meets the needs of Albertans? Strengthening the legislation should be the key objective of debate in this House, and there is no better way to strengthen legislation, particularly of this nature and depth, than by sending it to a focused, all-party committee for scrutiny, improvement, and recommendations. Sending it to a committee allows for robust discussion amongst all parties, including those not on the committee, who are welcome to participate at any time.

What we have here is a bill drafted by the government, perhaps for the government but really for all Albertans, which they may intend to push down the throats of Albertans, perhaps, in just five sitting days. Madam Speaker, I think Albertans deserve more diligence. Sending it to committee allows for an extremely thorough stakeholder consultation process. We've seen that before. That process is far superior to the process which occurred prior to the introduction of this bill because it would allow for all parties in this Assembly and all Albertans at large to step forward and bring forward the stakeholders that they feel are relevant, not just those consulted to this point. Forcing this legislation through allows the government to avoid possibly talking to people outside of their traditional sphere, big labour, perhaps, while consulting thoroughly with their friends. Again, Albertans deserve better.

Sending a piece of legislation to committee is all about careful, cautious, thorough, and robust consideration of legislation before it is passed into law. Unfortunately, in the last two and a half years the only time a committee has been used to study legislation in this House in order to improve it is when the government backbenchers brought forward unpopular and possibly unnecessary private members' bills which the government needed to deflect negative attention from. Madam Speaker, I've sat on that committee, and we've done a lot of consultation. Some of it has resulted in some great input, but it's certainly informed us as we've gone through the process, and I think that's a valuable exercise.

This would be an excellent opportunity to demonstrate that this government is willing to use the time-honoured nonpartisan committee process where it actually makes sense to do so, to use that committee to do good to bring forth better legislation and to inform this Assembly on how we can achieve that. Workplace safety should be an issue that is not politicized but fully and comprehensively addressed for the betterment of all Albertans. Every Albertan deserves the right to come to work and expect a safe environment so they're able to go home to their families each and every night. No one on any side of this House would ever debate that primary objective. The government can prove that they have no interest in politicizing this issue nor in avoiding the impact, feedback, and concerns of Albertans at large, by sending it to committee. At that stage, a multitude of presenters and stakeholders, both individual and organizational, can be brought into the process to discuss how this legislation will actually impact everyday Albertans and what it will cost Alberta businesses and business owners, both on the employee and employer sides.

Further, Madam Speaker, this government has an abysmal track record when it comes to unintended consequences with respect to various pieces of legislation, but I do not have time today to list all of them. Suffice it to say that it includes Bill 6, Bill 17, and many others. In many of these instances bills have been introduced and end up doing the exact opposite of what they were intended to do, with Bill 1, An Act to Reduce School Fees, being the most glaring example. If in that case, along with many other examples I could cite, the government would have been more considerate, respectful in the introduction of far-reaching legislation and taken the time to actually listen to all stakeholders, they may have been able to prevent the fallout that we continue to see to this day, the unintended consequences that are rife.

There's no way that the government can sit here and pretend that this bill is perfect. In fact, that's why we're here. That's why we debate. That's why we amend. That's why we address legislation. Don't pretend that there are no flaws in this. Madam Speaker, we have an opportunity here to let a committee, an all-party committee, address that and pull in the stakeholders that we need.

Our caucus and the stakeholders that we've spoken to have a number of concerns with the bill as it currently stands, including but not limited to the joint committee training program protocol, the joint committee's cost to employers, the actual effectiveness of the joint committee, the transferring of OHS appeals from the OHS Council to the Labour Relations Board, the expanded authority of OHS officers, the implementation of a new fair practices office, and how the effectiveness of that fair practices office will be measured.

I'm just beginning. That's just the beginning. It's 208 pages long. We're taking time to go through it, and we're talking to many stakeholders now. I think going to committee would allow all of us to do that in a way that actually reflects the needs and the priorities of all Albertans and Alberta employers. I'm sure my hon. colleagues will be able to elaborate further on these points in due course, and I'm sure we will.

But this bill, Madam Speaker, has its issues and deserves greater attention and scrutiny, which can be brought to it via an all-party committee, the Economic Future Committee in this case, which again brings me back to my original point. This legislation has an extremely wide-ranging and far-reaching impact on virtually every single business and person in this province. The Alberta Chambers of Commerce, a well-respected advocacy group which represents businesses in every single riding in this province, has stated that they would like the government to send this bill to committee for further review and analysis. They state, "Taking this step will help identify how employers and employees can best adjust to changes introduced with the new legislation, which are intended to prevent illness and injury in the workplace." Again, no equivocation with respect to what the objectives are. I couldn't agree more with them.

The bill is one of the most far-reaching, perhaps overreaching pieces of legislation we have seen in this session. Both employers and employees need to be allowed the time to properly understand and appreciate how this affects them, what it costs them, how it will impact them, and the possibility of unintended consequences with respect to and as a result of this bill. The government might think they can boil this bill down to a couple of quick talking points, a press conference, and have it just breeze through this Assembly with nary a concern – maybe, invoking past tactics, we might even hear some cult movie references – but that is just not the case. [interjection] Beetlejuice, indeed. Albertans deserve better, Madam Speaker.

This bill affects virtually every single employer in this province and virtually every single employee in Alberta. That cannot be overstated. Committee is a perfect place to thoroughly address those concerns. To allow all impacted stakeholders the opportunity to come before that committee and share their concerns, yes, an opportunity for input, consultation, and engagement of those most affected: a novel idea. Is that too much to ask? Madam Speaker, we need to slow down this process, take the time, listen to Albertans – the Alberta Chambers of Commerce, Keep Alberta Working, CFIB, employer and employee associations, unions, private citizens, and more – and do the right thing by Albertans and send Bill 30 to committee.

I would encourage all members to vote in favour of this referral amendment so that we can do the right things on behalf of our constituents. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to the referral amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm not going to spend too much time talking about the referral amendment because I think we need to get it off the table as quickly as possible, but I will say that I find this amendment – we're talking about the amendment, right? [interjections] Okay. You had a puzzled look on your face.

I think this referral amendment is actually insulting to all working Albertans, frankly, because a lot of consultation was done on this. I think they need to accept the fact. What I find insulting about this is that they want to delay safety, they want to delay benefits, and they want to delay solutions that other workers in other provinces have had for many, many years. This is just another example of what they call the Alberta advantage, which is lax labour laws and low benefits and low wages. We're not working on that. We're working on the Alberta advancement, Madam Speaker. If they had their way, they would delay this for another four decades. Four decades. Come on. Alberta workers deserve better.

As I said, I don't want to spend a lot of time on this, but I won't be supporting this at all. We need to move forward. Let's discuss the bill, and let's move forward. Let's protect our workers. There are a lot of great things in here. Actually, the speaker prior to the amendment acknowledged that there are some very positive things in here that they can agree with. We all agree with it, and all Albertans agree with it. Let's move on, let's not support this, and let's pass this bill.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

9:40

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd like to ask the member – I'm very interested in his perspective on this – what statistics he has to prove that the other legislation in the other provinces actually contributed to greater safety for employees. You know, we should be focusing on objectives and outcomes when we're talking about workplace safety. We should be talking about the number of incidents. We should be talking about the number of accidents. What have you got to prove that? I'm interested very, very much, and I think it speaks to my amendment, in that we need to know these numbers, we need to understand, and we need to talk to stakeholders about how this is going to improve and help them. We also have to understand the costs of achieving that and actually the results we're going to get from it.

So I'm very interested to hear where your statistics are from, and I'd be very interested to understand what you've compared it to and to see what kind of outcomes you expect with this and how you can give us more information that we might receive from stakeholders if we were to do more consultation.

Mr. Coolahan: Well, one statistic, Madam Speaker, is the fact that we understand that for every dollar spent on safety, three dollars are saved by not having people out of work.

Mr. Gotfried: That's from where?

Mr. Coolahan: That was from an independent actuary cited by the speaker from . . .

Mr. Rosendahl: Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Coolahan: That place.

It is also my understanding that Alberta has the highest incidence of deaths on the job. There are your statistics, and that's why we need to move forward on this.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Yes. I guess I was listening to the Member for Calgary-Klein talk. He said that it was insulting to workers to send this to committee to be looked at and have more consultation. Now, he also said that this is delaying safety and delaying benefits. But we're sitting here on November 30. This session started on October 30. Now they bring this 200-page document to us, in the last few days of this session, when they could have brought it forward at the beginning of the session. We could have sent it to committee, we could have looked at it in committee, and we could be sitting here discussing a far better document, that's had more consultation. As it is, they want to get up, and they want to talk about a delay to send us to committee to have more work and to have more consultation.

Now, they said here that they actually had eight round-table discussions. Eight. Wow. This is over a nine-week period. Madam Speaker, I think this government has spent much more time on bills that are much smaller. I bet you they spent much more time and money on the time change bill, and now they're sitting here talking that this is going to delay something.

Well, Madam Speaker, we had an instance last night in a committee where the members in the committee didn't want to spend two hours to listen to people present to them. They turned down an opportunity to listen to stakeholder groups. Two hours. I guess I can see why they don't want this to go to committee because they don't want to do any work in committee. They want to do as little as possible in committee. I guess that's why they don't want this to go to committee. I guess this is all making sense now.

So when we hear them talking about how this is something about delaying something, I mean, obviously they just don't want to do it. A nine-week period. This bill is huge, it's far reaching, it takes into consideration things that haven't been changed in 15 years. They've done all this consultation, eight round-table discussions in a nine-week period, and they can't send this to committee, presumably, I guess, because they don't want to do any work in committee. Last night they couldn't find two hours in the next few months to talk to stakeholders.

Madam Speaker, I just don't understand. They actually said that they had 1,300 . . .

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Any other members wishing to speak to the referral? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. A little bit of a coffee incident here, but I imagine we'll be fine.

Here's my question or my concern that I have, not so much with the specifics of the bill because it's such a large piece of legislation. The reason I'm going to speak in favour of the referral motion is not because I question the overall concept of updating critically important legislation with the objective of protecting workers in this province. I would think, I would hope that all members of this House would agree that it is far overdue to update especially the Workers' Compensation Board legislation. It's been an organization that has had its great challenges. I'm sure all of us have many constituents who bring the struggles that they face with workers' compensation to our constituency offices. Now, WCB, I think, has done a reasonable job in adjudicating many of those concerns but by no means all of them, so the idea of creating an effective ombudsman-type model within the WCB on the surface seems like a really, really good idea. I think that's welcome.

I want to be really clear that I'm not questioning the overall merits or the general principle of this bill. What I will say is that the bill that is before us here is of such magnitude and scale. It's larger, I think, than the MGA changes that we saw. It impacts two massive pieces of legislation that have wide-ranging impacts on Alberta workers and wide-ranging impacts on Alberta business. What I would have preferred to see is an approach by this government to this legislation similar to what we saw with the MGA, where significant consultations had been undertaken. I will say that I actually think the consultation process on this legislation was not bad. It was better than on minimum wage, which, as far as I understand it, was probably two meetings with two different groups. That wasn't nearly enough.

The MGA consultation, however, was a long-term, thoughtful, wide-ranging process where many, many, many stakeholders all around the province had an opportunity to come and sit at round-tables, provide feedback and input into the changes they would like to see in the MGA. Then legislation was tabled. Initial relatively minor or generally agreed-to changes were passed through the Legislature. Then legislation was tabled, and there was a long consultation process through the summer where all relevant stakeholders, all Albertans had an opportunity to weigh in on the legislation itself and actually provide feedback on the proposed rules that were going to change.

From that, the legislation itself was amended somewhat. But more to the point than the changes that were made, the stakeholders from all sides felt like the process was a good one. Not everyone at AAMD and C agrees with everything that was changed in the MGA. Not everybody at AUMA agrees with everything that was changed in the MGA. Some wanted it to go further, some thought it went too far, and some felt there were some things missing. That's always going to happen. We're always going to have that type of situation with any legislation in this Assembly.

But when we have changes as far reaching and wide ranging as we're facing here today, I think it would be incumbent on the government to take a long-term, thoughtful process to this because the problem the government faces is one of perception at the very least, the perception that here we are, four and a half days from the end of the Third Session of the 29th Legislature, and we're going to be perceived, if not in reality, to be ramming through hundreds of pages worth of a bill. Now, whether that actually bears out in truth, in reality, we live in a political world. I hope that doesn't come as any great surprise to anybody in this place, right? Imagine that.

This is really a caution to the government or a request to take a thoughtful approach to this. I think we all agree, I hope we all agree that this is a really, really important piece of legislation, and it's really important that we get it right. It's important that we get it right for working Albertans. It's important that we get it right for employers.

This is going to last for many, many years. If the perception of this bill is that the NDP is bringing in a bill with a title that makes it hard to vote against – because who's not going to stand up for the rights of working Albertans? – and that on the surface looks like it's all about improvements to WCB and worker safety, well, frankly, no one ought to be against those things, and I would argue that no one probably is against those things. But the question is a question of degree and approach and scale.

The reason I think it's important that we do support this referral motion is that we take the time to thoughtfully go through and allow stakeholders from all over the province to provide input into the bill itself, not broad-brush concepts, not online surveys, not an occasional round-table, but the actual legislation itself. Let's let labour and employment lawyers have a look at this. Let's let public unions, the public and private sectors have a look at the bill and actually digest all of the different clauses. Let's let employers and chambers of commerce have a chance to digest the bill and look at it clause by clause.

Let's let our constituents have an opportunity to weigh in. I'd love to do a town hall on this. I'd love to hear what my constituents think. I think we should all try to do those sorts of things on really important legislation. I think that not only does that result in better legislation that better serves the needs of all Albertans, but it helps this government with a perception problem that they're going to have with this bill.

I encourage all members to please support this motion. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, we've been talking a little bit about the consultation process, and I'm, you know, dismayed at how we seem to minimize what's been done. I just thought we'd clarify here on occupational health and safety, just that, the consultations that occurred there. We've received over 1,300 online surveys. Nearly 90 written submissions were put in through eight in-person round-table discussions with over 200 stakeholders. I'm just kind of curious if maybe some of the members are kind of feeling that those 200 stakeholders and their opinions are not very important. That is just simply for occupational health and safety.

I think when we start talking about the WCB review, Madam Speaker, we're talking about responses of over 1,700 questionnaires, 200 written submissions, 67 workbook responses, and when the panel submitted its report for review, there were over yet another 60 responses to the panel's review. So to say that we're just having one-off consultations here and there is a little bit, I think, demeaning to that process and the folks that happened to participate in that. I think one thing that we must remember over all is that we're talking about a system that hasn't been significantly reviewed at all in over 15 years. Any chance that there might be some organizations and groups and people out there that over the last 15 years have been working on this? Probably a whole lot more than some of the members on the other side have been working on this.

We have another system that hasn't been looked at for an extremely long period of time. I think it's probably pretty safe to say that there are some organizations, some individuals, and some groups that have also been working to move that process along.

I think we just probably want to keep some of those things in mind when we're thinking about this referral motion, and I would certainly suggest that we not support that.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much. You know, I actually want to agree with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore. This hasn't been updated in 15 years, in exactly the same way that the MGA, if my dates are correct – and someone may correct me if I'm wrong about this – hadn't been updated since, I think, 1995, and that's actually exactly the point. This is a government that's gone through some really good process, and it's a government that's gone through some perhaps not great process.

You know, one of the challenges and the feedback that we're getting from employers is: "Great. We want updates to this legislation, to both OH and S and WCB. We want to improve safety conditions." Every responsible organization that I've ever worked with, in particular in the energy industry, is laser focused on safety. It's an absolutely urgent imperative for them from a human perspective and from a business perspective. These are really important things in industry in this province. I know that they will welcome many of these changes, and they're certainly onboard and onside with them.

But to table legislation yesterday or earlier this week and give them less than 10 days with the actual bill itself to digest all of those changes, to provide feedback to us in this Assembly just isn't enough time. It really isn't. If this government seeks to make substantial changes to legislation like this, you ought to do it at the very beginning of session and give us a number of weeks to get through it. The perception is that you are dropping it near the end so that we've got to sprint through it, and we don't have time to really get through it because you don't really want to spend the time it takes to actually thoughtfully review the legislation.

Again the Member for Edmonton-Decore is bang on. It hasn't been done in 15 years. Yes, there were round-table processes, and, yes, there were many submissions, hundreds of submissions – absolutely, there were – but that was before we saw the legislation. Now that we've seen the legislation, based on that input, let's have another round, just like we did with the Municipal Government Act. That's a good process. This government should be praised for that good process, and you should take your own example of what good process looks like.

Unfortunately, this is not good process. There is no other way of saying it. We're going to rush this legislation through. We're going to be here late at night. We're going to get fractious. The Speaker will call points of order and call us all to order, as you rightly should. It doesn't have to be this way. It really, really doesn't. I know that everybody wants workers to be safe.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the referral amendment? The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise this morning to speak to the referral amendment on Bill 30, An Act to Protect the Health and Well-being of Working Albertans. Now, this bill significantly amends the OH and S Act and the Workers' Compensation Act; in fact, a major refurbishment of workplace safety rules, certainly. I think that major refurbishment is a reasonable description of what Bill 30 proposes.

Questions that I would have as an Alberta taxpayer, understanding the sheer amount of change that will be required to amend the WCB act and the included huge costs that will be related to those changes, are: has the government determined whether or not such costly changes will make the system unsustainable, and has there been any work done with regard to any kind of an independent study in that regard? Those are just questions that I would start with, I guess.

I guess I would also suggest that it isn't surprising that such an omnibus bill would show up in the fall legislative session, late in the fall. A flagship bill for each session generally shows up late in session, and not always but quite often they tend to be bills that affect Albertans in a substantial way. This bill does not disappoint. We are told that this bill will fix a broken system. We are told that the measures being proposed in Bill 30 will actually enhance health and safety.

I'm reminiscing on this government ramming through in this Legislature changes to the Labour Relations Code and the Employment Standards Code all at once, monstrous changes to two very labour-related bills. It appears that we're doing it again by proposing changes to both the Workers' Compensation Act and the Occupational Health and Safety Act at the same time. Because of the sheer size of this bill and the size of the acts that the bill proposes to amend, I think it would be safe to say that the government could easily have split this rather large, complex bill into two more manageable separate pieces of legislation. But, as they say, it is what it is.

Yet another small question seems to loom. We talked about this here a moment ago. There were indeed consultations held. That much we know. But critics of those consultations allow that the questions may have been leading. This could lead to another question: in its due diligence to perform some sort of consultation, did the government try to confirm and gain approval for predetermined ideas rather than actually try to listen to what was being said by stakeholders and the public? I looked at the submissions. I didn't look at them all, but I did look at the Alberta Wheat Commission's submission. I suggest the members opposite read that.

Remember Bill 17, the Fair and Family-friendly Workplaces Act? May I remind everyone that freedom of information documents obtained showed that the government's consultation on workplace laws last spring had a predetermined outcome. This is like déjà vu all over again.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, are you speaking to the referral?

Mr. Schneider: I'm speaking to the referral.

The Acting Speaker: Okay. Just clarifying.

Mr. Schneider: I'm getting there, Madam Speaker. [interjection] Would he like to speak to the referral? [interjections]

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, let's refocus, please. [interjection] Hon. member.

Please continue.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate it.

Let's just turn the corner here a little bit to something I found was rather interesting about Bill 30. I received in my inbox yesterday morning an e-mail from the Lethbridge Chamber of Commerce. I receive e-mails from the Lethbridge chamber on almost a daily basis – notices of luncheons and meetings and information on business issues and business accolades and such – a very busy organization. They do good work. However, yesterday morning they actually forwarded an issue-based e-mail from the Alberta Chambers of Commerce. Now, I may be wrong, but I believe the Alberta Chambers of Commerce would be considered stakeholders of the Alberta government.

The opening comment in the e-mail was:

The Alberta Government has introduced Bill 30, An Act to Protect the Health and Well-being of Working Albertans . . . Bill 30 makes significant changes to the [WCB] and [OHS] standards, which will result in new costs and administrative burdens for employers.

Small business, it appears, is somewhat concerned about the changes that are about to be thrust upon them. They are worried about changes to workplace standards and responsibilities for employers. I should say that I think they have some very good points here that I'd like to share.

As far as hard costs are concerned, the Alberta Chambers are concerned about the fact that

- the cap on maximum insurable earnings through the WCB will be removed. Workers earning more than the cap will now be fully compensated for 90% of their earnings.

They are also concerned that

- WCB claims will now include a $90,000 fatality benefit.

They are also concerned that

- stop work order[s] may be issued on multiple work sites of an employer [and that]
- when evidence is equal, WCB claim decisions are to be resolved in favor of the worker.

The Alberta Chambers of Commerce is also very much concerned with the speed with which these changes will begin to take effect. The biggest concern is small business, which will have very little time to try to adjust to their new responsibilities and very little time to fine-tune or become well educated as to how to take on and fulfill those responsibilities.

The Alberta Chambers of Commerce contends that the Alberta government has not completed nor provided any kind of economic impact study for Bill 30 on employers and essential industries. They state in their e-mail:

At first estimate, it is anticipated that the changes introduced by this legislation may result in approximately a 10% increase in the total WCB premiums collected from Alberta employers.

Another shot at small business.

Until this legislation came along, Madam Speaker, I had kind of forgotten that this government and their friends at the federal level believe that small-business owners are some kind of wealthy cheats that have been doing their best not to be fair with employees. Small and medium-sized businesses will be especially at risk. They are not nearly as able to absorb what boils down to increased administrative costs, added training costs, and alternative work placements.

If we think about this for a minute, does it not appear to anyone on the other side of the House that money spent by a small or medium-sized business on supporting the new proposed administrative costs may actually take away from those sized businesses the ability to invest in new safety measures and equipment? I mean, as much as you may believe that small and medium-sized businesses have this amazing stash of money somewhere, piling on more administrative costs can start to put some of these guys' bottom lines in jeopardy. There isn't some bottomless pit of money to draw on. It's like death by a thousand cuts. It's simply unfair to pile burden upon burden, expense upon expense onto small and medium-sized Alberta businesses. These are the people you claim to be looking out for, yet every piece of evidence shows that your slant is simply not compatible with independent business. After losing hundreds of thousands of Alberta jobs, this government acts proud in adding 70,000 new jobs. Heck, it's one of their talking points.

Are you going to ask me to get to the referral?

The Acting Speaker: I am going to ask you to please get to the referral, yes.

Mr. Schneider: Okay. This bill is too complex, too burdensome simply to jam it through the House using the NDP majority without taking into account how hard it may impact these businesses, the same businesses that the Alberta Chambers of Commerce are concerned about, the same businesses that provide jobs in towns and cities all across Alberta, the same businesses already impacted by increased costs from the impending carbon tax hike, raises to the minimum wage, and so on. It's economic death by a thousand cuts.

What harm could there be in taking the time to get this right? I don't believe there should be much of an issue with sending this off to committee for further study and comprehensive analysis, as my colleague from Calgary-Fish Creek just proposed. This is the same recommendation that the Alberta Chambers of Commerce proposed in their e-mail yesterday morning. [interjection] The same businesses, yeah.

Every week we hear gut-wrenching stories of long-standing businesses closing their doors because this government has created a climate that makes the challenge of running a business even more difficult. You can only increase the size of the public sector so much to pad your job stats before the bubble bursts. The Alberta Chambers realizes that the government has failed to provide "an economic impact analysis of this legislation on employers and core industries." It is an unfortunate refrain that we've heard time and again from stakeholders. I believe that this government, once again, has failed on this bill, and it will be the fine people of Alberta that pay for this government's follies.

Let's heed the words of my caucus mates and the Alberta Chambers, step back, and send this bill to committee, where it can go through proper vetting. I ask everyone in the House to please support the referral amendment. It seems to me that this is certainly what the Alberta Chambers, a stakeholder of the government, prefers to believe is the right way to do things, and even that little piece of information is enough for me to determine that that's what should happen.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I was interested to hear my neighbour to the north, my colleague from Little Bow, speak about the need for an economic impact study. One of the components of an economic impact study talks about that important vetting process of making sure that you've got proper consultation, that you get not just the advice that you're looking for but, actually, advice from both sides so that the legislation can be measured and properly vetted.

From what I understand, there are a little over 160,000 businesses in Alberta. I'd heard a comment made about how robust the consultation process had been. From what I understand, there are 1,300 online survey responses, 90 written submissions and eight in person, round-table discussions, over 200 stakeholders represented there.

But I want to just do some really quick math here to figure out what that does in terms of consultation. I want to ask my esteemed colleague to comment on this. If there were 200 stakeholders that were represented of the 160,000 and some-odd businesses in Alberta, from what I understand, that would be about a 1.25 per cent representation of businesses in Alberta.* Now, when we talk about a robust consultation process, I cannot believe that this government and the government members on that side would stand here and tell us that that is considered robust, a 1.25 per cent representation of 160,000 businesses in Alberta. Yet that is considered as robust.

Now, one of the concerns that I have about their concept of robust consultation is that they would consider 1.25 per cent to be robust. I'd like to ask the member who spoke to this so eloquently to help this Chamber and, hopefully, the members opposite understand how 1.25 per cent could be considered as a robust consultation.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Interesting question. I'd have to say that at 1.25 per cent I think this House should be embarrassed. Over a nine-week period we gathered – I don't remember what the stats were, but if it ends up being 1.25 per cent, I think what we're going to find is that when business finally does get a hold of Bill 30 and starts looking this over, we're going to start hearing a lot of issues come forward. It would be nice to have heard more than we have to get our teeth sunk into right now, but I think that before the session starts next week, we should have some more interest from those that are actually going to be affected by this.

I spoke about the Alberta Wheat Commission submission, and this now also affects the legislation that Bill 6 brought forward. I would suggest that they didn't go so far as to say that it was a negative way, but it's just the same as it is to small business, another attack at the bottom line of small business in Alberta.

Yes, I would suggest that 1.25 per cent of 160,000 businesses is a little bit embarrassing. I would suggest that possibly an opportunity to get to committee so that we could hear from 4 per cent of businesses in Alberta would be substantial.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I just wanted to make a quick comment on some of the things here. There was a reference to the actuarial report, which, I'm happy to say, of course, has been done. There were some concerns around the sustainability of the program. It's been set up very specifically to be sustainable. When we talk about supporting our small and medium-sized businesses, the changes that have been proposed here in Bill 30 are changes that are reflective of what's going on across the rest of the country right now, and to the best of my knowledge businesses and whatnot have not folded up.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the referral? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak to the referral of Bill 30. I'll just kind of try to put what I think is some reasonable perspective on this thing.

This is a substantial bill, and I will say, in fairness, that there are some good things in here, but this is changing the way that every business in Alberta is going to have to operate, so I think it's incumbent upon all of us, on all sides of this House, to be responsible in the way that we deal with this and the way we talk about this. Frankly, when I hear members saying, "If you don't want to pass this today, you are not in a hurry; you want to delay safety for workers; you want to delay workers' rights," I've never heard such a pile of bunk in my life.

If it was as immediately life and death as the one hon. member that said those things would have us believe, then the government should have brought this forward two and a half years ago, but they didn't. It would be unfair of me to say that but not any more unfair than what the hon. member said earlier this morning. [interjections]

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, can we please let the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays speak. Thank you.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

My point is not that either viewpoint is fair. My point is that neither viewpoint is fair and that it's a severely irresponsible and reckless way to talk about a bill that affects so many Albertans. One of my esteemed colleagues said that there are about 160,000 businesses in Alberta. He may be right. I don't know, frankly, whether he's right or wrong or indifferent, but I can tell you that if it's anywhere in the neighbourhood, you know, with 87 ridings, all of us have somewhere probably between, on average, 12,000 or 20,000 businesses in each of our ridings, just using rough numbers and averages.

My point is not to pinpoint the number but, rather, to bring the perspective, Madam Speaker, that that is a lot of people that we are responsible to that we're going to change everything about how they make their living, because people in businesses make their living. They feed their families, they support their communities, and very often they have money left over to donate to charities, nonprofits, and other things that make Alberta better. When you think of it that way – all of us should think that way and think to ourselves that if we're going to change everything about 12,000 to 20,000 people in our riding that we represent, we should probably put a little bit of thought into it and be just a little bit careful that we're not making their lives worse.

Now, the government always says that they make Albertans' lives better, and I'm sure that some of them actually believe that. I would say that on this side I don't think we agree, but that's okay. They're entitled to say that, and they're entitled to think that, but if they actually believe it, that would mean that this would be a good time to get this right, when it affects, on average, 12,000 to 20,000 businesses for each of the 87 of us in this important Legislature.

Before we put their businesses at risk, before we put their livelihoods at risk, before we put their contributions to the betterment of Alberta through the wages that they pay, the money that they earn, their contributions to the betterment of society at risk all at once, one would think that just the sheer enormity of this bill and the sheer enormity of the number of Albertans – I think you could legitimately say that it affects if not every Albertan virtually every Albertan because the vast majority of those that don't have a business work for one. Even if you don't have a business or work for one, probably someone you love does either have a business or work for one. I don't think that's much of a stretch. I doubt anyone from any side of the House would argue with me on that. They may, but I'd be surprised, frankly. I just think that they understand that that's intrinsically true.

When you actually look at that perspective, to accuse members of the House of trying to delay safety – in fact, trying not to be accusatory, I would just ask members to think about how careful they ought to be before we bring this forward. Further, you've got to wonder, frankly. I know the government has talked to some people, as pointed out by somebody in here, 1 or 1 and a half per cent of Albertans, but it affects a hundred per cent of people.

It's not just a matter of changing the rules, Madam Speaker. It's a matter of having the businesses understand the rules. It's having them put in a position to obey the rules. Even if they want to obey the rules, first they have to understand. They have to get access to what paperwork needs to be filled out. They have to get access to what committees they're going to have to have.

I mean, just look at the index of the bill. It's the obligations of prime contractors, self-employed persons, temporary staff agencies, multiple organizations, service providers, suppliers, workers, supervisors, and employers. I think most of us know what the word "employer" means, but the fact is that it's important that the businesses understand it in the context of the legislation. If somebody says, "Well, you're being silly," well, no. Actually, for many of these things within the legislation there is a definition of these things, which means that the government acknowledges that not everybody will automatically and intrinsically and immediately understand the definition of these terms because the government has taken time – and I think it's a good idea, frankly, that they did – to outline what all these things are.

To think that our hair has to be on fire and we have to pass this in 10 minutes when you're going to have 160,000 Alberta businesses and, by extension, hundreds of thousands or millions, literally, of Alberta jobs depending upon the businesses being able to interpret, act on, and obey this legislation – man, I don't think we ought to hurry. I think it's more important that we get it right than we get it fast.

You know what? I'm not prepared to say that the government got it wrong. I'm not prepared to say that they got it all right either, and that's exactly the point. Something as big as this ought to be out in the public realm for more than seven days or 10 days before it's passed. When it affects that many people, that many livelihoods, the future of – everybody in this Legislature will have people in their lives that they love that this will affect dramatically. Members of the House may say: well, there are people I know in my life it will affect positively. Great. All the more reason to get it right. If it's going to affect them positively, then it should be out in the public realm long enough so that the businesses can actually know it, understand it, and put those positive effects in place.

I'm prepared to try to believe that there are things in here that will make some people's lives better, but since it's 147 pages and I've only had it in my hands for a couple of days, I'm not prepared to say that I understand it well enough to say that it won't affect some people's lives negatively also. In either case, in the good cases and the bad cases, I think it's prudent, I think it's responsible, I think it's important, and I think it's our duty to get it right. I think it's our duty to make sure that Albertans understand it. Under this dome is a microcosm of this great and diverse province of ours.

You know what? Some large companies may have hot- and cold-running lawyers and accountants and consultants that can roll out a report based on this legislation in a week or 10 days and say: this is what we need to do in our large, big corporation. Great. But even in those large corporations it might take longer. My point is that a lot of the bigger businesses will have resources to apply straight to understanding and obeying this legislation. But what about the flower shop that the couple owns and operates who are maybe working 16 hours a day and barely paying the rent in the strip mall that they're in and barely making enough money to pay their mortgage and their rent at home and barely making enough money after, you know, sometimes 14- and 16-hour days to pay for their kids' tuition or daycare or whatever else it is in their life that they have to pay for? To demand that they instantly have to drop everything and on very short notice put themselves in a position to obey what I will acknowledge is a very important piece of legislation: I just don't think that's fair. I don't think it's reasonable. I don't think it's right.

If the government believes, as I sincerely hope they do, that their legislation is good – we on the other side are not required to believe that their legislation is good because we haven't had it in our hands as long as they have because they have actually created the legislation, so let's hope they believe it's good. But even if they believe it's good, that's all the more reason why the government should support this amendment, should send it to committee for no other reason – hopefully, it would provide opportunities to make what they think is good legislation even better. It might provide opportunities for them to say: "Oh, yeah. Whoops. We thought that was good. It wasn't quite as good as we thought, so it's an opportunity for us to improve it a little bit." I don't think I'm insulting the government in any way in saying this.

More importantly, it will be out in the public realm, hopefully for a few weeks or a few months, so that 162,000 businesses, including that couple running the flower shop that is working 16 hours a day and barely making it, can actually have time to read it, understand it, get some advice on it, and obey it because we all have to obey the law or face the consequences for not obeying the law. I would hate to think that we are going to put all these businesses, big and small, in a position where even if they want to obey the law, they don't have time to because they don't have time to understand it by the time they have to obey it. It's not a one- or two-line change. It's not, you know, that you're going to pay a different tax percentage, one calculation difference and you're off to the races or something of that nature.

This, by the minister's introduction of the bill, changes the fundamental nature of business and work in Alberta. If the government is going to make a change like that, you've got to respect what that does to 4.3 million Albertans. I'm sure there are members on the other side that probably agree with what I'm saying. If you're going to change everything and you think it's good, then maybe you ought to give Albertans a fair amount of time for them to understand just what great work you've done (a) so that they can obey the law, (b) maybe so they can appreciate the current government and what great work they've done if indeed it's as great as they think and hope it is.

To be clear, I haven't given up on that, that there may well be good stuff in here. In fact, from my initial understanding of it I think there are good and not so good things in here, but there are good things in here. That is why I think it's important that you take the time. It's not just one act; it's the Occupational Health and Safety Act and the Workers' Compensation Act.

I'm sure I am not the only Member of the Legislative Assembly who gets a lot of people coming into my office and saying: "I was treated unfairly by the Workers' Compensation Board. I don't agree with their medical assessment. I deserve better coverage because of my injury than what I've got. How do I file an appeal? I don't think I was treated fairly at the appeal." Whatever it is, you know, I'll be surprised if there is any member of this important Legislature that hasn't had people come into their office and do that. Those people need to understand what this legislation means if they either have been injured on the job or there's a chance they could be. The employers need to understand what their obligations are to those employees so that they can meet those obligations.

And it's about time. It's about time. It is about 160,000 businesses, big and small – again, those corner flower shops, those bars and restaurants, the dry cleaners, the oil and gas companies, the private doctors' offices, and every other manner of business that you want to name – with varying degrees of resources, being required to completely change the way that the occupational health and safety codes affect them, to completely change the way the Workers' Compensation Board rules affect them.

I think it's only right, fair, and reasonable for members of this House to say to those Albertans: "We're doing something really important here, and we need you to understand it. We need you to have time to obey what we think is a great piece of legislation. We need your workers to understand what their obligations are." There are millions of workers in Alberta, and there is a section here on the responsibilities of workers. You know what, Madam Speaker? Expecting them to do it in seven or 10 days is not reasonable.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I want to thank my colleague from Calgary-Hays for his comments. He brings up some very, very good points about how this affects small business and the time frame it takes for this implementation.

I just want to read a little bit out of the bill here. It's under Coming into Force.

51(1) Sections 11(1)(a), 12(1)(a), (b) and (d), 26, 27, 28, 35, 38, 42, 44 and 45 come into force on January 1, 2018.

Now, Madam Speaker, we're sitting here, of course, on I believe it's November 30. This session started on October 30. We've had members opposite, particularly Calgary-Klein, suggest, you know, that we can't delay this. This is all about safety and benefits. This can't be delayed. Of course, we've already delayed it a month because we're sitting here on November 30. We started on October 30. It could have been brought into the Legislature right then. Now, this is their argument for not sending this to committee, when we could have had a committee working on this for a month already.

I'd just like to hear the Member for Calgary-Hays' thoughts again on this as far as: if this bill does pass, it'll most likely pass here in the first few days of December, maybe by the 5th, 6th, 7th of December. I'd be guessing that's what the government wants to do here.

Now, a good portion of this bill comes into force on January 1, 2018. We have many small businesses, of course, like the member pointed out, that don't have lawyers and accountants and people that are just sitting there waiting for government legislation to show up so that they can figure out how they're going to implement it in their small business.

Now, these small businesses, these ma-and-pa organizations, will have roughly three weeks through Christmas and New Year's to figure out how they're going to implement a large portion of this bill. I would be interested in hearing how the Member for Calgary-Hays feels that will affect them, how that'll affect these small businesses that have three weeks through the holiday season to figure out how to implement something with so widespread effects as OHS and WCB, basically a total rewrite of these legislations, an omnibus bill that will affect every business in Alberta.

So I would just like him to maybe expand on that and let us know how he feels this will affect the businesses in his constituency.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, and I appreciate the question from my colleague. I think he makes an important point. Over the next three weeks and month or so over Christmas and even New Year's for some businesses that will be the time when they make all their money for the year if they're in the retail business, so they are working down to dusk. At the end of the day, those poor people – I wish them well because I'm grateful that they're doing some of these jobs and I'm not, and I admire them for doing them – will be dead on their feet at the end of every day because they will be going into their business during the busiest time of the year. They'll be swarmed with people. They'll try to have a smile on their face though they're dog tired for 12 or sometimes 14 or more hours a day, and then they're going to go home.

If we rush this, they're going to actually think: "Man, how am I not going to be put out of business by the health and safety inspector if I don't do this? I'm too tired to read it, but if I don't read it, I'm out of business, and if I do read it, I won't be on the ball to make my year's sales tomorrow." For another class of businesses, industrial and others, this is some of the time when they actually can give their employees some time off and get some time off themselves, so time is a big issue.

I will say that there are important questions that haven't been answered yet in the legislation, and I think a committee would be a great time to explore some of these things. For example, the actuarial firm Eckler said that these changes in WCB will cost $94 million annually, yet when we were at the bill briefing, we said: why has the government not paid back the half a billion dollars of WCB overcontributions? We were told by the government's representatives that that was in anticipation of Bill 30, that some of that money might be needed. Now, there might be a very good reason. I'm not at this point casting any aspersions or saying that anything untoward is going on, nothing to that effect, but I am saying that one of the questions that could be answered is: why the difference?

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the referral? The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Good morning. I rise this morning to speak to Bill 30, An Act to Protect the Health and Well-being of Working Albertans, the notice of amendment, the referral from my colleague from Calgary-Fish Creek. Mr. Gotfried moved that the motion for second reading of Bill 30, An Act to Protect the Health and Well-being of Working Albertans, be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 30, An Act to Protect the Health and Well-being of Working Albertans, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

My goodness, what a great opportunity for engaging Albertans, consulting Albertans, reducing unintended consequences of a huge, late omnibus bill and the opportunity to get it right. But, Madam Speaker, as we know, unfortunately this government has a bad habit, a bad habit of introducing their largest and most complex pieces of legislation as close to the end of session as possible and then insisting that the bill move through the Legislature process at 1,300 kilometres per hour. That particular ploy always confounded me. Does the government honestly believe that the opposition members' desire to get back to their constituencies for the winter break is so powerful – so powerful – that we're going to simply let bad legislation become enshrined into law without doing our due diligence, the due diligence that Albertans granted us in the opportunity to represent them within this House? Is that the mentality of the four hon. members of the NDP caucus elected in 2012, when I was first elected? Is that the mentality that the four hon. members had in 2012 when they were in opposition?

Or, Madam Speaker, is it because the government believes that the contents of this bill are so bad that if anyone took the time to read it, the government would actually have to defend its own legislation? I certainly hope that both are not true. I would be most disappointed, as would the rest of Alberta, I am sure.

But let's be clear. This bill will pass, and it will become law regardless of whether the opposition members want it or not. Quite frankly, Bill 30 will pass and become law regardless of whether the people of Alberta want it or not, which is a much bigger oversight and sin. The government is supported by a majority of the members of the House – and I respect that – but the fact that the government is supported by a majority of the members here does not give the government the moral authority to introduce legislation that doesn't put the best interests of Albertans first.

However, if that's not the reason the government waited so long to introduce Bill 30, then it begs this question: why did the government wait until November 27 to introduce a bill that is over 200 pages long in the Legislature? As stated, we've been here since October 30, the government has passed the two-and-a-half-year mark, and here we are at 1,300 kilometres an hour: got to get this done.

The only other reason why the government would wait over four weeks after session began to introduce this bill is because they hadn't finished writing the bill and they needed that extra month to finish writing it. This many pages of legislation written that quickly needs to be referred to committee, needs to have oversight, needs to ensure that we are protecting Alberta workers, Alberta families, and Alberta communities.

Madam Speaker, I'm not sure which reason is worse – I'm not sure what the government's reason is – that the government is trying to ram legislation through that it knows doesn't put Albertans first, or is it worse that it cannot develop legislation within the schedule that the government itself fully, one hundred per cent, controls? The NDP government fully, one hundred per cent, controls our schedules.

If our government needed more time, it had a number of options it could have used. First, it could have delayed or postponed the start of the fall session until it had all of its legislation completed and ready to be tabled in the Legislature, save the taxpayer a few dollars, allow us to consult better with our constituents around Alberta. They could have done that but didn't.

The NDP government also could have tabled the legislation and then adjourned the debate until the Legislature reconvenes in the spring. Madam Speaker, that is what this same government did with Bill 21, the Modernized Municipal Government Act, in 2016. The previous Municipal Affairs minister tabled the bill near the end of the spring session and then adjourned debate over the summer while she and a number of senior department staff conducted a fairly comprehensive tour across the province. I understand that based on the feedback that she was able to gather from stakeholders, the government developed some amendments to the bill before it was ultimately passed unanimously. Ultimately passed unanimously. They took the time to consult, they took the time to do it right, they took the time to engage the opposition, and it was passed unanimously. The feedback I received from stakeholders on the government's handling of Bill 21 was overwhelmingly positive regardless of whether the stakeholder ultimately agreed with the government's changes or not.

Thirdly, Madam Speaker, and finally, the government could support my hon. colleague's referral motion, which would result in the bill being referred to the legislative standing committee made up of members of this House, members of this House that could review the bill in fine detail, call witnesses and stakeholders to present their feedback, and ultimately provide recommendations back to this Legislature, back to cabinet, back to this government based on that feedback.

Madam Speaker, those are three options this government could have used to ensure they present the best possible bill to Albertans.

It's too late to delay or postpone the fall sitting, but, Madam Speaker, there is still time to adjourn debate until the Legislature reconvenes, of course, again in the spring, or the government could support the amendment to refer to committee as brought forward by my hon. colleague from Calgary-Fish Creek. While I would prefer that we adjourn debate, I think referring Bill 30 to committee is fine given the circumstances. What referring Bill 30 to committee allows is for members of this House to dive deeper into the bill and actually work through a lot of the changes, actually work through the changes with Albertans present, with experts present, employers, employees, communities, have the opportunity to minimize the unintended consequences – we can never eliminate them – and get this right.

Madam Speaker, referring the bill to committee would also allow the government more time to make the case as to why certain changes are justified, make the case to Albertan employers and employees who have been under considerable stress in the last two and a half years with taxes rising, regulations going up, a lot of employees being underemployed, our slowdown in our economy, managed or otherwise. It would allow the government more time to make the case as to why certain changes are justified.

Madam Speaker, one such change I would like to see the government justify to the committee is the government's proposal to replace the Occupational Health and Safety Council with the Labour Relations Board as the arbiter of OHS appeals. According to the Labour Relations Board's website About the Board, the Labour Relations Board is the independent and impartial tribunal responsible for the day-to-day application and interpretation of Alberta's labour laws.

It goes on to say:

The Board consists of a Chair, two full-time Vice-Chairs, three part-time Vice-Chairs, and approximately 28 part-time members. The members are representative of both labour and management, and appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council.

Madam Speaker, the last part is interesting language. The members are representative of both labour and management. The terms "labour" and "management" are not normally together unless referring to a unionized workplace. The common terms when referring to a workplace in general are "employee" and "employer."

Madam Speaker, further on the Labour Relations Board website it says:

Are you looking for information on this website that you cannot find? That may be because The Alberta Labour Relations Board administers the Labour Relations Code dealing with disputes between employers and trade unions (and employees represented by trade unions).

Madam Speaker, I don't understand. Why is the government referring OHS appeals to a body that is specifically designed to handle disputes between unions and employers? I think that there are a lot of Albertans that would like to know that. I think that there are a lot of Albertan employers and employees that are worried about the actions of this government that would like to know that. The last I checked, Alberta's economy was made up of a mixture of union and non-union workplaces. In fact, most Albertans do not belong to a union. According to the government's own statistics Alberta's unionization rate is 23 per cent.

My understanding of OHS rules is that they apply to both union and non-union workplaces. Madam Speaker, is the NDP government claiming that the overwhelming number of OHS appeals stem from unionized workers? I question the validity of that claim, that unionized workers are more likely to suffer a workplace injury. But if the government is confident, I don't see why they wouldn't welcome the opportunity to justify that to the committee, referred under time, under reason, and under the best information that we can get to do our jobs for Albertans, all the more reason for the government to support my colleague's amendment to refer this bill to committee so it can be properly, extensively reviewed by Albertans and by experts.

A couple of other issues I want to touch on. It's always surprised me in the five and a half years that I've been in here that a bill can completely pass in 48 hours, a one-day break on either side of Committee of the Whole.

The Acting Speaker: You have five minutes.

Mr. Bilous: Time flies.

Mr. Barnes: Yeah. No kidding. Time does fly. Thank you.

I understand that either the vast majority or all government bills in the federal Parliament go to a committee, a committee where Canadians have the opportunity for input, where experts have the opportunity to talk about the unintended consequences, to talk about getting it right, to talk about trying to reach the outcomes, the objectives, what the government is trying to achieve.

Madam Speaker, we know that the government controls the committee, too, by having the majority of members on it, so they have tremendous oversight on who's allowed to talk, the time, the agenda, the end result at the end of the day. But it's one higher level of accountability to Albertans – accountability to Albertans – that at the end of the day you're doing this for the right reasons, not for ideological reasons, not an honest accidental mistake.

This kind of oversight, this kind of second look is crucial when we're dealing with 4.1 million of our friends, our neighbours, Albertans, when we're dealing with communities, when we're dealing with what's been a fragile economy for a short time, when we're dealing with an economy and employers that have seen so much change from this government. Why wouldn't we take the step to get their involvement and to do this right? Madam Speaker, that's another reason why I solidly support my colleague from Calgary-Fish Creek's amendment.

The other reason that's been touched on is the half billion dollar surplus Workers' Compensation has now. I've read and heard that it's because they were getting ready for the uncertainty around the changes that this bill may have.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to correct something that I said earlier. It's a case in point as to why when you do something quickly or hastily, you could be wrong. You know, we're talking about this issue right now, about how we need to send this to committee because it's been put together too hastily. So I want to just point out something. When I talked about how many people had been consulted, 200 of the 160,000 businesses, I said that that equates to about 1.25 per cent. In sober second thought I recognize that it's actually one-tenth of that number.* So it's actually only one-tenth of 1.25 per cent, which makes the case even greater.

What we're dealing with here is not proper consultation. The sample size is very small. I would like to ask the member, again as I asked the Member for Little Bow: what does he think about the sample size that they've used in terms of being able to do consultation?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you. It's minuscule. It's amazing that they think that is full and comprehensive. Thank you to my hon. colleague from Cardston-Taber-Warner for the question because your constituency, like mine, has so many diverse businesses, has so many diverse people out there that create jobs, build wealth, pay taxes. I think of the ones in the family ranches and businesses that have done it for 125 years. Then I think of the new start-ups in technology that are trying to find their way.

You know, I wonder how this will impact charities and not-for-profits. Unfortunately, I believe it was the Parkinson's society in Medicine Hat that just closed their doors citing extra costs because of the minimum wage and carbon tax and those kinds of things. We've just had a couple of restaurants close.

I guess the burden on these people and the burden in trying to get it right – how can 1 per cent, or whatever the number is, convey the different wealth creators that we have in Alberta and the different stresses, the different opportunities? I mean, my goodness, forestry to agriculture. Agriculture all by itself has so many diverse elements, from ranching to irrigation to greenhouses.

Hey, a quick shout-out to Redcliff, Alberta's and Canada's largest greenhouse capital: tremendous hard work and tremendous value-added to what these people have done for Alberta and feeding the world. I mean, they would have a different set of impacts from this legislation than a wheat farm would, and that is one of the reasons that, again, I'm so concerned and so startled that the consultation to this point has been as minimal as it has been.

Again, you know, we just spent large parts of the summer in our constituencies. I don't recall hearing anything about these changes. I don't recall any opportunity to go forward and speak to these. So can you imagine the Alberta business owner who's working 60 or 80 hours a week to provide jobs and provide, you know, taxes for his community, and then on top of that has the burden of extra paperwork, and then on top of that now has the burden of this? My goodness, I couldn't imagine how many of them would have had the opportunity to sort through the layers and layers and the burden and bureaucracy to give their input on this.

You know, that's why this huge bill dropped on our desks here late in the session is – well, it's not surprising. It's happened before. But there is a better way. There is a better way to handle it. That's why I'm asking all my colleagues in this House, on both sides, to accept the motion from my colleague from Calgary-Fish Creek and send this to committee, where we can make it the best possible law for all Albertans.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the referral amendment? The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Just to be clear, you haven't spoken to the referral yet, right?

Mr. van Dijken: I have not.

The Acting Speaker: Just 29(2)(a). Okay. Thank you.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to express my opposition to Bill 30, An Act to Protect the Health and Well-being of Working Albertans as it is in its current form. I will support this motion to refer Bill 30 to committee. I should be clear that the goal of ensuring that hard-working Albertans are safe and healthy in their working environments is one that I and undoubtedly all members of this Assembly do support.

My opposition is to the way this bill makes broad and sweeping changes to the existing legislation without regard for the potential cost to taxpayers and the additional burdens that will be placed on Alberta businesses. In a climate where deficit spending runs rampant and our small, medium, and large businesses already face excessive regulation, these are not concerns that the government can simply throw aside in pursuit of its ideologically driven agenda, trying to ram through Bill 30 in just a few days.

Should we look at updating occupational health and safety legislation? Absolutely. Should we seek to improve WCB? Yes. However, any potential legislation must ensure that in doing these things, it helps Albertans rather than creating more economic and fiscal problems for our province. Madam Speaker, since this government came to office, Alberta has lost its reputation of being one of the best jurisdictions in which to do business in all of North America. In part this is because of reckless legislation that has been passed to satisfy partisan and special interests rather than to effectively serve Albertans.

One of my motivations to speak against this bill now is because it is incumbent upon me and it is incumbent upon this Assembly to stand up for ordinary Albertans, who expect us to be thoughtful and deliberative in our work, making sure that any legislation we pass serves the interests of Albertans and does nothing to worsen the economic problems that they face. In doing consultation for this bill, we saw an all too familiar strategy for this government. They asked their questions to precipitate the answers they wanted to hear. Alberta workers and employers deserve real consultation, not stage theatrics. Real consultation would mean going back to committee. It would mean going back to Albertans and asking them what they think without any preconditions.

Madam Speaker, the government seems to be only interested in rushing this bill through the Legislature before the end of this session. To produce good results for those we represent, the government needs to slow down to make sure we get these issues right. Ideally, these kinds of changes would come as several pieces of legislation, allowing proper scrutiny and debate on each individual issue that is addressed. At the very least there should be some substantive consideration of amendments. We need to make sure that each issue to be addressed by the legislation is in need of change and that any changes being made are supported by evidence showing that they are likely to produce the desired result. I don't see any indication that the government intends to support this kind of legislative scrutiny that Albertans deserve from their elected officials.

One issue I would like to see particular scrutiny of is the matter of joint work-site health and safety committees. This bill proposes to make these committees mandatory for any employer with 20 or more people working for them. Under the existing legislation these committees can already be mandated by the minister based on individual circumstances, or they can be formed voluntarily by workers and employers who think they are necessary to their unique situations. These existing rules allow for flexibility, and they allow for the formation of effective joint committees where there is specific need or merit. Unfortunately, as usual this government seeks to impose a top-down, government-knows-best approach without regard to the necessity and without consideration of the wants and needs of workers and employers on any particular work site.

It is legislative changes like this that make Albertans wonder if this government is prioritizing the needs of ordinary working Albertans or if they are more worried about the priorities of big labour and the union bosses who have been clamouring for these kinds of changes for years. I don't know about the members opposite, but I have yet to hear from a single constituent, a single ordinary working Albertan who is extremely concerned about the lack of mandatory, bureaucratic, government-imposed joint work-site health and safety committees in Alberta. My guess is because the people of this province want their elected officials focusing on fixing problems with common-sense legislation, not looking for opportunities to insist on more government interference in an area where there is seemingly little cause to do so.

Now, this is about more than the government telling workers and employers what to do; it's also about needlessly imposing new costs on businesses which, in too many cases, are struggling to get by in Alberta at this present time. The costs that the imposition of these committees would impose potentially takes money away from hiring more Albertans or providing other training to existing employees, which could in many cases provide more effective improvements to workplace safety.

There are many areas in which mandating these committees will cause additional costs, but is it worth going through them? First, we should recognize what the impact of lost time will be on employers. Every hour that is spent working on committees is time that cannot be spent engaging in productive economic activity. We must also observe that the employer is required to pay salary for the time that workers spend on committee duties away from their normal work and responsibilities. One must also consider the costs of training. Not only will there be the costs of the training itself, but in many instances there could be costs for travel and other associated expenses.

Madam Speaker, yet another point we must consider is the direct costs of implementation for proposals brought forward by these committees. These have the potential to be significant and numerous. Something else to be mindful of is that the cost of running and administering such committees is bound to hit small and medium-sized businesses the hardest. These businesses are integral to our communities and the backbone of our economy. Large corporations can more easily absorb costs like these, but smaller local businesses tend to have less room to work with new costs imposed on them. For those kinds of businesses, these changes could mean not hiring an out-of-work Albertan, or it could mean laying another one off. Frankly, I believe it is sad that when Alberta's small-business owners are already under attack from the Trudeau government in Ottawa, this government not only refuses to stand up against those changes, but it also finds further costs to impose.

This area is a critical example of why this bill needs further consultation and why it needs to go back to committee for further review. The government needs to go out and speak with hard-working small-business owners in our province and listen to what the individual impacts could be. Let's get a frank assessment of the costs, the burdens they will impose on business, and then ask the government to justify why these mandatory joint committees are necessary.

Madam Speaker, you have now heard me speak about why I cannot support this bill. We have gone through the changes the government wants to make in regard to imposing joint work-site health and safety committees rather than leaving the flexibility of the current legislation. I have also spoken about the costs that these changes will create for Alberta businesses. What is now important to address is whether or not there is actually any evidence that these proposed changes would have the desired effect of improving health and safety in the workplace.

