Until that point in time – I appreciate what the member across has brought forward, and like I said, I understand it, but I will not be voting for this amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Chair. First of all, I'd like to thank the Minister of Municipal Affairs for his comments and his clarification. I would especially like to thank the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod for putting this forward.

What I just heard has made me more than ever want to be in support of a clause like this. I don't doubt for a second that the hon. minister is totally honourable to his word and will consult with the RM of Wood Buffalo and everyone else, any other municipalities that are in a similar situation, but in the five years that I've been here, he may be the eighth or 10th Minister of Municipal Affairs. To me, that makes it all the more important why we have to have something in writing, so the certainty is there for industry, so the certainty is there for the good people of Wood Buffalo and Fort McMurray, as both hon. speakers talked so strongly about. It's absolutely not questionable.

The way I read this amendment, it's 12 years at the most. If the hon. minister and the people of Wood Buffalo decide to do it over 11 years or nine years or six, they can. You know, whatever it works out to.

So often when you try to compare things to the Legislature and law, I look back to what you do in your family, what you do in your household, or I look back to what you do in your business. When I've had the opportunity to be sitting with a colleague or a supplier or a contractor that I wanted to do business with in the future, the more you get in writing, the better. It's so easy to think: what was meant by that; was that what was really said?

Well, this is such a great, succinct clause. The minister and the municipality have tons of local decision-making, tons of authority and oversight on this until May 1, 2029. For these very reasons, Madam Chair and colleagues, it's always better to get it in writing. There have been several different ministers in Municipal Affairs. This doesn't remove any opportunity that the minister has to work it out directly other than by May 1, 2029.

I again will thank my hon. colleague for this great amendment, and I will be supporting it.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to my colleague from Cypress-Medicine Hat. Also, thank you to the minister for his remarks. I'd just like to take an opportunity to address some of the remarks he did make and add a little bit of context to the situation.

I think it's important to realize that no one can predict how a municipality will make such a large adjustment, as in the case of Wood Buffalo, from 18 to 1 down to 5 to 1, over the period of time that we arrive at. One can only conclude that if we're going to be adjusting from that high of a ratio down, somewhere along the way the residents will be impacted by a fairly significant increase in their taxes. Certainly, we know that McMurray has been going through an awful lot of difficulties this past year. There's no question about that.

I would also like to remind the minister, with all due respect, and his predecessor that earlier last fall during the debates on Bill 21 this subject was raised as a concern. This subject was addressed in Bill 21, was something that we felt was relatively palatable, and that was the grandfather clause that was in Bill 21 that allowed for those municipalities that were beyond the 5 to 1 ratio to be declared as nonconforming municipalities. Therefore, they would not be required to commit to this change. That was also supported by a letter that was written by the minister at the time. His predecessor again, by the way, I'm referring to: I think her constituency is Lesser Slave Lake if I recall. She said in the local newspaper that there was going to be a commitment to sticking with this, that they should not worry, that this was not going to change, and that they looked forward to working with the municipality, as the current minister has talked about as well. That grandfather clause was there.

This new bill that has been brought out has caused, in my view, a flip-flop on that particular circumstance, and that's the way the people are reading it. It may not be written in stone somewhere that it is a flip-flop, but that's the way people are viewing it, that's the way the residents are viewing it, and that's the way the municipality views it. Frankly, Minister, I understand that that may be contradicting what you understand, and I respect you for your position.

But it was from conversations one-on-one with some of the representatives from the municipality that we are here today discussing this to this length. It was they, in fact, who suggested to us that the 12-year window that is in this amendment today would be something that they thought they could work towards and perhaps work with.

Once again I ask for consideration of this. I ask for this timeline of 12 years to be a solid consideration, and hopefully some other members may wish to speak in support of this amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to the amendment brought forward by my colleague from Livingstone-Macleod. I just want to very briefly echo some of the comments that have been made by my colleagues because I appreciate the fact that the government is looking to create some certainty broadly across the province. I appreciate that taxation rates in some parts of the province have, particularly for nonresidents – as such, for businesses and our largest providers or our largest employers and all sorts of other great benefits that they provide, taxes have been passed along to them at a ratio that does create some competitive disadvantages perhaps to some of our neighbours. So there is an element of trying to create uniformity all across the province and provide industry a very, very competitive environment. Obviously, people on this side of the House have at length spoken about the need for us to do that.

But something that's equally as important as the taxation rate is certainty in business. I'm certain that if industry had a very clear path forward, they would be willing to accept a longer timeline because what this legislation is going to do is to triple the taxes of residents in Fort McMurray in quite possibly as little as three years. This is, you know, at a time when residents are rebuilding, at a time when many of them are still out of their homes. This does not create the long-term stability. Even in the discussion document that the government will sometimes reference, around a timeline of five years, it's all based in the regulations.

We spoke earlier today about: trust, but verify. As it turns out, we've heard the minister say similar sorts of things: "Don't worry. We're not going to have a negative impact. We're going to make sure we work closely with the municipality." But the easiest way to create certainty for both the municipality – and the municipality is the first to recognize that there is a need to work together. Create that stability and predictability for the municipality over a long period of time or a longer period of time and the same for industry.

This, I think, is a very reasonable compromise. It is going to allow certainty for the municipality to plan for what that will look like when they get down to a 5 to 1 ratio and certainty for business, where they have an end target of exactly what that will look like. We've seen regulations go sideways on numerous occasions, and this would prevent that from happening. I think it's reasonable. I encourage all members to support it, particularly in light of the fact that even though the government says, "Don't worry; municipal taxes aren't going to increase in Fort McMurray," there is no other path forward for them to get to 5 to 1 and still be able to operate the municipality in a manner that they're used to.

The other thing that's, I think, important to note is that it's not just the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo. There are others that are impacted by this, and it would provide the same certainty for those that it would for the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo.

So I encourage the hon. member. If, in fact, we can trust him, that they're going to do it over a long period of time, there should be no problem, then, to put some dates to exactly what that looks like.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would certainly second what previous speakers have said, but I'd also like to point out a couple of other nuances to the realities of Bill 8 with regard to the 5 to 1 ratio and the amendment that's before us.

Let me first of all begin by saying that the tax divergence, which is what we're talking about, incurs almost entirely in rural communities. Those are communities with large industry-caused expenses. Those large industries require certain amounts of infrastructure in order for them to function: heavy roads, which are much more expensive to build than just local roads. They require infrastructure in terms of health facilities, in terms of policing. Those are some of the obvious ones. There are others as well, though.

Yet while they cause this expense to the municipality, the reality is that the majority of their workers in many cases are what I'm going to call drive-in or fly-in employees. They don't actually live in the municipality that they are working in and in which this industry causes the expense to occur. This is part of the reason why we have this problem of extreme tax ratio. The tax base actually is fly-in or drive-in. Many of the people who work there, who cause the expenses, the industry itself that causes the expenses: in many cases those employees don't actually work there. They're camp workers, and they don't pay tax. These rural municipalities, on top of having this large industry-caused expense, also have, actually, minimal local populations, relatively speaking, in many cases.

Now what we're doing by not taking a very careful approach to how we re-equalize this tax issue is that we're going to be throwing the costs of industry onto the backs of the ordinary, local people. That's exactly what's going to happen. In many ways it's unjust.

The ordinary people who actually live in these regions and don't fly home to somewhere else – even in Lacombe-Ponoka, for instance, it happens because the large Joffre gas plant, which is in Lacombe county, actually receives most of its employees from the city of Red Deer. All of those employees do not pay taxes in that county. So in a very real way the local farm community around the plant, that, really, in many respects doesn't want it there in the first place, that doesn't particularly benefit from it, is the one that is actually going to see their taxes raised, that is going to see significant tax rises, and, with that, especially in some of the farther out rural areas, a potential loss of property value, declines in population. Really, this is going to be on the backs of the local people in the end.

Bill 21 did have the grandfather clause in it, protected the timeline with which this would happen. Bill 8 now calls these communities nonconforming, and there's no certainty, no guarantee for them on how quickly this will happen, how the transition is going to take place, what's going to happen.

Another part of this that concerns me, which is a little bit different but still important to the broader picture, is that in some respects what's happening here is that the provincial government or, in this case, the minister is taking the decision-making authority away from the local authorities and giving it to the minister. This is in some respects, in some areas viewed as a power grab. It's the continuing principle of the centralization of everything. It's a discrimination, and it's a bias. It's an inequity against the authority of the rural areas. It really is taking the decision-making from the local municipal governments to the provincial government.

The solution is not some sudden decree by the minister, which is potential in the way it currently stands, but a reasonable horizon, the security of a reasonable horizon. Let the municipalities figure it out in a reasonable horizon. Respect the local decision-making of those authorities, and don't drive the cost of industry back onto the backs of the local landowners and the local residents.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise and request that we rise and report progress.

The Chair: Is that motion to rise and report progress on Bill 8 . . .

Mr. Cooper: Correct on Bill 8.

The Chair: . . . and to rise and report Bill 7?

Mr. Cooper: Oh, yeah. Bill 7 is fine.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Ms Sweet: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 7. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 8. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 10 Appropriation Act, 2017

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a great privilege to speak to third reading of Bill 10, the government's Appropriation Act, 2017, and this indeed is the discussion of the government's budget and their plans for spending for the upcoming fiscal year.

As has been my habit in the past when looking at budgets, I like to try to say at least a couple of things that I see in the budget that I think are positives and that I think are good things that I support. For example, one of them – and this was covered in our estimates with the Health minister – is that I certainly support the effort of the minister to try to get a handle on, specifically, physician compensation. I give her as well as the Alberta Medical Association a great deal of credit in this regard because certainly physician costs, hospital costs, and pharmaceutical costs are the three principal drivers that have increased the health care budget consistently greater than the rate of inflation plus population growth.

It's a difficult curve to bend. It is, in fact, interesting to see how other provinces are finding the same sorts of struggles. I have been seeing some of the advertising coming across from the British Columbia election, and it's interesting to see that despite the fact that B.C. has one of the highest performing health care systems in our nation, there are still significant issues in the B.C. health care system. The Ontario health care system also has issues, so this is something that is not unique to Alberta, but I do applaud the minister in her efforts to try to bend the curve specifically on physician compensation and specifically in the area where we're trying to move more doctors to an alternate compensation model as opposed to strictly being fee for service.

The province of Alberta has for years had the highest percentage of physicians who are primarily compensated on a fee-for-service basis, and it is one of the principal cost drivers. As we found when we conducted the rural health review, it is also one of the things that creates distortions in our health care system that are not helpful to the delivery of health care services in our province.

The second area that I'm going to commend the government on – and this is sort of across a number of ministries – is their ongoing commitment to infrastructure construction, not just to new construction but also to infrastructure maintenance. This is a positive thing, and I will tell you that this is something that, in my assessment, in my candid assessment of our past government – although we hear a lot from the other side about the many and various failings of our 12 consecutive Conservative majority governments, I do believe that this is something that history will show was a shortcoming of our government. I think it's important that if we're going to have a candid assessment, we acknowledge things that we fell short on. I think that this is one of them. I do think that it is extremely important that not only do we build new infrastructure but that we also maintain it. This government's commitment to increasing infrastructure maintenance budgets is an important part of that.

Now, I do have to say that I found some of the changes in the capital plan section a little bit interesting. The fact that it went from a five-year capital plan to a four-year capital plan was interesting, and I asked three different ministers why that change had been made, and I got three different answers. I found that somewhat curious. I would have expected a more consistent answer between ministers as to why the capital plan horizon had changed from a five-year horizon to a four-year horizon and why there were significant shifts in how certain projects had been costed out.

Specifically, in the Department of Education I note that this year there is an announcement for the construction in the out-years of the budget of an additional 36 schools. Certainly, last year's capital budget did not have any provision for new schools beyond the completion of the capital plan and the school build that was initiated by the previous government. We know that these schools are now being opened and are coming on stream. Certainly, some of them were delayed by a variety of factors, some of which were not within the control of the government, some of which were local matters, but I know that, for example, I attended a school opening in our constituency last November, and this was a school that from announcement to opening of the doors was a two-year time frame. So schools can be built very quickly, and schools can be built very efficiently, and there are a lot of factors that contribute to that.

But I do have a number of concerns, and I think it would be remiss if I didn't at least discuss what my concerns are. Perhaps principal amongst them are the deficit and the debt that this budget takes on. Now, we can have a lot of discussions – and some of them will be philosophically driven – as to what level of deficit and debt is appropriate. Now, the Finance minister is very comfortable with a high level of deficit, and he seems very comfortable with a high level of debt. In order to ease his comfort in terms of these ever-increasing levels of debt, he has created a situation where there is an ever-increasing debt-to-GDP ratio, which is found to be acceptable. You know, that concerns me because a lot of other jurisdictions in Canada, a lot of other provinces are in fact moving to balanced budgets and are in fact curving the debt-to-GDP ratio in their provinces. Even the province of Quebec has a balanced budget this year and is contributing some $2 billion within their $100 billion budget towards debt repayment. You know, I hope that we can get to a point in Alberta where we're doing that sooner rather than later. It certainly concerns me that the Finance minister seems to show no commitment to a specific plan for paying down the debt.

In fact, I suppose the cynic could say that the 2016 budgeted deficit was $10.4 billion and this year's budgeted deficit is $10.3 billion and that at the current rate of progress it will take this government 102 more years to come to a balanced budget. It's perhaps a simplistic analysis, but it is every bit as valid as the one that the Finance minister has offered this House because he has just given a series of pie-in-the-sky and wishful-thinking dates that we will return to a balanced budget. You know, I am hopeful, certainly, that that is something that we will move towards.

The second area of concern is our much-vaunted tax advantage. Now, at the time that this government took office in 2015, that tax advantage over the next lowest taxed jurisdiction in our nation was some $11 billion. One third of that advantage has already been frittered away by this administration. They've gone from an $11 billion advantage to a $7.5 billion advantage, which will increase – I'm sure the Finance minister is about to heckle me – to $8.7 billion this year through no action of his. That increase is purely because other jurisdictions are moving and you have decided not to. So don't take credit for things that you can't take credit for.

But I point out again that that advantage used to be $11 billion, and I worry that that is an advantage that we should actually be working towards trying to maintain rather than treating it as if that's the room we have to play with before we're no longer the lowest taxed jurisdiction in the nation. I don't think that there's any indication that this minister thinks that that is still an important advantage to have. I don't think that we are seeing a commitment on behalf of this minister or this government to maintain Alberta as the lowest taxed jurisdiction. In fact, I hear a lot from some members of this government that indicates that being the lowest taxed jurisdiction is something we shouldn't be proud of, and I think that's a concern.

A third area is a major concern of mine that came up during the course of estimates – and it's very specific to one ministry, but I have to raise it because it is an area that I'm particularly concerned with – and that is in the Ministry of Culture and Tourism. The Culture and Tourism minister told us at estimates that they would no longer be doing specific calculations as to the economic impact of tourism to our economy. That's a stunning revelation.

The tourism industry is driven by numbers, Madam Speaker. The tourism industry always had a very clear picture of how many businesses, how many jobs, what the economic impact was, and what the contribution to the provincial coffers was each and every year, yet we were told in estimates that that was something that was felt to be no longer useful. I find it interesting that in every press release that comes from the Ministry of Culture and Tourism, they are still quoting numbers to indicate how great the economic impact of the tourism industry is to our province, yet they are quoting the last set of numbers that they have, and those, in fact, are numbers from 2014.

Unless the minister can demonstrate to this House a clear commitment to provide the kinds of measurements and statistics and numbers that allow the tourism industry to mark its progress as it grows and changes and develops and supposedly acts as a diversification driver, which I'm sure it could do, my question is: if you're not measuring it, how do you know? You have no clue as to whether tourism is in fact acting as a diversifier of our economy.

You know, the other end of things that has been kind of interesting has been some of the myths. I don't have time to go through all of the myths that have been perpetuated during the course of this debate by members of the government, but I do want to go after one, and that is the myth that they're doing a serious attempt at restraint of expenditure. Whenever we bring up the restraint of expenditure point, the only thing that they're able to bring forward is their recent review of CEO salaries and compensation packages for the ABCs.

Now, I support that review, and I support the idea that we have to bring these salaries more into line, and, no, I'm not advocating on behalf of golf course memberships, but I do want to say: let's keep this in perspective. That review will save the government $16 million. Sixteen million dollars is a good saving, but $16 million represents 0.03 per cent of the budget. If you're going to even get to a balanced budget, Minister, you have to do that 643 more times. So far we've seen no evidence that you're even prepared to do it one more time, never mind 643.

You know, we hear other things in relation to the budget. We hear the Minister of Economic Development and Trade saying how the world is moving past coal as a source of generation for electricity. That seems odd given that there are 2,400 coal-fired electricity generation plants either under construction or being planned worldwide. If the world is moving past coal, it seems odd that they would be building all of these plants. I think we are actually missing a huge opportunity, Madam Speaker, in terms of providing Alberta technology that could provide the world, those 2,400 coal plants, with some of the technology to reduce the emissions, to reduce the greenhouse gas emissions, to reduce the carbon footprint.

I mean, I will give you an example. If there was technology developed in Alberta to reduce the emissions from those 2,400 plants by 5 per cent, that would be the equivalent of taking 120 coal plants out of commission, yet this government trumpets that it's taking 19 coal plants out of commission. Wouldn't it be better for Alberta technology, our ingenuity, to develop a process that could be marketed, that could be sold, that could be exported world-wide and applied? Even if it's applied to only half of those 2,400 plants, that's still 60 coal plants that you're essentially taking out of commission.

The last one that I actually have real enjoyment about is green shoots. Green shoots. Now, I will confess, Madam Speaker – and you can ask my wife – I am not skilled at horticulture. If there are houseplants in our house that she leaves to my care, I can basically guarantee they will be dead within a week. Green shoots. The minister consistently talks about how we're going to have green shoots and that we're seeing these signs – don't get me wrong; I applaud every sign that our economy is recovering. I think it's very positive.

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt, hon. member, but pursuant to Standing Order 64(5) I now must put the question on the appropriation bill for third reading.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion for third reading of Bill 10 carried]

Prayers

The Acting Speaker: Good morning.

Hon. members, let us reflect and pray, each in our own way. Once again, let us reflect on the strength of our local communities and the skills and abilities our local leaders and community members bring to our province in order to make it a better place for all of us to live. Let us continue to advocate and commend our community for the great work they do. And May the 4th be with you.

Please be seated.

Cancellation of Morning Sitting

18. Mr. Carlier moved on behalf of Mr. Mason:
Be it resolved that, notwithstanding Standing Order 3(1), the morning sitting of the Assembly on Tuesday, May 9, 2017, be cancelled.

Mr. Carlier: Madam Speaker, on March 21, 2017, your office sent a memo to all parties requesting the use of the Chamber for high school students partaking in the MLA for a Day event. This motion will allow the Chamber to be used for that important event on the morning of May 9, 2017.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak to the motion?

Second Reading

Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Amendment Act, 2017

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my honour to rise and move on behalf of the Minister of Labour and minister responsible for democratic renewal the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Amendment Act, 2017, for second reading.

If passed, this legislation would further the principles of open government in Alberta by increasing accountability, ethics, and transparency. By strengthening existing legislation and by better protecting whistle-blowers from reprisal, we hope to encourage more people to come forward when a matter needs to be investigated.

Madam Speaker, the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee, which was made up of representatives from all parties, reviewed the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act and made recommendations for improvement. I would like to thank all members of the committee for their hard work in this regard.

One of the most important goals of this legislation is to protect whistle-blowers from any sort of punishment or retaliation from their employer. In order to help achieve this goal, the all-party committee recommended that the act be amended to ensure that whistle-blowers are entitled to some sort of remedy if they suffer a reprisal. Under the old legislation, while an employer in the public sector could be charged for committing a reprisal, it did not contemplate what sort of restitution should be made to the whistle-blower.

To solve this problem, we have accepted the all-party committee's recommendation, and this bill will enable the Labour Relations Board to order remedies. The board would appoint one of its senior members, either the chair or one of the vice-chairs, to hear the matter and order the remedy. Hearings would be conducted as determined by the board. They would be able to summon witnesses, and their decision would be final. For example, the board may decide that the whistle-blower should get their job back if they were fired blowing the whistle. In other cases they may be entitled to compensation for lost wages.

Ultimately, it will be up to the board to decide what is appropriate, and the act would set out new enforcement powers which would allow the board to enforce its orders. The board would also be required to provide a copy of all of the restitution orders to the commissioner for inclusion in the commissioner's annual report. Madam Speaker, when someone reports a serious wrongdoing, that person is acting in the public interest, and these changes will help ensure they are protected.

The all-party committee also recommended that the act be amended so that it more clearly applies to ministers and Members of the Legislative Assembly. The way the act stands, it does not afford any protection to political staff working in ministers' offices or the Premier's office. Likewise, it's unclear whether or not ministers may have the whistle blown on them. Staff in constituency offices are already covered by the act. However, the act currently does not allow these staff or anyone else to blow the whistle on elected Members of the Legislative Assembly. Madam Speaker, as you can tell, this can be rather confusing, but our amendments will help clear this up.

The bill clearly lays out that, subject to parliamentary privilege, MLAs, ministers, and the Premier can all be investigated when a disclosure is made to the Public Interest Commissioner. Likewise, political staff will be protected from reprisal should they choose to blow the whistle. Currently no other jurisdiction in Canada has whistle-blower legislation that applies to MLAs in this way, and Ontario is the only jurisdiction that covers ministers. As a result, accepting this recommendation would help make our government one of the most honest, transparent, and accountable governments in Canada.

The new legislation would also allow the Public Interest Commissioner to investigate a wider variety of wrongdoings, including some forms of mismanagement or abuse of human resources in the public sector. Under certain circumstances this may include bullying and harassment in the workplace. Of course, other options already exist to address human resource issues and breaches of code of conduct. We already have human rights legislation and ordinary employment law and collective bargaining mechanisms to help ensure a healthy work environment in the public sector. To be clear, in the event of a wrongdoing related to workplace bullying or harassment in the public, any collective agreement or employer policies would be accessed first, but if these processes are not adequate to resolve the problem, this bill would allow the Public Interest Commissioner to investigate egregious and systemic cases of bullying and harassment.

In addition, this bill would help improve the process whistle-blowers must go through to report a wrongdoing and ensure they are protected when they need it. Under the old legislation a potential whistle-blower is required to report the details of the alleged wrongdoing to a designated officer. Our new legislation would allow potential whistle-blowers to bypass their designated officer and report directly to the Public Interest Commissioner if they so choose. Furthermore, the new act would clarify that a whistle-blower may approach their boss about a wrongdoing, and their protection from reprisal would start at that very moment. In some cases a potential whistle-blower may not know their designated officer, and as a result they may be more comfortable speaking with their supervisor before going to that designated officer. In other cases a potential whistle-blower may prefer to go directly to the commissioner.

The Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Amendment Act, 2017, would also strengthen the commissioner's investigative powers. With our amendments the commissioner's power to access information would be equivalent to the Auditor General's ability to access information. In other words, the commissioner will be given the right to access records and data at an employer's work site. This is a definite strengthening of the commissioner's powers. It also helps ensure that information requests will remain focused and relevant, thereby avoiding an undue burden on public entities.

The all-party committee also noted that there are many outsourced government functions or governmentlike functions that do not fall within the scope of the act but for which government spends a lot of money to provide a service to the public. In other words, those who carry out activities on behalf of the government should feel safe and free from reprisal when they report serious wrongdoings rather than just those who are directly employed by the government. At the same time, these entities should also be investigated if there is an alleged wrongdoing related to their work in the public sector.

However, the all-party committee also recommended that the act not be expanded to include the private sector. At this time we are accepting the all-party committee's recommendations, but much more work needs to be done to determine how to cover public-sector services carried out by third parties without stepping over the line into the private sector. If this act is passed, we will consult with government contractors and delegated service providers to determine how best to move forward on the details of the recommendation.

Lastly, our legislation would also better protect the identity of whistle-blowers. For example, the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act does not apply to records held by the Public Interest Commissioner, but if a designated officer initiates an investigation rather than the commissioner, it is possible for a third party to submit a FOIP request asking for records connected to the investigation. Our new legislation will ensure that the name of the whistle-blower and other identifying information are exempted from these FOIP requests.

As members of the all-party committee will know, there were many more recommendations, and our government considered each and every one carefully. While I have covered the major amendments, I would encourage all members to read through the bill to see other amendments related to process or administration, all of which stem from the all-party committee's recommendations.

Madam Speaker, our government recognizes that the truest reason for exposing a wrongdoing is often not to criticize but to help make amends. In other words, when someone blows the whistle, they should be celebrated, not cast out. This is the foundation of this legislation, and this is what it was built on.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and speak to Bill 11, the strengthening the public interest disclosure whistle-blower act. I'd just like to begin by echoing a few of the comments of my colleague from across the way with respect to the good work that was done on the all-party committee. Certainly, this was the first task that the committee was working on and one that worked really well. Unfortunately, the whole committee didn't end as effectively, if I may say, as it started. Things went along quite well through this portion of the committee work, and then, as you'll know, the government started to make some changes to the way political parties were going to be funded. As my colleague from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre had mentioned on a number of occasions, it appeared that they were trying to stack the deck in favour of the NDP, so that committee didn't end quite as co-operatively as it began.

But that's not to say that good work wasn't accomplished, and certainly Bill 11 is a reflection of that good work that was done, so I would like to thank the former chair and the interim chair, I think, of the committee as well as the Minister of Labour, the then chair of the committee, for the work that was done. Strengthening the public interest disclosure act will make it safer for government employees to expose gross mismanagement of taxpayer-funded resources, and that's something that we should all be focused on, ensuring that those who have the information can provide information that will ensure there isn't mismanagement and that they are protected and able and willing to reveal that information. Employees need the peace of mind to know that they will be free from reprisal when they come forward to report wrongdoing.

This bill is a step forward in eliminating a culture of secrecy, a culture of secrecy that we have seen in Alberta over some period of time. Certainly, it's the opinion of this side of the House that that has continued under this current government. You know, Madam Speaker, that I have risen in this House on numerous occasions to speak specifically about the FOIP challenges that we have and the culture of secrecy that exists in the Department of Justice, the political interference that we've seen the FOIP commissioner speak about inside the Premier's office. We would encourage the government, and we have been, to ensure that they are taking even more steps to rectify those challenges just like – and I'll be happy to applaud them in this case – they have taken steps to ensure there is better protection for whistle-blowers and, as such, that that will hopefully be part of shining light on some of the darker parts of the government.

As I mentioned, last summer the all-party Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee did meaningful work to improve the legislation, and it was good to see that government members had opened up to good ideas. In fact, there were amendments passed, I believe, that were proposed by all parties in this Chamber, including the two independent members that are at the end of the Chamber here. The bill reflects 20 of the 21 recommendations in the committee's final report.

There needs to be more transparency whenever taxpayer dollars are being spent, especially at the levers of power, including the Premier's office, ministers' staff. These offices needed to be included in this legislation. We have seen political interference on a number of different occasions from this government, so it's important that our public employees or employees in ministers' offices feel that they have the ability to ensure that light is shone where it ought to be.

Expanding the scope of the act to government-contracted service providers is also important. These contractors provide services in many areas like taking care of our seniors or our children, just to name a few. There are some very, very significant service providers in terms of total amount of resources as well as total amount of responsibility. It's very important that those contractors also feel that they have the ability to shine light or to blow the whistle on areas where it needs to be and also to not fear for their contracts. We know that there is a significant amount of fear in this province when it comes to speaking out against this government, and we need to make sure that that fear is mitigated and that whistle-blowers are able to respond as they see fit.

Whistle-blower legislation doesn't work if employees are too intimidated to come forward. A whistle-blower may not feel comfortable filing a disclosure with their boss or even their boss's boss. It's good to see that in this legislation, the bill provides the provision for whistle-blowers to report directly and anonymously to the office of the Public Interest Commissioner. This is a very positive change. As you can imagine as the Deputy Chair of Committees, there may be some concern if you had a direct challenge or concern with your immediate supervisor. If you only had the ability to disclose to that supervisor your concern, there may be some reservation in your desire to do it. Now, with Bill 11 it provides other avenues to employees, other than their employer, to disclose this information, which I think is certainly a step in the right direction.

Whistle-blowers who have been brave enough to report wrongdoing have unfortunately had their career or their work life suffer at the hands of the people who have committed mismanagement. To ensure that they can remain anonymous and can utilize the Public Interest Commissioner is a much better and more open and transparent manner for the whistle-blower to ensure that there won't be consequences for shining light on a subject. Under the new act those who disclose wrongdoing and face reprisal will be able to seek restitution through the Labour Relations Board.

One of the concerns that we have – and we recognize that there are some very sensitive issues around this concern – is that, unfortunately, the NDP have chosen not to expand the whistle-blower legislation to protect physicians who are in alternative relationship plans or who have received other forms of payment from this government. Of course, there are some unique circumstances around physicians, which ones are contractors and which ones are AHS employees, et cetera, but all physicians should be protected to ensure that they can receive the same whistle-blower protections as any physician here. The minister should answer why her government thinks it's better to deal with something like this behind closed doors at a later time when the committee recommended that this action be done now.

The bill calls for more detail when the office of the Public Interest Commissioner conducts its annual reporting, which, of course, is very positive. It's important that we have the best available information to make the best available decisions. The Public Interest Commissioner now reports on the types of proven wrongdoing in the disclosure it receives, a summary of the findings in cases where wrongdoing or acts of reprisal are found to have been committed, the specific recommendations made to public entities or offices of the Legislature and the responses to those recommendations, and any offences committed or penalties given under the act.

One of the things that's equally as important as a whistle-blower's ability to report is the public's ability to understand and know what has happened as well as the consequences of those actions. Expanding the ability for the commissioner to report is of critical importance, and it's one of the reasons why we were pleased to see it included in the recommendations.

There are a number of very positive things about this legislation. Certainly, the legislation does significantly more good than harm. That's one of the reasons why I support and encourage all members of our team and of the Official Opposition to support Bill 11. I hope that on a go-forward basis we will be able to do much more work at the committee level just like was done here on the whistle-blower protection act. So much of the bill comes out of that committee.

Now, there was one recommendation and some other discussion that wasn't able to be included in the legislation, and I'm sure some other colleagues will speak specifically to that as they were very passionate about those particular recommendations. It is often the best opportunity for ideas from all sides of the Chamber to win.

The other thing that is great about committee work being done is the time that we have to review important issues, the amount of consultation and feedback that we all receive, not just that the government receives. I know that the government speaks about the consultation and the work they do, whether it's on labour legislation – and we all know that that consultation was rushed. That is information that the government has and is not available to the opposition. So one might be concerned with the government going rogue and not providing the results or not providing all of the content to the opposition.

Really, the opposition's role is to provide those checks and balances. In some ways we are whistle-blowers on the government, so we want to make sure that the consultation is done. When we do it in committee like this, we have the opportunity as well to have access to the experts. I know the commissioner came on a number of occasions to the committee and provided the same information. I know my colleagues from Bonnyville-Cold Lake and Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock and Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre and Highwood had some very positive and robust discussions around these particular issues, and as such, I know that they're all very willing to speak in favour of what ultimately is a good piece of legislation and a step forward for our province.

So I look forward to the debate. I look forward to the passage of Bill 11 and ensuring that those who have information are willing to provide it as well as to do so without the fear of significant negative consequences.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other hon. members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate this opportunity to talk about Bill 11. Let me say that because Bill 11 to a large degree grew out of an all-party committee, I think that's an example that we should consider following in the future because there's a lot of work here that is better done in an all-party committee, in a less adversarial environment than the one we're in right now. I think this bill is an example of some of the good things that can grow out of people in this important Legislature being put into an environment where we can work together in a more collegial atmosphere than indeed is in this room many times.

Madam Speaker, there's a lot to like about this bill, but I wonder why committee recommendation 18, on solicitor-client privilege, was deferred. Hopefully, we'll hear some explanation from the government side on that before this debate is completed.

There was a proposed authority for the commissioner to compel testimony. That doesn't seem to explicitly be a recommendation. I'd certainly be interested in hearing what the government side has to say about that.

One of the things that the member said when she was talking and introducing the bill this morning was about that the decision is final. I think that any time you give authority to somebody when the decision is final, unfortunately, you're depending upon the perfection of that person or that body. Certainly, our independent officers are important in the Legislature, Madam Speaker, but just because we're all human beings, I think that depending on someone being perfect and making every decision well, I have to say, personally, or putting in a rule or a recommendation or a piece of legislation or anything that says that all decisions are final is, I think, troubling at all times.

You know, even in the highest courts in the land the decisions are appealable. I think that's something that we need to think about as we go forward. I'm sure that it's well intended. I'm certainly not suggesting otherwise. But depending upon the perfection of every decision of any human being walking this planet is risky. Let's certainly hope that the commissioner is more perfect than I am if all decisions are final. Let me say that much.

There are several things that are worthy of supporting here. There's a section, I believe, that says that gross mismanagement is defined as an act or omission that is deliberate and that shows a reckless or wilful disregard for the proper management of government resources. I think that's something or I certainly hope that that's something that all members of this House could agree with and get behind. But I cannot help but ponder whether dragging the taxpayers $71 billion into debt without any plan to pay back even dollar one might even qualify as a reckless and wilful disregard for the management of government resources. That's a question for another day, but it seems to me that that's almost what that section describes. What's happening with the budget that the government was so proud of passing yesterday may actually fall under this category.

Madam Speaker, I think that protecting people at work from unfair management practices, protecting the taxpayers from misuse of government funds, protecting workers that have the courage to step forward and point out wrongdoing and make the world a better place, make their government a better place, make their workplace a better place are all worthy goals that, in my estimation, this legislation strives to achieve. I applaud what I believe are those intentions, and that's why I'm highly likely to support this. As I said, I have a couple of concerns, which I've tried to articulate in the first couple of minutes of my debate, and I'm sincerely hopeful that the government will make some attempt to answer those concerns before the debate concludes.

Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's been my privilege to stand and speak on this bill. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I'll recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak to second reading of Bill 11.

I'll start with some of the background that perhaps some of my colleagues may have touched on in their previous comments about how this bill came to be, where the recommendations that are contained in the bill came from. I really hope – and those who were in the House for my member's statement earlier this week will understand where this is coming from – that this is another one of those good examples of what it looks like when committees are allowed to do their work freely, where debate is allowed and encouraged by members from all sides, and that good legislation then comes as a result of that.

What I'm really encouraged by in this bill is that it does make Alberta's whistle-blower protection among if not the strongest in the country. That's a great thing. That's something that we in this House all ought to strive for on every front. Everything that we do in this House we ought to be striving to make it the best and also to do that for the right reasons. If there are things that are not being done properly at some place in the provincial government, then I think it's absolutely without question in the public interest that Albertans know about that.

To go back in history a little bit and answer that question of how it is that this bill came to be, where the different portions of this bill came from, it, of course, has its roots in the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee. That committee was tasked with reviewing four pieces of legislation, the whistle-blower protection act being the first among them. It took a while. It took, I think, the better part of eight months, if my memory serves, for that committee to actually get into the process of deliberating and making recommendations on the whistle-blower protection act. That committee made 21 recommendations, and by my count 19 and a half of those recommendations have appeared in this bill. That's pretty remarkable.

Again, I want to thank the government and the minister who has brought this forward for their work in incorporating nearly all of the recommendations coming out of that committee. The one and a half recommendations that are not included, the half being to do with physicians on alternative remuneration plans, or ARPs: my understanding is that those changes need to happen in regulation and either can't or for whatever practical purposes have been chosen not to be in the bill itself. I will certainly take the government at their word that that is, in fact, a requirement and also that that is in fact coming at some point down the road once this legislation is passed. That was, again, one of those thoughtful recommendations that were made by that committee.

The other one that isn't there has to do with solicitor-client privilege. Now, I know that, not being a lawyer, I don't have all of the facts about this, but I do know that solicitor-client privilege is a very fundamental aspect of the law and has a lot of very specific meanings and very specific protections that are fundamental to justice. I would like to hear at some point in the debate from the minister what her rationale is for not having solicitor-client privilege included in this bill because I think that is one of those areas, as we've seen from the Information and Privacy Commissioner, that could be used inappropriately or to frustrate the process. We've seen that in FOIP requests where it certainly appears from the Information and Privacy Commissioner's perspective – and I would agree with her – that solicitor-client privilege is used to frustrate the process. It appears that that happens inappropriately. I would certainly hope that that is not something that we have left the door open to by excluding that specific recommendation from this bill.

Again, as the debate moves forward, I would be very interested to hear from the minister or from other members why it is that that has been excluded and if that's something that the government will contemplate including at some point in the future or if they feel that there are other ways of addressing that particular challenge. Again, as much as I love lawyers, any time there's an opportunity for the process to be frustrated through what appear to the outside world as technicalities, potentially putting whistle-blowers at risk or potentially allowing perpetrators of either gross mismanagement or of intimidation or of inappropriate behaviour within any aspect of the public service, then I think we need to be very careful about enabling anyone to allow that to happen.

Now, I want to be very clear that I don't think that that's happening in any sort of widespread way through Alberta's very capable and very professional public service. But the point of whistle-blower protection is that when you have tens or even hundreds of thousands of employees, just through sheer statistical probability there are going to be a very, very small number of them that may at some point do inappropriate things. There may be gross mismanagement. There may be bullying and intimidation. The committee heard some examples of that, and we've seen some cases where the Public Interest Commissioner has ruled that that has in fact been the case. That's the purpose of having whistle-blower protection. It is absolutely in the public interest to not only have whistle-blower protection but to have very strong whistle-blower protection to make sure that anyone within Alberta's public service has the protection that they deserve should they identify something that's inappropriate: that money is being wasted, that people in a particular department are being bullied. That's why we have whistle-blower protection. That's not to say that these problems are rampant, but it's also not to say that they're nonexistent either.

So I'm certainly encouraged by the contents of the bill. Again, I'm interested in hearing what the minister has to say about the solicitor-client privilege issue, about some of the issues that the Member for Calgary-Hays has raised as well, some of those questions. I guess I don't want to go so far as to call them issues, but these are questions that I have as well. In general terms I'm very pleased to see that it is in fact possible to have a committee, in this case the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee, work well together on this particular area. It's come up with thoughtful recommendations and put those recommendations forward in the form of the bill which is brought before this Assembly and which we have an opportunity now to debate.

At the end of the day, I think without question this improves whistle-blower protection in Alberta. I think, not being an expert on whistle-blower protection around the country, just based on the recommendations that we made, having been on that committee myself and gone through that process, it certainly feels like we've taken a big step forward. It certainly feels like we are now on the cutting edge of whistle-blower protection in the country but also potentially on the cutting edge of whistle-blower protection around the world.

You know, one of the things that we did on the committee was a crossjurisdictional analysis, and this gives me a fabulous opportunity to thank the very, very capable, very hard-working, dedicated people in research services who did remarkable work in providing us with very succinct but thorough research, crossjurisdictional research not only in Canada but other Commonwealth nations, about whistle-blower protection. I know all of us at one point or another have been on a committee where we interact with the people from research services, and they do really, really remarkable work. So I hope they're listening, and I do want to make sure that they know how much we, all of us, I know, appreciate the work that they do. It really enables us to do our work.

It is possible for that committee structure to work. I won't go into some of the things that happened later on in the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee. That was unfortunate. It tells me, unfortunately, that it really, I don't think, needed to be that way. That is what it is, but for whistle-blower protection anyway we've proven that that committee process can work and be very effective.

Certainly, I have every intention of supporting Bill 11. I think it's a good piece of legislation. I think it improves the accountability within the public service. It improves transparency for the people of Alberta. It makes it most likely that we will identify any gross mismanagement that may be going on and address that to ensure that we are, in fact, good stewards of Albertans' hard-earned tax dollars that they send to the provincial government.

With that, Madam Speaker, I will return to my place and thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I've purposely waited until later in the debate. I was hopeful that the effects of some local anaesthetic from some dental work that I had done earlier today would have worn off, but it is a testimony to the excellence of our dental hygienists in our province that my infraorbital nerve block, which has rendered the right side of my face largely anaesthetized, is still very much in effect. So if it does appear to members of the House that I am suffering from some minor form of palsy, that indeed is not the case, but as this will result in my remarks being necessarily brief, I will also remark that this makes it likely that my colleagues in the House will suggest that I obtain dental work on a daily basis.

However, Madam Speaker, I do want to say a few remarks just on the heels of the remarks made by the members for Calgary-Elbow and Calgary-Hays and also Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. I also appreciate the remarks that were made by the Member for St. Albert in introducing Bill 11. I would certainly echo the comments made by the Member for Calgary-Elbow as a member of the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee. We were on a journey in the past year. I think that the resulting bill, Bill 11, is in my view an example of how things can work or perhaps should work when things work well. I think it is, in fact, the result of a collaborative effort on behalf of members of all parties.

I know that my colleague the Member for Calgary-North West and I as well as the Member for Calgary-Mountain View and members from the Official Opposition and the government worked very hard. In fact, of the roughly 12 months that the committee's mandate was in place, this was the piece of work that took up the bulk of the time. It was done carefully and conscientiously, and it was done very thoroughly.

I think that's reflected in this bill. I think this bill does provide improvements to the existing Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act that was passed in 2013. These improvements were in many cases recommended by the Public Interest Commissioner but also by other bodies and came about as a result of a very thorough and exhaustive crossjurisdictional survey which was conducted and I think was very useful.

I would like to say that I think some of the particular improvements are the allowing for the direct reporting to the Public Interest Commissioner, which I think is a very positive step. The increase in investigative powers of the Public Interest Commissioner is also positive, and increasing the scope of the act to include parties doing work on behalf of government as contractors without necessarily being government employees is also positive.

I'd also like to point out that, whether this was because of the way the committee approached this issue or something else, this act does not do something that unfortunately we have seen in a number of other pieces of legislation put forward by this government, and that is that it does not fall into the trap of overreach. There was one recommendation that was put forward – and this wasn't a recommendation of the committee; it was a recommendation to the committee – and that was that whistle-blower protection be extended to the private sector. We considered that recommendation very, very carefully, and after some consideration, it was decided that that would not be something that we felt was a positive step for this legislation in Alberta.

I think that's a reflection of the balance that you have when you have an all-party committee studying these issues. You know, I would say that we've seen many examples of legislation brought forward by this government that represent overreach because that balance was not present in the development of the legislation. I think that's an example of how legislation can in fact be improved if a conscientious and thorough approach is taken.

I wanted to make just a couple of cautionary comments, though. The one that I'm a little concerned about is, again, the expanded role of the Labour Relations Board. We just had discussion on Bill 7, which creates a whole new section of the Labour Relations Board to specifically deal with postsecondary institutions. In this bill the Labour Relations Board is being charged to decide issues of reprisal and whether restitution for those who have suffered reprisals is appropriate and what the level of that restitution should be. This is, again, an expansion of the scope of the Labour Relations Board. I think this is something we need to keep an eye on. I'm not saying that the Labour Relations Board is a body that isn't capable or isn't competent to deal with these things, but I think we are adding additional duties to that board at an alarming rate. I think it's something that we have to keep an eye on, and that is also included in this piece of legislation.

I do want to loop back, though, to something that was said by the hon. Member for St. Albert and to a certain extent echoed by the Member for Calgary-Elbow when they were speaking about how this gives Alberta the most comprehensive whistle-blower protection act or legislation perhaps in Canada. That does not necessarily translate into making us, as the Member for St. Albert asserted, the most honest and transparent government in Canada. Having really good whistle-blower protection is extremely important, but in order to have good, transparent government, there has to be a culture that encourages whistle-blowing. It doesn't matter how good the protection for whistle-blowers is; if the workers within an organization are not encouraged to point out and to report upon wrongdoings when they see them and when they note them, then it doesn't matter how good the whistle-blower protection is.

I especially note that in my dealings with Alberta Health Services specifically. I think that is an organization we have some very profound challenges with because here within Alberta Health Services we have very dedicated individuals, but my experience when we conducted the rural health services review – and all of the workers for Alberta Health Services would have been protected by whistle-blower protection – was that there was still a reluctance to point out areas where employees of Alberta Health Services were prepared to disclose to our panel issues that they felt were important.

I think we have to be very cautious that we do not equate stronger legislation necessarily with more transparency. Stronger legislation is a tool and an important tool that could bring about or help bring about more honesty and transparency and openness in government. But it does not, in and of itself, create that. What creates that is a culture that, in fact, encourages whistle-blowing, that encourages an open and transparent government.

So I, too, will join with the other members who have spoken in supporting Bill 11. We are looking at the legislation very carefully, and we do believe that there are some minor amendments that would improve the legislation in terms of providing some additional clarity in certain clauses, and we will be running those through Legislative Counsel and seeing if we can bring those forward.

But overall, certainly, I'd like to thank the government for bringing this forward. This was a necessary part of the original public interest disclosure act, that this legislation be reviewed on a regular basis. That review has now been conducted. We have in front of us the updated bill, which I do think provides a number of significant improvements to the original bill, and I'm certainly going to be very supportive of the passage of Bill 11.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak to 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Yes. Under 29(2)(a), just a couple of comments. I first want to say that despite the fact that the member had local anaesthetic, it's great to see that he's still as articulate as always. The second thing is that I just wanted to thank my dentist for accommodating me tomorrow morning as well.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any members wishing to speak to the bill? The Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Going back and as has been referenced in relation to the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee, I had the opportunity to join this committee sort of mid-phase following the cabinet shuffle that we had back last February, and I really thought it was a great opportunity. I don't know if my midi-chlorian counts were a little bit higher, but I found that the bulk of times in committee we have had a lot of success of moving through reviews and moving through legislation, whether it's the Alberta's Economic Future Committee or whether it was us going through the whistle-blowers act.

For the record I would like to thank some of the people in this room who have really contributed to the hard work, whether it's our government whip, the members for Calgary-Elbow, Calgary-Bow, Edmonton-Decore, Edmonton-Whitemud – he wasn't on the committee, but he substituted pretty much all of the time – St. Albert, Vermilion-Lloydminster. I apologize if I missed anyone in relation to that.

I would be remiss on a day like today to not sort of reference popular culture in relation to the whistle-blower act. I took my kids to see Rogue One last December. Galen Erso was forced by the empire to build a death star, and I often think that a long, long time ago in a galaxy far, far away if there was whistle-blower protection and he didn't have fear of reprisal for coming forward, he might not have had to leak these death star plans, you know, and we wouldn't have had a hundred thousand people die when Luke Skywalker destroyed it.

Now, I know the Member for Edmonton-Decore is a Star Trek fan, so I want to also kind of give a Star Trek reference to this because I don't want to discriminate here. In the episode listed as Pegasus – and this is in the future now. Unfortunately, they have lost whistle-blower protections in the future. Commander Riker was forced to do this experiment with his captain – this was when he was an ensign – and it was unethical, and they weren't following some of the rules within Starfleet, and a lot of individuals unfortunately passed away. Fortunately, Riker moved up as commander, and then he could come forward to his captain about this, but he was actually very concerned about fear of reprisal. It's quite interesting to see that these references get brought forward.

I'm going to kind of underline a lot about reprisal. In my member's statement yesterday I referenced some of the issues that have been happening in workplace bullying with some of our local talent in the WWE. One of the things that has been outlined in that workplace is the fear of reprisal and them not having systems in place to protect people who are coming forward or any systems where someone can go to report any of these claims. It's disconcerting because that's actually a publicly traded company, and if people don't feel comfortable going to their superiors, where can they go when, unfortunately, there is no system in place?

It's remarkable, and it's important for us to really make sure that we're moving forward in relation to this. It was referenced that we wanted to avoid involving the private sector within the whistle-blower protection act. I actually agree, and I think we should avoid it because, in fact, a lot of the private sector has actually shown a lot of leadership in relation to it. In some instances – I would say that I will stand corrected once this bill is passed – there are some private-sector companies that actually exceed whistle-blower protection, and they have whether it's ethical lines or ethics lines or things like that, where you can actually protect your identity and come forward. Not only that, but they'll have remediation situations where if you've lost your job and it's been unethical, you can go back and either be posted somewhere else or have your job returned or receive some benefits in relation to it.

Speaking in relation to comments that were said by the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, you know, I have a lot of faith that as a lot more work is being put towards the Labour Relations Board, we'll continue to monitor this. But I think it's important that people who are experts on these matters, people who are trained to review a lot of this information, take on this leadership moving forward to help remediate a lot of the process here.

With that being said and since I've kind of made my Star Wars references, I move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

10:00 Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I would now like to call the committee to order.

Bill 8 An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government

The Deputy Chair: We are on amendment A2. Are there any members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Madam Chair. Good morning, everyone in the House today. I see that the Minister of Municipal Affairs may not be here. I had some questions for him, but I can ask some other . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member.

Mr. Stier: Okay. I apologize. I can't say that.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Mr. Stier: All right. Anyway, I noticed that, so I'll try to rephrase some of the stuff I was going to say, therefore. We're on an amendment, just to remind folks, with respect to the topic of a 5 to 1 ratio, and what we're seeking here is approval to set a timeline for this 5 to 1 ratio to be in place.

The current idea that is in the act that we're debating today is actually without a set timeline. We're concerned on this side, greatly, about that affecting the stability and the predictability of the area in terms of its commerce and trade. We're worried that the oil and gas industry in Alberta will be not able to plan as well if they don't know when these changes would be made exactly. How do you make a plan if you don't know when it's going to change? The current act does not specify. It just has sort of a nice, smooth, goody-goody, "We're going to do it one day" kind of a thing.

I would urge members in the House to have a look at the amendment that we're talking about. What I proposed here was to insert a change and put in a timeline that would give municipalities 10 years to comply with this idea rather than it being left out in the open. It has got some wording. In case you were not in the House when this was being presented before – and I don't know if you have the amendment in front of you today – I'll just read it quickly if I may, Madam Chair. I move that Bill 8, An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government, be amended in section 1(31)

(a) by striking out clause (b) and substituting the following:

(b) by adding the following after subsection (3):

(3.1) If in any year after 2016 a non-conforming municipality has a tax ratio that is greater than 5:1, the non-conforming municipality shall reduce its tax ratio . . . on or before May 1, 2029.

That is a request of 12 years from when this bill is proclaimed, to change it to be coming into effect then, more or less setting a threshold . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, are you introducing a new amendment?

Mr. Stier: No. This is A2. I'm just supplementing my comments on A2.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. As long as you're speaking to A2.

Mr. Stier: We're asking for a 12-year timeline for municipalities, especially some that have a higher tax ratio – there are about 22 of them – so that they know when the time horizon is set and so that the oil and gas industry knows when to see some of these phased-in changes so they can plan themselves. I remind everyone that municipalities are required to do three- and five-year finance plans in their budgets, et cetera, et cetera, capital plans. Without some specific timeline being put in, there is no real clear way that they can budget when they don't know what their revenue streams are going to look like.

Thank you, Madam Chair. That's all I have to add to this one, and I look forward to support on this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2?

Seeing none, I will put the question on the amendment.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are now back on the original bill. Are there any members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to stand once again to speak on Bill 8, and I guess I want to begin by reiterating how extensive the consultation was on this bill.

Certainly, I had many, many people in my constituency talk to me about it, from city councillors, the mayor, to people who were in my neighbourhood. I heard lots and lots of questions, so I want to share some of those questions with you this morning.

One of the questions I received was: shouldn't the courts remain the last safeguard to protect the rights of municipal councils and councillors? The response that I received was that the proposed change would not circumvent the court system, which would remain the final authority on such complaints and decisions. The courts would still have the ability to review a ministerial order, but the ministerial order would stay in effect until any court action or decision is made, to ensure smooth, seamless operations of municipalities. Allowing ministerial decisions to remain in place during the court challenges would be in the best interest of the public, whom the municipalities serve. I certainly believe that my municipality does an incredible job of serving my community, and I'm very thankful for that.

One of the other questions I received was: where would this leave councillors or municipal councils who disagree with the decisions of the Minister of Municipal Affairs? The council members could still go to the courts for review but would be required to alert the minister beforehand, which I think would be pretty basic protocol. The minister will only step in after careful review and study. The minister is not entitled to act arbitrarily. Through these proposed changes the minister would have more tools to ensure municipal compliance with ministerial decisions in the very rare instances where this scenario arises.

Third question. The municipal associations have raised concerns regarding the minister's ability to suspend bylaws, resolution-making authority, or to withhold money from an entire council for the actions of an individual councillor. Why is the government still considering these amendments? The proposed changes allow for an expanded suite of tools and enforcement mechanisms so the minister does not have to resort to dismissal immediately. These powers are only available to the minister as a last resort, after specific directives have been issued to a municipality and the municipality has failed to take the steps necessary, with corrective action set out in a directive.

The requirement to use any of these powers is not expected to arise except on rare occasions, as I said earlier. All reasonable efforts to resolve the situation must occur prior to the use of these tools. The proposed changes provide the minister with more tools to support compliance with ministerial orders and to address inter- and intramunicipal conflict. It will also empower the minister to respond in situations where an official administrator is in place.

Some questions were about environmental well-being. Don't municipalities already take environmental issues into consideration when making decisions? Many do, and certainly my community does, but specifically enabling municipalities to consider environmental well-being will encourage them to take a leadership role in addressing this critical issue and will better position them as key partners with the government of Alberta in addressing environmental matters.

Might this policy give municipalities a blank cheque to take land for environmental purposes? No. This wouldn't allow municipalities to adopt any policies or bylaws that are inconsistent with provincial policy or legislation. It would also not allow municipalities to take environmentally sensitive or valued land without proper compensation. This would empower municipalities to include environmental well-being in their planning and development policies.

Under off-site levies: will setting up such a system be difficult? Off-site levies are an enabling tool for municipalities. This amendment simply adds one more aspect of this tool. It will be up to municipalities to determine whether they wish to use this tool. Municipalities may choose to collaborate on shared off-site levies if they believe there are cross-boundary impacts and that an intermunicipal off-site levy makes sense to share the costs of the facility. Municipal Affairs is working with stakeholders throughout the province to develop further regulatory provisions that will also provide guidance on the requirements for establishing these levies.

On conservation reserves, identification transfers, compensation, disposal funds: why is there a need for clarification of the new conservation reserve category? Some stakeholders have expressed confusion regarding the differences between environmental reserves, ERs, and the new conservation reserve category. This clarification will address that confusion. Many municipalities saw ERs as a way to protect environmentally sensitive lands from development, but ERs are limited to lands that are undevelopable: gullies, swamps, and similar pieces of land. The ER designation is not specifically related to environmental conservation, although it may be a side effect in some cases. Conservation reserves are specifically meant to protect environmentally sensitive land – tree stands, wildlife corridors, et cetera – that could be developed if not protected. Municipalities must offer fair compensation to the developers to preserve these lands.

Why is the province allowing the removal of the conservation reserve designation? Isn't there always an environmental value to such land? In some instances the environmental value of the land may be lost due to unforeseen circumstances outside of the control of the municipalities such as wildfires or floods. In cases where there is no chance of rehabilitation of that land, the MGA could help municipalities better use that land, instead of having it stand empty, while ensuring that the proceeds remain for conservation purposes.

How will you ensure that municipalities don't use the conservation reserve designation and removal of the designation as a way to grab land for future development? Municipalities will have to pay appropriate compensation to the developers for conservation reserves. If the municipality wishes to remove the conservation reserve designation, it will be required to hold a public hearing to allow residents to have a say in that decision. Further, any proceeds from selling former conservation reserve lands will be required to be dedicated to conservation purposes. The municipality wouldn't be able to put their money into general revenue.

On compliance with linked tax rate ratio: why wasn't a sunset clause put into the original policy change under the Modernized Municipal Government Act? Certainly, this speaks to the previous member's comments. We want to hear from municipalities, industry, and residents on how best to support affected municipalities in lowering high ratios. I know that in my community the ratio is 2.59 to 1, so we're well underneath the ratio, and I certainly hope that the 22 communities that aren't are going to get there.

We want to make sure that municipalities don't have to make drastic changes and have sufficient time to adjust to assessment growth rather than changes to residential tax rates. Municipal Affairs will work with the affected municipalities and other stakeholders in developing the regulation. The regulation will be posted online for public engagement over a 60-day period for feedback. There is no rush to put timelines in place. We will take the time to get this right. This regulation would not be put in place before the municipal election this fall.

If a sunset clause does move forward, won't residential taxpayers have to pay more? No. If the nonresidential tax base also grows in these municipalities, it may not be necessary to raise residential tax rates to move to compliance over a reasonable period of time. The province is committed to working with municipalities and taxpayers to develop a reasonable approach to achieving the 5 to 1 ratio, one that minimizes the impact on residential property owners. As they always must, municipal councils will have to make reasonable budgetary decisions for their community.

What time frame does the minister consider appropriate for municipalities to become compliant? We recognize that affected municipalities will require the time to adjust and plan for that change. What is in the bill is the flexibility to create a regulation in close consultation with affected communities. If a regulation is created, it will not be done quickly. It will be developed by working closely with those affected municipalities in an open and transparent way that values community feedback.

On access to assessment information: why is this change necessary or needed? Municipalities don't currently have the right to access assessment information on designated industrial property, DIP, over which Municipal Affairs will take responsibility through changes to the MGA. Municipalities will need this information as one of the partners in the assessment process. Municipalities have a stake in ensuring that assessments are prepared properly. Giving them a right to access assessment information would ensure that the assessment process is transparent.

If I'm an industry representative, how can I know that sensitive information about my company will be kept confidential if municipalities have access? Municipalities will have to sign a confidentiality agreement to protect sensitive information. This change will ensure the new, centralized industrial assessment process is transparent and fair to all parties involved. This will help build trust as the province assumes responsibility for the industrial assessment.

Tax receipts. A good time to talk about this. Why can't taxpayers automatically receive tax receipts for their payments? Taxpayers may request and receive receipts from their municipality any time they'd like. It is costly and time consuming for municipalities to provide receipts, particularly where it may be largely unnecessary. This change helps municipalities to save money, reducing the cost to taxpayers.

What is the government trying to hide by not providing tax receipts? All taxpayers will receive receipts when they ask for them.

Will there be a fee for taxpayers to receive receipts? There will be no fee for this service.

Taxation of provincial agencies. Why are you bringing a change that maintains current practice? In other words, why is there a need for clarity for Alberta's agencies, boards, and commissions on paying their municipal taxes? A recent assessment appeal decision found that one of Alberta's agencies should be exempted from property tax. This decision has highlighted that the MGA was not clear enough in setting out the intention that provincial agencies, boards, and commissions should be paying property tax. This formally adds clarity to the MGA that Alberta's agencies, boards, and commissions as defined under the Financial Administration Act must pay municipal taxes as good corporate citizens.

How many agencies, boards, and commissions don't pay their municipal taxes? At the moment we are only aware of one case based upon an assessment appeal decision, but without this amendment other agencies may wish to file similar appeals. The majority of provincial agencies that lease properties pay property taxes through their lease.

Why are you requiring these ABCs to pay taxes instead of the government paying grants in lieu of taxes to the municipalities for these properties, as the province itself does on property it owns?

Having ABCs paying taxes directly is more administratively efficient through the existing tax structure and provides greater certainty for the affected municipalities.

What about the property tax exemption set out in the MGA such as those for Alberta Health Services, housing management bodies, schools, colleges, and universities? Will they continue to be exempt? Yes. The amendments do not impact these exemptions. Exemptions will continue to be provided to qualifying properties in recognition of their public benefit.

Do other provinces in Canada tax their provincial agencies, boards, and commissions? In every province property owned or occupied by the federal or provincial government is exempt from taxation. However, the provinces vary in the taxation of provincial agencies, boards, and commissions. In B.C. ABCs such as the provincial lottery corporation and BC Assessment are subject to property taxes. In Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and Ontario only ABCs named specifically through relevant legislation are exempt from property tax, but they are still subject to a grant in lieu. Other ABCs in these provinces are subject to taxation.

All of those questions are questions that came from stakeholders and citizens, so I think this exemplifies just how much and the kind and quality of consultation that has occurred with the development of this act.

With that, I'll sit down and take another break. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm having a lot of trouble with all the paperwork here today – it's covering my microphone – and all other kinds of things at once.

I'd like to take this opportunity to thank the Member for Lethbridge-East for her remarks today. They're appreciated. Certainly, our side here does understand the nature of a lot of the segments of the bill that have come forward, and we don't have a lot of issues with a lot of these things – conservation and parental care and all that kind of stuff, aboriginal issues, et cetera, all great things – but we still take a lot of issue with this 5 to 1 ratio. So, Madam Chair, I would like to bring to the House another amendment, please. If I could get the pages to come and pick that up, and then I'll make some comments as soon as that's delivered.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, your amendment will be referred to as A3. Please go ahead.

Mr. Stier: Yes. Thank you. I was just waiting for the delivery. It's being held up.

Ladies and gentlemen and hon. members, in other words, I'd just like to talk a little bit more about the subject at hand. We talked about it a little this morning. I want to talk about, certainly, three or four words that are coming to mind here on this issue. One of the three words is "uncertainty." Uncertainty is a very, very difficult thing to nail down, but uncertainty in a marketplace, uncertainty in business, uncertainty in your life is extremely important. The way this bill is currently worded, it is full of that, and in this particular segment, the 5 to 1 ratio, there's no certainty of time.

I'm just going to read now. I think a lot of you have got that amendment close to you now. It basically is the same wording as the previous amendment, but I do have to read that out loud. I move that Bill 8, An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government, be amended in section 1(31)

- (a) by striking out clause (b) and substituting the following:
- (b) by adding the following after subsection (3):

(3.1) If in any year after 2016 a non-conforming municipality has a tax ratio that is greater than 5:1, the non-conforming municipality shall reduce its tax ratio to 5:1 on or before May 1, 2027.

This is a 10-year horizon that we're suggesting. The last one was 12. We are, please, asking for some sort of guaranteed timeline to be put in with some sort of phased approach – it's all we're looking for – a deadline, some sort of an idea that the people in the municipality administration can plan for, where the people in the offices of downtown Calgary, where we're having such difficulty today, can plan for prosperity, hopefully. The oil and gas industry so much needs these kinds of predictability issues and sustainability. What we have now in the act as it is is basically a trust-me clause: trust me that at some point we're going to come and we're going to put something in. How can municipalities plan on a trust-me clause? How can they do their three- and five-year plans when they do not know what their revenue stream is going to be like?

We've talked a lot about Fort McMurray with this, of course, because it's one of the 22 municipalities that has the largest variance. That is a rural municipality, and it's interesting to see what the AAMD and C has to say about this clause. I'm quoting from the AAMD and C briefing on Bill 8, April 2017, on page 12.

The AAMDC supports the ability for municipalities to be exempt for the 5:1 ratio where appropriate. The AAMDC will look to be involved in the development of this [proposed] regulation.

The previous iteration of the proposed legislation found that the Continuing the Conversation document included the option for the Minister to exempt a municipality from the 5:1 ratio. The AAMDC will be looking for the inclusion of this exemption in the regulation.

Wood Buffalo is a rural municipality, and I think that their comments are relevant.

Now, let's just have a look at the AUMA while we're at it. The AUMA said similar things in some respects. They said on page 19 of their document that AUMA also supports providing the Minister with the authority to exempt a municipality indefinitely from the 5:1 ratio as this would allow for specialized municipalities, such as Jasper . . .

They used that as an example.

. . . to be accommodated under the framework.

I would suggest to you that the two most important associations in the municipal world have some concerns with the way the bill is written. We're suggesting that we can fix their concerns. We're suggesting that the way to fix that is to put a timeline in. We have been in touch and I know that the government has been in touch with municipalities like Wood Buffalo. They have suggested a timeline. A definite period would be so important to them. We've talked to the oil and gas industry, and it is a revenue generator for this country we call Canada. They need predictability. The investment market needs predictability. They do not need uncertainty. They need to have some sort of way to look forward and say: yes, we can plan now because we know how this is going to go and when it's going to go.

Some of those big projects in that area, as an example in Fort McMurray, take a long time. Knowing what's going to be going ahead 10 years from now is vitally important. I do not understand this, and I know that the Leader of the Official Opposition, the Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin, is extremely concerned about this. We are fine with the rest of this bill, but we may have a problem supporting this bill if a timeline is not put into this clause.

I would ask all members to please look at this amendment that I have. It's A3. It's in front of you now. It's a 10-year horizon. It's a 10-year timeline. I would urge all members to give this, please, some good, serious consideration.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member. You'll be able to table copies of the two reports you referenced this afternoon, please? Thank you.

Are there any hon. members wishing to speak to amendment A3? The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the amendment and the spirit that it was offered in. However, I'm going to have to recommend to my colleagues that we vote down the amendment, and that's for good reason.

Now, the hon. member just spoke about Wood Buffalo specifically and their concerns. However, of course, there are 20 municipalities in the province that are affected by the indexing. In the consultations earlier – and I know that the members of the opposition received those documents. I mean, that's one part where consensus was a little bit more difficult to find. Of course, sometimes you just need to make decisions, but sometimes you don't get consensus for good reasons, and in this sense this seems to be one of those, in that 10 years just might not be long enough for some municipalities. It may work for some but perhaps not for others. Indeed, some municipalities may require longer than 10 years in order to get to the ratio. This is why we want to consult with municipalities over the next year or so to determine what can work specifically for municipalities. You know, 10 years maybe in some instances would work, but it does not provide the ability to develop a plan that's going to work for every municipality. I'm sorry. Well, 2027: it is 10 years.

Once again, I do appreciate the intent behind the amendment. I think we're on the same page in the sense that, you know, over time we need to do something about these indexes. I think that providing some integrated flexibility into the process is going to be to the benefit of the municipalities in question as well as the province.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. McIver: Well, I'll be brief, but I can't help but notice and remember that yesterday the government argued that the 12-year time span that the hon. member brought forward with an earlier amendment was too long, and we just heard that the 10-year is too short. Perhaps we're zeroing in on the right number. Perhaps the government wants 11. I just can't help but notice, and it's so obvious that it just needs to be said out loud, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Madam Chair. Predictable, stable funding: that is what is key here. With all due respect to the previous government, they didn't really provide that to a lot of the municipalities, in particular Fort McMurray. Quite honestly, we had to fend for ourselves up there at a time when they were allocating so many leases to these oil companies, expanding them, tripling them, hundreds and hundreds of hectares of land being provided to be developed for oil sands. Not once did they consider twinning that highway to allow those large vessels to go by that people like me had to follow behind at 30 kilometres an hour. They did not consider the hazards of all this.

They didn't consider the fact that Fort McMurray is a landlocked community, and because it was landlocked by Crown land, of all things, we could not expand. We could not buy a farm on our border's edge and develop this piece of land that's already cleared, already drained, and is growing what might have been a crop and turned that into a housing division. Fort McMurray has never ever had that opportunity. It was always restrained by this provincial government. That is why that community had to take into its own hands that 18 to 1 ratio. They didn't choose 18 to 1; it just evolved into that.

It goes back to the predictability and the stable funding formula that was never provided. The reason why it wasn't provided is because, quite honestly, our province experienced more boom-and-bust cycles than any other province out there. It was very cyclical events that were occurring in this province, and, you know, I don't believe that our provincial governments at the time truly understood these dynamics. The people who were advising those politicians truly didn't grasp what was going on while these cycles were happening, but certainly when you live in a community, you experience it greatly, especially when it is so far, so isolated, and, quite honestly, so restrained in its ability to grow.

It's an interesting thing, this Bill 8. Actually, there's a lot of housekeeping and whatnot. There are a lot of things like, if I understood correctly when I read it, that 90 per cent of it seemed to be quite decent and good for a lot of other municipalities. The problem is that we do have a diversity of regions in our province here, and even though there are many municipalities that are outside that 5 to 1 range, it is the one community in particular which chances on being impacted negatively the most. It would absolutely destroy the community. Now, I understand this government wants to do that because of the oil sands and whatnot. No, I understand, Madam Chair. You guys are being pragmatic. That's why you still keep pipeline protestors on your council. It's an interesting thing.

On the flip side, this is interesting as we're starting to find out that communities that aren't at that 5 to 1 are very much looking towards this because it gives them a reason to raise their taxes. I think that it is very unfortunate if they do that because they've gotten to their tax ratios because they've evolved to a system they thought was appropriate. For them to simply use this as an excuse to raise their tax ratios to 5 to 1: that's another negative implication of this, which I think this government needs to truly reassess.

That said, my good friend from Livingstone-Macleod has really provided a reasonable amendment, 10 years. If you choose to make an amendment to this to be more specific toward one community, I would not argue that, but understand that these things cannot happen overnight, and they can't happen over just a few years. Again, it's about whether your desire is to destroy a community quickly or a little bit slower.

You know, 10 years is reasonable for a community to adapt. They've hired a good conservative CEO who believes in fiscal responsibility, and she's doing her best to try to identify ways that we can reduce our spending in that community. Recognize that we did have to do a lot of our own stuff. We had to build a lot of our own roads, a lot of our own infrastructure, things that other communities might have to take for granted because they had elected that right MLA from previous governments to stand up for them, but Fort McMurray hasn't always been so lucky. For the most part, we've always had people on the outside. We just enjoyed being the opposition up there, where we had backbenchers who really didn't say a lot. Ten years is a reasonable amount, and I think a community like Fort McMurray could certainly adapt to that.

Again, we have to look at the reasons why. We were given no support, no finances, no money. We had to build our own things. We had to apply and buy land from the government in order to develop it so that we could build homes for the workers.

Unfortunately, the province provided so little to them, to Fort McMurray, that the oil companies built their own airports. There are approximately six, seven, or eight airports up in that region, around there anyway, scattered throughout that entire region, full-fledged airports with full-on emergency crash, fire personnel that attend to these things. These companies fly these people in and out of that region. They're not just flying to Edmonton and Calgary. They're flying to Newfoundland. They're flying to Toronto. They're flying to Kelowna. All these people that are coming up to work aren't even paying taxes in our province because they're claiming it all when they go home.

They use the local hospital. I asked our Health minister in estimates if they have an idea of how much, and she could not identify that number, but from my previous history in my previous job and my role being privy to a lot of this information, we were gathering that number at approximately a million a year that the Northern Lights hospital was losing to out-of-town, out-of-province people who are using our services, our doctors, our nurses, our medical care but were not paying in the Alberta health care, were not paying taxes here in Alberta. They did not claim it back in New Brunswick or Quebec or Ontario or B.C. or wherever they are from. Again, these are little things that add to the impacts, but these are also things that compound the situation where a community like Fort McMurray had to come up with its own methods.

Quite honestly, that is the epitome right across our province of how each municipality had to adapt. Fortunately for them, they have a Wildrose opposition now who believes in some stable funding that is predictable and would provide every municipality with some good ability to forecast and to grow appropriately and to plan. I know these things might be unheard of, but it's very possible.

I do appreciate the fact that the member across the way mentioned that 10 years might not be long enough for some communities, and I agree with him. How long is a reasonable time? Again, the government side is saying all the right things, that we have to consult and discuss, but also understand that the first times you said that you were discussing and consulting with the municipality of Wood Buffalo, the municipality of Wood Buffalo hadn't been approached yet. So I would certainly counter some of those arguments, but it's neither here nor there. You're now talking to us up there. You know, I was even able to talk to the leader of the government there yesterday at a fine restaurant in Fort McMurray, who assured me: we will be discussing, and we will work with the municipality. I certainly cross my fingers and hope that she wouldn't mislead me, but we will see.

That said, I would ask that we do support this clause, this amendment from my good friend from Livingstone-Macleod and, at the very least, that you consider – if you don't quite like this amendment, then make an amendment to the amendment to make it what you think would fit, but recognize that 10 years is a reasonable amount. If you vote against this, I will be just so saddened by that. I will hope that we can come to an agreement on this because we are fighting for our many municipalities. It's not your fault. It's them. All right? They set up the stage for us from previous years, which is why every municipality is out of whack, but understand that you can't fix everything that they did overnight. It's reasonable to ask for a period of time, all right?

Mr. Hanson: Ten years.

Mr. Yao: Ten years. Address each community individually. Recognize the hurdles that they have. If you don't understand the hurdles, then I ask that you guys come up to Fort McMurray. I want you to do a caucus retreat up there. You guys can all stay at my pad. I'll host you, and I'll show you guys what Fort McMurray is all about and what a community there is. We'll show you everything that Fort McMurray had to build on its own, without any provincial support. I will show you an overpass that an oil company built. My good friend from Calgary-Foothills, actually, was the manager of that project, where an oil company actually had to build highway structures. Syncrude Canada also built some highway. It is considered one of the largest dams in the world. They had to build their own road because, again, the province wasn't providing at a time when they decided to give $400 or $800.

You know, God bless our former Premier. I really liked him, but his last manoeuvres were a bit – I refer to Premier Klein. I loved the man, but his last decision to hand out money instead of building infrastructure was disappointing. But he knew his finances; he knew how to balance budgets. I wish you guys would learn something from him, perhaps.

With that, I will stand down. [interjection] I know. It's easy to spend money, isn't it? Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Madam Chair and to the member from Wood Buffalo. Obviously, we recognize that municipalities require time to adjust. In fact, the ministry has been in touch with the mayor in Wood Buffalo, well, since September, anyway, trying to work on this. I believe that the amount of time for any of the 22 municipalities to adjust may vary. That's why we'll certainly work with each municipality to develop a plan. Ten years may be a good time frame for one municipality, but what about the others? We need to develop local plans to ensure stability and the right plan for that municipality. I appreciate that you've put that forward, but I think that we have to work with each municipality, and then we'll see how things will actually settle in the end.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are now back on the original bill. Are there any members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you and good morning, everyone. I'm happy to speak on Bill 8, An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government. This is in respect to a couple of aspects. The first piece I'd like to speak to is the joint use of the agreements, and the second piece is with respect to parental leave.

Generally the AUMA, the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, and the AAMD and C, the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, and Wildrose are supportive of this legislation, and they would definitely advocate for greater co-operation. There are questions around the collaborative pieces, around work and best practices with respect to school divisions. Some of these clarifications are around utilization versus joint planning. Planning incorporates the aspects of school properties and reserves, the planning and servicing and understanding of those future builds.

How is the government going to make sure that transparency will be created in those joint-use agreements? What are the templates that are going to be used to help facilitate these agreements? What will the process look like? It's one thing to state that there is going to be a process, and it's another thing to know and understand what that process will actually be.

As I've stated, we support the agreement, but we need some definitions, and the committee accountability has yet to be addressed. As the AUMA has stated with respect to determining access for facilities, municipalities at times have had their access denied, so how is the government planning on dealing with these situations in the most transparent and accountable way without being heavy handed and also inclusive of local decision-making?

I've personally not seen any information with respect to stakeholder outreach to school authorities to understand how this joint agreement impacts school divisions, so I'd like to hear from the minister about that consultation and what he might be hearing from school boards. We have multiple school divisions in some municipalities, which, for obvious reasons, will make these potential agreements a whole lot more complex.

I think it's probably reasonable to ask about some sort of template with regard to the understanding of how these municipalities and school divisions are going to hash out the details of their usage of these sites. I think that those templates really need to be provided. Will the government be using its oversight to assist with these templates? There are a lot of details that need to be addressed, and as the municipal associations have long advocated for these changes, it is imperative that all stakeholders have been and will continue to be brought into those discussions.

Aside from those questions, I also have a few other questions with respect to the agreements. How does the government plan to provide conflict resolution and make sure that the agreements are indeed agreed upon and then followed through on? How will the government address the joint use of land development and the use of monies that are available, whether that is individually through school boards and through the municipalities or in those joint uses?

One especially interesting situation is when one municipality sends its students to another municipality for school. This is evident in my constituency. There are students from Conrich and other surrounding areas that populate our schools in Chestermere. What happens when a school building and land are no longer in use and the municipality is interested in repurposing a building? Should the building and land be returned to the municipality at no cost? That's just one question.

Our school boards and municipalities have many complex details to work out between them. There are many different municipalities, obviously, and they are diverse and unique in their needs. We have large cities, medium-sized cities, towns, hamlets, and everything in between, so a one-size-fits-all approach will not work.

Equally distinct are the school boards. In fact, we just passed the Northland School Division Act based on the unique needs of a school board and the wards and the councils in that area. How is the ministry going to help with the consultations with all of these unique and distinct areas, the follow-up, and then the negotiations all the while respecting the autonomy of the municipalities and the school boards? How will funding be determined, if there is any, for providing assistance for online templates, as suggested by the AAMD and C? We have a lot of small municipalities – small, small, small municipalities – and they're going to need some assistance with organizing these templates and creating those templates in order to make sure that these joint agreements work. I would appreciate any answers that the minister can give me on this topic.

The second topic I'd like to speak about is with respect to parental leave. Many in the House have already spoken with respect to this. Bill 8, obviously, within its mandate aims to improve accountability in municipalities, to increase transparency, to help nurture viable communities, to help build relationships between municipalities and the province. With respect to changes to parental leave, as has been stated, there are already provisions for those municipal councillors who may require leave and were given leave on a case-by-case basis for extended parental leave without fear of disqualification but that lack the authority presently to provide ongoing standards for this leave. This would be a change within that entire system.

There's an opportunity for municipalities to be able to create environments that will bring in many more people, young families if they're able to accommodate the need for extended leave. Public service, as we all know, is extremely overwhelming and really changes the dynamics of family life. We want to see many of these people come forward, including new parents, to run for office at various levels of government – this just makes for better communities – and to provide workplaces that allow for folks to be able to come forward and represent to their ability.

The amendment will allow parental leave without fear of disqualification as councillors will be exempt from this outcome. The amendment does not take away from local autonomy as it clearly states that the council will determine the how, especially as a gap will be created with that leave. That local autonomy, obviously, is incredibly important for a council to be able to understand how to make sure that the business of council continues when an important member is missing as a result of parental leave.

This part of the legislation is really about the ability to engage more Albertans and to encourage more people to run. We support this. This is positive, and it strengthens the legislation.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today to move an amendment to Bill 8. I have the requisite number of copies here.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you. Just wait until I have the original, please.

Mr. Gotfried: I will.

The Deputy Chair: Your amendment will be referred to as A4. Please go ahead.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the members for indulging me in this. It's a fairly long amendment, so I hope that you'll all have a chance to peruse the intentions and the wording.

Madam Chair, this amendment is intended to provide balance in the business and contractual relationship and, hopefully, goodwill between land developers and municipalities by preventing a situation which could be costly for all concerned with respect to the cancellation or significant amendment of a previously agreed to conservation reserve designation, hence impacting land and housing affordability in a situation where a municipality designates a conservation reserve in good faith, but then when the time comes to complete the transaction for the designated land parcel, they reconsider due to financial or other considerations, thereby disrupting the entire development process, adding time and costs to the development, which ultimately affect the end purchasers, and/or using the change in priorities, preferences, or direction as a latent negotiating tactic.

What might also be a consideration, particularly in a year of municipal elections, is the potential for significant change in the direction of government or elected officials, thereby challenging the sanctity and goodwill of prior commitments. I reluctantly mention cancelled PPAs and resulting lawsuits in the same breath as an example of risks associated for both parties with long-term capital investments.

Madam Chair, we need housing for Albertans, we need affordability for housing for Albertans, and we need to respect that the private sector as our partners are the primary providers of the risk, capital, and expertise needed to meet the housing needs of Albertans. As much as we need to ensure sustainability on the municipal side of this equation, which we agree with and which has been almost unanimously endorsed by the development community in Alberta, we also need to ensure viability, sustainability, or, at the very least, certainty to investors, professional land developers, and builders in their relationships with local authorities in delivering quality, cost-effective housing solutions.

Madam Chair, may I remind this House that the industry we speak of here is not a gathering of big, bad, greedy capitalists but a group of community-spirited Albertans, renowned for their philanthropy and reinvestment in the communities in which they develop and build. I cite the good work of the Resolve campaign in Calgary, a gathering of community-spirited leaders, both individually and corporately, from the development and building industry in that city, a bold $120 million reach goal to assist some of our province's most compassionate and experienced nonprofit housing organizations by providing 3,000 affordable rental units through nine housing organizations: Accessible Housing Society; Alpha House; Calgary Homeless Foundation; Silvera for Seniors; the Mustard Seed; Trinity Place Foundation; Horizon Housing, where I just attended a sod-turning last week presided over by your own Minister of Seniors and Housing; and more.

Madam Chair, Resolve has a leadership group of 11 Calgary-based philanthropic builders providing funding expertise and leadership and raising funds for our most vulnerable. I will also note that this is an industry that not only provides a risk capital but that in doing so, employs thousands of Albertans, not just employing them but providing a model for workplace success, safety, and good, stable, mortgage-paying jobs.

Madam Chair, I was blessed to work for one of those companies and community-spirited leaders, not just one of Canada's platinum 50 best-managed companies but also a decade-long plus recognition as one of Canada's best workplaces as voted primarily through an employee survey. The same ownership group has provided significant philanthropic support for such organizations or causes as kids cancer research, Chinese Community Service, Children's Hospital Foundation, University of Calgary medical research, Bow Valley College, Immigrant Services Calgary, SAIT, UNICEF, Canadian Red Cross, Boys & Girls Clubs Big Brothers Big Sisters, Kids Up Front, GlobalFest, Habitat for Humanity, and more. I believe our Minister of Advanced Education was just at an event, also, cutting ribbons for a new facility partially funded by that organization.

Madam Chair, I can cite dozens of examples of similar acts of philanthropy and community commitments from many, many other members of the building and development community. Many have also received trailblazer awards from the Alberta Construction Safety Association and have been recognized by WCB for thousands of hours of incident-free work sites, another very important factor and consideration for Albertans. Make no mistake. This industry represents more than just a successful, hard-working, risk-taking group of builders and developers; they are indeed community builders.

Is it an unreasonable request to ask for a small, added measure of certainty in the risks associated with their capital investment? How else will we meet the needs of our economy? If we are in fact blessed with modest economic growth and positive net immigration in the near future, who will we rely upon to provide housing supply and affordability? Who will we turn to for funding, expertise, and leadership in meeting our affordable housing needs? And who will we turn to in supporting our vulnerable, particularly when government coffers are challenged and many charities and nonprofits rely on the generosity and philanthropy of the private sector, which I would argue is overrepresented with respect to members of the development and building industry relative to the size of their operations, revenue, jobs, and profits they generate?

Let's also not forget the risks associated with such long-term investments, particularly during times of economic uncertainty, as sadly reflected in the recent seeking of creditor protection by a well-established Alberta company with over 35 years of market experience. Such are the risks associated with significant capital outlays and long-term, patient investment each and every day.

To be clear, we fully support the concept that a municipality may include policies addressing a newly proposed conservation reserve designation, including identifying additional types and locations of environmentally significant areas with the environmental purpose of conservation and how it might serve to further enhance the nature and design of new communities. We have heard no arguments from the building industry on that point, but we also believe that the identification and a firm commitment to conservation reserve lands must be done as early in the planning process as possible and include some certainty.

A key component that is missing from the proposed policies, Madam Chair, is that a more balanced and respectful approach would include provisions that require municipalities to follow through with the purchase of lands once they have been identified and designated as conservation reserve in statutory plans. This would ensure no waste of time, resources, or the burden of unnecessary costs being added to the development process, which, by the way, is always passed on to the end customer, often with added carrying costs, and, as importantly, puts some structure to the goodwill that I think we would all expect in such an agreement, commitment, or transaction.

Madam Chair, I am imploring all members of this House to do the right thing by not only supporting the municipalities and communities we serve but to incorporate and protect the right to fair and balanced practices with respect to those companies and individuals who truly build our communities, who take risks every day, who are entitled to reasonable returns on that risk as we in government provide the structure, infrastructure, and stability to encourage such investments for the betterment of life and affordability for all Albertans.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Madam Chair. On behalf of the Minister of Municipal Affairs I'd like to sincerely thank the member for his amendment. Now, Minister Anderson and Municipal Affairs have put significant analysis into the proposed changes. They understand what the member is trying to do with this amendment and do respect the spirit of what he's trying to do; however, we're not prepared to support it, and just give me a few moments to explain why.

Conservation reserve is a new tool that we introduced into the MGA in Bill 21 last year, as no doubt the member is aware. What was in place before was only environmental reserve. Now, through consultation we heard concerns over the differing interpretations on the intention of an environmental reserve, and it was this lack of clarity about the purpose and definition of such a reserve that led to an inconsistent application of the provisions, which – and I think the member addressed it, too – was probably a little unfair to developers. That's indeed why we've created a new type of reserve called conservation reserve, and this conservation reserve allows municipalities to protect lands of environmental value but would also require the municipalities to provide adequate compensation to developers for conservation reserve since the land will be set aside and conserved instead of being developed.

Now, we've carefully constructed this conservation reserve tool, and we think that making this amendment, especially with regard to inserting language around municipal development plans or area structure plans, would severely hamstring municipalities. Municipal development plans and area structure plans are long-range strategic planning instruments that identify broad patterns of development at a higher level than the detail that this amendment proposes. Because of this, we can't support this amendment. What we're doing is we're looking to find balance with this new tool of conservation reserve, and we're going to need to allow conservation reserve time to be implemented before entertaining further amendments, not to say that that might not happen sometime down the road.

Once again we'd like to thank the member for the time and consideration he put into this well-intentioned proposal and for sharing it with us 24 hours in advance, just as we did with the House amendment considered yesterday. At the end of the day, we're all doing our best to serve Albertans, and we sincerely appreciate the member's contribution to this important conversation about the MGA, but unfortunately I cannot recommend that colleagues support this amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A4?

Mr. Gotfried: If I'm allowed a small response, Madam Chair, that would be – and thank you to the member for your comments – that indeed we have worked hard to try and make this a palatable amendment that could be accepted. To the member, I hope that as time goes on we'll have an opportunity to review the viability and the current structure of the legislation.

It is my concern, of course, that hamstringing is certainly something that could occur. However, if developers choose not to bring their projects forward because of the enhanced or increased risk around the conservation reserves, that may not come to bear and they may not have the work that they need and we may not see that investment in the land. We may be hitting the pause button in Alberta at this point in time, which is allowing, I think, an industry which has often gone at breakneck pace to catch up.

However, if we see positive net migration continuing, we will hopefully be back in a situation in the future whereby we need to ensure that both municipalities and the developers are working very closely together to ensure that we have not just the land supply, which is one issue in itself, but the housing supply so that we don't see the rapid escalation in prices through the coming forth of many speculators, which deeply affect the marketplace when they see that there's an opportunity through reduced supply or inadequate supply to actually jack up the prices even further. I'm always very concerned about that and the impact that can have, and that's why I believe that that relationship of mutual risk and understanding and, I guess, consideration for certainty in that relationship is one that is well developed, that is well respected from both sides.

I'm hopeful that what you're saying with respect to the current legislation is true. I believe that an opportunity for greater certainty is something that would help us to ensure we have that affordability and supply of housing that we need for Albertans.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The Deputy Chair: We are now back on the original bill. Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

Mr. Gotfried: Madam Chair, I rise to propose a further amendment to Bill 8, and I have the requisite number of copies here.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member. Your amendment will be referred to as A5. If you can please just wait until I have the original.

Mr. Gotfried: Madam Chair, it's a short amendment. Would you like me to read it while it's being distributed?

The Deputy Chair: Yes. If you could read it into the record, please. Thank you.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that Bill 8, An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government, be amended in section 2 by striking out subsection (19) and substituting the following:

- (19) Section 116 is amended in the new section 664.2
 - (a) in subsection (1)(d) by adding "and area structure plan" after "municipal development plan";
 - (b) in subsection (2) by striking out "received" and substituting "approved".

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak to the amendment? Please go ahead, and then I'll recognize the minister.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you. Madam Chair, I will not belabour this. This is in a similar vein to the previous amendment. However, what this one does is to just provide perhaps a smaller level of certainty with respect to transactions involving conservation reserves. In short, this amendment will require municipalities to follow through with the purchase of any lands once they've been designated as conservation reserves in a statutory plan.

Madam Chair, the objective of this one, again, is to provide that certainty for long-term investment by the building and development community so that they can move ahead with those plans, so that they can ensure that there are no surprises as they go through the development process and that there's no change in designation through time that could cost them time, cost them further money, or, in some cases, a complete redesign of a development plan that has already been submitted and approved, with the agreed-upon conservation reserve lands.

This could be a significant parcel of land. It could impact significantly the affordability of that development. It could incur significant cost with respect to redesign and redevelopment of those lands. It deeply concerns me that we don't have that level of certainty, that's going to encourage that risk capital to come forward, to make sure that we have that adequate land supply in a timely manner but, again, to provide affordable housing and housing affordability for Albertans.

Everything we do to layer on costs, everything we do to delay the process puts Albertans at risk, particularly, again, if we're lucky enough in this province to move towards economic growth and to move towards stronger net in-migration. We need to be ready for this, and the only way to be ready for it is through co-operation and collaboration between governments, municipal governments in this case, and the building and development industry to ensure that strong collaborative relationship.

Madam Chair, I'm going to proceed again here to encourage all members of this House. This is a modest change, a minor change in wording to allow for some certainty in the process, some certainty in the investment, some certainty in that risk capital, that has no guarantees, as, again, we've seen with some of the financial challenges facing the industry now, to provide some certainty in making those long-term investments, both local investments and international investments coming into this province, to make those today to ensure we have the developable land, the land supply, and the building opportunities going forward.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak to amendment A5? The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to sincerely thank the member for his amendment. I understand what the member is trying to do with this amendment, and I respect the spirit of what he's trying to do. I've had some conversations with my planning department about the amendment, and at this time I'm not prepared to support it.

Let me explain why. Conservation reserve is a new tool we introduced in the MGA with Bill 21 last year. What was in place before was only environmental reserve. Through consultation we had concerns over the different interpretations of the intention of an environmental reserve. The lack of clarity about the purpose and definition of such a reserve led to an inconsistent application of the provisions, which was probably a little unfair to developers, and that's why we created a new type of reserve called a conservation reserve. A conservation reserve allows municipalities to protect lands of environmental value but would also require municipalities to provide appropriate compensation to developers for a conservation reserve since the land will be set aside in reserve instead of developed.

We've carefully constructed this conservation reserve, too, and we think that making this amendment, especially with regard to inserting language around municipal development plans or area structure plans, would severely hamstring municipalities. Municipal development plans and area structure plans are long-range strategic planning instruments that identify broad patterns of development at a higher level than the detail that this amendment proposes.

I can't support this amendment at this time on this basis. We are looking to find the balance with this new tool of conservation reserve, and we're going to need to allow the conservation reserve time to be implemented before entertaining further amendments.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A5? Seeing none, I will call the question.

[Motion on amendment A5 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are now back on the original bill. Are there any members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Yeah. I will keep it short, Madam Chair. I rise today to talk about the proposed changes, of course, to the Municipal Government Act and, more specifically, to the proposed changes that grant broader powers to the minister. While both the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties and the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association have generally been in favour of most of the MGA amendments, in this particular instance they share a few concerns that I want to voice now.

At the very core of this is the belief that municipal autonomy must remain a key foundation of local governance in Alberta. The autonomy must be respected unless the matter is under extreme and unique circumstances. This power should only be used as a last resort. I think, probably, we would all understand this. On this point it's clear that both associations believe exactly that, and both are in complete agreement with that statement.

According to the proposed changes the government feels that as it exists now, the minister lacks the adequate authority to enforce ministerial orders that implement both decisions of an official administrator or decisions that settle intermunicipal disagreements. Changes would empower the minister with the same authority currently available with respect to the inspection process for situations where, in the minister's opinion, a municipality has not complied with direction provided by an official administrator or by the minister in respect of an intermunicipal disagreement.

The concern shared by both the AAMD and C by and the AUMA is that in regard to an intermunicipal dispute, the minister should not use these provisions to benefit one municipality over another. In fact, where appropriate, the government should apply these provisions equally to all parties involved in whatever dispute happens to arise. Madam Chair, we certainly don't need a situation where the government may find itself picking winners and losers. I don't believe that this is in anybody's best interest.

Additionally, with these changes the minister would have the ability to suspend the authority of a council to make resolutions or bylaws with respect to any matter specified in the order, to exercise resolution- or bylaw-making authority in respect of all or any of the matters for which a resolution- or bylaw-making authority is suspended under the above measure, to remove a suspension of a resolution- or bylaw-making authority with or without conditions. Finally, the minister would have the ability to withhold money otherwise payable by the government to the municipality pending compliance with an order of the minister.

This last point especially could prove overly punitive. The ability of a municipality to continue to operate when these powers are exercised by the minister should always be taken into account. Government needs to consider minimizing disruption to administrative functions and to the public. Further to this point, an additional concern brought up by the AUMA is that withholding money payable to a municipality may cause unforeseen consequences when a municipality has contractual obligations that rely on grants to be funded. This could lead to legal and/or financial repercussions if funds are withheld from the municipality. This situation would benefit no one, I believe, Madam Chair.

Now, I'd also be remiss if I didn't touch on the points brought up about the ability to suspend the council's authority or to make resolutions or bylaws. Somehow it could be problematic if the council becomes unable to pass a bylaw that is necessary for the operation of the municipality. This act, the Municipal Government Act, is an act that's created within these walls, and municipalities live and die by this act. This particular point has the ability to handcuff municipalities' ability to govern, and it infringes on their autonomy and self-determination, which is something that we strive to make sure that municipalities have. The concern is that the minister should not be able to suspend authority to make bylaws or resolutions or withhold money from an entire council for the actions of an individual or a few councillors.

While it may be understandable that under the current MGA there does not exist a mechanism to provide the minister with much flexibility in enforcing directives derived from an inspection, the current MGA does have the ability to dismiss councillors or the CAO as an enforcement measure. These new powers I would hope would be handled delicately, to put it delicately. These officials are elected officials as well, and that, of course, would be a very important one to be handled delicately.

I do understand that the government has now included a series of tests that must be met to ensure that these additional ministerial powers are only used as a last resort, and I appreciate that. While they weren't included in the 2016 discussion guide, it's good to see that the provision is now included in the proposed amendments to the MGA.

That being said, Madam Chair, these concerns, we feel, must be taken into account as the continuation of governments must always be ensured for the sake of stability. The new MGA needs to make sure that it takes these possibilities into consideration and makes allowances to allow municipalities to carry on with minimum interruption to its citizens. I sincerely hope that these concerns that I've tried to express on behalf of these two municipal organizations are seriously considered.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question on Bill 8, An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government?

[The remaining clauses of Bill 8 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Madam Chair. I've listened with interest to all that's gone on with Bill 8 and others. I would like now to rise and report.

Thank you, Chair.

[Motion carried]

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill with some amendments: Bill 8. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

All those that concur with the report, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 7

An Act to Enhance Post-secondary Academic Bargaining

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and speak to Bill 7 at third reading.

Madam Speaker, the Supreme Court of Canada released its decision to guarantee the constitutional right to strike in January of 2015. That was more than two years ago. Our government felt that it was important to talk to our stakeholders, and we engaged in thoughtful and meaningful consultations with them. While the rest of Alberta's public service was given these rights in June of 2016, our government decided to give postsecondary employers and employees more time to transition so that we could listen to them, and that's what we've done. Now it's time to act to ensure that the rights of all Albertans are respected.

Over the past year stakeholders worked with Mr. Andy Sims, a well-known and respected labour lawyer, to develop recommendations, the majority of which we accepted and are represented in this bill. There was no consensus among the stakeholders as the diversity of experience, history, and circumstance varies significantly across the sector, but our government struck a balance, and since its introduction many stakeholders have endorsed this bill. One stakeholder told us that this legislation is long overdue but that the extra time put into consultation and research made it almost exactly right.

I'm proud of the work of the department, stakeholders, and our government. Because of this work, Bill 7 makes changes to both the Post-secondary Learning Act and the Labour Relations Code and gives academic staff, grad students, and postdoctoral fellows the right to strike and become subject to essential services legislation. Furthermore, postsecondary institutions will be required to negotiate essential services agreements with bargaining units and will be covered by the lockout provisions under the Labour Relations Code. This extension of rights to postdoctoral fellows and graduate students is long overdue. A leader in the postdoctoral community told CBC that this legislation is huge news for academics and that postdocs have been looking for recognition as employees in this province for at least 20 years because they've lacked the basic protections required.

Madam Speaker, Alberta has long been out of step with the rest of Canada, and it's time to ensure that postsecondary employees have the same rights as all other Canadians. The changes we are proposing will extend the right to strike, with protection of essential services, to faculty so that labour relations in Alberta's universities and colleges are consistent with the rest of Alberta's public sector and with postsecondary sectors all across Canada. In addition, by modernizing our labour model, we are ensuring that our workplace rules comply with the Supreme Court of Canada's 2015 decision.

Madam Speaker, Albertans deserve a government that makes life better, and that includes ensuring that all workers are respected and that workplace rules are strengthened.

With that, Madam Speaker, I will move third reading of Bill 7.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Third reading of Bill 7, an act that confuses postsecondary bargaining, is just not ready. It's a complete overreach. I'm sure the minister also realizes that it's just not ready. I'm sure that they needed to fill time to make sure that they got some legislation out there, so here we have it, folks. They're unprepared, and then they insert the NDP ideologies into every piece of legislation they put in our hands, even when it doesn't fit. Like I stated yesterday, it's their mistake. Let them work it out.

I do hope that with all the additions to this legislation and the minister not listening to stakeholders that it doesn't end up hurting our institutions, employees, and, in particular, in the event of a strike, the students. Even though we agree that changes are likely necessary to comply with the Supreme Court of Canada decision, this bill far overreaches what was needed and has done so in such a way as to satisfy ideological notions and their NDP world view and for no other reason. That was made evident when the minister didn't support our simple amendment to give faculty associations an additional five years before they get replaced by trade unions.

I have no other option than to oppose this bill in its current form and give the minister a failing grade. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

Seeing none, the hon. Minister of Advanced Education to close debate.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to close debate. I just want to remind the House that, you know, the Member for Highwood actually proposed an amendment to the bill that would extend the time that faculty associations and grad student associations were forced to be members of unions from five years to 10 years. I'm sure that forcing unionization on faculty association and grad student association members will be something that will endear him greatly to the Wildrose membership. I would be happy to let his members know that and help him campaign, if he chooses to run for re-election, on forced unionization of faculty association members.

Anyway, I have enjoyed the debate, the back and forth. I want to thank all of my colleagues here in this House for engaging in respectful and reasonable debate. With that, I will close debate on Bill 7.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

[Motion carried; Bill 7 read a third time]

Mr. Westhead: Madam Speaker, I think we've made some excellent progress this morning. Seeing the time, I say that we call it 12 o'clock and adjourn until 1:30 this afternoon.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, May 4, 2017

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you an amazing, brilliant group of students from my constituency of Red Deer-South. They're accompanied by their teachers Mr. Jeff Archer, Ms Laurie Shapka, Ms Tracy Knecht, and Ms Bev Higgins. Could you all please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other school groups today?

Seeing and hearing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today on your behalf to introduce to all members of the Assembly your granddaughter Miss Amelia Lewis and your wife, Mrs. Joan Emard-Wanner. Amelia is a grade 3 student from Sunnyside school in Calgary and is visiting the Legislature with her nana today. Amelia loves playing hockey, diving, and is a voracious reader. She is also an accomplished writer, having been published in Scribblitt. Amelia and Joan are seated in the Speaker's gallery, and I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions to do today. It is with great pleasure that I rise today to introduce to you my family. I would like to make sure that everybody understands that I have pride and love for every one of them that is sitting up there. I would like to start with my mother, Arlene Cyr, a strong woman from Slave Lake, and she has been a vision within my life; my sister Melanie Cyr, who has been a wonderful strength in my life as well; my wife, Megan Cyr, who is the love of my life, and I have to say that she has been the reason that I am actually sitting in this House today; my daughter Charlotte Cyr – if she can stand – that is my youngest daughter, and she's obviously a poser; and my oldest daughter, Amelia, who I actually had that conversation for Bill 202 with that gave me the inspiration. If they could all stand.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mr. Cyr: My second introduction. It is with great pleasure that I rise today to introduce to you and to all of the members of the Legislature one of the dedicated staff of the Wildrose caucus. I owe this staff my immense thanks for his hard work in passing Bill 202, the Protecting Victims of Non-consensual Distribution of Intimate Images Act. All members of this House know how important it is to have great staff behind you. As I ask him to stand and please take this traditional warm welcome, I would like to enthusiastically encourage him to move forward with his career on something as important as Bill 202. I would like to introduce Cody Johnston.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Okay. Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. I have a document here that says that my school is here at 2, but maybe they're here now, so that'd be good.

The Speaker: Not a problem, Madam Premier. If they're not here yet, we will go on. We have other guests.

Ms Notley: Okay. Thank you.

The Speaker: That has nothing to do with the fact that she happens to be the Premier.

The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you today to all members of the House a number of people who are living with cancer or have survived cancer. They joined me in the office this morning as we declared May Bladder Cancer Awareness Month in Alberta. Bladder cancer is the fifth most common cancer in our country. It's my hope that this provincial declaration will help spread awareness and show support for patients and their families. Today I have the honour of introducing a number of bladder cancer survivors, who are appropriately wearing bright yellow T-shirts. They are Dick Southworth, Michele Zielinski, Rob Truscott, and Gerry Maciejko. I ask that they please rise – they're in the members' gallery – and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly 12 staff from the public safety division of Municipal Affairs. I'd like to thank them all for their outstanding work delivering a comprehensive bill and for completing a successful consultation. It's my great pleasure to recognize them on the day that I introduce Bill 12 because they all had a hand in making this happen. This accomplished group of people – not all of them but some of them are here seated in the members' gallery, and I ask that they stand as I call their names: Monte Krueger, Colin Robertson, Erin Black, Kristopher Schmaltz, Iain Ilich, Lisa Bell, Jolene Cusack, Cheryl Ryder, Chris Neuman, Kathryn Davidson, Brenda Manweiler, and Alex Morrison. I'd like to now please give them the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Education System

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my privilege today to rise in this House to acknowledge Education Week in the province of Alberta. This week allows us the opportunity to celebrate the importance of education and to highlight the great work being done in schools across our province. This year's theme, Learning Is a Journey, acknowledges the role education plays in preparing students to pursue their career interests in a diversified economy and highlights the important role education plays in shaping the future of our province.

Our government is working hard to make life better for Albertans by ensuring that every student has a great education and a bright future. Alberta students deserve the best education that we can deliver. This session our government has introduced Bill 1, An Act to Reduce School Fees, which will save Alberta families more than $54 million this year. Families will no longer have to pay for instructional supplies or materials and will no longer have to pay transportation fees when they're being bused to their designated schools.

We announced 26 new and modernized school projects across the province, and we are providing a school nutrition program to all 61 publicly funded school boards across the province. Our government knows that investing in education is an investment in our future, and that is why we will all continue to build new schools, fund for enrolment, and provide predictable and stable funding for school boards.

I want to thank all of the educators across this province for their tireless effort and commitment to education, and we hope you take a moment to celebrate your accomplishments during Education Week. I encourage Albertans to join in the celebration by visiting their local schools and attending special Education Week events or visiting their child's classroom.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Government and Official Opposition Policies

Mr. Fildebrandt: In just two years the NDP has destroyed the once great pillars of the Alberta advantage: balanced budgets, low taxes, and accountable government. These pillars of Alberta society have been thrown to the lions under their watch. These two years have been marked by a scorched earth policy of hyperregulation, senseless waste of tax dollars, and blind ideology. But in just two years from today I believe the NDP will be reduced to just a bad memory.

The ancient Romans had a way of dealing with governments that were this far beyond redemption, once deposed. They called it damnatio memoriae, meaning literally condemnation from memory. The senate of Rome would declare damnatio memoriae as the highest form of dishonour that one could incur, normally reserved for leaders and emperors who brought disgrace on the Roman Empire. They would tear down their monuments and their temples. They would remove their faces even from the coins. They would destroy all traces that that leader or emperor and government had ever existed.

My friends, Albertans are calling for the damnatio memoriae of the NDP. We will tear down their ideological monuments to socialism by cutting taxes, reducing spending, and balancing the budget. We will destroy their temples of ecofundamentalism, replacing carbon taxes and ending the green slush fund. And we will end the NDP era of secrecy, restoring freedom of information and giving people the right to recall bad leaders.

The NDP have done the impossible and united formerly bitter enemies against a threat to Alberta greater than we could ever see in one another. Together we will sow the fields of socialism with salt so that a government like this can never grow again.

For those unlucky enough to remember this government's reign of error, this time will be looked back upon as one we would rather soon forget. Future generations will be lucky enough to never know...

Mental Health and Addiction Education and Services

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I had the privilege of moderating a panel discussion on indigenous youth mental health sponsored by the U of C's Mathison Centre and the Canadian Mental Health Commission. We heard directly from youth at the Kainai board of education and watched a video on the headstrong program encouraging youth to talk about the stigma related to addictions and mental illness. Unfortunately, the stigma is still too common even among some of our health professionals. In fact, there is often a double stigma: first, simply being indigenous and, secondly, with addictions or mental health issues.

Another common theme was the lack of culturally sensitive and more holistic approaches in our mental health system. Several panellists spoke eloquently about how traditional practices and mentoring from elders helped them break free from depression and addictions and regain a sense of identity and self-worth.

The Truth and Reconciliation Commission has identified a long history of intergenerational trauma and its lasting effect on our First Nations community. Updates to Alberta's curriculum should be aimed at giving all Albertans a deeper understanding of this and encouraging further participation in the reconciliation process. Tragically, we continue to see increasing incidents of mental illness and addictions across Alberta, including opiates and preventable deaths, now approaching two per day. While I commend the government for increasing investment in this area, spending alone is not the answer.

Since 2008 the elimination of the Mental Health Board – there is a lack of consistent leadership and co-ordinated planning for mental health and addictions in this province. System change is difficult without strong, sustained leadership. Once again I must call on the government to reconsider establishing the provincial mental health and addictions officer. We need immediate implementation of the recommendations from the Valuing Mental Health report, including the long-overdue reform of primary care networks and their important role in mental health and addictions. Timely system changes will not only save lives but will substantially reduce costs and boost staff morale.

On Mental Health Week let's reaffirm our commitment to reducing the stigma of addictions and mental health, support our indigenous people, and show...

Mental Health Week

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to also speak today about a mental health event: the Canadian Mental Health Association's Mental Health Week. This annual national event takes place during the first week of May to encourage people from all walks of life to learn, talk, reflect, and engage with others on all issues relating to mental health.

CMHA is a national organization that helps maintain and improve mental health for all Canadians. As the nation-wide leader and champion for mental health CMHA helps people access the community resources they need to build resilience and support their recovery from mental illness.

The theme this year is Turn Up the Volume: "It's the 66th Annual CMHA Mental Health Week and we're getting loud for mental health." During Mental Health Week Canadians are encouraged to take the time to reflect on their mental health and to speak out about mental health. To be truly mentally well, Canadians need the support of psychiatrists, psychologists, psychotherapists, counsellors, and other community-based mental health services and programs. As well, they need acknowledgement, respect, and adequate housing.

“Getting loud” means speaking up [to improve access to mental health care and] to stop the discrimination and the stigma that often go hand in hand with mental illness. It means . . . using your voice to raise awareness and build support. For someone at work. For someone at home. For yourself . . .

Positive mental health isn’t about avoiding problems or trying to achieve a “perfect” life. It’s about living well and having the tools to cope with difficult situations . . . during [smooth or challenging times].

I’m proud to be part of a government that is taking mental health seriously and has increased funding for mental health and addictions by over 60 per cent. Each person’s path to mental health is unique.

Edmonton-McClung Meet Your Neighbour Campaign

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It’s a pleasure to rise today to update the House on a Canada 150 project that I spoke about earlier this spring. In response to the Quebec shootings in a mosque as well as the desecration of some Jewish cemeteries in Calgary as well as some of the sentiments opposing immigration and refugee immigration in Canada, I designed a Canada 150 project to bring people together.

What I’ve done is invited all community league presidents in Edmonton-McClung to gather together volunteers. They will be joined by volunteers as well within my scope as well as from church groups and schools. Together we’ll meet at individual community league buildings on Saturday and Sunday afternoons in May and June, and from there we’ll go out and knock on 150 doors. As well as that, what we’ll do is invite people to learn about the benefits of community league membership, and particularly we want newcomers to be aware of the infrastructure that’s there in every one of their communities and to belong and become a part of their community league and to join as a member.

Once we finish meeting those 150 neighbours, we’re going to meet back at the community league, have some pizza and pop, and share the stories of new acquaintances we’ve made. Afterwards, later in July at my annual summer barbecue – everybody will be invited to attend – we’re going to be video taping the shared stories of new-found friendships that have been made by this initiative in Edmonton-McClung. I’m glad to say that we have three out of the seven community leagues already signed up, Mr. Speaker, and it’s oversubscribed for most of the Saturday and Sunday afternoons in May and June.

Thank you very much.

Provincial Debt

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Another year, and another fiscally irresponsible budget has been pushed through by this NDP government, but this budget was not backed by me or the Wildrose Party. However, on April 21 of this year I had the exceptional joy of holding my first grandson, Zachary Scott Nichols, for the first time about an hour after his birth. When I consider his birth this year, it strikes me that my grandson and all Albertans will unfortunately be responsible for massive amounts of debt that will be forced upon them due to successive bad budgets created by a government that doesn’t have a plan to get us back to a balanced budget.

The moment Zach was born, a bill was strapped to his back. I’ve been asked how much that might be. You might be shocked to hear that the moment he was born, his portion of the bill was already more than $7,000 of provincial government debt. In Shakespeare’s The Merchant of Venice it says: he will extract a pound of flesh from Antonio for the money he was owed and that was ruthlessly required to be paid back. Thank God no one is required to give a pound of flesh, but every Albertan is being asked to dig deeper and deeper into their pockets. By the time my grandson Zachary is old enough to vote, he will owe around $50,000 in provincial debt – that is more than the average university graduate owes after completing a degree – yet he will have nothing to show for it.

I made my grandson a promise the day he was born that I would do my best to turn this around. I promised him that I would do everything in my power to make sure that this NDP government would only get two more years of adding debt to his name before they’re voted out of office, and I promised him that I would help fix our spending problem and bring back the Alberta advantage, the advantage the NDP are so intent on destroying.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Oil Sands Advisory Group Co-chair

Mr. Barnes: Yesterday Albertans found out how much they are paying the Premier’s top oil sands adviser, ecoradical Tzeporah Berman, while she works tirelessly to shut down pipelines, $23,000 directly from our taxpayers. To make matters worse, the NDP will not fire Berman. Premier, your inaction demonstrates gross hypocrisy. You publicly avowed that no staff would help the antipipeline B.C. NDP on their campaign. Now we’re seeing exception after exception and no action on your promise. To the Premier: when will you fire Berman?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I’ve outlined in answer to this question before, Ms Berman sits on an advisory committee, a very important advisory committee to the province of Alberta, an advisory committee that is a fundamental part of our climate leadership plan. The plan itself is an absolutely fundamental ingredient to our successful approval of a pipeline to tidewater. In fact, we’re very pleased with the work that everybody on that committee is doing, and we look forward to their reports in the weeks and months to come.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, by adding ecoradicals like Tzeporah Berman and Karen Mahon to the oil sands advisory group, this government legitimizes the views of those that seek to defame and destroy our province’s most important job creator. This is unacceptable. Using taxpayer money to pay the salaries of these ecoradicals is a total betrayal of Alberta families whose livelihoods and re-entry into the job market depend on pipelines and investment. When will this government wake up and realize it is time to fight misinformation about our world-class oil and gas industry and not . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much Mr. Speaker. It's fun hearing the member opposite talk about misinformation when he sincerely put his bank account towards that very cause.

We are proud of the results we are getting because we have taken a different attitude, one different from the members opposite, their predecessors, Conservative governments in both Alberta and in Ottawa, that put their heads in the sand and pretended that there was nothing happening. And what happened, Mr. Speaker? Nothing happened. We took a different approach. We brought people to the table who traditionally have been adversarial, and instead we got good results, which includes two pipelines. I'm not going to apologize for getting good results for Alberta.

Mr. Barnes: When we asked this government about the sale of ConocoPhillips, they were, quote, proud, proud to see a mass exodus of American capital from our oil sands in favour of an NDP-orchestrated consolidation and reorganization. The Premier even accused the opposition of overreacting. Predictably, ConocoPhillips has announced that their sale resulted in 300 more pink slips to Alberta workers. Add that to the hundred thousand jobs already lost under this Premier. Does this Premier want to issue a retraction, or is she still proud to see how ecoradicals cost Albertans their livelihoods?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As was mentioned, we've gotten two pipeline approvals, which is tens of thousands of jobs and millions of dollars in new investment. But what isn't helpful is that as I talk to leaders every day, they tell me that they are more fearful all the time of the opposition continually talking down Alberta. I can say that on this side of the House we're standing up for Albertans. It would be nice if you would, too.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Government Policies

Mr. Strankman: We're now at the halfway mark of this government's term, and what an economic disaster that has been. They've spent more time and money trying to impress Leap Manifesto authors than defending Albertans. When they quickly ran out of taxes to hike, they invented the carbon tax. They are destroying coal jobs, including in towns like Hanna and Forestburg. What does the Premier have to say to the tens of thousands of Albertans whose lives are now much worse because of their policies? Where are the Respect Hanna buttons?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I can tell you that in the last few weeks I visited Hanna, sat down with the community leaders. They recognize that the world is transitioning off coal. They're quite excited at the opportunities within the renewables space. They want to participate, and I can tell you that we've got their backs, unlike the opposition. When the Leader of the Official Opposition was in Ottawa, they passed regs to ensure that those facilities would be closed permanently. We're not doing that. We worked with Ottawa to ensure that they can now transition to cogen.

Mr. Strankman: Albertans haven't seen two worse years of job losses since Trudeau's national energy program. That's how this government will be remembered after they become a footnote in history. While everyday Albertans are losing work, this government was busy wasting taxpayer money on ads, light bulbs, and clotheslines while abandoning people like Haley Chisholm. It's a shameful record. Albertans are suffering. As of late, in and around Hanna there have been nine adult suicides. How can the Premier justify this record?

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll tell you this much. Our government is focusing on making life better for Albertans through two pipeline approvals. We're pleased to see homegrown Alberta companies . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Stop the clock, please. I can't hear the hon. minister speaking. Could you please keep your volume down. [interjection] Pardon me? Did you have something to say?

Finish your 35 seconds, hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What I can tell you is that housing starts are up in our province, exports are up in our province, manufacturing is up, and drilling is up. You know what else? We have a number of banks and economists that have forecast that Alberta will lead the country in growth, by 2.4 per cent, this year and next year, higher than any other province.

Mr. Strankman: Completely out of touch with Albertans: these are the words that Albertans are quickly associating with this government. Bill 6 forced farmers to storm this building demanding respect. This government brought in a carbon tax despite never running on it. They also promised changes to our children in care system. Things got worse under their watch. They called hard-working Albertans sewer rats, embarrassing cousins, and the anger machine. Given this record of destruction how can Albertans trust them?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, the reason Albertans can trust us is because in the last election we said that as we head into an economic recession caused by the drop in the international price of oil – just to remind the folks over there – our government would choose to have their backs, that our government would focus on making life better for them, that our government would support those important public services that matter to Albertans: their health care, their education, postsecondary for their kids. Our government would work to create jobs, 20,000 jobs just in the last month. Our government would focus on making life more affordable.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

The hon. Member for Highwood.

Advanced Education Ministry Travel Expenses

Mr. W. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General's report released yesterday paints a picture of an NDP government far too comfortable with bending the rules. When it comes to Advanced Education, the ministry padded caucus-related costs to go on out-of-province junkets, with no sign-off on the trips. Life has never been so good if you're an NDP minister, but for everyday Albertans in the real world this reeks of ignorance and lack of respect for taxpayers' dollars. Why does this NDP government think it's okay to treat hard-earned taxpayer dollars as if it were funny money?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to respond to this concern of the Auditor General. Of course, we take our responsibility to be prudent with tax dollars very seriously. We know that the Auditor General identified some errors in processing these expense claims. We're working closely with the Auditor General and officials in our department to correct the errors and make sure that these matters are dealt with appropriately.

Mr. W. Anderson: The NDP government using a ministry to funnel money that should have come from the caucus budget is exactly the type of thing the NDP would have strongly opposed while in opposition. It's time for the NDP to face the facts. They've been in power for two years, and Albertans are sick and tired of them trying to shirk responsibility and accountability. This type of waste management needs to come to an end. What is the minister going to do to ensure and show that junkets on the public dime are over?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, I'd like to emphasize the fact that we appreciate the Auditor General for his report and his work to ensure the government is running effectively and efficiently. Our department has met with his officials to understand what the requirements are, and we're working very diligently to make sure that all of the proper processes are in place and that all of the documentation is in place so that there are no questions about these expenses going forward. Of course, out-of-province travel is often required as part of our ministerial duties to meet with our counterparts across the provinces. We will make sure that those processes . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. W. Anderson: You know, if a regular Albertan tried to pull off some of the tricks used in Advanced Education, they would have been punished. Submitting caucus expenses to the ministry is irresponsible and shows a complete lack of respect for taxpayers' dollars. But under the NDP's watch Advanced Ed has turned into a free-for-all, with insufficient documentation, a business rationale for submitting expenses, running up extra meal expenses and fuel charges. When is the Minister of Advanced Ed going to put an end to the gravy train in his department?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the minister has answered the question not once but twice, and I think it's also important to understand and to maybe dial back the drama over there a little bit to remember that the Auditor General himself characterized these oversights as insignificant amounts and also acknowledged that there are administrative errors. For instance, what the Auditor General didn't do . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: I cannot hear the answer. Would the people who asked the question try to work on listening as well. I had a discussion yesterday with a member who suggested that I needed to stand up and remind them that when I'm standing, you don't speak. I thought that was obvious and that all of you knew about that, but that seems to have escaped some of you.

Hon. Premier, could you finish your answer, please.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The phrase the Auditor General did not use, for instance, was "aura of power." It's interesting that the members opposite are so concerned about these issues, yet they're doing everything they can to join up with their other friends over there who are the architects of the sky palace, of golf club . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier. Thank you. [interjections] Hon. Premier, the principle applies to you as well.

Mr. Mason: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Noted.

The leader of the third party.

Calgary Southwest Ring Road Flood Risk Management

Mr. McIver: Thank you. Now for something completely different. Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the current government for their commitment to complete the southwest portion of Calgary's ring road on the schedule required by the agreement with the Tsuut'ina Nation. There have been concerns expressed by both individuals and groups about the construction form and the environmental care being employed. To the Transportation minister: are you aware of the complaints and challenges to your current construction process, and what can you tell the House about your response?

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We know that the hon. member was involved in getting this project approved in the first place, and I want to assure him that safety is still our top priority when designing infrastructure. The bridge will accommodate flood levels beyond the year 2013 flood level. We've designed the bridge to have a 150-metre bridge span, which provides additional hydraulic capacity, and we've also designed the stormwater ponds so that they can take more water in the event of a flood. The Springbank project will provide additional protection for this area.

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister, but there are still concerns that the bridge over the Elbow River has been designed with spans too short to allow the river to pass through during a high-water spring runoff. I heard what the minister said, but I have to ask: have you talked to the people at the Tsuut'ina, the residents of Discovery Ridge, and other people that are concerned about this and are actually filing complaints and injunctions and other things? Have you been able to have contact with them, please, Minister?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There has been some ongoing consultation. Certainly, we've received correspondence from some of those communities, and we've responded to it appropriately. We have done a revised design to minimize risk to the Glenmore reservoir. The study was completed in the fall of 2015 and confirmed that the bridge will not present a risk to the Glenmore reservoir, causeway, or dam.