In looking to other jurisdictions which have imposed mandatory joint committees on their workers and employers, we can find examples of the results that this part of the bill might elicit if it were to become law. One example is the province of Ontario, which imposed similar committees on certain industries beginning in the 1970s. The results of one study in Ontario led to the conclusion that the result does not lend itself to supporting the view that reductions in serious accidents have resulted from the legislation. In regard to the conclusion by some that joint health and safety committees led to a reduction of injury rates in Ontario, a 1994 report says that the statistical evidence for that conclusion is less than overwhelming.

Another study of relevant data, from the United States, was unable to find a significant correlation between the existence of a committee and the number of Occupational Health and Safety Act complaints or the level of hazardous workplaces as measured by OSHA.

I could go on with numerous other examples, but I believe the House understands that the facts demonstrate that these kinds of changes have produced unclear results at best. There is some speculation from multiple sources as to why mandatory joint health and safety committees do not have a strong record of producing the desired results.

One observation made in relation to similar legislation in Ontario says the following: simply mandating committees is unlikely to have much effect at workplaces where the internal responsibility system and the comanagement of health and safety matters is not embraced by both management and/or labour.

What is referred to as the internal responsibility system is the idea of comanagement of health and safety by both employers and workers. This idea underpins the concept of joint health and safety committees. What this and other observations are saying is that a top-down government imposition of these committees has little inherent benefit in itself. Rather, they are saying that successful examples of joint committees are characterized by situations where they have engagement and buy-in from both employers and workers.

Now, Madam Speaker, if the government believes it can universally legislate engagement and buy-in, more rethinking is needed than I had initially expected. Otherwise, the government should take this opportunity to listen to opposition members and support my colleague's referral motion so we can take this back to committee and look for a more evidence-based plan to improve workplace health and safety.

While we are talking about potential effectiveness of committees, it is also worth while to talk about training once more. Other than the identification of engagement and buy-in from workers and employers as a key factor, studies also identify training as important to whether or not any individual committee can be a success. The bill is vague on many details of training that would be required for success of joint health and safety committees.

Should the government intend to move forward with this bill, the establishment of mandatory committees would create a significant demand. So the questions are: who would provide these training services? Would the government do it? What training would be provided? Would all industries participate in the same training programs, or would they be individually tailored?

It seems that these questions inevitably lead to more questions. Does the government genuinely believe that it can either create effective health and safety training for industry in general or for all industries separately? Further, does the government believe that it knows how to better run health and safety than the employers and workers who practise it every day in their respective fields?

The government has a responsibility to address these kinds of questions and lay out a comprehensive plan for training prior to moving forward with these substantive changes. Surely, we will not see this government repeat the mistakes of their past legislation where they told businesses that they would be further regulated but refused to detail specifics before ramming the relevant bill through the Legislature.

Madam Speaker, I hate to sound like a broken record, but I would once again encourage the government to take a step back, to slow down, to support the referral motion, and send this bill to committee for proper consultation.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I have to say that my colleague does put out a very strong case on why a referral motion is needed here. I know that, for myself, I've seen our side put forward referral motions several times now, saying: let's move this away from rushed legislation, where we make errors, to a place where we can actually put forward legislation that is complete, where we have that time to discuss this in the House. A lot of times it comes down to discussing it in a committee setting before we can move forward.

Now, I can't imagine a more important piece of legislation than protecting our workers. I really can't. There are others – don't get me wrong – that we can quote and say are very, very important, but really, when we start looking at making sure that those that get harmed or potentially could be harmed have a mechanism to be able to get the help they need to be able to have a life that any one of us would want, how exactly is it okay that we have a government pushing this through so fast?

Now, I will tell you that when we see the bill before us here, the question is always that this bill is so thick – I'm looking through the bill here. You start looking at this bill, and it's actually quite a lot of information to get through. You see that this bill just hit the table on Monday, and we're already in second reading, and in going through this large a bill, this important bill, we do not have the time to be able to get the quality conversations that we need. I cannot actually get out to my constituents to even discuss this bill because I have been in the House since Monday. That's the lunacy of how fast this process is going. It's there Monday. We're sitting in the House.

But you know what? My colleague will convince you more on why this is so much more important than just, I guess, throwing it through and hoping that we hit the right target. My question is: could you please explain why a referral is so important?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to my colleague from Bonnyville-Cold Lake. You know, I'm highlighting just one portion of this very large bill, one aspect of it, that needs to have proper consideration. There are many more – many more – but to have the proper time that we need to properly review this bill and to consult with stakeholders is important.

I would like to reiterate a few general points. All of us in this House know the importance of workplace health and safety. All of us want to make sure that when needed, the relevant legislation is reviewed and updated. What we should not want is legislation that is pushed forward without demonstrating a need. We should also seek to ensure that legislation is not rushed through this place in order to meet a government deadline. Bills that are passed by this Assembly should be well thought out, backed up by evidence, carefully reviewed, and properly deliberated. They should take into account all the potential impacts, and they should seek to serve the interests of Albertans rather than serve special interests and partisan purposes.

It is for these reasons and for those I have addressed throughout this speech that I cannot support this bill as it stands. Again, I ask that it be referred to committee so that improvements can be made and so that this Assembly can hear from Albertans on some of the unintended consequences that are potentially coming from this bill, unnecessary costs for one thing.

You know, I've highlighted the joint health and safety committees because I do believe that there is some flexibility that is necessary in order to ensure that these joint health and safety committees are effective. To just mandate a joint health and safety committee does not create an effective joint health and safety committee, and to think that we can just legislate it and that all of a sudden there's buy-in, in my opinion, is nearsighted.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Is there any other member wishing to speak to the referral amendment? Hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, have you spoken to the amendment?

Mr. Loewen: No. Only under 29(2)(a).

The Acting Speaker: Just under 29(2)(a)? Okay. Please go ahead.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak to the motion on Bill 30, An Act to Protect the Health and Well-being of Working Albertans, to refer Bill 30 to committee for study. This bill is over 200 pages. The NDP could have brought this bill before the Legislature at the end of October to allow time for proper scrutiny, debate, contact with stakeholders, and gently brought the bill along in the House for debate, a speech here, a speech there. Instead, the NDP brought this bill here at the end of November.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

There is an incredible amount of material here that needs to be gone through, and it would only be prudent for a committee of the Assembly to study this bill and bring it back with the appropriate amendments if found required. With a bill like this, that affects all working Albertans and their employers, we need to be able to hear from both groups to understand what the implications of this bill mean for them.

Now, Bill 30 wants to add mandatory joint work-site health and safety committees and health and safety representatives. Safety is a culture. As much as we may try to legislate a nanny state culture, we can miss the mark. Bill 30 proposes to make these committees mandatory for any employer with 20 or more people working for them. Setting up joint work-site health and safety committees, while a good idea for large employers, can be a significant burden on many smaller businesses. Twenty people isn't that many, and it is these enterprises that make up most of the workforce here in Alberta.

These committees need to be resourced by the employer. This means that resources will get taken away from other areas, possibly even from actual safety training programs for the employees if the employers allocate a certain amount of their budget to work safety. Under current legislation these committees can already exist, and many of these companies already have these committees set up or maybe informally have them set up. Either the minister can order them into existence, or they can be formed voluntarily by workers and employers. I think it's far more effective to have this done voluntarily. But the NDP thinks they know what's best for everyone across the board. They don't seem to recognize the uniqueness of each individual workplace.

Yes, there will be costs, costs for Alberta businesses that are already struggling. Many have closed already. How many small businesses have we lost in the last two and a half years? Many small businesses have gone broke under this government.

If the NDP government is very excited about these joint work-site health and safety committees and touts their value, then I would like them to also recognize the value of legislative committees examining complex pieces of legislation and to support this motion. You see, on one hand, they suggest that the companies have committees and make them work, but these committees we have in the Legislature: they don't seem to want to use them. They don't seem to want to work in them.

Madam Speaker, I'm also concerned that we haven't talked much yet about the new information-sharing provisions in this bill. A lot of people don't have any say in whether they are part of WCB or OHS, and their personal data goes to them. Now we have this information sharing that we haven't had time to look at, to discuss, to try to find out what kind of ramifications, what kind of unintended consequences could happen. In this day and age privacy is a concern for many people. It's one of the greatest concerns out there for many people that worry about their privacy and losing their personal information. We hear every day of large organizations being hacked for personal data. So we need to hear more about the provisions for expanding information sharing to more agencies and organizations. What types of agencies will these be? These are questions that we need to have answered.

As you can see, Madam Speaker, there are all kinds of reasons why this needs to go to committee. This needs to be looked at more carefully. We need to have more input. Many concerns and questions have been brought up by my colleagues in addition to my reservations about the joint committees and information-sharing provisions. There have been lots of things that have been brought up here this morning that are concerning, concerning to Albertans, concerning to the members on this side of the House, answers that we would like to have.

I think Albertans deserve those answers, Madam Speaker. They deserve to know how this legislation is going to affect their lives, how it's going to affect the small-business owners, how it's going to affect the small-business managers, how it's going to affect the employees of small businesses. In fact, this affects, of course, not only small business but medium-sized business, large business. It affects government, government agencies. It affects every worker in Alberta.

I think that that is very important to realize, how this can affect every worker in Alberta and why it's so important that we take just a little more time, time that we could have taken in the last month had the government brought this forward in legislation at the end of October. Instead, we're sitting here at the end of our legislative session, and the government has brought through the biggest piece of legislation so far, the most far reaching, legislation that will affect more people. They've brought it in at the end, and I don't think that's fair to Albertans.

Albertans rely on us in this Legislature to look at these bills that come before us and decide whether they are going to help, hurt, or whether there's any way that we can improve this legislation. That's our job here. That's what we do. We have committees for a reason. Committees don't just exist so we can get together three, four, five times a year and look at each other across the room. There's work that has to be done in those committees, and it's important work.

It's work that can make legislation better. There can be things that come forward in a committee that nobody thought of before, when this legislation was being drafted. I know there are intelligent people that draft this legislation. I know they're trying to think of all the different angles and all the different things that could come up, but nobody is perfect.

What this does is allow that second thought, you know, for people to come forward to present to the committee, that can think of the different angles and the different things that could come into effect because of this legislation. Obviously, there are a lot of potentially positive changes that we could discuss how we could make them even better. I urge the NDP to support this motion so that we can learn more and do our due diligence here.

Now, Madam Speaker, again, this is a 200-page bill. It's a rewrite of occupational health and safety. WCB hasn't been looked at in 15 years. All of a sudden this government has come forward with this legislation, and it's going to, I guess, fix all the problems at WCB that have developed over the last 15 years. I would think that something so big and so important would be worth a little extra scrutiny. This is omnibus legislation. This is big. It covers a lot of different things. Again, it affects every business in Alberta. It affects every worker in Alberta. If this is all about safety, then we owe it to Albertans to make this legislation the best we can. We're not suggesting that this bill be scrapped. Right now we're just asking for it to go to committee. That's all we're talking about here today, to have this go to committee.

Now, we've seen in the past where this government has had problems with unintended consequences. We look at how they worked with the electrical act and how they passed one bill, and then they passed three or four more bills to correct the problems that the first bill created, all sorts of lawsuits and everything. Those are some unintended consequences that, had the government listened, could have been avoided. We've also seen examples of poor consultation, and we've seen examples of fairly good consultation. Look at the MGA: the bill was actually introduced in the Legislature, and then months of consultation. But we also have examples like Bill 6, where the government just all of a sudden plopped it down and rammed it through without proper consultation, virtually no consultation.

Now, I know they've talked about the 1,300 online survey responses to this bill while they were preparing for this bill, but the Member for Edmonton-South West brought forward a bill here some time ago regarding the time change, and he had over 30,000 responses. We have safety legislation, wide-reaching safety legislation: 1,300 responses. And the government is touting that as being fantastic.

Mr. Cyr: In nine weeks.

Mr. Loewen: In only nine weeks.

Then we have the time change legislation with 30,000 responses. Now, we know that with the time change, they travelled all across Alberta collecting input from Albertans. They took a lot of time to deal with the time change. What happened with the time change bill? The government sent it to committee even after all that. They sent it to committee. We have examples where this government has used committees, has done consultation and still sent it to committee. So I would like to suggest that this is what we need to do here. This needs to go to committee.

Well, I guess what I want to go on to now is that they've had this time, they've done this nine-week consultation period – that's what they've said they've done – they've had these different responses, and they've had eight round-table discussions, and everything. They talked to 200 people in these round-table discussions. Again, they had the 1,300 online survey responses. The Grande Prairie Chamber of Commerce has about 1,300 members. That's one chamber of commerce. That's not every small business in Grande Prairie. Those are the ones that have joined the chamber of commerce. Obviously, Grande Prairie isn't the largest city in Alberta. So when we look at this kind of consultation, I don't know that we can say that we're setting any records here or doing any really great consultation.

One thing we know for sure is that none of these people that have been consulted with have been consulted on this bill because this bill just came to us here two days ago or a day ago, whenever it came. They haven't seen this bill until now. Now is when they can actually have some input on this bill.

Now, we talked already about how it comes into force and how a good portion of it will come into force on January 1, 2018. By the time this bill passes in the Legislature, that will give these businesses roughly three weeks through the holiday season, through Christmas and New Year's, to decide how they are going to implement all these changes in their business. The small businesses don't have people just sitting there waiting for government legislation to show up so that they can say: okay; you know, what are we going to do with this? They don't have a large staff that they can do this with, but they're still going to be responsible, by January 1, to be living by this legislation.

Mr. Cyr: Through the holiday season, too.

Mr. Loewen: Through the holiday season. This is the busiest time of year for some of these businesses.

So I think it's unfair to the businesses of Alberta, the people of Alberta to not have this kind of opportunity to have this go to committee and to be able to have their input. I think it only stands to reason that we send this to committee and have this looked at properly.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Yes. I found that enlightening. Now, it's not just the retail sector that my colleague is talking about. When we're talking about the holiday season, we have all of the children being off. We have all of the companies short-staffed at this point because of vacations around the Christmas holiday season. Do you think it's reasonable that no matter what size the business, whether it's small, medium, or large, they will have the staffing requirements to be able to do this? The government, from what I understand the member is saying, is literally asking people to sacrifice their Christmas season to implement this legislation. Would you mind commenting on that?

The Deputy Speaker: The Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you. Yes, of course I believe it's very unfair. This is not the time of year to be doing this to businesses. On the time alone – I mean, three weeks – even if it wasn't Christmastime, even if it wasn't the holiday season, even if it wasn't the busiest time of year for some of these businesses, three weeks to go through something as big as this, 200 pages, and decide how the portions will start affecting them on January 1? Of course, there are other sections that come into force on April 1, so three months down the road they'll be looking at more legislation that comes into effect to try to figure out how that's going to affect their business and how they're going to respond. So, no, I don't think this is fair, and I don't think this is what the people of Alberta want or need at this time.

I think there are a lot of good things in this legislation, I'm sure, but this should have been done properly. It should have been brought in a month ago. They had all the opportunity in the world to do that. This should go to committee. We should be in committee right now reviewing this.

Now, I just want to go back to what the Member for Calgary-Klein said, that we're delaying safety and benefits and kind of an insinuation that we on this side of the House don't care about the safety of the people of Alberta. That is absolutely wrong. What I do want to do is read from the Alberta Chambers of Commerce. They say here:

If Bill 30 is passed this legislative session, the ACC is concerned with the speed changes will begin to take effect. Business, particularly small business, will have very little time to adjust or even be effectively educated on how to take on and fulfill their new responsibilities.

So this isn't me. I just said something very similar, but this is the Alberta Chambers of Commerce.

It says:

The ACC has recommended that the Alberta Government send Bill 30 to a committee . . .

Go figure. The Alberta Chambers of Commerce is suggesting the same thing we are, that this should go to committee.

. . . for further review and analysis following First and Second Reading. Taking this step will help identify how employers and employees can best adjust to changes introduced with the new legislation, which are intended to prevent illness and injury in the workplace.

Now, it also goes on to say:

WCB premium surpluses collected from employers in 2016 are approximately 350 Million.

Actually, before I get into the money part of it here, because I don't have that much time, I just want to point out that it's like the ACC is suggesting that this go to committee for further review. Now, if the members opposite want to suggest that we on this side of the House don't care about the safety of the people of Alberta, then obviously they're suggesting that the Alberta Chambers of Commerce don't care about the safety of Albertans either, and I think that's absolutely bizarre. I don't even know how to describe, without getting into any more colourful language, that this government would suggest that we on this side and the Alberta Chambers of Commerce don't care about safety. I know for a fact that that is wrong – that is wrong – and to insinuate anything of the sort I think is very, very disrespectful.

Like I say, if this was such a great concern for the government, they had all the opportunity in the world to bring it forward a month ago. They've been in power for two and a half years, but they waited till two and a half years into their term, till we're at the very end of this session, and then they're going to ram this legislation through without proper consultation. Like I say, the Alberta Chambers of Commerce are just seeing this for the first time, too. Everybody is just trying to react to this.

The Deputy Speaker: Any further speakers to the referral motion? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to this referral motion. Now, the same e-mail that my colleague was talking about, from the Alberta Chambers of Commerce, had a link to a technical briefing on Bill 30, An Act to Protect the Health and Well-being of Working Albertans, November 27, 2017. It says, "Confidential – Embargoed Material." At 61 pages this is literally the short version of the bill. This is quite the piece of literature that the Alberta government came out with.

But you know what? I have to say that at least they have a copy of something that we can utilize and look through.

I am more or less putting forward some of the points that are in this, and I will be referring to this document, probably, through a lot of my speeches because I think that it shows where the government of Alberta is standing on a lot of topics.

Now, what we have here is a document that is clear that they've done their due diligence when it comes to consulting. It says:

Consultation Summary

- A comprehensive review of Alberta's OHS system was undertaken in 2017
 - The themes of the review were:
 - Clarifying responsibilities of worksite parties in legislation
 - Improving worker engagement in OHS
 - A renewed focus on illness and injury prevention.

The themes of the review didn't include employers. That seems incredible here, that we've got clarifying of the legislation, we've got worker engagement, and we've got injury prevention, but we didn't actually include the employers in this part of it. That's bizarre, and this is in their technical briefing.

Now, we also didn't include all of the different industries in this. It's not just the employers, but we didn't include the different industry bodies in this as well. It goes on to say:

- Received input from Albertans over a [wonderful] ...

It doesn't say the word "wonderful," but it should.

... [stunning] nine-week period.

We're supposed to get this right with nine weeks of consultation?

Now, then, what we've got here – and this is something that the government is bragging up – are accomplishments.

- Over 1,300 online [surveys].

Yes.

- Nearly 90 written submissions.

That's another great win for this government.

- Eight in-person facilitated roundtable discussions involving over 200 stakeholders representing employers ...

At least, they involved employers here.

... workers, OHS professionals, health and safety associations and academics.

Now, my question in all of this is: what was the percentage of those 200 stakeholders that were actually employers and industry? I am going to bet we had probably 10 per cent of these people who were actually from industry or employers, and this is going to affect their businesses. This is an answer that maybe the government can get me later, because I think this is important.

But let's backtrack here. Let's talk about this legislation. I had already mentioned in one of my questions to one of my colleagues that we had gotten this legislation put on our desk on Monday and are expected to be able to debate this on Thursday. Now, the problem here is that the government has made sure that we're in morning, afternoon, and night sittings, so I don't even have the opportunity to put a lot of time in to be able to review this bill, to be able to get into the meat and potatoes of this bill, or even go out and consult my local constituents on this bill. This is sad.

An Hon. Member: You shouldn't have fired your staff.

Mr. Cyr: Unfortunately, the government's answer to that is that I should fire my staff.

An Hon. Member: Shouldn't.

Mr. Cyr: But I would argue that, in the end, this is terrible. What we've got here is four days to actually be moving forward on such an important piece of legislation.

Now I'd like to talk about workers' compensation. Actually, you know what? I'll take a step back. If this was the first time the government had done this, we would be going: well, jeez, you know, this isn't okay. But this seems to be a regular occurrence, especially when it comes to the Labour minister. We had Bill 17, the Fair and Family-friendly Workplaces Act, pushed through our wonderful Legislature, starting on May 24, 2017, to June 5, 2017. So we literally had 12 days to debate this important piece of legislation on our employment standards, and we had the same problem. I think they had some – what was it? – 60 days of wonderful consultations. In this case at least they put nine weeks in. That's – what? – 73 days. We're seeing improvement. We're seeing some improvement. They gave us an extra two weeks of consultation. We should all be thankful for that.

What we're seeing here is a clear direction from this government to say: we know how to make legislation, and we don't want anybody else's input on it. We saw what happens, because Bill 6 was a good flop. It ended up being so traumatic for everyone that was involved with that bill because they pushed it through the House.

Now, I think – and I think I could speak for most of my colleagues here – that we all want people safe on the job site. I can't imagine one of my colleagues standing up and saying: gee, I hope somebody gets hurt. Putting that aside, what is it that we're looking to do here? We're saying: let's get it right the first time. Now, I'm a guy that says: "Let's look at what happened when they first brought in legislation. Let's look back, because we can actually learn lessons from the past."

The Workers' Compensation Act was brought in in 1973. The first reading was October 12, 1973. Then what happened was that it made it through the House. Now, I would like to talk about that first day that they brought that in for second reading. The second reading date was October 22, 1973. They actually gave 10 days between first reading, which would have been when they first put the bill down so people could read it, and second reading. To be able to get it done, we got 10 days.

Now, I understand that that is also a very short time frame. But what I will say, which is important to all of this, is that this legislation came from a committee. This actually came from a committee. They saw the importance of all parties putting their part into it.

I'd like to quote some of the Hansard from October 22, 1973. This is on Bill 70, the Workers' Compensation Act. I would like to talk about a member, Dr. Hohol – and I apologize if I got his name wrong – and the intent here is important. What he says is:

I wish to recall the membership of the special Select Committee of the Legislature and to extend to them the government's and, through you, sir, the Legislature's appreciation and thanks for the many, many hours of selfless work on so important a matter.

So, then, when they first brought this in, they recognized the importance of a committee. They recognized that this needed more discussion than just being rammed through the House.

Now, it goes on to say:

Mr. Anderson, Mr. Drain, Mr. Cooper, Dr. Paproski, Mr. King, Mr. Diachuk, Mr. Harle and Mr. Werry each brought to the deliberations his own occupational background and also his own unique convictions, his own beliefs, his own value system and his own ideals to the job.

This is important, that we have a variety of opinions in making legislation.

It goes on to further say:

It was with this background that this dedicated group of legislators developed the recommendations of the committee on which the bill was formed. That there were strong disagreements from time to time attests only to the calibre of the committee members. But there was one overwhelming agreement throughout, and that was that without fear or favour we must make the strongest possible effort to bring to the Legislature the best report of which we were able.

They absolutely saw the value of this.

You know what? Excluding the opposition in creating legislation creates problems. Excluding the stakeholders of this legislation creates problems. This government continues to move down that road, and you know what? We're going to continue to see these kinds of problems. When you stop listening to people and start thinking that you know everything, that is where the true problem is. That's where ideology trumps reason, trumps integrity, trumps all aspects. It's important that you understand that this referral motion is very important. We need to get this legislation right. We need to make sure that we protect our workers. I don't believe anybody in this House – again I will quote this – wants to actually hurt another human being, whether they're in a working space or not.

Now, to go on a little further down:

To chair this outstanding committee, dealing with such very human considerations, was for me one of my most challenging and rewarding responsibilities in government.

Industry and the worker and Albertans generally, have been well served by the legislators who sat on this committee and by the legislation which will emerge from the report that it put together. The committee was strong in its unanimous view that reviews of The Workmen's Compensation Act, which have to be undertaken from time, should be made by a special select committee... in contrast to, for example, commissions or tribunals.

What we're looking at here is a recognition that our committees can do wonderful things. They can get out there, and they can actually make a piece of legislation all that much stronger. Yet what we've got is committees being used for daylight saving time. Now, this was an important topic. There is no disputing. This was something that very strongly engaged Albertans. Fair enough. That was something that we could use a committee for. But when we've got a piece of legislation as important as workers' compensation, this is something where we need to make sure that we get all sides of it, make sure that we hear all points of view.

What I would like to go on to here is a little further down. This is something that I think was very interesting because when we start to look at what we're dealing with today, we're seeing that a lot of the same issues or same things that were brought forward 40 years ago, we're bringing forward in this piece of legislation that we see in front of us. Now, I'm going to quote this.

The board pays permanent disability compensation, that is to say pensions, by capitalization, meaning setting aside money from which earned interest will pay compensation during the lifetime of the worker. This being the largest single cost against board funds, it is imperative to obtain the best possible investment returns, thereby reducing the cost to the industry.

The government, Mr. Speaker, is well impressed with the committee's deep concern with safety. It is not moving on this one part of the committee's report, and for reasons that I believe the committee and this Legislature will accept. In view of the government having made the judgment that the whole matter of occupational health and safety should be a sign for comprehensive study and report by a commission, it is reasonable to await that report.

In the meantime, the legislation does reflect our serious attitude on this important matter. In addition, every effort will be made to improve and to upgrade safety in all the departments and agencies wherever such responsibilities may lie. At the same time we appeal strongly to industry and labour to work together to ensure the safest possible...

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Yes, please. I believe the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake was just finishing a very important point, and I would like to be able to hear the rest of what he was letting us all enjoy.

The Deputy Speaker: Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you. To finish the sentence off:

... conditions with respect to the worksite and the workshop in their enterprise.

Here is what happened. The committee put forward the report. The Legislature or the government in charge didn't accept the whole report. That's okay. Just because you have committees working on reports or working together doesn't mean the government is required to enact those recommendations. You would hope that they would listen, hope that it would influence the decision. In the end, going and doing committee work is only going to strengthen the legislation. Even though maybe the government may not like the direction of the report in some cases, you will find that overall you'll get a stronger piece of legislation through it.

Mr. van Dijken: It's important for transparency.

Mr. Cyr: It is absolutely important for transparency.

Now, what I'd like to move on to is where the NDP leader at the time, Mr. Notley, was also speaking on this piece of legislation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think first of all I would like to say, in reading over the report of the committee, that a number of excellent recommendations were made. It's obvious, Mr. Speaker, that a good deal of work went into the preparation of the report which was tabled in the Legislature last spring.

I certainly agree with certain aspects of this report and of the legislation we have before us.

I'm bringing up the past NDP leader and the discussion where he's saying that he saw value in moving forward with committee work. He didn't agree fully with the committee recommendations, just like the government didn't agree with the committee recommendations. That's the adversarial part of our democracy. In the end, we may not agree on everything, but if we work together, we get a better piece of legislation moving forward.

Now, Mr. Notley in his speech goes on about a lot of the things that we see within this bill, so this is something that we can see is important to our NDP colleagues across the aisle. Fair enough. But what is it that we could have contributed to this piece of legislation if we had the time and the ability to be able to go through this legislation more thoroughly? If there is one that we should spend a year on getting it right, this is definitely one of those pieces of legislation.

I will tell you that a referral motion to the committee just makes common sense. I would ask every member of this Legislature to please consider it because we've seen what happens when you rush it. You get things wrong, and then you have to do a piece of legislation to Band-Aid and fix the problems that you've created. The unintended results of rushing through legislation always impact the person you're trying to protect. What is it we're going to see that is going to impact those workers in a bad way or a negative way because we didn't fully think through how to get this legislation in place?

This is an important discussion, and we're going to be done this whole discussion within, most likely, two weeks with almost no consultation from the actual employers who have to implement what we're putting forward. You know what? They might have a better way. We might have a better way.

You know what? I don't believe that the government is trying to put red tape in front of these employers so that they can't put people to work. But, in the end, if we do put red tape in front of these employers, we end up putting people out of work or preventing people from getting work. We've heard the government talking lately about 70,000 new jobs. Is this something that could affect that? I don't know because – you know what? – we haven't had enough time. We haven't had enough time.

I guess that getting past the last bill, Bill 17, the Fair and Family-friendly Workplaces Act, the one that was just pushed through, that still . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the referral motion? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to speak to my hon. colleague's referral amendment. There have been some really fantastic arguments made here today, and I really do hope that all members in this House have been listening and thoughtfully paying attention because, after all, we're here to debate in an effort to change each other's minds. Unfortunately, we're not hearing much from the government, which is hard, because I believe that the government has had a lot of time to digest the information in this bill, clearly, before it was tabled.

You know, we've heard a little bit about extensive consultation, and that's something that I think would be valuable to this debate in the House. That certainly would be something that we could do in committee with this piece of legislation. We could bring in experts, bring in anyone who wants to provide feedback on this very large piece of legislation. Yet we see this tabled just a few days ago.

We've been given very little time to digest the information, to get feedback from Albertans. I'm going to go home this weekend and have two days, because I also have committee work tomorrow, to consult with my constituents, which gives me a Saturday and a Sunday. I'm not really quite sure that that's going to provide proper feedback.

I think that the only option that we have at this point, Madam Speaker, is to put this into a committee, where meaningful work could take place. I doubt very much that anyone in this Chamber doesn't think that Albertans are in first place, that Albertans' voices matter, and that they need to be brought forward to a committee to gather these recommendations, gather the expert advice, and then bring back those recommendations to this Assembly, where we will have enough proper, thoughtful, expert information in front of all of us.

Very clearly, the opposition here today has been saying that we don't have the information, and we don't have time to get the information. You know, we're about a week away from adjourning this House for the Christmas season, and we had the largest bill of the entire session tabled just a few days ago. It's frustrating not only for the opposition but, I can assure you, for Albertans because they only just got this information a couple of days ago. They haven't had time to digest this information.

You can't tell me that the government, Madam Speaker, has talked to every stakeholder in this province. That's insane. There's no possible way. It would be prudent, however, to do the work of consultation in committee, which is what this amendment proposes here today. It's important. It's democratic. I just don't quite see what type of argument could be on the table as to why we wouldn't refer a piece of legislation to a committee for meaningful work.

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt, hon. member, but pursuant to Standing Order 4(2.1) the House stands adjourned until 1:30 this afternoon.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, November 30, 2017

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon, everyone. Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of visitors joining us today. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the ambassador of Austria to Canada, His Excellency Dr. Stefan Pehringer, and the honorary consul general of Austria in Calgary, Mr. Nikolaus Demiantschuk.

His Excellency's visit has given us a chance to identify areas in which Alberta and Austria can grow our relationship. With the Canada-EU comprehensive economic trade agreement now provisionally applied, there are plenty of opportunities for our two jurisdictions to expand bilateral trade and collaborate, especially in research, clean tech, and life sciences. We look forward to working with His Excellency on further developing and strengthening our relationship with Austria.

I would now ask my guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, I'm rising as well to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mrs. Abhilasha Joshi, who is the consul general of India, as well as Consul Mr. Amar Jit Singh. Mrs. Joshi was posted as consul general of India in Vancouver in August this year after having served as consul general in Brazil.

Alberta's trade with India is about $350 million each year, and in fact, Mr. Speaker, they are one of our largest agricultural export markets, and I was pleased that the minister of agriculture led a trade mission to India this spring. Like Alberta, India has a young population and a fast-growing economy. Our relationship will continue to be a priority as our government expands trade opportunities for local businesses, working closely with the Alberta office in New Delhi.

Mrs. Joshi and Mr. Singh are seated in your gallery, Mr. Speaker. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I am honoured to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 30 young students from the grade 6 class at Calder elementary school along with parents and teachers. Thank you to the teachers, parents, and volunteers who support these young leaders and help them lead healthy, happy lives. I'll now ask them to rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Wye elementary school. There are three classes, and their teachers – Sheryl, Tanya, and Janet – and many parent chaperones are here today. It's a very engaging school to visit with. They've been engaging in the process of what bill debate looks like, and they look forward to being here for question period today. I ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other school groups today?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members a group of activists from the rally to save fertility treatments, just held on the steps of the Legislature. Thanks to these women and many other activists and Friends of Medicare and United Infertility Edmonton, I'll be tabling a petition with over 25,000 signatures to bring back fertility treatments at the regional fertility and women's endocrine clinic at Edmonton's Lois Hole hospital. I'll ask them to please rise as I name them so that we can give them the traditional warm welcome of the Legislature: Sandra Azocar, Friends of Medicare; Dajana Fabjanovich, Crystal Pratt, Angela Pfeifer, all from United Infertility Edmonton. Thank you for coming and expressing your needs. Let's give them a warm welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce visitors from the constituency of Edmonton-Glenora who are seated in the members' gallery, and I invite them to please rise as I introduce them. They are Rick Stewart, David Hook, and Beverly Lafortune from St. John Ambulance. St. John Ambulance has a long history with our province. It was instrumental in building compulsory first aid training for workplaces in the 1920s, and they are valuable community partners and volunteers serving communities across Alberta, providing first aid and emergency response support and training. I want to thank them for their commitment to providing a culture of safety in Alberta and ask my colleagues to please join me in extending the warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise in the House to introduce to you and through you to other members in the Chamber four members of the group United Infertility who are in the public gallery today. They organized a rally on the steps of the Legislature earlier in support of keeping fertility services available at the Lois Hole hospital for women. I had the pleasure to address their supporters, who are indeed a dedicated group of champions for public health services. I'd ask that they rise as I call their names to receive the traditional warm welcome of the House: Amanda Butt, Dani Bourget, Carissa Therou, and Sara Spence.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Sabina Lange and her grandson Tom Boyce. Sabina moved to Alberta from Germany almost 50 years ago. She raised her two daughters, Connie and Rose, here. She's a vibrant, independent senior, a loving mother, a grandmother, and a devoted partner. Her grandson Tom is my ministerial assistant, and he told me he could not be more proud to be showing his oma around the Alberta Legislature. Thank you, Tom, for your service and dedication to making life better for all Albertans. I'd ask that they both stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Darby Lee Young, a remarkable person who's never allowed her physical limitations to stop her from following her dreams. One of those dreams was to apply her personal experiences as a disabled individual to her professional life so she could help others with physical challenges chase their own dreams, and she's done that and so much more. She founded Level Playing Field Inc., which promotes accessible and universal design solutions in urban environments. Darby is also on the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities, and I can tell you she looks forward with keen interest to seeing the council move forward at a pace perhaps somewhat quicker than it has to date. She also won one of the Calgary Stampede's western legacy awards and most recently was named one of YWCA Calgary's 150 women who dare. I'll be joining Darby and others at city hall tomorrow to celebrate the International Day of Persons with Disabilities, and I ask Darby to please stand now and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Service Alberta and Minister of Status of Women.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you a group of advocates from HIV Edmonton, an organization that is near and dear to me and my family. Tomorrow is December 1, and it is World AIDS Day. It's a day to reflect on the awesome and amazing achievements that have been made in HIV and AIDS and, most importantly, to renew our commitment to end HIV. HIV Edmonton's long-term vision is zero new infections, zero stigma, zero discrimination, and zero AIDS-related deaths. The support of dedicated volunteers like our guests in the gallery today will get us to zero. I ask that Shelley Williams, executive director, and other staff, volunteers, and advocates please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all the members in the House my guest, Stacey Carmichael. Stacey has worked in the community of Red Deer for many years demonstrating leadership related to homelessness, mental health, and addictions. She is currently the executive director of Turning Point Society, which is the local harm reduction organization in Red Deer. Turning Point has been working to foster healthy responses to HIV and related issues through support, education, and research. I would ask my guest to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

Thank you.

1:40

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you. With your indulgence, I have three introductions today. It's my honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two of Edmonton's city councillors. My riding of Edmonton-Decore is overlapped by two of the wards, but of course they also overlap into some of my colleagues' here in Edmonton as well. Ward 3 is represented by Jon Dziadyk, who was just elected to the position for the first time in the recent municipal election, and ward 7 is represented by Tony Caterina, who is serving Edmontonians now for his fourth term. They are seated in your gallery, Mr. Speaker, and I would ask that they now please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mr. Nielsen: It's also a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly one of my constituents, Moatasem Samara. Sixteen years ago Moatasem arrived in Canada, Edmonton specifically, for graduate studies at the University of Alberta. He's a proud small-business owner. He co-owns three pharmacies in Edmonton, one of which is in my riding of Edmonton-Decore, and is working to set up the fourth pharmacy now. His businesses employ nine people in addition to himself and his business partner. I would like to thank him for taking such good care of my constituents in Edmonton-Decore, and I would ask now that he please rise to receive the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mr. Nielsen: It's also, again, a pleasure to rise for the third time and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two staff members from Edmonton Meals on Wheels, Caitlin Fleming and Sarah McCrimmon. Although Edmonton Meals on Wheels is not in my riding of Edmonton-Decore – they are in the great riding of Edmonton-Centre – my office does have a very special relationship with this organization. As I have 21 schools in my riding along with numerous organizations that serve children, we have a special partnership where the children in my riding design and make cards for the numerous special occasions to be sent out with the meals. These cards have brightened up the lives of numerous seniors throughout the city of Edmonton, and I'm very proud of all the children who have taken part in this special endeavour. I would ask that Caitlin and Sarah now please rise to receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Katie Kitschke, the executive director of Saffron. Katie has shown an incredible dedication in assisting those in Strathcona county who have been affected by sexual assault. Katie and her staff at Saffron sexual assault centre provide counselling to victims and their loved ones. I'll be speaking more about her work in my member's statement later on today. I invite all of them to stand and receive the traditional welcome from the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my absolute pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a very dear friend of mine. She's a tireless crusader for the conservative cause in Alberta. Leah Wood was the provincial director of the legacy Wildrose Party before serving on the interim joint board and is now a director on the United Conservative Party board. Outside her political engagement Leah and her husband, Alton, run a cattle ranch close to Drayton Valley and are staunch advocates for Alberta's agricultural community and the rodeo, having served on the ag society board and on the Rotary Club. Leah is a business owner, a community leader, a mom, a proud Albertan, and a very dear friend. I would ask that she rise to receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two constituents of mine that I've gotten to know over the last number of years. They are the father and the grandmother of one of our page program attendees, Amanda Porter. I'd like to introduce to you Joan Porter – she worked for many years as a nurse in the Barrhead area and also on a farm in the Fort Assiniboine area and was there to help my wife and me as we got into parenthood and helped to deliver some of our children – and also her son James Porter, who was available to help on our campaign in 2015. I would ask them to please rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

World AIDS Day

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am humbled to rise today to speak to World AIDS Day. Alberta is proud to join the international movement in declaring December 1 as World AIDS Day, a day dedicated to raising awareness around AIDS and HIV infection and remembering those who have died of the disease. Since 1988 World AIDS Day has recognized the devastation this disease causes and that every nation has a responsibility to ensure universal treatment, care, and support for those living with HIV.

The first Canadian case of AIDS presented itself in 1979. By 1983 Canada established the National Task Force on AIDS to help fight the epidemic. Since that time science and medicine have changed HIV from a death sentence to a chronic but mostly manageable disease. However, today there is still a lot of stigma and discrimination for those who live with HIV. The mere mention of the word "HIV" can bring judgment and can instantly change interactions. Few diseases are more misunderstood or feared than HIV and AIDS. World AIDS Day is important because it reminds us that HIV has not gone away and that more work is needed to end it.

Our guests from HIV Edmonton support a vision of zero: zero new HIV infections, zero stigma and discrimination, and zero AIDS-related deaths. Similarly, my guests from Turning Point in Red Deer echo the same determined vision for the Red Deerians they serve. On this day let us reflect on the advancements we have made in our fight against AIDS and HIV. More importantly, let us renew our commitment to ending HIV. Now is the time to get to zero and end it for good.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

I must say that it is nice to hear a child in this place on occasion.

The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Volunteers in Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two thousand and seventeen has marked a year of celebration to recognize our country's 150th birthday. I've had the pleasure of attending many events organized by volunteers throughout my constituency to help celebrate this special birthday.

Two individuals from my constituency have earned the Senate of Canada's 150th commemorative medal, which was created to recognize Canadians who through dedication and volunteer work make their community a better place. Mr. André Noël of Morinville has been contributing for many years to the vitality of Centralta's Francophonie. Involved for more than 13 years in the Centralta Tourism Society, he has worked to ensure that the contribution of francophones is recognized and recorded in both official languages. He is a director and member of the Morinville Historical and Cultural Society, and he is a founding member of the Saint-Jean-Baptiste Day festival held in Morinville in June of each year.

Mrs. Joy Wierenga from Neerlandia has invested significant energy and time into community events and celebrations. In addition, she organized the compilation and writing of her community's history, detailing the lives of the first settlers in the region and, later, the community's more recent history. She is described as one whose dedication and passion for her community is boundless, and the impact she has had on the lives of those in the local area is hard to overstate.

On June 28 I stood on the banks of the Athabasca River with over a thousand people to welcome 15 large voyageur canoes. About 170 paddlers had launched their canoes six days earlier by Jasper and paddled about 333 kilometres to Fort Assiniboine. This brigade was more than just a canoe trip; it was a celebration of our nation's history. The welcoming event volunteer organizers Quentin and Teresa Olson along with many other hands did a wonderful job to provide entertainment and a barbecue dinner for all.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud of these and all of the volunteers in my riding who selflessly give of their time and efforts. Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Provincial Credit Rating

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, under this NDP government's watch Alberta's credit rating has been downgraded a staggering six times. Here's what a respected credit-rating agency said about the latest: the downgrade reflects large operating deficits and rapid debt accumulation, and Alberta's negative trend is because the province has yet to demonstrate any real willingness to address the weakest budget outlook among all Canadian provinces. It's clear that this government has no real plan to rein in its expenses. To the Premier: does she think that this reckless behaviour with Albertans' money can continue, or will she finally begin to rein in Alberta's expenses?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a good thing the member opposite corrected his language because we have reined in the expenses that Albertans are facing. We've made sure that we capped tuition. We've made sure that we capped electricity prices. We've rolled back school fees. All of these things are making life more affordable for Albertans, and we're not going to stop doing them. We're going to stand up for Alberta families and work to make it better. Guess what? Not only are we making life more affordable, but our jobs plan is working, too. That's because we have 70,000 new full-time jobs since just over a year ago, this time last year. It's working. It's time you guys got on board.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, the NDP can say it as loud as they want, but I can tell you that Albertans don't think that six credit downgrades is acceptable. When asked about this yesterday, the Finance minister said that this will all come out in the wash and be a wash. The Finance minister is clearly confused. More taxpayer dollars for debt servicing will actually reduce services despite what the Deputy Premier just said. So will the Finance minister stand up in this House and make it very clear how much these credit downgrades are going to continue to cost Albertans? [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members.
The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's credit rating remains among the strongest in the country, and our balance sheet is the strongest among provinces, with the lowest debt-to-GDP ratio. Those are actual facts. I know that the members opposite like to whip things up, but it's important for us to lay the facts on the table. We'll be sharing more about our path to balance with Albertans in the near future, but this work takes time, and it must be done carefully and compassionately with Alberta families. We are proud to be doing that work, and we are on track absolutely to make sure that we continue to have the strongest economy and the strongest balance sheet in our country.

Mr. Nixon: The NDP want to talk about facts; let's talk about some. Last year debt-servicing costs alone were over $1 billion, that's $240 for every single person in our province that could have been spent on services, things that are needed by Albertans. If this government does not change direction, it's going to become more and more expensive. But, again, Mr. Speaker, I asked a very simple question. Will the Finance minister stand up in this House and tell us how much the increased costs will be as a result of his sixth credit downgrade?

Ms Hoffman: Minimal, Mr. Speaker. As the Deputy Premier I'm happy to answer this because – you know what? – what they're asking us to do, the members opposite, is to stop spending, and they're asking us to cut 20 per cent. That's what their leader, Jason Kenney, said. What would that mean? Firing 16,000 teachers and doubling our class sizes, closing half of Alberta's acute-care hospitals and 600 emergency spaces, and wiping out the student aid budget for postsecondary learners. That's what they're calling for. We won't stand for it. We'll stand up for Albertans.

The Speaker: It's a lovely day in the neighbourhood.
Second main question.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, that is ridiculous. Again, a very clear question was asked on a very important issue. Six credit downgrades under this government's watch. All I've asked in these last few questions is something very simple. Will the Finance minister stand up and tell us what that increased tax will be, what the increased costs will be to Albertans as a result of his mismanagement? Yes or no, or does he not know?

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, what I can tell you is that we know that Alberta is the envy of many, many provinces. We have a strong balance sheet, we have the lowest debt-to-GDP, and we are in good shape. You know, we've heard from credit-rating agencies before. They want us to cut $3 billion to $4 billion out of our budget so that they can keep our credit in place. That would hurt Albertans. That would stunt the recession. That would put us farther back. That would make us like Saskatchewan.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, yet again all the NDP have is fearmongering. They want to get up and they want to talk about fearmongering and all sorts of different issues except for the record. Here is the question I am asking. Six credit downgrades under this government's watch, under this Finance minister's watch. I have simply asked in this House for him to stand up and tell us how much that will cost Albertans as a result of that mismanagement. He either does not know or he is refusing to answer. Yet again, through you to the Finance minister: how much more will it cost Albertans as a result of your mismanagement and these credit downgrades?

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, the other side doesn't want to talk about the good things going on in Alberta. The other side doesn't want to talk about the return of 72,000 jobs since the low of July 2016. [interjections]

The Speaker: Keep the volume down.
Go ahead, Mr. Minister. Finish.

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, they keep running our economy down. Mr. Kenney and the Conservatives are so eager for the good economic story not to get out in this province. We are starting to return to 4 per cent growth.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Nixon: Again, Mr. Speaker, nothing but deflecting the question. This government has a failed record. They have two cancelled pipelines. They've got another one that everybody in B.C. seems to be working to stop. They have a carbon tax that they brought forward that they said would buy social licence, and it hasn't worked. But putting all that aside, this is an extremely simple question to the Finance minister. He has six credit downgrades under his time as Finance minister. I've asked, I think, six times now in this House today if he will rise and tell us how much that is going to cost Albertans. Do you know? Yes or no, Mr. Finance minister?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The members opposite are very clear in that they want to push for deep, brutal cuts. We've lived through that before; we've experienced that before. Instead, what we did is move forward with a plan... [interjections] I know they want to yell and shut me up, but they're not going to do that because I'm going to stand up on this side of the House for Albertans. [interjections]

The Speaker: I can't hear.
Please continue.

Ms Hoffman: On this side of the House we're going to stand up for the families who are sending their kids to school, who want to make sure they have a quality education in a reasonable class size. On this side of the House we're going to borrow to make sure that we're building much-needed health infrastructure. We've opened hospitals in communities like High Prairie and Edson, and we're going to keep moving forward because it's been since the 1980s since Edmonton got one. We're not going to cut 20 per cent like the members opposite. We're going to stand with Albertans.

The Speaker: Third main question. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, again they want to continue to stand up over and over in this House, not answer simple questions, avoid the facts around their records. We're just asking very simple questions. The credit-rating agencies say that this is a result of the management of this Finance minister and this government of the province. Again, how much more is this going to cost Albertans as a result of these credit downgrades? Does the Finance minister know, or does he not know? Extremely simple question, and we don't want to hear any more fearmongering. Stand up and answer the question.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, we had a choice in this province. We could go down the road they wanted us to go down, or we could stand behind Albertans and ensure they got through this recession. The costs are minimal. I've said that. We are going forward. We are going to grow the fastest of any province in spite of their activities.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, the costs are minimal? What are the costs? It's a very simple question. Already we know that it's $1 billion in debt-servicing costs alone before this latest credit downgrading. That is over $240 per person in this province. It's not minimal. I don't think my constituents think that, and I don't think your constituents think that. What I do know is that your constituents and mine want an answer to this simple question: how much more is this going to cost them as a result of this Finance minister's mismanagement and six credit downgrades? It's as simple as that. Can the Finance minister answer that question, or does he not know? It's okay if he doesn't know. Just stand up and say it.

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, we are doing the work that this province needs to put it back on its feet. They would have kept us on our knees for years. The costs are minimal. It's $50,000 to the end of the fiscal year.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Nixon: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. This is finance 101, Minister, you would think. This is about as simple a question as I could ask in this place. I'm now about to ask it for the ninth time. This is the Finance minister of Alberta, that oversees one of the largest economies in the world. Does the Finance minister know the answer to this question or not? Will he take it seriously, stand up, and tell us how much this is going to cost Albertans and what he's going to do about his gross mismanagement of our economy, that has resulted in six credit downgrades under his watch?

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, the previous Leader of the Opposition was a deficit backer when he was in the federal government. He saw that you needed to support your economy. I answered the question with the last question. It's $50,000 to the end of the year.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Infertility Treatment in Edmonton

Ms McPherson: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I spoke at a rally on the Legislature stairs today about the service transition at the Royal Alex regional fertility clinic, which won't be offering important, uninsured services like IVF, and we haven't seen details on additional supports these patients will need. AHS said that they'd look into it, but we haven't heard a thing. Patients have been told that they will not be reimbursed for services they already paid for and now won't receive. To the Minister of Health: what is the status of the support for patients who are affected by the changes at the Royal Alex fertility clinic?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. Of course, to all families who are struggling – and we all know somebody who is. About 1 in 6 Alberta families does experience infertility at some point. Our hearts definitely go out to them, and we're working to make sure that there's a smooth transition. Every single one of the patients at the current clinic has been contacted by a letter and follow-up attempts by phone call to be able to talk about the transition plan, and any costs related to transferring biological material are going to be carried by AHS to ensure as smooth a transition as possible.

Ms McPherson: Mr. Speaker, families who have been on wait-lists at the clinic are now facing further delays. Some of these families have been trying to grow their families for years and are heartbroken at the prospect that they may not even be able to store their embryos as these wait times come with additional costs for storage and transportation, creating further barriers. To the minister: how are these people supposed to plan for their future family when they don't know when or even if they will be able to get treatment?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Again, just to reiterate, the transportation costs from the current storage facility to the new facility will be borne by AHS, not by individual patients. I absolutely understand the nervousness, and we do encourage all of the families who are impacted to please reach back out to AHS. They've sent letters and made phone call attempts so that they can arrange for as smooth a transition as possible because we know that additional stress is not conducive to good care. That's one of the reasons why the counselling services and other publicly insured services at that clinic will continue to be in place.

Ms McPherson: Patients of the Royal Alex clinic have been told by AHS to seek out services at the new private clinic on Jasper Avenue or the existing one in Calgary or perhaps in B.C. Doctors trained in IVF at the University of Alberta may now have to look for work in the private sector instead of in the public system. Can the Minister of Health explain to us how she intends to strengthen reproductive health in the public system or if she intends to continue to encourage privatization?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, our track record is very clear. On this side of the House we stand for public health care and public access. Everything that is publicly insured will continue to be offered at the hospital and continue to be publicly insured. The pieces that were already privately delivered at that facility at that hospital: the physicians are moving to a new clinic, and the physicians will continue to offer those privately insured services in the city of Edmonton. We are standing up to continue to reduce wait times and improve access for the publicly insured services. Again, our hearts go out to any family that is struggling with fertility.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think everyone in this House knows someone that has accessed fertility treatments to help them start a family, and I've heard how deeply personal that journey is. So I understand that the concerns came up after the changes to the fertility clinic at the Royal Alex, an important resource for families seeking support. Given the importance of these fertility services for Alberta, to the Minister of Health: why will IVF services no longer be available there?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for what we know is an important topic of interest to many Albertans. I know that infertility is a painful struggle for many Albertans, and again my heart does go out to families dealing with this uncertainty and stress because of the change.

Two physicians have made the choice to leave the fertility clinic at the current location and to go to a different one. My understanding is that they're hoping to transfer their patients, those who are interested in doing so, because the clinic will no longer offer the noninsured services at the current location. However, the clinic will remain open at the Lois Hole hospital and will continue to provide all the insured services that are available and, hopefully, with shorter wait times, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that there have been concerns about privatization of services at the fertility clinic, to the same minister: what fertility services are available through our public health care system?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some of the services that are publicly covered include diagnostic testing, endocrinology, and semen analysis. Once the transition is complete, we will in fact be able to expand capacity for those insured services so that more Albertans will be able to access them. This change will also increase space for other important women's health services such as reproductive mental health supports and bereavement programs, cancer screenings and treatment, and care for high-risk pregnancies.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this is a difficult transition for many families, to the same minister: what measures are being taken to communicate these changes to patients using the clinic?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, AHS has informed me that they have sent letters to the patients and have made some attempts via phone to follow up. We certainly do invite patients to – I've invited some of the folks involved with the rally today to meet with me. We reached out to them earlier this week, and I wanted to have an opportunity to meet with them today, but I understand that they'll be available in the coming days instead. AHS has reached out to patients to answer questions, review their care plans, and to transfer to other clinics as necessary. All transition costs for cryogenic material, again, will be covered by AHS. Again, I have absolutely extended an invitation and hope to meet with them at their easiest convenience.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, there appears to be a credibility gap between what the minister is saying and the experience of the folks suffering with this. The abrupt removal of fertility treatments from the Lois Hole hospital for women in Edmonton has come as a devastating blow for hundreds, and I don't see it as likely to improve access and improve wait times. Today a rally on the steps highlighted many of those affected, and they're in the gallery today. Thousands more have signed formal and online petitions, which I'll table shortly. To the minister: will you reverse this decision? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Two physicians at that clinic that have been providing uninsured services have chosen to move their practice to a different clinic. I can't force them to reverse that decision. It was the decision that was made. They're continuing to provide their services in the city of Edmonton. I have made very clear to AHS that we want to ensure that any transition is done with ease to the patients and to their families and that all insured services continue to be provided there. AHS believes that they'll be able to reduce the wait times and provide more of the insured services with that space.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, we'll take that as a no.

Since 2015 Alberta Liberals have campaigned on a promise to provide public funding for costly fertility treatments, which would save patients money and save the health system money. No other party has made the promise, choosing instead to send couples to private clinics, whose prices are much higher than those at the Lois Hole. Today I want to give this government an opportunity to change that. Will your government commit to funding at least the first round of expensive IVF treatments, saving both patient costs and the system costs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

2:10

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, I look forward to an opportunity to meet with some of the folks who have been involved in organizing this. I have a desire to meet with them and have reached out and look forward to discussing this more. Again, I know how difficult challenges with fertility can be on Albertans. One of the things is that we're working very diligently to protect and strengthen our public health care system. We know that members opposite are calling for deep and brutal cuts. We're not going to do that. We're working with Alberta families. I don't want to make commitments that I won't be able to follow through on, but I certainly look forward to and am open to opportunities that we might be able to explore.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Dr. Swann: Well, the other important impact here is the loss of academic training programs and opportunities. This clinic is one of only two academic IVF centres in Canada. More IVF specialists have been trained at the University of Alberta in the last 10 years than any other university in Canada. Now AHS has encouraged successful doctors to leave the public system for the private system.

What is the government's plan to train the next generation of fertility specialists, who've been forced into the private system?

Ms Hoffman: Again, Mr. Speaker, I want to clarify that AHS has informed me that the physicians made a decision to move to a different practice. That is a decision that I think we need to respect. We certainly want to ensure that all the publicly delivered services continue to be offered in the hospital, and that's our intention. We respect the decisions that others have made to move their practice, but we are going to make sure that everything that is publicly delivered we're fighting to protect, strengthen, and improve. I know the members opposite are yelling at me to move privatization models, but we're not going to do that. We're going to keep fighting for the publicly insured services to continue to be publicly insured.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, the Finance minister has said that he can and will balance the budget by 2023. Does he still maintain that he can achieve it? Yes or no, please?