Mr. McIver: Again I thank the minister, but my understanding is that part of the road will be built on an earthen berm, which is to support the road, and there is concern that in high runoff years an earthen dam may not be enough to hold the water back. The folks of Haysboro are concerned about their community as well. In fact, I understand that one of them was told by an official that they are the only ones that are at risk. To the minister: are you aware of this concern, and again can you assure the Legislature and Albertans that you won't let this negative scenario occur as a result of the construction of this important project?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Since receiving correspondence from some of the communities in southwest Calgary with respect to this, I have had my department officials review the matter again and brief me thoroughly on this. We have submitted an application under the Fisheries Act, the approval of Alberta Environment and Parks has been obtained, and all the work is being completed in accordance with all relevant federal and provincial environmental regulations and acts. I am quite confident that we have provided a safe . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Mental Health and Addiction Services

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, this being Mental Health Week, I expected to hear more government announcements on progress implementing the recommendations from the Valuing Mental Health report, including those on first responders, given that this is the anniversary of the Fort McMurray fire; also on extending funding for the central Alberta regional collaborative service delivery model; and on more timely access to opioid treatment clinics. To the Minister of Health. Sixteen months have passed since the report was accepted. Can you give us an update on the progress made on the 26 remaining recommendations?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. We are continuing to make good progress, and we look forward to being able to give a fulsome response in the coming days. Even without being able to do the full update in short order, I want to assure everyone that we are continuing to move forward with opioid replacement therapies throughout the province. A great deal of the funds that we received from the federal government to help us address the opioid crisis was funnelled directly to that so that increased opportunities for methadone and Suboxone closer to home are available throughout the province. As well, we continue to work on addictions and treatment options in communities, including a number of detox beds.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Dr. Swann: The regional collaborative service delivery model has proven to be the most efficient and most effective provider of mental health services to children and families. It's a clear improvement over previous fragmented approaches. A Red Deer mother of a child with special needs is concerned that this funding cut will lead to longer waits for therapy, poorer outcomes, and an increased burden on teachers as they attempt to fill the gap. Again to the minister: will you reinstate the regional collaborative service delivery funding, and if not, why not? This should be expanded, not cut.

The Speaker: The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to answer this question on behalf of the Minister of Education. Of course, we believe that every child in Alberta, including those with special needs, deserves an education that prepares them for success. That's why our government is working to make life better by improving classroom education for all children by hiring new teachers and teaching assistants and investing over $12 million more this year in inclusive education for students with special needs. It's important to note that since the RCSD model was introduced in 2014, funding for delivery has actually increased by over $8 million, to over $67 million this year. We will continue to do everything we can to support students with special needs in our classrooms.

Dr. Swann: That hardly explains the cuts to the Red Deer program.

Opioid users are seeking help, and often they cannot book during regular business hours. These Albertans require expanded access to treatment clinics, and wait times outside of our two major cities must be shortened. Clinics should meet the needs of people seeking services rather than those providing the services. In other words, services need to be patient centred. To the Minister of Health: will the government commit to reducing wait times and expanding after-hours access to services?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. These are the exact kinds of things that the associate minister has been working on, and we appreciate the recommendations and the support from the member opposite. Earlier this week she was in Lethbridge working at meeting with front-line service providers in terms of harm reduction and making sure that increased supports are available there. They also raised a number of other issues that they're hoping to move forward with in collaboration, including supervised consumption services, potentially, as well as increased access to other harm reduction strategies in the community. We look forward to being able to support all Albertans and save lives.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Capital Planning Process

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just over a month ago the government released its $29.5 billion four-year capital plan. The investment represents one of the most significant investments in roads, schools, hospitals, and other public infrastructure like the Reynolds-Alberta Museum in Wetaskiwin that were neglected for far too long. To the Minister of Infrastructure: what processes does this government follow to ensure that the best projects are approved to the maximum benefit of Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll just use as an example a project such as the Reynolds Museum. When such a project comes forward, it's reviewed against government criteria and priorities. This highly used museum project was deemed to foster economic development, to improve the health and safety of the existing facility, and to benefit both the local and regional communities as well as visitors. The project was found to be a priority for the local municipality, the MLA as well as the ministry of culture.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you. Given that there are a number of projects in the Wetaskiwin-Camrose constituency that are not included in the capital plan or unfunded projects list – for example, a new high school for Camrose, new science labs and classrooms for the Augustana campus, and a women's shelter in Wetaskiwin, to name a few – to the Minister of Infrastructure: could you detail the process followed to move such projects onto the capital plan or the unfunded projects list for future consideration?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much for the question, Mr. Speaker. Well, projects in the capital plan have all been reviewed very carefully to ensure that they align with government priorities such as the need to enhance access to services, improving the condition of facilities, which includes health and safety concerns, functionality, and use. Our criteria are open and transparent and published on the government of Alberta website.

Mr. Hinkley: Given that many worthwhile projects went unfunded in the government's four-year capital plan, to the same minister: what are the prospects for the funding of projects on the unfunded capital list in the future?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, in my time in the ministries of Infrastructure and Transportation I've met with many municipal leaders and many other stakeholders, MLAs and so on, who are bringing forward many very worthwhile projects. I can honestly say that I've not come across a frivolous or unnecessary project. But there are far too many projects to be funded by the government at one time, so we can't say yes to all of them. It's a list of funded capital projects that we've had a chance to evaluate, at least in a preliminary way, and found to be necessary, required, to be a project that is worth while . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Energy Efficiency Program Training Contracts

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, lately the Minister of Labour has been taking us on a stroll through some of the best classic rock of the 1980s. Meanwhile her colleagues are singing to a different tune: a Britney Spears song she might remember from her teenage years called Oops! . . . I Did It Again. Earlier this session we learned about the Ecofitt boondoggle, and then, oops, it seems like the NDP has contracted yet another Ontario company to do the training on these retrofits. It seems the government thinks that contractors need training on how to fill out grant applications. To the minister: how do you rationalize the need for this kind of training, and at what cost?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the energy efficiency agency undertook a competitive procurement process in order to administer the programs that the Energy Efficiency agency is now delivering. In this particular case, yes, the contractors will learn how to fill out the forms so that they can ensure that individual homeowners actually get their rebates on time and in good working order. This is how energy efficiency programs are run in other jurisdictions, and we're following best practices in this regard.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, given that the government thinks it needs to train highly professional and competent Alberta journeymen on how to fill out grant rebate forms and seeing as the government apparently needs Ontario's own ICF company to do this, can the minister explain why no qualified Alberta firms were able to successfully bid and win the same contract that an Ontario company won?

Ms Phillips: For the particular RFP . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members.

Ms Phillips: For the particular RFP that the member is referencing, Mr. Speaker, there were no Alberta companies who bid.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, given Alberta's skilled tradespeople need to register to work on these home energy retrofit projects and be trained on how to fill out the forms and then have recurring training from ICF Canada and given that taxpayer dollars are being expended here on an activity that many regard as frivolous and many tradespeople personally consider is an insult to their intelligence and their skills, how many other outsourced contracts is the minister hiding, that create more red tape work for bureaucrats and out-of-province consultants?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are a variety of programs that are being delivered by Energy Efficiency Alberta in order to make life more affordable for Albertans and ensure that we've got job creation happening in the energy efficiency space, something that we haven't enjoyed in the past given that we're the only jurisdiction in North America without an energy efficiency program. Of course, we do have over 350 contractors registered to deliver the insulation, tankless hot water heaters, and triple-pane windows program. There are also in-store rebates available for consumers as well as an online rebate program. Many people are taking advantage of these programs.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Having someone as radical as Ms Berman as co-chair of Alberta's oil sands advisory group is like having Saudi Arabia on the Human Rights Commission, but because in the past NDP caucus members, including the Premier, openly protested against pipelines and called our oil dirty oil, Albertans are smart enough to see through this government's hidden intentions for our oil and gas sector. To the Premier: will you do all Albertans a favour and fire this anti-Alberta crusader before they fire you?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have to say how frustrating it is to hear the members opposite continue to talk down Alberta and our industry. [interjections] Ms Berman has been effective in working with a number of industry leaders. A number of people joined the table and got good results for Alberta, including two pipelines, and we're going to make sure that we continue to get good access to international markets, which helps Albertans.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, you're yelling very loud, and you're heckling. I can't hear the speaker, so could you keep the tone down, please?

First supplemental.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Ms Berman has taken her crusade against the Kinder Morgan pipeline to extreme ends and that that includes calling people names when she disagrees with them and given that a public example of this behaviour is a January 11 tweet, which I will table today, in which she called Premier Clark, of British Columbia, a lapdog for supporting Kinder Morgan's pipeline, Premier, will you fire your lapdog on Alberta's oil sands advisory group? If not, why not?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday we talked about respect in this House. Today we have the members opposite name-calling yet again.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Yeah, sewer rats.

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, they continue to do this . . .

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, you're just escalating the dysfunction of this place. Please keep those comments to yourself.

Deputy Premier, continue, please.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much. We're going to continue to watch for good outcomes, Mr. Speaker, and I have to say that the outcome of getting our product to tidewater is significant. We are proud of that accomplishment.

I hope the members opposite will reflect on the times that they themselves have enabled people to call then members of their own caucus disrespectful names and whether or not that was appropriate as they continue to move forward.

Mr. Gill: Berman is fighting against a good outcome.

Given that Ms Berman considered Premier Clark a lapdog for supporting the Kinder Morgan pipeline and given that Alberta's Premier claims she supports the Kinder Morgan pipeline, too, Premier, do you think that she considers you a lapdog but doesn't tweet it publicly because she's getting paid from your coffer?

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

The Speaker: Another point of order.

The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the oil sands advisory group is a group of oil sands companies, First Nations, communities, and environmental groups who are charged with giving us advice on how to implement the limit on oil sands emissions at 100 megatonnes. The industry folks around that table sit with environmental groups and First Nations and local communities in a solutions-based way. Might I also suggest to the third party that perhaps they take their grievances to Athabasca oil sands, CNRL, Cenovus, Conoco, Suncor, and others who are supporting this process.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Energy Policies

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, while we heard all parties out in B.C. during their election make promises that are outside of their jurisdiction, our Premier is right that a $70 carbon tax on coal exports is a bad idea, but it's not that much worse than putting a $50 carbon tax on all of our industries. That's exactly the policy the Premier is putting in place. It doesn't just kill coal jobs but jobs across Alberta. Yesterday the Premier admitted carbon taxes on coal make us less . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Was there a question from the hon. member?

The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What I can tell the House is that our government is continuing to focus on diversifying our economy. We've recently put through a budget that not only invests in public services to ensure that we have teachers in classrooms and we have front-line health workers when we need them; we're also investing significantly in capital investment infrastructure projects. When the economists say that Alberta is poised to grow by 2.4 per cent, they attribute that to the two pipelines that we've gotten approved and our huge, largest-ever infrastructure build in Alberta's history.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Panda: Thank you. It's quite rich all of a sudden for the Premier to sound the alarm on coal jobs given she made it a flagship policy to destroy as many as she can over the next decade. Given politicians on the west coast are trying to pretend they can stop pipelines or attack our exports and livelihoods and given the NDP is wasting billions of dollars to kill coal jobs right here in Alberta, how can the Premier look coal workers in the face here in Alberta given her government's record?

The Speaker: The minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know what? We're going to continue to stand up for Alberta's forestry and energy workers as we have done from day one. I can tell you that, you know, our approach is to work with Canada, to work with our provinces in a win-win. Our government is making life better for Albertans by phasing out harmful coal pollution, diversifying our energy economy, and also repairing our international reputation and getting pipelines to tidewater.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, given the Premier's top oil sands adviser, Ms Berman, is out campaigning for the B.C. NDP and all the while the government is touting two pipelines every single day in this House and given that this is sending mixed messages, with the government talking out of both sides of their mouth at the same time, the Premier can't have it both ways. Will she fire the ecomilitant, ecoextremist, who is a waste of taxpayers' dollars and is hurting our province's credibility?

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, I'll tell you what hurts our credibility. It's the opposition that continues to run down our province, our industries and attacks the great work that our government is doing. I'll remind the members opposite that the Prime Minister cited our Premier's climate leadership plan as one of the major reasons that two pipelines were approved. I can tell you that that's what we're focused on. We're going to continue to work collaboratively with our counterparts. We're not going to listen to an opposition as it jumps up and down and tries to poke everyone in the eye.

Surgery Wait Times in Central Alberta

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, this NDP government always says, "The right care in the right place at the right time." Since the Alberta Health Services centralization we now see hip surgery wait times for Edmonton zone patients at 25.3 weeks, Calgary zone patients at 38.2 weeks, and the central zone at 44.3 weeks. That's right. It takes 19 weeks longer to get hip surgery in the central zone compared to Edmonton. To the minister: why are the surgery wait times so unacceptably long in central . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Let me be clear. If you're an urgent patient, you will get urgent care. There have been some good improvements on wait times, things like hip fracture repair, radiation therapy, and our 17 stroke treatment centres. Certainly, I agree that there is more work to be done. That's one of the reasons why on this side of the House we proposed a budget that protects health care instead of pushing for billions of dollars of cuts, which would inevitably impact wait times in all parts of the province, including central Alberta. We're moving forward with a plan that's stable and predictable and works to increase opportunities for speedy recovery.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Taylor: Given that central Alberta makes up approximately 10 per cent of Alberta's population yet only receives 5 per cent of the capital funding and given that a 2015 needs assessment in the central zone showed a shortfall of 96 beds, 18 emergency beds, and three OR rooms and given that surgery needs to happen in ORs and patients need beds to recuperate after surgery, why isn't the minister acting on the information in this report, that shows a severe lack of resources in central Alberta?

Ms Hoffman: Well, thank you for the question, Mr. Speaker. I ask the member: why is it that you're advocating for $9 billion worth of cuts to infrastructure funding, hon. member? [interjections] You want to make sure that we're continuing to provide improvements. That's what we're doing. If you want to make sure we're standing up for health care across Alberta, please vote for the budget. Don't continue to discredit it and put it down. We're proud of the investments that we're making throughout Alberta, and we're going to continue to do those because Albertans have a government that's on their side, that's making their lives better, and that includes investing in health care. [interjections]

The Speaker: Member for Chestermere-Rocky View, just keep your voice down, please.

Mr. Taylor: Given that this government has a priority initiative to "implement a Wait Time Measurement and . . . Management Policy to address long wait times" and given that the Wildrose leader put forward a motion calling for a study on wait times, a motion the NDP voted down, how can the NDP expect Albertans to take their word on wait times seriously when they voted against a motion that would support patients getting timely care?

Ms Hoffman: The motion did no such thing, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much. The member said himself that it was a motion to spend a bunch of resources doing more studies, just like they want to do in Justice, when there are serious issues. We are putting our money where our mouth is in Justice. We're putting our money where our mouth is in Health and Education, Mr. Speaker. Members opposite are pushing for deep cuts and to sit around doing studies. That's not good enough. Albertans deserve health care improvements now. That's why we're moving forward to protect their health care instead of pushing for the billions of dollars in cuts, both to capital and to operations, that the members opposite are advocating for. We're putting Albertans first.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Workplace Legislation Review

Mr. Gottfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Monday when I asked the Minister of Labour if she would do the right thing and actually consult with employers and business groups, she replied that she had personally met with Alberta Enterprise group and had met with the chambers. Well, the chambers disagree. The Calgary Chamber has called the process wholly inadequate, and the Alberta chamber had to publicly call on the government to show affected businesses some respect in order to get a meeting, which is still not a replacement for robust consultation. To the Minister of Labour. You say one thing. Others beg to differ. Who is telling the truth?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We have been talking to Albertans about making sure we have workplace legislation that works for Alberta, that is fair and balanced, making sure that we've been consulting with employers and workers. We've heard from nearly 5,000 Albertans, and I have met with chamber organizations, and they have been engaged in this process. We are going to make sure that we have family-friendly workplace legislation that works for all Albertans.

Mr. Gottfried: Mr. Speaker, the scales appear to be tipped.

Given that this government will not give a straight answer on whether they will get rid of the secret-ballot process for union certification and given that this government's NDP brethren in B.C. have openly stated that they will remove the secret-ballot process if they are elected next week and given that there is nothing more fundamental to Canadian democracy than the secret ballot, again to the minister: will you be proposing the scrapping of the secret-ballot process? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have been reviewing the feedback that we've received from various organizations, including workers. This afternoon I'm meeting with the Alberta Chambers of Commerce. I need to review what our stakeholders are telling us before making any final decisions, but I will tell you that unlike the party that was formerly in government, we will be making changes. We will be making sure that we have up-to-date, modern workplace legislation that takes care of Albertans.

Mr. Gottfried: Mr. Speaker, given that, in the words of the minister, the "government is getting consultations right" – it sounds like they're in secret as well – and given that every single business and employer group we have spoken with has expressed significant concern with both the length and process of the consultation and given that these groups simply want the government to extend them a basic level of respect by consulting them face to face, again to the minister. Minister, your consultation has failed. Will you do the right thing, reopen consultation and commit to meeting with affected stakeholders across the province face to face?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Albertans have had workplace legislation that has not been updated since 1988. We need to make sure that we have legislation that takes care of Albertans. That means that you need to be willing to consult, to have those important meetings, and then make decisions, something the former government failed to do. We will continue our process, and I look forward to bringing forward fair and balanced suggestions for Albertans to review.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Economic Development

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In my constituency of Calgary-Glenmore I have investors and small and medium-sized businesses. During tough economic times these businesses take the lead in economic recovery. To the Minister of Economic Development and Trade: how important are small and medium-sized businesses to Alberta's economy? [interjections]

The Speaker: Order, please. [interjection] Government House Leader, we had a discussion yesterday.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for asking about the impact that small and medium-sized businesses have on Alberta's economy. I can tell you that Alberta businesses have a bigger economic impact than businesses anywhere in the country. They inject about a hundred billion dollars of GDP per year into our hometowns and neighbourhoods, and together they're responsible for 32 per cent of Alberta's GDP as well as 36 per cent of all private-sector employment in the province. In March Alberta created more than 20,000 new full-time jobs, many of which came from small businesses.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It has been a tough few years for Alberta businesses and families in my constituency and in the province. To the Minister of Economic Development and Trade: what signs are you seeing of economic recovery?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the question. To quote the Minister of Finance, we definitely are seeing some green shoots in our economy. Drilling starts are up 130 per cent over last year, our exports are up 37 per cent year over year, and last month wholesale trade rose to its highest level in two years. Economists are forecasting that Alberta will lead the country in economic growth, putting us back on top, where we belong. Again, they've cited our historic infrastructure build along with two pipeline approvals.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We were proud of the fact that we led the country in private capital investment last year. To the Minister of Economic Development and Trade: what are we expecting for this year? [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet.

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, in 2016 we led the country in private-sector capital investment at $53.8 billion, setting records in a variety of sectors. In 2016 we had the highest per capita investment in construction, petroleum, chemical manufacturing, retail trade, transportation, and warehousing. In oil and gas extraction Alberta had the highest level of investment in 2016, just shy of $25 billion, far ahead of the next province, which was B.C., at $4.5 billion.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Calgary Growth Management Board

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Changes to the Municipal Government Act mean that we will now have a mandatory growth board in the Calgary and surrounding areas. Given that voluntary partnerships are always preferable to forced collaboration and given that making the growth boards mandatory will not necessarily overcome underlying issues, especially in some communities that have already worked countless hours on regional priorities, to the minister: why is it necessary to mandate this partnership, and how are you working to address the concerns of all the communities affected by this change?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Collaboration is a no-brainer. The CRP is a voluntary board, and the Calgary Growth Management Board is something that we're bringing in with the communities around Calgary, including Calgary. We are working with them. I was just down there last week, actually. I had a great meeting with them, really positive, fantastic, incredible actually. My commitment to them was to work with them to make sure that as elected officials in that region we are working together in the best interests of all the people of that region.

Mrs. Aheer: Well, some towns, including Black Diamond and Turner Valley, who are currently part of the CRP, will not be part of the new growth board, and given that they've been told by the minister's office that the membership will be limited to towns of over 5,000 and, further, that they are now going to have to work through the rural counties to contribute to the discussions, how will smaller urban areas have an effective voice in this new organization?

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you to the member for the question. What she said is actually untrue. Black Diamond and Turner Valley will have the opportunity to create ICFs with the municipalities around them to work with the growth management board on the things that are important to them. That's what's important, making sure that the locally elected officials can make decisions that affect their residents. I committed to that, and I will do that going forward.

The Speaker: Hon. minister, I think you maybe meant to say incorrect rather than untrue.

Mr. S. Anderson: Yes.

The Speaker: The second supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, the problem of the voting structure has been a big issue for the municipalities who are involved, and given that the decision-making mechanism is the critical point in these relationships and that the surrounding municipalities are understandably concerned about ending up with a voting structure that will result in the loss of their voices, to the minister: please explain your plan for this voting formula, and please also explain to Albertans what your office is doing to ensure that that structure is fair.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. It's a two-thirds majority and two-thirds of the population. What it means is that the people in that area will have to get together, the affected municipalities and the districts there, to work together on the plans for their regions. The growth management board isn't going to go outside and make some plan for a little town that can do their own things in their own area. They will create ICFs, which is collaboration, which is working together for the benefit of everybody.

School Fees and Education Funding

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, this government's decision to place their priority on taking a stab at fulfilling a campaign promise to reduce school fees is putting a financial stress on individual school budgets. Some administrators are considering drastic measures to absorb a budget shortfall for the coming school year, and at least one school board has increased some parents' busing fees to cover a shortfall that you created. I do not understand how this makes sense. Minister of Education, will you commit today that no teachers will lose their jobs and that class sizes will not increase?

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to answer this question on behalf of the Minister of Education. Of course, we're proud of the work that we're doing to make life better for Albertans, including investing in schools. We're making sure that we're funding for enrolment growth. Of course, if the opposition is so concerned about the welfare of students, they would have voted for our budget instead of advocating for $4 billion in cuts to government spending, which would mean firing teachers and having larger classrooms.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that schools are already struggling under the weight of the carbon tax and given that this fee reduction hands school administrators another unexpected cost that they have to absorb and given that you have claimed that no teachers will be laid off because of this rushed campaign promise but that schools have to find the money somewhere and are worried that they will have to lay off teachers, which means that class sizes will increase, Minister, is this not another unintended consequence of this rushed election promise?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again I'm happy to remind the members of the House about how our budget makes life better for Albertans by investing in schools, investing in more teachers to make sure that our students have the best access to education of any students in the country. You know, the members opposite want to cut $4 billion from government spending, which will necessarily fire teachers, which will necessarily increase class sizes. For some reason they seem to think that that's okay when they propose it but want to criticize us for doing exactly the opposite.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, thank you. Given that the minister has admitted that he is fast-tracking the NDP's campaign promise by one year and given that schools are telling me that they cannot absorb the funding shortfall by September because their budgets are already set and given that they are asking for more time just to prepare for the cut in funding, Minister, will you give schools a desperately needed reprieve and delay this purely political policy change to at least the fall of 2018 so that teachers aren't laid off and class sizes are not increased?

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Not only will we continue to invest in classrooms this year and in budgets going forward, but we'll also fight to make sure that those members opposite never have the chance to make the harmful cuts to schools, throwing teachers out of work and making sure that our students have the largest class sizes in the country. We will continue to work for the betterment of the people of Alberta over the next two years and make sure that every student knows what's at stake if those guys have a chance to make a budget again.

The Speaker: Hon. members, you have 10 seconds to exit.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

New Home Buyer Protection Amendment Act, 2017

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise to table for first reading Bill 12, the New Home Buyer Protection Amendment Act, 2017.

For most Albertans buying a new home is an investment in their future. It's an investment in their family, their kids, and their future home. It is one of the largest purchases we may make as Albertans, and when Albertans make that investment, they deserve the ability to make informed decisions and to feel secure in the knowledge that they are protected. Unfortunately, lack of oversight currently leaves new homebuyers exposed to risks because there are no specific requirements to be a residential builder. Right now in Alberta anyone can call themselves a builder and offer their services in home construction even if they have a documented history of fraud, weak finances, or no credentials.

If passed, Bill 12 will protect prospective homeowners by establishing a licensing system for home builders, providing homebuyers with a single source of information on builders and creating provisions to remove or suspend bad builders in order to protect people from negligent or unscrupulous businesses. Mr. Speaker, this government made a commitment to make Albertans' lives better, and that's what we're doing by ensuring that families can make informed decisions when purchasing a home from a licensed and qualified builder.

I want to again thank my incredible staff in Municipal Affairs for their hard work. They should be proud of themselves because I know I am.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 12 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table four letters, one to the Minister of Labour and three to the Premier, all asking for extended and enhanced consultation with respect to the employment standards and labour code. The first one is from Willbros Canada, Jeremy Kinch, president and COO; the second from Krawford Construction, Colleen Kerfoot, VP finance; the third one from McSween Custom Fabricating, operations manager

Nelson Martin; and the last one from Fillmore Construction, Chris Fillmore, president.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have five copies to table of the January 11, 2017, insult tweeted by Tzeporah Berman, which I referenced in my question today, in which she called Premier Clark of B.C. a lapdog for supporting the Kinder Morgan pipeline.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to table, in response to the Member for Drumheller-Stettler's concerns about the town of Hanna, an article from the Hanna Herald entitled Hanna Mayor Meets with Minister, in which he speaks of his meeting with the Minister of Economic Development and Trade, saying, "I felt our meeting was very productive and personally was put at ease with the outlook of the future of our region."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-MacLeod.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm just tabling two sets of documents that were spoken of this morning during Committee of the Whole, that were requested by the Chair, regarding the AUMA and the AAMD and C.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Out of respect for the House last week, I wanted to make sure that I didn't do 41 tablings. I could have. There were 41 different people who wrote in about this last week. There were 23 more today – I'll just do them all at the same time – along the lines of the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek's, who suggested that these folks are really hoping that the Minister of Labour will take a much longer time to truly consult with people. It's about workers in Alberta deserving the ability to join a union without fear of reprisal, and it's been mentioned many times. I think they know it has. I really trust that they'll take a look at this.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of the executive summary from the submission from the postdoctoral associations of Alberta, Post-secondary Labour Relations Consultation Report for Alberta Advanced Education.

Oh, I see that the table officer is stopping me.

The Speaker: Would you like to continue?

Mrs. Littlewood: I am tabling it because I think that it will be relevant for the members to read the support that we have for Bill 7 from the postdocs.

Thanks.

The Speaker: Hon. members – I'd look to the Deputy Premier and Government House Leader – there was earlier a school group. I take it that the group has left by now.

The Speaker: I believe we have at least two points of order. I'm trying to find one of them as we speak.

The Government House Leader.

Point of Clarification

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising under Standing Order 13(2), "The Speaker shall explain the reasons for any decision on the request of a Member." After standing up on the point of order after which you had admonished the Premier that this "applies to you as well," I did consult with the Premier. She indicated that she indeed finished her answer even though you were standing, and she apologizes for that.

But there are a couple of questions remaining around questions that might be interrupted by the Speaker or answers that might be interrupted by the Speaker because of noise from the other side or for some similar reason. The questions really are: does the clock stop automatically in terms of the time, or does the Speaker have to request the table to stop the clock? That's the first question.

Secondly, I just wanted to raise the issue that it's very difficult for someone to give an answer in two parts when it is divided by an admonishment from the Speaker. It might be advisable – and this is a suggestion – to restart the clock if something like that happens. But it does create real difficulty in providing a coherent answer to a question in question period when it is interrupted in that fashion.

I would ask if you could explain the application of this rule with respect to disruptions caused by the opposition.

The Speaker: Well, Government House Leader, with respect to your specific question about the timing, from my facts – I will check it again and report to you – I believe it is stopped at the time and then reactivated at the time that I ask it to happen.

An Hon. Member: Paused.

The Speaker: Paused. Excuse me.

Secondly, thank you to the Premier for the apology.

Related to the other topics you address, I believe, in fact, my office today – if not today, it will be tomorrow – has asked for a meeting with the House leaders to discuss the tone of this place and sharing the responsibility with me on behalf of all of these members so we can be proud of not only what we do in this Chamber but also how we do it. You, Government House Leader, will be invited to that meeting, and we will attempt to share the responsibility for making the tenor better along with the other House leaders.

I think there's a second point of order, Government House Leader, that you raised.

Point of Order Seeking Opinions

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Around about 2:15 this afternoon during question period the Member for Calgary-Greenway – I think it was his second supplemental question – demanded to know from the Premier or the Deputy Premier whether or not Tzeporah Berman thought, something to that effect, or what Tzeporah Berman might have thought about the government or something like that.

You know, I'm quoting from chapter 11 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice at about page 502. I want to acknowledge, first of all, that the basic principle of freedom of speech is sort of the pre-eminent principle that is applied by the Speaker in this place. However, some questions go well beyond the scope that is envisaged for them. On page 502:

In summary, when recognized in Question Period, a Member should:

- ask a question;
- be brief;
- seek information; ...
- ask a question ... within the administrative responsibility of the government or of the individual Minister addressed.

Further:

a question should not:

- be a statement, representation, argument, or an expression of opinion;
- be hypothetical;
- seek an opinion ... legal or otherwise.

I'll leave a few here. Yeah. I think those are the relevant ones, Mr. Speaker.

Asking a minister or the Premier for their opinion of what the opinion of a third party might be isn't something that is in within the administrative responsibility of the government. It's hypothetical. It seeks an opinion. It violates a number of the principles that have been established with respect to questions. Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, it's beneath this place to ask such silly questions when there are real issues that the government is dealing with that could be addressed, but they need to be things that the government actually has some control over and not opinions of what someone else might be thinking. That's just silly.

The Speaker: The House leader for the third party.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Contrary to what the hon. House leader has just said, this is not silly. This is not hypothetical. In fact, it is the exact opposite. It is very real, and this is a very serious concern.

We need to set the context, and I promise this will take only a short amount of time. He referred to Ms Berman as the co-chair of the Alberta oil sands advisory group. That is indeed what she is, but she's also a B.C. environmental activist who has likened the oil sands to the fictional wasteland of Mordor. We know that. We know that she's been a Greenpeace international campaigner. We know that she's been the cofounder of ForestEthics, and it's well documented that she's anti oil sands. This is all real.

We have the exact question here since the hon. House leader said he wasn't quite sure of the words.

[She's] taken her crusade against the Kinder Morgan pipeline to extreme ends and that includes calling people names when she disagrees with them and given that a public example of this behaviour is a January 11 tweet, which I will table today, in which she called Premier Clark [of B.C.] a lapdog for supporting Kinder Morgan's pipeline.

I will read the exact quote for you ...

The Speaker: Hon. member, I hope you're dealing with the procedure part, not the substance of the discussion.

Mr. Rodney: Absolutely. This deals with the fact that this is not silly or hypothetical; it is very real. From 3:38 p.m., 11th of January, 2017: "Saying yes to every project that the 1% & big polluters want is not leadership it's a lap dog @christyclarkbc #kindermorgan #bcpoli." You know, let's face it. If you look up "lapdog," it's simply a docile companion with no working function other than companionship. Mr. Speaker, the point being ...

The Speaker: Hon. member, which procedure would you be citing in your argument that makes the comment legitimate? The Government House Leader has submitted it under, I believe, 13.

Mr. Rodney: Okay. It's simply the fact that it is completely within the purview of the Premier's jurisdiction to hire and, indeed, fire people. Let's face it. The fact of the matter is that Albertans are absolutely aghast ...

The Speaker: Hon. member, I do now have the Blues.

The point of order that was argued by the Government House Leader was that – I'm trying to look for the correct one. If we look at Beauchesne 408 and 409, the Government House Leader, I believe, is correct. The question itself was poorly crafted, and it was not in keeping with the rules governing Oral Question Period in this particular House. Questions should not seek opinions, nor should they be argumentative but should seek information about government policy. The member may wish to brush up on the rules governing Oral Question Period. Please refer to Beauchesne 408 and 409.

Orders of the Day

Royal Assent

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor will now attend upon the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, if I might, it's been suggested that out of respect for the process and the Lieutenant Governor we would close laptops and related aspects.

Hon. members, I may need a half-ton truck to take the notes that I got today from each and every one of you.

[The Deputy Premier and the Sergeant-at-Arms left the Chamber to attend the Lieutenant Governor]

[The Mace was draped]

[The Sergeant-at-Arms knocked on the main doors of the Chamber three times. The Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms opened the doors, and the Sergeant-at-Arms entered]

The Sergeant-at-Arms: All rise, please. Mr. Speaker, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor awaits.

The Speaker: Sergeant-at-Arms, admit Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor.

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta, Lois Mitchell, CM, AOE, LLD, and the Deputy Premier entered the Chamber. Her Honour took her place upon the throne]

The Speaker: May it please Your Honour, the Legislative Assembly has at its present sittings passed certain bills to which and in the name of the Legislative Assembly I respectfully request Your Honour's assent.

Her Honour: You can, but I ask, first of all: would you please be seated.

The Clerk: Your Honour, the following are the titles of the bills to which Your Honour's assent is prayed.

- 1 An Act to Reduce School Fees
- 2 An Act to Remove Barriers for Survivors of Sexual and Domestic Violence

[The Mace was uncovered]

The Speaker: Please be seated.

The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That is an excellent end to an eventful, interesting, and challenging at times week for you and all of us, and I would move, then, that we now adjourn until Monday at 1:30.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 3:06 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us reflect or pray, each in our own way. Hon. members, let us be inspired by the youth of this province, in particular all the youth that are present with us today. Let us work with them to find ways and solutions for a better Alberta. The youth of today will be the decision-makers of tomorrow. Let us also be inspired by those amongst us with special needs and special skills. They are our real heroes.

Thank you, hon. members and ladies and gentlemen. We will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Mr. Robert Clark and a very special guest, Mr. Joey Moss. I would invite all to participate in singing our national anthem.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

[Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Please be seated, hon. members.

Introduction of Guests

Mr. Horne: Mr. Speaker, I would like to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 30 students from Muriel Martin school. The students are accompanied by their teacher, Mrs. Rhonda Surmon, along with their chaperones, Mrs. Heather McDonald and Mrs. Susanne Ambrose. This group is attending School at the Legislature this week, and I would like to ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, we'll now get a special introduction to our special guest today. I was hoping that we might get to sing the national anthem seven times.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today on your behalf to introduce to all members of the Assembly Mr. Joey Moss and his family. Mr. Moss is the beating heart of the Edmonton Oilers organization, having been the locker room attendant for both the Oilers and the Edmonton Eskimos for more than 30 years. His unwavering positivity and passion for the game inspires players and fans across the country. He has been awarded the Queen's Diamond Jubilee medal, the NHL Alumni Association's seventh man award, and is an honoured member of the Alberta Sports Hall of Fame. Mr. Moss is here today with his family: brother Steve Moss; sister Patty Walker and her husband, Stephen; nieces Jordan and Taylor Walker; niece Brittany Walker and her boyfriend, Steve Besenyei; nephew Adam Walker and his wife, Kim; and the family photographer, Tom Braid. They are seated in the Speaker's gallery, and I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

[Mr. Moss made remarks from the gallery]

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly 84 students representing 64 constituencies who are here today as participants in the Mr. Speaker's MLA for a Day program. Offered annually since 2003, this program strives to further develop the interest in and understanding of our parliamentary system among Alberta youth. These high school students arrived on Sunday and since then have participated in a variety of activities. In the last day they toured the Legislature, explored the grounds, and were able to network with Legislative Assembly Office staff to learn about the work they do supporting the members of this Assembly.

Today they're observing question period, meeting with a panel of former MLAs. Tomorrow they'll debate a resolution in this very Chamber, which will be presided over by yourself, Mr. Speaker. During this debate the students will be given a unique perspective on the work done by the members of this Assembly. Following the debate students will visit MLA offices and attend the Leg. with their MLAs.

I would ask that all of our MLA for a Day participants, who are seated in both the members' and the public galleries, please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome, each and every one of you. I would urge you not to hang around too often with the MLAs. I fear that you will get some bad habits.

The hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the board chair of the Alberta Network of Public Housing Agencies, Mrs. Tanni Doblanko. This network is building the capacity of the nonprofit sector in Alberta and is an important advocate for affordable housing. Through connection, education, and advocacy the Alberta Network of Public Housing Agencies is working to create an Alberta where everyone has a safe, affordable, and appropriate place to call home. I would ask that Tanni please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two people who are here to see the introduction of Bill 13 later today. Andrew Kriegler is the president and CEO of the Investment Industry Regulatory Organization of Canada, also known as IIROC. That's a fantastic acronym. With him is Lucy Becker, IIROC's vice-president of public affairs and member education services. I'd ask that they both rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Jeremy Woolward. Jeremy is visiting us from Calgary, and he's been involved in politics since about age 10. He is now a board member for the Member for Calgary-North West. Would like to say a special thank you to the members for Calgary-South East and Vermilion-Lloydminster, but he has crossed the gallery. He has seen the light and has chosen to join a centrist, progressive movement. Please join me in welcoming Jeremy to this House today.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two constituents of mine from the outstanding riding of Calgary-Foothills. They decided to drop in and see the question period today. They are Dorothy Allred and Kenneth Allred. The Allreds are struggling small-business owners, who recently lost a major client to bankruptcy, among other knocks of hard luck. I would ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House. They're in the right gallery.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you my roommate and constituent of the Minister of Health and Deputy Premier, who he voted for, Stephen Engstrom. Stephen has his diploma in travel and tourism from Grant MacEwan. He loves to be outdoors fishing and hiking in his free time, and he just wanted to come and watch QP today. I would ask him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mr. Carlier: Mr. Speaker, it is my sincere pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the president and CEO of Alberta Forest Products Association. May 7 to 13 is Alberta Forest Week. Today the Alberta Forest Products Association and its partners have distributed seedlings to each Member of this Legislative Assembly, inviting all of us to be part of the important work of forest stewardship. AFPA is an important partner of our government in keeping our forest industry strong as we continue the work of diversifying our economy and in facing market challenges. I would like to ask Paul Whittaker to now rise and receive the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other guests today? The Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my distinct honour to introduce an inspirational and intrepid Albertan. Tasha Schindel is a proud but humble wife and mother who embraces an indomitable spirit and a lifetime of volunteerism in children's services, educational institutions, her faith community, and numerous professions to build communities of positive change. She served eight years as provincial director and VP of ASCA, four years on the board of directors for the Calgary Learning Consortium, is the president of the Calgary-Lougheed PC Association, and is the newly minted PCAA regional director for Calgary-South. Tasha spent much of her childhood in Asia, speaks conversational Mandarin Chinese, and truly believes in a global community. I am absolutely honoured to call Tasha a trusted and dear friend, and I ask her now to stand to receive the warm ovation of this Assembly. Thank you, Tasha. You're awesome.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

National Hockey League Playoffs in Alberta

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. Before I begin, let me just say that I'm paying off part of a bet to our Premier. She was right. I was wrong. I'm wearing the winning team's colours. She and her colleagues will get some Alberta craft beer from Polar Park Brewing on my tab, not my ministerial tab but my personal tab, and I will read this ode to her and the winning team in public. Mr. Speaker, it begins:

I stand today to pay a debt
As often requested by Strathmore-Brooks
And though not the ones of which he dreams,
What I say here will balance books.
Because in April's early days
When Flames and Oilers fans both grinned
I bet the Premier that the Flames
Would be the ones to last and win.
And so we watched with bated breath
As players passed and took their shots
But when the first round was laid to rest
The Oilers prevailed, but we did not.
Our hopes: they sputtered and went out
As our team lost in four straight games.
Now our golf courses call 911
To report they're overrun with Flames.
And so I stand here to confess
Before the Speaker and the Queen
That Alberta's greatest honours belong
To the Oilers in 2017.
And for sports fans aching for a fix
Of top-notch sport and playing sublime,
The Oilers alone can scratch that itch,
The right team in the right place at the right time.
And to my colleagues in this House
I raise my voice and clearly state
As Minister of Finance and the Treasury Board
That beer is good, but the Oilers are great.

The Speaker: You may want to stick with that speech writer, hon. minister.

And won't it be nice, hon. members, when we get two teams in the playoffs.

The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I'm glad to see the minister is moving right. A lot of talk about unity here recently in Alberta, and of course all members of this House are united right now, united in a love for the colour orange. I want to make it very clear that, first of all, as you all know, this is the only orange I wear, primarily because it clashes with my hair, as you can tell. No, there hasn't been a sudden defection to the NDP. This orange crush is one we all get behind here in Alberta. It's called the Edmonton Oilers during playoff season. The city of Edmonton and indeed the province have been swept up in the wave of excitement for the team and are certainly rooting for them as they come into game 7 against the Anaheim Ducks Wednesday night.

I wish I could be there. Whether it's the mutton chops of Zack Kassian, the chorus of Lous for Milan Lucic, the dangles of Leon Draisaitl, or the outstanding aerobics of Cam Talbot in net, this is a team for all Albertans to get behind and to make sure they bring the cup back to Alberta. And let's not forget the outstanding performance of Hart trophy candidate and Oilers captain Connor McDavid, who is certainly worthy of the letter C – Mr. Speaker, you might notice it on my sleeve today – on his jersey at the ripe age of 20, believe it or not. At their last home game of this round the Oilers looked more like the Eskimos than a hockey team, scoring, yes, seven points. Ladies and gentlemen, it's duck-hunting season in Alberta.

We'll be cheering for them all the way regardless, but enough can't be said about the way this team has captured the hearts and minds of all Albertans. Oilers fans are everywhere wearing their favourite player's jersey, as I am today, flying their flags on their cars, and making all Canadians proud indeed of singing the anthems, the Canadian one and the American one. They fight this fight not for Edmonton alone but for all Albertans, Mr. Speaker, to bring the cup back to Alberta, because the spirit of this team is infectious. I know all members of this House and all Albertans will join me in saying a resounding: let's go Oilers; let's go.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Member for Calgary-East's World View

Ms Luff: Thank you. In May 2015 the people of Alberta chose a new government because they were tired of the entitled world view of the PCs in power and recognized that the world view of the Wildrose was neither inclusive nor progressive.

Grade 8 students in Alberta know what a world view is, Mr. Speaker. It's in the curriculum. "[A] worldview is a collection of values and beliefs about life and the universe... common to a group of people." The opposition makes a big deal that we're trying to impose our NDP world view on people, so I thought it might be useful to describe exactly what a world view is, what I value, and what I believe.

I value equality. I believe that every Albertan, regardless of race, religion, gender, gender expression, or socioeconomic status, should have access to equal rights and equal opportunities to succeed. I am proud of legislation that included gender expression in the Human Rights Act.

I value education. I believe in high-quality, publicly delivered education. I believe that education is the future. I am proud of our commitment to fund for enrolment growth and to improve the curriculum for a new generation.

I value the environment. I believe in ensuring that our kids have clean air and water. I know that climate change is real and man-made and that we must act now. I am proud that we protected the Castle and put a cap on oil sands emissions.

I value public services. I believe that there is a necessary role for government in providing important services for our citizens and that health and education must stay public services. Period. I am proud of the 2,000 new long-term care beds that we are building.

I value democracy. I believe that the more people are engaged, the better I can do my job. I believe in identifying barriers to participation. I believe democracy should work for everyone. I am proud that we have taken big money out of politics.

I value the arts. I believe that they add richness to our society and our lives both as audiences and participants.

Most of all, Mr. Speaker, I value people. I believe in humanity and its capacity to succeed if we work in co-operation rather than in competition.

These are the things that I value and believe, Mr. Speaker, and I know that Albertans value and believe these things, too. I also believe that although your world view might not be exactly the same as mine, we can find common values for the future of Alberta.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Alberta Health Services Survey

Mr. Jean: A new survey conducted by Alberta Health Services paints a bleak picture indeed about the state of our health care system in the province. The results of the internal survey show that over half of the respondents don't think their opinions count and 43 per cent say that they are not satisfied with AHS as a place to work. This comes as no surprise to those who know that the AHS system is a bloated bureaucracy with managers managing managers. Will the Premier commit to fully releasing this survey, as is standard practice within the government of Alberta's bureaucracy? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I believe that the survey has been fully released, and that's why the member is quoting it.

You know, each day more than 100,000 AHS staff and physicians work tirelessly to promote and protect the health of Albertans. We respect them, and we celebrate them for the work that they do every day. We know that we can always do better on that, but one thing that I will say, Mr. Speaker, is that cutting hundreds of millions and, in some cases, billions out of health care would not make it easier for them to do their jobs. We have their backs, and we will continue to have their backs.

Mr. Jean: Albertans want to trust that when they get sick, they will get the health care that they need from AHS, but the results of this survey clearly show that even health care employees and physicians don't trust AHS. An astonishing 36 per cent – that's 36 per cent of respondents, including front-line workers and physicians – stated that if they needed health care, they would not feel safe receiving it from AHS. Premier, if over one-third of those directly involved in delivery in the health care system wouldn't feel safe receiving health care from AHS, how on earth would regular, normal, everyday Albertans feel confident in the delivery of it?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said before, we are working every day and our Minister of Health is working every day and the Associate Minister of Health is working every day to improve the quality of care that we deliver to Albertans because we understand that when times are tough, people need to understand and appreciate and know that they have a health care system that is there for them when they and their loved ones need it. So we will continue to do that work. But beating up on public-sector employees, trying to bargain with them in public, rolling back funds, cutting things: that's not the way to stabilize our health care system. [interjections]

Our government is here to protect our health care system, not tear it . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, under this NDP government's watch we have a bloated health care system that physicians and nurses don't trust and that isn't getting results for everyday Albertans. When we propose solutions here on the Wildrose side to fix our health care system like exploring ways to reduce wait times, the NDP laughs, ridicules, and shoots them down. This government seems content with a bloated system that isn't serving Albertans. Will the Premier use the results of this survey as a wake-up call and commit to the Wildrose proposal to study ways to reduce wait times in Alberta? Yes or no?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're actually quite proud that on a lot of different measures our health care system is slowly improving. But one thing that won't make things work better is this continued threat of ideological privatization that the members opposite and their hopeful dance partners have been imposing and threatening Albertans with for years because that is what undercuts the confidence of employees. That's what undercuts the confidence of Albertans. [interjections] We are going to inject stability into our health care system because that's what we know Albertans are looking for.

The Speaker: Second main question.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, I was looking for an answer, not a fairy tale.

Oil Sands Advisory Group Co-chair

Mr. Jean: I don't know if it's stubbornness or unwillingness to stand up for Alberta, but Tzepporah Berman's continued position as co-chair of the oil sands advisory group is bad for our province, bad for Albertans. Albertans are frustrated, and justifiably so, that they are handing over any taxpayer dollars to an individual who has equated our oil sands to Mordor and who is actively trying to kill the Trans Mountain expansion project. With friends like Tzepporah Berman, Albertans have no need whatsoever for any enemies. Why won't the Premier do the right thing and fire Berman from this position immediately?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What I have said before is that the oil sands advisory group is working together in order to make serious progress on implementing the emissions cap, an emissions cap which is absolutely fundamental to our successful acquisition of not one but two pipelines. Now, I appreciate that the members opposite would like to tear it all down, undo the whole thing, stick their heads in the ground, pretend there's no problem, and then wonder why we have no pipelines, but that is a failed – failed – strategy. [interjections] We will not go down that road again.

The Speaker: Opposition House Leader, I wonder if you can make sure that your caucus behind you keeps the volume of their comments down today because we have a great day ahead of us.

Mr. Jean: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's the Premier's appointees that are trying to destroy the pipelines going through B.C. The Premier's unwillingness to do the right thing and fire Berman shows her true colours, and Albertans should recognize that. In case she hadn't noticed, we need to be proud supporters of Alberta oil, not send mixed messages to investors and the world. Oil continues to hover around $45 a barrel, and our province is in the worst economic situation since the days of the national energy program. The Premier can't claim to support our oil, having antipipeline activists leading an advisory group on oil sands. It doesn't make any sense. So which is it, Premier? Do you support pipelines and Albertans, or do you support . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, our government has been very clear that we support getting tidewater access for our oil and gas, and that is why we have worked on that project since the very beginning, when we were elected. That's why we have succeeded on that project where the members opposite have failed. They took an approach of yelling at people that didn't agree with them. We took an approach of bringing people together, and we are proud that it is getting results.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, her appointee says: no tidewater pipeline.

Since the Premier won't listen to me on this topic, maybe she'll listen to the very valid concerns of an everyday Albertan. David Young wrote to the Edmonton Journal and asked this pointed question, that the Premier needs to answer.

These folks can't have it both ways: sitting on OSAG (collecting either salaries or stipends) while trashing one of the key economic engines of our Alberta economy. It's time for the premier to correct this situation. Or has the NDP green plan really been [all along] about killing oil [jobs]?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I've said, our government has done nothing but work on getting a pipeline to tidewater, and thankfully that's exactly what happened. You know what? The members opposite can't even agree with each other on things that they theoretically agree on. Meanwhile, what we've done is we've brought oil executives together with environmentalists to work together on a solution. They can do their thing. We'll do our thing. We'll get a pipeline. Someday they might get shared office space. I'll take our choice.

The Speaker: I think we're at the third main question.

Government Advertising Expenses

Mr. Jean: The NDP have developed a nasty habit of using taxpayer dollars to promote their less popular programs and policies. Albertans know it, and we saw it with the rollout of the carbon tax, that Albertans didn't ask for and couldn't afford, and, again, trying their risky and ideological PPA lawsuit. Ridiculous, Mr. Speaker. The latest example is a rollout of ads related to the energy efficiency program that is paid for through the $3 billion carbon tax that Albertans pay. How much taxpayer money has this NDP Premier thrown away in her latest energy ad campaign?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, our government is investing in energy efficiency programs to make life more affordable for Albertans by helping them to reduce the costs of their utilities. The funny thing is that it's hard for people to do that if they don't know about it, so what we are doing is that we are investing to ensure Albertans understand the range of opportunities that they have to engage in energy efficiency strategies and to save money. I will not apologize for that because we are focused on making life better for Albertans.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, this NDP program is going to cost taxpayers more than they will ever save.

That isn't the only new glossy ad campaign that the NDP government is rolling out. Listen to this. A recent CBC report shows that the Public Affairs Bureau is also frantically working on a new video campaign with the company Dynacor that's going to be launched in the coming weeks. It's all part of the propaganda that has seen this NDP government spend over $10 billion on advertising while in office. [interjections] Ten million. Sorry. I'm used to "b"s with the NDP. Will the Premier disclose why she's hired Dynacor and how on earth she can justify this kind of expenditure?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, the previous government left Alberta as the only jurisdiction in North America without an energy efficiency program. It is outrageous. The members opposite and their hopeful new dance partners want to continue down a path of pretending that energy efficiency isn't the most effective way to reduce emissions and help people save money on their regular utility bills. But, like the rest of the continent, we get that that helps Albertans, and we're going to keep working on it because it's an excellent program.

Mr. Jean: The facts are clear, Mr. Speaker. This NDP government has spent almost three times as much as their predecessors on advertising while in office. Shameful. Albertans are disgusted seeing their hard-earned dollars being used for advertisements of government programs that show up in movie theatres or on TV or radio. It's not acceptable. The NDP government continues to waste taxpayer resources on frivolous ad campaigns at a time when they cannot afford it. When will the Premier realize that Albertans don't want to be bought with their own money and stop these expensive ads?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that over 90,000 Albertans have already started to sign up for these energy efficiency programs. Because we know that they work and they save money and they reduce emissions, if we can get another 90,000 people to sign up, that will mean even more money saved and even more emissions reduced. [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet.

Ms Notley: The more people who are involved, the more we save and the more we reduce emissions, Mr. Speaker. So you know what? We're just going to keep working on that very, very, goal.

The Speaker: The leader of the third party.

Job Creation and Retention

Mr. McIver: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, this government claims Alberta has gained 20,000 jobs under their watch, but Statistics Canada's most recent labour force survey tells a different story. Alberta lost 63,200 jobs since May 2015. Meanwhile every part of the goods-producing sector has lost jobs, totalling 71,000, since this government took power. When will this government's failed plan actually produce even one private-sector job beyond the tens and hundreds of thousands that you have driven out of Alberta?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the member opposite knows, with the drop in the price of oil many, many Albertans lost their jobs. We are concerned about them, and we understand that it was a very, very serious issue for many, many Alberta families, and that's why we've been focused on trying to combat that which happened as a result of the price of oil. You're right. We're not there yet. For nine of the last 10 months we've seen job growth in Alberta, and that's good. In March we saw 20,000 new jobs, and that's even better, but we'll be the first to admit that our job is not done. We continue to be focused on creating jobs for Albertans.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. The Premier never gets tired of being wrong.

Agriculture is among Alberta's most important industries that do not depend directly on global energy prices: 16,700 jobs lost in agriculture, Premier, not because of oil. Twenty-four per cent of the 68,000 jobs gone under your watch. Can the agriculture minister tell us how much of that job loss is due to an actual contraction in agriculture production and exports and how much is due to farmers and ranchers avoiding hiring so they don't have to deal with Bill 6?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I for one and this government can't be more proud of our agriculture sector. The agri-food processing sector in Alberta is now the largest manufacturing sector in the province. Our agriculture continues to be a real bright spot in the province and will continue to be so. I and this government have the best interests of farmers at heart. We will continue to do so. We're making lives better for all farmers. We're making life better for all Albertans.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, it's no wonder neither minister wanted to answer the question about their failed policies: 89,000 jobs from our goods-producing sector lost, including 31,000 in construction, 22,000 in manufacturing, 16,000 in agriculture, thousands more in energy. Given that the jobs in exportable services are also down, including 15,000 in accommodation and food service, they have a lot to be ashamed of. How can this government claim it's diversifying the economy when almost every sector has lost jobs on your watch? They're not all because of oil.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know what I'm not going to apologize for? The fact that the number of rigs drilling in our province is up 100 per cent from last year, the fact that Alberta's exports are up 68 per cent over the same time last year. That's including our nonenergy exports, which have reached the highest levels since 2008. Our wholesale trade has risen for the fifth month in a row and has reached the highest levels since June 2015. Last year we led the country in private-sector capital investment, and we're on track to lead it again.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Energy Industry Update

Mr. Westhead: Mr. Speaker, while we all know that record-low global oil prices triggered a recession in Alberta in 2015, there are positive signs for the province's economy and for Alberta's oil and gas sector. But the opposition wants Albertans to believe it's a bad thing that our home-grown oil companies are doing well and increasing their investments in the oil sands. Albertans aren't impressed that the opposition is cheering for failure. To the Minister of Energy: what signals are you seeing to suggest improved prospects for industry and Albertans in 2017? [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members.

The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we know the last couple years have been hard for Albertans and hard on their families. We are seeing a growing sense of optimism. We know that drilling is up, and with drilling come more jobs. Up my way I'm seeing that hotels are fuller, more service rigs are on the roads, and life in general is busier. With two pipeline approvals and our royalty review system, our side of the government is getting results. We need you folks to cheer for us. [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet, please.

First supplemental.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this increased activity coincides with improved resource prices since this time last year, again to the minister: what is it that the government has done to contribute to increased investment and activity in the oil and gas sector? [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet, please.

The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, critics said that it was the wrong time to review the royalty system, but it proved to be exactly the right time. Our modernized royalty framework supports producers for innovation and supports lowering costs. The new framework is supporting jobs in both conventional oil and gas and in the oil sands, and the outlook for 2017 is very bright. We expect to be having more than 650 rigs, more than our neighbouring provinces. We're not out of the woods yet, but we know that we are seeing a lot of positive signs.

2:10

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Second supplemental.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Energy: given that it's important to see continued investment in Alberta, what is the government doing to counteract the opposition's dangerous climate change denialism and unduly negative characterization of our province's investment climate? [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, when I stand, please be quiet. Thank you.

The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I talk daily to energy industry stakeholders. They have heard the same cries about uncertainty, but you know what causes uncertainty? It's an opposition who talks down Alberta consistently and talks about getting rid of the carbon leadership plan, the carbon leadership plan that got us two pipeline approvals. So I would urge the opposition to get out from under the dome themselves and go speak to those stakeholders, who are very worried about the uncertainty that they are causing. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, please.

Promotion of Alberta's Energy Industry

Mr. Panda: Today I am proud to put forward Motion 505, which will shift Canada away from buying the oil of oppressive dictatorships. Alberta is among the most socially and environmentally minded jurisdictions in the world for petroleum production, yet members of this NDP government have protested oil development, spreading dangerous misinformation. Albertans still doubt the NDP's 180-degree turnaround from anti-oil to pro-development. Does the Premier agree that Alberta's oil is ethical compared to other sources of crude?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I mentioned, we've worked very hard to get two pipelines. Those pipeline approvals came because of a climate leadership plan and the hard work on this side of the House. Our opposition keeps saying that if – if – they are ever elected, they will scrap the climate leadership plan. Do they not understand that that's the very plan that got us two pipeline approvals? [interjections]

The Speaker: Please keep it down.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, given that the NDP want Albertans to celebrate the approval for the repair on line 9 as if it is the same as a new pipeline, spooking Energy East's proponents, and given that Alberta still needs Energy East and given that Energy East is critical for ending Canada's dependence on dictator oil, when will the Premier stand up to her Leap fanatic friends, also known as dance partners, across Canada about the legacy of clean, ethical oil in Alberta and stop stoking the fires against pipeline approvals?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, the difference between a dance partner and someone you disagree with is that where you're begging someone to be your dance partner, you're also running around talking about how much you agree on everything even though, apparently, you can't agree on your plan. But what we've been very clear on is that we object to and we reject the position of the Leap Manifesto and everything about it. Quite the opposite. We have gone into places where people are not in favour of pipelines and we have argued for pipelines. We've talked to environmentalists and we've talked to labour unions because you shouldn't yell at your opposition when you don't agree. You should try to bring . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, the NDP pay the salary of antipipeline protester Tzeponah Berman while she spreads misinformation. Given that Berman's rhetoric on pipelines proves that the Premier's social licence plan hasn't convinced the eco radicals and given that this misinformation undermines the public confidence in pipelines, is Berman on the OSAG panel because she represents the personal views of the Premier, or will the Premier acknowledge the truth right now, that Alberta oil is clean and ethical?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we disagree with Ms Berman's position on pipelines, but she is on the OSAG committee to help us . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members. Please pause the clock. I can't hear. Keep your voices down.

Mr. Cooper: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order noted.

Minister of Energy, please continue.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The OSAG committee is a committee of energy companies, environmental leaders, and community representatives who are helping us work with the 100-megatonne cap. I can tell you that on this side of the House we are taking our orders from Albertans, not from Premiers of other provinces, not from people outside this province. We are listening to Albertans.

Advanced Education Ministry Travel Expenses

Mr. Rodney: Last week I quoted from the government's own numbers in a speech, so it was beyond ironic when a minister stated, "If I were a faculty member, I would give him an F minus." Now, curiously, immediately thereafter the Auditor General released his report on the travel, meal, and hospitality expenses of seven ministries but singled out Advanced Education for insufficient business rationale documentation, no preapproval for out-of-province travel, incorrect quoting on expenses, with an expense not being publicly disclosed. Now, with a failing grade from the Auditor General, when will the Minister of Advanced Education rectify all of these problems?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We want to thank the Auditor General for his guidance on this matter. We're working with the Auditor General and the finance department because we recognize that we have some processes that we can improve. We're working diligently to make sure that those processes are better going forward.

Mr. Rodney: Given that during debate last week the minister suggested that a certain member had not done his homework and given that the Ministry of Advanced Education was the only ministry audited which did not have the proper systems or protocols in place, again to the minister. It would appear that perhaps you have been singled out as not having completed your homework, so will you take this opportunity here and now in this Chamber to explain to all Albertans why your office and your department were the only ones not following the rules?

Mr. Schmidt: Well, Mr. Speaker, of course, we take our responsibility for managing tax dollars prudently very seriously. That's why we're working with the Auditor General and our finance departments to make sure that our processes are improved going forward and that we have the proper documentation and controls in place so that all of our expenses are beyond question.

I want to thank the Auditor General for helping us see the error of our ways, and I want to assure everyone in this House that we're making sure that we do a better job in the future.

Mr. Rodney: Albertans are wondering what he'd be saying if he wasn't caught.

Now, given that the Auditor General also reviewed the internal controls of 16 postsecondary institutions from across Alberta and given that his office identified six of them as needing improvement for financial statements as well as the implementation of outstanding Auditor General recommendations from last year, again to the minister: what oversight are you providing to these institutions, and when can we expect them to be in compliance with the Auditor General's recommendations?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I want to thank the hon. member for the question. Of course, we are very concerned about some of the issues that the Auditor General raised with respect to the financial reporting that took place at a number of the institutions that he identified in the report. We're working with those institutions to make sure that they have all of the information that the Auditor General needs for future reports. We're working diligently to make sure that everything is going to be in better shape for the next Auditor General report.

Legal Aid

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, legal aid is a vital component of our legal system, providing representation and other services for eligible Albertans who could not have otherwise afforded legal services. The recent Auditor General report highlights several disturbing facts, including that there have been no performance measures to monitor cost-effectiveness or quality until just recently. Even worse, there's a lack of clarity on what services it should provide. The AG also notes that internal studies have been done, yet there remains no action. What is the minister doing to address this problem?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We know that legal aid is a critical component in our justice system. That's why this government has increased funding to Legal Aid by 26 per cent since we took office. We know that there is still more work that needs to be done to ensure that we are delivering the services needed by vulnerable Albertans. We will continue to work on our processes and systems to make sure that we are doing the absolute best job we can to take care of those people, but what certainly won't help is cutting billions of dollars out of operating.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, given that another problem facing Legal Aid Alberta is inconsistent budgeting practices, which have led to three supplemental budget votes in just five years, and given that the Auditor General notes the recent budget will be unable to avoid the need for supplemental funding in 2017-2018 and despite that I already raised this exact issue to the minister during the estimates process, when will the minister stop throwing money at the issues and actually fix the problems?

The Speaker: The hon. Justice minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We know that we need to keep moving forward to ensure that Legal Aid is able to deliver the services necessary to vulnerable Albertans. This has been an issue that has evolved over years. We know that the previous government chose to do absolutely nothing about it and put their head in the sand and ignored the problem. That's why we're taking action, that's why we have moved on increasing funding to Legal Aid, and that's why we've moved on increasing funding to other sectors of the justice system. They want to study the problem forever; we want to fix it.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this problem comes down to the oversight and programming responsibilities that rest solely on the shoulders of the Minister of Justice and that, unfortunately, we have really heard radio silence from this minister on the topic of legal aid and given that the Premier in her opposition days requested this review and chastised the former government's similar inaction as, I quote, a complete abandonment of obligations of the Minister of Justice, unquote, who has abandoned legal aid reform as a priority for this government, the minister or the Premier?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. No one has done more to ensure that Legal Aid is delivering the necessary services than this government has done. Previous government stuck its head in the sand and ignored the problem. We started a review. We've been going out and talking to Albertans, we've been working with the Auditor General on this issue, and we've been investing the necessary funds throughout the justice system.

Prescription Drug Coverage for Eye Disease

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, Frankie Leavitt from my riding suffers from macular degeneration and, as a result, is blind in one eye and going blind in the other. A new drug called Eylea has helped. Her injections, needed every 30 to 60 days, resulted in her one eye improving dramatically. Each treatment costs over $1,600 and is not covered by AHS. The number of compassionate treatments from the drug company has run out. Frankie only makes $1,600 a month. To the Minister of Health: why isn't Eylea an approved drug as part of the AHS coverage?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I know that macular degeneration is a condition that impacts many Albertans. We're working with the manufacturer and through the common drug review to make sure that we can get it on label and accessible to Albertans as quickly as possible, within reasonable cost limitations, which, of course, as the member points out, right now are not so. We're working to make sure that we bring this about for the benefit of Albertans and at an effective cost. I look forward to being able to update the House and Albertans about this very soon.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, given that Frankie is still active in the community and able to do physical activities like mow the lawn and shovel snow and given that Frankie faces the very real possibility of having to choose between keeping her sight, which would allow her to stay at home, or losing her sight and moving into seniors' assisted living, does the minister not understand that the best option for Frankie and for the government is for AHS to pick up the cost of the treatment?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I mentioned in the last response, we are actively engaged in conversations with drug manufacturers through the common drug review to make sure that we have access to drugs that will improve quality of life. We encourage anyone at this time to continue working with their optometrist or their ophthalmologist to make sure that the treatments that are available today are accessible to them. That's one of the reasons why I was so proud to bring in the rapid drug program just a year and a half ago, which, of course, is bringing about better quality, better choice, and better cost savings to all Albertans.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, given that the side effects of Eylea are manageable and the drug is FDA approved and given Frankie has almost completely depleted her life savings trying to fund this life-transforming drug, will the minister be willing to meet with Frankie Leavitt this week to discuss how she can get the right care at the right place by the right people?

Ms Hoffman: I'm always happy to meet with Albertans, as I spend a great deal of my time, unlike the members of the opposition, who seem to be spending a lot of time in the backrooms of the Federal building. I'd be very honoured to take that meeting, Mr. Speaker, to make sure that we continue to move forward, to make sure that this individual as well as all Albertans have opportunities to have the very best savings, the very best services, and the very best drugs for the benefit of all Albertans. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members.

The Member for Calgary-West.

Death Investigation Time Frames

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Performing autopsies for suspected homicides is a crucial responsibility of the office of the Chief Medical Examiner, yet autopsies for murders and suspicious deaths can take more than a year, such as the one for three-month-old Cyrus Nel of Airdrie, whose 2015 death was just recently ruled a homicide, and delays like this can compromise police investigation. To the minister: what are you doing to ensure the ME's office expedites autopsies to allow police to move forward rapidly with criminal investigations?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. You know, we think that the work the office of the Chief Medical Examiner does is absolutely critical. It's critical to police; it's critical to victims and families of victims who are waiting to hear the outcome of a case. That's why we've invested in the office of the Chief Medical Examiner. We've provided them with an additional million dollars that will allow them to hire two new medical examiners to ensure that they are able to complete their work in a timely manner in addition to doing the additional work we've asked them to do.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister confirmed in estimates that the purpose of injecting additional money into the medical examiner's office is to decrease turnaround times for death reports and given that this year's $800,000 to a $1 million funding increase for the office should come with targets and given that it is the job of the minister to set those expectations, yet there were none in the business plan, Minister, why have you not set any specific timelines for the ME's office to finalize death reports?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, we think it's important for any of our employees to be meeting necessary targets. Autopsies are very complicated things. They depend on a number of factors in the case. There's a lot of back and forth between investigators and the office of the Chief Medical Examiner. That sometimes takes some time, and sometimes different specialists are required. We work with them to ensure that they are meeting their targets, but in order to ensure that they are able to do this work, it was necessary to make those resource investments, and we're very proud of them.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, thank you. Given that Ontario has a 90-day target for finalizing its death investigations and given that in Alberta the Chief Medical Examiner is talking about meeting a nine-month turnaround for final death reports and given that this NDP government is not providing the medical examiner's office with new measurables despite this injection of money, Minister, are you not just throwing money at a problem without any expectations of accountability?

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member will be aware, it does take awhile to hire these professionals. There are not a lot of pathologists throughout North America, so it does take a while to complete the hiring process and to sometimes work with the immigration folks so that we can bring in the necessary people because we don't have as many as we would like in Canada. We will absolutely be working with the office of the Chief Medical Examiner to ensure that as we go forward, they're able to bring down those timelines in a reasonable and consistent manner.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

2:30 Legislature Grounds Usage Policy

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a downtown resident and a former employee of the city of Edmonton's LRT design and construction branch I am a big believer in public transit. As a representative of Edmonton's downtown I recognize the important vibrancy that the many festivals that we host here bring to our community. We have reached a phase now in the construction of Edmonton's valley line where several downtown festivals are going to have to temporarily move from Churchill Square in order to allow for the construction of the valley line. One such festival is the Taste of Edmonton. Given that the Taste of Edmonton festival has asked to be able to host their festival here at the Legislature Grounds on the federal plaza, to the Minister of Infrastructure: what is being done . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the hon. member for his question and his advocacy for Edmonton's festival scene. Like many Albertans, I always look forward to the Taste of Edmonton, and I want to inform him that senior officials at Alberta Infrastructure are working with Taste of Edmonton right now to make it possible to host this major festival at the appropriate time. We want to ensure that the Taste of Edmonton continues after 34 successful years.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that public space in the heart of our city is at a premium but is important to community vitality and vibrancy and given that the Legislature and its grounds belong to the people of Alberta and given that the outdated policies about the use of these grounds are restricting their enjoyment by Albertans, to the Minister of Infrastructure: what is being done to bring this policy into the 21st century?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is absolutely correct that the Legislature Grounds belong to the people of Alberta. We are working on a new policy that will welcome more Albertans to their Legislature Grounds while recognizing its historical and cultural importance. One of the policies we're looking at is a no-dancing policy, put in place by the previous government. You know, we're not going to let the killjoys over there stop Albertans from enjoying their Legislature Grounds. [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet, please.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that both myself and many of my constituents are known to enjoy the opportunity to cut a rug and given that I have been approached by other festivals such as the Cariwest festival expressing interest in making use of the Legislature Grounds, to the minister: when can we expect to see this new policy?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the question. We have short summers in Edmonton, and we need to be able to make the most of that time and enjoy the opening up of the Legislature for those kinds of things. We're working to bring forward the policy as soon as possible, and we want to be in a position to welcome new activities to the Legislature precinct. We need to respect the history of this place, but we can open it up to the people, and I think we can have some fun while we're doing it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Seniors' Self-managed Care

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We understand from a former senior executive at AHS and the owner of Community Care Cottages in Red Deer that it is unclear if seniors can use self-managed care funding in a private facility. One couple were told they had six months to move to a public institution or lose their self-managed funds because there supposedly was a duplication of services although the facility does not offer the needed care as part of the rental fee. Can the minister clarify? Can residents of private facilities still access self-managed care for their unmet needs?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, I was happy to address this last week and this week and whatever other weeks might be required. It continues to be the case that in this province you have individual assessments, and then care is assigned based on the need of the individual resident. Yes, that care can be done in a variety of settings, including an independent home, a lodge, or another care facility. There continues to be case-by-case assessment. If the member would like to talk to some folks that understand the issue, I'd be happy to arrange so.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the owner of the cottages was told that when an Albertan chooses to leave the public health system and go private, the system washes their hands of that person and given that AHS managers made it clear to her that if anyone anywhere in Alberta living in a private care home is currently receiving SMC funds it is an error that they will correct and they said that they have ways to figure out who the seniors are and where they are living, why are the rules different depending on the type of facility a senior chooses?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, why the member's research department would give him that kind of information, that certainly isn't based on fact, is beyond me, but I'd be very happy to connect the member opposite with people who actually understand the process, understand how it works, and to make sure that he has an opportunity to receive valid information to position future questions on because I certainly want to help him be successful.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that we've heard that self-managed funds are being denied even when the assessed unmet needs are on the record and given that families report that they've heard that funding does not exist or is frozen and not to apply because they do not qualify for unmet needs or would not qualify if they chose to live in a private facility, to the minister: what are your instructions to home care co-ordinators about self-managed funds in private facilities, and does the 2017 budget for self-managed care funding apply to private facilities?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, I'll say it again with pride. Individual case-by-case assessments are done based on citizens' needs, how they can best be accommodated, and what types of care options they might want to access to be able to do that. My direction to the member opposite is: please, do sit down with me. I'd be happy to walk you through the program and provide those assurances. I think we touched on it at estimates. I'd be happy to do so again. We are continuing to provide a range of supports, including supports in self-managed care.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Trade Mission to China and Japan

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier and the minister of economic development recently returned from a trip to Asia. Promoting trade between Alberta and the world is a key component of any foreign mission. However, the government should also be focused on attracting foreign investment to Alberta. A recent Calgary Herald article referenced comments by China's ambassador to Canada in which he stated when talking about the oil sands: "I do not believe that Chinese enterprises would still be interested in this." To the Minister of EDT: what progress did you make in addressing the negative perception during your trip to China?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for his question. I can tell you that China is very, very interested in our energy. We know that Alberta is the energy and environmental leader that the world needs for the 21st century. While the Premier and I were in Asia, we had numerous conversations about the approval of Trans Mountain, which, I can tell you, was very welcome news. Asia is hungry for our energy, and Alberta is more than willing to provide the world and Asia with our energy resources.

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, given that the Premier recently announced that Alberta and the Chinese province of Guangdong had become sister provinces and given that while such announcements are helpful in strengthening bonds with a particular region, those bonds must be nurtured and supported now and into the future in order to achieve full potential, reflecting on our current relationship with Heilongjiang, again to the minister: what specifically are you doing to build cultural and commercial bridges between Guangdong and Alberta, and what specifically is your ministry doing to promote trade with the people and businesses of Guangdong?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the question. The Premier signed a new twinning relationship with the province of Guangdong. I can tell you that this is the first new twinning since the 1980s with Asia, so this was long overdue. Just to put this into perspective, Guangdong is the economic engine, or one of, in China. They are responsible for one-fifth of China's GDP. They are an economic powerhouse. We recently opened an Alberta office, the 12th Alberta office, in the capital of Guangdong. I've been there three times now, and the Premier . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, given that Japan has recently chosen to increase the amount of electricity within their grid from coal-fired generation and given that we have heard that there are Japanese companies ready and willing to buy large amounts of Alberta's low-sulphur thermal coal, with a potential for significant direct investment in Alberta to follow, and given that this government has treated the thermal coal industry as just another climate change outcast, again to the minister: did you discuss thermal coal opportunities while you were in Japan, and if so, what specific supports are you offering this industry in facilitating exports?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again I'll thank the member for the question. First of all, when we were in Japan, the topic of coal actually didn't come up that often, but what I can tell you is that Japan is also very interested in energy security and in continuing to work with Canada. I can tell you that the Premier signed an agreement with Japan Oil, Gas and Metals National Corporation. JOGMEC is a significant company that already has invested over a billion dollars in Canada, with the majority of it being here in Alberta. We are continuing to work with them.

2:40

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad that the member opposite and myself are both very interested in the impact that the Premier and the Minister of Economic Development and Trade had in their trade mission to China and Japan. I'm really interested in the way that both Chinese and Japanese markets are interested in our agricultural and forestry products, and I was wondering if the Minister of Economic Development and Trade could let us know.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the question. I'm thrilled to see that there's so much interest in our trade missions, as there should be because these missions are absolutely critical to continuing to open doors for Alberta businesses. I know that the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry has been to China and Japan; the Minister of Energy has as well. I myself have been to Japan twice. There is a significant and growing interest in a lot of our agricultural products, from honey to barley. There is interest in our products in beef and pork. I'd be happy to expand on that in the next response.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Chinese and Japanese economies are growing and given that the demand for Alberta products is increasing along with them, to the same minister: I'm wondering how this government is helping Alberta businesses to take advantage of the opportunities this growth presents.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll thank the member for the question. Absolutely, we want to support Alberta businesses to diversify their markets. We know that businesses that have a diversity of products and markets build a resilience and are able to weather an economic downturn. This is why last fall in November I was very honoured to lead the largest trade delegation in the history of the province, with over 80 businesses and business associations, including the Alberta Industrial Heartland, which I know is in part of the member's riding. I can tell you that we have a number of programs . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have always been pleased, when I've travelled to Asia, to see our product from Alberta on the supermarket shelf or advertised. I was wondering what other activities the Premier and the Minister of Economic Development and Trade undertook to showcase our products and opportunities for businesses.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member. As I was saying, we have a number of supports for Alberta companies that are interested in exporting and getting into new markets. I would encourage them to visit jobsplan.alberta.ca. What's really exciting is that, again, Japan is Alberta's largest market for pork and our third-largest for beef. What's fascinating is that in the last few years Alberta has increased its market share. When you're in Japan, 40 per cent of the pork comes from Canada, and the majority of that is from Alberta. That is very significant. The Minister of Agriculture and Forestry and I are going to continue . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Hon. members, in 30 seconds we will proceed with Members' Statements.

Provincial Fiscal Deficit

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, if left unchecked, this NDP government's policies will bankrupt this province. Their debt-fuelled budgets, without any plan on a way back to balance, leave me to wonder if they are in denial and do not recognize that they have a problem or if they know they have a problem but are not willing to solve it. In other words, they are either incompetent or immoral: incompetent if they cannot recognize that we have a structural deficit problem; immoral if they recognize that we have a structural deficit problem but are willing to saddle our children with a massive debt burden.

This government is projecting an operational deficit this year of $10.3 billion. They are borrowing almost a quarter of what they are spending. Projections indicate a $71 billion debt by the time the next election is called. The NDP would like Albertans to believe that the problem is the price of oil and that they are not to blame for this massive debt growth. Nothing could be further from the truth.

Ideological decisions implemented by this government are piling on extra debt and leading our industries down a path of increased costs. It started with increases to corporate and personal taxes. Then came increases in the specified gas emitters levy, resulting in returned PPA contracts at a price of over $4 billion. Next there was the early shutdown of coal electricity generation, $1.4 billion, and the list goes on. How about a $4 billion carbon tax to top it all off?

Mr. Speaker, Albertans know it is the hard-working, ordinary people of Alberta that will pay the price for this NDP government's mismanagement. They will pay for it with increased taxation, reduced job opportunities, and their children's future. Governments running out of money and reaching a point where they are unable to borrow more money is not a fantasy. This government is failing to deal with their structural deficit problem. This government has implemented policies that have increased our debt far more than it ever needed to be, and if left unchecked, this NDP government will bankrupt this province.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I've received a request for unanimous consent for an introduction.

The Speaker: The Minister of Indigenous Relations

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to make this introduction to you and through you to the whole House. I'd like to introduce Lennea Oseen, who is my next-door neighbour and also works for the department of agriculture here in the province. She is accompanied today by her father, Chester Oseen, who's a farmer in southern Alberta, and his wife, Hilda Oseen, both of whom now live in Lethbridge-East. If they could please rise and receive the traditional welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ombudsman's Office 50th Anniversary

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 1970 Alberta Supreme Court Justice Milvain had this to say regarding the Alberta Ombudsman.

He can bring the lamp of scrutiny to otherwise dark places, even over the resistance of those who would draw the blinds. If his scrutiny and observations are well-founded, corrective measures can be taken in due democratic process, if not, no harm can be done in looking at that which is good.

On September 1, 1967, the province of Alberta became the first jurisdiction in North America to open itself up to this "lamp of scrutiny." On that day, almost 50 years ago, the office of the Alberta Ombudsman opened its doors and George McClellan, the province's first Ombudsman, arrived at work to find 30 complaints already waiting on his desk.

In the years that followed, Mr. Speaker, the work has never ceased. Individuals in the role of the Alberta Ombudsman have gone on to assist in the development of offices in other jurisdictions and played an instrumental role in the creation of the International Ombudsman Institute in 1978. Our office of the Ombudsman continues to act as a consultant to investigators from around the world.

The Ombudsman's jurisdiction has expanded over time and will soon grow again as the office begins to provide oversight to Alberta's municipalities. But throughout its growth and evolution one thing about the office of the Ombudsman has held firm, that being its steadfast commitment to support Albertans by promoting administrative fairness in an increasingly complex environment.

As chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices it is a pleasure to acknowledge the contributions that the office of the Alberta Ombudsman has made and will continue to make to our province and to congratulate everyone involved on the upcoming 50th anniversary of that good work.

Thank you.

The Speaker: My apologies. I missed the Member for Calgary-West.

Calgary Southwest Ring Road Construction Concerns

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This NDP government continues to display a lack of interest in the consequences of its actions. A case in point is the much-anticipated construction of the southwest Calgary ring road.

Let's be clear. Calgarians in neighbourhoods bordering the ring road support it. They also anticipated some inconvenience during the construction. But they did not expect gravel crushing and asphalt operations virtually in their backyards, that will run continuously, and they certainly did not expect a road dam that leaves them susceptible to flooding. Furthermore, they do not appreciate being ignored.

They are naturally worried about breathing in carcinogens from the gravel and asphalt operations that will put their health at risk. Additionally, they fear that this road dam will intensify another 2013 flood and will put communities at risk. These are all valid concerns. The people of West Springs, Bridlewood, Discovery Ridge, The Slopes, Lakeview, and Tsuut'ina, among others, are simply asking for a face-to-face meeting with the Transportation minister, but they are repeatedly snubbed.

So PC MLAs are intervening. My colleagues and I are actively working on their behalf. Last month I sent a respectful letter to the Minister of Transportation seeking a meeting. It has been five weeks, and I am still waiting. We are frustrated with the NDP government's attitude of: please stop bothering us because we know best. Today we are putting them on notice. We will not stop bothering you until you address the concerns directly with these residents and work with them to find common-sense solutions. Move the gravel crushing and the asphalt operations. This is not rocket science. People simply want to use their backyards without running the risk of contracting silicosis.

Minister, respectfully, will you please meet with these people?

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Wind Power and Technology Changes

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me take everyone to New York in the early 1900s. Transportation was by horse: individual riders and horses pulling coaches, carts, and wagons. Imagine all of the workers involved at the stables driving ice carts and milk carts, feeding and caring for horses, cleaning the manure, and building carts, saddles, harnesses, whips, and so on. The economy was built around the horse.

Then along came Henry Ford and his Model T. Not only did this change transportation; it also transformed the economy with the creation of new wealth and new jobs. New York did not disappear because the horse was no longer the main form of transportation; it survived and became an American economic powerhouse.

Today in Alberta another transformation is taking place. The transformation is in our electricity sector, away from coal toward more renewable energy. There are many types of renewable energy, but the one that I want to focus on is wind power.

Canada's first commercial wind farm was installed on Cowley Ridge in southern Alberta in 1993, and in the 24 years since then Alberta's wind energy has grown to rank third in Canada. Alberta now has 38 wind installations and 901 wind turbines producing enough electricity each year to power more than 600,000 homes. Rural municipalities such as Vulcan county, Paintearth county, and the MD of Pincher Creek receive millions of dollars in tax revenue from wind power, and it brings new income and jobs to rural communities. Wind is also a source of significant greenhouse gas reductions, sustainably generating electricity without emitting air pollutants or toxic waste. It is one of the most affordable forms of electricity available today.

While some of the opposition will blow hard about transitioning toward renewable energy, the past has shown that transformation can bring prosperity. Henry Ford drove into the future . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Health Care in Central Alberta

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. People in central Alberta are desperate for this government to make their health care a priority. Facilities like the Red Deer regional hospital are the primary point for acute-care delivery to the over half a million Albertans living in AHS's central zone, so you can imagine how devastated people were, not only in Red Deer but in the entire region, when year over year AHS's list of top 20 infrastructure priorities went from featuring only two central zone projects in 2015 to a whopping zero projects in 2016.

The per capita funding is also grossly behind every other part of the province, and the imbalance is having serious effects on Albertans' health. This kind of inequity has led to the central zone having the longest emergency room wait times in the province, outraging not only residents but also front-line workers. It's nearing a crisis situation, and it's evidenced by the brave doctors and nurses who are being forced to organize rallies and speak out against a system that is leaving them and their patients behind.

Last summer the Minister of Health told Albertans, quote: always know the buck stops with this minister. But, Mr. Speaker, the problem is with the minister. The NDP talk about the importance of local leadership and empowering communities to prioritize their own needs, but at every step the Minister of Health has centralized power under her control, and this is the result. This is a power-hungry government that does not trust Albertans to get it right, and it shows in the management and deliverables of our health system. Minister, listen to the residents of central Alberta and start making their health care a priority.

Thank you.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Securities Amendment Act, 2017

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 13, the Securities Amendment Act, 2017.

The securities regulatory landscape has become more complex, sophisticated, global, and driven by technology than ever before. The government of Alberta is working to make life better for Albertans with practical changes that help make sure that their investments are safe. The proposed amendments are intended to enhance protection of Alberta investors and prompt a fair and effective Alberta capital market. With these amendments we're ensuring that Alberta's securities regulatory system reflects the realities of today's market and evolves with international standards and global regulatory reform initiatives. We are also making changes to Alberta's securities laws to harmonize our system with other jurisdictions in Canada which will help to ensure that our capital markets remain vibrant and efficient.

Thank you to IIROC and to CARP for standing with me earlier today and announcing these at a press conference.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 13 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table, on day 15 of excellent Public Affairs Bureau tablings, a letter I wrote to the hon. Government House Leader on 9 March 2017, where he was referring in 2003 to then Premier Stelmach and said:

When the opposition stands up and asks legitimate questions about an increase in communications staff . . . he can actually turn it around into the opposition wanting to take services away from the blind.

That sounds very familiar.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I believe we're at points of order. The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll withdraw the point of order.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Orders of the Day

Motions for Returns

FOIP Request Processing

M1. Mr. Cooper moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all documents relating to Alberta Justice's role in processing requests made to other government ministries under the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, excluding documents that contain legal advice.

[Debate adjourned May 1: Mr. Cyr speaking]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: I think I've already spoken. I could close debate if you want.

The Speaker: Any other members wish to speak to this motion?

The hon. member.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak, for the benefit of the House, who may not recall where we were last week, on the amended Motion for Return 1 with respect to copies of all documents relating to Alberta Justice's role in processing requests to other government ministries under the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act and, of course, the amendment, "excluding documents that contain legal advice."

I'd just like to very briefly remind the minister that it's my hope that she doesn't utilize "excluding documents that contain legal advice" too broadly or widely to ensure that the ministry doesn't need to comply with our request. This is important information that should be available to the public. I will support and encourage my colleagues to support the amended motion for a return although reluctantly. Some information is better than no information.

I am assuming that later on this afternoon I will have the opportunity to speak at some length about the government refusing to provide information to the Assembly, which is not just rightfully the Assembly's but also Albertans'.

[Motion for a Return 1 as amended carried]

Mr. Smith: The hon. Member for Drayton-Valley Devon.

Trinity Christian School Association

M2. Mr. Smith moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all correspondence between the government and Trinity Christian School Association sent or received between September 1, 2014, and March 1, 2017.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's clear that the Minister of Education and his senior administration mishandled the Trinity Christian and Wisdom schooling file. Instead of working with the administrations of these institutions to deal with the financial concerns and perhaps even appointing a trustee, the minister instead chose to shut down the program, and he left 3,500 students and their families scrambling for some sort of an alternative.

The minister clearly stated that the issues revolved around financial accounting practices and the following of certain regulations. This was not, to be clear, an issue of the quality of the education program but of its financial administration. The minister knew these situations and that in situations like this they'd been handled by appointing a trustee to help school boards come into compliance with all of the pertinent rules and pertinent regulations. It appeared to many Albertans that the actions of this minister in shutting down the programs and leaving 3,500 students in complete educational disarray were disproportionate to the problems that were observed in the administration of the schools and their programs. It's important for Albertans to begin to understand why the minister came to the conclusions that he did, especially in light of the fact that when this issue went to the courts, the courts appeared to believe that the minister indeed did not handle this issue in a proportional fashion.

Wildrose has asked for the correspondence between the minister, Trinity Christian School Association, and the government between September 1, 2014, and March 1, 2017. We'd like to know: just how did the minister get this so wrong? What led him to conclude that his actions to shut down these programs and to deny home educators their choice of program was a reasonable course of action?

That is why I've asked for the correspondence between the ministry and Trinity Christian school. This minister must be held accountable for his uncalled for closing of the Wisdom home-school. I have used the dates from September 2014 because that will give us the correspondence for almost a full school year prior to this government's election to see what previous correspondence was taken into consideration when making this heavy-handed decision.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the hon. member for his motion for a return and for his comments. At this point I would like to move that Motion for a Return 2 be amended by striking out "correspondence between the government and Trinity Christian School Association sent or received" and substituting "official signed correspondence from the Minister or Deputy Minister of Alberta Education pertaining to Trinity Christian School Association sent."

Mr. Speaker, the amended motion for a return would read as follows:

That an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all official signed correspondence from the Minister or Deputy Minister of Alberta Education pertaining to Trinity Christian School Association sent between September 1, 2014, and March 1, 2017.

I have the signed copies of that from the Minister of Education, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Is there anyone wishing to speak to the amendment? The Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak against this amendment. Motion for a Return 2 was all about bringing the actions of the government into the light of day. We've seen that something went terribly wrong here when you see 3,500 students placed into a situation where they do not have access to their school of choice, and we've seen that the courts have intervened on this.

This amendment, I believe, is meant to intervene or to obscure actions that would allow us to move the actions of the government into the light of day. We need to take them out of darkness and into the light of day so that we can begin to see if the actions of this government were reasonable or not. Now, this amendment would keep the correspondence that we seek surrounding these events to only those pieces of officially signed correspondence or documents signed by the minister or his senior officials.

Democracy depends on the opposition being able to hold the government accountable for the decisions that they make, for the actions that they take, and in this case the opposition can only do its job properly if it understands the background and the correspondence, the full background and the full correspondence, that has occurred in this situation. You know, the opposition and the courts have already concluded that this government did not act in a reasonable fashion when it closed down the Wisdom Home Schooling program, so therefore it's actually very crucial and important that all of the correspondence, including e-mails, be made available to the opposition and therefore through us to the people of Alberta so that we can understand how the government could have gotten this just so wrong.

Now, when a government begins making poor decisions that hurt Albertans, in this case hurting 3,500 students and their families, and when a government by its actions exhibits a lack of transparency and when it begins to by its actions hide or impede access to the information that would help us to explain its actions, then I believe that the opposition and the citizens of Alberta through the opposition rightfully should start to become concerned. It's only by opposing this amendment, Mr. Speaker, that the members of this Assembly will begin the process of understanding. When you begin to understand what was going on, then we can begin to rebuild, perhaps, the trust that has been broken between the actions of this government and the people of Alberta.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that a full disclosure is important when it comes to the correspondence because it's then that you will see the healing and the trust that is necessary to begin to move forward. The people of Alberta believe that the government needs to be working on their behalf, and when they see that, when they can see that a government is actually working on their behalf, then that trust gets to be reborn and rebuilt. That's only going to happen in this case if the correspondence is forthcoming from this government, if the opposition is able to ensure that this government in this case had the interests of the students at heart, that they were working for these kids.

Now, the court obviously came to a decision that they weren't by their actions actually working in favour of and best interests of these families and these children, but the correspondence could give us some insight as to whether or not that was an accident or whether that was by design.

So I ask all the members of this Assembly to vote down this amendment, to support the original motion for a return so that Albertans will have a clear, open, and transparent understanding of why the government got this decision so badly wrong. It's only when the opposition and thereby Albertans receive this correspondence will the trust in this minister and in this government have a chance of being rebuilt. That is why I believe, Mr. Speaker, that we need to vote this amendment down.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. member, you're speaking to amendment A1, as moved by the Government House Leader on behalf of the Minister of Education?

Mr. Cooper: Correct. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to the amendment, which, really, in many respects is outrageous, and perhaps a case could be made that it goes against the original intention of the motion for a return. The challenge is that it fundamentally changes what the member has asked. The member, my colleague, asked for all correspondence.

Mr. Speaker, growing up in the household of the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, his father used to say: "all" means all, and that's all "all" means. That is exactly the challenge that we face today. The member has asked for all correspondence or, in this case, all of the facts, and what the minister and the Government House Leader are proposing is something significantly different.

Mr. Speaker, you will know that very regularly governments correspond via e-mail and other methods by department heads, by other individuals inside the department about a specific issue prior to any official correspondence being signed by the minister or the deputy minister and that much of the content is left out from the official correspondence. So the question that everyone in this Chamber should be asking is: what exactly is the minister and the department trying to hide? The information that they would like to release is only the official information or correspondence that these public bodies received. As you can well imagine, much of that correspondence is already available in the public domain, and what is being kept secret by the minister and his department is the very important facts and content around what actually transpired to arrive at the decision. It's very, very troubling.

We've seen this government put together a significant track record. In fact, we have already asked through freedom of information for this very important information to be revealed, but as you can imagine, the government is trying to keep these secret. They have a horrible track record on releasing information and not engaging politically in information that would be potentially damaging to the government, so they have done that in this case as well.

As you'll know, Mr. Speaker, better than anyone, this Assembly has very unique and special abilities to call for documents to be produced. All it takes is the will of the Assembly to say yes. All it takes is members of the NDP backbench to not support cabinet, keeping in mind that we are in private members' business, doing the work of private members, not doing government business. I get that they need to support the government, but this is about supporting private members' ability to get access to information, and the NDP, in all of their wisdom, is choosing to keep things secret and only providing the absolute bare minimum so it looks like they're doing something.

I know that the Government House Leader, when he was in opposition, used to stand just a few feet from me here to the left – now, he was way to the left of me, but it was just a few feet to the left – and almost say these exact same words about the government hiding things. Now, much to the chagrin of Albertans and members on this side of the Assembly and people in the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills – they're disappointed to see this minister now trying to keep secrets from Albertans.

I encourage all members to vote against this amendment and ensure that private members have access to information that's important for us all to do our work.

Before I sit down, Mr. Speaker, I would like to request unanimous consent of the House to go to one-minute bells for motions for returns only.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Acting Speaker: Are there other hon. members wishing to speak to the amendment?

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A1 carried]

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Acting Speaker: Any further speakers on Motion for a Return 2 as amended? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This motion for a return that's been brought forward is to bring clarity to the communications between the Trinity Christian School Association and the Education minister here. I think that the fact that when you look at some of the circumstances around Trinity school, which resides in my local constituency, it would be nice to hear exactly what the minister, the deputy minister, the assistant deputy minister, and all of those that were involved in this process were thinking at the time.

I guess when we start to look at exactly what it is that the government was working towards, it would be better to have an understanding of what it is exactly they were trying to accomplish with this. I know that for myself I ended up with a call from the minister's office, which I'm very appreciative of, on the day that they had shut this school down in my constituency. During that specific call I had asked the minister: was it necessary to shut this school down? The minister said that this was obviously the last resort, shutting it down. Obviously, you know, being in shock from having one of my local schools shut down, I myself was hoping for a little bit more information on it, but I did understand that the minister felt very, very sure that this was the right decision at the time.

Now, for myself I would have loved to have a little bit more information on this because this was a huge step. This was shutting down a school in my constituency during the school year. We're talking about 3,500 people, 3,500 kids across Alberta that were going to be affected by this decision, which is why having the communications with the ministry is something that we needed, to show what the thought process was for such a traumatic move by this government.

Now, I do have to say that in the end, in January we saw a minister that said: maybe we need to take a step back, review exactly how we came to this decision, and then we need to maybe apply an administrator. That is something that I had asked the minister to do when they had first shut this school down in October. So it would be nice to see exactly how the decision that the minister, the ADM, the DM, and anybody that was involved in this situation came up with and how they came to justify this very – I don't like using this word, but I can't come up with a better one – radical move. What we're looking to do here is to see what basis the minister has come up with, what justification.

To see that the minister had accepted this motion but that it needed to be amended does show that the minister is trying to move forward some clarity. I have to give him some credit for trying to give some clarity on this. But, in the end, I believe that when we start looking at official, signed correspondence from the ministry or deputy minister, what we're looking at is a fact that a lot of this was very formal at that time. What I'm hoping for wasn't just formal letters between the ministry and the school; what I'm hoping for is the thought process behind it. What's important is: how did they get there? What process did they use to go from full-on active school to closed school? What justification is there? I don't believe that the signed letters by the minister address that.

While I'm thankful that the minister is allowing us to be going forward and not rejecting it outright, I am questioning why it is that he needed to amend this. Why couldn't we have more thorough transparency and accountability from this ministry, especially when it comes to so many home-schoolers? This is across Alberta. We had home-schoolers at the front door saying: please support our home-schooling system. This school, this one school, makes up a third of home-schoolers across our constituency. That says that there is a large number of parents, a large number of students that were involved in this.

So I am a little upset that the minister amended it because I do believe that the intent with the way it was is what we needed to see.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I will be voting against this motion, and I will be wanting to see more clarity coming from the minister. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Hon. members, is there anyone else who wishes to speak to Motion for a Return 2 as amended?

The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon to close debate.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll just pass.

[Motion for a Return 2 as amended carried]

3:30 Indigenous Relations Review

M3. Mr. Cooper moved on behalf of Mr. Hanson that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all documents prepared by the government relating to the review mandated by hon. Ms. Notley, Premier, to determine what changes may be needed for the government to better align its policies and initiatives with the UN declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples, as referenced on page 11 of the Ministry of Indigenous Relations annual report 2015-16.

The Speaker: Is there anyone who wishes to speak to the motion? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, you know, the UN declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples is something that this government has strongly supported, and it guides our objectives as we move forward. With regard to the request there's a document that fits the description of what has been requested, but it was prepared for cabinet and, as such, is not for public distribution. But in the interests of improved disclosure and public transparency, something this government is deeply committed to, we will provide any document that has been distributed to indigenous communities. Obviously, however, precedent and the very principles of responsible government prohibit us from distributing documents of Executive Council.

As such, I'll move that Motion for a Return 3 be amended by adding "excluding confidential cabinet documents" after "annual report 2015-16."

The Speaker: Is there anyone wishing to speak to the amendment? No one?

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Speaker: Is there anyone wishing to speak to the amended motion?

[Motion for a Return 3 as amended carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Automated Traffic Enforcement Technology

M4. Mr. Cyr moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all data collected by the Ministry of Justice and Solicitor General pursuant to section 7 of the September 2014 automated traffic enforcement technology guidelines in each fiscal year from 2014-15 to 2016-17.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What we're looking to see is exactly what data is actually collected when it comes to our traffic enforcement. The fact is that when we start to see that our government is actually collecting this data, it would be nice if we actually had some transparency and accountability to be able to see what exactly is being done within the province. I would like to hear from the minister if she would be willing to release this information, and if so, then I would thank her for it.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General I'm pleased to respond. Unfortunately, we're recommending that this motion for a return should be rejected. It's not because of anything that we're trying to keep from the opposition, but the request would generate an unmanageably large amount of paper. There would be approximately 81,000 pages per copy that would have to be provided. The minister indicates that she has no concerns about the data itself. It's a question of the volume that is being requested.

Automated traffic enforcement technology guidelines are designed to ensure fairness and consistency in the use of automated traffic enforcement technology across Alberta. Municipalities collect that information, and that is electronically populated in a template that is submitted to Justice and Solicitor General. The data report, reviewed by Justice and Solicitor General staff, is used in determining whether municipalities are following the established guidelines and assisting in audits conducted every two years.

With regret, Mr. Speaker, it's not that we do not wish but that we are unable for practical purposes to supply the information requested in this motion.

The Speaker: Are there any other individuals that would like to speak to the motion?

Seeing and hearing none, I'll let the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake close debate.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was very disappointed to hear that this information won't be made public. I do understand the concern and the reluctance that the minister has regarding the size of this. It would be nice to see some sort of maybe open-source document, then, being brought forward so that we can search this information. I would like to see that. While this government has moved towards open data, it is important that when we look at government moving forward and saying that they're open and transparent, some of these larger pieces of data – and I'm trying to remember without the Blues what the minister said – are sent to the ministry in spreadsheets. Therefore, this should be something easily posted onto the website for us to be able to search. Maybe if the minister has got some concerns regarding the fact that this is too large to be given out in a motion for a return, it would have been nice to hear that maybe a compromise would have been struck, making this available through, again, like I said, open-source data.

While I'm very disappointed and I really wanted to see 81,000 pages, I am looking forward to hearing that the government is moving in this direction. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion for a Return 4 lost]

Ministerial Orders

M15. Mr. Cooper moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all ministerial orders issued by each ministry between January 1, 2016, and December 31, 2016.

The Speaker: Anyone wish to speak to the motion as proposed by the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to indicate that we very much appreciate and agree with the opposition's desire for more transparency with regard to ministerial orders. Similar requests were made and granted last year. However, it did come to our attention that a small number of orders contained commercially sensitive information that would be excluded under the freedom of information act. For that reason, I will move that Motion for a Return 15 be amended by adding "excluding those items that fall within the exceptions to disclosure provisions in the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act" and that that would be inserted after "December 31, 2016." That amendment would allow any commercially sensitive information to be excluded while, I think, still keeping with the spirit of the request.

Mr. Speaker, again, the government is trying to provide the information requested by the opposition wherever that's possible. However, as the opposition knows or should know, I think that when we enter into commercial agreements with third parties, there is some requirement that we protect their commercial information. If we didn't have this, we wouldn't really be able to negotiate and conduct business with other outside parties, whether it's another agency of another order of government, a municipality. It might be a private company. It might be any other number of entities, not-for-profits, and so on.

Of course, it's really important that the government is able at any time to have negotiations and to enter into agreements with third parties which may have commercially sensitive information or other information that would protect individuals' right to privacy, for example, or protect legal opinions that would be provided in confidence. All of those things are important so that we are seen as a good partner and as an entity that people can have confidence in, that they can enter into negotiations with to conduct various business or other arrangements of a contractual nature and that we're not going to be releasing, either purposefully or inadvertently, information that may compromise their position as an organization or a company. I think that's a very important thing.

That's why we've moved this motion, because it does preserve as much as possible the information that has been requested by the Official Opposition while protecting our reputation as a good partner and someone that people can have some confidence in that their particular information is going to be protected. That's why we have made this motion, I think, to the degree possible. Notwithstanding the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks' tabling of his wonderful letters, his missives that he is penning to me on a regular basis and tabling here in this House, I have maintained my commitment to openness in government.

We want to make sure and I personally want to make sure that, wherever possible, this government can provide information to the opposition, to the public, to the media in a spirit of openness. Nothing that I have done here, I think, contradicts that basic principle, but obviously from the point of view now of being in government as opposed to being in opposition, one has a slightly different perspective and has to accept the responsibility that comes with being a member of government, something that the opposition doesn't really have to deal with. You know, they can stand up and demand whatever from the government, and it's good posturing. I totally respect the role that the opposition plays, but it's a very different role here, when we are in government. We are responsible and accountable for outcomes as opposed to just simply standing up and saying, "Wouldn't this be nice?" or "Wouldn't that be nice?" and so on.

You know, I appreciate very much Strathmore-Brooks' attention to the comments that I made while I was in opposition. It seems to be that I've set the gold standard for opposition, and I appreciate very much that the Official Opposition is trying to live up to that record. So far I would say, with the greatest respect, that they've fallen a bit short, but I do appreciate their reminders of the work that I did do and that I know the Premier and several other members, now of the government, did in opposition, the stellar work that we did do in opposition, which obviously was appreciated by the public very much, because clearly they decided that they would promote us from the opposition to the government. I think that despite the fondest hopes of members on the opposite side the public is probably going to renew our contract in two years.

As we've seen, coming through a difficult recession and then on our first anniversary in government, we had to deal with the fire in Fort McMurray, which had a very calamitous effect, a calamitous impact. We need to work hard, I think, to win Albertans' trust and to turn the economy around. We knew that eventually oil prices would shift, and they have done so, not nearly as much as we would have liked. Hopefully, they'll continue a gradual upward trend, which will help our economy, because, of course, the economy is still extremely dependent – I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker is not ruling me out of order, but he's sending me facial expressions to indicate that I should really come back to the amendment, which is, as I mentioned, to preserve as much as possible the transparency and the openness and the availability of information collected by the government on behalf of the citizens of Alberta for the citizens of Alberta. I would certainly, really on that basis encourage all members to support this amendment. Then if this amendment is passed, we will vote on the motion as amended, Mr. Speaker, as you well know, and I think we should vote for that as well.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I'm going to reluctantly take my seat.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I may have dozed off, but I'm not sure I missed anything.

Are there any members who would wish to speak to the amendment as proposed by the Government House Leader?

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills to close debate.

Mr. Rodney: Oh. Before you do, sir, earlier today we've had other things unanimously pass. This is a simple request. It's happened on many occasions. As it's warmed up outside, it's warmed up inside. The deliberations of the House are unaffected if folks in a situation like this and on an afternoon like this were to simply take off their jackets. It does require a motion. I would move that for the duration, until 6 o'clock, members would be allowed to remove their jackets if that would pass.

Brian, you're used to this, right?

The Speaker: I believe this motion would require unanimous consent.

[Unanimous consent denied]

The Speaker: We are now dealing . . . [interjections] Hon. members, I'm standing again. Remember that rule?

Is there anyone else to speak?

[Motion for a Return 15 as amended carried]

NDP Election Platform Documents

M16. Mr. Cooper moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all documents prepared by the government between April 1, 2015, and March 1, 2017, relating to the New Democratic Party election platform during the 2015 provincial general election campaign.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise on Motion for a Return 16. We all know that around election time the government prepares for what could be a number of different outcomes around an election. In this particular case there was a change in government, and what is curious to know is exactly what was happening in the bureaucracy at the time. It's important information for Albertans to have to understand how we transition power in a smooth and reasonable manner.

It's also important that we on this side of the House can do our job with respect to what exactly is transpiring. That was the genesis of this particular motion for a return, to have a real sense of what was happening at the time, how we transition from one government to another as well as what work the bureaucracy is currently undertaking with respect to the New Democratic Party election platform promises. I hope that the government will be forthcoming with that information.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much to the Official Opposition House Leader for his motion and for his comments with respect to that matter. You know, it is true – and I think I agree with the hon. member – that there was a change of government in the last election. It's also interesting to note that our party, that won that election, did have a platform and that we have in fact been working very hard to implement the promises that we made during that election campaign.

You know, we've provided greater protection for the consumers. We've put forward a plan to combat climate change. We've made sure that wealthy individuals and corporations that are earning profits pay a little bit more. We did stop the implementation of the proposed health care premium, the reintroduction of the health care premium. That was another thing we did. We took big money out of politics, Mr. Speaker. That was another commitment that we made in that election, and that, in fact, has been done. We've put forward programs to create new jobs in this province, to diversify our economy because, in fact, the diversification of the economy was a major platform commitment, something that was really strongly supported by the public in the last election. Those are just a few of the more than 20 to 30 campaign commitments that we have met.

It is, in fact, clear that the platform was designed to make life better for Alberta families, Mr. Speaker, and I think it's clear that we're doing that. We make decisions every day in this government – every day – that can be traced back to that platform because that was our commitment to the public. That was what we told the public that we would do if we were elected, and in fact we are doing it.

Now, I want to just point out that the platform itself is public information. It's public information, and everyone has it. Our throne speeches are public as well, so everybody has a chance to see them. They're posted online, on your website, Mr. Speaker. As well, our budgets are public information, and the bills that we introduce in this House and that the House passes in its wisdom are all public information. All of that is out there. It's all transparent. What we ran on and what we're doing: they're both there, and people can check and see that for themselves.

I know that after the election we were encouraged by some of our members opposite to break our promises. "You know, you can't possibly do that. It would be terrible to have people who are making a little bit more money pay a little bit more taxes. It would be completely wrong to get rid of the flat tax," they said. "There are just a lot of things – I know you got elected on all of this stuff, and we didn't get elected, but we think you should keep doing exactly the same thing that we were doing and that we promised to do." It was an odd request, Mr. Speaker. It was a strange situation that the members who had been part of the former government really thought that we should do what they had been doing.

I know why. It was because then we would have been out, too, and they could have replaced us by doing the same things, and nothing ever would have changed. Mr. Speaker, people voted for change in the last election. They voted on a platform that was quite different.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I believe that you're dealing with the substance rather than the process.

Mr. Mason: Oh. I'm very sorry, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Yeah. I know. I thought it my responsibility to remind you.

Mr. Mason: I will deal with it. You know, I was responding to what I thought the reasons were for the motion as it related to the New Democratic Party election platform during the 2015 provincial election. I was merely trying to make the point, Mr. Speaker, that we should defeat this particular motion because all of the things that are relevant to this question are already a matter of public record, whether it's our platform, which was there, or the actions of the government. As I mentioned, budgets and throne speeches, all of these things that this motion would probably ask for are already public, so there's really no need, I think, to pass this particular motion. We're going to continue to be open and transparent, and our budgets and our bills and our throne speeches are all going to remain public. Obviously, that's pretty clear.

I don't think we need to pass this motion, and I would urge all hon. members in the House to defeat this motion. Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any other members who would like to speak to Motion for a Return 16 as moved by the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills?

Carbon Levy and Climate Leadership Plan Correspondence

M19. Mrs. Pitt moved on behalf of Mr. MacIntyre that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all correspondence, including e-mails and submissions from stakeholders, related to the carbon levy or the climate leadership plan between May 24, 2015, and March 1, 2017.

The Speaker: All those members wishing to speak to Motion for a Return 19? The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, as we stated earlier in relation to the requests laid out in motions for returns 8, 10, 11, 12, and 19, much of the requested information has already been made public through various releases under the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act and through the full climate leadership panel process, that's been thoroughly documented and posted on our website for public consumption.

Our government does recognize and appreciate the need for open and transparent government, and we will gladly work to accommodate reasonable requests for information on behalf of the Official Opposition or others in the House. However, requests which, taken together, ask for all correspondence related to Alberta's climate leadership plan constitute hundreds of hours of staff time and tens of thousands of dollars' worth of work, the fruits of which would produce thousands of pages of correspondence with no clear informational objective. All of this time and effort would divert valuable resources from our government's work to save Albertans money and to create new jobs.

These unreasonable requests, I think, demonstrate that the opposition needs to sharpen its focus a little bit when it makes requests for information because these giant nets, where they hope to snag something, are going to not only bog us down, but I can't imagine the work that they'd create for their research staff in going through thousands and thousands of documents looking for some smoking gun that doesn't even exist, Mr. Speaker.

I think it's pretty clear that with a little more focus, we can operate to make sure that the opposition gets the information that it needs. But these kinds of – I guess I would call it a fishing trip, but really it's more than that. It's trying to essentially drain the whole ocean with one big net, and I don't think that it will assist the opposition, but I do know that it will take us an inordinate amount of effort and money to fulfill.

So with the greatest of regret, Mr. Speaker, I have to encourage all members to vote against this request and to encourage the opposition generally, you know, to sharpen its focus when it's asking for information. If we can accommodate their requests without just a massive diversion of resources and time, then we're happy to do so because we are an open and transparent government and we are as committed to those principles as we were in opposition.

The Speaker: Are there any other members who would like to speak to Motion for a Return 19, as moved by the Member for Airdrie on behalf of the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake?

Member for Airdrie, would you like to close debate?

Mrs. Pitt: No.

[Motion for a Return 19 lost]

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 204 Protection of Property Rights Statutes Amendment Act, 2017

[Debate adjourned April 3: Mr. Hinkley speaking]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. How much time do I have remaining?

The Speaker: I think you have five.

Mr. Hinkley: Five minutes? All right.

Well, I guess just quickly to summarize what I had mentioned last time, our party has stood up for landowners in Alberta and will continue to do so. We believe in property rights, including due process, proper notification, and fair compensation. We are working to ensure that the public has access to appropriate protections and avenues for resolution.

There are some concerns, though, that we do have, and there are lots of questions and clarity that we are looking for. For instance, how would we find that the balance between individual property owners' rights and protecting Alberta's public goods such as water and Crown lands be handled in this particular bill?

One of the amendments in Bill 204 proposes to repeal section 74 of the Land Titles Act, including wording that would ensure that "no right or title in or to land registered under this Act may be acquired . . . by adverse possession." Now, we'd like to thank the member for bringing this issue to the House because I do believe it is an issue that requires further investigation and action. I have no doubt that members of this Legislature have been contacted by their constituents urging them to address the doctrine of adverse possession. Issues that will have a positive impact on Albertans are something that this House must consider seriously, but as I read through the bill as currently written, I was left with wanting just a little bit more.

Again, I'd like to stress that this is a good first attempt by the Member for Livingstone-Macleod, but it is incomplete. For example, if it is passed, this may not solve the issue the member is seeking to address. I would urge the member to take a more holistic approach given that the bill does not address all the necessary policy considerations. For example, it is unclear how ongoing issues that arise in boundary and occupancy disputes will be addressed and resolved if we eliminate adverse possession. Currently section 69 of the Law of Property Act provides the mechanisms needed to resolve disputes where improvements have been made on the wrong piece of land. However, Bill 204 does not outline whether it plans to keep section 69. If the member does intend through Bill 204 on keeping this section, it does not solve the issue of boundary disputes, and this is just the tip of the iceberg on this issue.

I have no doubt that the Member for Livingstone-Macleod is aware that establishing if something is or isn't a lasting improvement is a difficult process. If it is established, section 69 may not cover situations where the occupier has long-time use but does not actually build a long-lasting improvement, something like a driveway, so I would urge the member to consider that including a method for disputes where lasting improvements are not present is still required.

I would like to shift focus now to the principles of the Limitations Act. As members know, the Limitations Act sets out that claims should be acted on within a 10-year period for an owner to claim return of possession of real property from an adverse possession. But reading through Bill 204, it does not set out a framework that would address existing disputes. As I mentioned earlier, I don't believe that Bill 204 addresses adverse possession in a holistic manner and am interested to hear from other members on these issues.

I've already mentioned section 69 of the Law of Property Act and the Limitations Act and the Land Titles Act, but revisions may be needed to the Municipal Government Act, the Irrigation Districts Act, Public Lands Act, and perhaps others. This is just becoming too much like an omnibus bill, and there's just too much in it, actually. Adverse possession cannot and should not be addressed through a single lens because the elimination of adverse possession is not a straightforward process. It is complex and may open gaps and create unintended consequences for Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, I would again like to thank the member. As I have said, we respect the intent of this bill; however, property rights and industry responsibility are key concerns for Albertans and for this government. For example, our government is looking at how we can better . . . [Mr. Hinkley's speaking time expired]

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak to Bill 204, the Protection of Property Rights Statutes Amendment Act, 2017. I speak in favour of this bill.

Property rights: they're always very tremendously important. If you come into my constituency and you start talking about the property rights of the farmers and the individuals that have acreages, you will find out very, very quickly that property rights are a very important part of the life in my constituency of Drayton Valley-Devon. Property rights refer to the rights of the landowners, among others, and are a key foundation of the financial security and the prosperity of this province that we call Alberta. When we start talking about financial security and prosperity, obviously it becomes a very important issue that we're addressing.

Landowners, Mr. Speaker, need to know that their investments, that their property, sometimes even their livelihoods that depend on those investments and those properties are not going to be unprotected, that they're protected from the actions of others and from the actions of government, that they can't be simply devalued by the actions of others, including government, without having access to some sort of just compensation. Indeed, many people will argue that the property rights in our society are the foundation of individual liberty. I think of somebody like Calvin Coolidge, that we would have talked about when I was in my social studies class, who said, "Ultimately, property rights and personal rights are the same thing." What he's trying to get at there, for my kids, is the understanding that when you have property, whether it's intellectual or whether it's in the boundaries of physical ownership, the ownership of something as the author or as the owner of land really does come down to your personal right of ownership and therefore your capacity to be able to provide for yourself. So they're absolutely critical.

Now, we've actually taken in an oblique way the capacity to enshrine these property rights even in our Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The Charter in section 8 protects individuals from unreasonable search and seizure of their property. In section 15 we see that we're guaranteed equality before the law, and this can be used, for example, to challenge land-use regulations that may discriminate against someone based on their religion or their mental disability or other protected categories of the Charter. Section 26 affirms the existence of pre-Charter common law and other rights that existed in Canada, especially with regard to ownership of property. And, of course, section 25 of the Charter is crucial for our First Nations for it protects aboriginal rights, including their land rights, against state interference. So when we start talking about this issue of land rights, it's a very important issue.

Now, previous governments have brought forward legislation that severely curtailed the property rights of Albertans. We've been aware – in my constituency I've had many citizens come and talk to me about the problems that were created by bills 19 and 24 and 36 and 50. They looked and they saw that the government and the bureaucracy that works for this government saw property rights as a hindrance, a hindrance to their capacity to be able to plan and to set policy goals, so they saw a deterioration of their property rights, which they have not been happy with.

For instance, Bill 2, in 2012, the Responsible Energy Development Act, lacked the capacity to provide for my constituents adequate notification of hearings and appeals, their ability to appeal for their rights as landowners. It failed to abolish the law of adverse possession, known as squatters' rights.

Bill 36, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, removed the landowner's right to compensation and to access to the courts for anything short of expropriation when a land-use plan harms their livelihood. There were many people in my constituency that were very concerned about this lack of access to the courts. It gave the cabinet complete decision-making authority over existing rights, including grazing rights, development rights, natural resource rights, et cetera. I live in a rural district. I live in a rural constituency. Every one of those is important to my constituents. Section 17(4) maintains that Bill 36 will trump all other acts. Huge concerns for my constituents.

Bill 50, the Electric Statutes Amendment Act, 2009, took authority to approve new electrical transmissions away from the public Alberta Utilities Commission and gave it to the cabinet. Again, after the lines were built, the bill was repealed, but we're still going to be paying for those lines for a long time. The concept of taking it away from a public utilities commission, where people could have access to that commission: huge problems when you're just talking about giving all of that power to the cabinet.

Bill 19 gave cabinet the power to freeze a person's land without compensation. Now, again, it was repealed.

Bill 24, Carbon Capture and Storage Statutes Amendment Act, 2010, took away the pore spaces. I have heard a lot about that in my constituency, as landowners have had to look at: what were the ramifications of a government that could take away the pore spaces in the land that they owned?

While many of these bills have been repealed over the years, Bill 204 would continue this process. It would continue to rectify some of the still outstanding issues that are of concern for my constituents.

I want to thank the hon. member for bringing forward Bill 210 previously, the Protection of Property Rights Statutes Amendment Act, 2016. It would have re-established landowners' rights to access to the courts, to a right to fair compensation, to timely information. Now, that bill died on the Order Paper. So I want to thank the hon. member again for bringing forward Bill 204. This bill will continue that move forward, to move that bar in a direction that will allow Albertans to see that their property rights are continuing to be protected.

When we take a look at Bill 36, for instance, Bill 204 will amend Bill 36. It will repeal sections which give cabinet the extraordinary power to make any law or regulation within the authority of the Legislature. It will amend in section 11 the rights of holders of statutory consents, people that are involved in forestry permits, intensive livestock operations, oil and gas leases, grazing leases. They will be allowed to recover their financial losses through the courts if they're negatively impacted by, for instance, regional planning.

As we look at this bill, we can see that it's providing landowners and Albertans with increased capacity to defend their property rights. Every Albertan should have the capacity to go before a court. Every Albertan should have the capacity to be able to fairly place before the courts their concerns rather than simply having cabinet make the decisions for them. Every Albertan should have the capacity to receive fair compensation when their livelihoods are directly and negatively impacted by regional planning, and I believe that this bill will move us forward in that direction, and that's a good thing for Albertans.

We will be amending section 31 of the Responsible Energy Development Act. We're going to incorporate the rights from section 26 of the previous Energy Resources Conservation Act so that the owners of private land will be properly notified of access requests. They will learn and be able to challenge the facts supporting an energy resource application, and they'll be fully involved with the hearings that surround that.

Mr. Speaker, I do not see how allowing Albertans the capacity to learn and to challenge facts is anything but a positive move.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and speak to Bill 204, the Protection of Property Rights Statutes Amendment Act, 2017. I'm proud to be part of a government and a caucus that has always stood up for landowners in Alberta, and we'll continue to do so. We believe in protecting property rights. It's something that I know as a member of the Resource Stewardship Committee we have discussed numerous times. I've had numerous discussions in my office regarding this topic, and I'm proud of the work that we're doing. It's important to Albertans, and it's important to us, which is why we've made the commitment to address these issues. It's why our government has already begun working with stakeholders to make positive changes to protect Albertans, their property, and their property rights.

The issues raised in Bill 204 are important issues, issues that have been raised by a great many Albertans in my riding, in your riding, and to MLAs on both sides of this House. After my review of the bill, however, I have serious concerns around the specifics of what the member is proposing. Again, many of the issues raised in this bill are important topics worthy of debate in this Legislature, but I believe we need to address issues in a way that does not substitute one set of problems for another or create unintended consequences for the very people I believe we should be trying to help.

Protecting landowners is important to our government, as it should be. It has long been an issue championed by members of our caucus, some of whom, in debates in this House, identified the challenges associated with the legislation Bill 204 would seek to amend. Mr. Speaker, there are other important considerations as well. For far too long previous governments failed to manage the environmental and social outcomes of development on a cumulative-effects basis. We need to do better going forward, and regional planning needs to be a cornerstone of that important work.

However, one of the key changes that Bill 204 proposes is to provide additional rights to compensation for any statutory consent, like a water licence, that might be affected by a regional plan. In fact, Bill 204 would add a clause to the Alberta Land Stewardship Act that states:

Notwithstanding section 13, if a regional plan affects, amends or rescinds a statutory consent or the terms or conditions of a statutory consent, the holder of the statutory consent may bring a claim against the Crown for any losses the holder may suffer as a result of any effect on or amendment . . . of the statutory consent under a regional plan.

Again, I understand the intent of the member in putting this amendment forward, but I worry that this bill looks at the issue from only the perspective of compensation for consent holders, missing other important perspectives like environmental protection and orderly development. Looking at an issue from all sides is what we do in this government and what we should do in this House.

As drafted, Bill 204 would create private compensation rights for public goods such as water and public lands, and I think we can all agree that property rights are complex. We need to strike the right balance among matters of public good, individual property owners' rights, environmental protection, and responsible development.

Mr. Speaker, there are currently over 86,000 active Crown mineral agreements in Alberta, and many of these may be potentially impacted by regional plans and regulation. If Bill 204 becomes law, regional planning could leave the government, and more importantly Albertans could potentially be liable for compensation for these plus thousands of other statutory consents affecting public lands, water, and any other resources.

Mr. Speaker, regional plans are designed to reflect the unique attributes and public interests of Alberta's different regions. For example, our government has recently begun work on the North Saskatchewan regional plan. The focus of that plan will be on balancing the pressures of a growing population, serving as a significant centre for energy refining and distribution, and acting as a gateway to the north. The lower Athabasca regional plan came into effect in 2012. The focus of that plan was to manage the challenges of a growing population in an area with high bitumen production.