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, we'll be sharing more about that path to balance with Albertans in the near future. As we move towards Budget 2018, we are going to be carefully and compassionately watching our spending. We have opened up the web lines so that people can tell us what their views around cutting and shaving our budget are. But, yes, the plan is still to balance by 2023.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, given that multiple times today the Deputy Premier and the Finance minister have said that they won't cut 20 per cent from their budget and given that a 10 per cent, or $10 billion, deficit is 20 per cent of your budget, how can you do both?

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, there is a growing economy in this province. Everybody knows that we're going to grow at least 4 per cent. I met with economists earlier today, and they were all bullish on our numbers. They said: yes, those numbers make sense. As the economy grows, as we restrict spending, and as we diversify our economy, we will get to balance in 2023.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, that sounds a lot like our plan.

Mr. Speaker, the Finance minister has said that he will balance the budget through hiring freezes and attrition. Can the minister balance the budget on these measures alone?

Mr. Ceci: You know, that side's plan to balance the budget is different, Mr. Speaker. They want to give massive tax giveaways to their friends and insiders. They want to pay for those massive tax giveaways by cutting the programs and services that we all rely on. We're not going to let that happen. We're going to balance by 2023 in the sensible way that we've talked about.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Land Titles Registry Website Outage

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since Sunday evening Alberta realtors, lawyers, buyers, and sellers of property have been stuck in limbo after the land titles search website crashed. This means that hundreds of thousands of dollars in transactions were stalled. No real reason for the site failure was given other than a technical glitch. It is this kind of secrecy that is a concern to all Albertans. To the Minister of Service Alberta: for the record did the site actually crash due to an update, or was your department hacked and we lost total control of the Alberta land titles system?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans deserve a government that makes life better by focusing on what matters most. Certainly, we know the importance of the land titles system. [interjections]

The Speaker: Go ahead.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, it really doesn't help the situation with this, like, hyperbolic, you know, out-of-thin-air suggestion. The reason that has been given is the actual reason, I can assure the member opposite, and we're working on it.* We've extended land titles hours to be able to deal with this issue, and we have everyone working on this to get it back up and running.

Mr. Cyr: Given that this complete site failure clearly shows the limitations of the government's IT system and given the serious impact that stalled transactions and the inability to pull property information have on our real estate industry, if this is truly an update failure, why was there no contingency system in place to ensure that businesses and the personal interests of thousands of Albertans were protected, Minister?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is one platform available for these purposes. It's the SPIN platform, and unfortunately when something as serious as what occurred happens, there are unfortunate consequences of sites going down. This is not terribly unusual, unfortunately, when we talk about websites overall. But I can assure the public that we are working on this, and we will ensure that it's repaired, and we will learn from it to prevent this kind of thing from happening again.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this critical failure of the land titles system was so serious that you had to shut down your Edmonton and Calgary land offices and given that these IT disruptions could negatively affect the privacy and security of individuals and businesses and given that the system went down yet again today – there are clearly no adequate backup measures in place – to the minister: what assurances can you give to Albertans that our land titles system is safe under your direction?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, the assertion that there is somehow a privacy issue here is just way out to lunch. There was an update that came. It caused the system to crash. We are fixing the system. These assertions are not helpful to anyone. We are working on the problem. We will have it back up and running, I assure the public. When we talk about transparency, they really are ones to talk. When we look at the record of Mr. Kenney, he refuses to disclose anything to the public. This is a computer glitch, nothing more.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Student Achievement in Mathematics

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The trends in international mathematics and science study, or TIMSS, has been administered across the world every four years since 1995. TIMSS data is collected from students in grades 4 and 8. In 1995 Alberta's grade 4 results indicated that our math achievement results were roughly in the middle of the countries that participated. However, our results have been steadily declining ever since. To the Minister of Education: are you concerned about the steady decline of our math results in standardized international testing over the last 22 years?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. In the last two years, absolutely, we've been taking a number of efforts to make sure that they're moving forward. For the 20 years before that, you'll have to talk to your benchmates, hon. member. In terms of the last two years we've invested over a million dollars to create a new bursary to support teachers in strengthening their own math knowledge and math education knowledge, to modernize the curriculum, ensuring that our school teachers have the basics or the pieces that they need to be able to provide quality learning environments, and of course we've improved testing, including the addition of a no-calculator portion to the PATs. That's certainly a move in the right direction, and we continue to move forward with Alberta teachers, students, and families.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that when the most recent cohort of Alberta students who wrote the TIMSS in grade 4, in 2015, wrote the provincial achievement test in grade 6 this past spring, they demonstrated the same decrease in math ability that was demonstrated through the TIMSS two years ago and given that the PATs are the official communication of the provincial standard, again to the minister. Two different tests, same result. Why are Alberta students continuing to struggle with math?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Speaking as somebody who was trained as a math teacher, I have to say that it's incredibly important that teachers and students have reasonable class sizes to ensure that they can have good opportunities to engage one on one. That's why when we became government, instead of moving forward with the deep cuts that were proposed, that were going to result in far worse opportunities for students to learn and teachers to have a productive work experience, we moved forward to ensure that we provided stability to class sizes. We are updating the curriculum. We are updating testing. It takes some time, obviously, for implementation, but we know that we're headed on the right track, and we know that students and teachers are . . .

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the hon. member knows that it's far more than just class size.

Given that the PAT program assists schools, authorities, and the province in monitoring and improving student learning and given that if we had grade 3 PATs, the province would have had earlier data to help those kids succeed and given the failure of the SLAs, again to the minister. Waiting for an international test in grade 4 or your exam in grade 6 is too late. Why do we not have grade 3 PATs to identify these issues as early as possible?

Ms Hoffman: Well, Mr. Speaker, we worked with Albertans to make sure that there's a test. Actually, instead of having a PAT at the end of the grade 3 year, there were earlier assessments brought in at the beginning of the year to do diagnostic approaches so that that year didn't lose the whole opportunity that it had to ensure that students were on track and prepared and able to move forward. I certainly think that in my experiences with the public school board and training as a teacher, the earlier you can get opportunities to sit down with parents and with students to talk about gaps in knowledge, the better. That's exactly why these tools are being developed and why the curriculum is being redesigned. We know there's room for improvement. We know our students can do better. They're doing it in science, and we know they can do it . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Child and Youth Recreational and Cultural Programs

Ms Luff: Mr. Speaker, children and teens across the province deserve to be able to participate in valuable activities when the school day is done. All Albertans benefit when our kids have access to cultural, recreation, and arts programs. When I speak to constituents about community concerns, one thing that I hear frequently is that there's a lack of after school programming in my constituency, especially for adolescents. To the Minister of Culture and Tourism: what is this government doing to help organizations that provide school programs for students in my riding?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government knows that the best way to support programs for youth is to ensure that we continue to deliver funding for facilities and programming in these organizations. That is why our government is investing in community facilities like the Ethno-Cultural Council of Calgary, the Forest Heights Community Association, and the Cornerstone Youth Centre Society, all of which have a significant benefit for youth in communities across the city and the province. While the opposition would have us cut, we are going to continue working to ensure that we continue to deliver the services that these children and youth . . .

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While all of those organizations are doing amazing work, many ethnic communities in my riding are working to provide programs for youth that will help to strengthen cultural ties and help students succeed in school. However, they find difficulty in accessing government grants. To the same minister: what is this government doing to help address systemic barriers for these groups to improve access to grants?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm proud that our government supports nonprofit organizations that help to build stronger, healthier, and more inclusive communities. Not only are we investing in important grants that these organizations rely on; we have also made the application easier and clearer for groups who are applying so they can access the funding. If the member has specific questions about specific grants, programs, I'm more than happy to talk with her and provide additional information. The most important thing to remember here is that while that side will continue to cut, this side and this government will continue to support our province's nonprofit and voluntary organizations.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Luff: Thank you. Given that community groups throughout the province also rely on funds from gaming to help support recreation and cultural programs, I often hear from new and small nonprofits, particularly in cultural communities, that receiving a bingo or casino licence from AGLC can be a huge challenge. To the Minister of Treasury Board and Finance: what is the government doing to ensure that all nonprofits have equal access to these opportunities?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you. In the last fiscal year alone 17,904 charities were licensed to carry out charitable gaming activities in support of their communities. They raised in excess of $330 million. The dedicated team at AGLC strived to work with each and every one of these groups to assist them through the licensing process, ensuring that each group has equal and efficient access to information. The AGLC staff are passionate about the work they do for Albertans, and I'd encourage anyone facing challenges to reach out to AGLC.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Calgary Cancer Centre Construction Contract

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The awarding of the Calgary cancer centre design/build contract is great news for Calgary and fulfills a long-made promise to the city, but documents and sources indicate that the winner got the job for $1.122 billion, a full $206 million, or 22 and a half per cent, higher than the lowest bid. Two hundred and six million dollars is the equivalent of five new high schools or 80 per cent of the highway twinning and widening budget for this year or six years of medical equipment replacements. To the Minister of Infrastructure: can you explain why the highest priced bid won the job?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that it probably sounds attractive to members of the opposition to think that the cheapest bid is going to win at the end of the day, but we actually look for something beyond that. We actually look for quality of building design because, you know, when it comes to something as important as a cancer centre, we think it's incredibly important that we get the right build at the right time and that we get something in a structure that is going to provide decades of effective, quality service, care, research, and design for Albertans who are affected by ...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

First supplemental.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that at the end of the day, we are building a box – mind you, a fancy box – to do the job of treating cancer patients and given that the Infrastructure minister has the right price at the right time and that the winner will take eight months longer to complete construction of this facility than the lowest bidder, to the Minister of Infrastructure: what are Albertans getting for the extra eight months of construction and the extra $206 million being paid for the Calgary cancer centre?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The fact that the member opposite would talk about such critical infrastructure, needed for compassionate care for cancer patients, as a box, to me, is disrespectful and disheartening. The patients who are involved in the creation of this project have put their hearts and their lives ... [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members.

Ms Hoffman: ... on the line to make sure that it is a quality building that respects the kind of care and dignity that I would expect all members to give to them. The dad who was at the announcement with his daughter, who was grieving the loss of his wife, the daughter's mother, is building that hospital, helping to build the design. It is going to be a thing of beauty, Mr. Speaker, far more than a fancy box. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members. [interjections] Hon. members.

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, a thing of beauty costing $206 million more and eight months longer. What are Albertans getting for the extra time and the extra money? A simple question. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. member.

Ms Jansen: Mr. Speaker, when it comes to cancer care, I think we have to consider a lot of things. As someone who has a mom who goes for chemotherapy for one week out of every month across town at the Peter Lougheed, I will tell you that the idea of bringing all these services together under one roof, in the kind of state-of-the-art facility that we can be proud of around the world, is something I am incredibly proud to spearhead. And the idea that we do so with the consultation of cancer survivors and with the idea that we are creating a space that is going to bring comfort, care, and innovation to cancer patients everywhere ...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Health Care ID Card Fraud

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, in our meetings with Health we asked about the costs associated with fraudulent use of our health system by non-Albertans. This fraud is perpetuated by the fact that our health care identification is extremely outdated. It exposes Alberta to millions of dollars in losses due to this simple oversight. At the time, the minister did not have a clear answer on financial loss due to fraud. To the Minister of Health: have you finally identified how much Alberta is losing due to health care fraud?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. What I did say is that there are international studies that are being done that propose projections. Any time we identify fraud, we do that in partnership with the public service and Service Alberta. Any time we identify fraud, it is addressed, it is gone after, and those funds are recovered or attempted to be recovered. If there is fraud that the member opposite knows about that he wants to point us in the direction of, we'd be very happy to recover those funds.

Mr. Yao: Given that concerns with our health care cards are not just financial and that our current health ID is vulnerable to allowing noncitizens to access health services and this could impact the actual medical record of our citizens, facilitating erroneous and possibly conflicting health information on Albertans' health records, which could be detrimental to their health, have you made a decision to institute a permanent form of identification for health's sake?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. These are certainly some of the conversations that I think are important for Albertans to have. We know that there would be an increased cost in being able to do so. We've discussed this with our partners in Service Alberta and others. I do think that there is merit to the idea. I do also acknowledge that we are in a period of time where we're tightening our fiscal belt and we're making sure that we're investing in what needs to be done. They're calling for cuts in question one, they're calling for us to reduce the deficit, they're calling for 20 per cent cuts, and they're calling for increased investment. I think the idea is worth merit for further conversation, but it's time to figure out which page you guys want to be on when you're asking your questions in question period.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, even the most simple retail outlet can give an identification card to somebody.

Given that other provinces have incorporated photo ID with bar codes with basic personal information, which does help discourage fraud, and given that people who are addicted to illicit drugs are desperate and will use any option available to access opioids, including impersonating others to access prescriptions, and that this is another contributor to our opioid crisis, when will the minister come to the realization that she needs to make a decision on this issue? You've had 30 months to look into this. Why are you neglecting the simple, simple piece of the puzzle that really is inexpensive?

Ms Hoffman: It's simple to be a critic and to ask questions. I'll tell you that it is not a low-cost initiative. [interjections] That doesn't mean it's not important for us to be investigating. That's one of the reasons why I've asked Service Alberta and my Health officials to do that, but I'll tell you, Mr. Speaker, that it is a very costly initiative. The members opposite are heckling me, talking about cuts, talking about spending. Enough is enough. Come up with a plan, and tell us what it is. Where's your shadow budget? Don't tell us we can cut 20 per cent without telling us where you'd cut it, because I can tell you that we're going to stand up for Albertans. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.
Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Energy and Environmental Policies

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier appointed Tzeporah Berman to the oil sands advisory group. Berman was paid Alberta taxpayers' money to give recommendations on how to implement a 100-megatonne emissions limit for the oil sands. Now, I'm sure Ms Berman was happy to give recommendations on how to implement this limit that has and will be detrimental to Alberta's oil and gas industry. Berman recently wrote an article for the Guardian. In this article Berman said that "there is still time to shine a light on Canada's most shameful environmental secret." Does the Premier believe that Alberta has a shameful environmental secret?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What I can tell the members of this House and all Albertans is that our Premier and our government are very proud of our oil and gas sector. We know that our practices here in the province are world leading when it comes to environmental responsibility and sustainability. I can tell you that over the past year our oil sands, our oil and gas sector are growing. We know that drilling activity is up, with 64 per cent more wells being drilled this year than last year. This month we learned that Chevron is ramping up spending in the oil patch, investing up to $1 billion on their Duvernay shale basin. Our oil and gas sector is thriving.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Loewen: Given that they're so proud that they call us the embarrassing cousins and given that this government has implemented a damaging carbon tax, punishing emission caps, and community-crushing coal shutdowns and has agreed to the federal government's horrific carbon tax increases that are even higher than what the NDP will be ramming down Albertans' throats even after the 50 per cent increase starting January 1, does the Premier believe Ms Berman's comment that Canada has "weak climate targets"?

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, our Premier will never back down from fighting for Alberta jobs and Alberta's energy sector. Frankly, our Premier has done more to promote pipelines and deliver results in two years than the members opposite did in 44. Here's what some of the members of the industry are saying about our Premier: you have been a strong and unwavering partner of ours and our industry; your voice is being heard across the country. That was from Ian Anderson, who is the president of Kinder Morgan Canada. I can tell you that the president of the chamber of commerce in Calgary said: Premier, your remarks are passionate, patriotic, and fantastic; thank you for your leadership and for standing up for Alberta.

Mr. Loewen: Given that this government's carbon tax has been responsible for two cancelled pipelines and given that this government has been late in its support for pipelines and Albertans do not believe the words that have been followed by actions and given that the NDP MLAs have protested pipelines and that the Premier has hired anti-oil activists and that one of them, Tzeporah Berman, has said, "The tar sands have been dubbed the largest (and most destructive) industrial project in human history," to the Premier: do you stand behind the quote from your past adviser?

Ms Hoffman: Let me be clear. The Trans Mountain pipeline expansion will be built. We will break our land lock. We will get our product to new markets. Our Premier is in Vancouver fighting for the support of this critical project. She carried the same message to Toronto and Ottawa last week. The Leader of the Opposition sat for decades in Ottawa. You know what? We didn't get to tidewater. Frankly, our Premier has done more to promote the pipeline in two years than Conservatives did for 44.

Greenhouse Gas Emission Regulations

Mr. MacIntyre: The NDP haven't got a clue how to attract and keep money in this province. It's called investor confidence, and every ministry has failed in it, especially Energy. The NDP want a shiny new sector-by-sector, output-based allocation system with performance standards. That was two years ago. Now the current system, SGER, will expire in a month with no details on a replacement yet. How can investors be expected to do a detailed financial analysis when the greenhouse gas regulations affecting emitters have not been released?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know what? I'm very proud of the work that the Minister of Energy, our minister of environment, and our Premier have been doing, working very closely with industry. We are working collaboratively with them to ensure that when the new OSAG rules come in, we're going to be working with industry to ensure that they can continue to invest. I can tell the member opposite that investor confidence is up in this province. I can give you a number of examples, from Amazon to Google to Pinnacle to Champion Petfoods, who are all investing in the province. In the energy sector Cenovus Energy has more than doubled their production this year.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. MacIntyre: Regulations limiting GHG emissions from Alberta's largest emitters are a core financial concern and ought to be a large part of this government's social licence narrative in advocating for market access for resource exports. Given that the government could have used the last two years to ease industry into the pending changes and instead chose to lollygag at industry's expense, why have these regulations not been a priority for this government?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I can appreciate the fact that the Energy critic is in the dark when it comes to the work that we've been doing with industry as far as coming up with our targets. I can tell you that when the Premier announced our climate leadership plan, she did so with a number of key industry stakeholders that support the cap on emissions, that support methane reduction. I can tell you that our government is working collaboratively with the energy sector, investing dollars in innovation to drive down our environmental footprint, reduce costs . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. MacIntyre: California, Ontario, and Quebec define large final emitters at a 25,000-tonne threshold, yet this government, being cash strapped, never turned down an opportunity to adversely punish Alberta's job creators. Given that one-third of our province's available power is used by heavy industry and given that added costs for our electrical generators means added costs for our job creators, will the minister commit here and now to keeping Alberta attractive to investors by keeping our definition of large final emitters in line with our neighbours?

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, you know what's attractive to investors? Stability in government, investments in infrastructure, investments in our oil and gas sector, knowing that a government is a partner, as opposed to the opposition, who love to jump up and down, throw our energy industry under the bus, drive back and forth over them, and then claim that they're somehow supporters. These guys are cheering for the two pipeline approvals to fail. Well, I'll tell you what. Our Premier is in B.C. right now advocating on behalf of Trans Mountain. We've said that we would intervene if need be, and we are confident that they will be built.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the hon. Minister of Service Alberta has a supplemental comment to a response to be made.

Ms McLean: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have supplemental information to the question that was asked. As early as 10:14 a.m. SPIN 2 was restored.*

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, a comment?

Mr. Cyr: I apologize, Mr. Speaker. What was the response?

Ms McLean: My supplemental information to the question that was asked earlier is that as early as 10:14 this morning SPIN 2 was fully restored.

The Speaker: Any questions, hon. member?

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have information that says that that system has gone down several times during this very day, so it sounds like your answer right now is maybe incorrect. Please go back and check your facts. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order, please.
The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While I certainly appreciate that there have been difficulties with the system, I can assure the member opposite that, despite his assertion, I am not lying and the system was restored as of 10:14 a.m.

Members' Statements (continued)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Alberta Party

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is a remarkable place. The people of Alberta are the most extraordinary, talented, resilient, kind, community-minded people anywhere in the world, and this didn't happen by accident. It happened because we're the kind of place that rewards people who take risks, who work hard, who make something of themselves, and, more importantly, who make something of their community. Albertans are both fiercely independent and at the same time we rely on our community and we look out for our neighbours. We are not the stereotype of the single-minded, profit-motivated, tax-despising Albertan. We are entrepreneurial and independent – make absolutely no mistake – but we also care deeply about our community, and we care deeply for one another.

But Albertans are smart and practical, so we won't support politicians who are spendthrifts, who persistently rack up huge amounts of debt for our children to pay. Albertans deserve a government that shares all of those values. We've shown this time and time again. When given the opportunity to vote for politicians who are narrow-minded and mean-spirited, we won't do it. And we also won't support a government that's out of step with Albertans' innate sense of fiscal discipline.

Albertans don't have to choose either/or. We don't have to choose left or right. We don't have to choose between a strong economy or a good quality of life. We can have both, and we deserve both. That's the message the members of the Alberta Party endorsed at our recent AGM. It was a packed house, but it wasn't just the number of people in attendance that was exciting; it's who they were: community leaders, activists, doers. Most importantly, the room reflected the diversity of this great province.

The province of Alberta is a place of possibility, and the Alberta Party is a party that reflects the optimism that we should all share about this great place. We want Albertans to get involved and join in one of our many upcoming events throughout the province, join a CA, share your ideas. Yes, Alberta has its challenges, but they will be overcome by working with can-do people in a can-do province. That's who the Alberta Party is, and that's who Albertans are.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Saffron Sexual Assault Centre in Sherwood Park

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise today and speak about an incredible organization, Saffron, the Strathcona county sexual assault centre. Their relentless commitment to providing critical services to survivors and families is truly appreciated. Saffron hosts many community awareness campaigns, the walk for consent, discussing toxic masculinity, public education in schools, and that's not a comprehensive list. They go above and beyond their task because of the high demands placed on their services.

Katie, the executive director, leads this organization with passion that is inspiring. Creating safe environments for survivors to come forward and seek the help that they need is a task that sexual assault centres can't do alone. It takes the whole community to become involved in changing attitudes.

November 25 marked the United Nations 16 Days of Activism against Gender-based Violence. Today is day six of my pledge, during which individuals and governments around the world recognize the deep impacts of gender-based violence. Recently we've seen the global outcry where millions of folks have used the Me Too hashtag to bravely share their stories. As a survivor I know that these experiences impact us for a lifetime and that we can and should be preventing these occurrences.

Our government is taking actions to address this. We have stabilized and in many cases increased funding. As part of the NDP government's commitment to making life better for Albertans, FCSS funding has been increased to over $100 million.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Addiction and Mental Health Services Outcomes

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Surely, one of the most significant challenges that government needs to acknowledge is that spending does not equate to improved outcomes. Nowhere is this more valid than in Alberta's health care system, the most expensive in Canada. It is now two years since the Valuing Mental Health report, and I acknowledge efforts to develop targets and timelines and the new 18 next steps identified on the website. More plans and reports and spending, particularly on addictions and the opioid crisis, though, are not enough.

The sticky part continues to be measuring whether they are improving, one, access; two, quality; three, cost-effectiveness of our services. This needs new, bold, dedicated leadership to achieve medical care that's better co-ordinated; communications with other service providers, especially for those with mental health and addictions; prevention as a higher priority, with better outcomes. Why are we not measuring these?

The most recent AHS performance report does indicate that some major urban centres have reduced wait times for children and youth with mental health challenges though not in Edmonton and rural areas. Current indicators are not actually measuring improvements in co-ordination, communications, and results for folks with mental health problems and addictions – such as subjective improvement, ability to work, reduced drug dependency, and reduced recurrences – and they should be. Proper management involves oversight of both process and outcome. Our fragmented mix of public health services do not do so.

As the Auditor General indicated in several reports in the past decade, Albertans are not seeing value for money in a health system that spends more per capita than any other province, especially on physicians. In short, it's not enough to do things right if you're not doing the right things and not measuring the right things. Ultimately, accountability, of course, falls to deputy ministers and managers . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Parliamentary Debate and Political Discourse

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, overblown political rhetoric and hyperbole erode the quality of political discourse and undermine our capability to act as elected representatives. Take, for example, the varying reactions to the current economic recovery. For some it doesn't fit their political narrative, so they deny it's happening or actually cheer against it. Now, I won't do that. I am encouraged, but I also recognize that the recovery is fragile and has not yet reached all corners of Alberta.

Now, the government brags that the recovery is proof that their plan is working. What an unmitigated load of tripe. Not too long ago the Finance minister drew on his thespian skills and gave an Oscar-worthy performance, blaming the downturn solely on the steep and prolonged slide in oil prices. But since then oil prices have doubled and the industry has made difficult but necessary adjustments to return to modest profitability. Stabilizing oil prices and resourceful Albertans are the reason for the recovery, not this NDP government. When the economy was struggling, they accepted zero responsibility, and now that it's on the uptick, they say that they caused everything. Well, they didn't. It was not due to their poor policies.

And just when you thought the self-congratulatory rhetoric couldn't be topped, the Official Opposition steps forward and says: hold my beer. Staying true to their usual modus operandi, the folks on my extreme right make yet another attempt to confuse and confound Albertans. Their claim that the January 1 50-cent hike in the carbon tax on natural gas will cause home heating bills to increase by 75 per cent is at best misleading and at worst full-blown folderol. Several sources have already pointed out the glaring flaws in their math, but, hey, why let accuracy get in the way of a good meme? Their claims are totally incorrect. They know it, yet they defend them with the tenacity of a Jack Russell terrier trying to defend a savoury pork chop that it's just unearthed.

Mr. Speaker, governing in a province is a privilege earned by building trust, not by rhetoric and hyperbole. Albertans deserve better.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table on behalf of Friends of Medicare a petition signed by hundreds of Albertans to keep fertility treatments at the Lois Hole health centre.

The Speaker: Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With sincere apologies to the Child Friendly Housing Coalition of Alberta, I rise to belatedly table a petition calling on the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to “end discrimination against children and their caregivers in condominium and rental housing,” something which was largely accomplished with the passing of Bill 23.

Introduction of Bills

Bill 214

An Act to Regulate Political Action Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, I have some tablings. I’m tabling copies of a petition . . .

The Speaker: We’re at bills now, hon. member. Do you have an introduction of a bill?

Dr. Swann: Of course. Yes. Bills.

Today I rise, Mr. Speaker, to introduce Bill 214, an Act to Regulate Political Action Committees.

Mr. Speaker, political action committees represent a means of circumventing Alberta’s campaign finance laws. Even the Chief Electoral Officer has said so. At this very moment dark money from corporations, unions, individuals from outside Alberta, outside of Canada, even, is freely flowing into Alberta to influence our electoral process. This was all supposed to stop with the passage of the Fair Elections Financing Act, but clearly major problems still exist. Even when their money comes from within Alberta, political action committees can still operate in the shadows if they don’t engage in advertising. For that very reason, some are choosing not to.

The Speaker: Hon. member, this is the introductory part. A little faster. A little less detail.

Dr. Swann: A little faster.

That’s why this legislation is so critical, Mr. Speaker. Quite simply, we need to maintain the integrity of democracy in Alberta.

Lastly – well, no, not lastly. Mr. Speaker, this bill does something that’s never been done before in Canada.

Do you want me to close?

The Speaker: Yeah. I really would like that.

Dr. Swann: I got that message, sir.

I will put this bill up against anything the government is proposing – it appears it certainly will – and I ask that members . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Thank you. I think we’ve got the message.

[Motion carried; Bill 214 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. More letters continue to pour in from very concerned rural Albertans who’ve been experiencing very bad crime. This one involves a lady, a nurse and mother of five, who was home alone and had to watch from her living room as they destroyed the contents in her garage and stole her possessions. She was unable to protect herself, and the police did not show up.

Another one says that “rural residents should not have to barricade our homes and yards every day” and fear being prosecuted ourselves if we should try to protect ourselves. This is from Donna from my riding.

This one is from Sarah from my riding. She is a mother of three who lives on a farm outside of Spruce View who had to build a safe room in her home in central Alberta just to protect her children because they’ve been robbed so many times.

This one is from a pastor of a church which has been vandalized five times. They installed security cameras and recording equipment. That was all stolen.

This particular individual, Glenn, says that the people that were arrested and charged came back into his community within one year doing the crimes again. They feel absolutely powerless to stop this.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’m also tabling copies of a petition to keep fertility treatment at the Lois Hole which did not meet the requirements of a petition from the Legislature.

Finally, I am tabling an online petition with over 25,000 names calling on the government to reverse its decision on the fertility clinic. I have one of several boxes here. The able assistants here may or may not be able to carry them.

The Speaker: I’m sure we will be able to circulate that very soon.

Hon. members, I have two tablings today. The first I’d like to table is five copies of the revised DVD, attached letter, and table of the 87 electoral division boundaries from the 2017 Alberta Electoral Boundaries Commission final report, incorporating the amendments to Government Motion 34.

Secondly, I have five copies of the 2016-17 annual report of the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner of Alberta.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Ms Ganley, Minister of Justice and Solicitor General, return to order of the Assembly MR 1 asked for by Mr. Cooper on May 8, 2017. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Feehan, Minister of Indigenous Relations, return to order of the Assembly MR 3 asked for by Mr. Hanson on May 8, 2017. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Mason, Government House Leader and Minister of Transportation, return to order of the Assembly MR 15 asked for by Mr. Cooper on May 8, 2017.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

The Speaker: Hon. members, yesterday I advised the Assembly that I would be deferring my ruling on a point of order raised by the Government House Leader relating to comments by the Leader of the Official Opposition during question period. Subsequent to my statement the Leader of the Official Opposition indicated that he would be withdrawing his comments. At that point I’d hoped that the matter would have been at an end. However, in withdrawing his comments, the Leader of the Official Opposition made an additional statement to which the Government House Leader raised objections. Therefore, it is necessary for me to return today with a ruling.

The initial point of order was raised by the Government House Leader in response to a claim by the Leader of the Official Opposition that the Premier was laughing at rural Albertans. The Government House Leader argued strongly that this observation was incorrect. You can find those comments in yesterday's issue of Alberta Hansard at pages 2116, 2117.

As paragraph 494 of Beauchesne's provides, on occasion the Assembly will be required "to accept two contradictory accounts of the same incident." I may not have found an order in this instance, as I will take the Leader of the Official Opposition at his word that his comments reflected his true perception of what occurred.

However, I note that this situation could have been avoided if members refrained from making personal comments about other members that may be misconstrued or that imply motive or that may give rise to disorder in the Assembly. I further note that arguments on the matter yesterday managed to inflame the situation rather than to defuse it.

Hon. members, we are in this House as a method for representing the people of this province. If we want this institution and this House and, in fact, all of us to be respected, it seems to me that we need to show respect for each of the members, and when that does not happen, we are in fact not showing respect to the people represented by any member who is in this House.

Generally speaking, on the matter of withdrawing comments I will make one clear statement that I expect all members to follow going forward. If a member is withdrawing comments or making an apology, that withdrawal or apology should be unconditional and offered in a sincere tone and manner. An apology should not be used as an opportunity to debate the matter further or to have the last word. Additionally, if a member sincerely withdraws a comment or apologizes unconditionally, it should be accepted without further comment by members.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 26

An Act to Control and Regulate Cannabis

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs on behalf of the hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's an honour to rise today and move third reading of Bill 26, An Act to Control and Regulate Cannabis.

If passed, this legislation will establish a system for legalized cannabis that will provide Albertans reasonable access to cannabis products when it becomes legal next July. It is a proposed system that prioritizes the health and safety of Albertans.

Bill 26 proposes amendments to the Gaming and Liquor Act, including amendments related to the role of the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission in this system. This legislation will grant the AGLC authority to oversee the distribution of cannabis, ensuring that all cannabis products that come to our province's retail sector are legally produced and come from licensed producers. The bill will also authorize the AGLC to oversee the retail aspect of cannabis, ensuring that products are distributed only to specialized retailers that only sell cannabis; no tobacco, alcohol, or pharmaceuticals.

If passed, Bill 26 will enable our government to begin establishing the elements of the system that will include privately owned and operated cannabis retailers who are licensed and strictly regulated and online sales of cannabis that are controlled and operated by government, allowing us to verify that all customers are of legal age and ensuring that all Albertans will have access to cannabis products on the first day of legalization.

Our legislation establishes provincial offences, making it illegal for anyone under 18 to possess any amount of cannabis. It also restricts smoking and vaping cannabis in public where smoking or vaping tobacco is not allowed and bans the consumption of cannabis in vehicles. It makes it an offence to smoke or vape in any outdoor space typically frequented by children, such as playgrounds, skate parks, spray parks, and on school grounds and hospital properties.

Finally, Bill 26 includes amendments to reduce the risk of impaired driving. If legislation passes, there will be no consumption of cannabis in vehicles, either by the driver or passenger, and any cannabis products must be stored away from everybody's reach.

I know there has been a lot to discuss around the minimum age issue, which is why I want to reiterate why we are proposing the age of 18 in Alberta. We have certainly heard concerns about the health risks associated with cannabis used by young people under 25, but we also recognize that people between 18 and 25 are the largest age category that already uses cannabis. We want to encourage young adults who would otherwise frequent the black market to instead purchase legal cannabis from a licensed and regulated retailer, reducing their exposure to other criminal activity and potentially using unsafe cannabis products.

The legal age does not mean that we promote its use. It means that we feel that an 18-year-old is equipped to make an informed and responsible choice regarding cannabis. Eighteen will align with the minimum age for alcohol and tobacco in our province as well as the federal minimum age for cannabis.

Madam Speaker, more than 60,000 Albertans made their voices heard through consultation this summer and fall, and most of them said that they approved of the system that we proposed in October. If Bill 26 is passed, we will begin setting up a system for legalized cannabis that we believe will work for Albertans because that's what they told us.

Before I conclude, I would like to thank all members who spoke to this bill this week. We appreciate your support, concerns, and your suggestions. As was mentioned throughout debate, this bill marks a good beginning, with more to come as the system evolves.

I ask that all members support me in moving third reading. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, can I clarify that you are moving third reading on behalf of the Minister of Justice?

Ms Goehring: That's correct. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Any other members wishing to speak to third reading? The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. W. Anderson: Thanks, Madam Speaker. I rise today to discuss this government's Bill 26, An Act to Control and Regulate Cannabis. While it is indeed the government of Alberta's bill, it needs to be noted that this is a reaction to the federal government's legislation on cannabis under Bill C-45, which is to take place on July 1, 2018. On the whole, I think this provincial government's reaction to this, Bill 26, is decent legislation but could probably be tweaked slightly to provide some clarification and dispel some concerns that I've been hearing from Albertans. These points I'll get to shortly.

However, I'll begin with some main points of this bill, beginning with online sales. Under Bill 26 this gives the government a monopoly on public sales. My concerns with this revolve around a couple of issues. While online access to medical marijuana has been in place for a while now, it's clear that each company can price their strains as they see fit. Of course, like any other commodity, it would have to be priced competitively. Under a government monopoly, however, no such flexibility exists. A user of cannabis would be required to pay what the government says you pay.

Another important issue with regard to online purchase of cannabis is age verification. For years it was near impossible to get wine or beer delivered to your home. Same thing for something like Wine of the Month Club. The reason it was difficult was due to concerns about ensuring that purchasers are of legal age to purchase the stuff. In other words, how do you validate an 18-year-old or the age of that individual? Yet the government has no issues with this for online marijuana. At least with medical cannabis there is a process you must go through, including medicals and prescribing doctors and referrals, and if your info is verified by your government ID and your health card, then you get your medical marijuana.

I guess a question that I would have is: where are the safeguards for this legislation? We don't even know if the government will make a profit on this operation. I mean, it's implied, but have they done any sort of economic study on this? If so, can those results be shared with the House or tabled? That'd be nice. I know that the federal government has suggested that they will take 50 per cent of the profits on the tax applied to the sales of cannabis, but another question is: will there be a risk that taxpayers in Alberta may end up subsidizing these operations?

Another pressing concern is retail sales. Under this legislation retail sales will begin on July 1, 2018. There has been plenty of discussion about where and who will sell cannabis, but will the same restrictions on proximity to schools and liquor stores have to be applied? Will municipalities have the ability to limit the number of stores or the distance between competing stores, such as 500 metres, in a bylaw? I believe that these are some questions that need answers.

Madam Speaker, much debate has been around whether to allow pharmacies and liquor stores to sell cannabis or just stand-alone retail stores. The government has decided to go to independent stand-alones, with the government monopoly on online sales as their model, so quite frankly I think that ship has already sailed. It can't be overstated, however, that the liquor industry has the training and experience to deal with issues that arise while selling a controlled product like alcohol or cannabis, so I hope the government will ensure that the same standards are adhered to by these new stand-alones and their owners and, of course, their employees.

What sort of public education campaign will be introduced in order to school citizens with regard to the effects of cannabis? Certainly, the feds will have come up with their version because they're the ones legalizing the product. What has this government done, you know, in this regard?

Another issue is enforcement. I touched on this throughout my speech already, but other thoughts have occurred as I go here. Why won't the same restrictions apply to smoking or vaping cannabis as do around the consumption of alcohol? You know, would the rules for smoking be different for vaping? I don't know. Can someone in the future open a nightclub exclusively for vaping as it is very different from smoking? Will these questions be answered in time for the July 1 deadline? People just want to know. It's certainly not fair to our law enforcement folks to have them play catch-up with legislation. We owe it to them to try to give them every possible tool to ensure that all Albertans are protected. It's about safety.

Perhaps the best way to ensure that is that as this technology and this bill progress, we put in place a sunset or autorenew clause in this legislation that ensures that this act is renewed every so often, perhaps every three years, just to ensure that this legislation keeps pace with what is going on with society and how this act works with Albertans at large.

It's too bad the government turned down my friend from Drumheller-Stettler's amendment, which I find odd because in some cases this government's own technical briefings often mention that there will be a review done and that it will be done in three to five years. It seems to me somewhat hypocritical of this government to pat itself on the back for inserting a review of legislation clause in some other bills, but when we propose it on a bill that brings about such a major shift in society, that side of the House just drags their feet.

Madam Speaker, this is a highly complex issue, and there are many aspects that need to be worked out before I'm totally comfortable with this bill, while understanding, of course, that the government has been put in this position by the federal government. I guess the success and failure of this bill will come down to how the police and the AGLC deal with regulations and the consequences that come out of this legislation.

Whether this is an ideal model can always be debated, but be assured that the UCP will be watching closely to see how this bill is rolled out, and as with all legislation we'll continue to engage with the public and stakeholders to ensure their concerns are always heard.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak on third reading of Bill 26, a bill that amends the Gaming and Liquor Act to become the gaming, liquor, and cannabis act. The United Conservative Party supports a private model for marijuana retail, which is a major portion of this bill as well as online sales and other regulating aspects in this legislation.

We disagree with the NDP's plan to treat marijuana like simply a new tobacco product; however, tobacco is a restricted substance. Alcohol is a controlled substance. Marijuana, which is currently illegal, will soon become a controlled substance, too. Unlike tobacco, alcohol and cannabis are both intoxicating substances.

When this law passes, adults can walk down the street smoking marijuana just like they can a cigarette. They can't, however, walk down a street in Alberta drinking a beer. We made an amendment that would allow us to treat both of these as the same substance under the law.

The UCP public consumption amendment would have created public consumption laws for cannabis that mirror as close as possible liquor's, a bit of a hybrid from smoking and the liquor laws. These liquor laws are well known and well accepted by Albertans.

The UCP believes it's the government's job to help protect members of the public from exposure to unwelcome marijuana use and second-hand marijuana smoke. Albertans who prefer not to be around people drinking can easily avoid being in environments that allow it. The NDP is not applying that same measure to marijuana.

The NDP insists Bill 26 protects Albertans from smoking or vaping cannabis by making the Tobacco and Smoking Reduction Act apply to the substance. Kudos. It also provides specific protection to children by prohibiting use near playgrounds, sports fields, and child care facility properties, but those are very narrow provisions, and interestingly they don't include public events. I know that one of my hon. colleagues in the House in opposition proposed an amendment to address this. This means that families may think twice about bringing their children to one of Alberta's many family events and festivals.

Modelling of children is of special concern. I know many of my colleagues in this House share that. Many parents will wish to shield their children from seeing adults using recreational drugs. It makes sense. A family can walk down the street now and not be concerned about someone walking by with a beer. So why wouldn't it be the same for marijuana?

On July 1 people will be able to smoke marijuana on sidewalks, outside of buildings other than schools and hospitals as long as you're not within five metres of a door or window, and almost anywhere else in Alberta that you are allowed to smoke a tobacco product.

The NDP may make it sound like it has good restrictions on public use of marijuana, but it simply does not. We tried to highlight this with our amendment. Thankfully, municipalities can make their own bylaws restricting or allowing marijuana use. It's interesting to note that the NDP has complained about the federal government downloading responsibility onto the provinces, but now the province is doing the same thing to the municipalities.

Our amendment would have treated marijuana more similar to alcohol in its public use. It was a common-sense view that reflects that of Albertans and many other jurisdictions that have legalized cannabis in their society. I think this is the best-case scenario for something like this in the provinces. It's unfortunate that the NDP didn't accept our very reasonable amendment in an effort to strengthen this legislation. However, I will effort to do that as we go down this path in making safe spaces for the children and families in our province.

I will support this piece of legislation, and I urge my colleagues to do the same. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any further speakers to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak in support of Bill 26, An Act to Control and Regulate Cannabis, at third reading. This legislation is a turning point for the province, and while it has been imposed upon Alberta given the changes made at the federal level, each province and territory has been tasked with legislating its sale and distribution. Like the province of Manitoba, the government of Alberta has decided to adopt a hybrid model of private retail and government online sales.

On the whole, we're generally satisfied here in the Alberta Party caucus with this plan. The NDP has created a system that both allows and encourages entrepreneurship at a very important time for our province, when Calgary's unemployment rate remains above 8 per cent and the overall unemployment rate in the province hovers around 8 per cent. In the truest Alberta fashion, people from across this province will be able to do what we do best, set up shop.

With respect, Madam Speaker, it's hard to imagine the government setting up a system, though, that can adequately protect the information of cannabis consumers with online sales given the fact that they carelessly deleted 800,000 of their own e-mails and up until today can't seem to keep critical systems like land titles online. In an age when a great deal of our personal information is stored online, we need assurance that the government can and will protect it, and at this juncture we are not convinced that the provincial government is ready to take on this responsibility.

Madam Speaker, I have spent most of my career in the information technology and business sectors, and I know all too well the importance of data security and the dangers of having personal information exposed, and frankly so do most Albertans. The government is proposing that they undertake online sales of cannabis to the exclusion of private business. Now, currently medical marijuana is sold exclusively online and through government-approved vendors. While concern about public safety in the distribution of cannabis is a legitimate priority of Bill 26, there are some concerns about safety and security of online sales that do need to be addressed.

As we discussed in committee under the amendment that I proposed, delivery of cannabis is sometimes compromised by the delivery method. If a vendor doesn't check the box indicating that a signature is required on delivery, the package is left at the doorstep. It's now difficult for police to seize illegal drugs in the mail system, and there's nothing in this bill that addresses that particular issue.

As well, I've heard from stakeholders that one of the challenges is checking for ID in online delivery. Will the government online sales be delivered by a service more expensive than Canada Post to ensure proper delivery, and in that case, if it costs more money, will it make the black market more attractive to customers?

Another priority I haven't seen the government address is the security of the data that will accompany online sales, data like consumers' names, ages, addresses, payment details. If there were a data breach, not that I'm aware that any necessarily have occurred, it would still be a small subset of records that were compromised if the government adopted a hybrid public and private model for online sales. With a single vendor those records will essentially be aggregated in one place, making it a very attractive target for online criminals. What system of authentication and IT security do the NDP propose to keep the information of Albertans safe? What measures will be in place to ensure that this information is kept confidential?

Again, we have not heard or seen from this government a demonstrated ability that this government can be trusted with IT systems, so why would we trust them with the information of thousands of potential consumers? As far as we're concerned, the government has a long way to go before it can be trusted with our data in this new context.

The other issue, Madam Speaker, is cost. The amount of money it's going to cost to stand up an online sales system is going to be substantial. If that cost was borne by private retailers, the savings to Albertans could be substantial.

Ultimately, my caucus colleagues and I feel like this legislation is half baked. Even the slightest online security threat could leave us dazed and confused, hungry for reassurance that Albertans' data isn't going to go up in smoke. Right now what we need is sound digital leadership, a government that proves it can be responsible with our information.

However, we will still support this bill because I think that, fundamentally, the retail aspect of it the government has gotten right. While we'd like to see private sales available online as well, the Alberta Party caucus will stand in support of Bill 26 at third reading.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other speakers to the bill?

Seeing none, I will call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs to close debate on behalf of the hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would like to thank all members of the House for their passion and debate on this issue. When the federal government legalized cannabis, all of us had the same concerns. We all want to keep cannabis out of the hands of children, protect public health, promote safety on roads, in workplaces, and in public spaces, and we all want to limit the illegal market. I believe our framework meets these important objectives. While some of our solutions may be different, I know that when it comes to the legalization of cannabis, all members have the best interests of Albertans at heart.

I'd like to thank you for your constructive and thoughtful debate on this important issue. I move to close debate.

[Motion carried; Bill 26 read a third time]

Bill 28 School Amendment Act, 2017

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park on behalf of the hon. Minister of Education.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Madam Speaker, Mme la Présidente. I am pleased to rise today to move third and final reading of Bill 28, the School Amendment Act, 2017, on behalf of the Minister of Education.

This legislation will ensure that the School Act, which has served Alberta well for over 30 years, will continue to do so in the future. Bill 28 brings a number of small changes to the act to ensure that it remains relevant with other existing legislation as well as paves the way for important changes in standards to come into effect in the coming years. This includes establishing certification processes for principals and superintendents that are similar to those of teachers now and ensuring that the leaders of our education system are well equipped and held accountable as they work to ensure every student is prepared for success. The bill also allows for the creation of standards for education service agreements, which will help students on First Nations access provincially funded schools, thereby helping to improve the educational outcomes of indigenous students.

We're also establishing a common age of entry through this legislation. By setting the age at which students start kindergarten, we will ensure that all students in the province have a good basis for success in their academic future.

This act will also ensure that establishing a separate school district will be made clearer and more collaborative under the proposed amendments, ensuring communities are well aware of any potential impacts.

As well, the act will be building a measure of flexibility by removing some provisions from the School Act that set student transportation requirements in stone.

Finally, Bill 28 is ensuring that the School Act aligns with other legislation and will continue to help schools upgrade smoothly for the foreseeable future. Madam Speaker, this act will make Alberta's education system stronger and thereby make the lives of students and communities in our province a whole lot better. I therefore hope that everyone in this House will be supporting me in voting yes on this legislation.

Thank you, Madam Speaker. Merci.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to this bill at third reading? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak to Bill 28, the School Amendment Act, 2017, at third reading. We all understand that Bill 28 has many parts to it. In many ways it's an omnibus bill, and because of its many parts, it tackles some very important issues, many of which the United Conservative Party will support and can support.

One of the parts of this bill deals with the age of entry. We know as educators that sometimes in many children's lives it's best if we delay the entry into school. Especially for boys, it seems to be important. You know, with a little bit of age, a little bit older, they will perform much better academically. Establishing that age of entry as December 31 and having a common age of entry across the province, in our view, is beneficial for students.

Having an education service agreement between the provincial and the federal governments for First Nations children is a good thing. Bill 28 allows the minister to be able to establish standards for an education service agreement that would allow First Nations students to be able to attend provincial schools. In our party we believe that all children in Alberta deserve a high-quality education. We believe that all children in Alberta should have access to a provincial education on equitable terms and that these education service agreements between the province and the federal government will take positive steps towards ensuring that that occurs. We believe that establishing these education service agreements actually works towards providing all Alberta students with the ability to have choice. Should First Nations parents and First Nations children desire to attend a provincial school because they deem that it is in their best interests to do so, that is a positive step forward.

Updating the references to the Chartered Professional Accountants Act: a good thing.

Updating the terms of office for trustees to four years: a reasonable thing to move forward on.

It's a good thing to enact a set of professional standards for principals and superintendents. Madam Speaker, superintendents are charged with a very important duty, the duty of ensuring that education is functioning smoothly, that our schools, our educators, our children, and the education that occurs within the walls of our institutions are meeting professional responsibilities and that education is in fact taking place. Setting professional standards for principals and for superintendents is a positive step.

Our concern with Bill 28 and with this particular setting of professional standards for principals and superintendents revolves not around the intent but around the lack of confidence that we believe Albertans have in this government to oversee the regulatory process. We have seen in the term of this government a lack of proper consultation, and they have sometimes, some would say, purposely placed poor legislation before this House – an example would be Bill 6 – with the promise that they will fix this poor legislation through the regulatory process. Then the consultation process to develop the regulations can be controlled by the government, and the regulations can address those parts of the bill that should have actually been addressed in the Legislature but, instead, are being worked out outside of the Legislature and without the input of the Assembly.

This government has a habit of not listening to its stakeholders, and we are not convinced that this government will work co-operatively with the stakeholders involved. We don't believe that they will work co-operatively with the stakeholders involved when drafting up things like the professional standards that principals and superintendents will be expected to live up to.

Madam Speaker, Bill 28 addresses, within this omnibus bill, a trustee code of conduct, and in this we see a trend beginning and continuing towards the centralization of power – the centralization of power – with the minister. In an education system which for decades has been characterized by a decentralization of power, where we've had local school boards elected by the people of Alberta, the parents of Alberta, that have made local decisions that have governed the education system of our children, we begin to see and have continued to see a centralization of power in the hands of the minister.

Bill 28 also provides the minister with power to set mandatory elements when developing a trustee code of conduct. The United Conservative Party does not agree that the minister needs to centralize and to continue to centralize the decision-making power of education in his office.

Over the course of the past two and a half years we have seen the minister take control away from the school boards across this province and invest it in himself. The minister abandoned local bargaining in favour of a provincial bargaining system where he appoints the majority of the representatives on the negotiating team.

This minister's solution to the school fees issue was to vest the decision-making power regarding school fees in himself rather than leaving it for a local school board to decide. While the minister may believe that vesting that power within his office is a positive step, we've seen even just this past week that it has had some very real issues creep up, some unintended consequences, some might suggest. As we've seen over this past week, in the Elk Island public schools they've cancelled their half-day kindergarten as they had paid for the noon hour busing through fees. The result? Parents who at one time had a choice to have a half-day kindergarten program now no longer have that choice in Elk Island public schools. Why? Because the minister has vested the power within his office and has made decisions on a province-wide basis that do not have the capacity to take in local considerations.

The minister supported an amendment and spoke to an amendment in this Legislature to a private member's motion that would have made the minister and the public school boards the determiner of school choice in Alberta, a private member's motion, that should have been easily supported and eventually was by the government when they backed down, to support private and charter and home-schooling options. Instead, the minister at first supported, as the government did, an amendment to the motion that would have made the minister and the public school system the guardians or the gatekeepers over whether you could have had those educational options.

This minister has taken a most determined stance to be the guardian of school choice by refusing to expand the charter school alternatives in this province. We've had several charter schools over the last two and a half years that have applied to be able to be a charter school in this province. They've had waiting lines of parents to enrol in these schools once the minister has agreed to allow that charter school to move forward, yet they have been turned down by this minister without reasonable explanation even though the minister could have clearly added these additional charter schools and, in the process, would have met the needs and the desires of Alberta parents.

Now this minister has determined that he will mandate the elements of the board of trustees' code of conduct, another step in a long line in consolidating power within this minister's hands.

Mr. Mason: Point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, we've had a point of order. Go ahead, hon. Government House Leader.

Point of Order Relevance Items Previously Decided

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I rise on several points in the Standing Orders of the Assembly.

- 23 (b) [When a member] speaks to matters other than
 - (i) the question under discussion . . .
- (c) persists in needless repetition or raises matters that have been decided during the current session . . .
- (f) debates any previous vote of the Assembly unless it is that Member's intention to [see] that it be rescinded.

Madam Speaker, with respect, I recognize that the chair needs to allow wide latitude to members when they speak to questions, but it does occur to me that the member is not at times in his speech referring to the bill but, rather, is taking the opportunity to read a litany of his complaints against the minister for things that the minister has done, which may or may not relate to this bill. I understand that he has been rather frustrated as our government has embraced a progressive approach to education during our term in office. Nevertheless, it is important that you focus on what is before the House, what is on the floor, and also that you not reflect on previous decisions of this Assembly because those are clearly matters that are dealt with in these particular clauses of the standing orders.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise on the attempted point of order, which I don't think is one. I think what I heard the hon. member doing was trying to create context as part of his debate on the bill to make it clear, not only to people in this Legislature but the people that may be watching through other means, why he feels the way he does and why he's taken the position that he does. I don't think there's a point of order here. Frankly, I thought that while the Government House Leader may not have cared for what the member was saying, he was speaking in a fairly respectful way and, again, was giving context to both the things that he did appreciate and support about the bill as well as the things that he did not appreciate and support about the bill.

One of our jobs here as we debate these things is to debate in such a fashion that the people that vote for us or against us at home or any Albertans watching would have an idea of why any of us here do choose to vote for something or against something. Part of that is context, which I believe the hon. member was providing, and I thought that in a fairly respectful manner he was doing that. I appreciate that the Government House Leader feels tender about some of the decisions that, you know, his minister has made, but I don't think the member was so much trying to redebate the items that have already been decided as giving context to why he would or would not support the bill. With all due respect, Madam Speaker, I think the Government House Leader is being a little bit more sensitive on this Thursday afternoon than he needs to be.

Thank you.

3:40

The Deputy Speaker: Any other speakers to the point of order?

Seeing none, I will note that as the hon. Government House Leader recognized, the Speaker does tend to give fairly wide latitude when speakers wish to express their comments regarding a matter or a bill. For the most part that's how I was interpreting what the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon was doing, providing a background explanation of why he perhaps could not support some elements in the bill. However, I would caution members that it is important to try to stick to the bill being debated and not drift too far off the context. However, in this matter I think we can simply proceed. Just be a little more closely aligned to the bill itself. Thank you.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I will endeavour to take your counsel into consideration here as I move forward, okay?

Debate Continued

Mr. Smith: May I bring us back, then, to this bill. This minister has determined that he will mandate the elements of the board of trustees' code of conduct. Now, education and codes of conduct in education are best developed in a co-operative climate where the people at the most local level would develop their own codes of conduct as many school boards have already done across this province. Rather than co-opting local authorities so that he can mandate elements of the board of trustees' code of conduct, the minister could, should issues arise, direct his concerns to the school board involved and work with that school board and help them address any of the concerns that the minister may have.

Each of these trustees, Madam Speaker, has been elected. They've been elected by the parents of the constituency that they serve in education, and these trustees are accountable, at the end of the day, to the constituents that have elected them and to the expectations that these constituents have of them. We know that in this province, that is larger than most countries in the world, every school board is unique. We have rural. We have urban. We have some school boards that in their territory alone are massive, and the educational issues that they face are absolutely unique. In that case, the trustees may need some very unique expectations written into their codes of conduct.

What happens if the mandatory portions of the code of conduct from the minister conflict with the wisdom of the trustees and/or the people that they represent? If the minister believes that he needs this additional level of power, then he must have a pretty clear idea of what these standards would be that he wants to mandate. So why not build them into the legislation, where they could be debated by the members of this Assembly?

Busing across the province of Alberta: the problems that school boards have to overcome regarding their transportation in this province are incredibly varied. Urban needs, rural needs: they will vary greatly.