Regional plans such as these are crucial to ensuring that all of the interests in a community are considered when planning for the long-term economic prosperity, environmental sustainability, and community well-being in different regions of our province. They were developed after wide-ranging engagement with community stakeholders. Regional planning is an important tool for ensuring Albertans have an ability to shape their communities, and it needs to be preserved.

I'm concerned that Bill 204 could bring in significant financial and legal risk for those regional planning efforts. The bill currently proposes to eliminate section 9(2)(c) and (d) and 14(2) of the Alberta Land Stewardship, which allows the government to make regulations under regional plans. Mr. Speaker, regulations are what allow government to give legal force and meaning to the plans developed in consultation with the people of a region. Without that power regional plans would amount to statements of intent and little more. What the member has proposed could undermine the work of communities and stakeholders across Alberta and potentially gut land-use planning in our province.

Bill 204 also appears to propose a change under section 19 of the Alberta Land Stewardship Act to create additional rights to compensation, not to protect existing rights but to create new ones. The amendment would redefine the term "compensable taking," which refers to situations where a regional plan may take away a property right and the owner is then compensated under law. The proposed change would potentially overlap and confuse compensation rights under the Alberta Land Stewardship Act that already exist elsewhere in Alberta law. This would broaden the scope of those who would be entitled to compensation even if they would not have been entitled to compensation under common law or any other existing legislation.

Let's think about that. We don't know what the bill would make us liable for because the provision for compensation is potentially so broad that it could require compensation for any loss, including for damages or other financial relief, and the proposed amendments could cause uncertainty. They could harm the ability of government to properly plan for growth and development and to regulate industry. Mr. Speaker, this government is focused on attracting investment at a time when Alberta needs that investment. The uncertainty that this bill could create would have the opposite effect.

To name one example, Bill 204 would reinstate mandatory hearings at the Alberta Energy Regulator, where its decisions may directly and adversely affect the rights of a person and would change other notification requirements by amending the Responsible Energy Development Act. The proposed requirement for mandatory hearings would impose additional costs on industry at a difficult time for our energy sector. Moreover, I'm not certain that formal hearings, where players with deeper pockets and greater capacity may have an advantage, are really the best way to level the playing field, as I believe the member intends.

I also understand that there may be options under the existing Responsible Energy Development Act for changing these processes. Wouldn't this be a simpler way than changing the law? It's also worth noting that this change could also create inconsistencies between regulation of energy resource activities and nonenergy resource activities that would not be subject to the same requirements for mandatory hearings. Again, this strikes me as the wrong time to increase industry uncertainty, particularly when there may be better ways of achieving the same objective.

I'm proud to be part of a government and a caucus who have always stood up for landowners in Alberta. We need a legislative regime that balances the needs of industry for predictable regulation and the needs of all stakeholders, including private property owners. I have serious concerns about how these proposed changes would impact investment in our province. Any changes need to strike an appropriate balance between individual property owner rights, industry's need for process certainty, and protecting Alberta's resources such as water and public lands. As drafted, I'm worried that the choices made in Bill 204 do not meet that test.

One of the amendments that Bill 204 proposes is to repeal section 74 of the Land Titles Act. It includes wording that would ensure that no right or title may be acquired by adverse possession.

If passed, the bill would also delete sections of the Limitations Act. This would remove the limitation period on a registered landowner's right to enforce ownership over his or her land, including the right to possession.

I'd like to thank the member for bringing this issue to the House because it is an issue that requires further investigation and action, and I have no doubt that members of this Legislature have been contacted by their constituents, as I have, urging them to address the doctrine of adverse possession.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am going to urge that this House vote in favour of Bill 204. My colleague from Livingstone-

Macleod has brought a very good piece of legislation forward. He's looking to address some of the past concerns brought forward by our laws that were, I guess, in an effort to avoid following rules, if you will, or going to the courts and actually allowing people their day in court. Our bureaucrats saw that property rights were a hindrance, and I don't think we should ever see property rights as a hindrance. We should be looking at it as a foundational piece that we should all be trying to bring forward as the one thing that we can depend on.

I know that this adverse possession is something that is a deep concern for rural Alberta. I did find an article that really struck a chord with me, when I thought, you know, it's important that we look at exactly what it is that we're trying to achieve with this bill, at least a part of it anyway.

The article that I'm specifically looking at is from the Western Producer. When Squatters Strike is the title of the article. It was done on January 22, 2015. Now, I'd like to read out some of this because it is actually very, very interesting to see the perspective of somebody that is caught within this terrible process that's currently allowed in Alberta. Just to make sure that people understand what squatters' rights are, squatters' rights laws allow people to be legal owners of land if they have been in open possession of it for 10 years or more.

There's a gentleman named Bob Woodward, who can see the 10-acre parcel of ranchland from his kitchen window.

It is land west of Cardston, Alta., that he bought in 1999, for which he had legal title and on which he paid taxes every year since it was purchased.

So Woodward was flabbergasted when a judge ruled in December that the land belonged to his neighbour.

The decision was based on Alberta law involving adverse possession, more commonly known as squatter's rights.

It allows people to be recognized as legal owners of land if they have been in open possession of it for 10 or more years.

This is something that we need to review. Is this something that we want in Alberta, where you can actually hold the title and somebody can take that title away from you?

Now, it's my understanding here that when we look at these squatters' rights, if you will, we're actually looking at examples where people are becoming very creative on how to take other people's land for free. It is very disappointing that this government appears to be looking in this direction and saying: "This isn't something we're looking at dealing with. This is something that we don't think is important."

I'll go further on here.

Alberta is the only province to retain the legislation, which is based on British common law but has been struck from the books in other provinces.

What's interesting here is that we've got an actual quote from Mr. Woodward, and I think this actually sums it up very, very nicely.

"I think that the rural people need to be made aware that this old act is still in the works and that if you have unscrupulous people looking for an opportunity like that, they can take advantage of that old law . . .

"Even though you've bought a piece of property and paid for it and paid the taxes on it and everything, if they squat on it, even if you know that they're there and more or less acknowledge, or in other words put up with them, if you let them do it for 10 years, they can turn around and claim your property."

You know, in this case it sounded like this gentleman was doing a neighbour a favour. Without knowing all of the facts, I can only speculate at this point. But I can tell you that a lot of this is well intentioned. What happens is that you may have somebody in need, and you say: “Gee, you know what? I want to help that individual.” So squatters’ rights are something that is a very big concern.

Now, when I was doing some accounting training courses, I remember this topic actually coming up. The one concern that had been brought up was that we’re seeing people even becoming more creative with this. We’re hearing that children living in their parents’ home, down in the basement, could possibly be able to claim squatters’ rights and prevent the sale of that home. Now, I understand about children that are dependent on their parents, but we also need to make sure that we strike a balance. Property rights: it is the most imperative thing that we’ve got, the foundation that we actually formed government on, going forward, for centuries. What we need to be looking at is what, actually, property rights are. That means holding title. That means keeping title.

Now, I do understand that the NDP have brought up a few concerns, some concerns that they feel justify making sure this bill probably isn’t going to be moving forward. But I will remind you that a committee was formed. The committee reviewed that squatters’ rights were probably not in the best interest, and they unanimously passed that something needed to be done. Well, it’s being done with Bill 204. How can you vote against this? Instead of voting against this, why not bring amendments forward that correct your concerns? Why are we looking at a move by the government that will continue to allow this clear, clear injustice when it comes to our property rights?

We need to make sure that when we look at our neighbours and we’re out there to help people, they are not allowed to take advantage of that generosity, that generosity that makes every Albertan that much better, helping their neighbour through hard times. This is the one thing that I can say, that in my constituency of Bonnyville-Cold Lake, while we are going through this low oil time, there are a lot of people in need. The food banks are so heavily depended on in my constituency right now. The fact that we have such high vacancy rates in my riding is another thing.

I am hoping that, in the end, what we start looking at is that we start to review what has happened in the past when it comes to property rights, that we see that it didn’t work, and then we correct those errors. That is what my colleague from Livingstone-Macleod is doing. He is going forward. He is bringing his constituents’ needs forward. He is saying: “What was done in the past should never have been done. Let’s correct that. Let’s work together.” I went to the committee. We saw it in the committee. We saw that our two caucuses were able to work together and say that something needs to be done specifically around squatters’ rights, yet when the Wildrose puts a bill forward, how is it that this is not being put forward in good faith so that the government will move that forward?

Now, I will say that it is unfair of me to say that they have categorically not wanted to work with the Wildrose because Bill 202 is a good example of our caucuses working together. We did it on that bill. Why can we not move Bill 204 forward? This bill is a strong bill that will strengthen property rights. And you know what? I can’t see any caucus within this House that doesn’t agree that property rights are important to Albertans. I believe that this is something that we can work together to solve.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It’s a great privilege to rise in the House this afternoon to speak to Bill 204. It’s actually really gratifying to be part of the Legislature doing its intended job, which is, of course, you know, seriously considering legislation brought forward by other members. I’d like to commend the spirit that the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod brought this forward in.

[Ms Woollard in the chair]

I also do understand that this is something where, of course, you know, our government and, previous to that, our party have been very clear on making sure that questions of fundamental justice are respected when it comes to surface rights. But I also do understand that members of the opposition might have gone further in this at certain times and also that the very genesis of their party, in some sense, comes from a dispute over that.

Of course, I speak of this in representing a big part of Sturgeon county, where Bill 50, of course, had quite an impact on residents and farmers and where a lot of the concern came from. Now, that being said, of course, Bill 50 has been repealed, so at least we’re not facing that type of very negative approach to property rights.

I have the utmost sympathy for the perspective that hon. members are taking, but just because we might agree on some outlines of a problem doesn’t necessarily mean that we agree on what the best solution for that problem might be or that it might be always completely clear what that solution is. That’s because, of course, this is a very complex issue. It is not simple, as my other colleagues have brought forward. I mean, it’s not simple even on a basic level.

You know, the hon. members in the opposition have been discussing rights and what property rights are. What does a right consist of? I mean, what does it mean to have a right to something? Who bestows it, and how is it maintained? Now, when it comes to rights in Alberta, my — I don’t know — great-great-grandparents had settled in the St. Albert area before Alberta became a province in 1905, and as such for many decades they retained the subsurface rights or the mineral rights to their property.

Unfortunately, they sold the land. We never did discover any resources under there, and right now that land is under the Costco when you’re going north out of St. Albert. I’m not sure that anyone will be drilling there any time soon either although, with the kind of advances in technology with directional drilling, perhaps.

Now, since 1905, however, all land in the province, whether that was through the homestead act or whether that was purchased through the CPR or whether that was in purchasing school land set aside, the mineral rights have not gone with the property. We have a situation where we do have competing values and competing interests, where you have on the one side, of course, the individual land or property owner that wants to be able to enjoy unencumbered his or her property, but on the other side you have the collective need for the people of Alberta as a whole to develop their own resources in a way that can, you know, bring our province forward. In fact, a lot of the wonderful things we’ve been able to develop in this province over the decades have been through this wise development of our resources.

Now, that being said, that development has not always been wise either. I mean, there have been excesses. There have been issues with previous administrations where they maybe didn’t get the balance right. Sometimes, you know, the environmental and even economic outcomes have not been properly balanced. There has been sort of a cumulative impact of that, and I think that speaks to maybe a lessening of trust by some property owners in the existing system. Definitely, I think it’s agreed that we do need to do better for individual landowners but also in the public’s interest for the common good. I know that that is a priority of myself and that of our government.

How do we go about this? Well, I mean, a lot of the problems that we've found ourselves in over the years have been maybe a bit of overexuberance and a lack of planning. Regional planning: it's hard to imagine how you can have an orderly development that's going to benefit everybody, including us as individuals, without any sort of plan.

One issue that I have with Bill 204 is that, you know, as my hon. colleagues alluded to earlier, it could have a real impact on some of the existing planning efforts; for example, the North Saskatchewan regional plan and the lower Athabasca regional plan. These plans themselves are critical as they speak to people's other rights.

Now, of course, you can't look at rights in a vacuum. You can't look at property rights in a vacuum. As some members may be aware, I used to actually have the great, well, fun – that would be a good word for it – of teaching ethics for beginning teachers at the U of A. That is something that we go into in great detail, that no right can be unconditional because unconditional rights negate other rights. Maybe a simple way of putting that is that the right for me to swing my arm kind of ends at where your face is. There are kind of limits to what rights are, so there's always a balance built into them.

Now, that balance under our system needs to be in accordance with – now, it's a vague term, but it seems to be the one in Canadian jurisprudence that's becoming more popular because of being in the Charter – the principles of fundamental justice. From that fundamental justice is a concept of basic fairness. That's how these need to be mediated. If we're looking at things for regional planning or things that are serving the collective interest or other rights that we have as individuals – a right to clean water, a right to a rich environment – these types of things might be impacted if we go too far the other way. That's where it might become so prohibitive for the government to make positive changes, because it's unclear just how much of a compensational right Bill 204 would create. It might even be in ways that are unintended.

I guess going on with another hat, speaking as a former insurance agent, having a situation where you can't actually determine the limits of your liability, that isn't a position that I'd like to see our province in. Of course, you know, one of those limits, as my other colleagues had referred to: we have 86,000 Crown mineral agreements enforced at the present time that might be impacted by this.

Like I said, obviously – and I don't want this to be interpreted in any other way – property rights are critically important. They cannot be set aside. However, there's always going to be a balance. If you have a situation where we leave the government liable for potentially – well, who knows how much? That's something that I think anyone, including members of the opposition, are going to have some concerns about.

Now turning to the issue of adverse possession, I think it was the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake that mentioned that this is something that had come out of... [Mr. Piquette's speaking time expired] Oh, I was just getting warmed up.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do want to take a moment here today just to talk about Bill 204, that my colleague from Livingstone-Macleod has put forward. He's put a lot of thought into this bill and has made some very, very good suggestions that this bill will bring forward to the Legislature. It's been interesting to hear the comments so far, especially from the NDP caucus.

I do want to just read a few quotes here, and this is out of a document produced by Alberta's NDP opposition. It's titled Your Land, Your Rights. It says:

Alberta's NDP stands for:

- No expropriation except in cases of urgent public need;
- Due process with respect to rights of landowners;
- No "freezing" of land for future projects.

Those are just a couple things there right off the top.

It says down here in another spot that "the NDP Opposition has a petition to repeal Bills 19, 36, and 50." Now, this Bill 204 relates mostly to Bill 36. At one time the NDP opposition fought to totally repeal Bill 36. Now here we are just talking about some amendments just to help soften the blow that Bill 36 has created on landowners' property rights in Alberta, and all we hear now are things like – well, the Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose at the beginning of his speech talked about how it doesn't go far enough. That may be. There's probably a lot more we could do with Bill 36 to improve it. But near the end of his speech he talked about how this is way too much; it's like an omnibus bill. Is it too much or too little? I don't understand.

When I go further into the NDP Official Opposition land property rights brochure, it talks about that Bill 36, Alberta Land Stewardship Act,

- Creates seven regional plans that will trump all other legislation and local municipal by-laws, regulations, or plans, have power to make law on any matter within the authority of the Legislature, and be under the exclusive power of cabinet, which can amend or repeal them at any time.

Now, it sounds like they're somewhat distraught by this idea that cabinet would be making all these decisions. Of course, unless it's your cabinet; then I guess it's all okay. It's all fine. It's all fine.

It goes on to say:

- Allows regional plans to extinguish any type of consent requirement under other authorities.

So here we are. We have cabinet taking away opportunity for other authorities to make decisions.

Here's a quote from the Government House Leader.

This is yet another example of the government's own trend toward centralizing power in the political leadership of the province. Specifically I'm talking about the cabinet. There are so many decisions that have previously been made by other organizations in the province that are now being made at the cabinet level.

This government has been in power for two years now. This was one of their campaign brochures. What have they done to change Bill 36, that was so abhorrent back then? Nothing. And what do we do here? The Wildrose Official Opposition MLA for Livingstone-Macleod brings forward Bill 204, and what happens? "We can't talk about this. This, you know, sounds good, but no, no, we just can't look at this."

I think it was the Member for Stony Plain who talked about it taking away government decisions on stuff. Well, in here they're talking about how the problem is that all the decisions are going to be made in cabinet. Well, Mr. Speaker, I think we have a situation here where in opposition it was great to oppose, it was great to make all these claims, but once the power was in their hands, things have changed. That's just not right. This is a well-thought-out bill that should be supported by everyone in this House.

I keep hearing discussion on adverse possession. Obviously, that's something that needed to disappear a long time ago. It has across Canada. Different jurisdictions have gotten rid of it or are getting rid of this adverse possession law. I think it was one of the NDP MLAs who was talking about: “Well, you know, what do we do? How do we tell what’s happening under adverse possession?” Well, I think there’s a thing called a land title that landowners have. There are also people called surveyors that go out and survey land. I think it would be pretty easy to find out who the legal owner is of any property in Alberta based on those two things: a title to the land – who legally owns it? – and if there’s any discussion as far as what property this is and what property that is, then a surveyor could sort that out.

I don’t understand why the government is balking on this other than the fact that maybe they want to make sure that this power is kept in cabinet while they’re in power. Of course, two years from now when they’re gone, we’ll probably see them fighting: “Oh no. Now we’ve got to get rid of this.” They have the opportunity right now, Mr. Speaker, to do the right thing: support Bill 204; take care of some of the most egregious things in Bill 36; protect landowners’ rights, as they have claimed they wanted to do in the past; and take care of adverse possession at the same time. Pretty simple. It’s not complicated. It’s the right thing. All they have to do is support it here, and it’s done.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’m very pleased to rise this afternoon to speak to Bill 204, Protection of Property Rights Statutes Amendment Act, 2017, which was brought forward by the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod. For 30 years I staunchly defended property rights as a member of the Canadian Real Estate Association. Part of the preamble of the code of ethics of the Canadian Real Estate Association speaks to this. I will be tabling this at first opportunity.

Under all is the land. Upon its wise utilization and widely allocated ownership depend the survival and growth of free institutions and of our civilization. Through the realtor, the land resource of the nation reaches its highest [and best] use and private land ownership its widest distribution. The realtor is instrumental in moulding the form of his or her community and the living and working conditions of its people.

Such functions impose grave social responsibilities which realtors can meet only by diligent preparation, and considering it a civic duty to dedicate themselves to the fulfillment of a realtor’s obligations to society.

Mr. Speaker, I dedicated myself to that code of ethics for 30 years, and that dedication didn’t die when I got elected on May 5, 2015. The rest of my caucus is equally committed to that profound dedication to the protection of property rights, and we’ll continue to do so in legislation that we bring forward. Right now, this piece of legislation doesn’t necessarily afford the protections that the opposition is claiming it will.

We’ve always stood up for landowners in Alberta, and we’ll continue to do so. One of the fundamental premises of the code of ethics, “under all is the land,” is that arbitrating competing interests is something that must be carefully done by any piece of legislation that is brought forward. What most real estate law does, in fact a lot of laws, is arbitrate competing interests. However, the legislation before us today really doesn’t reflect that commitment as we would like to see it done. Bill 204 aims to address important concerns, but in fact as it’s currently drafted, the bill creates more questions than it answers.

Our government has already begun working with stakeholders to make positive changes on these important issues, and we’re working to make Albertans’ lives better by ensuring that the public has access to appropriate protections and avenues for resolution where issues arise, including private property, to make sure that when we are arbitrating competing interests in land, it is done fairly with adequate attention to all the unintended consequences that a piece of legislation might contemplate.

Now, I’m pleased to speak to Bill 204. I’m proud to be part of a government and a caucus that has always stood up for landowners in Alberta and will continue to do so. For anyone to suggest that this government is not interested in the protection of property rights is disingenuous. I think if you look at the histories of the members of the Legislature on our government’s side of the House, there’s a long list of individuals who have been involved in the real estate industry, insurance industry, and other parts of the business community and in their past professional capacity have stood up and been staunch defenders of property rights. That is reflected in our caucus’ attitude towards legislation that will affect property rights and the arbitration of competing interests in land as we move forward in our mandate.

Now, it’s important to Albertans and important to our government, and that’s why we made a commitment to address these issues. Protecting landowners is important to our government, as it should be.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but the time limit for consideration of this item of business has concluded.

5:00 Motions Other than Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Oil Security of Supply

505. Mr. Panda moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the federal government to develop strategies to facilitate the building of pipelines within Canada to ensure security of supply to the Canadian market, thereby shifting Canada away from buying oil from countries with oppressive dictatorships.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’m pleased to introduce Motion 505. Our province produces the best oil and gas in the world, and Albertans are tired of the hypocrisy of accepting millions of barrels of foreign dictators’ oil from overseas while putting up barriers for ethically produced Alberta oil. I moved to Canada and especially to Alberta precisely because of the natural resources to be exploited – the economy, the jobs, the opportunity, the lower taxes, the Alberta advantage, the technological innovation, the fairness for workers, the environmental regulatory oversight – so it’s a little baffling to me that Canadian refineries buy 245,000 barrels of oil per day from outside of Canada from countries where basic personal freedoms and democracy are in doubt or absent. This is absurd.

We sit on over 50 per cent of the free oil in the world, yet we are helping finance some of the most oppressive regimes in the world. Alberta has 1.8 billion barrels of proven conventional reserves remaining, but the oil sands contain 166 billion barrels of proven reserves. We are third in the world for reserves, behind Saudi Arabia and Venezuela. The vast majority of the world’s oil is controlled by state-owned enterprises whereas in Canada it’s free oil. We don’t need any military efforts to extract that oil, Mr. Speaker.

This amazing resource provides wealth not only for Albertans in the energy sector but supports industries both here and across the country. Our wealth also funds the rest of the country because of federal taxes and other programs. The most recent average was $24 billion per year, that goes from Alberta taxpayers to programs like equalization and employment insurance.

In the Trump era, where everything is America first, where stability is going to be very much in question, our oil reserves will provide stability for Canada's economy. We have the ability to achieve something that is only dreamed of in other countries, energy independence. With United States President Donald Trump calling for American energy independence and with Saskatchewan Premier Brad Wall going to Washington, DC, last month calling for North American energy independence and with Conservative leadership candidates calling for country of origin labelling at the gas pump, the obvious choice for Alberta is to start promoting Canadian oil for Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Panda: That's right.

That's why it's so important for TransCanada's Energy East project to be built, that 4,500-kilometre pipeline that will transport about 1.1 million barrels per day safely from Alberta and Saskatchewan to the refineries of eastern Canada and a marine terminal in New Brunswick.

In a survey done for the Montreal Economic Institute by Leger in February 2016, 41 per cent of Quebecers consider pipelines to be the safest means to transport oil, and the overwhelming majority of Quebecers, 59 per cent, prefer that the oil imported from outside Quebec come from western Canada.

Valero's refinery at Lévis, south of Quebec City, has already sworn off foreign imports in favour of domestic, North America only crude sources. New Brunswick is welcoming the Energy East pipeline with open arms. Desperate for jobs, there is much hope that Irving Oil will invest in modifying its existing 300,000-barrels-per-day refinery to process Alberta heavy oil.

Getting our oil to the east coast, of course, means that we have all kinds of options because we are at tidewater. India is closer to Saint John, New Brunswick, than Vancouver, British Columbia. My dream is to see the bitumen from Suncor's Firebag or Fort Hills mine operations exported from Saint John, New Brunswick, and sent to the Reliance group's refinery in Jamnagar, India, connecting projects I helped to build in Canada to projects I helped to build in India, too. Mr. Speaker, that's my dream. The infrastructure is all there for energy independence and exports. We just need a pipeline to connect it all. There is a ridiculous tanker ban on the northwest coast of British Columbia, so we have to go to the east, where tankers from tinpot dictators come in every day, Mr. Speaker.

I'm talking about Saudi Arabia and Algeria. Human Rights Watch has this to say about Saudi Arabia:

Saudi authorities in 2017 continued to arbitrarily arrest, try, and convict peaceful dissidents. Dozens of human rights defenders and activists are serving long prison sentences for criticizing authorities or advocating political and [democratic] rights reforms. Authorities systematically discriminate against women and religious minorities. In 2016, Saudi Arabia carried out 154 executions, 23 for non-violent drug crimes.

Women trying to escape forced marriages have their passports seized by authorities and have religion imposed on them. Women are not allowed to drive. How about we go down to the public square and watch someone have their head cut off for committing a crime? It's brutal. It's cruel. Why are we buying oil from these people? Why are we Canadians continuing to patronize this? In Alberta trade unions play a critical role in the development of our oil, and workers' rights here are protected. In Algeria trade union organizers go to jail.

Finally, Alberta's oil is produced with some of the strictest environmental standards in the world. Trust me, Mr. Speaker. I have seen some of the things that happen in other countries, personally experienced them. Not only are we a country worth supporting for our legal protection of rights but for our environmental regulatory oversight, which has a very personal meaning for me. Upon coming to Canada, a respiratory ailment of mine healed miraculously. Precisely because of Canada's clean air and water I no longer need medication for my sinuses. Have I made my point clear?

I have worked internationally as an engineer in the petroleum sector for 28 years. I came to Canada to see all of these wonderful things, with natural resource development happening, yet six years from first whisper we still do not have a pipeline from Alberta to Saint John, New Brunswick. Six years, Mr. Speaker. In India I worked on a refinery project, and we built a 1.4-million-barrels-per-day refinery in just three years. That's the single largest refinery in the world. Meanwhile we are sending money to foreign countries to buy foreign oil that supports the most heinous of crimes, that would never be tolerated in Canada. It has to stop.

If passed and acted upon, Motion 505 would send a strong message to the rest of Canada that it is time to start truly moving our country in the direction of energy independence and away from our reliance on foreign oil. I challenge all the members in this House to stand up and support our industry, demand those pipelines be built, and promote Canadian oil for Canadians.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Coolahan: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak to Motion 505, and I want to thank the Member for Calgary-Foothills for bringing forward the motion. You know, it's a good motion. It's redundant, but it's a good motion. It's a good motion because it shows that the opposition has been paying attention. In fact, it reads like a motion that could have been written by a government caucus member, but of course we wouldn't have to because we're already working with the industry to modernize the oil and gas sector and achieve what's desired in this motion. Pipelines to tidewater on both Canadian coasts will factor into the success of the industry, so of course we will use our motions for other purposes.

Of course, it makes no sense that Canada still imports oil from countries that don't share a respect for human rights and the environment. My personal position as well as that of many others for many years has been that we should be pursuing energy security in this country, and this, of course, works to eliminate "buying oil from countries with oppressive dictatorships," to quote from Motion 505. But a strong modern oil and gas industry, including pipelines, with a focus on energy security also, somewhat ironically, will help us focus on getting a greater percentage of renewables on the grid.

Mr. Speaker, I know that motions are written to urge governments to take a course of action, but really this motion reads more like a fan letter. I read it as a show of support, telling this government: keep doing what you're doing. As such, I can support this motion in principle because it's really just a show of support for what the government is already doing.

I know the member isn't used to seeing a government take action because the previous government ran the province like it was on autopilot for 30 years, so maybe he missed the fact that his motion is redundant. But I guess it can be said that I'm glad that it is this government receiving this motion and working towards the objectives of this motion because, rest assured, Mr. Speaker, there's no chance that the opposition has the understanding to navigate the 21st-century relationship between government and industry, not only in this country but around the world. Maybe that's why they're putting forth this motion, because they know that we have an understanding of how the modern world is looking at the oil and gas industry.

Mr. Rodney: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Point of order. What's your point of order?

Mr. Rodney: You're allowed to sit, sir, through the chair.

Mr. Coolahan: Can I sit?

Mr. Rodney: Yes.

Mr. Coolahan: I don't take orders from you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, please.

Point of Order Language Creating Disorder

Mr. Rodney: I am simply asking for a little bit of respect. Our third party is not involved in this conversation whatsoever, but I simply don't understand why it is . . .

An Hon. Member: Citation?

Mr. Rodney: The citation is: language that is likely to offend. By continuously insulting the intelligence of the Official Opposition, that's exactly what that's going to do. I'm happy to hear all the arguments; I think we all are. But – let's face it – a little bit of mutual respect would be much appreciated, especially when it comes to a private member's motion that it looks like he might even be supporting.

The Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understand, you know, the rules of the House, where people can stand up on points of order, and I think this one certainly is not. We have the opportunity to criticize and be able to make counterarguments. It's all part of the tradition, and that's all the member has been doing. There has been no – I've been listening very carefully to what he has been saying, as I do for everybody in this House, and I don't see in any shape or form that he was being disrespectful, making his points forcefully. I hope he will have the ability to continue.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise on the point of order, and I support my colleague from Calgary-Lougheed in his assertion about language that's likely to create disorder. While I can appreciate that the Deputy Government House Leader quite rightly pointed out that the member hasn't used language that is unparliamentary, that doesn't mean that he hasn't utilized a course of argument that is likely to create disorder, particularly when he makes statements about what the opposition would and wouldn't do, how redundant it is, how they don't know what's going on.

These sorts of statements are likely to create disorder, just like they have for my colleague from Calgary-Lougheed, and I would encourage you to encourage the member to choose the words he uses much more wisely.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I agree. I don't know that there's actually a point of order in this situation. It's one of opinion. But particularly at this late hour and with the weeks that we have to move forward, try and be more considerate of all of the members of the House and adjust your comments accordingly.

In this instance, to the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, I don't believe there was an actual point of order.

Please be cautious. Thank you.

Debate Continued

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will continue. It's just very difficult to adhere to what they're trying to say here, to be honest. But, anyway, I'm going to continue here.

I'm going to say that it's unfortunate and unhelpful to Albertans and the economy, Mr. Speaker, that all I see from the opposition are positions that impede any success of what the opposition is proposing in its own motion. As I said, I support this motion in principle, but I'd almost like to see this motion come with a caveat or a promise from the opposition, something that says that the opposition will not support ideologies and positions that are detrimental to the success of getting pipelines approved and built.

Mr. Speaker, while this government is implementing a made-in-Alberta climate leadership plan that saw the province get two pipelines approved, the opposition rails against the climate leadership plan, preferring that a climate plan be imposed on us. They're completely out of touch with where the modern industry is heading.

On this side of the House we believe that a strong economy and a clean environment go hand in hand, and that is exactly how we secured two new pipelines, pipelines that support Albertan jobs and investment, pipelines that support a strong, diversified economy. The opposition sees this as an either/or proposition, that you can't be environmentally responsible and have a strong oil and gas sector.

While this government continues to work with the federal government and continues to push for more pipelines such as Energy East so that more Albertan oil can be used across the country and around the world, the opposition would rather let their ideology dominate and continue to push for failure. The opposition needs to explain to Albertans why they think it's a good idea to scrap the climate plan that resulted in the approval of two new pipelines.

Let's be clear, Mr. Speaker. Collaborating with the federal government is vital to ensuring that pipelines are built. I don't think the opposition understands that, nor have they demonstrated that they have the diplomatic skills to work collaboratively with the federal government or any world government. They need to stop scaring capital away to score political points at the expense of Alberta families and businesses.

With that said, Mr. Speaker, I will close by saying thank you to the member for the motion. I will be supporting the motion because it supports the work that's already being done by this government. But I would urge the opposition that should a yes vote come from this side, they recognize what is working in getting pipelines approved and built, which includes a strong climate plan and a modern, incentivized royalty structure, and that they be strong proponents of Alberta's oil and gas sector and recognize what the leaders of the sector are saying. This is part of what it is going to take for success of any kind on what's being proposed in this motion, support for what is working in getting pipeline approval. They need to be strong advocates, like we are on this side, of this oil and gas sector.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I continue to be amazed. Even on issues that you agree upon, there seem to be reasons to disagree with each other.

The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and my thanks to my hon. colleague from Calgary-Foothills for bringing forth this excellent motion. This motion is about market access and about choice, which is why I'm proud today to rise in support of it.

Mr. Speaker, the motion reads:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the federal government to develop strategies to facilitate the building of pipelines within Canada to ensure security of supply to the Canadian market, thereby shifting Canada away from buying oil from countries with oppressive dictatorships.

From what I just heard, it sounds like both sides of the House can agree that that's a worthy goal.

As an Albertan and as a conservative this means two things to me. Firstly, Alberta is still facing unfair trade barriers when it comes to transporting our energy products to other provinces. Secondly, eastern Canadians are being robbed of the option of purchasing ethical, clean, Canadian oil.

Mr. Speaker, Canada ranks third in the world for proven reserves, with more than 95 per cent of these reserves being located in the Alberta oil sands and with Alberta having 39 per cent of Canada's remaining conventional oil reserves, more than any other province. Together, this means that Alberta contains nearly all of Canada's oil sands and much of its conventional oil reserves. Of course, we've been happy to be a leader, a leader in growing our economy and a leader in sharing our resources and our wealth with the entire rest of Canada. While Alberta is blessed in its geology, it's landlocked geography has always been a bigger challenge.

In our current political climate, where parties are so eager to spread misinformation regarding the care with which Alberta's oil and gas resources are developed, market access is Alberta's pre-eminent challenge. Alberta needs Energy East, and Canada needs Energy East, not only for the construction jobs and the operation jobs but for access to the resource and the self-sustainability. Perhaps more significantly, by participating in Confederation, under the Constitution Act Alberta is entitled to Energy East. Confederation was intended to be a trade partnership, but today many members of Confederation act to prevent the free movement of our energy products.

Mr. Speaker, right now we can see examples of this with the B.C. NDP and with Alberta NDP appointee Tzepporah Berman. The NDP across Canada and in Alberta, truthfully, and even at the municipal level with mayors like Denis Coderre from Montreal are examples of blocking the free movement of our energy products. Their clear portfolio desire to stop the transportation of our energy products is in clear violation of the spirit of Confederation – 150 years – and section 121 of the Constitution Act, 1867.

Intercolonial free trade was an important motivation for Confederation, yet many players within our Confederation have ignored their obligation to section 121 of the Constitution Act, 1867. Mr. Speaker, section 121 is clear in its intent to provide for the elimination of interprovincial trade barriers, stating: "All Articles of the Growth, Produce, or Manufacture of any one of the Provinces shall, from and after the Union, be admitted free into each of the other Provinces."

It is so interesting to me that political operatives across Canada would be so unkind to their neighbours in Alberta and our communities and people when we're a neighbour that shares our prosperity so willingly, a neighbour that keeps the coffers of other provinces full through equalization and other transfers. It is interesting because in blocking or protesting oil from Alberta, we're de facto welcoming oil from other countries that do not share their wealth with Canada or our expectations on how ethically our products are developed.

Mr. Speaker, one compliment that I will give to the last government is that it seemed like in almost every throne speech they highlighted the fact that interprovincial trade barriers had to come down and had to be improved upon.

When I talk to Albertans, the ones that I smile about maybe the most are the ones that come up to me and show a map of the United States and all of the miles and miles of pipelines that have been put in to make that country self-sustaining in oil and a lead producer in LNG. At the same time Canadian Confederation is not working like it could and should and was promised in 1867.

Many of the countries that provide oil to Canadian refineries have environmental standards as high as Alberta, and they care deeply for human rights. Mr. Speaker, Norway, for example, contributed 41 MBD to Canada in 2016, and our southern neighbours contributed 411 MBD. This trade is important for controlling costs domestically and ensuring that Canadian consumers and producers are getting the fairest prices.

What is great about this motion is that it does not advocate for trade blocks. No. Where trade makes sense it should occur. Alberta does not need a protectionist national energy program that tries to manage supply, harming Canadians in the process with prices that are higher than the world price. Healthy and free international trade will keep that in check. Furthermore, it should never be the government's place to tell Canadian refineries where they must import their oil from. They should be able to consider all their options.

However, Mr. Speaker, there is again huge hypocrisy at play. Domestically we have mayors like Denis Coderre and other NDP-financed ecoradicals like Tzepporah Berman and Karen Mahon that try to stop the trade of Alberta oil through the building of these needed new pipelines, appointed by our very own Alberta Premier. In working to stop this trade, these so-called advocates are forcing good Canadian refineries to import their raw product from jurisdictions with questionable ethical records. How does this make any sense?

In Alberta we respect workers' rights, we pay high wages, we impose world-class standards, we treat men and women equally in the workforce, and the list goes on. I am not sure that the same can be said for many of the countries we import oil from like Saudi Arabia, Algeria, Nigeria, Angola, or Iraq. I believe that Canadian refineries should be given a fair choice between the oil from Alberta and Saskatchewan and the oil from dictatorships, but without pipelines connecting our country, that choice of supplier is not a meaningful choice. I trust that if refineries in eastern Canada had access to Canadian raw crude, they would choose to use it. If they didn't, well, the country would still be better off because at least Alberta oil would have access to tidewater.

Mr. Speaker, this is why I'm supporting this motion before the House today and why I'm imploring all of my colleagues to do the same, especially critical at a time when we saw last week, unfortunately, another 300 Calgarians receive a pink slip from ConocoPhillips.

You know, I talked to an investment adviser in Medicine Hat this weekend who said to me: "If you look at the multiples of Canadian oil and gas companies compared to the American ones, they're way lower. We're in huge trouble. The confidence is not there."

Mr. Speaker, this is the time – this is the time – that we have to rely on our federal government and our national partners to once again make the Alberta oil and gas industry strong and restore the Alberta advantage. That is why I'm supporting this motion.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to rise and speak to Motion 505, and I want to thank the Member for Calgary-Foothills for bringing this motion to the House. I will start off by saying that I support the principle of his motion. The fact that Canada still imports oil from countries that don't share a respect for human rights and the environment does not make sense. I agree with him on that point. It also makes no sense that as Canadians we can't sell our oil to our eastern neighbours.

That is why this government has already engaged and continues to work with the federal government to develop strategies to ensure that we get more pipelines out of Alberta, either east or west or any other direction where we can get it to a market. That is why we continue pushing for more pipelines such as Energy East, so that more Albertan oil can be used across the country and around the world. Collaborating with the federal government is vital to ensuring that pipelines are built in Alberta. Let me say that again: collaborating with other provinces. Where the opposition has been asking us to pick fights with other provinces or mayors, their approach would only serve to galvanize opposition to our pipelines and to our interests in this province. I don't subscribe to that strategy, Mr. Speaker.

On this side of the House we also believe that a strong economy and a clean environment go hand in hand, and that is exactly how we secured two new pipelines, pipelines that support Albertan jobs and investment, pipelines that support a strong, diversified economy, pipelines that – our government is focused and remains committed to making life better for Albertans with new pipelines, good jobs, and a better return on every barrel of oil so this government can continue making investments in things that Albertans care about, things such as strengthening our health care system and investing in Alberta's infrastructure deficit, that has for too long gone unaddressed, and investing in its central public services, that were ignored by the previous government for too long.

The approval of both pipelines simply would not have happened without the made-in-Alberta plan to address climate change. The Member for Strathmore-Brooks – he's heckling me right now – is always very happy about our two pipelines that we got approved, due to our climate leadership, I may add. Our climate leadership plan and new royalty framework both support and incentivize innovation, technical improvements, and emissions reductions in the oil sector and throughout our whole economy.

So while I support the Member for Calgary-Foothills' motion, I do want the opposition to rethink their position on our climate leadership plan. I am proud of our government's policies, policies that have led to strong economic growth in this province. Now, I know the opposition would disagree with me on this point, believing in the disproven theories of austerity, believing in its climate change denying colleagues, and believing that all that is orange is wrong. Ideological indeed, Mr. Speaker.

But the facts show otherwise. Not only are we leading the country in growth, but housing starts are up; that's jobs. Exports are up; that's jobs for Albertans. Manufacturing is up, and drilling activity in this province is up, and that's jobs for Albertans. Each one of those stats is jobs. While the opposition debates climate change, we are focused on jobs. While the member focuses his time on what combination of parties or parties' names will best hide their out-of-touch, '50s ideals in a quest for power, we have been focusing on the things that make life better for everyday Albertans, those hard-working Albertans on the shop floor, in our hospitals, or out working on our highways or in any other part of the economy, Mr. Speaker, making life better for Albertans.

It has been made clear by stakeholders that the opposition's reckless and extreme approach is opposed by the leaders of the oil and gas industry because it would kill new pipeline . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, you are going to stay on the subject matter that we're dealing with?

Mr. Malkinson: Of course, Mr. Speaker. I would be happy to talk about the pipelines and the fact that we need to be able to get our products to market. That is the substance of the motion.

As a part of that, I just was mentioning how it was ironic that what the member opposite was saying is that we need to support pipelines to sell our oil to the rest of Canada. His colleagues and he himself are trying to scare capital away. In fact, they always are talking down the recent investment in the oil industry, in CNRL, in Cenovus. That required a big inflow of capital and finance, billions of dollars, Mr. Speaker, in investments. That's jobs here. We should cheer successful Canadian businesses. In fact, those companies are headquartered in Calgary. My riding is in the shadow of those towers that bear the names of those companies. So I cheer that investment, that investment in Canada, and I hope the opposition does as well.

Let me reiterate that scrapping our climate change plan means scrapping the pipelines that the motion speaks to, Mr. Speaker, and I don't agree with that. So as I support this motion, I want to assure the opposition that it is not too late for them to change their minds and support our made-in-Alberta plan to reduce carbon pollution while creating jobs and diversifying our economy and our markets. It's not too late for their Energy critic, Cypress-Medicine Hat, to stop denying climate change and support our pipelines.

The fact is that new pipelines mean a brighter future for our oil and gas industry, with jobs and opportunities for thousands of working families and billions in new investments. [interjections]

The Speaker: Calm it down, folks.

Mr. Malkinson: Our government is committed to improving this province's pipeline capacity because, as the Member for Calgary-Foothills' motion stated, it will "ensure security of supply to the Canadian [energy] market, thereby shifting Canada away from buying oil from [other countries or] countries with oppressive dictatorships."

We all agree that Alberta's oil and gas are the best in the world. We also know that we need to reach more markets beyond Canada and the United States in order to get the best price for our resources. That is why our government continues to push for more pipelines such as Energy East. More oil capacity means that we can sell more of our product to markets right across the country and around the world.

We know that there is much work to do, and we will keep fighting until we get shovels in the ground and oil flowing, employing Albertans around Alberta and getting our men and women to work. We will achieve this because we understand that a strong economy and a clean environment go hand in hand. Again I say to the opposition that this government's made-in-Alberta plan to address climate change secured two new pipelines, Mr. Speaker.

While I support this motion, I want to assure the opposition that it's not too late to change their minds. It's not too late to admit that their old way of doing things wasn't working and that our way of doing things was getting results. I hope the hon. members agree, and I hope that the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills agrees with me as well.

I'll be voting in support of this motion. Mr. Speaker, I'll leave my comments there. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the Member for Calgary-Currie for his remarks. I always enjoy the back and forth in this House, and he makes for a very entertaining debate opponent. But I want to really thank the Member for Calgary-Foothills for bringing this excellent motion forward in support of Canadian and Albertan clean, ethical oil. This is a common-sense motion that I'm glad to see, at least so far, all members of this Assembly supporting, at least in theory.

It is completely impractical and unreasonable that Canada is still importing large quantities of oil from regimes that can't hold a light to Alberta's human rights record and our environmental record. We are importing oil from places like Venezuela, Nigeria, and much of the Middle East, where human rights are an afterthought, in fact, not just an afterthought but where purchasing oil from these regimes actively props up those states and keeps in place regimes that are both against Canada's commitment to human rights but also our national security interests. Many of the regimes that we are supporting here with oil revenues are either actively hostile to Canadian interests or are allied with interests that are opposed to Canada.

We've got a significant political class, largely to the east and some to the west of Alberta, who would rather see Canada importing oil and other petroleum products from regimes that we should not want to be close to just because of the symbolism of Alberta's oil sands to them. It is cutting off their nose to spite their face.

I am unapologetically proud of Alberta oil. It is ethical. I don't think anyone could say anything negative about the human rights records of Alberta or Canada. [interjections] Somehow they must find some gross human rights violations currently taking place in Alberta. I look forward to their explanation on it.

Alberta oil is clean. It is environmentally responsible. Our carbon emissions per barrel are very reasonable and cleaner in many cases than other North American oil like California heavy. Our emissions are reasonable. It is produced with world-class standards.

I remember when I travelled along with my Wildrose colleagues to Fort McMurray last summer and saw recovered oil sands sites. They had wood buffalo roaming there, and it was absolutely beautiful. You could hear what sounded like a shotgun going off regularly, about every minute or so, and I asked what it was. It's to keep ducks out of the former tailings ponds. The cost for this is absolutely incredible. Now, if a single duck were to land in the tailings ponds, we'd probably see it on the front page of the Globe and Mail, with folks in Toronto declaring Alberta oil to be horrible. You can have birds running into windmills, and you'll never hear about it, period, so we are held to a particularly high standard. It is an unfair standard, but it is a standard nonetheless that our industry has chosen to meet themselves, without the lecturing hand of government. They've decided to do it themselves.

I am proud of Alberta oil, and I'm not an apologist for it. Now, while I'm pleased to see that the government, the NDP, has undergone a kind of conversion on the road to Damascus with their view of Alberta's oil, many members on the government side were well known for protesting against Alberta oil. They called it dirty oil. People who are ministers now stood on the steps of the Legislature just a few years ago, not long ago at all, and chanted: "No new approvals. No new approvals." It was just a few years ago, and now they are senior cabinet ministers. I genuinely believe that they want pipelines and that they want to see our industry succeed, but there has been a conversion of sorts on the road to Damascus, and I am so glad that they have seen the light of Alberta oil.

My concern, though, is that they are apologists for it. They are only in support of Alberta oil if it's used as an excuse to strangle Albertans with a massive, new, $5 billion carbon tax, a carbon tax that they are accepting from Ottawa, that they are refusing to fight Justin Trudeau on. Now, they say that this is a made-in-Alberta plan; it is not. It is accepting the diktats of Ottawa when Ottawa declares that you must have a carbon tax, but Ottawa has no constitutional grounds to impose one on a province-by-province level. They are accepting it as a convenient excuse – a convenient excuse – for imposing it here and trying to pass the blame to somebody else. It is an apologetic support of Alberta oil. It is only supporting Alberta oil if – with a big asterisk there – Alberta oil companies and Alberta taxpayers and consumers are paying a massive carbon tax. My support for Alberta oil is not conditional on a carbon tax, Mr. Speaker.

Now, if they were truly in support of Alberta oil, they could prove it by doing something really simple right now. The Premier or the Energy minister could stand up and announce that effective immediately they are firing Tzeporah Berman. They could prove that they truly support Alberta oil by ceasing to fund and pay the salaries of people who are campaigning against Alberta oil. The NDP is taking taxpayers' dollars to support anti-oil activists who are fighting right now in the B.C. election, which will be held tomorrow.

Now, I could tell you that the B.C. NDP is no friend of Alberta oil. The B.C. NDP is a radical, radical branch, a Leap Manifesto branch, of the NDP that is attempting to shut down Alberta's access to tidewater by stopping . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I would remind you of the same that I reminded another member of earlier: please stay to the subject matter that you've got.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Yeah. I'm speaking about pipelines, Mr. Speaker.

The B.C. NDP is opposing pipelines to tidewater, and the NDP in Alberta is taking taxpayers' money to fund people who are campaigning for the B.C. NDP. If they truly supported Alberta oil, they would stand up right now and announce that they will not put people on the payroll with Alberta tax dollars who are campaigning against pipelines to Alberta. They have implicitly accepted Ottawa's control to impose a carbon tax on Alberta. This side of the House – I think I can speak for the Official Opposition, and I'd presume to speak for the third party, too – categorically rejects that anyone named Trudeau can tell Alberta's oil industry what it can do.

We make no apologies for it, and I'm proud of the Member for Calgary-Foothills for putting forward this motion, which will put front and centre the fact that this Assembly will support Alberta's oil without apology, without conditions as they would impose.

Let's all stand up on the record. Let's stand up for Alberta. Let's stand up for clean oil, for ethical oil, and for Canadian oil. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I rise to request unanimous consent to go to one-minute bells.

The Speaker: The Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I admit that after hearing the Member for Strathmore-Brooks today, I'd think he comes from B.C. but that yesterday he came from Saskatchewan. I'd like to remind him that we're debating the motion having to do with pipelines in Alberta and not anything from B.C. or from any other province.

I wanted to thank the member for inviting us once again to talk about pipelines and the work that our government has done to get the federal government to approve the pipelines. The more that we talk about it, maybe the opposition will believe it.

One of the wishes I really have in this House is that I wish the opposition would be consistent. Clean, ethical oil is defined as coming from countries that uphold not only human rights but that have high environmental standards. I'm thinking that if the opposition really believes it about clean, ethical oil, they would indeed support our government's climate change plan and that they would support all the efforts that our government has put in place to really ensure that the environmental standards are obeyed. I think that as a government we've been very vigilant to ensure that there are no pipeline leaks and so on.

I really hope that the opposition would consistently believe in what they're saying through this motion. I want to remind the opposition, as my other colleagues have done, that it is the Premier, through her work with the federal government and the ministers, who has ensured approval for the pipelines.

I'm very proud, Mr. Speaker, that indeed one of those pipelines will be starting from my constituency and that the pipelines are going to provide employment not only to my constituency but also to my friends in this House who come from constituencies nearby. In my riding we have the makers, the manufacturers, of the pipeline components. We have a steelmaker that makes the rebar. So the pipeline is something that's very important to me and to my colleagues.

There are also two refineries in the area. Refining the oil in our province is important for well-paying, long-lasting employment and for creating a long-lasting economy for our province. I would like to remind everyone that it is our government who has provided the petrochemical diversification program so that the oil and gas can be further refined and we can further upgrade the crude in the riding. It is because our government is focused and remains committed to making life better for Albertans, with new pipelines, good jobs, and a better return on every barrel of oil.

But, Mr. Speaker, I want to discuss one aspect of the motion that I'm not sure the mover has really thought about, and I'm kind of intrigued by what he thinks about it. I did some research on the words "oppressive" and "dictatorship." The word "oppressive" means burdensome, unjustly harsh, or tyrannical. A dictator is defined as a person exercising absolute power, especially a ruler who has absolute, unrestricted control in a government without hereditary succession.

I'm intrigued about how the MLA for Calgary-Foothills would define these words. For example, would he define it as a country that holds democratic elections but disenfranchises some from voting or a country where the military has power through a coup and keeps postponing elections or a country that is moving towards democracy but still hasn't appointed legislators or a country where the elections are not held in a fair or open manner? I've had that experience as an elections observer. Or is it like what happened yesterday, a country that holds fair and open elections but is dissed by its friends in the Rebel media because the person who was elected was not xenophobic and anti-EU?

Really, I have to say that when I heard the words "oppressive dictatorships," I was really upset that your friends in the Rebel media would dis a fairly elected government. I'm wondering, Mr. Speaker, where the mover of the motion is on what is an oppressive dictatorship when his friends were pushing for a xenophobic government. I'm also wondering what the mover of the motion thinks about an elected Legislature where legislators are disqualified for made-up reasons or where legislators are put in jail on trumped-up charges or where they lose the popular vote but are still elected.

Mr. Speaker, while I support the motion to urge the federal government to develop strategies to facilitate the building of pipelines, I do have some problems with the second part of the motion because I am not persuaded that the members opposite can define accurately who they mean by an oppressive dictator. I'm also concerned that the people who are maybe the most affected by the member's definition are the most destitute in Africa and the Middle East.

So, Mr. Speaker, while I will be voting for the motion, I would really ask the members of the opposition to pay particular attention to the definition of ethical oil and to support the government around our climate change plan.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Any other individuals who would like to speak to the motion?

I would call upon the Member for Calgary-Foothills to close debate.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank my hon. colleagues for their remarks pertaining to motion 505. I have some curious facts here to add to the debate. Whether we are talking about Canadian oil for Canadians or North American energy independence, when it comes to production, in 2016 the United States produced 9 million barrels per day whereas Canada produced half of that, 4 and a half million barrels per day. Whereas Canada has 171 billion barrels of proven reserves, the United States only has 35 billion barrels. What that means is that although our resource is five times bigger than the U.S., the U.S. produces double what we produce here.

Also, there are some interesting facts about the economics of importing foreign oil. We spend every year $13 billion in foreign exchange paying for imports from other countries. We import about 759,000 barrels per day, and we spend $13 billion in foreign exchange, which works out to be about $35 million per day. On the other hand, we are losing $50 million per day, as per the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, due to the lack of marketing infrastructure in Canada.

Alberta has been selling at a discount to the only customer we have, the south of the border, who is our strongest competitor now. Many believe President Trump will take advantage of the opposition to pipelines within Canada, whether it is Tzeporah Berman or whoever it is, because Mr. Trump has all the intelligence at his disposal. He can figure it out. Some of the NDP colleagues here in the past have opposed pipelines for whatever reason. Suddenly they've taken a 180-degree turn, and now they say that they're pro development. I respect that if they've had a change of heart. But today I asked the Premier at least to confirm that she agrees that Alberta oil is ethical compared to other sources of crude. She didn't give me any answer on that.

Now, every day they take credit for those two pipelines, Mr. Speaker. I want to talk a little bit about that. Out of those two pipelines, the one, line 9, is a replacement pipeline, which is a repair to line 9, which they make out to be a big deal as a new pipeline, which is okay. But then the other pipeline, which is going west, is Trans Mountain. I'm really worried that if tomorrow, with the help of Ms Berman and other people appointed by NDP here, they succeed in convincing British Columbians to vote for the NDP there, that is saying that they won't allow that Trans Mountain pipeline. So the two pipelines which they're talking about will become suddenly one. I'm really concerned about that. I'm really, really concerned about that. That's why we asked them to fire Ms Berman. But they refused to do that, and she continues to be on the oil sands advisory group, paid by the government.

In the end, anyway, Mr. Speaker, if they change their heart, if they support this motion, I thank them from the bottom of my heart. I want them to be consistent. When they ask us to be consistent, I want them to be consistent. When they say that they support pipelines but when government-paid employees are protesting pipelines and they encourage them to do that, then they can't have it both ways.

In any case, Canada needs to be strong and self-sufficient. By building the Energy East pipeline, we'll get our market access, and we'll lessen our dependence on exports to American markets.

I thank all of the members for agreeing to support this motion. This is a common-sense motion. When it is passed today and if it is acted upon in the future, this would strengthen Alberta's energy industry and create jobs across the country, and we'll be building more pipelines in every single direction across Canada. That way, we'll lessen our dependence on foreign oil. Also, we'll lessen our dependence on exports to the United States. That way, we'll move our country away from foreign oil and move close to energy independence. This is all about economic prosperity, Canadian oil for Canadians.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, May 9, 2017

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let each of us reflect or pray, each in our own way. Let us embrace diversity, encourage opinions, and welcome our differences. When we open our minds, solutions often follow. Let us think critically, have patience, and find renewed understanding, not for our individual selves but for the people we serve.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Elan Lynes, the cofounder of Fund It Forward among the many things that she does – she was also recently my real estate agent – and Le-Ann Ewaskiw, co-ordinator of the youth volunteer program for Strathcona information and volunteer centre; and Cody Hanson and Kalea Colman from Youth Rock. I will speak to the great work that they're doing later in my member's statement. I invite them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a fantastic constituent from the riding of Edmonton-Decore, Jim Ragsdale. Jim is a dedicated constituent in the riding of Edmonton-Decore. He's part of the Evansdale Community League, area 17, which Evansdale is a part of, and a huge supporter of the VantagePoint church. He also volunteers in my constituency office. I would now ask Jim to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Volunteerism in Strathcona-Sherwood Park

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to recognize the spirit of co-operation and collaboration that exists amongst volunteers within my constituency of Strathcona-Sherwood Park. My guests here today include representatives from the information and volunteer centre. The IVC promotes volunteerism and supports nonprofits and community organizations. They connect people to the most accurate and relevant community information.

One of the organizations they support is Fund It Forward, which is a local crowdfunding movement. Fund It Forward is made up of local businesspeople and residents that come together quarterly with a commitment to support local nonprofit organizations. The projects they fund impact directly the health and well-being of the county and residents.

Most recently the members voted to provide funding to Youth Rock to put on a number of events this month to engage youth. At Youth Rock events youth lead, plan, and execute events that they are interested in while adults from the community act as mentors and advise youth as needed. Last week they held Locked In the Library and Big Brother, Sherwood Park edition, for senior high students. The junior high students get their chance on Friday. This fun continues later on this month with Pressure Cooker, Dive In Movie, and Smashcona, and the month wraps up with May Music Fest.

I'm proud that our government is able to provide grant funding for initiatives like this, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

Emergency Medical Dispatch Services

Mr. Stier: Mr. Speaker, separation of fire and EMS dispatch in southern Alberta is back in the news today. People are dying, lives are at risk, and quality of patient care has degraded because of the current broken system. There are major life-threatening delays, gaps in coverage, and local familiarity and co-ordinated responses are missing when EMS dispatch is moved to another centre. Pages of examples have been delivered to the minister's office. Just to name a few: number 1, a person died after suffering a heart attack and receiving no advanced medical help on scene for 50 minutes due to a poorly co-ordinated EMS call with an air ambulance response.

Number 2, a baby with breathing problems could have died due to a 64-minute delay in EMS sending the call to dispatch fire when an ambulance was unavailable and fire was only 6 and a half kilometres from the scene.

Number 3, a person having an asthma attack did not receive a timely emergency response because it took AHS EMS 34 minutes to forward the call to get fire first on scene because someone left the room and dropped the call.

Number 4, persons involved in a motor vehicle accident did not receive a timely response due to an inaccurate dispatch. Emergency responses were sent to the wrong location in Banff townsites rather than Field, B.C., due to a major EMS dispatch problem.

Number 5, a person suffering a cardiac arrest did not receive advanced life care for 40 minutes because EMS dispatch would not allow the closest ambulance to attend the scene and was unfamiliar with the distances.

Mr. Speaker, we need a single-point 911 call answer, with fire and EMS dispatch together, to solve the multiple problems causing delays and the unacceptable consequences of centralizing, which are experienced by all 26 municipalities served by the Foothills 911. This is something we can fix and has been done for Calgary, Lethbridge, Red Deer, and Fort McMurray. We are requesting the immediate return of EMS dispatch to Foothills regional 911 commission.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Seniors' Supports

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is aging. Today's boomers, only now beginning to access seniors' care, are 53 to 71, with healthier, active lifestyles. By 2031 there will be more than 900,000 Alberta seniors, roughly double current numbers. Key priorities in the future of seniors' care: enabling seniors to remain in their homes, better connecting seniors with services, and delivering services in the community. Choice and innovation in community design, transportation, and housing are required.

The future of seniors' care is important while sustainability and affordability are challenges we must face head-on. But, first, we must take care of today's seniors by working collaboratively with private, nonprofit, and faith-based sectors. In 2015 we had ASLI. Today we are told that the scope and timeline for the next capital grant program has not been determined and that more announcements will follow. We all know that now is the time to partner, plan, and build.

We hear of challenges in providing seniors' care due to the minimum wage increases and the burden of the carbon tax in an environment where exemptions and rebates are either nonexistent or misdirected. In my Motion 509, to be tabled this session, I will ask you to approve a review of the financial impact of the carbon levy on organizations providing front-line care to seniors. We must collectively understand the unintended consequences of legislation on this all-important and growing demographic, the people who literally built this province.

We have called on government to exempt the seniors' housing and continuing care industry from the carbon levy to allow them to continue a high level of care and services for their residents and clients without the burden of crippling cost pressures or the negative consequences of fee increases.

Mr. Speaker, let's listen and work together as legislators with caring and compassionate housing organizations, the private sector, and industry associations to ensure sustainability, innovation, and focused and leveraged investment in the care of those who deserve our respect, compassion, and support to live not only in comfort, safety, and dignity but to thrive as valued and contributing members of society.

Thank you.

Westray Mine Explosion 25th Anniversary

Loyola: Mr. Speaker, 25 years ago today, early in the morning of May 9, 1992, a blast so strong that it shook houses more than a kilometre away lit up the skies of the small town of Plymouth in Nova Scotia. This was the Westray mine explosion. It ended the lives of 26 miners and started both a criminal investigation and a public inquiry into the safety conditions of the mine that led to this disaster.

Nova Scotia Supreme Court Justice K.P. Richard said in his report that the Westray disaster was "a story of incompetence, of mismanagement, of bureaucratic bungling, of deceit, of ruthlessness, of cover-up, of apathy, of expediency, and of cynical indifference." He placed the cause of the disaster and the loss of life squarely on the shoulders of management, who repeatedly violated safety procedures, and on government for failing to enforce their own regulations.

In 1997, after the release of his report, the government of Nova Scotia apologized to the miners' families, finally admitting that the entire system failed the workers of Westray.

Despite wide-ranging evidence of safety violations and wilful refusal by management to act, no one was ever held criminally responsible for the deaths of these 26 men. It is hard to think of any other circumstance where 26 people could be killed and everyone who was responsible could walk away free.

I'm proud to be part of our government today for signing an MOU which will define protocols between occupational health and safety officers and police officers when investigating serious workplace incidents to help determine if criminal charges are warranted. On this anniversary of a deadly disaster, where 26 men died and where dozens of family members' lives were changed forever, we should all do everything we can to make sure that it never happens again.

Mariano Ezeta

Connolly: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to celebrate the life of a young Albertan who grew up in my constituency of Calgary-Hawkwood and tragically passed away early last week. Mariano Ezeta was born on June 7, 1993, and lost his battle with leukemia on April 30, 2017. He grew up in the community of Arbour Lake and later attended the University of Calgary, where he was a member of the U of C Dinos track and field team in 2012-2013 and 2014-2015. He won the Canada West men's track and field championship with the Dinos in 2015 along with other medals for the relay and the 300-metre sprint. After the 2015 season he was diagnosed with leukemia and was forced to miss the next two seasons.

Mr. Speaker, leukemia is a devastating disease that can attack people at any age. It occurs when the bone marrow begins to create abnormal white blood cells. Usually white blood cells help your body to fight infection, but leukemia cells grow faster than normal cells and crowd out the other blood cells in the body.

Experts don't know what causes leukemia, but the toll of the disease is high. It is estimated that in 2017 alone close to 3,000 Canadians will die from the disease. Research into the causes and effects of leukemia are ongoing, and treatments are helping hundreds of Albertans to fight the disease. Sadly, for Mariano Ezeta the treatments did not work.

This gifted athlete is survived by his parents, Guillermo and Marcela Ezeta, and his sister, Alex Ezeta. His teammates with the U of C Dinos remember him for his strength and his team spirit. The University of Calgary lowered its flags to mark his passing and is establishing a track and field scholarship in his name.

I encourage all members to visit the Mariano Ezeta track and field scholarship page at netcommunity.ucalgary.ca/marianoezeta and join me in contributing toward this worthy cause in memory of a strong Calgary athlete.

Thank you.

Arbor Day and Forest Week

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, Arbor Day has come and gone, and with that, we begin the celebration of Forest Week here in Alberta. To get at the roots of these events, you need to go back to Nebraska, where then secretary of the territory of Nebraska, a journalist and nature lover, J. Sterling Morton, advocated the planting of trees whenever he could. On January 4, 1872, Morton first proposed a tree-planting holiday, to be called Arbor Day, at the meeting of the state board of agriculture. The date was set for April 10, 1872. Prizes were offered to counties and individuals for properly planting the largest number of trees on that day. It was estimated that more than 1 million trees were planted in Nebraska on the first Arbor Day.

Closer to home Alberta's Forest Week is celebrated each year during the first full week of May. While not as long a tradition here as in Nebraska, the tradition of Alberta Forest Week and Arbor Day celebrations do date back to 1884. In fact, the lodgepole pine, or Pinus contorta, is Alberta's provincial tree. Conservation and stewardship as well as the environmental benefits of trees and our forests are shared with our young generation. Close to 70,000 tree seedlings are distributed by Agriculture and Forestry to grade 1 students throughout the province during Forest Week.

Forest companies also play their part throughout the year as members planted over 65 million seedlings in 2015, more than two trees for every one harvested. This is a renewable industry that employs over 15,000 people and nearly 30,000 others in direct spinoff activities. Alberta has some of the highest forest management standards in the world. Companies are required to not only regenerate harvested areas and access roads but to also take into consideration wildlife habitat, water quality, and recreational opportunities.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this time to acknowledge the contributions to both Alberta school kids and industry to ensure that we have a healthy and long-lasting forest for generations to come.

Thank you.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have four sets of documents to table today. One is from Market Surveillance Administrator, a notice to participants. "The MSA has received complaints about the Balancing Pool's conduct regarding ... breaches of the Electric Utilities Act" with regard to power purchase arrangement terminations. They're investigating the conduct of the Balancing Pool.

I have another document from the Balancing Pool acknowledging that they have received a notice of an investigation from the MSA pursuant to complaints about the Balancing Pool's conduct regarding breaches of the Electric Utilities Act in relation to power purchase agreements and terminations.

I'm also tabling a letter from the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner of Alberta. It's investigation file 004383. The commissioner is investigating the issue regarding the government asking the Balancing Pool to delete e-mails. It's regarding PPAs again, the gift that keeps giving here.

Also, an article from jwnenergy.com entitled Canada One of the Most Geopolitically Unstable Places for Oil and Gas. "Arguably the highest-cost basin in the world and it's not because of inefficient operators ... [but because of] the high tax rates and the uncertainty."

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on day 16 of Public Affairs Bureau tablings. I would like to table a letter I wrote to the hon. Government House Leader on the 9th of March, 2017, quoting him, where he refers to the Public Affairs Bureau as a "bloated PR bureaucracy [that should] be downsized in order to save the taxpayers money."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table five copies of an article from CBC's website today entitled 'God Only Knows': Serenity's Mother Concerned about Children Living in Former Foster Home.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to table the requisite number of copies of a story found through the 630 CHED website where the title of the story is Wildrose Party AHS Employee Satisfaction Numbers Found to Be Misleading. That's not my word; that's the word of the media.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Serenity's Former Guardians

Mr. Jean: The NDP government is allowing what happened to Serenity to happen again. The same guardians who allowed Serenity to be physically and sexually abused and starve under their watch continue to have children in their care. The ministry is trying to claim it's nuanced because it's an informal living arrangement, but that's simply not good enough. Why isn't the Premier directing her government to take every single necessary step to ensure that these guardians who abused Serenity can't have children in their care ever again?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Let me begin by saying that our hearts go out to the mother of Serenity, who is still dealing with this horrible tragedy, and our hearts also go out, of course, to all Albertans who are concerned for vulnerable children across this province.

Let me begin by saying that it is the policy of this government, that we are following, that we never place children in care in a setting where there is a criminal investigation involved. However, we do not take the biological children away from families where there is a criminal investigation involved. Instead, what we do is we monitor the matter very, very closely. That's what's happening in the case here.

Mr. Jean: Well, here's what Serenity's caseworker said about her guardians.

The child is being neglected by the guardian, the child has been or there is substantial risk the child will be physically injured or sexually abused by the guardian of the child and the guardian of the child is unable or unwilling to protect the child from physical injury or sexual abuse.

Your government says that removing children from the home is the last resort. If that doesn't sound like a last resort, Premier, what does?

The Speaker: Hon. members, I just want to caution the entire House. This is a very sensitive matter. As we move into this topic, I would hope that we all respect that.

The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I've said before, after the tragedy of Serenity's death, ministry officials immediately removed children under the government's care from that particular setting. They then engaged in a process of monitoring the safety and the quality of life of the biological children in that family very, very closely. The matter actually went before the courts. Indeed, in that case the judge indicated that what should happen is that monitoring should continue. So that is what is happening, and we are taking every care to ensure the safety of the children in the house in which they live.

Mr. Jean: Sounds like a lot of excuses, Mr. Speaker.

It is their job to protect these children. If it wasn't for Serenity's mother's bravery in continuing to bring these horrific conditions to light, we would know nothing. It took a CBC reporter to uncover it. From what I see, this government is sitting on its hands while children are in serious danger in Alberta. This scenario isn't something from the past. These children right now are living in these conditions. We keep asking for action and answers. What is the Premier doing to protect the other children in this house and prevent another possible murder?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, I would caution the member opposite on using the kind of inflammatory characterizations that have not been proven in any setting, and I would suggest that that is deeply irresponsible to the families, the children, and the community in which this tragedy occurred. What I will say is that the safety of the children who are biologically related to the guardians in question is being monitored on a regular basis. We are absolutely concerned about ensuring their continued safety, and we will continue to do that work.

The Speaker: Second main question.

Mr. Jean: This government is totally irresponsible, Mr. Speaker. Two years after her death the RCMP continues to investigate the probable murder of Serenity in the home of her caregivers. And what do they say? Excuses. There are six children still in that home under the guardianship of Serenity's former caregivers. Two of those six children have reportedly not been seen in school since October. That's over six months and no school. While we've been asking for answers on the death of Serenity, we don't know if the other six children in that home are even safe today. Has the minister even bothered to pick up the phone and ask someone to go and check on the welfare of those children?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The safety of the children of this province is my top priority, and I remain committed to doing everything in my power to ensure the safety of those children. I care very deeply, like all Albertans, about ensuring that every child is safe and protected. My heart continues to go out to the mother of Serenity, who is dealing with this tragedy still. Ministry officials do continue to monitor the situation very closely, and I certainly continue to interact with them to ensure their safety as well.

Mr. Jean: Albertans are disgusted. It's absolutely absurd that six children remain in the care of those responsible for Serenity at the time of her death. It is absolutely beyond comprehension that nobody in this government appears to have bothered to check on the safety of those children. This is pure negligence, and somebody in this government needs to be held responsible for this. I can't even believe that I have to ask this, but will the minister go right now and direct her staff, direct child services, or ask the RCMP to drive over to the home and check on these kids to make sure they're okay?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Clearly, the safety and protection of Alberta's children touches us all, and it makes us all passionate. I just want to clarify that, absolutely, the safety of Alberta's children is a key priority of Children's Services. We are monitoring the situation in the home very closely. When there have been concerns of safety issues, of abuse or neglect, they have been followed up. We take every report of possible abuse and neglect very seriously and follow up with every single one. We continue to monitor this situation and ensure safety.

Mr. Jean: The death of Serenity was more than a tragedy. It looks like outright murder. Now, with six other children still in the care of the same people who were responsible for Serenity when she died, we hear more shocking stories told by Serenity's family. "Every time I saw them, those kids, they had bruises and cuts on them. Every single time." I don't even know what to say. When will this minister, this government, and this Premier or anybody over there do their job and get these kids out of that house?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again, the safety of children is a top priority for myself, for Children's Services, and for this government, and we continue to do everything we can to ensure the safety of children in this home and across this province. Every single concern about the safety of a child in this province that's reported to Children's Services is taken seriously and followed up. I would urge all Albertans that if they have concerns about the safety of a child, please let Children's Services know. Please know that we do take it seriously. We will ensure to follow it up and to monitor . . .

The Speaker: The third main question.

Lacombe Hospital and Care Centre

Mr. Jean: Wildrose has obtained confidential documents related to the AHS-run Lacombe hospital and care centre. In April an investigation was launched following serious concerns about care quality and only – only – because Red Deer College practical nurse students completing their practicum sounded the alarm. In total there were 80 issues identified to date that include safety concerns and training deficiencies. What changes are being made to Lacombe hospital to address these serious concerns that jeopardize patient safety?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We are grateful that the students who were on-site did raise concerns and that AHS followed up immediately. Some of the steps to date include placing three staff leaders on immediate administrative leave pending the investigation. The investigation is still ongoing, but this certainly is a matter of concern. We are grateful that the students raised it and that AHS is acting in accordance with the legislation, including following up with protection for persons in care to ensure that they can do their preliminary investigation as well, which is, again, under way.

Mr. Jean: Monitoring, investigating: Mr. Speaker, why don't they just do their job and pick up the phone and get some action on this file? We've heard concerning stories from loved ones whose families have been patients at Lacombe hospital. Lois Cookson's 89-year-old father's condition rapidly deteriorated at Lacombe hospital to the point that she said that she was watching him die before her eyes, with an inadequate level of care. Since he's gotten out of the facility, he's improved 40 per cent. I'm appalled at the conditions at this hospital. Would the Premier trust the level of care at Lacombe hospital to her own loved ones?

Ms Hoffman: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would. Again, this is a long-term care facility. It's important that we enable anyone who has concerns to bring those forward. It's my understanding that the students did bring those concerns forward. AHS was notified, and they're in the process of conducting a survey, ensuring that the three staff who were the staff leads at that time were put on administrative leave. They're conducting nursing assessments of the 75 residents, again, of the long-term care facility to ensure that the health care needs are being met. I would be confident to assure that if I needed to be in care, I would feel safe there. That's why we have these checks and balances in place. Again, thank you to the students for raising the concerns.

Mr. Jean: Another concerned family shared the following about their 72-year-old mom who has dementia. Numerous times Lois was found in her room in her wheelchair with her pants around her knees because it was quicker for staff than pulling her pants all the way up. Her blanket had fallen on the floor beside her, out of her reach. She was cold and very distraught. What steps is the Premier taking to ensure that the people of Lacombe get the care they deserve, and is that the care the Minister of Health said she would leave her family in? Is that appropriate?

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the Minister of Health has already outlined, these concerns that were raised have been taken very, very seriously. The staff leads have been put on leave, and most importantly a very thorough nursing assessment of the quality of care and the state of health of every person in that facility has been undertaken, because we know we are accountable, because we care about providing the quality of care that our seniors and our loved ones deserve. We are working very hard to make sure that all of those concerns are addressed and that the quality of care improves on behalf of the people that are there.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The CBC article I tabled today said, "Children are still living in the former foster home where Serenity lived before she died emaciated and battered in an Edmonton hospital bed." When I read this, I thought that the minister and the system cannot possibly be that tone deaf and indifferent to children in care, yet it is true. To the children's minister: what could possibly have been more important that you couldn't be bothered to ensure kids in the same place where the brutal end to Serenity's young life took place aren't left to suffer the same fate under your watch?

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again, I cannot state strongly enough that the safety of the children of this province is absolutely my key priority, and I will continue to do everything in my power to ensure children in this province are safe. I want to be clear that there are no children in the care of this government who have been placed in this home, and again ministry officials continue to monitor the situation in the home very closely. But if there is an allegation of abuse or neglect, Children's Services staff will follow up. They will do a safety assessment in that house and will . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The first supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I was once a minister, so I know that things can go sideways without warning and land on the front page of the paper. I also know that when this happens, the minister in charge must demand the file and take a personal interest in the issue and get on top of the problem or be fired. Serenity's file has been front and centre for months, and now we know that the Premier and the minister have not done their job and left more kids in the same danger as Serenity. To the Premier: before you and your minister decide to resign in disgrace, will you order these kids removed from the very same house that led to the unspeakable abuse and death that Serenity suffered?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, it's interesting. Unfortunately, the tragedy that Serenity went through occurred in September 2014, and the ministry engaged in a very comprehensive review and monitoring of the safety of the biological children of the guardians in question, beginning in September 2014 and onward, under the watch of the member opposite's former government. Now, the reason for that is because the policy is that you do not take away the children of somebody who is engaged in a criminal investigation . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier. [interjection] Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. McIver: Shame on the Premier smirking about this issue.

Mr. Speaker, we know that the Premier and the children's minister have left children under the same roof where a child named Serenity was starved, beaten, raped, and murdered, knowing that her killers are still at large. To any minister that dares to answer: what feeble excuse can you offer that would convince Albertans that the Premier and the minister should not be fired and immediately held responsible for endangering the lives of these and other children? [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, I would ask that responses – I am not able to hear when the noise gets so loud, so please contain your comments both in substance as well as tone.

The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, I have to say that, without doubt, I take an interest in the safety and well-being of every child in this province. I can absolutely say that in this particular case ministry officials and Children's Services are monitoring the situation very closely. Since 2014 they did recognize the need for an interest. I care very deeply about ensuring that every child is safe and protected, and I will continue to do every single thing I can to improve the child intervention system and to . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Gravel Extraction in Flood Plains

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are for the minister of environment. The water for life strategy has three main goals: safe, secure water; healthy aquatic ecosystems; a reliable, quality water supply. Gravel extraction in watercourses continues to threaten as flood plains are crucial for long-term protection of our water and flood mitigation efforts, yet this government continues to allow the PC-era policy of continued activity in flood plains. To the minister: why hasn't the law changed since you took office? Why do you still allow gravel extraction in flood plains?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks and climate renewal.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. He's quite right that the water for life strategy involves monitoring. It involves clean drinking water. It also involves public education. It also involves compliance and enforcement. We're very committed to all of those elements of the water for life strategy.

As for the particular matter that the hon. member raises, I can assure him that the department is reviewing the matter of gravel extraction and will have more to say about that.

Thank you.

Dr. Swann: Well, the conflict is that the Municipal Government Act allows municipal governments authority over water within their boundaries. The Environmental Law Centre said recently that they have a lack of capacity to assess risk, measure cumulative impacts, and protect habitat, recognizing ecological function of the flood plains. Alberta Environment and Parks does have the necessary expertise and is responsible for protecting all surface water, including flood plains. To the minister: when will the minister make water the priority and enforce the ministry's standards?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is no question that years of underfunding the environment department and the operations division in particular under the previous government led to a situation where we have a number of cases in which we simply don't have enough resources to do the job. That is why we have increased our resources by reallocating within the department – we've had this conversation at estimates as well – to ensure safe drinking water, to ensure habitat, and to ensure that Alberta's water resources are there for environmental, social, and economic reasons. That is why the department is looking at its options . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Last week I met with members of the watershed planning and advisory committee for the confluence of the Red Deer and Medicine rivers and viewed the 120 acres, productive farmland, in the river flood plain that are going to be turned into another gravel bed. They're dissatisfied with the lack of transparency in the approval process and the inability to appeal decisions, meaning that finances trump environmental concerns. However, the proposal still needs to be ratified by this province. To the minister: will you commit now to protect these communities and the environment and do a proper cumulative impact assessment before this goes ahead?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the hon. member for his engagement on this topic for the benefit and health of all Albertans. It's not just on this particular topic, but his history of working on environmental issues is to be commended and in this case as well. I am pleased that he has interacted and engaged with the WPAC in question. I am pleased that he has raised this matter for us. We will ensure that all of the appropriate protocols are followed and that we take a conservation and stewardship ethic approach as we consider this matter of that particular extraction.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Protected Leaves of Absence from Work

Ms Fitzpatrick: Mr. Speaker, I am very proud to be part of a government that supports family-friendly workplaces. I have worked for about 50 years, and most of that time my workplaces were not family friendly. Given that today's workplaces are very different from when our employment standards legislation was last reviewed and that this province has not done enough to match protections enjoyed by other Canadians, to the Minister of Labour:

what is the government hearing from Albertans who are struggling to balance work and family responsibilities?

Ms Gray: Thank you very much to the member for the question. Mr. Speaker, since I've been minister, I've been hearing from Albertans who have concerns that they haven't been able to take time off in urgent situations for personal and family reasons, situations like when a loved one dies or for the care of a child with a critical illness. Albertans want to be treated fairly, and a parent having to worry about losing their job while also trying to care for a critically ill child is not fair. Albertans pay into employment insurance like every other Canadian and deserve the same rights and protections other Canadians enjoy.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that other jurisdictions have made updates to their employment standards legislation and given that many Albertans may not be aware that they don't have the same rights and protections as other Canadians, can the same minister tell us where Alberta is out of step with other provinces and why?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Albertans face some of the longest qualification periods in Canada for job-protected leaves, including maternity and parental leave. We are also one of the few provinces that don't guarantee that employees who are sick won't lose their jobs for that. Alberta also has the shortest compassionate care leave in Canada, and we don't have leaves for bereavement or domestic violence. That is why I have engaged with Albertans to ask their thoughts on our leave system.

The Speaker: The second supplemental.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. How do these leaves in other provinces impact women in the workforce?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Between 2005 and 2015 the number of women in Alberta's working-age population grew by 28 per cent, or by 360,000. Mothers and pregnant women are a part of our workforce, and their ability to take leaves impacts their health, their productivity at work, and the health of their children. However, our maternity leave is out of step with what is offered by the EI system. We also have the longest qualification period for maternity leave, meaning that Alberta women can be fired for getting pregnant if they haven't worked somewhere for a full year. Other jurisdictions have lower . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Elder abuse is not something to take lightly. We entrust our loved ones to the care of competent and compassionate care workers in seniors' homes across Alberta. At AHS's Lacombe hospital families spoke up, but issues persisted until nursing students in practicum reported abuses. The teacher had to pull the students from the hospital before an investigation was launched. Such drastic measures should not need to be taken before reports of abuse are taken seriously. Why were families rebuffed, and why did it take so long for an investigation to be launched?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The member is right that Albertans of all ages and all health care needs deserve to be treated with dignity and respect. Again I want to thank the students at Red Deer College for expressing their concerns and ensuring that those were raised. As soon as AHS found out, the concerns were indeed followed up.

With regard to the specific questions about families notifying the facility, I'd be happy to follow up. I can tell you that when AHS was notified, they immediately followed up, and I'd be happy to co-ordinate sharing additional information. Any Albertan can call 811 to talk to a registered nurse and absolutely be facilitated with the right people if they do have concerns they want to raise, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Orr: This is a systemic issue. Given that 80 continuing care service standards have been breached at Lacombe hospital – no medical assessments at admission, no care plans, no record of legal representatives, no fall assessments, no dietary assessments, no wound care interventions, and staff are not trained in infection prevention, emergency preparedness, medical assistance, care with dementia, CPR, on and on – how did this facility deteriorate to the point where 80 care service standards have been breached?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The member does articulate concerns that have been raised. As I've mentioned, there is an investigation, and even more deeply – ensuring that the 75 residents in the facility had their health care needs being met was the number one action as well as making sure that the three staff leads who were on at the time and who were responsible were put on leave, the three staff leads at the facility. So I have to say that this is a demonstration of the seriousness with which it's been taken.

With regard to the accusations the review is continuing, and of course any measures will be taken to ensure the safety of all residents.

Mr. Orr: People's parents and grandparents are at stake here. Given that patients have suffered falls, burns, and serious systemic substandard care here, if this is the case at one facility, I can only guess how many other facilities managed by AHS are in the same disastrous state. Given the people of Lacombe are worried that this will be swept under the rug, will the minister make public the results of the current investigation into the hospital to ensure that real corrective action is taken?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, what is always the case is that whatever information can be shared publicly will be done so.

We want to ensure the safety of all residents in this facility and others. That's why there are regular audits, and that's why I really want to say again that if you have any questions, please do raise them with AHS and make sure that they are properly flagged, as was the case by these nursing students. I'm very grateful that they did raise these concerns. I myself had a grandmother that lived in long-term care for five years. There were times when she fell, where I had concerns and where I was able to raise them, and they were able to be addressed. Of course, the staff who work in this facility deserve our respect, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Support for the Energy Industry

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I was proud to vote in favour of the Member for Calgary-Foothills' motion favouring Alberta's oil over oil from countries with poor human rights records. Unfortunately, the Member for Edmonton-Decore shouted "no" during the vote. We all acknowledge that he later voted for the motion, perhaps after his whip intervened to avoid embarrassment for this government. The member even acknowledged on Twitter that he shouted "no," saying he was just, "playing around." Playing around with the fate of Alberta jobs: seriously? Premier, will you denounce this member's anti-Alberta views, and if not, why not?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I was proud to be part of the debate yesterday. We heard many points raised on both sides of the House. At the end of the day, we all came together and had a unanimous vote in support of making sure that we continue to advocate for our product to get not only to tidewater but to all markets within Canada. I think that yesterday was a very good day, a very positive result. [interjections] I have to say that the disrespect that is being demonstrated by members opposite at this very moment is very frustrating, Mr. Speaker.

I hope that they certainly stand by the vote that we had yesterday and the unanimity that we had. [interjections] Mr. Speaker, can I draw your attention to the very blatant disrespect that's being shown to me at this moment?

Mr. Gill: Mr. Speaker, alone I could have shrugged off this member's antics, but this is just part of a bigger pattern for this NDP government. The NDP tries to talk a good game but every once in a while show their true colours. From labelling Alberta the "embarrassing cousins" of Canada to appointing anti-oil radical Ms Berman as the oil sands adviser to bizarrely calling the vast majority of Albertans that oppose carbon tax xenophobes, this is the true Alberta NDP. Premier, again I ask if you'll lead by example and clearly denounce the Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Mason: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Point of order.
The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, the tone, the rhetoric, the disrespect is not becoming of elected officials or of our province. I'm very proud of the fact that we came together yesterday afternoon to consider a motion brought forward by one of the members opposite. We all engaged in that debate in a thoughtful way. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Ms Hoffman: At the end of the day we voted unanimously, Mr. Speaker. It was a standing vote. The member's vote is on the record. The accusations coming from the member opposite are not becoming of his office or this House.

2:20

Mr. Gill: Mr. Speaker, today is election day in B.C. It's quite possible that Ms Berman, this government's hand-picked oil sands adviser, is busy right now campaigning for the B.C. NDP, the party that's promising to kill the desperately needed pipeline to our west coast. That's right. If Ms Berman gets her way, the next Premier of B.C. will block the Trans Mountain pipeline. This is who Alberta's government is taking advice from. Wow. This is a bad joke, and it has gone on for far too long now. Premier, regardless of the outcome in B.C., will you finally do the right thing and fire Ms Berman?

Speaker's Ruling Preambles to Questions

The Speaker: Hon. member, I would remind you again as well as the other ones – and I've said this several times, particularly today but also in earlier events – about the use of the preamble. You've taken advantage of it, and I don't appreciate that. If it continues in the manner in which it has, I think we'll have to enforce it much more stringently than we have. So I would ask you, hon. member, not to do that again.

The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have to say how proud I am of the environment minister and the fact that she did things differently. Guess what? Instead of getting the same results that we did year after year after year, which was a flat-out no, we got a different result. By bringing a variety of perspectives to the table, including the member that was just referred to, we got approval for two pipelines. This is great news for Alberta. We're making sure that we're showing the world and our country that environmental responsibility and good jobs and market access go hand in hand, and I have no apologies to make for that.

Emergency Medical Dispatch Services

Mr. Stier: Mr. Speaker, back in the news today are the issues surrounding the lack of co-ordinated emergency response and the reduced communication between AHS dispatch and the Foothills regional 911 commission. Since AHS took over EMS dispatch and especially since February, people are dying and lives are at risk because the current broken system of separating fire and EMS dispatch is causing life-threatening delays and risks to first responders. Instead of just monitoring this situation, why won't the minister and AHS do the right thing and allow Foothills 911 to become a satellite EMS dispatch centre as has been done in four other major centres in Alberta?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad that I've had an opportunity to discuss this issue with the member opposite as well as the Member for Banff-Cochrane as well as with the leadership from FRESH themselves. What the member opposite fails to highlight is that this has been the case for over six years. He himself says that he's been working to try to stop this for many years. It is totally different from the issue that he's highlighted. This has been something that's been happening for some time, where folks in Calgary are doing dispatch, and we are working to make sure that any of the questions and concerns are being ironed out. While they spend all this time in the backrooms of the Federal building, why don't they talk about policy? It was their . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Stier: Mr. Speaker, given that AHS is falsely suggesting that this is a change issue and the problem is with 911 call handling and given that this is a lack-of-communication issue between EMS and fire, which has been intensifying since AHS began dispatch earlier this year, and given that this can easily be solved by Foothills, who have the facility and the capability to solve this problem, where a single-point 911 call answer with fire and EMS would be dispatched together, again, why do the minister and AHS continue to refuse to consider returning the authority to Foothills?

Ms Hoffman: Again, Mr. Speaker, this has been something that has been ongoing. There's been a great deal of change in the last seven or eight years. We've ensured to make increased opportunities for stability. I hope that the member will lean over to the left or that the next time he's in the backrooms with members of the PC caucus ask them why this policy change happened seven years ago. I believe that they have very insightful intelligence, including people who have been paramedics themselves, to offer the members. While they're having these conversations about where to have their seats, maybe they can talk about policy.

Mr. Stier: Mr. Speaker, this is serious. Given that recent poorly co-ordinated EMS calls and delays and errors have led to death, a baby not getting an emerg response for 64 minutes, a person having an asthma attack waiting 34 minutes, and a person suffering a heart attack for 40 minutes and given that only 4 per cent of emergency calls are being sent to Foothills 911 within the industry standard response times, Minister, you can make an immediate decision and save lives. Again, will you do the right thing and allow Foothills 911 to become a satellite EMS dispatch centre?

Ms Hoffman: The points the member raises are valid. Any time anyone calls 911, they want to know that help is on the way, Mr. Speaker. That's one of the reasons why those specific occurrences or incidents that have been highlighted have been reviewed, to ensure that the very best opportunities for effective dispatch are in place. We're going to continue working to make life better for Albertans in all parts of the province, including those that the members just referred to.

Again, if you want to talk about policy, this has been policy in place for over five years. Please feel free to talk to the people whose positions are going to have to be defended before you keep criticizing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Health Care Funding for Central Alberta

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The inequity of health care funding to central Alberta is quickly reaching a crisis situation, and the government needs to stop pretending that there isn't a problem. According to AHS's own numbers, planned capital spending on a per capita basis in the central zone is fractional compared to its neighbouring zones. How can the minister rationalize the gross inequity in per capita funding to the central zone?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The member opposite talks about gross inequities. How about proposals that would result in cutting $9 billion from infrastructure projects? How about the Calgary cancer hospital? Do the members opposite think that we shouldn't be building a Calgary cancer hospital because that's an inequity? I don't think so.

We're making sure that we are moving forward with increasing stability in terms of infrastructure. We're increasing infrastructure spending in parts of the province that were neglected for far too long. And we all are happy to continue to work with folks in central Alberta. I was just in Red Deer a week and a half ago meeting with doctors to talk about how their needs can be met as well instead of...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Taylor: Given that this is a critical issue that desperately needs the government's attention, not political posturing, and given that the Red Deer hospital was once a top priority for AHS and now no longer appears on AHS's list of top 20 priorities, my question to the Minister of Health: how can a desperately needed expansion of the Red Deer hospital simply fall off the government's priority list?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The point around priorities changing is a fair point. It's dependent on what some of the other needs are in the area. Let's talk about Lacombe-Ponoka, where we've invested $2 million in roof repairs and chiller replacement. Let's talk about Strathmore-Brooks. In Brooks we've invested $500,000 in health care to ensure a new high-pressure sterilization boiler, which ensures that clinical equipment and tools are properly cleaned. Let's talk about Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundry. In Sundry we're working to keep long-term care beds open, ensure that they remain at the site, and develop the lab in the hospital. We will continue to work with folks in Red Deer as well.

Mr. Taylor: Given that the Minister of Health has informed Albertans that, quote, the buck always stops with the minister, unquote, and given that the situation has hit a critical juncture, where doctors and nurses feel it necessary to organize rallies and speak to media about their concerns, about their ability to provide adequate care to patients, to the minister: does the buck still stop with you, and if it does, why are you subjecting central Albertans to this type of unfair treatment and ultimately risking their health?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, I respect the fact that individuals in the community had meetings and ensured that they were sharing their perspectives. I actually followed up by having my own meetings both before the gatherings and after with a number of the folks who were there presenting information. I respect the physicians and other health care staff working in the community of Red Deer and in other parts of the province for doing their best to make sure that they have the best supports available to their constituents. And I'll tell you that making sure that they have an NDP government that supports health care and making sure that we aren't pushing deep ideological cuts and privatization is just that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Rural Health Facility Capital Planning

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In February the Minister of Health told the good people of Beaverlodge that the money for planning a new health facility had already been allocated and the design for a new health care facility would be moving ahead. Since the Minister of Health has stated, "When I make a commitment, you can count on it," and given that the good people of Beaverlodge are counting on the minister to uphold her commitment to planning this facility, to the Minister of Health: can you confirm that you are currently planning the Beaverlodge health facility?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for his important question. Absolutely, the residents of Beaverlodge have worked hard, and they've long advocated for the community and the health care needs to be met over many years. I had the pleasure of meeting with Doris McFarlane at that exact moment, and she, having formerly been a nurse and also being somebody who wants to ensure that the community has a long-term, positive outlook moving forward, has graciously offered a significant portion of land. We are happy to ensure that we are moving forward with plans to ensure that Beaverlodge does get a new facility at some point.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Minister. Given that $2.5 million allocated for a rural health facility design template appeared in the Minister of Infrastructure's 2016 budget and given that the 2015 budget allocated those funds to create a model that could be used on health care facilities in rural communities across the province, including Beaverlodge, to the same minister: is the $2.5 million you referred to in the Ministry of Health's budget, or is it in the Ministry of Infrastructure's budget?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you again for the very fair question. The member is right to say that that is what I said. The $2.5 million is indeed in the Minister of Infrastructure's budget. In the budget previous to that, which was passed only about six months before, I believe, we also had a line item – I believe it was $10 million – for rural facility and needs assessments to be done throughout the province, Mr. Speaker. Both Health and Infrastructure have been making sure that they have resources available. My staff have a number of projects on their plates, but this continues to be one of them.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Minister, for that clarification. Given that the Ministry of Infrastructure has had money in their budget to design rural health care facilities such as Beaverlodge for three years now and given that in estimates I asked the Minister of Infrastructure if something was actually going to get done this year and given that the minister answered that they were awaiting direction from the Ministry of Health, to the Minister of Infrastructure: are you still waiting for the Minister of Health to direct you to design rural health facilities such as Beaverlodge?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much for the question from the former Infrastructure minister of the previous government. The rural health facility design project is indeed in the Alberta Infrastructure budget. Approximately $2.4 million has been allocated this year for the work. We're nearing the completion of this initiative. It will standardize documents and processes and provide consistent information for the planning and development of future rural health facilities. Various facilities are included in the project, including...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Calgary-Northern Hills.

Calgary Growth Management Board Transition

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Calgary Regional Partnership, or CRP, has been in existence for over a decade now and has been an organization that has helped the Calgary region expand their work together on common interests during that time. With the MGA review and the new growth management board coming to Calgary, to the Minister of Municipal Affairs: what is the future of the CRP, and will the CRP be merged with the new growth management board?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I want to say that the Calgary Regional Partnership has done excellent work over the years. I recently had a great meeting with the board and have committed transitional funding to help assist the CRP as we move forward to establish a new board similar to the Capital Region Board here in Edmonton. What elements of the CRP will be taken over by the growth management board will be up to the member municipalities and the elected leaders of those communities, and I will support the decisions that they make for their region.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the CRP covered 12 municipalities such as Turner Valley and Black Diamond and given that the new growth board is expected to include 10 municipalities and three municipal districts, to the same minister: what will happen to communities that are no longer covered by the growth board?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. We want to make sure that the right number of municipalities are at the table so that the board is as effective as possible. We are proposing a number of provisions to help ensure that this board operates smoothly and that all perspectives are heard. As for Black Diamond and Turner Valley, I have committed to meeting with the mayors again one-on-one and look forward to discussing the membership issue with them. I will also point out that all communities in the region will have opportunities to collaborate, whether they are mandatory members or not.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that regional transportation projects like On-It transit are in the pilot project stage and involve communities that were covered by the CRP but not the new Calgary growth board, to the same minister: what will be the future of this pilot transit project?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. As mentioned, I have approved transitional funding for the CRP so that this and other priority programs can continue. Just today I received a letter from the CRP thanking Municipal Affairs for this funding and for the encouragement going forward with the transition. The long-term future of this program and others of the CRP will be determined by the elected leaders of the new growth management board. They will have the ability to transition this program, and I will support the decisions that they make for their region.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Health Information Privacy Breach Reporting

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Rising problems related to information and privacy have never been a problem that this government has addressed. It's bad enough that the NDP withholds information from Albertans under FOIP, and it's just as bad that the privacy of Albertans is being violated. Most recently a former AHS staff member was fined $3,000 for inappropriately accessing information, yet it appears that there's no obligation for the incident to be publicly reported. To the Minister of Health: is it mandatory for your ministry to report these types of privacy breaches? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. When privacy is breached, obviously, it's a deep concern. A number of factors are taken into consideration, including the risk that it might put to the individual if they were notified. I believe that there is some room for – regularly it is said that the rules need to be questioned sometimes. It is certainly best practice, whenever it's safe to do so, to share that information with the individual who could have been impacted, but there are times when it isn't safe to do so.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that in May 2014 the health information amendment act passed third reading and given that this act would have made reporting privacy breaches mandatory but, unfortunately, a section that this act brought forward was never fully brought into force, to the Minister of Health: how can it be mandatory, given that you have not proclaimed the legislation necessary, to publicly report investigated breaches under the law?

Ms Hoffman: Well, in answer to the first question, Mr. Speaker, I clarified that there are times when information needs to be taken into consideration, as the implications of notifying the individual could be damaging both to their safety and the safety of others. So that, I believe, is one of the reasons why that piece has not been proclaimed. Obviously, the intent is to ensure that whenever it's safe to do so, that information is shared. Certainly, there are times when it may not be safe to do so, and people's safety, obviously, needs to be the top priority.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you. It appears that you're hiding breaches.

Given that it appears there is no mandatory reporting for health-related breach problems and given that this concern for privacy and security has been raised on all sides of the House and considering that the Member for Edmonton-Calder, the former NDP Health critic, said in May of 2014 that the information on this bill was "very timely and important," will you immediately implement this bill to protect Albertans' sensitive health information, or now that you're in government is privacy and security no longer timely or important?

Ms Hoffman: Of course, privacy and security is timely and important, Mr. Speaker. That's one of the reasons why I'm confident that my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder and Minister of Education made those remarks. There are times when sharing the information could cause a serious threat to a number of individuals – a threat of safety, a threat of well-being – and that needs to be taken into consideration. But the intent is that whenever it's safe to do so, to share information, and that will continue to be the case.

The Speaker: We're going to move, hon. members, to points of order. If anybody would like to leave the Chamber, please do so within about 15 to 20 seconds.

Hon. members, I believe a point of order was raised on question 9 by the Government House Leader.

Point of Order

Questions outside Ministerial Responsibility

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today in question period the hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway posed a number of questions with respect to apparently some sort of heckle that may have occurred. I think that the question was clearly out of order.

If you look at Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules & Forms, page 121, rule 409(6):

A question must be within the administrative competence of the Government. The Minister to whom the question is directed is responsible to the House for his or her present Ministry and not for any decisions taken in a previous portfolio.

There are a number of other references as well. In O'Brien and Bosc, on page 502, questions should be about items that are "within the administrative responsibility of the government." At page 617 in O'Brien and Bosc there's also a reference to referencing previous debates and proceedings.

Mr. Speaker, if the opposition's interpretation of everything that's said in this House by people who do not have the floor is to become the subject of a point of order, we might see hundreds of points of order based on various heckles and catcalls and so on that we get all the time from the opposition. Each one could be subject to a point of order.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, the member has put his own interpretation on whatever it was, and that is not something that one ought to be doing. I think that that's actually a violation of 29 – sorry; 23, 22. I'm counting down. I just want to actually find that section. Standing Order 23(i) says, "imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member." He's clearly doing that in this case with the Member for Edmonton-Decore. He has no idea what that meant, nor is it a matter of something that is rightfully a subject of question period.

He is simply using the opportunity to try and smear the government by creating some sort of sense that the government is not deeply committed to establishing pipelines and to supporting the oil sands in our province. Nothing could be further from the truth, Mr. Speaker. This government has shown by its actions where it stands with respect to these matters. This government has got more action in two short years than that government ever did in 20 years.

I just want to say in closing, Mr. Speaker, that those types of questions are absolutely inappropriate in this House. They are nothing but an attempt to smear the member, smear the government, and clearly, in my view, should be ruled out of order.

The Speaker: The House leader for the third party.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To quote the old Bard, methinks thou doth protest too much, my friend.

Mr. Speaker, clearly there's no point of order. We can see how the hon. Government House Leader was struggling for the quotations. I daresay that if this wasn't so serious, it would be laughable. Now, to prove my point, because there were no direct references to what was said, I will quote simply two sentences that were said. "The member even acknowledged on Twitter that he shouted 'no,' saying he was just 'playing around.' Playing around with the fate of Alberta jobs: seriously?" The other quotation: "From labelling Alberta the 'embarrassing cousins' of Canada to appointing anti-oil radical Ms Berman as the oil sands adviser to bizarrely calling the vast majority of Albertans that oppose the carbon tax xenophobes, this is the true Alberta NDP."

So I challenge anyone in this House from any corner of this House to prove that any of these statements are at all false because they're not. Mr. Speaker, with reference to Standing Order 23(h), there were no false allegations, there were no false or unavowed motives, and (i) there was no abusive or insulting language. These are the words of the NDP. If it causes disorder for them, they're the ones causing the disorder in the first place in this room and out in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, this is just simply the truth. If the truth hurts them, I'm sorry it hurts their feelings, so I encourage you to simply rule this out of order. If the Government House Leader is concerned about continuing to raise points of order, maybe he should be a little bit more careful about when he calls them because clearly there is nothing here. Nothing to see. Let's move on.

The Speaker: Did I note by your standing that you wish to speak as well, hon. member?

Mr. Cooper: That is correct. Sorry, Mr. Speaker. I'll stand on a phone book the next time so you know I'm actually standing.

It's a pleasure to stand and speak to the point of order, Mr. Speaker. I'll speak specifically just to address some of the concerns from my colleague, the Government House Leader, who has taught me much, and I have studied his words in this House at length. I hope that some day he'll have the same opportunity to repay the favour to me.

I speak specifically, Mr. Speaker – the Government House Leader spoke about what was a heckle. As you know, there are rules in this place around when we vote and when we don't and what should be decorum and what isn't while we vote. What happened last night certainly wasn't a heckle. It was a vote in a recorded vote.

If you are so inclined to spend some time reading this evening, House of Commons Procedure and Practice, chapter 12, speaks specifically about voice votes and then recorded votes as well. You'll know, Mr. Speaker, that there is a long-standing tradition, not just in this Chamber but in Chambers all across the Westminster parliamentary system, that as one votes with their voice, there is an obligation or an assumed position that one would then stand and be recognized with what their voice vote was. I know that the member from Lloydminster has spoken about this in the House as well. He has spoken where he perhaps even voted in error and voted with the government when he had intended to vote opposed but still stood in his place and voted as he had in the voice vote.

So what we saw last night by the member was a departure, certainly, from the long-standing traditions of the Assembly, and I might add that the question was clearly in order as the statements were true, as acknowledged on Twitter. But, more importantly, the member was asking about whether or not this position was the position of the government, so not only was it discussing a statement of fact but also of government policy because the member was asking about not just whether it was the member's position but whether it was the position of the government, as such making it in order. He was discussing whether or not this was the position of the government and would the Premier condemn such a position or not.

Clearly this is not a point of order. I hope that you take some time to read chapter 12 this evening around the procedures, voting and perhaps check the Hansard from my colleague from Lloydminster when he spoke about the long-standing traditions of voting as you have voice voted.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I in fact have that book beside my bed. I just want you to know that I read it regularly. I've been known to fall asleep when I've read it, but, as you alluded to earlier, you must have a book beside your bed with quotes by the former Opposition House Leader. I suspect you fall asleep faster than I do.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway, I think earlier today I referenced your infractions, I would say, with respect to the preamble point, so let's put that one aside.

Government House Leader, I was listening carefully to your arguments, but I missed some of the subtleties. Nonetheless, I have looked into the matter, and I in fact ought to have maybe jumped in sooner myself. Nonetheless, the subject matter in the first quotation was offside as it pertained to a decision of the House, and I cite Standing Order 23(f) and page 617, House of Commons Procedure and Practice: "Members may not speak against or reflect upon any decision of the House." In other words, an allegation or question concerning how a member has voted is offside.

The House has made a decision on the matter. I believe there was a point of order in this situation, and I would caution again all members to – it may be good politics at times to do that, but respect and honour in this House is determined by each of us.

Mr. Rodney: Mr. Speaker, point of clarification, please. I'm asking how it is that a point of order can be made on something other than what the point of order was. That's all. You raised . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, through the chair, please.

Mr. Rodney: Happy to.

The Speaker: I'm not sure what part you missed. I cited several citations. I've indicated that I made a ruling with respect to the comments made by the member, and I believe they have good evidence, if you look to Hansard, that applies.

Mr. Rodney: Yeah, well, Mr. Speaker . . .

The Speaker: What now, hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed? I made a decision.

Mr. Rodney: It's Standing Order 13(2), clarification of a decision of yours. The hon. Government House Leader raised a point of order that was completely different than the ruling that you gave. That's very, very confusing for everyone beyond that side of the House.

Mr. Mason: Three separate things.

Mr. Rodney: Not the one that he . . .

The Speaker: Hon. members, please, both of you. The decision is made.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 13(2) I would like to seek a clarification of the ruling.

The Speaker: I'm not sure what you were listening to either, hon. member. I've given my decision, and we're now going on to Orders of the Day. I'd love to have a visit with you this afternoon.

Bill 11

Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Amendment Act, 2017

[Adjourned debate May 4: Mr. Sucha]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week I spoke about fear of reprisal, and I'm going to underline some of those themes that were there. Last time I spoke, I spoke about the future, the 24th century, with the United Federation of Planets, Commander William Riker facing the challenges in relation to fear of reprisal over an experiment that was done. [interjections] Now, the Member for Edmonton-Decore . . .

The Speaker: Hon. members, could we ask you to exit if you're going to have a conversation, please? Thank you.

Keep going.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Member for Edmonton-Decore did a sidebar with me in relation to this and asked me to go back in time a bit further to the 23rd century to ask a reference in relation to a red shirt and fear of reprisal in relation to that. He said: how would red shirts be directly impacted if they had a whistleblower protection act on Kirk's Enterprise? I cited that more people would be alive today.

Mr. Speaker, you know, it was May the 4th, and we all referenced many fun popular culture references to whistle-blowing, but it is important to acknowledge that sometimes whistle-blowing really impacts a life-or-death situation. I'd be remiss because we just recently had comic expo in Calgary, and Edmonton-born Nathan Fillion was there. In Firefly they had the Reavers. If anyone has read into the Reavers, they were these beasts that no one really understood where they came from. There were these weird creatures, and there was a lot of hearsay and rumour in relation to it. As we dug deeper, it turned out that Nathan Fillion's character in the show Firefly discovered that it was actually the Alliance that was doing experiments, and they actually work off a parliamentary system similar to our own here. It made me wonder that if they had whistle-blower protection under the Alliance on Firefly if Reavers would have actually existed, you know, if whistle-blowing could be called on members of the parliament in Firefly.

It's fortunate that here in our Legislative Assembly we're moving forward with including ministerial staff and the office of the Premier to be included under the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act because, you know, it's important that we make sure that we have the most transparent government possible, that we preserve faith in the public sector and preserve faith within our elected officials here within the government of Alberta.

You know, one of the things that we also looked at was expanding it to contractors or delegated services that are provided to the provincial government, and I think this is very important because sometimes within a workforce it's easy for us to put our blinders on. It's easy for individuals sometimes to be in a culture where they think, "Well, this is how it's done, so it must be right," not knowing that a regulation or law has been broken. So sometimes when we have situations occur where we have contractor or delegated services come into one of our government environments or come into our workplaces, they can determine that in reality there is some neglect or there is something that's going wrong or people's lives are being put at risk.

It's interesting to note that there are actually a lot of contractors and delegated services in Firefly, and if they had this whistle-blower protection, they could move forward with ensuring that Reavers were never a thing. It's important to notice that, because even within sort of our universities there are a lot of ongoing experiments that occur, and sometimes we do bring in contractors, whether to maintain some services or to help with some of these experiments. It's important to note – and for many of those who have been academics who studied psychology or were doctors, they'll understand that there is a code of ethics that has to be dealt with and maintained when doing any experiments. If we're breaching those codes of conduct or codes of ethics and our government is funding these projects, it's important that we're speaking up and that we're making sure that we expose some of these here as well.

You know, it's also very important to note that if someone is dealing with punishment within the workplace because they have spoken up about anything that is unethical, they have the freedom to go to the Labour Relations Board, and the Labour Relations Board is enabled to find remedies for the situation. While I have complete faith that the office that receives the reports of whistle-blowing will act in the best interests of the whistle-blower, sometimes they don't have a lot of the labour relations legislation readily available whereas with the Labour Relations Board, this is what they're experts at. This is what they're paid to do. So, ultimately, they can move forward with making sure that the employee is taken care of and that they receive the proper justice here as well.

The other thing that's really neat to see is that currently under our public service and our government offices whistle-blowers have to report to the designated officer to handle whistle-blowing, and this can create a lot of anxiety. You know, I used to see this in the private sector when a front-line employee had concerns in relation to something that was happening within the establishment, and they sometimes didn't really know where to turn. There would be some workplaces, especially within the corporate sector, where they would say: well, go to your direct manager if you know of something unethical happening. Well, what if it is your direct manager who is doing something unethical?

A lot of these workplaces enabled an ethics line or a line for you to contact to go directly to a person who would handle, in essence, whistle-blowing within that private-sector establishment. It worked really well because that would go to the regional manager, and then we could have it dealt with appropriately. We could make sure that we protected the privacy of that individual, and to be honest, within the private sector and from what I saw of it occurring there, it worked very efficiently.

I'm happy that we are now introducing legislation that will allow potential whistle-blowers to report directly to the Public Interest Commissioner whenever there is any concern. Then, when the commissioner receives any of these complaints, they are authorized to go to the employer's workplace and view the records within the site, and it gives them strong powers that are equivalent to our Auditor General's.

I know that the Member for Edmonton-Centre spoke about some of the strengths that we've seen from our Auditor General. You know, it's a system that works really well to hold us – elected officials, government agencies – accountable. Giving the commissioner powers that are very equivalent to the Auditor General's will allow the commissioner to really maintain that public faith within the public sector. Also, those front-line workers can feel safe to come forward but also feel that we have appropriate remedies to make sure that we're running an ethical workplace and so that they can feel safe simply going to work every single day.

Mr. Speaker, I recognize that I probably do not have a lot of speaking time left. I just want to close by thanking all hon. members who participated in this committee for the hard work that they did over the summer. You know, I feel a lot closer to all of you. It felt like we really worked collaboratively and got to know each other and that we could work together to find a balance of how we want our whistle-blower protection to occur.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any questions under 29(2)(a) to the Member for Calgary-Shaw? Under 29(2)(a), Edmonton-Centre?

Mr. Shepherd: Under 29(2)(a), yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I greatly appreciated the member's statements. He offered, I think, some excellent analogies, and certainly it warmed my heart, being a fan of science fiction myself. Certainly, hearing him expound on both Star Trek and Firefly in a single speech: much to be admired there. My one question to the member, specifically in regard to his reference to Firefly, is: why, if he knew that he was going to bring that up in the House, did he not at least have the decency to wear a brown shirt?

Mr. Sucha: You know what? I was going to sing about the man they called Jayne, but unfortunately – I could see on this side of the House the people that got the reference. Realistically, going into it, I think it's important to really note and relate to these popular culture references because, for some of us, we haven't found those parallels to when something unethical has happened in the workplace and when something unethical hasn't happened in the workplace.

You know, I made light of the May the 4th reference there, but to be fair, it really outlines the importance of why we need these in place. Ultimately, if you look at these references, you truly do see that having these protections in place will ensure that we can have a government that is transparent, that works, and that makes sure individuals are safe.

The Speaker: Any other comments under 29(2)(a) to the Member for Calgary-Shaw?

Seeing and hearing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud. [interjections]

Dr. Turner: Is there somebody else that wants to speak?

The Speaker: I'm sorry. My apologies to the House.
Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for ceding the floor.

Bill 11, Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Amendment Act, 2017: progress, real progress. I was part of the committee and applaud the chair and the work that was done on this. A pity that we couldn't get on to do some of the other important work with respect to the Election Act and conflicts of interest, but this is truly a step forward from the earlier version of the whistle-blower protection act. It authorizes the Public Interest Commissioner, for example, to investigate allegations of wrongdoing submitted anonymously or by people that are not considered employees under the act; private citizens, for example. That's progress.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Whistle-blowers can report wrongdoings directly to the Public Interest Commissioner, which they couldn't do before, always a weakness of the previous bill under the PC government. Whistle-blowers are protected from reprisals from the moment they tell their supervisor about an issue.

Workers who are fired, have their duties changed, or experience reprisals as a result of whistle-blowing have access to restitution through the Labour Relations Board. The Labour Relations Board decides on restitution for workers who experience reprisals, with an enforceable decision in the same manner as a court order. Prescribed service providers such as care in seniors' homes that have a business relationship with the government are now covered under this act, as are physicians, who have an alternate reimbursement program, which was not the case in the past.

The term "gross mismanagement" now includes a wider variety of wrongdoings, including bullying and abuse in the workplace as well as mismanagement. So progress.

The Public Interest Commissioner's office will be required to report more information each year, telling what types of wrongdoings and summarizing the findings, penalties, and specific recommendations to public entities. Section 19 adds a section, 18.1, which grants the Public Interest Commissioner greater access to information than in the past, much like the powers of the Auditor General. More progress.

The Public Interest Commissioner determines whether a public interest outweighs potential harm to an individual, and the Public Interest Commissioner and his or her staff are not compelled to give evidence during judicial proceedings.

Finally, the Public Interest Commissioner is now allowed 20 days to determine whether to investigate a complaint, giving the Public Interest Commissioner more capacity and time and resources to make appropriate decisions and not short-circuit anything that's needed.

The Liberal caucus position is, of course, that the most glaring deficiency is that the PCs wrote the legislation in such a way that it only applies to wrongdoings that occurred after the act came into force. Clearly, that allowed a get-out-of-jail-free card for any potential wrongdoings that occurred prior to June 2013, when the act was first brought in. Certainly, it went against the spirit of the legislation, and we're pleased to see that this is now going to be much more vigorous and timely.

Section 19(2) authorizes, again, the Public Interest Commissioner to either not investigate a disclosure or discontinue an investigation if more than two years have passed since the date the wrongdoing was discovered. Again, this is arbitrary and could lead to legitimate investigations of wrongdoing being abandoned or not even getting off the ground. So that's a shortcoming of this particular bill, limiting it to two years.

Pursuant to section 38(1) the Public Interest Commissioner is appointed by "the Lieutenant Governor in Council, on the recommendation of the Legislative Assembly." As always, there is a risk that government could unduly influence the choice, and that continues to be a concern.

Finally, section 52 is problematic in stating:

No proceeding of the Commissioner is invalid for want of form and, except on the ground of lack of jurisdiction, no proceeding or decision of the Commissioner [can] be challenged, reviewed, quashed or called into question [by a] court.

In other words, the Public Interest Commissioner has the absolute final word, and that's a concern with respect to accountability of the Public Interest Commissioner.

Having said that, I think the progress made on this bill and the improvements in protecting whistle-blowers are significant, and I'm very much supportive of what we finally came to. In my view, our existing whistle-blower legislation was deficient in not allowing proceedings or decisions of the Public Interest Commissioner to be challenged, reviewed, or quashed and with the commissioner being given the absolute final word, with no accountability. I would reiterate that if there was any amendment, that would be an area that we would be considering.

Bill 11 does address the deficiency in part by very specifically allowing a decision of the commissioner concerning a reprisal to be reviewed by the courts. This is a welcome improvement. But why are we stopping there? If we're going to allow the courts to decide whether addressing a reprisal against a whistle-blower can be reviewed, why wouldn't we allow the courts to review the commissioner's decision? It doesn't seem to be consistent.

Apart from those concerns, caveats, I very much support this important bill. It's bringing us into line with much of the rest of the country, Madam Speaker. I believe we will be supporting it as is.

Thanks, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other speakers to the bill? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by Edmonton-Whitemud.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and speak on Bill 11, Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Amendment Act, 2017. I'd like to start off by saying that this bill should improve accountability and ethics here in Alberta. When the original whistle-blower protection act was passed in 2013, it was mandated to be reviewed within the first two years of coming into force and thereafter every five years. In accordance with this piece of legislation, it was sent to the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee. I myself sat on that committee, and I'll commend all of the members on all sides who sat on this committee. It is another example of nonpartisan MLAs moving forward to bring in a good piece of legislation. It is an incredible honour to be a part of that committee, to be able to show that the process of committees works within Alberta.

From the fact that this government usually will push legislation through the House, which is to run over the opposition and all objectors from far and wide like a legislative truck, if you will, this is where I can say that in this case a committee was very aptly used. That is why, when I sat on this committee – and this went through the summer, and I spent many hours of time and debate with my government MLA colleagues – it was surprising that what we had, according to the article by Global News from September 20, 2016, was: Brian Mason Says Alberta Democracy Committee Could Be Scrapped. That's the article title.

To go on, I'm going to quote from this article. The Government House Leader told reporters:

I'm pretty disgusted. (The opposition) have filibustered that committee from start to finish, they've made up phoney points of order and points of privilege (and) they've attacked chairs for just trying to [get the job done].

This is completely false. In the end, what we've got here is a piece of legislation that went through a committee, and to say that this entire committee had no value from start to finish is completely unfounded.

Now, I'm pleased to say that the bill reflects 20 of the 21 recommendations that came from the committee. Recommendation 9 came from a motion that I put forward to the committee, which read:

The Act [should] be amended to clarify a chief or designated officer's obligation to report illegal conduct to law enforcement or to the Department of Justice and Solicitor General in cases where there is a reasonable belief that an offence has been committed.

The legislation as it was originally worded led to some inconsistencies between sections 5(2)(f) and 22 in regard to the chief or designated officer's obligation to report alleged illegal conduct.

Obviously, Madam Speaker, clear laws reduce the need for court clarification and interpretation of the laws and, hopefully, can prevent long-drawn-out arguments about what the interpretation of that law is. That is why making legislation consistent and clear is important, and I hope that this amendment to the act will do so. I am pleased that the other side agreed with that assessment of this and will be supporting the change.

Another recommendation that this side proposed, Madam Speaker, was defining what gross mismanagement is. The Auditor General, Alberta Health Services, and the Alberta Medical Association all asked for that term to be defined. It is my intention that this Chamber supports open government and works with the Auditor General and makes sure that we see an improved piece of legislation moving forward. The fact that we were able to define this term and have it included as a recommendation is an incredible source of co-operation between both the government and the opposition.

Under this bill gross mismanagement will be defined as an act or an omission that is deliberate and shows reckless or wilful disregard for management of public funds or a public asset or the delivery of public services or employees by a pattern of behaviour or conduct of a systematic nature that indicates a problem in the culture of the organization relating to bullying, harassment, or intimidation. In these times, Madam Speaker, we cannot afford for any government funds to be misused, abused, or to pay for needless, worthless expenses. This will help the Auditor General and others determine where the line lies on gross mismanagement of government resources.

There are some other aspects of the bill which will improve current legislation, Madam Speaker. One area that I think is important to note is that this bill will expand the act to contracted service providers who may be witnessing wrongdoing and gross mismanagement of public assets. This is important because there is complicity in the government of Alberta's office with regard to wrongdoing. There may not be anyone able or willing to come forward from that office. By including contract services providers, this will allow an additional set of eyes on operations of government and may expose waste in areas of the government that may not be on other people's radar.

This is especially important in Alberta. As you know, we have private contractors that do many services such as registries agents, services for disabled people, self-managed care, and so on and so forth. The Auditor General noted that the former department of human services contracted with more than 2,200 small businesses. This is just one area of the government, Madam Speaker. So to extend the act in this way, we are extending oversight of the government to areas where services are contracted out.

If this legislation were to pass, these contractors would be able to report wrongdoing without having to endure bureaucratic nightmares working all the way up through the government's chain of command. This bill will allow direct reporting by contractors to the Public Interest Commissioner. This will also shield contractors from negative business repercussions from their program area for reporting wrongdoing.

I just want to conclude, Madam Speaker, by talking about how important it is that this legislation and indeed most legislation is reviewed with a sunset clause. We need to get legislation right for whistle-blowers. It is not easy for whistle-blowers to come forward. They risk their jobs, their livelihoods, and much besides that with their decisions to come forward and expose mismanagement in government. That's why it's disappointing to see that the NDP have chosen not to expand whistle-blower protections to physicians, who are in alternative relationship plans or receive other forms of payment from the government. We in the Wildrose wonder why it is better to exclude these people from the act rather than to include them since even the government seems to agree that it is in the best interests of all Alberta and all Albertans. That being said, on the balance this bill is an improvement over the current law.

I would like to reaffirm – reaffirm – Madam Speaker, that while we were in a committee setting, this committee was not a waste of time from start to finish. Let's be clear. The discussion or the comments that the House leader from the government side made were truly inaccurate. I took offence when he did that.

Thank you, Madam Speaker, for hearing me out.

The Deputy Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Yes. Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you, Member, for those comments. I did want to actually ask a question about your comment that physicians were not included. I think that's actually a misreading of the bill. It's my understanding that physicians and other contracted service providers – and it's in recommendation 3, actually, that came out of the committee – whether they're fee for service or in an alternate revenue plan, are included. This is also going to apply to other service providers like psychologists, social workers, dentists, et cetera. In fact, this is one of the strengths of this legislation.

Otherwise, I actually am in agreement with much of what you said, except for the criticism of our House leader. I wonder if you would want to modify your remarks in that regard.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I thank the member for bringing clarity forward. If I have made an error in my speech, I do have to apologize for that. I will be looking closer at that specific issue, and I will be bringing comments later. Thank you very much for bringing that to my attention.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I'll call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'll beg the indulgence of the Legislature, but I am going to continue on in a similar vein, not to coin a pun, to what we were just discussing. First of all, it's fascinating that we're dealing with things like conflicts of interest and whistle-blower protection and enhancement of democracy. I actually have to bring the attention of the Legislature to the fact that all of us who speak to this bill are in a form of conflict of interest since this whistle-blower legislation, according to recommendation 2, will apply to MLAs and their staff.

Certainly, I am in conflict of interest in the sense that I am a physician of 40 years' standing in this province. I have practised medicine at the University of Alberta hospital and other hospitals in Edmonton as well as in Grande Prairie, Red Deer, and outside the province over those 40 years. Some of that practice has been in the form of fee for service, and other parts of it have been in an alternate revenue plan. Indeed, I've worked at the Cross Cancer Institute for 40 years and have always been in an alternate revenue plan employment status there.

I thought it might be useful for me to bring some clarity of that terminology to the Legislature. I think it's a very important thing that this is being discussed in this bill. Also, alternate revenue plans are a very important part of what the Alberta Medical Association, Alberta Health Services, and the Ministry of Health are doing to try to rein in the escalating costs of physician services. Alternate revenue plans refer to a system of payments for physicians that aren't dependent upon only fee for service. Fee for service is what a physician is allowed to charge for specified medical activities. For instance, if a general physician sees a patient for a physical examination, a yearly checkup, there is a set fee for that. If it's a follow-up from that visit, the fee is about a fifth of what the checkup fee is. That's the way that medicine was practised primarily 40 years ago.

Over the 40 years we have come to the realization that involving alternate providers is important, so we have advanced nurse practitioners and pharmacists and physician assistants, who can act in a more collegial environment. Some of these are developed in primary care networks.

I'm more familiar with the academic alternate revenue plans, and they've been interesting, too. Those plans – and they were alluded to by the Member for Calgary-Elbow a week or so ago – actually permit academic physicians to practise medicine. Actually, we can retain academic physicians because this is a very attractive form of practice. It isn't just looking after patients and billing on a fee-for-service basis. We academic physicians can actually create a practice profile that includes doing research.

I might just allude to the remarks made in the member's statement of Calgary-Hawkwood about leukemia. In the Alberta cancer program there is a hematology tumour group that includes a whole host of various professionals that are basically dedicated to improving the results for patients with acute leukemia. That couldn't be done if we didn't have a way to actually include research, education, community service, and clinical service in our practice profiles.

In an alternate revenue plan we've got multiple components to it and multiple co-workers, all of whom deserve the protection of a whistle-blower protection act. I can attest to the fact that having this protection is going to make it a lot easier for this kind of activity to prosper in this province, not only in the cancer program. I can tell you that for 30 years the department of medicine at the University of Alberta hospital has had an alternate revenue plan so that things like pulmonary medicine, cardiology, kidney disease, the whole gamut of what we would call internal medicine, are covered by the same thing. Combining activities in research, combining teaching of all phases of medical activity and community service as well as the actual seeing of patients and caring for patients can all be taken care of.

That's been very successful at the University of Alberta hospital in medicine, and it's actually at the University of Calgary. They have a similar thing. It's being expanded to pediatrics and to psychiatry in various areas. Maybe giving you more information than you want to know about alternate revenue plans, but I did want to make sure that all of us knew that by having whistle-blower protection, we're actually enhancing the environment in which that kind of activity can prosper.

You know, basically, the question was: does the act currently apply to physicians? It applies to physicians who are directly employed in public entities as well as other health practitioners and professional staff with admitting privileges run by those public entities such as Alberta Health Services, Covenant Health, and others. However, the act currently does not apply to physicians who receive government funding in other ways such as through the alternate revenue plan or fee for service. If the act is passed, government is going to be consulting with physician stakeholder groups and delegated service providers to determine how best to move forward on this side of the issue. The expansion of the legislation could impact a wide variety of health service providers and medical clinics, and it's only fair that they be consulted before moving ahead.

If you look at Bill 11, where this shows up clearly is part 1.2, prescribed service providers. The prescribed service provider regulations basically talk about:

- (a) respecting the Commissioner's exercise of powers and performance of duties under this Act in relation to prescribed service providers; [and]
- (b) for the purpose of section 1(j.1), determining that any individual or person, any part or all of an organization, body or other person or any class of individuals, persons, organizations or bodies is a prescribed service provider.

I think this is a very strong part of this legislation and worthy of support of all of us.

I want to turn back to the comments about the work of the select special committee. I, too, was a frequent attendee and participant in the meetings of this committee last summer, and I think it was one of the most rewarding activities that I've had the honour to participate in during the two years that I've been an MLA. There was a collegial environment and a recognition that expansion of the whistle-blower protection was essential, and this was recognized by all participants in that committee. It was really gratifying to see how well that committee worked, particularly under the direction of our minister responsible for democratic renewal.

There's no doubt that the public interest is served by having strong whistle-blower protection, and certainly there's nobody on this side of the Legislature or that corner of the Legislature that would deny that. It's certainly been my personal belief for as long as I've known about politics that whistle-blower protection is a key factor in our democratic institutions.

The all-party select special ethics committee did a lot of work on the bill, and I do want to acknowledge that that work was done by all of us. There were a lot of thoughtful comments made. The submissions were superb, I thought, and it was obvious that this was something that was very important.

You know, besides physicians, the other area that I think that this legislation applies to that I'm very interested in – and we actually heard a little bit about this in question period today – is the nursing home operators. If this legislation is passed, I would think that perhaps what we heard about the issues in Lacombe might actually be helped.

Those people, those nursing students, I think, could be called whistle-blowers in a sense, and this is going to basically give them some backup when they want to do this. I'm really anxious to see this legislation pass so that the people working and caring for our most vulnerable people living in those long-term care facilities can feel free to try to help improve the environment in which they are working and do that without fear of retribution, without fear of losing their jobs, without fear of being discriminated against in their employment. I think this is really, really important, and I don't think you can think of a better example than what was brought up in question period.

You know, the government does support the idea that this act should extend to service providers who provide services paid for with taxpayer money. However, it's also very important that everyone takes the time to review and consider which services should be included and how they should be included. So we're going to consult with government contractors and delegated service providers to see how best to move forward without stepping over the line into the private sector.

I think I'm going to wind up my comments at that point. I think this is vitally important legislation. I'm glad to see that there's a lot of interest on both sides that is generally supportive of the legislation. I would hope that the opposition can see their way to fulsomely supporting this without doing some ad hominem type of criticism that I heard a little bit of today. I don't think that that is helpful at all.

In any event, Madam Speaker, I would implore all of my colleagues in this House to support this legislation.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Yes, under 29(2)(a) I'd like to ask the hon. member if in his 40 years of medical experience, without divulging details or circumstances, whether directly or in proximity to his practice, he's actually witnessed the effect of not having whistle-blower protection in place in workplaces that he was witness to and what types of pressures that put on employees that he may have been aware of that would have been otherwise helped by the whistle-blower protection that we're now contemplating with this legislation.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Yeah. Thank you very much to the member for that important question. I do have a lot of experience in health care in general, and I'm somewhat constrained by confidentiality issues at this point to discuss this. In fact, that comment actually is the basis of why I'm so supportive of this legislation, because heretofore health care providers have been constrained in doing this sort of thing. I can assure the member that there have been situations in which I personally might have wanted to become more vocal and bring forward issues, and this legislation is going to protect that.

To take a more positive view of it, having this protection is going to free up, basically, the creativity of our co-workers and our teams so that they can feel free to make comments about how things are managed without fear of retribution, and I think what will happen in health care facilities of all sorts is that you're going to see more. In fact, that's been happening in Alberta Health Services to a greater degree over the last few years because the management of Alberta Health Services actually is trying to promote this, to try to get people to buy in, to engage, you know, and with the whistle-blower protection we may actually see an improvement in the engagement numbers that Alberta Health Services has been seeing.

Thank you for the question.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I will call on the hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am pleased to speak to Bill 11, the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Amendment Act, 2017. I was able to participate in the committee, the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee, to review the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act, and I'm pleased to stand today and speak on Bill 11, which would amend that act.

I must say that it was a pleasure to work with all members on the committee, and I believe that the amendments to the act reflect much of the work that was done by the committee. It was a show of how committee work can actually come to good resolution and bring forth good recommendations and how it's a very effective tool within our legislative process to work with all-party committees. We did review several written submissions on the committee, Madam Speaker, and I believe we also had three oral presentations to help us with our work.

One thing that the committee work on the public interest disclosure act allowed me to do was also to reflect on some of the whistle-blower work that I had done in the private sector, working on different boards and audit committees that helped to design whistle-blower functions within private-sector businesses, and how it can lead to very effective ways of bringing a culture change into an organization that helps to improve the culture in the organization and respect all levels, from management right down to beginning workers.

It was interesting, just going through the notes of our committee work, that the Auditor General, I believe, did a very good job of consolidating the written submissions that came before us and talked about five main issues that he found that were throughout many of the written submissions, and I believe that we did a fair bit of work on those main issues: expanding the scope or application of the act, coming to a definition of wrongdoing, investigations, and the ability of the commissioner to compel action.

Effective whistle-blower legislation does contribute to better government for the people that it is mandated to serve, and the successful whistle-blower programs, whether they be in government public service or whether they be in private-sector programs, to be effective really rely on buy-in right from the bottom to the top of the organization. I would suggest that it definitely works the best if the senior members of the workforce recognize the value of whistle-blower protection and the value of a whistle-blower program. It really helps to encourage a culture of transparency in how the whole workforce can work together to improve the operation.

Whistle-blower protection is about giving employees the piece of mind to know that they will be free from reprisal when they come forward and report wrongdoing. It's about enabling government employees to expose gross mismanagement of taxpayer-funded resources and bring unethical behaviour to light. Those who behave unethically should not have the privilege of stewarding tax dollars.

The changes being implemented will encourage early reporting of wrongdoing, which will help also with risk management within our functions. Early reporting of situations can really stem the costs of those misdoings. For risk management in undue loss of public dollars it's important that we have effective whistle-blower legislation.

I think there are a number of positive developments within this bill, which is a result of the co-operation of the multiparty legislative committee. It is my understanding that this bill reflects 20 of the 21 recommendations of the committee's final report. Under the new act those who disclose wrongdoing and face reprisal will be able to seek restitution through the Labour Relations Board. Whistle-blowers, who have been brave enough to report wrongdoing, unfortunately sometimes in the past have had their career or work life suffer at the hands of the people committing the mismanagement. Hopefully, the likelihood of reprisals will be diminished by the fact that this bill includes a provision for whistle-blowers to report directly and anonymously to the office of the Public Interest Commissioner. A whistle-blower may not feel comfortable filing a disclosure with their boss or even their boss's boss. Furthermore, navigating bureaucracy is often a frustrating and unjust process.

Another thing this bill does is expand the scope of the act to the government's contracted service providers. This is important as the Auditor General did point out that there's a risk of misdoing with public funds through the services of contracted service providers. These contractors provide services for seniors and children, to name a few, and it's critical that there is an adequate avenue for reporting of wrongdoing.

One thing that was brought forward in the oral submissions – and it did concern me – was from the Alberta Federation of Labour, where Mr. Gil McGowan presented on behalf of the Alberta Federation of Labour. I did ask a question after his presentation. We had a discussion on extending the legislation into the private sector. It did concern me that the AFL had not become proactive in its own organization to ensure that its employees had the benefit of having whistle-blower protection for themselves.

Mr. McGowan did say that their organization believes very strongly that whistle-blower protections are an important component of workers' rights and employment rights . . . with an eye to making it more effective. In general and in principle, we're supporters and fans of whistle-blower legislation . . . We believe that all employees, regardless of where they work in the public or private sectors, should have whistle-blower protection.

Then in further discussion on those points my colleague the MLA from Highwood asked a question, where there are 41 individuals who are listed as vice-presidents for the Alberta Federation of Labour – that's quite a size for a management team. He was wondering if the Alberta Federation of Labour could describe their internal processes and practices for dealing with whistle-blowers within their own organization. It astounded me to hear Mr. McGowan reply, "We do not have internal practices or procedures for whistle-blowing." This from a person that strongly believes that whistle-blower protection is an important component of workers' rights and employment rights yet has not taken the effort to ensure that his employees have that same right.

Mr. McGowan would like to see that we have legislation put forward to cover both public and private, and he talks about protecting the public interest. I would suggest that there's a little bit of confusion in his thought process. The public interest is identified by the Auditor General as protecting the public interest by whistle-blower protection where the recipients of public money are under this legislation. The Auditor General did suggest that he thinks that it broadens the scope, this opportunity to manage the risk of public dollars going to these other contractors.

Mr. McGowan did also say, "I'd be thrilled to welcome legislation that covers my employees as well." But, Madam Speaker, it is not necessary for legislation to come forward to encourage a private-sector body to do what they believe is right for their employees. Legislation is not necessary for whistle-blower protection to be implemented in the private sector, so when I hear this submission that they, the Alberta Federation of Labour, believe strongly in whistle-blower protection for their employees yet have put no effort into ensuring that that protection is given to their employees and expect our body, the legislative body, to make them do it, I don't understand. There's a disconnect to me.

It is allowed to be done. I sat on boards where we had whistle-blower protection for all our employees, and it worked very effectively. We had third-party auditors that our employees were able to phone if they had any ideas about or saw any misdoings. So I would encourage the Alberta Federal of Labour to actually do that for their employees, to put forward whistle-blower protection for their employees. When it's identified at the top that it's an important function of a healthy organization, it will trickle down and will help that organization to stay very healthy.

Back to Bill 11. This bill calls for more detail when the office of the public interest conducts its annual reporting. The Public Interest Commissioner will now report on the types of proven wrongdoing in the disclosures received: a summary of findings in cases where wrongdoing or acts of reprisals are found to have been committed, the specific recommendations made to public entities or offices of the Legislature and the entities' responses to these recommendations, and any offences committed or penalties given under the act. I would like to see the reports tell how much money has been given in restitution each year, but I'm not sure if this bill does that.

I do look forward to further discussion on Bill 11. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you. I find it rather interesting that the member is talking about the Alberta Federation of Labour and Mr. Gil McGowan and the employees. I'm wondering if the member is aware that the executive is made up of union presidents that are covered by union contracts, and under the union contracts they have all those protections that are outlined: whistle-blower, antiharassment, bullying. All those things are covered under those union contracts. Of course, the other part of it is that any employees hired by the Alberta Federation of Labour are also unionized, and they are also covered under union contracts. So I'm asking you: are you aware of all those things when you make those kinds of comments?

Thank you.

Mr. van Dijken: I find it interesting that the Member for West Yellowhead tries to second-guess what the presenter presented before committee, and to this day I have not received a reply to the recorded question that was given at that time. I asked, "So if you could give me an understanding on why you felt it was more necessary to have another entity establish [whistle-blower protection for your employees at] AFL as opposed to establishing it within your own organization." There was no reply, and I still have not received any reply.

So I find it difficult to take that submission seriously from an individual that has spoken very adamantly that they believe strongly in whistle-blower protection and that they believe that all employees, regardless of where they work, should have that protection. I'm a strong believer in whistle-blower protection. I'm a strong believer in whistle-blower programs being instituted in all organizations because I do believe that it's a fantastic way to create an environment that allows that organization to stay healthy and to stay ahead and to provide risk management for their organization so that there will be no wrongdoing.

When an individual brings submissions forward to our committee, quoting that they're a strong believer in that protection, yet makes the claim that there is no – I'll find it here; lots of papers. Essentially, Madam Speaker, the person doing the submission, Mr. Gil McGowan, reflected on the question from the MLA for Highwood. The question was: "I'm wondering if you could describe to us . . . your internal processes and practices for dealing with whistle-blowers within your . . . organization." Mr. McGowan replies, "We do not have internal practices or procedures for whistle-blowing."

I find it somewhat disingenuous for an individual to make claims that they "believe that all employees, regardless of where they work in the public or private sectors, should have whistle-blower protection," to make claims that they believe that this is a right for all employees yet to not have that right being extended to their very organization. Mr. McGowan says, "We do not have internal practices or procedures for whistle-blowing."

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I think that this bill – updating and amending it is a very good move. It's something that has been needed in the public arena for a long time. Having protection for people that need to, want to speak up about concerns that they have, not just concerns but wrongdoings that they're aware of in their workplace, is really important. A good public service and a fair, honest, and transparent public sector are things that Albertans count on and should be able to count on. We want to make sure that serious wrongdoings in the public sector are both reported and addressed, not just reported and put on a piece of paper and filed away but dealt with.

Employees are the ones who see things that are going on, and they see what shouldn't be going on. They should be able to report serious problems without having to fear for their job security, and that fear of reprisal is a terrible obstacle. Anybody who's worked in a large institution or corporation knows that there is often, you know, maybe not an overt climate of fear but an underlying climate of fear: don't say too much, or you stand to jeopardize your job or your chances of promotion. There is an element of that being a deterrent. I like the fact that the way the investigation is to be dealt with or handled is laid out very clearly when problems are reported to encourage more people to be able to speak up when need be.

I've just gone through here and looked at things. One of the things I noticed in the bill was that wrongdoings aren't just having to do with public funds or assets or service delivery but that wrongdoings are also cases where public trust is being violated through egregious or systemic bullying and harassment. That's a very subtle wrong, but it's one that does involve people and is very demoralizing. I'm sure many of us have known people who did wind up leaving jobs that they were effective in and found enjoyment in and were successful at because of harassment in the workplace. I know there are other means for dealing with harassment, but it's good to have the whistle-blower.

The new legislation defines gross mismanagement, and in regard to bullying and harassment in the workplace the new act would allow the Public Interest Commissioner to become involved in some cases. As said, there are already a range of remedies for this – human rights legislation, employment law, and collective bargaining tools – but this allows the Public Interest Commissioner to step in if the other means have been exhausted and it's still going on.

I like the way it lays out how people can blow the whistle. The designated officer in each government department or public-sector entity is given the directions and means to know how to handle whistle-blower complaints, and a potential whistle-blower has to report to a designated officer before a wrongdoing will be investigated. Under the old law that had to be done, and they were not protected from reprisal until that time. So they may have thought about it and talked about it, maybe to a supervisor, but until it went to the official designated officer, they were not free from the danger of reprisal. But under the new legislation they are allowed to approach their supervisor or the Public Interest Commissioner directly, and they're protected from reprisal as soon as they approach their supervisor. They don't have to wait until the designated officer is informed.

There are just a few other things that I thought were really worth while looking at. I know I was looking at the part on delegated service providers. As a psychologist I worked as a contracted service provider for school boards. I was being paid out of the public purse, and, you know, I used to wonder sometimes. I never had cause to be a whistle-blower, and I didn't see any wrongdoing that concerned me, but if I had, it would have been really important to know what the avenues were, what the means of reporting wrongdoing were so that it could be addressed. If there's any institution that we need to make sure is free of wrongdoing, then that is a school division, a school board.

The recommendations, I found, were very good, and it seemed like they were very thoroughly done, even the definitions clearly laying out the difference between the different kinds of wrongdoing. The reporting of it I've talked about.

One of the things I did mention just briefly, to back up a little bit: a potential whistle-blower may not know who their designated officer is. If the research and prior work hasn't been done, the person may not know, so they've got a choice to hang around and wait until they find out their designated officer's identity or to move on and talk to somebody who can start the process of dealing with the wrongdoing. That's where going directly to the commissioner would be advisable.

I know there are a lot of things that are dealt with and that everybody can read that, but I like the fact that the information is given, and I hope it's shared with every individual in the public sector, in a government sector of any kind, so that they know what their rights are and what their responsibilities are.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), any questions or comments? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I want to thank the Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek for her informed comments, and I wonder if she could actually expand on some of the issues related to the psychology of whistle-blowers. In my experience, some of these whistle-blowers have been under a lot of stress, and that stress has actually been elevated to the point where it could be called, basically, posttraumatic stress because of the evocative nature of what they've witnessed or what they've been participating in. There's been bullying that's been going on. I just wondered if the member could further elaborate on how this legislation might actually alleviate some of that.

Ms Woollard: Thank you. The Member for Edmonton-Whitemud put it very well. That is something that I didn't talk a lot about, but it's something that we all are aware of to some degree. As a psychologist also you know that people who have their confidence and their picture of themselves undermined on a systematic basis do lose perspective. They have a hard time seeing what they can and should do, so a victim mentality. If a person is convinced that speaking up is not going to be effective or that it's not necessary and that, really, what's happening isn't that bad or whatever, they start questioning their own judgment. They can. That is where having something like this would be really helpful. A lot of it is saying: if you see or are aware of something that you believe is a wrongdoing, then you have the responsibility and the ability to go and speak about it and speak to somebody who, hopefully, would be able to support the person, the whistle-blower, in their thinking, maybe give them some added clarification. Maybe this is somebody who's a witness to or has been aware of the same concerns as the whistle-blower.

At any rate, that would be really important because it's that cycle of abuse, basically, psychological abuse. If a person is being bullied or harassed for a long period of time, it's very hard for them to step out of that situation that they're in, to be able to step out and look at it and say: that's wrong; that needs to stop. Anything we can do or anything that could be done – and I think this will help by giving more support to the whistle-blower – is good to help them have the ability to find out who to speak to and to start the process going.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Yes. As you know, I worked for the federal government for nearly 33 years, and I was a union rep for about two-thirds of that time. I had – I can't tell you the exact number – many cases where harassment and bullying went on in the workplace, and when those members tried to deal with it, first of all in a very proactive manner, they found that they were targeted even more so because they were confronting really bad behaviour. I mean, eventually it reached a point where several members of the executive got suspended. They had to go through a process that took almost two years to get settled.

I'd like to hear from you – I mean, I think this legislation is awesome in that it's coming forward to try to protect from those kinds of things in the workplace – and I'd certainly appreciate knowing, again from a psychological standpoint: along with this whistle-blower legislation, how else can we protect employees when this kind of thing is going on in the workplace?

The Deputy Speaker: We're out of time. Sorry, hon. member.

I will now recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Speaker, for the opportunity to rise today to speak to Bill 11. In my work history I've just been listing the number of places where I did work through some of my early work career. I started off listing warehouses that I worked in in my early teens, packing plants where I helped put myself through university, oil well service rigs north of Edmonton, seniors' long-term care. I was a master control operator at a community TV station, worked at numerous construction sites and also 30 years at a real estate office. Some might say, by reading all those, that I had trouble keeping a job in my early career, but actually they were mostly shorter term positions that helped me get through university, of course, culminating in 30 years of a real estate career.

However, in all those situations that I found myself working in, there were always instances where people during coffee breaks would rub shoulders with each other and talk about situations that they weren't comfortable with and want to know what they could do and who were fearful that if they did perhaps raise the alarm, their job would be at risk.

I know that in working as an oil well service rig hand, that was the most egregious place to work, that I worked at in 1982 or '83. Notice was given about three days beforehand that we were going to have an inspection of the rig, and you could see the binoculars of the rig inspector standing beside his car glint in the sunlight as he recorded the rig number to make sure it was standing, and that was the extent of his inspection. I can tell you that that rig needed a serious inspection because when I was catching pipe and threading it in and the other fellow on the platform was greasing the threads, as it got close to the pipe that was already stemmed into the hole, there was an arc, a spark, at an open well, and it would happen every time we brought the two two-inch sleeve pipes together.

We'd been working for pretty much 72 hours straight moving one rig and putting rods down the hole, completing it off, and getting to the other site, and the push wanted to really get going and keep on moving. He said: look, just get this pipe, this sleeve, in the hole, and we'll shut her down for the night, and we'll fix it in the morning. It wasn't more than 10 minutes after that that the residual petroleum in the two-inch sleeve caught fire. I was right there, and luckily it was petroleum, an oil well, not a gas well. Otherwise, I probably wouldn't be talking here today. But people there didn't say anything. They were concerned about perhaps getting fired. And that's not the only safety incident there that people never spoke up about.

But as a result of that incident, we of course jumped right off the platform and ran for our lives until we got to the guy wires, and the fellow up in the crow's nest was screaming that he didn't have a cat line to get down, no safety line. We ran back, grabbed fire extinguishers, and tried to put the fire out, but not one of five fire extinguishers worked. So we ended up putting the fire out, an open flame at a wellhead, with rags. That was something that I don't think ever got reported to any type of authority at all. The rig did get shut down at that point, and, blow me down, they actually hired an electrician, who came out to fix the short in the lighting system that we relied upon to continue working into the night.

So that's one example in my working career where I can see how whistle-blower protection might have saved some lives, and I'm sure that's multiplied many times over in the past work histories of many other members of this Legislature. If they recounted stories from places they were employed at, they would probably come up with multiple stories of situations where they knew that things should be said about work practices or about how an operation was being undertaken, yet nobody said anything for fear of reprisal, for fear of losing their job. That was in the days of shoot, shovel, and shut up, where, in other words, you just kept your mouth shut and kept on working. That brings consequences, and it could have been my death as a result of that and that of many others who were working beside me on the same platform.

I know that after I think probably 10 weeks of working on that job, I would normally come home – and I was staying back at my folks' place for the duration of that summer. I'd finish the day working on that service rig, and I'd be covered in crude oil, so I know the smell of Alberta crude.

Crude oil doesn't wash off well with soap and water, so what you'd do in order to get the crude oil off you is turn to the pail of diesel fuel and some scrub brushes you had there. You'd wash the crude oil off with diesel fuel. To get rid of the diesel fuel, you had a pail of gasoline that you scrubbed off with. Then you went and showered, about a triple shower, and you could actually go home. When you got home, you stood your pants up at the door because they were crusty with crude oil from the day, and you'd hopefully pass muster for supper. You'd go inside and not smell too much like a refinery and have supper and crash in bed.

After about nine weeks of this job I went in to talk to my father – and I'd never actually quit a job before – and I told my dad: I quit that job today. And this is after reporting a few other incidents that included getting knocked off the platform into the sump and so forth. And he, to my relief, said: I'd have quit the darn thing two weeks ago.

So I had my experience on the service rigs and wished that there was somebody I could have spoken to and raised the alarm. Many of those people that I met in that service rig industry were missing digits, missing fingers, had caved-in faces, severe injuries that deformed them for life, that nobody really could say anything about and didn't in those days.

It's changed significantly now. There's no bravado, you know, about weathering through dangerous situations. The safety situation is much better. I think that had we had legislation like this back then, you would have seen those occupational safety issues taken care of much more rapidly because people would feel that they could come forward and report wrongdoings in terms of safety or other improper practices without repercussions hanging over their head that they might lose their job, lose their way of supporting their family as a result of doing the right thing, which is basically protecting their lives and that of their other workers and other workers down the road who might replace them later on.

This type of legislation has been a long, long time coming, and I support it wholeheartedly. I support the changes that the legislation makes in terms of how MLAs, ministers, and the Premier can all be investigated when an accusation of wrongdoing is made to the Public Interest Commissioner. So it applies right across the board, top to bottom, throughout the whole workplace in the province, Madam Speaker. Right now no other jurisdiction in Canada has whistle-blower legislation that applies to MLAs in the way that this legislation would apply. Ontario is the only jurisdiction currently that covers ministers. If this recommendation is accepted, it will make our government one of the most honest, transparent, and accountable governments in Canada.

We also know that not only are there wrongdoings in regard to gross mismanagement of public funds, assets, or service delivery, but there also might be cases where public trust is being violated through egregious or systemic bullying or harassment. One of the things that this new legislation does is to define gross mismanagement. In regard to bullying and harassment in the workplace this new act would allow the Public Interest Commissioner to become involved in some cases.

There are already a range of remedies for this like human rights legislation, employment law, and collective bargaining tools. However, this new legislation would allow the Public Interest Commissioner to step in if any of these other processes have been exhausted. Now, it would have been great during my stint on the service rigs and in other jobs that I had if there was a guideline as to how to go about blowing the whistle if you saw improprieties, how to respond to those people who talked to you in the lunchroom, to give them some advice as to who to approach and what method they could take to perhaps save somebody's skin in the workplace or make sure that a bullying situation was taken care of.

Currently each government department or public-sector entity has a designated officer to handle whistle-blower complaints. A potential whistle-blower has to report to a designated officer before a wrongdoing will be investigated, and they're not protected from reprisal until that time. This new legislation would improve the reporting process and ensure that whistle-blowers are protected when they need it. This new legislation does help that process by allowing whistle-blowers to approach their supervisor or the Public Interest Commissioner directly. Also, this new legislation means that whistle-blowers will be protected from reprisal as soon as they approach their supervisor, not have to wait until the designated officer is informed.

Now, as far as investigating the whistle-blower complaints, something that would have been unheard of in my oil patch days, never mind being able to come forward with the complaint in the first place without probably getting sacked the moment you opened your mouth, we know that the whistle-blower coming forward with an allegation is only the first step in the process. We're proud that this new legislation will also strengthen the commissioner's ability to conduct investigations.

For instance, the commissioner will be authorized to go to an employee's workplace, to view records on-site, and the commissioner's power will be made equivalent to the Auditor General's ability to get at pertinent information. Also, the burden of accessing the information will be more equitably shared with the commissioner on-site, to review documentation instead of requiring the affected agency to deliver the information to them.

When you look at how widespread this legislation is, you should note that contractors, delegated service providers, and physicians, as the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud alluded to, were something under consideration during the select special all-party ethics committee. They did a lot of work on this bill, and I want to acknowledge the hours that were spent by many members thinking about this legislation and in preparing a well-prepared final report. One of the things that the committee talked about was that contractors hired by the government and some delegated service providers such as some physicians and some nursing home operators do not currently fall within the scope of the act.

This government supports the idea that this act should extend to some of the service providers who provide services paid for with taxpayer money. However, it's also very important that everyone takes the time to review and consider which services should be included and how they should be included. Our government supports the part of this new legislation which would consult with government contractors and delegated service providers to see how best to move forward without stepping over the line into the private sector. One of the recommendations of the all-party committee was to ensure that these regulations do not affect the private sector, and our government supports the committee's recommendations on that.

Now, Madam Speaker, in order to make this legislation effective and in order to create an atmosphere where whistle-blowers feel secure coming forward, it is critical that their identity be protected. In the existing legislation it is already clear that FOIP does not apply to records held by the Public Interest Commissioner. However, there is an exception to this, and that is when a designated officer initiates an investigation rather than the commissioner. In that case, it is possible for a third party to submit a FOIP request asking for records connected to the investigation. This is not a secure situation for the whistle-blower, and the new legislation will ensure that the name of the whistle-blower and other identifying information is exempted from FOIP requests. The new legislation will also require that more details be reported annually by the Public Interest Commissioner.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any questions under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I was just wondering if the member would care to expand more on what he was about to say, I think, about the expansion of the reporting, please.

The Deputy Speaker: Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Thank you for the opportunity to continue with the conclusion of my remarks. Everybody in the Chamber and everybody in the public knows that most whistle-blowers merely want to help fix mistakes and make things right. I'm proud of this legislation, that I hope will make legitimate whistle-blowers feel more secure in coming forward with their concerns. Everyone in this Chamber can agree that when it comes to public money and resources, opportunities to identify and correct mistakes should be welcome. I'm confident that this legislation, if passed, will help make that happen and help to protect those who come forward. This is just one way that our government is working to make life better for all Albertans and increasing the transparency and accountability of the public sector. I support this legislation, and I hope that everyone else in this Chamber does as well.

Now, as you know and as we've alluded to previously, on June 25, 2015, the Legislative Assembly passed Government Motion 12, which appointed the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee, an all-party committee made up of 17 members, to review the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act along with other bills. This all-party committee put forward a number of recommendations, all of which were seriously considered, and the work of this committee has been commended by others in this House and was really put forward as an example of how members of this Legislature can really complement each other and work together to come up with legislation and recommendations around legislation that benefit a wide cross-section of Albertans when it comes to not only this matter but all types of legislation that we as committee members, as legislators are asked to comment on.

Some of the recommendations are incorporated into the legislation, and some are not. But I think that the general consensus about the work of that committee is that it was a very, very fine example of how positively we can work together and how we can really have some great results coming from a truly nonpartisan effort at seeking solutions to problems that face Albertans that are better tested in arguments that are seeking the truth rather than seeking partisan gain.

Now, the all-party committee recommended that the legislation be expanded to contracting entities. At this time we are accepting the all-party committee's recommendations, but much more work needs to be done to determine how to cover public-sector services carried out by third parties without stepping over the line into the private sector.

There are new penalties under the legislation that are contemplated if it's passed. The current act already establishes strict penalties of up to $25,000 for the first offence and up to $100,000 for each subsequent offence. Offences include the following: committing a reprisal; withholding information or making a false or misleading statement or counselling or directing another person to do so; obstructing, counselling, or directing another person to obstruct any individual acting in an official capacity under the act; destroying, mutilating, altering, falsifying, or concealing any document or thing that may be relevant to an investigation or directing or counselling another person to do so. There are no new penalties although whistle-blowers who are subject to retaliation would now be entitled to remediation as determined by the Labour Relations Board.

Now, if whistle-blowers go to the media rather than the commissioner – people have asked whether there's protection if they go to the media rather than the commissioner or their designated officer. Now, the act has a formal disclosure process for this.

4:30

The Deputy Speaker: That concludes the time under 29(2)(a).

Any other hon. members wishing to speak? I'll call on Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my privilege to rise in the House this afternoon to speak to Bill 11, and I'd like to speak in favour of this bill. I think this is something that is building on existing legislation in a very constructive and positive way and one that's going to provide better – well, I mean, a couple of different things: one, I think it can provide one more tool to ensure that, you know, toxic workplaces aren't tolerated within government; secondly, I think it's critical, as these type of measures are, to improving our democratic practice in this province.

I'll talk first about sort of the expansion to allow the Public Interest Commissioner to investigate a wider variety of wrongdoings, including some forms of mismanagement but also, in particular, bullying or abuse of human resources. Now, of course, there are different pieces of legislation as well as workplace regulation that would address these types of issues. Even within the Legislative Assembly Office – right? – we have our respectful workplace policy and assorted directives.

Now, with these types of chains of reporting, there's always a concern that you might have individuals that, because of the widespread and systemic nature of the abuse that might be occurring, would, you know, feel constrained from reporting to their direct supervisor or even one or two steps up that chain and be fearful of reprisals if they do so, both overt – but, of course, these aren't always overt. There are other sort of covert ways to be able to get back at people who are breaking silence over various abuses of power. I think this is something that is going to be one more tool, that will allow another channel so they can go to the Public Interest Commissioner if it's relevant and at the same time be guaranteed that they'll be protected from reprisal from that very moment. I think this will really help get some respect because with these systems, people do have to feel protected, the vast majority of people that might be willing to step forward.

I mean, this is something, I guess, alluding to prior occupations, but I did do consultation and training on respectful workplaces for the city of Edmonton. There were some times when I would have individuals approach me, and they were a bit cynical about the process. They had multiple channels to go through but said: well, it will get back to the abusers, and it's just not worth it for us. So just one more channel is an important one to be able to get at it, especially where you have a toxic workplace. They don't tend to be issues where you have one or two – you know, if it's one or two people that aren't following proper behaviour with their colleagues, that's one thing, but when you have systemic abuse, it seems to erode. So I think it will be useful that way.

Secondly, I was saying that it's important for democratic practice. I mean, I just looked it up. It's a common quote – I think it's from Justice Brandeis – that sunlight is the best disinfectant, right? This is something that, you know, I mean, I had one of my colleagues – he's not in the House today. Oh, God. I didn't say that. Yeah. You could strike that. One of the hon. members – I didn't mention the name, so it's okay – liked to refer to Firefly, Star Trek.

I'm thinking of a historical analogy, and that's with Gorbachev and the whole movement of perestroika and glasnost in the then Soviet Union in the 1980s. The reason why you had perestroika and glasnost – now, perestroika, of course, referred to restructuring, and glasnost referred to openness. Looking back, in retrospect within Russia today and within, you know, countries like China, Gorbachev has been roundly criticized. He was criticized, saying: well, this was destructive, and all we needed to do was just economic restructuring, so what was the whole point of this whole glasnost thing?

But if you look back at that time, I mean, you know, for the reformers within the old Soviet Union, glasnost had to come first. Why did glasnost have to come first? For the simple reason that without openness, without having people be able to stand up and let officials know what was really going on, it was impossible to reform, right? How can you make informed decisions as a democratic society if you don't have the actual facts of the matter at hand? When you have an environment where there is abuse of power, where there is abuse of privilege, and where you don't have individuals feeling safe to be able to stand up to it, not only do those continue; they can continue despite the best of intentions by those in power for the simple fact that they're not aware that they're happening because people are afraid to tell.

That speaks, I think, directly to being able to govern well. How can you govern well if you're making decisions based on things that aren't actually true? You have your tools, and you're using your tools to the best of your ability to fulfill your mandate, but those tools are defective, and nobody will tell you because they're afraid to. This is something that faced the old Soviet regime. This is something that might surprise people, but when it collapsed, it came as a huge shock to a lot of people within the politburo, within the Supreme Soviet. They were shocked because they thought that things were going just great. I mean, there's an anecdote about Yuri Andropov where, I think, one of his children was saying that, you know, as far as he was concerned, everything was fine in the Soviet Union, but it's because all he could see was what he could see through the windows of his Chaika limousine when he was going from his home to the Kremlin.

Now, I don't want to necessarily compare our predecessors here to the old Soviet regime, but definitely I think sometimes – and I'm sure members of the opposition would agree – I mean, this is a province where we could have used a little more glasnost at certain points than we had. So I think that this is definitely something that's going to help all of us be able to have a better understanding of what the real situation sometimes is and then be able to make better decisions as a consequence.

I mean, it just sort of speaks to why free speech is so important on a pragmatic level. I want to refer to the philosopher John Stuart Mill, who I know is popular amongst some of my colleagues across the floor here mostly for his economic arguments. But sometimes people lose the moral arguments and even the epistemological arguments that he made around the importance of people being able to speak freely without fear of repercussion. According to Mill, really it's the only tool you have to be able to get at a sense of collective truth. By silencing certain parties for whatever reasons but in particular for fear of repercussions, you're actually preventing the ability to get at what the truth of the matter is, and that has grave pragmatic consequences, right? You know, it's like going back – I mean, you make these decisions based on an understanding of what the situation is, but it's a skewed understanding because you're only getting part of the story, right?

That's why I think this is something that we shouldn't be afraid of because there might be concerns, you know, from all of us on just how radical this expansion is. It is a radical expansion of whistle-blower protection. I think it's something to be commended. By "radical" I mean something that's a real change, and that's having political staff included within the legislation. That's something that I think would be wrong. But I think we're pretty unique in that in the country if we're going forward – I'd like to commend the committee for bringing that type of suggestion forward.

Not only is that going to make sure that we're – you know, if one of us is acting in a way that's untoward, that's unacceptable, that's an abuse of power, there's a better chance we'll be able to be held to account. It'll also create, I think, a more open environment. Like I say, sunlight is the best disinfectant. If all of us go forward with the understanding that if we act in a way that fits within the definition in the legislation, that is considered abuse, we too can be held to account, we too can face investigation. In that sense there aren't any little corners where you can avoid the sunlight, where you can do things in the darkness, which is where you tend to do things you don't want people to find out about. I think that by extending protections to more employees, including staff in the office of the Premier and ministers and MLAs, that's definitely a positive step.

Now, that being said, of course there are certain, you know, things that are legitimately kept secret. There are some types of discussions and conversations where if it's totally public, the people within it can't feel free to express their true opinion. It's a constraint on information necessary to making decisions as well. I'm speaking, of course, about parliamentary privilege and why that has developed over time. I mean, this is something that's developed over the centuries, and it's to make sure that with all this there is a space where we can speak entirely frankly. Now, that's about talking, about advice, that type of thing. I think we can protect that while at the same time making sure that how we treat people and how we treat our powers are subject to that disinfectant when they come out.

It's for these reasons that I'd like to commend once again the committee for, I think, putting together a good, balanced package, something that's very progressive and, hopefully, maybe an example to other provinces because I know that there are other provinces that weren't actually as far ahead as Alberta was even before this legislation. Hopefully, it'll serve as an example to some of the dawdlers so that, you know, everyone across the country can benefit from more open government, more transparent government, where nobody is considered to be above the law or is above reproach.

Thank you for listening to my points. I welcome any questions if you might have some.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. You had mentioned a little bit of Soviet and Russian history in your comments there. It was brought to my attention that when the Holodomor memorial display was out front, some of the presenters there: you actually questioned their accuracy. I was wondering if you might want to comment on that.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Piquette: Yeah. It's not germane, but with your indulgence I can reply to the question. The presenter was saying that the gulag prisons had just been closed in the 1980s, and I corrected the presenter to say that they were actually closed under Khrushchev in the 1960s.

The Deputy Speaker: I would urge you, hon. members, to keep your questions relevant to the topic at hand.

Any other questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, other speakers to the bill? Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As always, it's a pleasure to get up in this House and speak to a bill and share my thoughts although I know that not all appreciate it when I get up to talk. But I'm sure the present members appreciate every word I have to say.

Dr. Turner: We do.

Loyola: Thank you. I appreciate that.

It gives me great honour to speak specifically about Bill 11, the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Amendment Act, 2017. As we speak about this bill, I think it's very important to highlight those two first words: public interest. What is in the public interest? And how is the work that public servants do day to day for all Albertans a way that they are part of building the great society that we have here in Alberta, in this province? Their day-to-day contributions do exactly that, protect the public interest of all Albertans. We can't forget that that is the primary objective of this bill, the public interest.

The public interest is served through our democratic system, and it's so important within a democracy that there are opportunities for checks and balances. Being an individual that came from a country which established a military regime, a military dictatorship, you can only guess how important it is for me to support democracy and not only to support the process of every four years electing representatives specifically to this House but also that constituents play an active role in participating in their democracy day to day.

We can't forget that public servants are constituents. They're doing their best to make sure that all Albertans get the services that they require, and they're part of that democracy. The hard work that they do every day is part of making sure that we have a strong democracy, and I think that we forget that. Now, you could call me biased. My wife is a public servant. I know many public servants, and I'm sure many of you in this House know public servants, but I think that we forget to appreciate the hard work they do day in, day out in order to contribute to our democracy and to make sure that Albertans are served well by that democracy.

Before I continue, though, I want to go into a little bit about culture because I remember working on the committee, and I remember how important it was for me to speak directly to the issue that what we're trying to do here is to create a paradigm shift. Up until this point, under the previous legislation and until this passes, that piece of legislation had holes in it. Public servants didn't feel a hundred per cent confident to come forward and disclose if there was gross mismanagement happening within a department or ministry. The reason for that is because in the legislation there isn't specifically the issue of how reprisals were going to be addressed. I'm going to get into that a little bit later on. I don't want to forget that we're talking about culture here.

Now, as a student of anthropology at the University of Alberta I'm proud to say that culture is something very important. A lot of people when they hear the word "culture" think ethnic diversity. My culture: these are my dances, and this is my food, you know? But culture goes even deeper than that, to the subcultures that we have within our different ethnic groupings, and at the base of that are the values and principles that we so intimately hold. That is the true foundation of our culture, the things that we hold dear: family, hard work, making sure that things are fair, that all are treated fairly in our society and our community, that everybody has the same opportunities that everybody else does, and that when we see barriers for some people when it comes to accessing those opportunities, we're going to do something to change it.

Now, that's what our government is all about, and we've been working so hard over the last two years to address those things. I want to talk about the culture that existed in this province for more than 44 years, and at the risk of boring some people, I'm going to go all the way back to colonization. Let us not forget that this fine country that we call Canada was established by the Hudson's Bay Company. It was established as a corporation. The English had the Hudson's Bay Company, and of course the French had the North West Company, but the prime objective of both those companies was to extract resources from this land so that they could send them back to Europe. Now, of course, the majority of those were furs, as we well know, those of us who know our history and those who have had a chance to visit Fort Edmonton or Fort Calgary or all those wonderful historical interpretive centres that we have here in the province of Alberta, that tell the Alberta story so well.

But rooted deep in that story is a tendency for authoritarianism, not only authoritarianism but specifically colonization and, within that colonization, also patriarchy. Yes, I said it. Patriarchy. All of that has contributed to a strong foundation that has made Alberta the place it is today. Now, of course, Alberta has many, many wonderful things about it, but if we want to make Alberta better, we need to address those aspects of our culture that aren't good, and colonization is something that we need to focus on, of course, colonization and what happened in terms of marginalizing specifically the indigenous people here in the province of Alberta.

You know, I remember the hon. member across the way in the Indigenous Relations estimates specifically speaking to the fact of: how come we don't have more indigenous people working in the Ministry of Indigenous Relations? Great question. But it's not something that we can simply fix by saying: okay; well, now we're just going to go hire more indigenous people.

Mr. Hanson: Just one would be good.

Loyola: One would be good, yes. And my understanding is that they have hired one.

It goes deeper than that. It's about understanding the historical injustices that occurred in the past and trying to address those issues and not only that but also understanding and sharing in a wider understanding of how indigenous people and settler colonialism can work together in order to make this province a better place.

Of course, the base of that is the treaties. Now, I'll remind people – and, hopefully, there are people watching us at home that I'll be able to help remind – about the treaties. So many people think – and I'll be honest with you; this is even a misconception that I had until I learned otherwise – that the treaties allowed indigenous people to have their reservations. When I was younger, when I was in high school, that's what I thought because that was the history that was being passed down to me. That was the narrative that was being passed down to me as a new Canadian immigrant coming from that particular background. I think that many other people shared that misconception of what the treaties meant. But, of course, as I'm sure many of the members here in this House understand, the treaties aren't that.

The treaties said that, yes, these reservations were going to be set aside so that indigenous people could live and that we would share the rest, that we would have a shared responsibility to make sure that the wealth of this province and this nation would be shared equitably by all who call it home. Already right there you can see that we have this disjointed culture. Settler colonialism understands it from a different perspective. They thought: "No. We're going to come in, and we're going to develop. We're going to create our urban centres, and we're going to benefit from the wealth. The indigenous people can be there on their reserves, and if they want, hopefully, they can adopt the same agricultural methods that we use," not understanding the traditions of indigenous people here and not only not understanding them but just being reluctant to even fathom how both cultures could get along.

Now, you may be wondering: “Okay. Well, this bill is the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Amendment Act, 2017. Why is he talking about colonization?” But I think I’ve made a really good argument to establish how the misunderstanding of our cultures has led to where we are right now and why there aren’t more indigenous people in the public sector. We need to make sure that the public sector mirrors the Alberta population, that we have more people who are ethnically diverse working in the public sector and not just at the bottom rungs but also higher up. I’m proud that our government is addressing that. Slowly we’re getting there with time.

I also talked about patriarchy. We wouldn’t need a ministry for the status of women if patriarchy weren’t a reality. Now, I’m so proud to be part of a government that has established a Ministry of Status of Women, that not only established the Ministry of Status of Women but is already doing the analysis on how many women are in the public sector and in what roles within the public sector. When you look at the data and you analyze the data, you start seeing that there are not many women in the upper rungs of the public sector, in director positions, assistant deputy ministers. There are some but not as many as there could be. Through the Ministry of Status of Women they’ve established a women’s leadership program so that the women who are interested in moving into those leadership positions within our government can do so. This is how we build a strong democracy, by making sure that those who didn’t have access before have access now.

Now, these people, as I stated at the very beginning, are the people who work so hard to make sure that our democracy and the services that we provide Albertans may be the best that we can offer the citizens of this fine province.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), the hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Connolly: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. The member was, well, just kind of beginning his speech about the patriarchy and how that influences this legislation and at the lower end kind of a whole servant-master type of ideal, so I was wondering if the member could expand on his ideas about patriarchy and women’s rights and how it influences this legislation.

The Deputy Speaker: Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker, and thank you to my hon. colleague for asking such an important question. Of course, as a man I’m a hundred per cent aware that there are women in this room that don’t need me to explain it to them because they live it every day. I would consider myself a newbie when it comes to understanding patriarchy because I’m not the one that has to live it every day and feel the effects of it, but I’m glad to be part of a caucus where there are incredibly strong women who share their experiences with me so that I may learn about the realities that they have to face.

It’s really interesting that when you look at the public sector, you see that there is a majority of women – right? – but those women are not in positions of power. Add that now to the fact that under previous legislation people felt reluctant to come forward and, quote, blow the whistle. So if you’re a woman in a system plagued by colonialism, plagued by patriarchy, how likely are you going to be to come forward and blow the whistle and not fear that potentially you could be fired for doing so?

Now, I’m not talking about what would really happen. I’m talking about perception here based on historical reality. We all see what’s going on. We all see the structures around us. We all know how gender, sex, and our ethnic makeup are part of the aspects of our society. I’ve heard it many times from people who are ethnically diverse. They come and say to me: “Well, you know what? I’m a little bit afraid to say what’s going on here. I’m a little reluctant to come forward because I’m afraid I’m going to lose my job.” If there’s one aspect of Bill 11 that is so great in terms of what we’re trying to do here in this province, it’s exactly addressing that: protecting whistle-blowers against reprisals.

I remember fighting so hard for it in committee along with many of my colleagues both on this side of the House and that side. We all agreed that there needs to be a way to protect us so that we can build a culture that’s going to strengthen our democracy as we move forward. That’s what it’s about at the end of the day. Let’s not forget. I go back to my opening remarks that this is about strengthening our democracy. This is about making sure that when people that work in the public sector see gross mismanagement, whether it be financial gross mismanagement or human resources gross mismanagement, which is now included within the amendment act before us today, someone can come forward and feel confident that they will not be reprisal against. Even if they should be so unlucky as to have a reprisal against them, we’ve set it up so that we can make sure that they would receive a reward if they’ve had to go through a process like that. We want to make sure that we have a culture... [The time limit for questions and comments expired]

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to Bill 11? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Connolly: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie for speaking. It was a very insightful speech. I really hope that everyone was able to pay close attention, as I am sure all members do whenever any member of the House rises.

I’m very proud today to stand in the House in support of Bill 11, the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Amendment Act, 2017. This legislation will better protect employees already covered by the whistle-blower legislation, and it will increase the number of people who would be protected, like staff in the offices of the Premier and ministers as well as all MLAs no matter where they stand in the Legislature. I’m really proud to be part of a government that is making life better for Albertans by renewing democracy in the province.

This isn’t the first bill that we’ve done to renew democracy and really improve our province. I mean, our first bill was to ban political donations from unions and corporations. After that, I was very proud to support the Fair Elections Financing Act, which helped to make sure that good ideas and everyday Albertans decide elections and not big bankrolls and deep pockets. This whistle-blower legislation amendment act would build on those successes, Madam Speaker, and further the principles of open government in Alberta by increasing accountability, ethics, and transparency.

Whistle-blowing is not something new. It’s been around since, really, the dawn of time whereas always people who are the general workers who believe something wrong is happening, whether that be in a corporation or in a government or basically anywhere – I was just looking up some history online, and I found one from 1777 even, with Samuel Shaw along with a third lieutenant, Richard Marven, who was a midshipman. Shaw was a key figure in the passage of the first whistle-blower law passed in the United States by the Continental Congress. During the Revolutionary War the two naval officers blew the whistle on the torturing of British POWs by Commodore Esek Hopkins. Of course, as everyone obviously knows, Esek Hopkins was the commander-in-chief of the Continental Navy. The Continental Congress enacted the whistle-blower protection law on July 30, 1778, by unanimous vote. In addition, it declared that the United States would defend the two against the libel suit filed against them by Hopkins.

As everyone knows, it's very difficult, whether you're a lieutenant or a midshipman or even just a general worker in a company, to file something against your superior, especially if it's the commander-in-chief of the entire Continental Navy. So that's really where modern whistle-blower protection came from. It was because the Continental Congress at that time was able to pass legislation unanimously, and that didn't happen very often. There was a lot of piddling and twiddling and resolving in the Continental Congress, if anyone was aware. I don't know if anyone in the opposition was alive back in 1778, but I certainly wasn't. I'm very proud of what we've been able to accomplish thus far and to see how far whistle-blower legislation has come.

Even in 1984 there was a huge blow-up in the Canadian government when a Canadian civil servant reported to his chief, the top Canadian civil servant at the time, that the minister of defence under Brian Mulroney, Minister Robert Coates, had visited a West German strip club while on an official mission, with NATO documents in his possession, thus creating a security risk. While Coates was asked to resign from cabinet by Prime Minister Mulroney at the time, he also fired Duncan Edmonds and made him a persona non grata in government circles.

In reality, making sure that people in government who do come forward are given the rights of protection is incredibly important because we've seen – when was that? – 20, 30, 40 years ago, in the '80s, even as recently as then, that people who did come forward as whistle-blowers were still symbolically crucified by governments and by ministers and even by Prime Ministers. It's very important that we read this legislation and that we support the legislation as one of the biggest fears of employees and one of the reasons they don't come forward is the fear of reprisal by their employers. There is some protection with regard to that once this bill is finally passed. Right now any employer in the public sector can be prosecuted for punishing an employee who exposes a wrongdoing, but there is no mechanism in place to determine what kind of restitution should be made to the whistle-blower if they are the subject of such an unlawful punishment.

I'm really proud to say that the new legislation would enable the Labour Relations Board to order remedies when there has been a reprisal and that the board may decide that the whistle-blower deserves to get their job back if they've been fired or that they might be entitled to compensation. In the end, it will be up to the board to decide what is appropriate, and the board's order would be enforceable like a court order.

Our government hopes that these changes will encourage whistle-blowers to feel safe in coming forward because that's really the most important part. People won't come forward unless they know that they're safe in doing so. Some people will. Those people are fabulous, and we really appreciate them. However, many people won't because they're afraid of losing their jobs. They're afraid of their previous employers or even government coming back to them, as happened with Duncan Edmonds in 1984. They're afraid of what could happen. So making sure that that's explicitly in the legislation, that they won't lose their job, that they do have protections: that's really what's important.

I'm really happy that the act now expands to ministers and MLAs because another problem with the old legislation is that it didn't protect political staff who were working in ministers' offices and premiers' offices. As well, Madam Speaker, members of the Legislature weren't covered at all under the previous legislation. This is simply not right. As Members of the Legislative Assembly in this province we should be leaders when it comes to ethics and accountability, not people who are excluded from being held accountable, whether that's our staff or even managers in our offices, so I very much support the changes that this legislation makes in these areas as well.

If passed, this bill will mean that MLAs, ministers, and the Premier can all be investigated when an accusation of wrongdoing is made to the Public Interest Commissioner. Now, we know that this has been the subject of parliamentary privilege, and matters regarding parliamentary privilege would still be ruled on in the Legislative Assembly by the Speaker, of course. This is where Alberta will once again be a leader, Madam Speaker, because right now no other jurisdiction in Canada has whistle-blower legislation that applies to MLAs in this way, and Ontario is the only jurisdiction that covers ministers.

I'm really proud to see Alberta as a leader when it comes to ethics and accountability. It's something that we haven't seen, really, for decades, even centuries, I'd say. If this recommendation is accepted, it will help make our government one of the most honest, transparent, and accountable governments in Canada, and that's not only the front bench, Madam Speaker. That's the back bench. That's the opposition. That's every single last Member of this Legislative Assembly. I'm very proud to see that coming forward.

We also know that not only are there wrongdoings in regard to gross mismanagement of public funds, assets, or service delivery, but there also might be cases where public trust is being violated through egregious or systemic bullying or harassment. I know I've spoken to many public servants who have been bullied and who are always afraid of coming forward as a whistle-blower.

One of the things that this new legislation does is to define gross mismanagement, and in regard to bullying and harassment in the workplace this new act would allow the Public Interest Commissioner to become involved in some cases. There are already a range of remedies for this like human rights legislation, employment law, and collective bargaining tools. However, this new legislation would allow the Public Interest Commissioner to step in if any of these other processes have been exhausted, and that's something that we haven't seen in the previous legislation.

I'm really glad it's coming forward, as it is a very touchy subject for many public servants. There is gross bullying, and really it can be quite widespread. So allowing staff to come forward saying that there is bullying being done in their workplaces is something that I'm really proud that we're finally bringing forward. It's really a shame that it didn't come forward before because it has happened for eons. I'm really glad that this is finally going to be in the legislation.

Finally, this new legislation would also improve the reporting process and ensure that whistle-blowers are protected when they need it. Currently each government department or public-sector entity has a designated officer to handle whistle-blower complaints. A potential whistle-blower has to report to a designated officer before a wrongdoing will be investigated, and they are not protected from reprisal until that time. But this new legislation will help the process by allowing whistle-blowers to approach their supervisor or the Public Interest Commissioner directly, and that's really an important tool that public servants will finally have.

I know when we talked to the Public Interest Commissioner at the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee, that was something that he had directly stated was needed because many people do try to come directly to the Public Interest Commissioner; however, before that was never an option. So I'm really glad we have this in the legislation as well. Also, this new legislation means that whistle-blowers will be protected from reprisal as soon as they approach their supervisor and will not have to wait until the designated officer is informed.

This entire bill is really bringing our whistle-blower legislation into the 21st century, and I'm proud that we will finally be a leader in this respect. I'd like to thank you, Madam Speaker, for giving me some time to talk about this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other speakers wishing to speak to the bill?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

Bill 12 New Home Buyer Protection Amendment Act, 2017

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. We are here today to debate the merits of Bill 12, the New Home Buyer Protection Amendment Act, 2017.

I have to say that over the weekend I had the pleasure to speak with a lot of folks in my area who had heard about the bill and thanked me for introducing it. I'll be honest. Many people were actually shocked that this wasn't already in place to protect Albertans, and I think that shock comes from Albertans wanting and expecting their government to stand up for them and have their backs when they're making one of the largest, if not the largest, investment of their lives.

You know, on this side of the House we believe in a few simple things. We believe that a government should be working to make life better for Albertans every day that we walk through these doors of this Legislature, we believe that we can protect and promote smaller builders who get undercut out of the market by fly-by-night companies, and we believe that Alberta families should be able to make informed decisions and be protected when investing in their future home.

Again, what seemed to surprise a lot of the constituents I spoke to this weekend is that there are no specific requirements for the residential construction industry in Alberta. This leaves the government of Alberta with little recourse to stop a bad builder from building even if they have a documented history of fraud, have weak finances, or no credentials, and this could happen to any Albertan. Many of the folks I have spoken to since introducing this bill either had a personal story to share or had a friend or relative that may have encountered this. Even the most proactive Albertans struggle when trying to find information on the financial standing or build history of a prospective builder. So it is with great pride that I stand here to speak to this bill.

If passed, builder licensing will reduce the risk prospective homeowners face by establishing a licensing system for home builders, providing homebuyers with a single source of information on builders, and creating provisions to remove or suspend bad builders in order to protect people from negligent or unscrupulous businesses. We want to see that Albertans are empowered to go with trustworthy builders to construct their homes and that Albertans are better protected.

There are many excellent builders in Alberta, the vast majority of whom work hard, are professional, and build safe and beautiful homes. Under this new framework good builders will no longer be competing with fly-by-night companies that come in, cut corners, and undercut smaller builders out of the market. With builder licensing all builders will need to disclose their corporate history, build experience, financial claims, and any court proceedings in their licence application.

The new-home buyer protection office in my department will review applications for court proceedings, outstanding bankruptcies, orders and administrative penalties under the New Home Buyer Protection Act and Safety Codes Act, and make a determination on whether or not to issue a licence. Key criteria for rejection or removal of a licence would include instances of fraud, risk exposure due to pending bankruptcy, a builder grossly misrepresenting himself or herself, or licence rejection or removal in other provincial jurisdictions.

A licence will be suspended in instances of noncompliance with New Home Buyer Protection Act orders or administrative penalties, patterns of outstanding Safety Codes Act orders or violations, or patterns of financial court claims. Other criteria that would be considered as potential grounds for suspension would include violations under the Fair Trading Act, occupational health and safety standards, employment standards, workers' compensation orders and violations.

Builders who receive their licence will be added to the new public online registry of licensed builders. The online registry will allow consumers to look up corporate histories, build histories, and financial records and allow them to track these over the years. This will provide consumers with a single source of information, a one-stop shop, to help Albertans make informed decisions. It will also promote the many experienced and trustworthy builders in Alberta.

When we consulted with Albertans about this over the winter, we heard overwhelmingly from the 1,200 Albertans who took the survey that nearly 80 per cent supported the idea of licensing builders. We also held 11 engagement sessions across the province to talk with key stakeholders about builder licensing. Working with the Canadian Home Builders' Association and smaller independent builders along with other industry leaders like the Canadian Condominium Institute, we developed a licensing framework that works to protect consumers while promoting the work of great builders.

Currently 75 per cent of Canadians enjoy the benefits and protections of a licensing system in Ontario, B.C., and Quebec, and Manitoba is currently developing their framework and plans to have theirs online for 2018. Not having one means that Albertans have less consumer protection right now than the majority of Canadians. One of the reasons that I'm proud to work for this government is that we just don't settle for average.

What would make our licensing framework unique in Canada is the integration with our home warranty program. Other jurisdictions have different governing bodies that issue their permits, their licences, and their warranties. If there's a failure of communication, this can result in a building receiving a building permit before they even receive a licence or a warranty.

By amending the New Home Buyer Protection Act and tying our licensing framework to our warranty program, we would create a system of checks and balances that protects consumers from falling through the cracks and promotes the builders with great track records. While builder licensing will offer new-home buyers proactive protection when looking to build a new home, the new home warranty program will continue to protect new-home owners after they've moved in. This integration will require home builders to receive a licence before they're able to apply for warranty coverage. Both the licence and a warranty will then be required to receive a building permit.

This is another example of a made-in-Alberta solution that other provinces are taking notice of. This bill comes from a coalition of Alberta builders, home sellers, homeowners, tradespeople, and government officials working together collaboratively to ensure that this framework comes together in the best way to protect Albertans and the residential home building industry.

As I said, I'm proud to stand here today to move and speak to this bill.

I look forward to the debate on the bill, and I look forward to answering any questions as they come up. Madam Speaker, Albertans deserve a government that protects consumers while promoting great businesses, and that's what we're doing.

I'm looking forward to some of the discussion involved. I've received a lot of positive feedback over the few days since I introduced the bill. You know, that was on Twitter, that was on Facebook, that was phone calls, and in my constituency. So I'm looking forward to hearing more positive stories from people out there. Like I said, any questions or things that I can clear up, I'd be happy to do so.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Good afternoon and thank you, Madam Speaker, and good afternoon, everyone. It's my pleasure to rise this afternoon and speak a little bit about Bill 12, the New Home Buyer Protection Amendment Act, 2017. Thanks to the minister for the information he's supplied today on this new bill. I'm certainly most happy to see this bill.

A little bit of history to start out with, I guess, is what I've got prepared here today. The New Home Buyer Protection Act was passed by the Legislature in 2014. I was here during the time when we had those discussions, and it was of interest to me then. It was initially brought in because there was a growing number of homeowners who were finding that their newly built homes were poorly constructed, and the home builders that they had hired were not required to offer any sort of warranty in those times. This resulted in many Alberta families experiencing a significant financial loss, sometimes having to fix and replace shoddy workmanship.

In fact, I'm sure my colleagues from Fort McMurray, who aren't here today, may recall the issue of the poorly built Penhorwood condominium complex that resulted in over 300 residents being evacuated in the middle of the night. In the end, the entire structure was deemed uninhabitable, actually, and in 2015, four years after the evacuation was ordered, it was demolished.

I'm not going to stand here and claim that had the government of Alberta had a home builder licence requirement in those days, the issue of Penhorwood never would have arisen, but it went much deeper and was partly also the result of Fort McMurray's extreme housing shortage, incredible economic expansion, and problems within industry all converging together, apparently, which culminated in the building being ultimately condemned. In response, though, to Penhorwood and others the province began the process of implementing a number of consumer protections that would eventually result in lessening the number and severity of poorly constructed homes and condo buildings.

If the public, though, does not have faith in the products that are being produced, be it new homes or children's toys, the impact both economically and socially can be severe. There's no question. Albertans work hard for their money, and they deserve to have some certainty that when they decide to spend it, they're getting the product that is being advertised. I believe that this is what the bill intends to address today, and it's why I will be supporting the bill at second reading.

Madam Speaker, I believe there's a role for government to play in ensuring that Albertans are not being taken advantage of, and I believe Albertans are best positioned to make decisions on what is best for themselves. However, in order for that system to work, the consumer must have the information they require to make an informed decision. More importantly, they must have faith and confidence in the information they do have. If they are either unable to obtain or lack faith in the information they have, they are unlikely to part with their money. We all know that.

It's not uncommon for professionals in highly technical industries to be required to hold a licence to practise their trade, which is what we're talking about here today. For example, land surveyors are required to be certified by the Alberta Land Surveyors' Association before they can advertise or work as a land surveyor in the province, according to the land surveyors' website, "for the protection of the public and administration of the profession." That just makes simple sense.

Another example within the construction industry of the requirement for a professional to have a licence before they can practise their trade is architecture. The Alberta Association of Architects is a self-governing professional association charged by government with the registration of architects and the licensing of interior designers in Alberta. Before an architect can begin practising in Alberta, they must be registered with the Association of Architects. The mission of the association is "to represent the public interest in the administration of the Alberta Architects Act."

Similarly, real estate brokers in Alberta are required to obtain and maintain a licence in order to practise in Alberta. The Real Estate Council of Alberta is responsible for setting, regulating, and enforcing standards for real estate brokerages in Alberta. This is ultimately done for the protection of Albertans and to ensure that they have confidence in the real estate industry in general.

To keep with the theme of housing-related professional licensing, home inspectors, too, in Alberta must be licensed in order to conduct and approve home inspection reports. Again, this requirement was introduced a few years ago in order to improve the confidence Albertans have in home inspectors, which ultimately improves industry as a whole.

No doubt, the intent of Bill 12 is to reduce the number of unscrupulous builders in Alberta, raise the overall quality of homes, and increase consumer confidence in the home construction industry. So while I will be supporting the intent of the bill and will be supporting it at second reading, I do have, though, a number of questions that I hope to have answered before third reading and perhaps in Committee of the Whole.

One of those questions is, by the way, what impact this will have on small, independent home builders. These are reputable, long-standing companies that employ five, three, four, a dozen employees. They may only have a handful of homes built every year. How will they be impacted by this additional requirement, I wonder. My understanding from reviewing the bill is that the licence doesn't require the home builder to have completed any specific education that I can see so far. My colleagues and I will be reaching out to these builders to ensure that small, reputable builders' concerns are being heard. I hope that the government is doing the same.

Another question I have is: who is responsible for overseeing and issuing these licences? I didn't happen to see that very easily on the site so far, but I understand that the Department of Municipal Affairs is going to be overseeing this licence. Alberta has a long and successful history of delegating regulatory authorities, as I mentioned earlier, like the Alberta Association of Architects and the Alberta Land Surveyors' Association.

Was there any consideration, therefore, to delegating the authority to an industry association for this purpose, I wonder. Home building may not be rocket science, Madam Speaker, but it still takes a lot of expertise, and I'm not sure that a bureaucrat sitting in an office in Edmonton, who may have never worked in the industry, as an example, is going to have the expertise required to ensure that this licensing legislation is going to do what it intends to do. So I look forward to the answers to the questions as to who might be managing this new department and how it will work.

Furthermore, I wonder: how will this impact the housing market and home prices? I understand that a house is often the single largest purchase an individual or couple can make in their lifetime, and they deserve the protection and assurance that what they're buying is of quality, as we've talked about already today. However, the issue of licence costs cannot be made in a vacuum. For instance, last fall we approved changes to off-site levies that a municipality can charge developers. We are aware that all these additional costs cumulatively may not be large by themselves, but in total they can increase the cost of a new home to the point where regular Albertans are simply unable to afford to have the luxury of owning their own home.

I'm looking forward to hearing from the industry and the ministry as to how we will continue with this extra amount of cost being put onto the homeowners, and I look forward to continuing this debate on this legislation, as I said earlier, perhaps in the next couple of days during Committee of the Whole, to find out some of those answers.

I will close by saying that with positive responses to those questions, I will consider supporting this bill at second reading, and I look forward to hearing the answers to those questions and the discussion in the upcoming debates.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I just want to once again remind all members that we do not refer to the presence or absence of members in the House.

I will call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Carson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's an honour to rise to speak to the second reading of Bill 12, New Home Buyer Protection Amendment Act, 2017, as one of two cosponsors. I'd also like to thank the Minister of Municipal Affairs for bringing this bill forward and also to reiterate some of the sentiments that he's heard from his constituents and stakeholders since bringing the bill forward.

As I've been talking with my community about this bill, the number one thing that I've heard over and over again is: I cannot believe that this isn't in place already. It's really not hard to understand this disbelief, Madam Speaker. As the minister stated, the majority of Canadians, 75 per cent of them, have the protections and benefits of a builder licensing program. I would say that it's about time Alberta moved forward to protect both consumers and qualified builders from the consequences of bad builders in our communities.

I can tell you that since becoming an MLA and, even before then, in my previous line of work as an electrician, I've heard stories of bad builders costing homeowners upwards of thousands of dollars in extra expenses just because they simply didn't do the job right in the first place. I've listened to and spoken with constituents about how devastating these bad practices can be and the stress it causes to not only not have a home but to be out potentially thousands of dollars as well.

It's important to note that without a licensing system we have no ability to remove accreditation from a poor builder who has a documented history of fraud, weak finances, or no credentials. By passing Bill 12 and establishing a builder licensing framework, we can protect homebuyers and the many builders here in our province. Let's be clear. We are dealing with a few bad apples in the industry. The builders in this province do recognize that licensing is needed to protect not just consumers but Alberta's home building industry. Currently anyone can be a builder in Alberta. There are no mechanisms to prevent builders from operating even after instances of fraud or violations of statutes such as labour laws, and this, I believe, needs to change, Madam Speaker.

Through consultations carried out by the Ministry of Municipal Affairs, we have heard from families and home builders alike that builder licensing will help to ensure transparency for consumers while holding bad builders to account within their industry. Once again, if passed, Bill 12 will reduce the risks prospective homeowners face by establishing a licensing system for home builders, providing homebuyers with a single source of information on builders, and creating provisions to remove or suspend bad builders in order to protect people from negligent or unscrupulous businesses. At the end of the day, Madam Speaker, licensing builders will help to prevent issues in home construction by requiring builders to be accountable for their actions.

The move to license builders is not only supported by consumers but by industry leaders such as the Canadian Home Builders' Association as well as the Insurance Bureau of Canada and the Alberta chapter of the Canadian Condominium Institute.

It's important to note once again that across Canada British Columbia, Ontario, and Quebec all have implemented builder licensing systems.

As the minister outlined, Municipal Affairs conducted targeted stakeholder engagement in February and March of 2017 to hear stories from Albertans and to determine an appropriate scope of a builder licensing program here in our province. Of course, specific program details will be outlined in regulations, which will be developed in summer 2017, taking into account stakeholder feedback from initial consultations and any further engagement as required. Legislation and regulations will come into force on November 1, 2017, with phased implementation over six months and full implementation taking effect May 1, 2018.

An implementation plan for builder licensing will outline key requirements such as processes for receiving, assessing, issuing, renewing, suspending, and/or revoking licences; auditing procedures; an appeal process; and required IT infrastructure. This new licensing framework will proactively protect potential homebuyers on the front end of the home-buying process, and the current new-home buyer warranty program will continue to protect homeowners after the purchase of their new property. By integrating it with the New Home Buyer Protection Act along with the warranty program, the ministry is creating a system of checks and balances that requires builders to receive a licence before they can apply for a warranty, which is needed to obtain a building permit.

Madam Speaker, since the introduction of this bill I've had the opportunity to speak with members of my community, as I mentioned, who are currently in the process of building their own homes, and they do see this as a good move. As construction of new homes and infill projects picks up, it is important that we work to ensure the best possible outcomes for families choosing to build a new home. That starts with builder accountability, and I'm happy to see steps taken through this bill to ensure just that.

I want to take a moment to read a quote from the president of the Canadian Home Builders' Association, Alberta chapter.

CHBA – Alberta is looking forward to working in partnership with the provincial government on including licensing as part of the New Home Buyer Protection Act. While there is still plenty of work to be done, the ability to remove builders who demonstrate a proven negative track record will be a benefit to every Albertan – including those in the industry. Our members have always been on the leading edge of the industry, including requiring warranty coverage for more than 40 years. We want to make sure that licensing protects affordability and choice for Albertans – while also recognizing the many upstanding builders providing homes and jobs throughout the province.

What this bill will do is to empower consumers by establishing a one-stop shop so they can be informed and confident in their choices. Madam Speaker, this government made a commitment to make Albertans' lives better, and that's exactly what we're doing by ensuring that families can be making better, informed decisions when purchasing a home from a licensed and qualified builder.

I'd like to thank the minister for bringing this important piece of legislation forward. I look forward to the debates that arise, and I encourage all of my colleagues to support this passing.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other speakers to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's an honour to speak about Bill 12, the New Home Buyer Protection Amendment Act, 2017, and I'm especially proud to be one of the cosponsors as well. Thank you to the Minister of Municipal Affairs for bringing this forward. It's a bill I'm proud to cosponsor, and I think we can all get very excited about it. There has already been quite a bit said about the bill by the minister and other members, the many benefits of this bill, because it is a very needed bill. I'd like to talk about some of the specific aspects of the bill, which is a made-in-Alberta solution.

When the wildfires hit Fort McMurray last year, the government moved quickly on the lessons learned from the Slave Lake wildfire and the 2013 floods in Calgary and area. That was to make sure that the public could stay informed while rebuilding their homes. We instituted a pilot program that required builders working on the rebuild to submit a declaration including key information on their corporate structure and history. That information was made available to homeowners so they could make informed decisions about their builder, and this was launched in June 2016. This bill's builder licensing framework builds on this process from the Wood Buffalo fire, and it strengthens the transparency across Alberta as well as offering proactive protection to Alberta consumers.

Melissa Blake, the mayor of Wood Buffalo, recently commented:

These measures build on the New Home Buyers Public Registry pilot, which empowered Wood Buffalo residents to make informed decisions during the rebuild process. Builder licensing promotes builder accountability and protects homebuyers in the biggest purchase of their lives.

Madam Speaker, that's what's at the heart of this bill. It is a government's responsibility to protect its residents and to ensure that when they are making an investment like purchasing a new home with their family, they can be informed and confident consumers. By licensing builders, we are also ensuring the protection of the many builders and small businesses of integrity in our province, who sometimes get shut out of the market by fly-by-night, unscrupulous companies that undercut them. It's this collaboration with Alberta builders, home sellers, homebuyers, homeowners, and other industry leaders that led to this bill being here today.

What makes the bill unique in Canada is the integration of the licensing program with the Alberta home warranty program. By reviewing and researching what has worked and what has not worked in other jurisdictions – this bill proposes full integration of our licensing program with our home warranty program. This integration, which would be unique to Alberta, ensures a system of checks and balances that puts consumers first. Builder licensing would proactively protect consumers before they choose a builder, and the New Home Warranty Program will continue to protect new-home owners after the purchase of their home. Both a licence and a warranty would be required before receiving a building permit, making sure the consumer is fully informed and protected before a building permit is even issued.

If this amendment is passed, licensing will also extend to condominium developers. Condo developers will also be required to receive a licence when building residential condos.

I'd like to read a quote from Anand Sharma, president of the Canadian Condominium Institute's north Alberta chapter, who recently said:

CCI North Alberta is very pleased that the Alberta government is proposing legislation that will protect new condominium owners. This type of consumer protection legislation has been desperately needed for decades. It will hold developers accountable for poor building practices and allow condominium boards to prevent large special assessments. It will make a tangible difference in protecting consumers.

When I talk to people in my riding, this is what they want to see from the government, legislation that puts them first and strengthens small business. Implementing builder licensing in Alberta will increase builder accountability, provide increased protection for homeowners, and will support enhanced quality of home construction in Alberta. It will also support strengthening the safety code system, enhance professionalism of the builder industry, and protect great smaller home builders from being priced out of the market.

By putting the people of Alberta at the heart of our legislation, we are ensuring protection of the dream of home ownership for Alberta families so they can be informed when making one of the largest financial decisions of their life, and that's how this government is continuing to make life better for Albertans, by making them the centrepiece of our legislation.

I ask that my hon. colleagues please support this bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I was very interested in hearing the discourse from the hon. member regarding her experiences with respect to homebuyer protection and her interest in the matter. I was wondering if indeed she's had any familiarity with people that she's known who have actually suffered as a result of purchasing a home or a condominium that was built in less than a professional fashion and which ended up having problems.

I know that in Edmonton and Calgary and throughout the province we've typically had, of course, boom-bust cycles in real estate as a result of our resource-based economy, which quite often ended up resulting in a shortage of tradespeople and workers, particularly in the housing industry. As a result of that, you had people who were less than qualified actually building houses, and there was not enough oversight, and quite commonly you had problems with construction.

Most notably, recently you'll see in Edmonton and Calgary and Red Deer, in major centres anywhere in the province, the sort of leaky condo issue, where balconies were actually built where they leaned in towards the property and ended up drawing water into the walls and down the walls and into the actual buildings, so the building envelope was compromised. You'll see scaffolding around properties in Edmonton even right now that are only 10, 15 years old, and you think: "What in the world is going on? Why does this building need such a major revamp?" Well, it's because there were problems with the workmanship in the beginning.

I was wondering if the hon. member had experienced in Calgary those same issues or personally knew anybody affected by it.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, and thank you to my colleague for the question. I am sitting here drawing a complete blank, so I'm going to draw from my own experience. Now, I haven't ever purchased a brand new home, but many years ago I bought a home that was quite a bit older. I remember the first very cold day. This was in Massachusetts. It got to minus 20, which is, surprisingly, much colder in Massachusetts than it is in Alberta.

The furnace died. It was quite a surprise. I actually had to go and buy some diesel to prime it, which was a new experience for me. I'm sure the hon. member can appreciate buying diesel. It took a lot of work on a very cold day when my kids were little to get the furnace going, and what that experience does for me is that, you know, it really draws a parallel. Imagine buying a brand new home. You have the expectation that everything is going to work, that the weeping tiles will be installed so that your basement doesn't flood the first time it rains, that you have a reliable heating and cooling system so that your family is comfortable when we face extreme temperatures, that the doorbells and the electricity will all work.

With this kind of a program, we're going to be licensing builders to ensure that they are credible and reliable. In conjunction with the home warranty program, they will have recourse if they find themselves at minus 20 with a furnace that does not work.

The Deputy Speaker: Any further questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other speakers to the bill? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Like the previous member, I've never bought a new house. However, I've bought five houses during my lifetime and sold a couple, and I had experiences with each one. The second house I bought was here in Edmonton back in 1995. On the surface it looked like a pretty good house. I had my three-page checklist, and I checked everything off. I thought it was pretty good, but I found out there were other things I needed on the checklist.

Now, the house was 10 years old, and both my daughters, my grandson, and my stepson were living with me. In the basement of the house, which had been finished when the house was built – it was finished by the contractor – my daughters, my grandson, and my stepson had bedrooms, so they used the bathroom in the basement and used the shower. One day I heard this crash in the basement, and I ran downstairs. My daughter had been having a shower, and she slipped. She put her hand on the tiles around the bathtub, and her hand went right through. There was, I think, quarter-inch Gyproc behind it. It wasn't the wet rock. It wasn't, you know, the normal size. It was quite thin. What we realized was that when that contractor had put that bathroom in, they didn't do the bathroom to specifications.

There were many other little things that we found out about that house that, really, went right back to the builder of the house. Of course, after 10 years you certainly couldn't go back and try to find or get somebody to fix things like the weeping tiles. Yes, we had a little rain, and we had a little leak in the basement, again, having to get a contractor in to redo weeping tiles or put weeping tiles in because there weren't any in kind of a low part of the soil next to the foundation. My list is now five pages long when I go to buy a house because I have to check all of these things that I found out through my experience.

But I have to tell you that I am thrilled that we have come forward and done this. Like my seatmate here said, so many people have said: "You're doing this bill? I thought that was already the case." None of them had bought new houses, so obviously they didn't know that. I certainly think that we have some incredibly reputable builders throughout Alberta. I see some of the housing that goes up in Lethbridge, and I'm just amazed at the beautiful work that's done.

I've got friends who've bought new houses. Certainly, there's some really, really lovely construction and building and designs, so I think we're very fortunate. But, again, as my seatmate had said, it's that one bad apple. It's the one family who's been saving for 10 years to buy that first house, and they buy a house and start finding all kinds of problems.

My cousin in Lethbridge a number of years ago bought a house. They were living in the house probably a month and a half, and I went to visit, and there were little sticky notes all over the front hallway. I said, "What are all the sticky notes for?" She said, "They're where the nails or the screws are starting to pop out." I said, "This is a brand new house." She said, "I know." They had saved for that house. Here they have this house, and you walk in their front hallway and screws are popping out of the wall. Absolutely shameful. They went back to the contractor and wanted to get something done about it, and basically he just raised his hands and said: "The house is built. You bought it." I don't want that happening to any Albertan. It shouldn't happen.

When I was growing up, my mom and dad did buy a new house. My dad was somebody who if anything needed to be done, did it. If he didn't know how to do it, he went to the library and got a book so that he could fix something if it needed fixing. My dad supervised the construction company that built that house, that I lived in for 13 years. He supervised everything except the pouring of the foundation. Guess what? The only thing there was a problem with was the foundation, and my dad got a jackhammer and fixed it. With everything else in the house – the electrical, the plumbing, everything – he supervised it to make sure they did it right the first time.

That's the way I was raised, that when you do something, you do it right the first time, and then you don't have to do it again. It's like those lessons you learn in life. You don't want to repeat those bad lessons. That's a good lesson that I learned from my dad. I think this bill is a perfect example of telling the building industry that they need to do it right the first time and that they need to put their word behind it.

I'm thrilled that this legislation is in second reading, and hopefully it's going to be passed. I thank the minister for bringing it forward.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Connolly: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I just had a very, very quick question, I hope, for the member. I heard her talking. I was very thankful for everything in her speech. I know that in my riding I had someone come to my office because he had recently bought a house for his daughter, and they realized just over a year afterwards that in the attic the builder hadn't connected the vents from the bathrooms to the vents outside. When I heard about this, it was quite odd. He showed me pictures, and they had just blown insulation over top of where the vents were supposed to come out. There was no attempt to even connect those vents to the outside, which is completely ridiculous, and it is the home builder's fault. I just wanted to ask the member if . . .

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt, hon. member, but pursuant to Standing Order 4(2) the Assembly now stands adjourned until 9 tomorrow morning.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Good morning.

Let's take a moment to reflect, to recognize and send our thoughts to all those who were and continue to be affected by the recent flooding in Ontario and Quebec. It's times like these when we need to stand with our neighbours and let them know that they're not alone and to send our sincere thanks and appreciation to all those who are working tirelessly to ensure that the communities affected remain safe.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 12 New Home Buyer Protection Amendment Act, 2017

[Debate adjourned May 9]

The Deputy Speaker: Any members wishing to speak to this bill? The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Imagine, if you will, building your dream home. Husband and wife, three children: you're moving to a new community, so you're building your dream home in a new community. Because it's so far away, you can't do regular checks. The day of excitement comes. You're moving in. You're doing your final walk-through. You open your front door, and in your front entranceway is your gas meter because the person who built the house read the blueprints wrong, and instead of putting it at the front door, they put it inside the front door. To this day that gas meter is still in that front entranceway because they are still fighting with the builder to move it. That happened in Ontario. They don't have these kinds of laws, but there are horror stories all over Alberta.

I was married, and with my first husband we built our first home. We would go in every evening and check for, you know, little things that could be wrong. The builder didn't like it, so they locked us out of the house, and we couldn't check on anything. We go to do our final walk-through, and there were problems everywhere. Could you imagine someone putting the outlet for your in-home vacuum in the middle of a staircase, so you can't use it upstairs or downstairs? Or putting the electrical plug-ins for something – so here's your wall. You've got your electrical plug-in for your in-home vacuum. Twelve feet away you've got your outlet to plug in your in-home vacuum. It doesn't work. The cords are only four feet long.

These are the kinds of things that happen. The day of a housewarming having all four toilets crack in your house, and you've got water everywhere because they used faulty toilets that ended up being recalled. If you have a good builder, a licensed builder, these things get rectified. In the case of the toilets they were fixed within hours, but in the case of other things they don't happen as readily and get fixed as fast.

When you're building your dream home, you don't expect all the pitfalls. The shoddy, fly-by-night contractors that take advantage of people have to be stopped. People put their life savings into their homes so they can build their family. It's just not right. We have to be able to have laws that stop them. It doesn't matter who you are. You're not above ripping someone off, putting it bluntly.

I think that this will level the playing field. You have to be licensed, you have to be insured, and then the homeowner has something to come back on. I wouldn't want any of these types of horror stories to happen to anyone. I know that my friend in Ontario is still fighting with this, and her gas meter in her front entranceway is an atrocity.

I would encourage everyone in this House to support this bill to prevent any of these things happening to others. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), any questions or comments?

Seeing none, any others wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Stony Plain-Spruce Grove.

Mr. Horne: Spruce Grove-St. Albert. Still a crossboundary road, also a great community, totally different although they do work really well together.

Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, when I was much, much, much younger – I was about two or three – my dad was working for Safeway at the time in the advertising department, and he had moved up to Edmonton for the position. He met my mother, had two kids, and then the department transferred him back down to Calgary. He was actually from Calgary, so that meant we got to see his side of the family a lot more. But the relevance of this story is that Safeway paid for the moving expenses to move back down to Calgary. We moved into a community, a fairly new community at the time, in what is now Calgary-Shaw. It was, I believe, about two years old when we moved in. Of course, we weren't the original owners, but with two-year-old developments there were plenty of the original owners around.

There was an issue with the builder. For some strange reason they didn't install the windows correctly. I was trying to recall the term, but googling things when you don't have the term you're googling is not always that easy. Effectively, they installed the windows in such a way that if there was any water running down the window, the water would run down the Gyproc and get into the wall. Of course, as you can imagine, you now have not just a waterlogged wall, which poses all kinds of mould issues and everything, but you also now have a rotting support structure in your wall. Some of the windows in some of the houses started to rot out of the wall. This is only a two-year-old development, Madam Speaker.

This was, of course, very concerning for many of the residents, and they were, you know, looking to get this fixed. No homeowner buys a house expecting to have to replace the windows in two years, certainly not a new home. So individually they had to reach out to the developer, and the developer wasn't always responsive. Now, I was trying to do some research. Unfortunately, I couldn't find what happened to the developer. The residents did eventually get the developer to come back and replace the windows, do it properly this time. But that's just one of the issues that potentially could have arisen. Of course, when you have an issue where your windows are rotting out of your wall, you're now very concerned about what the rest of the work was like.

Now, with such a large investment, in the case of my family not just personally but for the company but certainly also for the individual – home ownership is a big investment. You know, in my community there's a lot of growth, a lot of new developments, and a lot of families take a lot of pride in being the first owner of their home, and for a lot of them it's a huge step forward. In fact, the only time I could imagine a bigger financial decision might be the decision to retire, but that instance will be more personalized. For such a big financial decision to then face such uncertainty and, in some cases, neglect of the product they're buying that is their home, that is very concerning.

I know many of my constituents are very concerned any time they hear that somebody's property has an issue, you know, three blocks away, whether that's that the sump pump doesn't quite work, especially around where I live in northwest St. Albert – it's a very flat piece of land. It used to be mostly boggy land, so all of the houses have sump pumps that are running at least once a day trying to deal with the water. You know, when a sump pump fails, it's a very big concern.

Of course, I believe that this legislation endeavours to strike a balance between the homeowner and the builder. Certainly, in instances where there is an issue, you know, perhaps if the builder buys some toilets that turn out to be recalled, that might not be an issue of the home developer, the home builder but the supplier. That's certainly possible. Without legislation like this they're now in a situation where they're liable for those. I think that this is a good step toward that balance between consumer protection and business protection. I think it's working towards a good middle ground there.

I think that this is a good bill. I would like to thank the minister for bringing this forward, and I hope to see everybody in this House support this bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), questions or comments? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Madam Speaker and to the Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert. You talked about, you know, water running down the insides of the walls, and you said that the builder did come back and replace the windows. Did the builder also come back and replace the structural damage that was done with the rotting two-by-fours and the Gyproc and all of the other little things that would have been affected by that kind of water coming down on the inside?

Mr. Horne: Yeah. Thank you to the hon. member for that question. Of course, I was three, four at the time. I don't quite recall.

The next step to the story of my moving around is that Safeway then tried to transfer my dad to San Francisco. He looked around and said: "Housing prices in San Francisco are insane. To find a house that I could afford would be a three-hour commute into work. I'm not doing it, not moving my kids." So we ended up in Prince George in B.C., and we lived there for about six months. My dad is in the design field. Then Conrad Black bought out the paper he was working at, so we moved back to St. Albert, and I've been there since. I've been in St. Albert since kindergarten plus a couple of years before moving to Calgary.

While I believe that the builders did in fact replace the structural damage, I was too young to quite recall, and I had a hard time finding an article on this instance, on this case, when I was doing some research when I saw the bill come forward.

Thank you for the question. Unfortunately, I can't give a definite answer.

The Deputy Speaker: Any further questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to speak to Bill 12, the New Home Buyer Protection Amendment Act, 2017. I'll be honest. The likelihood that I will buy a brand new home during my lifetime is probably relatively low. You see, I was raised fairly frugally. My parents didn't have a lot of money, and I didn't personally either, so I learned to be very careful about how I spent what I had. Certainly, working as a musician for a number of years – it's not known to be an occupation in which one makes a large amount of money – I had to learn how to live on a fairly low number of dollars. For myself personally, I spent many years renting before I finally got the opportunity to actually purchase a property.

In fact, Madam Speaker, I'll admit, you know, that I just recently upgraded my vehicle. I was driving a 1994 Toyota Camry that I bought for $500 back in September 2014 and continued to drive that after elected. It ran well. It served me well, and it was one of many vehicles that I bought. I haven't spent over $1,000 on a vehicle since 1993. So I'm not one to spend a large amount of money if I can find something that serves me well in a lower bracket.

Now, of course, housing is a bit of a different thing. You know, I did have the opportunity to buy my first property eventually in 2008, and that was in an apartment building that had been converted to condominiums. I had the opportunity to purchase there, and that was when I first moved into Edmonton-Centre. I had the opportunity to take over there. I lived there for about eight years before I purchased a new property just recently and moved in this past December, that again being a condominium of a sort, a unit in a three-storey fourplex just over in the community of Oliver here in Edmonton-Centre. Being that, Madam Speaker, I do really love living in the centre of our city and sort of that urban living, for those reasons, it's not likely that I'm ever going to buy a brand new home built from scratch.

That said, I certainly appreciate what this bill is bringing forward and the positive aspects that this is going to bring forward for Albertans and indeed many of my constituents because, as I said, Madam Speaker, my first home that I purchased was a unit in a condominium build, a converted apartment building. You know, one of the first things that happened when I moved into that building was that I was immediately asked to pay a special assessment to replace the balconies, which was fair. This was a building that was built in 1967 or so. Yes. Absolutely, it takes some time. You need to start to do some upgrades and that sort of thing.

I eventually went on to serve as the president of the condominium board for that building and certainly got a good appreciation for what goes into maintaining a building, what the costs are, and the things you have to look at over the long term. I certainly followed with interest many stories that I read about newer condominium developments around the province, indeed in many locations where builders were throwing up these condominium buildings very quickly, selling them, and then moving on, closing down the corporation that built the building, opening a new subsidiary to build the next building. Then the previous building that they built: within a year all of a sudden there are a number of things that are found to be wrong with it.

What happens then, Madam Speaker, is that the condominium board and the owners in that building are left holding the bill because the corporation that built the building no longer exists. They have no one that they can go back to for legal recourse, so owners are left with thousands and thousands of dollars in special assessments to bring a building up to the level where it should have been after the developer had actually built the property. This is something that has happened in many jurisdictions. Indeed, I believe there was one notable case in the Minister of Municipal Affairs' own constituency of Leduc-Beaumont, that we heard about quite a bit.

So I think this bill, Madam Speaker, does some very good work towards ensuring that that will not continue to happen or that indeed, should that sort of shoddy workmanship occur in any future condominium buildings, there will be recourse because, as has been discussed by many members, this bill provides for builder licensing within the province of Alberta. I think this is an excellent step forward because, as many members have discussed, whether it's building a new home or building a new condominium building, we need to have standards. Albertans should be able to trust that when they are buying a property, that property is built as well as it could be built, that they are not going to be hit with hidden costs, hit with costs for damages that should not be there, for issues that should not be occurring and know that when they buy a new home, they can be comfortable, they can feel safe, and they can know that they are making a solid investment.

Builder licensing, Madam Speaker, will directly address builder accountability. The New Home Buyer Protection Act doesn't address the qualifications for being a builder. Right now anybody in Alberta can be a builder regardless of their experience or skills, and this is unlike many other aspects of actual building construction. Of course, the people that do the work to build the home are expected to be professionals. I can't just hang out a shingle and call myself a plumber. I have to have my certification; I have to have my ticket. I have to be able to – it's all inspected. All these things are checked. For any of the trades where people are involved, one must have training, and there must be certification.

It's incredibly important now that we bring in the opportunity for this licensing program. Under the legislation now, builders will be required to submit an application and pay a fee and then hold an active licence in order to be able to build. That licence will be for a one-year period and will allow the builder to apply for multiple building permits during that time, after which the builder then would have to apply for a renewal. But here's the most important part, Madam Speaker, in my view. The application process will require builders to submit information about their history, their track record, their financial standing, and their corporate structure. All those will then be assessed by the registrar of the new-home buyer protection office to ensure that all licence applications, then, are on the straight and narrow.

As I said, Madam Speaker, there has been this practice where builders will have multiple corporations that they use to build specific buildings, specific homes, specific units, and then they will retire that and move on to another. This now will require that when they submit an application for a licence or when they submit a renewal of their licence, all that information must be provided. It will be reviewed, and now it will be able to be tracked. Now Albertans will be aware of the work that has been done by a corporation or a builder in previous work, and the office will have the opportunity to review that and decide, then, whether this builder should be allowed to continue to build in the province of Alberta. I think that that is an incredibly important protection indeed because home ownership is one of the biggest financial decisions any family may ever make.

Certainly, Madam Speaker, as I said, I am loath to spend large amounts of money. I'm very careful about how I do that. I just bought a new vehicle recently and took my time, thinking very carefully about what I was going to get, how I was going to do it, trying to find the best deal I could. I know that Albertan families, when they're looking for a home, especially when they're making that kind of an investment, an investment in something that needs to support them, that needs to be there for them and their children for many, many years to come, want to have that kind of reassurance. I think what this bill is proposing is a very fair and balanced measure. It's going to be good for consumers.

But, Madam Speaker, it's also going to be very good for the home building industry. Certainly, I think the majority of builders in our province are very good and reputable people. They do quality work. It's an important part of our economy. It's an important part of how our cities grow and thrive. But having even just a few bad apples can give a bad reputation to the larger group. Indeed, I know that in conversations that I've had with folks at the Canadian Home Builders' Association and some others, I think they are very much in support of ensuring that we have ways to track and identify and weed out those who would abuse the system, those who would take advantage of consumers, and ensuring that we are instead giving the opportunity to those who are going to do quality work, who are going to provide Albertans with good homes, who are going to continue to make sure that the industry can enjoy a good reputation and that people can have trust in the people that are building their homes.

As I said, Madam Speaker, this application process will require builders to submit their information about their history, their track record, their financial standing, and corporate structure. That will go to the new registrar of the new-home buyer protection office. They will assess that information.

It's quite similar to the process that we put in place for the enhanced builder information program in Fort McMurray, which I think was a good template. Madam Speaker, I think that was a great program that was put in place, especially when we have people in situations like we do in Fort McMurray, who indeed have lost so much, you know, and are just working to build back their lives, to provide them that extra layer of protection to help them navigate. That's one less stress that they have to have in a very difficult time of their lives.

Many of these requirements already exist for builders and are just going to be folded in under this legislation, and then the registrar will determine if the applicant meets the licence criteria and whether there are any other conditions that should be placed on that licence.

Now, of course, Madam Speaker, we don't just have builders that just build new homes; we have the area of renovations. Certainly, before I moved out of my first home, I did do some substantial renovations in that suite. I tackled some of those myself. I certainly enjoy the opportunity to do that when I can. I took the opportunity over the Christmas break, when I moved into my new home, to remove some of the carpet and replace it with hardwood. That was admittedly the first time I'd taken on sort of a task of that size, but I found it very personally satisfying to be able to spend part of my Christmas break on a task that was, say, a bit more mundane and a bit less intellectually taxing, perhaps, than some of the work we do here or challenging in a different way, certainly still using my brain but a different part of it, perhaps, than from day to day here in the Legislature.

So I certainly appreciate that in many cases people are looking to do renovations of their home. Certainly, here in the downtown core, within my constituency of Edmonton-Centre that's something that happens fairly often. People will buy older properties, and they will choose to do substantial renovations to them. Builder licensing, then, will be required for substantial renovations where at least 75 per cent of the home's footprint is changed such as if there's a full rebuild or if there's a top-floor redesign. That more or less aligns the home warranty with the home warranty requirements under the New Home Buyer Protection Act, where a renovation, as I said, that alters 75 per cent of a home's footprint is defined as essentially being a new home and therefore requires a warranty. Applying this only to substantial renovations is going to keep us from overregulating the industry.

Certainly, I recognize that there are many people that do much smaller scale renovations. Indeed, when I had the kitchen in my previous home redone – this would have been last April or May – I thought it could be done quickly and in a matter of a short time. I thought it could be easily accommodated during session. I can assure you, Madam Speaker, that I don't think there was ever a renovation that has been done quickly and in the time that you anticipate. It certainly ended up being a bit more of a disruption than I had intended, but I deeply appreciated being able to hire a good contractor or renovator, indeed some local musicians and venue owners who also do some renovation work on the side. I was very happy to be able to hire them to come in and do that work for me as these days I don't have quite as much time as I used to and an opportunity to do these sorts of things. They did excellent work.

But, Madam Speaker, while it certainly made a big difference to my kitchen, it was not a substantial change to my actual home. It didn't do anything that would affect the safety of the home. It didn't take out any load-bearing walls or any walls at all, really. It was a matter of just replacing the cupboards and the flooring and doing a bit of a repaint. It's not something, I think, that would necessarily require licensing for someone to do that kind of work. I think we have some robust systems in place. You know, before I chose a person to do that renovation, I of course checked their references. I had the opportunity to talk to many people who knew them. I was able to work within my own network to have a good sense of reassurance in the work that they would do.

It's much different when somebody is doing a much more substantial renovation or indeed building a home, where it can be a lot more challenging and daunting to sort of find your way through that marketplace. Indeed, to throw citizens out and just sort of say, "You're on your own; you figure it out; buyer beware" is perhaps not the best approach there.

In the case of renovations, you know, we recognize that it can vary pretty significantly. It can be anything from just simply repainting or, as I said, redoing the kitchen. It could be just redoing a bathroom, or, as I said, it could be a gutting and reworking of an entire home. The builder licensing is focused on ensuring quality construction. The smaller renovations, that are more cosmetic and that sort of thing, are not really falling under that rubric. We only require under this bill, then, builder licensing, again, if it's at least 75 per cent of the home's footprint that is being changed.

In the case of subcontractors – and of course there are many of those within the province of Alberta, Madam Speaker. For a few years I worked for the Canada Revenue Agency. When I started working there, I was working on their phone lines for their business inquiries call centre here in Edmonton. We would be speaking with individuals, a large number of them who were self-employed, about business tax issues.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you very much to my colleague from Edmonton-Centre. I was quite interested in your story about your use of your time over Christmas. I sew, a number of years ago, not since I've been elected, and I had a sewing room. It had carpet on the floor, and I couldn't move my sewing table. So I did pull up the carpet, and I laid a laminate floor in my sewing room. I have to say that I did a pretty good job. Laying the first three boards, I had to cope around corners. It was a long wall, and I went right to the cupboard, so I was pretty pleased with myself. But it wouldn't lay flat, and I couldn't figure out why it wouldn't lay flat. I sat down on the floor, after doing it over two or three times, and kind of had a conversation in my head with my dad, who was pretty good at doing those things. I realized that I needed to put another row down because the weight of it wasn't heavy enough to lay flat. I did complete it in a day and a half.

I'd appreciate hearing a little more about you laying the floor. I'm impressed that you did that.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, thank you to my colleague from Lethbridge-East. Certainly, as I said, it was a bit of a challenge, but it was one that I embraced quite readily. I found that generally what it comes down to is just being patient, and indeed, Madam Speaker, if you lay a good foundation – this is what I learned. I called over a friend to give me a bit of advice for the first bit of the floor, and what he showed me was that if you carefully, very carefully, lay out your measurements for your first few rows, make sure that they are very tight – make sure, folks, that you lay a good, solid foundation – everything else flows very well from there.

Indeed, I think that's largely what this legislation is looking to do, to set a firm foundation for our home building industry, to ensure that we have at least this minimum standard, this basic licensing, which then gives a lot of reassurance for consumers and also gives a solid foundation that we could continue to build on as a province as we continue to grow. Indeed, Madam Speaker, Alberta remains the youngest province in Canada. We have the largest number of children and babies in the country at the moment. We know that we have many people coming up. There are going to be many families that are going to need new homes, so it's indeed important that we have good protections in place to ensure those homes will be well built and protected.

As I was saying, Madam Speaker, in terms of subcontractors, when I worked at the Canada Revenue Agency, one of the calls we'd get most often would be from young tradespeople, indeed, who were just getting started and having to call in to register a GST number. In the industry, in the construction industry in particular, it has gone to a system where it is largely a fairly dense thicket of subcontractors, so every individual who does each piece of a job in each situation is considered to be their own employee. We recognize that that is a big part of the building industry, and certainly subcontractors will do a lot of work, particularly, I think, in areas where there are a number of homes that are being built by a single building company. In those cases we recognize that the builder is responsible for managing the project, including which subtrades they should hire and how much financial risk they're going to assume.

So we are not including the subtrades under builder licensing because that is indeed the responsibility of the builder. In this case we are saying that it's the responsibility of the builder to oversee their subcontractors, to ensure that the work of each of those individuals is of a quality that is going to continue to support the reputation of the builders themselves and, indeed, to be sure they can continue their licensing. I think that's a reasonable approach, Madam Speaker. I mean, after all, Alberta has a very strong system of qualified tradespeople. We have very competent builders. Licensing is about supporting those who do good work, to help them to set themselves apart from those who don't. So builder licensing will not and should not, I think, in fact, impact trades individually.

Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to this bill. I look forward to hearing from some of the other members, and I look forward to seeing this bill, hopefully, pass.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Ms McLean: For questions or comments?

The Deputy Speaker: Okay. You've got about 40 seconds. Go ahead.

Ms McLean: Thank you. I would just like to assist the hon. member. He made some comments about renovations. I'd just like to be able to clarify for the House and the record, consumer protection being very important to our government, that prepaid contractors are covered under Service Alberta for renovations. This legislation I think we can all be quite proud of. It covers when there are situations of 75 per cent or more of your house being renovated. When that percentage threshold is met, then this legislation certainly does cover that.

Thank you, hon. member.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I want to thank the member for his comments earlier. I thought they were well spoken. I find it interesting that he was starting this job off with a car that was worth about $500 because I think that I have driven many of those same vehicles in my life. It's just nice to see that sometimes there's a lot that we have in common as we enter into this profession.

I rise today to speak to Bill 12, New Home Buyer Protection Amendment Act, 2017. I want to let the House and my constituents know that I have a great deal of empathy for both sides of the groups of Albertans that will be affected, both the producers as well as the consumers in this case. I don't know if this is a good exercise to go through, but you could maybe turn your minds back a few years on my life and picture a much younger version of myself and see a university student before you looking for a job and finally being successful and finding a job in the construction industry. It happened to be a company that was owned by a neighbour down the street. I show up on that first day for this job, and I'm about a 150-pound, skinny kid that's looking for some way to work his way through university. I met this big, gruff bear of a man by the name of David Mitchell. Dave would be my foreman for the next three or four years of my life when I was looking for work in between schooling.

Dave was a man of few words. When I got onto the job, they were building a house, and they had just finished pouring the basement and were working on the subfloor. I came up to the job site, and he grabbed this shovel and said, "Do you know what this is?" I said: "Yeah. It's a shovel." He walked me over to the basement, and he threw it down into these three huge piles of sand, and in very Dave fashion he said: "That's a basement. That's sand. Level it." Those were my instructions for the rest of the morning.

Well, that was my introduction to the world of construction. As I said, for the next three or four summers you could find me variously on the end of a hammer or up on a roof or caulking or subflooring or landscaping. Probably the worst of it was putting a 150-pound kid on the end of a wheelbarrow full of cement as he was frantically trying to go through a front door and then pour some cement floors and do those kinds of things.

So I have some experience at the construction level. I wouldn't suggest that that makes me an expert by any stretch of the imagination, but I do know that the company that I worked for always tried to build a home that a family would be safe in, that they would feel that they were getting good value for their money, that they would be happy living in and raising a family in. I know that there were times when, as the inspectors would come through or when the family would walk through if they'd prebought the house, they would look and we would make adjustments, and we would deal with any issues that either the inspectors or the family might have. It was always a symbiotic relationship, our job being to produce a house that the people would feel comfortable in and know was well built.

Well, fast-forward a few years. You've graduated from university, you've got your job teaching, and you now are married with three kids, a mortgage, and a home. You can understand as a consumer how important that home is. I mean, the reality is that it's probably the largest investment that we'll make in our lives, and when we find out that there are issues with this home that we have purchased, when it's brand new especially, there's concern. Sometimes the cash register can run up pretty quickly when you're trying to deal with some of those concerns. You know, I think we've all probably in our lives had to address defects and problems in our homes, and when you're a teacher on a single income, oftentimes you become that subcontractor trying to deal with those problems and those issues.

I think Bill 12 tries to address some of these concerns. While I appreciate the intent of it, and I will probably, at the end of the day, support the bill, there are some concerns that perhaps need to be addressed. On the positive side, let's start with, you know, that currently there is no recourse for families for the impact of a substandard home, a new build, but this bill will remedy that by providing safeguards for homeowners by providing a licensing regime that builders will have to follow. The standards that that licensing regime will set should, I believe, provide an additional level of peace of mind that a homeowner needs when making such a large investment, and I believe that that's a good thing. I think it will increase the level of accountability for a home builder to the purchaser or the homeowner. I believe that that is well intended and is worthy of support.

You know, there are times when we hear the bad-news stories. Maybe we've been a part of those bad-news stories. I know that in the house that we're living in presently, I wish I had been the new homeowner rather than somebody down the line because when we purchased our used home, we found out after three or four years that there were problems with the sewer system. When, at the end of the day, it was finally discovered what the issue was, it was that the original home builder had not built the house to grade. As my plumber put it: crap don't run uphill. Trust me, when we brought the town out and we started talking about, "How did this pass inspection?" and "How did 12 or 13 or 15 years ago . . ."

Ms McLean: Get a good inspector before you buy.

Mr. Smith: Yeah. They don't tend to go through the sewer pipe.

Ms McLean: Mine did. I paid for it.

Mr. Smith: Yeah?

Ms McLean: Yeah.

Mr. Smith: Well, actually, ours did as well, but it was about six or seven inches difference. As long as the kids had a bath two or three times a week and it flushed it out, we were good, but if all of a sudden it didn't work that way, it could get plugged up.

Ms McLean: The moral is bathe your children.

Mr. Smith: Yes. You know what? Trust me, when you've got a seven- or eight-year-old boy, you're having those conversations.

The reality is that there are times when I truly can understand the flip side of this, the purchaser's side of the agreement, and I think that this bill addresses some of those issues. I think that, you know, this bill encompasses warranty programs, so it should mean that there's a capacity for your purchaser to be able to fall back on those kinds of things if need be. I think that generally there's some really good material in this bill that needs to be pursued and supported.

There are some concerns that I think the House should consider as well. You know, there are small builders out there that are not building hundreds of houses every year. As a matter of fact, in some cases I'm aware of companies where they're actually one-at-a-time builders. They're very specific. They find the client. That client wants a very specific kind of house, and they build to meet the needs of that client. They might only build three or four houses in a year, and they'll act as their own general contractors and site managers. It's a family business where the husband will often do, in this case, much of the initial preparation work for the building, looking at the excavations and the finishing grades for the houses that they're building.

When I've talked with some of these companies, they do have some concerns. You know, one of them is that while this bill is supposed to be revenue neutral, they're not so sure. They're unsure of the impact in their specific instance, when they build one house at a time, and what that will mean for increased costs related to the licensing. While they understand that the licensing will be some of the lowest in the country, it's the economies of scale that they're worried about. To assume those additional costs would be burdensome on them, so they have to pass them on to the consumer, and that makes them, again, perhaps less attractive an option for people when they're looking to find a builder for their houses.

We have to remember that this licensing fee has to be added to a series of other costs. I'm not trying to be digging at anything here, but obviously even the carbon tax that we have being placed on society has added additional costs, and to a small-scale builder those are costs that either they have to absorb or they have to pass on to the consumer. So in this particular case they're worried about their profit margins and whether they will be negatively impacted. They're worried a little bit about some of the additional time that's going to be spent on paperwork and administration. When we take a look at section 4.1(2)(a), there's perhaps a concern there. The registrar may "require an applicant to take . . . courses and examinations for the purposes of ensuring that the applicant . . . [meets] the qualifications and conditions" for prescribed qualifications and conditions for licensing. In 4.1(2)(b) the registrar may "set and administer courses and examinations."

In the company that I'm thinking about, Madam Speaker, they're self-taught general contractors. They've been very successfully in business for many years for a variety of individuals. They work very closely with their clients. They make sure that as issues develop in the building, they have dealt with those issues, that the purchaser, the buyer, has acceptable workmanship that's going into these buildings. They've never had an issue with home inspections, and they've just got questions. What will this mean to their business as somebody that is a self-taught general contractor but a very successful one?

Everything considered, the capacity for small-scale builders to continue with current businesses and business plans where they're only producing maybe a few single-family dwellings a year – it's becoming harder and harder to do that. The trend in our economy that I think all of us find troubling is when the smaller businesses, the small mom-and-pop operations, the family businesses, face challenges in continually trying to find ways to be more efficient, to continue to exist amongst a climate of larger scale businesses. We have to be very careful about the cumulative impacts that continue to pile up on these businesses.

You know, even though in my own personal case perhaps there were some issues with the inspection system, I think that in general the inspectors that we have that are looking at electrical and gas and all of the inspections you have to go through as a builder do a pretty good job across this province to ensure that our houses are being built safely. They require a body of knowledge that allows them to be an expert, to make sure that the houses are meeting code and meeting standards and that it's followed through at each of the stages of the building of the house. Generally I think that the work that's being done is meeting a high level. I believe that it's holding builders to account.

Just a question, I guess, that I have is that if there is a gap between the inspections and the security of the build for the homebuyer, I'm just wondering if there's maybe not another way of ensuring that the work that is being done addresses the shortcomings in the current system rather than producing another bill.

Having said that, I think we've seen with the rural municipality of Wood Buffalo that they've done a pilot project there, and it's worked. So I do intend to support the intent of this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments for the previous speaker under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I've actually been really enjoying the comments from my colleague across the way. I want to ask questions in a couple of different areas. I was interested to hear that you actually have a mortgage on your home, as I do, actually. I've had a mortgage on a home since 1980, and I continue to pay on that mortgage. I think it's been one of the best investments that I've ever made in my family's life. I've used a secured mortgage to get a lower rate, and I've actually used that lower rate to do other infrastructure support and to buy things that are important for the future of my family like my children's education and, you know, improvements to our property.

I'm bringing this up because I often hear from the member that deficit spending is such a bad thing and that that party over there has never heard of a deficit that they like, and they rail against using the government's good credit to basically get a loan at a very low rate so that we can build infrastructure like the schools in the member's riding or the roads in the member's riding or the bridges in the member's riding. So I'm actually interested in hearing his reaction to that comment about the importance of being able to use wise investments and securitization, basically, in the whole province.

The other thing that I would ask him about is his more recent comments about the impact of this bill on the small, if you wish, mom-and-pop type of constructor. I think that this is a situation in which the government can help some of these people meet the requirements that all of us as citizens of this province actually expect of a builder. I think this is an example where regulations brought in by the government actually are going to be helpful to the business to assure confidence of the buyers of those homes, and that may actually help the businesses to acquire more customers.

On both of those questions, I look forward to the comments from the member.

The Deputy Speaker: Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you for the question. You know, as a teacher we made good money, not as good as doctors, but we made reasonable money. As a single-income teacher we made reasonable money to be able to raise a family, but it was always an issue in my family that I could have a mortgage, or I could have a car payment. I couldn't have both.

I can remember the time my brother was told he had two weeks to live, and in his generosity as he was winding up his affairs, he said: I want to send your family down to Disneyland. We had had many conversations, and I can remember saying to him at the time: you know, Mike, not sending my kids to Disneyland is not child abuse, okay?

Ms McLean: Sending them is.

Mr. Smith: That's abuse for this man here because I can't take the crowds there.

But the reality was that as a family on a single-income teacher's wage we had to make choices, and we had to make decisions. Disneyland was out; camping at the Brazeau was in.

So when we start talking about debt and deficits, I've always believed . . .

The Deputy Speaker: As the next speaker to the bill I'll recognize Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak to Bill 12, New Home Buyer Protection Amendment Act, 2017, this morning. It's a topic that has really touched me over my life, starting right at the very beginning. I was raised in a family that was led by a union carpenter who raised six children on that carpentry wage, and his motto was always to measure twice, cut once. He did a lot of home construction earlier in his career. It did eventually morph into more commercial construction as he became a superintendent and built such things as the Bonnie Doon swimming pool, which, to me as an eight-year-old, when I went to visit it on a Saturday while it was under construction and the pool was just a mass of rebar, looked pretty massive, and I was pretty amazed that my dad was the one who was making that pool. He was very proud of what he did and did it right until his retirement and ended up building many schools, which the Minister of Infrastructure is happy to continue doing with investments now.

The evolution of construction is really what I'm trying to get at here in terms of home building. If you look at the history of home construction in this province, starting from the early days of the province, a lot of times people would build their own homes, whether it be the farmhouse or even in town. I know that my great-grandfather built a house close to Commonwealth Stadium in about 1920, which they lived in when he was actually employed building the Alberta grain elevator terminal in 1925, which was located in Athlone, along the railway tracks close to where I grew up. That big grain elevator building, which for a long, long time was one of the biggest if not the biggest building in the city, was built prior to the use of diesel engines. It was built using donkeys and steam jennies to get that massive structure constructed.

The evolution of construction has really changed a lot from where you had barn-raising bees and neighbours would help each other build their own homes. You didn't necessarily have to concern yourself about the quality of construction because it was your neighbour and yourself building each other's homes. The history or the fact is that the construction materials that were used were full-dimension lumber, and everybody helped each other on it. The buildings would stay firm and solid for a long, long time, and warranties weren't something that were necessarily in high demand. But over time, as people moved off the farms and came in to populate the cities in the postwar era, you'll find that the mass construction of homes necessitated that they be built by construction companies and individuals who would build them on a for-hire basis.

Even in that postwar boom you would find that the philosophies of quality and workmanship that were inherent in the construction of the homes that were built by people building them for each other and for their neighbours was transferred into the building construction trades during that postwar boom era. I know that in my real estate career, where I sold the other side of 800 homes over 30 years, I've seen a lot, and I've seen particular eras where housing construction shifted in terms of the quality and the building materials that were put into the homes.

If you look at buying a house or if I was looking at listing a house or having a buyer of mine make an offer on a house, if it was built, say, prior to 1975, I had a fair degree of comfort that I knew that house was going to be well constructed. There were not going to be any structural issues, probably not going to be a foundation problem, and I knew that it was going to be pretty square and true because prior to that period of time you ended up with people who were building with dimensional lumber, and there was a self-regulating type of atmosphere. Even though during boom times postwar there were massive numbers of houses built, the guiding principle was, I think, pride of workmanship, and it didn't seem to be an issue as far as quality of construction.

Once we got into sort of our boom-bust cycle during our oil booms here in the '70s, something shifted, and we ended up having diminished dimensional lumber and shortages of trades, lack of oversight on construction sites, and massive numbers of homes being built when quality labour wasn't available. As a result of that, we ended up having problems for the first time on a significant scale. That showed up when you went to sell a property or when I was working with buyers and it was a house that was, you know, built in that era. It was two-by-four construction, and you knew what the windows were.

You really made sure that you had your client get a home inspection that was done by somebody that, prior to the home inspectors being licensed, a home inspector that you knew did good work. That way you protected your buyer from getting into a property that perhaps was going to cause a problem down the road.

The New Home Buyer Protection Amendment Act, 2017, isn't necessarily only to protect the new-home buyer. It's also the secondary buyer that is being protected by this legislation because it's not a problem that necessarily shows up during a home inspection when the buyer is first buying a brand new home. It's two or three years down the road, after that house has been subjected to various weather conditions and spring rains and so forth, that you start seeing problems with leaky windows or leaky balconies or other things that aren't normally apparent until the house has experienced a couple of years aging. The secondary buyer is part of the whole process here in terms of protection for these homes that are initially bought on the market as brand new.

As I said before, measure twice and cut once. Prevention is really the best medicine, and that's what this legislation is doing. It's preventing problems from occurring in the first place by ensuring that the companies that are building brand new homes have qualified people doing that construction, that they are competent to be involved in home construction, and that the product they offer to the market is something that's not going to end up costing either the primary or secondary buyers a whole lot of headaches and a whole lot of money to solve problems that should never have occurred in the first place because the home builder wasn't competent.

It's basically an inherent guarantee of quality if you have a home builder that is fully qualified and there are licensing regulations that ensure that any home builder knows what they're doing and is competent. That builds in a measure of quality guarantee into the homes that are first built.

Now, I know that back in the era of the earlier days you could really count on quality being put into the home. I talk about dimensional lumber. I remember having to help my grandfather in Thorhild. They built a home in 1947, and it was actually partly leased to the federal government because they operated the post office out of their home. That home, I was surprised to learn, had 10-inch thick basement walls. I learned that because I actually helped my grandfather with hammer and chisel cut a doorway in the basement wall to make a basement suite for the then principal of the Thorhild high school, who was named Mr. Michael Senych. He later became a member of this Legislature for the Social Credit Party in 1964, I believe, and served two terms.

In hammering and chiselling that doorway for the basement suite so that Mr. Senych could rent there, I learned that that basement was 10-inch thick. What they used for the aggregate inside that wall was actually fieldstones. Fieldstones were collected from fields around the village and put into that basement wall. It actually still stands now and was known as the big house in Thorhild. That's the type of solid construction technique that was used back then in terms of foundation, and then, of course, the dimensional lumber was – if you had a two-by-four, you knew it was two inches by four inches. The strength of those properties was guaranteed by the quality of the materials and the individuals helping each other to build their own homes.

My grandparents built that home in 1947 using their own labour and neighbours' manpower, and it still stands straight and true today. That's the type of thing that we want our consumers today to be able to expect from the homes that they have built by contractors today: contractors that are licensed, contractors that are proven to be competent, and contractors that will stand by their product because they have been fully trained and understand the most modern construction techniques and are held to that standard by licensing and regulations.

As I said before, the warranties, which were an earlier component of the New Home Buyer Protection Act, really try to compensate for harm after the damage is done whereas this piece of legislation takes the building trades one step further in consumer protection and tries to prevent the harm from being done in the first place by ensuring that those who are building properties, building houses are competent to do so and therefore protects not only the initial homebuyer but the buyer subsequently down the road by ensuring that the problems that might have been built into a home don't occur and cause harm to subsequent buyers.