The United Conservative Party agrees that the walk limits are a problem and that they need to be addressed. Setting a 2.4 kilometre limit in legislation was an issue in some jurisdictions, but in other districts it was not the primary busing issue. Rather, the number of routes or ridership or travel distances or funding: these were the primary issue. The United Conservative Party can support placing distance limits in regulation. What we find worrisome is how the distances will be decided. Our position would be that local boards know best what is needed as far as walk limits, and they should have reasonable flexibility to decide what those limits will be. This should be locally driven, not driven by a bunch of bureaucrats who are making up regulations that may not particularly reflect the local concerns or the realities of the parents and the students where they live.

Madam Speaker, in an urban setting asking a five- or a six-year-old to cross several busy intersections regardless of the total distance may not be safe, and putting forward a provincial formula is not going to allow for local situations to come under consideration. Our school districts are simply too varied. They need the boots on the ground making these decisions, not some province-wide formula.

Indeed, we've heard from many stakeholders that their concern is less the formula and is more focused on the process for fulfilling their responsibilities regardless of whatever the walk limits are. The opposition would strongly remind the Minister of Education that funding decisions regarding transportation will affect the bus routes that will be provided. We are not talking about the amount of money set aside in the budget for transportation, while that can be an issue, but, rather, an issue of timing.

For many large urban school boards, the bus schedules are driven by money. If the budget is finalized and approved by the Legislature in the spring, many school boards fear that there is not going to be enough lead time for the school boards to be able to implement the busing plan. For instance, we've been told that the Calgary board of education has more bus routes than the city of Calgary. Imagine trying to organize all of those bus routes, pick-up times, et cetera, in only a few months. This minister must be sure that the decisions regarding walk limits and the budgets that accompany them also consider a reasonable period of time in which to implement the bus routes and the schedules.

The minister continues his trend towards the centralization of power when he provides himself with the power to force school boards to co-operate regarding busing through Bill 28. Providing the minister with the power to force school boards to co-operate over busing simply removes the decision from being a local, community-driven process to one where the decision is made by a minister who may not understand the local sensitivities or nuances regarding transportation. Let the people, the voting parents, decide whom they are willing to vote for, and let those school board trustees decide if it is in their children's best interest to have a co-operative busing agreement.

The United Conservative Party supports co-operative busing agreements and arrangements. We believe that co-operative busing arrangements should be pursued where savings can be accrued and where it can be done meeting the local needs of the parents and the students. We believe that these decisions are best made locally and that providing the minister with the ability to enforce co-operation is a troubling sign that reveals once again this government's mistrust of local elected decision-making.

There are parts of Bill 28 that we do support, but like all omnibus bills, the good portions of this bill will sometimes be lost because of other parts of the bill that need improvement. For instance, the United Conservative Party, as we've said, supports the updating of the terms of office for school board trustees. Yet because of the increasing power creep of the minister built into this omnibus bill, we will have to vote against good parts of Bill 28. That is the nature of an omnibus bill. It leaves the potential that good legislation, legislation that has the support of the House, is lost if the entirety of the omnibus bill is defeated.

It is therefore with a sense of an opportunity lost that the opposition will not be supporting Bill 28.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's an honour to rise today to speak to Bill 28, the School Amendment Act, 2017. I want to thank the hon. Minister of Education for bringing this piece of legislation forward. We were elected two years ago based partly on our commitment to strengthen the education system across our province. Of course, we've had many discussions around the importance of our government's promise to fund enrolment growth and build new schools throughout the province, but we must also work to enhance the legislation that governs the system as well.

It's important to recognize that the School Act has served our province's communities for over three decades. I believe that through Bill 28 and through its amendments to the current act we will be able to address many of the complexities within the act that have become somewhat outdated, ensuring that the legislation meets the needs of our communities now and into the future.

Madam Speaker, I can tell you that through the conversations I've had with educators, parents, and the wider Edmonton-Meadowlark community, I've heard many great ideas about how we can modernize our education system. The amendments within Bill 28 address many of the concerns within the current act that have been brought forward to my office. As a government we must do our best to address the changing needs of our communities. The way in which the province delivers education and the fairness in how it is delivered are of the utmost importance to my community and to all Albertans.

Among the changes to the School Act contained within Bill 28 is the proposed establishment of school transportation co-operative agreements, which would encourage co-operation between school boards to ensure efficient transportation for our students, sharing transportation services where possible. This is an idea that has come up often while considering this legislation and even before then with my constituents, and I'm happy to see it move forward.

We also see changes proposed to the school transportation walk limit, which would eliminate the antiquated 2.4-kilometre restriction on bus services, taking effect in the 2018-19 school year. Once again, I've heard from many people in my community that having children walk anywhere near 2.4 kilometres every morning and every night to receive transportation services is simply too much, especially when we look at some of the complexities within my community like Westview Village, which is measured from the front of the manufactured home community and doesn't take into account those who live near the back of the massive property. There is no doubt that these changes will have a positive impact on the families in my community and for others across the province.

Bill 28 also specifies that school boards will be required to develop and implement a code of conduct that applies to school board trustees, recognizing that these trustees play an important role in leading our education system and should have established guidelines much like the ones laid out for municipal councillors under the MGA, or the Municipal Government Act.

Bill 28 will set a consistent standard that a student must be five years of age as of December 31 of the year they are entering into kindergarten, something we've heard broad support for, I believe, at least on this side, for sure. Right now the age at which a student may start kindergarten is set individually by local school authorities and varies across the province. Consistency across all boards will ensure fair and equitable education for all students, of course taking effect in September 2020 to allow school boards and parents and families to plan around these changes.

Bill 28 will also allow the Minister of Education to set standards for the education service agreements to ensure that students are able to access the provincial education system on equitable terms no matter where they live throughout the province. In cases where students live on-reserve and want to attend schools in a public, separate, or francophone school jurisdiction, an ESA is signed between the First Nation and the school authority. These ESAs vary across the province, and as a result, once again, these agreements are not consistent. Having standards for these agreements will ensure accountability and will remove some of the barriers that exist when students on-reserve look at their choices for education while maintaining and allowing continued opportunities for First Nations and school authorities to collaborate into the future.

Madam Speaker, within Bill 28 we also see changes to increase collaboration of and transparency for the public in the process around establishing separate school districts. This would ensure, once again, a consistent approach with standardized timelines and specific steps throughout the process. It will also encourage all parties to work together.

We also see within this legislation updates to financial reporting requirements for private schools to bring them into alignment with practices within our public system. While many private schools already provide this information to Alberta Education, this would ensure that all that accept public dollars are subject to consistent financial reporting expectations and would ensure greater accountability for the public funds that go into all of our schools. It's important to note that for the 2017-18 school year there would be no changes. This regulation, once put in place, would take effect in the '18-19 school year.

Madam Speaker, I am very supportive of the amendments proposed within Bill 28. Through the changes that I have discussed and other changes to the School Act, we will ensure that the professionalism and dedication demonstrated by educators across our province will be supported by legislation that has been updated for the 21st century. These changes will go a long way in terms of addressing some of the challenges that have presented themselves within the current School Act, and I believe the implementation of this bill will result in stronger collaboration, more transparency, and better service delivery to many Albertans that rely on our education system while making the system more fair overall. I know that the minister has spent a lot of time consulting with educators, parents, and all interested stakeholders in the development of these amendments, and I believe it shows through the common-sense changes that have been put forward.

I'm happy to stand in support of Bill 28, and I hope all of my colleagues will do the same. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other speakers to the bill? I'll recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Pleased to rise and speak to Bill 28, the School Amendment Act, 2017. The Alberta Party caucus will be supporting Bill 28. It is not a perfect bill, but I think it does do more, certainly, good than not.

Briefly, just speaking to some of the aspects of the bill that we support and then some areas of concern, the professional practice standards for principals, superintendents, and certificate-holding central office staff I think is a very positive move. I think what's especially positive about this is the grandfathering for existing people who are in existing positions. It allows for continual improvement within the system but doesn't place undue burden or new expectations on people who have legitimately achieved the positions they have to date.

The establishment process for separate school districts as well, I think, is a result of a good, collaborative process between separate and public school boards, and I hope it ushers in a new era of collaboration which will benefit Alberta students primarily, also perhaps offering an opportunity for cost savings.

That then leads me to the school transportation and co-operative agreements. The opportunity for the minister to have an increased ability to examine and address situations where co-operative transportation may be beneficial is a good thing. It can eliminate duplicate service and increase service levels. I was pleased to see that the minister was so clear on that point, that school boards that choose to collaborate will be treated more favourably by the minister. I think Albertans would expect that our education system would collaborate wherever possible to both reduce cost and improve service. That seems like a good, common-sense outcome.

Education service agreements with First Nations I think are very particularly important and very welcome. In a conversation I had with the chief and council at Tsuut'ina Nation recently, which is adjacent to my constituency of Calgary-Elbow, they raised this issue with me, and they had some grave concerns about some of the inequities in education when Tsuut'ina students would participate in either the public or separate system, primarily in Calgary. This will, I hope, allow the government to establish standards that will ensure that all students are treated fairly, that indigenous students have every opportunity for a great education, be that on-reserve or in partnership with off-reserve schools.

The transportation walk limit. Of course, it's great to see the 2.4-K limit gone. I do have some questions about how exactly the new walk limit will be set. That's a tremendous amount of work to do all around the province, and for the ministry to be involved in that with each school board is going to be a long and complex process. This could very well have a knock-on effect that, I hope, does not have a further detrimental impact.

I can tell you that many of my constituents in Calgary-Elbow – and I've heard from many, many parents in Calgary and around the province who have real, genuine concerns with how transportation has been handled. There have been some significant changes to bell times and busing and transportation within, in particular, the Calgary board of education, which has had a real detrimental impact on parents around the city, in particular parents of children in alternative programs. We have situations where students now as young as 10, 11 years old need to take multiple city buses plus a C-Train, then cross a busy street just to get to school. I think that as a parent that doesn't feel right to me.

I think that we as legislators should ensure that we're thinking of making sure that education is the prime area of focus and primary objective for all of our school boards. The way one parent put it to me is that it felt very much like the system was transportation focused and happened to also educate students as opposed to an education system that happens to also provide transportation. They felt that the situation was reversed, where the focus seemed to be on making sure that transportation worked and that if the kids happened to also get an education at the end of it, well, so be it. Of course, I think we would agree that that certainly is not an acceptable situation.

My hope is that removing the 2.4-kilometre walk limit and allowing school boards to work collaboratively with the ministry to establish new walk limits that fit the context of each community and each school board will be a positive thing and, equally, that the ministry will provide backfill funding to school boards to enable proper transportation to make sure that students have the opportunity, of course, to get to and from school in a way that makes good sense for them and good sense for their family.

While I have the floor and speaking of transportation and alternative programs, one of the frustrations that many constituents have expressed to me is that French immersion, in particular, is treated as an alternative program when it is so widely available, especially in our larger cities but even beyond, and that that's captured as part of this umbrella, which creates tremendous inequities when it comes, especially, to transportation for parents whose children choose French immersion. It is an official language of this country, as I'm sure we all know. I understand that up to 1 in 5 or even 1 in 4 students in the Calgary board of education participate in an alternative program, the vast majority of those in French immersion. It's widely available throughout the city. One would hope that there would not be an inequality in transportation as it relates to alternative programs of all kinds, but especially French immersion.

Standardizing the age of entry to kindergarten: we certainly will support that as well as the trustee code of conduct, requiring each school board to establish a code of conduct. I would hope that that would help improve governance and accountability of school boards and make sure that school boards are, in fact, responsive to the needs of parents and students. The good news, Madam Speaker, is that I think that is the case in the vast, vast majority of situations amongst the dedicated trustees who serve our province, but this, I think, can only seek to improve that.

The technical and administrative amendments to update some of the references to things like the Chartered Professional Accountants Act, updating the term of office for trustees to four years: these are sort of technical amendments that also exist in the legislation that are a positive thing.

With that, Madam Speaker, we in the Alberta Party caucus are happy to support Bill 28 at third reading. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other speakers to the bill? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I've spoken to this bill a few times. Thank you so much for the opportunity to speak to Bill 28, the School Amendment Act, 2017. There are a couple of things that need to be addressed. You know, a lot of the members have spoken about the good changes in this bill, and again I would completely agree. As the Official Opposition we have a crucial job in making sure that we are holding the government to account with respect to any new legislation that comes through this House. It just feels that time and time again so much legislation comes so quickly through the House. It's large, large legislation, and to debate and question it appropriately and to get to the nitty-gritty of the legislation – I mean, this legislation has real-world implications to Albertans.

How is one supposed to ask appropriate questions, no matter how difficult they are, about the plans for these programs and the rollout of the legislation, especially legislation like this, that really gives the minister a tremendous amount of oversight, Madam Speaker? Actually, the changes that can be made by the minister can be made whenever he deems it to be necessary. If the Minister of Education felt so strongly that we should support every aspect of the legislation and if there were no contentious things hidden in this legislation, then why is there not a comprehensive plan to actually address the larger portions of this legislation, that we're supposed to just believe are going to go through regulations? We're supposed to just be okay with that? There are large parts of this legislation that I believe Albertans would prefer to make sure have the opportunity to be debated, especially as there are so many good things in this bill. Again, it's so frustrating as a legislator to see so many good things that need to be changed.

From the stakeholder outreach that I was able to do and from many of the trustees and the board members that I spoke to, especially with the new elections, I have to tell you that there is a lot of information in this, institutional information that was with the other trustees and past boards that hasn't been transferred, necessarily, at least not at this point, to the new trustees.

So there's a whole bunch of information that is huge within this bill. I understand that the government did some two-day consultations and discussed it. But to tell you the truth, Madam Speaker, how much of the feedback that came from stakeholders was actually put into this legislation? We won't know because we're being expected to understand that everything that will happen in this legislation, the larger portions of this, is just going to happen in the regulations. As much as I would like to think that everything is just going to be okay, I do believe that our responsibility in this House is to actually be able to look at the meat and bones and the guts of this whole thing and to be able to discuss it appropriately.

But this is a continued pattern, where legislation is hidden within other legislation. You know, again, it's mind boggling. You want to be able to support practical ideas and policies that the government puts forward, really great policies, really great ideas. I'm not interested in voting against those things, especially the more relevant things that we know that the stakeholders are looking to change. However, there are pieces of this legislation that are very concerning that will not even come to see the light of day, Madam Speaker, so how are we supposed to ask questions about those when it's going to just go through the regulations?

You know, the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark was speaking about modernizing and how, when we get the bill, it's going to be changed. You can modernize the bill as much as you want, but how are we supposed to understand what those modernizations are going to look like if that's not in the guts of the bill and that's going to happen in the regulations? We can't debate that.

He also spoke about collaboration and transparency. Well, the only way that we can collaborate and create transparency is to actually have access to understand what's going to happen in the guts of this legislation.

The Member for Calgary-Elbow, you know, is agreeing to vote in favour of this legislation, but if the minister doesn't show the ability to consult widely and all things happen in the regulations, how can we possibly vote in favour of a piece of legislation that does not adequately tell us exactly what's going to be going on? This is a tremendous amount of oversight, and it will give the minister – and I don't believe any minister should have this level of it – the oversight to legislate on these issues as he sees fit in the future.

Like I said, there are so many good things in this bill, but there are things that are contentious, and it just makes it a huge deal breaker to otherwise very strong legislation.

The crux of the matter is that the significant changes to the way our province is run need to be vetted through this Assembly, Madam Speaker. We need to ensure that we're creating policies for the betterment of all Albertans. The government doesn't just get to create workarounds for that process through one piece of legislation whereby the practical pieces of that legislation seem to be the main idea there.

But then as you go through the legislation, there are all of these other things that are really concerning. The timing, of course – not that that's the government's fault. I mean, there was an election. However, I think there's a sensitivity that needs to be there in understanding that there's a whole bunch of stakeholder outreach that hasn't been done, with 50 per cent of the changes happening to school boards and school authorities and to our trustees.

Of the board members past and present that were aware of this bill, many had been communicated with initially, but did you know, Madam Speaker, that many of the boards and the trustees have yet to see the final report on how their feedback was implemented? I don't think that that is transparent at all. I don't think that that is collaborative at all. Those are all of the things that the government keeps saying, but we have yet to see that happen in real life.

Would the government be willing to table the consolidated feedback that was supposedly used to inform this legislation? That's just one of the questions. If you have that, I would be very, very grateful to see that. I think it would, at least to some degree, put at ease some of the questions that at least the folks I've spoken to have had. That feedback is of high importance, the feedback that comes from these people. These are our elected bodies, our elected trustees and school authorities, that have the thumbprint of each one of these school boards. It is absolutely imperative that that feedback be tabled or that we understand it so that as the process goes through and these regulations are put forward, Albertans actually understand and are part of at least the understanding of the process that's going to be put forward here.

What is the government's plan, then? If so much of this is going to change within the regulations, I'd like to know what the government's plan is to communicate these sweeping changes to the school boards, many of which, like I had said before, have newly elected trustees. Were the trustees aware of this legislation? Many of them felt that this bill had potential to further erode local decision-making.

Now, as you know, on this side of the House that's a pillar of our party. That local decision-making process is so important because we put faith in the folks that are elected by the people of those local areas. That is the level of accountability that is imperative at all levels of government. We really believe that the people in those areas have a responsibility to be able to understand and elect who they believe best represent the people in those areas. If local decision-making is being taken away as a result of eroding the work that is done by the school boards, the school authorities, and the trustees, I do believe that we have a responsibility to the people of Alberta to make sure that we are not undermining a process that is imperative to making sure that decisions that are being made at those levels are impactful, appropriate, transparent, and accountable to the folks that elected them there.

You know, the most important thing about those local school boards and school authorities – and I think all of us can agree on this – is that schools are the focal point and the centre of a lot of communities, especially in rural Alberta. These schools are the heart of the community, the hub of the community. The teachers live in the communities. The principals shop at the same Safeways as the parents. They see each other all the time. They have dinners together. These people know each other. These are very, very important relationships. Those communities and that communication and that level of understanding: we can't take that for granted, that local aspect.

Even in the larger cities you see that, with so many of the schools being the hub of so many of the communities. This is what brings parents together and families together. We do not want to be doing anything that divides that local decision-making from the families that rely on the people in those places that take care of their babies for eight hours a day.

I just think that, with respect to those entities, we need to respect and understand and really, really look at the intricacies of those schools and their communities and the families, and we need to make sure, Madam Speaker, that we're actually empowering those communities, that we're empowering those bodies, because they have the heartbeat of those communities. We need to empower them, not erode their power. I believe that any time a minister is going to have that level of oversight into a school authority, you are undermining the ability for that school authority to actually act in the best interests of that community.

We need to ensure that they're engaged, that with the changes that are made, their positions are not being made redundant by a provincial government that is overstepping, especially with the running of the school boards. Changes being made to school transportation and the establishment of separate schools are two instances where trustees should be heavily involved in the decision-making. These people know what is going on with their schools.

As the Member for Calgary-Elbow had mentioned with regard to transportation in the cities, when Bill 1 came forward, the level of letters that came across our desk with regard to transportation, especially with regard to our alternate schools – he'd spoken about French immersion. We had many, many, many families that were in alternative programs that are provided by CBE that all of a sudden could not access the schools because of ridiculous changes in transportation. That is a direct result of lack of consultation, Madam Speaker.

That is comparative to the exact situation that we could find ourselves in with the passing of this bill, with not actually pulling it apart a little bit and finding out what it is that we need to do. Why not do one part of the bill with the changes that need to be made that have been consulted on, obviously, and then take a look at these other pieces and consult appropriately on those?

I also have questions regarding how the smaller private and independent schools will be impacted by sections 5, 6, and 7 of this bill, and those are the technical components of this. That was extremely vague. They are quite concerned, given that, you know, Madam Speaker, schools come in all shapes and sizes in this province, which really is an absolutely magnificent part of the schooling system in this province, our choice and the different kinds of education that are possible. I'm constantly blown away by the amazing – amazing – people that educate our children in this province. School choice is a pillar of education in this province.

When we're looking at the administrative components that would require schools to hang on to student records and financial statements, as important as that is, that oversight within the schools in those situations, I think that you can't look at it as one size fits all, Madam Speaker. We have larger school boards that obviously have a very different component, but when we're looking at small schools, I think that we need to be sensitive, and we should look at the unique perspective of each of those schools before we go rushing in to create policy that oversees a whole bunch of different school authorities. Again, consultation amongst all of these school authorities I think could fix a lot of the issues that I could foresee happening in this bill due to the oversight of the minister and maybe not particularly understanding the thumbprint of that particular school.

My list of questions on implementation of these incentives is long, Madam Speaker, and the point is that this House should have the opportunity to debate those and question all of the sweeping changes. Honestly, if the minister was ready to bring forward a cohesive and well-thought-out piece of legislation, I think most of us would be more than happy to have a robust debate on those specifics. I believe it is necessary to do that. Given the engagement of Albertans and given the changes in the education system and given what is happening – we were talking about math scores and all sorts of things earlier – there are a lot of families and parents that are frustrated right now.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

Seeing none, I will have the hon. Member for Sherwood Park on behalf of the Minister of Education to close debate.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's an honour for me to close debate on Bill 28, School Amendment Act, 2017, and ensure that the School Act is meeting the needs of the students and the school trustees that we have in our education system at the moment.

I have to say that I'm very disappointed that the members opposite are not supporting this common-sense legislation that will move the education system forward. I would like to remind everyone in this House that this legislation was built in extensive consultation, and I would be willing to repeat the list of groups that the minister consulted with, but as it is in Hansard in my speech yesterday, I think I will refrain from doing so.

I would also like to really thank those people that have been consulted: the school trustee associations, the Teachers' Association, the parents' associations, the First Nations groups, and everyone that participated in the consultations over the last few months. I think it's a really good reminder of how the Minister of Education values the collaborative work that happens in our school system. He values the work of school trustees, the work of superintendents, the work of teachers, and the role that parents play in the school system.

These amendments are going to ensure that our students in Alberta have the best education possible and that they can succeed in their chosen endeavours in the school system. I would like to suggest to the members opposite that they reconsider their decision not to support this bill, that is really going to meet the needs of our students.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 28 read a third time]

Mr. Mason: We're finished third reading, yes?

The Deputy Speaker: Yes.

Mr. Mason: There is no more business before us for the afternoon, Madam Speaker, so I would move that we adjourn until 1:30 on Monday afternoon and wish everyone very safe travels and a great weekend.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:21 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 29th Legislature - 3rd Session (2017)

Activity to Thursday, November 30, 2017

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 1 to 200 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 201 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

* An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at 780.427.2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, December 4, 2017

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let each of us pray or reflect, each in our own way.

Dr. Albert E. Hohol

December 27, 1922, to November 17, 2017

The Speaker: Hon. members, today we pay tribute to a former member of this Assembly who has recently passed away. Dr. Albert Hohol was elected as the Progressive Conservative member for Edmonton-Belmont in 1971 and was re-elected in 1975. Dr. Hohol earned his bachelor of education in 1950 and his master of education in 1954, both from the University of Alberta, and his PhD from the University of Oregon in 1967.

After his teaching career progressed, he rose to the position of associate superintendent, educational administration, for the Edmonton public school board in 1969. He then turned to provincial politics and served in the cabinet his entire tenure. Dr. Hohol held the portfolios of Minister of Labour from 1971 to 1972, minister of manpower and labour from 1972 to 1975, and minister of advanced education and manpower from 1975 to 1979. In his last portfolio he advocated for the creation and ongoing support of the Canadian Institute of Ukrainian Studies at the University of Alberta. Dr. Hohol passed away on November 17, 2017, at the age of 94.

In a moment of silence I would ask that you remember Dr. Hohol as you may have known him.

Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, we will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Mr. Robert Clark. I would invite all to participate in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
Il sait porter la croix!
Ton histoire est une épopée
Des plus brillants exploits.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, with our admiration and respect, there is gratitude to members of the families who shared the burdens of public office and public service. Today I would like to welcome members of the family of Dr. Hohol who are present in the Speaker's gallery. Please rise as I call your names: Ms Barb Oberg and Mr. Ted Prebushewski. Hon. members, if you would express your appreciation to the family members of Dr. Hohol.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'd like to remind everyone that we have a very busy day, and I would encourage each and every one of you to keep your introductions as brief as possible.

The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of outstanding individuals who are here today celebrating Human Rights Day at the Legislature with us. I would like them to stand as I call their names: Karen Lee Gall, Jim Gurnett, Austin Mardon, Catherine Mardon, Chevi Rabbit, and Muriel Stanley Venne. Please, let's give them the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise and introduce to you today and to this Assembly members of the electricity and sustainable energy division in my ministry. These folks serve Albertans very well with all their hard work. In their division they've been helping to launch the renewable electricity program and transition to a more sustainable market system for Alberta's future. I'd ask them to rise as I call their names: Brent Kelly, Chelsea Donelon, Christine Armitage, Christopher Ewert, Ewa Kultys, Helaina Zyp, Isabelle Vouvé, John Ferrera, Kimberly Budd, Sandy Lee, and Scott Crawford. I'd ask them to stand and members to join me in welcoming my staff.

The Speaker: Welcome.

An oversight: school groups first, hon. members.

The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce a number of students, some of the hardest working and smartest students in the whole province of Alberta, who are visiting us from the humble constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar, those being the students of Forest Heights elementary school. They're accompanied by their teacher, Frau Marion Fritz, and some parent chaperones, Alexander Brunnée and Brian Salisbury. It should be noted that Forest Heights offers a German-English bilingual program, and in recognition of that, I have saved up some of my heckles in both English and in German this afternoon. I'd ask that the students please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Darby Young and Amy Stevens with Level Playing Field Inc. Darby visited us on Thursday. She's back again today with Amy in commemoration of the International Day of Persons with Disabilities. Amy runs the office and is known as the amazing Amy at Level Playing Field. I'd ask now that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to introduce to you and through you to all the members of the Assembly guests who are also here celebrating Human Rights Day. Seated in your gallery are Roxanne Felix-Mah, Joel French, Jill Green, Harchand Grewal, Charan Khehra, and Hai Nguyen. I'd ask my guests to stand – I thank them for all the hard work that they do – and that we give them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly guests who are here today for Human Rights Day: Alphonse Ndem Ahola, Cynthia Palmaria, Harriet Tinka, and Xiang Zhang. This year Human Rights Day also commemorates the 50th anniversary of the international covenant on economic, social, and cultural rights and the international covenant on civil and political rights. I thank my guests for celebrating this day with us and ask them now to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly guests who are here today also celebrating Human Rights Day at the Legislature. They remind us of the importance of human rights in our own lives and that every person is entitled to human dignity and worth. Here today are Fakhra Abrar, Lorna Dancey, Gary Hansen, and Blake Loates. If you four would all stand, I would thank you all for your work and ask you to receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

1:40

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to introduce to you and through you guests who are here today celebrating the annual event of Human Rights Day at the Legislature. Later today I will speak more about Human Rights Day and the importance of a common standard of equal dignity and worth for all people. My guests here today are Susan Dut, Tammy Kaglik, Shahriyar Khan, and Jonathan Robb. I'd ask them now to please rise to receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three of my favourite constituents. Two of them were too young to vote for me. One probably did, but she is my wife. I guess there's no way to know for sure. But it's good to see Tiffany Nixon – I'd ask if she would stand up – and our twins Austin and Chyanne, who have been guests in this House many times, but they've never seen it quite this way. Most of this last year they've seen their dad in unity town halls across all of central Alberta and then on a leadership race all across central Alberta. So I say to them through you: "Here it is. We united. Thanks for all your help, and thanks for being here." Please give them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome. You must be a very patient wife.

The hon. Minister of Labour and minister responsible for democratic renewal.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this House a group of 19 from the United Steelworkers who are here with us today. The United Steelworkers is Canada's most diverse union, proudly representing workers from a number of fields, from steel mills to health care, social services to telecommunications.

As well, we are joined by two other people very important to me. First, my mother-in-law, Dr. Bette Gray, has been an educator all her career, an award-winning teacher. I've been very honoured to have Bette in my life and am very happy she's here to join us. She is joined by Edna Dach. Edna is also an award-winning educator and innovator. In fact, there are now awards named after her that are being given out. She's an inspiration to me personally and, I know, to all who know her.

If I could have all my guests stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mr. Carlier: Mr. Speaker, it is my sincere pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly this year's inductees into the 4-H Alberta Hall of Fame, Linda Gooch and Sylvia Mathon. Linda Gooch has been a 4-H leader and volunteer for more than 25 years in many roles, including district key leader and on the Provincial Equine Advisory Committee. The late Sylvia Mathon was a 4-H parent, leader, and volunteer with a passion for family, youth, and agriculture. Sadly, Sylvia passed away in 2016, and her presence will be sorely missed by her 4-H family. Linda and her family as well as a member of Sylvia's family are here today, including two-and-a-half-month-old Rebecca. I'd like to ask that they now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Health and Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce a group of medical students who are here from the universities of Alberta and Calgary. They're seated in the members' gallery. Each year a group of students from both programs visits the Legislature to meet with MLAs and share their ideas about health care. I look forward to meeting with them later today. I now invite Howie, Kaylin, Angela, Adom, and their colleagues to please rise and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly several organizations. To start, the Victims of Homicide of Edmonton Support Society. The Victims of Homicide Society was founded in 1995 by Noel and Joyce Farion following the murder of their son. I've attended several of their meetings, and I can say that it's a profoundly emotional experience first-hand. The group provides ongoing emotional support to help people deal with the pain of their tragic loss and to help them slowly rebuild their lives one day at a time.

They are joined by representatives from both CDI College and UFCW local 401: Lori Kapler and Renata Maione from CDI College as well as Charmaine St. Germain and Sheena Thomson from UFCW. They're joined by my constituency manager, Maria-Elizabeth Vicente. All of them along with 16 of my colleagues' offices work to make the UFCW local 401's third annual shoe drive a success, and I'll be discussing that later in my member's statement.

I would like to ask all of my guests now to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of introductions. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly representatives of the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities. Joining us today are the following members: Cam Tait, Neil Pierce, Regan Treewater-Lipes, and Darby Lee Young as well as Darby's assistant, Amy Stevens. I'm pleased to have them here today in honour of the International Day of Persons with Disabilities. Our government was proud to appoint 15 new members to the Premier's council for the first time in years, led by Chair Sheila Serup and the deputy chair, my colleague the MLA for St. Albert. I appreciate having an incredible group of individuals on this council and look forward to working with them. I ask my guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mr. Sabir: I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly ambassadors for the CommuniTea Infusion project and Skills Society who are visiting us today in honour of the International Day of Persons with Disabilities. Skills Society is one of the largest disability rights and service organizations in the Edmonton area, with a 40-year history of supporting over 400 people with disabilities in the Edmonton area. Skills Society is a valued partner of my ministry and is known locally and nationally as an organization that lives and breathes innovation in order to help people with disabilities live full lives in the community.

One of their innovations is called CommuniTea Infusion project, which converted a 1972 Volkswagen bus into a tea house that travels to Edmonton neighbourhoods, creating and strengthening community relationships. This is an innovative employment program, and I wish to congratulate all participants on its success. Joining us today are Paige Reeves, Larry James, Emily Hannem, Momo Yekee, Chris Bruce, and Shelby Larson. I ask my guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

International Day of Persons with Disabilities

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday, December 3, I was pleased to join millions of people around the world to celebrate the International Day of Persons with Disabilities. This is an important day to recognize the valuable contributions of persons with disabilities in our communities. Disability is not inability. Every day across our province individuals with disabilities are making incredible contributions and building stronger communities. The International Day of Persons with Disabilities is an important opportunity to celebrate these remarkable accomplishments and promote inclusion in all our communities.

This day is also a call to action. While much has changed since the day was first proclaimed in 1993, many issues and barriers continue to face individuals with disabilities. These issues are important to our government and to me personally. Before I was elected, I worked at the Salvation Army. I have seen how important it is to have reliable public services for individuals with disabilities and their families.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I'm proud to be part of a government that is focused on taking action to make life better for Albertans with disabilities. Instead of making reckless cuts, we are protecting and improving the supports Albertans with disabilities count on. Since we were elected, we have increased funding for PDD by $55 million so that more individuals and families have access to support. We have increased funding for AISH by $93 million and released the AISH action plan to make improvements. We have stopped regressive and dehumanizing policies that hurt Albertans with disabilities.

One of the things I'm most proud of was repealing the safety standard regulation in its entirety. This was a damaging regulation that was imposed on the community without much consultation, and the community told us loud and clear that it had to go. I was proud to remove the supports intensity scale, that people with developmental disabilities called invasive and dehumanizing.

It has been a source of pride and a profound privilege to do this work, but I know there is more work that needs to be done. Individuals, families, and advocates have had to wait for real action for so many years, and I know it sometimes feels like improvements aren't being made fast enough.

That is why we are creating the first disability advocate in Alberta's history, someone who will represent the rights, interests, and views of persons with varying abilities, with a view to improving programs and services available to them. We look forward to sharing the job posting soon. We are also making AISH more accessible and user friendly and will be releasing new application forms and a user-friendly guide for Albertans later this month.

Mr. Speaker, we are doing this work in collaboration with many incredible individuals, advocates, and organizations who are working diligently to make life better for persons with varying abilities. Over the next week several Albertans are being recognized with awards for their outstanding leadership. Awards are being presented in communities throughout the province by members of the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities, a council that we were so proud to appoint 15 incredible advocates to this past year.

I'm so proud that Alberta not only promotes but embraces and celebrates inclusion and diversity. I want to recognize all award winners for their incredible work. I also want to recognize all individuals with disabilities, their families, advocates, and front-line workers for the work they do to make life better for Albertans each and every day.

Mr. Speaker, we are here, we are listening, and we are committed to working with all concerned to build an even stronger and more inclusive Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I would propose to continue with the response from the Official Opposition, and then we will move to Oral Question Period.

The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am so honoured to rise today in the Assembly to celebrate the International Day of Persons with Disabilities and to celebrate the enrichment that people with disabilities provide world-wide. In 1992 the United Nations General Assembly proclaimed December 3 as the International Day of Persons with Disabilities to promote equality, inclusion, and the empowerment of persons with disabilities and to highlight the obstacles that they still face in society. To date this convention on the rights of persons with disabilities has 160 signatories to the convention, 92 signatories to the optional protocol, and 175 ratifications and accessions. This convention identifies the rights of persons with disabilities and serves to promote, protect, and ensure those rights. In March 2010 the government of Canada joined this list when it ratified the convention.

While our country, Mr. Speaker, has made incredible strides in creating equal opportunity and welcoming spaces for the disabled, we still have a very long way to go. Based on 2012 data from the Canadian survey on disabilities, almost 14 per cent of the Canadian population is affected by some sort of disability. People with disabilities are still too often struggling to seek secondary education, equal payment, and employment. The stigma surrounding disability has to end, and it needs to end today.

As the mother of a child that faces these challenges, I know what my child along with others with disabilities are capable of. I'm incredibly encouraged that the government will soon be creating the first disability advocate in Alberta's history. This is an important first step in creating the essential role that advocates for these incredible individuals and helps them to navigate a system that can often seem overwhelming.

Mr. Speaker, as elected officials we must lead the charge in creating an inclusive and welcoming society that values equal opportunity, kindness, diversity, and acceptance. I feel so completely blessed to be able to use my voice to support and to advocate for and to empower persons with disabilities, and I will continue to strive to shape a world in which every day is a day that celebrates these remarkable and extremely able individuals from across our province and the world.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to seek unanimous consent to allow a representative from the Alberta Party to respond as well as to ask for the Routine to extend past 3 p.m. today.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. December 3 marked the 25-year anniversary of the International Day of Persons with Disabilities. The United Nations founded this day of observance to promote awareness and understanding of persons with disabilities and to mobilize action around issues of accessibility, mobility, and dignity. I'm proud to rise in the House to acknowledge this important day and to salute all persons with disability in our province and around the world.

While we have observed the International Day of Persons with Disabilities since 1992, the sentiment goes back a number of decades. In 1976 the United Nations proclaimed 1981 the International Year of Disabled Persons, and two years later the decade of persons with disabilities was proclaimed. These were important steps, and there are many tangible ways the world has changed for the better because of these initiatives.

In the past it was common to think of disability as a problem rooted in the body. This was an assumption upheld by those in the medical profession and one that often found its way into political discourse. Now we have to ask each other and ourselves some tough questions when it comes to ability and disability. Do we as a society fail to empower people whose abilities may be atypical?

Today I ask that all members of this House take the time to reflect on this important day and how we think about ability and disability. I ask that we consider the diverse needs of our constituents, colleagues, and friends, who may themselves grapple with a disability. I would also like to send a gentle reminder to all members of this House. Disabilities may not always be visible and may not always be obvious, but they are no less real. Disability does not exist in a vacuum. We must continue to acknowledge how disability intersects with other forms of discrimination and thank the community for bringing forward their diverse experiences.

I look forward to a day where we can support one another with the goal of a progressive and mindful Alberta that reflects all of our needs, goals, and limitations.

The Speaker: Hon. members, there was a request for unanimous consent, if you would, for an introduction of guests who were missed.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the House for indulging me. It is an honour to introduce to you and through you 12 members of the council administration staff from Thorhild county. Here today are Wayne Franklin, Richard Filipchuk, Janelle Cornelius, Chynne Shaw, and Cheryl Pasay. They're all here from Thorhild county to bring Christmas wishes to the government and the members of the Assembly. I would ask you to extend the customary warm greeting of the Assembly.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Trans Mountain Pipeline Construction Opposition

Mr. Nixon: Last December, when our Premier met with B.C.'s NDP leader, he said after that meeting that she had no intentions of persuading on pipelines, and the Premier seemed content with this, saying: I haven't changed his mind; he's still very committed to standing up for his constituents, and that is fine. Now we find out that during her visit to B.C. last week, the Premier didn't even bother to meet with B.C.'s Premier, instead choosing a Vancouver audience that was safe. A simple question to the Premier: is this government doing anything at all that is consequential to advocate for a pipeline to tidewater with the B.C. government?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Let me be very clear about one thing, and that is that the Trans Mountain expansion will be built. We will break the landlock. We will get our products to new markets. I was so proud to go to Vancouver last week to build support for this critical project amongst opinion leaders throughout the Lower Mainland. I did the exact same thing the week prior in Toronto and in Ottawa.

The Leader of the Opposition is familiar with Ottawa. He sat on Parliament Hill for two decades and did nothing to support the industry, Mr. Speaker. We have a very different record.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, this government has a failed record when it comes to much-needed resource projects. They've gotten two pipelines cancelled and another one that everybody is trying to obstruct. Words won't help. Words are not enough. We are glad to see the Premier starting to take action with words, as we have asked, but we need consequences. We need serious actions. Will the Premier stand up and make it clear what the consequences will be to B.C. if they continue to obstruct our pipelines, or will she continue just to have words? Albertans are looking for more than words, Premier.

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll tell you what we won't do. We will not yell. We will not scream. We will not build a wall. We will not act like someone from south of the border. We will work respectfully and collaboratively with our colleagues across the country. We will talk to citizens across the country about the very important role that our energy industry plays for all citizens of this country, and we will continue to work to get this pipeline built, and we will succeed on behalf of all Albertans, and I invite the members opposite to join us.

Mr. Nixon: The federal NDP MP for Burnaby South, Kennedy Stewart, last week compared the Kinder Morgan Trans Mountain expansion project to the Guantánamo Bay detention camp. It isn't a surprise that the new federal NDP leader also opposes the project in no uncertain terms. He said that, quote, we must oppose the expansion of the Kinder Morgan pipeline. It's fine for the Premier to continue to stand up here and give words, but there need to be consequences. There needs to be serious action taken beyond words. Will the Premier stand up, make it clear what the consequences will be to B.C. if they continue to block pipelines? If not, it's nothing but words. Albertans need action.

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Interestingly, while we're in the business of quotes, the president of Kinder Morgan Canada, you know, the company that's actually building the pipeline, describes our government as, quote, strong and unwavering partners of ours and of our industry. End quote. That is because we are doing the grown-up thing. We are not making threats. We are not making outrageous claims that we have no ability to back up. We are working carefully and respectfully with the citizens of this country to get the job done.

The Speaker: Second main question.

Provincial Credit Rating and Debt-servicing Costs

Mr. Nixon: Last week under this government's watch Alberta's credit was downgraded yet a shameful sixth time. Last week I tried asking the Finance minister about the increased borrowing costs that would come from this downgrade. After repeatedly dodging the question, he finally admitted to Albertans how much that downgrade would cost but only in this fiscal year. The crippling debt is a problem that extends well beyond this year. Is the government willing to release the expected costs of these downgrades over the next decade, or will they continue to hide behind ridiculous answers?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the member opposite knows, the Minister of Finance answered his question last week and indicated that the cost of the most recent downgrade would be roughly $50,000. But you know what? The important thing is that our government had a choice when the price of oil fell. We could have Albertans' backs, we could invest in jobs, we could invest in public services, we could invest in affordability, or we could take the tried-and-true efforts of the past, blow up hospitals, lay off teachers and nurses, and make a bad situation worse. We chose the former, and things are looking up.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I pointed out that the minister finally did answer that question after eight questions, but I see we're yet again in the same spot now with the Premier. I asked a very simple question: how much will these six downgrades under her government's watch cost Albertans over the next decade? We're not looking for rhetoric. It sounds like the Premier is campaigning to be Leader of the Opposition. Stand up. Tell us your government's policy. Tell us how much this will cost Albertans. Simple question; simple answer.

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In the long haul the cost of financing our debt will be well below 1 per cent of the overall budget, but to eliminate that debt this year, for example, would mean getting rid of $9 billion. That is the whole education system in the province. That is firing every teacher and shuttering every classroom. We are not going to go ahead with those kinds of ridiculous plans. Albertans expect a more responsible form of government. That is exactly what they are getting.

Mr. Nixon: Again more fearmongering, more deflections to simple answers.

Last year debt-servicing costs alone were over $1 billion. That's $240 for every man, woman, and child inside the province of Alberta, and all this Premier can stand up and continue to do is fearmonger over and over and over. So I'll try a different question but very simple. Does this Premier and the NDP government have any plans to avoid a seventh credit downgrade, or are they going to continue down this ridiculous, reckless path?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What I will say is that what we won't do is cancel important projects that matter to Alberta families; for example, the project that the members opposite were calling down last week, disrespectfully calling "a fancy box," the new cancer centre. It was unbelievable. Albertans need a government that will stand up for them, that will invest in their future, that will invest in their families and invest in the public services that they desperately need, that for so long were overlooked. I'm so proud that it is our government that is here now making these decisions finally on behalf of the people of our province. [interjections]

The Speaker: Please, hon. members.

I believe we're at the third main question.

Carbon Levy Increase

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's disappointing to see the Premier continue with this behaviour. It's unbecoming of the Premier of Alberta. Here's a fact – you want to talk about facts – 12,000 Albertans lost full-time jobs in Alberta alone last month. Calgary and Edmonton still have high unemployment, and this Premier has stood in this House after putting in the largest tax increase in the history of this province, a tax increase that she hid from the people of Alberta when she campaigned, and we still have no social licence. So I will ask a question. Will the Premier recognize that her carbon tax has not worked and stop her reckless 50 per cent increase at the end of the month? [interjections]

The Speaker: Folks, just let me know when you're ready.
The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, the unemployment rate in Alberta is at a two-year low. Tens of thousands of new jobs have been created. We know that we still have more work to do. Do not forget. We know we have more work to do. We care about Alberta families, so we're not going to throw a bunch more out of work for some ideological pursuit like theirs. In the meantime, drilling is up, retail sales are up, small-business confidence is up here in Alberta. Our plan is working, and we're going to keep working it because we know that's what's going to be best for all Alberta.

Mr. Nixon: This Premier wants to talk about ideological plans. She brought in the largest tax increase in the history of Alberta without even telling Albertans about it while she was campaigning. Again, I asked a simple question to the Premier today, through you, and she stands up with nothing but fearmongering and rhetoric. It's just ridiculous. Will the Premier and the NDP acknowledge that their carbon tax has brought no social licence, that it is hurting Alberta families? Stand up and do the right thing and stop the increase. In fact, I would go as far as to say: withdraw the carbon tax.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, what I will stand up and do is remind the member opposite that, in fact, when the Trans Mountain pipeline was approved at roughly this time last year, the people who made the decision to approve it actually identified our climate leadership plan as the reason for why it was approved. So I will not apologize. I will celebrate, and I will say that this is the kind of leadership that Albertans have been looking for for a very long time. Now, the members opposite say that they want to cancel it, so will they now stand up and tell the people of Calgary definitively that it is their plan to cancel the green line? [interjections]

The Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Nixon: The Premier's Trudeau Liberal allies may have liked her plan, but the people in B.C. that are blocking the pipeline that she keeps saying is going to get built certainly don't. The environmental activists, the extreme ones, actually, that she put on government panels that are working now to block Trans Mountain, didn't accept that social licence was a result of her carbon tax, that she lied to Albertans about when she was campaigning.

Mr. Bilous: Point of order.

Mr. Nixon: Happy to withdraw that comment there, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Nixon: But the reality is this. The NDP government do not have any social licence as a result of their carbon tax, and the question is: will they stop their reckless behaviour and recognize the consequences that Albertans are receiving as a result of their ideological policies?

2:10

The Speaker: Hon. members, I talked about, on your collective behalf, respect for each other. I would hope that that message will sustain itself for the next, I hope, 18 months.

The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, it is very interesting to observe the creation of the strangest of allies, the extreme left and the extreme right, working together to somehow cut down Canada and our future. The message that I delivered in Toronto, Ottawa, and Vancouver is that the progressive majority of Canadians want to move forward, need to move forward, need to support our sustainable and responsible energy industry, support the jobs it creates, and support what it will do for Canada on the international stage. I believe that we are growing support for that very vision. I think that those on . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Services for Persons with Disabilities

Mr. Clark: Why, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we mark International Day of Persons with Disabilities, I want to draw the government's attention to the work of the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities. In their most recent annual report the council made 30 recommendations across 15 government departments and six community agencies. However, there's no follow-up about past recommendations, and there are no measures to track the implementation of current recommendations. To the Premier: how are you co-ordinating your ministers to ensure that these recommendations are fully implemented in a timely way to the benefit of all Albertans with disabilities?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the important question. We know that it is of critical importance that we constantly look to find ways to improve our services and supports to Albertans with disabilities. As a result, there is a great deal of work that is going on, whether we're talking about reviewing the AISH program and the criteria there as asked for by the Auditor General, whether we're talking about the work that the disability council will be doing under the leadership of the MLA for St. Albert, whether we are talking about the work that's been done with respect to PDD . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier, with apologies.
First supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, I recently received a business card from a member of the council, and I was shocked to see a Gmail address. I learned that government staff had created a Gmail address for each council member. Now, this raises a lot of troubling questions, including whether Gmail is FOIP compliant, how the government will manage the increased IT security risk, and how the public perceives something so unprofessional on official GOA business cards. Again to the Premier: is it standard practice for your government to use Gmail, or is it only happening on this council, and if so, what does that say about the value that the government places on this council's work?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Let me begin by saying that we very much value the work of the advisory council on disabilities, and we've been working, of course, collaboratively with a number of agencies as well as representatives and self-advocates within the disability community since our government was first elected.

On the matter of the e-mail I will be happy to have the minister get in touch with the member in order to answer that specific question.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, earlier this year this House unanimously passed a bill to create the disabilities advocate.

Albertans were very hopeful that this position would be created quickly to the benefit of Albertans living with disabilities and their families, friends, and supporters. But six months later not only do we still not have a disabilities advocate; the government hasn't even started the recruiting process. To the Minister of Community and Social Services: will you commit here and now to a timeline to recruit the disabilities advocate, and will you include the Premier's council in the process?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the important question. We do know that Albertans have waited for decades to have that office set up. We are proud of the work that this side of the House did. We have that office now approved. It's not just hiring one individual; it's about setting up an office. We have done the background work, and fairly soon we will be moving with recruitment, and, yes, the Premier's council will be included in that process.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Community and Regional Economic Support Program

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The community and regional economic support program, or CARES, has allocated $30 million to support economic growth and prosperity throughout our province. In my constituency the town of Stony Plain recently received $40,000 in CARES funding to help support business development and create high-value jobs. Given the importance of this program in creating jobs and diversifying the economy, to the Minister of Economic Development and Trade: what new projects have been created as a result of the CARES program?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for her question and also for being such a strong advocate for this program and other economic development opportunities within her riding. Dozens of communities across the province are creating jobs and diversifying their communities through the use of the CARES program. I can tell you that at AUMA two weeks ago I announced funding for 50 new initiatives. Some of those include a small-business incubator focused on supporting entrepreneurs looking to start social enterprise in Calgary, an indigenous pipeline monitoring program in Edmonton, an entrepreneurship mentoring program in Canmore, and a training program for small Alberta businesses . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

There seems to be a culture of using the desks as objects, but we have not yet crossed over that Rubicon about clapping.

First supplemental.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that one of the goals of CARES is to support diversification of the economy, especially in our critical industries, to the same minister: how does CARES encourage that diversification?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I just want to talk for a moment about the importance of this program. These are initiatives by local leaders and community leaders coming to government and saying: we have ideas on how to diversify our economy. Now, for some reason the opposition seems to think that they know better than the local leaders who have received funding all across this province, including in every single one of their ridings. I'd love for them to have a conversation with their local leaders to find out how they feel about CARES funding. These are critical diversification projects they have not been able to move forward on. Just because you guys don't believe in diversification, the rest of Alberta does.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The CARES program is also very popular with municipalities, with over 80 applications from communities across the province. Given that co-operation between provincial and municipal officials is key to delivering programs successfully, to the same minister: what incentives are there for municipalities to both work together and work in tandem with their local MLA?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I've been going around the province promoting this program – we've now had three intake windows for CARES – I made it very clear to local municipal leaders, including entities like Alberta's regional economic development alliances, who can all apply for CARES funding, that what we want to encourage is a regional approach to economic diversification. We know there are 344 municipalities in the province of Alberta. What we'd like to see are municipalities working together with each other in order to compete on the world stage. And you know what? This program has been very successful. I look forward to announcing the next round of CARES successful applicants and encourage all communities to apply.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, last week we learned that personal and corporate tax revenues were down lower than projected and that many Albertans who have been lucky enough to return to work are making significantly lower wages. Some Albertans have recovered, and we celebrate their success, but for far too many this has been an asymmetrical recovery. Many in the middle class are afraid of falling lower, and many lower income Albertans are struggling just to hang on. What is this government doing to ensure that we have an economic recovery for everyone?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the member for his question. It is an important one. You know, Alberta is just coming out of the worst recession, some say, since the '30s. The past two years have been very, very challenging. This is why our government made a choice to invest in infrastructure, to invest in front-line services. I can tell you that there are a number of different economic institutions that are forecasting that Alberta will grow at least by 4 per cent this year, and they attribute that primarily to two things. One is our historic infrastructure build, but as well investor confidence is up, coming from the approval . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Given, Mr. Speaker, that this time of year has a lot of added costs for moms and dads, this Christmas is going to be hard for many Albertans, with many people's incomes reduced significantly from what they were just a few years ago. Perhaps there's not much that the government can do directly to help them right now, but there is something the government could not do that would help them. The carbon tax is scheduled to go up on January 1 by 50 per cent, significantly increasing the costs of home heating fuel, electricity, and food. Will this government show compassion to these families by repealing the increase in the carbon tax on January 1?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise and discuss the details. Of course, rebates will go to 60 per cent of Albertans, a full rebate, the first week of January, just as they did last year. In addition, this government has undertaken a number of different initiatives to make life more affordable for families. We've eliminated a number of school fees. We've got a tuition freeze happening. We've got investment in $25-per-day child care. We've got a cap on electricity rates. We've got the rebates, as I said. We've got a number of efficiency programs that are also putting a lot of Albertans to work. We've got a new child . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Given, Mr. Speaker, that there's nothing compassionate about raising taxes on the most vulnerable and there's nothing compassionate about running up so much debt that we jeopardize the social safety net that protects the most vulnerable Albertans – all of us in this House agree that it is our duty through charity and government to provide a safety net, but I'm not sure if everyone here understands how important sound financial management is to ensure that that safety net is sustainable – does the Finance minister not agree that unless he changes course, he will be jeopardizing important programs that vulnerable people rely on?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much for the question, Mr. Speaker. You know, the things we won't jeopardize are public education and public health care. That side has marked solutions for both of those things that would make life far more expensive for Albertans. We're going to follow through with our program. We're growing the fastest of any province. That's good news for everybody in this province, for companies and people. We're going to continue on that track because that will get us back to full recovery.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In less than one month the carbon tax is going to jump 50 per cent, creating more of a financial burden for Albertan families across this province when they can least afford it. Perhaps the most troubling fact is that this backward tax will attack our most vulnerable populations: seniors, low-income Albertans, those on AISH. When the legislation was introduced, this side of the House put forward multiple amendments asking the government to exempt our vulnerable populations and the organizations that serve them. These were voted down. Why is the government targeting vulnerable Albertans with the carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the full rebate goes to 60 per cent of Albertans. Two-thirds of Albertans get a rebate. If you're a couple who makes less than $95,000, you're getting a $450 rebate. If you have two kids, that goes to $540. Low-income seniors in Alberta are getting a $300 rebate. We've also set up energy efficiency programs for nonprofits, for small businesses, for community centres, for farms, for First Nations so that they can save money on their bills and live more comfortably.

Mrs. Aheer: Mr. Speaker, the rebates don't help the not-for-profits, and the rebates are less than the cost.

Mr. Speaker, given that we've heard from countless not-for-profit organizations that assist vulnerable Albertans that they will not be able to provide the level of service they once did or be able to serve the volume of clients they were once able to because of the impact of the NDP carbon tax and what it will do to their bottom line, why is the government not supporting our not-for-profit organizations by refusing to exempt them from the carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we moved forward with a number of different initiatives for nonprofits. Last year, if the hon. member was paying attention, she would have noticed that we had an audit program. We have the business, nonprofit, and institutional program. It's those energy efficiency programs that the folks across the way have done nothing but make fun of the entire time that we have had them introduced because they don't want those organizations to save money. They don't want to put people to work on energy retrofits and other forms of efficiencies. They want us to be stuck in the Stone Age.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we talked about judging the motives of other parties last week. I want to remind you about those kinds of comments.

Hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View, I think we are at second supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I don't know how energy efficiency is going to help not-for-profits at this point in time, however, if that's the way that the minister is going.

Given that not-for-profits are already struggling, Mr. Speaker, and there are high demands for their services and fewer donations because of the stressed economy and given that the carbon tax is a significant expense for these organizations regardless of the efficiencies, where does the government expect Albertans to run when the not-for-profits that actually provide the services for them are forced now to turn them away because of the carbon tax that is making it more expensive to operate the not-for-profits?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we have invested in a number of new initiatives for businesses, nonprofits, and institutions that are allowing folks to retrofit their operations to save money. I just toured a recreation centre on Thursday, Vivo in Calgary. They retrofitted their lighting, and they're saving $80,000. That's exactly the kind of leadership that the Conservatives would turn their backs on. Those folks in Calgary: they're doing the right thing.

Tourism Industry in Northern Alberta

Mr. Loewen: Every hotel customer in Alberta pays a tourist tax, whether they are working, visiting family, or touring the region. In 2015-2016 northern Alberta paid $9 million in tourism tax and received $732,000 in return for development and events, and that number eroded by 36 per cent the following year. Does the minister feel that it's fair to neglect the tourism needs of northern rural Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, our government is investing in jobs and diversifying the economy by working through tourism infrastructure. It's very important to ensure that we are making those investments to bring not just Albertans on holidays to other places but also internationally as well. There is a considerable investment, and it's an equitable way by which we can help to promote the tourist industry.