So I'm fully in support of this piece of legislation. I know that, of course, home ownership is one of the biggest financial decisions any family will make. I don't recall too many situations where a family actually got burned after I did a home sale to them, but I know that there were situations where discoveries were made during home inspections which caused people to back off, and we were very thankful that they did actually have the home inspection done. In fact, if I had a buyer who perhaps in a hot market would say, "Well, no, this is a multiple-offer situation. I don't want the inspection. Just make it an unconditional offer. Don't do the inspection," I would recuse myself from that buyer and refuse to participate in the offer, knowing that the buyer was putting themselves at risk, and it wasn't something I wanted to condone.

It can be very, very harmful for a buyer to get into a situation where there has been a construction flaw in a house that was not caught by inspection during the construction of the property, and it can be devastating financially because you don't get insurance for that kind of thing. Your insurance comes in at the first stage of home construction, where it's the people who are building those homes who are responsible for making sure that they don't end up being their own worst enemy down the road. If you've ever been in that situation yourself, where either it's water damage or – it can be any number of things. Any system of the house can be flawed in its construction. It costs a lot of money, and it comes right out of the pocket of the homeowner. It can be a long-standing issue. It doesn't matter whether it's shingling that was done wrong or electrical outlets that were installed improperly or stairs too small or too high a height. Anything that was done not according to code or not according to proper professional construction standards can end up costing people a lot of money.

Now, I had heard from members opposite the question of whether or not this was necessary, that it was going to add undue cost. I really take issue with that. The fact is that builder licensing programs already protect 75 per cent of Canadians, and we need to be in line with the other provinces so we're not a destination for bad builders from elsewhere. Not only that; even if a person is a small home builder – building one, two, five homes a year – the amount that we are asking that the builders pay for a licence fee is hardly a king's ransom. I mean, you could carpet a bedroom for less than what this fee is going to be on an annual basis.

So I don't accept the argument that it's adding an onerous cost to home builders even if they are very small contractors. I think the need and the public interest, the public interest in knowing that there is a measure of protection in terms of licensing of home builders and standards for construction and knowledge and competence being put in place for home builders, far outweigh the argument that small home builders may find the relatively minor fee onerous.

I'm fully in support of the legislation. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, the member talked to us about his experience as a real estate agent, and I think that's a really valuable perspective to add to the debate this morning, so I really appreciate him sharing that with us. I just wonder if he can talk to us a little bit more about his experience with buyers, especially first-time homebuyers. You know, we hear about different names of builders in Alberta, and prior to this legislation being introduced, sometimes folks would feel more confident buying a home whether or not it came from one of these builders that you hear on the radio or on TV. I wonder if the member could speak to us about, you know, the confidence level of new buyers and his experience dealing with those as a real estate agent.

Also, I'm just curious. He talked about subsequent buyers. This not only protects initial buyers but buyers down the road. So is there an implication for a resale value of a home down the road, too? You know, homes tend to appreciate in value, but if we know that they are built according to certain standards, they may appreciate even further or not depreciate as much. I just wonder if the member could talk to us about those kinds of concepts in his experience.

The Deputy Speaker: Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As most members of this Assembly know, I could talk real estate forever. I'm certainly glad to have been changing the channel in my conversation on May 5, 2015, to actually being employed doing the job that I've always wanted to do even before I was a real estate agent. It's very pleasing to be here today, though, to speak about some elements of my past career in terms of buyer protection, that the member opposite had asked me to comment on.

The member asked about well-known builders or builders' names that buyers would shy away from or that within the industry were homes to stay away from. Of course, I won't name any names right now, but there definitely were some home builders who had a reputation for lower quality work, and one would stay away from them. Especially representing a buyer, you made the buyer aware, or buyers knew, by virtue of the publicity that these builders would get, that there were homes that they probably might not want to buy because of the reputation of certain builders, that was poor. That's one of the things one would have to guard against as a representative of a buyer. You know, of course, as a representative of a seller if there is an issue within a property that you're concerned with, disclosure of that type of a problem would be incumbent upon the seller, with some qualifications.

I know there was a period of time when, as part of the Alberta Real Estate Association, members who listed properties were required to have their sellers fill out a property disclosure statement as part of the listing agreement. Also, you would end up having buyers ask for that as a part of a condition of their offer, that the seller fill out this property disclosure statement. That ended up being a discontinued practice, but it certainly was a result or a reaction to the fact that many houses have some issues with them and that over time things occur that weren't readily noticeable to the owner of the house when they bought it and now really present an issue that may cause some financial expenses to the subsequent buyers.

That responsibility to disclose did force some stories to the surface about a particular home, and it also made it incumbent upon sellers to perhaps remedy some of the issues they might have had in their home that otherwise would have simply been kept silent, and the subsequent buyer would end up suffering and perhaps end up even suing the seller that they bought the house from for failing to disclose a problem, problems which in many cases really were systemic to the original construction of the house.

One of the things that we always consider when buying a property and when recommending or talking to our buyers is that you don't look necessarily only at how the house is going to serve you; you look at resale right from the beginning.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other speakers to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure today to rise and speak to Bill 12, the New Home Buyer Protection Amendment Act, 2017. I think this is a bill that aligns with the government's qualities, aligns with what this government has committed to this session, and aligns with what this government has committed this budget to be, a bill that will support Alberta families. It's a bill that's going to support Alberta families in probably the single largest financial decision any family will ever have to make. I am so proud we are going to be able to protect these people, these families and that they will have confidence in their homes.

Madam Speaker, my riding, Edmonton-South West, is one of the fastest growing ridings in the entire province. It's definitely the fastest growing riding north of Calgary. What that means is that in my riding there are record numbers of new home starts: people that are going out and starting their families, people that are going out and want to have somewhere with a yard to raise their kids, an apple tree in the back, and they're going to grow too many apples and then have to give them away to all of their friends. That's the type of family that's growing up in my riding.

Now, for those families, I hear a lot about the things they have to go through day to day. The types of stories that I've heard over the last few years include things such as the family who decided: "Now is the time we want to buy a new home. We've got the down payment together. We've been saving for a few years, and we're pretty excited. We have our first child on the way, and we want to have a great opportunity to grow our family as our finances improve." Now, that family... [interjection] Not my family, no. Another family. They then went on and they bought a house. They put a down payment with the builder. They put a deposit with the builder, and the builder started going.

The first month came along, and things were going well. The second month came along, and things were going well. This half is getting into the five-, six-month stage. It's almost half built now. Now, the builder that they had decided to go with decided that — well, the investors for that builder decided that this company was no longer viable. The company that they had chosen to build their home was no longer going to be viable, and their investors pulled out. This company had been building, I think, four or five homes on that block, Madam Speaker, and none of those homes were completed ever. In fact, today those homes are still sitting half constructed, empty on those lots, and those families are either involved in court cases or have given up on their deposits and moved on to other locations to try and start building a home again.

Madam Speaker, it's for stories like that, where I hear about families that put almost their entire life-savings into buying their first house, and then, really, because of bad practices, that make the entire industry look bad, practices that put a bad mark on the entire industry — no builder wants to be in that situation. That's where I think this legislation shines. I think that this legislation protects families from having to go through the stress and the burden of not knowing whether their home is going to be completed, not knowing what's going to happen. When you get a half-finished house, no other builder will finish it for you. You can't just go to the next builder and say: "Hey, I've got a half-finished house. Can you put the rest of the walls and the roof in?" Nobody is going to do that for you. They won't guarantee the original builder's work. They won't guarantee that that home qualifies for new-home warranty, which is mandatory in this province. It's not a good situation for anyone involved.

Now, I understand, Madam Speaker, that this legislation also covers things like condo builds. As somebody who has a number of condo buildings coming up in my riding as well, it's also something I'm very passionate about. We hear time and time again of condo developments, that sometimes get built, where you have tens of residents, hundreds of residents who have put substantial deposits down or have bought one or two units in those buildings. Now, with those buildings you often hear about there being deficiencies after. When there's a deficiency in a condo unit, the owners usually have to pay a special assessment, and that can mean tens of thousands of dollars to repair that. That might be something as simple as the balcony floorings not being done properly, or there might be a leak in one of the walls.

One of the stories that I heard was that the plumbing wasn't done properly, to code, in one of these condo buildings, so every single unit in that condo was assessed a $50,000 special assessment. That's quite substantial, Madam Speaker. It's $50,000. That's the down payment for a new home in my riding. Now, what went on from there was that the condo board got a very good legal opinion, and they said: "You know what? We could try to chase the builder, but we don't know what will happen. It could go to court. We might lose. We might win." You could flip a coin and decide, basically.

Or you could go to court, and if it's a shell company for a larger builder, that shell company will actually just close off and declare bankruptcy, and you won't have anyone to sue anymore. That's the type of situation that I've heard about in my riding.

I've heard about what's going on in the industry, and none of those builders that are doing those sorts of nefarious practices are making a good impression on the industry. We want to support our industry. We want to support our families. We want a situation where our industry is able to provide a good product and a good service to consumers so they're able to make responsible financial decisions, so they're able to have a home that they can be proud of, somewhere they can raise a family, somewhere they can have their kids grow up, walk to the school down the street, and have those types of situations.

Madam Speaker, that's why I'm so proud of this legislation. I'm so proud of our legislation, that's going to allow consumers to be able to look up the history of their builders and see how reputable their builders are so that our excellent builders that we do have in this province, the people who are doing very good work and creating very excellent homes for families, are going to be able to shine because it's going to be obvious who's doing a good job and who might not be doing quite as well.

Now, builder licensing programs, Madam Speaker, are already existent for 75 per cent of other Canadians, so it's not something new. It's not something exceptionally onerous. I think it's something that all members of this Assembly will agree supports the types of families – it's the type of consumer protection that we're looking for for Alberta. It's something that we've already seen in other provinces like British Columbia, Ontario, and Quebec, and when we look at these, we need to step in and say that we want to be at the forefront. We want to be right there at the front of the path, with the other provinces that provide a safe place to build and a safe place to live. If we ensure that the builders are doing the right type of work with this type of licensing program, we're going to be right there, because our families deserve that, and my families deserve that.

Madam Speaker, if you drive out to the airport here in Edmonton, for example, and you just look right, you just look into my riding, that whole stretch, new growth. That growth wasn't there five years ago, that growth wasn't there 10 years ago, and 15 years ago it was farmland. You're looking at it now, and there are entire subdivisions that have grown out. If you look at the electoral map of my riding and my district, you'll see entire neighbourhoods that don't exist yet on those maps, and those maps are only from 2012. It's not that long ago.

Madam Speaker, we have so many homes starting in my riding. We have so many people that are moving into my riding and are excited about the prospects that they're going to have, excited that they're going to be able to landscape their yard however they want. They're excited that they can start doing all these things. But all of that comes back to and starts with having a home that works, having a home that is up to code, having a home that is built right and isn't going to have significant deficiencies moving forward, a home that isn't going to cause you any troubles. You're not going to be worried about replacing the roof, let's say, significantly before the expected lifespan of that because of shoddy work. You don't want to be worried about: if I plug in my vacuum cleaner and my toaster at the same time, is my circuit box going to explode or something? Those are the things you don't want to be worried about. Now, I might be using a little bit of hyperbole. I don't think a circuit box would explode. It might cause an electrical fire, but I don't think that's preferable either.

Madam Speaker, I think that this is the type of legislation that this House not only can and should do, but I think we're obligated to do this type of legislation. I think it's something that we can go out there and say to every single person in our ridings – every single person in my community that I know bought a new home will say: I wish you had this when I bought my house. I have so many friends of mine and people who live in my riding who are right now involved in some sort of either a lawsuit or trying to arrange a settlement with their builder. It's not a unique situation. It's something that families that build new homes sort of begrudgingly accept. I think that this legislation puts us in step, where we don't have to accept that. We can say that we deserve a good house from day one.

I'm so proud to be able to support this legislation. Madam Speaker, I really do implore all members to vote in favour of this, and I look forward to moving forward. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other speakers to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm happy and excited to stand here in support of Bill 12, New Home Buyer Protection Amendment Act, 2017. As the Member for Edmonton-McClung alluded to, he was a realtor. He had to be certified under RECA. If you're going to a dealership to buy a car, it has to be certified under AMVIC. If you go to a bar to buy beer, it's certified under the AGLC. The paramedic who picks you up is certified by the college. The bus driver has to have proper licensing through Alberta Transportation to be certified to drive a bus. Even the guy selling hot dogs from the cart, which is amazing, out on the street outside the Federal Building has to be certified with AHS to sell us that hot dog. But right now we have a system in place where if you're building someone a home, the most expensive purchase that they're ever going to make, you don't have to be certified.

You know, at the end of the day, this is not a system in which we're trying to create more bureaucracy or more red tape or anything like this. This is where we're trying to protect consumers because it's their safety that's in jeopardy. The Member for Edmonton-South East . . .

Dr. Turner: South West.

Mr. Sucha: South West. Thank you.

. . . alluded to plugging in a vacuum and the circuit box exploding. While it was an extreme measure, you know, it's to think about how important electrical is and how important it is to make sure that your electrical is properly certified when it's in a house because, you know, a house is the place you keep to protect your stuff, yourself, your family, and your kids. We put a lot of trust in the builders of our homes. To be frank, we have some phenomenal builders in this province who do great work and who I would trust with my life, which we do every single day when we make a new purchase and we move into a home. But if we have a few bad apples out there, we're taking a risk.

It's very similar to many of the other items that I outlined, which was to make sure that we have proper certifications to protect individuals. That's why there is a lot of faith in our food service industry and why people can go and not think twice when they go to a restaurant and order a meal, knowing that if that meal is not cooked or not handled properly, you're putting your life at risk.

At the end of the day, it's important that we're making sure that we move forward with licensing builders in an appropriate fashion, that isn't cumbersome and doesn't create a huge burden on them but makes sure that we help protect the reputation of these builders.

That is one of the things that I think is important for us to really do to create some strong confidence in this market.

Being a born-and-raised Calgarian, I remember that growing up I was always a very engaged young individual. I'd watch the news a lot. There was a weird trend that started happening as we got to the late '90s, early 2000s. It was the odd news story that would come up every three weeks, every month, about some shoddy home that was built. While I acknowledge that is was a very, very minute number of homes, a very small minority, it still was a very big concern to hear about this and to hear about some of this shoddy workmanship.

When I went to Ottawa to study in university, I noticed something when I watched the news every day. Because I was doing television broadcasting and poli-sci, I had to kind of stay tuned to the current affairs and news to stay up to date. These were stories that we weren't hearing about in Ontario. We weren't hearing about foundation issues or electrical issues or condo boards that had to do huge, huge, huge, expensive works, and a lot of that is because in Ontario they have a certification process that holds these businesses accountable, and there are these protection systems in place.

You know, it's unfortunate. I was speaking, actually, with my real estate agent. Nearby to where he lives is a big condo complex, and he says it breaks his heart every time he drives by there because they have literally had to pull all the siding off the side of the walls. They have had to start tearing out a lot of the insulation in this condo. It's going to cost the residents of that condo a vast amount of money. Either (a) the condo fees are going to go up really heavily and it's going to be hard for them to sell their units or (b) they're all going to have to pay out of pocket, but they're going to have to make a hard choice here. The reason why is because when they did the weather stripping at the top of the roof, they cut corners and missed just a small piece. We're talking about maybe a few hundred dollars of savings that is going to cost, you know, all the members combined potentially a million dollars. It's devastating to see that that is occurring.

You know, one of the things that has started to become a cliché in Calgary – and this has actually turned a lot of the houses that are in my constituency. The bulk of it is well established. There are some that were built after the early '90s, but not a lot. There was a huge appeal to a lot of these properties because for people who have lived in Calgary and have heard these stories in the news for the last 20 years about the odd shoddy build, you realize that, you know, you're taking a little bit of a gamble. It's a small gamble – don't get me wrong – because the majority of our houses were built by outstanding contractors who did a great job, but you're still taking a little bit of a gamble.

So what ends up happening is that houses that are actually appealing to a lot of people are anything that was built in a recession, so your early '80s houses, anything that was built in the '60s, '70s, and it came to the extent that people were trusting a 50-year-old home over something that was built five years ago because they have more faith and more trust, just as the Member for Edmonton-McClung kind of alluded to here in Edmonton. You know, it's not that different down in Calgary. Even when I purchased my first home – I bought an '83 – I got really excited because I went: oh, this is great; it's a recession home. I know that they took their time on this build, that at that time we weren't hearing a lot of challenges in relation to shoddy builds in the area and that this home will be safe and sound.

One of the things that we hear a lot of, too, is with some of the new areas that we started seeing development in. Some of the old industrial buildings in the Midnapore community: they tore them down, and they built condo complexes. Sometimes it was a shame because some of them were actually historical buildings, part of the actual old townsite in the area there, too. So it's something that we've been working on in that community, trying to preserve the last remaining old buildings in that community because it shows a little bit of the history of that area and because there's not a lot there that we really preserved. The old grain elevator is gone. The train station has been moved to Heritage Park, so fortunately it's safe.

Nonetheless, I digress. A lot of these new condo builds: they're only about five, 10, 15 years old, and it's funny when you see some of the condo fees and the structures that are there. A lot of condo owners have come to me. We've actually reached out to a lot of them just to get some feedback. What's happened is that the newer builds, some of them: their fees are significantly higher than the condos that were built in the '70s and '80s, when Shane Homes was developing the Midnapore community following the annex to Calgary. A lot of it is because within about a 10-year timeline they've run into some issues. There was one particular condo complex – this was before the election, but I remember because it was a pretty big deal when it happened. It had some issues with its HVAC. Its HVAC wasn't working properly, and actually they had a huge carbon monoxide leak in the condo complex, and a lot of people got sick.

I was looking at the condo fees for that complex now, and it looks like, because of some of the work they've had to do, they're paying almost a hundred bucks more a month than a lot of the other individuals who live in surrounding condos in the area. With that being said, if we had protections in place to make sure that people were being certified appropriately, there would be a bit more faith, and there could be a bit more trust in these complexes as well.

There's also been a lot of fear in relation to some, you know, negative contracting companies. I have contractors who come to me who've asked us to really look into matters like this because they want to rebuild their reputation. They build homes, they do everything properly, and they're getting really frustrated because there are some bad seeds out there who will come in the market for five years, do unethical, improper, shoddy jobs, and then go insolvent. So if we have a system in place that allows consumers to see that these businesses are in good financial standing, it'll put them in good protection.

I've also heard concerns in relation to some of these companies not being in good financial standing, not paying their invoices or not paying their staff appropriately. In a recession like this what ends up happening is that if you have companies that are not paying their contractors in appropriate times, that could be the one catalyst that causes a contractor or a business, especially a small business, to go under.

You know, there have been situations where I hear allegations from some contractors that there are some shoddy builders out there that will actually push the invoices to the brink in hopes that these small companies will go insolvent. They'll file for bankruptcy. Then when the creditors come for the unpaid invoices, they will sell them for pennies on the dollar, and they'll actually be able to pay less for those invoices. I've heard allegations and concerns in relation to that. So I think that if we really make sure that these builders are in good financial standing, that they're reputable, it's going to help a lot of the subcontractors that they're hiring and create a bit more faith in the contracting community.

The other things that I've heard a lot of are concerns in relation to – and you know, credit to the Member for Edmonton-McClung, who has a lot of expertise in this from whether it's his family background or his background as a real estate agent – natural disasters and how we can have our homes be able to stand whenever we deal with very heavy challenges in relation to weather and how weather implications can play a major factor in a home build.

We've had a lot of studies that have been coming out. Actually, in the last PNWER conference we had an individual who spoke to us about this, about how we have to start cracking down on our regulations in relation to home builds, making sure that our contractors are doing good jobs and are reputable. What's going to start happening is that it's going to cost us as a society, us as a government, who has to help with remediation, not to mention that if we're having buildings collapse in natural disasters, overall it's going to cost governments a lot more money and cost individuals a lot more money when we start seeing things like heavy winds that come in.

We have significant windstorms that hit the city of Calgary, sometimes actually causing us to declare a state of emergency. There was one about four or five years ago that was very scary because on some of the newer homes it was actually tearing the siding off the walls. The older homes were unscathed, to be completely honest, and it was remarkable to see the workmanship in comparison to those homes.

I think that having a really strong system in place will also help us protect consumers, protect ordinary Albertans when we face potential natural disasters, whether it be flooding, heavy saturation with rain, especially if you want to have a proper foundation. If you have heavy rainfalls, the water table is going to rise, but if you have a proper foundation in there, if your sump pump was installed properly in that home, you're not going to have any issues, you're not going to have any significant damage, and ultimately it's not going to lead to us having to pay out heavy insurance costs, which are going to raise premiums for all Albertans here. It's going to ensure that, at the end of the day, you're still going to be able to live in your home during these times. Even in '05 in Calgary when we had the heavy rainfalls that caused a lot of flooding, you could kind of see the homes that had the good workmanship in comparison to the ones that didn't. You'd be on a street block: all the houses are graded the same, but not all of them have flooded. It was a matter of how well the foundations were built on those houses in comparison to others and how well those sump pumps were installed in comparison to other homes.

You know, I think it's important that we make sure we move forward, especially as we move forward with the rebuild of Fort McMurray, making sure that we can give faith to the consumers that their homes will be safe when they move back in. That can give them that sense of peace of mind and give all consumers a sense of peace of mind. At the end of the day, if this is going to accomplish anything for the consumer, the new-home buyer, the people who are buying in the new south communities in Calgary and new south communities in Edmonton, it is that they can go home easy knowing that we put a strong system in place in this Legislature to make sure that they will be protected and that their home will be safe and sound.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), questions or comments?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill in second reading?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

[Motion carried; Bill 12 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 12 New Home Buyer Protection Amendment Act, 2017

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Madam Chair. I have an amendment.

The Chair: This is amendment A1.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that Bill 12, New Home Buyer Protection Amendment Act, 2017, be amended in section 20(a)(ii) in the proposed section 28(1)(h.1) by adding the following after subclause (viii):

- (viii.1) respecting exemptions from fees and fee refunds for licences issued for any of the categories of residential builders established under subclause (viii).

Madam Chair, this amendment seeks to remove new barriers to entry for small builders as well as gives the government the ability to waive any fees charged to purely charitable organizations such as Habitat for Humanity. The small builder would not be disadvantaged compared to incumbents when they acquire training and certification. This amendment does not exempt those builders from obtaining and maintaining the requisite qualifications, and it also does not exempt them from obtaining a builder's licence. This amendment simply provides the government the ability to exempt and/or refund fees associated with the builder licence itself as well as any training required by the registrar as set out by the legislation.

While the licence fee itself is relatively minor, the potential training and certification costs associated with meeting the requirements for the licence itself could run into the thousands of dollars. A large home builder can afford these costs quite easily. However, those same costs have the potential to be overly burdensome for some small builders, which could prevent them from growing despite their skill in home building. The last thing we want to do is prevent individuals from expanding their business because they were treated the same as a company that was much larger than they were.

Further, this amendment, if passed, will give the government the ability to exempt or refund organizations such as Habitat for Humanity for the costs and fees associated with obtaining the builder's licence. Habitat for Humanity along with many other organizations in this province do great work in building great products for those that would not otherwise be able to obtain a home, and it is not fair to lay all these costs on these organizations.

In closing, this amendment simply prevents small builders from being disadvantaged and gives the government the ability to avoid laying undue costs onto charitable organizations in the housing industry. I encourage all members to support this amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A1? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the Member for Calgary-South East for this proposed amendment. We have taken a closer look and understand that it would add a regulation-making power to exempt fees and fee refunds for licences for different categories of residential builders that may be established. This amendment would provide the option to create different categories of residential builders, that could be addressed differently if needed, and therefore adds an element of flexibility under the builder licensing program.

One of the organizations that was mentioned during the introduction of the amendment was Habitat for Humanity. I have some direct experience with Habitat for Humanity, having served on the board of the Family Selection Committee as well for Habitat for Humanity in Norton, Massachusetts, so that's Old Colony Habitat for Humanity. It was one of the most rewarding and gratifying experiences of my life. Going through the process, which is so efficient and so easy to navigate – you would think that it would be really, really difficult for a group of people to choose a family to qualify to have a Habitat for Humanity home, but because the organization has been at this for so long and they've developed such a great program, it was actually really easy to narrow down which families would qualify and which just weren't ready at that time.

Incidentally, as a matter of interest, it was through my participation with Old Colony Habitat for Humanity that I got to try on a Super Bowl ring. We did a lot of fund raising with the Patriots organization, and, yeah, I had the chance to try on a Super Bowl ring, which is, weirdly, related to this amendment.

There are other organizations in Calgary and across Alberta that do good work, nonprofits that help people get into moderately priced homes, that otherwise might be unattainable for them, especially while we're seeing the gap in affordability widen. One of those organizations is Attainable Homes in Calgary, which I know has done a lot of work in helping families that have been priced out of the market to access a home for their family.

I also have seen Habitat for Humanity in Calgary. Recently they completed a build of accessible housing. These are families that have a family member that isn't able to use a regular home. They need certain modifications in order to provide accessibility for them: ramps, bathrooms that you can get a wheelchair in, showers that are accessible for people in wheelchairs.

I know first-hand how important it is to be able to continue to encourage these kinds of organizations to build homes for people that may not otherwise be able to afford to buy a home, and I would like to thank the member for proposing this amendment and for sharing it with us in advance. I am prepared to support this amendment, and I would encourage my colleagues to do the same.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Chair: We're back on the main bill. Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? Calgary-South East.

10:50

Mr. Fraser: I have another amendment, Madam Chair.

The Chair: It will be called amendment A2.

Please go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that Bill 12, the New Home Buyer Protection Amendment Act, 2017, be amended in section 8 in the proposed section 4.1(2) by striking out "and" at the end of clause (a), by adding "and" at the end of clause (b), and by adding the following after clause (b):

- (c) designate one or more service providers to administer courses and examinations for the purpose of clause (a).

Again, thank you, Madam Chair. The intent of this motion is to ensure that builders located outside of Edmonton and Calgary are not unduly burdened by having to travel in order to take courses or examinations that are required by the registrar in order to obtain a builder licence. Most ministries are largely based in Edmonton, some having smaller offices in Calgary. However, homes need to be built in all corners of this province. The companies which build in rural areas or far away from the two largest cities should be able to access, where possible, the required courses and examinations in a location that is more convenient for them.

Organizations such as the Professional Home Builders Institute already offer a wide range of courses and certificates, which are available online. If the government were to utilize these pre-existing institutes to offer the training and allow builders to access training which would be geographically convenient for them, it would help reduce the burden placed on these builders as they seek to comply with this new piece of legislation. It would also allow the government to utilize pre-existing corporate testing providers, who have been doing great work across Alberta for many years.

In closing, this amendment simply asks the government to be cognizant of the fact that travelling to Edmonton and Calgary is not always easy for out-of-town builders, especially small companies from more remote areas. By allowing outside organizations the ability to offer some or all of the training these builders require, this amendment would create more equitable programs for builders based outside the two major cities. I hope all members will support this amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2? Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I want to again thank the Member for Calgary-South East for his second amendment to the bill. I understand that this would see a clause added to designate service providers to administer any courses and/or examinations.

We've reviewed how this would affect the proposed program and have identified that this could result in procedural issues. For example, a service provider is currently undefined, and it's not clear what the designations would be for. Then there's a practical issue of de-accreditation. What happens when licence holders take courses that cease to be recognized? Without some forward thinking put into this, this could cause administrative issues down the road, and we really want to avoid those. I think the opportunity to be able to introduce a licensing program, especially having it integrated with the home warranty program, is a huge benefit for home buyers, and we want to make sure that we take some time to really understand what all of the implications are.

I know this amendment has good intentions, but it could possibly introduce some issues down the road in terms of what is considered appropriate education and qualifies and what doesn't qualify. It would create a whole structure where you have to make sure that there is a migration path, essentially, for courses that exist and courses that may exist in the future. I could envision that that would include a lot of people making those decisions. It sounds like quite an administrative burden.

Additionally, this is unnecessary. Nothing in this bill would preclude service providers from administering courses, and this is actually something that we are discussing with the Canadian Home Builders' Association.

A service provider is currently undefined, so in terms of deciding who or what would be an appropriate service provider, I think, again, we would be at risk of introducing a lot of administrative burden that isn't necessary in order to get to the end result. The purpose of the program is to make sure that consumers are protected when buying a new home. They have the home warranty already, and in licensing builders, we want to ensure that we're not getting fly-by-night operations, people who want to undercut very good builders in order to turn a profit but aren't necessarily that concerned with the integrity of the structure that they're building.

I'm not able to support the amendment. I certainly appreciate the work that has been put into it, but again I cannot recommend that we go forward with it at this time.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Madam Chair, and good morning, everyone. I would like to thank the Member for Calgary-South East for bringing this amendment forward. I think it's a good amendment.

I think that it is extremely important to take a little bit of notice that in this bill, from what I've seen and read, there's not a lot of detail as to how this thing is really going to roll out: where people can go, where they can register, where they can be examined, et cetera, et cetera. I don't think it's come forward as to where people actually go to make the application, and it doesn't appear to me – and I'm happy to be corrected on this – how it's really going to be processed, how applications are going to be conducted, et cetera, et cetera. Is it the municipalities that are going to be doing this? Is it a new office that's going to open? Where are these offices going to be? What is the time frame between making an application and when the application is actually approved or, perhaps, refused, et cetera, et cetera?

This amendment that my colleague here today has brought forward is at least trying to get to the situation where service providers could be in local areas, where it wouldn't be necessary for all of these various contractors and home builders to drive for hours and hours just to put in a little bit of paperwork and meet with someone to discuss their application.

I would encourage people to support this amendment. The amendment itself, aside from the detail I'm looking for, would at least encourage local branch offices or some type of service provider to be able to do this and prevent some of that unfortunate lag in making this happen. Red tape is a problem that everybody deals with from time to time in government situations, and without this kind of improvement to this bill I'm worried that it would be just more red tape and a hard thing to manage.

Perhaps the Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill can give some clarity as to how this will be done or how existing contractors that have been in business for 35, 40, 50 years, some of them, can go to a local office someplace. Maybe it is a municipality. I don't know. But without that information this type of amendment makes sense.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the Member for Livingstone . . .

Mr. Stier: Macleod.

Ms McPherson: Macleod. I was going to say St. Cloud, but I knew that wasn't it.

Those are really good questions, and I have some information that I want to share with you to hopefully alleviate some of your concerns, which are legitimate. Details of the application process will be worked out over the summer. We want to ensure that we're working with builders to develop a system that doesn't result in unnecessary red tape. The process will be similar to what's currently in place for Fort McMurray. We will use a lot of the information that's already collected in the registry system, so registries will be an appropriate place to go through the process.

Municipal Affairs staff are currently developing the application process and will incorporate feedback from stakeholders on what things should be considered, also taking into account what has worked and what has not worked in terms of the process that's in place for Fort McMurray right now. So we have some lessons there that we can take information from.

The application process will be online although some paper documentation may be required. So if there are certificates, certifications, existing licences that need to be submitted – I'm not sure; this process is going to be worked out – it could be a matter of scanning them or getting a certified copy and submitting those to the registry in order to complete the application.

The application process will require builders to submit information about their history, their track record, their financial standing, and corporate structure to allow the registrar to access all licence applications and determine whether an applicant presents a risk to the consumer. I imagine that will include a matrix where scoring will be applied to each area, and then an overall algorithm will be applied to understand, on a scale, how much of a risk a particular builder would or would not pose to new-home buyers.

Once an application is reviewed and approved, a builder will be notified that they can register new homes in the new-home buyer protection system, the online registry. This is part of the integration process with the new-home buyer warranty program, so that gives an extra level of security to buyers of new construction homes. So we'll have the warranty and the licensing.

If an application is rejected, the registrar will notify the builder with the reasons why and with contact information should they wish to appeal the decision. There may be some contextual information. With small builders, they don't have a lot of volume. I understand that the average number of new homes built per builder in Alberta is seven. So one unfortunate circumstance out of seven is actually a pretty high percentage, but there may be contextual information that would help the registrar understand those circumstances and thereby form the basis of an appeal.

Builders will be required to submit an application, pay the required fee, and hold an active licence in order to build. Now licences will be issued for a one-year period and will allow the builder to apply for multiple building permits during that time, after which the builder will have to apply for a renewal. Just like we have to renew the registration on our vehicles every year or every two years and just like we have to renew our licence for driving, that gives us the privilege of being able to drive in Alberta, there's a similar sort of process. It's not a one-shot deal: you get a licence, and you're licensed forever. That has to be verified and validated, reviewed on a regular basis, and what's been chosen is annually because of the turnover in companies that build homes.

The registrar will assess all licence applications to determine if the applicant meets the licence criteria and whether any conditions should be placed on a licence. Just like I need to have corrective lenses in order to drive my vehicle legally – and you wouldn't want me on the road without them – builders will also have similar sorts of conditions applied to them, depending on what their circumstances are.

The application process will incorporate many of the existing requirements for a builder under the New Home Buyer Protection Act. So it's not going to be a matter of having to come up with a lot of information that they haven't had to come up with previously or having to qualify for some sort of special skill or service that would be a surprise. It's based on existing criteria, existing principles, existing practices.

In terms of red tape and the concern about red tape, we're using the information that has already been collected wherever possible. So it's not a matter of duplicating the effort. It's not a matter of pushing a lot of paper or JPEGs around. It's taking advantage of what we already have, which is a smart way to approach any task that you want to accomplish.

Financial vetting currently done by banks and warranty providers will consider liquidity and other financial indicators, so that will help inform the decision as to the reliability of a particular builder. Government will meet with warranty providers to see if their financial review processes could support builder licensing rather than government duplicating that process. They're already very good at vetting companies for financial liquidity and stability, so why not leverage that?

I hope that helps to answer some of the concerns that were raised, and I'm happy to answer any other questions. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other speakers to amendment A2? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm not sure that a lot of what the Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill brought up really applied to what was going on with this amendment as we were talking about courses and examinations. But she did bring up some things that I did find interesting and I'd like clarification on, specifically about restrictions on licences like corrective lenses, if I remember her words. I don't have the Blues, unfortunately, in front of me.

Now, from what I understand – and, again, the member can correct me if I'm wrong – this is a revenue-neutral program that's being put forward, so it's supposed to be covered through the fees that are charged to the contractors to maintain this program. I guess my concern here is that it seems like as soon as we start to restrict our contractors, does that mean that suddenly we're going to need a new department set up within the government to maintain this new licensing feature?

It appears that this is going far beyond what I had thought this bill was, which was to bring forward licensing. Again, you can correct me if I'm wrong. My understanding was that you would apply for a licence, you would be granted a licence, and that is as far as I understood this process would go. There may have been an education component to that licensing part. But now we're hearing that there could potentially be restrictions when it comes to the licence itself, sort of like your vehicle licence. Will we be grading from class 7 all the way to class 1, where you can build certain types of units based on the education requirements? Will the Ministry of Municipal Affairs now get into education components with some of our local colleges and universities, or is this going to be a simplified thing, where you'd go online and do a 20-question survey?

I guess my thoughts here are that this could be onerous. The fact that this education component – going back to what this amendment is, I don't know if the Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill had actually brought up the facts that we were trying to be concerned with. Specifically, when it comes to my riding, I can tell you that we're three and a half hours away from Edmonton. Should we need to do any exams or if we need to do any training that is done at the major centres, this could put a real cost to being able to maintain a licence and build houses. So it goes far beyond what the $600 fee, going down to $500, I believe – I don't have the talking points in front of me.

I guess at this point now it appears that we've gone from licensing to enforcement. Is that the goal of the government, to bring enforcement forward? Who's going to pay for that enforcement if it's not being paid for through the funds that are collected? What are you going to do about the fact that this training sounds like it's going to be more extensive because of the levels that you're going to be putting through on this licensing? Who's going to be doing this?

One other thing that occurred to me during my thoughts on this was that it sounds like you're rolling this out during the summer. Going through this, I'm concerned that if this is implemented poorly, it could affect the rebuilding of Fort McMurray because of a lack of training, if you will. So will there be some kind of grandfather clause to allow that to move forward? Like, I would hate to see a building season lost in Fort McMurray because of a government licensing program that is being brought forward and the people in Fort McMurray being unable to get into their homes as soon as they need to be. Will that be thought of when they're rolling this licensing out? I am concerned that Fort McMurray could get caught up in the backlash on this, and I don't think that's okay when we're looking at the devastation that they've witnessed and what the people of Fort McMurray have gone through.

If the member could answer some of those questions, I'd very much appreciate it. Thank you.

The Chair: Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake for the questions, a multitude of questions. I'll try to answer some of them if I can.

First, I want to address the issue regarding your concerns about rebuilding in Fort McMurray. What's in place right now is what the licensing program is actually going to be modelled on. This has been introduced for people that are rebuilding in Fort McMurray. It's already in place, and it's providing the model for licensing across the province. I would emphasize that this introduction of licensing should in no way impede the rebuilding process that's going on in Fort McMurray. There is certainly no desire to keep people out of their homes any longer than necessary. So I hope that allays any concerns that you have about that.

As far as establishing a new department, the program is leveraging off a number of things that already exist: the registration program that is already in place for Fort McMurray; talking with financial providers, warranty providers in terms of the financial information for potential licensees. We're going to be leveraging off that information, so hopefully there would be no need to create any new department in order to address that.

There was something else, too, that escapes me at the moment. I'm going to come back to that in a minute if I can recall it.

In terms of licensing, I am licensed to drive – I think it's a class 5. I'm licensed to drive most vehicles. I've driven a pickup. I've driven a Beetle, which was a lot of fun. I have an SUV now. But I can't drive a motorcycle because I've never been trained or taken any education regarding that, so it would be a bad idea to let me loose on the streets on anything more than a scooter. I can't drive a never had any training, and it wouldn't be legal. And, goodness knows, without training, we don't want people behind the wheel of a large eighteen-wheeler going down the highway with a load of cattle or grain or cars because that would pose a danger.

Similarly, we could have a builder who is really excellent at building cottages. They've built a number of cottages across the province, and then they undertake a project, a development of multifamily dwellings. Let's say that it is an 18-storey high-rise. It has to be concrete construction. It can't be wood, which is what they're used to working with. We don't want to just have someone pay $600 for the privilege of building whatever they want to build. There has to be something that backs that up. That is why there is some examination of people's ability to meet the requirements of the licence. It's not simply a matter of paying some cash so that you have your name on a list. It is actually providing information, providing credentials that prove to the registrar that you are competent, that you have experience being able to build a multifamily dwelling as opposed to a cottage at the lake with no insulation.

Let me just refer to my notes and see if I can grab any more of your questions. No. I think that's about it.

In terms of the amendment itself, which we're speaking to – like, I really am confident that the amendments introduced in Bill 12 will do a good job of ensuring that education is up to date and accessible for builders. This amendment that was introduced is redundant, and that's why I'm not supporting it.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other comments on amendment A2? Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Carson: Yes. Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I just want to reiterate some of the things that my colleague from Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill has said and just repeat that there is a provisional period for this fall and winter while construction season is slower. This bill would not obstruct any of the work that's already being undertaken to rebuild Fort McMurray. The program is in place there already, for the most part, in terms of being able to see the quality of builders out there. Finally, the licensing program, if passed, would be fully implemented before the next building season, which is, hopefully, by next spring.

I'll just repeat the timelines here that we have. Specific program details will be outlined in regulations, which will be developed in the summer of this year, taking into account stakeholder feedback from initial consultations and any future engagements.

Ministerial orders respecting licensing fees, powers of compliance officers, and other administrative matters will come into force on November 1, 2017, with phased implementation over six months. Of course, full implementation will be expected to be in effect by May 2018.

Just on the other matter that the member raised, about extra costs to the department, I have had discussions with the ministry, and they assure me that there is room to have this program implemented without any extra costs to the department.

On the piece about enforcement – I also asked about that – as far as I know, there won't be any extra enforcement needed to undertake this program.

That's all I have. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I guess one of my questions is on the fees that we're paying for the licensing part of this. If it becomes a registry's responsibility to go through this process, have we decided how much of those fees will be moved to that specific registry, into that process, for their time? Or is this going to be something that is going to be downloaded and put onto the shoulders of all of our registries within Alberta? I don't know if that is quite fair if that is the intent the government has, but I would like to know exactly how it is that you're going to move that fee through to pay for this.

Thank you.

The Chair: Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you for the question. I would just say that I know that some of the fees will, I can imagine, go towards the registry costs.

In terms of continuing consultations, that is a discussion that will be ongoing and is to be worked out with further consultations with stakeholders.

Thank you.

11:20

The Chair: Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. Have you consulted with the registries association within Alberta regarding this plan and rolling this out on exactly how you're going to be licensing? I would love to hear some of their thoughts if you have consulted with them and whether or not they feel this is something that can be moved forward quickly through their offices.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Back on Bill 12, are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? Any other speakers to the bill? Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to stand up to talk about Bill 12 this morning. I'd really like to thank the Minister of Municipal Affairs for his work and his department's work on this very important bill. We've heard that this kind of thing, when people are buying their first home or a brand new home, for that matter, is the biggest investment that they can make. We want to reassure folks that the investment they are making is a sound one and that the people that are building their homes are up to the best standards that we have.

I think the Minister of Municipal Affairs has done a tremendous job on striking the right balance, working with the industry, and getting this right. This is a really good example of the consultation that he's done. When we're getting support from the opposition on these kinds of matters, we know that there is a general consensus, and we can all agree that this is an extremely important piece of legislation that's going to protect Albertans and make sure that their investments are sound into the future.

I'd like to start out just talking about a little bit of my personal experience with construction in my home. I had a window company install some windows – and I know that this doesn't necessarily apply directly to the bill, but I think it speaks to the importance of having people that you can trust when you're having work done on your home. We were doing some renovations to our own home, and in the course of doing those renovations, we had some brand new windows installed. They weren't just replacement windows, but we actually had to increase the size of the opening for the windows quite substantially. I consider myself a handy person, but I also know my limits in terms of what I can do safely and comfortably. I know enough to be potentially dangerous, so I want to keep myself in check when I'm doing things. I know enough to say: okay; I can't handle that particular job.

In creating these large window openings, the openings started out as just about 16 inches wide, the size of a stud bay, and they were going to be opening to I think about maybe five or six feet wide, so it was a pretty substantial opening. It was two windows side by side, and the type of construction that's required in this instance – I can't recall the technical term, but there are headers and jack studs and king studs and this kind of thing.

You know, it was great. The salesman for the window company showed me the architectural drawings of what the opening should look like and how they should be constructed. I was quite impressed because this person showing me the architectural drawings really reassured me that this company knew what they were talking about. I felt confident in their abilities when the contractors came over to do the work, and we were really looking forward to this.

I live in Bragg Creek, and we have a beautiful backyard. The windows that we had there previously, like I say, were only about a foot wide. We had this great big wall that looked out over our nicely forested backyard, but you could only see it through these one-foot-wide windows. I think it was like that in the past because there was a fireplace in between those two windows, so they're quite spread apart. They let a little bit of light in, but that part of the house was quite dark, so trying to open that up and open up the view and be able to see our nice backyard was something that was pretty important to us.

Now, there are two halves to the house. One half was built in the '70s, and there was an addition put onto it in the late '80s, so the construction between the old side of the house and the new side of the house was a bit different. The Member for Edmonton-McClung earlier talked about two-by-four construction and two-by-six construction, and this was the case here. Like, we actually had two parts of the wall with different-sized studs and different kinds of insulation, so that's why we had undertaken the renovations in the first place. Like I said, as part of that renovation we wanted to open up the windows and increase the light and have a better view.

The contractors came over. I was really intrigued to watch them because I'm an amateur renovator myself.

Mr. S. Anderson: Do you have a licence?

Mr. Westhead: I don't have a licence, but thankfully in the bill owner-builders don't require a licence, so that's okay.

I was quite eager to watch the carpenters do their work because I wanted to see how these experts did it, you know. I was watching them throughout the course of the day, and I kind of told them that I was interested and asked them to walk me through some of the things that they were doing so that I could learn from them. They seemed quite eager to do that, so again my confidence level in this process was quite high.

I think, if I remember correctly, they kind of showed me and walked me through on one window, how they installed the header and the jack studs and the king studs and all this kind of thing. Then, after learning the first window, for the second window I kind of went about my day and was doing some other things while they carried on with their work. Then the day went on. The windows had been installed successfully, and the builders asked: take a look, and see what you think. You know, I was kind of mesmerized by these brand new windows. It was fantastic. It really opened up our view of the backyard, and it really increased the light in our house, too. Anyway, I signed off on the contract and sent them on their way.

Then a little bit later on – I think it was either later that day or the next day – I took a closer look at the work that they had done. It turned out that on the first window, that they had walked me through and showed me what they had done, everything was fine, but then I looked at the second window. You know, over top of a window opening there are supposed to be, I think, two two-by-10 headers over top of each other. It looked like they must have run out of wood. They still had two headers, but one header was a solid piece of wood, and for the other piece of wood they had just put two pieces of wood side by side, so there's no strength in that. Even if you try to laminate them to one another, if you don't have a continuous piece of wood as the second header, there's a significant reduction in strength there.

I could tell that they – my impression was that they were trying to hide this on me and that they were trying to skimp on the wood. You know, Bragg Creek is a little bit isolated from Calgary. My impression was that they picked up the wood in the morning, what they thought they needed, and I suppose they underestimated that and didn't want to make the trip back to Calgary to pick up another piece of two-by-10, so they kind of fudged it a little bit.

Not only that, Madam Chair, but I saw another inconsistency when I looked back at the architectural drawing that the installer had showed me. Because the two windows were adjacent to one another – and I can't remember the correct terms – there are supposed to be two king studs side by side and then a jack stud on either side of those to hold up the header, but in this instance maybe they measured wrong because there was only one king stud in the middle.

Mr. S. Anderson: Measure twice, cut once.

Mr. Westhead: Yeah. Measure twice, cut once. I think they cut once and maybe didn't even measure in the first place.

Not only was the header insufficient, but the studs that they put beside the openings were insufficient. The type of construction in our home with the two-by-fours: you know, you're asking a lot of those kinds of framing members in your house when you have the weight of the roof and all that kind of stuff on top of it, especially with snow like we get in Bragg Creek. Fortunately, the windows were made – we had them installed in the summer so we didn't have to contend with the weight at the time.

But, thinking ahead, we knew that – well, first of all, it didn't match the architectural drawings that the salesman had shown me. You know, I called them up right away and said: I think you might have a situation here that needs to be corrected. To the window manufacturer's credit, they made it right immediately. They apologized for the situation and told me that these installers had made a significant mistake and that they would come over and correct it. They did that. I think they came later that week and fixed the problem.

The attention often goes to the negative stories. You don't hear the stories of: I bought my brand new house, and I never had a problem with it for 20 years. That's what we expect. I think it's human nature to bring up our instances that we have difficulties with or that we might have a complaint about. We hear about these negative stories from time to time, and it's easy to get an impression that these problems are persistent elsewhere, but I don't think that's the case. As has been said previously, we have a lot of excellent builders here in Alberta, and we should be proud of that. These people make their living building our homes and providing shelter.

That kind of brings me to the concept of Maslow's hierarchy of needs in terms of: what are our most basic requirements? This bill ensures that we are looking after the most basic of human needs. People want to feel safe in their house. They want to know that when it rains, it's not going to leak. They want to know that when it gets cold outside, the insulation is going to protect them. I think the minister has done a fantastic job in helping people have reassurance that the shelter they are counting on is going to be there when they need it.

I think it also goes to the concept of being professionally licensed. I myself as a registered nurse – we're a self-regulating profession. We hold ourselves to a certain account and standards, and there are consequences if we don't live up to our professional standards. This bill gives us not quite the same type of certainty. It's not a regulated profession per se, but it is a standard where folks will be able to say to the public whether or not they are a licensed builder. That's a very particular term that would be reserved for folks with a licence. Just to draw a parallel, a protected title for health professions is registered nurse. Only someone with a registered nurse licence can call themselves a registered nurse, and that's what's known as a protected title.

This bill doesn't contemplate quite the same thing. On the other hand, it has a parallel in terms of only a licensed builder being able to go out to the public and say: I'm a licensed builder. That gives the public certainty that when they hear those words, they know that the builder is adhering to the terms and conditions of the New Home Buyer Protection Amendment Act, 2017.

I think that's really important because, you know, when you're contemplating buying a new house, one of the last things you want to worry about is how much faith you have in the builder. You want to know that you've got some recourse. You want to know that that person has met the requirements of having a licence. You know, it's also nice to be able to look them up in a registry to see what their history is, how long they've been licensed, and this kind of thing. So I think that goes a long way. When you're making that big investment, you've got to meet with your lawyers, you have to meet with the real estate agent, and you have to talk to your mortgage broker. There are so many different things that people are thinking about when they're buying their first home. Knowing whether your builder is a good one or not is an important part of that, and this helps to take some of that anxiety away. It helps people to know that they've got certainty and that their builder is good.

You know, Madam Chair, I grew up watching TV and people like Bob Vila. Does everybody remember This Old House? Yeah. That was a great show, that kind of spurred some other similar types of renovation shows and home building shows, people like Holmes on Homes' Mike Holmes. There were a couple of other ones that were on the Discovery channel. It was quite interesting, as a young person watching these videos, because the craftsmen took such great pride in the work that they did. They knew that they were building something that folks were going to rely on for quite some time and knew that their investment was predicated on the work that they did. The skill and detail that these craftspeople would adhere to was quite remarkable.

You know, I learned a lot through watching these kinds of things, how to use tools safely and appropriately. This is part of the licensing requirement for builders, too. They have to demonstrate through their actions and through the licensing procedure that they're competent in the types of things that we're going to be trusting them to do.

It also makes me think of – you know, why I support this bill is that in Canmore during the building boom, which would have occurred most recently, I suppose, in sort of the early 2000s, when after the Olympics the town of Canmore was really in the world spotlight, people were clamouring to buy land and buy condos and houses in this little mountain paradise because at the time the land prices were quite low. Investors saw this as a great opportunity to invest in a town that was growing. It's in the mountains, it's a beautiful area, so they looked at this as an investment.

But the problem, Madam Chair, is that, unfortunately, some of these contractors that were building the condos and homes – not all of them, mind you – a minority of them were kind of fly-by-night contractors. They would build things under numbered companies, build these things, make their money, and get out as fast as possible. They'd declare bankruptcy so that they'd protect themselves from any future liability, and in the housing boom . . .

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, May 10, 2017

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Hon. members, this morning there was a lot of attention in the media about hockey and elections. But earlier this morning the Deputy Speaker expressed on our collective behalf thoughts and prayers for those who continue to be affected by the recent flooding in Ontario and Quebec. As we know, it is at times like this when we need to reach out to our neighbours across Canada and let them know that they are not alone and that, firstly, we are all Canadians. During this difficult time, please, each of you, as you reach out, extend those best wishes from our Assembly to the people of those two provinces.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today on your behalf to introduce to all members of the Assembly Chief Ron Kreutzer and Mr. Brad Callihoo, the chief executive officer of the Fort McMurray 468 First Nation. You had the opportunity to meet with the chief on the Fort McMurray First Nation a couple of weeks ago, when you were on the Mace tour across the province, and I know everybody greatly appreciated that. The Fort McMurray 468 First Nation is located 45 minutes southeast of Fort McMurray, near Gregoire Lake, and it consists of approximately 700 members, predominately Woodland Cree. During the wildfire evacuations at this time last year Chief Kreutzer stayed behind to prepare to fight the fire. He and his son helped build large firebreaks all around the houses in the community and, at the risk of their own lives, fire-protected all of the properties in their nation.

Chief Kreutzer and Mr. Callihoo are seated in the Speaker's gallery, and I would like them to please rise now and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Edline Jacobi and Gerda Martin. Edline is the secretary for the Airdrie Wildrose Constituency Association, and she's here visiting her sister and the Legislature. Would you please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly 56 grade 6 and grade 9 students from the Taber Christian school, the best school in Canada. I understand that they have the best corn as well. I understand that they have been able to participate in a mock Legislature as well as attend a 4-D video in the Federal building. Their teachers and parents with them today are Wendy, Joel, Philip, René, Trina, Linda, Pam, Marlene, Abe, Anna, and Jennette. They have traveled a long way to be here, and they've enjoyed the day. I would ask that they be given the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly as they stand.

The Speaker: Welcome. It's always nice to see schools from the hinterland, the far reaches of our province. [interjections] I have experienced the same feeling. I have one school that's been able to get here. It's nice to see that.

The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 17 students from Viking school in the town of Viking. As always, they're very interested in the proceedings of the House, both the government and the opposition members, and, of course, the NDP members sitting on this side in the Valhalla section. I'd ask for all members of the Assembly to now join in giving them the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any other school groups today?

Seeing and hearing none, the Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 20 administrators working both in Edmonton and in our international offices. Now, I must say that these folks do an incredible job ensuring not only that our trade missions are successful, but these are the ones that are working to identify companies to come invest in Alberta and are setting up very powerful, quality meetings when we travel overseas with our businesses.

I'm going to ask them to rise as I say their names – I'm going to apologize in advance for botching up some of their names and beg your forgiveness, Mr. Speaker – from the Beijing office, Lily Li; from the Shanghai office, Zoe Shi; from the Hong Kong office, Peggy Mou and Karen Cheng; from the Taiwan office, Angie Tsai; from the Japan office, Kazuyo Kumamoto and Chie Shinonaga; from the Korea office, Hye-Ja Yoon; from the Mexico office, Sandra Diaz; from the U.K. office, Karen Todman; from our Singapore office, Kathy Malacaman; from the Washington office, Lolita Zaphiropoulos; from our New Delhi office, Disha Kalia; from our Guangzhou office, Katrina Chen. Of course, there's a group of staff here in Edmonton that supports all of our offices: Shannon Homeniuk, Rosie Sorensen, Jeanette Lee, Kendra Turpin, Madeleine O'Scolai, and Susan Henderson. I'd ask all members of the Assembly to join me in giving them the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome. Welcome.

Pretty good job on that translation, hon. member.

The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a good friend of mine, Mrs. Mae Bateman, from the Sundre and Rocky Mountain House area. She is one of the most beautiful souls that we have in a community that is very full of beautiful souls. She has worked in home care for a long time, taking care of many of the people that have built the communities that we enjoy today, of course, in Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. She's nearing retirement now but still keeps care of one of our most prominent citizens in the community of Sundre, John Whitesell, who just celebrated his 100th birthday. I'm happy to have her as my guest today. I would ask her to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

Pipeline Opposition

Mr. Loewen: Last night should be a wake-up call to our NDP government. The B.C. election left a minority government, with this government's cousins, the Green Party, holding the balance of power. It's no secret that the NDP and Green Party are anti-oil and antipipeline.

What is alarming is the Alberta NDP's absurd claim that the carbon tax that burdens Albertans has bought social licence for pipelines. If so, where is it? This government gloats day after day about the two pipeline approvals the carbon tax bought. How can this claim be proven or even be made with any kind of honesty when we see that the people that have opposed pipelines in the past are still opposing pipelines and are being elected into jurisdictions that we need to get our product to market?

We have a government that has many activists among them that have spent their lives opposing pipelines. They have hired and continue to hire and employ antipipeline activists, and they incredulously claim that they support pipelines. Saying a lie over and over again doesn't make it true.

Last year this NDP government helped me pass my motion to support pipelines and to counter the federal government tanker ban. Since then we have not heard . . .

The Speaker: Hon member, just be cautious of the words you're using, please.

Please continue.

Mr. Loewen: Last year this NDP government helped me pass my motion to support pipelines and to counter the federal government tanker ban. Since then we have not heard anything from this government opposing the tanker ban, nothing supporting the Northern Gateway when Trudeau cancelled the approval of it or any other meaningful support of any pipelines. All we hear is how their social licence got two pipeline approvals, which is just not true. They suggest that since Trudeau said it, then it's gospel. What would you expect Trudeau to say on the eve of his own carbon tax announcement? It's clearly a case of one lying and the other swearing to it.

This government needs a proctologist to do a cranium exam if they think that Albertans are buying that the carbon tax has bought this mythical social licence. The first step in change is admitting that you have a problem. You have an NDP problem called anti-oil activism. Once you admit it, then take the next step and get rid of your taxpayer-paid anti-oil activists, take a leadership role in supporting all pipelines, stand up against these radical activists, and finally admit that there is no such thing as social licence and that it's bought nothing but expensive light bulbs.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Nurses Week

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to focus on something really positive for two minutes in this House today. I rise with pride to give recognition to a profession which at one time or another and often at multiple times in our lives touches us, makes us safer, heals us when we are hurt, and points us toward a healthier future. I'm talking about nurses, Mr. Speaker, and the many roles that nurses play in our health care system. This week is Nurses Week in Alberta and in Canada, and I'd like every member of this House to think for a moment about a time in their lives when they or someone they care about was helped by a nurse.

I am incredibly proud to be a nurse. I have seen nurses cry when new life is brought into this world, and I have seen them cry when we've lost someone before their time. I have seen and been the one to hold the hand of someone as they pass from this life. Nurses wipe tears and blood, comfort and strengthen, care and advocate for every patient they serve. I have seen nurses leave their families on holidays, birthdays, work double shifts, and work on their feet for hours to care for my family and yours. And nurses are honoured to have the privilege of serving every single one of those patients.

Really, nurses are involved in almost every important moment in our lives, both tragic and happy. Nurses are there when we need them, 24 hours a day, whether in emergency rooms, where they are the first people we see, or with services like Health Link, where they are only a phone call away.

The theme for this Nurses Week is #Yes This Is Nursing, and I think the very brief description of everything nurses do that I've given above really shows what kind of impact nurses have on everyone's lives. We are fortunate to live in a country and in a province where health care is valued.

I would ask all members of this Assembly to think about the role nurses have played in their lives and, the next time they are engaged with a member of that profession, to just thank them.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Provincial Election Second Anniversary

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, this past Saturday the world watched the two most exciting minutes in sports, the Kentucky Derby. Now, obviously, I love the horses, but I have always admired the ability of racetrack announcers to summarize an entire horse race into two minutes, and I asked myself: if a racetrack announcer took two minutes to describe the past two years of NDP government, what would that sound like?

Welcome, fans, to the Legislature Downs and the first-ever running of the NDP Derby, a claiming race for nonwinners in their first 28 outings. They're at the post, and they're off. Breaking quickly from the gate, it's Initial Optimism and Hopeful Expectation, followed closely by Honeymoon Period and Give Them a Chance. Here comes No Budget, Embarrassing Cousin, and Just Blame the Tories.

Initial Optimism and Hopeful Expectation are falling off quickly, and moving up fast is Fake Consultation, followed by Enraged Farmers and Flight of Capital. It's Just Blame the Tories, Fake Consultation, Enraged Farmers, and Flight of Capital surging to the front, with Honeymoon Period and Give Them a Chance looking tired and spent.

Speaking of spent, here comes Massive Deficit and Credit Downgrade. Down the back straight it's Massive Deficit, Credit Downgrade, Fake Consultation, Enraged Farmers, and Flight of Capital. Initial Optimism has pulled up lame, and Hopeful Expectation is nowhere to be seen.

But what's this thundering down the middle of the track? It's Carbon Tax. This must be a late entry. Carbon Tax was not in the racing program. Hot on the heels of Carbon Tax is the twin entry of Pipeline Approvals and Pipeline Construction. Pipeline Approvals is losing ground, but Pipeline Construction has been cut off by B.C. Election, boxed in on the rail by Eco Demonstrators and Endless Conditions.

Surging down the backstretch, it's Carbon Tax challenging Massive Deficit and Credit Downgrade for the lead. Fake Consultation is always there, but Just Blame the Tories is losing traction.

Rounding the final turn, it's Carbon Tax, Massive Deficit, and Credit Downgrade. There's a late charge from NDP Again along with Ballooning Debt and I'll Never Vote. Down the stretch they come. It's Carbon Tax, NDP Again, Massive Deficit, Credit Downgrade, and I'll Never Vote. Carbon Tax and Massive Deficit are neck and neck, and at the finish line it's Carbon Tax by a nose over Massive Deficit, Credit Downgrade, and I'll Never Vote NDP Again.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Government House Leader, a new benchmark may have been set today.

Mr. Mason: It's been done, and guess who did it?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Domestic Violence Alternative Sentencing

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Social issues are one of the key challenges we face in the north, including high rates of domestic violence. Domestic violence tends to be a revolving door of arrests, charges, victims deciding not to testify, and the cycle repeats. Alberta has high overall rates, but this January my community of High Level was dismayed to learn that spousal abuse cases had skyrocketed over the previous year.

In light of this, Staff Sergeant Brad Giles of the High Level RCMP took action, implementing a two-phase alternative measures approach. High Level already has the Domestic Violence Response Unit, but there were limitations to its effectiveness. Staff Sergeant Giles expanded on this program by assigning one officer full-time to domestic violence, hiring a full-time therapist, and building relationships with multiple agencies in town, including probation, the Safe Home, North Peace Tribal Council, child and family services, and victims' services.

Phase 1 is preconviction. The offender is charged and released with the condition that they must report to the domestic violence unit within the first week. They are offered a range of voluntary, free programs that address the root causes of trauma, anger management, and addictions through individual and group therapy. Within the first few months of this program 100 new therapy files were opened in High Level, including many walk-ins who heard about the program and wanted help. There was an immediate decrease in new domestic violence cases, and over the past three months the RCMP has already seen an overall 12 per cent reduction.

Phase 2 involves program attendance as an alternative measure. The Crown and the offender agree on probation with no conviction, conditional on successful completion of the prescribed program. Even in serious cases this will have benefits. Once phase 2 is fully implemented, the RCMP is confident we will see even more reductions.

Preventative approaches that address the root causes of family violence in addition to providing supports to victims will not only contribute towards breaking the cycle but will help to reduce crime and violence overall. Thank you to the High Level RCMP and the many wonderful community agencies in my constituency who are leading the way.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Homelessness

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to speak about a very important issue that I believe isn't spoken about enough, and that is homelessness. Many people think of homelessness as being an inner-city phenomenon or as a result of someone being unable to work. Many think of the homeless as being exclusively addicts.

Mr. Speaker, all of these conceptions miss the mark. Simply put, homelessness exists because there are people that do not have a home. There are many reasons someone can end up in this situation. One man I met several years ago had come to Edmonton following a job opportunity. He did not have the money for a security deposit or a hotel room. While he waited for a paycheque or two to come in, he was on the street. This man had nothing but the clothes on his back and the promise of a job. I met him at a bus stop just a few blocks from here on a very cold January night. His story is far from unique.

Mr. Speaker, there are many reasons someone becomes homeless. The breakdown of a marriage could leave you without a bed. Work could leave you with no time to search for a new apartment. A youth coming out to their parents could be thrown out.

Further, there are just as many forms that homelessness takes. From couch surfing to sleeping in your car, from building a shelter in the woods to curling up in a quiet corner somewhere, homelessness exists in every community in this province.

Everyone deserves a safe and affordable home. In the past few decades the cost of housing has grown faster than income. Alberta was one of only three provinces that did not have an affordable housing strategy. Mr. Speaker, that's changing. Alberta's government is investing $1.2 billion in affordable housing, and following last year's consultations, Albertans are expecting the launch of a new housing strategy. This is only one of the many ways that this government is working to make life better and more affordable.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Carbon Levy

Mr. Jean: The NDP government is making Albertans foot an ever-increasing bill for the carbon tax in an attempt to buy so-called social licence. Well, this morning it's clear, more than ever, that their social licence application has been rejected. The balance of power in B.C. now rests with the Green Party, which is adamantly opposed to pipeline expansion, as, of course, is the B.C. NDP. Will the Premier face the facts and do the right thing for Albertans and scrap her carbon tax?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to begin by congratulating Premier Christy Clark as well as John Horgan and Andrew Weaver on the campaigns that they did run in British Columbia.

We're looking forward to continuing to work with British Columbians and with their elected officials on items of mutual interest, Mr. Speaker, and of course that includes ensuring that we continue to have market access to new opportunities, including the Asia Pacific markets. I'm grateful that the federal approvals are through. We are going to continue to move forward, and we're going to cheer for Alberta, not for its failure.

Mr. Jean: Well, tidewater access is important, Mr. Speaker, but the Green Party in B.C. opposes Trans Mountain, they oppose LNG, and they oppose site C. Alberta is quickly becoming the punching bag of North America under this NDP government. We're taken for granted federally, where the Premier is willing to go with Trudeau's every beck and call and has done nothing whatsoever to build relationships with who should be our closest allies, our provincial neighbours. Will the Premier just admit that she's dropping the ball when it comes to standing up for Alberta families?

Ms Hoffman: Nothing could be further from the truth, Mr. Speaker. We are continuing to work to make sure that all Albertans have opportunities for a good, clean environment and for good, long-term, mortgage-paying jobs, and that's why the Premier is in Ontario working to make sure that she's expanding opportunities for market access to the east. That's why she's meeting with working people from across the country, including the staff that work in our hospitals, in our schools. [interjections] I hear the members opposite yelling at me that they're union thugs. They are working people of this province, and they deserve respect. Our Premier shows them that respect. The members opposite could learn something from her.

Mr. Nixon: Point of order.

Mr. Jean: It's no secret whatsoever that this NDP government has MLAs in the ranks and on their advisory groups who don't like pipelines. In fact, they've even campaigned actively against them. Social licence is a failed experiment that's only hurting hard-working Alberta families. The Premier is busy trying to impress those in the ivory towers in foreign countries and big labour at conferences in Toronto with their carbon tax, but it's only a tax that costs Albertans when they can least afford it. Will the Premier wake up and scrap the tax?

Ms Hoffman: I am so proud to have a Premier who works every day to make life better for the people of this province, and that's exactly what she is doing at this exact moment, Mr. Speaker. We are proud that we have federal approvals to get our market access on the west coast. We are working to ensure that we are connecting with provinces across the country to make sure that we have access further going to the east. This is good news. The Premier's priorities are straight. The member opposite keeps cheering for failure. We're standing up for Albertans.

The Speaker: Second main question.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, it's hard to cheer for anything else but failure when you keep seeing failure from the NDP government.

Serenity's Former Guardians

Mr. Jean: The image of little Serenity laying in hospital in her final days is seared in my mind, Mr. Speaker. When I look at the facts, six children are still in the care and under the same roof as the guardians who allowed Serenity to be physically and sexually abused and malnourished. There were repeated pleas from Serenity's birth mother and her cousin to get Serenity out of that house. Those desperate pleas were ignored. Now, why on earth could we ever trust the Premier that the other six children in that house are safe today?

The Speaker: The Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will be speaking further to Albertans on this matter later this afternoon, but I want to remind members that when people make statements without all the facts, inaccurate information is given to the public. I want to assure all Albertans that we have monitored and continue to monitor the situation closely, and if there was evidence of abuse of a child, we would apprehend that child immediately, as we would in any case.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, there is a muzzle on the facts, and that muzzle is this government not telling Albertans what's happened. Yesterday the Premier said that the safety of the six children in the same house under the care of the same people as Serenity when she died a brutal death is being monitored. Now, clearly, Serenity's caseworker swore an affidavit that despite significant evidence of abuse in that home, nothing has changed. Guess what? Serenity was supposedly being monitored, too, at the time of her death. The system failed her, and it sure looks like it's failing these six kids now. What kind of monitoring is in place for these children now, today, that wasn't in place . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The courts do not let government go in and apprehend children without evidence of abuse of that individual child. Courts require that there is evidence of abuse of that child, and that is the law. We have continued to monitor this situation very closely, and if there was any evidence of abuse of a child, we would apprehend that child immediately.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, it's this government and this minister's job to protect Alberta's children. If you won't listen to me, listen to Serenity's own mother. She lost her little girl because of an unwillingness – an unwillingness – to listen to her serious concerns, and she's sounding the alarm bells again. She says, "God only knows [what's going] on in there." Now, Serenity was raped, beaten, starved, and murdered most likely, based on the facts, under the same care as those other six children. No child should ever have to face this kind of horror and terror. This should weigh heavily on all of us. Why won't someone just do the right thing and make sure that those six children in the same house are . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a very difficult matter for all members of this House and, indeed, all Albertans, but I want to urge the members again to be aware of spreading inaccurate information and of the impact that this has on the lives of young Albertans. I will be sharing more information about this matter this afternoon.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Ministerial Panel on Child Intervention

Mr. Nixon: I joined the children in care panel in good faith with the hope of stopping what happened to Serenity from ever happening again. Instead, the past few months have been spent studying topics that, presenters point out, have already been researched to death. There is a refusal by this minister to share the details of Serenity's case with the panel or to even let them talk about case-level data. This secrecy indicates that this government and this minister are not serious about preventing more children from falling through the cracks. How can this minister stand here and promise Albertans that what happened to Serenity won't happen again when she knows she has done nothing to change it and her panel is doing nothing to change it?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Absolutely, as legislators, as parents, and as Albertans we have to do everything we can to improve the lives of children at risk and to stop preventable deaths from happening. That is why we have a Minister of Children's Services, that is why we have the panel, and that is why we continue to prioritize the safety and well-being of Alberta's children. As an RN that was my priority for many years, it will continue to be, and I will ensure that we take action to change the system, that has gone unchanged for far too long.

Mr. Nixon: Inaction resulted in Serenity's death. A private guardianship went forward despite reports that Serenity was malnourished and had unexplained marks and bruises. Now the minister tries to appease us by saying that there are regular checks on the six children in care of the same guardians who watched Serenity starve to death. Warnings continue to be expressed about the children in that home. The minister says that they are closely monitoring the situation. Given this government's abysmal track record on this issue and their blatant dodging of questions by the opposition, why would Albertans believe this government is protecting these kids?

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again I have to say that the situation has been monitored. Without doubt, we very much prioritize the safety and well-being of all Alberta's children. Again I want to remind the members opposite that making statements with inaccurate information to the public is a challenge when you don't have all the facts. I do want to continue to assure Albertans and all members of this House that if there was evidence of abuse of a child, that child would be apprehended immediately.

2:00

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, making sure that my three children are safe and protected is my number one job. Common sense dictates that no children – period – should be cared for by people who allowed a child to be beaten, starved, and sexually assaulted to the point of death under their watch. The minister may have justified in her own mind that these children are safe, but apparently the younger children have not been seen at school since October. Six months. Clearly, something is not right. Minister, would you let your own children be cared for by these adults? Yes or no? And if not, why are you treating these kids differently than yours or mine?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have to say once again that the courts, the law we are all bound by as Albertans, does not let government go in and apprehend children without evidence of abuse to that individual child. Again, I want to say that when people make statements without all the facts . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members. [interjections] Hon. members, I cannot hear the response.

Ten more seconds and then finish, hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again, we will continue to monitor this situation very closely as we have until now, and if there is any evidence of abuse, we will apprehend the children. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House, I asked you to keep your voice down. Even after I said so, you continued to speak. Please don't do that in the future.

The leader of the third party.

Out-of-country Health Care Funding

Mr. McIver: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, last week I rose in this House on behalf of little Greta Marofke and her courageous fight against a rare liver cancer. I asked the Minister of Health to use her discretion to cover the cost to allow Greta to have a life-saving transplant in Cincinnati as the option was not available in Alberta. Greta has now had that surgery in the last few days. Minister, I want to publicly thank you for meeting with the family as you promised you would. Can you share with the House whether you were able to offer any hope of financial support to the family?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, we make sure that the decisions around medical best practices are derived by medical experts. One of the things that I did commit to was to ensure that the contact information for the physician that they're working with in the United States was accessible to the committee that does make these decisions. But, again, it's committees of physicians that make decisions on medical best practices, not elected officials, and that's the way it should be.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, the $1 million U.S. price tag could bankrupt three families, and while we can all agree that no price can be placed on this precious little life, it's unacceptable that the onerous burden of that, without provincial coverage, is put upon Greta's family. To the Minister of Health: have you received a request for funding as of yet, and if not, will you have someone follow up, please, with Greta's doctor?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. When I did meet with the family, I confirmed that their physician did submit the application to the Out-of-country Health Services Committee, and that's exactly the process that needs to take place. These applications are not directed to the minister; they're directed to the commission, the agency that oversees this work. We trust that they will do so to the benefit of all to make sure that there is a decision that supports everyone.

I have to say that Greta's family is incredibly strong, and if she's half as strong as her family, including that warrior mom of hers, she has a very strong spirit, and I look forward to seeing her when she returns.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, and I thank the minister for the direct answer. Mr. Speaker, the family is trying to work with AHS bureaucracy and with the minister. One AHS official has insisted that a letter from the Cincinnati doctor explaining the procedure and providing justification for the urgency not be sent to the minister but through his hands. To the minister. You've demonstrated compassion by meeting with the family, and I thank you for that. They understand from that meeting that you will accept communication from them. Can they send the letter to you, or must it go through the other person's hands first?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much. Again, my contact information and phone numbers of two staff who are in regular contact with individuals who would like some support have been given to the family. They are certainly welcome to contact us and ask for additional support in helping them to facilitate the process. But the application doesn't go to AHS; it doesn't go to me; it goes to the Out-of-country Health Services Committee. That's where the application certainly should be directed, but if they're having a challenge getting the letter to that individual, I'd be happy to help them do so, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Connolly: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. However, I believe it's the Member for Calgary-Mountain View first.

The Speaker: Hon. member, my apologies. This is the second day in a row that I've done that. There must be other things that are distracting me.

Dr. Swann: I forgive you. I forgive you, Mr. Speaker.

Child Protective Services on First Nations

Dr. Swann: Yesterday the wounds from Serenity's tragic death were reopened as we learned that six more children remain in the same home where her life was cut short. Our first reaction is to assume that the other children in the home might be in danger as well; however, the government says that there's no evidence of abuse or neglect that would cause them to intervene, and clearly there are difficult jurisdictional issues here involving a federal on-reserve family. That is good to hear, that reassurance from the minister, but Albertans cannot understand why we wouldn't err on the side of caution. To the minister: as a provincial authority what evidence do you base your decision on?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Absolutely, the safety of Alberta's children is the key priority of Children's Services, so when there is any evidence or complaint or indication of concern, that is followed up with a thorough assessment as to the safety and well-being of Alberta's children. I will continue to state very clearly that when there is specific evidence of abuse of a child, that child is apprehended and then is supported by the courts. We continue to monitor the situation to ensure the safety and well-being . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Dr. Swann: Well, let me put it very succinctly, Mr. Speaker. First Nations children on reserve land are under the authority of the delegated First Nations authorities. Who is ultimately responsible for the safety of reserve children, the DFNA's or you?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We work very closely with the delegated First Nations authorities to ensure the safety and well-being of children on Alberta's First Nations. It's no secret that conditions for children on First Nations in this province are far below what they are for children who live off-reserve. That's very unacceptable, and there are many issues that need to be resolved, that have been complicated and have existed for a very long time. We're very committed to working with our First Nations to make sure that First Nations children have access to the kind of care and support that all children deserve, but their safety . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, the Premier rightly identified Serenity's death as a reason to establish the Ministerial Panel on Child Intervention to fix what the Premier called systemic problems. The system supposed to be watching out for Serenity clearly failed; however, we must not allow the jurisdictional issues to fail these children again. Finally, to the minister: if you come to believe that these six children are not safe but are outside your jurisdiction, what is your role to ensure their safety?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to reassure the member that the safety of those children absolutely is my responsibility through Children's Services. Absolutely, if there is evidence that those children are not safe, that those children are being abused, then we'll utilize the power that the law has granted to us to apprehend those children.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

School Fees and Education Funding

Connolly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've heard from many teachers in my riding concerned that they won't be able to provide an adequate amount of school supplies as a result of Bill 1, An Act to Reduce School Fees. They're concerned that their ability to provide quality education will be compromised as a result of this bill. I have even heard that school administrators are telling teachers to hoard pencils in preparation for the upcoming school year. To the Minister of Education: should teachers be worried about this?

Mr. Eggen: Thank you for this question. Mr. Speaker, it gives us a good chance to provide some clarity. We have just passed, with unanimous support from both sides of the House, An Act to Reduce School Fees, so if any place, in any jurisdiction they're suggesting that they will raise school fees as a result of An Act to Reduce School Fees, this is incorrect. We must make sure that teachers and parents and students know that, in fact, in September we're putting money back into the pockets of those families and we are not raising school fees in An Act to Reduce School Fees.

Mr. Cooper: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order noted.
First supplemental.

Connolly: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the minister. To the same minister: if teachers have nothing to worry about but this confusion is out there, can you please clarify where the resources will be coming from to ensure that we can reduce school fees?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, we are looking specifically at instructional supplies and materials to reduce those school fees for all students, for more than 660,000 students. As well, we have a reduction in busing transportation fees for some categories of busing. Again, this is An Act to Reduce School Fees; it's not an act to eliminate school fees, nor is it in any shape or form to be construed as a way by which they can raise school fees as a result of this.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Connolly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that I see so many families in my constituency struggling due to the tough economic times that our province is facing, to the same minister: how many families will benefit as a result of this reduction in school fees?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We expect that almost 600,000 Alberta families will see reductions in their school fees as a result of Bill 1. We are working not just to reduce fees but to equalize the landscape around school fees so that we can make further reductions and make sure that we're making life better for Alberta students, families, and teachers by starting this process.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Health Facility Quality Assurance

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My colleague identified serious concerns in the Lacombe health facility. These issues include things like not following dietary, infection control, patient handling, and SHARPS safety guidelines; no continuity in dementia training, fall management, and medical chart documentation; not implementing protocols on safe bath temperatures, nutrition and hydration needs, patient hygiene, and medication management. Infractions were found in almost every area inspected. To the Minister of Health: how often are audits performed in our health facilities, and who is accountable for this?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There are regular reviews that happen, I believe, semiannually. If that's incorrect, I'll correct the record.

I also want to assure everyone that if they do have any questions about the safety of anyone who is living in a care facility, please contact protection for persons in care or raise the concern with the local site manager if they'd like to do so. Certainly, protection for persons in care is there to do these very types of things, to ensure that there are safety audits done if there are any specific concerns, and that's exactly what happened in this case.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, concerns have been raised at this facility for many years based on countless verbal accounts. Who deals with these complaints, and which department is accountable for the corrective actions? Is it the department of process improvement or infection prevention and control? Maybe it's internal audit and risk management or the department of culture, transformation, and innovation. What about integrated quality management or safe, healthy environments? What about the department of quality and health care improvement? Can the Health minister identify which departments within AHS manage these issues, and will you hold them accountable?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The specific oversight for long-term facilities, including those within AHS, of course, rests with the assisted living branch within the government of Alberta as well as within Alberta Health Services, but there are many specific components within. That's one of the reasons why immediate steps were taken to investigate the concerns when they were raised. There was, in turn, an audit to ensure that that quality of care is provided to all residents, including the 75 who are there currently. I'm glad to report that a number of initiatives were taken to make sure that changes were made immediately, including the three staff who've been put on immediate leave.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, we all want to see an improvement in our health care system, and within AHS there are so many departments specifically tasked with patient safety, quality, and process improvement, to name a few, that are focused on ensuring operational integrity. Given that oversight and accountability for infection prevention and control are outstanding items from the 2013 AG's report, if we do not learn from this, we are doomed. Will this government provide a report on the issues pertaining to this facility, and when can you provide that?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to report today in this House that a thorough cleaning of the site was provided, that there is support and guidance from infection prevention and control professionals that are on-site to ensure that that happens and that there are improved communications between caregivers, residents, and families. There is also work with stakeholders to introduce a resident and family council. As somebody who attended those meetings when my grandmother was in a care facility, I can say that there are very productive ways to resolve issues at immediate sites as quickly as possible. I'd encourage people who have somebody in a facility and who would like to be involved to reach out to the site manager and say that they would like to be a part of the resident care family . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Pipelines to the West Coast

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I suspect that members on the government side are happy that their comrades across the Rockies increased their seat count, but I know that most Albertans are uneasy about what this means for our province. If the results stand, the majority of seats in the B.C. Legislature will be controlled by parties opposed to the Trans Mountain pipeline. To the Minister of Energy: how do you intend to stop your political siblings from sabotaging Alberta's interests and our future?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, B.C. voters have made their choices, and we're going to work with the government they have elected. We worked very hard to get two permissions, the Trans Mountain plus the other pipeline, and we're confident those projects will go through. It doesn't mean we stop just because we got permissions. We're going to keep fighting. We've applied for intervenor status, and we're going to keep fighting for Albertans because this is a good project not just for Alberta but for Canada.

Mr. Gottfried: Mr. Speaker, given that the Green Party currently holds the balance of power in B.C. and given that after Trans Mountain approval Dr. Andrew Weaver stated that “heavy oil tankers have no place on our coast” and given that he has stated that investment in any fossil fuel infrastructure is incompatible with meeting the targets set out in the Paris accord, again to the minister: will the B.C. election results delay the construction of the Trans Mountain or either of the two pipelines approved?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I mentioned, we’re going to continue to do the work. Our office was in contact this morning with Trans Mountain, who plan to do what they’ve been doing. They’re in B.C. talking to people as we speak. We will do the same. We’re going to keep working very hard to not just get a yes to the pipeline but to see those shovels in the ground.

Mr. Gottfried: Mr. Speaker, given that Tzeporah Berman has repeatedly insulted both Dr. Weaver and Premier Clark and given that the Premier continues to defend Berman’s place on the oil sands advisory group, claiming she brings an environmentalist world view, and given that there are numerous qualified individuals who could better represent this view without insulting multiple party leaders in other provinces, again to the minister: if so many people agree with Ms Berman’s perspective, why can’t you find someone who has the social licence to fulfill this role without insulting Albertans and our hopeful allies?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the oil sands advisory group is made up of a number of companies and First Nations communities and environmental groups, and their first order of business was to provide government advice on the implementation of the 100-megatonne limit in the oil sands. That work has now been completed, and I fully anticipate that there will be a change in the membership as a result of that, which is what we have signalled from the very beginning.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Electricity Power Purchase Arrangements

Mr. MacIntyre: Another day, another chapter in the PPA saga. The Market Surveillance Administrator will be investigating the Balancing Pool over allegations that the coal-fired assets returned to the government last winter are operating at a loss. Once again the NDP’s only plan is to leave the taxpayer on the hook for billions. To the Energy minister: did you task the same staff with understanding the Electric Utilities Act as you tasked with understanding PPA clause 4.3(j)?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we took action to protect Alberta consumers against backroom deals that were done many years ago, and we continue to do so. We did this by extending a loan to the Balancing Pool to reduce monthly charges to consumers because that’s what we’re doing. But let me be clear. This loan has nothing to do with the Balancing Pool’s mandate to manage those PPAs. It’s up to the management, and it’s up to the board.

Mr. MacIntyre: Well, this government’s interference with operations at the Balancing Pool is already under investigation due to a Wildrose FOIP. Given that this FOIP demonstrated a systemic cover-up by the department and given that the Balancing Pool’s $4 billion in losses will be shifted to a hidden tax bill instead of a politically dangerous monthly electricity bill, is the Department of Energy responsible for orchestrating Balancing Pool losses as a means of hiding the rapid cost increases stemming from your electricity overhaul?

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, let me be clear. The decisions about the PPAs are the work of the Balancing Pool, the management and their board. The MSA’s job is to investigate any complaints, which is what they’re doing. Both of them are arm’s length from our department.

Mr. MacIntyre: My goodness. Albertans are tired of the gross incompetence the NDP have shown. Given that Balancing Pool losses are now projected to exceed the entire first year of revenue from the carbon tax and given that we haven’t seen the full cost of the PPA debacle, with the NDP still battling Calgarian-owned Enmax, to the Energy minister. Your government’s policies have done nothing but make electricity more expensive. Is this what ministers mean when they claim they’re making life better for Albertans?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: You know, Mr. Speaker, again I will reiterate that the Balancing Pool is the one to manage the PPAs. It’s the MSA’s job to manage complaints, which they are doing. What we’re doing on this side of the House: I’m not going to apologize for standing up for Albertans. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: We are doing that, Mr. Speaker. The opposition continues to want to support backroom deals that were made many years ago. We’re not going to do that. We’re standing up for Albertans.

Services for Students with Special Needs

Mr. Nixon: School staff and parents are very concerned. They were informed last month that funding is being cut by approximately $1 million for central Alberta regional collaborative service delivery. For the Wild Rose school division, in my riding, this means losing the support of a social worker, invaluable student access to occupational therapists and to speech and language pathologists. The ability to diagnose disabilities like vision or hearing impairment and to intervene at an early stage of life is very important for long-term student success. Minister, will you please explain your reason for cutting this funding for central Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and certainly thank you for the question. It’s very important that we do provide special-needs funding and services in all parts of the province. The regional service delivery method – the funding for certain boards was transitional funding over three years. Now we’ve moved to a regional model, and I can say that we have actually increased the funding this year by more than $8 million on the regional model, and we have funding otherwise of $451 million for inclusive education.

Mr. Nixon: Given that every year the Wild Rose school division subsidizes the inclusive education grant money it receives from the government and given that despite these dollars they are still having to cut inclusive education staff and support due to inflation and rising costs and given that the number one challenge facing the Wild Rose school division and others is the significant mental health issues faced by students and their families, Minister, why is this government making it so hard for schools to meet the needs of their most vulnerable students?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. Certainly, we want to make sure that we are providing special education needs for all students. In general the regional service delivery method is a good way to pool resources so that you are getting the best possible people to help to intervene when students need it the most. I have individual school boards that do have problems as a result of the end of transitional funding, and I am in discussions with them, the Wild Rose school division amongst them.

Mr. Nixon: Given that schools say that they do not have the tools they need to support students with mental health needs or with other disabilities and given that partners in the central Alberta RCSD are getting together to advocate for restored funding because clearly this government has not yet communicated an adequate alternative arrangement and given that school jurisdictions are publicly calling for meetings with the government to discuss the negative consequences of this government's decision to cut, to the minister: what have you been doing to engage with the schools and the families in central Alberta about a strategy to address their valid concerns?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we are, as I said before, in discussions with school boards to look for ways by which we can provide that care for students who need it at the time that they need it. The best way to do that globally is to make sure you fund for education and you fund for enrollment. We have done so as a government for schools. We're building schools all across the province. You can't do that and have billions of dollars in cuts at the same time.

PDD Needs Assessments and Service Delivery

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, it's been said that the measure of a compassionate society lies in how it supports those that are most vulnerable. Albertans with developmental disabilities face challenges every day, better addressed through a myriad of supports provided by government, support agencies, service organizations, and families. It is a complex network where, unfortunately, both duplication and gaps can and do occur. To the Minister of Community and Social Services: is your department following an overarching, co-ordinated strategy for the delivery of services to Albertans with developmental disabilities?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. Over the period of the last two years I've worked with persons with developmental disabilities, their advocate, their representative organizations, and service providers. Evidence of that is that we work with them on safety standards, we work with them on the supports intensity scale, and we work with them on contracting going forward. We will continue to collaborate with them on all issues that matter to them.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that there was only a fleeting mention of persons with developmental disabilities in the government's recent Speech from the Throne and there was no mention in the budget speech and given that this has led to concerns from stakeholder groups that the ongoing need for co-ordinated government support has disappeared from the government's radar screen and given that these stakeholders need assurance that this, in fact, is not the case, to the minister. Your government's silence is causing significant concern. What assurances can you provide to persons with developmental disabilities that they are still a priority for your government?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. I think what I have heard loud and clear from that community is: nothing about us without us. The past two years demonstrates that whatever steps we took, we took in close consultation and collaboration with the community. We will continue to work with them on all issues that matter to them.

Thank you.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, in light of the fact that stakeholders within the PDD community were very pleased when this minister announced the end of the demeaning and degrading supports intensity scale, or SIS, test and given that this minister has indicated that his department would develop a more comprehensive and holistic approach to assessing the needs of those requiring supports and given that there's no indication of what assessment methodologies are being developed nor has there been any consultation with PDD stakeholders regarding alternatives to SIS, to the minister: we applaud your commitment to end SIS, but what are you replacing it with, and when will you be informing Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. As I said earlier, on all issues that matter to them we have worked with them. In the absence of that supports intensity scale there is still a process in place, which is more one-on-one contact with the families to assess their needs on a case-by-case basis to make sure that individuals get the supports they need based on their individual circumstances. We will continue to work with individuals and our community partners to make sure that persons with developmental . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Investment in Alberta

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A strong and sustainable economy is dependent on strategic long-term investment. Given that this investment requires a climate that provides opportunity and a competitive advantage over other jurisdictions, to the Minister of Economic Development and Trade: what strategies has this government developed to remove the barriers that have traditionally impacted this province's economy?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the question. There are a number of initiatives that our government has undertaken, including two tax credits which are going to provide Albertans an opportunity to invest in companies in their own backyard, something other jurisdictions have enjoyed for decades. We are also actively working to diversify our economy through initiatives in agriculture and forestry, through diversifying our energy sector, investing in partial upgrading but also the petrochemical diversification program. As well, market access is absolutely critical, and that's why we've rolled out programs to help our companies diversify their markets.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this government has made it clear that a strong economy and clean environment go hand in hand, to the same minister: how is this government supporting our businesses and helping to ensure that Alberta will continue to be the economic and environmental leader Canada needs for the 21st century?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know what? I'm very proud of a number of things, including the fact that we are showing that the environment and the economy go hand in hand. You don't have to choose one over the other. The number of investments that will be coming into the province, including our own companies in renewables, wanting to get into the renewable space, is going to create thousands of jobs.

2:30

As well, Mr. Speaker, I had the pleasure of announcing a $10 million investment in Alberta's carbon conversion technology centre, which is very exciting because this is providing support for companies to take carbon and add value or turn it into useful products. I'm quite proud of the work that is going on in Calgary.

The Speaker: The second supplemental.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: how is this government collaborating with private investors to ensure Alberta's economy diversifies and thrives and makes life healthier for Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know what? This morning I was very excited to stand with Janssen, which is the Canadian company of Johnson & Johnson, when they announced a J Labs pod, which is the first of its kind in the world. It is here in Edmonton. We are working collaboratively with the city of Edmonton. What this is doing is providing supports for our researchers and entrepreneurs so that they can commercialize their technologies, which we know the world needs, and it will also help us drive down our health care costs.

Renewable Energy Land Leases

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, several advisory groups have been cautioning landowners of late on the possible perils and pitfalls of renewable energy agreements. This government has said over and over that these agreements are strictly voluntary. Well, kind of. With the lofty goal of 30 per cent renewables by 2030, Minister, will the Surface Rights Board force right of access in order to tie in above- or underground cabling between tower structures and substations regardless of whether neighbouring landowners want any part of renewables on their property? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, as the hon. member knows, there are a number of existing wind facilities in his own riding. For example, the Blackspring Ridge wind project is the largest in Canada and created a number of jobs, 350 construction jobs and a number of permanent positions. It returns a large amount of revenue to towns and counties in his own riding.

To his question, Mr. Speaker, those are matters that are being dealt with through the permitting process.

Thank you.

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, given that my questions are based around landowner rights, I will continue. Given that under Bill 27 these renewable projects are considered activities and given that that side voted down our renewables equivalent to the orphaned well fund and given that there have been no legislative protections written for landowners, will the minister issue a ministerial order that demands that some form of remediation and reclamation bond be put on all renewable projects? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, many of these questions are taken up in the approvals process. Certainly, from Environment and Parks' perspective, obviously the siting and wildlife directives are also important parts of the permitting process. As we phase in more renewable power, we will ensure that our regulatory framework keeps pace. You know, places like the village of Carmangay, for example: I've got a quote here from the mayor, who indicates that there are huge opportunities for that particular village as a result.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, given that I know where all of the renewable projects are in my riding, I will ask a question. Given that these renewables projects will be assessed at a rapidly declining linear tax rate and given that it isn't uncommon for energy project companies of all types to fail and become insolvent and given that this government is providing little protection to landowners beyond buyer beware – Minister, agriculture is the number 2 business in this province – why does this government continue to treat this industry with little respect, certainly with regard to landowners' rights?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. What I would suggest is that it is not helpful to affix the tinfoil hat a little too tightly with respect to what the Wildrose spreads for misinformation about renewables. [interjections] It is shocking the sorts of things that have come up in this Chamber with respect to what renewables are and what they can deliver to rural landowners.

An Hon. Member: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order noted. [interjections] Order, please.

Ms Phillips: I'll read from Gary Sproule, who is from Wheatland county.

It's sure nice to have an idea of a pretty good chunk of income that you are going to have available in the next 20 . . . years. You can make some plans and have a little money [on the side].

You're not always sure of a lot of other things when you farm . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Calgary-West.

Child Safety Reporting and Investigations

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Premier said, "Our hearts also go out . . . to all Albertans who are concerned for vulnerable children across this province." Premier, Albertans' hearts are broken. Their faith in your government is shattered. We cannot comprehend the excuses this government offered for leaving children in a home where a little girl was beaten, starved, and sexually assaulted and from which her siblings were rescued. Premier, will you commit today to calling a public inquiry so Albertans can have answers and Serenity can have justice?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order, hon. members.

Ms Larivee: Mr. Speaker, again I will say that I am sharing more information for Albertans later this afternoon. I do want to continue to caution the members of this House about making statements without the facts . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members.

Ms Larivee: . . . which, in fact, leads to inaccurate information being given to the public. I want to continue to assure all Albertans that we monitor the situation, and if there was evidence of abuse of a child, that child would be apprehended immediately because we take the safety of every Alberta child very seriously. [interjections]

The Speaker: You continue to yell at a level where I am unable to hear the minister. Please contain that volume. There are several of you. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, I'm speaking to you as well as to the other members, to all of you. Please keep your volume down here. Please. Thank you.

The hon. member. It's the first supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you. Minister, we'll just do it in two years' time, then.

Given that the minister said yesterday, "I would urge all Albertans that if they have concerns about the safety of a child, please let Children's Services know" and given that it is good to hear the minister address the public in this way, because according to the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act all adults have a legal obligation to report the matter to a director, Minister, can you specifically tell Albertans today who a director is and how you would contact them?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would certainly say that if any Albertan has concern about the safety of a child, they can contact any Children's Services office or call the child abuse hotline. You know, once again I want to say that, absolutely, Children's Services and this government take the safety of Alberta's children very seriously. We're thankful for the co-operation of Albertans to assist us with that in reporting all concerns about abuse. We will follow up, we will assess, and we will ensure . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Ellis: Well, let me run through this very convoluted process for you, Minister. Given that to seek intervention for a child, Albertans have to go to the Children's Services website and then they need to know to look under Abuse and Intervention, click on Child Intervention, and then scroll down to How to Get Help, eventually finding a phone number to call, and given that my proposal for Serenity's law makes it very simple – adults must call the police if they know a child is in need of intervention, but the government claimed last fall that it ran out of time to make this change – Minister, will you make it very simple and change the legislation now?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again I would encourage all Albertans, if they are concerned about the safety of a child, to call the child abuse hotline or to contact their local Children's Services. But I have to say that this government has a very strong record of being very concerned about the safety and well-being of Alberta's children. That has not changed. We will take action to ensure the ongoing safety and well-being of Alberta's children, and you have our commitment on that.

The Speaker: Edmonton-Whitemud.

Electronic Cigarettes

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Control of inhalation of cigarette smoke is a very important preventive health measure. There has been a steady increase in usage of e-cigarettes in Alberta in recent years. Given that Health Canada is currently looking at how best to address and regulate this industry, to the Minister of Health: what plans does this government have to address concerns my constituents and I have regarding vaping?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for his important question as well as the expertise that he brings forward as an oncologist and as somebody who's been a cancer prevention advocate for decades. We're very grateful for that. I am proud that our government has a strong working relationship with the federal government. We are working to make sure that provincial regulations would of course flow from the federal legislation and working in partnership with other jurisdictions across Canada. I am working with the ministry to bring forward options that ensure safety and best regulatory approaches as we move forward.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Dr. Turner: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Given that in recent years municipalities across Alberta, including Red Deer, Cold Lake, and Bonnyville, have introduced bylaws restricting the use of e-cigarettes in public spaces and given that vaping may occur near children, to the Minister of Health: is this government considering similar regulations?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member again for his question. The municipalities that have been named certainly have done important work in this regard. As well, I know a number of school jurisdictions have made efforts as well, and we want to commend them for their work in that area. We'll continue to review all of the moving pieces. Within Alberta obviously the regulations or guidelines would flow from federal decisions as well, so we want to ensure that we have safety but respect and want to commend local municipalities for making efforts that they think will provide best safety for their communities.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that families in my constituency are very concerned about the accessibility of e-cigarettes to children, to the same minister: will this government ensure its policies protect the health of children and youth?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to highlight one that I think has very quickly addressed that in the past in a related manner, and that is of course ensuring that we banned flavoured tobacco products, including menthol, which the previous government failed to do. The research was clear. Flavoured products are an attraction to youth. We moved on that. We'll continue to monitor the research in this regard and work with cancer prevention organizations, with the federal government, and with the families that continue to be involved as well as with retailers. We're happy to continue to work in partnership with those parties as we make best decisions moving forward.

The Speaker: In 30 seconds we'll recommence.

Airdrie Food Bank

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to talk about one of the most recognized not-for-profits that exist in many of our communities across Alberta, Canada, and the world. In particular, I would like to talk about the important work being done in my community at the local Airdrie Food Bank. The Airdrie Food Bank is responsible for providing assistance to their clients within Airdrie, Crossfield, Balzac, Beiseker, Madden, and the surrounding area of Rocky View county. They provide many invaluable services to the community such as the community kitchen, a program designed to help people gain basic cooking skills and the ability to create well-rounded meals with food that's available.

Mr. Speaker, I'm proud to say that in my community the Airdrie Food Bank has been nominated for a national award titled Excellence in Food Banking. I know that the executive director, Lori McRitchie, and all of her staff and the volunteers will be successful given that they provide exceptional services with hamper programs, partnerships with schools, and other community-based nutrition.

No child, mother, or family should go without food, not in Airdrie, not in Alberta, not in Canada. It's a sad reality, but more and more Albertans are turning to these resources because of the economy, job losses, and rising costs. Wildrose has rallied hard to have exemptions brought forward for the carbon tax to ensure these amazing not-for-profits are not harmed by this government's risky, ideological carbon tax on absolutely everything. These pressures and other poor NDP policies have forced food banks across our province to do more with less.

I would encourage all NDP members to reach out to their local food banks and hear their stories first-hand. To the Airdrie Food Bank and all of the food banks: thanks for everything you do and for being leaders in creating healthy, strong communities and families.

Thank you.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to table five copies of an article from the CBC news website entitled Calgary Girl with Rare Cancer Gets Liver Transplant in U.S.

The Speaker: Any others, hon. members? Strathmore-Brooks? No.

Mr. Fildebrandt: I'm all out.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table five copies of the preamble included in the March 2016 Canadian Real Estate Association's code of ethics, which I quoted during the recent Bill 204 debate. As noted in the preamble, realtors are dedicated and committed to the protection of property rights in this province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Any others, hon. members? The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to table the requisite number of copies of an article talking about the order for the Trans Mountain pipeline using recycled Canadian steel from a unionized shop in Regina, and some of the metal is from Alberta.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Acting Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Ms McLean, Minister of Service Alberta and Minister of Status of Women, response to a question raised by Mr. Cyr, the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, on April 12, 2017, Ministry of Service Alberta 2017-18 main estimates debate.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I believe we are at points of order. If I recall, it's the Opposition House Leader with respect to point of order 1.

Mr. Cooper: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to withdraw point of order 1.

The Speaker: It's headed in the right direction.

Mr. Cooper: I can speak to point of order 2 if you like.

The Speaker: Point of order 2 would be nice.

Point of Order

Referring to the Absence of a Member

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today during question period, in response to a question from the opposition, the Deputy Premier referred to the Premier being in Toronto at this moment. We all know that referring to the absence or the presence of a member inside the Chamber is wildly inappropriate, and while she may have been pleased to talk about that, it still would be inappropriate to do so.

The Speaker: I just want to make sure. Can you just tell me that again? I don't know that I have the Blues. Hon. member, the statement that was made, if you might say it again.

Mr. Cooper: The Deputy Premier made reference to the Premier being in Toronto presently, today, at this moment. I also don't have the benefit of the Blues.

The Speaker: Thank you.
The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Opposition House Leader is correct that it is inappropriate and has been ruled out of order to refer to the absence of a member. I believe in this case it was inadvertent on the part of the Deputy Premier to imply in some way the absence of a member. I do appreciate the Official Opposition House Leader's interest in standing up and protecting the interests of our Premier. I've seen many things over the years, but this is probably the first time I've seen that. So as it was very likely inadvertent, but it did actually happen, you know, I'm sure that the Deputy Premier is very remorseful, and on her behalf I will offer this as an apology.

Thank you.

2:50

The Speaker: Hon. members, it may well have been inadvertent. However, I believe there was an end result which was a point of order, so I'm sure it won't happen again.

The third point of order.

Point of Order Items Previously Decided

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you. I rise to speak to a point of order. During the Member for Calgary-Hawkwood's question – and my point of reference for folks today and for those of you following along at home is 23(f). Mr. Speaker, you, sir, had the opportunity just yesterday to speak to Standing Order 23(f). For those who may not be familiar, 23(f) is: “debates any previous vote of the Assembly unless it is that Member's intention to move that it be rescinded.”

Now, yesterday in this very Chamber my colleague from the third party rose and asked a question about a vote that had happened or, in this case, as you ruled, a matter that had already been determined by the Assembly, and you ruled that it was out of order. Your ruling can be found on page 924 of Alberta Hansard from May 9, 2017, when you said these words.

And I in fact ought to have maybe jumped in sooner myself. Nonetheless, the subject matter in the first quotation was offside as it pertained to a decision of the House, and I cite Standing Order 23(f) and page 617, House of Commons Procedure and Practice: “Members may not speak against or reflect upon any decision of the House.” In other words, an allegation or question concerning how a member has voted is offside.

The House has made a decision on the matter. I believe there was a point of order in this situation, and I would caution again all members to – it may be good politics at times to do that, but respect and honour in this House is [to be] determined by each of us.

Now, it may in fact have been good politics for the hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood to speak to Bill 1, but unfortunately you had made a ruling yesterday that spoke specifically to decisions that have been made by the House. While I may not have entirely agreed with the decision yesterday, the challenge is that when we have ruled, then we create a precedent. In this case the member clearly asked a question about Bill 1 from this session, that has been ruled on in this Chamber. As such, this particular question should today, in fact, be ruled out of order.

The Speaker: The House leader for the third party.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, hon. Speaker. Yesterday the Government House Leader raised a point of order, 23(j), against the hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway, as a matter of fact. Mr. Speaker, you did not rule on that but, instead, scolded him on something completely different, that was a reference to a decision of this House, 23(f). Now, as you recall, I asked for clarification, and I got a bit of a lecture, that many found disrespectful.

Today the NDP member referenced a vote in this Chamber, again 23(f). Based on the fact that yesterday our caucus was ruled out of order for exactly that, Mr. Speaker, I guess it comes down to a very simple question. Does the rule apply to the Member for Calgary-Hawkwood and other members of the NDP as well or only to this side of the House?

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I first want to address the points made by the House leader for the third party. It continues to amaze me how little this House leader knows about the rules of the Assembly despite being the person who is the second longest serving member of this Assembly. When you ruled yesterday, the member attempted to argue with you and, moreover, made a very erroneous argument, which he repeated again just now, that the Speaker may only rule on points that are brought up before him. That is not the case.

Mr. Speaker, if we can get to the point of order that was made by the Official Opposition House Leader, I think that he's made a very cogent case. It's clear that the standing order says that you may not debate any previous vote of the Assembly unless it is the member's intention to move that we rescind it. He's quite correct in that, and had the Member for Calgary-Hawkwood done that, he would have had a valid point of order. But I have the questions of the hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood, and it's very clear from that that he does not do anything like what has been suggested by the Official Opposition House Leader.

Here's the first question, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've heard from many teachers in my [constituency] concerned that they won't be able to provide an adequate amount of school supplies as a result of Bill 1, An Act to Reduce School Fees. They're concerned that their ability to provide quality education will be compromised as a result of this bill.

The Speaker: Hon. member, can you get to the substance? I have the copy.

Mr. Mason: You have it? Well, I hope that you will put that also on the record, Mr. Speaker.

It's very clear that he's asking about concerns of constituents about the impact of this bill, and that is . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, please. [interjection] Hon. member. Who is talking?

Go ahead.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That does not constitute reflecting on the decision of the House. It simply asks about concerns of his constituents about the impact of a decision that has been made. There is a very, very big difference between the two things, and it is absolutely in order for a member to ask on behalf of his constituents about concerns that are raised by any matter that may have been passed by the House or actions that are taken by the government.

Should you choose to rule in favour of this, Mr. Speaker, we might also say that the opposition is not entitled to ask questions about the carbon levy because that is a decision of the House and so on and so on.

Thank you.

The Speaker: To the leader of the third party: I would point out that in your comments – and it applies to all. How many times have I said it? Each situation ought to be considered in context. I believe that the situations today, last week, tomorrow each will be different.

In this particular situation there was no point of order because there was no reflection upon the decision. There was no reflection. As the Government House Leader said, it was simply responding to the fact. I think he makes a good case in terms of the fact that you may well limit debate on other questions if you were to raise that point. So in this situation there is no point of order.

The next point of order. I believe there's one more left. Is that correct? Who was that from? Go ahead, hon. member.

Point of Order Language Creating Disorder

Mr. Rodney: Actually, it's on behalf of our hon. caucus leader of the PC opposition. Standing order 23(j) reads: "Uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder." Now, on this particular occasion, Mr. Speaker, in answer to a question, the minister of environment referred to the opposition as spreading misinformation, and it went on over and over. It's been used many times. I dare say that if any member on this side suggested that the government was spreading misinformation . . .

The Speaker: Excuse me, hon. member. Hon. member, you continue to imply, whether it's intentional or not, to this House that decisions by the chair are somehow being applied because of which side of the House they're sitting on. I would respectfully ask with respect to the process that if you haven't, avoid those kinds of suggestions. I think the record will stand in terms of its fairness of application in this House.

Please proceed. Thank you.

Mr. Rodney: I concluded my comments, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: So what is your point of order, then?

3:00

Mr. Rodney: On behalf of the hon. PC caucus leader of the opposition 23(j), which reads, "abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder," to reference the fact that the minister of environment, during one of her answers, referred to the opposition spreading misinformation. There are many words that have been disallowed in this House that have a denotation or connotation along these lines. I would hope, Mr. Speaker – you can apply this any way you want – that the rules would be the same for everyone in this House, and that indeed should be a violation point of order under 23(j), that language.

Please and thank you.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, clearly, as you've already indicated today, context means everything. It's for you to decide whether this particular use crosses a line or not. The only point that I would make is that we have seen repeatedly from the opposition use of that language and stronger language. Even today the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky in his member's statement used the term "lie" at least twice, and taking cover under the rule for Members' Statements that does not allow interruption or points of order, he clearly violated the rules. We see this repeatedly on the other side. Then when much milder terms are used, the opposition stands up with this mock indignation and tries to pretend that the government has transgressed the rules of the House, the very rules of which . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members.

Mr. Mason: . . . they regularly and flagrantly disregard in a complete lack of respect, Mr. Speaker, for the House and for yourself.

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's a pleasure to rise. I had hoped to sit this one out, but unfortunately the Government House Leader left me no option but to rise and speak to this particular point of order and respond briefly to the comments from the Government House Leader, particularly with respect to the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky. The Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky may have in fact said the word "lie" but did not make an allegation against the government side of the House. He said that there was an either/or, and it could have been the federal government. We all know that that can happen.

Now, more importantly than that is that the Government House Leader makes an allegation that this side of the House will effort to bend the rules while at the same time ministers of the government have made allegations that the opposition members are misleading Albertans, sir. That is clearly an abuse of the rules. It is the exact same thing that took place earlier today in the member's statement from the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

If the government is going to make allegations about the opposition misleading the Chamber, which has happened on numerous occasions, particularly from the minister of environment in the past, the opposition, too, will make statements that reflect the beliefs of the opposition. It is very problematic that the government can make these statements and then rise on a point of order to say that the opposition is the one that is trying to bend the rules. Nothing could be further from the truth, sir. All members of the Chamber should be held to the same standard, and the rules need to be applied the same to all members of the Chamber.

The Speaker: Any other members like to speak?

Then thus it goes, that the applications within the principle of context ought to be applied, and in this particular instance I believe that the minister was somewhat inflammatory with her remarks and would caution her again. I think there was a point of order in this situation, and I need to remind both sides of the House to avoid those kinds of comments.

Hon. members, you continue as a group to create – someone is going to be able to sell a very valuable book: new words that you can say in here that mean something other than what you intend but not get onto the list. I consider that there was a point of order in this situation, and I would caution the minister in the future.

The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. Thank you for the ruling, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Environment and Parks I withdraw the comment and apologize on her behalf.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, I have an important meeting to go to, which I'm looking forward to.

Bill 13
Securities Amendment Act, 2017

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I rise today to move second reading of Bill 13, the Securities Amendment Act, 2017.

The Alberta Securities Commission is mandated to protect investors and foster a fair and efficient Alberta capital market. A well-regulated and efficient financial system where investors are protected is essential for investor confidence and can allow for innovation. As I've said in this House many times before, the securities regulatory landscape has become more complex, sophisticated, global, and driven by technology than ever before. Throughout the world regulators and legislators have to be nimble and act vigilantly while also allowing for innovation. Simply put, regulators and legislators must keep abreast of a landscape that is ever changing and constantly evolving while at the same time be prepared to update our laws and regulations at regular intervals.

Before I get into the substance of the Securities Amendment Act, 2017, I think it would also be beneficial for all members of this Chamber to briefly review where we are and where we have come from over the past few years. Roughly a year ago this government announced that it would stand up for Alberta businesses and investors by backing our provincially led securities regulator to continue overseeing our capital markets rather than deferring this responsibility to a single national agency. We took this decision after taking the time to fully understand the implications of regulatory oversight in our capital markets and the excellent leadership role our provincial regulator has taken on the national stage.

As we made this decision, we set out three goals, or three principles, that would guide our approaches to our capital markets on a go-forward basis. Those three principles were investor protection, market integrity, and an efficient system of capital formation. We all know that these goals are best achieved when our capital markets operate transparently, when regulatory standards are harmonized, and when we have effective, authoritative oversight.

All members of this House can appreciate that our capital markets are defined by the resource sector, and it remains our belief that it only makes sense to have a provincially led securities regulator who understands our province's unique need. As I said at the time, when you have highly localized and specialized capital markets, as we do in Alberta, effective oversight is increased by having a regulator just blocks away from the action, not thousands of kilometres away on Bay Street. While I'm certain that this government made the right decision to continue with our provincially led regulator, that decision requires this government and this Legislature to regularly keep our laws up to date. The responsibility falls on us, and we will not defer that responsibility to Bay Street or Ottawa.

As members of this House know well, this government has been working consistently with our industry partners to ensure that our capital markets remain well regulated, provide effective mechanisms through which companies can raise capital, and to ensure our laws are kept up to date. Alberta and this Legislature must ensure that our securities regulatory system continues to reflect the realities of current markets and aligns with international standards and regulatory reforms.

To achieve this objective, this government has brought on a number of amendments before this House to ensure our capital markets continue to function effectively. Madam Speaker, if I'm not mistaken, all of our previous amendments that this government has introduced received unanimous support in this House. As a reminder members of this Chamber have voted in favour of legislation that I introduced to do a number of things, including amending the definitions of a derivative reporting issuer and security, amending the amount of advance notice a witness must provide to appear at a Securities Commission hearing, making smart changes to halt trade provisions, harmonizing provisions related to civil liability, and the list goes on. The important thing here is that we all acknowledge how critical it is to continue updating legislation as required to keep our capital markets strong, and we do so in a fashion that keeps to our three key operating principles.

Madam Speaker, with that very important context in mind let me say a few words about the Securities Amendment Act, 2017, and steps this government is taking to continue ensuring that we have strong investor protection, that we continue to maintain strong market integrity, and that we continue to build the necessary institutional infrastructure to allow for an efficient system of capital formation. Let me also state that these proposed amendments, that I will discuss and that are part of the Securities Amendment Act, 2017, have been developed in line with our key operating principles and in co-ordination with other industry partners.

First, let me focus on investor protection. Currently the Alberta Securities Commission has statutory powers to compel attendance and the production of evidence during both investigations and adjudication phases. However, self-regulatory organizations, or SROs, such as the Investment Industry Regulatory Organization of Canada and the Mutual Funds Dealers Association do not have this authority. It is the view of this government and the ASC that the vast majority of market participants need this change, so we all agree. We need to ensure that self-regulatory organizations, or SROs, have the necessary authority to do their work, like other self-regulatory organizations in our society. Providing SROs with the same authorities as the commission will strengthen their enforcement abilities and improve investor protection.

Let me be clear. The vast majority of market participants are honest, trustworthy, and follow the rules. The issue is that we need to protect against the few bad apples that are out there. As members of this House know well, trust is integral to the integrity of our capital markets. When a few bad apples take action and swindle investors, trust can erode very quickly, and when overall trust erodes in our capital markets, it becomes incredibly difficult if not impossible to raise capital. Therefore, the proposed amendments before you with respect to self-regulatory organizations are important for two reasons. First, these changes will help protect individual investors and, therefore, improve investor protection. Second, and just as importantly, these changes are one step that we can take to improve overall trust in the market and, therefore, help to improve market integrity.

The proposed amendments will also extend immunity to their directors, officers, employees, and agents from civil liability and will also clarify the conditions that immunity is provided to these organizations. Providing immunity from liability for good-faith acts during the exercise of regulatory or delegated duties, functions, or powers makes it possible for these organizations to conduct enforcement more effectively. I think all members of this House can agree that these are common-sense changes and will help to ensure that our capital markets continue to operate fairly and efficiently.

Madam Speaker, while the amendments that I have just discussed form the largest part of this bill, I should add that the Securities Amendment Act, 2017, has a few other very minor components. Most notably, there are some changes that are housekeeping in nature to ensure clarity and better compliance with Alberta securities laws. In particular, amendments to Lieutenant Governor in Council regulations will apply provisions to persons and companies to ensure the act is consistent and allow the application to all parties, as intended by the legislation.

In closing, Madam Speaker, and to summarize, these amendments before this House today will help ensure Alberta's securities regulatory system reflects the realities of today's markets and evolves with international standards and global regulatory reform initiatives.

Let me also add that the common-sense amendments before this House today also have broad support in the financial community. We have worked closely with the ASC and our industry partners like IIROC on developing these changes. These changes or amendments have been widely applauded by groups like the Canadian Association of Retired Persons. For example, Wanda Morris from CARP came out publicly and said the following about the Securities Amendment Act, 2017:

I've heard too many heart-wrenching stories of individuals who have lost their life savings because they trusted the wrong person: an unscrupulous financial advisor. Today's changes will help hold wrongdoers to account.

Wanda went on to say that this legislation is a critical step in bringing rule-breakers to justice and deterring wrongdoing, thus better protecting investors in this province.

Likewise, Andrew Kriegl, president and CEO of the Investment Industry Regulatory Organization of Canada, or IIROC, and former deputy superintendent of the Office of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions, had the following to say about this legislation.

We congratulate the Minister of Finance and the Government of Alberta for their leadership in being at the forefront of investor protection in Canada. With these [legislations] Alberta becomes the first province in Canada to provide [self-regulatory organizations] with a complete toolkit, enabling us to more effectively fulfil our responsibilities as a public interest regulator and bring wrongdoers to justice.

Madam Speaker, I think we can all agree that keeping our securities laws up to date is a good idea and in the best interest of Albertans, and I think we can all agree that improving investor protection is good not only for investors but for the overall long-term health of our capital markets in this province. On that note, I think that the amendments before this House warrant the support of all members. These amendments are reasonable, practical, and in the best interest of Alberta's capital markets. These amendments align with our overall strategy of improving investor protection, strengthening market integrity, and ensuring we have an efficient system to raise capital.

I would ask all members of this House, Madam Speaker, to support this bill as we work to ensure the long-term vibrancy of our unique and innovative capital markets in this province. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak to Bill 13, the Securities Amendment Act, which will strengthen our investment regulators and harmonize our regulations with the rest of Canada. I want to thank the Minister of Finance for bringing this forward. I might even give myself a puffball of the day award for the speech I give today.

Canadian provinces, ours included, have long been opposed to a forced national securities regulator. The Minister of Treasury Board and Finance wrote an article on that subject in April of last year in which he said, "It only makes sense to have a provincially led securities regulator who understands our province's unique needs." I agree with the minister. Don't get used to it, Madam Speaker.

The bill will assist in strengthening our regulatory process and those bodies that best understand Alberta's investment industry. If we are going to control our own securities system, let's make it the best in Canada.

The groups that will be the main benefactors of this bill will be the Mutual Fund Dealers Association of Canada, MFDA, and the Investment Industry Regulatory Organization of Canada, IIROC. Alberta's Securities Commission has delegated investigation powers to both of these organizations, the MFDA and IIROC. These two bodies are responsible for those companies and individuals who are registered beneath them. This is an excellent example of a decentralized structure working more efficiently if everyone is looking for examples as to how to make other parts of our government work more effectively.

IIROC and the MFDA have encountered issues following through with their investigations, especially when it comes to the collecting of evidence. One example provided by IIROC was when they attempted to track down evidence against an investor who was accused of misappropriating the funds of a client for their own personal use. The most obvious way to track whether or not this was true would be to follow the money. IIROC has access to its clients' accounts, and they can see what happens to every cent that is invested with clients of the investors who are registered with IIROC. Of course, this information is only accessed with the permission of their clients, which was granted when the investigation was requested by the client. When IIROC had access to the client's side of the equation, they did not have access to the investor's bank accounts. To trace the money, investigators at IIROC would need to gain access to the bank records of the investor.

Banks are mandated to protect their clients' personal information and are not required to give this information to IIROC. The reason the banks are not required to give up this information is because IIROC does not have the authority to compel the bank to provide this information. This is one example of a need for the change in legislation that is provided in this bill.

With the powers granted within this bill, IIROC and the MFDA would have the equivalent powers as an investigator for the Court of Queen's Bench. If Bill 13 passes and a situation arises where bank records are required to investigate a case of using the client's funds for personal use, IIROC would be able to compel the bank to provide this information.

Another example is when investors are trying to determine if a report of insider trading is legitimate or not. There are many ways of communication in this day and age, and almost all of them are traceable in one form or another. Text messages are recoverable, e-mails are located on both the sending and receiving end, and phone records show who called whom and when. All of this information can be used as evidence if it can be acquired.

To accuse someone of insider trading is a serious accusation and will result in severe consequences when prosecuted and convicted. There has to be some way to prove that someone with insider knowledge misused this information and spread it one way or another. Text messages or phone records would need to be obtained from the phone company as a piece of evidence with building their case upon the receipt of a warrant. Just like banks, phone companies will protect their clients' personal information and are not required under current laws to provide this information to IIROC or the MFDA. Without this bill investigators will face a roadblock they cannot overcome.

These are just two examples of the reasons why the changes within this bill are necessary.

When Albertans invest, they need to be assured that their money is invested with and not beyond the reach of the law. At the moment, without this bill, there are those who believe they can get away with illegal and immoral use of other people's hard-earned money. Strengthening our regulatory bodies will give Albertans peace of mind. Albertans are already struggling in an economy, and they should not be worried that any of their savings would not be protected by the law. Albertans want to be assured that those they are investing with cannot use loopholes in our legislation to get away with stealing or misusing their money.

One very positive thing I'd like to point out in this piece of legislation is the fact that this would not increase the province's debt. It won't cost us a penny. Nowhere in this bill would the government be spending more money or creating debt. It always pleases me when the government finds ways to solve problems without throwing money at it. If this could be a theme for the rest of the government's last two years of record, that would be wonderful.

Stakeholder outreach is very important when creating legislation. I'm sure that the government remembers Bill 6 and other fiascos when outreach was not done properly in advance. It seems for the most part that in this case stakeholder outreach has properly occurred.

I'd like to read an excerpt from IIROC's 2016 Enforcement Report, where they ask for another change being brought forward in this bill.

IIROC is seeking statutory immunity for its good faith performance of all of its regulatory functions undertaken pursuant to its Recognition Orders, including action taken by Enforcement. While there are limited common law protections, statutory immunity would ensure that IIROC and its employees have the same protection as provided to the provincial securities commissions and other regulatory bodies. We strongly believe that this immunity is necessary in order to allow us to take appropriate regulatory action in the public interest without fear of reprisal.

I agree with IIROC, in that if they are being directed to fill the shoes of the Alberta Securities Commission, they should be provided with the same immunity as the Alberta Securities Commission while investigating white-collar crime. IIROC and the MFDA are not requesting to be above the law with this change. They are requesting to be able to enforce the law with the same protections as other Alberta organizations who complete the same work.

This protection is not needed for one or two investigations a year. Investigating white-collar crime is not a minor part of their mandate. Last year IIROC alone had almost 1,500 complaints, and 138 of those were investigated. That is more than one investigation every three days. Without this immunity protection granted within the bill, investigations on this scale would be hazardous for investigators. White-collar crime is devastating to many families, and it should not be devastating to those investigating wrongdoers.

Unlike the laws that the minister of Treasury Board and Finance writes to govern himself and the actions of this government in their fiscal framework, we need to ensure that the laws have consequences and are enforceable. When we pass laws here, we should be bound by them. If that's not the case, we need to make it the case when we're writing legislation for our regulators at the very least. This piece of legislation is a step in the right direction when it comes to prosecuting white-collar crime. The minister should consider some enforcement legislation for how this government complies with our own fiscal framework legislation. We should be a leader, and we should not be above the law.

I'd like to encourage all members of the Legislature to support this bill. We need to protect Albertans, and we need to protect their hard-earned money. It is encouraging to see this government putting forward a bill that protects their hard-earned money instead of taking it from them in the form of taxation, levies, and other terms they'll invent to take more Albertans' money. It is important to close loopholes that allow white-collar crime to get away with misappropriating other people's money. I know that Albertans don't like it when their money is taken from them in any case, so we need to ensure that we have the best possible legislation in place to protect those who are protecting our investors and to protect investors in Alberta.

With that, I will ask all members of this Legislature to support Bill 13 and ensure that it gets passed in short order. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

3:30

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's always a great day when the Member for Strathmore-Brooks and I agree on something.

The Securities Amendment Act, 2017, if passed, would put Alberta at the forefront of investor protection by providing the Investment Industry Regulatory Organization of Canada and the Mutual Fund Dealers Association with the same enforcement powers as the Alberta Securities Commission. This change would empower both organizations to compel attendance and the production of evidence during investigations and hearings, allowing them to better protect Albertans' investments. Thus, enforcing Alberta's securities laws would also be immune from civil liability, allowing them to enforce the law effectively without fear of liability.

Madam Speaker, you know, I have a quote here, actually, from Wanda Morris, the vice-president, advocacy, of the Canadian Association of Retired Persons, who goes on to say that she has heard too many heart-wrenching stories of individuals who lost their life savings because they trusted the wrong person: an unscrupulous financial advisor. Today's changes [would] help hold wrongdoers to account. We welcome today's announcement as a critical step in bringing rule-breakers to justice and deterring wrongdoing, thus better protecting investors in this province. We look forward to additional, practical steps like [these] from the Government of Alberta.

Madam Speaker, I think that's an excellent example of how this Securities Amendment Act is working to make life better for Albertans. It's just like how we are doing that on the business front, where we are making life better for Albertans by supporting our businesses through our investor tax credit that was brought forward by our Minister of Economic Development and Trade and is just – you know what? – a small example of the many things we are doing in this government, big and small, to help Albertans, to make life better for Albertans.

Now, in the bill itself, Madam Speaker, one of the most interesting sections that is in this bill and that I think is perhaps the most important is section 69.1, where they specifically talk about those investigative powers.

A person [who is] appointed to conduct an investigation has the same power as is vested in the Court of Queen's Bench [before a] trial of civil actions.

What that means is that that person will have investigative powers just like Queen's Bench, and that gives them the ability

- (i) to summon and enforce the attendance of witnesses,
- (ii) to compel witnesses to give evidence on oath or otherwise, and
- (iii) to compel witnesses to produce documents, records, securities, derivatives, contracts and [other such] things that are needed in the course of an investigation.

Madam Speaker, why are we doing this? I mean, as our Minister of Finance mentioned in his opening statements just recently, you know, Alberta has made an ongoing commitment to reform, modernize, and harmonize securities laws in Canada, and since then Alberta has made a practice of reviewing and updating its securities laws annually, along with other provinces and territories, that came about as a part of a 2004 memorandum of understanding. The securities regulatory landscape in Canada has become more complex, sophisticated, and international in scope and is more driven by technology than ever before. Since the 2007 financial crisis it has become more difficult to sustain quality capital markets, and Alberta's challenge is to deliver the right regulation to support investor confidence and to encourage investment, innovation, and economic growth in Alberta and across Canada.

I, of course, note that when it comes to encouraging investment and innovation and economic growth in Alberta, just recently, Madam Speaker, we have seen a whole lot of investment in our oil and gas industry here in Alberta as Canadian companies such as CNRL have been investing heavily in our oil sands, backed by various large investors throughout Canada and Bay Street and around the world. That, I think, speaks to the business climate that we are bringing forward in this province and, frankly, to the confidence that investors have in our province.

The Securities Amendment Act works to make sure that we keep reviewing our securities legislation every single year and bring in those changes to make sure that confidence is sustained so that consumers can invest with confidence in Alberta or wherever they choose to do so. Alberta must ensure that our securities regulatory system reflects the reality of today's markets and stays in step with evolving international standards as well as global regulatory reform.

Madam Speaker, you know, of course, a lot has been said on this already, and with that, it seems that we have support from the Finance critic from the opposition, the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks. It's always nice when we can find agreement on these sorts of things in the House.

With that, I will encourage all members of the House to vote in support of this important and much-needed bill. I'm sure, as many members of the House will note, that it's probably not the most exciting piece of legislation that we have, but it will make a very big difference to consumers who are investing in this province. I think it's important, and as legislators we need to examine it and debate it. I encourage all members of this House to vote in support of the bill.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) comes into effect if there are any questions or comments for the previous speaker.

Seeing none, I will call on Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As always, it's a pleasure to get up in the House and speak to the legislation that's before us. Specifically, when it comes to the Securities Amendment Act, 2017, I'd like to paint a picture for all the members that are here.

Before I do, though, I'll mention that at one point I actually used to work for RBC Dominion Securities, as I've pointed out in the past. As I was going through and reviewing this piece of legislation, I was reminded of a lady, Maria. Maria used to work as a maintenance person, and every paycheque she'd simply put $50 into a Canada savings bond. That was all she could afford, but that's what she did. Every paycheque would come by, and $50 would go into that Canada savings bond, and she saved and she saved and she saved and she saved. Finally, when it came to retiring, she transferred her money over to RBC Dominion Securities.

Of course, we don't think about it often, but, you know, when you start saving $50 every paycheque over a lifetime, it adds up to a substantial amount of money. Maria transferred that money over to RBC Dominion Securities, and then she had a stockbroker invest that money for her, as I recommend all Albertans do. Save that piece of money. Save that little bit of money every month, and make sure that you invest it wisely.

That's why the Securities Amendment Act, 2017, is important and also for us here in the province of Alberta to continue updating our regulatory system through the Alberta Securities Commission: for people like Maria. I want you to imagine a situation where a person who has saved their entire life – you know, I really respect all Albertans but specifically those ones like Maria. Every day they go to work, and they do what they need to do. They honestly gain money through the sweat of their brow, their hard-earned money, as the Member for Strathmore-Brooks pointed out. For them to be cheated out of that hard-earned money that they've saved over an entire lifetime is just a catastrophe. It's a catastrophe.

I want to say that most businesses here in the province of Alberta are honest. They do what they need to do. They're investing. They're trying to build and help our economy grow, and that's excellent. But there are the few bad apples out there. That's what we're trying to do, protect people like Maria from those bad apples. That's why this piece of legislation – you know, it's been mentioned before that people say: oh, it's not the most exciting piece of legislation. But let me tell you that it sure is necessary. It is absolutely necessary. We often don't think about how capital markets impact the everyday lives of Alberta citizens. This is why I'm trying to highlight Maria's experience, right?

I think it's really important that, as the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board has stated, we've consciously taken on the responsibility and made a decision that we continue with having the Alberta Securities Commission, our own commission right here, because of the fact that it responds to the specific market that we're trying to develop within here, inside of the province, and why it's so important to continue amending the Securities Act on a regular basis.

As was pointed out, the regulatory landscape is continuing to become more complex and more sophisticated, and I'll give you the example of crowdfunding. It's a great example. You know, especially start-ups, new technologies, new people, new young people in our communities and in our economy: they're starting to get together and they're working out new ways of putting together businesses. Crowdfunding is a major way that they can explore research and bring a commodity or a service, a business idea of their own, to market. As we continue to grow here in Alberta in terms of implementing new technologies and new ways of doing business, new ways of providing services, crowdfunding is going to become more and more a way of raising finance capital for those ideas, and the Securities Commission is going to have to be able to respond to that in that way.

We don't want to be in a situation where, let's just say, hypothetically speaking, a group of people decide that they're going to go into a business idea. They start crowdfunding, and then all of a sudden instead of using the money for what they stated it was going to be used for, they use it for something else. Then imagine all those people who bought into the idea to provide that service or that product that these people were saying they were going to do who all of a sudden are out that money that they've invested through that crowdfunding avenue.

I'm happy that we continue to have our own provincial regulator here. I think it's really important, as was mentioned by the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board. We're a unique province here, and the investments that are being made here continue to be ways that we build and grow our economy.

With that, I want to say how proud I am that we've passed legislation on the Alberta investor tax credit. These go hand in hand, right? You have Albertans that have been saving that money, and they have a friend or perhaps someone they know, and they want to be able to help that friend or acquaintance grow their business. Of course, the Alberta investor tax credit is a great idea to help Alberta businesses grow and be able to invest that money. What could be better?

You know what? When I go out into the public and I talk about the Alberta investor tax credit with people in the community in my own constituency and others around Edmonton and in the province, they're like: "Oh, a 30 per cent tax credit? Well, that's great. It totally makes sense." It's a great piece of legislation that's going to help spur on growth in our economy. Like the Alberta investor tax credit, the Securities Amendment Act, 2017, is going to help encourage growth and help people like Maria feel that they can trust that we have a good regulatory system here in the province of Alberta.

I want to speak a little bit to the fact that we have unanimous support for this. I think it's great. I think it's wonderful that we can all agree on something that's so important and on how important it is to regulate capital within our markets. You know, there are certain people in this House who I've heard say that they would much prefer a libertarian way of going about capital markets. "No regulations whatsoever" is what they seem to imply, right? I mean, they want no government intervention whatsoever. I think that's kind of strange, right?

At the same time they get up in the House and say that, well, they support this piece of legislation. Great. Wonderful. But I think it's so important to have the intervention from the Alberta government, from the Alberta Securities Commission, people who are investigating and who know capital markets, know how capital formation occurs within the province, that specifically contributes to the growth of industry right here in our own province. Regulation is absolutely essential because at the end of the day, we're helping people like Maria and helping to protect investors.

Now, we're going on and even taking a further step and making sure that other SROs, or self-regulatory organizations, also have the authority to do their own work in making sure that investors are protected. I think this is an incredible move in the right direction. Providing self-regulatory organizations with the same authorities as the commission will strengthen their enforcement abilities and contribute to the protection of people like Maria. As I stated before, this improves overall trust in the market, which is what the end objective is really all about at the end of the day.

With that being said, the fact that we do have unanimous support, well, what I feel is unanimous support – I want to highly encourage all members of this House to vote in favour of the bill.

With that, I will close, Madam Speaker. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), the hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. You know, it's fascinating listening to the real-life example that you shared with us from your experience, Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. I just wonder: in that circumstance – and, you know, I was out for a little bit, so I didn't hear the whole thing about Maria's situation – it sounds like the duty to compel during investigations would have assisted her situation and brought more information, evidence to the table more quickly so that situation could be totally understood in terms of how she was investing with a group who was fraudulent or misusing the funds that she had committed to that investment. I'd like to hear more about that if I could.

I'd just like to better understand, you know, the kind of feedback you're getting with regard to the independence the Alberta Securities Commission has and the steps this government took to reinforce that, hiring a top-notch executive to be the chair of the commission as well as the CEO, Stan Magidson, who spent time with the ICD as their leader in Toronto and had great support in the capital investment community here in Alberta for his hiring. We're incredibly proud of the work he is doing. He's liaising across Canada to ensure that the Canadian community of securities commissions knows the value that the Alberta Securities Commission brings to that collection of commissions. Alberta continues to be a leader, to know its capital markets extremely well.

Perhaps if you could just tell us a little more about Maria and her circumstance and how these actions will protect her and what you've heard about the Alberta Securities Commission and the actions this government has taken.

The Deputy Speaker: Before I recognize Edmonton-Ellerslie, just a reminder to always speak through the chair. Also, for the benefit of Hansard, the microphones will not pick you up if you're facing away. Thank you.

Go ahead, Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Just to clarify, I know that the President of Treasury Board and Finance was on a break, shall we say. I wasn't suggesting that Maria was in any way taken or – actually, I was talking about how Maria had with every paycheque put away $50 into a Canada savings bond and that this is the experience of many people in our society that work hard every day. You know, they're not people who receive large, large sums of money, as others do in our society, right? I'm talking about your average person. But somewhere along the line they've met someone who has told them: hey, just put that little piece of money away.

You know, having the experience of working in the finance industry at RBC Dominion Securities, I want to urge all Albertans – and I always remind people: you could be making $30,000 a year, and you're just putting that little bit away, and you're going to save that amount of money for your retirement, or you could be making $200,000, like some people do, and not save a single penny because you're spending it on toys and a snowmobile and whatever the case may be.

Ms Renaud: A motorcycle. Sorry.

Loyola: I have my money well invested, and I've invested in a motorcycle.

Ms Renaud: Which is awesome.

Loyola: Thank you for that.

Again, getting back to it, I want to urge all Albertans, no matter how much you're making monthly, to just put that little bit away because when it comes to retirement, you want to make sure to have that little nest egg. Our government, through the Alberta Securities Commission, wants to make sure to protect that amount of money that you've saved for your retirement. We want to make sure that ...

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. I do agree. Motorcycles are very good investments.

Any other speakers to the bill? Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I have to disagree with you. I think investment in bikes is much wiser and much better in terms of the carbon levy and the environment, but that's just a minor disagreement.

Madam Speaker, I am so proud today to rise in support of Bill 13, the Securities Amendment Act, 2017. Very often in this house we talk about how small things make a difference. This is one of the things that I'm so proud of our government for, that we're really concerned about how we can change ways of doing things in Alberta to protect people and to ensure that ordinary Albertans do not see their life savings disappear or are not taken for granted.

I'm also reminded that last year we passed a bill around payday loans, which, again, was something that needed to be done for a long time in Alberta, and our government has done something. That has also protected Albertans and their savings and their money. I'm so proud today to support this bill.

You know, things have really changed in Canada and in other parts. In the past people saved for their retirement through a government pension, and the money was invested by professionals through a pension system, either a public pension or a company pension. But things are really, really different at the moment. Many Albertans have to work at saving for their pension right from the beginning, as the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie explained with this lady saving $50.

So many Albertans have been taken advantage of by persons who have taken their money and have not been wise about how the money has been invested. I've had a number of constituents come to my office and tell me their sad stories about how they had invested money in a fund or a security that they thought was going to be secure, that had been promised to be protected and so on and found all of their hard earnings, all the money that they had put aside and had saved for retirement gone. One of my constituents saw all of her retirement money disappear. Even though there was a trial, she could never get any of it back.

I really, really appreciate the work that the Minister of Finance and Treasury Board has done to include a strengthening so that the securities organizations can be more diligent about protecting the consumer. You know, it wasn't something that it was immediately apparent needed to be done, but still the Minister of Finance and Treasury Board has done it.

As Wanda Morris from the Canadian Association of Retired Persons says, "I've heard too many heart-wrenching stories of individuals who lost their life savings because they trusted the wrong person: an unscrupulous financial advisor." This is something which not only myself as an MLA but, I would say, many other members of this House have experienced: they have been faced with constituents to whom this has happened. Individual investors, be it that you have a thousand dollars saved or have a million dollars saved, need to know that the investment industry is being regulated properly.

I am so thankful that in my 20s, when I began earning a little bit of money, I took an investment course because I knew that if I didn't understand the challenge of investment and understand not only how to save properly but who to go to for help and advice and the challenge of knowing how many fees you're paying for and what kind of investment is protected, I might really have started saving and lost all my savings.

Financial markets are getting more and more complicated every day, and more and more people are relying on financial advisers to help guide their decisions. As a government we need to encourage investment, especially because, as I mentioned, fewer and fewer people have pension plans but also because it is critical to the development of our economy. Last year we passed a bill with tax credits for people who invest in our local economy, and this Bill 13 very much links to Bill 30 that we passed last year.

We also have to do everything we can to protect investors against the very few people in the system who would take advantage of them, and I think all of us in this House know of some really sad, terrible, terrible stories that have attracted attention in Canada. We already have strong organizations in Alberta like the Alberta Securities Commission, whose mandate is to protect investors and foster a fair and efficient Alberta capital market. The commission currently has statutory powers to compel attendance and the production of evidence during both the investigation and adjudication phases. With all the legislation dealing with the fast-changing role of securities law, some of these proposed changes are just housekeeping to ensure clarity and better compliance with Alberta's securities laws.

I'm wondering how many of the members here are day traders. When I started my investment career, when I was in my 20s, a long, long time ago, there weren't that many options about how you were going to invest your money, and really it was less fraught with problems. You either went to your bank or your credit union and invested or you might have gone to a full-service brokerage firm and met somebody and established a relationship. Now the investment vehicles are so varied. It's very hard to know, really, how secure they are, what kind of protections there are.

Also, there are so many different ways for people to be licensed to provide financial advice. This is an issue that I know many of us have discussed. Now we have people who sell life insurance, we have people in the banks, we have people in the credit unions, we have people in full brokerage, we have people on the phone and on the Internet. It's a lot more challenging work.

I wanted once again to really thank the minister for having done some very small amendments with the Securities Amendment Act to provide everyone in Alberta with the opportunity to know that there are remedies and there's a stronger vigilance about how their money is being invested.

Madam Speaker, I'm happy to see that this bill will have support from all sides of the House. I also would like to support the remarks of my colleague the MLA for Edmonton-Ellerslie that as we debate this bill and we talk about the need to save for retirement and the need to ensure that we save, we all think carefully and choose wisely how we're going to invest and make sure that we invest through the types of investments that are protected under Alberta laws.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), questions or comments?

Seeing none, other members to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am very proud today to stand here to support Bill 13, Securities Amendment Act, 2017. I agree with almost one hundred per cent of everything that my colleague from Calgary-Currie says except when he described Bill 13 as – and I’m paraphrasing – somewhat boring. I’m sure the Minister of Finance doesn’t agree with that, and indeed I stand here really attesting to the fact that I find this to be one of the most exciting pieces of legislation.

Loyola: I didn’t say that.

Dr. Turner: I said Calgary-Currie, by the way. I’m one hundred per cent in agreement with my colleague from Edmonton-Ellerslie and always have been, including my support of left-wing causes.

Calgary-Currie made the mistake – I think he might regret it – of saying that this act really wasn’t all that exciting. Tell that to people like Maria, or tell that to people like a constituent of mine who has been in my constituency office on multiple occasions, a senior citizen on a fixed income who has been the unwitting prey of an unscrupulous financial adviser. This financial adviser actually absconded with more than $300,000 of this constituent’s wealth, and it forced her to sell her home and to move into less than satisfactory accommodations.

This law that we have now would help prevent that sort of thing. This actual action occurred four or five years ago, and despite appeals to the banking regulator, because there was a chartered bank that was involved in this situation, and despite appeals to the Securities Commission, my constituent has been pauperized by the actions of this individual. That individual has actually absconded and left Canada and is out of the reach of justice in this province.

I want to repeat something that’s been said already. This government is working every day to make life better for Albertans, Albertans of all sorts. In this situation as a senior I’m actually going to speak on behalf of my fellow senior citizens in this province. Many of those seniors are small investors. Whether you’re a senior or not, you’re going to be faced with having to make investment decisions, basically, throughout your life. Seniors have to make decisions, for instance, about how they invest their RRIFs or their RRSPs. At the age of 71 the rules of RRSPs dictate that you begin to withdraw a certain portion of your income. That means that you have to actually make investments that will yield that kind of money and that you withdraw it.

It’s not only people that are investing in RRSPs and RRIFs that need to be aware of this sort of thing. Those young people that are investing in RESPs for their children’s education – and I would certainly recommend that every parent make sure that they have an RESP, taking advantage of the federal monies coming in to help augment the size of the RESPs. The holder of an RESP has to make decisions about where that money is going to be invested, and that means that the holder has to have confidence in the purveyor of these investments. With this law, Bill 13, we are going to make that situation a bit safer for these investors.

There’s another situation in which people of all ages have to make decisions about investments, and that’s in the situation where they might have a pension that is called a defined contribution type of pension. There’s a defined benefit pension, which many of us who are public servants have access to and which is, in my opinion, a better form of pension than a defined contribution pension. But if you do have a defined contribution pension, it is actually your responsibility to invest the pension money into a suitable investment product.

There have been many instances – you can take the American example of Enron. Everybody knows about Enron.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Dr. Turner: We don’t know about Enron? Enron was an American corporation that basically played fast and dirty with electricity contracts and other energy contracts.

I had a brother-in-law who was a captain of a petroleum tanker in Florida which happened to be owned by a company related to Enron. What Enron was doing was making the people that worked for that tanker company invest their pension, which was a defined contribution pension, into Enron shares. Guess what happened to my brother-in-law’s pension when Enron went broke through malfeasance of the people that ran it? I imagine that some of the members across the way actually know more of the details about that than I do. My brother-in-law basically lost all of his pension. He’s still struggling 20 years later to build back something to take care of himself in his older years.

We definitely need to be paying attention to that.

I’m going to bring up some other names just because they’re important to be recognized in this context. The name Ponzi, the name Madoff, Bre-X: these were all schemes somewhat like Enron that basically preyed upon the gullibility, if you wish, of the general public in regard to investments. Ponzi actually happened a hundred years ago; Bre-X, maybe – what? – 20, 25 years ago; Madoff, 10, 15 years ago. Yet we’re still struggling with this. I really congratulate the minister and his department for bringing forward this legislation that’s going to at least partially help prevent a repetition of a Ponzi scheme or the Madoff story or perhaps even Bre-X, although that situation is somewhat different financially from the other two.

The financial markets are getting really complicated, and more and more people are relying on financial advisers. That’s probably a good idea. I’m sure, like the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, there are probably at least 200 good financial advisers for every one that’s not good, but it is our responsibility as a government to help protect folks in that way.

We need to be encouraging investment because it’s critical to our economy. This is going to help diversify our economy. It’s going to help provide for the security of our senior citizens. It’s going to help provide for the security of getting our children educated through RESPs. I could go on and on. Investors need to be protected in some ways, and this is a good use of, if you wish, red tape or regulation. You know, we already have strong organizations like the Securities Commission and the self-regulatory organizations, but we need to support those.

In sum, because I’m a consumer of these products and I recognize how important investment is to making sure that the whole economy is functioning well, I would urge all of the members of the Legislature to support this fine legislation.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing order 29(2)(a)? Go ahead, hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Member, for sharing your information and talking about the situation you’re aware of in regard to the $300,000 that a constituent was unfortunately bilked out of. You know, there are thousands and thousands of financial advisers in this province, and the vast, vast, vast majority are upright and follow the laws and have no problem at all with regard to any sanctions from the ASC or IIROC or the other organizations. But there are some wrongdoers out there, and this amendment, the Securities Amendment Act, Bill 13, will give greater powers for that investigation to go on with regard to the people, the self-regulatory organizations, so that they're more in line with the powers of inspectors from the ASC.

Could you just maybe focus a little bit on how you think this will prevent future wrongdoers from taking the actions that occurred with your constituent? I mean, we're looking at changing things so that people can be properly investigated and prosecuted and monies can be recovered or attempts to recover money can be more successful. What effect do you think these amendments will have on preventing these actions in the future?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Turner: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I think these are very important questions, and I'm pleased to respond to them. In my experience, I've dealt with probably at least a dozen or more financial advisers over my adult life, and all of them have been credible, honest, of high integrity, and what I hear from my friends who are financial advisers is that, basically, their image needs to be burnished. I think many people look at financial advisers somewhat like used-car salesmen in that there's maybe a taint to even that title. So having these sorts of protections built into the regulations I think is going to be a great help to the investment advisers who are competent and who deal with clients with great integrity.

To answer the question specifically, what impresses me about Bill 13, specifically in reference to the constituent that I was mentioning, is that the legislation will force the respondents to respond. They're actually compelled to respond, and they have a much shorter time to respond than they do now. During that month that they have to respond now – and it's going to be shortened to two weeks, as I understand – many of these folks go to Belize or some other place that they can't be extradited from, and they basically hide their ill-gotten gains and make it difficult to have recovery.

I think that many of the provisions of this bill are going to help in enforcement, if you wish, but I think its greatest benefit is going to be to provide more faith and trust by the general public of our investment organizations.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, other speakers to the bill? Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Pleased to rise today to speak to this piece of legislation as proposed as a major regular update of the legislation in keeping with Alberta's commitment that was made to ongoing reform and modernization and harmonization of securities laws in Canada. Alberta made that commitment in a 2004 memorandum of understanding with other provinces and territories across the country, and since then we've had a regular practice of reviewing and updating the securities laws annually along with other provinces and territories, and this legislation, these amendments, are in keeping with that commitment.

The securities regulatory landscape in Canada has become more complex, continues to change over time, becomes more sophisticated and international in scope, and is driven by technology more than ever before. Since the 2007 financial crisis, which the world is still recovering from in many quarters, it's become more difficult to sustain quality capital markets. Alberta's challenge is to deliver the right regulation to support investor confidence and encourage investment, innovation, and economic growth in Alberta and across Canada. Once again, these amendments are designed to maintain our momentum in ensuring that we keep up with the times with respect to securities regulation globally. We must ensure that our securities regulatory system reflects the realities of today's markets and stays in step with evolving international standards and global regulatory reform initiatives.

These powers, as I say, are more than housekeeping changes. These amendments will help ensure Alberta has fair and effective capital markets by extending powers to recognized regulatory organizations so that they can compel testimony and the production of evidence during a disciplinary hearing. This is a significant change, which will give more teeth and more legitimacy to the regulatory organizations which protect the public in securities investment in the province.

The changes will extend immunity to the directors, officers, employees, and agents of regulatory organizations from civil liability when conducting enforcement activity, something which is absolutely essential in order for those directors to do that task of oversight and enforcement. Not being protected from civil liability would expose them to legal suits that would make it impossible for them to conduct their job. That's why this immunity is being granted to the regulatory officers by this amendment. The people responsible for enforcing securities rules must be able to do their jobs without fear of being held personally liable.

It's something that is very common in self-regulated industries as well, where there are oversight bodies and members and directors who have the responsibility to make decisions and adjudicate over that particular industry. They are commonly granted this immunity from prosecution so that they can freely do their jobs. Protecting them from liability for carrying out their duties in good faith makes it possible to enforce the rules more effectively.

Compared to other jurisdictions, Madam Speaker, the immunity and statutory powers to compel attendance and the production of evidence at securities laws investigations were recommended by the Investment Industry Regulatory Organization of Canada, and this came as a result of hearings and broad public consultations with industry and investors. These changes are also planned by other jurisdictions across Canada. Quebec is considering similar investigative authority for regulatory organizations. B.C., Ontario, Saskatchewan, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, and Yukon have committed to adopting immunity provisions. We're not doing something that's out of the ordinary. It's in keeping with the momentum that we have committed to in annually updating our regulations, on a regular basis. The Minister of Finance and head of the Treasury Board will bring forward amendments to ensure that the modernization of the securities regulations in Alberta keeps up with the changing landscape of the global securities field.

The Alberta Securities Commission is an industry-funded provincial corporation responsible for ensuring a fair and efficient capital market in Alberta. The Securities Commission develops and enforces securities regulations, it offers information and resources to Albertans about investing, and it administers Alberta's Securities Act and regulations.

Now, I mentioned that regulatory organizations would be granted having the powers extended to them to compel testimony and the production of evidence, and I wanted to maybe explain a little bit more about the organizations. Firstly, the Investment Industry Regulatory Organization of Canada is a national regulatory organization which oversees all investment dealers and trading activity in debt and equity marketplaces in Canada. The Investment Industry Regulatory Organization of Canada was created in 2008 through the consolidation of Investment Dealers Association of Canada and Market Regulation Services Inc. and sets high-quality regulatory investment industry standards, protects investors, and strengthens market integrity while maintaining efficient and competitive capital markets. It was from there that the recommendations to have these new amendments occur came. The Mutual Fund Dealers Association of Canada is a national regulatory organization for the distribution side of the Canadian mutual fund industry. The association regulates the operations, standards of practice, and business conduct of its members and their representatives.

Now, the government delegates authority to regulatory organizations for specific reasons. Provincial regulators have delegated certain aspects of their authority to regulatory organizations to provide more effective and efficient regulation of the market and market participants.

Madam Speaker, what we're doing today is going to satisfy the desires of a lot of investors in this province, people who rely upon the provincial government to ensure that rules are in place that govern those involved in the investment and securities industry in a way that makes them know that should they contravene the rules, there will be severe consequences and that the regulators have the tools at their disposal to ensure compliance and investigate any wrongdoings that are brought forward.

Many people in this province over time have suffered as a result of wrongdoing by investment dealers, and of course the stories have been relayed or spoken about in this House by other members previously. What we're doing is continually updating our rules and regulations so that these types of bad-news stories are kept at a minimum. By and large, we know that the investment dealers throughout the province and indeed across the country are very highly respected, but no matter what industry one talks about, there are rules and regulations and government orders in place to protect the public, as there should be. We in Alberta are once again leading the way in bringing forward these types of amendments so that the standard of care for our public is the highest it possibly can be.

Extending powers to recognized regulatory organizations so that we can compel testimony and production of evidence through a disciplinary hearing is a natural progression of the oversight powers that the public demands we have for our Alberta citizens and for protection of their hard-earned money and their investments as they retire and save for their end of life as well as when they save to protect the educational opportunities for their children or perhaps for those in their families who may be looking to having to survive with a disability after their parents have died. There's a mechanism for them to invest as well.

It's important that all of those investments that people rely on are protected and given the highest level of scrutiny so that anyone with malintent is weeded out of the industry and properly sanctioned by rules that are continually upgraded after oversight and recommendations by people in the industry, by citizens who are involved in investing, and by other bodies and members of the industry that have an interest in making sure that the reputation of investment dealers and the investment community is absolutely stellar in this province. That's what this legislation continues to do as we meet our commitments to review this legislation on an annual basis, in step with other provinces and the territories as well as the federal government, in keeping the legislation across the country relatively in line with each jurisdiction, one with respect to the other, so that you don't end up with crossjurisdictional difficulties.

That's the way in which we will continue to operate in this province and ensure that there is a very healthy and transparent and reliable investment regulatory system and framework in place so that when people do receive a request or a recommendation from an investment dealer or securities agent that they are engaging with, they can have confidence that that individual's activities have the scrutiny of oversight and so that they know that if indeed there is something that they think has gone awry, there's a place that they can report it to and know that it will receive significant scrutiny and oversight and that the body that does actually look at the transgression will have the legal teeth necessary to fully investigate and, if necessary, sanction those individuals who may be contravening the laws.

With that, I will once again commend the Minister of Finance and thank him for bringing this legislation up to date with these amendments, that he's advised us he will continue to do in future years. I agree that this is actually much more than simple house-keeping on an annual basis, because it is a fairly significant step to not only grant immunity to the directors, officers, employees, and agents of these regulatory bodies and also to clarify the conditions under which immunity is granted to these organizations, but in the first place to give them the authority to compel witnesses and to compel documents to be produced is a major step forward to changing how these organizations are viewed by those who might consider bending the rules for their own advantage.

I think that it will go a long way in helping investors in Alberta have confidence that the landscape in Alberta for investors has changed in their favour and they can know that there is an even greater layer of protection laid upon them by the amendment to this legislation for their protection and that of their families as they invest for their future.

Thank you.

4:30

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you. To the Member for Edmonton-McClung, Stan Magidson, the chair and the CEO of Alberta Securities Commission, agrees with you. He said recently, "Strong investor protection is a critical component of our mandate, and we support meaningful and practical regulatory advances such as this that can have a real impact on protecting Albertans from financial misconduct."

I agree with everything that you said just now. I guess I know that you're a lifelong professional in terms of real estate in this province. I just wonder. With seeing so many clients who are saving money for often their first home and, you know, the protections that the real estate industry has in place with regard to monies needing to be deposited and put in trust and all those sorts of things, I wonder if you've heard from any of those clients or know situations where people have perhaps been with unscrupulous financial advisers and lost money that they could not then put into their home or to use for the benefit of their family with regard to making important purchases, the biggest purchase that they often make in their life in terms of housing. Do you know of situations where, you know, with other parts of their investments they were not treated so well?

We heard earlier from another member who knew of a situation where $300,000 was misappropriated, and that person did not get those monies back. This kind of legislation will, as you said, be able to get to the heart of and investigate these matters more quickly so that people will know what's happened, will be able to see some actions taking place so that those same individuals who are doing wrong with investment advice and taking monies and giving bad advice and not being straight with their clients – we'll be able to get to the heart of the matter more quickly. Have you heard of other situations where that hasn't occurred because this kind of protection wasn't in place?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to respond to the Minister of Finance's questions. Indeed, I did over a 30-year real estate career come across many, many situations where people saved their hard-earned money and made the difficult decision of sacrifice each and every paycheque to put that money away and were very disciplined in doing so. It's not an easy thing to do, particularly when you're – no matter what age you are, saving is a hard thing to do. It takes a lot of effort and, really, a lot of dedication and sacrifice from a family to put together that down payment, whether it's a minimum 5 per cent down payment or you're looking at a 15 per cent down payment to avoid the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. It's been two years, so I may have those percentages wrong.

I know that when I had a family come to me, particularly first-time homebuyers, I'd sit down and I'd do a one and a half, two-hour interview before we'd even go looking at houses. That was my standard modus operandi. If you wanted to go looking at houses with me and you wanted me to represent you, I wanted to know who you are and where you're at and what exactly your needs were.

I have had situations, Madam Speaker, where the family would talk to me and we'd have an initial interview. Even when I'd meet somebody anywhere – I would talk real estate no matter where I was; in an elevator, grocery store, didn't matter what – people would say: "Oh, well, we've just started out. We're looking next year. I don't know when we're going to buy a house." I'd say: "Well, that's okay. Come talk with me. I'll talk with you for an hour and a half anyways, get you going." Even knowing that those people may be a year and a half, two years away from purchasing a property, I'd sit down and spend that hour and a half, two hours with them and go through that process and find out what their needs were and try to determine a savings plan so they could more effectively save that money and get into that house faster than they otherwise would because they were paying more in rent than they really needed to. If there were solutions that could be made to adjust what they were paying in other output costs, then we'd take a look at that so that that savings would rise quickly.

Some of the times when I looked at the investments that they had those savings in, they weren't very appropriate. It was, in some certain cases, because they chose the wrong investor's help.

The Deputy Speaker: The time has expired for 29(2)(a).

The next speaker, Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, as I was considering this bill, at first I didn't think too much of it. I haven't heard too much about securities from my constituents, but then I did a little bit of digging on, you know, demographic trends and such, and in parts of my constituency I've got everything from, like, subsidized trailer parks up to multimillion-dollar homes, so certainly there are a lot of constituents that are seeking the services of a financial adviser. I, actually, just the other year myself did the same thing. There seems to be a theme today. Earlier I was talking about protecting homebuyers with their large financial decisions. Now I'm talking about people as they seek the advice of financial advisers. I think these are both equally important issues.

You know, for a lot of Albertans, not just my constituents, of course, they need to be able to know that whoever they discuss their finances with, they can trust that person. Especially if it's a situation where there are large amounts of investment or indeed if it's your only savings, that can be very sensitive information. I think that the majority of financial advisers, I'm sure, are fine, outstanding people, but there's always that one or two that give the entire industry a bad name. I think it's really great to see some legislation coming forward to show that we are both protecting the person seeking the services as well as the financial advisers as a collective group. I think that legislation like this really helps to provide some confidence when seeking the advice of a financial adviser.

You know, regulation bodies like what is being discussed here really help to make sure that if there are those oddball people out there who aren't necessarily the most outstanding citizens or perhaps – it's entirely possible that they're just ignorant of the regulations. But it provides some certainty that there's a possibility of recourse there. So I think that having that certainty provides a lot of comfort for Albertans. For many Albertans these are things like their retirement we're talking about here. We're talking about, you know – I myself am definitely a long ways away from retirement, but there are some programs available that I've kept my eye on, and hopefully by the time that I can make use of those, they're still there.

But, you know, there are RESPs, your children's education and, really, their future and RRSPs as well as TFSAs and everything else as well as direct investments. When Albertans and indeed anybody go to seek advice on these things, they need to know that not only the person that they are talking to knows what they're talking about but also that there's nothing shady going on. When I was going through school, there was a lot of talk about identity theft, especially with the growing digital age, and, you know, that's certainly something that you would be opening yourself up to when you seek some financial advice. So it's really important to see that there are protections there for Albertans.

You know, I am very happy to see the minister bring forward this legislation to help protect the person seeking these services. It also helps protect the people doing the investigations. It helps protect the employees of the regulatory organizations, and I think that's certainly very important. When we have a regulatory organization, they need to have the ability to investigate any allegations that do arise. Certainly, having the ability to compel attendance and produce evidence in cases of alleged wrongdoing: I think that's very important. It helps them be able to do both their jobs but also helps protect the investors themselves. I think that's something that's certainly very important. It also helps ensure that these investigations are carried out in good faith and that regulatory bodies are really able to engage in their duties with that faith in mind.

Now, I know the minister reached out to several of the organizations involved, you know, the Alberta Securities Commission as well as the Investment Industry Regulatory Organization of Canada, and they helped develop this bill along with the minister. I think that that shows that there's some buy-in from the financial adviser community here.

Overall I think that this is a good bill. You know, the world of financial securities changes constantly. It's not the first of these amendment bills that we've seen, and I'm sure it certainly won't be the last, nor indeed do I think it should be the last. New technologies, new practices, new agreements between jurisdictions: these come up all the time. I know there was a federal one just recently, a similar amendment act, that was a result of an agreement with some place like Gibraltar, like, a fairly small country. But it's very important that we keep on top of all of these.

I would like to take a moment to thank the minister for bringing this forward, and I hope to see all members of this House support this bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Yeah, and I'm just speaking to the bill, not 29(2)(a).

The Deputy Speaker: You want to speak to the bill?

Mr. Orr: Yeah, if you're ready for that.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay. In a second.

You had a question under 29(2)(a), hon. minister? Go ahead.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker and to the member. It's always great to hear people planning for their future and making investment decisions. I guess a question to him and to others who might be thinking about that: what were some of the criteria that you used in choosing who to work with, and how can others maybe do some of that work to feel confident, especially at such a young age?

[Mr. Sucha in the chair]

I want to commend you not only for being very significant in your savings, but you're also very significant, I know, in donations to a variety of organizations. So you are clearly making many efforts to make life better. How do you ensure that the people who are supporting you in that work have those same values?

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and welcome to the chair. And thank you to the minister for the question. You know, prior to being elected, I was working part-time as I made my way through university. Then suddenly I had a rather large increase in both the paid hours I was working – of course, I was putting a lot of work into my school time – but also in my income, so I felt that it was prudent to reach out and seek some advice early, before I developed any habits that I would later regret down the road.

I started asking around to people I knew: who did you talk to? And there was one name that seemed to have a fairly good rapport in the community, a local guy in St. Albert. I reached out to him and asked his advice. You know, at that point we were looking at purchasing a home and everything, and he said: okay; well, here are the steps that I myself would take if I were to be looking towards that and was in your financial situation.

So we've been putting some money into RSPs as well as trying to avoid things like credit card debt. I also made the purchase of a vehicle fairly recently, slightly used. Well, I bought a 2016 car used in 2016, but it was a rental. [interjection] The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood is telling me how to park. For those of you that don't know, his parking spot is next to mine.

You know, I bought it slightly used. I did my research, and I picked a car that doesn't depreciate that much. Some of the other cars on the lot I looked at were five years older, but they were selling for only, like, $1,000 or $2,000 less. So I thought that that was a fairly prudent investment. In fact, to get any significant savings, I had to go to a car that was 10 years old, and it looked like it had some engine issues and was starting to get some rust around the wheel well and things like that. So I figured that given the two choices, it was more prudent to go with the slightly used car.

So, yeah, back to the minister's question. I reached out to the community and to people that I knew had talked to financial advisers and asked them who they went to. I've made similar inquiries about various other services that I didn't need as much before. You know, I didn't have much need for tailoring in my previous life, so I reached out and discovered who had a good reputation in the community. I think that's a great process, that many constituents can use and many Albertans can use. Well, I would go so far as to say that anybody anywhere can use this approach.

I saw the minister making motions towards haircutting. Actually, I didn't have to ask people about haircutting because . . .

4:50

The Acting Speaker: The time for 29(2)(a) has expired.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you. Yes. I'd love to speak to this, bring a little bit of excitement to it, because I think this is actually a fascinating topic. I've always been truly interested in this, and I can support Bill 13, the Securities Amendment Act, 2017.

I think it's important because of the evolving complexities of the marketplace. There are ever-new financial products out there, ever-new derivative markets being created, and, in fact, ever-new trading platforms that are confusing and difficult. Because of the complexity of the market, we have to keep up to it. I think there's also the reality of the increasing needs of people in our complex society to have financial instruments as a way to not only park but even have assets.

You know, in days gone by people were more focused on land. They would oftentimes have rental or lease revenue. It's a small part of the population that can actually have, for instance, business dividends that can carry them into years of retirement or whatever. Not everybody gets a government gold-plated pension. The reality is that people need some mechanism by which to preserve their assets and their wealth. It's an increasingly complex world; therefore, we need to keep up to date with how we protect people as they try to do those kinds of things.

Because it's an increasingly complex world, I fear a little bit that people somewhat tend to just throw up their hands in frustration and, consequently, trust their broker too much. There are too many people that I've run into who just feel like: I don't know all this stuff; whatever they tell me is what I'll do. Yeah, that's an easy way out. But the truth of the matter is that the crooks will take advantage of that in our society.

I guess what I'd like to say is that it's a great bill as far as it goes, but it's sort of after-the-fact protection. I'd also like to see some sort of before-the-fact protection maybe more, and I think maybe the only way for that to happen is through increased investor education and increased investor knowledge. Never trust a dealer. That is my advice to everybody.

I remember years ago I was quite involved, actually, through some family business with some listings on the Vancouver Stock Exchange, and I read a book that I would recommend to everyone for their financial education. I see on the Internet here that it's still available today. It was written by a journalist and is called, Fleeing the Lamb: The Inside Story of the Vancouver Stock Exchange, by David Cruise. I would encourage anybody who hasn't read that book to read it. It will increase your knowledge of how the markets work, why they work, who they're for.

The markets are not for the benefit of consumers, I assure you that. The markets are for the benefit, really, of businesses to raise capital. That's why they create shares, so they can sell little, tiny pieces of the company and create capital with which to function. Now, that's a good thing because it allows for business to grow and develop and our economy to develop, but there are risks in it to the consumer. Too many people just aren't willing to be educated well enough to understand the risks and are frustrated by the complexity and just give up on it.

I also want to say that because the modern economy needs a marketplace, we do need to be careful also of the extreme reaction of too much regulation. Businesses will avoid marketplaces that are so regulated that it becomes impossible for them to function. That, to some degree, has happened in the last 15 to 20 years in our North American equities markets. In many cases the markets have become nothing but exit strategies for insiders and owners. They just want a way to liquefy their assets and turn shares into cash. Then what happens is that some of these publicly traded companies that become viable are taken over, on the other hand, by private equity, so the good investments for the ordinary people are often pulled out of the marketplace.

There's a real need for balance here in terms of regulation and the freedom and the viability of our economy because the reality is that stable, reliable, healthy marketplaces are key to a healthy economy, key to the generation of jobs in a society, key to a middle-class lifestyle. In fact, healthy marketplaces are one of the key metrics by which countries' viabilities are measured. Third-world countries that struggle economically to provide middle-class income for their citizens in many cases don't have viable equity markets, so it's extremely important. Access to capital is necessary to build businesses, innovation, GDP, raise our standard of living, and protect the wealth that we have.

I think it's a great bill. I think we always need to be paying attention to and finding that balance between protection of consumers, protection of industry and of the economy itself and how we move that forward.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any speakers under 29(2)(a)? The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to get a chance to ask some questions around this. I have to agree. I think it's really important that we ensure that all individuals have opportunities to gain greater understanding in terms of financial literacy, investment prudence, and educational support to be able to support themselves, ask critical questions when necessary. Definitely, I think that's one half of it. I think the other half is ensuring that there's recourse if something does happen that is unbecoming to the individual.

I guess the main question I want to ask is around work we're doing in curriculum redesign to make sure that all students have opportunities to have these types of knowledge to be able to care for themselves. Certainly, there are a number of areas that are related, and I think one is financial literacy. When I was on the Edmonton public school board, I was really proud to bring forward a resolution to the Alberta School Boards Association, along with the rest of my board, that this be incorporated into the upcoming curriculum review. That was a number of years ago.

Obviously, it needs to be done, and I think this is an opportunity. I'd be happy to hear if the member opposite would support that through the curriculum redesign, increased opportunities for financial literacy and financial acumen, and what other areas he thinks might relate as the minister engages in that work in supporting all Albertans to prepare for opportunities not only in the world of work but also in the world of investment.

The Acting Speaker: Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Yeah. That's a great question. I actually was going to make a note about it earlier, but I figured I'd keep it limited. I truly think that incorporating some financial literacy into our education curriculum would be very helpful, considering the kind of society we're in. The Education minister, of course, isn't here at the moment, but I'm sure he'll consider that.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, just to remind you about referring to the presence of members in the House.

Mr. Orr: Because he's not here. Right. Sorry. My apologies. I'll stick to the Health minister.

Yeah, I think that incorporating that, especially at the higher grades, the high school level, would be extremely important.

The other thing that I think would be helpful in that regard might be to somehow look at how we, either through regulation or simply asking the industry's self-regulation itself to do that, include a higher or a more extended level of education with customers when they come in and they're looking for something like that. I know a lot of the businesses are working in that direction. But I do think that an increased level of education would be extremely valuable and would protect customers in many cases from making mistakes, not only just from fraudulent issues but even just from making mistakes in the kinds of investments that don't actually benefit them in the long run because that's not really helpful either.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), any other members? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm actually rising to congratulate the member opposite on his presentation. I think it has been a valuable contribution. My question would actually relate to something he mentioned about the complexity of modern investment vehicles. I know that in this legislation we are referring, or we did in previous legislation, to how the derivative market is working, but there are other novel things going on these days such as the Bitcoin and alternate currencies.

I read a fascinating book a while back. I've forgotten the title of it, but it was about how investment corporations in the United States had actually created a fibre-optic link between Chicago and New York, and they actually had to make sure that there were no curves in the line. They had to keep it as straight as possible because in millionths of seconds they could actually beat the market. I'm just wondering if the member opposite had comments on how the securities market in this province can be protected, I guess, from that sort of manipulation.

Mr. Orr: Yeah. That's a really interesting subject. The whole evolution of automated trading – and it's actually evolving at a rapid, rapid pace – does hold serious risk for retail investors and maybe even, quite frankly, for the industry as a whole, as we saw with the package real estate market meltdown in 2008 in the U.S. That was a part of the derivative market. So I think there is an ongoing, serious need to monitor it.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's nice to see the Member for Calgary-Shaw in the Speaker's chair. It's my privilege to stand and speak to Bill 13, the Securities Amendment Act, 2017. I'm speaking in support of it.

I just wanted to go back to maybe some basics for those that maybe need a quick rundown on exactly what it is that we're talking about. Securities regulation: what it is is the conduct of securities market participants, including issuers, that raise capital through securities offerings, and their directors and officers and securities firms, the directors and officers and employees registered to advise and trade in securities.

Canada does not have federal securities regulation. Regulation falls under provincial jurisdiction, and the provinces are working together through the Canadian Securities Administrators to co-ordinate securities regulation throughout Canada.

Securities regulation in Alberta is the responsibility of the Alberta Securities Commission. The Alberta Securities Commission is an industry-funded provincial corporation that is responsible for ensuring that a fair and efficient capital market exists in Alberta. It also develops and enforces securities regulations, offers information and resources to Albertans about investing, and administers Alberta's Securities Act and regulations.

Regulatory organizations such as the Investment Industry Regulatory Organization of Canada and the Mutual Fund Dealers Association of Canada have authority that is delegated by the Alberta Securities Act to make sure that their member firms meet standards set by the province's securities laws. Regulatory organizations are an important part of the enforcement mosaic in Canada. The three key regulatory organizations, as overseen by members of the Canadian Securities Administrators, are the Investment Industry Regulatory Organization of Canada, the Mutual Fund Dealers Association of Canada, and the Chambre de la sécurité financière. These three organizations concluded 139 enforcement cases in 2015, and that compared to 112 in 2014. In 2015 the Canadian Securities Administrators' members concluded matters that involved 233 individuals and 117 companies, or 350 total respondents.

There are certain securities violations that proceed to prosecution either through an administrative tribunal or a provincial court, depending on the type of violation and the jurisdiction where it occurred.

For those that don't know what the Canadian Securities Administrators is, it is an umbrella organization of Canada's provincial and territorial securities regulators whose objective is to improve, coordinate, and harmonize regulation of the Canadian capital markets.

For those that don't know what the Investment Industry Regulatory Organization of Canada is, it is the national regulatory organization that oversees investment dealers and trading activity in debt and equity in the marketplaces of Canada. It also was created in 2008 to consolidate the Investment Dealers Association of Canada and Market Regulation Services Inc., and it sets high-quality regulatory and investment industry standards, protects investors, and strengthens market integrity while maintaining efficient and competitive capital markets. The government delegates authority to these regulatory organizations so that they can provide effective and efficient regulation of the market and market participants.

What this bill sets out to do, other than just some standard updating to ensure that it's in line with international standards, is that it will provide regulatory organizations the same enforcement authorities as the Alberta Securities Commission. It will give regulatory organizations the ability to compel attendance and production of evidence so that they are better able to do their jobs and to protect Alberta investors. It will also protect the people who investigate these cases from liability while carrying out their duties in good faith. This is one of the ways that our government is working to make life better for Albertans, making practical changes that will make sure that Albertans' investments are safe.

To again quote Wanda Morris from the Canadian Association of Retired Persons, she said, "I've heard too many heart-wrenching stories of individuals who lost their life savings because they trusted the wrong person: an unscrupulous financial advisor." Unfortunately, sometimes individuals are taken advantage of with a lack of regulation or a lack of scruples. Unfortunately, sometimes these people also lose their lives because of the stress that it causes themselves and their families, which is always quite tragic.

Individual investors and large investors need to know that the investment industry is being regulated properly. The commission currently has statutory powers to compel evidence and attendance during both the investigation and adjudication phases. However, self-regulatory organizations such as the Investment Industry Regulatory Organization of Canada and the Mutual Fund Dealers Association do not currently have this authority. Alberta will be the first in Canada.

Andrew J. Krieger, president and CEO of Investment Industry Regulatory Organization of Canada, says, "We congratulate the Minister of Finance and the Government of Alberta for their leadership in being at the forefront of investor protection in Canada," and that these legislative changes will mean that "Alberta becomes the first province in Canada to provide IIROC with a complete toolkit" that will enable more effective fulfillment of "responsibilities as a public interest regulator and bring wrongdoers to justice."

This actually was quite meaningful to me when it came forward because I actually have had constituents come into my office that have been victims of money schemes, of Ponzi schemes, as a matter of fact. There was a case that involved a person by the name of Wade Robert Closson, who was able to take $10.8 million away from 125 investors, and none of these people have ever been paid back. The commission found that Closson lied to investors. Instead of investing the money in mortgages, what he did was that he used $5.6 million of new investor money to pay returns to other investors and $3.9 million for other projects outside the scope of the investment's purposes and used $800,000 of that for his own personal use. As a note, he does owe almost all of that money still to investors. The fine that was waged on him was $1 million, and he does have a permanent ban placed on him on being able to trade.

However, when you have someone in front of you like I had in my office, telling you that they lost their entire life savings to someone like this, they obviously will never feel like it's enough to actually address what happened to them.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

There's also the really terrible case of someone named Jeremy, or Jay, Peers. There were 11 counts he committed that breached the Alberta Securities Commission, and he was guilty of taking $80 million of investors' money and causing it to disappear in the practices that he was engaging in. He was fined $5 million and was sentenced to five years less one day. That decision was upheld by our Alberta Court of Appeal, and it was also upheld by the Supreme Court of Canada.

So I think it is incredibly important that we continue to move forward with legislation that will ensure that we're looking after Albertans and their hard-earned money because it's not just money, but it's individuals and their families that are trying to make plans for the future. When there are individuals that lack the scruples to be able to actually manage those funds as someone has entrusted them to do, it can end in incredibly tragic consequences for those that are involved.

With that, I will thank the Minister of Finance and look forward to continued support for these amendments. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other speakers to the bill?

Are you ready for the question?

The hon. Minister of Finance to close debate.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I just want to commend all of the speakers on both sides of the House for their time and attention here today with regard to Bill 13, the Securities Amendment Act, 2017, that we have been elucidating in the different discussions and different presentations.

As was rightly pointed out, since 2004 governments in Alberta have been yearly bringing forward securities amendment acts to stay abreast of all the evolving changes in securities legislation across the country and in best practices. I think there was only one year that there was a miss in terms of amendments being brought forward, and it was around 2012, when an election intervened and there was not an opportunity to bring a bill forward with that government.

Since the new government has been elected, May 2015, I have three times brought to this House bills that would improve the securities sector in this province and bring greater clarity to the application of the securities laws in this province and give more enforcement teeth, as we are doing at this time with this bill, this amendment. We have also shortened the length of time necessary for people to produce evidence, when they are now compelled to produce evidence in terms of investigations, and other actions have improved that situation for our investigators.

Madam Speaker, the ASC is the overarching regulator in this province, and they have given self-regulatory permission to two SROs that we're dealing with today, IIROC and the Mutual Fund Dealers Association. Now the investigators for those two organizations will be able to have the same sorts of powers that current ASC investigators do and immunity from malicious suits and so be better able to do their jobs without fear of reprisals from those who are doing wrong and want to stymie the progress of investigations.

We have good partners in IIROC and the Mutual Fund Dealers Association. We have great advocates in people like the Canadian Association of Retired Persons, who are fully onside with the actions we're taking here today, and we'll continue to work with our partner jurisdictions throughout the country. Notably, Quebec is taking similar kinds of actions to what we're taking today in this province so that investors can be better protected in that province. I might note that today Quebec had a summary judgment from the Court of Appeal, a decision on a particular part of the securities regime in that province. What I read from that work that they did in terms of going to their courts is that they're in line with Alberta in terms of the independent securities regulator, and they're getting support from their courts to say that the actions they're taking to be independent make a great deal of sense and are in the best interests of investors in that province.

That's why we took the actions we did, Madam Speaker, to make sure that Alberta's unique investment community had an independent regulator who could be closely in touch with and mere feet away from the investment community here instead of thousands of kilometres away in terms of being on Bay Street or in Ottawa. We believe strongly that continuing to have that independent securities commission in our province and the chair and CEO, Stan Magidson, is in the best interests of Alberta.

Madam Speaker, the work we've done today I think will continue to prove well for this province. Continuing to amend the Securities Act is in the best interests of our investment community and the protection of investors here. We are taking actions that will provide immunity for the regulatory organizations that work with the Alberta Securities Commission, and we are taking actions to compel the production of evidence during investigations and not just during hearings so that the full tool kit is now available for the people who take on the difficult task of trying to unravel sometimes the fraud that goes on with unscrupulous investment personnel.

I just want to quickly say that the vast, vast majority of people who are involved with investments have the utmost high standards in terms of ethicalness and competency. There are from time to time people who take advantage, though, and those people need to be brought to justice as quickly as possible. The actions we're taking today will assist in making that happen so that we have integrity and confidence that when we go to people, when we put our hard-earned money in the hands of other people, they will treat that with the kind of care that we know needs to be taken. It's just like assurance that our monies are in good hands. When they get into wrongdoers' hands, though, those people need to be brought to justice as quickly as possible, as I say. The situations that members here today elaborated on, situations they know about where these negative actions occurred as a result of wrongdoers: those are tragic. We need to be assured that actions are being taken and that organizations like the Mutual Fund Dealers Association and IIROC are able to use the full tool kit available to them.

I would just say that I look forward to standing in this place again soon to bring additional improvements to the Securities Act so that we continue to stay at the forefront. I am the chair at this point in time of all the ministers of the Crown across the provinces who are responsible for securities in their provinces. I am taking great comfort in knowing that there's a great deal of support and that we can be the leaders in this initiative across Canada and that other provinces, once they see what we're doing and see the benefit of the SROs having these additional tool kit functions, will take similar actions or that there'll be consequential actions in their provinces to make that happen.

I'm also looking forward to being able to find out from those ministers of the Crown responsible for securities in their provinces what other things can be done to improve the investment communities in this province and bring greater integrity and security to the investment sector as a result of actions they're taking that we can take.

I would like to close debate on second reading of Bill 13. Thank you very much for your attention, Madam Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 13 read a second time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. In view of momentous events that are going to be occurring this evening and the fact that we made such great progress and wonderful strides today in our legislative agenda, I move that the Assembly now adjourn until 9 o'clock tomorrow morning.

Some Hon. Members: Let's go, Oilers.

The Deputy Speaker: I feel like I don't even have to call the motion. That was so enthusiastic.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:22 p.m.]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Good morning.

Let us reflect. As elected representatives we take the weight of our responsibility to our constituents very seriously, and we live by the motto Service above Self. However, let us never lose sight of the importance of self-care. In order to discharge our duties successfully, we must remain healthy.

Please be seated.

Third Reading

Bill 8

An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's hard to come in to work today after what happened last night with the Oilers, but we're here doing it, so we'll do our best today. They made a good run but fell short, unfortunately.

Madam Speaker, I request leave to give third and final reading to Bill 8, An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government. This bill is aimed at improving how municipalities are empowered to govern, how they work together, and how they are funded. It's about giving Alberta communities the tools they need to deliver services and improve the lives of Albertans.

Madam Speaker, this bill has been a long time in the making. I'm proud of its contents and the effort that has gone into its development. I would like to thank the many Albertans who took time to provide input and ideas for this very important piece of legislation. I would also like to thank the members of this Assembly for reviewing these amendments to the MGA. Your consideration was thoughtful, and it was great to hear about all the municipalities in all of your constituencies. I would also like to thank the department for its efforts. I know there were countless hours and plenty of thought that went into developing this final piece of legislation.

Well, let me recap. In the summer of 2016 Municipal Affairs toured the province to talk to Albertans about the Modernized Municipal Government Act, or Bill 21. Last session 21 consultations were held in 20 communities across Alberta. Albertans gave us great feedback on Bill 21, and they also shared new ideas for how the MGA can support sustainable and collaborative communities. Municipal Affairs ran with these ideas and released a discussion guide to put them past the rest of the province. The document was posted online during November, December, and January, and Albertans were asked to review it and provide input via an online questionnaire.

Municipal Affairs received more than 1,100 responses to the online survey and more than 35 official submissions. Albertans know better than anybody else how to improve their communities. We heard strong support for nearly every policy proposal, so these ideas from Albertans form the foundation of An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government. This bill provides municipalities with more tools to continue to build strong communities and to make the lives of Albertans better every day.

Madam Speaker, some of the substantive changes we're making include taking steps to live up to Alberta's commitment to the United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples. We heard indigenous communities express interest in building these better partnerships with neighbouring communities. Albertans are neighbourly, and speaking to your neighbours about changes you plan to make in your backyard is the right thing to do. That's why we're making three key changes to strengthen the relationship between municipalities and neighbouring First Nations and Métis settlements.

First, we're clarifying that municipalities may invite neighbouring indigenous communities to participate in regional servicing opportunities. Second, we're clarifying that municipalities are authorized to enter into formal legal agreements with First Nations and Métis settlements. Third, we're requiring municipalities to notify First Nations and Métis settlements of new municipal development plans and area structure plans where there is a shared border. This change will make Alberta a leader in Canada. We believe that it will support stronger relationships between municipalities and First Nations and Métis settlements, and I'm very proud of the work we've done to date.

Our government also vowed to make governance more family friendly and more open to people starting families. This bill would enable municipalities to create parental leave bylaws so that councillors may be allowed to take leave prior to or after the birth or adoption of a child. The decision on whether to adopt a parental leave bylaw and the specific content of the bylaw will be left to each municipality based on its needs.

Our elected officials need to better reflect the communities they serve, including young people, new families, and women. Half of Alberta's population are women, but right now in Alberta women only make up 26 per cent of municipal councillors, and 23 per cent of municipalities in this province do not have a single woman on council. As our Premier has said, "We know gender parity is possible. We have done it in our government. It's time to make similar gains at the local and school board levels."

The Minister of Service Alberta, a champion for the Ready for Her campaign and the women of Alberta, also said it well.

Our city halls and school boards should reflect the communities they serve, and that means electing more women. When women run for office in Alberta, they win as often as men. I'm encouraging more women to run because when Albertans are truly represented, that's progress for all of us.

I want to thank the minister for her fine work in that regard.

I also want to repeat the words of Councillor Bev Esslinger, who was instrumental in bringing this idea forward and has already started discussion at the city of Edmonton for what their policy will look like. Councillor Esslinger said of this bill:

It's great to see this change. This is not just about women, this is about families. There are so many bright, talented individuals out there and having a child should not be reason to hold any of them back from becoming a municipal leader.

I was happy to hear all the support for this policy in this House, and I appreciate all the comments and stories that were shared with this Assembly about how parental leave policies would make life better for Alberta families.

Another way we would do this through this bill, Madam Speaker, is the amendments to give local governments more tools to build complete and sustainable communities. An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government will enable municipalities to share intermunicipal off-site levies for libraries, police stations, fire halls, and community recreation centres. This change will also make Alberta a leader in Canada and is another way that our changes to the MGA are supporting municipal collaboration.

One of the themes of the MGA review has been collaboration between municipalities, their neighbours, and other local authorities, including school boards. This bill would add a section to the MGA that indicates municipalities must enter into joint-use and planning agreements with school boards within their boundaries. These agreements would support effective and efficient use of municipal and school reserves by discussing matters related to planning, development, and use of reserves; transfers of reserve land; disposal of school sites; servicing of school sites; the use of school facilities, municipal facilities, and playing fields, including maintenance, liabilities, and fees; how they will work together; how they will resolve issues; and the establishment of a time frame for regular review of the agreement.

This bill has received overwhelmingly positive feedback from Alberta's school boards. As Mary Martin, president of the Alberta School Boards Association has said:

[This] government has heard our concerns and acted on them – in particular, introducing mandatory joint use and planning agreements. It benefits Alberta families and communities when municipalities and school boards work together on integrated long-term planning for school sites and facilities. Further clarifying exemptions for off-site levies is also good news for school boards, because it means more dollars remain in our classrooms.

We also heard great feedback from the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, AUMA, whose words of support highlight the shift to collaboration for the MGA.

Collaboration ensures strong communities and increased quality of life for Albertans. Local governments can advance cost-effective regional approaches for infrastructure and service delivery through new tools such as inter-municipal off-site levies and greater use of joint use agreements with school boards.

I also want to highlight feedback from the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, whose president, Al Kemmere, reiterates how robust the consultation and collaboration has been during the MGA review. "Through the MGA review process, AAMDC has been grateful to have been at the table. This journey has been open, inclusionary and fair . . . and we are proud to have been part of it."

Madam Speaker, I'm also proud to have been a part of the immense amount of work to update the MGA in a transparent and collaborative way. As Ken Kobly, president and CEO of the Alberta Chambers of Commerce, said so well, "The MGA review is the gold standard for government consultation." We will continue this approach as we work with the key stakeholder groups to develop draft regulations, all of which will be posted online for 60 days so that everyone can see and give feedback on the specific proposed policies.

I appreciate all the feedback from members on the ongoing work of the MGA review, and I want to thank all the members of this Assembly for their many contributions to this important conversation and for their thoughtful consideration. It has been a collaborative process, a long process.

I want to say, Madam Speaker, that I'm extremely proud of the staff of Municipal Affairs for the amount of work they've done on this. It's been, as I said, years coming. They have put in countless hours to make sure that they've listened to feedback from Albertans all across the province. I've heard overwhelmingly positive comments from many municipal councillors, and I'm looking forward to a lot of these things coming to fruition. I know we have some work to do on our regulations once they come out, and I'm looking forward to hearing more feedback once those are posted online. I think it's been an interesting process.

I feel that the MGA is one of the most interesting pieces of legislation that we've had out there because it touches the lives of every Albertan. You know, it's something that I think we can all be proud of because we've all worked on it together. I'm looking forward to more information coming in from throughout the province, as I said, and getting around the province this summer to municipal councils out there to hear more from them on the ground, what's going on and what they think could be improved or changed or what they like with the MGA and the regulations.

I really appreciate all the work that's been done and everybody in here for all their comments.

With that, Madam Speaker, I move that this bill be read a third and final time. Third time is the charm.

Thanks.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Any other speakers to the bill in third reading? Calgary-East.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I haven't had an opportunity to get up and speak to this bill yet, so I thought I would mention some things that I thought were important while I had the opportunity. I'm from Calgary, one of the larger municipalities in the province. I think there are three parts of this bill that I really want to touch on, three amendments that I think are really important and are going to make some crucial changes to how municipalities operate in Alberta. The first is the issue of parental leave and allowing parental leave for city councillors. I know it's something that many members of this caucus have spoken to because many members of this caucus have had the experience of having children while in office or having small children or being part of a family.

Now, while I don't get the distinction of having had a baby while elected, I did campaign in 2012 while I was three months pregnant, and I really don't recommend that to anybody. When you're three months pregnant, you're not allowed to tell anyone that you're pregnant. Also, you feel exhausted and are nauseous all the time. So, you know, it's not something that I would necessarily recommend. Then again in 2015 I campaigned while I had a three-year-old and an eight-month-old, and in the ensuing two years my eight-month-old has turned into a nearly three-year-old, so I've really had the opportunity to experience all of what it means to have children while being in office.

Subsequently, I have been super impressed with the Ask Her campaign that's been going on in Calgary to get more women involved in municipal politics because, really, we don't have enough women involved in municipal politics. The numbers have been thrown around several times. There are only 23 per cent of municipal councillors who are women. The Ask Her campaign has been very successful. We have women running, I think, in almost all of the wards in Calgary now – I know in my ward there are at least three women running, which is wonderful – women from indigenous backgrounds, women from African-Caribbean backgrounds, women from Muslim backgrounds, women from, really, all walks of life.

Many of them have come to talk to me, and they've said: "I need to talk to you because I have kids, and I am about to do this. I am worried that it will be really difficult. I don't know how you're doing it." When I speak with these women, I try not to scare them too much, because it is hard. It's challenging. You have to have really supportive partners. You have to have access to good-quality child care. You have to have access to flexible child care. This amendment is going to make it that much easier when I talk to women about running to say: "Hey. It is possible now for you to push for parental leave for municipal councillors.” So I think it’ll make a really big difference.

Why is it exactly that we want more women in politics? We want more women in politics because all sorts of research has shown that more women in politics leads to more equitable societies. Women have a tendency to focus on issues that matter to them. They focus on issues like child care, reproductive rights, education, women’s health.

When I was on the family-friendly subcommittee, when we were trying to come up with changes to how we could make this House more family friendly, I heard from other members of the committee: you know, we should have gotten around to this, but we didn’t ever really have to. The thing is that when women are involved in the political process, we get around to things. We get around to things that should have been done for hundreds of years, and men didn’t do them for hundreds of years. That’s why it’s important to have women involved in politics.

Women have been shown to govern differently. They have a tendency to be even more collaborative, less aggressive, more likely to emphasize consensus building, which I think we can all agree is a good thing. There are also at least two peer-reviewed studies that have shown a significant correlation between a higher proportion of women in government and lower levels of corruption, so I think that’s probably a good thing, too.

I am really impressed with this amendment, that allows municipalities to create parental leave and to create parental leave that works for them so that we are allowing them to do it but also allowing them to come up with what works for them themselves.

I do also want to talk about the amendments with regard to school boards. I think it’s valuable to note at this point that the Calgary board of education is actually 100 per cent women, which is a wonderful and interesting thing. They’re wonderful women, whom I get to work with on a very regular basis. They come to talk to me about all manners of things. The Calgary Catholic school board also has a majority of women. I know that both of these boards recently signed a memorandum of understanding with the city of Calgary to allow more flexibility for how the city uses school reserve sites. The mayor of Calgary was quoted as saying that he was really excited about the possibility of having a firehouse and a school together on the same site. I’m not sure that that’s something that will necessarily happen, but the fact that we are requiring these joint-use agreements could lead to any manner of very exciting development.

Schools really are community hubs. They’re places in the community that people come to, where people gather. If we can include more services that are required by the community in those schools, we’re all going to benefit. You could have child care centres in schools. You could have libraries in schools. You could have daycares in schools. You could have other varieties of recreation facilities.

For example, not in my riding but in the Member for Calgary-Cross’s riding we have Village Square Leisure Centre, which was built right next to a high school, so the high school is able to use all of the facilities at the Village Square Leisure Centre for their physical education classes. Also, there’s a library in there. There are, you know, cafés and other public-use areas. It’s really become a hub for that community. People from all over the northeast of Calgary go to Village Square Leisure Centre to partake in all of the services that are available there. That’s really an example of what we can do when we plan for communities when we’re planning schools as opposed to just building a school and nothing else associated with it.

The other part that I’m excited about, the other amendment, is to include environmental well-being as a municipal purpose. Again, when I used to talk to my students about water and how we use water, because that’s part of the grade 8 curriculum, we always talked about: when planning for the future and looking at the water that we have available, who are the groups that need to use that water, and how are we going to plan for using it into the future? The students always, very rightly, brought up that although people and industry are very important and need to use the water, the environment needs that water, too. The environment needs that water to be self-sustaining and to allow a functioning ecosystem.

So including environmental well-being as a municipal purpose, I think, is really important, especially given that many of our cities in Alberta are river cities. Calgary is a river city. Edmonton is a river city. Lethbridge is a river city. There are lots of cities that have rivers running through them. [interjection] Sorry? Lots of them have rivers running through them. Really, the river is the centre of our communities. So including environmental well-being helps to really foster that sense of care that we need to have.

It’s been shown that spending time outside has proven to have, you know, clear mental health benefits. If you spend just 20 minutes or half an hour outside, even in an urban park, every day, it can really clear your head, help you to think more clearly, reduce depression. There’s research that shows this. I think maybe all of us in the House might benefit from getting outside a little bit more often, spending time in nature.

In Calgary we’re very fortunate to have many wonderful parks. Just this last Saturday was really the first truly beautiful day of the year. As Albertans we all really appreciate that first day where you can get outside and sit in the sun. My kids and I went down to Prince’s Island park and threw rocks in the water and looked at the goslings and, you know, got into an argument with some people about religion. It was a good day. We had a really good day. Because Calgary has really prioritized the ability to have those public parks so that even within a large public park you have the opportunity within the city to get outside, and I think that’s really important.

Those are really the three things I wanted to touch on. I’m obviously also very excited about the work for collaboration with indigenous communities. There are many First Nations communities just outside the city of Calgary who I know will appreciate the amendments in this piece of legislation that are really focusing on our commitment to the rights of indigenous peoples and to the Truth and Reconciliation Commission.

There are a lot of good things in this bill, Madam Speaker. I thank the minister for bringing it forward, and I look forward to its passage. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Other speakers to the bill? Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise and speak in support of Bill 8, An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government. I am in full support of each of the proposed amendments, particularly the parental leave amendment. Fellow members, the most recent Canadian statistical data available regarding women supports that women comprise 48.9 per cent of our Albertan population. Parity in many respects is an endeavour that supports fair representation. The impact of policy and legislation should denote a similar representation.

When the Municipal Government Act review was conducted last year, 21 sessions provided a broad scope of feedback that resonates throughout each community. My community of Red Deer was one of the participants, and what emanated was the immense pride that Albertans have for their community as well as its governance. Speaking to our MGA, the impacts also reflect how our municipal governance is comprised and how it interacts with the diversity of our communities. Static governance cannot reflect the dynamics of our ever-evolving province, and I am glad that I belong to a government that recognizes that change is inevitable and that policies require flexibility. Madam Speaker, we must be adaptable and resilient in order to sustain the impact of change.

Fellow members, my opening statement supported the specifics of the parental leave amendment. I speak to this because it enables and encourages the empowerment of women to participate, without repercussion, in municipal councils and various other municipal boards, with an impact that supports the demographics of our province. It is my belief that elected councils need to better reflect the communities they serve. It hones in on making political life more accessible for Albertan women and their families. Currently the population of women involved within municipal councils, sadly, encompasses a mere 26 per cent.

It is no surprise to the House that I wish to encompass my great city as a superb example of how the participation of women in the political and policy-making forum can be executed. Currently Her Worship Tara Veer is the mayor of Alberta's third-largest city. Her career has supported three terms as a city councillor, with transition into mayor, and is an excellent example of how women can sustain great momentum in the municipal forum. I wish to speak about our former mayor, Gail Surkan, who held office as mayor for three terms as well. In fact, her participation inspired Tara Veer, and this is specifically one of the changes that our MGA amendments serve to achieve.

My city of Red Deer is rich in contributions from women within the municipal arena. Within the team of city councillors 3 of 7 are women. Lynne Mulder has served four terms as councillor, Dianne Wyntjes is in her second term, and Tanya Handley has her first term almost under her belt. What does this mean to our municipality? Madam Speaker, I'd like to say that considering the needs of our city, our dream teams are bringing projects to fruition and accomplishing what needs to be done.

Recently the announcement of the Red Deer regional justice centre shed light on this momentum. I wish to thank the members for Calgary-Buffalo, Edmonton-Strathcona, Red Deer-South, and myself along with Mayor Veer, who were dubbed the Get 'Er Done Girls. No disrespect to Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, but thanks nonetheless.

Women bring a perspective that is prevalent in all facets of our political spectrum. Currently our education boards also support a strong female presence. Why? Because we recognize the importance of their input and invaluable feedback. We cannot be stifled by conventional views if we are going to participate in global matters. Red Deer's public school board also has 3 female members out of 7. It's chaired by Bev Manning, vice-chaired by Cathy Peacocke, with Dianne Macaulay as trustee. We commend the diversity of participation that allows the vision and mission guiding our future Albertans' education.

Similarly, the Red Deer Catholic school board engages 3 women participants of 7: Anne Marie Watson as vice-chair, Diane MacKay as trustee, and Adriana LaGrange as trustee as well as president of the Alberta Catholic School Trustees' Association. These women inspire progress and change while balancing priorities because they are passionate about our future and direction.

Bev Hanes, the president of our Red Deer Royal Canadian Legion, is also an outstanding individual who contributes at a municipal level. Having participated as a director and chair, her presence as president is unprecedented. And I'm not going to repeat that.

Broadening the scope of our municipal governance paves the way to sustainability as well as adaptability. While division is historically prevalent in many aspects of our global society, our ability to implement change must be met with the open-mindedness that allows for growth as well as progress.

Madam Speaker, engaging opportunity for parity provides for well-rounded approaches and solutions and engages the diversity and mental mapping that embraces a stronger model that paves the way to future endeavours. Achievement is measured on cohesion. As a female elected official I fully support the amendments and move to a global progression.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) comes into effect if there are any questions or comments.

Seeing none, I'll recognize Calgary-Bow.

Drever: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to support Bill 8, An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government, and I would like to give my utmost respect and appreciation to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and also his staff, that worked tirelessly to make this bill happen. Thank you. I know how much work goes into a bill.

There are many great amendments to this bill to make lives for Albertans easier, but I would like to bring attention to the parental leave amendment and give a shout-out to Lisa Holmes, who is the president of the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association. She was a huge supporter of this amendment, and I would just like to quote her right now.

Collaboration ensures strong communities and increased quality of life for Albertans. Local governments can advance cost-effective regional approaches for infrastructure and service delivery through new tools such as inter-municipal off-site levies and greater use of joint use agreements with school boards. We appreciate that the province adjusted many of its initial approaches for the bill [in order] to ensure the provisions are more practical for municipalities.

Another supporter of adding parental leave to the MGA is Bev Esslinger, Edmonton city councillor. She states:

It's great to see this change. This is not just about women, this is about families. There are so many bright, talented individuals out there and having a child should not be a reason to hold any of them back from becoming a municipal leader.

Madam Speaker, I am a woman in my child-bearing years – that kind of scares me saying that – and after the next three or more terms I will still be in my child-bearing years, so it's comforting to know that if I decide to run in municipal politics and I could bring my expertise that I learned from this House, I could do it because of this policy. I feel this way because when I look at Calgary's city council, there are only two women sitting on the 14 seats available. That is only 14 per cent, and I find that concerning considering the fact that 50 per cent of Calgary's population is female.

Another concerning fact is that half of Alberta's population is women but that right now in Alberta women only make up 26 per cent of municipal councillors and 23 per cent of municipalities in this province do not have a single woman on them. By adding parental leave to the MGA, it will remove this barrier for women trying to enter municipal politics, and I'm happy to see that our government wants to encourage young women to get involved so that their voices can be heard. Something I speak often about when I talk to constituents in my office and at the doors is that I'm proud that our government is taking women's issues as a priority. This is a change as this kind of discourse was not present with the previous government. I applaud this amendment.

Another amendment that I would like to talk about is our government's commitment to building new schools to serve our young and growing province and to protecting and improving education for Alberta's students. The education of our children is incredibly important to the well-being and prosperity of our communities, and schools are at the heart of our neighbourhoods. We listened to municipalities and school boards that we can do better in how school sites are planned and serviced for communities, so this bill proposes joint-use and planning agreements to work together on integrated long-term planning for school sites and facilities. This will benefit students, families, and all communities, including the riding of Calgary-Bow.

Back in April I was pleased to attend the grand opening of the West Ridge middle school in the community of West Springs. As government one of our top priorities is seeing school constructions like West Ridge middle school completed quickly and efficiently. An incredible amount of hard work and dedication went into the development of this school. Between the parents and community at large, the Calgary board of education, and contractors, everyone involved can take great pride in its completion. By building that school, we ensure that all of our students receive an education that prepares them for success.

More than 60 new schools and modernization projects opened last year while 26 more projects province-wide will be announced for this year. Another investment that our government provided was for the much-needed modernization of Bowness high school. We all know that projects like these are creating good jobs and protecting and improving the things like education that Albertans and my constituents count on.

Speaking of modernization, Madam Speaker, our government is delivering on its promise to modernize the Municipal Government Act. The amendments that were made were from Albertans to serve Albertans to make lives better for Albertans. It's just one more way that our government is improving the lives of Albertan families.

With that, I would like to end my comments and ask everyone here to support this bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), any questions or comments?

Seeing none, other speakers to the bill? Lethbridge-East.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Like the others who've spoken before me today, I want to thank the Minister of Municipal Affairs for really championing this bill. I want to thank in particular Melinda and Keith on his staff for the work that they have done supporting me and the other cosponsor for this bill.

Now I want to talk about a couple of things within the bill, and the first piece that I'll talk about is collaboration. I want to give kudos to my city of Lethbridge for the effort that they make and they have made since 1959 to collaborate on so many different things, collaboration with our county in the municipal development plans and area structure plans and for reaching out to the Blackfoot Confederacy as they border our city. In terms of any of the new things that are going on in the city, the schools, the whole issue of sharing facilities with schools: just amazing in my city. Absolutely. Kudos to the city, to the council, and to the mayor for doing those things.

The next piece that I'm going to talk about, obviously, is the parental issue, and I want to talk about that totally from my perspective. I was a single parent, as I've said many times in this Legislature. I've certainly met throughout my years with many, many other single parents who couldn't even think about participating in politics even though they had the ability to do so. They certainly had the passion to do so, and they had input that would have been fabulous for their municipal councils; however, they were single parents and they had children, and this didn't allow for them to do that. I see many men in this Legislature who probably have children and are here because their wives or their partners are at home looking after their children.

Women have a huge impact in our society, an impact that's rarely acknowledged and appreciated for just how important it is. That same perspective of being a mother and looking after your children, balancing the bank book, cooking meals, doing a menu week in and week out, getting the laundry done: all of those things really show the ability for women to multitask and the ability to be organized and provide input. We have a depth of knowledge of families and communities that is rarely tapped.

To have this amendment in this act to me really speaks of a progressive, forward-thinking bill that engages all of our community. So thank you again to the minister and the staff for including that in this amendment. Because I've spoken to this bill before, I'm not going to say much more. I just want to say how pleased I have been to be a part of this.

I guess one thing to go back to is the indigenous communities. Somebody had said to me: well, they're not compelled to engage in that conversation. No, they're not, and neither is your neighbour when you're building a fence or anything else. But the neighbourly thing to do is to tell them what you're doing and to ask if they have any concerns about that, and that's what this bill does. You are required to notify them of what your plans are within your community. To me, that opens the door to a much better collaboration in the future. Certainly, I think that if I'm talking to my neighbour, it increases the level of trust that I have with my neighbours when we collaborate and talk about what we're doing within our own neighbourhood.

With that, I'm going to say please support this bill. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? Seeing none, any other speakers to the bill? Stony Plain.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm really proud that our government is delivering on its promise to modernize the Municipal Government Act in time for the municipal elections this coming fall. It gives municipalities practical tools and resources to support strong and sustainable communities and a more resilient and diversified economy for all Albertan families. As we know, in our rural constituencies it is incredibly important that we are diversified, that we are resilient, and that we are bringing these investments to our communities. We're making life better for Albertans by listening to their ideas, enhancing community collaboration, and removing barriers to municipal leadership. We will continue to work collaboratively with municipalities.

Our government is committed to open and accessible consultation with Albertans on the Modernized Municipal Government Act, and we took the time to do it right. Last summer we held 21 sessions as government across the province to hear directly from Albertans about what matters for each and every one of their communities. There are so many people across Alberta who care about their communities, and we heard from those people how our government can make practical changes to make their lives and communities better. I attended one of those sessions in Hinton, and I was very encouraged by the conversations I heard and was engaged in with many municipal leaders from many communities. Many of them had travelled a very long way to be there.

There were 40 additional amendments in the Modernized Municipal Government Act last fall before it was passed. What we've heard are things that we're bringing forth in this amendment. They're new ideas on how we can support those sustainable and collaborative communities. We heard strong support for nearly every policy proposal. One of the key focuses of the MGA's modernization is municipal collaboration because we believe that all Albertans benefit when municipalities are good neighbours and they work together to provide services and strengthen the economy.

Madam Speaker, I'm lucky enough to live in what we call the trimunicipal area. The trimunicipal area is Parkland county, Stony Plain, and the city of Spruce Grove. When we have our communities in silos, everybody can make something good. We can have a small rec centre in each community. We can have decent infrastructure in each community. But when our communities get together, as they do in the trimunicipal area very often, we can provide something great for all of our citizens. Parkland county, in particular, extends collaborative agreements within their borders as well as beyond their borders. For example, they have a number of agreements with the town of Devon for things like fire services.

Over the last year we heard from leaders in many First Nations and Métis settlements that they want to see better relationships with their neighbouring municipalities. These amendments would require that municipalities give First Nations and Métis settlements the same notification and opportunity to comment on statutory plans that is provided to all other adjacent municipalities. It would set a Canadian precedent to build a stronger relationship between municipalities, First Nations, and Métis settlements. We are empowering municipalities to enter into agreements with indigenous communities. It's a small but significant step to strengthen relationships between indigenous communities and municipalities farther.

Our province is committed to implementing the principles of the United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples, and as such it's important to encourage the province's municipalities to continue to take meaningful and reasonable steps to understand and engage with neighbouring indigenous communities and citizens in a respectful and culturally appropriate manner, particularly in respect to land-use planning and service delivery. I know that the indigenous leaders in my region – namely, the Enoch Cree Nation and Paul First Nation – appreciate the collaborative approach we're taking now and ensuring into the future.

Madam Speaker, by making political life more accessible for women and Albertans with young families and by making amendments that would enable councils to make parental leave bylaws for councillors, our elected councils will better reflect the communities they serve, including young people, new families, and women. With the new census numbers released, we know that in the town of Stony Plain there are approximately 500 more females in the community than males, and the average age of a resident in Stony Plain is 39.4 years old. I'm not sure where the .4 comes from. And 19.3 per cent of the population is aged zero to 14, which is higher than in any other region in Alberta, which means that having parents of this large portion of our population be engaged is even more important.

Half of the population in Alberta are women, but right now they only make up 26 per cent of municipal councillors, and 23 per cent of municipalities in this province do not have a single woman on council. Today in our House we have 33 per cent women, and 97 per cent of those sit on the government side. Of course, I'm incredibly proud to see the number of women that surround me. But it's not the case even here in Canada, if we speak on a provincial or national level, because only four out of our 13 jurisdictions have achieved the minimum 30 per cent participation of women as outlined in the 2011 UN resolution on women's political participation.

Madam Speaker, I am a huge believer in using all the tools available to achieve a successful result. There is substantial evidence that the collective intelligence of a group is significantly increased when there are more women as part of said group. Studies from MIT and Carnegie Mellon, among others, point to some diversity being good, more women being important, and to encourage this is imperative. In this way, supporting women may be a tool in the tool box to encourage participation of all marginalized groups, but it cannot be the only tool. It doesn't accomplish enough. Today less than 19 per cent of legislators world-wide are women, so there's still much to do to involve all voices in our province, in our municipalities, and globally, of course.

Madam Speaker, one of the things I'm most excited about seeing in this Municipal Government Act is the commitment to building schools to serve our young and growing province and protecting and improving education for all Albertan students. Mandatory joint-use and planning agreements will be required between municipalities and school boards through amendments to the MGA and the School Act. That will require all municipalities to have these agreements with the school boards operating within their borders and to consider establishing a process for discussing matters relating to the planning, development, and use of school sites on municipal reserves, school reserves, and municipal and school reserves in the municipality; transfers of municipal reserves, school reserves, and municipal and school reserves in the municipality; disposal of school sites; and the servicing of school sites on municipal reserves.

It's so important that we see the education of our children as being one of those most important things that we can do as a province and as municipalities. It helps with the well-being and the prosperity of everybody in our community to have a good educational system, and our schools are the hearts of those neighbourhoods.

There is a higher percentage of children in the town of Stony Plain, as I mentioned, at 19.3 per cent, than in the region – that is the No. 11 census division, including Edmonton and surrounding areas – which sits at 18.5 per cent of the population. Stony Plain also has a higher percentage of children aged zero to 14 than the population of Alberta, which sits at 19.2 per cent, or even Canada itself. Nationally we sit at 16.6 per cent. So we are a growing community, and we are a young community.

One of the things that I'm really proud that our government has stood up and made a difference on in our municipalities and our school boards is how we can do better on school sites being planned and serviced. In the city of Spruce Grove, in Parkland school division, the Minister of Education has funded a bus transfer station, which is in a planned new school, which will help all of our children from the west end of our region come into these more urban places so that we don't have so many buses on the road. It's working because working regionally is so important to all of us.

You know, An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government is designed to make life better for Albertans no matter where they live, whether they live in our cities, whether they live in our towns, or whether they live in rural Alberta. Madam Speaker, I would encourage every member in this House to vote for this bill.

With that, I will take my seat. Thank you.

9:50

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, other speakers to the bill? I will recognize Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my unexpected privilege to rise in the House today to speak at third reading of Bill 8. It's always a pleasure to speak to municipal governance. I guess, before getting into the meat of my comments, I'd just like to thank, of course – I think I've mentioned this on other occasions before. Municipal Affairs is an amazing ministry, with dedicated and very astute individuals within it. This process wouldn't have had the kind of traction it did without the co-operation and buy-in from our municipal partners from across the entire province.

As the members might be aware, I had the opportunity to attend four of the consultation sessions over the last summer: in Two Hills, in Lac La Biche, in Athabasca, and in Rocky Mountain House. They were all very well attended, and the people that came to them came briefed, came with kind of reasoned opinions on it and with a willingness to discuss them. But it also goes beyond elected officials.

Of course, this is the second bill with amendments to the Municipal Government Act that we passed. The first one actually went over two separate sessions. This has been an ongoing topic of discussion within municipal circles for, you know, quite a bit of time now, I guess, even if you add to that that the beginning of the consultative process, of course, happened before we ever became government. So this is an iterative process that's been going over years, and there's been continued engagement, like I said, not just from elected officials. Some of the most astute commentaries that I'd heard actually came from CAOs, from people doing assessments, and from people generally involved with municipal government in all sorts of different ways. If they hadn't been forward in their comments, I don't think that we would have been able to come up with such an excellent, balanced approach to reform.

It's kind of a real special honour to be involved in this type of legislation because it kind of speaks to the most important technology we actually have. I think that's something that we need to take time to kind of reflect on and to recognize from time to time, just how fortunate we are to be in a place like this and that this is the way that we settle disagreements, that we work out how to share power equitably between people. It's absolutely critical to civilized life, to the point of the very definition. You know, when we say "civilized," we're talking civil, we're talking civic, and we're talking city, right? So we're talking about, you know, municipal affairs.

Now, this has always been a real challenge to be able to get right, the balance between centralized authority and local autonomy. I mean, there have been philosophers in the past that have made the argument that without sufficient centralized authority, you actually can't even have morals. I think one of the hon. members on the other side referred to Thomas Hobbes, and I know that we had one of our members bring up Hobbes as well.

The famous quote by Hobbes about life and nature refers to what happens when you don't have adequate centralized authority. I'll read the quote in its entirety.

During the time men live without a common power to keep them all in awe, they are in that condition which is called war, and such a war as is of every man against every man . . .

To this war of every man against every man this also is consequent, that nothing can be unjust. The notions of right and wrong, justice and injustice, have there no place. Where there is no common power, there is no law; where no law, no injustice. Force and fraud are in war the two cardinal virtues . . .

No arts, no letters, no society, and, which is worst of all, continual fear and danger of violent death, and the life of man solitary, poor, nasty, brutish, and short.

That's that famous quote within its context.

When we're talking about the balance between centralized authority and local autonomy, we're talking about fundamental tensions that go to the beginning of civilization itself, and in fact these are the types of arrangements that developed in time when we started living in cities. In fact, the very definition of politics itself, the root of "politics," is the Greek word for city, "polis." That's where these technologies developed over time, how to be able to balance out between the common person and the king, between the Senate and the proletariat, and on we go.

What has been found through trial and error, essentially, over the centuries is that, really, too much on the one side is a bad thing. If you go with too much autonomy, you end up with anarchy and all the miseries that are attendant there. However, if you go too far the other way, to too much of a centralized authority, then you kill any ability to progress. You create huge inefficiencies, and you create, of course, autocracy, tyranny, and oppression. How do you strike that balance?

Now, the very meaning of the word "municipal" comes from earlier attempts at striking that balance. Whereas "polis" is Greek for city, "munia" is Latin. That comes from a Latin origin. "Municipal" is pertaining to citizens of a free city within the Roman Republic and the Roman Empire, where they were Roman citizens, but they could govern their own local affairs with their own laws. That's where you had this balance between, you know, the centralized authority and local autonomy. That's kind of the very base of where the concepts of municipal politics, municipal affairs come from.

Like I said, this is something that has been a tension ongoing for, well, as long as we've been around. I guess I could also refer to maybe another earlier philosopher than Hobbes, and that, of course, would be Plato, who wrote, you know, one of the foundational books of western philosophy, The Republic. It's about: what does it take to govern a city wisely? What does it mean to be a good person in that type of city? Aristotle, after Plato, talks about how it is impossible to have a good life as a human being without being embedded in a well-functioning society. It's just something that you can't do. We are talking about, as I said, pretty important stuff.

As I think I've mentioned before, there are a lot of decision points going through this bill, and I think the overarching thing is kind of where they fall on that spectrum between authority and autonomy. I think that we've used a really deft hand with the use of that authority, and I think that the whole ICF process – I guess we'll see how that unfolds as time goes on – is kind of an example of that, where we're saying as the province: "You have to sit down and talk to your neighbours and work things out. However, we are going to leave it up to your discretion how to do that. Now, if in the end your discussion isn't in good faith or you just end up with irreconcilable differences so that after two years you're just not going anywhere, then we'll step in and help bring that agreement. But we respect your autonomy to the point that we'll give you that opportunity to work it out yourself."

With Bill 8 I'm very happy to see that that potential or that option is now extended to working with indigenous communities as well. Now, of course, it would be mandatory for municipalities, you know, if they have developments that can directly impact these communities, to contact them. I'm surprised, quite frankly, that that hasn't been there all along. This option for municipalities to sit down and talk with indigenous communities about that shared interest: I'm very happy to see that in there and hope to see that kind of take fire.

I know that there are some good examples of that happening within our own area. The Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills and I attend what are called joint municipalities meetings in Smoky Lake county. I've been told that this isn't unique, but I'm not sure who else does this. Is it every three or four months? I think it's three months. Every three months the county of Smoky Lake has a meeting with all the municipalities within the county as well as representatives from the police, representatives from the school board, and you get presentations from community groups, and they invite both of the MLAs that represent the ridings.

It's a very interesting experience, as I know my colleague would probably agree. It's never dull, and sometimes it can get pretty heated. Very tough questions sometimes get asked, and sometimes people aren't very happy with each other during that meeting. The key point here is that they're still talking to each other. As long as people are talking to each other, there are other things that they're not doing to each other. I think that it is just so absolutely important to keep people at the same table.

It's kind of funny. I mean, it's been a couple of years that I've been going to these meetings, and you can start to see some of the patterns of, you know, relationships between people at the table. You can see that there are a few, I guess, sort of frenemy relationships, but you can also see that some people don't reach their rhetorical best without having these frenemies there to help goad them into flights of eloquence, let's just say.

Now, why am I going off on that a little bit? It's because I think it would be really wonderful to have more opportunities where representatives of indigenous communities and the surrounding municipalities would get the opportunity to forge those types of relationships, you know, sort of honest, open, forthright, and happening enough over time so that people come to respect the qualities on each side and then build a way forward for effective, lasting partnerships. That is what the government is really looking for between municipalities and indigenous communities and, of course, between municipalities and the federal government as well. I think that this extension of options for ICF for indigenous communities speaks well to that.

Now, just going on to the next sort of major set of amendments, around parental leave, many of my colleagues I think have made pretty excellent points on why that's so important. I know that I myself have risen before to talk about just the absolute necessity of diversity for good decision-making. I just want to make this small point. Of course, when we're talking about municipalities being empowered to develop parental leave, I know that the focus has been on women, but I do want to, you know, maybe remind our male colleagues that, of course, this can apply to us as well.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I was really interested in the comments of the member from Redwater and surrounding area. He touched a number of times on the theme of collaboration. That's one thing that I think this government can be proud of as the major theme of our government throughout the ministries. Whether it be Economic Development, Health, Treasury Board and Finance, we're all looking for ways to make sure that government departments and agencies aren't siloed.

I know that one of the ways that I saw evidence of this in a beneficial way was even before I was elected, and I wanted to know if it is something that is continuing in the member's riding. One of the last homes I sold was in Ryley, and I, of course, wanted to familiarize myself with what school opportunities there were for families who might be buying that house. I discovered that there was collaboration between neighbouring school boards wherein there were smaller class sizes or smaller populations of certain age groups in one community versus another, so they gathered together the groups of students into classroom sizes and decided where certain grades would best be offered in a community. One community would offer grades 3 to 6, and another one would be, you know, 6 to 9. It kept people in their communities and with shorter busing distances. I thought it was a great example of a collaborative effort that was not really formalized. I think these amendments go a long way to formalizing that type of collaborative effort.

I'm wondering if in his community the member has been able to identify new areas of collaboration that he thinks this effort will benefit and what relationships, as he alluded to, may be formed as a result of meetings between communities, if the formalization of this collaborative effort in the MGA amendments will lead to new interconnections and opportunities to share services and regionalize the benefits of those spread-out services, and what examples he might see where he would like to apply these new collaborative initiatives under the MGA.

The Deputy Speaker: Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: All right. I'd like to thank the hon. member for the question. Just to make sure that I understand it correctly, he's not asking about existing agreements but asking about where I see potential for new agreements. Well, I mean, first is that I think one of the things about this process is that until you get people sitting down and having these discussions, it's kind of difficult to be able to predict just what synergies are going to emerge from those types of discussions.

I guess this sort of goes back to why it's really important that we didn't try to dictate this from the top down. You know, when you're on the ground and when you see these discussions unfold and there are things happening, sometimes you can have these unexpected areas where you can find efficiencies or where you have a new area for potential co-operation that you might not have been aware of. For example, you know, the co-operation and collaboration in discussing water seems to be opening up some new possibilities in Athabasca county. They're looking at bringing water out to communities such as Rochester and also to the summer villages. I know that, you know, in having them sit down at the table and talk, they might be able to find better ways of doing that and also help them to come up with a consensus within their own communities. Of course, these discussions are never isolated in small communities; everybody kind of gets involved. So there's power in having these discussions in and of themselves.

I guess other efficiencies that I hope we could find: well, snow removal might be one. Perhaps you could see municipalities, villages, towns, and counties working more closely together to optimize how they allocate resources for snow removal. Sanitation: of course, there is a lot of co-operation in municipalities as it stands now through various water commissions, those types of organizations, but there might be also partners that they don't yet know they could have. That might come out of these discussions. Garbage collection and bylaw enforcement could be other areas of fruitful collaboration.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other speakers to the bill? Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It really is my honour to rise today to speak to third reading of An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government, presented by the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Like my colleagues, I really want to congratulate both the current minister and the previous minister for their excellent leadership on this effort. The various amendments to the Municipal Government Act, in my opinion, are among the most important measures that this Legislature has taken in the two years that we've been sitting.

Indeed, it is my honour to be able to speak to it because when you look at what we do as legislators, I doubt that there's anything much more important than what we are talking about today, collaboration between cities and municipalities.

Loyola: The Securities Amendment Act.

Dr. Turner: Well, maybe the Securities Amendment Act would have some impact, but I don't think it's quite as important as ensuring parental leave for folks that might want to run for municipal office. The Securities Act probably isn't as important as ensuring collaboration among municipalities, and it's not as important as the topic that I really want to cover in this, and that is protecting our environment and ensuring that this province, its municipalities, and its other levels of government collaborate on ensuring that we have environmental protection.

Before I get to that, since I am the first Edmonton MLA to stand up, I really want to take a couple of moments to express my appreciation to the Edmonton Oilers for the fantastic effort that they've shown this year. I'm sure all of my colleagues in the House join in congratulating Captain McDavid as well as Coach McLellan and the rest of the team and the management in really overachieving and making us all proud as Albertans. Thank you.

Back to what I was talking about, another thing that I've really appreciated in the discussion of this act throughout all of its phases has been the collaborative spirit that all sides of the House are showing. I have learned a lot about Municipal Affairs from listening to the comments made not only by our minister but by representatives of the opposition, of all stripes of the opposition. In particular, I'd like to pay tribute to the Member for Livingstone-Macleod. He is a wise man, and his interjections have been very positive, and I have personally appreciated his wisdom in his comments. There have been other members. I'm not going to go through the whole list. Actually, each of the interjections, I think, has been very positive. As a government MLA I truly appreciate it, and I think that's how we should be working on a whole bunch of things. I think we worked that way on the securities bill, actually, yesterday. There was a sense of collaboration.

Our government is delivering on its promise to modernize the MGA, and we need to do this expeditiously because there are municipal elections this fall. We're making the MGA a responsive and forward-looking piece of legislation that gives municipalities practical tools and resources to support strong and sustainable communities – and I would underline the word “sustainable” when I come back to talking about the environment – and a more resilient and diversified economy for Alberta families.

I'm going to pause again to quote some of the folks that have worked with the government on these. The first is from Lisa Holmes, who has been mentioned before. She's the president of the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association.

Collaboration ensures strong communities and increased quality of life for Albertans. Local governments can advance cost-effective regional approaches for infrastructure and service delivery through new tools such as inter-municipal off-site levies and greater use of joint use agreements with school boards. We appreciate that the province adjusted many of its initial approaches ... to ensure the provisions are more practical for municipalities.

That was Lisa Holmes, president of AUMA.

The president of the AAMD and C is Al Kemmere, and his quote is:

Through the MGA review process, AAMDC has been grateful to have been at the table. This journey has been open, inclusionary and fair. Though you never get everything you ask for, in the end we have current legislation that for the most part reflects municipal challenges and we are proud to have been part of it.

Last summer our government held 21 sessions across the province, and we heard from Albertans directly about what matters to their communities. There are so many people in Alberta who care about their communities, and we heard from these people about how our government can make practical changes to make their lives and communities better. Those changes have been made in the form of 40 additional amendments to the MGA, and this was passed unanimously last December. Today is about the rest of what we heard from municipal leaders, families, young people, school boards, indigenous communities, and businesses. They've included new ideas about how the MGA can support sustainable and collaborative communities.

I'm going to turn now to the discussion about components of these amendments that relate to environmental well-being. I think that before I do that, I just want to discuss a couple of points. Don't municipalities already take environmental issues into consideration when making decisions? Well, many do, but specifically enabling municipalities to consider environmental well-being will encourage them to take a leadership role in addressing this critical issue and will better position the municipalities as key partners with the government of Alberta in addressing environmental matters.

Well, might this policy give municipalities a blank cheque to take land for environmental purposes? No. This wouldn't allow municipalities to adopt any policies or bylaws that are inconsistent with the provincial policy or legislation. It would also not allow municipalities to take environmentally sensitive or valued land without proper compensation, and this would empower municipalities to include environmental well-being in their planning and development of policies. I think this is really vital, and I'm going to give you some examples from my constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud where this might apply.

What's changing, actually? We're going to foster environmental well-being by including it in the MGA as a municipal purpose. The MGA currently identifies municipal purposes as providing good governance, providing “services, facilities or other things ... necessary or desirable,” and “to develop and maintain safe and viable communities.” Many municipalities consider environmental elements as part of their decision-making, but the MGA does not include fostering environmental well-being as a municipal purpose.

Some stakeholders express concern that municipalities lack explicit authority to incorporate environmental well-being in their operational land-use decision-making processes. This may prevent municipalities from fully embracing a leadership role in environmental stewardship and more actively taking action towards the goal in Alberta's climate leadership plan. Members of the public are supportive of clarifying municipal responsibilities and consideration in the decision-making process that will lead to better planning and development decisions. Expanding municipal purpose in the MGA to include fostering environmental well-being will give municipalities a clear signal to consider the environment in a multitude of operational and growth decisions, and municipalities will not be able to pass bylaws that conflict with provincial legislation on these environmental measures.

I'm proud to say that the city of Edmonton and indeed the city of Calgary are extremely supportive of this. The Urban Development Institute and the Canadian Home Builders' Association have not been as supportive as they believe this will confuse the roles of municipalities in the province regarding management and development of the environment, but I think we can still work with those folks to get their involvement. Meanwhile the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers will be supportive if the scope of environmental stewardship as a municipal purpose is limited to matters that are municipally related.

As I said before, I'm actually going to give a few examples in my riding where this collaboration has worked very well. The riding of Edmonton-Whitemud is a very urban riding. I'll describe it. If people don't know the geography of it, the riding of Edmonton-Whitemud is bounded by the North Saskatchewan River on the north and west sides, by the Henday on the west and south sides, and the east border is Whitemud Creek, from which the name of the riding comes. It's a beautiful riding with lots of natural areas and ravines. Really, a high-quality life is available to our residents for activities in the parks and in the ravines, on the bike trails. For the constituents of Edmonton-Whitemud having a positive approach to our environment is very important. I can tell you that when I go door-knocking – and I'm door-knocking twice a week in my riding now – the climate leadership that our government has done and the approach to these Municipal Government Act amendments are really, truly appreciated.

In the riding of Edmonton-Whitemud we have a monthly meeting which involves all of the community leagues, the municipal councillors, their MLAs as well as representatives of the rec centre and the school boards. We actually discuss these issues on a regular basis. One of the things that has come out of this – and this is called the Terwillegar Riverbend area council – is a fantastic organization called Brander Gardens ROCKS. ROCKS means reaching out to community kids. This is a phenomenal organization. I've spoken about it briefly in a previous presentation.

Brander Gardens ROCKS is a collaboration between the public school, Brander Gardens, in the northern end of Edmonton-Whitemud; Capital Region Housing, which has a large number of units in the vicinity of Brander Gardens school; as well as the Riverbend community league; and several of the churches, including the Riverbend United church. The local library is part of this, and the city of Edmonton also collaborates with this.

The city of Edmonton is interested in collaborating with this not only because of the housing that's involved but because there's a large number of recent immigrants that are living in the housing that I referred to and there's a known need for programming to provide for youth to have things to do, basically. The library is an important part of that. The school opens up its facilities after hours and on the weekends for this. There's phenomenal music, cultural interchange. People exchange, actually, cooking hints between the recent immigrants and the people that have lived in Riverbend for a longer time.

It provides a safer community. It's a collaboration. It's really an example in this very urban setting of how this collaboration could work between various levels of government. I'm really proud to have that in my riding. I can tell you that the constituents of Edmonton-Whitemud really appreciate that as well.

A short time ago I spoke about my experience at the opening of the Larch sanctuary in the southeast corner of my riding, where it abuts the riding of Edmonton-Rutherford and Edmonton-South West. This is actually a conservation area of about 50 acres. It's at the confluence of the Whitemud and the Blackmud creeks. It's an oxbow, and in that area there are a lot of different . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'll touch on two things that the member said. First, I would also like to extend my congratulations to the Edmonton Oilers for a great season. I'm hoping that the member would be open to cheering for the Ottawa

Senators. There are some great players that are on there with some great names, including Cody Ceci, Mike Hoffman, and Craig Anderson. With that being said, I could really see it as a team that our entire caucus could get behind.

But I would love for the member to continue to elaborate on the conservation areas if he would like to.

Dr. Turner: Well, I truly appreciate the question. Thank you very much. You can be assured that the Ottawa Senators will have my full support, at least the hockey team. I'm not very fond of the actual people that sit in the House of Commons, and if it were up to me, I'd get rid of them, actually.

Anyways, thank you for the opportunity to finish the description of Larch, and I may go on to another example of collaboration between the municipalities, at least at various levels of government. This sanctuary was the result of a donation of land from the Poole family of Poole constructors. Another private company called Maclab has also contributed, as has Melcor. I would actually welcome all members to come down to that area. It's on May Common where it meets May Gate in Magrath.

Melcor has built several sustainable housing developments, and there are actually several blocks in which every building is covered with solar panels. It is a real revelation to go down there and see how this private company, with the assistance of the city in terms of its zoning, has been able to enhance our sustainability. I spoke to Mr. Tim Melton at the opening of this Larch development – he's with Melcor – and he said that this was a good business decision, that this is what people want, and that this is what new families are looking for. You know, the home builders are responding to these needs when we give them the proper support through policy and development. I really think this is a glowing example of how that can work.

The other company that I want to give a shout-out to on a completely different measure – but it's again through our policies that promote collaboration between private industry and municipalities – is Telus. Telus has invested over a billion dollars in a fibre optic build-out throughout the province. They're showing confidence in this province. They're showing that this province has a future. That fibre optic build-out is happening right now in Edmonton-Whitemud, and I'm going to actually share a booth with Telus at the upcoming farmers' market on May 17 I think it is, whatever the Wednesday is next week. I'd welcome you all to come out basically to see me but also to see how Telus is expanding this important service that's going to help students, businesses, and old folks like me that want to download some movies. Maybe I'm going to be able to do trading with the new Securities Act.

In any case, this is a collaboration that's been facilitated by the municipality – and it's changing its policies – and the government or at least private industry, that is seeing its opportunities. It's there because it's going to presumably make some more money and maybe improve its competitive status. But, again, this is a collaboration. It's a very positive thing.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any further questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? Edmonton-McClung, you have 15 seconds.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I just wanted to ask quickly the hon. member if he could elaborate a little bit more on a topic he touched on that interested me greatly, and that was the area council that he alluded to that had been in operation in his riding, where the school board, community league, Capital Region Housing, faith groups, library, city of Edmonton, all of them got together on a monthly meeting basis and formed an area council, out of which this group called Brander Gardens ROCKS came. I'm just wondering: what was the genesis of this organization, how long has it been going on, and is it something that you would recommend other . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The time for 29(2)(a) has expired.
Other speakers to the bill? Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's an honour to rise today to speak to the amendments to the MGA. I wanted to discuss some of the application that that will have in my constituency.

Over the last two years as MLA for Strathcona-Sherwood Park there have been a number of school builds and modernizations and commitments that we've made within the constituency that really come back to some of the agreements and amendments that are coming into the MGA. We saw that we committed to École Élémentaire and an expansion, even, for the school there, and Davidson Creek is in the new area.

For those of you that aren't familiar with Sherwood Park and Strathcona county, I mean, it's considered one of the most livable communities in Canada. It's something that – lots of families move there to raise their children.

I know that I've discussed this with many parents and community leagues and parent councils and school boards and the municipality in the last two years, kind of being shocked to find out that there was no mechanism where the school boards and the municipalities were really sitting down and very thoughtfully planning out the long-term development strategies. I mean, there's been lots of growth in Strathcona county. There have been a lot of families moving in, and that causes, you know, increased need on the school board and increased need for more space. Of course, you always have changing demographics. Is it young families that are moving in?

All that's happening requires a planned approach. I am happy to say that even before we did this, the county, the municipality, and the school boards got together and had been discussing how they do joint planning. But to solidify that goal a little bit further, the amendments within the MGA allow for there to be clarity as to what needs to be hashed out and worked in to make sure that when you bring in a new school – I'll give the example of, like, Davidson Creek, which was a new school in an established neighbourhood. Had there been some kind of long-term planning and some expectations as to where the new schools were going to be built, it might have facilitated a simpler conversation, and it hashes out also the roles and responsibilities of both municipalities and the new school board.

Just to expand on some of the things that it means to have something like joint-use planning and agreements for schools that would be seen under this bill, the change requires the municipality to have joint-use and planning agreements with the school boards operating within their borders that consider establishing a process for discussing matters related to the planning, development, and use of school sites on municipal reserves, school reserves, and municipal and school reserves in the municipality; transfers of municipal reserves; disposal of school sites; the servicing of school sites on municipal reserves; the use of the school facilities, municipal facilities, and playing fields, including the maintenance of the facilities and the payment of these fees associated with them. Set out within that is how the municipality and the school board are going to work together collaboratively; also, setting up a process for settling disputes; also, a time frame for a regular review agreement; and any other provisions that the parties may consider to be advisable.

When we talk about how that is applied, there have been many cases within my constituency where that would have helped the process. There was the school closure of Colchester, and the school site had to be disposed of. You know, there was a very complicated process because of the things laid out, because of the history between the public school board and the municipality. Those things were resolved. However, there weren't processes and ways to resolve the kinds of circumstances that were arising, so it was new for everybody. It was complicated, and it took a lot longer than it needed to. At the end of day, that means that maybe the school was sitting there, like, having to deal with some of the vandalism that happens when a school isn't open.

Being able to have a plan in place and a process for those kinds of things really aids the community's understanding of the process as well. I know that a lot of my parent councils and my school boards are very involved together, and they work collaboratively. I know that in talking to parents, they want to know more about the process and how decisions are made in developing the long-term planning and in understanding why a school would be built in one place versus another place. Madam Speaker, I believe that this is actually going to be something that I will be talking about throughout the summer to the parent councils, and I know that this is actually feedback that I've received as the MLA from people that come to me and say: I'm not sure why there hasn't been this joint planning in order to prevent surprises from occurring.

There are also residual effects from not having joint planning. For example, if the municipality decides to build a facility in a space that maybe in the foreseeable future isn't becoming a school site, they might put investment into that green space and make a baseball field or whatever the case may be. They can put those investments in. I know that on a municipal level the council is looking at motions to prevent things like that. But this solidifies that you have to do it in an inclusive approach, understanding the different things that are involved in building that community.

It would prevent something for the community also, just being surprised, when a school site is announced in a certain area, as to why it was picked, as to all of these things. It really helps build that transparency and accountability with the community, and I think that that's something that in my area people are looking for.

I'm really proud to say that the Minister of Municipal Affairs really heard the concerns that people brought forward and appreciated that, you know, they looked at how to find solutions, and he also appreciated that, from the side of the school board trustees in my area and the municipalities, they were also open to doing this. They have been doing this in a more informal setting already. Solidifying that and kind of establishing a paradigm to work from really help altogether as we address all of the needs and concerns.

Again, going back to the number of infrastructure investments that we've made in my community, there's, as I mentioned before, École Élémentaire, which is a replacement school; Davidson Creek, which is a new school in an area that has grown out and has actually seen a lot of the students from the area that was developed be on buses to another side of Sherwood Park.

Of course, when you're talking about reducing bus times, making sure that you're building communities that are accessible, especially with something like Emerald Hills, which is one of the ones that was built – it was built with the mind frame of it being a walkable community, the same as Summerwood, that whole area, of it having all the things that you need in order to really have the capacity to have parks there and do that. Having to attend a school on a different side of Sherwood Park isn't really working within that vision.

Having that kind of mandatory agreement that you have to come to this place and talk to the municipalities as to what they're building out, make sure that the school sites are actually viable options for them to choose when thinking about building a school, which is, I mean, something that was discussed within the school reserve left in Summerwood, whether they could actually build a school there and what the impacts would be – there was a train site, rails nearby. There were perceptions of safety concerns at that point.

So understanding that it all comes together and that the school boards work within the confines of what areas are provided to them by the municipality and some of the concerns that maybe parents raise: they're limited to being able to address them based on that. Having to work together, making a plan, well, that actually might eliminate some of the frustration that I've heard from community members. Of course, I think everyone has come together to address these concerns, but I think that putting something like this in place really allows people to know that when they come forward to discuss that – they have expectations of accountability and want to be a part of the process – something like this really says to them: we're listening; we want to move forward on things that are meaningful to you, and we want to be accountable for the decisions that we make.

Just as we go forward, I know that this will be a topic of conversation in my community, so I just wanted to discuss that even further.

Having kind of highlighted the number of families and schools being modernized or the infrastructure investment in my community, that also means that there are a lot of families there. When we get to the other part of the amendments here, there's the parental leave. What does that mean when, you know, we want to elect representatives that represent the diverse makeup of our community?

When a community like Strathcona county is made up of families – also, not excluding that there are an increasing number of seniors, as the rest of Alberta is experiencing, that high increase in the number of seniors in the population, there's still a big portion of the people living in Sherwood Park that are family orientated. Making sure that representatives can be elected that are mothers or are fathers or whatever the case may be and aren't being prevented from running for politics because of being worried that if something happened, they wouldn't have an option available to them, that they would have to make a lot of sacrifices to make it work – I think that when we talk about being allies and being supportive to women and diverse voices in leadership, it has to translate into policy.

That's what this looks like – right? – translating that into being able to have parental leave and being able to give the tools available to municipalities and people within the council to figure out what that parental leave can look like within their constraints, because each one is different. I mean, they set out their own salaries. They set out a lot of these other conditions. Being able to set out what this looks like for that municipality is very important, but it also allows the tools to exist.

I know that I was able to go to one of the meetings with AAMDC and talk to Lisa Holmes on behalf of the Minister of Status of Women. We discussed that the leadership on a provincial level allows people on a municipal level to really bring these issues forward. I remember having that conversation because it is really important to lead by example, to provide those spaces in a place like the Legislature because it builds a broader understanding in the general public as to what is actually happening. Not many people would just know off the top of their head what kind of, you know, parental, compassionate care leaves an MLA or an elected official on a school board has. Those aren't pieces of information that people just know. That's something that you have to look into.

Bringing to light the fact that we had the first two MLAs that had a child while being an MLA brings those issues to light. Those things have never occurred. We've never really resolved these issues because they didn't come to the forefront. We weren't really forced into it, and it didn't seem all that relevant. I mean, it seemed something, you know, like, that we should work on, but it just didn't seem like we had to do it right now.

But I think that as we move forward, we know that supporting women in politics has a very positive effect, supporting diverse voices in that way, especially in a community such as mine, where it's made up of families. It has this commitment to being a livable community for your family, to being able to actually talk to representatives in the community and say: "Listen; you can raise your family, and you can be part of a municipal council or school council. Those things are options available to you. There are supports put in place, and there are tools there for you to make it a better space for you." That is something that people think about: how am I going to manage all of the expectations I have as a mother or a father of a young family and be able to also manage the expectations of living a political life?

I mean, we understand inherently that it's difficult, that there are expectations put in place on the amount of time that you're spending going out into communities. I always say that it's more of a lifestyle than a career because it's part of your life, going out to the community. So it's knowing, for them, that there are at least some options for things. You know, when you're pregnant, you might need some other time off, and being impacted negatively in your position because of that is a natural deterrent. It's a barrier for people to experience.

I think it's incumbent upon us to make sure that we are supportive, that we put the things in place, and we listen to people when they tell us the reasons that they're hesitant to move forward, and if there are not reasons that that needs to be in place that we find a solution for those things.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Hinkley: Yes, under 29(2)(a) to the member. It was very interesting, and it was great to hear about the parent councils that are working together collaboratively. It is a microscopic reflection of what we want to happen with the municipalities. I have two sort of questions that I'd like you to touch on if you could. Have there been examples of shared facilities or events between the various urban and rural municipalities in your constituency already? If not, do you see any potential for any specific joint socioeconomic collaboration within those different municipal governments within your constituency as well that would benefit as a result of the modernization of the MGA?

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you. I think that's a really great question. More of an example of a collaborative approach to it would actually be just, like, a block outside of my riding, in the Member for Sherwood Park's riding. It's a school that is part Holy Trinity and Lakeland, and it also has a part in there that is part of Children's Services. It's all within the same facility, so it's one building. It's one space, a shared field space. But what the school boards have actually done is to be able to stagger the break times, the recess times so that they were both able to use the whole playground for their classes during their break times.

That would be an example of a joint venture between the school board and the municipality because you create a government space in the middle that's kind of in between the two. Again, it's just outside of my riding. I actually went to that school, so I was able to see it in action and see the fact that you don't really see much of the other school there because they stagger this in order to create the maximum use of the space there.

You know, it's a really wonderful thing to be able to talk about because, at the same time, somewhere like Strathcona county and Sherwood Park are going to be experiencing a limitation in the amount of land available for schools. Then you're going to see the number of parents and families that need space, and enrolment capacities are at a maximum right now, so you get into the complication of: where do you build these schools?

Both, you know, the separate school system and the public school system need schools as well. We also have a francophone school division that actually just had a grand opening in that area as well. That's another example of joint planning again in the MLA for Sherwood Park's riding.

At the end of the day, it's a fact that we're going to be facing a limitation of the space available, space that is currently being used as green space in the community. So if we learn to utilize that space in a way that is efficient, that is thoughtful to the community's perspective of that space as well – because, of course, these are established neighbourhoods where they've used these spaces for a very long time; there are habits being built – being able to come up with a plan of how to respect that community's needs and how to make sure that we're enhancing those needs and meeting the needs of our education system, that's incredibly important.

There are some examples, and I know that everyone at the table is willing to work at finding more of them. So I think it's a great question. I think that we can continue to do things like that. It allows us to actually maximize money and look at different mechanisms of doing things like that. I was really happy to be able to share those examples.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

10:50

The Deputy Speaker: Any further questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, other speakers to the bill? The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. Certainly, I just wanted to make a few comments in regard to An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government. Of course, one of the main elements of this was to have interaction between school boards as a level of government and municipalities and then the province, too. I must say that this has been quite an illuminating experience for school boards across the province.

Initially they entered into the MGA consultation with some trepidation. I think perhaps they have had less than amicable relationships with previous governments. But, lo and behold, with the new government they found that the process was quite open and was within both the spirit and the letter of the law of responsibilities between these levels of government. So by building the planning and compelling school boards and municipalities to discuss the issues around school sites, I think we've really taken a big step forward. Of course, again, everyone has stories – we've heard them all morning – about school planning and municipal planning that were not in alignment with each other.

I can tell you, Madam Speaker, that we are in the midst of the largest school build here in the history of the province of Alberta. We have 200 projects on the go now, and it's going very well. I can tell you – you know, knock on wood – that the projects have been moved into alignment with the timing. I mean, you always have the vagaries of individual circumstances that might cause delays. We know that we had a tragic fire, for example, here in Edmonton just a few days ago. But, again, we're getting better at building schools, and the contractors are getting better at them, too, right? We now have, with all these projects, lots of experience building specifically to school project orders. I'm seeing projects speeding up and timelines shrinking all the time.