Mr. Loewen: Given that the government talks about diversifying the economy but the government does everything to do anything but diversify the economy and given that northern Alberta's economy has been hit hard by the carbon tax and given that tourism taxes in northern Alberta are down $1.4 million year over year from 2016 to 2017, will the minister admit that his provincial tourism promotion spending is not working for northern Alberta and that the job-killing carbon tax is hurting tourism, just like it's hurting the rest of Alberta's economy?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's funny that the hon. member would say that because, certainly, there is more tourism in the province of Alberta than we've seen in a number of years, and investment internationally is considerable as well. I was just up in his neck of the woods last week, and the economy is booming. You know, he can't have it both ways. You've got to make sure that you make the investments and then you reap the rewards as appropriate.

Mr. Loewen: Given that the minister maybe needs to look at a few facts before he answers a question and given that on May 30 of last year the minister of tourism suggested that a higher U.S. dollar increases buying power and therefore helps tourism and given that the government has implemented a job-killing carbon tax, driving up the price of everything, and it will rise another 50 per cent on January 1, to the minister: if a rising U.S. dollar increases buying power, does it not make sense that visitors will have less purchasing power and that the carbon tax will drive tourism away?

Mr. Eggen: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, what doesn't make any sense is to constantly run down our province, as the UCP does. They make it sound as though there's something wrong with our province. I'm proud to be an Albertan, and I'm proud of our tourism industry here. It has seen record years, and it will see another record year here come next summer.

Thank you.

Mr. Gottfried: Mr. Speaker, when the question of balanced budgets is raised, government-side MLAs race to be the first to shout out and misrepresent others' spending restraint. However, the government loosely suggests moving towards a balanced budget by 2023 without any strategy or plan. To the Minister of Finance. It is clear that you have no plans to restrain public-sector spending, and your policies are clearly not attracting global investment to bolster jobs, economic activity, and revenue, so tell us, Minister: how do you intend to balance your spendthrift budget?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, I take objection to the idea that there have been no savings achieved by this government. That side let CEOs go to golf courses, have really great health memberships. We cut all of that. We cut the salaries and eliminated the bonuses of the highest paid executives of Alberta's ABCs by $33 million. We extended a salary freeze until September 2019 for management, and that's going to save $29 million a year.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Gottfried: Mr. Speaker, all that and you still can't balance a budget.

Given that the minister clearly believes he can address the deficit without actually controlling spending [interjections] . . .

The Speaker: Order, please. Order.

Mr. Gottfried: I'll start again, Mr. Speaker. Even then they can't balance the budget.

Given that the minister clearly believes he can address the deficit without actually controlling spending and given that he is clearly counting on creating a new magical revenue stream despite consistent underperformance of both personal and corporate revenue and has yet to conjure up any revenue magic with his red ink provincial fiscal wand, again to the minister: you have clearly demonstrated your inability to manage expenses, so where will you find $10 billion in additional revenue in order to balance the budget by . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, you know, Jason Kenney wants to look out for his friends and insiders. He'd like to keep the golf club perks.

Mr. Nixon: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order.

Mr. Ceci: He'd like to keep the memberships and access to private health care. We're not going to do those sorts of things. We're going to carefully look at where the reductions need to be made, Mr. Speaker, and we are. We're going through all of that. That was all set in place by those folks. We're reducing that because that's the right thing to do, and Albertans expect it.

Mr. Gottfried: Mr. Speaker, I wonder how much the membership to the red ink club is going to cost them.

Given that U of C economist Trevor Tombe astutely observed that based on the recent Q2 update we need resource revenues to be 26 per cent of our budget and given that in 2015-16 we only relied on 19 per cent of our budget to come from resource revenue and clearly the NDP are making Alberta more reliant on oil revenue, not less, and given that the minister has been telling Albertans incessantly that the NDP are getting off the resource roller coaster, again to the minister: why are you blatantly misrepresenting the facts to Albertans? [interjections]

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, that doesn't seem parliamentary over there.

But I will tell you that we're not going to take advice from members opposite, who couldn't balance the budget when oil was a hundred dollars. Their friends in Saskatchewan have imposed a 6 per cent sales tax on new construction and other things, Mr. Speaker. We're not doing that. We're responsibly looking at those places a budget can be cut, and we're bringing those in. Under the Q2 update I can tell you that drilling is up, retail sales are up, manufacturing is up. Things are looking up. They don't want . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Flood Damage Mitigation in Calgary and Area

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A flooding event devastated Calgary in 2013. In the aftermath of the disaster the government promised the shaken citizens that it would take concrete steps to protect them from future flood waters. But four and a half years later Calgarians are still waiting. To the Minister of Transportation: where is the promised flood protection now?

Ms Jansen: I want to thank the member for the question. Certainly, when we talk about the Springbank offstream reservoir, it's one of the issues that I think this government is taking extremely seriously. The government of Alberta committed to the Springbank offstream reservoir project in October of 2015, and that commitment has not wavered. In fact, the project is the best option, we feel, to protect the city of Calgary and other downstream communities from another flooding event like the one in 2013. We continue to work on that and consider it a very viable option for us in the future.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the neighbouring Tsuut'ina Nation opposes the Springbank dam, as do most of the landowners who would be displaced by the project, and given that surely the minister has consulted with all of the parties involved, to the Minister of Transportation: what kinds of resolutions have you fostered to move a flood project ahead?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can assure the member that conversations with Tsuut'ina and the local landowners are ongoing as the province moves forward with the Springbank project. But it's not just about Springbank; it's also about that we're investing $150 million for local flood protection projects in the city of Calgary. Of course, we also created the Bow River Working Group to assess potential future Bow River flood mitigation options. Those are all funded as operating grants. Those are the kinds of things that you could not fund with the kinds of cuts that are being proposed by the Conservatives.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the cost of this project has already doubled to $400 million over the past few years and given that neither the Calgarians nor the Tsuut'ina Nation nor taxpayers can afford to have it drag on, to the minister: when will flood mitigation be in place for Calgarians?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Jansen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. You know, we think it's important, obviously, to do the work of consultation. That has been important through this whole process. Working in tandem with the Glenmore reservoir SR1, we're going to ensure that flood mitigation is capable of protecting against 2013 levels. I do want to say that when we talk about the importance of these projects and about cost savings, it's important to remember that our government is committed to these issues in terms of how they work with environmental issues while our friends across the way are interested in scoring political . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.
The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Cannabis Distribution and Sale

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On July 1 of next year cannabis will be legal across Alberta. Selling cannabis illegally has been extremely lucrative for criminals in Alberta for decades. They seem to be able to make millions of dollars, yet the government has indicated that in the first years of legalization Alberta will actually lose money on legalized cannabis. To the Minister of Finance: how is it possible the NDP government will make no money in the same line of business where criminals have been getting rich for years?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Just to reiterate, there are three guiding principles: one, making sure that our roads and our workplaces are safe; two, making sure that this product is kept out of the hands of youth; and three, making sure that we take out the illicit and illegal market. To be able to do that, you need to make sure that you price it at the right point. We're working to ensure that that happens, and at the same time we're doing the other important investments to make sure that the other values are also followed through. Alberta is not alone in this. We need to do this as a national effort to keep our communities safe and to take out the illicit market.

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the government has left the door open to have provincial workers deliver cannabis purchased through their online system instead of having Canada Post do that job and given that Canada Post successfully delivers medical cannabis across Canada every day, to the minister: since you've already stated that you can't make money selling the stuff, why are you even considering creating a brand new, money-losing public service to duplicate what Canada Post does now and has done for over a hundred years?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thanks again, Mr. Speaker. We did do consultation with Albertans on a number of different components, and we've decided to make sure that we move forward with a private retail model, public distribution and private retail for the storefront piece. We do believe that there is a significant opportunity for greater oversight and support in terms of the online component, and we look forward to following models that I understand other jurisdictions are looking at as well. This is not unusual. This is something that we're going to keep working at to provide that protection for the youth, protection for our work sites, protection for our roads, and making sure that we cut out the illicit market.

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker: losing stores, losing mail service. Given that criminals sell marijuana because it's illegal and they have no law-abiding competition for that market and given that they make lots of money doing trade in the shadows, again to the Minister of Finance, if he'll get on his feet: how do you convince Albertans of your financial competence when you're running $10 billion plus annual deficits and you can't even figure out how to make a buck selling dope?

Mr. Ceci: You know, the whole discussion about cannabis sales and taxation will be coming up at the federal-provincial-territorial first ministers' meeting on Monday of next week, Mr. Speaker, a week from today. I'll have more to say about all that, obviously, after that period in time, but as the Deputy Premier has already said, we're responsibly going into this whole thing with our eyes wide open after consulting with Albertans about their wishes. Albertans have directed, have said: this is the way we want it to unfold in terms of the private and public.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

2:40 School Construction and Modernization in Northeast Edmonton

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Northeast Edmonton is one of the fastest growing parts of the city. The community of Pilot Sound is full of young families and children that are in need of a school, or they may have to deal with the prospect of long commutes and cramped classrooms. Despite the fact that this neighbourhood was first laid for development back in the 1980s, it has yet to receive a public elementary school. To the Minister of Education: can the minister report on the progress being made to build an elementary school in Pilot Sound?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, this side of the House recognizes that an investment in new capital projects for schools means an investment in our children and an investment to diversify our economy here in the province. For example, people in Medicine Hat, Cold Lake, Grande Prairie are enjoying the new schools that we built using this process, but they would have not been built if the UCP had their way, cutting 20 per cent.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members.

Ms Sweet: Our new schools often open full or nearly full, and the schools which aren't full have greater enrolment than expected. Can the same minister please explain how the government is planning ahead on the community growth?

Mr. Eggen: Thank you very much for the question. Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to share that using the lists that we get from school boards as the way we build priorities for which schools are being built – for example, last week I announced funding for a much-needed high school in southwest Edmonton, adding 1,800 spaces. Just last week we also announced a new elementary in south Edmonton and a special high school in Lewis Farms. We use the process, we use it in a scientific way, and we make sure that the schools get built as the school boards outline for us.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My understanding is that a new school for Pilot Sound was announced, but during the same announcement the minister also announced funding for redevelopment of Ben Calf Robe Catholic school. To the same minister: what is the government doing to increase the capacity by modernizing our schools?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. Certainly, it's important to modernize schools as well as build new ones. We listen to the priority needs of each of our school boards, and we make the decisions as we see fit. Once again, students in Medicine Hat, Grande Prairie, and Cold Lake are certainly outstanding students, but you know what? If the UCP had their way, they would be out standing in a field because those schools would never get built.

Agricultural Plastics Recycling

Mr. Orr: Mr. Speaker, agricultural plastic waste is growing in central Alberta and the province. In 2012 it was reported in the Alberta government survey titled Agricultural Plastics Recycling: Agricultural Producers Survey, page 18: "It is notable that burning agricultural plastics is a common practice." Why has this government not been willing and not been involved in looking for solutions for all agricultural plastics recycling in the two and a half years that they've been elected?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the hon. member for the question. I, too, have heard from a number of people on the matter of agricultural plastics. It's come up at the federal-provincial-territorial table as well. Our recycling regulations are in need of update – there's no question about that – and that will be coming in the coming weeks.

Mr. Orr: So far there's no sign of it.

Given that a working group called the Agricultural Plastics Recycling Group formed in 2016 and involves the majority of stakeholders in the agricultural sector in the province, including recycling organizations, municipalities, ag fieldmen, plastics manufacturers and retailers, even Alberta Agriculture and Alberta Environment, do they have the minister's commitment to move ahead with a provincial ag plastics recycling program to provide an environmental solution for farmers and Albertans, or should they just have to keep burning it?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, people should not burn their agricultural plastics. There's no question that our recycling regulations were left to languish by the previous government, and there were a number of different consultations that occurred that went nowhere, so we picked it up, and we're going to make sure that those consultations are accurately reflected in the new regulatory package. That takes time. We want to make sure that we talk to municipalities and to others to make sure that we're getting it right on recycling of these plastics and others. There's no question that this work remains to be done, and we're going to do it.

Mr. Orr: Consultation has been going on for years already. Does this government really care about the environment or only if they can hijack it in order to justify a massive tax grab? Given that this government has done nothing to address the growing problem of ag plastic, which as it gets burned is highly toxic and emits greenhouse gases, and given that the Saskatchewan government has had an ag plastic recycling pilot project for several years now, when will this government commit to introducing an ag plastics recycling program for Alberta agricultural communities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. If the hon. member would like to ask questions about why the consultations in 2008, 2012, 2013, 2014 went nowhere, he should ask his new colleagues from the former Progressive Conservative caucus because they did nothing. So we are examining this. We've gone out and made sure that we've got a few new consultations to make sure that we know exactly where everyone is at, we know exactly how to get this thing right, and we will do so. We'll be bringing forward new regulations, and we'll get done what the hon. member's new friends couldn't do.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Imperial Oil Cold Lake Oil Sands Project

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Twenty-two months ago Imperial Oil applied to the Alberta Energy Regulator for the approval of a 55,000 barrels per day SAGD expansion project near Cold Lake, and if approved, that project will bring thousands of direct and indirect jobs and a $2.2 billion investment. To the minister. Twenty-two months sounds and looks like red tape. At what stage is this project approval, and if there is any holdup, is that your ministry or is it the Alberta Energy Regulator?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, our focus is making life better for Albertans, and we are working with industry on a number of matters. We have two pipeline approvals. There are good jobs coming back in the oil patch, there's more production, there's more investment, and we're proud to work with industry on made-in-Alberta solutions for each of the areas.

Mr. Panda: Given, Mr. Speaker, that Alberta Energy has been sitting on a report dealing with the safe recovery of bitumen from beneath water bodies for over three years, refusing to publicly release it to the industry, and given the number of lakes and water bodies in the Cold Lake, Athabasca, and Peace River areas, to the minister: why does the Official Opposition have to fight for the release of the taxpayer-funded research while the NDP would keep industry in the dark when much-needed jobs are on the line?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, we work within Energy on a number of matters, and I'm proud to point out that the AER recently has been working on leading in the methane regulations, which industry has been co-operating with us on. We're coming up again with a made-in-Alberta plan rather than something imposed from Ottawa.

Mr. Panda: Given, Mr. Speaker, that the Cold Lake area has been hit hard by the economic downturn and that these highly skilled, well-paid jobs would go a long ways to recovery and given that the unemployment rate now stands at 8 per cent in the Cold Lake area, Minister, if the proponent comes to you and commits to complying with the safety and environmental standards, will you expedite the approval of this Cold Lake project?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I had mentioned, we work with industry, we work with the AER, and if there's a particular problem that is not being addressed to your satisfaction, I'd welcome you to give me the details because I can't speak to that one particular project.

The Speaker: In 30 seconds we will continue with Members' Statements.

International Day of Persons with Disabilities

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On December 3 of every year since 1992 communities around the world observe International Day of Persons with Disabilities. In 1992 the United Nations General Assembly declared an annual observance of the rights of persons with disabilities. The aim of this declaration is to promote the rights and well-being of people with disabilities in all spheres of society and development.

How do we ensure that we leave no one behind? How do we do everything we can to promote the individual autonomy and independence of people with disabilities? We create real solutions by seeing the existing problems and barriers. We acknowledge that women and girls with disabilities are at far greater risk than their nondisabled peers for violence, injury, abuse, neglect, negligent treatment, and exploitation. We acknowledge the significant barriers to community living, inclusive education, and full employment and that they continue to exist and must be methodically addressed by all Canadians. We acknowledge that poverty is a grinding reality for far too many people with disabilities.

Once we acknowledge the realities, we can effectively work towards eliminating barriers to full inclusion for people with disabilities. Barriers need to be torn down by creating inclusive legislation that is not created for people with disabilities but created with them. Full inclusion must be expected and supported by doing things like removing humiliating processes that are put in place to exclude people from living and moving into communities. Full employment for people with disabilities will only be the norm when employers see and appreciate the value of employees with disabilities.

Freedom from abuse and violence requires empowerment, and empowerment comes from the lived experience of equality, inclusion, and access, so today and every day let's acknowledge the International Day of Persons with Disabilities and take a moment and think about what you and your community can do to ensure no one is left behind.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Carbon Levy Increase

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As winter closes in on us with all its might, it's a good time to talk about how this government's ideological carbon tax is going to harm Alberta farmers and ranchers when it goes up to $30 a tonne on January 1. On this side of the House we have long warned about the unintended consequences to some of this government's poorly thought out bills.

Farmers and ranchers are not, as many people seem to believe, exempt from the carbon tax. While it is true that they do not pay the tax on dyed fuels for the equipment directly involved in farming, they are still greatly impacted by this tax on everything, a tax this government didn't campaign on. When the cold temperatures hit, costs will soar on January 1. Expenses such as transportation costs will go up for the trucks and trains that ship the grains, crops, and livestock to consumers around the world. These costs will have to be absorbed by the producers or passed on to the consumer, leading to rises in food costs at grocery stores and restaurants. The price of natural gas will increase, so heating greenhouses, barns, and other outbuildings will become that much more expensive.

Mr. Speaker, there used to be a cheaper alternative to producers, stoker coal used as an economic alternative to heating in areas where natural gas isn't readily available. But this government made sure that was taken completely off the table. You may recall the farmer from Vermilion who uses stoker coal to heat his shop and outbuildings. On his load of coal he paid $42 a tonne. In addition, his carbon tax was $35.49 per tonne, so he ended up paying an additional 90 per cent in taxes. Guess what? As of January 1 the carbon tax portion on a $45 tonne of stoker coal will be $53.09. That's a 118 per cent tax.

With increased costs like this I wonder if Santa Claus will join other companies fleeing for friendly economic climates, but, hey, this government's got our backs.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Human Rights Day

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On December 10 every year we observe international Human Rights Day. That's because on December 10 in 1948 the United Nations General Assembly adopted the universal declaration of human rights. This year marks the 69th anniversary of the declaration and kicks off the year-long campaign to recognize this milestone document for its 70th anniversary next year.

I cannot overstate the importance of this document. The declaration proclaimed the inalienable rights which every person is inherently entitled to regardless of race, colour, religion, gender, language, personal politics, national or social origin, birth, or class status. It's available in over 500 languages and is the most translated document in the world.

The declaration sets out universal values for our global community and establishes the equal dignity and worth of every single person. While there is still a lot of work to be done, the declaration has stood the test of time. Its principles of equality, justice, and human dignity have endured, and the spirit of the declaration, those values and principles, are just as valuable today as they were in 1948. As members of this Legislature and members of our communities it's our job to stand up for others. That's why I was proud to stand in this House and vote to add gender identity and gender expression to the Alberta Human Rights Act and for greater protection for young Albertans to join GSAs. That's why we work so hard to make life better for Albertans, and that's how I'm going to celebrate this milestone, by committing to make life better for everyone.

I look forward to joining my colleagues in celebrating this important document in the days ahead, remembering that all human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights. Thank you.

Rural Emergency Medical Services

Mr. Stier: Mr. Speaker, for over five and a half years I and other members of this House have been raising serious concerns regarding the vast array of problems with the rural ambulance system. Despite constant complaints by residents, elected officials, and EMS paramedics, patients across Alberta continue to feel the impact because of this failed system. Ambulance time wasted on nonemergency transfers, flexing of units into other communities, paramedics needlessly tied up for hours in emergency departments, units not being returned to their home regions, and faulty centralized dispatch protocols continue to plague the system.

These problems were emphasized once again recently, when on November 15, 2017, a number of Alberta paramedics came to the Legislature in desperation, claiming that the number of events that led to emergency calls has increased nearly 36 per cent since 2009 while the population of Alberta has increased by more than 15 per cent, yet we have virtually the same number of ambulances. They added that resources have been stretched to the breaking point. Injured and sick Albertans are paying the price for the lack of resources as they wait for help to arrive. Paramedics also pay the price with increased stress and mental health injuries.

Over the years several significant reports have been conducted on these problems, including that of the Health Quality Council of Alberta, Rural Health Services Review Committee, the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, the central Alberta municipalities group, and the southern paramedics that produced the suburban-rural EMS deployment review. Yet this government ignores all of this. It's time to give our paramedics the resources they need, that we return to local dispatch, that we stop the practice of using ambulances as taxis, that ambulances are released from emergency rooms within an hour and are then mandatorily returned to their home regions.

These are solutions that United Conservatives will continue to advocate for. We will fight tirelessly to put Albertans first and fix these critical ambulance problems once and for all.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

UFCW Local 401 Shoe Drive for Women's Shelters

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm here today to talk about a very important initiative: the UFCW local 401 annual shoe drive. This is the third year that this event has taken place and the second year that my constituency office has participated. The purpose of this shoe drive is to collect shoes to donate to a women's shelter in Alberta. Last year shoes were donated to WIN House, and this year the shoes were donated to the Ermineskin Women's Shelter Society.

I'm very proud of the fact that the number of individuals and groups assisting to collect shoes this year has grown. In addition to the hard work of the Women's Committee of UFCW local 401 and my constituency manager, Maria, we were joined by 16 other caucuses within our group of offices as well as CDI College north campus. Together, we were able to collect over 500 shoes in the Edmonton area alone for women in need.

Violence against all women is simply unacceptable, yet it continues. This has got to stop, Mr. Speaker. Together, you and I can help make a difference.

I highly commend the Women's Committee of UFCW local 401 for taking on this initiative to assist women fleeing from domestic violence. I would also like to thank my colleagues for collecting all the shoes at their constituency offices, and finally, I would like to extend a huge thank you to CDI College north campus for all of their assistance, from collecting shoes to being the site where the shoes were presented to the Ermineskin Women's Shelter Society. Together, each and every one of us can make a difference, ensuring that violence against women is completely eradicated.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

3:00 Racism and Religious Discrimination

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has a proud history as a land of opportunity. Many Albertans today are either immigrants to Canada who chose to live in Alberta or are the descendants of those who did. No matter one's cultural heritage or religious practice, our province has been one where everyone has the opportunity to find work, raise and support families, and worship in peace. We can and should be proud of Alberta's model for diversity.

Disturbingly, a recent media report this weekend captured a deeply troubling, racially motivated tirade in the middle of a Calgary Superstore. I know that all members here today will join me in condemning such forms of racism and bigotry. The angry racism captured in that video is simply not the Alberta we know, love, and serve.

This is an opportunity for all of us to reaffirm our commitment to reject and eliminate racial and religious discrimination in our province. Alberta must continue to be a place where all are welcome no matter their cultural heritage or religious practice. We must be mindful of ensuring that nothing we do here can be interpreted as being against diversity. Sadly, on a few occasions I've seen some members opposite belittle Albertans of faith. I can only assume that they were not aware of what they were doing. We must all agree that Alberta must continue to be a place where all are welcome. There's no room for bigotry and racism in our province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to rise and give oral notice of a bill to be introduced tomorrow, that being Bill 216, the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement (Protecting Alberta's Children) Amendment Act, 2017.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour and minister responsible for democratic renewal.

Bill 32

An Act to Strengthen and Protect Democracy in Alberta

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise today to introduce Bill 32, An Act to Strengthen and Protect Democracy in Alberta.

This bill proposes to amend the Election Act and the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act to make elections more fair, accessible, and balanced. As well, this bill, if passed, will mean new rules to prevent the flow of dark money influencing our elections, to make elections more accessible and easier for people to get out and vote, Mr. Speaker, as well as making sure that we essentially update our Election Act, which has not had significant updates since the 1980s. It's time we move forward with a fair and more democratic and modern electoral system, and it is my pleasure to introduce this bill.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 32 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Bill 33 Electoral Divisions Act

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising on behalf of the hon. Government House Leader to request leave to introduce a bill being Bill 33, the Electoral Divisions Act.

This bill would make certain changes to the names and boundaries of Alberta's electoral divisions. These changes reflect the proposals of an independent Electoral Boundaries Commission. The commission conducted an extensive review of Alberta's electoral map and received written and oral submissions from the people of Alberta. The commission recommends the creation of three new electoral divisions and the consolidation of three areas with below-average population growth over the past eight years. We're moving forward with the recommendations to ensure this process is both transparent and objective. As members are aware, this matter was brought to this Chamber for debate on the evening of November 28. The Assembly concurred with the report while making a small number of changes to individual constituency names. It is on that basis that Bill 33 is presented today.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 33 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When I asked my question today, I made reference to the government actually talking about delivering marijuana through a mirrored system to Canada Post. What I have here is a Globe and Mail article from December 4 confirming that that is what the government has said is a possibility.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, today I talked about a report that Alberta Energy is sitting on and that the industry has been demanding the release of, the Assessment of SATAC for Hydrocarbon Production for Underground Facilities below Water Bodies. This is a 415-page report. I'm only tabling 181 pages. This report was prepared by the Reservoir Geomechanics Research Group at the U of A for Alberta Energy and delivered in October 2014, and the industry has been looking for this. I'm glad to table this report.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the appropriate number of copies of a document entitled Jason Kenney Proposes Drastic Cut to Alberta's Per Capita Spending, Balanced Budget in 3 Years, that I'll be speaking about briefly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I table a letter, dated November 30, received from the AAMD and C. I believe all MLAs have received a copy, and I encourage them to read it before we get into deliberations on Bill 33. They are calling for effective representation for rural Albertans in Alberta's Legislative Assembly.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Ms Gray, Minister of Labour and minister responsible for democratic renewal, pursuant to the Government Organization Act authorized radiation health administrative organization annual reports for the following organizations: the Alberta Association for Safety Partnerships for the period from September 1, 2015, to December 31, 2016; the Alberta College and Association of Chiropractors for the period from July 1, 2016, to June 30, 2017; the Alberta Dental Association and College for the period from January 1, 2016, to December 31, 2016; the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association for the period from November 1, 2015, to October 31, 2016; the College of Physicians & Surgeons of Alberta for the period from January 1, 2016, to December 31, 2016; the University of Alberta for the period from April 1, 2016, to March 31, 2017; the University of Calgary for the period from April 1, 2016, to March 31, 2017.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I believe there was one point of order, which was withdrawn.

Orders of the Day

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 208 Government Organization (Utilities Consumer Advocate) Amendment Act, 2017

[Debate adjourned November 27: Mr. Hinkley speaking]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week we had the chance to introduce debate on second reading of Bill 208, the Government Organization (Utilities Consumer Advocate) Amendment Act, 2017.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

This particular private member's bill has been constituent driven. It started during the campaign and has continued ever since, where constituents, consumers have been looking for clarity and information on their utility bills. They've often indicated that they've controlled consumption or that it has gone down but that the bills continue to rise. They want to know whom they appeal to if they have disputes with those retail companies, and they want to know what can be done about unexpected and perceived unfair utility bills. To help consumers when they purchase electricity contracts, this bill will give them the opportunity to do that by connecting with the Utilities Consumer Advocate.

I did have an opportunity to meet with the Utilities Consumer Advocate and hear about some of the work that that department is doing already to help the consumers of Alberta with their energy concerns. This bill will enshrine the role of the Utilities Consumer Advocate in law so that the UCA can be there for Albertans for the future.

The Utilities Consumer Advocate is an important resource for Albertans, and every year they handle 30,000 to 40,000 inquiries. They produce educational material and run outreach events across the province. They provide mediation services to consumers who cannot reach agreement with their utility providers, and often their intervention is enough to settle most disputes. They run a program every year reconnecting utilities for people who have had their services disconnected so that some of Alberta's most vulnerable do not suffer through a winter without heat or power. They conduct research and represent consumers at proceedings of the Alberta Utilities Commission, and since 2013 the UCA's interventions at commission hearings have saved more than $800 million on energy bills.

This is an important role, Madam Speaker, and I am proud to be putting forward a bill that will allow this valuable office the authority to do its job under legislation and not just under regulation.

The bottom line, Madam Speaker, is that this bill is about consumer protection. With this bill, we are ensuring that consumers are protected against potential unforeseen financial stress. I am proud to be part of a government that takes the responsibility to provide a stable and fair electricity system seriously. The government has already taken steps to ensure that the generation system meets the needs of Albertans into the future. Moving to a capacity market and providing the Alberta Electric System Operator and the Balancing Pool with stability into 2030 will help ensure a smooth transition to a more sustainable and stable economic market for the future. Supporting microgeneration for consumers and supporting renewable energy projects for schools and municipalities will help Albertans take more control over their own electricity needs and generation.

But the electricity generation system is only one part of what makes Alberta's energy market work. The government recognized that energy contracts are complex and took action to ban door-to-door sales of energy contracts and services after receiving more than one thousand complaints from Albertans about aggressive and misleading sales tactics.

The consumer also needs to be informed about their options, and Bill 208 takes steps to make sure that all Albertans have the information they need about their rights as consumers when it comes to purchasing electricity or natural gas contracts. Prior to and since the bill's introduction I have received a lot of positive feedback from those constituents. The goal here is to ensure that consumers have the greatest possible protection and to ensure that they have clarity and confidence that they will not be taken advantage of.

Madam Speaker, it has been great to hear the perspectives of everyday Albertans on the proposed legislation, and I look forward to hearing more from them as we move through this process. At the end of the day, this legislation simply will allow consumers to access the information they need to make smart choices.

Madam Speaker, as I've said before, this bill builds on best practices already in place in the industry here in Alberta and in other jurisdictions. This bill will be another important step in an ongoing discussion around consumer protection in Alberta, and I look forward to the opportunity to continue the debate here in this Assembly about making life better for Albertans.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Speaker. In looking at this bill, one of the initial thoughts that I had as I was going through it was whether or not the advocate's office had actually requested these sorts of things or whether this was just something that the hon. member took on his own initiative. I would still like to know that.

There are, of course, with any piece of legislation pros and cons. Increased consumer awareness is always a good idea. More information being made available to the consumer in one centralized place is a good thing for Albertans. Consumers deserve to be informed about their options and any issues that others in their community have faced when it comes to choosing their power provider.

I don't see any reason, however, why this cannot already be done by the Utilities Consumer Advocate's office under the existing legislation and regulations. I just question whether this was actually an effective use of the House's time since these things could already be done. I understand that the hon. member wants to see this enshrined in legislation – and that's fine – but these powers were already held by the consumer advocate's office under the regs.

I would also like clarification from the hon. member, when he's got a minute, on whether the Utilities Consumer Advocate's office was involved in the writing of this amendment. Was it something they specifically requested? Were these issues that they themselves brought up as, you know, issues they wanted to see in legislation because the regs were insufficient for them? Those sorts of things, I think, are important for us in the House to know.

I recommend to my colleagues on this side and all the members in this House that we support this bill. It's not that there's anything particularly wrong with it.

You know, in the consultation that we had with people within industry and different organizations, they all wondered the same thing: well, why do we need this since the advocate's office can already do these sorts of things? Perhaps it is that the amendment spells out in more detail existing powers of the Utilities Consumer Advocate and turns some of their underutilized or unutilized power into a requirement to disclose and collect and use information about distributors and providers and retailers from the Market Surveillance Administrator, the AUC, the director of fair trading, and any other person the advocate's office considers necessary. Again, just pointing out that it's already within the minister's power to have the advocate's office disclose this information called for under any proposed amendment.

I'd be interested to hear from the hon. member what sort of feedback he got from the advocate's office regarding this and the need for it. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It gives me pleasure to rise and give a few remarks with respect to Bill 208, Government Organization (Utilities Consumer Advocate) Amendment Act, 2017. I thank the hon. member for bringing this bill forward. I know that it really was embedded in a desire to strengthen the role of the advocate and enshrine the regulations in legislation, which will give it the importance that I believe the regulations should have.

I'm pleased today to rise in support of Bill 208. I commend my colleague the MLA for Wetaskiwin-Camrose once again for bringing this bill forward. It plays an important role in the ongoing effort of our government and caucus to make life better for Albertans. Many in this province will have noticed our emphasis on consumer protection items. We definitely asked Albertans to come forward with their ideas with respect to areas where they thought consumer protection might be improved. This measure is one result that I think will be lauded by those Albertans who seek a higher level of consumer protection for people in the province. Our caucus firmly believes that our laws and regulations should be effective and enforceable so that consumers and businesses have confidence in our marketplace. Not only will this bill help protect Albertans' pocketbooks; it will lead to increased consumer confidence, and that's good for business.

One of the great things about this bill, Madam Speaker, is the fact that it will, if passed, enshrine the role of the Utilities Consumer Advocate, or UCA, in legislation, as has been mentioned by previous speakers. I was impressed to learn from my colleague exactly how important the office of the UCA is to consumers in Alberta. The UCA is a powerful voice for safe, reliable, cost-effective energy utility services that meet the needs of Alberta consumers.

Did you know, Madam Speaker, that every year the office handles about 30,000 to 40,000 inquiries? This includes everything from answering questions and connecting consumers to the right resources to actually mediating disputes between consumers and utility companies on issues such as bill charges or energy contracts. The office also runs outreach events across the province to educate consumers and engage them in conversations on making informed energy-related choices. Through its website, ucahelps.alberta.ca, the office reaches about 200,000 Albertans every year with consumer resources and services, indicating strong support for this service and making a case as well for enshrining the regulations in legislation to ensure that they continue to serve Albertans no matter what the ongoing, long-term thoughts of a government might be.

One of the hallmarks of the UCA's activities is its work helping vulnerable Albertans maintain or restore utility services during the cold winter months. I know from my past experience as a real estate agent that there were properties which had been threatened with getting utilities cut off or actually had a reduced flow of electricity. They had a special meter on them. This method of obtaining some type of arbitration to ensure that utility services weren't interrupted in cold winter months was a great relief for those people who were owning the properties and also for families who were going through hardships, and utility bills were some things that were perhaps being left aside in order to buy groceries. The utilities they relied on to keep their houses heated weren't cut off. The UCA intervened and did help many, many families and homeowners with maintaining the utilities they rely on in the heating months.

Now, in partnership with the Alberta Utilities Commission, utility retailers and distributors and government agencies such as Alberta Works and assured income for the severely handicapped save many families from having to go through a loss of heat during the heating months. The UCA helps those at risk through the winter utility reconnection program. As part of this program the UCA makes multiple attempts to contact customers with disconnected utilities to help them get reconnected before the cold weather hits.

Another role the UCA plays is representing the interests of consumers at Alberta Utilities Commission rate proceedings. The UCA intervenes in dozens of rate proceedings each year, and since 2013 their interventions have helped Albertans save more than $800 million on energy bills. That's a significant amount of money back in the pockets of Alberta consumers. Last year alone the evidence and arguments that the UCA presented to the commission prevented $204 million in extra energy costs from being passed on to consumers. That, to me, Madam Speaker, is a huge benefit of having a Utilities Consumer Advocate in Alberta.

I'm proud of my colleagues for bringing forward this legislation, that will support and enhance the role this office plays and enshrine it in legislation. I'll leave my remarks there and thank my colleague once again for bringing this important measure forward. I look forward to encouraging all members of the Assembly to support the bill.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak to Bill 208, the Government Organization (Utilities Consumer Advocate) Amendment Act, 2017. This bill is simply making a redundant amendment to the Government Organization Act, schedule 13.1, which governs the Utilities Consumer Advocate's office. This amendment's only real function is that it now requires the advocate's office to disclose information, complaints, and investigations lodged against a distributor, provider, or retailer. It's just about as simple as that.

To spell this out more completely, the existing power of the advocate has now just been turned into a requirement. They will now be required to disclose, collect, and use information about a distributor, provider, or retailer that comes from the Market Surveillance Administrator, the Alberta Utilities Commission, the director of fair trading, and/or any other persons the utilities advocate considers necessary.

Now, I will be supporting this bill since it's really not all that controversial and it may in some ways benefit the consumers, but I do feel that it's just another version of the NDP paper-pushing, make-work projects. It makes the advocate, now required, do something that it can already do under the existing clause (c), "to inform and educate consumers about electricity and natural gas issues." I do think that this is a bit of a waste of the House's time and that this amendment is really just spelling out the same clause that was in there before but in more detail and at added cost.

I just hope that this won't distract from what is the most important role of the Utilities Consumer Advocate's office, which is supposed to be to represent the interests of Alberta residential, farm, and small-business consumers of electricity and natural gas in any and all proceedings or conflict. A question that should be asked and, hopefully, answered by this government is: will the advocate need to hire additional staff to make sure that all information is collected and disclosed and also continue to function as an advocate in proceedings and conflicts? Without providing the advocate with additional resources, this could prove to be onerous and distractive. Has the government thought about the financial costs? Where are you planning to get the extra finances from? Is this government planning on providing additional funds, or are they simply going to hand over the responsibility to the advocate's office? Are there any protocols in place to ensure that there is continued advocacy for those facing conflicts?

It's great that Albertans will have all the information and disclosures made available to them in one centralized place. This will increase awareness, and consumers should be informed about their options and any issues that others are facing in their communities. This will hopefully increase awareness and help them make important decisions about which power provider they would like to choose, but I still cannot see why this amendment is really required. I'm hoping to hear more about the reasoning that is behind this amendment during our debate time later today. Consumers do deserve to be informed about their options. However, I really don't see how this can't be done already by the Utilities Consumer Advocate's office under the current legislation.

Other questions that we have. Has the Utilities Consumer Advocate office been involved in the writing of this amendment? Did they request that this amendment be made? Was the advocate consulted, and what did that look like? These are some of the questions we have here on this side of the House. By no means are we saying that this amendment shouldn't be done. We just want to know if this is just another make-work project. Has the financial component of this been looked into? Or perhaps this is just another way that the government says that it's creating jobs for Albertans, because this bill will certainly create more work.

Saying all of that, Madam Speaker, our caucus will be supporting this bill in its present form as we feel that it does not add unnecessarily to any controversy, and I do believe that it will benefit consumers. Just please answer the many questions that I and my colleagues and, I'm sure, everyone have looming in the back of their minds. It's not like this government has a glowing reputation in making the most responsible financial decisions.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: All right. Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm about to rise and speak in favour of Bill 208, and I'd like to commend my colleague from – oh, jeez. I'm trying to remember the name of his riding.

The Acting Speaker: Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Piquette: Wetaskiwin-Camrose. He's nodding. I guess he knows that it's his bill.

I think this is an excellent bill. I'm actually very pleased to hear that the opposition will be supporting this bill, and I'm sure that the hon. member will be able to answer any specific questions they might have, you know, going forward.

As for myself, I wanted to concentrate on a couple of aspects of this bill that I find particularly useful and helpful, well, especially to the constituents that I represent in Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater. I guess, personally, I wasn't aware of just how busy and active the office actually is in helping Albertans deal with concerns over their utility services, their utility billing, that the office reaches out to around 200,000 Albertans every year with consumer resources and services. It definitely shows that this is a very, very well-utilized service and, you know, very much a service that deserves to be protected and supported by legislation. I'd like to commend the member for making sure that this resource is available to Albertans.

Of particular interest to me, because unfortunately there are residents that I represent and, I'm sure, that other members do as well that are having some economic challenges – one of those challenges is, unfortunately, not necessarily having, you know, money at the end of the month to make all the bills. As all Albertans know, one of those bills that you need to make sure that you're meeting is your utility service during the wintertime.

You know, where you have vulnerable Albertans that have had their utility services cut off or maybe are in danger of that happening, I think it's just absolutely critical that we do have an advocate that, in my understanding, in partnership with the Alberta Utilities Commission, utility retailers and distributors, and, of course, our own departments – it's Alberta Works and assured income for the severely handicapped – works to make sure that those at risk are helped out through the winter utility reconnection program.

I mean, that's definitely one among other aspects, this absolutely critical role that the advocate fulfills. My understanding is that it's a very proactive approach that the UCA makes, that they will actually reach out and attempt to contact customers that have disconnected utilities and try to get ahead of the problem because, I mean, the very last thing I know any members want to see is Albertans facing winter without utilities. Unfortunately, some people are simply too proud to reach out when they need the assistance.

As a matter of fact, last winter, unfortunately, I did have one of my constituents whose utilities had been disconnected the previous fall, and somehow there was an issue where it kind of fell through the cracks. Now, to be fair, she might not have been on natural gas, but in any event, I mean, she actually did freeze to death in her house. You know, this is something that is a tragedy which very much could have been identified and prevented. I'm just very happy to realize that, I mean, there is this program. Obviously, it's not one hundred per cent, but anything that the UCA can do to prevent this type of tragedy going forward is a huge plus.

Now, I know another important role that the UCA plays is representing the interests of consumers at commission rate proceedings. I think this is a very critical role because, you know, it's very rare for individual citizens to feel comfortable when you go up to this type of commission environment without some type of support. I know that in the past when I've talked to people who have to go through similar hearings, the language is opaque and the rules can be very complex and hard to understand, and it's really good to have someone on your side.

My understanding is that through their interventions the UCA has been able to help Albertans save more than $800 million on their energy bills since 2013, which is amazing, and that last year alone the UCA presented the commission evidence and arguments to prevent $240 million in extra energy costs from being passed on to consumers. It's in light of this type of information that I think, Madam Speaker, there is a huge benefit to having the Utilities Consumer Advocate in Alberta, and I think it's very, very important that it's protected.

My understanding is that this legislation, if passed, would indeed ensure that the government would have to return to us here in the Legislature in order to do away with this office. So it's not some sort of cut you can make and, you know, people don't realize it till it's done. I think it also speaks very strongly and centrally to what our caucus believes in, that it's important that we stand for the consumer and that it's important that we always work to make life better for all Albertans.

With that, I'd like to urge the unanimous support of this bill, and I think I'll rest my remarks there. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Madam Speaker. A lot of what I was really interested in in this bill, the Government Organization (Utilities Consumer Advocate) Amendment Act, 2017, a lot of the issues there have been raised by other speakers, which I am very happy that people see as we all are consumers of the various, you know, means of energy in our lives.

One of the things I really was impressed with about this bill was that it would serve to make sure that people were able to have better understanding of what their actual energy bills contain because – I mean, obviously, the winter utility reconnection program is great. The proaction that the Utilities Consumer Advocate, you know, is involved in is great. The fact that they work with the energy providers and government agencies, Alberta Works and assured income for the severely handicapped, is wonderful because when we see collaboration like that, there are fewer chances of people falling through the cracks. There's a greater likelihood of problems getting solved before they cause more damage than is necessary.

I like the fact, too, that this would see a means of enshrining this program in legislation. It's a valuable service. It provides something that is not a duplicate of anything else that's being done already, and it is really worth while having this enshrined. The amount of money it saved consumers, as many other people said, and the number of consumers it helped was absolutely phenomenal.

I really like the fact that it said that the intent of Bill 208 is to support the UCA to make the important information more visible and accessible so that consumers can make well-informed energy choices. This is a really important matter. I find energy bills rather incomprehensible and have to make an effort to read them. I'm imagining someone with a lot less education or someone just not familiar with the kind of language used, and it would seem like a foreign language.

Also, people have a hard time – we all do sometimes – deciding what's a legitimate good deal when we're being offered one of the deals that companies commonly give us and what is just a means of getting us to sign up longer, sign a contract. So having a neutral, nonpartisan means of giving us information is really helpful.

I like the fact that the focus of the bill is on allowing Albertans to see operating records of energy retailers and distributors in areas such as customer service, compliance with laws and standards, history of enforcement actions, and history of complaints and major issues. These companies should be able to be transparent and have their history made public so it would help people better understand who they're working with and who they're engaging in business with.

The UCA provides such a valuable role. I'm totally supportive. Obviously, we want it to continue standing up for Alberta's energy consumers. I support this bill totally.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to Bill 208?

Seeing none, I will call on the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose to close debate.

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to all the members who participated in debate on this important bill. I really appreciate your thoughtful feedback. I want to reiterate that this bill is about consumer protection. It is about making sure Albertans have the information they need about their rights as consumers and reducing some of the anxiety and nervousness that many people feel about electricity contracts. Since the bill's introduction I have received a lot of positive feedback, and I really appreciate all of the discussion.

I have also met with the Utilities Consumer Advocate and had a good discussion with that office about the bill and how it can help them in their task of protecting Alberta electricity consumers. I was very impressed with the work that they do. The UCA office did not request this bill. They did not write it. They did not revise it. It is constituency driven. However, they were very happy and definitely supported it. They appreciated that being able to put the information in one place would be more efficient and effective for consumers who want information. Consumers did want details about their bills and disclosure of complaints about the companies and resolution of those complaints. The UCA agreed that that would be valuable information for them to have.

Also, the advocate did not see the need for additional staff. They handle 30,000 to 40,000 inquiries. This might change the nature of those inquiries, but the most important thing for them, in addition to the one place for that information, was – it may be just terminology – changing a regulation to legislation so it's "by law these issues can be resolved" as opposed to just "they might or could be resolved."

I enjoyed listening to all of the feedback. Yes, this bill was not meant to be controversial but just to support the work of the UCA's office in becoming more efficient and effective and letting consumers know that they would have protection. There would be somebody that they could appeal to. I want to ensure that this bill provides the strongest protection possible for consumers. I look forward to the opportunity to continue the debate about consumer protection in the Legislature and hope that everyone will join in supporting this bill at its second reading today.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion carried; Bill 208 read a second time]

Bill 209 Radon Awareness and Testing Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Ms Luff: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm very happy today to be able to introduce debate on second reading of Bill 209, Radon Awareness and Testing Act.

This bill does pretty much exactly what the title indicates. It seeks to raise awareness of radon here in the province of Alberta and to encourage more radon testing to happen.

The idea for this bill came about when my husband read a newspaper article in the Calgary Herald about the work of Dr. Aaron Goodarzi, who is a cancer researcher at the Charbonneau cancer institute at the University of Calgary. We quickly ordered an electronic tester for our home, and I also scheduled a meeting with Dr. Goodarzi to learn more about the issue. I would absolutely encourage anyone who hasn't had the opportunity to hear Dr. Goodarzi speak about radon to do so as I have yet to meet somebody who has been to one of his presentations and hasn't come out a radon awareness advocate. He's very passionate about the issue and does an amazing job of really identifying what the problem is. After that meeting I began hearing from concerned citizens, health advocates, and radon mitigation experts, and I knew that I had to do something to increase awareness of this very important public health issue.

Radon is a colourless, odourless, tasteless radioactive gas. It occurs naturally and is formed by the natural breakdown of uranium in soil, rock, and water. Radon that escapes from the ground into outdoor air is diluted to low concentrations and, as such, isn't a problem. However, radon that enters an enclosed space such as a home or a daycare facility can accumulate to a very high concentration. Radon gas in a home or any other enclosed space undergoes a process of change called radioactive decay, which produces solid particles that can be breathed into lungs. When these particles change, they emit a tiny burst of radiation that damages the cells inside of your lungs, and prolonged exposure to high concentrations of these particles can lead to lung cancer. According to the Surgeon General in the United States radon in the home is the second-leading cause of lung cancer after smoking.

Here in Alberta we're fortunate to have Dr. Goodarzi, who is doing research into this issue to establish a better understanding of the extent of the problem here in Alberta. In March of 2017 Dr. Goodarzi published a peer-reviewed study of radon in Calgary. The study was entitled Comprehensive Survey of Household Radon Gas Levels and Risk Factors in Southern Alberta. He tested the radon levels in 2,382 residential homes in Calgary and the surrounding townships. To quote from the report:

Our findings show that radon exposure is a genuine public health concern in southern Alberta, suggest that modern building practices are associated with increased indoor air radon accumulation, legitimize efforts to understand the consequences of radon exposure to the public, and suggest that radon testing and mitigation are likely to be impactful cancer prevention strategies.

The study found that 1 in 8 homes in the Calgary area had radon concentrations above the recommended level of 200 becquerels per metre cubed. This is a higher level than was previously thought to be present in Alberta and reason enough to increase awareness and encourage more Albertans to test for radon.

Cancer is the leading cause of death for both men and women in Canada, and the Canadian Cancer Society estimates that 28,600 Canadians will be diagnosed with lung cancer in 2017, that 21,100 will die from lung cancer, and that an average of 58 Canadians die from lung cancer every day. They state, "Radon is the leading cause of lung cancer in non-smokers and the second leading cause . . . in smokers." Health Canada estimates that radon exposure is linked to 16 per cent of lung cancer deaths, or more than 2,000 Canadian deaths, every year. Madam Speaker, the idea that 2,000 Canadians die every year because of radon exposure is shocking to me.

When I think about families and loved ones of those who have died from this horrible illness, it makes me very sad and very angry because many of these deaths could have been prevented. There are simple and inexpensive tests available to all homeowners that would tell them the radon levels in their homes. I ordered an electronic one that tells me the average. I can look at two different levels: I can look at daily levels, or I can look at the longer term levels. I have noticed that there has been a little bit of a spike since winter came. It's best to test for radon in the winter because that's when your heating is happening and you've got your windows and doors closed. It's recommended that people test between November and April of each year. These kits are available from local retailers and from specialized radon mitigation companies.

If radon levels are over the recommended limit, remediation is relatively safe and inexpensive. Every home is different, but the most common type of radon mitigation involves installing a vent pipe that lets the radon gas outside of the house instead of inside. The average cost for this mitigation is around $2,500. Now, there are many private companies in Alberta that offer these services. Although there is a cost, I believe this cost is very low compared to the cost, both emotional and financial, of having a loved one or a family member be affected by lung cancer. As soon as I learned about this, I had my home tested, and I told other people, too.

But the sad truth is that most Albertans don't know about radon. They don't know the dangers that it poses, they don't know how to test their homes, and they don't know how inexpensive and easy it is to lower the risk for themselves and their families. Groups like The Lung Association of Alberta and the Northwest Territories and Health Canada do their very best to promote these risks, but so far it hasn't had a big impact in Alberta. A recent study has suggested that of all the provinces in Canada, Alberta has the lowest level of knowledge about radon and its dangers. To me, Madam Speaker, that's unacceptable and, to a certain extent, inexcusable. When we as legislators have the ability and the knowledge to improve the health of our constituents and we do not do so, we're not doing our duty.

There is much we can do. We can educate, we can encourage, and we can lead the way by requiring that daycare facilities test for radon levels, and this bill does all of these things. It requires the ministry to produce materials for radon awareness to encourage Albertans to test, and it requires child care centres to show that they have tested in order to renew or to receive a new licence. It's crucial for child care centres to test for this carcinogen because small children are more susceptible. They breathe more rapidly than adults and, as such, can inhale more radon into their lungs. I don't know a single parent, Madam Speaker, who would want their child spending significant amounts of time in a room with second-hand smoke, and radon is no different. British Columbia requires child care centres to test, and this bill will require Alberta ones to do the same.

I'm also hopeful that this bill and the efforts of others will raise awareness to a point where parents begin to demand testing in schools as well. I didn't choose to mandate school testing in this bill because I think that it's important to respect school board autonomy, but I also think it's important to note that very few schools in Alberta have been tested for radon. Our neighbours to the east in Saskatchewan and also to the north in the Yukon have tested 100 per cent of their schools. However, according to the most recent data available, here in Alberta we've only tested 3 per cent of our schools.

In summary, radon is a naturally occurring gas that can be concentrated in indoor spaces and is the second-leading cause of lung cancer in Canada. As legislators we have a duty to act to protect the health of Albertans, and increasing awareness of radon will do this. Any time we can prevent cancer, we not only save our health care system money, but we prevent pain and anguish for Albertans and their families. Child care centres should absolutely have mandated testing because no parent wants their child in a room breathing in a carcinogen all day long.

Overall, I think this is a common-sense bill that will help to prevent lung cancer in Alberta and quite possibly save the lives of some Albertans. I hope and trust that other members of the Chamber will support this bill, and I look forward to the debate at second reading.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate being recognized today. I wanted to thank the hon. member for bringing forward this private member's bill. I think it's an important bill and an important topic to discuss, and it certainly has my support.

You know, it's interesting. My mom, Madam Speaker, who probably is not watching but just in case, is excellent, and I'm very fond of her. She was very good at cooking. You may be able to tell. She came to my house not too long ago, probably about a couple of years back – I've got two kids that sleep in the basement of my home; it's a renovated basement, and they've been down there for a while – and she starts talking about this radon thing. "This sounds like a bunch of hokey-dokey there, mom. Where are you going with this?" She was pretty passionate about it. She started to talk about all these statistics, which I think the hon. member did a great job of illustrating for the House. It's a serious thing.

I mean, it's the second-leading cause of lung cancer. I think all of us probably know people that have suffered from lung cancer in our lives that never smoked a cigarette in their lives. You often hear that. It seems to me that most of the people that I know that I've lost in my life to lung cancer often say that, too, because they didn't smoke, so there are other things causing that situation.

You know, mom went through that with me and talked about that, and she said: "You know, Jason, you've got a couple of kids living down in that basement. Have you ever tested your basement for this radon?" She went through in great detail about different testing products, Madam Speaker. I have a mother who is one of those people who spends their time on Google. If she's going to put some sort of testing thing into the basement, she will have spent more time than it would take to do the testing just to determine what would be the appropriate product to use to do that testing.

She did it in her basement, my childhood home, where I grew up, where my mother actually works in the basement. She had worked in the basement of that house for well over a decade, doing the work that she does. She put this testing kit in there for a period of time and got the results, and it turned out that the levels were really, really high, way above the recommended amounts that should be in a basement. Of course, she had been exposed to that for a long period of time and would not have known about it. The fix, as the hon. member pointed out, is actually pretty cheap, pretty easy to implement in a home or another area.

Also, where she works is the basement room that I spent most of my teenagehood in, and we would not have, of course, known about that at the time, me and a couple of my brothers that lived in the basement. One of the things, Madam Speaker, about having five brothers is that you all have to bunk together. There are some other stories there, but we won't get into that.

Then my mom took the kit, and she brought it to my house, and we did the test, the same thing, in my house. Our levels were actually low. As the member pointed out – for whatever reason, where our basement had been built, in our area the levels were not that high, but in her house it was. She proceeded to do that to all of her six boys' homes. She's more worried about her grandchildren, I think, than us, Madam Speaker. She proceeded to do that. It was interesting. About half of us had levels that were too high in our homes, and about half of us did not. It's that random.

My understanding as well is that it can be different very close by. Just because my house came in well below the limit or the recommended exposure limit does not mean that my neighbour on the next farm or my mother's neighbour would not have a different level. It does change, and it's important that it's checked for those homes.

I think the point that the member who brings this piece of legislation before us is trying to make is that most people probably did not have their mom show up and start installing radon detectors in their basement and checking how much their children were being exposed to it. The reality of that is because most people probably just don't know about this. I think that even in our caucus, when we saw that this piece of legislation was coming before the House, Madam Speaker, and we talked about it, probably only about half of us actually, really knew what radon was and the potential for significant consequences to one's health as a result of exposure to that product.

I think the hon. member talked a little bit about how easy the fix is, at least on the residential side. I don't know how much the cost increases for larger facilities, commercial facilities, municipalities, high-rises. I actually don't know. I do know that for a home, for a residential home, the ability of the kit to fix it is pretty insignificant in cost compared to the potential consequences, for sure, of not doing it but also the cost to the system.