One of the main ways by which we can choose a project for its readiness is how the site is serviced and the interaction and the co-operation between the municipal government and the school board. There are many schools, for example, that I know I want to get going – we see the population growing, and we can track the populations of young children moving through, you know, and you need a school for the next phase of their lives – but we've seen roadblocks where the site servicing has not been done in a timely manner or the urban planning has not been sort of put into alignment in a timely manner as well. So by building in these changes from this bill, I fully expect that we will have a much more integrated planning process that will allow municipalities and developers and school boards to get it all working together in a timely and efficient manner.

All of us, again, have had lots of these stories of schools. A picture of a school in a field stays there for 10 years, but no school is ever built, right? Or, you know, some posts in the ground with tape on them but no school. Together with our planning, working in co-operation with Infrastructure, working in co-operation between school boards and sitting down at the table with municipalities, I believe that we've turned a corner in this regard, and we can start to get those schools built and serviced and integrated into the community in a timely way, that we've never been able to do previously.

So, yeah, I know as well that there's a large appetite for school boards to work closely with municipalities in terms of providing public services in close proximity to where school sites might be. We've seen some interesting and imaginative pilots in this regard: school boards and municipalities building, for example, their multiplexes in close proximity to each other; school boards and municipalities looking for libraries and other public buildings in close proximity to each other with the school. I'm encouraging this every step of the way. This is a way by which, again, we can facilitate that at a discussion table between the school boards and the municipalities.

I think the best and wisest good governance from a provincial level is that you open the door for a smooth interaction of communication and let the local authorities on the ground make the decisions that are best for their own neighbourhoods and communities, right? We know that any given town and school board have an intimate knowledge of what they need and how they can achieve that in terms of planning, and I believe that that's the best and wisest way for us to go. This bill does do that in the broadest possible way, and I'm quite proud to see my school boards give it universal acceptance and that enthusiastic agreement to moving forward under this new framework.

We know as well that when we are building schools and we're making decisions about planning over time, we're really shaping how those communities will look not just for a few years but for generations to come. We know that, for example, schools will have a heavy demand on them for certain populations moving through, and then the demographics change over time. Over the course of 50 years or 100 years you have different waves of young families moving through and retired people and so forth, so we can be more flexible using those public buildings and those public spaces over time. We might consider, for example, having some social services or seniors' services built into a school complex. We might have access to daycare built into those school complexes. We might have, you know, anything that people can creatively and imaginatively consider. I think, again, this bill will help to make that happen.

You know, it's important to note that, of course, with Municipal Affairs, with Education – for example, Education I know. Your budget I know less about. But between about 95 and 97 per cent of all the money through Education goes to the school boards. I think that that's a proud and wise decision. We try to have certain initiatives that we encourage school boards to do, but ultimately they're making those decisions around capital projects and operations and everything else.

What better way to ensure the responsible spending of those considerable funds – in my case it's $8.1 billion coming through the Education budget – than to make sure that they are discussing and planning with municipalities every step of the way? Because once you pour the foundation and put up the roof, then that's what you've got for probably 50, 60 years of a school's life, or even more sometimes. So we need to make sure that we have an adaptable and clear vision of what the neighbourhood is going to look like with that school as its community hub every step of the way.

So, yeah, it's looking good. I know that there are other provisions I've heard colleagues talking about in regard to elections and the improvements that this bill does have in regard to elections. Of course, we have the school board elections in October, too. Already I'm very proud of how we have much more gender balance in the school boards than in perhaps other levels of governance. You know, I would like to encourage people to be running in those school board elections here in the fall. I know that the provisions to encourage more gender parity in this bill can really help to strengthen the school boards.

It's interesting. Of course, I know CBE very well. I'm in discussions with them every week. It just was a great reminder to say: hey, that's an all-female board, right? And it's strong. I mean, it's one of the largest school boards anywhere, really. It provides an excellent standard of education, and the leadership is second to none. There you go. Of course, it's an all-female trustee crew, and I am very proud of the work that they do. They lead by example every step of the way.

We all signed off on the Northland School Division Act here just in the last few days. Again, that is signalling a democratically elected trustee board for Northland, the first time in seven years. I think that this municipal government act here will really help to encourage people to make choices about running in the Northland school division. For women to make that decision, we need that, quite frankly. Again, we're just facilitating the movement of democracy in the Northland school division here, but it's the people on the ground in Northland that must step up and run. I think that An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government can really help to encourage people to run in Northland and all school boards here in the province of Alberta.

Madam Speaker, this is an exciting time, to see us moving forward on this bill. I know that it was a long time coming. I know that a lot of people put work into it over many years. It's an example of what can be done when everybody puts their shoulders together to push in the same direction.

With that, Madam Speaker, I move to adjourn debate on this bill.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 12 New Home Buyer Protection Amendment Act, 2017

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I know that saying the New Home Buyer Protection Amendment Act, 2017, over and over probably gets a little long. I'll just shorten it up. I'll just call it builder licensing if that makes it easier for people.

I just have some comments today, you know, some kind of clarification on some of the things I've heard from people over the last little while of debating this bill. I'll start with the online registry, some of the messaging and a little bit of information here. An online registry will be kept up to date for consumers with a listing of all the builders who are licensed to build. The licence status – active, probationary, suspended, provisional, as examples – will be listed as well as reasons why the decision was made in the case of a probationary or suspended licence. In addition to providing more information to home builders to help them make informed decisions when selecting a builder, this will provide homeowners with the assurance that builders meet government criteria.

The registry will build on existing infrastructure that is housed and maintained within Municipal Affairs, which is an important thing to know, which lists the number of homes registered in Alberta. The current new-home buyer registry has 6,400 users that utilize the system daily. This infrastructure will be leveraged to ensure a seamless application process.

I've heard the question: will this be a new registry? This is not a new registry, nor is it related to registries under the purview of Service Alberta, which has drivers' licences, birth certificates, et cetera. The new-home buyer registry currently lists all homes in Alberta which have a home warranty insurance contract. This will be expanded to list information about all licensed builders in Alberta, including licence status, to provide consumers with information about builders. This is not associated with the Association of Alberta Registry Agents but is a stand-alone registry that will be maintained and housed within Municipal Affairs.

I've also heard some things about program operations. The builder licensing program will be administered from within government in the new-home buyer protection office. The program will not require additional staffing resources. It will be administered through a reallocation of existing staffing resources. Integrating this program into the new-home buyer protection office will enable integration into the safety codes system, working closely with warranty providers, municipalities, and builders, and it can also leverage an existing public registry.

I also have some more questions and answers here that I'd like to go through just, as I said before, to get some clarification and to get this information on the record so that we have it straight. I heard a question that says: why does Alberta need a builder licensing program when the province already has mandatory home warranty coverage under the New Home Buyer Protection Act? Albertans have shared many stories about poor home construction leading to massive repair costs. The recent consultation on builder licensing indicated that homeowners want builders to be held more accountable for their work.

Builder licensing will directly address builder accountability. The NHBPA does not address the qualifications for being a home builder, and right now anyone in Alberta could be a builder regardless of their experience or skills. This is unlike other aspects of building construction, where plumbers, gas fitters, and master electricians are required trades.

There's also no provision under the NHBPA to prevent a builder from building in Alberta even under extreme circumstances such as fraud or imminent bankruptcy. Licensing builders will help prevent issues in home construction by requiring builders to be accountable for their actions. For example, a builder may set up a numbered company, which can later be dissolved. The builder can walk away from its business without any repercussion while transferring the cost and risk of low-quality builds to the consumer. Builder licensing will enable tracking of these types of practices, and those with poor track records may find their company without a licence.

I've also heard the question: do any other jurisdictions have builder licensing programs? I have stated before that, again, Ontario, British Columbia, and Quebec have builder licensing programs in place. That covers 75 per cent of Canadians under those. Manitoba is expected to come online with a program in 2018.

The next question that I've heard is: who did government consult with to develop this proposed bill or licensing framework, and what are some of the results that we heard? We did consult stakeholders in engagements between February and March 2017 to hear stories from Albertans and determine the appropriate scope of what this builder licensing program was going to be in Alberta.

We had approximately 1,270 or so Albertans respond to the online survey, and about 130 participants – homeowners, owner-builders, builders, renovators – that attended the 11 engagement sessions and 78 per cent of survey respondents were in favour of the government exploring options for licensing builders. Several builder survey respondents noted the challenges of competing with home builders and that they would welcome a builder licensing program. Also, 81 per cent of members of the public support government exploring options for licensing builders compared to 69 per cent support from those in the industry.

I said to a gentleman the other day who asked me about builder licensing: "You know what? If you go out right now, I bet that if you polled 100 people on the street, most of them probably would think that they already have builder licensing because we have trades that are licensed and it seems like everybody out there has a licence for what they're doing." I brought that up, and I think it's a good point to make. We need to make sure that we're holding people accountable for the work that they do. That's one of the purposes of this, right? It's to protect our consumers and make sure Albertans have the protections that 75 per cent of other Canadians have.

I've also heard, you know, more general questions like: what difference is builder licensing going to make for Albertans? As I've stated before, home ownership is one of the largest investments, if not the largest investment, that a person can make. You know, we want to make sure that Albertans are informed and that they know that they're going to be protected and their families are going to be safe.

Previously there were no provisions to remove poor builders to protect consumers. Under our builder licensing framework builders who have demonstrated a pattern of disreputable behaviour or have consistently failed to meet standards may have their licence revoked.

Homeowners have expressed frustration with having limited access to information and not being able to easily or accurately research their builders. With builder licensing consumers will have access to consistent, reliable online information about the licences and the licence holders to help them make these informed decisions.

Now, how will builder licensing benefit Alberta's residential construction industry? Builder licensing will support the overall integrity and reputation of Alberta's residential construction industry. We have a great many builders out there that are fantastic, Madam Chair, and we want to make sure that those guys are highlighted. We don't want, you know, one bad apple here and there to ruin it for the rest of them. I want to make sure that we get that on record, that there are some amazing builders out there. The vast, vast majority of them are very, very good builders. That's something we can be proud of in this province.

Builder licensing is about supporting, as I said, those who do good work and helping to differentiate them from the rest of the pack. Builder and licence information will be available online, and we will help consumers with that to be able to understand who they have building their houses so that they don't have builders that are going to go out there and cut corners and misrepresent their industry and try to gain an unfair market advantage by deceiving people.

What will be the requirements for builders under a builder licensing program? Builders will be required to submit an application, pay a fee of $600 for the application and $500 for renewal, and hold an active licence in order to build. The licence will be for a one-year period and allows a builder to apply for multiple building permits during that time, after which a builder will then have to apply for a renewal.

The application process will require builders to submit information about their history – their track record, financial standing, and corporate structure – and it will allow the registrar of the new-home buyer protection office to assess all licence applications and determine whether an applicant presents a risk to the consumer. To avoid duplication of activities where possible, the application process will incorporate many of the existing requirements for a builder under the NHBPA, and the registrar will then determine if the applicant meets the licence criteria.

Will builders be required to take courses in order to obtain a licence and maintain an active licence? Builders have expressed a need for better training for practices outside of trades such as siding installation and installation of windows. Courses are not being considered at this time. We want to implement builder licensing first and phase in courses over the next few years. By phasing in training or course requirements, we will be able to first assess the program, determine strengths and gaps, and better align any required training to address those gaps. Both British Columbia and Ontario have had builder licensing in place for some time and have just recently introduced some of their course requirements.

What are the proposed licensing fees? How do proposed fees compare to other jurisdictions? Does government collect any other fees from builders? As I said, the proposed fees are $600 for a new application and $500 for the annual renewal. Ontario charges $2,500 for a new application and $500 for the renewal, and this involves warranty application fees. B.C. charges $600 for a new application and $500 for an annual renewal. Quebec charges $1,048 for a new general applicant and $1,378 for a specialized licence, with a range of renewal fees depending on licence type.

Will builder licensing apply to the construction of condominiums? Simply, yes, it will. We all know about leaky condos. We've heard about them here and in B.C. in the past. We want to make sure that people who are buying condos are protected as well.

Now, how will builder licensing be applied to renovations? This is a big one that we need to clarify about how this is going forward. Builder licensing will be required for substantial renovations where at least 75 per cent of the home's footprint is changed such as a full rebuild or top-floor redesign. This aligns home warranty requirements under the NHBP where renovations that alter 75 per cent of a home's footprint are defined as buying a new home and therefore require warranty. Applying builder licensing only to substantial renovations will prevent overregulation of the industry.

Renovations vary significantly and range from painting to deck building to finishing a basement or replacing a furnace to a full rebuild of a home. Builder licensing is focused on ensuring quality construction. Renovations such as painting or tiling are cosmetic and less complex and do not have safety impacts for the most part, unless I'm doing it. As a result, these types of renovations will not be covered under the builder licensing as they are also regulated under Service Alberta's prepaid contracting business licensing regulation. Renovations such as putting in new electrical wiring or finishing a basement are more complex and require journeypersons and permitting. The prepaid contracting business licensing regulation also applies to many of these renovations, and as a result, these types of renovations are regulated.

How will builder licensing impact trades or subcontractors? Trade subcontractors would not be required to be licensed. The builder is responsible for managing the project, including which subtrades to hire and how much financial risk they assume. Subtrades are not covered under the builder licensing because they are the responsibility of the builder. Alberta has a strong system of qualified tradespeople and competent builders. Builder licensing is about supporting those who do good work and helping them to differentiate themselves from those who don't. Builder licensing will not impact the trades.

Builder licensing would apply only to the construction of new homes, as I said, which does include condominiums and major renovations to most or all of an existing home. The majority of renovations requiring tradespeople are less complex and already covered under existing permit systems and, as I said, prepaid contracting regulations.

Will builder licensing pass extra costs on to consumers? Will builder licensing result in increased home prices? Home ownership is, as I stated, probably the largest investment people are going to make in their lives, and Albertans have told us that they want to be protected. The average builder in Alberta builds approximately seven homes per year. Using the proposed $500 fee for licensing renewal, the yearly cost per home will be roughly $80.

In general, housing prices are determined by supply and demand and much less directly by underlying costs such as materials like lumber. Ultimately, high demand by consumer confidence and availability of supply will determine housing prices. An underlying cost in the form of a licensing fee is therefore unlikely to be passed on to the consumer anyway. The overall affordability of housing in Alberta is appreciably below the Canadian average and will not be significantly impacted by builder licensing.

Who will be exempted from builder licensing requirements? Owner-builders constructing their own home would not be required to maintain an active builder licence. Charitable organizations such as Habitat for Humanity could also be exempt from builder licensing because they have a different business model. Builder licensing is focused on regulating those in the business of being a builder.

What's the definition of a builder? Under the New Home Buyer Protection Act

"residential builder" means a person who engages in, arranges for or manages all or substantially all of the construction or reconstruction of a new home, or agrees to do any of those things, and includes a general contractor, but does not include an owner builder.

What other questions can I answer for people here? What will be the requirements for a builder to be licensed – for example, education or experience, project track record – and who will evaluate? The bill proposes that the builder submit information about their history, their financial standing, and their corporate structure. The new-home buyer protection office would review this information. They would evaluate the builder's demonstrated experience, knowledge of legal responsibility, ability to undertake and complete home construction, and ability to manage finances. Any formal training and certifications would be considered a benefit. When looking at these elements to evaluate a builder, the key question would be: does the builder's track record demonstrate building competence, and are there any patterns of behaviour that could be deemed risky to consumers? There are many excellent builders in Alberta, and this program would highlight those good track records.

How will a so-called bad builder be determined? Will it be a complaint system, and how will it be evaluated? Will there be an appeal system? If a builder has committed fraud in the past, has had their licence revoked in any other province, or has outstanding bankruptcy proceedings, a builder licence would not be issued. Court proceedings for past bankruptcies or violations under other acts will be considered along with the builder's history of construction when making these licensing decisions.

Is the annual fee a flat rate regardless of company size? Yes. The licence application and renewal fee will be the same for all builders regardless of size.

Will builders be responsible for the trades they subcontract, or will providers such as roofers, finishers, et cetera, also have to be licensed? I did touch on this before, that trades and subcontractors would not be required to be licensed. The builder is responsible for managing that project, including the subtrades that they've hired and the financial risk they would assume. Subtrades are not covered under builder licensing because they are the responsibility of the builder. In addition to protecting Albertans and bolstering the reputation of the residential building industry, better licensing would help protect subcontractors by recognizing builders' strong financial and legal track records.

How will you avoid processing delays since builders will need to be licensed for the building season? Government will work with the industry to make sure that licensing requirements do not impede a builder's ability to prepare for the building season. Steps will also be taken to ensure continuity throughout the process and that builders and homeowners will not be interrupted by unnecessary bureaucratic delays. Because of the integrated system being proposed and the ability to leverage the current registry system, Municipal Affairs will be able to work with our existing partners to mitigate delays and find agreeable solutions.

How many new staff will you hire for this program? We touched on this before. The program will be administered through reallocation of existing staff resources.

Aren't we just creating a duplicate system when both insurance companies and the banks already vet builders for financial risk? The financial vetting currently done by banks and warranty providers will consider liquidity and other financial indicators. The warranty providers are currently key partners in the NHBP system, and we will continue to work with them to implement builder licensing, utilizing existing information. Government will meet with warranty providers to see if their financial review processes could support builder licensing rather than government duplicating the process.

Will this be a barrier to a new builder? No, this will not be a barrier to a new builder. We will look at a range of factors beyond experience, including financial and corporate structure, to determine licensing decisions. New builders will be given the opportunity to build a profile with the department over time. The builder licensing program will provide oversight and guidance for the new builder.

As for some of the regulations, many of the specific details of the builder licensing program will be laid out in the regulations. These will include details on appeal processes, fees, classes of licence, application process, renewal process, suspension or cancellation of licence, terms and conditions of licences, requirements for corporate licence holders, and some other things, obviously, that will be coming through. Government will continue to listen to stakeholders and industry to make sure the implementation of builder licensing is smooth and that through the drafting of regulations we are listening to everybody going forward.

I'm sure there's a lot more that I could say, but I know there are a few others that would like to speak. I just want to say that I really appreciate, again, my staff and all the hard work that they're doing on this and all the good, positive feedback we've been hearing from our different ridings and from different people around the province about this.

You know, I was just with a few gentlemen the other night, friends of mine, and one of them works in the oil patch. He had said, "It's about time; up in the oil patch we've got to have licences and permits," and he kind of listed off a bunch of things that they do. He's a tradesman himself, and he had kind of laughed about it and said: "It's about time. You know, people need to be licensed and protected." It was a nice thing to hear from him. I talked to a couple of builders on the weekend that said similar types of things. You know, we continue to get messages, as I had stated before, on social media and through e-mail and things like that. Hopefully, we continue to get more information from people and more feedback like that and make sure that we catch all of that feedback in a positive way. [Mr. S. Anderson's speaking time expired]

There you go. Perfect.

The Chair: Any other questions, comments, or amendments? Calgary-Northern Hills.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I rise this morning to speak in Committee of the Whole to Bill 12, the New Home Buyer Protection Amendment Act, 2017. Clearly, a new-home purchase is one of the biggest financial decisions any family will make, and Albertans should be protected. They need the confidence that the home being built is being built to the highest standards by builders with a good track record.

I was surprised to find out that 75 per cent of other Canadians in other provinces are protected by builder licensing programs, and the provinces of British Columbia, Quebec, and Ontario each have a licensing program that has proven to benefit both consumers and the home-building industry.

Buying a new home is one of the biggest investments that a person will ever make in their lifetime, and when Albertans make that investment, they deserve to be able to make an informed decision about their builder. They need to feel secure in the knowledge that the builder they have chosen is qualified and that the builder doesn't have a history of mismanagement and fraud. Currently new-home buyers are vulnerable, and there are no specific requirements for a residential builder.

Madam Chair, like most members of this Legislature, I have bought a new home a few times in my life. The first time was a 1,400-square-foot condo unit. It was one unit in a six-unit building, and I was lucky enough to have bought a unit without any significant problems. However, being in a shared condo space of townhouses, I heard from neighbours about problems and complications within their units. For example, if plumbing or electrical wiring in a block of units was not completed in a proper way, I could have found myself affected by the failures or the low quality of work even though it may have not been in my unit.

I later joined the condo board of our condo units and served as director and soon found out that my worst fears were realized and that the roofing and shingles were poorly installed, and a few units had leaky roofs. We attempted to fix the work and used our condo reserves to approach the builder to get the job complete. To make a long story short, it took two years to get a proper settlement and the shingles fixed, but it came at a cost to the condo board, and the fee increase affected all residents. In this case, although it was a reputable builder, still we confronted these challenges. Fortunately, we came to a resolution to the matter, but it doesn't make the process any easier.

However, I was happy to see that condominium construction was included in this bill as well. The construction of condominiums is regulated under the New Home Buyer Protection Act, as is any new-home construction, and I'm encouraged to know that the builder licensing will apply to condominium developers as well.

Madam Chair, I'll tell you another anecdotal tale of another home that I purchased in the past. In this case, it was a semidetached unit. When I think about the spot, I often miss it. It had a great view. However, after moving into the neighbourhood in this new home, I was surprised to learn that a lot of other neighbours were still having issues with their homes. The builder managed to resolve most disputes, and the neighbours were satisfied in the end for the most part, but we found it necessary to form a community association to work with the builder to further resolve some of those issues as well.

In the case of my building, my neighbour always asked me in the wintertime about my unit and if the master bedroom was warm enough. I didn't have any problems with my unit, and eventually, after the second winter, my neighbour ended up moving away because of the heating issues in their unit. After the new neighbours moved in, while I was over socializing one night, after a few drinks of milk and juice, of course, I found out that the vent from the furnace to their master bedroom was missing about half a foot of pipe. Yes, Madam Chair. There was literally a half-foot gap between the pipe and the connecting piece to the master bedroom. The basement was toasty warm in the winter while the master bedroom was not.

I went to have a peek at this deficiency, and I was surprised to see this not only because the final inspectors missed it – and not only that; the previous family had missed it as well – but because the consequences of that deficiency were so irritating that the family moved away. They were great neighbours. But to the credit of the new neighbours, I enjoyed their company as well. Once again it just highlights how a small deficiency like that can have such surprising consequences.

Madam Chair, I am certain that this bill and the builder licensing is going to make a big difference for Albertans. In February and March 2017 Municipal Affairs conducted a targeted stakeholder engagement to hear stories from Albertans and to determine the appropriate scope of a builder licensing program in Alberta: 1,269 Albertans responded to the online survey, and 130 participants attended 11 engagement sessions across the province. Seventy-eight per cent of survey respondents were in favour of government exploring options for licensed builders. Eighty-one per cent of members of the public support government exploring options for the licensing of builders compared to 69 per cent supporting those of the building industry. Forty-one per cent of all respondents indicated that they were dissatisfied with the current state of residential construction in Alberta. As well, several builder survey respondents noted the challenges of competing with poor builders and that they would welcome a builder licensing program.

Through the consultations we heard frustration from homeowners, who felt they were on their own when it came to the residential construction process, with no assurance that someone was looking out for them. Builder licensing combined with mandatory home warranties will help increase builder accountability, with homeowners feeling confident that mechanisms are in place to protect their interests.

Madam Chair, I'm impressed with the direction of this bill, and I think it's time that we take action to protect Albertans when they're making the biggest investment decisions of their lives. I'll be supporting Bill 12 in Committee of the Whole, and I encourage others to do the same.

Thank you.

The Chair: Hon. members, I've had a request to revert to Introduction of Guests.

Okay. I've been advised that we can't actually do that in committee as we can't set aside the standing orders. We'd have to actually be in Assembly. So if someone would like to move that we rise and report progress and then go back, then we could.

The hon. Government House Leader to help us out.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I think we need to revisit that rule, but I will move that the committee rise and report progress.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 12.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I would request unanimous consent to briefly revert to Introduction of Guests.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd like to introduce a school to you and through you to all members of this Assembly. The Spring Glen junior high school has come up from the southern parts of the province. They've travelled a long way, and they were hoping to be able to be introduced in the House, so I'd like to do this at this time. Their principal, Jamie Barfuss, is here, a great guy even though his students say otherwise. We went to school together. I'd like to have all of them please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

Thank you.

Mr. Mason: Do you need a motion to go back into Committee of the Whole?

The Deputy Speaker: No. I think we're fine. You learn something new every day around here.

Thank you, hon. members.

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: We're moving back into committee.

The Chair: Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments? Calgary-Hawkwood.

Connolly: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. It's my pleasure to rise today and speak to Bill 12, the New Home Buyer Protection Amendment Act, 2017. I'm really proud to be able to stand today and speak, mostly because home ownership is one of the biggest financial decisions that any family will make. Albertans deserve to be protected and have confidence that their home is being built to a high standard by builders with a good track record. Currently you can never be too sure as to whether or not your home builder is well equipped, is licensed – well, there is no licensing program at the moment. You never know what their credentials are, but soon you will if this bill is to pass.

This is a fair and balanced measure which will help both consumers and the home building industry and has been put forward after consultation with the industry, consumers, municipalities, and, of course, other stakeholders. Currently new-home consumers are vulnerable because they have limited access to information about builders, like I was referring to earlier. There are no mechanisms to prevent a builder from operating even after instances of fraud or poor building practices. Builder licensing programs already protect 75 per cent of Canadians, and we need to be in line with the other provinces so that we're not a destination for bad builders from elsewhere, of course. Now, Madam Chair, this is just one of the more practical ways that we're making life better for Albertans, and I'm proud to be a part of a government that is focused on that.

Now, I just wanted to talk about certain parts of the bill. Of course, under part 1.1 of the act, Licensing:

4.1(1) The Registrar may, on application, issue a licence to a residential builder if

- (a) the Registrar is satisfied that the residential builder meets the prescribed qualifications and conditions for licensing,
- (b) where the residential builder is a corporation, the Registrar is satisfied that no individual about whom disclosure is required under subsection (3) would be refused a licence if the individual were an applicant, and
- (c) the residential builder pays the required licence fee.

Of course, that's just referring to how the licensing program will be set up, Madam Chair, and how we can move forward.

(2) The Registrar may

- (a) require an applicant to take, or where the applicant is a corporation, to require any of its directors, officers or employees to take, courses and examinations for the purposes of ensuring that the applicant or the applicant's directors, officers and employees meet the qualifications and conditions referred to in subsection (1)(a).

Of course, this just makes sure that everyone who does want a licence is properly informed of all the decisions, is informed of what the requirements to build a house would be.

Of course, Ontario, British Columbia, and Quebec already have builder licensing programs in place, so that means that over 75 per cent of Canadians, as I was referring to earlier, have the benefit of protection of builder licensing, and Manitoba is expected to introduce a licensing and warranty program in 2018.

Just to continue on with what I was talking about:

- (b) set and administer courses and examinations for the purposes of clause (a).

That's just referring to the first part I was talking about.

- (3) Where a residential builder applying for a licence or the renewal of a licence is a corporation, the residential builder must file a statement with the Registrar disclosing to the satisfaction of the Registrar the identity of all directors and officers of the corporation.

That's just so that there's a bit more transparency in the corporation.

- (4) If, after a statement is filed under subsection (3), there is any change in the information required to be disclosed, an updated statement must be filed with the Registrar forthwith.

- (5) A licence is not transferable.

Of course, that's just to make sure that if one corporation does close down or licensing does close down, they cannot create a new one and have that licence follow them with the new corporation.

11:40

Under Renewal of Licence:

- 4.2(1) A residential builder who holds a licence under this Part may, within the time prescribed, apply to the Registrar to have the licence renewed.

That's just to make sure that there is continuity.

- (2) The Registrar may renew the licence, with or without conditions and restrictions, if
 - (a) the Registrar is satisfied that the residential builder continues to meet the applicable requirements of section 4.1, and
 - (b) the residential builder pays the required renewal fee.

Again, just to make sure that there is continuity, making sure that they are still paying their dues as well as ensuring that everyone in the corporation or a certain builder is still qualified.

Under Conditions:

- 4.3 Subject to the regulations, the Registrar may at any time impose conditions and restrictions on a licence issued or renewed under this Part.

You never know what may happen, so you have to make sure that the registrar has the right to impose conditions.

Under Expiry of Licence:

- 4.4 Subject to section 4.5, a licence expires one year after the day it was issued or last renewed or, if an earlier expiry date is specified on the licence by the Registrar, on the specified date.

That is just, of course, making sure that people are able to renew the licence.

- 4.5(1) The Registrar may refuse to issue or renew or may at any time suspend or cancel, as the Registrar considers appropriate, the licence of a residential builder

- (a) for any reason that would render the residential builder ineligible for a licence under section 4.1 if the residential builder were applying for a licence under that section,
- (b) if the residential builder has made a false statement about a material matter in the application for the licence or renewal or refuses to provide information about a material matter when requested to do so by the Registrar.

Of course, that's just keeping everything more transparent.

- (c) if the residential builder is convicted of an offence under this Act or a prescribed offence under another Act,
- (d) if the residential builder has breached a condition of the licence or a restriction on the licence,
- (e) if the Registrar considers that the application for the licence or renewal is not or was not made in good faith,
- (f) if the residential builder has failed to comply with a compliance order or a prescribed order or direction under another Act,
- (g) if the residential builder has failed to pay an administrative penalty under this Act or a prescribed Act,
- (h) if the licence was issued in error.

Of course, that would be if it was issued without compliance with the other parts under 4.5.

- (i) in any other circumstances in which the Registrar considers the refusal, suspension or cancellation appropriate to avoid or reduce a risk to the public or any person.

That's, of course, just keeping with public safety.

- (2) Subject to the regulations, the Registrar may reinstate a licence that has been suspended or cancelled if the Registrar is satisfied that it is appropriate to do so and that the issues that resulted in the suspension or cancellation have been addressed.

Again, making sure there's transparency, making sure the registrar has the rights to do as they need to.

Under Notice of Decision and Surrender of Licence:

- 4.6(1) If the Registrar refuses to issue or renew a licence or suspends, cancels or imposes conditions or restrictions on a licence, the Registrar shall serve the residential builder with notice of the decision.

- (2) The notice must

- (a) include written reasons for the Registrar's decision, and
- (b) advise the residential builder of the right under section 17 to appeal the Registrar's decision to the Board.

So making sure that the home builders still have rights if something does happen to their licences.

- (3) Where the Registrar suspends, cancels or refuses to renew the licence of a residential builder, the residential builder must forthwith surrender the licence to the Registrar.

So making sure that the registrar does have rights to suspend at any time instead of just having to wait until the renewal.

Under Holding Out:

- 4.7 A person who does not hold a valid licence under this Part shall not represent or hold out, expressly or by implication, that the person is licensed under this Part.

Section 5 is amended

- (a) in subsection (1)
 - (i) by striking out "shall issue" and substituting "may, on application, issue";
 - (ii) by striking out "an individual who intends to build a new home for personal use if the individual" and substituting "an owner builder if the owner builder";
- (b) by repealing subsection (3).

The current act says:

- 5(1) Subject to section 6, the Registrar shall issue an authorization, subject to any terms and conditions the Registrar considers appropriate, to an individual who intends to build a new home for personal use if the individual

- (a) registers the new home with the Registrar,
- (b) meets the prescribed criteria, and
- (c) pays the required fees, if any.

Of course, this just makes it so that if someone does own their own home or is an owner-builder, they have their own rights under this act.

Section 6 is repealed, and the following is substituted:

Refusal, suspension or cancellation of authorization

6 The Registrar may refuse to issue an authorization to an owner builder or may at any time suspend or cancel, as the Registrar considers appropriate, an owner builder's authorization

- (a) if the owner builder does not meet the prescribed criteria referred to in section 5(1)(b) or does not pay the required fees, if any, under section 5(1)(c),

Of course, that was the section that I just read and we have amended.

- (b) if the owner builder has made a false statement about a material matter in the application for an authorization or refuses to provide information about a material matter when requested to do so by the Registrar,

This is making sure that they are accountable under the registrar once more.

- (c) if the owner builder is convicted of an offence under this Act,
- (d) if the owner builder has breached a condition of the authorization or a restriction on the authorization,
- (e) if the Registrar considers that the application for the authorization is not or was not made in good faith,
- (f) if the owner builder has failed to comply with a compliance order,
- (g) if the owner builder has failed to pay an administrative penalty, or
- (h) if the authorization was issued in error.

Of course, this just mirrors what's done for other builders.

Section 7(2) is being repealed. It presently says: "If the Registrar suspends or cancels an owner builder's authorization, the Registrar shall notify the permit issuer that issued the building permit to the owner builder." It will be substituted with:

- (2) If the Registrar suspends or cancels an authorization held by an owner builder to whom a building permit has been issued under the Safety Codes Act, the Registrar shall notify the permit issuer.

That's just making sure that the registrar still has the right to permit the issuer.

Section 9(1)(a) will be repealed. It presently reads:

9(1) The Registrar shall establish and maintain a registry that must include information on

- (a) authorizations and exemptions issued or applied for under this Act.

That will be repealed, and the following will be substituted:

- (a) licences applied for, issued, renewed, suspended, cancelled or reinstated under this Act,
- (a.1) authorizations applied for, issued, suspended or cancelled under this Act,
- (a.2) exemptions applied for or issued under this Act.

Of course, that's to make sure that the registrar can maintain his registry and include certain information.

11:50

The current section 11(1)(a) and (b) shall be repealed. It reads:

- 11(1) For the purposes of this Act, a compliance officer may
- (a) require an owner builder to produce
 - (i) the owner builder's authorization, including any declaration in support of the application for that authorization, or
 - (ii) any records relating to the owner builder's exemption from a requirement under this Act.

That will be repealed, and the following shall be substituted:

- (a) require an owner builder to produce any or all of the following:
 - (i) proof of the owner builder's authorization;
 - (ii) any records relating to the application for the authorization;
 - (iii) any records relating to an exemption from a requirement under this Act,
- (b) require a residential builder to produce any or all of the following:
 - (i) proof of the residential builder's licence;
 - (ii) any records relating to the application for the licence;
 - (iii) proof that a new home built or under construction by the residential builder has the required home warranty coverage;
 - (iv) any records relating to an exemption from a requirement under this Act.

Of course, that makes it so that the residential builder shall produce any proof that they are a residential builder to a registrar or those who are taking care of the law in this regard.

Section 12(3)(a) is amended by striking out "an authorization" and substituting "a licence or an authorization," just to make sure that we have full compliance under the law.

Section 15 shall be amended in subsection (2) by striking out "in respect of a new home, including a dwelling unit within a multiple family dwelling that is a new home." That means, in respect to the act, that a penalty may be imposed by the registrar. Currently that subsection reads:

- (2) An administrative penalty may be
 - (a) a single amount, or
 - (b) an amount for each day that the contravention or failure to comply continues.

It will also be amended by adding the following after subsection (2).

- (2.1) Where a contravention or failure to comply referred to in subsection (1) is in respect of a multiple family dwelling, a separate administrative penalty may be imposed for each dwelling unit that is a new home within the multiple family dwelling.

It will also be amended in subsection (4) by striking out "under this section."

It will also be amended by repealing subsection (6) and substituting the following:

- (6) An administrative penalty may be imposed on one or more directors, officers or other persons who authorized, permitted or acquiesced in a contravention or failure to comply by a corporation for which an administrative . . .

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, May 11, 2017

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. It's a beautiful day out there, folks. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you this day the students of Lacombe Christian school from the beautiful and historic city of Lacombe. With them is their teacher, Mr. David Allers. As you will see by the names of the parent chaperones in a minute, most are from the hard-working Dutch community that live in and around Lacombe as well. I'll see how I get through the names: Mrs. Reanne Vanderscheer, Mrs. Judy Hazelhoff, Mrs. Candace Bajema, Mr. Keith Vaandrager, Mrs. Rachel Kraay, Don and Angie Scott, and Sherry TenHove. I'd ask that they all please stand and receive the warm welcome of the House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you 80 students from Westpark middle school in the amazing constituency of Red Deer-South. They are accompanied by teachers Mr. Adam Barthel, Mr. David Cozens, Ms Kim Toth, and Mrs. Cindy O'Connor. Would you all please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other school groups today?

Seeing and hearing none, the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Richard Hanson. Mr. Hanson was a correctional officer at the Edmonton Remand Centre for 33 years, retiring in 2013. This week he was awarded the corrections exemplary service medal for his 30-plus years of service in the corrections system. I think we all know how difficult and challenging this work is and that it keeps the rest of us safe. I'd like Mr. Hanson to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Labour and minister responsible for democratic renewal.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members some very special guests from the Edmonton Vaisakhi Nagar Kirtan Committee. These gentlemen have dedicated hundreds of volunteer hours planning and organizing the 19th annual Edmonton Nagar Kirtan parade, which draws upwards of 50,000 Albertans from all faiths. I ask them to stand. They are Gurcharan Singh Sangha, Pal Singh Purewal, Harpreet Singh Gill, Paramjeet Singh Dhindsa, Malkit Singh Panesar, Chanchal Singh Nyota, and Mohinder Singh Sagoo. This year's parade is on May 21 and touches the constituencies of Edmonton-Mill Woods, Edmonton-Mill Creek, and Edmonton-Ellerslie. I encourage all members to attend. Thank you for being here, gentlemen. I would now like you to receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize National Nursing Week, and I have four guests in our gallery. They are Alberta nursing professionals, who always bring compassion and expertise to their roles, that are continuously evolving and changing: Joy Peacock from the College and Association of Registered Nurses of Alberta as well as Barbara Lowe from the College of Registered Psychiatric Nurses of Alberta, Linda Stanger from the College of Licensed Practical Nurses, and Teddie Tanguay from the Nurse Practitioner Association of Alberta. They have all risen. Please join me in extending the warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to introduce to you and through you 18 students and their teachers from around the province. They came here today to present to me two papers on reconciliation in our schools. These 18 students represent more than 200 students who are working collaboratively to produce papers on how schools can become institutions of reconciliation and how we can work to ensure that First Nations, Métis, and Inuit cultures are recognized and supported throughout the K to 12 education system. I would ask them, their teachers, their chaperones, and the elders to please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege and pleasure to introduce to you and through you my parents-in-law, Dave and Donna Johnston. They are joined by my husband, Jeremy Johnston. They are my most lovely parents-in-law and are in Fort Saskatchewan. They have been making their lives there for decades upon decades and have raised four lovely children. My father-in-law was a long-time Unifor union member, so we have a lot to talk about on those files. I would encourage the entire House to please extend the warm welcome to them.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two guests that are from Saskatchewan. Austin MacNally is a student at the University of Saskatchewan with the hope of one day serving as an NDP MLA in the province of Saskatchewan. He's a proud member and vice-president of the Saskatchewan Young New Democrats. After attending the 2016 Western Canada Youth Parliament, he decided he wanted to see all Legislatures in person and not just on television. He is here today with his grandmother, Dianne Winters, who hails from Borden, Saskatchewan, and currently serves as an office manager at the Royal Canadian Legion branch 63 in Saskatoon. These two have joined us today to see firsthand the great work that our Alberta NDP government is able to accomplish. Could they please receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Dr. Turner: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature representatives of Hypertension Canada, who've been running a blood pressure monitoring clinic in the lower rotunda. In fact, it's still going on until 2:30 if anybody wants to get their blood pressure checked. Hypertension Canada is a volunteer-based, not-for-profit organization whose mission is to advance health through the prevention and control of blood pressure. Several representatives of Hypertension Canada are in the public gallery, including Angelique Berg, CEO; Dr. Nadia Khan, president and chair of the board; Dr. Ross Tsuyuki, professor of medicine and pharmacy at the University of Alberta; and Dr. Raj Padwal, professor of medicine at the University of Alberta. I ask for all to rise and receive the usual welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, I was encouraged by both sides of the House to go to that clinic before I came in here this afternoon.

The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Good afternoon, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions if I may. The first one is on behalf of my colleague the MLA for Airdrie. I would like to welcome the beautiful and determined Abby Marr and her grandfather Gavin Clarke, who are strong conservatives from the wonderful city of Airdrie. If they could please stand and receive the traditional welcome of our House.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to introduce my next two guests. The first one is Lisa Friedt. She is a community creator, connector, and coach, and she shines light on women's strengths and accomplishments. I am so lucky to know her and to work with her.

The second is a very, very dear friend of mine. Her name is Kelly Falardeau. She is a survivor of burns on 75 per cent of her body since the age of two years and constantly struggled with her self-worth and confidence. She found a way, in her own words, to go from near death to success, from the ugly, scar-faced girl to the top 10 most powerful and influential speakers, fierce woman of the year, international best-seller author, four-time recipient of the Queen Elizabeth II Diamond Jubilee medal, and the YWCA women of distinction award. She has also travelled to Africa twice to help burn survivors recover from their tragic injuries. Plus, she started the blankets for burn kids fund to help burn kids to feel more loved and needed and wanted at times when life is just too rough to move forward.

I would like you both to stand and please receive the absolute warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly someone who is a regular visitor to our Chamber but who comes to us today having just done some quality control on our health care system, and having accomplished that, he is now informing me that he is going to be a very strong advocate on behalf of increased resources for health care infrastructure and operations. Please welcome back once again Rory Koopmans.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Climate Leadership Plan and Pipeline Construction

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have heard many members of the opposition ring alarm bells and shout insults across the aisle because of one news item or another about oil pipelines in Canada. The latest bit of nonsense came yesterday, when a member opposite used the occasion of the B.C. election to use highly inflammatory language about our government's stance on pipelines. I will not dignify the member's statement by responding to it directly except to say that he is absolutely wrong.

Instead of arguing at the level of insult, let's look at some facts. The first is the Prime Minister of Canada's announcement where he publicly stated that Kinder Morgan and line 3 could not have been approved without the leadership of Alberta's Premier and Alberta's climate leadership plan. If the opposition wants to claim that the Prime Minister is lying, that is their choice.

The second is Cenovus CEO Brian Ferguson, who spoke at a panel organized by the Calgary Chamber of commerce and said that Alberta had struck an appropriate balance with our climate change policy. If the opposition wants to claim the CEO of one of Alberta's largest energy companies is lying, that is their choice.

Support from powerful political and business leaders did not come about because we used childish insults. This support came about because we, working as a conscientious and informed government, recognized some fundamental realities. Albertans know that a strong economy and a clean environment go hand in hand. Opposition to pipelines is real. We must engage with those who oppose pipelines in order to achieve lasting results. The benefits of pipelines, both economically and environmentally, are substantial. We must educate and inform everyone of that reality.

Progress towards a stronger economy and a cleaner environment must not be taken for granted, and I am proud to be part of a government that is committed to working with the energy industry to get results and not part of the opposition whose risky and extreme actions put those results at risk.

Thank you.

Immigration and Economic Development

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, throughout the 1990s the Alberta advantage meant having the lowest taxes to attract entrepreneurs to create jobs. Migrants have long been associated with entrepreneurialism. According to the World Economic Forum 65 per cent of migrants between the ages of 15 and 35 are skilled, and India is the number one migrant-sending country in the world. Among the 15 million Indian immigrants globally, many hold prominent positions in management, technology, and science, bringing with them unique skills and diaspora networks. Some of the examples are the current CEOs of Microsoft, Google, and Pepsi.

President Trump's policy to overhaul the H-1B visa program will provide opportunities for Alberta as Indian computer programmers and coders will no longer be brought to Silicon Valley. This means creative, tech-savvy individuals can set up anywhere in the world equipped only with smart phones, database access, and desktop-publishing capability. They can create, market, and sell internationally. Their company's value will be based on the innovations, not assets. Calgary's fintech and Edmonton's computer gaming sectors stand to benefit from these computer programmers and entrepreneurs leaving the U.S.A.

In today's society we are defined by our ability to reach every corner of the world in an instant. We can share ideas and move between continents like never before. Fibre optics to every community and direct international flights off-continent are essential. The opportunities abound, and I encourage the government to update the Alberta immigrant nominee program for strategic recruitment of computer programmers and high-tech entrepreneurs who want to move to Alberta and contribute to our communities.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Alberta Party Policies

Mr. Clark: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This weekend Alberta Party members will gather in Edmonton to bring the centre together. We'll meet to talk about the issues that matter to Albertans, focusing on jobs and the economy. We'll bring together people from around the province to share ideas, debate, and learn from one another. We will host two diverse panels to talk about how to create jobs for underrepresented groups and how government can create an environment where Albertans have stable employment and job growth no matter the price of oil. In other words, exactly the topics we should be focusing on in this Assembly.

Now, I've had the privilege of travelling all over Alberta, and I will let you in on a little secret. Albertans are not left-wing or right-wing. Albertans are humble. Albertans are remarkable. They are proud and smart and resourceful and compassionate. Albertans are thrifty, but we are not cheap. We are strong, but we're not bullies. We get things done, and working together, Albertans make tomorrow happen. Albertans: we admit our mistakes, and we move past them. We don't obsess about who's to blame. We put our energies into what's to come. Albertans time and time again prove that we have big hearts. Albertans believe that to be great, our province must be great for each and every citizen. At the same time, Albertans hate waste.

Our people want a government as smart as they are. They want common sense. Albertans know that we cannot have a discussion about the economy without having a discussion about the environment. Albertans want leaders who are proud of our energy industry as it is today and will fiercely defend our environmental and social track record to the world. Albertans want leaders who ensure our province succeeds in today's economy while also taking a step into tomorrow's economy, by allowing Alberta entrepreneurs to innovate in green technology, agrifood, IT, and so much more.

That is the sort of leadership Albertans are looking for, and in 2019 that's exactly what the Alberta Party will . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Government and Opposition Policies

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's New Democrats have a long history of standing up for the protection of universal, accessible public services like health care and education. We know that cuts in essential services lead to horrible consequences down the road. We also know that for years the previous government neglected necessary repairs in nearly all of our province's infrastructure in the name of a balanced budget. Even when oil prices were at record high, the previous government failed to invest sufficiently in our public systems. They did nothing to curtail the skyrocketing school fees, they allowed tuition to rise over decades, and the Wildrose opposition called for even further cuts, which they continue to do to this day.

When our government expands on affordable child care and nutrition programs, reduces school fees, and freezes tuition, we hear crickets from that side of the House. When this government invests in new hospitals and needed infrastructure, more crickets.

Mr. Speaker, when the opposition talks about risky economic policies hurting families, perhaps they might look to their best friends to the east, the ones that made massive increases to their PST while cutting almost all of the services their citizens depend on. They removed $67 million from the K to 12 system. They eliminated their provincially funded busing services, which are utilized by low-income seniors and rural communities. They reduced postsecondary funding by 5 per cent while raising the education tax by nearly 10 per cent. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members.

Mr. Carson: Mr. Speaker, the opposition might try to deny that they support these measures, but up until a few weeks ago they were the Saskatchewan government's biggest cheerleaders. If they have a better plan, perhaps they might take a moment from tweeting memes to make a shadow budget longer than 140 characters.

Mr. Speaker, I support finding efficiencies and making smart, targeted investments to optimize outcomes, but what I do not support is pretending that a balanced budget is more important than protecting the services that the people in this province depend on. I will continue to be a tireless advocate for my community, as will the rest of my government.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Serenity's Former Guardians

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Children's Services minister said that we had things wrong about Serenity. She said that she would explain everything in a press conference. And then nothing: no details, no explanation, and no answers. What we do know is that there are still children living with adults who allowed Serenity to be abused and starved. She was four years old and only weighed 19 pounds. Will the Premier tell Albertans right now which law allows you to abuse and starve one child but still allows you to keep the other children?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the members opposite should know, our government is committed to ensuring that vulnerable children in our province are kept safe. We are focused on doing that work. Is it perfect? No. Do we all have more work to do to make it better? Absolutely. Are we committed to doing that work in as transparent a process as possible? Absolutely. Is this process being led by an excellent minister who is absolutely focused on this issue, too? Yes. The answer to that is yes. I'm very proud of her work, and I'm happy to have her answer the additional questions around what she can and cannot . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, the state put Serenity in the home where she was starved and abused. The state gave the adults in that home guardianship status over Serenity. The state stopped visiting her and looking out for her. It abandoned her. Now the state has left other children in that very same house. The adults in that house at minimum allowed a four-year-old to be abused and starved. The whole point of the panel was to make sure that what happened to Serenity never happens again. What laws, Premier, are we actually going to see changed to protect our children?

The Speaker: The hon. Children's Services minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've been very clear with what I'm able to say at the moment. A criminal investigation is ongoing, so I'm unable to provide additional details at this time because to do so would put young people involved at risk. It would be so much easier for me to have these conversations if I disclosed very personal, intimate details about those youth. I won't apologize for protecting those kids because that's my job: to protect and keep kids safe. That's what I'm doing and I will continue to do, and we will continue to monitor and ensure the safety of those children.

Mr. Jean: Serenity was four years old and weighed only 19 pounds when she died, Mr. Speaker. Her siblings were also drastically underweight. They were beaten for stealing food. This type of abuse did not happen overnight. It took time for Serenity to get to that place. The minister says that the remaining children in that home are safe and that you can't remove a child until you can prove abuse of that specific child. But we cannot let history repeat itself in Alberta in this case. If there's no law in place to protect these children today, when will this NDP government bring forward a law to keep these children safe?

The Speaker: The hon. Children's Services minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again, I would say that the safety of children in this province is my absolute priority and that if any young person in this province was being abused, then we would apprehend them immediately. Clearly, there are challenges in the child intervention system. That's why we have a Minister of Children's Services. That's why we have the ministerial panel. This government has stood on the record strongly in support of our vulnerable children for a very long time, and we will take action to improve the system going forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky-Mountain House-Sundre.

Serenity and the Child Intervention System

Mr. Nixon: When we asked this government what action is being taken for Serenity, the minister brings up the panel. The panel might be doing good work, but it is not doing anything for Serenity; let's be clear. In fact, this government and this minister refuse to allow us to even speak about Serenity. The Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act has provisions to allow the minister to disclose to any person personal information that comes to the minister's attention. Minister, are you willing to explore a way to legally disclose the details of Serenity's case with the panel members in private so that we can work together on preventing another Serenity – yes or no? – or will your government and you . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again, I would say that, yes, there are issues with the child intervention system, and, yes, all of us continue to be devastated by the story of Serenity, and absolutely we need to make changes to do so. There is a process by which the panel members can work with the chair to get access to the information they need to make the decisions to improve the system. So I would continue to encourage the members of the panel to work through all of us to ensure they have access to the information.

Mr. Nixon: Point of order.

Albertans are rightly confused by what the minister is telling us about the children in Serenity's former home. Yesterday she said that there needs to be evidence of actual abuse to an individual before apprehension, but the minister and I both know, Mr. Speaker, that there are many examples of where that is not the case. The minister accuses us of being inaccurate when in actual fact she is being inaccurate. Minister, Albertans are outraged and have had enough of this government's incompetence when it comes to children in care. When will this minister and this government stop hiding behind ridiculous excuses, stop the secrecy, do something, and do your job?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have to say that as a mom and as a nurse for almost 18 years taking care of Alberta's vulnerable children goes to the very heart of who I am, and I'm very proud to be in this chair and responsible for that. While I understand that it's frustrating to not have all the details, I can absolutely assure Albertans and all members of this House that the safety of those children is the priority of this government and that we will continue to do everything in our power to ensure their safety and the safety of all children in this province.

Mr. Nixon: Children absolutely need to be put first. A previous round-table with a cross-section of stakeholders resulted in the development of the Children First Act in 2013. Surprisingly, much of that legislation has not actually been put into force. We asked the minister about this, and she replied that it would not be timely to move forward. This law is from four years ago, Mr. Speaker. Clearly, the problem is not passing laws; the problem is getting this government to act on laws. Minister, even if new legislation is passed as a result of your panel, what guarantee can you give Albertans that your government will actually implement the laws?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, I can say that, absolutely, this government is committed to putting vulnerable children first, and we will continue to do so in this situation and in terms of developing legislation going forward. I'm incredibly excited to see the results coming out of the ministerial panel as we go forward through phase 2. I'll be bringing forward legislation on phase 1 very shortly this spring, and I can't wait to take action on the recommendations going forward because the children of this province have deserved change for a long time, and we will make that change happen.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Highway Speed Limits and Potoradar Use

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, earlier this week Edmonton's chief of police stated that in his opinion there is no reason why the Anthony Henday ring road does not have a maximum speed limit of 110 kilometres during the summer driving season. The tens of thousands of drivers who have received a stealth potoradar ticket on the Anthony Henday for going less than 10 kilometres over the limit were very happy to hear this news. Will the Premier commit to reviewing the speed limits on provincial highways, including the Henday, and ensure that they are properly and objectively set?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, I admire the hon. member for her commitment to some of the changes that she's talking about: photoradar, for example, and speed on the Henday. Unfortunately, she's a day late and a dollar short because I asked the department to look at speed limits on the Henday a couple of months ago. It's being reviewed. Safety is our top priority. I've also had the opportunity some time ago to discuss it with the chief of police and solicit his opinion. I appreciate her enthusiasm, but we're on it.

2:00

Mrs. Pitt: I love when the opposition makes changes with this government, Mr. Speaker.

Many Albertans are understandably frustrated that photoradar in our province feels like a cash grab. Only four Canadian provinces have photoradar programs in place, and Alberta is the Wild West, with uninhibited use that allows for mobile speed cameras outside of construction and school zones. Does the Premier believe that our current photoradar system is serving Albertans, or is it just a cash cow?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, pretty much the same situation as the last question. We've been working on this for a number of months. I've been meeting with my colleague the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General on this matter. We're reviewing the policy around photoradar, how it's utilized. We're going to be talking to municipalities about how they implement the guidelines that have been in place for some time. We're reviewing the guidelines. We are going to conduct a review of photoradar to make sure that people are safe on our highways and that law enforcement is not used for revenue generation.

Mrs. Pitt: Always a good day when Wildrose member-passed policy is being followed by the government, Mr. Speaker.

We all care about safety on this side of this Assembly. We believe that photoradar can be used to prevent collisions and protect pedestrians, but we also think that a review would be common sense to ensure that photoradar is being used fairly. Will the Premier commit to producing a report on photoradar, due back no later than September 15 of this year, so that Albertans can be informed on photoradar before heading to the municipal elections this fall?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We are conducting a review of photoradar. This is something that's been on our radar for a number of months. We are scoping out the terms of reference of the review, and we are not going to be rushed by artificial deadlines. This opposition may want to use it as a club in the municipal elections, but we're more interested in safety and getting the policy right. [interjections]

The Speaker: I'd respectfully request again: keep the volume down.

The leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Deputy Premier and the Minister of Children's Services accused both the media and the opposition of spreading misinformation about children that are still living in the home where Serenity suffered unspeakable abuse. Apparently, there was so much, quote, information that the minister needed to call a press conference, wherein she informed the media that their facts were wrong, but then she refused to provide the correct facts. To the Minister of Children's Services: since you failed to point out yesterday where the media and opposition were wrong, perhaps you'd like to clear that up now.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, there's a lot of emotion around this story. My heart continues to go out to the family of Serenity for the tragic loss that they endured. However, there is information that is quite dated that has been circulated and is being utilized in this House and throughout the media. Again, in the interest of protecting the youth who might be involved in this situation, I was unable to share particular details. I thought the media and the opposition would be interested in knowing that they should not be spreading . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: It just keeps getting worse, Mr. Speaker.

If the minister is going to accuse me, my colleagues, and the men and women of the press gallery of lying to Albertans about something as serious as vulnerable children in need of intervention, then she ought to be prepared to set the record straight. Minister, we're all ears. Strike one was yesterday. Strike two was on the first question. Before you have strike three, what were we incorrect about? Please correct the record.

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Because I respect my colleagues in this House, I certainly would never have used the word "lying" at all. In fact, what I said is that they should be careful in terms of the sources of information and be cautious about sharing information that they've not confirmed. Again, you know, it's important to protect the young people involved in a very complex situation, and sharing their personal details, in fact, could have quite unintended consequences for their lives. I will not apologize for protecting young people in this province. That's my job, given to me by the Premier, and I will continue to do so.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, the minister is putting children in danger because she will not use the authority she has to get them out of danger, and that is unacceptable. Now, the only thing the minister did say yesterday was that the number of kids was not six. She didn't say if it was two; she didn't say if it was 12; just not six. Apparently, that was her reason for calling a media conference. To the minister: your credibility is now at stake. Can you please point to the specific Alberta privacy laws that you are hiding behind in order to not talk? What are you hiding? What are you not telling the public? What you're telling sure isn't the story that Albertans deserve to hear, and it's not the truth.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have been very clear about what information I'm able to share at this point in time. Once again, the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act: the entire intention and purpose behind that act is to protect Alberta's vulnerable children. I take the protection of those children very seriously. As much as it would be easy for me to be able to answer the questions in terms of that, you know who would pay for that? Not the members of this Legislature but those vulnerable youth, whom the sharing of that very protected information would put at risk. I will continue to protect the children because that is my job, and I take it very seriously.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Serenity and the Child Intervention System (continued)

Mr. Clark: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. When it comes to children in care, there is a complex web of legislation, different accountabilities and funding from various levels of government, overlaid with privacy concerns. Now, all of this, I hope, is focused on the well-being of Alberta's children. Unfortunately, as questions about Serenity's former kinship care family have been debated this week, the minister hasn't helped the situation by her lack of disclosure. To the Minister of Children's Services. Now, I'm not asking you to break any privacy laws, but your responses have left too many unanswered questions. There's an unfortunate perception that you're using privacy as an excuse for inaction. What are you going to do to change that perception?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understand that this is a very complex situation and that there is some frustration at the lack of being able to access that information. Again, while I understand the frustration on behalf of members and other Albertans, I have to be incredibly careful and respectful of the young people who are involved in any complex and delicate and sensitive situation. My primary directive is to protect those youth, so while I understand the frustration of the member, absolutely I can say that I am ensuring the safety of those children.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, the first phase of the Ministerial Panel on Child Intervention resulted in seven recommendations, including to improve information sharing, which I believe would go a long way towards helping the minister provide timely information to Albertans and restoring public confidence in the system. The panel also recommended changes to streamline and speed up the child death review process and enhance supports for families. The panel chair confirmed on April 19 that there would be legislation brought forward this spring to implement the phase 1 recommendations. Again to the minister: will we see this legislation this spring? If so, will it enact all seven of the panel's recommendations?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Absolutely, the panel did fantastic work. I'm very thankful for the recommendations that came forward in terms of improving the child death review process. Absolutely, I took those recommendations very seriously. I'm working very hard with my legislative team to look at legislation as well as potential changes to policies and procedures and regulations to enact those changes or the intent of those changes as we go forward because, clearly, there was change required. Again, there was excellent work done, and I look forward to making those changes in the very near future.

The Speaker: The second supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The panel was created to prevent tragedies like what happened to Serenity from ever happening again. The only way to restore Albertans' trust in the system is for this panel to be given the tools we need to do a comprehensive review. That means we need access to the information about what happened to Serenity. I think I speak for all panel members when I say that we would be willing to sign whatever agreements are necessary for us to see the specific files and to review those files in strictly closed sessions. Again to the minister: will you grant us access to the information we need to do our jobs so we can prevent tragedies like this from ever happening again?

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, I think it's very important that the panel have all the tools that they require in order to be able to make the recommendations to improve the child intervention system. So I will continue to support working with the panel to ensure they have access to the information that they require in order to do that.

Mr. Nixon: Point of order.

Ms Larivee: Mr. Speaker, clearly, we need to know how to improve the system, and clearly they need access to all the information that they require. Absolutely, I will continue to work with them to give them access to all the information I can to support their ability to do so.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Air Ambulance Service in Northern Alberta

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituents in Peace River have approached me with concerns about the process used by Alberta Health Services to provide air ambulance services. Given that the fixed-wing air ambulance is a vital component of health care in the north and given that my constituents rely on this service to access the health care they need, particularly in emergencies, to the Minister of Health: can you clarify the status of the procurement process?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I also want to thank the member for the question and acknowledge that several other members have approached my office with similar questions. The current contract will expire this summer. A competitive RFP process opened last July and closed this March. Two proponents were successful. AHS is in contract negotiations with them, but no contracts have been signed at this point.

The Speaker: The first supplemental.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that my constituents remember that when the previous government brought these contracts out to a bidding process, the intention was to relocate air ambulance bases out of several communities, including Peace River, and given that this would have a very serious impact on health care in these communities, can the Minister of Health assure this House that the air ambulance will continue to be based in Peace River?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member again for the question. She's right that that would have a detrimental effect. So, yes. What's more, I can assure all members that this procurement process will not lead to any base location changes. I want to be very clear on this point for my colleagues. This procurement process will not lead to any consolidation or relocation of air ambulance bases, period.

The Speaker: The second supplemental.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that municipal leaders in the Peace River region have also raised concerns about the economic viability of the Peace River Airport if its scheduled passenger service provider is unable to continue that service, to the same minister: was this issue a factor in the Alberta Health Services procurement process?

Ms Hoffman: No, Mr. Speaker, it was not. This process is about getting the best air ambulance service for our health care dollars. I've met with municipal leaders in the area as well as the member. I've heard from the members for Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley, Lethbridge-East, Lethbridge-West, and yourself, Mr. Speaker, as a local MLA for Medicine Hat. I encouraged them to continue working with their local aviation companies. Certainly, we will recognize that Peace River Airport is an important economic portal for the region.

Oil Prices and the Provincial Fiscal Deficit

Mr. Barnes: Good news today for the market. Oil is up for a second day. Bad news today for Albertans. The rebounded price is nearly $10 below the NDP's budget projection, contrived to make things look a little less terrible. The NDP has no plan outside of gross hypocrisy. The economic development minister used to criticize the former government, saying that they "intentionally misled Albertans by using . . . overly optimistic projections." Minister, when can Albertans expect more details on your budget adjustment and a deficit update?

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much for the question. Mr. Speaker, we're about six, maybe five and a half weeks into the fiscal year, so that's not a great deal of time in terms of the whole 52 weeks to base this average on, the average for oil. We're not going to change it, necessarily, right now. It's about $50. Albertans know that it's a fool's game to go up and down with the price of oil, so we've risk-adjusted our forecast, and that's to the benefit of Albertans.

Mr. Barnes: By now the NDP really should have figured out that the price of oil isn't responsive to the whimsical hopes of a misguided, ideological, socialist government. Given that every $3 swing in the price of oil has a billion-dollar implication for the treasury and given that The Rapidan Group is predicting that by the middle of next year crude could revisit the low $30 mark, to the Premier: when can Albertans expect you to stop buying off voters by indenturing our children with an ever-mounting, unsustainable debt level?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. You know, Albertans deserve a government that makes life better for them and their families regardless of the price of oil. Mr. Speaker, we're going to assure Albertans that the size of the classrooms for their children and the care their parents receive in hospitals are not dependent on the price of oil. That's why we've risk-adjusted it. We will get through this. I just wish they would support Alberta and Albertans instead of calling our oil price and everything down.

Mr. Barnes: Obviously, poor budgeting is just one more thing that Albertans can add to the long list of reasons capital investment is skittish or fleeing.

Given that Alberta was referred to as the most – the most – geopolitically unstable jurisdiction in the world due to high royalties, high taxes, and high uncertainty and given that the rapidly increasing deficit and debt only serve to unnerve investors, who fear a pending drastic tax increase, and that we're two years into this, Premier, can Albertans expect you to get your spending in order without bankrupting the next . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Speaker's Ruling Preambles

The Speaker: Hon. members, I had a great meeting yesterday with the House leaders. One of the topics that came up, which was really a very engaging discussion, was with respect to the use of preambles in the House. I also had discussions with other members. I urge all of you again to go back to the standing orders and be conscious of the way you may or may not be applying the intent of that standing order.

The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we average our oil price from five private-sector companies. That is the same way we've been doing it in this province for years. We have the same oil forecast as Saskatchewan does. If you take a look at their oil forecast, it's the same as ours. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. member.

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, full-time employment in this province rose for the third straight month. Rigs, drilling are up in this province. There are good things happening across this province as opposed to what's being said over there.

Serenity's Former Guardians

Mr. Fraser: As a paramedic I've attended motor vehicle accidents where one person in the vehicle has died and the other passengers seemed fine. Common sense would dictate that if one person is dead in the vehicle, the mechanism of injury is lethal and others may be hurt. In fact, it's a duty of care to do everything in my power to get those patients to a safe place, to ensure that they're not harmed beyond what I can see. Minister, as a nurse you understand duty of care and mechanism of injury, yet there are still children in the home where Serenity was raped and starved. Doesn't common sense tell you that the other vulnerable children in that home should be removed based on what happened to Serenity?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I absolutely understand the member's frustration. It is a very complex situation. What I can say is that we have been and we continue to monitor the situation, and if there were ever concerns about the safety of any young person, we would apprehend them immediately. The courts don't let us go in and apprehend children without evidence of abuse to that specific child. That is the law. I take the safety of those children very seriously and will absolutely say that we continue to monitor the situation to ensure the safety . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, the children at potential risk in this home deserve more than empty promises and key messages from the minister. Minister, given that as a nurse, if you came across a child that was being abused, you would have a duty of care to report it – having worked with nurses, there is no way a nurse would abandon children who lived in the same home where a child was raped. Given the fact that children are regularly removed from these circumstances until a full investigation has been conducted – Minister, you have the authority, the duty of care to get these children to safety today. Why are you choosing to leave them in potential harm?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to say, absolutely, without doubt, that the safety of those children and all children in this province is my primary focus and that I'm doing everything in my power to ensure their safety. Again, I understand the frustration with the lack of information in a complex situation. However, I will say that the safety of the children is being monitored. If there were concerns about the safety of any young person, we would apprehend them immediately. Again, everything in our power is being done to ensure the safety . . .

2:20

The Speaker: Hon. member, I urge you with respect to the preamble as well. Please proceed with your second supplemental.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, given that this government claims to be champions for sexual assault survivors yet they're sitting on their hands while children may be in harm's way as we speak, Minister, respectfully, what are you thinking? Given that these children may have witnessed the sexual abuse, starvation, and murder of Serenity, do you honestly think that they even dare speak out about what's happening to them as they might receive the same fate as Serenity? They will never speak until they know that they will be safe. Minister, will you do your job, begin to advocate for these kids, and put them in a safe place?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would say to my fellow health care provider in the Legislature that oftentimes there are many details about situations that we cannot disclose which provide understanding of a complex situation. I would say that I understand the member's frustration. However, I absolutely would assure all members of this House and all Albertans that we are doing everything in our power to keep those children safe because keeping vulnerable children safe is our key priority, and we will continue to ensure that we are doing everything to make that happen.

Supervised Drug Consumption Sites in Edmonton

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, this last weekend there was a large rally downtown protesting three proposed supervised injection sites in their neighbourhood, the Boyle Street-Chinatown area. The city of Edmonton claims they held consultations. However, the Chinese community says that they were never properly consulted, and they point out that the whole process had been rushed. To the Minister of Health: did your ministry ask the city of Edmonton to have this process expedited?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We are very proud as a government to be supporting the application for supervised consumption services here in the city of Edmonton. We know that there's tremendous evidence that supervised consumption services save lives, and that's why the Calgary Police Service, the Edmonton Police Service, and the mayors of Edmonton and Calgary support these services. The community groups that put forward the applications have engaged in a fulsome process of consultation with the communities where they will be located, and we've supported them along the way.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, consultations are critical. This is something that the Wildrose opposition has been trying to teach this NDP government for the last two years now. The Edmonton Chinese community has raised concerns regarding the lack of consultation by the municipal government, and the Senate has proposed . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, could you get to the question? It seems to me that as I hear you speaking . . . [interjections] The preamble. The preamble.

Mr. Yao: The city of Edmonton says that they were directed by the Ministry of Health to expedite the process. To the Minister of Health: did you ask to have this process expedited? Why?

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. The process has undergone a five-year process to get to the point of the application of the supervised consumption services for the exemption under the federal law. I don't know that I would call five years an expedited process. Additionally, I would quote Reverend James Holland of the Sacred Heart Church of the First Peoples, located in the neighbourhood where some of those services will be located. He's in support of the supervised consumption services because within the month he's buried five community members. Quote: we've got to recognize that people are human beings no matter what situation they are in in life; if we bring them to a safe place, we have a chance . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister. [interjections]

Hon. members. Hon. members. Hon. members.

I do hope, hon. member, that you have a second supplemental. I do ask again that you be conscious of the rule that this House has agreed to with respect to preambles, discussed as lately as yesterday, so I would urge you to do that. Please proceed.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, 2016 saw a 33 per cent increase in overdose deaths compared to 2015.

Mr. Mason: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Yao: The 343 people that died in Alberta due to overdoses last year alone: that's one a day. In the first six weeks of 2017 there were 51 opioid overdoses.

Speaker's Ruling Preambles

The Speaker: I'm sorry, hon. member, I must say. I'm not sure. We might need to have some more discussion on the matter, but as I hear it, you continue to use the preamble. That may not be your intent, but that's what I think I'm hearing. I therefore would say that your question is out of order because of the standing order.

Labour Relations Code Review

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, Alberta has been a peaceful and prosperous province for decades. Our economy needs stability so we can get Albertans back to work. This government engaged in a very short consultation with Albertans on its workplace laws. It hosted a survey online with questions on employment standards but left out questions on labour relations. Albertans are worried that the fix is in. Minister of Labour, can we expect to see a report from Andrew Sims on the labour relations portion of this consultation before your government introduces any changes to the Labour Relations Code? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question about our consultation. We had heard from thousands of stakeholders about both our employment standards and our Labour Relations Code through the online surveys – over 1,000 employers responded – as well as through the round-tables and the discussions that have been taking place. With the guidance of Mr. Andrew Sims, a renowned labour lawyer, we are looking forward to reviewing all the feedback we've received and determining what the next steps may be after we've reviewed that.

Thank you.

Mr. van Dijken: Given that the NDP's constitution guarantees the Alberta Federation of Labour two seats on its provincial council and given that the constitution also guarantees seats for other AFL member unions like CUPE, UFCW, and United Steelworkers and given that the minister did not attend all of the by-invitation-only consultation meetings but the AFL president, Gil McGowan, did, Minister, who is making the decisions about card check certification, collective bargaining, and other labour relations issues? Is it you, or is it the AFL and your union bosses?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am proud to be Alberta's Minister of Labour, and I'm very proud to be reviewing workplace legislation that had been neglected under the previous government, not updated since 1988. We currently have workplace legislation that allowed a mother to lose her job when her son needed treatment for cancer. We have legislation that allows employees to be fired if they take time off to be sick. I am very proud to be leading an initiative of this NDP government, who believes in fair and family-friendly workplace legislation.

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, given that the AFL opposes secret ballots in favour of a card check system and given that secret ballots were implemented to allow people to express their true conscience without fear of reprisal from either an intimidating union or a threatening employer and given that a vote to decide who will represent you is a basic principle of democracy, to the minister of democratic renewal: could you ever foresee yourself claiming that it's in the best interest of democracy to get rid of a secret ballot vote?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Through our consultation we heard from thousands of Albertans, thousands of businesses, all of which had a variety of opinions on employment standards and labour relations. I am reviewing the submissions that Albertans have put forward. I look forward to making sure that Alberta has fair, family-friendly, and balanced workplace legislation to support a strong economy and to make sure that workers can contribute to that economy and take care of their family responsibilities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I pointed out the difficulty in finding a phone number for your ministry. I then asked about implementing Serenity's law, and the reaction over there continues to be groaning, eye-rolling, and shaking of heads. My proposal to change legislation is not self-serving. It will save lives if the police are notified when a child is at risk. Again to the minister: since your government is dragging its heels on legislation anyway, will you please bring Serenity's law forward now?

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, the story of Serenity devastated all of us in this Legislature and moved us all to recognize the importance of making real, meaningful change to our child intervention system. That's why we have the ministerial panel to take a serious look at the system and identify improvements. Phase 2 of the panel's work will focus on the system as a whole and explore ways to achieve the best possible outcomes, and I encourage members who have ideas and suggestions to continue to work with their caucus representative on the panel to ensure that together we make the best changes possible.

Mr. Ellis: Given that the minister has been admonishing the media and opposition members for disseminating inaccurate information and given that whistle-blowers are so desperate to get help for children that they are leaking information to the media, which the minister then criticizes, and given that Serenity's law addresses the need for public awareness and your concerns about whistle-blowing and misinformation, Minister, why, for the love of children, would you not do this right now?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again, this government has taken a strong stand on improving the child intervention system for a tremendously long time. That's why, once again, in this province we have a Children's Services minister, a move that I'm incredibly proud of, so it finally has the focus that it deserves. Through the panel and through the work of the Children's Services ministry we will make changes and we will take action, action that should have been taken a long time ago on behalf of Alberta's vulnerable children.

Mr. Ellis: Not soon enough, Minister.

Given that multiple systems failed Serenity before and after her death and they continue to fail now and given that those failures include the child intervention system that left Serenity to languish and die, a botched autopsy that may have compromised the criminal investigation into determining her killer, and the failure of the minister's office to prioritize this disturbing case, Minister, since the ministerial panel is barred from reviewing Serenity's death, will your government call a public inquiry so that Albertans can get answers, and if not, why not?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I previously stated, there have been changes that have needed to happen for a long time, and I look forward to taking action as soon as possible to make those changes happen. Absolutely, I'm thankful for the partnership of Albertans who have concerns for children. If anyone knows of any child who is at risk of abuse or neglect, please call immediately to report that so we can follow it up and work together to keep Alberta's vulnerable children safe.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Government Information Technology Systems

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The May 2017 report of the Auditor General highlights that Service Alberta maintains duplicate computer systems across many different ministries. This is wasteful. Given that Albertans expect governments to spend their money wisely, to the Minister of Service Alberta: what action is your ministry taking to address this problematic duplication?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Speaker and to the member for the important question. First and foremost, I take the stewardship of taxpayer dollars very seriously. Since taking government, we have already taken steps to find efficiencies and have realized significant cost savings by consolidating e-mail systems and helpdesks, and we are now doing the same with data centres. One example of the real action we've taken is implementing our information management and technology strategy to ensure that our systems meet the needs of government in the most efficient way possible.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy that the minister is taking actions to address this wasteful spending, but to the same minister: can you explain to Albertans why such an obviously wasteful system was even set up in the first place?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Speaker. A very insightful question as it was, in fact, the Klein government who created these impractical systems of duplicate programs and disjointed data, which are very expensive and time consuming to maintain, at the expense of taxpayers. The recent report indicated that this has been a long-standing issue and has recommended improvements in his last three audits, dating back to almost 10 years ago, since 2008. Now we're left to clean up the PCs' mess, though I'm happy to say that since taking office, we've taken the necessary steps to begin fixing their costly and inefficient mistakes. We've embarked on a multiyear program to replace those applications, renew legacy technology, and deliver . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Auditor General's report also makes two other recommendations in relation to our IT systems and given that Albertans expect our IT systems to be run efficiently, to the same minister: what actions is your ministry taking to address the Auditor General's concerns?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Speaker. The government of Alberta's IMT strategy sets the vision, direction, and foundation for us to do just that. As I mentioned earlier, the actions we are taking to consolidate and standardize government systems demonstrate the action and commitment that I have to addressing the Auditor General's concerns as well as optimizing our government's efficiency while saving tax dollars. Another example of how we are working responsibly and effectively is working with ministry partners to reduce the number of data centres. We have already reduced the number by 54 per cent, and our goal is to further reduce by another 85 per cent by 2020. This is important work, which will further reduce duplication and allow us to . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Services for Students with Special Needs

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are confused about the regional collaborative service delivery funding. In response to a question yesterday from the MLA from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre you spoke about a new regional model and an increase of $8 million for the program, yet the budget shows a decrease, and we continue to hear from boards who say that they will be receiving fewer funds this year. To the minister: what's going on? What is this new regional model? How have you communicated the changes to boards and families who rely on the services, and what is your plan for RCSD funding for the 2018-19 school year?

Mr. Eggen: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, certainly, we know that the regional service transition money has moved into the next phase. Having a regional model by which you can have physiotherapists and psychologists and speech pathologists and so forth working for more than one area I think is more economical, and it's probably better focused. The three-year transition finished this year. Now we have moved and we have put more money, more than an $8 million increase in funding, into the regional service model.

Thank you.

Mrs. Aheer: Well, given that this transition is going to cause disruptions in service that are difficult for everyone and most especially for families who need programs for their children to help them succeed and given that some school boards are telling us that they're losing funds that support these students and given that the government states that they will save money by ending the, quote, three-year transition funding, end quote, to the Minister of Education: well, then are you cutting the full $65.2 million at the end of 2017-18, and what exactly does that mean for public, independent, ECS, alternative, and home-schooling families who need these services?

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you for the question. It's important to have clarity. The transition funding that was given to a number of school boards – three years – was about three and some million dollars, but, no, the 60 some million dollars is not being cut at all. In fact, it is being strengthened over time, and I'm working with some of the school boards that might have lost some of their funding this time because of the transition to make sure that we have those services in place for them in coming years because it's important to make sure that we have special-needs services for all students regardless of where they live here in the province of Alberta.

Mrs. Aheer: I'm interested to find out what strengthening funding means.

Since Albertans and schools and authorities are very confused about your plans with this critical program and given that the website still says that in 2016 regions began to plan to engage with First Nations across Alberta as part of the MOU and that this should be functioning by next month, in June of 2017, Mr. Speaker, when the minister ends the RCSD funding, is he planning on transitioning out of funding for First Nations communities as well?

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, no. In fact, the regional service model that we've moved to – that's what we transitioned into – is there. It's strengthened. In fact, it's up by $8 million. Overall we're spending more than $451 million this year on inclusive education in general. So we are working hard to fund education. That's the way we have operated since we started in government, and you can't do any of these things if you decide to make billions of dollars worth of cuts, as the opposition would do. You know, talking out of both sides of your mouth does not improve education.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Grizzly Bear Management

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A study on the status of the grizzly bear was last done in 2010. The status report on Alberta's grizzly bear population and habitat was the source for government policy in this area. A grizzly bear recovery plan was designed for 2008 to 2013 implementation. Since the report seven years ago much has changed about the grizzly situation in Alberta. To the minister of environment: what is the status of the grizzly in Alberta?

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member is quite right, that at the last time of inventory in bear management area 2, which is the hon. member's riding, there were 388 grizzly bears. What we have found is that human-caused grizzly bear mortality rates in Alberta are low and within the ranges to allow for population growth. I can elaborate a little bit more in the supplementals.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the grizzly population in Alberta has recovered significantly since hunting of them was outlawed and given that an overgrown grizzly population can threaten human lives if left unchecked, to the same minister: what are you doing to control the grizzly situation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is a full inventory of bear management area 2 scheduled for the coming months. Most livestock-related issues happen in the white zone, but according to the figures there have been no increases over time in the 2009 to '13 analysis period. It is true that the province has invested in BearSmart programs, all of the information for which is available on the Environment and Parks website. There are a number of different programs in terms of grain bins and other investments that landowners can make and a number of other pieces of information there for landowners.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the predator kills of livestock due to grizzlies have increased and given that we're seeing increased interactions with humans and grizzlies, to the minister: what can you do to help farmers and ranchers with predation, and are you concerned about the increased interaction with humans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, we are concerned about increased interactions with grizzlies, and that's why we've ensured that the BearSmart funding continues and that Environment and Parks' overall funding remains stable. Additionally, I have asked for more information around the wildlife predator compensation program. This program was enhanced in 2014, but it remains to be seen if there are more partnerships with the Growing Forward 3 program or other enhancements that we can make to that program. Right now it is jointly funded between the federal government's GF2 and proceeds from hunting licences, and I'm committed as minister to reviewing it.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Hon. members, in 30 seconds we will move to Members' Statements.

Mother's Day

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Sunday Albertans will celebrate Mother's Day. Mother's Day gives us all the opportunity to appreciate what our mothers or mother figures mean to us and for those lucky enough to be a mother, what being a mother brings to their lives. A quote from the late Princess Diana speaks volumes on what a mother means to many. She said, "A mother's arms are more comforting than anyone else's."

I know that, growing up, my mother would always make me feel better no matter what was happening. She was always there for me and would work to provide everything she could to ensure that I was as happy as could be. And while I know that some may want to debate me on this, she made the best apple pie in the world.

One day a year is just not enough to appreciate everything mothers do for us. They watch over us, as only a mother can, when we sleep for the first time. They are our first nurse, our first teacher, our first confidante, and so much more. They inspire us to be the best we can be, make us laugh, and try their hardest to make sure we survive.

On Sunday mothers will be visited in the morning with a breakfast that only a five-year-old would count as a breakfast. Mothers will be called for just a few minutes by their kids, who are across the country at university. Mothers will be visited by their children, who now have children of their own in tow. Sunday will be different for every mother, but one thing I hope is the same for all is that they all know that they are loved every day of the year. This Mother's Day do not forget to tell your mother how much she means to you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Dr. Brian Sproule and the 1950s Polio Epidemic Childhood Immunization

Dr. Turner: Mr. Speaker, I was absent from QP on Monday, May 8, to attend the celebration of life of Dr. Brian Jessup Sproule. Brian was a constituent who I had the pleasure to talk about at his residence in Lifestyle Options, near my constituency office in Riverbend Square, at the end of March.

Although he was 91 years old, Brian was physically sound and mentally active. He loved to swim, hike, golf, and was an avid concertgoer and continuous learner. To me, perhaps the most endearing part of the eulogy at the celebration was that Brian provided a left-wing voice in the frequent political discussions at Lifestyle Options.

Dr. Sproule received many honours, including an Order of Canada in 2002 for his contribution to pulmonary medicine in Canada and his ongoing commitment to world peace. He was a role model and mentor for hundreds of junior colleagues, including me.

Mr. Speaker, Brian Sproule was a hero of Alberta medicine. In the 1950s Alberta was ravaged by a polio epidemic, which resulted in a large number of young people afflicted by paralysis requiring treatment in an iron lung. He moved into the Aberhart hospital, where he provided 24-hour medical care as part of the Aberhart team. It took many years for technology to develop that allowed these young people to live fulfilling lives outside of that iron lung.

I emphasize this historical event because some parents are choosing not to protect their children from polio, diphtheria, tetanus, measles, and rubella, all of which are preventable and can be devastating to our whole community. I was vaccinated against polio in 1954, and I'm extremely grateful to the scientists who developed the vaccine such as Dr. Julius Youngner, who also recently died, as well as to the nurses and physicians at the Aberhart like Dr. Sproule, who selflessly saved hundreds of lives during the polio epidemic. For their memory, Mr. Speaker, we should all encourage fact-based and science-based policies such as universal vaccination.

Thank you very much.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to rise and present the requisite 95 copies of the letter I sent to you this morning, before 11 o'clock, which states in the first line, "In accordance with Standing Order 15(2), I am raising a question of Privilege regarding the conduct of the Honourable Minister of Children's Services during Oral Question Period on May 10, 2017," and it goes on. I look forward to the debate shortly.

Thank you.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Bill 206

Child, Youth and Family Enhancement (Adoption Advertising) Amendment Act, 2017

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am so honoured today to rise and introduce Bill 206, the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement (Adoption Advertising) Amendment Act, 2017.

This is a piece of legislation that was inspired by my colleague from Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. As you know, he has spoken with tremendous passion as a father who has been given the gift of two of his beautiful children through adoption. His story is compelling, and one of the things that he found was that there is a necessity to update the legislation around adoption and accessing information of potential parents.

If this change is passed, it will offer more options for birth parents, who have decided to find forever homes for their children, to find parents that, for a myriad of reasons, will complete their families in this way. The loving and lasting commitment not only comes from the side of those adopting but from those who are looking to find homes to adopt these precious children.

Unlike in other provinces, Albertans who are looking to adopt cannot advertise their profiles online. Bill 206 amends the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act in section 85(2) and would allow the publication of an advertisement by a licensed adoption agency publicizing the profiles of prospective adoptive parents.

Again, I look so forward to hearing from all of the members of this House and hope to have your support in bringing this important legislation forward. Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion carried; Bill 206 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table a report from Robert McNally, founder and president of The Rapidan Group, which is entitled This Oil Rebound Is Just Another Fake-out: Here's Where Prices Are Really Headed. Unfortunately, Mr. McNally goes on to say that they're headed to $30 a barrel. Fortunately, though, on this side of the House we're aware of the wildly optimistic prediction of the price of oil by the minister, and the high per capita spending is a recipe for disaster.

The Speaker: The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to present a letter from Sherry Payne, who is a controller at O'Dell Electric Ltd. This is a copy of a letter sent to the Minister of Labour, wherein she says, "a 5 week window for input is neither fair nor reasonable, given the complexity of the Code."

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Coolahan: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of a CBC piece that I referenced in my member's statement in which Cenovus CEO Brian Ferguson stated that our climate plan has struck "an appropriate balance."

A point of interest, Mr. Speaker. My former boss Scott Thon, CEO of Berkshire Hathaway Energy Canada, is also noted in this article, and he said that the carbon tax hasn't diminished his company's bullishness on Alberta.

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two documents to table today in relation to questions that the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo raised yesterday. The first is a long-term care accommodation standards document, and the second is a continuing care health service standards document. I want to remind all Albertans that if they have any concerns about the care that they or their loved ones are receiving, please ensure that those concerns are raised either with on-site administration from a facility or with protection for persons in care. We take these very seriously.

The Speaker: Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter from the superintendent of the Wild Rose school division clearly outlining the Wild Rose school division's concerns with this government's cuts and the impact on front-line services and front-line jobs, I would add, as well as the consequences to the children that they educate in that jurisdiction as a result of this government's decisions.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following document has been deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Mr. Bilous, Minister of Economic Development and Trade, responses to written questions WQ9 and WQ10.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I believe we have some points of order, the first being, I believe, from the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: I withdrew.

The Speaker: Okay. Thank you.

The second is from the Government House Leader.

Point of Order

Allegations against a Member

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My point of order is in connection with Standing Order 23(h) and (i), that is to say, "makes allegations against another Member" and "imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member."

It was I believe the hon. PC caucus leader who alleged that the Minister of Children's Services had suggested that the opposition and the media had lied with respect to that information. What the minister clearly said was that there was some misinformation that was being disseminated which she wished to correct. You can find it in yesterday's Hansard at page 966. The minister says, "I want to remind members that when people make statements without all the facts, inaccurate information is given to the public."

Mr. Speaker, that's a far cry from suggesting that the opposition or the media had lied to the public. As such, I think it violates the two standing orders that I referenced.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Earlier in question period today the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays asked questions about vulnerable children in need of intervention. He did not accuse the minister of lying. He simply stated, and I will quote for the record:

If the minister is going to accuse me, my colleagues, and the men and women of the press gallery of lying to Albertans about something as serious as vulnerable children in need of intervention, then she [better] be prepared to set the record straight.

Then he simply asked: "Minister, we're all ears . . . [Will you take this opportunity now to] correct the record?"

The record, of course, Mr. Speaker, is from yesterday's Hansard. Also from page 966: "When people make statements without all the facts, inaccurate information is given to the public." It goes on on the same page about: "spreading inaccurate information." And on the next page: "I want to remind the members opposite that making statements with inaccurate information to the public is a challenge when you don't have all the facts." Again on the same page: "Again, I want to say that when people make statements without all the facts." And, finally, on page 973: "I do want to continue to caution the members of this House about making statements without the facts . . . which, in fact, leads to inaccurate information being given to the public."

Now, Mr. Speaker, many would contend that these references equate to lying in the colloquial. But if this is deemed unparliamentary, I will be happy to apologize and retract on behalf of the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, despite the level of accuracy and common understanding of the statement.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

I believe point of order 3 is withdrawn as well.

Point of order 4 is from the Government House Leader. Is that correct?

Mr. Mason: Sorry; were you going to rule on the other one?

The Speaker: The hon. member withdrew his. It's withdrawn. [interjections] What am I missing here, folks? It's withdrawn. [interjections]

Let me go to point of order 4.

Mr. Mason: I withdraw it.

The Speaker: Okay. I believe that now we would go to the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed on a point of privilege that he communicated with my office today.

Privilege

Access to Information

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Acknowledging the seriousness of raising a point of privilege, I rise today pursuant to Standing Order 15 on the grounds that the Minister of Children's Services breached the privilege of the members of this House by withholding information from members and intending to share that information with the media before members of this House. Standing Order 15(1) states: "A breach of the rights of the Assembly or of the parliamentary rights of any Member constitutes a question of privilege."

To cite Erskine May, 23rd edition, page 75:

Parliamentary privilege is the sum of the peculiar rights enjoyed by each House collectively . . . and by Members of each House individually, without which they could not discharge their functions, and which exceed those possessed by other bodies or individuals. Thus privilege, though part of the law of the land, is to a certain extent an exemption from the general law.

Further, from Erskine May, 24th edition, page 251:

Any act or omission which obstructs or impedes either House of Parliament in the performance of its functions, or which obstructs or impedes any Member or officer of such House in the discharge of his duty, or which has a tendency, directly or indirectly, to produce such results, may be treated as a contempt even though there is no precedent of the offence.

3:00

To cite O'Brien and Bosc, page 61:

The House has the authority to assert privilege where its ability has been obstructed in the execution of its functions or where Members have been obstructed in the performance of their duties. Members are not outside or above the law which governs all citizens of Canada.

And from Erskine May, page 251: "Any disorderly, contumacious or disrespectful conduct in the presence of either House or a committee will constitute a contempt, which may be committed by members of the public, parties, witnesses or by Members of either House." Mr. Speaker, the minister's repeated obstructive responses that answers would be forthcoming later, outside the House were clearly disrespectful to this Assembly.

Another clear reference in this regard, Mr. Speaker, comes from O'Brien and Bosc, pages 82 and 83. It reads: "The United Kingdom Joint Committee on Parliamentary Privilege attempted to provide a list of some types of contempt in its 1999 report," which included "assaulting, threatening, obstructing or intimidating a Member or officer of the House in the discharge of their duties."

Mr. Speaker, in this House yesterday we witnessed a very vigorous debate regarding vulnerable children residing in the same house where Serenity once lived. The minister repeatedly delayed answering questions until after question period had ended and chose instead to share the information with the media before giving it to members of this House.

Quoting from Hansard, page 966, the Minister of Children's Services said in response to questions from the Leader of the Official Opposition: "Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will be speaking further to Albertans on this matter later this afternoon, but I want to remind members that when people make statements without all the facts, inaccurate information is given to the public." Again on page 966, responding to the same member: "I will be sharing more information about this matter this afternoon." Despite the repeated urging of members of this House, the minister refused to share that information with the duly elected representatives of Alberta, instead choosing to accuse the opposition of spreading misinformation.

Now, further, in response to the Member for Calgary-West, on page 973 of Hansard the minister stated, "Mr. Speaker, again I will say that I am sharing more information for Albertans later this afternoon." That was the third time during question period yesterday alone that the minister stated her intention to share information with the media before sharing it with the members of this House. Clearly, this is not a slip of the tongue but a deliberate withholding of critical information in contempt of this House.

Now, in this regard Erskine May, page 261, clearly states, "The House will proceed against those who obstruct Members in the discharge of their responsibilities to the House or in their participation in its proceedings." Mr. Speaker, the minister refused on numerous occasions to provide adequate information to members of this House, which would have allowed them to better advocate and represent Albertans, including Serenity and other children in question, clearly a breach of member privilege.

Furthermore, the minister impugned the reputation of members of the opposition yesterday by claiming that information provided by opposition in their questions was inaccurate and that they were spreading misinformation. Mr. Speaker, I think we all know that the purpose of questions in this House is to provide Albertans with the most fulsome information regarding issues of public interest. If the minister was interested in celebrating and combatting – sorry. I'm going to read that again. I want to be very accurate with my words. If the minister was interested in combatting misinformation, she had every opportunity to do so in this House yesterday.

Further, the minister was clearly obstructing the members of this House in the discharge of their duties. Every member of this House has a duty to speak out on issues of importance to Albertans, and for the minister to accuse the members of this House of trying to spread misinformation while deliberately withholding the relevant facts is an affront to the people who elect us to this House and clearly is a breach of privilege.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, we ask that you rule this is a prima facie breach of privilege. Thank you.

The Speaker: I know I do not need to remind all of the members about the importance of points of privilege.

Are there any other members who would like to speak to the matter today, or would they choose it for a later time? The Acting Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think, certainly, that there are references we could make right now on this matter, but I think we will reserve till Monday to make sure that we can address all the many and varied allegations.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, all members of the House had appropriate notice at 11 a.m. I think it's only reasonable that if they would like to respond, we ought to be doing that today, which has been a fairly routine practice around the Chamber for responding when appropriate notice is given.

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, on that point, I don't think that the Official Opposition House Leader is on the mark. It is actually very common for people who have been accused of a breach of the privileges of the House to reserve in order to research it.

The notice that was given says simply, "I will address how the Minister of Children's Services breached the privilege of this assembly. I will provide relevant citations at that time." That is what the hon. member has now done. I think it's entirely reasonable for us to take some time.

If you rule, however, Mr. Speaker, that we need to proceed with our arguments now, we will comply, but they will be incomplete.

Mr. Cooper: If I may, Mr. Speaker?

The Speaker: Yes.

Mr. Cooper: If the Government House Leader has a concern with respect to the notice that was given, I think that's significantly different than his ability to respond. That is different. But if it's not that he doesn't have a challenge with it other than the challenge with his notice – and I know that we've done this in the past. When the Government House Leader has had some concerns that the points of privilege raised may have been different than the points in the notice, you have rightly allowed time to respond. That is different than just not being aware of the points that would be raised.

The Speaker: So do I understand, Opposition House Leader, that if he had used a different argument, you would have agreed to the principle? Is that correct?

Mr. Cooper: Yes. That's correct.

The Speaker: As a matter of background to the issue, hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, did you, in fact, send a copy of your statement that you sent to my office – did you also provide the minister in question with a copy of the letter as well?

Mr. Rodney: I understand that it was sent not only to the minister but to all the other House leaders.

The Speaker: To the House leaders but not to the member herself?

Mr. Rodney: No. I understand that she received a copy through your office.

The Speaker: I'm sorry. I can't hear you. Just through my office?

Mr. Rodney: And it was sent also to her office.

Mr. McIver: To the minister. Say "to the minister," not "to her."

Mr. Rodney: Sorry. To the minister's office.

The Speaker: For the record it was my office that sent the letter to the – it's my understanding that the letter was sent to the House leaders. I'm just trying to determine if, in fact, a copy was sent by you or your caucus to the minister in question. Yes?

Mr. Rodney: We followed protocol. We sent it to your office, and it was in turn sent to all of the House leaders and the minister's office. Sorry. That's my understanding.

The Speaker: Okay. I think the point being made about, as you read it – the letter that came to my office was:

I am raising a question of Privilege regarding the conduct of the Honourable Minister of Children's Services during Oral Question Period on May 10, 2017.

At the appropriate time in the House today I will address how the Minister of Children's Services breached the privilege of [the] assembly. I will provide relevant citations at that time.

Thank you, hon. member. You did that.

There is under 15(3): "If the Speaker is of the opinion that the matter may not be fairly dealt with at that time, the Speaker may defer debate on the matter to a time when he or she determines it may be fairly dealt with." I think in this instance, as per the Opposition House Leader's agreement as well as the Government House Leader's, that those arguments that the Government House Leader and the Opposition House Leader may wish to make in this matter should be deferred to our next sitting day, which is Monday.

Mr. Cooper: Just to be clear, I would like to also provide comment on this then.

The Speaker: Yes. That's the intent.

Orders of the Day

Private Bills Second Reading

Bill Pr. 2

Paula Jean Anderson Adoption Termination Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to move second reading of Bill Pr. 2, Paula Jean Anderson Adoption Termination Act, in accordance with the recommendation of the committee.

The Speaker: Is there anyone who would like to speak to this bill? Seeing and hearing none, any closing comments on the bill?

[Motion carried; Bill Pr. 2 read a second time]

Private Bills Committee of the Whole

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

Bill 13

Securities Amendment Act, 2017

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. With regard to Bill 13, Securities Amendment Act, 2017, our government is working to make life better for Albertans by helping to make sure their investments are safe. Alberta is the second-largest capital market in Canada, and our province's economic growth depends greatly on consumer and investor confidence in that market. Albertans deserve to know that the people to whom they entrust their money are honest, proficient, and represent their financial interests.

To keep pace with industry developments, government is supporting the ongoing reform of the Canadian regulatory system by reviewing and amending the Alberta Securities Act on an annual basis. I think the only time that it was not done was in 2012. Bill 13, the Securities Amendment Act, 2017, will further modernize, harmonize, and streamline Alberta's securities laws and assist Canada in meeting its international commitments to securities regulation. As I've mentioned, the Alberta Securities Act has been amended annually since 2003 with the exception, again, of 2012.

Changes in today's global financial markets make it more difficult to design and sustain quality capital markets on a timely basis. This requires regulation that promotes confidence in our capital markets, is responsive to changes in economic and business environments, and reflects the reality of today's global, competitive capital markets. Alberta's challenge is to deliver the right regulation to support investor confidence and encourage investment, innovation, and economic growth in Alberta and across Canada, and our government is trying to do this in an environment that is more complex, more sophisticated, more international in scope and driven by technology than ever before. It is important to ensure that Alberta's securities framework reflects the realities of today's 21st-century markets and keeps in step with evolving international standards and global regulatory reform initiatives.

In 2004 Alberta made a commitment to an ongoing reform of the Canadian regulatory system under the 2004 provincial-territorial memorandum of understanding regarding securities regulation. Since that time provincial and territorial governments as well as securities regulators have worked to harmonize, modernize, and reform the Canadian securities regulatory system. Ensuring that we're able to do so has required the continuous review and updating of securities laws across Canada. Alberta continues to focus on making practical, functional, and timely improvements to its securities laws.

The amendments proposed in this bill will support the ongoing reform of the Canadian regulatory system while helping to meet the needs of Alberta and Albertans. Our government is absolutely committed to maintaining a well-regulated and efficient capital market in this province so that investors are protected and innovation is encouraged, and we are doing just that with these amendments.

If passed, these amendments will extend the industry regulatory organization the same enforcement powers as the Alberta Securities Commission when conducting investigations and hearings. Madam Chair, we're enhancing investor protection by providing stronger enforcement powers for regulatory organizations. These changes are also planned by other jurisdictions across Canada. These amendments will help ensure that Alberta has a fair and effective capital market by extending powers to recognized regulatory organizations to compel testimony and the production of evidence during an investigation.

Regulatory organizations like the Investment Industry Regulatory Organization of Canada and the Mutual Fund Dealers Association are entrusted with the oversight of large segments of the national investment industry, including Alberta. The Securities Amendment Act, 2017, will provide these organizations with the same powers available to the Alberta Securities Commission during investigations and hearings so that they can better protect investors in our province. These regulatory organizations are key partners in protecting investors and making sure that we have a fair and efficient capital market. When these regulatory organizations suspect wrongdoing, Madam Chair, they will be able to go after the wrongdoers so that people have the confidence to invest in Alberta's vibrant capital markets.

Madam Chair, we are making sure these organizations have the right tools necessary to do their jobs, which includes making changes to the Securities Act to extend immunity to the directors, officers, employees, and agents of these important regulatory organizations from civil liability when conducting enforcement activities in good faith. This gives the people responsible for enforcing Alberta's securities laws immunity from civil liability so that they can do their jobs without fear of malicious lawsuits. The people responsible for enforcing securities rules must be able to do their jobs without fear of being held personally liable. Protecting them from liability for carrying out their duties in good faith makes it possible to enforce the rules more effectively.

We did not arbitrarily decide that these amendments were needed. Madam Chair, these changes came from broad public consultations with industry participants and investors. These changes are also under consideration by other jurisdictions across Canada. Quebec is committed to extending the same enforcement powers, and several other jurisdictions intend to adopt these enhanced enforcement powers and immunity provisions within the next year. These other provinces and territories include British Columbia, Ontario, Saskatchewan, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, and the Yukon.

Madam Chair, these changes reflect our continued commitment to the reform of the securities regulatory framework across Canada. Today's legislative amendments are just the latest example of that commitment. If these amendments are not promptly passed, Alberta could jeopardize its leadership role in securities regulatory reform. Without continued modernization and harmonization of the Alberta Securities Act, it will be difficult to ensure a continued vibrant capital market in Alberta through enhanced market transparency and investor protection along with the detection and mitigation of possible risks and market abuse.

Now, Madam Chair, I'd like to take some time to provide some background on securities regulation and some of the industry players. Please allow me to begin by explaining what securities regulation is as well as its importance. Securities regulation is simply the regulation of the conduct of the securities market participants. These participants include issuers that raise capital through securities offerings as well as their directors and officers and promoters, securities dealers and advisers and their representatives, who are registered to advise and trade in securities.

Canada does not have federal securities regulation. The day-to-day regulation of securities falls within provincial jurisdiction under the Canadian Constitution. This has been confirmed repeatedly by Canada's courts and was reaffirmed again just yesterday by the Quebec Court of Appeal. The Alberta Securities Commission is most familiar with the unique aspects of our province's capital market and is best positioned as a regulator, and I'm pleased the courts continue to recognize this.

As I mentioned earlier, provinces and territories work together through Canadian Securities Administrators to co-ordinate securities regulation throughout the country. Securities regulation in Alberta is the responsibility of the Alberta Securities Commission. The commission is responsible for administering the Alberta Securities Act and its regulations and rules. The commission is an industry-funded provincial corporation responsible for ensuring a fair and efficient capital market exists in Alberta and the protection of Alberta investors.

The Alberta Securities Commission develops and enforces securities regulation and rules. Madam Chair, the Alberta Securities Commission offers information and resources to Albertans about investing and administers the province's Securities Act and regulations. Organizations such as the Investment Industry Regulatory Organization of Canada, commonly known as IIROC, and the Mutual Fund Dealers Association of Canada have authority delegated by the Alberta Securities Commission to make sure their member firms and their representatives comply with the standards set out in the province's securities laws.

Regulatory organizations are an important part of the enforcement mosaic in Canada. Certain securities violations proceed to prosecution either through an administrative tribunal or Provincial Court, depending on the type of violation and the jurisdiction where it occurred.

The Investment Industry Regulatory Organization of Canada, or IIROC, is a national, self-regulatory organization which oversees all investment dealers and trading activity in debt and equity marketplaces in Canada. IIROC was created in 2008 through the consolidation of the Investment Dealers Association of Canada and Market Regulation Services Inc. and sets high regulatory and investment industry standards, protects investors, and strengthens market integrity while maintaining efficient and competitive capital markets.

Madam Chair, the Mutual Fund Dealers Association is a national regulatory organization for the distribution side of the Canadian mutual fund industry. The association regulates the operations, standards, practices, and business conduct of its members and their representatives.

Finally, Madam Chair, I'd like to point out why it is necessary that these regulatory organizations have these new powers. Provincial regulators like the Alberta Securities Commission have delegated certain aspects of their duties and functions to regulatory organizations in order to provide more effective and efficient regulation of the market and market participants.

In summary, Madam Chair, the Alberta government is working to make life better for Albertans with practical changes that help make sure investments are safe. The proposed amendments were developed to support Alberta's commitment to ongoing reform by protecting investors and promoting a fair and efficient Alberta capital market. The changes will compel persons or companies that are under investigation to provide the necessary assistance to the Alberta Securities Commission as well as ensure that market participants under review are in compliance with Alberta securities laws. These amendments will also ensure that Alberta has a fair and effective capital market by extending powers to recognized regulatory organizations so that they can compel testimony and the production of evidence during an investigation or disciplinary hearing.

The people responsible for enforcing securities laws must be able to do their jobs without fear of being held personally liable. Protecting them from liability for carrying out their duties in good faith makes it possible to enforce the rules more effectively. In addition, these changes will extend immunity to their directors, officers, employees, and agents from civil liability and will also clarify the conditions under which that immunity is provided to such organizations.

Finally, amendments to Lieutenant Governor in Council regulations will ensure the act is consistent and applies to all parties as intended.

In closing, with these amendments we are ensuring that Alberta's securities regulatory system reflects the realities of today's market and evolves with international standards in regulatory reform. Albertans deserve to be confident that someone is looking out for them, and with the changes our government is making, they can have that confidence.

With that, Madam Chair, I'd ask all members of this House to support this bill. Thank you very much.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to this bill? Any questions, comments? The hon. Member for Calgary- . . .

Mr. Malkinson: Currie. Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I notice we're at the time of the day where we always, you know, forget who is in what riding.

I rise today to say a few words about the Securities Amendment Act, 2017. As members of this Chamber well know, this government has made a commitment to ensuring that our capital markets work well and for the benefit of all Albertans. As the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board just mentioned and has made very clear, this government has laid out three key principles when it comes to approaching Alberta's capital markets. The minister said that the government is focused on, one, investor protection; two, ensuring market integrity; and three, ensuring that we have an efficient system for capital formation. I think we can all agree that these are laudable goals and serve as a useful guidepost when we consider changes to the Securities Act.

3:30

When we consider these amendments, let's ask ourselves: how does this legislation serve to enhance consumer protection? Does this legislation serve to further improve our integrity? I apologize, Madam Chair. There's a very cute baby that is here that's just bringing joy to my heart. Anyway, the final question we should ask ourselves: will these changes ensure that we have an efficient system for capital formation?

Ms Renaud: Just imagine them in bikinis.

Mr. Malkinson: Not helpful, hon. member.

Madam Chair, I think the answer to all three questions is a clear yes. But before I say these additional words about the Securities Amendment Act, I think it's useful to remind this Chamber of the steps we've taken together to further these three goals.

Back in 2015 the Securities Amendment Act – I'll come back to this, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other questions, comments, or amendments with respect to the bill? The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: I just thought that maybe the member needed a few minutes to compose himself.

As we talk to the Securities Amendment Act, I think it's important to discuss, you know, the communities which need to be protected by something put in place like this. Of course, when we put something like this in place, we're really talking about a few bad apples that could cause harm to people that have put away their life savings in investments and making sure that there's appropriate recourse. These situations need to be prevented, and these kinds of amendments really allow for that.

There's something really important in it in that we don't have a big history in financial liabilities in this way, but I know that the Securities Amendment Act provides securities – especially when we have an aging population and we have an increased number of people that are depending on their investments being protected. We need to make sure that these protections are put in place. They are very important.

I am very proud to be supporting this bill. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I've had a chance to have a glass of water here, so I will continue my comments where I left off.

Back in 2015 the Securities Amendment Act, 2015, came before this Assembly. At that time the Minister of Finance asked this Chamber to approve a number of changes to the Securities Act. In particular, he asked this Chamber to approve changes related to enforcement: for example, to ensure that ASC had the capacity and authority over electronic record statements; point-of-sale changes specifically related to ETFs, one of the most popular financial products on the market today; as well as harmonizing derivatives regulations as part of our continued efforts to harmonize standards across the country.

Madam Chair, I believe these changes received the unanimous support of this House because they were reasonable and in line with the set and reasonable principles that guide decision-making progress when it comes to Alberta capital markets. Back in 2016 the Securities Amendment Act, 2016, came before this House. If I remember correctly, this bill brought forward an important set of amendments that were, once again, in line with the principles that this government set out regarding our capital markets. For example, the SAA, 2016, set out updated definitions of a derivative reporting issuer and a security. The SAA, 2016, went on to amend the wording related to the halt-trade provisions, to make changes that would allow the justice of the peace to issue warrants, and finally, updated provisions related to the regulation of exchanges, trade repositories, and clearing agencies.

Madam Chair, I could go on, but the point here is that on a yearly basis the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board and this government have long been doing a very good job of keeping our regulatory system up to date. We know how important well-functioning capital markets are to this economy and to our province, so I am pleased to see the action being taken to date.

That brings me, Madam Chair, to the Securities Amendment Act, 2017, that we're discussing here today, and the changes that are before the Assembly. Once again, just like in 2015 and 2016, we have a set of reasonable amendments before us that will improve investor protection, ensure market integrity, and ensure that we continue to have an efficient system of capital formation. Clearly, the major focus of the SAA, 2017, is investor protection, and with everything we hear about in the newspapers, on TV, and on social media, I am glad we are taking further steps to ensure investor protection.

Before us today in this bill there are proposed changes to the authorities and capacities of self-regulatory organizations, or, since we like to abbreviate things in this House, SROs. SROs like the Mutual Fund Dealers Association or the Investment Industry Regulatory Organization of Canada, also known as IIROC, play an important role in our capital markets. These SROs have devolved authority from the Alberta Securities Commission, so it's incumbent on us to make sure that they have the best tools at their disposal to do their job. The amendments of the SAA, 2017, will allow SROs to have the same statutory powers as the ASC, which will improve the enforcement capabilities of the SAA.

Madam Chair, ensuring that SROs can compel attendance and ensure the production of evidence is critically important. It is critically important because it empowers these organizations to fulfill their mandate, which is investor protection. When we create laws and rules which empower investors, it's good for our capital markets. When we create a disincentive for wrongdoers to operate in our capital markets, we improve the overall integrity of our capital markets for all, and as all members of this Chamber know well, market integrity is a precondition for firms to be able to go out and raise capital. Without market integrity, firms can't raise capital, and our entire economy is put in jeopardy.

Madam Chair, as we consider the bill before us, I think it's worth reflecting on the questions I first raised as we go about considering this legislation. Does the legislation serve to enhance consumer protection? Does the legislation serve to further improve market integrity? Finally, will these changes continue to ensure that we have an efficient system for capital formation? In my view, the answer to all three of these questions is yes.

This is good, smart, and important legislation, Madam Chair, and I hope, as happened with the securities amendment acts of 2015 and 2016, that all members of this Chamber will vote to support these critical amendments.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other questions, comments, or amendments? The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Drever: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today to say a few words about the Securities Amendment Act, 2017. I'd like to begin these brief remarks with a story which helps to underscore why the amendments before this House are so important for investor protection and for our capital markets more generally.

Back in 2016 an individual was working at a Calgary-based investment firm. The person in question failed to ensure that his financial recommendations were suitable for two clients, who lived in Saskatchewan, who were nearing retirement and depended on his advice because they did not know much about the stock market. This individual undertook an investment strategy not designed for clients entering into their retirement years such as engaging in numerous trades and penny stocks, day trading, and short sales, which was not consistent with the personal circumstances of these people from Saskatchewan, including their expressed intentions with respect to retirement. As a result of this individual's aggressive investment strategy, which involved the pursuit of many high-risk, speculative securities, his clients lost over $125,000.

This individual failed to ensure that his recommendations were suitable for a third client in Calgary, who was seeking secure investments with respect to her eventual retirement. This individual pursued an aggressive investment strategy involving a high degree of risk to her account and which was too aggressive for her. This client nearly lost $41,000.

This individual also on many occasions executed trades without prior information provided to or informed consent received from all three clients beforehand. This is contrary to the IIROC rules.

Madam Chair, I got this IIROC information, and this is one of the cases that they successfully prosecuted. The IIROC hearing panel ordered that this individual pay a fine of $120,000 and be suspended from engaging in the securities industry for a period of two years, following which he would have to successfully complete a prescribed course and be subject to supervision if he re-enters the industry. It also ordered that he pay a cost of $25,000 in payment of IIROC costs incurred in these proceedings.

Madam Chair, as we know, the amendments before this House will further empower organizations like IIROC and the MFDA to protect investors. While the powers currently provided to these organizations have been effective in some circumstances, we can do more to support and protect investors.

It is stories like the one I just told you that make me proud to stand up in the House and support the Securities Amendment Act, 2017. As has been said before in this House, the vast majority of market participants are honest, trustworthy, and play by the rules. What we need to do is protect against the actions of wrongdoers, the individuals who try to take advantage of others and make it harder for everyone else in the market to succeed. We want investors in our marketplace to be successful and get good returns. We want companies in our marketplace to be successful and be able to raise capital to grow and sustain their businesses. The amendments before us today help achieve those objectives.

When we have more good actors operating in our marketplace, when we have market integrity, when investors are protected, then firms can effectively raise capital. When capital markets are working effectively, our entire economy benefits, and that means good jobs for the people of Alberta.

On that note, Madam Chair, I hope that all members of this Assembly support this very important legislation. Thank you.

The Chair: Any other questions, comments, amendments? The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's my pleasure today to rise and speak on Bill 13, the amendment act here, because I think that it's such an important piece of legislation. It's something that, as we've already heard about from other members in this Assembly, affects so many people in so many aspects of their lives and is something that Albertans deserve to feel comfortable and confident about when they make financial decisions with their investment dealers, their advisers, their representatives.

I'm so proud of the government for being a leader in this aspect. I'm so proud of the government for being a leader in ensuring that as we move forward with the Securities Amendment Act, which, of course, Madam Chair, you know, comes every year – but this one in particular, I believe, is one of the first jurisdictions in the country to provide the Investment Industry Regulatory Organization of Canada with the tool kit that they need to bring wrongdoers to justice and to fulfill their responsibilities as a public interest regulator.

The amendments proposed in this bill will provide the regulatory organizations with the same enforcement authorities as the Alberta Securities Commission. Madam Chair, that gives the regulatory organizations the ability to compel people's attendance and the production of evidence so that they are better able to do their jobs and protect Alberta investors. When we talk about work like that, when we talk about the tools that we're providing for these regulatory organizations, we're talking about making a difference for each and every family that trusts an adviser to make decisions with their money.

Madam Chair, in my constituency, for example, which is predominantly, of course, as I've spoken about before, young families, people who are starting their families, as we hear from some families here in the Legislature, are the types of families that are starting to make these types of investment decisions. These are the types of families that are starting to go out and say, "We need to put money away for my child," whether that's to go to college, university, or some sort of postsecondary education, or to make decisions that reflect their own retirement moving forward.

Seeing those types of decisions being made, these Albertans and my constituents expect there to be strong regulatory frameworks and strong enforcement frameworks to ensure that they're not taken advantage of. In fact, Madam Chair, if you go and speak to a lot of my constituents, you may indeed find that they thought that those protections were already in place. This is something that I think is going to be harmonized across Canada moving forward, and I'm very, very excited to see that a number of provinces have already committed to adopting provisions that are very similar to those we're seeing in this act.

When we see that the Canadian Association of Retired Persons and the Investment Industry Regulatory Organization of Canada and the Alberta Securities Commission have all come onboard and said, "This is something that we absolutely need; this is something that we absolutely want to see moving forward," I think it's so self-evident that this bill and the amendments that it puts forward will protect Albertans. It's something that – when we talk about consumer protection, we can bring bills and bill and bills about consumer protection, but at the end of the day, Madam Chair, these are people's lives. We're talking about the money that they're putting forward for their child's life or for their own retirement. Those types of investment decisions don't come lightly, and we do want to make sure that all of it's done in good faith and in the most thorough way possible.

Madam Chair, it's so encouraging to see that these amendments and this bill were consulted on very thoroughly with the investment industry. That's why we did see the quotes and validation from all of those validators that I did mention earlier. I believe that these are very common-sense amendments. I think that they're things that when we go out and we talk to the industry, they say, "Well, yes, we've been asking for this for a while," or "Absolutely, these are things that we want to see," because the industry does not wish to be seen as perhaps trying to swindle persons. The industry does not want to be seen as being malevolent in any way. They want to be working with the government to provide a very strong framework and a very strong industry that will allow Albertans to invest wisely, to be able to move forward wisely so that everybody is able to benefit from our strong Securities Act.

I think it's something that I'm very excited to see moving forward. I'm very encouraged to see the government moving forward to harmonize and modernize our legislation in this aspect. I think it's something that all members of this House are likely to be able to support, and I do encourage all members to support this bill as well.

Thank you.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us each reflect or pray, each in our own way. Hon. members, let us take a moment to find the strength and guidance in the ongoing support received from our families and close friends in all corners of Alberta. May their understanding and patience inspire us to be compassionate and co-operative in working together for the people of our province.

Hon. members, we have an interesting situation today. You're going to lead us, hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I believe we do owe each other a round of applause for that. [some applause] Let us use that as yet another example of how we can work together.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I don't believe my guests are here yet, so with your permission I'll wait and see if they arrive. Thank you.

The Speaker: Agreed.

Are there any school groups, hon. members?

Seeing and hearing none, the Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today on your behalf to introduce to all members of the Assembly Mr. Ahmed Kassem, Mr. Mudhir Mohamed, Mr. Osman Aidarus, and Mr. Mourad Trabelsi. Mr. Kassem is with us today from Shaw TV Medicine Hat Global Village centre show, which provides resources and integrated assistance to new Canadians. Mr. Mohamed is the president of the Muslim Community Foundation of Calgary, Mr. Aidarus is a businessman in Edmonton, and Mr. Trabelsi is president of the Brooks Muslims. Mr. Kassem, Mr. Aidarus, Mr. Mohamed, and Mr. Trabelsi are seated in the Speaker's gallery, and I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly Team Investigate Tachyons, eight Bishop Carroll high school students who have entered the CERN beamline contest. Just when you thought that the speed of light was the fastest superhero on the block, imaginary mass blessed with a positive charge and attractive gravity makes it onto the scene through the scientific method, enhanced by a thousand hours of math and pure resolve. I would like to mention all of them by name, and please stand when I say your name: Koi McArthur, team leader grade 12; Tarek El Naggar, grade 12; Urban Pistek, grade 11; Brynna Clarke-Leene, grade 11; Nicholas Betancourt-Lee, grade 11; Kelly Ma, grade 12; Carter Markic, grade 11; Eyoas Negash, grade 10; and my amazing research assistant, if she's still in here, Maureen Gough. One of their mandates is that the universe is like a beautiful painting, and the paint is math. Would you please join me in giving them the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the students of Lycée Louis Pasteur from the beautiful, tremendous, remarkable, and wonderful constituency of Calgary-Elbow. They're here this week attending School at the Legislature. The students are accompanied by their teachers, Nicole Pereversoff and Ryan Taylor. I ask, please, that they rise now and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other guests for introduction today? The Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of introductions. First, it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all the members of this Assembly Shuai Wang. Shuai is currently visiting Canada on his fifth trip to North America from China. His trip will include Victoria, Vancouver, and Montreal, and he has come to Edmonton to learn more about our great province. I ask my guest to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mr. Sabir: The second set of guests. It's my pleasure to introduce Stan and his son, Mike Szykowski. Stan and Mike are here in honour of Stan's wife and Mike's mother, Tamara. Tamara recently passed away, but today we honour her as an activist for social justice and for equality. Although we mourn her loss, we remember Tamara as a proud Albertan who made life better for so many Albertans. Stan and Mike are related to my press staff Kate Toogood, as her father-in-law and partner respectively. I ask my guests to rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce Daniel Menjivar. He's a guest pastor at the New Hope church of God, which is in Edmonton-Calder. Since becoming a pastor, Daniel has led three missions to Cuba with a small group of dedicated volunteers, building churches and communities and taking bicycles to southeastern Cuba. He does great work both internationally and right back here in Alberta. If you could rise, please, and receive the warm welcome of the House.

Members' Statements

Environment Lethbridge

Ms Fitzpatrick: Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud of our government's commitment to the environment, and I'm proud of municipal governments that are taking action as well. I rise today to talk about a local organization called Environment Lethbridge. It was started in 2014 to inspire Lethbridge residents to take action on sustainability. In April of this year they released the first Lethbridge State of the Environment Report. This report reviewed 32 indicators of environmental sustainability.

Lethbridge and southern Alberta have excellent potential for development of renewable energy sources, and Lethbridge residents use less electricity than both the Alberta and Canadian averages. Lethbridge also has an abundance of green space, with over 38 square kilometres of parks.

Lethbridge is facing some of the same challenges as the rest of Alberta. Water flow in the Oldman River, a vulnerable watershed, has decreased by 57 per cent since 1912. The local climate is warming, with the growing season in Lethbridge increasing by 23 days since 1950.

The report also contains some key recommendations for the city such as controlling invasive species, supporting native pollinators, reducing the amount of food waste entering the landfill, working with regional partners to improve air quality, encouraging green transportation, and, above all, educating people about water use.

I am very proud of the city of Lethbridge for recognizing the importance of sustainability. As the city approaches 100,000 people, we must be prepared for the impact that climate change and population growth will have on our environment and our lives.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Serenity

Mr. Nixon: In November of last year journalist Paula Simons put a face and a name to the subject of an investigation by the Child and Youth Advocate. Four-year-old Serenity was the subject of that report. She died more than two years ago, starved, beaten, and sexually abused. Her life was wiped out before it could even begin. She did not have a chance, Mr. Speaker.

The NDP was not in power when Serenity died, so we thought that the NDP wouldn't have reasons to sweep this under the rug. We asked this government what happened and when criminal charges would be laid. Our questions were stonewalled. It turns out that the RCMP weren't able to proceed with their investigation because they were missing key government documents. The NDP, to cover for their mistakes, put its spin doctors to work and set up a child intervention panel to talk about root causes. We also saw a cabinet shuffle that split the human services ministry in two and a new Minister of Children's Services.