As a conservative, Madam Speaker, I don't often rise in this House and speak about a member from the NDP caucus bringing forward a bill that I think is very conservative as well and is in a position to help save our system money in a positive way, but today I would like to point that out, that I actually think that in the end this legislation will save taxpayers money. It'll save our system money. It'll save our health care time. Something that I know that we talk about a lot in this House is the need to address the serious health care delays and the waiting lists and those things that our health care system faces. This piece of legislation, when implemented, over time, I think, will have a positive impact on those. Of course, it won't eliminate all of those concerns, but it will certainly have a positive impact, ultimately lowering costs.

I also think that it's important to point out, Madam Speaker, that Health Canada has already deemed radon a serious health risk, so I think that we're talking about a fact that has been determined through science. I know that often the members across the way like to imply that this side of the House denies science. Maybe later on today they'll rise and point out that I'm not denying science. I'm recognizing the science behind this important health issue.

You know, Madam Speaker, I didn't actually get to hear all of the hon. member's comments, but one thing that shocked me was that in Canada 16 per cent of lung cancer deaths are attributed to radon exposure. Sixteen per cent of people in our country that are losing their lives because of lung cancer is because of something that costs, in most households, a thousand dollars or so to eliminate most of the exposure.

Again, at the same time, when you've got parents, often I think that – I don't know how it was for the members across the way, but lots of my friends growing up happened to live in the basement of the home. That's where you ended up going. In fact, Madam Speaker, I was pretty happy when I got moved from upstairs to be able to go down into the basement. When I was a teenager, I kind of had my own domain down there, and it was pretty exciting. But our parents certainly would not have known that they were potentially exposing us to hazards in the air that could have catastrophic consequences for us much later on in our lives.

I certainly think that the comparison to second-hand smoke was a fair comparison for the hon. member to bring forward. I remember growing up in my house, and people still smoked in our house when we were little. I couldn't even fathom that happening in my home, you know, not even with guests or anything along those lines. But it was pretty commonplace when I was a young toddler, and that's changed. Our culture and our society have learned about the devastating impacts of second-hand smoke, and we recognize that it's not appropriate to expose children to that second-hand smoke. It's one thing for adults to make a decision to risk their health and consume that product; it's an entirely different thing to have children, who can't make those decisions for themselves, be in a spot where they're exposed to second-hand smoke.

I think the other thing that we've learned is that it's not fair to those of us in our society, like myself and many others, who choose not to smoke to be exposed to second-hand smoke as we go about our lives. That's the same now for radon. Knowing the science that we know now, knowing the consequences that we see as a result of radon and the potential consequences to individuals and to their health, how important it is that we begin to look at that on the same level as second-hand smoke and that we take steps to make sure that, particularly, children are not exposed to that.

I think the hon. member also pointed out that children are most susceptible to it because of the way that they breathe and are developing. You know, add that together with the fact that they're not in a position where they can make choices for themselves – I mean, when my mom sent me down to the basement there, Madam Speaker, I really didn't have a choice. Even if she had had a radon test that showed that it was lethal, I had to go down there without delay, of course.

Now, I talked a little bit about the fact that it can't be seen, smelled, or that you would not know that you're exposed to it. As I was talking earlier, Madam Speaker, about the basement in my childhood home, where my mom works and where my room was when I was a teenager, we would not have been able to smell it, and there would be nothing visible to us or to our senses that would let us know that we were being exposed to this. That actually makes it different than second-hand smoke in a way. Well, it does make it different than second-hand smoke because, you know, with second-hand smoke, you see it in the air, you can smell it, and you're being exposed to it.

Now that we know as a society the consequences of second-hand smoke, when I'm in a spot where somebody is smoking – you know, for example . . . [A timer sounded] I actually have another 10 minutes. [interjection] Yes. Thanks. That's okay. I know that members are excited about my next 10 minutes. [interjections] That's the reaction I get everywhere I go, Madam Speaker. The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre is going to speak, and everybody is excited, I'm sure. I know I am.

You know, it's almost Christmas. Every year we have to go to my brother-in-law's house. My wife is going to kill me for telling this story. It's a good thing she's not in the gallery. They sit in their garage, and they smoke. They're smokers. They don't smoke in the house because they don't want the kids exposed to it. But the whole family ends up in this garage every Christmas. It drives me nuts because I don't smoke. I can't stand the smell of it. It's just no fun.

They sit in this garage, and it's like their hot box with cigarette smoke. Nobody bothers to open the darn door. They're all: hey, come in and visit; tell us how things are going. I don't want to go in there. My clothes will stink, you're going to kill me, and all that stuff. I know of the hazard, like I do now for radon. I can see that hazard, though, when I'm there. I know that if I sit in that garage all night, I'm being exposed to second-hand smoke, and I'm concerned with the consequences, let alone just the smell, Madam Speaker. I'm sure you can help me out if my wife is watching because I am going to be in trouble now at Christmas. Or maybe I'll get lucky, and they'll stop smoking in the garage. I don't know.

But I digress. The point is that I now could be in their home or in a new home that I buy and not have that ability, like I would for second-hand smoke, to be able to sense with my regular senses that there is danger as a result of the radon in the air in the basement. This legislation is extremely sensible because it puts us in a position where we could start to actually educate people about the dangers of radon and the consequences but also put in steps so that we could actually start to prevent that for people, particularly children. I do commend the hon. member for pointing that out because I think that is a valuable point.

Again, Madam Speaker, I think I will point out one more time, because I actually think that it's an important part of this legislation, the fact that in the long run it will actually save money. You know, we've talked a little bit, as I have been talking today, about the human cost that it will prevent. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud knows about that human cost probably more than many of us in this House.

Certainly, this legislation will help towards preventing that in the future, with fewer deaths as a result of radon. The generation that's coming up behind us will not be exposed to it in the same ways that we were because parents like myself now will be able to take steps to make sure that they're not, which our parents could not have because they would not have understood that.

It also is a win-win, which I think is rare to find in politics sometimes, where we are going to be able to save the system itself money, which will lower the number of people that are in the system as a result of lung cancer, dealing, of course, with the human cost and then taking pressure off the system, saving money for the system, in the long run creating more space for people that are dealing with other sorts of diseases to be able to come through the system because people have been able to put in something as simple as, you know, a $1,000 kit in the basement of their house.

I am interested in – and maybe we'll hear more about it at future stages of the bill – the idea of how we would approach the education side of it, how we would be able to take the time. I guess, Madam Speaker, through you to the member, I can't get Mama Nixon to stop by everybody's house, like mine, and install it and teach us all about the consequences. I mean, I kind of had nightmares the first night because she had us so scared of radon. It's important enough of an issue that we need to take the legislation through, make sure that we're requiring testing, requiring this important issue to be dealt with but that we're also taking time to educate people as to why so that they understand the dangers of being exposed to radon.

With that, Madam Speaker, I do think that my time is drawing near to an end. I think that it's something to . . . [interjection] What was that, hon. member? If you've got another idea you would like me to discuss, I'd be happy to discuss it while I'm up here. Yeah. I mean, it's pretty spectacular the time that we've spent together already, Madam Speaker.

You know, here is another one that I want to leave with you. There is a 1 in 20 chance of developing lung cancer if exposed to high levels of radon over a lifetime. A 1 in 20 chance is quite a bit. It's pretty significant when you think that we have people working in basements or sleeping in basements or in other areas that expose them to this. They have a 1 in 20 chance, and they don't even know it. They don't even know that it's in the air. They don't even know that that is taking place.

I think another important thing to point out, actually, before I finish, Madam Chair – I keep thinking that we're in Committee of the Whole today, and I don't know why; I apologize every time I call you Madam Chair – is that it's not just in basements. It can be on the main level of your home where you could be exposed to that. I think that the further up you go, the less likely it becomes. I think there's actually a point, from my understanding, where once you reach a certain height, it's a nonissue, but certainly it can be on the main floor of a home or on the second floor of a home or on the second floor of a commercial building that has a daycare in it. It's important that we look at it beyond just the basement thing, which is kind of my experience with it because of my experience with my mother when she was testing our basement. It's important that we recognize, which I think was the hon. member's point as well, that this is beyond just residential applications. It could be into areas where people could be exposed to something that is significantly dangerous for them.

You know, Madam Speaker, I think that given how dangerous this can be, given the significant consequences as a result of it, both the human cost to people and their families that ultimately will suffer from cancer as a result of exposure to radon as well as the overall cost to the system, which I think the hon. member did a good job of articulating, I can't see why any member of this Legislature would not support the hon. member's private member's bill. I personally am looking forward to voting with her on this piece of legislation at some point, and I certainly do hope that it will receive unanimous consent of this entire House and will go on to be a law, because I do believe that it will save lives.

Again, I just want to close with this, Madam Speaker. It is a conservative bill as well, which I am always happy to see.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to Bill 209? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

4:10

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Actually, thank you very much to the previous speaker as well as to the mover of this motion. I think this is one of the most important topics that we've had the opportunity to discuss in this House. As has been said several times already – but it certainly bears repeating – prevention of lung cancer is an imperative that we all should be aware of. Lung cancer is a leading cause of death in Alberta, and whatever can be done to reduce the toll, which is very expensive – the cost of treatment of lung cancer, once it is established and diagnosed, is very expensive and, unfortunately, is not as successful as one would like it to be.

I basically want to amplify a few points that were made. I think that it's very important to realize that it took a New Democrat government in this province to bring this matter to the fore, and I don't think it's a coincidence. I think that what we're talking about as a New Democrat government is making life better for Albertans, and making life better means making our roads safe, making our schooling as good as possible, making our hospitals and other health care facilities as efficient and as effective as possible. When we think about this sort of thing, about public health, about ensuring that, for instance, vaccinations are promoted and that we promote exercise among the whole population, we want to basically follow the same precepts and, where there is evidence, try to eliminate things such as radon that might cause disease in young people.

I was just in contact with a constituent of mine who works for the Alberta Lung Association, and he's very pleased to hear that we're making progress on this. The Alberta Lung Association has long recognized that radon exposure is a preventable cause of lung cancer, and indeed about two years ago they initiated a program to give radon monitors to anyone who wanted them. I actually availed myself of that a year ago and installed the radon monitor in my own home, and about a couple of months ago I got the report that was facilitated by the Alberta Lung Association, my friend and constituent as well as the manufacturer of the monitors. Fortunately, the result showed that in my home there was less than 25 millibecquerels of exposure, well below the 200 limit and certainly way below the 800 mark, which means that you really need to do something about it.

I'm fortunate in that I don't need to be looking at making renovations, but I'm sure that for anybody that did this sort of thing, particularly if they have children, as was mentioned in the previous two speeches, modifications to your home may be necessary.

Now, I have another constituent and friend who used to be on the Edmonton separate school board. She's actually doing a master's in public health, and she chose as her thesis topic a dissertation on radon exposure in schools in Alberta. She just published her report. Basically, the report says what we've heard from the Member for Calgary-East, that radon exposure to young people is particularly a concern.

I thought I'd spend a few minutes just talking about why it is that young people are particularly at risk for this. It's related to length of exposure, if you have children in a daycare or in the basement, as was mentioned by a previous speaker, for long periods of time, where they're being exposed to radon gas over long periods of time, and those young children have a long life to live after the exposure. That's why these children are particularly at risk. Children also have smaller lungs than adults and smaller tracheas and bronchi, so these radon particles can actually get lodged in the adventitial tissue around the bronchi. Because they're radioactive, the radon actually decomposes into other substances which can be damaging to the lung. The longer that they are lodged there, the more likely they are to cause changes that would lead to cancer. So it is probably less important that somebody my age pay attention to whether or not they're being exposed to radon although that's still a concern, I'm sure, than a two-year-old or a five-year-old or a 10-year-old. The 10-year-old is, hopefully, going to enjoy at least 70 years of life expectancy after the exposure.

An Hon. Member: They're going to live to 100.

Dr. Turner: Well, we can make them go to 100.

The other thing that's key in all of this is that, basically, this is something where we have a duty to protect. We as legislators have a duty to identify public health risks, and if a public health risk like this is identified – and it's been identified by the University of Calgary as well as by the Canadian Cancer Society and by my friend Marilyn Bergstra, who was the trustee, as something that can be done. So I'm very pleased with the response of my colleague for Calgary-East in getting this done.

The other consideration I think that we need, that's important, is that every house will have a small amount of radon. So it's important in this education process not to make radon sort of a bogeyman and have effects on, for instance, you know, property values and other sorts of things. I think that we need to make sure that our population is educated about what radon is, what it can do if it isn't mitigated but also what can be done to make sure that these risks are abated. Certainly, the education aspects of this bill . . .

4:20

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak to Bill 209. I want to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-East for bringing this forward. I know that when I started reading through this bill and when I realized the issue that was being brought before the House, I knew very little about it. I think that probably one of the things that this House can do best at times is the education process, so I want to thank the Member for Calgary-East for bringing this forward if for no other reason than that it has helped to educate this Member of the Legislative Assembly.

You know, I remember standing in front of my kids in my classroom and talking about the benefits of a democracy and of a parliamentary system of democracy and saying to them that at its best in this Legislature the opposition is not just there to oppose for the sake of opposing. Good parliamentary procedure and good Legislatures are where the opposition opposes in order to make bills better. While we may disagree sometimes on whether a bill needs to be made better in this Legislature, I know that we have done our part to always try and bring forward amendments that would help the government to improve a bill. There are times when we can actually support a bill because it is a good bill. I think that this bill falls into that category today, so with sincerity I want to thank the Member for Calgary-East for bringing it forward.

Now, I said that I knew very little about this issue before the bill was brought to us and before I had a chance to read through the bill. It got me thinking about the times in my life when I was growing up, about some of the other issues that I can remember very specifically having to educate myself on and sometimes in not the usual ways. I can remember being in my high school when they realized that there was asbestos throughout all of the gyms and were having to shut down the gyms and having to bring in the workers and putting up vapour barriers and making sure that when they took that asbestos out of the gymnasium, it wasn't going to create a problem in the rest of the school, not knowing anything about it and just feeling really quite frustrated that I couldn't go to one of my favourite classes, which was phys ed, and having to find alternate arrangements and finding out that now we were going swimming and now we're going out and we were going to go to the hockey rink because we had to find alternate places to be able to go to and not really understanding the importance of the whole issue of asbestos. Now, as I've grown and matured and as life has taken place, I can see back, and I can see the real importance of that. We've had friends and we've had people in our community that have passed away from asbestosis. We can see the real wisdom of the movement that was taking that material out of the schools.

I can remember that my dad, when I was about 13 or 14, purchased a car wash in Edmonton. As many times as we tried as 15-, 16-year-old kids to tell the people that were coming into our car wash that they couldn't leave their cars running when the doors were down, sometimes they just weren't willing to listen to a kid. While you know that there's a problem with carbon monoxide, it was never brought home more closely than when my brother came home one night and said that he had to rescue an individual that had gone down in the bay. He'd been busy pumping gas, and when he came in, he realized that this guy had left his car running. He had to throw the doors open and call 911 and bring the people in. We were able to save the man's life, but it really drove home the whole issue of carbon monoxide.

We need to be educated. I guess that's why I really believe that perhaps the most important function of this bill is going to be in the education of your average, everyday Albertan.

I think that all of us probably have grown up in situations where one or more of the family have been banished down into the basement when they became teenagers. I know that in our case it was because the bedroom that my brother and I shared was getting a little too small for the pride and the egos of the two boys that were in it, and we had to make a choice as to who was going to go down into the basement. Since I was the eldest, it was my job to take on that burden and to go down into the basement. Never did it ever come into my thought or into my parents' heads that that might be an issue.

I know that when we were just starting our family, we had three kids and two bedrooms in the entire 800 and some-odd square feet of the house. We had to have that debate. Could we put our five-year-old down into the basement? Now, I had no idea about radon, but I guess in hindsight that would have been a real easy decision. We made the decision not to because we thought he was too young. We went looking for another house where all of the kids could be on the same floor as the parents.

How many parents today, if they were aware of this issue with radon, would make the decision not to place their kids down into the basement at least until they had it checked? I really believe that the educational materials that could come out of this program and this act are perhaps the most important piece of this legislation. One year after passing this act, the materials will be going out to Albertan parents. I think that's going to be absolutely crucial.

Now, I'm really very glad that in the process of reading through this bill, I was able to learn that you have a 1 in 20 chance of developing lung cancer if you're exposed to high levels of radon radiation over a lifetime and that in Canada 16 per cent of lung cancer deaths are attributed to radon exposure. That's a human tragedy. Now that we know – at least, now that I know – this is a completely preventable thing, I believe this act moves us towards and in that positive direction that will allow us at the end of the day to save lives. I can't think of a more worthy thing that this Legislature could do than to save lives and to pass good legislation that will make the citizens of this province truly more safe. In this case I believe there's a very clear connection between the passing of this piece of legislation and increasing the safety of Albertans.

We've been told by hon. members already that children are at greater risk, and I don't know if there's anything that is more precious in our world than the children that we've been given. I know that I have yet to meet a parent in all of my long teaching career that would purposely make a choice that would harm their children. I believe as a legislator that the option in this case is very clear. We take the positive step. We support a piece of legislation that is going to make the lives of Albertans better.

Not only will this save lives, but at the end of the day it also reduces the costs that we'll face when it comes to our health care. Again, maybe not the primary reason why I would support this but a very good reason for supporting this piece of legislation. You know, we're going to have to make some really serious decisions. We've had the conversation, Madam Speaker, in this House about some of the decisions, about whether the government is making wise decisions in accumulating the debt and the deficits that we've had over the last several years. Well, here's an example where we can, with prudence and with wisdom, support a piece of legislation that may actually end up reducing some of our health care costs. That's a positive thing that needs to be considered.

We know that one of the reasons we can move forward with this piece of legislation is because there is a way of testing for radon radiation, and we know that it's possible to have radon detectors within the house. They can be used for a short period of time, I understand for two to seven days, or they can be for a longer period of time, over months, and that Health Canada... [Mr. Smith's speaking time expired]

Thank you.

4:30

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other hon. members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today in support of Bill 209, the Radon Awareness and Testing Act. I'll have to admit that I'm one of those people who, while I did know about radon gas, only had a vague understanding of it and not a real appreciation of the health risks of radon. I think that's particularly of concern to me because, as some members may be aware, I was previously an insurance agent. I actually used to do home inspections, and this was not something that we really looked for. It's my understanding that today most residential home inspectors don't actually check for the presence of radon. But, you know, after hearing the MLA for Calgary-East and some of the other comments in the House, I think I'm motivated to get a radon detection kit for my own house to see where my levels are.

As a government and as a caucus I think we've proven that we really do care about the health and safety of Albertans, and we've done and supported a lot of things that directly help to make Albertans' lives better and help them with their health. The first one, to kind of start off with a bang, is Bill 6, of course, which was about health and safety and at this point has helped over a thousand injured farm workers receive treatment and compensation for their injuries. We just passed Bill 19 this fall, and that will work to help protect the lives and safety of gas and convenience store workers. Of course, Bill 26 has just passed and will help ensure that Alberta is ready when cannabis is legalized by the federal government, and we'll work to keep cannabis out of the hands of children; protect public health; ensure safety on our roads, in our workplaces, and public spaces; and, hopefully and ideally, limit the illicit market.

Now, all of these are high-profile pieces of legislation dealing with things that are on the top of the public mind and often in the media, but unfortunately radon is not an issue like that. One of the reasons that I rise to support this and why I commend my colleague from Calgary-East is for the very reason that it is not something that's in the public mind, and it's something that ought to be.

Beyond a few news stories done last year – I know that the hon. member referred to Dr. Goodarzi and his colleagues at the University of Calgary, you know, where there was a little coverage of the reviewed radon levels in southern Alberta – there hasn't really been a lot of news about this. That could well be because it's something that is kind of an out-of-sight, out-of-mind issue, just because, as the member said, it's colourless, odourless, tasteless, and there's no apparent way of knowing whether you have it or not unless you test for it. Surely, that's why it is so important for us to be talking about it here and why we should be bringing this forward to the attention of Albertans, precisely because it doesn't have that attention.

Now, radon gas is responsible for 16 per cent of lung cancer deaths in any given year. When we do have a simple and inexpensive test that can tell you whether it's been an issue for you or not, I mean, this is something that needs to be getting a lot more exposure. So I think it's really important that we bring this up.

A few important facts about radon that I was able to find out through this debate and in preparing for this is that there are a few myths that I think need to be dispelled. One that maybe I was guilty of – my house was built in 1976, so I didn't think there would be an issue for me – was that it doesn't really matter whether you live in an older home or one of the newer airtight types of homes. You find high levels in both. It doesn't matter what area of the province you live in or even what your neighbours' tests are at. I mean, every house is built individually; every house has its own issues. Every house, really, could be affected, so it's important that we make sure that we test for this.

Now, Health Canada has spent millions of dollars establishing guidelines and certification standards for mitigation specialists and on media campaigns to raise awareness, but unfortunately the message hasn't been getting through. I think it's really important that we do what we can to get that message out, you know, and I think that's a very good reason for why this bill is necessary.

For all these reasons, Madam Speaker, I think that it is important that this bill is passed and that Albertans are warned about the dangers of radon. Thank you to my hon. colleague for bringing this up. I hope this bill gets speedy and unanimous passage.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise and speak in this House today regarding Bill 209, the Radon Awareness and Testing Act. Obviously, youth are extremely important to all of us in this House, and I just want to thank the Member for Calgary-East. I will not only be encouraging my colleagues here in the Official Opposition to support your bill, but I'm so happy to be able to stand and support your bill as well.

It's so tragic that so many deaths have occurred from an odourless and tasteless gas like radon. The risks of radon are obvious, and so many people have died from lung cancer. I was truly saddened that so many people may have been living with such high levels of this disastrous gas in their very own homes, in a place that we are all hoping will be our safe haven. Every day we all go home to our houses, wherever that may be, to rest and rejuvenate and feel safe and be with our families, not ever thinking that there could be very serious concerns and dangerous radon within our own homes.

Madam Speaker, there's so much information on the Internet these days, but unless you specifically know or hear about something from a friend or on the news, you would rarely stumble upon something on this that could potentially save your entire family. So thank you so much for bringing this bill forward.

There are a lot of families that have lived in the same dwelling for many, many years, and they're breathing in the same air thinking nothing different, certainly not thinking that there are gases or poisons in their homes. I mean, why would you? We don't go home thinking about the properties of air quality in our house – at least, I don't, anyway – or wonder about the long-term ramifications of that unless you can smell it or feel it or, you know, you can sense it. I've never truly thought a lot about that – I'm so grateful that you've brought this forward – and I bet most of us in this House have never thought about that. Day after day people go home to their safe place from the world, and they're not even aware that there could be poisons in their air and that it could be hurting their families. I'm so delighted to stand in the House today and support this legislation intended to educate the public so that Albertans can protect their families.

Now, about children and child care programs across the province. It is spectacularly important that they will also be protected just as soon as the legislation is proclaimed. That is fantastic news. Again, I just don't think it crosses a lot of people's minds. You're assuming that you're taking your children to a safe place, not ever assuming anything about the air quality. So thank you. This has been a really, really mind-opening discussion. Children spend, obviously, long periods of time in child care, and when they are there, it is absolutely imperative that those areas are being tested. Children have been reported to be at a greater risk than adults for certain types of radiation exposure. So I can't reiterate enough, I'm sure: thank you, to the member again, for bringing this forward.

The World Health Organization has material specifically for training the health sector on children and radiation, and it's actually pretty amazing when you think about it. That manual has absolutely everything in it from understanding the basic principles on radiation physics to identifying the source of radiation exposure right down to describing preventative strategies. So it really, really sets the tone and the availability to make sure that we're doing right by our kids in these spaces. It's super important to understand those basic principles for the pediatric health care system world-wide, actually.

One of the things, Madam Speaker, that the manual stresses is that "ionizing radiation is a known carcinogen to which children are particularly vulnerable"; that is, the effect of radon when there are high concentrations of this gas in enclosed areas such as a house or facility. This is when it becomes extremely volatile. It also says that when there is radon in a home or a building, "children may receive higher doses than adults because of higher intake and accumulation [and that] sensitivity to radiation is highest early in life."

Madam Speaker, our children are severely more susceptible to ionizing radiation that creates what's known as oxidative damage, or the free radicals, and that leads to recognizable changes in their cells and their DNA molecules. It's just terrifying. To think that children are at a higher risk and accumulate the radiation faster than adults is just horrifying.

There are also other pieces of information, Madam Speaker, that speak to the epidemiological studies that have shown that moderate to high doses of exposure to ionizing radiation actually lead to higher rates of cancer in adults. Again, I can't begin to explain how much more terrifying it is to know that our children are even more susceptible to this radiation than we are. Ionizing radiation has been linked to things like childhood leukemia, thyroid cancer, brain cancer, and radon has been, as some of the other members have, I think, mentioned earlier, linked to lung cancer. The studies of uranium miners have consistently shown that miners that have been exposed to high levels of radon are obviously going to be at an increased risk of lung cancer, but the actual statistics are staggering.

In 2007 Health Canada sponsored a workshop to review the current state of the science on radon health risks. The specifics of the workshops were to collect and assess scientific information relevant to setting national radon policy in Canada. They gathered information on social, political, operational considerations in setting national policy. The workshop at that time, Madam Speaker, was attended by 38 scientists, regulators, and other stakeholders from Canada and the States. A number of strategies to reduce radon came forward in this workshop, including testing, mitigation of existing homes, and, really importantly, changing the building codes to require that radon mitigation devices be installed at the time when a new home is constructed.

We know that new homes are required to have radon detectors installed and roughed-in radon pipe should the home or building require removal. However, Madam Speaker, what is very concerning is that we know that old buildings may not have these remedial detectors and pipes. So it is imperative that the owners that are going to buy these properties are properly educated. As I understand it, under section 4 of the Child Care Licensing Act, prior to licensing any child care program, the facility where children will be will have to have radon testing completed the year before.

Again, I would like to take this moment to thank the member for her thoughtful bill, and I look forward to seeing what changes will be made in the regulations.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Today I rise to speak to Bill 209, the Radon Awareness and Testing Act. I just have to say to the Member for Calgary-East that the fact that the sole purpose of this bill is about educating the public about dangerous health risks I think is excellent. I think you've identified a very good subject. I agree wholeheartedly with this bill. Good job. [some applause] And that's all the kudos you're getting from me today.

Quite honestly, I do just want you to know that as soon as I heard about this bill, the first things that came to my mind were asbestos and carbon monoxide poisoning, some very similar, some very real issues that do affect us. Actually, when I thought about radon and read farther, I often think about house construction. I used to do house construction. I wonder how much the way we design homes here in Canada affects this compared to, say, in some warmer climates where they only build on a slab. Those were just some internal questions that I had.

The fact is that we do have to build these homes that are deep enough so that they avoid the frost, and we probably are digging deep enough that we are exposing our houses to the potential minerals, uranium, that produce this radiation. It makes me wonder, like, how much we have to do to alleviate these things in our houses. I see we've changed our building code, but we'll get back to that later.

Let us talk about asbestos and carbon monoxide poisoning, though. Carbon monoxide poisoning is something that fire departments across our nation have embraced, especially our Alberta firefighters. Up until recently they were handing out carbon monoxide detectors, which I strongly recommend people have in their homes. You have to remember to put those very low in your house because it is very similar to radon. In fact, it is a tasteless, not visible gas that is very heavy and stays low to the ground. Obviously, folks like the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre wouldn't have that issue because he's such a tall man, but Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills there might be affected by this greatly. This is no laughing matter, though.

Carbon monoxide is a very similar issue. Though we have some awareness of carbon monoxide – groups like the firefighters have embraced this – there still needs to be more education on carbon monoxide. There is a push, perhaps, to make it a standardized thing, a mandatory thing, and I'm not sure that is necessary as long as everyone is aware and takes those precautions for carbon monoxide. Unlike asbestos and the other things carbon monoxide can kill you very quickly, even just a few hours of it. In Ontario they made carbon monoxide detectors mandatory because a family did lose a family member to a carbon monoxide leak just a few years ago. That's what instigated Ontario to push this forward. Again, the fire commissioner of Alberta has more than embraced carbon monoxide.

Asbestos. Here's another issue that was much more dramatic because we used asbestos for everything back in the day. It was a really good insulator. It actually has very good qualities to it. The unfortunate thing is that when you disturb it or it's in its form, it can easily be inhaled into your lungs, thereby causing a lot of obstruction to the oxygen and carbon dioxide exchange in your lungs. It makes things a little bit difficult. I've dealt with asbestos myself. You have to cover yourself from head to toe. You have to put on at a minimum an N95 mask, and you have to seal everything up. You have to seal the site up. It's a cumbersome issue, but it's well worth it to clear your home of such a prominent hazard within our homes.

I guess that's the point here. We continue to evolve; we continue to learn about all the different things that can affect us in our homes. Our homes are being built more airtight. We have very good windows. We have very good foam insulation that goes around any opening. We have paints and other seals that ensure that the air cannot escape anywhere from your home because we don't want that heat loss. That's a big energy issue. But the flip side to this is that we have to put things in our homes that exchange the air and whatnot. In the cases of some of these things like radon there's very much a need for that air exchange to occur.

Arsenic. Another issue that is very relevant. It's another carcinogen. It's something that we sometimes get from our groundwater. It seeps through. Obviously, it can come through the air and ultimately through our food as well. Arsenic is something that is very deadly. It very much kills us. Health effects include skin and lung and bladder cancers, liver, kidneys.

We know that because of the identification of a lot of these things like your arsenic, like your asbestos, we have different rules for different organizations. Health Canada, for example, continues to monitor the concentrations of various chemicals, and one of the things they do measure is arsenic. The Canadian Food Inspection Agency also takes a look at arsenic in all of our various foods, including baby foods and toys and things like that, to make sure that we are clear of this.

To the effect of radon: we do have extensive radiation laws, so I'm glad that this bill that is being put forward by the Member for Calgary-East is not imposing any hard laws – it is about education – because the fact is that there are laws out there that identify this issue. Certainly, the Radiation Protection Act; the radiation protection regulation; the Government Organization Act, schedule 10; and the radiation health administration regulation are all legislation that ensures that we're trying to protect our workers, our people, our citizens from radon. Again, so much more can be done, and that's why this Bill 209 has been provided by Calgary-East to increase the public's awareness, very much in the vein of carbon monoxide and asbestos. This is a good bill. This is education that we need to invest in and push forward.

I do hope, though, that when we're pushing these things, we can streamline things as well, make things more efficient. We shouldn't always just be educating on radon. It can be done in conjunction with carbon monoxide. It can be done in conjunction with asbestos. It can be done in conjunction with anything else that we discover. Certainly, something to consider is how we educate people. Again, carbon monoxide isn't quite out there. We have some education on it, but people continue to be unaware. It's something that hurts us all. It's good education.

As houses get built and we're building sturdier homes – again, they're very high quality; they're more environmentally friendly in the fact that they don't allow heat and other things to escape – we have to be concerned that we can circulate that air and have a system of getting rid of this product. What I'm really happy with on radon is the fact that in 2014 the Alberta building code addressed this very issue. Basically, with this issue the only thing that a builder has to do when they're building their foundation is the submembrane. They're just putting some gravel. Before you might put some fill, even some sand, they're also asking for a layer of gravel, another substrate, which allows the air to escape in between those particles and to possibly vent it off if you were to rough-in a pipe into your cement. That is a good recommendation by the building code because it's very expensive and very time consuming to have to put these things in after the fact: breaking out concrete, hauling that out, digging holes, putting pipes in, putting in new concrete. I really like the fact that they addressed this a few years ago.

They talk about all the building objectives that builders must perform to alleviate this very issue. This bill is very much in alignment with that. I love it. The building code ensures that we do have a properly sealed and labelled radon pipe, and it discusses the width. It should be at least 10 cm in diameter. It should run underneath the floor up to the midpoint of the home. Again, if we do discover radon in that particular home, it's very easy to simply add a fan and a vent pipe to it.

You know, I fully support that these educational materials will be developed and will address all these issues. Again, like I say, if we can do this in co-ordination and conjunction with some other things that we are concerned about, like carbon monoxide, like asbestos, I think we have to continue on with this education.

Calgary-East, good job.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I just want to mention a few other things when we're talking about radon gas. Again, it's been said many times that it's an unseen particle that we can't really detect unless we have the proper equipment. It has very long-term effects and is especially harmful to small children. I noticed in the bill that they're requiring child care services to do testing prior to getting a new licence, and I think that's a very good idea. A lot of the day homes and that: their basements are set up specifically for that purpose, and they have, you know, a bunch of little kids down there. I think it's a great idea to have that testing done.

Also, when we talk about these things, in the oil and gas industry we have what's called NORM, the acronym for normally occurring radioactive material. It can be very, very dangerous as well because, again, you don't know that you're even dealing with it. I was quite surprised. We had a stack of old drill pipe that was laying around, and we did some experimentation. We were actually looking for radon gas and radioactive materials. We got a Geiger counter out, and it was amazing how many of those pieces of pipe that people were handling – you know, a lot of times they're sold off to farmers to build corrals with and stuff, and these guys don't even realize that some of this normally occurring radioactive material is in the pipe and inside the scale that's in it.

The other thing that really concerns me – and if there are any amendments to this bill, Bill 209, that I might add in, it would be also the testing for black mould. This is another thing that very commonly occurs in basements, especially damp basements. Again, you don't really know that you're being affected by it. I know that people can get very, very sick from it and have things that, you know, doctors can't even really tell what is harming these people. They've come up with all kinds of diseases, unexplainable causes. Then, I think that if you did some of the root causes – I know that down in the United States it's very, very difficult to get rid of black mould, and a lot of times they'll just destroy a home.

Again, if we're going to be testing for things like carbon monoxide, which is a great idea, and radon gas now, I think that is fantastic, but maybe something that we should be looking at also is testing for black mould in houses. I know that if I were going to buy a new home in the city or in the country or anywhere that had a basement in it, I would definitely be testing for black mould. Just a simple matter of not doing the right things, not getting the vapour barrier the right way in a basement or even in an exterior wall, can trap moisture. Once you get the drywall and the paint on top, you don't even know that you've got black mould behind there, but it's in the air and it's permeating your house the whole time that you're there. Especially, like I said, with small children around it can have a very, very harsh effect on them.

I agree with the member's Bill 209. I think it's a good step, but I think we could add a little bit to it and maybe throw in that black mould thing. What do you think?

Thanks.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak?

Seeing none, I will call on the hon. Member for Calgary-East to close debate.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's wonderful to hear support from all sides of the House for this piece of legislation. I am always pleased when, you know, this private members' business can go well.

I just want to quickly mention a couple of things. First off, someone I think mentioned: what was the cost for larger buildings? It is true that the cost from radiation in larger buildings would be more expensive than the cost for an individual home although sometimes, like in the school that I was in, which was a very, very old building, it had vents in the ceiling, and it's just an issue of changing the pressure in the whole building. If you change the pressure from being negative to positive, you're going to push gases out instead of sucking them in. Sometimes these things in larger school buildings, especially older ones, can be remedied quite quickly.

Where to test? There were a lot of people who discussed the basement. The main purpose of radon testing: you want to put the test anywhere that you spend four hours a day or more in your home. If you're spending most of the time – my house doesn't have a basement, so we put the test on the ground floor because that's where we spend most of the time in the house. If you do have children in the basement, obviously that's the closest to the ground. That's going to be your priority. If you spend a lot of time on the ground floor of your house, you probably want to do that, too.

Where are the best places for education to happen? It is my great hope that every person who buys a house in Alberta will get a pamphlet that says that radon is an issue. I'm not opposed to the idea of other things. When you buy a house, that's when you're looking at fixing things that could be wrong with it. I would sincerely hope – and I've spoken to folks with AREA and AFREA.

I'll end quickly by saying that I appreciate the thought that this was a conservative bill. If you appreciate prevention as a means of saving the health care system money, I'd just like to say that all of my Conservative colleagues should also appreciate supervised consumption sites and reduced air pollution from coal, among other things.

I'm very happy for everyone's support for this bill, and I hope for continued support at further readings. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 209 read a second time]

5:00 Motions Other than Government Motions

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Traffic Safety Act Amendments

510. Mr. Hanson moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to consult with physicians and optometrists and make recommendations on possible amendments to the Traffic Safety Act to address patients who in the opinion of a physician or optometrist have a medical condition that makes it dangerous for them to drive a motor vehicle.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's just another day. Sometimes we take that for granted, you know. Just another day.

That's how October 25, 2012, started out for the students, teachers at Racette junior high school in St. Paul. Then at 9:20 in the morning, without warning, a minivan driven by a man with severe chronic health issues plowed through the wall of a grade 6 classroom. It was estimated he was doing 80 kilometres an hour at impact. Three 11-year-old girls were severely injured in the wreckage. Eleven-year-old Megan Wolitski passed away from her injuries the next morning. Eleven-year-old Maddie Guitard, severely injured, never regained consciousness. She survived until August 31, 2016, and then she, too, succumbed to her injuries sustained in that incident. The third girl miraculously recovered though will carry the lasting effect from this incident for ever, as well as the rest of her classmates, her teachers, and indeed everybody in that school that was there that day.

Madam Speaker, shortly after I was elected, I was contacted by Megan Wolitski's grandmother, and I promised her that I would do whatever I could to prevent a tragedy like this from ever happening again.

Richard Benson, the driver of the van, had suffered from seizures for over a decade yet was still able to procure a driver's licence. Currently in Alberta doctors are governed by their own code of ethics when it comes to reporting patients that they feel may be a danger to themselves and the public and should not be driving a vehicle. In Saskatchewan it became mandatory in 2004 for doctors or any duly qualified medical practitioner to report anyone 15 years of age or older that, in their opinion, is suffering from a condition that will make it dangerous for that person to operate a vehicle.

British Columbia passed the same law, enacted as early as 1996. It says under the Motor Vehicle Act:

Report of health professional

230 (1) This section applies to every legally qualified and registered psychologist, optometrist, medical practitioner . . . who has a patient 16 years of age or older who

- (a) in the opinion of the psychologist, optometrist, medical practitioner... has a medical condition that makes it dangerous to the patient or to the public for the patient to drive a motor vehicle, and
- (b) continues to drive a motor vehicle [even] after being warned of the danger by the psychologist, optometrist, medical practitioner...
- (2) Every psychologist, optometrist, medical practitioner... referred to in subsection (1) must report to the superintendent the name, address and medical condition of a patient referred to in subsection (1).
- (3) No action for damages lies or may be brought against a psychologist, an optometrist, a medical practitioner... for making a report under this section, unless the psychologist, optometrist, medical practitioner... made the report falsely and maliciously.

The concern among physicians that I've talked to is the patient-doctor relationship. They're worried that if they report a person, word's going to get around, and then people will avoid going to that doctor. Currently the onus is on the doctor. Legislation would take the onus off the doctor. I've asked this question to the College of Physicians & Surgeons, and they agree that mandatory reporting would level the playing field for all doctors.

On December 9, 2016, the results of a public fatality inquiry into the death of Megan Wolitski were released. The inquiry was held in St. Paul on September 21 through September 23, 2016. Recommendations from that report support what I am asking for in Motion 510.

Madam Speaker, Megan and Maddie would be 16 years old this year and in grade 11. They should be joining sports teams, going on first dates, and planning their futures. Our current system failed them. Megan's family, Maddie's family, their classmates, teachers, school, and community were traumatized by an event that could have been avoided.

It is incumbent on us as legislators to do what is right to prevent tragedies such as this one and protect the public. Our current legislation does not go far enough to ensure public safety. I encourage all members to please support Motion 510 in memory of Megan and Maddie.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the motion? The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's kind of an interesting conundrum of feelings that I get when I rise in this Chamber because I was in the Chamber the day that the event happened, that my friend from Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills talks about. I can specifically remember the exiting of the Chamber by the Minister of Transportation and the Member, at that time, for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills because they thought that something completely nefarious had happened. I may be incorrect in saying that it was the Minister of Transportation; it may have been the Solicitor General. But I remember back in that time that we had access to government aircraft just right nearby, over here at the municipal airport. There was a bipartisan joining together of the Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills member at that time and the other government member that went out to the scene, thinking that there was something extremely nefarious that had gone on.

As we've learned since then, it was simply a health issue of the person that had the health condition, and that contributed to the incident. But because of that, now we have people negatively affected by that, and my colleague now from Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills is trying to seek proper, I will say, vindication, if you will, or verification, possibly, of the seriousness of the event of that day.

I too have had constituents in my constituency of Drumheller-Stettler who have reached a ripe age of 80 years old and were completely of proper health. One gentleman that I know personally, who has now since passed, at over 80 years of age was trying to achieve and did achieve his class 1 driver's licence and maintained it to drive what we in the agriculture and the bulk carrier commodity industry, transportation industry know as a super-B. These are multiple fifth wheel units. I have the qualifications to drive one forward, but it's a whole other series of experience and whatever to try and back one up. This gentleman, although he was in perfect health, was running into a bureaucratic hurdle there to maintain his licence.

[The Speaker in the chair]

I think that my colleague's motion here to achieve proper professional medical adjudication of a person's health condition and achieve accountability for that condition is very important. I would like to stand with personal conviction. Because of my knowledge of the events of that day, I can stand here and ask for the compassion of the Chamber to support this motion and create full and open accountability for the doctors and the people that are, hopefully, going to be adjudicating the medical conditions of these people that are involved. I would plead for the passing of my colleague's motion as well.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

5:10

The Speaker: Are there any other members who wish to speak to Motion 510? The Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: All right. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to rise to speak in support of this motion. I want to commend the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills for bringing this forward. I agree with him that this is important.

Now, I can speak directly to the case that brought his attention to it in a moment, but prior to that, I mean, I guess I just referenced it in my last speech that I used to be an insurance agent. As an insurance agent representing communities where you did have people with some health concerns, maybe sometimes you had elderly drivers that really shouldn't have been on the road.

There's one thing I can say, that a process I sometimes would find frustrating myself is when you'd have a motor vehicle operator that you knew was unsafe to be continuing driving, and you didn't have concurrence from the local physician for whatever reason, that there really weren't any resources available. Now, for myself I'd end up, depending on the severity of it, actually trying to get the family into the loop and trying to have those types of discussions, but as many hon. members are well aware, I mean, it's a very delicate matter when you're talking about someone's driver's licence, especially in rural areas. There's a lot of resistance. I mean, pride is one thing, but the health and safety of people is another, and unfortunately the second one should probably trump the first one.

There's another issue when you have unsafe operators that continue to drive. Members of the Assembly may not be aware of one of the qualifying questions when you get issued an actual policy for auto insurance, that the onus is on the individual to disclose any health conditions that may affect the safe operation of an automobile. If they fail to do so, the company may be at the discretion of denying the claim. There might not actually be liability coverage in situations like that, so it can be a very grave situation indeed.

Now, it is my understanding that officials in the Department of Transportation are already at work on this issue. Of course, we are unfortunately and personally well aware of that, you know, terrible, tragic death in St. Paul just over five years ago. You had a driver who was noncompliant with seizure medications and did not disclose his medical conditions to the registry of motor vehicles as required. This type of tragedy is preventable, and we need to take action to ensure that it doesn't happen again.

Today, as it stands, if a physician deems a patient medically unfit to drive, the physician can indeed report that individual to Alberta Transportation. Canadian Medical Association guidelines recommend that a physician report to the provincial registrar any patient they deem to be unfit to drive. Now, I understand that Alberta Transportation has been working with Alberta Health as well as with the College of Physicians & Surgeons and the Alberta Medical Association to make such reporting a mandatory practice. I also believe that it's very important that affected groups, especially seniors, are included in these conversations so that there are no unintended consequences to these changes. There are some very delicate issues that are at play with this.

Now, we must continue this important work. I would urge members of the House and government to continue working to achieve the desired outcomes of the motion by considering all means at our disposal, including regulation changes and potential updates to legislation. With that, I'd like to rest my remarks, once again commend the member for an important motion, and urge that it be supported.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Speaking to Motion 510, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Yes. Thank you. I am pleased to rise and speak in support of this Motion 510. I'm very aware of this topic given my profession as a physician. I think that the intent of this motion is very good, but it's going to take a lot of consultation, as was mentioned by my colleague just before me, to fashion a response. That's actually the purpose of this motion, as I read it, to go to the Ministry of Transportation and ask them to expedite a process in which a scientific approach to this vexing problem can be taken.

There is a real problem here. This motion actually has "physicians and optometrists" in it. I have to say that it's 99 per cent physicians and 1 per cent optometrists. Going through my mind now, medically I can't think of a medical situation that an optometrist could identify other than poor vision, which we already have taken care of. Actually, on my driver's permit – I'm a class 5 – it says that I cannot operate without corrective lenses. I don't think that an optometrist would have been able to, for instance, detect the issues, that the member mentioned, that led to the tragic events in Cold Lake.

The situation that did occur in Cold Lake actually involved a person with a seizure disorder. These are relatively common. In fact, seizure disorders can occur in childhood, or they can occur after trauma. For instance, if somebody has a brain injury, then a seizure might be the result. It can also occur, you know, with the presence of a tumour in the brain. The onset could be either in childhood, or it could be well into adulthood. If it is diagnosed, it is a reason for the privileges of operating a motor vehicle to be rescinded.

In my experience – and this is something that I do not have a lot of personal experience with – patients who have a newly diagnosed seizure disorder are routinely told to give up their driver's licence, and those persons that are told to give up their driver's licence are severely affected in terms of their quality of life. They then become dependent upon friends and relatives for transportation. This is particularly, I think, a problem in areas like Cold Lake, where there may not be public transport available like there is here in Edmonton and in Calgary and other larger cities. A point to remember when we're discussing all this is that besides making sure that the doctors and optometrists are reporting these things, we as a government have a responsibility to make sure that the situation doesn't occur where somebody would try to get around those rules and operate a motor vehicle inappropriately.

In fact – and this is speculation on my part – I think that that was a large part of what led to the difficulties with the Cold Lake thing.

Mr. Hanson: St. Paul.

Dr. Turner: Sorry. St. Paul. They're close together, aren't they? Yeah.

The individual, I think, may not have been compliant with medications that would have suppressed the seizure disorder that led to this situation. Again, that's speculation on my part. I don't have any factual information about that. There may have been situations – for instance, a lack of sleep or consumption of intoxicating materials – that might have exacerbated the tendency for a seizure to occur in a particular situation. Even going without eating for more than 90 minutes can actually make a person more likely to have a seizure than they would otherwise be.

I'm not making an excuse for the doctors in this situation – that certainly is not my intent – but I'm actually trying to give you some context to think about how difficult it is in a situation like that for a family physician, for instance, or for a neurologist or a neurosurgeon or a cancer doctor, like myself, to be able to make the judgments that are being asked to be made in this situation.

I think that probably the strongest part of this motion is that we ask the Department of Transportation, the Ministry of Transportation, to basically consult with various groups such as the Alberta Medical Association or the Alberta family medicine association to come up with suggestions. They should also consult with the patient support groups. There is a large epilepsy association in this province. There's also a brain injury group at the Glenrose, for instance. Louise Miller is actually the most famous Edmontonian that I know of who works with people that have a brain injury. These groups would have a lot of very valuable information to bring to the table to make our roads safer and to protect the quality of life of the persons that have epilepsy or brain injuries or other things that might lead to this situation.

While I'm fully in support of this, I think it's important to recognize that this is a problem that the province has been dealing with for a long time. Certainly, physicians have been dealing with it for a long time. I learned about it in medical school. I get reminded about it regularly by the Alberta Medical Association as to my responsibilities in this regard as well as by the College of Physicians & Surgeons of Alberta, and I dare say that the optometrists might get the same advice from their colleges.

I think, with that proviso, I will end my comments on this article. It is an important step in managing transportation safety, but we need to strike a balance between the individual's transportation needs and the public's right to road safety and to basically live with that. If we do monitor the driver's fitness as well as safety records and their medical conditions, Alberta's roads can be made safe, and that will make life better for all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud for providing us a bit of a doctor's perspective on this particular motion. I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills for bringing forward this motion.

I think it is a good motion, and, you know, I'd like to share a little bit with the House as this is something that is particularly timely for me personally. As some of you may know, I have a grandfather who is 87 years old. Any time somebody loses a driver's licence, particularly, for example, if a doctor says, "Hey, perhaps you need to go and retake your driver's test," if you are somebody who has lived your whole life as an independent person who survived the Great Depression on a farm, was able to raise your family and then to see your grandson becoming a legislator, as you can imagine, it is always extremely rough on somebody's dignity and independence of being able to travel around when you need your grandson to drive you to the registry office to go take a driver's test and then inevitably fail that driver's test and have your grandson again drive you home from it.

It is important that, you know, as we think about this, we think about, particularly with seniors, keeping in mind that driving is often that last piece of independence. I find that this is sort of an observation in my constituency. When a person loses a driver's licence, there are consequences to that. I'm going to talk about this again from the context of seniors. When somebody loses their driver's licence, perhaps even temporarily, this might be the first time somebody might have to come to grips and admit the fact that they are old. I know this is something my grandfather is struggling with.

You know, some things were mentioned. My hon. colleague from Edmonton-Whitemud mentioned that when people are talking to a doctor about the problems they may be having, whether you are an elderly person or a younger person with some other medical condition, you might have a fear of admitting your problems to your doctor for fear that they might send a letter off to the director of transport and you might lose your licence. That is what happened to my grandfather, and he is living those consequences right now. He chats with me and my family regularly about not wanting to go back to his doctor because he's afraid of what other consequences may come out as a result of that.

I get that we need to make sure that our roads are safe. The hon. member, when bringing forward this motion, mentioned a very tragic incident with an individual who, you know, sounded like they definitely should not have been driving, and I don't think anyone in this House is going to argue against that. Certainly, I would not either. Again, particularly with seniors, sometimes in the past it's also been family members that have reported individuals who are seniors: you know, perhaps it should be time for grandpa to retire the keys.

Again, that is also a very tough conversation to have because, like I said, that can be a very big hit to the dignity and independence of a person who might not respond well to that, which creates some family tensions that might prevent other care and help that that person needs as they grow older to happen in a nice way. I mean, these, of course, are all problems that need to be dealt with, you know, within the family and with that person.

This is a story that I've heard before. I have Bow Cliff Seniors and Good Companions 50 Plus Club in my riding, and I have heard this before. This seems to be a problem that seems to be particularly prevalent with older men, and it's something that we have to deal with.

Hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, that is why I really appreciate that your motion as worded, although it comes from a very tragic incident, is also very calm and nonalarmist about making sure that we do have to consult with doctors and optometrists to make sure that there's, you know, consultation to work through all the potentialities of this, particularly, I think, when it comes to our seniors on when it's time for a doctor to say, "Hey, perhaps I'd like to make a restriction that you can't drive at night anymore" or "Perhaps I think it's time for you to go re-evaluate the driver's test."

5:30

I appreciate that your motion has that built into it, that consultation, and isn't being alarmist, you know, from that tragic event. That tragic event did shine a light on this problem, and I'm definitely supportive of that consultation going forward.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will end my comments there. Again, I thank the member for bringing forward this motion, and I thank the member for making a very good motion that I think will help with consultation and will allow us to, you know, explore this issue and come up with a solution to it that I think takes into account some of the things we've heard from other members across the House today.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any others who would like to speak to Motion 510?

Seeing and hearing no one, I would allow the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills to close debate.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, I'd like to make a couple of comments. Maybe the choice of wording when I used "optometrist" – what I was trying to do was match legislation with our neighbouring provinces. But perhaps we should use Saskatchewan's, especially with the upcoming use of nurse practitioners. Theirs actually states that any duly qualified medical practitioner can make that decision. We could definitely go with that. But that'll be part of the whole collaboration and consultation on this process.

I'd just like to also mention that my mother passed away a few years ago. She had COPD, and she was on very high levels of oxygen for quite a few years. She loved to drive. She loved to go to bingo, loved her little car. As a matter of fact, I helped her out and bought her a car so that she would have something dependable to drive around in.

But she had this condition where she had a bottle of oxygen with her all the time. Her doctor recommended that she stop driving and go for a test. She was quite upset about that because it took away her independence. You know, she used to pick up her friends. She was the go-to for bingo, right? She could pick up a couple here and there, and they'd all go out and enjoy their bingo.

When she had her consultation with her doctor, he asked her: how long would you last if the oxygen line got pinched or if you hit the brakes and your bottle fell over and became disconnected? That was all it took. She knows that if she doesn't get that bottle changed right away, she's not operating at a hundred per cent by a long shot. You know, she almost took it upon herself – she realized at that point that she was dangerous to herself and to other people. I think that's very important.

I mean, this whole exercise and even the bills in B.C. and Saskatchewan start at 15 years old. This is not an attack on seniors by any means. This is an attack on anybody that has a condition that's going to really affect their ability to operate a vehicle, their safety, their own personal safety, the safety of the kids riding in the vehicle with them or an oncoming vehicle if something happens and they have a seizure.

We saw in the case there in St. Paul, very tragically, how it's disrupted – I guarantee you that there are kids in that school that will never ever recover from that incident mentally. It is horrendous that they had to go through that. If there's any way that we can put through legislation that's going to help to avoid a situation like that, somebody else having to go through that kind of a tragic event, especially, you know, kids in grade 6, 11 years old – I don't know how much more I can say about it.

But I really do appreciate that I think the members opposite are going to support this motion. I really appreciate that. I think it is a good motion. I think it's something we need to look at as legislators.

Thank you.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 510 carried]

The Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At this point, given the amount of progress we've made this afternoon, I'd like to move that the House adjourn until 7:30 this evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:35 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Monday, December 4, 2017

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Good evening, everyone. Please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 30

An Act to Protect the Health and Well-being of Working Albertans

Mr. Gotfried moved that the motion for second reading of Bill 30, An Act to Protect the Health and Well-being of Working Albertans, be amended by deleting all of the words after “that” and substituting the following:

Bill 30, An Act to Protect the Health and Well-being of Working Albertans, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Alberta’s Economic Future in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

[Debate adjourned on the amendment November 30: Mrs. Pitt speaking]

The Acting Speaker: Are there any members wishing to speak to the referral amendment? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to continue my speech on Bill 30, An Act to Protect the Health and Well-being of Working Albertans. Here we are again at 7:30 at night in this family-friendly Legislature in the dying days of the legislative session dealing with an omnibus bill, and once again it’s major legislation that is important to both employees and employers. For that reason alone, it requires and deserves thorough scrutiny, for that is our job in this Legislative Assembly.

Bill 30 is 147 pages of significant changes to two acts, the Workers’ Compensation Act and the Occupational Health and Safety Act. The NDP has decided to combine its proposed amendments to these acts in one bill yet again. They even came up with a title theme that makes it appear that all of these amendments should be together, yet this government could have easily kept them separate, just as it did for its two marijuana bills, which we do appreciate.

Let’s look at the common-sense way of dealing with these changes. Recently the government introduced Bill 29, which only amended the Traffic Safety Act to deal with marijuana and impaired driving. Two days later it introduced Bill 26, which amended the Gaming and Liquor Act to include cannabis. Separating the bills in this fashion allowed members of this Chamber to focus on the specific objectives of each of these bills, extremely important when we’re making smart decisions in this Legislature. It allowed for good debate, positive amendment proposals, focused debate, Madam Speaker.

However, when it comes to sweeping labour legislation, the NDP seems to have a pattern of choosing a different track. First, we had Bill 6 for farm workers. This bill has a rich history of controversy, as I’m sure everyone in this House remembers, initially due to the fact that the NDP chose not to consult with the very people its proposals would significantly impact. But let me point out another trend. Bill 6 was introduced on December 1 and was before the House for all of four days. I think you can certainly call that fast-tracking, Madam Speaker.

Now, let’s turn to the comprehensive labour legislation this government introduced last spring, once again in the dying days of session. That was Bill 17, a 252-page bill, that was before this House for three days longer than Bill 6. Yes, seven days: that’s all the time that was afforded for a massive piece of legislation, which, just like Bill 30, also amended two comprehensive acts, the Employment Standards Code and the Labour Relations Code.

To recap, Bill 6, at 12 pages, was before the House for four days, and Bill 30, a whopping 252 pages, was before this House for seven days. Now we have another comprehensive labour bill before us, and there are only a few days left before this House rises for Christmas. Maybe, I suspect, we’ll be here longer than that.

Not only is this government not the least bit worried about pushing through sweeping labour legislation at the last minute and invoking closure when the debate gets dicey for the government, but it continues to see consultation as a nuisance. With Bill 6 the government thought it was unnecessary, and then thousands of farmers turned up on the steps of the Legislature. Then with Bill 17 it held sham consultations with business organizations. The minister assured everyone that these were fulsome consultations, yet we learned that many business leaders had been pleading with her to meet with them prior to introducing the legislation. She refused to do so until some went public with her refusals. Then she held meetings after she introduced the legislation and claimed that they were part of her original consultation, but business leaders called her on that, too.

For Bill 30 the NDP instead chose to consult through a comprehensive web survey, yet that survey only provided options the government wanted to see implemented. In other words, it was designed to get the answers it wanted, not what Albertans wanted. Where’s the proof of that? Well, the bill was presented last Monday, and today influential business organizations like the Alberta Chambers of Commerce are urging the government to send Bill 30 to committee to allow for a thorough review. And now with my colleague the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek bringing this referral motion forward, we have a true test for this government. What will they do, Madam Speaker?

This is the third piece of labour legislation that we fully expect to see pushed through this House in quick order. I will hold out a small bit of hope that this government will do the right thing. The NDP has a chance, a chance to prove the opposition wrong and do the right thing by Albertans. It can agree to this motion. Referring it to committee is the only way to properly assess Bill 30, and the government knows it. If it doesn’t agree to it, clearly it’s not interested in having Bill 30 scrutinized at all. What does this tell you, Madam Speaker?

Perhaps I shouldn’t hope that they will do the right thing, but I can’t help it, and I will hold out hope. If just this once the NDP government takes the advice of the Official Opposition, it may find that spending time consulting with stakeholders pays off not just in legislation that better reflects Albertans but that Albertans will appreciate them for it as well. I can promise you that Albertans will notice. They could also pull the bill and split it into two, one for WCB changes and one for OH and S.

The choice is theirs, Madam Speaker, and I will hold out hope that this government will do the right thing and vote to refer this bill to committee, where it can be properly scrutinized, where experts can be brought to the table. They can testify, can offer help, changes. They can ensure that the majority of Albertans will have input into this piece of legislation. They can be assured that this is the right thing for Alberta, not just what they think is the right thing but what Albertans think is the right thing, which I can assure you is the most important thing that we as legislators should be doing in this House. I would hope that I wouldn't need to remind the government that they are here on behalf of Albertans.

They can prove here today that they're here for all of us, all Albertans, all of the people that we represent by passing this motion to put this bill to committee, where it can be properly scrutinized. Heck, it could even be a quick process. But let's invite everyone to the table. Let's allow everyone to have a voice on such a massive, sweeping change of legislation that affects so many people in this province. We can really make sure that some of the good things are put forward, that some of the harmful things can be thoughtfully debated. Proper evidence could be brought forward, Madam Speaker, so that Albertans will feel confident in the legislation that is passed in this House, not only by their government but by opposition members as well.

I would urge all members in this House to vote in favour of the motion by my hon. colleague for Calgary-Fish Creek to refer this to committee. If the government truly feels that this is the right thing for Alberta and that the people of Alberta want to see these changes, then that evidence will be clearly shown in a committee setting, and all members can have input as, after all, we're all representatives of the people that have elected us to be here. That's an important role, which I know many of us take very, very seriously. We need to see the bill in committee. We need to bring experts forward.

We need to have proper scrutiny of Bill 30, and perhaps, maybe, the government will see that this bill is actually two bills that should be separated. That would certainly be a recommendation from the opposition. I think it would be a fair thing to do, to separate WCB and OH and S. It would certainly create a more fulsome debate. It would be a lot easier for Albertans to engage with, when there is a focus and an area of direction. But, hey, maybe that's not what comes out of committee. I don't know. We don't have that opportunity.

That's why it's important for members of this House to support the referral motion to bring this forward in a committee setting, where we can do the right thing by Albertans for Albertans.

With that, I thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Just a quick comment with regard to the consultation. I think that saying that consultation is being treated as an inconvenience on this side is not exactly overly respectful to the multitude of folks that participated. With anywhere from employers and workers and labour groups, municipalities even, health and safety technical experts as well as safety associations, you know, I don't think we necessarily want to be placing their comments that they've put forward with regard to this bill – I mean, more than 1,300 online surveys, 90 written submissions, with over 200 stakeholders participating, and that's just in occupational health and safety, not to mention the over 1,700 questionnaires, 200 written submissions, 67 workbook responses for WCB, and then the 60 responses to the panel's own report.

I think that this is, you know, some very good information that has been put forward for consideration with this bill. I would just maybe ask members to keep that in mind when we talk about their submissions being treated as inconvenient.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for your input, certainly something that's available online.

I think that it's important to mention that the document says that it received input from Albertans over a nine-week period. That's 45 business days. I can appreciate that there was some consultation that took place. However, this is not information that is shared with all members in this House, and to ask members of this House to support or trust the word of the government and the feedback that they received, that is not open to everyone in this Assembly, is not exactly a good example of responsible governance.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, I have to say that we mentioned earlier the daylight savings time act. We decided that we would move that to committee because it was so important to Albertans to hear about an hour difference on one side or the other of the day. And you know what? My constituents actually were very vocal when it came to daylight savings time, both for and against. So just to hear that we spent all that time on daylight savings time, which is definitely important to a lot of Albertans, but not be able to speak with a more thorough consultation about worksite safety seems strange.

You've said 1,300 online surveys, 90 written submissions, eight in-person, facilitated round-table discussions involving 200 stakeholders representing employers, workers, OH and S professionals, work and safety associations and academics. And you know what? Of course, I agree. You don't want to demean these people for what they've done. But you sure didn't give them enough of an opportunity to speak. You gave them, it looks like, a survey where you got the answers you were looking for. I've seen your surveys before. They are terribly misleading. They are trying to get to answers that you're hoping to get to so that you get some overwhelming affirmative of yea or nay to the questions that you're trying to ensure, that more or less fill out the opinion you've brought forward.

So when we look at the scope of this, we could do better. I think that's really what my colleague is saying, that we can do better. We can actually do a better job of consulting with Albertans. From what I understand, the committee that reviewed the Daylight Saving Time Act had – and somebody can correct me if I'm wrong – 14,000 online responses. This is less than 10 per cent of what we did with daylight saving time. It tells you that we have the ability to outreach to Albertans. Why wouldn't we?

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the referral amendment? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise this evening to speak on the motion for referral of Bill 30, An Act to Protect the Health and Well-being of Working Albertans, moved by my colleague the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. When it comes to Alberta's workforce, nothing is more important to me and the members on this side of the House than protecting these hard-working men and women. That is why it is paramount that we not rush this bill and that we get it right for the people it is intended to protect. Put in the simplest terms, the OHS Act and the WC Act have not been revised since 2000, over 17 years ago. What is the harm in taking a few extra weeks to ensure that due diligence is complete? Let us put the lives of Alberta workers ahead of ideological agendas and an unrealistic timeline. The best way to do that is to refer this bill for further study by committee.

Madam Speaker, anyone who has been in my constituency in southern Alberta knows that you'll find some of Alberta's hardest working, compassionate, and caring people there. Whether you're just visiting, new in town, or your family dates back to the early pioneers in the mid- to late 1800s, you're always treated like family and made to feel welcome. That's because where I come from, we look out for each other. There are all kinds of communities in the south brought together by religious conviction, athletics, vocation, hobby interests, and the list goes on. But when faced with adversity, we circle the wagons round each other. We look out for each other. No one gets left behind. That's the Alberta way, and that's the spirit that this bill should be written with.

Unfortunately, Bill 30 fails to accomplish this goal on a number of fronts. In the short time I have been given to meet with stakeholders since this bill was first read, it's become clear that their interests have not been accounted for or they have been flat out ignored. For that reason, this bill should be referred to committee for review so that we have an opportunity for all members, both sides of the House, to be able to hear the concerns and the wishes of the people who are being represented in this bill. That's the best way to be able to vet this bill and to make it so that it's open and transparent.

Madam Speaker, this bill in its current form will severely jeopardize Alberta's path to recovery. I want to say that again. I truly believe that the unintended consequence of this bill could potentially cause severe problems for the recovery that Alberta is on.

The existing and future success of Alberta's employers rests on their ability to recruit and retain talented employees from around the country, even from around the world. A large portion of this success will be a result of a system in place to compensate injured workers that is effective, efficient, and, most importantly, sustainable. However, Bill 30 doesn't address the real problems here. One of the biggest failings of the current system is not the amount of money or level of benefits distributed but how the rulings passed impact employees and employers, including the burden of proof required by employers or the new provision for WCB staff to use creative licence and solutions.

Creative licence sounds like a fancy progressive term, but when boiled down, it really translates to lack of consistency. When we are dealing with the livelihood of Alberta's workforce, the last thing we can leave subject to interpretation is how money and benefits are distributed. When making rulings, a significant amount of responsibility will be placed on case managers and their level of skill as advocates. Instead, we should be relying on precedents and standardized procedures to ensure that the needs of claimants are met and dealt with fairly and impartially.

Madam Speaker, we also can't have the appearance of the WCB picking winners and losers when it comes to claims. Standardization of process will eliminate any chance of worker resentment towards colleagues and the WCB system. If two workers with equal claims are treated differently during review, there will likely be an appeal process that follows. This will cause unnecessary strain on our system. With a system that brings in $1 billion worth of payments from the 160,000 some-odd businesses in Alberta to the Workers' Compensation Board, I think it's extremely important to make sure that this does not inflate, and I'm concerned about this bill inflating those numbers to the point where it cannot be sustainable.

The workers' compensation system is built on the tenets of the Meredith principles. These state that employers will pay for the workers' compensation system and share the liability for injured workers, with the understanding that injured workers get the benefits they deserve while they recover but are unable to litigate their employers. To be effective, the Meredith principles require that all decisions made on a claim be done impartially, based on sound evidence, legal precedents, policy, and an impartial process. For this to take place, the Workers' Compensation Board appeals process must – and I repeat: must – remain at arm's length from the government. This is to avoid any real or perceived government intervention and influence.

However, this bill gets a failing grade when it comes to influence. Here is just one example. The occupational disease and injury advisory committee is to be established under the minister and consists of a select number of members with distinct qualifications. First, the director of medical services, occupational health and safety, will chair the committee. That makes sense, to have occupational health and safety and medical services personnel on there. Next, the board should designate someone who is a physician: again, reasonable given the nature of the claims the board will see. Another committee member must be from the Department of Health, also a worthy addition. Fourth, an employee of Alberta Health Services, designated by Alberta Health Services. Next, an employee of Covenant Health: obviously, an organization with some expertise in the field.

What about the sixth provision? The committee may also include three persons appointed by the minister. Why would the minister need to appoint three members of a committee this small? Furthermore, what would said members bring to the committee? Each of the previously mentioned appointees have an existing level of involvement in the WCB or the OH and S field. However, these three appointees have no requirements for them besides being appointed by the minister.

The problem we have here is twofold. First, there is certainly political injection into this committee that was not there prior. Second, there is no merit-based approach for appointees from the minister's office. Similar to the issue I raised earlier about creative licence, I see a lot of opportunity here for creativity on the part of the occupational disease and injury advisory committee.

There are significant concerns, Madam Speaker, with enshrining the obligation to return an injured worker to work within the Workers' Compensation Act. Provisions already exist within human rights legislation, and this is a situation where we see a disconnect between human rights and workers' compensation legislation, which would be detrimental to both workers and employers. Having a different standard in the WC Act creates conflict between the two pieces of legislation, and applying the same standard is redundant. It already exists and applies to Alberta employers. That's taken from the Industry Task Force release on Bill 30.

Talk about removing the cap for maximum allowable earnings: this will make it impossible for the government and the WCB to accurately cost out the program. This will rise . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt. We are on the referral amendment, not the bill, so I'm just wondering if you could please speak to the referral instead of the content of the bill.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the comment, and I will make sure that I get back to talking about the referral. I wanted to make sure that I gave context so they understood why we need to make sure that we bring this back to a committee to be able to study it. In order for us to be able to understand why it's so important, I have to give context. This is the reason why I'm giving this information.

I have no doubt that the members opposite, especially the minister, have taken the time and done everything they can to try to make this the best bill possible. The problem is that there are over 160,000 businesses in the province of Alberta, and because of that, we need to make sure that we get as many of their perspectives on this bill as we can in a transparent, open, committee forum, that will allow these businesses to be able to present their information. Then we can have an all-party discussion about which are best practices and what actually should be brought forward.

Now, I also want to point out that according to the Alberta Chambers of Commerce one of the more significant indirect effects of Bill 30 will be the rapid onset of the new legislation, that small and medium businesses will be unable to afford. Many parts of this bill will come into effect only a few short weeks from now, January 1, 2018. The remainder of the bill will come into effect on July 1 and September 1 of the coming year. The chamber recommends, like the members of this side of the House, that the government refer this bill to a committee to be further reviewed. This will allow us to meet with stakeholders from the business community about how to best implement the new legislation without causing lasting damage to local businesses.

The truth is, Madam Speaker, that we do not want to have unintended consequences for our businesses, especially right now, in this current economic downturn. Businesses have been hit on multiple levels with legislation from this government, that has caused them a lot of struggles in their business. Yes, we are in a downturn in the economy, and, yes, that will cause pressure to be on businesses, but the problem is that this government has compounded the situation. They've compounded the situation with minimum wage increases, they've compounded it with the carbon tax, and they've compounded it with labour legislation previously introduced as well. The list goes on.

Now, one of the things that I believe is important, Madam Speaker, is the vetting process. We're supposed to be sober thought for the ideas of what makes a better society that we live in. I want to describe to you what I experienced in watching the federal process, where what they have is the opportunity to bring forward bills, but those bills are vetted quite rigorously through committees – they are all-party committees – where they have the opportunity to be able to bring forward stakeholders, and those stakeholders have an opportunity to present not just to the governing side but actually to all parties. Then the opposition sides have the ability to say: "You know what? I know that maybe this doesn't work for the government's agenda, but this is actually a good idea, and a plethora of stakeholders is telling us that this is a fantastic idea. We need to look at this." And if the governing side says that this isn't a good idea, then they can take it to the press, and they can start drumming up important public opinion.

That is a process, I believe, that will get you closest to the right answer. And when we send it to committee, at least in this context, we send it to committee in order to be able to, again, bring it to the closest approximation of a good bill, that would be good for the majority.

Once again I will say this: the problem that we've seen in the past has been the unintended consequences. I would have to venture to say that the reason why these unintended consequences have been popping up so much is because they refuse to do an economic impact study. We have asked numerous times on this side of the House: has an economic impact study been done?

Now, I don't know whether or not members opposite feel like they know better than what the professionals would be able to present in an economic impact study, whether they know what is better for Albertans, or whether or not they've done an economic impact study and the information is so terrible that they're not willing to share it with us. Either way, it does not work for Albertans, what they're trying to accomplish. I would say that it's extremely important that we send this to committee so that at least we come closest to an approximation of a good bill that will actually help.

I've heard the Minister of Economic Development and Trade say: our number one responsibility is creating jobs. For two and a half years we've heard him say this.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I believe my colleague has some really, really good points. He's really trying to bring understanding on why committees are so important to this House. I believe that he didn't have enough time to get that point forward, and I think that we should let him have the time that he needs to explain further to this Assembly why referral motions are so important.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It actually is my pleasure to be able to stand and speak a little bit more to the importance of sending this bill to committee.

Now, I will say this much, though. Sending it to committee is not the silver bullet. In fact, there was a situation, actually, a week ago, where I was in a committee, and there was an interest by stakeholders to be able to come to this Resource Stewardship Committee. They wanted to be able to present what they felt was important in their own industries to this committee. The committee, unfortunately, refused to see these guys and made a point of it.

Committees are not actually the silver bullet. But I will say again, going back to the point, that we want to come to the closest approximation of a good bill that will actually help, as I was saying earlier, accomplish what the Minister of Economic Development and Trade is looking for, which is to get Albertans working again.

We have a little over 160,000 businesses in Alberta that contribute to the Workers' Compensation Board and, from what I understand, 200 stakeholders representing in a round-table discussion. The problem with that is that that equates to one-tenth of 1.25 per cent of the businesses that are actually out there. So when we talk about a fulsome consultation process, I can't see how this government can say with a straight face that that is considered fulsome.

Now, the other thing that I wanted to point out about this process of consultation is that I would be very interested to see, after they presented the bill, what kinds of letters the members opposite are receiving in their offices, in their constituencies. I can tell you that in my office, Madam Speaker, I'm receiving e-mail after e-mail from concerned businesses on how this will affect their ability to keep the people who they consider their friends, even family employed. How can the Minister of Economic Development and Trade achieve his desired goal of keeping Albertans working when the Minister of Labour is taking his feet out from underneath him?

It doesn't make sense. The ministers need to get together. They need to talk about common goals so that they can actually get Albertans back to work, which was the number one responsibility of this government. They've said this many times.

Now, when I was going through the technical brief of this bill, I asked the person that I was going through the technical brief with to give me empirical evidence about why they were doing the changes they're doing, especially with the WCB, and they presented an empirical study called the Joint Health and Safety Committee Education and the Value of Bipartite Co-operation in the Health Care Sector in British Columbia, Canada, 2005. It's interesting because that same study I actually quoted in one of my speeches earlier. That same study says:

Mandatory Joint Health and Safety Committees for workplaces with 20 or more employees were legislated in BC in 1977. Nonetheless, despite the long-term existence of JCs, in the BC healthcare sector in 1998 the injury rate was 54% higher than the average rate for all workers in BC. And, from 1997 to 1999, direct claims costs were $180 million in BC healthcare.

In other words, at best . . .

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the referral amendment? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills. It's the new lane in between your seats. I don't know why I can't get it.

Mr. Hanson: That's fine, Madam Speaker. Thank you very much. I rise to speak to the referral amendment on Bill 30, An Act to Protect the Health and Well-being of Working Albertans. Now, that's a title that you can't really argue with, right? I mean, how are you going to vote against that?

Now, I understand the desire to do good and look after our brothers and sisters in the workforce. I came from a construction background. I worked out in the oil and gas industry and construction industry for upwards of 35 years. And I'll tell you how safety has changed in the time from when I started my apprenticeship to when I left as a consultant. I worked out in industrial where coveralls weren't mandatory, safety glasses weren't mandatory, and gloves weren't mandatory, but if you were working with a welder, you know, you learned pretty quick to put them on.

Even something as simple as wearing a face shield while you were running a grinder wasn't mandatory. They were all there in the tool shacks, and you could go and get them, free issue, glasses and safety masks, but a lot of guys didn't use them. It's like: "Oh, yeah. I'm tough. I can do this." I for one liked to use the glasses. I used glasses and a face shield. The trouble with a face shield is all that grinding dust would get on top, and then you go to look up, and it would all fall on your face anyways.

What I'm saying is that industry itself has been taking care of workers and trying to teach that mentality of safety. At times they've had to force it on people. At one point there were getting to be so many eye injuries even with safety glasses that they went to the monogoggles that were a real pain when you were trying to work, especially in a warm environment. You'd get all fogged up and that. Again, as we went along, now safety glasses are mandatory. Hearing protection is mandatory. Fire-retardant coveralls out in the oil field is a mandatory piece of equipment now. So everybody has evolved, and it's all been due to – at some point or another the incidents get to a certain point where the companies say: "You know what? Enough is enough. Everybody has to do this."

I know that you were not supposed to go back to the bill itself, but I'd just like to point out something. You know, I've been working in the management capacity at least for the last 25 years, and every morning on all of my job sites we always did a safety meeting. One of the very first things every day was: you have a right to refuse unsafe work. This has been in our construction industry for as long as I can remember, yet here I see it on page 20 of the manual coming up again. So I just get a little confused that some of this stuff is coming right out of the occupational health and safety manual. It's already been there, and I don't understand why it's in this legislation.

So I really think that we could probably reduce this thing a fair bit if we send this to committee and get some industry and safety – safety is an actual industry all on its own, especially in oil and gas right now, so there are a lot of experts out there that could help with this. I can tell by looking at it that there wasn't enough consultation done on this because there are things in here that don't make a lot of sense. Anyway, like I said.

Now, another thing came up when I was in the oil and gas industry. I had an engineer come up and talk to me one day, and she said: "Why is it that we're doing these exact same projects all the time, yet the price seems to escalate all the time? It can't be just from material. We should be finding efficiencies and getting better at it." So I explained to her how things had changed in just over about a two-year period, where on a 50-man crew each man was spending close to an hour and a half a day just filling out safety paperwork. We'd do a safety meeting in the morning. Then each group would go out to their area, and they'd do a tailgate and hazard assessment. All that stuff is good, but what we found is that it hadn't done anything at all to improve the stats safetywise. We were still getting the eye injuries, the pinched fingers, you know. I could make one of my colleagues nervous by using an old saying that we used to use, but we won't go there.

What we found that worked the best was mentoring, where you would get somebody that was brand new to the industry, and you would stick him out with a journeyman or somebody that had been doing that project or that job for 10 years, and you would march them along instead of just turning them loose with a piece of paper and a hazard assessment that says: if I check off all these boxes, everything is going to be good; I'm safe. That's what we were finding, that people would get so complacent with, you know: we've checked all the hazards; there's nothing that can go wrong. Then something would go wrong, and somebody would get a finger squished or they'd get a spark in the eye or something like that, and off we were to the first aid tent.

I really think that there are a lot of professionals out in the oil and gas industry that would be more than happy to come and talk to the committee about what's good about the bill, what's redundant about the bill, that's already in OH and S regulations as they stand. I think we could, you know, go a long way to making this a better bill.

As I said, you know, I supervised sites for many years and, thankfully, no major injuries on any of my sites. It was always something that we took very, very seriously. We were working a lot of times in live gas plants with lines that had a 1,000 psi of natural gas in them, and if, you know, somebody cut into a wrong line or made a mistake like that, it was going to be disastrous. So we were always very, very careful about safety. You know, it was always: we want you going home safe, just like you came into work.

Really, you know, this kind of a bill with all the pages and pages and pages: I think a lot of it is already in OH and S. I really think that we should push it to committee, bring in the professionals, bring in the safety professionals that could actually write a manuscript themselves.

Let's get it right. I mean, there are a lot of really good things in the bill. Like I said, my biggest concern when I was working and the guys were working for me was that everybody went home safely with all their digits and their eyeballs in their heads. I don't think there's a construction company out there that doesn't think that way. I really don't. I think we're barking up the wrong tree there, but we should bring those guys in, let them have their say.

I don't think that we've spent enough time on this. Like one of my colleagues said, we spent a lot of time over the summer on daylight savings time and gave it a lot more credence than what we're giving this manual that's going to affect so many businesses as it is. Like I said, you know: how much more paperwork do you need to do? Do you need to bubble wrap people? It doesn't help. I really think that if you looked at the stats, just a common-sense approach on job sites and some proper supervision would go a long way to reducing injuries.

Again, I'd like to see the evidence, like I say, from the government, that we're actually fixing a system that's broken. Like I said, my experience tells me that the OH and S manual is pretty good. There may be some additions. It's always a growing document that grows with the changes in industry and technology. There's nothing wrong with changes, but when I look at the wholesale changes that are going on here, I just wonder how many of them are, like I said, redundancies. I think the only way to find that out is to bring the professionals in, bring the businesspeople in, construction professionals, safety professionals, and let's try and get it right.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate what was said by the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills. I just wanted to make a couple of comments and ask a question. Yes, I think that in this bill there are a lot of things that we recognize, but I think we have to get into the nitty-gritty of this, and there are some very nuanced differences.

One I'll bring up is the right to refuse unsafe work. How it previously read was that it was a duty to refuse imminent danger. As you may know, being in the Legislature here, words mean a lot in legislation, they mean a lot in contracts, they mean a lot in collective agreements, and those small words make a big difference. In the previous incarnation the duty to refuse imminent danger was really left wide open and open to interpretation, mostly by the employer. This way brings it up to speed with a lot of other provinces and their OH and S legislation that says, you know, that if you recognize it as an employee and you think it's dangerous, you go tell somebody, and you refuse it until you figure out how you can do it safely.

Now, one thing that the member said there really hit the nail on the head, about how important this legislation is and why we should not put it to committee at the moment. He was talking about how over years in construction sometimes it would take two or three near incidents or accidents for the employer to finally say: "All right. Enough is enough. We've got to do something different." Right? Safety needs to be preventative, not reactionary. That's the big thing. That's what we're trying to do with this legislation.

I would ask the question of the member. There's no number in their referral motion. How long do they want to see this in committee?

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Yeah, you're absolutely right. You know, you can call it an evolution in safety when you see the incidents rising. Like I said, we went to wearing safety glasses, and it wasn't being helpful. It was mandatory. Everybody had to wear them. We were still getting eye injuries, so we went to the monogoggles. It wasn't something that was in occupational health and safety. This was something that the industry, the company we were working for, did just in trying to nail this stuff down and protect these guys. But it turned out that that didn't work either.

It's just a matter of, you know, proper training and getting guys to be working properly, a simple matter of, "When you're grinding, make sure the sparks are going that way instead of hitting you in the face," stuff like that, right? Like I said, it wasn't that we were saying: "Oh, just go out there. Oh, too many guys are getting hurt, so we're going to do something about it." It's a constant evolution out on the job site. We're trying to find the best ways so that guys aren't getting hurt.

Now, when he talks about the right to refuse work, I'm going to have to check with my former employer, but we had a checklist that I used for indoctrination. When we were bringing in a new hire, I always did the orientations on-site for these guys. I can show you in there from 10 years ago where you have an absolute right to refuse dangerous work. It wasn't something like: oh, you know, assess the work and if it's too dangerous. If you thought it was too dangerous, in your opinion, you had the right to refuse it. Nothing would be said, and you could not be fired for it. I have to clarify that, but if you like, I can see if I can get a copy of that, get permission, and I'll table it here for you.

Thanks.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thanks, Madam Speaker. I enjoyed the presentation from the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills. He reminded me of something when he talked about a work site where you operate a grinder wheel so that the sparks don't fly in your face or something like that. He also mentioned the potential loss of digits or body parts. I was wondering if he could explain and talk to the people about the lack of regulation and the camaraderie that happened on those kinds of work sites, where the goal wasn't to injure anyone but to create more production. I know that as a young man I worked on a pipeline crew, and our goal was to increase production without getting hurt.

I was wondering if the member could talk about an informal matter of safety and regulations that came forward that would allow self-performance and self-initiative to create a safer workplace.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Yeah. Thank you, Member, for that question. Yes, you know . . . [The time limit for questions and comments expired] I'm done?

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the referral amendment? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise this evening to speak to the referral amendment, which, if passed, would see this bill, Bill 30, sent to committee. For me – and I've risen many times in this House to talk about referral amendments – it happens to be my opinion that every bill should find its way to committee at some point to allow members representing all parties not just to investigate and review the bill but also to review the reason why the government crafted the bill.

Now, the government claims that they held robust consultations, and while that might be true, I want to point out to the members in the House that there is a huge difference between consultation regarding a concept or a number of concepts and consultation regarding a bill that becomes law. There's a difference between consultation prior to the crafting of a bill, consultation over issues, and then, when the bill is created, consulting back with Albertans again so that the created thing gets back before Albertans again so that they can see what the government has done with the information gathered during the initial consultation.

That's why we're saying that, yeah, we acknowledge the consultation, the survey, and the other things the government tried to do at the beginning, but now we have a very substantial piece of legislation before this House which, we are told, is the fruit of this consultation. Well, it would be very interesting, Madam Speaker, to consult with Albertans when they have that bill in their hand and they can go through it page by page by page.

I can recall, Madam Speaker, back during the Bill 6 issue, that when that bill came to this House and we attempted to have the government agree to refer that to committee, we were assured over and over and over again about all kinds of consultation that this government had done regarding this bill. Yet all of us in the Official Opposition at that time were getting pummelled by letters and e-mails from the agricultural community across this province, who were telling us that they were not consulted. They did not feel consulted. They felt insulted. Here was this bill which contained things that they in their wildest dream wouldn't have believed. If that bill had been so perfect, why, then, did the government issue six pages of amendments to their five-page perfect bill? It's because they didn't take the time to take the bill and consult Albertans on the content of the bill. I don't want this Legislature to make that mistake with any legislation.

Again, consulting over concepts and ideas is one thing, but consulting a group of Albertans and, especially as the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills pointed out, giving that Bill 30 into the hands of health and safety professionals in this province and asking them to give their input to a standing committee on now the contents of that bill is a whole different matter than an online survey.

Now, some of the members opposite claim that this bill is important and urgent: we need to get it through this House, and we need to get it out there so that we can start protecting workers. The question that comes to my mind is: then why wasn't this bill introduced on the first day of this session rather than almost at the end? If it's such a great masterpiece and we cannot afford to delay the implementation a single moment, why are we introducing this bill now instead of back around October 30, the first day back after summer recess? It would be interesting to get the answer to that.

Now, as I understand it, the Member for Calgary-Klein intimated that he was insulted by the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek saying that he would consider delaying the implementation by suggesting that the bill be referred to committee. Then why did the minister wait so long to introduce it? I encourage the Member for Calgary-Klein to maybe redirect his disgust to the minister for taking so long to get it here.

Now, make no mistake. This bill incorporates some really encouraging aspects, but I have concerns with other aspects, including the wholesale and potentially costly changes to the WCB that I believe could make the WCB system unsustainable. We need to hear from health and safety experts on that, the people that have to deal with WCB legislation day after day after day. That's one of the many reasons why I'm supporting the amendment to refer this bill to committee.

Now, if the government is so very confident that there are no issues with this legislation, then I don't see why they wouldn't welcome the chance to put it before committee, have experts from across our province review the bill, listen to what they have to say, and let them come to that same conclusion themselves. You see, Madam Speaker, unfortunately, this government has got a credibility gap, where this government has been known to say one thing and then later we find out that, well, it's not exactly as they had said. I'm going to point out one of those with regard to this bill, which will highlight why it's so important to put this to committee.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Simply put, Mr. Speaker, I don't trust this government when it says just about anything. They have a credibility gap when it comes to the truth. The government has created this credibility gap for themselves by introducing a carbon tax that they never talked about during the election or when it promised to be the most fair, open, and transparent government ever. Of course, we've had report after report from the Privacy Commissioner's office that that's just not so. The credibility gap grows every time this government touts its positive economic record, but the experts, the real experts in financial matters like the Standard & Poor's and Moody's and DBRS's of this world, respond by dropping Alberta's credit rating. This government says one thing, but the facts say another.

Now, here's an example of exactly that with regard to this bill. It concerns the Occupational Health and Safety Council. The role of the Occupational Health and Safety Council is outlined in section 7 of the current Occupational Health and Safety Act. I'm going to quote a little bit from there. I want the House to see what I mean about this credibility gap.

- (7) The Council shall
 - (a) advise the Minister on matters concerning this Act, the regulations and the adopted codes and potential changes to them, and the regulations and on matters concerning the health and safety of workers;
 - (b) hear appeals in accordance with this Act and the regulations;
 - (c) perform any duties and functions assigned to it by the Minister with respect to the administration of this Act, the regulations and the adopted codes.

Now, that seems real clear to me.

The council, which according to section 6 of the OH and S Act is made up of no more than 12 OH and S experts, acts as an adviser to the minister on issues related to the OH and S Act, any regulations and codes related to it, and on any matters concerning the health and safety of Alberta workers. When there is an appeal filed over any decision in accordance with the OH and S Act, the council is the arbiter of that appeal. Finally, the council is also sanctioned to perform any duties and functions assigned to it by the minister related to the OH and S Act, its regulations, and adopted codes. To be clear, that is the current version of the OH and S Act. Bill 30 proposes some pretty significant changes to that particular section of the OH and S Act.

The changes I will get to in a moment, but here's the issue with credibility, Mr. Speaker. When the government introduced Bill 30 last week, they posted a summary of the changes on their website, and one of the changes that the government noted on their website was to this OH and S Council. According to the government's website: "The OHS Council would become an advisory council to provide specialized advice to government to better protect working Albertans." But I just read to you the existing section of the OH and

S Act where it states that that is precisely what the OH and S Council already does. When someone goes to the website and reads what I just read to you, that the OH and S Council would become an advisory council to provide advice to the government, when someone reads that summary, they would be left with the impression that very little is changing in terms of the OH and S Council. I mean, it's already an advisory council.

The government's credibility crumbles the moment we look at the actual changes the government is proposing in this Bill 30. Let's start with section 93, which can be found on page 92 of Bill 30. Under the heading Part 13, Related and Transitional Provisions, Consequential Amendments, Repeal and Coming into Force, it states the following. "The Occupational Health and Safety Council referred to in section 6 of the Occupational Health and Safety Act . . . is dissolved and the appointments of members of the council are terminated." But wait a minute. The government website says, "The OHS Council would become an advisory council to provide specialized advice to government to better protect working Albertans." As I just read to you previously, that's something they can already do. They already do that job. Now the website says: we're going to change this. The act says: no; it's dissolved, and the appointments of those members are terminated.

As I said, consultation with Albertans before a bill is in their hands is one thing. It's a far different thing than consulting with Albertans after the government has taken whatever consultation they did earlier. They craft this piece of legislation, and then make the absurd claim that they consulted with Albertans. Frankly, you did not consult with Albertans while they were holding Bill 30 in their hand. It is actually disingenuous of members opposite to say that they've done all this consultation before anybody has actually seen this bill.

What needs to happen is that the bill needs to be referred to a standing committee. It needs to be advertised far and wide across this province to people who have to work with the results of this bill to hear what they have to say. I have received communication from the chambers of commerce in my area that (a) they don't feel like they were consulted, and (b) they've got some serious problems with Bill 30. They would love to have the opportunity to come here and talk to a committee regarding the actual details, because as you know, Mr. Speaker, the devil is always in the details of these things. One of the questions the committee might ask the minister is how she expects the OH and S Council to advise her after they've been fired and escorted off the property.

Bill 30 goes on to repeal that section of the OH and S Act, so make no mistake. This government has no role for the OH and S Council and never intended for the OH and S Council to have a role, and the website that the government has created is misleading. It is misleading Albertans right now. This is the credibility gap this government has created for itself in this bill and others and why this bill must be referred to committee.

I'm sure there are many more areas where the government has claimed that Bill 30 will do one thing when, in fact, it's going to do the opposite. When this government claims that it has consulted on this bill and there are no other stakeholders to consider, every member of this Chamber ought to automatically question that claim.

This bill must be referred to committee because as the representative of the people in Innisfail-Sylvan Lake I need to see the evidence for myself that Bill 30 is fixing a broken system, where it's fixing that broken system, and that the legislation that this government has proposed actually will increase health and safety in this province.

I have strong concerns that the questions that the government asked in their online survey were leading, which again calls into question whether this government was simply confirming its own biases rather than considering what the stakeholders and the public actually had to say.

The Speaker: Are there any questions or comments? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake under 29(2)(a)? Correct?

Mr. Cyr: It is, Mr. Speaker. I really enjoyed hearing the points that the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake brought forward, especially the fact that misleading surveys are something that this government has completely endorsed. It continues to search to fix things that the government feels that – it really doesn't reflect what I believe Albertans are looking for. If the hon. member could please explain more on how these surveys are misleading, I would really appreciate it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you, Member, for the question. The thing about surveys and consultation is that, as I pointed out earlier, it's one thing to conduct a survey, conduct a poll, have a questionnaire go out to people in our province, the stakeholders in our province, but you're never going to reach everybody that ought to be reached on something.

This bill has far-reaching impacts, just like Bill 6 had far-reaching impacts that this government never foresaw, mostly because the people that this government had helping them craft Bill 6, for example, were not actually the experts in farming and not the experts in family farming. So we saw farming communities right across this province rise up, and they were adamantly opposed to Bill 6. They were adamant that they had never been consulted, and they felt insulted over some of the statements that the government was making, statements such as that farmers were forcing their workers to do dangerous work and so on. You know, being a former farm worker, that was just not the case. I always had the right to refuse anything that was dangerous without fear of losing my job. I don't know any farmers out there that were like that, yet that was what this government was making the farmers feel like.

Well, here we have another bill that is massive, it's far-reaching, and the government claims that they have conducted surveys and they have conducted consultation. But as I said earlier, it's a very important distinction, Mr. Speaker, to consult on a concept and to consult with a bill in your hand that is supposed to be the result of that consultation earlier in the process.

This is the reason why it is parliamentary convention in many places that at second reading bills automatically go to committee, so that the people – and this is supposed to be a democracy – who that bill is going to impact have the opportunity to look at what the government has created and see if it is what the people need. Let the people decide. This government doesn't want to do that. Repeatedly, over and over again, they're cramming stuff through this House. They don't want it going to committee because they don't want the scrutiny and they don't want the feedback from Albertans who are going to bear the brunt of whatever that piece of legislation may be putting upon Albertans.

Well, I would hope that the members opposite will respect the people of Alberta, respect their level of intelligence, and respect their, I think, right that they should have to scrutinize every and any piece of legislation coming through this place at committee, where it should be. I would hope that all members of this House will support a sombre second thought, refer this Bill 30 to committee, and let Albertans have a good look at it and hear what they've got to say.

Thank you.

8:40

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any other questions or comments? The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster under 29(2)(a)?

Dr. Starke: No. Actually, Mr. Speaker, I was going to beg leave of the House for unanimous consent to revert to Introduction of Guests.

The Speaker: I was just waiting to see if there was anyone else under 29(2)(a). I was going to do that next. Any other speakers?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my very great honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three colleagues that are visiting today to attend the debate on Bill 31. It's my pleasure to introduce the president of the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association, Dr. Margitta Dziwenka; the registrar of the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association, Dr. Darrell Dalton; and the deputy registrar and complaints director for the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association, Dr. Phil Buote. I might also parenthetically point out that Dr. Dalton was my fourth-year buddy in veterinary school and taught me how to do my first jugular venipuncture on a cow, a cow that survived the procedure, I'm proud to say. I'd ask that my colleagues here in the House greet and welcome my colleagues in the gallery with the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome. I hope the instructors gave ample direction and detail about how we'd operate on a bull versus a cow.

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 30

An Act to Protect the Health and Well-being of Working Albertans

The Speaker: Now other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to stand in support of this referral by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. We are here, of course, again today debating a large omnibus bill that offers sweeping changes to both the Workers' Compensation Act and the Occupational Health and Safety Act just days away from the end of fall session or, at least, hopefully the end of fall session.

Now, last time we did this, it was in the spring session. This government had introduced Bill 17, which amended both the Labour Relations Code and the Employment Standards Code. That was last May, and after weeks of filibustering its own bills because Bill 17 clearly wasn't ready, they finally brought forward legislation seven working days before the House was ready to recess for the summer. And I'm not even going to get into Bill 6, which was, once again, thrust upon us and unsuspecting farmers just before Christmas of 2015. The point is that the NDP government has a pattern of bringing forward comprehensive labour legislation at the last minute, towards the end of session.

But let's look at this bill. Perhaps it is suitable for the dreaded "omnibus" word. I'm happy to of course tell you why, Mr. Speaker. First of all, despite some positive aspects, it introduces and will implement far-reaching changes to the Workers' Compensation Act that include a price tag. Why is that a problem? Well, I'm of course happy to tell you. This government has another habit, and that is perpetuating the idea that small and medium-sized Alberta businesses have a well of money that cannot be tapped out.

As an example, Alberta's business community collectively provided the WCB with a lot more in premiums last year than were needed. Were some of these WCB funds due to the earnings off its $10.5 billion reserve? We understand that they were. Regardless, when the accounting was done at the end of the year, the surplus in the WCB's accident fund was $350 million, Mr. Speaker. Do you know what normally happens to that money? It is returned to the businesses paying for the program in the form of rebates, and that did not happen in 2016. The WCB kept the money because a panel recommending changes told it to cover the costs of the upcoming changes. But the cost of those upcoming changes – that is, those based on the legislation – is $94 million.

Hang on a second. Let's do the math here. The WCB withheld $350 million, which is normally returned to business, due to an upcoming $94 million cost. Mr. Speaker, that math just doesn't make sense to me. Either it is going to cost a lot more than $94 million to implement the sweeping changes in Bill 30, or there is no reason for the WCB to keep that money, which, by the way, is over $250 million.

I mentioned that the WCB has a $10.5 billion reserve. That's coming into Alberta heritage trust fund territory, Mr. Speaker. That's a lot of money. But according to this NDP government businesses do not need this money. After all, the money only goes to paying employees, who have families, mortgages, and school fees to cover; the money only goes to programs that improve safety in the workplace; and the money only goes to pension plans and benefits for their employees. This practice isn't new. We've seen it before from the NDP, and we will certainly see it again. Bill 30 is just another continuation of the NDP's erosion of business here in Alberta.

My colleague from Calgary-Fish Creek has proposed a most sensible solution to the problem we face before us, Mr. Speaker. First, let me reiterate the problem. This bill makes comprehensive changes to two very large and very different acts. The Member for Calgary-Fish Creek has proposed sending Bill 30 to committee, so let's review the positive aspects of that motion.

The committee can invite stakeholders to present and, of course, ask them questions. They can do so over time to ensure that everyone has time to prepare and that the committee members have time to think about their questions. But the NDP wants to ram Bill 30 through this House in mere days. The Legislature is supposed to rise at the end of the week, possibly, and there are numerous other bills to review during these last few days. We have not had a lot of time or the opportunity to discuss proposed changes with stakeholders. Versus four days, pretty much three days are left now and now no opportunity to consult with stakeholders, let alone have discussions with them as a group of legislators – and we have legislation that can wait.

As the minister so enjoys pointing out, the OH and S Act came out when Wayne Gretzky was a rookie and when cellphones did not exist. Syncrude had opened its mine. Minister, what is the rush? As for the WCB, the minister kindly pointed out that the last comprehensive review of the act occurred 15 years ago. Once again, is there a need to rush and force it through in days? I think not, Mr. Speaker.

I was involved in the debates on the two marijuana bills this fall. I'm going to give the government credit for separating out impaired driving and distribution as it relates to marijuana. It could have combined the two bills into one like Bill 30, but it chose to portion them out, and that's a good thing. We had good, focused debates in the House on Bill 26 and Bill 29. Will we be able to do that on Bill 30? I don't know. I suggest to you that this government does not want to do that.

The next question is: why? Is there an ulterior motive? Are they trying to hide something? I don't know, Mr. Speaker. When an omnibus bill is brought forward just as session is waning and is then forced through, Albertans have to ask: why? Businesses certainly are, and so is the Official Opposition.

With any luck, albeit small, this government will listen to the reasoned argument that we are presenting to send Bill 30 to committee. Now, Mr. Speaker, I will not hold my breath for it to accept this common-sense course, but I can certainly hope.

Thank you, sir.

The Speaker: Are there any questions or comments under 29(2)(a) to the Member for Calgary-West? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

8:50

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker – or Mr. Speaker. Sorry, Mr. Speaker. It's getting late.

I was actually very interested in what my colleague had to say, and to reinforce something that my colleague had touched on, I thought I would use the Minister of Labour's own words here.

Every Albertan should be able to go to work and come home healthy and safe at the end of the workday. When they don't, they deserve to have access to the medical and financial supports they need to get healthy, care for their families and return to work. This bill would better protect hardworking Albertans and provide fair compensation to Albertans injured on the job.

This is from a press release titled Bill Would Improve Safety, Well-being of Albertans.

I have a hard time connecting how we're seeing such very eloquent language being put forward by the minister – she's saying: what they need in the right time and right place. The government likes to use that quote all the time.

An Hon. Member: The right place at the right time.

Mr. Cyr: The right place at the right time. Apparently, I misquoted that.

But what we're hearing here is very different from what we are seeing by the government not allowing us to sit through a committee and discuss this with the people that it's going to be affecting.

We have a very clear – a very clear – mandate from Albertans, I believe, that they all want to get home safely to their families. I can't imagine anybody that wants to go to work, come home, and get hurt on the job site. I can't imagine anybody that would hope that if they did get injured on the job site, they would not be taken care of by their WCB coverage. The fact that we've spent nine weeks, nine whole weeks, of consultation on such an important topic – that's 63 days.

As I mentioned in one of my last speeches, the Minister of Labour spent a whole 60 days of consultation on the last WCB and OH and S rules that she put through the House. Sixty whole days of consultation. [interjection] She's telling me I'm wrong, and she can correct me if I'm wrong. I apologize if that is – I'm not meaning to put in words. But I am saying that in this case we do have nine weeks, nine whole weeks, 45 business days. This is something that is unfortunate.

If we're taking this seriously, then the answer is a committee. This is exactly what my colleague was talking about, that we need to bring this to a committee. If we can't show Albertans the respect they deserve by allowing a committee to flesh out all of the issues at hand – and I don't believe that nine weeks and an online survey, a whole 90 written submissions, eight in-person, facilitated round-table discussions are enough to be able to draft such an intricate piece of legislation.

If we're looking at this piece of legislation . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I'm very patiently waiting for the question.

Mr. Cyr: This is a comment, Mr. Speaker, but with, I guess, my respect for you, sir, I will ask my colleague: do you feel that 1,300 online survey responses, nearly 90 written submissions, eight in-person, facilitated round-table discussions involving 200 stakeholders, only 200 stakeholders, are enough to get a reasonable answer and to be able to call this consultation? Do you believe that the government has done its due diligence in its requirement to go out and consult with Albertans? To the member: do you think that the consultation has been adequately done?

The Speaker: Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you very much, and thank you to my hon. colleague for asking that question. You know, I think that it's always good to do more consultation.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today in support of my colleague's motion to refer Bill 30 to committee for further work and scrutiny. As the members of this House know, Bill 30 represents the most significant changes to Alberta's occupational health and safety legislation as well as to that governing workers' compensation in decades. There is no doubt that from time to time we should review critical legislation areas like this to find if there are any existing deficiencies, to seek solutions to any that may exist, and to remedy them through the legislative process. This, however, is not what the government has chosen to do at this time. How do we know this? The first clue is that these sweeping changes had a review and consultation period of just over eight weeks, eight weeks for some of the largest changes to Alberta labour law in a generation.

Mr. Gill: How many?

Mr. Yao: Eight weeks.

There are nearly 170,000 businesses in Alberta, and there are close to 2.3 million Albertans in work. Well, there were until the government came in. Surely, the government could have spent more than a few weeks to speak with those who would be affected by these changes and gain their input. If I might go off script here, Mr. Speaker, the government side is really terrible at consultation. They set the bar so low that a mouse from Mouseville couldn't even creep under there.

Where they did show some good consultation was on the daylight savings bill. The daylight savings bill is where they showed good consultation. [interjections] They did. They spent time, they threw it to committee, and they asked and reviewed with so many groups.

That was an excellent demonstration of review of a bill. They came to a very good conclusion, that this has to be a co-ordinated effort with the rest of the provinces of our fine nation, and they put it aside. But it demonstrated that they could consult if they wanted to. They showed some glimmer of hope there.

We know that for some reason they want to rush this legislation through this session, and for others they insist that these changes cannot wait. But it is important to recognize the importance of the legislative process, that is integral to our parliamentary democracy. While we, of course, recognize that this government enjoys the support of the majority of members and that it has the right to pursue its agenda, it does not remove the importance of legislative scrutiny, it does not remove the importance of the opposition to demand better, and it does not relieve the responsibility of the government to consult with those who will be affected regardless of whether or not they agree with a particular ideological agenda.

Since we do not have an upper House in this province, which I wouldn't want anyway, it does place a greater duty on us as Members of this Legislative Assembly to exercise a degree of sober second thought. [interjections] No, no. Let me be clear there, Mr. Speaker. I in no way want a Senate here. I'm glad that our provinces got rid of such a level of bureaucracy.

My friend from Calgary-Fish Creek has put forward this motion for referral. I would ask this House to consider supporting it because it is part of the job that our constituents have entrusted us to do. Mr. Speaker, beyond our duty to the legislative process, from a practical perspective we also need the time to go through this massive omnibus bill and seek further improvements on its content. In the relatively brief period of time since this bill was introduced, my colleagues and I have identified several sections that are in need of improvement and second thought. We have also heard from stakeholders who have legitimate concerns with parts of this bill, concerns that should be heard and remedied in committee before moving forward.

We all want to see improvements to the WCB, and we all want to ensure that occupational health and safety legislation is adequate to protect Alberta workers, but as these are such crucial areas, it is imperative to make sure that we get it right. One area where I believe there should be particular concern is the fiscal sustainability of the Workers' Compensation Board. In this bill the government has stated that they want to support a sustainable workers' compensation system for the benefit of workers and employers. It seems that if this is their goal, they would have sought an independent and in-depth analysis on the potential costs of the changes they are proposing to WCB.

Mr. Speaker, this government has started to speak a rhetoric that they're going to start balancing the books and provide more fiscal sanity to our fine province, but they aren't demonstrating it here. Their numbers state that the annual cost of implementing these changes will be roughly $93 million. My question is: why haven't they engaged that independent analysis to look into this estimate? Either they are confident that this number is accurate and that doing so would simply be ensuring due diligence, or they harbour a notion that the actual costs will be significantly higher and do not wish to have it confirmed.

If this bill were to be passed and the costs of these measures did spiral out of control, these circumstances would threaten the fiscal sustainability of the program that the government itself purports to be concerned about. Frankly, this government's existing record on fiscal sustainability and prudence is reason enough to make sure that there is an independent and in-depth analysis done. We cannot let this be yet another case where Alberta taxpayers and future generations are left to clean up the fiscal mess created by the ideological tunnel vision of this government.

Also, in the matter of changes to WCB it is worth while to look at the proposed changes to the maximum insurable earnings. The change would take the current cap of $98,700 and eliminate it entirely. This seems to be an extreme change, one that has the potential to be very costly. If we were to refer this bill to committee, it would provide an opportunity to look at raising this cap to a fair and equitable level and potentially incorporate provisions for an indexed increase. This would allow us to ensure that there is a stable and predictable model for the future that benefits workers, employers, and taxpayers.

Mr. Speaker, we owe it to the workers of Alberta to be exceptionally deliberate and make sure that we get this legislation right. It should always be policy to try and anticipate the potential problems with new legislation and to avoid unintended consequences. It is better to take a little more time to iron out the wrinkles than to encounter problems down the road and have to fix them after the fact. Surely that is a strategy that can be embraced by all regardless of ideology or partisan politics.

I'd also like to address the new rules and responsibilities that are being given to the Labour Relations Board. The transfer of occupational health and safety related appeals to the Labour Relations Board and expansion of its authority are major changes, which do need to be examined closely. What prompted the dissolution of the current Occupational Health and Safety Council, which is made up of neutral legal and workplace safety experts, and why is the Labour Relations Board better suited to handle appeals?

The new legal authority granted to the Labour Relations Board in regard to enforcing orders from the Court of Queen's Bench should be addressed as well. Why is this new power needed? Have there been problems in the past that would justify its inclusion?

While this bill dissolves the existing OH and S Council, it creates a new OH and S advisory council, which exists only to advise the minister on related issues. If the current council was not needed, then why is there a need to create a new one? I'd love to understand some more clarity around this particular issue, totally taking apart one council and rebuilding it only for the minister.

These are all questions that need to be answered, and the best way to do that is by referring this bill to committee, sir. If a change is justified, then there should be no problem with greater scrutiny. As I expressed before, they demonstrated the ability to do some consulting with the daylight savings bill, and if they were to repeat that, they would certainly provide me with some encouragement that they're doing this in a fair manner.

Now, Mr. Speaker, another potential problem I see with the provisions related to discrimination in the workplace: it goes without saying that workers should be free from discrimination in the work environment, but what concerns me is the process created by this bill. As it stands, the new provisions on discrimination create for employers a presumption of guilt unless proven otherwise. This is in clear conflict with the fundamental principle of justice as it exists in our country. It is likely that if ever examined by a court, it would be found constitutionally invalid.

If we want to combat discrimination in the workplace, we need to make sure that the legislative provisions will stand up to legal scrutiny and that they are fair and just for everybody. Once more, if this bill is given the opportunity to go to the committee, it will give a chance to sort out the issues like this, where there are glaring errors. They may get in the way of the good intentions of this legislation.

It may be apparent to some that the idea of unintended consequences is a common theme raised by myself and some of my colleagues. Now, part of this is because the government has proved to us in the past that their method of legislating does produce its fair share of problems, ones that they do not foresee. That is also one of the reasons that we must be so insistent in our suggestion to get this bill to committee. Even if this government didn't have this reputation, it would still be a critical step to pursue. The consultation piece is so important. There are so many employers, so many employees.

There's so much that can be corrected here. This is such an opportune time to really get this legislation right because even when the legislation is well intended and even when it does things that we know can be practically good ideas, the overarching results can still differ from what we expect. One example where this may be would be, well, pretty much all the legislation the government puts through.

But one example may be the new standards on incident reporting. These new standards broadly expand what incidents need to be reported under law, including things like near misses and precautionary hospitalization. While one can certainly see how more information could be a good thing to help keep track of workplace health and safety, there is a possibility of some significant unintended consequences. Think of an example where it appears that an employee is all right after a workplace incident, but an employer sends him to the hospital to get checked out, just in case. The employee in many cases may be fine or may need only minor care, but in other cases this precautionary measure may turn out to identify something critically important. Under this new regime a report would need to be filed even if the worker turns out to be fine. This record could reflect poorly on an employer who is simply exercising caution. Ultimately, this could disincentivize employers from taking this kind of precautionary measure, which is the exact opposite of what we want to happen if we are seeking to better workplace health and safety.

It's also worth mentioning the vast amount of additional administrative work that these new reporting measures would create. This kind of work could not only inflate costs for business, but it could also mean that time that would otherwise be spent on other workplace safety incident measures is spent documenting innocuous incidents.

I can speak to this, sir. In my previous life we filled out a whole bunch of WCB forms and HIAs and everything else, and it was cumbersome. The paperwork was extremely thorough, almost too much, and there was a lot of repetition in that paperwork. I can tell you from members on the floor that had to fill that stuff out that they even became very frustrated with it. It was very much a demonstration of bureaucracy.

Were this bill given the opportunity to be examined in committee, potential issues like this could be given further thought. The committee could highlight potential problems and tweak the legislation to proactively solve matters that may arise.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to close with a couple of last thoughts. First, I just wish to reiterate the importance of further consultation. It is so important to understand so many perspectives, and this government is in that position, where you can put all your resources to it, whether it be your public media, social media, official requests from so many groups, so many business groups. You can definitely talk to the unions, which I'm sure you have, but there are so many more. You can talk to workers in independent locations as well. There are many people to consult.

With this bill being introduced so close to the end of session and with the relatively short period of time the government took to consult on such a large and wide-reaching piece of legislation, I would urge all members to consider that we owe it to Albertans to spend a little bit more time listening to them. The people of this province are the ones who sent us here, and ultimately we need to remember that while we are here to represent them, they are the ones who are in charge.

Secondly, I would just reiterate the importance of legislative scrutiny.

9:10

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Strankman: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. It's interesting subject matter here tonight. The member touched briefly on his past work experience with the EMT and the paperwork burden that they were faced with. I was wondering if you could expound on that and how that might relate to the need for greater discussion on the bill and changes to that.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, in my previous life working for the Fort McMurray fire department, we took safety very seriously. Obviously, that is our job, that is the profession, safety all around. We reported everything. I was a supervisor. I was a senior man. I always insisted that my guys write the paperwork out, even if they had their BA off and walked by a house that was on fire. They were very aggravated when I was telling them to fill out paperwork after they just walked by that without their BA on – that's breathing apparatus – to ensure that they don't inhale that smoke. You know, a bunch of tough guys: they don't need the BA when they're just doing some outdoor duty. Unfortunately, it would lead to paperwork like this because what they didn't understand was that sometimes these things are how they get the firefighter cancers and stuff like that. So I did insist that they fill out things like the OH and S, WCB forms, the hazardous incident accident forms.

That's the thing, that we had repetition of forms. Many of them were asking for the same thing. We needed them for the municipal level. We needed them for the provincial level. We needed them for the firefighters' union. Sometimes, depending on what they got exposed to, maybe there had to be some federal reporting. It was an ongoing battle to get these guys to fill out these forms, quite honestly, because in the end they just saw that there was a lot of unnecessary information that was being asked for or redundant information, a lot of repetition. It was a task. It was a battle.

We did emphasize safety, but we recognized that there's a lot of bureaucracy behind it and couldn't help but notice that there weren't some ways to influence WCB to streamline and clean up their forms to ensure that there was a certain level of efficiency while still getting all the information. This would have been a beautiful time to do that, to clean up those forms.

You know, there are aspects to this legislation, Mr. Speaker, that I do find interesting as well, I might add. The right to refuse hazardous work: in California, if my memory recalls correctly, they were going on a big push for safety officers in the fire department because they felt that the safety training that they ingrained in us wasn't enough. These safety officers were given a very high level of authority. If I recall, it took one major disaster in California where basically it was a building on fire, from my understanding, a warehouse, and the firefighters had the opportunity to go in and stop this fire very easily and very efficiently. Because there's this new safety chief, he shut the incident down because it was too hazardous, and it blew the mind of every fire chief and every firefighter who was on that incident.

I can say honestly that shortly after that incident they actually stopped putting those safety guys in those positions. They took away their authority, and they made them subofficers. They recognized that firefighters and other emergency service workers, for that matter, will be exposed to certain conditions that are threats. Those are the things that we expect and we anticipate when we go in because our job is to get people out of those situations. That said, we are gifted with the equipment and the training and the resources to do that safely.

But I fear the day when there is some bureaucrat that comes in and tells them that that is too dangerous a situation, not trusting the experience and the training of those fire officials, because they do not haphazardly throw people into a building that is burning or collapsing for any reason. They understand how to identify if a building is safe to go in and if it's feasible to try to find people in there, the search and rescue aspects, things like that. That is the job. That is the training that we do. I'm curious about that aspect.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon. Sorry. Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Good leg exercise, Mr. Speaker. I'm certainly happy to have that. It's better than exercising the backside. Sometimes the brain will only absorb what the backside will endure.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in favour of the referral proposed by the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek to Bill 30, An Act to Protect the Health and Well-being of Working Albertans. This bill makes broad changes to both the OH and S Act and the Workers' Compensation Act. We're here again late into the session, and the government is dropping a major piece of legislation on us with something around a week to go, some would say, and I could say that I'm surprised. It's unusual but not necessarily totally irregular, I guess I would say.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to speak even though we're in a process of the democratic process. The Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster honourably recognized other members from his profession that are in the gallery tonight, and I'd like to speak to them if I could. We're talking about OH and S regulations and the potentiality of legislation. The Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo talked about various forms of safety going forward.

To the members in the gallery. They may or may not know of three locations where veterinary services are being performed on similar large mammals known as bovines, cows: in the town of Oyen, in the town of Consort, and in the town of Provost. All three of those communities have veterinary services that I've partaken of through my farming career, and all three have very similar but dissimilar ways of dealing with a dangerously large bovine animal in what they perceive to be a safe fashion. Each has their own protocol for OH and S, but they process the animals and allow them to proceed through their facilities in a different fashion.

Mr. Speaker, that's part of the reason I'm standing up tonight to speak to this legislation. These three facilities: they're all honourable, honest professions serving very large, gigantic, actually, cattle operations where the owners of those practices actually go out to do on-farm visits, where they process hundreds if not maybe even thousands of cattle. They do it in different fashions but all generally in a safe fashion, in quite possibly an OH and S approved fashion.

The regulations that are created are broad and varying in many cases, and they're not necessarily created in this Chamber. Those are the common-sense kinds of regulations that we're talking about here, ladies and gentlemen in the gallery, to bring this stuff forward so that you as Albertans and your client base, the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association members, can work in a safe fashion. That's the surgery, if you will, that's going on here tonight. We talked about that earlier, and the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster – now it's known as Vermilion-Lloydminster-Wainwright or will be after the legislation is passed – was talking about his venture off into the jugular surgery there.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that it's important – and I'm alluding to members like those in the gallery – that stakeholders are given the proper time to be consulted, and it's a pleasure that they are here tonight to witness some of the goings-on. This is only one facet of businesses across the prairies and in the rural area at least, but there are whole other facets of labour, et cetera, et cetera, that we need to be able to allow to have input into the changes in this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the train has passed about the legislation, but I'm here to stand up and make sure that my voice is heard for people like my constituency and the businesses that are involved there in that we ask for a referral to move this legislation to a committee. I think it's important. We are assured by government that this bill will fix a broken system.

I was here in the Chamber, Mr. Speaker, when our current Premier, while in opposition, railed at length and repeatedly about the WCB's constant failure to help hard-working Albertans. I remember that extending into the wee hours of the day following, and the current Premier, then an opposition member, took great relish in doing that. I think that's part of the democratic process. Even though to the people in the gallery this form of surgery may be quite awkward, this is what we do in this place. The then opposition member, now the Premier, vilified the system, saying that this system needed to be fixed. I don't know if it'll be fixed by this piece of legislation, but if we would send it to committee, we'd have a full, open, and accountable method of digesting all the information going forward, a 200-page document that I doubt the average employer will even have time to read through this holiday season, let alone ensure that they are one hundred per cent compliant by the time significant portions of this bill come into force in the new year.

As I hinted at earlier, this omnibus bill smokes of – yeah, we're talking about that, too – smacks of the government's Bill 17, the Fair and Family-friendly Workplaces Act. I retraced myself back to places of business like the Oyen veterinary clinic, where the owner is actually Dr. Ruschkowski. She in her younger years used to have her family members running around the facility there. It was kind of like old home week when you went there.

The fix was in on that piece of legislation, as borne out by FOIP documents – to the people in the gallery, FOIP stands for freedom of information and protection of privacy; some use open slang letters, and they're not fit for this place – on the outcome of the workplace laws despite assurances of fulsome consultation with those affected.

My colleague from Little Bow has already talked about how we have heard from the Alberta Chambers of Commerce and how much their member groups were concerned about the act. They also recommended that this bill get much more input and study in committee. I imagine that over the next while more individual stakeholder groups will also chime in, but with the unlikelihood of the government taking pause on this bill, those groups may not get their chance to be heard until well after the fact.

Mr. Speaker, that's why I believe that it's incumbent upon us to vote favourably for this referral and take the time to continue to consult and to hear concerns from stakeholders. After all, these businesses are the backbone of Alberta. While the much-maligned energy sector is the economic engine that drives this province, these small and medium-sized businesses help employ thousands of Albertans as well. As numerous members have already pointed out, these businesses don't have an army of lawyers in-house or on retainer to delve into the complexities of these significant changes.

Did I mention that this is almost a 200-page piece of legislation and facts? If this is having Albertans' backs, then I shudder to think how they would feel if this government actually wished them ill will.

Mr. Speaker, this bill needs to go to committee for another, longer look and continued feedback. It is never the wrong tack to ensure that a piece of legislation that makes so many changes to how businesses must operate in order to comply – surely, a little more care can be taken. We simply don't know how these sweeping changes are going to change the economic reality that these businesses face, and we're hearing about that on a daily basis. As I happened to be returning to the constituency, at the gas bar in Hardisty a gentleman pulled in there and bought some gas and such and such. He said to the gas station attendant: with tax on tax on tax, I'm hoping I can make eight bucks today. I thought, "That's kind of an interesting comment," unprovoked, just a sidebar conversation.

After all, this government has once again failed to do a proper independent economic impact study. And for the people in the gallery, economic impact studies are something that many businesses do.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I encourage you to speak through the chair and not to the madding crowd.

Mr. Strankman: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to include you and the citizens of Alberta. It's important.

They claim to have estimated the additional costs for the WCB to implement these changes at about $94 million. However, this is hard to believe, given the broad changes proposed. While I can acknowledge that this bill contains some positive pieces, the concern is that these costly changes to the Workers' Compensation Act will at some point make the system unsustainable, Mr. Speaker. We're putting another burden on an already hurting business environment, which is certainly not in the best interests of workers or employers in the province of Alberta, people like the guests we have tonight in the Chamber.

I will briefly highlight some of the proposed changes to an already fragile economic climate. The cap on maximum insurable earnings through the WCB will be removed. Workers earning more than the cap will now be fully compensated for 90 per cent of their earnings. WCB claims will now include a $90,000 fatality benefit. Stop-work orders may be issued on multiple work sites of an employer. Some businesses have multiple work sites, Mr. Speaker, and they're spread in various places throughout the constituency.

My biggest concern, Mr. Speaker, is how this affects small business, and I can't reiterate that enough. Still speaking through you but to Albertans and to the guests we have, there is very little time to adjust to their new responsibilities, very little time to fine-tune and become educated as to how to ensure they will become compliant with these new realities.

Mr. Speaker, I did in my preamble talk about small businesses, three of which I have in my constituency – there are more but three that I remember – and which, specifically, process bovines in simple, simplistic ways, but they all have safe methods of doing it. There are some that are self-driven, innovative changes that these facilities have created.

Mr. Speaker, I know that you were recently out and visited the devastation in the communities of Acadia Valley and Hilda as a result of fire, and in one location you were well aware of the deaths of cattle by the fire. But right beside where the cattle were kept was a facility to safely load the animals, and that was all done by the farmer from the area.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I encourage you to speak to the amendment.

Mr. Strankman: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker.

I'm asking: how are these changes going to affect Albertans' ability to continue to operate in a profitable manner? Many of these businesses simply don't have the ability, be it the time or the knowledge, to quickly determine how these changes will impact them. Some of this has been going on for hundreds of years in a safe, effective manner.

This is why this referral is desperately needed to protect these businesses. Mr. Speaker, even the Alberta Chambers of Commerce estimated that the changes introduced by this legislation may result in at least a 10 per cent increase in the total WCB premiums collected from Alberta employers. Haven't this government's policies done enough damage? How do they measure that? They haven't done an economic impact assessment. I would hope that they don't wish to further burden these entrepreneurs with additional costs and administrative burdens that they simply haven't had time to absorb.

The remedy, Mr. Speaker, I believe, is simple. We need to take the time to do this right and send this legislation to committee. I remember presenting a private member's bill that went to the Labour minister's committee, and we still haven't seen that. Is that the fear that the government has, that if we go to committee, it won't be resurrected, that it'll never see the light of day? I think that's an unfair comment. I think we're here trying to do the democratic right thing. In committee we would continue to do due diligence and make sure that those who are impacted by this legislation are not unduly harmed.

I make my argument, Mr. Speaker, and I'd like to have everyone support this referral. I'd like to thank the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for his motion for referral.

The Speaker: Any questions for the Member for Drumheller-Stettler? Bonnyville-Cold Lake under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, my colleague had brought up some good points about consultation. It appears from the press release that the government has consulted at least two people, at least two here. I'm going to go back to the press release, and I'm going to ask his opinion on the level of consultation that the government has done with these two individuals. The press release is Bill Would Improve Safety, Well-being of Albertans. I'd like to read the quotes here.

The proposed changes to the occupational health and safety . . . are generally in line with the oil and gas industry's best practices. Our objective as a safety association is to develop and support standards and best practices across the oil and gas industry and we see these changes as a positive step forward in advancing worker health and safety in Alberta.

This is from John Rhind, CEO of Energy Safety Canada.

The next quote is:

Even one tragedy – one fatality, one life-altering injury, one occupational disease – is too many. Threads of Life is dedicated to a world where these tragedies become morally, socially and economically unacceptable, so that all workers return home safe and healthy to their families. We support Alberta's steps to . . . move us as Canadians closer to that vision.

This is from Shirley Hickman, the executive director of Threads of Life.

This press release came out on November 27, 2017. Specifically, it was e-mailed out. This was actually what hit my constituency account at 3:30 p.m. on that Monday. This also coincides with the time that this bill was first introduced in the House, just before 3 o'clock. So we literally have half an hour between the government putting this bill down for its first reading – it's this thick, like, 200 pages long. Does the Member for Drumheller-Stettler believe that these individuals had been thoroughly consulted to the point where they could give these quotes saying that this is an incredible piece of legislation? That is my question. Does he think that half an hour is enough time to make this determination?

Mr. Strankman: Hopefully, I can respond in less than half an hour to that. I think the response that the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake got was a reaction to an onerous piece of legislation, and that's why they're requesting, in my mind at least, that we would want to go forward with a process like our referral – and I would openly and irrefutably apologize to you, Mr. Speaker, for addressing members in our gallery here – because they have varied and different ways of working with the same processes. I mean, it's important that there are variables. Just like the member from Fort McMurray, who every time they approached a fire or whatever – it's not a cookie-cutter situation that they're involved in. There needs to be broad and consultative discussion to bring this forward.

We've seen this multiple times, that the government is in a hurry to process things and sometimes due diligence isn't done. That's all we're here for, to reinforce the request for action of due diligence and sending this to a committee.

The Speaker: Any comments or questions under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing and hearing none, any members who wish to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak to the referral amendment for Bill 30 in second reading. A referral amendment is a device that we use in this Legislature to try and help create better legislation. It would be my firm conviction and my belief that every one of the legislators in this Legislature would desire to create a better piece of legislation. By referring to committee, we have the capacity to try and strengthen a piece of legislation by incurring some very robust discussion at the committee level. We have the capacity to call in different stakeholders and for members of the committee to be able to share different perspectives on the bill, to dig into the bill, and in a bill that is 147 pages long, there is indeed a great deal of material here that we could be digging into.

We want to ensure – and as an opposition it's a part of our job – that whatever legislation is passed in this House is good legislation. It's important to get the feedback of stakeholders. It's important to have the committee look at nonpartisan feedback and to create a balanced understanding of the piece of legislation under discussion and to be able to get that second body of sober thought, so to speak, through the committee process. There is no perfect bill – there rarely is – especially one that has as many parts as this. You know, when we take a look at a bill that has as much detail as this does, it's important for us to try and fix the flaws that have been identified by stakeholders, by the opposition, by Albertans in general. And when it's dealing with employer-employee relationships, it's time to maybe take some opportunity to reflect and to listen and to try and figure out how any of the internal flaws that may be in this bill could be corrected.

Mr. Speaker, debating legislation in this House is supposed to be done in a manner that allows all members to contribute fully to the discussion and to improve whatever the bill that is before us has within it. You know, I guess one of the concerns that's been brought up – and I think it's a legitimate concern – is that this bill, an extremely lengthy piece of legislation, has been brought to this Legislature so late in the legislative session. This bill, I'm going to assume, took many, many months to produce and to bring forward. I'm sure there was a significant amount of work that was placed into this bill, and it would seem reasonable that the elected representatives of this province, the legislators of this province, would have the capacity to spend more than just a few hours looking at this bill, proposing amendments, looking to try and make this legislation better.

It begs the question: why not bring this legislation to this body much earlier? Why not in October or November, when we could have started to give more time to be able to pick this bill apart and to really give it the due diligence and the justice that it needs, Mr. Speaker? I would remind all of the members that this was supposed to be, this was scheduled to be the last week of the sitting of the House. To place this bill at this point in time, in what is supposed to be the last week of the House, I believe, does a disservice not only to Albertans and not only to this Legislature but also to the bill itself.

Now, this bill, in all of its complexity, introduces some pretty sweeping changes to both the workers' compensation and the occupational health and safety systems in Alberta. I believe that there are 147 pages in this bill. You know, when we take a look at this, it's going to take some time to go through this bill and take a look at the really incredible impact that it's going to have on our workers' compensation system and our occupational health and safety systems in Alberta. Mr. Speaker, these changes are going to impact virtually every single business across Alberta, and the impact is going to be far reaching. Therefore, any changes that we're going to make need to be extensively considered, very carefully considered before they are introduced.

You know, I'm going to speak a little later in my speech here about a constituent that came to me on Friday. I spent a significant amount of time on Friday afternoon with this gentleman. He was so upset that I had to come and meet him again on Sunday afternoon. This is the book that he gave me. It's the Occupational Health and Safety Act, Regulations, and Code Handbook. This is the book that he had, and you can see some of the places where he's identified areas of concern in it.

One of the things that really surprised me was the intensity of his concern. I can see him now in my mind's eye, Mr. Speaker. This book is sitting on the table between us, and he's pounding it with his hand, and he's calling this the Bible. We understand, I think, the analogy that he's trying to make here in that it's a very important piece of legislation. In his mind, outside of a few things in this Occupational Health and Safety Act, Regulations, and Code Handbook, outside of a couple of changes that he would make, he said that this is an amazing document, one that should not be tinkered with, one that should not be casually set aside for the piece of legislation that has been brought before us. Now, I would suggest that any member in this House would not and should not be opposed to taking the time to thoroughly study this piece of legislation, especially when we can see that for many of our constituents this is considered to be a very, very important document.

Now, we are here, at least in theory, I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, to put forward the best possible legislation, and I would suggest that taking this to committee is going to help forward that progress to make sure that we will get the best possible legislation. We owe it to Albertans, we owe it to Alberta employers, and we owe it to the employees that are in this province to make sure that we get the best possible legislation we can.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

Now, as I said, I met with a concerned constituent in my town. His job is to work in the oil industry as a part of safety. When we were talking, Madam Speaker – all of a sudden you’ve gone from a Mr. Speaker to a Madam Speaker; that’s quite a feat – one of the things that this constituent brought to my attention was a concern that he had with regard to section 31(1) of Bill 30. It reads:

A worker may refuse to work or to do particular work at a work site if the worker believes on reasonable grounds that there is a dangerous condition at the work site or that the work constitutes a danger to the worker’s health and safety or to the health and safety of another worker or another person.

Well, his concern is that this piece of legislation, Bill 30, is actually less protective than what is already in the Occupational Health and Safety Act, regulations, and code. If we go to section 35, on the existence of imminent danger, it reads:

- (1) No worker shall
 - (a) carry out any work if, on reasonable and probable grounds, the worker believes that there exists an imminent danger to the health or safety of that worker.

His point, to me, was that there’s a significant difference in the language when we use the word “shall” or “may,” that when you use the word “shall,” it is an obligation. You must perform this. You must as a worker. “No worker shall carry out any work” versus “a worker may refuse.” “May” gives the worker some latitude, an option. They can choose to or they can choose not to. He was quite concerned that this bill is actually an inferior piece of legislation when it comes to protecting workers.

I would suggest that perhaps it would be good for us to go to committee, where we could take a look at and could compare these and where we could see if this individual, who is far more educated on this piece of legislation than I am right now, could come to the committee and could give his expertise to us as legislators, and at the end of the day we would have a far better opportunity to put forward positive legislative work coming out of this bill.

Madam Speaker, my constituent also pointed out some other interesting pieces in this bill. For one, he pointed out that there is a potential that if an employee did not want to do a particular task, they could simply say that the work is dangerous. Now, I think that that might be something that we need to take to a committee to see if there’s any validity in that. He believed that in this bill no other employee can perform that work until after a full assessment has been done to see if indeed that’s dangerous and that this leaves the system open to abuse, where an employee may just not want to perform the task and therefore say that it is too dangerous.

Madam Speaker, I would suggest that by the way the government here is mumbling and grumbling, perhaps we need to take this to committee. Obviously, they believe that this might not be a scenario that is worthy of discussion, yet this man, who, I would argue, probably knows a whole lot more about the Occupational Health and Safety Act than I do or probably even some of the members on the government side, could come and give us his interpretation of why he believes that’s a reasonable position to take. I, for one, would like to be able to hear him go further down this path to see if it is indeed a reasonable point, and I would argue that it probably is a very reasonable point.

I would suggest that taking this to a review by the committee could at least allow us the capacity to ensure that whatever legislation we are passing, it’s weighted equally so that all parties can thrive and so that all parties have the capacity to ensure that there is safety in the workplace.

You know, strengthening legislation is one of the key reasons that we’re here as an opposition. We are here to help the government and to make sure that they provide the best legislation for Albertans, and strengthening the legislation should be one of the key objectives, I would argue, for debate in this House. It’s one of the reasons why we go through all of this effort, why the government has gone through the effort of putting together this piece of legislation, why we have studied it, why we have come up with suggestions for how we can make it better, so when we . . .

9:50

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Cyr: I was very riveted by my colleague’s enactment of how his constituent was very passionate on OH and S standards, and I would love to hear some more on what his constituent had to say to him about OH and S guidelines.

The Acting Speaker: Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, as we were saying, debate within a committee setting allows for perhaps a more robust discussion than what we can sometimes have in this Chamber. We all come to this Chamber and to committees with different points of view, with different backgrounds, different experiences. It’s one of the joys, I would suggest and I would argue, of being in this Legislature and being on the various committees that we all sit on.

You know, I had the opportunity to travel down in California for a while last winter, and I got into a conversation with a lady. Believe it or not, Madam Speaker, you do a lot of things for love in this world, and one of the things that I do for love in this world with my wife is that I sometimes have to go to knitting stores with her. There are a lot of places I would like to be, but knitting stores are not necessarily one of them, okay?

So here I am sitting in this knitting store, and I am striking up a conversation with a couple of ladies who are busily knitting away and talking about the finer points of how to do this stitch or that stitch. They said, “What is it that you do?” I said, you know, “I’m a Member of the Legislative Assembly.” Well, most Californians don’t really understand what a Legislative Assembly is, and they’re really not too sure about the finer points of the parliamentary system of government, but they got talking about their frustration with the system of government in the United States. One of the things that they said, Madam Speaker, was that in the last race for governorship in California the loser of that election spent $65 million, and they were quite shocked.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, I know we’re under 29(2)(a) and that it’s comments or questions, but you usually need to speak to the referral, so if we could get there, please.

Mr. Smith: We are getting to the referral, Madam Speaker. My story is riveting.

So here we are. We’re sitting in this knitting store, and we’re listening to these ladies, and they were really shocked when I told them, you know, that I raised a grand total of $29,000 to run in the last election and that I spent $22,000. They couldn’t believe how little we spent here.

But one of the points that I made out of that whole thing was this. One of the results of that was that anyone in this fair province of ours, this great province of ours, can probably afford to run for election. It means that the people that get elected into this Legislature often come from a wide range of diverse points of view and businesses. You don't have to simply be from the rich elite.

Mrs. Littlewood: Yeah, on this side.

Mr. Smith: Okay. Yeah, well, on this side as well. Trust me on this one: I bet you that if we looked at our bank accounts, mine would have less in it than yours does.

When we take a look at this diverse group of people that we have here, taking and referring this to committee allows us the capacity to bring that diversity in this province, through the Legislature and through the people that have been elected, to this piece of legislation. I would argue that it's a very healthy thing to bring this to committee.

Now, I am sure that we all love a good debate, and part of getting the extensive stakeholder feedback is that it allows the stakeholders to bring forth their opinions and to spur the debate about whether or not this bill is a fine piece of legislation or not. Madam Speaker, I would argue that we need to be willing to use the committee structure that we have built into our system to be able to allow effective and nonpartisan committee work to take place and to build the best legislation possible. We need to ensure that, at the end of the day, we've looked at things like the joint committee training program and protocol.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Just a reminder to all members of the House – I know we're getting a little bit late into the evening – that we are on a referral amendment. We are not on the bill as of right now. I would encourage all members to speak directly to the referral, not to the bill, please.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the referral? Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know what? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon is a hard act to follow, but I will try. You know, all we're saying on this side of the House is to refer this bill to the committee so that the committee can engage all the stakeholders, like we have seen with the daylight savings time bill, right? In that bill we had our airline industry, our NHL teams, all those different stakeholders that would have been impacted by changes to daylight savings time. They came, presented their cases, and the committee made a decision.

We look at the track record of this government. Carbon tax: no consultation, tax. Bill 6: no consultation. Right? I mean, we can talk about those things.

Mr. Nixon: Rural crime.

Mr. Gill: Rural crime: again, no consultation.

This is the opportunity right now. If this government really claims to be on the side of Albertans, there's nothing to hide. Let's engage the people whom you're trying to help, and let's hear from them. That's all we're trying to say. Let's hear from them. You're claiming to be helping them, but you don't want to listen to them. You don't want to give them the opportunity to tell us what would help them.

What is the intention behind it? What is the hidden agenda here?

An Hon. Member: Control.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Gill: Control. That's what I heard. I don't know.

With that, I ask all members to, you know, please consider this and send this bill to the committee.

I'd also like to move a motion that we adjourn debate on this bill, please. Thank you.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion to adjourn debate lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 9:58 p.m.]

[Fifteen minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

Bill 31

A Better Deal for Consumers and Businesses Act

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the members for the warm desk thumping. I'm pleased to rise and move Bill 31, A Better Deal for Consumers and Businesses Act, for second reading.

This bill is an important part of our government's commitment to make life better and more affordable for Albertans. Mr. Speaker, consumer spending plays a strong role in Alberta's economy. It makes up more than 4 per cent of Alberta's GDP. In fact, statistics show that so far in 2017 the retail trade sector grossed more than $53 billion. Given the significance of consumer spending to our economy, it is vital that consumers have confidence when dealing with businesses. This is especially important now that Alberta's economy is looking up and we are expected to lead the country in economic growth this year. Our government is taking action to help businesses attract and retain customers and grow the economy.

So far our government has made several practical changes that help protect consumers from unfair practices and businesses from unfair competition. We've put a stop to unsolicited door-to-door sales of energy-related contracts and products such as furnaces. We've stood up for vulnerable Albertans and put an end to predatory lending in our province by introducing Canada's lowest interest rate and the country's strongest protections for payday loan borrowers. We also undertook a comprehensive review of the Alberta Motor Vehicle Industry Council. Our government also introduced stronger protections for condo buyers. Because a home and a car are the two biggest investments any Albertan will make, we believe consumers and their assets deserve protections.

Mr. Speaker, my department is also hard at work investigating and taking enforcement actions against unscrupulous businesses and individuals. Scammers hurt consumers and businesses alike. Our enforcement actions help support a level playing field in the marketplace and minimize losses for consumers and honest businesses.

Mr. Speaker, the realities of the marketplace call for more action. The current consumer protection legislation was put in place in 2000 and has not been significantly updated since 2005, yet our marketplace continues to evolve. Advancements in technology led to and continue to cause unprecedented changes in consumer behaviour and in the way businesses operate. Additionally, the availability and volume of information, some of questionable validity, has put consumers at risk by challenging their ability to make well-informed decisions.

This government's ability to respond to marketplace issues is also challenged. A prime example is the difficulty of protecting consumers in the online world, whether it's enforcing our laws against online suppliers from other jurisdictions or protecting consumers who post online reviews from potential lawsuits designed to intimidate them. Mr. Speaker, we must ensure that our laws are relevant and enforceable so that consumers and businesses have confidence in Alberta's marketplace.

During our consultations over the summer months Albertans told us that they want to be protected when shopping or signing contracts, and businesses told us that they want to compete on a level playing field. That's exactly what Bill 31 will deliver. Bill 31 will bring in smart rules that support a trusted marketplace, a marketplace where consumers are confident to spend their money, and that's good for business.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 31 proposes to rename the Fair Trading Act to the consumer protection act. This will help us reaffirm our commitment to consumer protection and better communicate the intent of the act. Further, Bill 31 proposes a plain-language preamble to be added to the act. The preamble will help explain the intention and purpose of the act. The preamble could also be used by courts as necessary to interpret any provisions in the act that are potentially unclear.

Another proposed amendment is the introduction of a consumer bill of rights. This will help create awareness of consumer rights and responsibilities and support consumers in making informed purchasing decisions. Bill 31 also proposes improving consumer protections in priority areas as identified in the consultation with Albertans as well as business and consumer stakeholders. This includes new protections for consumers to help ensure a straightforward car-buying experience and to ensure that they get what they pay for when their vehicles are being serviced or repaired.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. He has done some excellent groundwork which laid the foundation for this part of Bill 31. We have taken what we learned – and we learned a lot – from Bill 203 and implemented the recommendations from the committee report by consulting with industry stakeholders.

We are also proposing new rules for online ticket sales to help ensure that Albertans have a fair shot at seeing their favourite performers, additional protections for borrowers of high-cost credit products to support a safer borrowing environment and encourage responsible use of financial products, transformation of the Alberta Motor Vehicle Industry Council into a statutory corporation subject to the Alberta Public Agencies Governance Act – this move will better protect the interests of consumers and ensure integrity in the automotive industry – and new protections for pet owners, which will enable Albertans to find the best veterinary services with full confidence that the prices will not contain any surprises.

With respect to these protections for pet owners I want to be very clear about what the proposed legislation does and does not include. First, the amendments to the Veterinary Profession Act will only allow vets to advertise their fees. This does not require vets to advertise their fees. Rather, they simply have the option to advertise if they so choose. Second, the amendments will only apply to domestic animals. It will not apply to livestock or any animal used for the production of food.

Bill 31 also proposes new provisions in the act to protect consumers from unfair lawsuits and other intimidating tactics, expand grounds for recourse when consumers suffer losses, and enable the government to act in the public interest and proactively release information about pursuing bad actors. These provisions mean that unilateral amendments to contracts will not be allowed. It goes without saying that consumers have a right to know all of the terms and conditions of their purchases or services that they pay for. This provision will help ensure that consumers are fully informed, and it will reduce the potential to take advantage of consumers. This change is intended to establish consent standards and to allow businesses and consumers greater flexibility when making decisions in relation to contract changes.

Next, mandatory arbitration clauses in contracts will not be allowed. Mr. Speaker, some businesses will impose a condition in contracts preventing consumers from using the courts for dispute resolution. As such, consumers are required to use a mandatory arbitration process, with the arbitrator chosen by the business. Consumers deserve better. That's why our proposal prohibits mandatory arbitration and allows consumers a choice in their dispute resolution avenue.

Clauses that prevent consumers from posting negative business reviews will also not be allowed in contracts. Additionally, consumers who file complaints in good faith or who issue a negative review will be afforded a new right of defence against lawsuits intended to have consumers withdraw those negative reviews.

Mr. Speaker, we know that the majority of Alberta businesses provide great products and services to their customers. Often online reviews come in handy in helping other customers find those reputable businesses. All consumers benefit from having the information that will help them make the very best decision on where to spend their money. That's why consumers should be able to openly review good or bad service. This is an essential part of a successful marketplace.

However, where bad service calls for a bad review or a complaint, consumers should not fear unwarranted retaliation from the business. Yet we've heard from Albertans that businesses sometimes use lawsuits as a method of intimidation for consumers who notify Service Alberta of alleged unfair business practices. This is why we're adding this level of protection, specifically for consumers who file complaints in good faith or post honest reviews as a way to help others make well-informed decisions.

We're also proposing that consumers have an expanded right to sue in instances of losses. This provision gives consumers options for recourse when they experience losses from business behaviour not constituting an unfair marketplace practice under the act. For example, a business may not disclose key terms on a gift card. Or, in another example, a business may not meet contract cancellation standards under the legislation. While these actions may result in consumer losses and are violations of our current laws, these actions in and of themselves are not considered unfair practices, and consumers do not currently have a legislative right of action against these types of violations even in instances of experiencing losses. Mr. Speaker, we want to fix this because Albertans deserve a government that looks out for their interests.

Finally, it is proposed to allow the minister or delegated authority to publicly release the information about charges and convictions with liability protection from releasing such information. The legislation does not currently allow us to release the information about businesses that have been charged or convicted of offences. This can result in consumers unknowingly entering into contracts with potentially unscrupulous businesses. Making this information publicly available will help consumers make well-informed decisions and minimize their risk of losses.

Mr. Speaker, as a whole, all of the amendments contained in Bill 31 are intended to build a trusted marketplace by strengthening consumer protections, enhancing business and consumer confidence, and reducing the risk of consumer losses. I am proud to move forward Bill 31 as a practical approach to balance consumer and business interests in the marketplace, expand protections in priority marketplace issues, and level the playing field between businesses. In the end, this will lead to a better deal between consumers and businesses, which will lead to increased consumer confidence. We all know that increased consumer confidence is good for our economy.

I am confident that Albertans will support this progress on improving our consumer protection laws. I look forward to debate on this bill, answering questions, and providing further explanation so that all members of this House have adequate information to support this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak on Bill 31, A Better Deal for Consumers and Businesses Act. It's important to begin at the beginning, and that's what I'm about to do now.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Service Alberta doesn't need legislation to legislate the ability to create a consumer bill of rights. If the minister and her government want to draft a consumer bill of rights, it's well within her ministerial power to do so. There is no need to include this legislation except as a way to distract from the less savoury things that they're putting forward here. Don't get me wrong. I have no problem with a consumer bill of rights, especially if one is written in plain language. What I have a problem with is the fact that the minister seems to need to create legislation for every aspect of her job.

But let's start actually talking about some of the consumer protection measures that the government is hoping to bring in, Mr. Speaker. Now, I don't know the last time you went online to purchase tickets for a concert or a game or some sort of entertainment, but I don't think that there's a person here who would deny that it can be extremely difficult to obtain any tickets these days. This bill purports to ensure that more customers and fans can actually get their hands on a set of tickets before they are otherwise snapped up. Additionally, the bill allows for consumers to seek reimbursement when they are the recipient of invalid tickets.

This is actually a decent idea, and I congratulate the government on seeking to correct this. However, despite the fact that the government says that legal action can be taken against individuals and companies using bots outside of Alberta, the reality is that it just isn't that simple. This language provides consumers with a false sense of security, which I thought was what this government was trying to protect against.

In December 2016 President Obama signed the Better Online Ticket Sales, or BOTS, Act, banning all use of bots in ticket sales. But there are still bots, and it won't be so simple to get one's money back. An article in the Economist states: "Federal law enforcement may be unable to hunt down bot-operators based outside America. And the scale of the racket is daunting. Last year bots made 5bn attempts to buy tickets on Ticketmaster, at a rate of roughly 10,000 a minute." Mr. Speaker, federal law enforcement in the United States is unlikely to be able to track down the bots that this government also hopes to crack down on.

It is, as with this government, a worthy endeavour, but we need to be honest with ourselves as well. If American law enforcement, the most powerful country in the world, can't do it, how do we think we are going to be able to succeed at this? This is not downplaying Alberta in any way but, rather, being honest with our limitations. This legislation is unenforceable, and by legislating an unenforceable law, we're not doing anyone any favours.

But, Mr. Speaker, let's move on because there's plenty to talk about in this bill. I must say that I'm concerned with the apparent lack of respect for what members are here to decide. A year and a half ago Bill 203 came forward, and the bill was referred to committee by the members of the Assembly. After receiving submissions on the subject from numerous concerned stakeholders, the committee informed the Legislature that they recommended that the bill not proceed, yet here we are seeing it again. This clearly represents a backdoor attempt by the government to bring in legislation that was panned by stakeholders and voted down by members of this Assembly.

The problem here is that many industry associations and many business owners already operate under best practices. Unfortunately, those that don't may not change to fit the legislation. But customers know, Mr. Speaker. They take their business elsewhere. You can't legislate behaviour no matter how much this government may want to.

Now, the next area is a bit different, Mr. Speaker, and I'm sure you know I am talking about AMVIC. I mentioned being honest with ourselves earlier, and I think it's important that we do so again. The honest truth is that AMVIC has struggled over the years in a number of different areas. There have been complaints, there have been reviews, and there have been investigations. There's nothing to sugar-coat here. I'll be doing a disservice to everyone if I tried. AMVIC has had a turbulent past.

When this government came into power, the minister did some work on this, and I know that at least one of my colleagues assisted her in various ways. It's important that we work together because that's when Albertans truly benefit. The minister has strong feelings about AMVIC, even going as far as calling it a gong show earlier this year. Those comments followed a 2016 report stemming from a review commissioned by the minister in August 2016. This report, by George Cuff, was thorough and pulled no punches. In the end, there were a few recommendations that were submitted. Well, a few more than a few, or a few more than a couple. Mr. Speaker, Mr. Cuff put forward 23 recommendations, and this minister accepted all 23 of them. What's interesting in all of this is that in December the minister accepted all those recommendations – there's a news release that confirms this – and in March of this year the minister said, quote: we're finally on the right track. End quote. We're finally on the right track. AMVIC has been making progress on these recommendations.

The minister is aware of this, yet now, a year after the report came out and after AMVIC started to make changes for the better, the minister is pulling the plug on all that work and pulling AMVIC under her direct control. It doesn't make sense, Mr. Speaker. Why, when according to the minister we're finally on the right track? Why, when progress is made, do we stop and go in a different direction? Why does the minister throw more uncertainty into the air with a metaphorical gut punch to AMVIC? What's the point of accepting the recommendations and watching progress being made only to pull the rug out from underneath the restructuring AMVIC?

If this was the only plan she wanted to take, it would have been wiser to have done it two years ago rather than going through the restructuring phase. Instead, we are throwing Mr. Cuff's work and the report out the window, and we're doing the same with AMVIC, that has already showed so much that they've accomplished. It is insulting to all their good work, Mr. Speaker.

Speaking of insults, I don't think it's an overstatement for me to suggest that including the veterinary profession in a consumer protection bill is seen as a huge insult and slight against the profession. Mr. Speaker, I have tried to understand why veterinarians have been lumped into this bill, and I just can't. I just can't understand it. It's an affront to veterinarians everywhere that they are being treated as unsavoury characters who can't be trusted with their work. If you ask the public, this is just truly, incredibly insulting to veterinarians across Alberta.

A simple look at their annual report shows the lack of complaints. In case you're unaware, Mr. Speaker, allow me to tell you the statistical truth. In the ABVMA's 2016 annual report it reported that there were 23 – 23 – written letters of complaint received. Twenty-three. In total, there were 26 complaint cases, and that's based on 3,211 members. The information is all right there. They've even done the math for us: .8 per cent of registered members were the subject of complaints in 2016. That's down from 1 per cent in 2015, and it was only 1 per cent in 2014, too. Let's be clear: those are complaints in relation to the number of members, not to the number of interactions.

This is not a profession that is in crisis. This is not a profession that is vastly in need of help. There is no need for government interference here, and it is a disgrace that this government is choosing to overreach in this area. The question is: what does this government have against veterinarians? For what reason have they embarked on this vendetta? It doesn't make sense, Mr. Speaker. It doesn't add up. I'm disappointed that the government right now has done this. As an Albertan I think we all can see that, and we expect better from this minister.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank my colleagues for their co-operative effort in allowing me to speak to this bill, Bill 31. I'd like to start by saying that earlier today I contacted the office of the Ethics Commissioner with regard to a specific question on my participation in this debate. The Ethics Commissioner has advised me to state the following: both my wife and I are currently not actively practising as veterinarians although we both hold licensure in the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association; however, we do own a minority share in a business that has property that rents to a veterinary clinic amongst other tenants. I have disclosed this information to the Ethics Commissioner, who has advised that I may participate in these debates and vote on this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to start by saying that I'm in general agreement with a lot of the principles of this bill. How can one argue against consumer confidence and consumer protection? I agree when the minister says that consumer confidence is vitally important. Having run a successful small business for close to 30 years, I recognize that consumer confidence is everything. The ability of people to trust me as a trusted professional is the greatest asset that I had in my practice, and I would do nothing to jeopardize that asset. I think that is a statement that is true of all veterinarians.

It's interesting, when we were reading through Bill 31, how the government in each case is addressing, you know, areas where there is public concern with people operating on what I would call the fringe of otherwise reputable business ventures. You can imagine my shock and surprise and that of my colleagues when we get to the last three pages of the bill, where the veterinary profession comes under direct attack by this government. I suppose I should thank the minister. Nothing else I've ever seen has galvanized our industry in the same way that this bill has, and I should thank the minister that she has unified both the registered veterinary technologists, who were admitted to the profession thanks to Bill 13 from the Minister of Labour, and veterinarians, some practising for only a very short period of time, some still students, others who've practised for 40-plus years and are now retired. It's a little bit offensive when our proud profession is lumped in with ticket scalpers, curbbers, and loan sharks, Mr. Speaker, but that's what this bill does.

When it comes to the consultation process, Mr. Speaker, the consultation process on this bill consisted of two phone calls that basically could be summarized as: brace yourself; this is what is coming. That is not responsible consultation, and it certainly is a far cry from what we enjoyed working together with the Labour minister on Bill 13.

My objections, Mr. Speaker, to this bill are fourfold, and they all deal with the veterinary profession. First of all, I object to the clauses with regard to informed consent and prior fee disclosure. Second, I object to the clauses dealing with advertising by veterinarians, specifically the advertising and publication of fees. Third, I object to the broad, unlimited, and vague powers that are given to cabinet in setting regulations under section 48.3(1) and giving precedence to those regulations over regulations made by the ABVMA council, as is stated in section 48.3(2), which, in essence, strips the veterinary profession of the privilege of self-governance that we have earned and discharged faithfully for over a century, since this province was less than one year old. Finally, my fourth objection is to the lack of proper consultation with the profession.

Let me go through these individually. First of all, informed consent. The provisions in this act, specifically 48.1 and 48.3(1)(c) and (d), requiring informed consent are completely and totally redundant. Informed consent and prior disclosure of fees are already mandated by the bylaws of the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association, and the use of proper consent forms for all procedures is an audit requirement under the practice inspection and practice standards requirements of our profession. Our practices are regularly and routinely audited by inspectors that go all around the province. I know this because I know a number of the auditors, including the president of the association, who has been a consultant and practice auditor.

To suggest for even a moment that veterinarians perform procedures on their patients without owner consent is not only completely wrong but deeply offensive to veterinarians in our province. Yet when this piece of legislation was introduced, that is exactly what three different media outlets – and I will table their news stories – stated in their news articles. That was the impression given. The impression was given that currently veterinarians do not have to obtain informed consent from their clients, that veterinarians do not have to disclose the fees for procedures from their clients, and that now something new will happen that will be required of veterinarians. That is wrong, it is false, and it casts our profession in a very negative light and lumps us in, as I said before, with ticket scalpers, loan sharks, and curbers.

You know, Mr. Speaker, as you can probably guess, I'm passionate about our profession. Well, you don't work at something as long as I have and not get passionate, not just about our profession and about our clients and about our patients but our contribution to Alberta.

You know, I'm not alone. I received this in one of the hundreds of e-mails that I have received – and I know that most of the members opposite and most of the members on this side have heard from my colleagues – from a registered veterinary technologist. She said:

I am a veterinary technologist and have worked in the veterinary profession for over 25 years. We have always disclosed fees for administering treatments as this is a provision already existing in the practice inspection and practice standards bylaw and is just plain good common sense to avoid conflict with our clients and ensure that we are providing the best care possible for our pets.

Now, what did we just hear from the minister? We heard from the minister that the goal of these provisions is so that they could choose the best veterinary services. Choosing the best veterinary services involves proper consultation, proper disclosure, and obtaining informed consent. There is no question about that. Mr. Speaker, that provision within this act is completely unnecessary and redundant. It's already there.

Section (2), advertising fees for procedures. You know, this is an issue that has been discussed by veterinarians throughout the course of my career, and I will say that each and every time that it has come up within our association, our members, acting together, debating the issue together, have rejected the advertising of fees and the publishing of fees as being unprofessional and the potential for leading to commodification of veterinary services.

Mr. Speaker, this has been tried elsewhere. It was tried a couple of decades ago in British Columbia and resulted in the almost total implosion of the association. Veterinarians started undercutting veterinarians, not only started undercutting prices, but more alarmingly they started undercutting the procedures.

There are certain things, Mr. Speaker, in veterinary medicine that you can do to reduce the costs of providing, especially, a surgical procedure, but they are not in the best interest of the patient. The people who are the best judges of what is in the best interest of the patient are the people who have been trained, in some cases for eight or more years, to become veterinarians, who are licensed, who require continuing education to keep up their skills. They're the ones who are in the best position to decide what is in the best interest of the patient and then to communicate that to their clients. This bill takes that away from veterinarians and puts it in the hands of cabinet. That is wrong.

The jurisdictions that have tried that, British Columbia and Ontario and also a number of the states in the United States, in all cases wish that they could turn back and remove the advertising of fees. Veterinarians don't want to advertise fees, and the few that do, Mr. Speaker, have always been voted down by the vast majority, who feel that it does not lead to a more professional veterinary association.

Mr. Speaker, just choosing your veterinarian based on the lowest price, just like it's wrong to choose the contractor for the Calgary cancer centre based on the lowest price, is wrong. It does not necessarily get you the best product or the best service, and if it's right for the construction of buildings, surely then it is also right for the selection of obtaining veterinary care.

Another quote from a registered veterinarian technologist:

In my experience people would rather go to a Veterinarian who they trust than shopping for the cheapest option. The public already has choices and can use whomever they wish to care for their pets. I would hate to see animal care reduced to a dollar figure versus what is best for an individual patient and their care givers.

Mr. Speaker, it is very clear that the Pandora's box of fee advertising and fee publishing, which has been tried in other jurisdictions, would be a mistake.

Mr. Speaker, veterinarians have a duty of care. This brings me to my third point. This bill would place that duty of care in the hands of cabinet. I ask the Health minister: do you feel qualified to decide whether there should be a regulation as to whether a two-year-old collie pup should be treated with ivermectin for internal parasites? I ask the Infrastructure minister: do you feel qualified to decide whether a six-year-old cat suffering from osteoarthritis should be treated with acetaminophen? I ask the Finance minister, who I know is a horse-racing fan: if you are presented with a 1,200-pound thoroughbred stallion who is showing signs of abdominal pain, would you feel comfortable deciding on whether you should advise to have the horse's gallbladder removed?

Well, Mr. Speaker, in all three of those examples it's absurd to expect members of cabinet to know what the best course of action is. But if they were to answer yes to those three questions, in the first two cases, the collie pup and the cat, it would result in the death of the patient. In the third case, well, that was a bit of a trick question for the Minister of Finance. Horses don't have gallbladders.

But, Mr. Speaker, I don't expect the Minister of Finance to know that, and I don't expect cabinet to be able to make regulations for the veterinary profession. They are not qualified. Since 1906, since the very first veterinary profession act, cabinet has had final approval on every regulation and every bylaw passed by the Veterinary Medical Association. They have final say on anything we pass, so they still have that power. This bill would turn that power over first to cabinet, and then it says: in consultation with the association.

Well, let's talk for a moment about consultation. Consultation on this particular bill was shameful. What was so alarming was that it was such a departure from what we enjoyed during the lead-up to Bill 13, which was in May 2016, after months of consultation with the Minister of Labour, who, by the way, is responsible for the Veterinary Profession Amendment Act, not the Minister of Service Alberta. After months of consultation the introduction of Bill 13 resulted in the incorporation of registered veterinary technologists into our profession, a very positive step, one that has been embraced within our profession. It has brought a unity within our profession that I have certainly enjoyed, and I thank the Minister of Labour for her respectful consultation on that issue.

Then this summer, when our association learned that there was a survey going around asking questions about veterinarians, letters were sent to both the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Service Alberta. In mid-August the association president waited two and a half months to hear back from the Minister of Service Alberta. That letter, which arrived barely a month ago, on the 2nd of November, stated, and I quote: further consultation and engagement with industry stakeholders will be necessary to develop the details of any potential legislative or regulatory amendments. Where is that consultation, Minister? The truth is that it didn't happen. It didn't happen. There were two phone calls from the ministry office, and all requests to meet with the Minister of Service Alberta went unanswered. Mr. Speaker, two phone calls are supposed to be the basis of consultation to turn the veterinary profession completely on its ear and to reverse over 100 years of operation.

Mr. Speaker, you know, we talk about consumer confidence. Veterinarians are one of the most trusted professions in Canada. A survey last year indicated that we're the third-most trusted profession in Canada, behind only nurses and farmers, at 87 per cent. By comparison, politicians only have support from 23 per cent.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler. Under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Strankman: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. It's marvellous to hear the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster talk so eloquently about his former profession. I was wondering. He's missed out on a couple of words, I think. He hasn't talked yet about due diligence and care and compassion that are demonstrated by the industry, and I'd appreciate it if he'd elaborate on that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we take the responsibility for due diligence very, very seriously. There is no question in my mind that the best people to discharge that due diligence are, in fact, veterinarians. If we were to ask Albertans: whom do you trust in terms of taking care of the animal population of our province? Whom do you trust in making laws and making regulations that determine cases of animal welfare? Do you trust a group of politicians, who have a trust level of 23 per cent, or do you trust veterinarians, who have a trust level of 87 per cent? I should point out that in Alberta it's even higher. It's 93 per cent in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, to suggest that there is a problem here is not true, and to suggest that there's been consultation is also not true. But that's what they've been told by the minister. For example, one of the constituents who wrote to one constituency office was told:

During this consultation process we met with the AVMA and other industry stakeholders. We have also heard from ordinary Albertans who told us they want to be better informed when looking for veterinary services for their pets. That's why we're proposing reasonable new rules requiring fee disclosures that are in line with other provinces like B.C. and Ontario.

Fee disclosure has been in place in Alberta for years.

And then to another person who wrote to an NDP constituency office:

Thanks for the e-mail. My understanding is that the government did consult with the AVMA and that the elements of Bill 31 were a compromise negotiated with the association. If this is not correct, please let me know.

I'm letting the member know that it's not correct. The association did not agree to Bill 31, and it will not agree to the provisions that turn our association and lump it in with used-car salesmen, ticket scalpers, and loan sharks.

Mr. Speaker, I received in the last three days, as this is yet another one of these bills that is being jammed through at the end of session, hundreds of e-mail correspondence from members, but the one that really struck me was one from a veterinarian who has only been in practice for three years. He's a veterinarian practising in central Alberta. He wrote:

I find these proposals very invasive and infuriating. We are an honest profession, which is full of good-hearted, hardworking, and compassionate people. Following through with the changes proposed by Bill 31 without consulting members of our industry will harm our profession. This is another example of this government's ignorant overstepping without proper due diligence. This makes me very upset. I feel this is a step in the wrong direction, which will ultimately misguide the public to value price over quality.

I strongly urge our government to retract these amendments.

This is a misstep which will shift the focus of veterinary medicine away from providing the highest standards of care.

Mr. Speaker, we don't want to go down that road. We don't have to go down that road. This government is trying to fix a problem that doesn't exist. You heard the statistics on complaints. I sat for years on the discipline tribunal and hardly had anything to do. Veterinarians are an honourable profession, and when things go wrong, we do our very best to make it right with our clients.

Mr. Speaker, I'm deeply offended by this bill, specifically the provisions for the Veterinary Profession Act, but I know that we will have another opportunity to discuss it, so at this point I would move to adjourn debate.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 30

An Act to Protect the Health and Well-being of Working Albertans

Mr. Gottfried moved that the motion for second reading of Bill 30, An Act to Protect the Health and Well-being of Working Albertans, be amended by deleting all of the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 30, An Act to Protect the Health and Well-being of Working Albertans, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

[Adjourned debate on the amendment December 4: Mr. Gill]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Yes, we were talking about Bill 30 and the referral of this bill to the committee so that we can engage all the stakeholders and make changes based on what they tell us. The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster was telling the cabinet ministers that they're not specialists at their jobs, that they don't know how to do the surgeries. I think the people who best know how to do their work are the people who are in those professions. So why don't we bring those stakeholders... [interjections] You won't. I will. Trust me.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, continue.

Mr. Gill: The issue is this, that if we don't bring the stakeholders together and we don't listen to them, how can we, like, make a constructive bill?

Again, it's going back to the same thing. You know, the government claims that they have the backs of Albertans. Yes, you do: the carbon tax without any consultation, without any clue in the last election, and now it's going up again 50 per cent in another month, basically. We had Bill 6: no consultation on that. I don't know. Basically, on every bill that we had, there was no consultation with the exception of the daylight saving time bill, which was finally... [interjections]

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, we are now on second reading of Bill 30 and the referral amendment. If we could please focus on the referral and listen to the speaker, please.

Mr. Gill: How it was done on daylight savings time, I think, was a great example of how we can send this bill to the committee and hear from all the stakeholders to make the right decision. We're trying to do the right thing for Albertans, whom we're all here for. Every member, every single one of us, has the responsibility towards our constituents to represent them in the best way we can. If this is our duty, why aren't we performing our duty? Why are we trying to hide away from the truth? Let's engage them. Let's engage the stakeholders, right?

This bill is making changes to the WCB system, to the OH and S Act. I mean, the list can go on and on and on. I don't think the minister has talked to even a safety company personally yet, right? They wouldn't know unless they engaged with somebody.

Every time we ask the government side to do something, all we're saying is – and I know you're not going to listen to our side; we get that – to at least listen to Albertans, to at least engage them. Send it to the committee. Let's do the whole tour like we did with daylight savings time, with the town hall meetings in different parts of the city, in different parts of the province, and hear from Albertans. But the government doesn't want to do it. Why does the government not want to do this? Like, what are they trying to hide from Albertans? My question is this: how can we serve our constituents better if we're not engaging them?

You know, we have occupational health and safety. It's a repeal and rewrite of the existing Occupational Health and Safety Act. Why are we doing this thing? These questions will be answered when we engage the stakeholders.

I'm going to keep on going back to the same point. I know the members on the opposite side are probably saying that I keep on saying the same thing, but apparently they're not getting it. It's important. It's important to engage the job creators of this province. We didn't do it last time we did WCB changes. By the way, the government still hasn't returned their money, the overpremium. Now we're going to burden them more.

These small and medium-sized businesses are getting impacted by the increase in the carbon tax on January 1, by the minimum wage increase, and now by these changes without their input. It's going to add more of a burden on them. Now, the government claims that we have increased the number of jobs. If the government has increased the number of jobs, why has the revenue coming from income taxes dropped? Because we are not creating quality jobs. This government's policies are not creating quality jobs. That's what it equates to, in my humble opinion.

I'm going to go over a few things. One of the changes: all OHS claim appeals will be heard by the Alberta Labour Relations Board rather than by the existing Occupational Health and Safety Council. The reason for this is that, allegedly, the board has more sources to deal with appeals than the existing council.

Now, this adds another definition of harassment.