The panel isn't allowed to talk about Serenity despite the minister repeatedly telling this House that it can, and we still haven't received answers from this new minister about what the department is doing to fix things. To make matters worse, we recently learned that there are still children living in the house where Serenity had her life stolen from her. The minister responded by saying that the media and the opposition had their facts wrong but refused to correct the record. She said that the situation is being monitored but won't conduct her own ministry with any sort of transparency. The tragic story, the timeline of events both leading up to Serenity's death and after are mind boggling, Mr. Speaker.

If all of us in this House care about kids, why does it feel like a case of government workers covering up for government workers while Serenity and her family continue to come last? This is not a partisan issue. I implore this government to start working with the opposition and the experts to ensure that we learn from Serenity's death and that this never happens again. Mr. Speaker, Albertans are sick of this government's lip service and want the NDP to stop sweeping this issue under the rug.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Government Policies

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The coat of arms sitting above your chair includes the motto Fortis et Liber, which we all know means strong and free. I want to thank the forefathers of this province for giving Alberta this coat of arms and also the pioneers for making this province strong and free.

I am concerned, however, that Alberta today is less strong and less free. When nearly 100,000 people are sitting at home because they cannot find work, we are less strong. When the multinational companies are bailing out of Alberta, when bankruptcies are spiking, and when small businesses four to five generations old are shutting down, we are less strong.

When the government disrespects our proud farmers with Bill 6 and when the vast majority of Albertans reject a carbon tax but have it imposed on them anyway, we are less free. When this government wants to take freedom away from our small businesses and enslave them with their socialist ideology, we are definitely not free. When the Minister of Finance is asked about burgeoning debt load and he simply smiles and when his comrades heckle and call concerned citizens Chicken Little and sewer rats and when Serenity still cannot get justice, we are definitely not strong or free.

With the NDP's ideological governing style this government is not fighting for Alberta families as they always claim. In reality they are hijacking our future, our children's future, and they are killing the proud culture of this province. When free-enterprise Albertans unite, they will annihilate this NDP socialist ideology. In the next election Albertans will take their province back, and once again it will be fortis et liber.

The Speaker: I want to caution all of the House again about the need for certain words like "killing" and words of violence. Please consider that.

The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Calgary-East Constituency Update

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I love spending time in my constituency and not just because we have the best food in Calgary. Talking to my constituents about what matters to them is the most important part of my job. I also like being there because I get to be on the ground to experience real, concrete examples of the work that this government is doing to make life better for people in Calgary-East.

The most obvious example of this is the redesign and addition of bus rapid transit to 17th Avenue S.E. As a result of $85 million of investment by this government construction has begun to widen the street. This project will make it easier for people to visit the amazing businesses on the avenue, increase access to faster public transit, and will make it possible for people to bike into downtown and Inglewood.

I also had the opportunity to tour the new EvenStart child development centre in Mayland Heights, where $300,000 of government investment is helping to create 30 new $25-a-day child care spaces, and the centre will also house EvenStart's existing program for at-risk preschoolers. It's a beautiful facility, complete with indoor play centre, community gardens, and art spaces.

I spent a lunch hour at Holy Family school, one of the first schools to pilot our school nutrition program. Grade 6 students were helping to serve a variety of healthy sandwiches and fruits to younger students, who were all smiles as they sat on the gym floor enjoying their lunch. The principal noted that parents, teachers, and kids have all noticed benefits from this program already.

I dropped by Common Crown Brewing, the second of three new microbreweries to open in my riding, that makes delicious beer with local ingredients. The owners were pleased with the government support that had been available so far and talked about the camaraderie and collaborative approach that new small brewers in Calgary are taking together.

I was present at the opening of the new NICU at the Peter Lougheed hospital, where folks from east Calgary, including myself, go to have babies. I know this beautiful new space will be appreciated by the 1 in 8 parents who have babies that require some form of intensive care.

These are only some examples, Mr. Speaker, but I think they work to illustrate how our government's choices are focused on tangible actions that make life better for Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Blue Hills Community

Ms Jabbour: I recently had the opportunity to get to know a corner of my constituency that no previous MLA has ever visited, the Blue Hills community school. I was invited to the Tompkins Improvement Board AGM and fundraiser and received a warm welcome on arrival. I toured the school, chatted with families from the area, and learned about community plans and goals.

Blue Hills is a Mennonite farming community, a mix of long-time residents and newcomers. What is perhaps most unique about this community is that unlike many small rural communities that are struggling to remain viable, Blue Hills is flourishing and growing quickly. They already have the lovely new Blue Hills Motel and Plaza, a small convenience store, and fuel station. If the rate of development continues, I wouldn't be surprised to see a new town spring up in the area within a few years.

Blue Hills is about 50 kilometres southwest of La Crête and 20 kilometres from the Tompkins Landing ferry, a key route to access services and markets. There are challenges, though. The ferry and ice bridge are closed several months of the year during freeze and spring breakup. Water levels are often too low for the ferry to operate, and limited ferry capacity can mean long waits. The community would love a new bridge, but they were very pleased to learn that a new, larger capacity ferry is on its way, although they joked that they would like a ferry wide enough to touch both sides of the river.

Education is important to this community. Blue Hills school is K to 9, but they want to expand to grade 12 in order to increase high school completion rates and eliminate the two-hour bus ride. A new gymnasium is needed as the current gym is too small to host tournaments and visiting teams. The old gym would become an industrial arts shop. A covered ice rink to allow games to be played during inclement weather is also planned.

Blue Hills has many other project ideas such as a seed-cleaning plant, a ski hill, expanding the P5 road to Peace River, and value-added agriculture processing not only for grains but for dairy and egg operations. We hope to support these projects through our government's investor and small-business programs.

There is incredible potential in this part of my constituency, and with their hard work, enthusiasm, and dedicated community spirit, I'm confident that Blue Hills will achieve their goals.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Serenity and the Child Intervention System

Mr. Nixon: In response to public outrage over the horrific death of Serenity, this government established the child intervention panel. The panel was supposed to recommend changes to the system, but how can we when we actually can't learn anything about what happened to Serenity? The minister tells Albertans that they are giving us panel members all the information we require. That is not accurate, Mr. Speaker. We are given intake windows to put forth requests; the documents we ask for, we never get. Any attempt to ask about Serenity by the panel is blocked by the NDP. Minister, will your government at least stop misleading Albertans about what this panel can actually do?

1:50

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The story of Serenity moved every single person in this House, and all of us continue to be heartbroken about it. That is the reason that the panel was put in place, to create meaningful recommendations to strengthen the child intervention system. We want panel members to have the information they need to make recommendations that will lead to real change. As I stated previously, if members feel they require additional information for their work on the panel, I encourage them to work with their caucus representative, and panel members can reach out to the chair to request information . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Nixon: I am the caucus representative.

The public was shocked to learn that children still live in the home where Serenity was likely murdered. Because this defies common sense and we have yet to see evidence of action to prevent a future Serenity, panel members are asking this government to find a way to legally discuss the file with them in private. The government says "trust us" when there is absolutely no reason to trust them. Minister, I ask again – and don't you dare say that this is what is already happening, because it is not – are you willing to explore a way to disclose the details of Serenity's case with panel members in private to assure us that this issue is being handled properly and that steps have been taken to prevent future tragedies, or are you going to continue to mislead the House?

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order noted.

The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again I will state that absolutely the panel needs to have access to the information that they need to make recommendations that will lead to real change. Again, the government, Children's Services, myself as minister: protecting vulnerable children in care is our key priority. That's why the panel is there. We'll ensure they have the information that they need in order to make real change. This case continues to be under criminal investigation. We don't have all the facts, however. We will continue to provide the panel with the information they need, and I encourage them to continue to work through the process to get that information.

Mr. Nixon: Utter nonsense, Mr. Speaker.

On November 22 the Premier said that she would make public the detailed changes made to the system as a result of what is learned from Serenity's death. We're still waiting. She said that the reviews were under way internally and as that information was assembled, it would become public. This hasn't happened either. We're still waiting for a statutory review for any case, let alone Serenity's case. Premier, how much longer do Albertans have to wait until Serenity's internal reviews are finished, and are you still committed to making this information public, or are you going to continue to allow your minister to keep misleading the Assembly?

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, I am very proud of the work that this minister has done to move forward on the many, many important issues that face vulnerable children in Alberta, that face people who are concerned about vulnerable children in Alberta, and that, of course, arise with the particular tragedy around Serenity. There will be legislation that comes forward this spring to deal with the first set of recommendations that the panel made.

Let me say from my own experience that there has never been an opportunity for an all-party committee to engage as deeply and as meaningfully as that all-party committee has, yet they still complain.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Calgary LRT Green Line

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, the green line LRT project was supposed to be good news for Calgarians in suburban communities, but this dream is quickly turning into a nightmare for these families, who are now being cut out of green line construction. Many of these families purchased homes on the promise that this project was proceeding as planned. Premier: what do you have to say to these families, who were sold a bogus bill of goods by the city of Calgary?

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, this government is very committed to supporting the transportation needs of all Albertans. It's part of making life better for everyone. That means also supporting our major cities in their transit systems and their LRT systems, which we're prepared to do. We're awaiting a final decision from the city council in Calgary as to the route and costs of this project, and we're going to do our very best to support the transportation needs of the citizens of Calgary.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, to add insult to injury, families in suburban Calgary are facing higher property tax rates caused by the NDP PPA debacle with Enmax and by the carbon tax even though they will never see the benefits of the green line. Since Alberta Transportation will fund $92 million this year for this revised project, does the minister agree with this antisuburban plan, or is he ready to call this what it really is, a bait and switch on suburban Calgary residents?

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the Wildrose opposition may be quite content to sit here and make decisions for city council in the city of Calgary, but we respect all orders of government in this country, including the municipal governments, and the democratic right of citizens to elect a mayor and a council to do the kinds of things that they want to. Obviously, the Wildrose doesn't care about democracy.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, this project is going to have real consequences for real people. The south campus hospital will not be connected, and Centre Street will still be chock full of cars. Construction costs should be dropping as per the minister, but the scaled-back project will cost $4.65 billion for just 20 kilometres, up from $4.5 billion for 46 kilometres, a whopping $233 million for each kilometre. Before committing more money, is the minister ready to demand better from the city's management?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I said, this government is committed to helping all Albertans with their transportation needs, including the residents of the city of Calgary. We are not going to be interfering in the work of the city council of the city of Calgary or of any other municipal council. We will carefully consider whatever proposals they put in front of us, and we will see how we can help because we're committed to making life better for all Alberta families.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

AIMCo Governance

Mr. Fildebrandt: The Alberta Investment Management Corporation manages $90 billion in Alberta assets. Troubling signs of political interference first appeared when the NDP ceased requiring that AIMCo directors have relevant financial experience, clearing the way for partisan appointments. The Finance minister said that these changes were welcomed by AIMCo, but the AIMCo CEO said that these changes came "as a surprise to us and, frankly, not a welcome surprise." Will the Premier reverse this decision and reinstitute basic financial qualifications as a requirement for serving on AIMCo?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, let me say that I've got great confidence in the professionals at AIMCo. They make sound investment decisions for Albertans and in the many pension funds and investments that they take on on our behalf. We took some redundant provisions out of the bylaws that AIMCo had and made for an open and transparent process of appointments for people. That means that any Albertan, anybody, can go online and see what boards and commissions are available and put their names in. We've got good people who have come forward, and we're going to have more good people soon with regard to appointments.

Mr. Fildebrandt: This minister's answers are redundant, Mr. Speaker.

This government is falling all over itself trying to explain away its bungling of an AIMCo investment in Calfrac. The government issued a false news release with information that was directly refuted by Calfrac. People in the Premier's office demanded that AIMCo insert itself into this political embarrassment for the government in an attempt to take the heat off them. Can the Premier look me in the eyes and tell me with a straight face that this government is not interfering in AIMCo?

Ms Notley: This government is not interfering in AIMCo. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order, please, hon. members.

Mr. Fildebrandt: It's not that the Premier is not telling the truth; it's just that what she's saying is just not so. Kevin Libin at the Financial Post released documents today, obtained through freedom of information, showing the media talking points that were prepared for AIMCo's CEO after this mess blew up. In it he says that he was personally called with an apology over the snap qualification changes, that he was not consulted on. So who's telling the truth about these changes, the CEO of AIMCo or the Premier?

2:00

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much for the question. You know, on March 8 the CEO of AIMCo said, "I do want to reinforce that at present our independence in investment decision-making, as I think I reassure you at every quarterly meeting, has not been encumbered in any way." Mr. Speaker, if they won't take the views of the CEO of AIMCo on this, why are they taking the views of a reporter or writer in the Financial Post or anywhere else? Listen to the CEO of AIMCo.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Seniors' Prescription Drug Copayments

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Along with our very young, our seniors can be the most vulnerable in society. I have a constituent in an assisted living facility. This individual has 10 prescriptions. When she ordered from home once every three months, the average cost was $83. The facility orders twice a month, with a $25 per prescription fee. That's $500 per month. To the minister of seniors: are you and your department aware of this, and what are you doing to protect seniors against these expensive practices?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much to the member for the question. The drug policy that is in place around prescription refills in terms of seniors' drug benefits does have a $25 copay piece attached to it. In terms of the timelines those certainly aren't guidelines that are set by the College of Pharmacists or otherwise, so we'll be happy to follow up with regard to this very specific case. Again, under this government we're working to make life more affordable. We're working to make sure we're investing in our seniors, and that includes making sure that we're building long-term care facilities, Mr. Speaker. The last government pushed forward full speed ahead with other facilities where seniors do have to cover things like their own drug coverage. I think we know clearly who's on whose side.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, the government is actually making things more expensive, as I pointed out. The senior was ordering every three months at an average cost of $83 a month, and the government's program is $500 a month. I don't know how the minister can say that that's making life better for Albertans, so again to the minister: what can you do to make this better? Because, clearly, so far you've made it worse.

Ms Hoffman: Let me clarify that in assisted living facilities you are responsible for your own drug costs, assisted living facilities that moved on en masse under the former government. We are making sure that we have a balance of varieties of places for people to live, including long-term care, where drug coverage is incorporated. But I have assured the member that I will follow up with regard to this specific case and make sure that we can find out what can be done longer term to prescriptions being filled because you are right that there is a $25 copay when you fill your prescriptions. If they're filling them once every two weeks, obviously that would be greater than once every three months. I would be happy to look into it for this case, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to hear the minister agree that the one senior was doing a better job of buying her drugs than the whole government was, but I'm also grateful that the minister has acknowledged the problem and has said that she's willing to help. To the minister: if I get you the information on the case, would you take a look at it and get back to the senior to see if you can't help, please?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Just to reiterate, the assisted living facility is not a government facility. It is another facility that is operated by another operator. But I would be very, very happy to look into it on behalf of this senior and any others who want to raise these kinds of questions. I encourage the member to look even within his own caucus to ask them for some education around how assisted living facilities work because I know there's expertise on that side of the House, and I think that information could be very helpful to the member opposite. Of course, I'd be very happy to work with him on behalf of this constituent.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Energy Industry Liability Management

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've heard regularly from constituents concerned about the issue of abandoned oil and gas wells. Many are landowners who feel that the system isn't working for them. Some are concerned about the environmental impact of abandoned wells. They are folks from the oil and gas sector worried about the damage to their reputation and their industry thanks to a few bad actors. To the Minister of Energy: what is the government doing to address these very real concerns?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad to report to the House what we are doing. We absolutely all know that this is a critically important issue for Albertans. I myself and many of us who are rural MLAs hear this all the time when we go home. When the oil and gas industry was booming, there wasn't very much attention paid to this matter, and as it fell, we're seeing an uptick in issues. That's not right, and our government is taking a leadership role in this. We're looking to find solutions that protect Albertans, protect our environment, and keep Alberta a competitive place to invest.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Rosendahl: Mr. Speaker, given that a lot of people in this province are very cynical about this issue and given that they've seen previous governments only do one-sided consultations, what is the minister doing to ensure that this does not happen this time?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Unlike members of the opposite side there, who prefer to stay in their echo chamber, we in fact are out engaging. We believe in thorough engagement and finding common ground for solutions. We're talking to farmers and landowners. We're talking to environmental groups. We're talking to lenders. We're talking to municipalities. They're helping us look at the matter and how we can best manage the situation. We're not just admiring the problem; we're having good conversations and finding solutions.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that previous governments ignored indigenous communities in this province, to the same minister: will First Nations and Métis communities be included in this liability management review?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, our government is proud of the work we're doing to renew the relationship with our indigenous peoples. We have a responsibility to have meaningful engagement with First Nations and Métis communities, and I'm pleased to say that we have a parallel engagement going on with these groups that will be beginning very shortly. As well, my department is visiting different parts of the province to ensure that we get a good cross-section of perspectives. This is a critically important matter, not just to rural Albertans but to our indigenous people, and we're getting all perspectives as we continue.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Labour Relations Code Review

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government is not being up front with Albertans about its labour law review. We ask legitimate questions about the labour relations portion, and the minister responds with old pop culture references and comments about employment standards, which is a different topic. Issues like union certification and collective bargaining are serious subjects, and this government is avoiding our questions. Minister, leaving the employment standards portion aside for a moment, will you be proposing changes to our Labour Relations Code this session? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very proud that we've been engaging with Albertans and talking to them about what needs to be updated in our workplace legislation to make sure we have fair and family-friendly workplaces. Albertans have engaged, with nearly 5,000 submissions, multiple round-tables, other submissions, and people working with labour lawyer Andrew Sims. The former government held consultations as well, and what they did with those was that they let them sit on the shelf and gather dust. I'm looking forward to bringing forward workplace legislation reforms that will help build a strong economy.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, given that any review of our labour laws must be transparent and accountable and given that the major cost of the Labour Relations Code review is our contract with Andrew Sims and given that Albertans are giving tens of thousands of tax dollars in exchange for his guidance throughout this review, to the Minister of Labour: can we expect to see a report from Andrew Sims on the labour relations portion of this consultation before your government introduces any changes to the Labour Relations Code? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta needs legislation that makes sure that our workplaces are fair, family friendly, and support a strong economy as well as making sure that we have our rights protected in Alberta as they are in other areas. This legislation has not changed since 1988. [interjections] The previous government conducted reviews and then took no steps forward. We are making sure that our workplace legislation is fair and family friendly, and I am looking forward to talking to Albertans further about that.

2:10

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, your volume is getting pretty loud.

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, given that significant changes to our labour laws will likely discourage investment, making it more difficult to create jobs, and given that this ideological government seems more concerned with appeasing their union bosses than with helping get Albertans back to work and given that this government has shaken investor confidence and is destabilizing our economy by bringing in uncertainty, Minister, tell Albertans why you are rushing through changes to our labour laws rather than helping Albertans get back to work.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Particularly during tough economic times Albertans deserve workplace legislation that protects them, protects their families, and supports a strong economy. We have been engaging with Albertans and talking about important issues like job-protected sick leave, like making sure that we have workplace legislation that allows families to balance their work and family responsibilities. These are important topics that have been neglected under previous governments for too long. Making sure that we have fair and family-friendly workplaces is a priority for me and this government. [interjections]

The Speaker: Now I would ask the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View and also the Member for Strathmore-Brooks, under the same rule, to cut it down a little.

Calgary-West.

Investigation into Serenity's Death

Mr. Ellis: All right. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has provided so much conflicting information and lack of information about Serenity that it has lost all credibility. For instance, the Edmonton Journal reported on March 22 that the RCMP investigation was concluded and the file was in the Alberta Crown prosecutors' office for review, but in the House last Thursday the minister told us that she could not answer opposition questions because the "investigation is ongoing." Minister, is the investigation finished or not, and do you even know what is happening here?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We were all deeply touched by this particular case. That's why the RCMP is being absolutely very careful to ensure that they do the best job they can. As is very common in many complex cases, the file has been forwarded to the Crown, and the investigation is still ongoing. Police and Crown often work closely together in this way to see what additional evidence may be necessary in advance of the laying of charges.

Thank you.

Mr. Ellis: Given that last Thursday the minister also said – and this is alarming – that she is unable to provide details about the ongoing criminal investigation because “to do so would put young people involved at risk” and given that the minister and Premier spent last week assuring Albertans that young people are not at risk, Minister, if children are at risk, why are you not acting now to protect them?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children’s Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Absolutely, without doubt, the commitment of myself and my department and this government is to protect the vulnerable children of this province. If there was a child in this province for whom there was evidence of abuse, absolutely they would be apprehended. What I can say is that I will not disclose information in which the disclosure of information would put a child at risk, and I would hope that the member would support me in ensuring the protection of the children of this province.

Mr. Ellis: Given that the minister keeps saying that the media is wrong but she will not correct the information and given that we have heard this before – in November the then minister told the House that a reporter, quote, did not have all the facts, unquote, and he was referring to the date that the RCMP finally received Serenity’s case file, and it was the minister himself who reported the date wrong – and given that the government keeps changing its story and hiding behind privacy laws that they will not identify, Premier, there is only one way to get the facts here. Will you call a public inquiry now?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, all members on all sides of this House and all Albertans take this case incredibly seriously. The Crown and the RCMP have been working very diligently on this case to make sure that they explore every possible avenue because everybody wants to make sure that they get it right in this particular instance. At this time that investigation is ongoing, so it’s not appropriate to comment on what the other further steps will be. As the Minister of Children’s Services has said many times, I think we really need to be focused on moving forward and making the system better.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Data Security in Public Bodies

Mr. Cyr: Over the last year tens of thousands of computers have been affected with a recent wave of cyberattacks which use ransomware to extort individuals and businesses to pay to get their information from these individuals. With 12 international offices the chances of Alberta coming close to contact with cybermalware is high. The risks of infection both at home and abroad are a reality. Just last weekend this attack happened in Saskatchewan. At any point has Alberta become a target of espionage operations for cyberattacks within Alberta?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Service Alberta and Status of Women.

Ms McLean: Thank you for the question, Mr. Speaker. Service Alberta takes information security very seriously, so we have a number of best practices that are in place to protect our information and our systems. I can tell you that, certainly, we know that world-wide hackers do target governments. That’s why it’s important to be vigilant, so we are very vigilant. I’m very happy to report to this House and to the member opposite that ransomware has never affected the government such that we’ve ever paid a ransom. Our security systems and vaccinations, as it were, from these viruses are very much in place and are very top of the line. We are not exposed in the way that Saskatchewan was, and I’m proud of our systems.

The Speaker: The first supplemental.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that in 2016 the University of Calgary’s computer system was cyberattacked by ransomware and a $20,000 ransom was paid to cyberterrorists, to the Minister of Service Alberta: within the last year has the government paid any other ransoms for government of Alberta departments, agencies, boards, or commissions since the University of Calgary cyberattack, and are they recorded in the blue book?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you again for the question, Mr. Speaker. Service Alberta is responsible for the government of Alberta ministries’ devices, so I can certainly speak to that. We do update our antivirus protection software very rigorously. We also have a rigorous and robust backup and restoration process. So I can certainly tell the member opposite that our efforts are definitely working. Of a total of 860 million e-mails which we received last year, 93.4 per cent were blocked due to detected malicious intent. So we certainly have good systems in place. With respect to ABCs it’s a different . . .

The Speaker: The second supplemental.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given this government’s callous disregard towards privacy, freedom, and general concern for its citizens’ information and given that ransoms have been paid by public institutions within the riding of the minister responsible for IT security, to the Premier: if your minister is not able to protect institutions in her own riding, how can we expect her to protect Alberta in our own home?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. I’m sure the member opposite does know that agencies, boards, and commissions are arm’s length. There are many things that they’re responsible for, including their own budgeting, including their own operations. The University of Calgary is no different in that respect. When it comes to the government of Alberta, however, and the ministries, we are certainly responsible for that. I can certainly assure the House that we take the most rigorous of steps. If we did what the opposition proposed, which would include millions of cuts from our budget – I can tell you that one of the vulnerabilities is because governments look to IT applications as the very first place to cut.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

2:20 Flood Damage Mitigation in High River

Mr. W. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, in just a few short weeks we’ll be recognizing the four-year anniversary of the High River flood. This epic event had a devastating effect on the people and the economy of High River. Flood mitigation work is still in progress with only one project left to complete. To the Minister of Infrastructure: have the funds for the High River floodgates been allocated to this project?

Mr. Mason: I'll look into that matter and get back to the member, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. W. Anderson: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's interesting. Given that last year I contacted the ministry and suggested that since the floodgate project was a temporary solution and the raising of the Centre Street Bridge was the only permanent solution and whereas I had suggested that instead of spending taxpayers' dollars on a temporary fix the government ought to allocate the funds to a permanent solution, why did the minister turn down this project?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. Certainly, in Environment and Parks we have worked very closely with the town of High River and with the city of Calgary on appropriate flood mitigation in response to the 2013 flood. That is why our government has also committed $500 million over 10 years to protect homes, businesses, and the economy through the Alberta community resilience program. In 2015 we also committed $297 million, which will ensure that communities along the Elbow River are protected from a 2013 event. Our work on flood mitigation is ongoing, and we're happy to work with the town of High River to complete the projects that came out of the 2013 disaster.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. W. Anderson: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's really interesting because given that the town of High River council has provided to the minister – which minister, I'm not sure now – a 107-page engineering-approved project, shovel-ready solution along with the offer to fund over half of the project, why is this ministry preventing High River flood mitigation projects from taking place, why are you holding up this vital, potentially life-saving solution, and why is there so much bureaucratic red tape? What's the problem?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, our province has dedicated many hundreds of millions of dollars to flood mitigation in response to the 2013 flood and to ensure that our communities are resilient in the future, both in High River and elsewhere. I would be very pleased to hear from the town of High River on further mitigation that is proposed by them and follow up with the hon. member and the town of High River as we complete the projects that came in the immediate aftermath of the 2013 flood.

Coal Strategy

Mr. Fraser: TransAlta recently announced that it would be speeding up the conversion of some of their coal-fired plants to natural gas. Specifically, some of the Sundance and Keephills units will be converted or retired up to two years sooner than previously estimated. While this might seem like a win for the NDP, it's certainly not a win for Alberta's coal communities like Parkland county, which is looking at a nearly $6 million loss from their tax revenue due to the early shutdown. To the Minister of Economic Development and Trade: what are you doing to offset the loss to Parkland county and the similar losses that all communities can expect?

The Speaker: The minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you . . . [interjection] What? Okay. Sorry, Mr. Speaker. I'm short, and sometimes I don't see my colleagues.

Thank you to the hon. member for the question. Of course, his own leader, Mr. Kenney, voted to phase out 12 of the 16 coal plants, as did the Leader of the Official Opposition, with no plan for what might happen to those communities. Our side of the House has taken a different approach. We are engaging with coal communities. We ensured that we got the right regulatory change with respect to natural gas conversion, and we're going to make sure we invest in those communities whereas they were ignored by the PCs and the Wildrose.

Mr. Fraser: Respectfully, Minister, that $6 million this year is likely the cut to front-line services for that community.

Given that the minister has spoken about the opportunities for the export of thermal coal to other jurisdictions and given the further opportunity to export Alberta's high-grade metallurgical coal and given that much of the impact on the coal communities will be felt through the loss of good, mortgage-paying mining jobs, to the same minister: will you commit to doing everything in your power to ensure that thermal coal mines in these communities remain open, and will you work to reduce the barriers currently stopping new metallurgical coal mines from opening?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the plan that we put forward so that generators could convert their plants to natural gas and keep investing in communities and workers had to do with the plants and not the thermal coal mines. We went to Ottawa – our side of the House did – with a plan, and we were able to negotiate a 15-year exemption for coal plants that convert to natural gas. That means that Alberta natural gas will be burned in Alberta plants that are run by Alberta workers. We have the best interests of those communities in mind. They were ignored by the PCs and the Wildrose.

Mr. Fraser: Given that in my discussions with the mayors of the various coal communities a common concern has been that the well-being of their communities doesn't seem to be a top priority for this government and given the current environment around the uncertainty and the future of the coal industry, including the early forced shutdown and the intent of the B.C. government to levy an additional tax on the export of thermal coal, to the same minister: respectfully, Minister, these communities have expressed that they've heard more about free light bulbs than their successful transition. Will you demonstrate to these communities that their families, their future are more important than free light bulbs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the best interests of the communities were ignored by the PCs and the Wildrose when both the leader of the Wildrose and the leader of the PCs voted to shut down 12 of those 18 plants. Our approach has been a little bit different. Here's what the CEO of TransAlta, for example, had to say about that: "We have been [very] public about the benefits of these conversions. These are low-cost investments that will lengthen the average life of our coal fleet by up to 15 years." This ensures that we keep our workers working, according to the CEO of TransAlta, and keep those communities strong to be able to provide capacity to the system as we go through decades . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Marijuana Legalization

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we fast approach the legalization of marijuana, my office continues to receive calls from constituents concerned about the effect this will have in Red Deer and across the province. Given that the federal government has committed to setting the minimum age of 18 to buy marijuana, to the Minister of Justice: has this government considered the legal age in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Justice minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the very important question. I think all Albertans are concerned about ensuring that we make this transition in a thoughtful way. Some of our main priorities with this process include keeping cannabis out of the hands of children and proceeds out of the hands of criminals. The minimum age is something we'll raise as part of our public consultation, a process we'll be launching in the coming weeks. We want to ensure that the views of Albertans are taken into account in this process.

The Speaker: The first supplemental.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the need to ensure that our roads remain safe and given the concerns surrounding drug-impaired driving, to the same minister: how will we ensure that Albertans are kept safe on the roads after marijuana is legalized?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, this is a concern that is very much on the mind of the government and of all Albertans, I think. Impaired driving, whether by alcohol or drugs, is unacceptable. It is dangerous, and it puts everyone on our roads at risk. The federal government is working to ensure that a reliable roadside saliva test will be available, and we will be watching this process closely. One of the things we're looking to ensure is that law enforcement in Alberta is properly educated so that they're able to proceed on the basis of the impaired charge.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The second supplemental.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the need to educate Albertans on this topic as we move forward, to the same minister: how will public education play a role in how the province responds to the legalization process?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and again to the member for the question. Educating Albertans about safe consumption is absolutely a high priority. We'll be working to ensure that this happens as we move forward in the process. We will be working very closely with our partners in Health, and we'll have more to say about this as we move forward. It's absolutely critical that Albertans understand both the risks and the benefits.

Highway 61 Repairs

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, last summer residents of the county of Forty Mile were excited to see construction equipment begin to fix highway 61 near Etzikom. Sadly, the equipment idled, and the highway repairs stopped. It turns out that some regulation changed in the environment department, and the minister of environment halted the Minister of Transportation's project. Now I'm told by Alberta Transportation that nothing will happen until August. Why is the minister of environment holding up the Department of Transportation on road repairs, promised since 2007, that represent a health and safety issue?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is an unfortunate situation. The project was on the shelf for quite a long time. Our government revitalized it, and as a result there were some changes to the Water Act that require additional permits, and we're in the process of acquiring those permits now.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, this isn't the first critical, unsafe project that has been held up waiting for the NDP's approval. Given that NDP bureaucracy and red tape are holding up repairs on this critical lifeline while we risk losing a second construction season and given that this road is in such a state that even school buses refuse to use it, is the minister of environment trying to shut down rural Alberta by allowing the roads to deteriorate to such a condition that the Transportation minister can't fix them anymore?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, nothing could be further from the truth. Our government is strongly committed to meeting the transportation needs of all Albertans, including those in rural Alberta. But I can tell you that if the Wildrose formed government and cut $9 billion from infrastructure, the roads would be one mass of potholes from one end of the province to the other.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, given that I have asked about the repairs to highway 61 every year since I was elected – in question period, estimates, and Public Accounts – and given that the government of Alberta continues to botch the repairs of this highway for all the residents of southern Alberta, if the government isn't able to get the basics of road repair right, how can we trust them to diversify our economy, create jobs, and get value for taxpayer dollars?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, this government is already producing results in all of those areas. The infrastructure that's being built in this province is going to serve Albertans for generations to come. Jobs are being created. We're getting back on track. It's not going to be highway 61 revisited.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Workers' Compensation System

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This NDP government has proven that it is a poor financial manager. That's why business owners are concerned that the WCB has not provided them with their 2016 premium rebates. In a year in which businesses are struggling with the economy, the carbon tax, the minimum wage increase, and top-secret regulation changes, these rebates are particularly critical. Minister, will you promise these business owners that you will not use their premium overpayments to help fund your department? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's absolutely critical that Albertans know that they have a Workers' Compensation Board and system that provides fair compensation and meaningful rehabilitation. Let me be clear that surpluses are not being folded back into government revenue. The WCB manages its own funds, and there has been an internal decision of the WCB for this current year. We look forward to working with the WCB as we receive the report from the panel that has been reviewing WCB to see how we can improve the system going forward.

Mr. Gill: Given that the accounting practice standard is that if employers contributed more in premiums than was needed in a given year, the money is refunded and given that it's unfair to withhold their money when all of the accounting is finished for 2016 and given that it should not matter what the WCB review recommends for the future because we are talking about the last year, to the same minister: is the decision to withhold the premium surplus coming from you or the WCB?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The WCB manages its own funds, and this was an internal decision of the WCB, who has historically responsibly managed and accounted for all of the funds within the WCB system. There has been an ongoing review of the WCB to make sure that the system is working for injured workers and employers. The last comprehensive review of the WCB had happened more than 15 years ago, so this was long overdue. This review is part of our commitment to make sure agencies, boards, and commissions are operating well here in this province.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the WCB review was launched over a year ago and given that the law hinges on this review, including premium overpayments from 2016 that businesses did not expect to have to worry about and potential legislation changes from a government that is a fan of overburdening businesses with regulations, Minister, when will your panel complete its report and provide it publicly for all Albertans, and if you want to say spring, is this the spring of 2017 or 2018?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased that we had a three-person panel, consisting of a neutral chair and representatives from workers and employers, engaged in a fulsome review of the workers' compensation system so that we can make sure there is meaningful rehabilitation and fair compensation as well as to make sure that there is a strong system of workers' compensation. The report is due to me spring of this year. We will be receiving that report, reviewing it, and then coming back to talk to Albertans, the WCB, and all affected by the system about the next steps.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Bow.

Neonatal Health Care

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently this government announced the official opening of the new neonatal intensive care unit at the Peter Lougheed health centre in Calgary. To the Minister of Health: what does this project mean for front-line health teams in the Lougheed NICU and their patients?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Of course, it's important to make sure that we have the very best care environments, which also regularly equate to the very best working environments for the staff who are there to provide this care. Rather than teeny-tiny newborns having to be held in close proximity to each other, they have much better infection control, the space is three times that which it was previously, there are doors that actually close between the different spaces, and it also creates a space for the family to be able to stay and care for their children, which regularly is where you want to be when you have a child who is so ill.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the number of births in the Calgary zone has increased by 8 per cent in the last five years, from almost 18,000 babies in 2011 to nearly 20,000 in 2016, to the same minister: why didn't the new unit increase the number of beds to meet the growing demand?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and again to the member for the question. I had a chance to meet with some of the families as well as the staff while I was there, and I have to tell you that baby Noah's family was so excited to see the new space. They're more excited to get him home, but if the time continues where they have to be there, they're excited to be able to transition into the new space, where they'll all be welcome. Certainly, that new, dedicated space supports isolation as well for conditions that could be infectious. It's important that we continue to have the right number of beds or, rather, bassinets in this unit, and AHS continues to monitor that and ensure that they're bringing space online when it's most needed.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Calgary isn't the only community facing increasing demands, to the same minister: what else is this government doing to make sure families across Alberta don't experience barriers when a child needs health care?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is one of the reasons why I'm so proud to be a part of a government that's putting Alberta families first instead of moving forward with reckless, ideological cuts, as are being proposed by the members opposite. We're investing in parts of the province to ensure that we have the right health care supports. That includes ridings right across this province, from north to south, from east to west. Last year we started covering things outside of acute care, including specialized formula for children who have severe dietary restrictions, and many families have been able to benefit from that. As well, the health care system has had fewer complications because these tiny children aren't getting the kinds of conditions that they could acquire if they...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Legislative Procedures

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, two years ago in June the Wildrose Official Opposition proposed a document to restore trust in Alberta's democracy, and so far we've heard crickets from this Government House Leader. What I'd like to know is: what has happened in the last two years when he used to believe in openness, transparency, and fairness for the opposition?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of democratic renewal.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to talk about what this government has done to renew democracy over the past two years, starting with Bill 1, banning corporate and union donations, and following that up with changes to our elections financing act to get big money out of politics. We've now introduced whistle-blower legislation that is going to make sure that our public servants are able to come forward and speak about what they're seeing if there is wrongdoing happening within our agencies. We continue to push the boundaries and make sure that Alberta is leading in renewing our democracy. I'm very proud of the work we've done so far and the work we are going to do in the future.

2:40

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, given that the opposition proposed real changes to this Assembly that would make our democracy more open and more transparent, including reforming question period, including opposition days, and all this government can talk about is their union pals, when will they make real changes that reform our democracy?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, I would note that when this party, the NDP, was in opposition, we had four seats, sometimes even two seats, and we were far more effective under even far more restrictive rules than this huge Wildrose opposition. So don't blame us because you're lame.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, given that there is no new legislation on the Order Paper and that this government claims to be effective at governing – yet all we saw last week was this government filibustering their own pieces of legislation, with nothing on the horizon – and that the Minister of Labour is always dodging and weaving about whether or not they're going to ram controversial labour legislation through at the end of session, when are we going to hear whether this will be happening or not?

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've been advised that my last comment was perhaps disrespectful to the disabled community, and I'd like to apologize now for using that. I can think of five or six other words I could have used equally effectively to describe the opposition.

But I do want to tell the Opposition House Leader that we are going to be introducing two new bills – I'm giving notice this afternoon – just so the opposition is happy, Mr. Speaker. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. members, Members' Statements in 30 seconds.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Electric Power System

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're now two years into an electricity comedy of errors that started as soon as the NDP began their reign of economic tragedy. It's time for a recap. Weeks into the NDP's electoral mandate, without any consultation with industry, the NDP rashly changed the 2007 SGER's carbon pricing. The result: a mass turn-back of power purchase arrangements, which are decade-old power contracts between Alberta generators and the government's arm's-length Balancing Pool. The NDP had six months to undo their rash change to SGERs. The NDP were warned repeatedly that companies would lawfully terminate their contracts unless the short-sighted order in council was reversed, but ideology came before sense and before Albertans. The NDP didn't back down. Instead, they started a smear campaign, evoking the besmirched name of Enron in a failed attempt to divert attention away from their growing comedy of errors.

The Balancing Pool recognized Enmax's right to terminate, which is the last time they decided anything independent of this meddling government. Then came the costly lawsuits and Bill 34, the blank cheque to the Balancing Pool. A few short months ago, when the blank cheque act was passed, the expected cost was $600 million, but weeks ago costs skyrocketed to over $4 billion according to the government's own admission. Now the Balancing Pool is being investigated by the MSA for using the money from the blank cheque act as an open-ended subsidy, undermining our competitive power market. Changing SGERs will cost Albertan taxpayers at least $4.437 billion.

The taxpayer and the ratepayer are still the same person. You are not the heroes protecting Albertans; you are the villains inflicting harm on them.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The Minister of Infrastructure and Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with great pride that I stand here to provide oral notice of two bills to be added to the Order Paper tomorrow. Those bills are Bill 14, An Act to Support Orphan Well Rehabilitation, which will be sponsored by the hon. Minister of Energy; and Bill 15, the Tax Statutes Amendment Act, 2017, which will be sponsored by the hon. Minister of Finance.

Thank you.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to bring forward five copies of the Edmonton collision statistics as well as some photoradar locations that were provided by FOIP, showing that there's absolutely no correlation between the locations of photoradar and collisions.

The Speaker: The Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of a six-pack of Wild Rose beer that I owe the hon. minister of agriculture. I bet him that the Flames would outlast the Oilers in the playoffs. I was wrong, and a Fildebrandt always pays his debts. Unfortunately for me, though, I didn't put any money on the Bandits against Whitecourt. In any case, it's right here for him.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have five copies of a letter that I received today from Paul Baena of Western Electrical Management Ltd. It's with regard to the labour review, and he claims, "I feel that the NDP government is once again attempting to change our province in order to align the province with the values and belief system of a political party, which is no longer in favor by the people."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising today to table five copies of the summary and indicators from the Lethbridge State of the Environment 2017 report by Environment Lethbridge, which I quoted during my member's statement. As noted in the summary, we must be prepared for the impacts of climate change and population growth on our environment and lives.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to table the requisite number of copies of a post from my Facebook page, where the mayor of Carmangay commented on answers that I got as I questioned the minister of environment about property rights and renewables. The mayor was not impressed that the minister took her comments out of context and used them as supporting arguments to give a non answer to an extremely important question.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the Hon. Mr. S. Anderson, Minister of Municipal Affairs, responses to questions raised by Mr. McIver, hon. leader of the Progressive Conservative opposition; Mr. Clark, hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow; and Mr. Strankman, hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler, at the April 12, 2017, Ministry of Municipal Affairs 2017-18 main estimates debate.

2:50

The Speaker: Hon. members, I believe we have two points of order today. Is that correct?

An Hon. Member: And a point of privilege.

The Speaker: And a point of privilege as well.
The Acting Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: Sorry, Mr. Speaker. Would you like to begin with the points of order or the point of privilege? The points of order?

The Speaker: Please.

Point of Order Language Creating Disorder

Ms Ganley: I rise on a point under Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j), which states that members will be called to order by the Speaker if, in the Speaker's opinion, that Member

- (h) makes allegations against another Member;
- (i) imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member;
- (j) uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder.

At about 1:55 p.m. – and I believe this same argument stands for both points of order because it occurred again at about 1:56 – the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre asked: will the minister continue to mislead the House?

Mr. Speaker, in recent months you have cautioned many times on the practice of using words like "mislead" or "misleading." Most recently, on April 20 you said, "I want to caution the member and the members. We've had many hours wasted on discussions about what's true, what's not true, misleading, false, et cetera. I want to caution everyone to be careful."

This, of course, is a very context-specific state of affairs. In this particular case the context is that it was a specific allegation against a specific person. We were not talking about an argument or an idea or a group, Mr. Speaker. We were talking about one specific, individual person. In particular, what we were talking about was a topic that is deserving of sensitivity and respect. In this case I think it is clear that the use of "misleading" in this context was absolutely a violation of this rule. It's very sensitive, it's affected all of us very deeply, and I think that really does denote the need for caution.

Mr. Speaker, you have asked members to stand in this House before for saying that a member was misleading the House and to apologize and withdraw. I would ask that the members opposite do the same by withdrawing and apologizing for the remarks made today.

The Speaker: The House leader for the Official Opposition.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to agree in many respects with my colleague. This is an issue that is emotional. From time to time members of the Chamber can become emotional. I know that my colleague has some strong feelings about some of the things that the minister has said both at the panel and here in the House and how there's some discrepancy with those. But I do agree that in this case the context in which it was used was in fact a point of order, and the member has asked me if I would withdraw and apologize on his behalf as he had to step out.

The Speaker: Thank you.

I believe we are now at a point of privilege. The case was made by the House leader of the third party on Thursday, I believe.

The Acting Deputy Government House Leader.

Privilege Access to Information

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In response to the point of privilege raised by the hon. House leader for the third party, I would begin by saying that the test for prima facie breach of privilege is high. The hon. House leader for the PC caucus hasn't even come close to establishing that the privilege of a member has been violated in this instance or that the privileges of the House as a collective have been breached by the Minister of Children's Services in question period. The member is using this matter of privilege and points of order frivolously as a means of extending debate from question period and of relitigating issues that have been closed.

Before refuting his argument, I'd like to briefly outline what it was that occurred. In question period the PC caucus leader asked the Minister of Children's Services questions about child welfare. The minister responded to those questions. The opposition wasn't satisfied with the answers. Mr. Speaker, that happens most days in this place. Following question period the minister provided further information to the public through a media conference, an update she had made reference to earlier that day in question period. Again, there's nothing unusual here. Those are the facts. This doesn't translate to a matter of privilege.

I'd like to now review and refute the accusations of the PC House leader, Mr. Speaker. I'll begin with what I believe to be the substance of the matter, but the argument wandered somewhat, so I will try to touch on as much as possible.

First, he argued that the privileges of a member of this House were breached "by withholding information from members and intending to share that information with the media before members of this House." Mr. Speaker, Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules & Forms is very clear on page 13, paragraph 31(10), that there is absolutely no right of members to receive any or all information before the general public does.

The question has often been raised whether parliamentary privilege imposes on ministers an obligation to deliver ministerial statements and to make announcements and communications to the public through the House of Commons or to make these announcements or statements in the House rather than outside the chamber. The question has been asked whether Hon. Members are entitled, as part of their parliamentary privilege, to receive such information ahead of the general public. I can find no precedent to justify this suggestion.

Parliamentary Privilege in Canada, by Maingot, further states on page 224:

A complaint that a minister of the Crown has made a statement outside the House rather than in the House or that the government provides information only to its supporters in the House may well amount to a grievance against the government, but in the absence of an order in the House forbidding such activity, there is no personal or corporate privilege that has been breached in the doing.

As one of my predecessors as Government House Leader, Mr. Hancock, stated on March 6, 2000: government actually gets elected to govern, and then they come into the House to get approval for legislation and approval for spending; but governments are elected to govern, and they are expected to go out and talk to the public about what they are doing.

Similarly, Speaker Zwodzesky stated on November 7, 2013:

We all know that governments across the greater Commonwealth will make announcements. They will make policy statements, they will make program decisions and other announcements like that, and they will also make funding announcements such as the one we heard today, and they are well within their right to do that. That's what governments are elected to do. They can do it any time they wish provided that some of our conventions, rules, and authorities are observed.

Mr. Speaker, I think it's very clear that sharing information with the public through the media prior to it being provided to this Chamber is not prohibited, and in fact there are a great many occasions on which it is desirable or appropriate.

At the same time, I do wonder whether the hon. member spoke to his caucus leader prior to making this argument. After all, earlier that day in question period the Member for Calgary-Hays said that the minister had refused to provide correct facts to the media. In fact, the Leader of the Opposition went on even further in his first question to say that the minister provided nothing: no details, no explanations, no answers.

Mr. Speaker, it can only be one of the two. Did the minister breach privilege by providing answers to the media, or did she provide nothing? You can't have it both ways. In either event, it's quite clear that ministers have the right to provide information to the public and, in fact, one might argue, even have the duty to do so in many cases.

The next allegation raised by the hon. third-party House leader quotes at length from Parliamentary Practice as well as House of Commons Procedure and Practice in defining what privilege is. But he doesn't establish that the minister breached privilege. He quotes Erskine May on page 251 in attempting to argue that the minister's conduct in a response in question period was disrespectful in such a way as to have breached the privileges of the Assembly; however, he ought to have continued reading, Mr. Speaker. He would have found that his own dissatisfaction in terms of the answers to questions in question period is most definitely not grounds for a point of privilege.

O'Brien and Bosc at page 510:

Members may not insist on an answer nor may a Member insist that a specific Minister respond to his or her question. A Minister's refusal to answer a question may not be questioned or treated as the subject of a point of order or question of privilege.

It continues, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker ensures that replies adhere to the dictates of order, decorum and parliamentary language. The Speaker, however, is not responsible for the quality or content of replies to questions. In most instances, when a point of order or a question of privilege has been raised in regard to a response to an oral question, the Speaker has ruled that the matter is a disagreement among Members over the facts surrounding the issue. As such, these matters are more a question of debate and do not constitute a breach of the [rule] . . . of privilege.

There are a couple of other comments, Mr. Speaker. Ministers are not required to provide answers that the members opposite may necessarily like. Parliamentary Privilege in Canada states at page 223, "The alleged lack or unsatisfactory nature of a reply to an oral or written question is not a question of privilege, because the practice of the House does not compel a reply." I think that the minister has been very clear about the constraints placed on her in this situation, in the context of an ongoing investigation, and I think it is abundantly clear that just because the members opposite don't like the answer, that doesn't mean their privileges have been breached.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the hon. third-party House leader quotes from various books on obstruction. His claim is that he has been impeded in his duty as an MLA seeking information on a matter of importance to himself and the people who elected us to this House. He argues, "The minister was clearly obstructing the members of this House in the discharge of their duties. Every member of this House has a duty to speak out on issues of importance to Albertans." As proof of obstruction he argues that the minister delayed in answering questions or refused to share information. First of all, Mr. Speaker, that's just simply not obstruction. Beginning at page 108 in O'Brien and Bosc is a discussion on obstruction and similar matters. To begin with, it's generally a reference to physical obstruction, assault, or molestation, items such as traffic barriers, security cordons, and picket lines that literally impede the ability of a member to access parliament or to discharge their duties.

While members may want particular information related to a policy or program, that does not mean that receiving the information is fundamental to their duties as a member. On that point O'Brien and Bosc discuss on page 117 the multiple responsibilities and duties of members, including those related to their constituency work. They point to a ruling from July 15, 1980, when Speaker Sauvé told the Chamber, "Whatever duty a member has to his constituents, before a valid question of privilege arises in respect [to] alleged interference, such interference must relate to the member's parliamentary duties." In other words, just because accessing specific information may be important to the individual, that does not make it a fundamental part of their duties or privileges as a member, Mr. Speaker.

In conclusion, I don't believe that any of the points raised by the hon. House leader for the third party meet the test of privilege, which, again, is quite high. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The House leader for the Official Opposition.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me just begin by reminding folks exactly why we're here and of some of the statements that were made by the minister which have created some significant concern for many members inside this Chamber. It can be found on page 966 of Hansard, when she said in response to the question from the Leader of the Opposition, "I want to urge the members again to be aware of spreading inaccurate information . . . I will be sharing more information about this matter this afternoon." Ultimately, how the opposition is able to do our jobs representing the views of Albertans is in question here. The minister is clearly withholding information from the Chamber. Clearly stating that she "will be sharing more information about this matter this afternoon" gives an indication to every member of the Assembly that she had the information available to her at that point.

Mr. Speaker, question period is one of the only opportunities in the day in which the opposition has the opportunity to ask the government questions and, as such, hold the government to account. The very fact that the minister would withhold information from the Leader of the Official Opposition and others and openly acknowledge that she would be providing that information to members of the media and not to this Chamber directly affects the ability of the member to hold the government to account in the line of questioning that he may or may not have chosen to take during question period.

We in effect are told by that minister that they're not going to provide details to the House, but it's okay for them to go to the press and provide them the details, essentially saying: you can all tune in later when I tell Albertans what I wasn't willing to tell you. This clearly shows contempt for the Assembly. I won't go on at length today, Mr. Speaker, about this point of privilege because I think that it is clear that there is a tradition inside the Chamber that we ought to provide information to the Chamber and not to the media in advance of providing that information to the Assembly, particularly when she acknowledged that she had it.

It's significantly different from a funding announcement that the government may engage in, where the government makes a decision that they will be rolling out a policy announcement or otherwise. We were in the Chamber at the time that the Minister of Children's Services said: "No. I'm not going to tell you; I'm going to tell the media later today." That directly and intentionally affected the Leader of the Opposition's ability to execute his duties on that day.

We heard the Minister of Justice, the Acting Deputy House Leader, speak at length about answering questions and what their ability was to do. I'd just like to point to a reference in Beauchesne's for you that she neglected to bring up, mostly because it doesn't support her arguments – all the same, it is there and available to you – when it speaks specifically about the government's responsibilities when it comes to answering questions. Mr. Speaker, if you're following along in Beauchesne's this afternoon or tomorrow or later today, it can be found on page 25. The heading is Interfering with Members, notation 97.

The Speaker has stated: "While it is correct to say that the government is not required by our rules to answer written or oral questions, it would be bold to suggest that no circumstances . . . like we may have seen the Minister of Justice recommend today

. . . could ever exist for a prima facie question of privilege to be made where there was a deliberate attempt to deny answers to an Hon. Member . . .

which is exactly what we saw from the Minister of Children's Services when she did not answer the question of my colleague, the Leader of the Official Opposition, but said – and I'm paraphrasing here – "I'm not going to answer your question; I will answer that question later in a media conference." What we saw was a deliberate attempt to deny an answer to my colleague, and while I can appreciate that the government is not required, there are certainly references available to you that provide evidence that that limit is not boundless, as the government has suggested.

It's my recommendation, Mr. Speaker, that you do find a prima facie case of privilege and that this issue be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing so that situations like this, where the government is not providing the answers that are rightly deserved, could be heard there.

The Speaker: Hon. members, upon assuming this responsibility, I was told that in this House points of privilege happen very infrequently. I must tell you that we've had far more than I would have expected in these last two years.

There were some very strong, cogent arguments made with respect to this matter. I will be taking your points under consideration and in due course will report back to the House.

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 204 Protection of Property Rights Statutes Amendment Act, 2017

[Debate adjourned May 8: Mr. Dach speaking]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my privilege to stand today and speak about Bill 204, Protection of Property Rights Statutes Amendment Act, 2017. There have been a number of points made by both opposition and my own caucus colleagues, and I just want to kind of start off the conversation pretty broad and then get a little bit more detailed as I go along.

As those that have been aware of work that's gone on in this Legislature for the last 10 years know, we have members that are sitting as ministers now that have been long-time advocates for property rights in Alberta. They have stood up for landowners, and we as members will continue to do so because we do believe in things like property rights, due process, proper notification, and fair compensation. The government has already begun working with stakeholders to try to make these positive changes on important issues, and it's very important that we do this to make Albertans' lives better and ensure the public has access to appropriate protections and avenues for resolution where issues arise involving private property, Madam Speaker.

Last we left off, we were speaking about adverse possession. As was talked about, I'm sure that all of us in this Chamber have had constituents come into our offices to talk about adverse possession, urging us to make very substantive changes that would protect property rights, and members of this government are very interested in making changes that will satisfy that call. But, of course, any amendments that we see come before this House: they do impact many pieces of legislation often, and it's quite important to the House to consider all of what these necessary policy implications might be.

For example, when I'm looking at the bill, I'm not quite sure how ongoing issues that arise in boundary and occupancy disputes will be addressed and resolved if we were to go ahead and make these changes. Currently section 69 of the Law of Property Act provides the mechanisms needed to resolve disputes where improvements have been made on the wrong piece of land. Sometimes this may have been a result of past survey errors. Sometimes it may have been an unrecorded understanding that happened in early generations between neighbours that can no longer be identified. The fact is, unfortunately, that we know that mistakes can happen.

I do understand that section 69 was originally enacted after a property owner ended up obtaining a house that someone else had actually built, Madam Speaker. There needs to be a way of resolving these situations fairly. The current law might not be the best, but we can't do away with it without a lot of consideration. If we're seeking to protect one landowner who historically owned that land, we shouldn't do it in a way that is entirely unfair to the other landowner who mistakenly could occupy or use it.

I'm concerned that these amendments would potentially hand over one hard-working person's investment to another party without due process that would protect both parties' interests. Many of these situations, after all, aren't about government or industry versus landowners; they can be landowner versus landowner. So we need to make sure that we get this right and be fair to both sides. However, Bill 204 does not seem to outline the impact of section 69, and that's just the tip of the iceberg on this issue. Establishing the necessary facts in such disputes is a difficult process, and even if the facts are established, section 69 may not cover all situations. I would not want to leave these neighbours without a process for addressing these concerns, Madam Speaker.

I would like to shift focus now to the Limitations Act, which sets out claims that would be brought within 10 years for an owner to claim return of possession of land from an adverse possessor, which is someone who occupies land that they do not own and under the doctrine of adverse possession might acquire an interest in that land if certain criteria are not met. The doctrine of adverse possession requires an owner to take timely action to enforce ownership and possession of the land, often through court action if an agreement with the adverse possessor cannot be reached. Bill 204 does not seem to set out a framework that would address disputes that may already be before the courts or claims that existed before the proposed amendments are supposed to take effect. More work absolutely seems to be needed to get this right.

Just as a recap of many of the points that have been made, it doesn't seem that Bill 204 addresses adverse possession in a holistic manner and as drafted would have unintended consequences for the very people that I believe the Legislature is trying to help. I already mentioned section 69 of the Law of Property Act as well as the Limitations Act and also the Land Titles Act, but also the other acts that might be impacted would be the Municipal Government Act, the Irrigation Districts Act, the Public Lands Act, and perhaps other acts. Adverse possession cannot be addressed through a single lens. Eliminating the doctrine of adverse possession is not a straightforward process and needs these careful considerations. It's complex and may open gaps and create unintended consequences for Albertans.

I just want to make a few notes also about the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, that the act is important for doing cumulative effects management and for managing the triple bottom line of the public's interest in social, environmental, and economic outcomes. For too long previous governments failed to manage the environmental and social outcomes of development on a cumulative effects basis, and we do need to do better in the public's interest and for the common good. It's a priority for this government, and regional planning is a cornerstone of this effort.

Bill 204 could bring in significant financial and legal risk for these regional planning efforts like the North Saskatchewan regional plan, for which we have just begun consultations, or for the lower Athabasca regional plan, which came into effect in 2012. Regional plans such as these are crucial to ensuring that all of the interests in a community are considered when planning for the long-term economic prosperity, environmental sustainability, and community well-being in different regions of the province. Also, what's important is developing these wide-ranging engagement tools for community stakeholders. Regional planning is also an important tool for ensuring Albertans have an ability to shape their communities, and that net needs to be preserved.

Bill 204 would create new rights to compensation in legal contexts where property rights were not intended. In fact, we don't even know what the bill would make the public liable for, and because the provision for compensation is so broad, it would require compensation for any losses, including for damages or other financial relief, so really this bill could leave the government and the public liable for compensation for the 86,000 active Crown mineral agreements that might be affected by a regional plan.

I would like to again thank the Member for Livingstone-Macleod. I understand and respect the intent behind his bill. Our government and caucus believe in protecting property rights, including due process, proper notification, fair compensation, and that is why the government has begun to work with stakeholders to make positive changes that would protect Albertans and respect property rights. The government is right now looking at how to better manage historic, current, and future liabilities associated with upstream oil and gas infrastructure, which is often located on private property, Madam Speaker.

To further support managing these liabilities, the government would be working with federal counterparts in securing $30 million to help address the rising inventory of orphan assets. We are waiting for the details of how that money will be used to benefit Alberta, and we know that this is just the beginning of the work that we need to do to benefit landowners, workers, and the environment.

We know that there is room for improvement in how property rights issues are addressed, and I would again like to thank the member for bringing forward this bill. Of course, as I've laid out, it leaves many unanswered questions, which is why I am happy to move an amendment in the House on this bill, Madam Speaker, and I have the requisite copies.

The Acting Speaker: If you can just wait one minute until the originals are at the table, please.

Thank you, hon. member. Your amendment will be referred to as RA1.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you. Could I speak to that amendment?

The NDP has always stood up for Alberta landowners, Madam Speaker. We're working to strike the right balance between individual property rights, the public interest, and responsible energy development with industry, which is why we have done so much to get to two pipeline approvals, because we have been able to get the public on our side. Balancing these very delicate interests is of critical importance, and that's why I'm concerned that the bill does not strike an appropriate balance, which is why I'm tabling this amendment.

As such, I move that the motion for second reading of Bill 204, Protection of Property Rights Statutes Amendment Act, 2017, be amended by deleting all of the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 204, Protection of Property Rights Statutes Amendment Act, 2017, be not now read a second time because the Assembly is of the view that the bill does not strike the right balance between individual property owner rights, industry's need for certainty and the public's need to protect Alberta's water and public lands.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak to amendment RA1? The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Yeah, I'm pleased to rise today in support of my colleague from Livingstone-Macleod's private member's bill and against the reasoned motion as it was just presented. You know, I struggle with where to start. Three things run through my mind, and the first of all is the hypocrisy of a government that four and five years ago was absolutely, totally against bills 36, 24, 19, and 50 and claimed, like the Wildrose opposition would at the time, that they would repeal them. I guess you're supporters of property rights only when it's convenient, supporters of property rights only when you don't have the opportunity to make government bigger, larger, have more ability to infringe on individual and property rights.

Certainly, we have the opportunity in this House to just vote against a bill. We have opportunities to make amendments to change it. You know, my question in question period today talked about how for five years I've been asking for the improvements on highway 61. Well, Madam Speaker, it's seven or eight years that I've had constituents from Cypress-Medicine Hat and Forty Mile county come to me with great, great concern about the infringement of property rights.

Again, when both the NDP and the Wildrose were in opposition, in an odd kind of way we seemed like we were allies to protect property rights. Obviously, we know the true NDP government position. Thank goodness the Wildrose position hasn't changed at all. We are here to protect property rights.

Why should we do this? You know, everywhere I go talking to people in the oil and gas business, people in industry, people looking for jobs, they are absolutely appalled at how this government has shattered confidence, confidence in not increasing taxes with the biggest per capita deficit in provincial Canadian history since World War II – I'm afraid they have to go even higher before this government decides to get spending in line – the confidence of an industry that might come here. Madam Speaker, as we all know, we've seen several international companies leave our jurisdiction in the last little while, taking their capital and their jobs with them. Stronger property rights would be a signal to these companies that this is the type of jurisdiction . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, sorry to interrupt.

Members, we are not in Committee of the Whole at the moment. Can you please return to your seats.

Hon. member, please continue.

Mr. Barnes: Okay. Thank you. Again, you know, the confidence that we could send to investors, to stockholders, to people to buy shares, to people that want to start small businesses that Alberta is a jurisdiction where government knows its limits and where government knows that the individuals and companies are happy to pay taxes, are happy to support families and communities, but they need certainty.

So the hypocrisy, the lack of confidence are two of the reasons that I will not be supporting this amendment.

The third reason. What I didn't hear the hon. member who introduced this talk about was what I saw, Madam Speaker, five and six years ago: 300, 400, 500 farmers and ranchers, hundreds of Albertans from the cities come to meetings to express their concern for the fact that these laws could not only take away their covenants that are attached to their titles to land that in some cases great-great-grandfather and great-great-grandmother homesteaded but actually without their full input to courts, to one of the hallmarks of a western democracy. Again, it was, like, 250 to 450 everyday Albertans, hard-working families, men and women who built this province, who felt that the prior government absolutely got the balance wrong. I think the balance was that they were trying to expedite so the government could do what they want quicker without paying the compensation they might need to.

I don't know. Fairness and equity, I think, are hallmarks of every Albertan. Yeah, sometimes things have to be done for the public good, but let's always treat those affected with fairness and equity, and the current status of bills 36 and 24 right now does not do that. My hon. colleague from Livingstone-Macleod is presenting some great solutions.

I mean, many, many people I talk to, Madam Speaker, would prefer just to repeal the bill still and start over and strengthen property rights. I think the hon. member found a way that might appeal to a party that believes in a bigger, more spending government, but obviously we're seeing clearly that the hypocrisy from the NDP, the lack of desire for individual and property rights, is going to continue. I fully expect it to continue through the next two years into the next election, and I fully expect that rural Albertans will once again see that the Wildrose is continuing to stand up on their behalf and continuing to stand up for stronger property rights, which means a stronger Alberta for all of us.

I will ask all of my hon. colleagues to vote against this amendment and return to supporting these excellent changes to the bill as proposed by my colleague from Livingstone-Macleod. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I hadn't spoken to Bill 204 previously, and I didn't because I have some questions and I wanted to have a better understanding of what the bill will actually do. Are there any unexpected consequences which may negatively affect my constituents and Albertans?

3:30

Now, I've had a number of people come into my office – some constituents; some from other constituencies – and they've both supported and not supported the bill, so I'm actually very happy with the amendment. The issue of adverse possession was certainly one of the things that came up. The story that was shared with me was that there was a development under way, and the surveyor came and did the survey lines for each of the pieces of property on this development, and there was – I don't know – I guess a snowstorm or something happened, and a contractor came in with a grader to grade the roads and, in fact, went over a couple of the survey poles, unbeknownst to the person operating the grader.

So the one house got built. The sticks were put back in the ground, the house was built, and then the person on the next property went to build a house and had their own surveyor come in to check because they felt like the property lines didn't quite align the way they had aligned when they bought the property. Sure enough, they were about two and a half to three feet over the line. But the house was built, a fence was built, and now the second property owner was about to build, and there was a problem. It didn't get resolved very civilly, and it cost both parties a fair amount of money in court arguing about it. I don't want that kind of thing happening to my constituents or to other Albertans. I would like to see those things fixed and, if we're going to have a bill, a bill that's going to address all of the issues.

First of all, I want to thank the Member for Livingstone-Macleod for bringing it up because we're having a discussion and a debate about this issue, and I think that's pretty important. Unfortunately, I'm not able to support your bill – I'm going to support the amendment – but I do think that it gave us the opportunity to discuss it and for us to put something together in future that really addresses all of these fine points in legislation like this. I'm standing up to support the amendment, and I'm sorry that I can't support your bill.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm just very disappointed. With the opportunity the government had here to simply send this bill to committee if they had concerns, we could have ironed out a lot of these issues that they had at committee before it came back for third reading or sent it to committee for a total rebuild of the legislation.

We've seen concerns over this government's ability to address property rights, you know, specifically to landowners out in the rural parts of the province, farmers' and ranchers' concerns over the green energy legislation. For example, I actually attended a town hall where the Farmers' Advocate and the AUC presented a PowerPoint really, really challenging farmers that before they signed any deals with these unscrupulous landmen – that's pretty much the way they put it – they make sure that they talk to their communities and don't have pitting of neighbour against neighbour or municipalities against landowners. Municipalities, when they're approached with these big green energy or even oil and gas projects, look at the linear assessment that they're going to get, and they can plan ahead for 10 years and bank on all this money coming in, but they don't really look at the rights of the landowners and how it's going to affect them.

Not only that, but when it comes to wind energy as well as oil and gas with the vent tanks, your neighbour may have a gas well or an oil well on his property, and you're living downwind from it, so you're the one that gets the benefit of all the vent gases that come off the tank. It's the same thing when it comes to wind energy. If there are any vibrations or – you know, some people say that they can feel the vibrations from this and it drives them crazy because they're living in close proximity to this. This is what pits neighbours against neighbours and communities against communities when it comes to that linear tax and trying to force this onto the landowners.

The other part that was very concerning about that was that if your neighbour agreed to a wind energy project and he was surrounded by other landowners and there was no access to the grid, they would then – once the agreement was signed, yeah, the property owner has a right to say yes or no to the wind energy program or plan, but the adjacent landowners have no right to block access to infrastructure to tie that wind farm into the grid. We're going to see this pitting neighbour against neighbour, pitting municipalities against their own constituents.

I would really caution members that we have an opportunity here. This amendment basically kills this bill. We've seen it happen before in this House, where a similar amendment was put forward to squash a bill, and the outcry from the province was enough to force them to backtrack and change their minds. We've seen how landowners can get motivated, how farmers can get motivated with Bill 6, and I think this is another one of those where you're going to see a huge backlash from landowners in the province. It extends. You know, this isn't a centralized issue. This is going to cover the entire province, and I think you're going to get a huge backlash over this when it becomes public that you're using this referral amendment to kill this bill rather than take it to committee and fix the issues.

If you have issues with it, that's fine. We can take that and have an open discussion on it and address those issues. You don't just introduce a bill – this puts every bill that's put forward by the opposition at risk of, you know, simply: we throw a referral motion against it, vote against it. Bang. The bill's dead. I think that Albertans are really going to take notice of this, and I think you're making a drastic mistake by voting for this amendment.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today in disappointment at the amendment here to essentially kill this bill. I think the amendment that we should be discussing right now perhaps is a referral to committee, where this bill can be thoroughly debated, discussed, we can bring in experts, whatever type of extra information that you need. I think Albertans are going to be extremely disappointed to hear that after the committee on economic future voted unanimously to put a recommendation forward to this Assembly to reverse the adverse possession, also known as squatter's rights, which this bill would address – and this is yet another example, Madam Speaker, of the government members supporting ideas, recommendations in areas they think are not as public as they actually are and then reversing their opinions in this Assembly, perhaps because they are instructed or told to do so.

I think that's extremely disappointing, Madam Speaker, and I think Albertans will not feel fairly represented when they find out that this government, when now actually asked to make a decision in legislation, is voting against property rights.

The Acting Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Airdrie, but under Standing Order 8(7)(a)(i), which provides up to five minutes for the sponsor of the private member's public bill to close debate, I would invite the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod to close debate on Bill 204.

Mr. Stier: Madam Speaker, are we talking about the amendment now, or are we closing debate on the bill?

The Acting Speaker: The reasoned amendment is on the floor, but traditional practice has been to allow you to close debate, and then we will vote on the reasoned amendment. The time is up for the private bill.

Mr. Stier: Okay. Thank you for this opportunity. Certainly, I respect the comments today from the hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville and the time she took to expand on and explain the situation.

I must say, as some of my colleagues have said already this afternoon, that we're pretty disappointed, and I am concerned about the backlash in the public for the decision that's being made today on this very important – very important – set of amendments, that we were hoping to get to Bill 36 and all of these other various acts that we were trying to fix up. It was basically a housekeeping bill, we thought, to try to, you know, kick up some of the main problems and clean those up. Anyway, you know, it only sought to restore some of the basic protections that we were looking for.

We've spent lots of time listening to what the government members have said, yet we hear some of the things and we just can't understand if there are any really good reasons why not to proceed with this as is. We could have, as some have said today, gone to a committee on it. We could have invited in special experts. We could have really made this, jointly, one of the best changes for property rights we've ever seen and really turned this situation around.

You know, it's strange that we think about property rights in such a fashion, where we're putting forward things like what the Member for Stony Plain said: "I worry that this bill looks at the issue from only the perspective of compensation for consent holders, missing other important perspectives like environmental protection and orderly development." In other words, Madam Speaker, the hon. Member for Stony Plain seems to believe in compensating property owners but not necessarily when property is being taken for environmental protection or development planning purposes. That's a contradictory statement. That's exactly when property rights need to be upheld; namely, the right to fair compensation when the government decides to sacrifice property or livelihood for the sake of everybody else. Every member considering voting against this bill should consider what it is they're telling Albertans.

The same member also expressed concern for private compensation for public good. Clearly, the member is not aware of water licences, as an example. Well, a water licence is basically a document that allows the holder to draw a specified amount of water from a water source. For an individual operating a farm, the ability to draw water is a pretty important aspect to being able to sustain life, and it's fundamental to the business. But currently the government can cancel a water licence and provide whatever compensation the minister wants, including absolutely none. If a farmer can no longer provide water to his herd or irrigate his crops, that's a devastation to his business. Bill 204 does not at all affect the government's ability to take the licence; it just ensures that they will provide fair compensation for sacrificing this person's business. Should the government not have some responsibility to compensate the farmer or businessman for their loss of livelihood, I ask?

I would have hoped that we would have all been able to agree on that fundamental point of ensuring that we can take care of individuals as we pursue some notion of common good, but it doesn't appear that way. A proper referral to a committee motion or amendment would have been something that we would have supported. We could have all met and decided how we could move forward with this and clean this situation up. Instead, what we're faced with today is not the appropriate course of action, in my opinion.

I'm extremely disappointed, Madam Speaker, and I will be voting against the amendment that was presented if that comes up, and I'll be bringing forward some other kind of legislation in the future to correct what has happened today.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Bill 205

Advocate for Persons with Disabilities Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is my pleasure to stand and move second reading of Bill 205, Advocate for Persons with Disabilities Act.

Establishing an advocate, I believe and many of my caucus members also believe, hopefully all of them, is going to make life better for Albertans and provide much-needed support for people with disabilities and their families in this province.

Madam Speaker, the bill would establish an advocate for persons with disabilities in Alberta with the power to represent the rights, the interests, and the viewpoints of persons with disabilities. This bill proposes a new advocate position that would report to and advise the Minister of Community and Social Services. The bill will support the ongoing work of the Ministry of Community and Social Services as well.

Now, the final report of the persons with developmental disabilities, PDD, safety standards consultation in 2016 identified and recommended that advocacy is critical within the PDD community to ensure that individuals with disabilities are supported to lead more fulfilling lives. In fact, recommendation 10 of that report asked the government of Alberta to investigate the creation of a formal advocate for persons with disabilities, and Bill 205 aims to do just that.

I'd like to say that my colleague the MLA for St. Albert has been an advocate in this area for a very long time. She took part in the PDD safety standards consultation. Shortly she is going to be speaking to Bill 205, and I can't wait to hear what she has to say because I don't believe there's anyone in this Chamber who has more knowledge and background than the Member for St. Albert. It was truly wonderful to work with her on this. This bill is the culmination as much of her efforts as anyone else's, and I'm absolutely excited and looking forward to hearing what she has to say.

Now, what does the bill do? That's the question. The advocate would have a mandate, and that mandate is to:

- (a) identify and study issues of concern to persons with disabilities . . .
- (b) review programs and policies affecting persons with disabilities;
- (c) participate in processes in which decisions are made [with respect to] persons with disabilities;
- (d) promote the rights, interests and well-being of persons with disabilities through public education;
- (e) provide information and advice to the Government with respect to any matter relating to the rights, interests and well-being of persons with disabilities; [as well as]
- (f) assist individuals who are having difficulty accessing services and related programs for persons with disabilities, including directing them to an appropriate resource, person or organization [that may be able to help them].

Madam Speaker, I began working on this when I was a member of a different caucus and began my consultations back then, and I have been lucky enough to have the opportunity to have conversations with a lot of people about what exactly this advocate should be doing and where the gaps and the holes are. Certainly, I know that many of them are watching today, and I do want to thank them because so many of them really informed the work that I did. When we talk about consultation, it was the consultation that began the quest to get this bill done in the first place. It was consultation all the way through, and the consultation is ongoing. This is a fine example of that.

I also had a lovely conversation with my colleague across the aisle from Chestermere-Rocky View, who, of course, has a lot of knowledge about this area as well, and I certainly took her comments to heart when we were having these discussions. You know, I'm really hoping that this conversation that we have is a postpartisan conversation about how we move this bill forward so that it does what it needs to do for the constituents of all 87 of us in this Chamber.

We know that with an advocate we can help identify barriers to access to information, and we know that this person will be able to provide advice to government on all sorts of issues where that advice is desperately needed. Just as important, the advocate is going to identify issues of concern that come up over and over again, and our ability to take care of those issues, to find really good common-sense solutions comes when we have the ability to sit down and say: we see a pattern here and an opportunity to create some much-needed change.

By having an advocate, Albertans with disabilities will have a point person; for instance, when a teen transitions into adulthood. I heard from so many of the service providers that there are an awful lot of difficulties in areas of transition. We know that when we see a pattern like that forming, if we have the ability to sit down and come up with some good, workable solutions to those problems, we help people over their lifespan, and that is critically important. For instance, there are people who need help navigating government programs and services, and I hear this.

I met with a number of people in my constituency who worry. Not all people with disabilities have an advocate in their home or in their community, and even for those who do, a lot of those folks often are parents, and at a certain point they're saying to me: I worry about what happens when I'm not around anymore and my child needs an advocate. All the preplanning in the world cannot prepare you for problems that can come up in the future, so that's why this conversation around advocacy becomes so important.

According to the latest Canadian survey of people with disabilities done by Statistics Canada, there are approximately 436,000 adults with disabilities and 31,000 children with disabilities right here in this province. Now, those stats were done in 2012. It'd be interesting to see them updated because, certainly, five years later we believe that those numbers have gone up. Although government staff and contracted service providers are providing ongoing case management supports, including identifying and responding to the changing needs of individuals and families, we do need to do more. We recognize that, and we want to. That's the importance of a bill like this.

This government is collaborating with partners in Health, Education, and Community and Social Services to ensure that the needs of individuals who require supports from more than one ministry get those supports without having to go to individual ministries and do that work piecemeal. Having an advocate is going to help with that task, and it's also going to be a great addition to the system that is striving to make life better for Albertans with disabilities.

The government is prioritizing access to services for individuals with disabilities. There are a number of programs in the province right now to support individuals, including the family support for children with disabilities, the FSCD. There are 13,400 families in that particular group. The persons with developmental disabilities group, PDD, has 11,300 people. The residential access modification program has 570 people. Of course, if this bill is passed, this will establish an advocate that will help make all of the services tailored to Albertans living with disabilities and access to these services easier to manage. The disability community would have a direct ear to turn to for assistance in this province.

I'm very pleased to bring this forward and look forward to the conversation about this bill and what folks have to say on both sides of the aisle because I do believe that we all have people in our communities with disabilities. When we have a good, fulsome conversation about this and get to a place where we can move the disability community forward and put an advocate in place, we all benefit, the province benefits, and we are better for it.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm very pleased to stand and speak in support of this important new role, that's obviously been much needed for many years given the history of some of the complaints and concerns not only with respect to PDD but AISH as well. With PDD, in particular, there's been lots of demand for change, access to supports, recognition of the role of family and community, and this would certainly give greater voice, greater attention, greater influence and understanding of what's working and what's not working in the system by someone so directly involved with these most vulnerable folks. It obviously gives the advocate the power to represent the interests and rights of people with disabilities and to advocate for change where it's needed, not least in individual cases where people are not getting their needs met, where families are not feeling properly listened to and responded to.

Programs and policies, obviously, in some cases need to be changed, but certainly their basic rights and their well-being have to be at the forefront and need strong advocacy. There's no question that the measure of a civilization, the measure of a society is how well we take care of those folks. We have advocates for health, for seniors, for mental health. We have an advocate for children in care. This is another vulnerable population that clearly needs to have some independent leadership and advocacy.

To be sure, I need to comment on not only the role but the resources given to this person. If it's anything like the resources given to the mental health advocate, it's a shame because the mental health advocate has been able to do almost nothing in the last few years because of receiving the same resources they have for the last 25 years. In name we have a mental health advocate, but the mental health advocate has been hamstrung by a lack of resources and ability to formally investigate complaints about the mental health system and in some cases the abuse of people's rights as persons. Whatever we do, let this not be a token, as I feel the mental health advocate has become in this province.

The Health Advocate: also very limited resources except to refer these people to different bodies, including the college of physicians, the college of nursing, various colleges that are supposed to oversee the quality of care, the quality of response to health issues. The Seniors Advocate: similarly. If we're going to provide these advocates' offices, let them be properly resourced, evaluated, and properly increased as the population increases. It's a travesty that in 25 years we see the mental health advocate, for example, still dealing with two staff when the population has increased phenomenally and the number of mental health issues has increased exponentially in the last 25 years. Let's ensure that we get value for money and ensure that the people who are in this position have the resources to do their job.

I also, I guess, have to wonder how much this is an effort to address the Auditor General's stinging criticism of AISH in the past, and rightly so. It looks like an important initiative that is going to address the criticisms of the Auditor General, and I sincerely hope it will be. Again, it depends on finding the right person and staffing appropriately and finding the resources to do this. I think it's an important initiative. It sends the right message to people with a disability and their families. Let's just make sure that it's done with the generosity and the research and the capacity that is needed for this large population.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak to Bill 205, the Advocate for Persons with Disabilities Act. Now, as MLAs we are elected to represent our constituents and to advocate on their behalf, and that's not always easy as you try to interface with government and the bureaucracy that's there. Often it's very difficult for our constituents to work through and to work with government. I know that nothing gives me more pleasure at the constituency level in this job than to help one of my constituents navigate the maze of government regulations and the red tape and try to access the services that they are indeed needing. I believe that Bill 205 is intended to provide Albertans with disabilities with an advocate to help them access government services and that would ensure that the government is working for them and not against them.

I rise today to speak in favour of this bill. I believe that Bill 205 will advocate for and help to advocate for and represent the rights and the interests and the viewpoints of persons with disabilities, and we know that that's often a very important thing that needs to happen. It's difficult for someone that is not facing a disability in their life to do this. When you have a variety of disabilities that make that more difficult, it's indeed important to have an advocate in your corner. I believe that in this bill the advocate will be able to identify and study various issues of concern to the person with a disability and to help to recommend appropriate action and a course of action for that individual. They can review programs and policies, they can be a participant in the process with this individual, and they can help to promote the rights and the interests and the well-being of that individual.

As I look at this bill, I see that there are many ways that this advocate can indeed step into the gap, perhaps, that this individual would not be able to deal with. I believe that when we take a look at other portfolios within the government, other areas, we see that there's a Farmers' Advocate, a Child and Youth Advocate, a Seniors Advocate, a Health Advocate, so I can see the benefits of creating an advocate for persons with disabilities. I know that government is hard to navigate, and it's magnified when you are suffering from a disability.

I think of one of the constituents that walked into my office about a year and a half ago or two years ago, and if it wasn't for the fact that his parents were involved in his life, he would have had significant difficulties in navigating through the systems of government that were necessary for him to get the help that he needed. I don't believe this is uncommon, and I believe that it speaks to the necessity of having somebody within the government apparatus that can help these individuals work their way through to receive the help that we want to give them and that they deserve.

I believe the advocate will reduce the demands on time that the programs and the services and the regulations and the policies place on families. It will reduce the time and the demands on families. It will help them to be able to seek the help that is needed for the loved ones that they are concerned about.

For those that do not have family to advocate on behalf of them, the advocate can assume that role to ensure that they have access to the programs and the services that should be appropriately theirs. You know, an example of this as it's come through my office has been those that are looking to apply for AISH. There are over 55,000 Albertans that count on AISH to help them survive. In 2016 there were over 12,000 applications for the AISH program. In October 2016 the Auditor General released a report on how to improve the AISH program, and I believe that the Auditor General's report is a good example of how Albertans find difficulty in negotiating through the complexities of government, especially with this program, and would be helped by an advocate.

The Auditor General identified several concerns. One of them was the need to improve program accessibility in AISH, that there was a problem with receiving the appropriate information that would allow the AISH program to be accessible and to be user friendly. He identified the need to simplify the AISH application process. I believe that in this case an advocate for persons with disabilities would be able to help them proceed through something like the AISH application process.

The Auditor General came out with a second recommendation. It said that there need to be improvements in the eligibility procedures and guidelines, that AISH did not have the adequate standards to track and monitor application processing times, and that the staff did not receive sufficient training when assessing applications. Because of that, it's made it more difficult for people to be able to apply and to work through the process. I believe an advocate could help an individual work their way through that.

I believe that AISH is just one example of how there can be internal issues within a bureaucracy of the government that can make it more difficult for Albertans to access and to receive the benefits from a government program that they both need and deserve, so I would speak, Madam Speaker, to this bill and its ability to help Albertans.

Of course, AISH is not the only program; it is just one. We have all sorts of programs. For instance, Community and Social Services offers disability services and supports related to employment for families of people with children with disabilities, for fetal alcohol syndrome disorder, for residential modifications. An advocate will help Albertans and their families cut through the red tape that's necessary to be able to provide the accessibility that they need in a much more timely fashion. So I can see some of the real positives of moving forward with this.

Bill 205 will help Albertans who don't know how to access the information and supports. It will help to address some of the inefficiencies and disorganization that have been identified by the Auditor General. It will help persons with disabilities by aligning with other government advocates who are there to help the vulnerable in Alberta. Perhaps as importantly, it will provide for public education to promote the rights and the interests and the well-being of persons with disabilities.

I guess that if there is one concern – and it's one that I would like the House to consider – it would be that in Bill 205 this is not an independent advocate that we're setting up. I'm wondering if maybe we shouldn't be reconsidering having a little more distance and making this person independent. We've maintained as the Wildrose that the role of an advocate should be independent of government, that this would ensure that issues are dealt with fairly and consistently and with transparency, and that the role of the advocate would be strengthened by this independence.

I believe that we should consider that, that we would continue from this side of the House to voice our concerns over that issue. We would believe that any advocate must report, and I think reasonably so, to the Legislature and have the authority and the autonomy to investigate complaints, the ability to perform system-wide audits and to explore better ways for the delivery of care for these individuals. So it's something that I would suggest to the House we should maybe consider as we move forward.

You know, I think all of us probably at some point in time, as we've gone through life, have had people that have disabilities. I can think of one, and it's the reason that I stand up here today to support this bill. This individual came into my life about 30 years ago. He has a brain injury, and for all of the things that are stacked against this individual . . . [Mr. Smith's speaking time expired]

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to stand up. I'd just like to thank the Member for Calgary-North West for this bill. I couldn't be any happier, and I don't think we spend nearly enough time in this House talking about people with disabilities, so thank you. I also think that history is important, so I'm going to refer back a little bit because I think it's where we come from. We learn a lot about ourselves, and I think we learn a lot about charting the right course forward.

Just a few years ago people with disabilities and their allies by the thousands rallied the government on some very key issues around people with disabilities, and that was that they were telling the government to consult. They needed an advocate. They needed someone to speak on their behalf. They desperately wanted somebody to speak on their behalf. As you know, the disability rights movement really began in the '70s and '80s. Deinstitutionalization was fuelled by the powerful voices of people with disabilities, their allies and families. Let's not forget about the time the government wanted to stifle those voices of people with disabilities following Leilani O'Malley Muir's successful battle.

The reality prior to that was segregation, sterilization, rampant abuse, and isolation. Still, we have much ground to cover in order for Canadians with disabilities to experience the same rights and access that Canadians without disabilities enjoy. The opposition gets annoyed when we refer to the actions of the previous government. The reality is that they own many of the complex issues facing people with disabilities today in Alberta. It is important to remember our history. They talk a lot about the Alberta advantage. When I think about the Alberta advantage, I know it was not advantageous for people with disabilities. I seem to remember the PCs trimming about 70,000 people from welfare rolls.

So why do we need an advocate? There are so many reasons. I participated in the PDD safety standards review. We needed a review because of what the previous government introduced without even five minutes of consultation with Albertans with disabilities. In an attempt to keep people with disabilities safe, they introduced standards that set us on a dangerous path. One of the standards required people with disabilities in the community to have fire suppression on the same level as massive institutions. One man in his condo, owned by his dad, living by himself with staff got an estimate of about $20,000 to renovate his condo to meet these standards. That year the previous government spent over a million dollars on mixing valves for hot water tanks. That was directly related to the safety standard that was brought in without consultation, and there was no one to advocate.

Examples of the previous government: I just want to remind you a little bit. A few years ago, when we all started rallying out here and all across Alberta, it was because the previous government wanted to cut community access. Their solution to that, one of the solutions to that, was to create an employment focus group. That focus group was made up of people from the business community, some experts in disability, but I didn't see anybody with a disability on that committee. The previous government introduced things like the supports intensity scale assessment, the quality-of-life index, and, my favourite, the PDD transformational plan. None of these things were done in consultation with Albertans with disabilities. We need to learn from that because we need to do a lot better.

I'm going to give you some examples of the times when we needed an advocate, when we desperately needed an advocate. Yeah, I was in the sector for a very long time, and I had the fortune of meeting a lot of people. I'm going to share the stories of some people that are no longer with us, but I think their lives have a lot of meaning, and we can learn a lot from them.

I met Susan W. about 20 years ago. She was a woman who had acquired a serious brain injury. She was married at the time, and due to her acquired disability she was unable to get the support she needed to navigate the justice system. She wanted to divorce her husband – she did remember that part from before the injury – and she wanted to get some control, retain some control of the business and the assets she shared with her husband. She could not. She did not have a family, and she did not have allies at the time. The justice system is difficult for all of us to manage when it comes time for us to be there. You can imagine someone with an acquired brain injury, with problems with speech and memory and physical mobility. It was almost impossible, so she relied on a paid service provider, whose role isn't necessarily to do that.

Joanne L. was another woman I met. She's a woman that had Down syndrome, and her family was told when she was born that she wouldn't live very long, but she did. When she got to her 50s, she presented with symptoms of dementia and was eventually diagnosed with Alzheimer's. It was extremely difficult to get an appointment to see a specialist and to get her access to the medication that would slow the disease. Why? Because she had a disability. We were actually told by the doctors that, you know, she really did have enough to worry about given that she had a disability. Needless to say, people around her advocated when there wasn't a systemic advocate or advocacy system in place, and we were able to get the support she needed. The result was that she died at home surrounded by people who knew her and cared for her. I think we learned a lot from that. But service providers are not always the best advocates, and families are not always in the best place to do that.

Patrick H. was another man that I met. He was actually a triplet, and there were two of them left. He moved to the city and to a service provider when his elderly parents could no longer care for him. There wasn't any family left. He was new to the city, so a nephew that he hardly knew and had little contact with was assigned to him to be his informal trustee. He was on AISH, of course, so after expenses he was left with approximately $200 a month. Over the few years that this nephew was his informal trustee, that $200 that was left over each month dwindled away. His service provider reported and spoke to the people in power at the time, and nothing could be done. So at his age – he was also in his 50s – he had zero savings. He did not have $20 in his account, and he should have. Eventually we had to get a lawyer to have the informal trustee removed. Now, thankfully, he had a provider that was able to do that; not everybody does. An advocate would have been ideal in that situation.

Paul was another person I met, originally from the Wabasca-Desmarais area, and he had been in a severe accident and was a quadriplegic, had a significant spinal cord injury. He was moved to a supportive living facility where most of the residents were about 30 years older than him. He had no assistance maintaining contact with his family. There was no cultural awareness or attempts to link him with appropriate supports. There was no advocate for him.

Sonny was another fellow. He died in his 20s, actually. He moved to Alberta from Quebec, and he died after being sent home from the hospital twice. He had gone because he was not feeling well. He couldn't express himself properly – he had cerebral palsy; he was tough to understand – and he went by himself or he went with his staff. He did not get the assistance he needed. I'm certainly not blaming the hospital or the staff at the hospital. I'm certain they did their best. He went home. He was by himself. He was weak from illness. He fell into a piece of furniture and died as a result of an internal injury. He was in his 20s. He needed an advocate. He needed an advocate so badly. He had no family here.

Betty Anne Gagnon: I think that if we don't learn a lot from this woman, we don't deserve to be here.

Young men and women who have public or private guardians being told that they can't have relationships because they have guardians: that's why we need an advocate. People in hospital without advocates around them are taken off life support very quickly. I don't think the same discussions are had as when a person without a disability is facing that decision. People with disabilities are unable to get support for a mental illness because they have a disability. Birth control is often difficult to get or refused because people have a disability.

My brother, who had a significant mental illness and disability, was released from hospital because he was stable a few days after a suicide attempt, only to successfully die by suicide when he was released. I am certainly not blaming providers for that at all. It is a system, and it's a system without strong advocates.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak on Bill 205, the Advocate for Persons with Disabilities Act. In my view, it's an act whose time has come. I would even say that it's overdue by 40 or 50 years, but the second-best time after 40 or 50 years ago is today. I congratulate the member for bringing it forward because this is an act that a lot of Albertans, I believe, if it is put into place correctly, will benefit from, and those are people that in many cases very much need an advocate.

Madam Speaker, just as a small piece of housekeeping and not to panic the author of the bill, if you go on the Assembly website right now to the status of bills, it shows that Bill 205, the Advocate for Persons with Disabilities Act, is defeated on second reading today. Let's make sure that that doesn't come to pass because that's what the website says. I certainly am one who will be in favour of this act.

There are lots of things to like about the act, but one of my favourite things is section 6(1), the review of the act, which says:

Within one year of the Advocate's appointment under section 2(1), the Advocate shall prepare a report evaluating the effectiveness of this Act that includes any amendments and recommendations relating to persons with disabilities that the Advocate considers appropriate.

Of course, that would be submitted to the Speaker of the Legislature, and we'll all get to see it. It's my hope that this will allay some of the fears of my colleague from the Liberal Party, who was concerned about the advocate not having any effect, because when we see that report a year from now, then of course it will all be in front of us. We'll all have the responsibility to take action on it in this place and then out in the world, where, actually, people with disabilities live, who will be needing that help.

I don't want to be misunderstood, so I want to make it very clear that I'm not a fan of reviewing the act in a year because I think it's bad; rather, I'm a fan of reviewing the act within a year because it's important. I'm sure that the act in its current form will cause very much improvement for very many Albertans who have disabilities now and whose voices don't get heard, but I also think that we will learn a lot as we go. I know that we heard in debate today examples of when things have not always been done well in the past, and I think that as we evolve and we learn and we improve, we need to do that.

I am reminded of a time when we were dealing with infrastructure changes at city hall and some of the city-owned buildings when I was on council in Calgary. I and some of my colleagues made some suggestions for improvements. While I felt good about them, a friend of mine who was part of a disabled persons' advocacy group – I think it was disability hall if my memory serves me – invited me to a meeting to talk about that, where, Madam Speaker, they schooled me big time on what I didn't know because nobody can explain what disabled people need better than a group of disabled people that are organized can explain. I can assure you that they did their very best to pry some of that knowledge into my mind, and it made quite an impression upon me.

I see this bill as an extension of that personal learning experience that I have had, and it will give me an opportunity, along with, I believe, other members of this House, to learn more in the future and to make more changes that will benefit those people in Alberta with disabilities, who very much need and deserve to have those changes put into place.

[Mr. Sucha in the chair]

A little later on we will have, I believe, Madam Speaker – Mr. Speaker, sorry; we just changed players in the chair there – a couple of minor amendments, ones that I'm hopeful the mover of the bill will agree with. I would assure all members of the House now that those will have the intent of making slight adjustments, we believe, one hundred per cent within the intent of the creator of the bill. We'll bring them forward in the spirit of co-operation. I think somebody from the government side said that this should be a nonpartisan issue, and I believe that they were correct in so saying. For my part, I will be pleased to be supporting this bill because it's one of those opportunities that we get in this House to actually, demonstrably make Alberta better, and because of that, I thank the mover of the bill for bringing it forward.

The Acting Speaker: The chair will recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It really is a pleasure and privilege to speak in favour of Bill 205, the Advocate for Persons with Disabilities Act. I want to very much thank the hon. member for bringing this forward and recognize the work that the Member for St. Albert has done and her strong advocacy and action that she has taken on behalf of people with disabilities. That action, I know, predates her time in this Assembly by a lot. It's very much appreciated. The Member for Calgary-North West bringing this forward as well: I know this is something that you're very passionate about, and I thank you very much for bringing this forward.

But for the vagaries of private members' bill draws – and I think that if I'm to see my private member's bill this session come up, it will probably be the spring of 2023 by the time my bill would be up. I didn't do as well. This is, quite interestingly, one of the ideas that we had talked about with my team as well should we get high enough up in the bill draw. Without question, I absolutely, enthusiastically, of course, will support this bill.

It addresses both issues that people who have disabilities deal with on a daily basis. Those are some of the issues that they will deal with today, right now, on a daily basis, but what I like about the advocate role is that it will address challenges that people with disabilities and their families and loved ones and caregivers deal with on an ongoing basis. They're the kind of thing that, unfortunately, will likely always require someone to advocate for people with disabilities.

I can tell you from the work that we do in my constituency office – and I imagine that all members very likely deal with some of these challenges through their constituency offices and in their work as members – that the various programs and services that are available really are confusing for people with disabilities. They're confusing for people who advocate for those people or who are their friends and family. Anything we can do to have an advocate role similar to the Seniors Advocate's, the mental health advocate's, to parts of the role of the Child and Youth Advocate and others I think can only be a positive thing.

There are a couple of examples that I noted as I prepared for this debate today. There have been many challenges raised to my office about the transition from services that are available when you're under 18 to the services that are available when you turn 18. The person's needs haven't changed, but the funding sources change, the programs that are available change. Sometimes families and people with disabilities find that they have less in the way of services. An advocate can certainly help not only people who are dealing with the transition to navigate the system as it is now, but they can also help advocate for change from government to ensure that that transition is far smoother, that services are provided in a way that's much more consistent, that better meets the needs of the variety of different people with different needs.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The other example is a constituent of mine who has raised with me the issue of building codes. She's in a wheelchair and has troubles with buildings that are officially built to Alberta's building codes. She finds that doors perhaps will open in the wrong direction in certain buildings, and she'll end up in a vestibule in what she calls squish-me doors. She finds that she can't push the button, wheel out of the way, and then wheel back in and get, actually, through the door. Now, the building meets the building code – no one is breaking any rules – but does she actually have access? Is that building, in fact, accessible to her? The answer in many cases is no.

These are just a couple of examples that I thought of as I reflected on what sorts of things a disability advocate could possibly do. The Member for Calgary-Mountain View, I think rightly, has raised the question of resourcing in ensuring that this is not just a token position, that it's not just there in name only, that in fact they have the tools they need to do the job, the resources they need to do the job, and as has been noted in debate, it's very likely that in giving appropriate resources to a disability advocate, we will actually save money.

It will actually not only improve the lives of people with disabilities, but it will actually save money, and I would hope that as we go through the debate and the discussion here, we can learn a little more about specifically where that can happen and actually what some of that cost-benefit calculation might look like. I think it's likely very compelling. Again, not only will we be helping on a human level, but we're also helping the government save money because we're improving people's quality of life. We're keeping them out of hospital, and we're ensuring that the services that they receive are most efficient and effective.

Enthusiastically, I will support Bill 205. Again I thank the Member for Calgary-North West for bringing it forward, and I look forward to listening to further comments.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm so happy to rise today to speak to this bill. I, again, would really like to thank the Member for Calgary-North West as well as the Member for St. Albert, especially, for her expertise in this. It's greatly appreciated.

I just want to say that because I'm a parent, I have to thank the Member for Calgary-Hays as well because we fundraised for autism for many years together, long before I was here. I've met many of you in just the last two years at so many functions throughout the city and the province advocating on behalf of special needs and our folks with disabilities. I think the ability to be here, the privilege to be in this House, elevates our understanding of the needs of these folks, the families, and everybody who surrounds them. It's a huge privilege to be here and to be able to speak to this. Thank you so much for bringing this bill forward.

One of the things I'd like to share is that when I was 28, that's when my son was born. He came into the world with curly hair and monster blue eyes. He was a beautiful child. Of course, we all think that of our children. I remember that as he grew, he was just a normal, functioning, you know, happy little baby, and then all of a sudden he disappeared one day. He completely disappeared. He couldn't remember any of the language that he had learned, the "mama" and all of that kind of language that babies learn. He just disappeared into himself completely. We lost him somewhere.

It was one of those days that I won't forget. All of a sudden it started to become apparent that he just wasn't connecting. His eyes wouldn't make eye contact. The one thing that I remember at that point was thinking: how do I find out about this? I'd been really fortunate in my lifetime that I'd worked with special-needs kids for a long, long, long time, so for me it was a matter of getting to the guts of it and finding out. For my husband, it was a completely different journey. He just didn't know how to deal with that.

One of the things that I noticed right from the beginning was that it was very hard to find people to learn about what to do with this munchkin. He was nine months old at that time, so we intervened very early on. I remember that when we went to the Dr. Gordon Townsend school in Calgary to learn about disabilities and who this little boy was going to be and who he was, a lot of the information that came out initially was extremely negative. And not because the people were negative. I honestly don't believe, Madam Speaker, that it was anything intentional. It's just that they were trying to put as much information together for you as they can. They told me that he may not speak, that he may not be able to walk or swim or do all of these things that his older brother, by 20 months, was doing at that point in time. As a mom you just draw your line in the sand, and you realize at that point that nobody is going to tell you what your kid can and can't do. The Member for Calgary-Mountain View, I believe, saw my son perform this weekend in Youth Singers on stage. I think he can probably attest that he's pretty strong. He's pretty awesome up there.

What happened, though, and probably what was most significant at the time were the parent connections that we made, but they were really difficult to find. The importance of having an advocate stretches so far beyond what we think an advocate needs to be. This advocate isn't only going to be a person that connects the dots and fills the gaps. For all of the facilitators that we've had come into our house – the OT, the PT, the speech paths – I mean, they lived at our house when my children were young. In fact, our speech pathologist is still one of my closest friends to this day. She's the reason, I think, my son can sing a song from end to end.

Those people are heroes in my world, and to have an advocate to be able to help parents – also, we are talking about other people with disabilities, with brain injuries, people who come into disabilities later on for all sorts of reasons. Having those gaps filled is imperative. I believe we had a good discussion about this, Madam Speaker, in estimates as well. We were going through the process of what goes on in the ministries of human services and Health and Education, that all of these ministries have a lot of different options, a lot of different availabilities but that nobody really knows how it all works together. This is a really great opportunity, hopefully, for that advocate to be able to bring that all together.

One of the things I wanted to also talk about a little bit – and this was in our stakeholder outreach, too – was sort of an interesting perspective, and I hope that it helps to ask some questions to strengthen the bill as well. When we're looking at disabilities as a sector, we are lacking a process for appeals. What I mean by that is that we need that process to respond to the concerns of quality of service and safety as well. That's one of those places, I feel, where those gaps really need to be addressed. That needs to have a mandate, and it needs to have a space.

I was excited when the bill was introduced. It's very exciting. There were some other things, too, that I wanted to ask about, and potentially as we go through debate and discussion over this, this will have some opportunity to be discussed. One of the things about the role, in my opinion – and I believe the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon also brought it up – is that I honestly feel this needs to be an independent person. If at all possible, that advocate needs to be independent so that it's not attached to the ministry and has the ability to avoid conflicts of interest and can make judgments based purely on that family, on the situation, on whatever is going on at that time. The persons with disabilities need to be able to interact in a way that is conducive to making sure that things get better for them.

Part of the problem – I mean, you all know this as well from having worked in this field or having talked to your stakeholders – is that there's such a runaround that ends up happening. I've just come through the process of AISH myself with my son, and it's a tricky situation. The paperwork and the number of people that you talk to – and it's the same discussion over and over again. When my child was young, I used to have to go in and advocate with FSCD and a lot of different associations to get funding for him at that time.

The hardest part of that, Madam Speaker, was that I had to advocate on what he couldn't do, not on what he could do. It really, really just tears at your soul. Having an advocate in order to be able to find out what services are needed and what can be provided for your child, family member, friend, whatever that is, for the allies to be able to advocate, is really, really important, because when you're having to point out all of the things that your child can't do, it's hard on you as a person.

If the advocate falls under one particular ministry, Community and Social Services in this case, then does the advocate work for persons with issues in Health or Seniors and Housing, too? That's just one question. I don't know if that would fill a gap, because it could be construed as a disability as well, depending on that person's situation. I think the member also brought that up as well when she was doing her speech.

We've also heard a few concerns about who the advocate will represent or work for. Are we talking just about developmental disabilities, physical handicaps, any particular stage in life, or all of them? That's quite a broad range, so I think there needs to be some clarity around that.

Also, would the advocate also work with the families of persons with disabilities seeing as some with disabilities aren't able to reach out on their own for help? The family members also have needs, so this is an important aspect. Again, you want to make sure that that person, those people, family, all have the supports to make sure that the people that they love are being supported appropriately.

Also, is the advocate going to be representing also the people working within the disability sector? I bring up the tragic death of Valerie Wolski. On the flip side, we also have people working with folks with disabilities where the person who's working with them, the worker, could also be at risk. I'm just curious if that's part of that mandate as well.

The other thing that's just a little bit concerning – and this just may be something that I think is an easy fix if this is the direction that the government wants to go in – is that in the bill it lists what the advocate may do but not what they must do. The advocate may

- (a) identify and study issues of concern ...
- (b) review programs and policies ...

- (c) participate in processes in which decisions are made . . .
- (d) promote the rights, interests and well-being of persons with disabilities through public education;
- (e) provide information and advice . . .
- (f) assist individuals who are having difficulty accessing services and related programs . . .

and, finally,

- (g) perform any other function prescribed in the regulations.

Madam Speaker, the stakeholders have expressed some concern about this. I'm not sure if anybody else has heard this as well.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I recognize we will be coming up against the clock here shortly, but I'll see if I can get a few words in.

Just in regard to what the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View was talking about in terms of making this an independent officer of the Legislature, as the chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices I recognize, I guess, everything that's involved in creating a new, independent officer of the Legislature. It's a fairly significant investment of resources. You know, it could be as much as 10 times, in terms of a budget, between somebody having the opportunity to work as an advocate and investing somebody as an officer of the Legislature, so that's certainly something that we need to consider in this.

As well as many of the other things that would be involved in that, I think it could be prudent and reasonable to start with an advocate that works within the ministry, much as the mental health advocate or the Health Advocate. Give them the opportunity to begin to define the role, and from there, then, have the opportunity in the future to consider if it's something that needs to be expanded and could be looked at and moved into a larger presence.

But I can certainly appreciate where folks are coming from because indeed this is an incredibly important bill and, I think, an incredibly valuable position to be creating within the government.

The Acting Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, but the time limit for consideration of this item of business has concluded.

5:00 Motions Other than Government Motions

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Northern Alberta Development Strategy

506. Ms Jabbour moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to direct the Northern Alberta Development Council to develop a comprehensive northern Alberta development strategy that will identify the government's vision and plan for achieving enhanced social and economic prosperity in the region.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm thrilled to stand here in this House to move Motion 506. Why do we need a northern strategy? As MLA for Peace River and chair of the Northern Alberta Development Council, or NADC, I'm very familiar with the unique challenges we face in northern Alberta: rural, remote, and widely dispersed communities, a large geographic area, sparse population, lack of services, difficulties with labour recruitment and retention, social issues, and much more.

First Nations comprise a significant part of our population, including all 24 Treaty 8 nations and eight of the Treaty 6 nations, all with unique cultures and languages. All of Alberta's Métis settlements are in the north, and we have several francophone communities.

Thirteen of us as MLAs are from northern constituencies. Our region represents 60 per cent of Alberta's land base and only 9 per cent of its population. This means that per capita funding models can severely disadvantage us and leave us lacking in core services. We have unique health needs such as high rates of diabetes and FASD. I was very pleased to see the recent agreement with the PCNs that will fund by medical need rather than per capita, and I'm hopeful this new model will help us manage these concerns.

We have major transportation challenges, including limited road networks, remote communities accessed by plane or winter road only, ferry crossings, ice bridges, and mud roads that can be impassable certain times of the year. Access to rail is problematic. The lack of an east-west route hampers growth. A utility and transportation corridor linking Peace River and Fort McMurray could have significant economic opportunities and could be part of a forward-thinking northern strategy.

We are truly, as the NADC website states, "Canada's outback – a vast area of grandiose lakes, mighty rivers, abundant wildlife and untapped wilderness." We are also a land of incredible opportunities, where anyone with an idea can become anything they want to be.

Alberta's north is filled with creative, hard-working, innovative entrepreneurs, and when it comes to resources, we are truly wealthy. Northern Alberta has 100 per cent of the province's minable oil sands, but that's not all. We have the potential for much, much more. We have high concentrations of lithium, a light metal used for medical, environmental, and electrical applications such as electric car batteries. New technologies allow mining of lithium from oil field waste water, and projects are already under way in Fox Creek and Swan Hills. We have great quantities of iron and vanadium. One large deposit near Fairview is expected to produce activity for years into the future. We have diamonds in the Buffalo Head hills and Birch Mountains, and many, many more such resources are just waiting to be developed.

Geothermal is another area with great growth potential for the north, although it requires a long-term vision to properly develop the resource. Hot spots have been identified in various locations in northern Alberta, including Peace River, Rainbow Lake, Zama, Hinton, and Swan Hills. A Hutterite colony near Manning, in my constituency, is completely powered by geothermal. Not only is geothermal one of the cleanest sources of energy and 100 per cent renewable; it could represent a creative solution to the problem of orphan wells.

Given our many hours of sunshine in the north solar power is another growth industry. Many farms in the La Crête area are already operating with solar. Many First Nations such as Tallcree, Beaver Lake, and Fort Chip have major solar projects, and Grande Prairie will soon be using solar to power a fleet of electric buses. People in the north are excited about possibilities, but maximizing these opportunities requires training, planning, and a forward-thinking strategy.

That's not all. We have 21 per cent of provincial crop production, including a significant portion of all organic produce in Alberta. Northern Alberta's climate is conducive to particular types of agriculture, including a very high quality of flax. NADC recently did workshops to highlight possibilities for industrial hemp and flax. Medical marijuana is another untapped resource some communities are exploring. We also have 10 per cent of provincial livestock and 86 per cent of the province's forests. Of course, our tourism potential is unlimited. From dinosaurs to history to indigenous culture to outdoor activities, we have it all, and we have the aurora borealis.

But we see what can happen when resource activities proceed too rapidly without a comprehensive, structured growth plan. Fort McMurray experienced some incredible growth pressures as a result of unplanned, unstructured growth. Alberta's north is comprised of an estimated 350,000 people in 150 communities, each with diverse economies that are rich in potential. A strategy is needed to properly manage these resources.

Another area of concern highlighting the need for a strategy is our workforce. We face unique challenges in attracting and retaining a workforce in northern Alberta, that are not experienced in other parts of the province. The long distances, the scarcity of big-city resources, and the need to travel for health services and other activities means that potential teachers, nurses, and other professionals tend to choose to work in the larger centres rather than the north. One solution to this is to educate local youth and support their career development at home, but this will require a long-term vision and strategy.

Northern Albertans are also experiencing social and economic barriers to prosperity that include inadequate local infrastructure to attract investment and to develop economic opportunities, a small market size that limits opportunities, high transport costs for goods and services, a lack of affordable housing and services for the homeless. We have limited public transportation options. The larger northern centres such as Fort McMurray and Grande Prairie have excellent public transit, but that's not the case for most of the rest of northern Alberta. If you don't have access to a vehicle, it can be impossible to get to work and move around the community. Of course, lack of child care is a key factor in preventing many northern women in particular from working.

The fact is that these issues are having a bigger impact on northern Alberta's indigenous communities, so a comprehensive strategy must be inclusive, collaborative, and viewed through a northern lens in order to address the concerns and issues experienced by both indigenous and nonindigenous communities and to ensure northern Alberta is prepared to take advantage of current opportunities to meet future challenges. A strategy can help guide our province in renewing its relationship with indigenous people, one that is based on trust, collaboration, and respectful engagement and that follows the principles and objectives of the United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples.

There exists a legal framework under the Northern Alberta Development Council Act which permits the government of Alberta through the NADC to develop and implement regional development plans in Alberta's north. A northern development strategy will align with government's current vision and plan for achieving enhanced social prosperity and economic diversification. Not only would the strategy support the government of Alberta's desire to maximize the value of its natural resources; it would establish the province as an environmental leader and enhance the quality of life of all Albertans by becoming a leader in the areas of health care, education, and skills training as part of its overall mandate.

Rapid development in the north has made Alberta a formidable player on the national and international economic stage, but the volatility of world markets substantially impacts Alberta's growth forecasts, and for northern Alberta communities the realities of a resource-based economy must be managed to ensure long-term sustainability. As Alberta moves toward integrating new technologies and diversifying the economy, the northern region would benefit from a plan to firmly guide development and help the region adapt to future challenges. A northern development strategy will strengthen all of Alberta. It will ensure a northern perspective, helping northerners build resilient, sustainable economies and enhanced quality of life. It would support economic growth, ensure infrastructure enhancements are in place to support that growth, and it will help define how we address social issues in the north and support a resilient, strong, local workforce that has the necessary expertise to build our economy.

NADC is prepared to champion the creation of a northern development strategy as part of its mandate within the Ministry of Economic Development and Trade. With 50 years of experience identifying issues of importance to the north, the NADC and its regional staff are well positioned to facilitate the advancement of a northern development strategy for Alberta. The council's strategic plan identifies key priorities for a strong northern region: a robust, diversified economy; strong, vibrant communities; and a skilled, educated, local workforce. NADC is experienced in working with regional partners, elected officials, and ministry colleagues to advance projects and initiatives with a northern focus. We have council members representing areas across the north who can help bring forward a grassroots perspective. These connections, coupled with a political mandate, would provide the NADC with the key elements necessary to begin the process of building a strategy that will align with overarching government priorities such as economic development, human capital, infrastructure, healthy populations, environmental sustainability, and aboriginal engagement.

In 2009 the government of Canada announced the creation of a northern strategy outlining the federal government's overall direction for Canada's north. Four of Canada's seven provinces with defined northern regions have also developed northern strategies identifying long-term policy objectives and short-term outcomes that will improve the social and economic fabric of their respective jurisdictions.

Northern Alberta communities are resilient, continuing to demonstrate a willingness to work together to foster growth as a region. The time has come for the government of Alberta to support a co-ordinated approach to northern development to maximize the growth potential and enhance the quality of life for northerners.

I urge all members of this Assembly to support this motion. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak to Motion 506. My colleague from Peace River has brought forward a good motion to discuss matters that I observed on my trip across northern Alberta last fall. But I have to ask a rhetorical question. Why do we need the Legislature to tell the government to tell the Northern Alberta Development Council to do something? The NADC has its own board to report to. Why is the NADC not taking direction from its own board? Why is the board chair running to the Legislature to tell the government to tell the board what to do?

5:10

The NADC has a budget of $2.4 million. The executive director was moved from Peace River to Edmonton, a move that has bred resentment amongst stakeholders. Somehow I think this motion is a veiled ask for more money and that it sounds like another government make-work project for the bureaucrats. The crats will scurry around and develop this plan. Meanwhile some good plans have already been developed like the comprehensive regional infrastructure sustainability plan, or CRISP, for the Athabasca, Cold Lake, and Peace River oil sands regions. Well, the Peace River one was never finished and released publicly. These CRISPs sit largely on a shelf, gathering dust, because the government does not have the will or money to implement them, but they are excellent pieces of information to draw resources from for this northern strategy.

It is not the first time that a northern development strategy was attempted. In 1980 Cold Lake had a regional plan drawn up because of the rapidly expanding oil industry. Thirty-seven years, and here we are, coming full circle, Madam Speaker.

Peace River and Cold Lake oil sands deposits have a low steam-oil ratio, which makes these projects very economical. The northern Alberta region is blessed with resources, but the development of in situ projects will be limited by the 100-megatonne cap and also the carbon tax.

There is no use having a plan unless the government actually plans to follow through and commit to the plan and commit the resources to fund the plan. Madam Speaker, I'm told that there is a plan on the shelf to build a highway from Fort McMurray all the way to Peerless Lake so that Peace River and Fort McMurray would be connected directly, saving hours upon hours of travel time across the north. Even residents of communities that would see a drop in traffic are cheering for this road, but, just like all good plans, unless the government commits the money, it will never happen.

We had a plan for SuperNet in this province to all corners of rural Alberta. I understand that the last miles are being completed. Meanwhile I'm told that the SuperNet is too slow in High Prairie, so slow that a First Nations software company could not set up shop and diversify the economy away from lumber. I'm also told that the SuperNet is too expensive, so expensive that a registry office in Falher had to close shop. That is not economic development, Madam Speaker; that is economic destruction.

Speaking of destruction, I've heard all about the sorry state of the postsecondary buildings across the north. It is as if the government wants to close them all down through death by a thousand cuts, Madam Speaker. With schools closed due to poor infrastructure, the province will be forced to bring skilled labour in from foreign countries in order to enable natural resource extraction. It will force amendments to the provincial nominee program.

Northern Alberta appreciates small colleges close to home for skills training. These schools help to keep northern Albertans in their communities, schools like Grande Prairie Regional College, Fairview campus, where our hon. Energy minister used to be a top official before becoming an MLA. I happened to visit there, too. One of the student residences has been condemned. It is not safe to live in anymore. Replacement is not in the capital plan nor on the unfunded list. I guess no one on the government benches looked at this Fairview one seriously.

Then there is Athabasca University, a distance learning institution that will have to close in a year if proper funding is not secured by the government and the information technology is not only modernized and replaced but also backed up, as per the report of the Auditor General. What a blow to Athabasca if this distance learning institution is closed.

You know what else northern Alberta is concerned about? Caribou. It seems the caribou management plan will do things like closing the largest employer in High Level, the Tolko mill. The caribou plan will hurt the timber harvest in addition to the struggling oil and gas industry in that area. Who wants High Level to be a ghost town like Coalspur or Whiskey Gap? At this moment if that lumber mill closes over this caribou plan, High Level will be reduced to a tourism town. Yes. Trips from Yellowknife to High Level for just a feed of Kentucky Fried Chicken is northern tourism, Madam Speaker. That's what they told me when I visited there.

Now, if only the federal government had not botched the First Nations consultation, highway 58 could have been extended by Ottawa through Wood Buffalo national park, from Garden River to Peace Point and onward to Fort Smith, Northwest Territories, and a real northern driving loop would be established to drive tourism. Maybe our federal dance partners will send some equalization money back and build a highway there.

Meanwhile over in La Crête there is a baby boom under way. La Crête now has the same population as High Level but has no hospital. Residents have to drive one and a half hours to High Level for hospital services, Madam Speaker. That is the equivalent of telling everyone in Red Deer to drive to a hospital in Edmonton.

La Crête is a boom town. The people are really industrious, and one of their big concerns is Crown land release, Madam Speaker. We heard this before in Fort McMurray, perhaps, this concern about Crown land release. Farmers in La Crête want more Crown land sold so they can convert it to productive farmland. This farmland is so fertile, and warmed by the long daylight hours, it grows the highest protein oats and wheat and the highest omega 3 canola in the country and yields premium prices. How is that for an economic competitive advantage?

Sadly, northern Alberta is strangled by geography, the long distance to markets, and poor service provided by CN Rail. No strategy created by this government is going to get a faster, more frequent, or competitive railway up there, nor will any strategy created by the government of Alberta force the hand of CN Rail to run trains from Grande Prairie to Dawson Creek and on to the port of Prince Rupert. No. CN will take everything to Edmonton or Swan Landing first and then send it out to Rupert at additional distance, additional time, and additional cost.

With that, Madam Speaker, as shadow minister for Economic Development and Trade I have summarized a number of issues to go into this strategy: roads, SuperNet, colleges, caribou, hospitals, land releases, railways. In short, I'm willing to support this motion, but that is because I believe that if the NADC does its job properly, they'll give the government good advice on how to improve prosperity, and most of that advice will run counter to this government's ideology. If instead this turns into an exercise where the NADC comes up with a report that explains the government's ideological vision to northern Albertans, then I'll be very disappointed. I look forward to reviewing any strategy the NADC brings forward.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm very happy to speak about this motion to direct the Northern Alberta Development Council to develop a comprehensive northern Alberta development strategy. Having lived and worked in northern Alberta for a number of years, I'm very interested. I was really interested in reading the notes and thinking about the development that could and should happen up in the northern area of our province.

5:20

One of the things that's so important is that, as with any other kind of development, people need support. The area needs support. They've got some special issues in northern Alberta that we may not be familiar with. One of them is transportation. Transportation, as the member previously stated, can be very tricky in some areas. You get freeze-up. When the ice goes out – things like that will translate into stops in traffic, stops in trucking.

We do need to be committed to supporting this region of Alberta given that all the municipalities bring strengths. There's energy, agriculture, forestry, mining, tourism. One of the things you find when you spend much time up in northern Alberta is that there is an enormous variety. Sometimes going north from Edmonton, you think it's going to be nothing but bush, you know, lots of rivers and streams. But you get further north, and there's so much farming, and there are so many different people, different cultures in the different communities.

I had a terrific time with a friend one year just hitting all the small museums we could in northern Alberta. Well, we actually went as far as – where did we go up by? – Great Slave Lake. It was so much fun seeing the different museums.

Dr. Turner: There's a new dinosaur museum up there.

Ms Woollard: Yeah. We haven't even got there yet.

Didn't get to Grande Prairie but all the little ones: Manning and High Level and La Crête – we didn't hit the museum in La Crête – Fort Vermilion, and all the little stops along the way. People, as everywhere else, are treasuring their past, their heritage and showing people what is valuable in the area. All those things were wonderful.

In every place people are welcoming and are just so happy to show you what they have, what they're doing, what their natural resources are, what they're being accessed – you know, not saying: our country, our land is for sale; our resources are for sale. But, as with anybody else, they want to make a living. They want to develop their area. They want it to be a good place for their children to grow up in, and they want opportunities for everyone there.

I wholeheartedly agree that the government should direct the NADC to develop the comprehensive northern Alberta development strategy. I like the phrasing of it: "The mandate of the NADC ... to 'investigate, monitor, evaluate, plan and promote practical measures to foster and advance general development in northern Alberta and to advise the Government accordingly.'"

With any development anywhere it's really important to make sure that all the local people in the various communities that are part of northern Alberta are consulted, not just consulted but are partners in all the developments. That's so important.

I like the fact that it mentions that we are thinking about – the reality is that being boom-and-bust economies, that we see with our resource development, we need to make sure that the economy is diversified and do long-range planning to ensure that the development is sustainable because it doesn't do anybody any good to have the boom, and then when it goes back, it's like the tide going out. Everybody is left with memories of the good times.

I'm proud to be part of a government that has tried to address the infrastructure deficit through an aggressive capital plan and to be, hopefully, part of a government's vision of having a prosperous province from north to south to north.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

We've had a request to revert to introductions.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests (reversion)

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd like to introduce, I guess, guests actually sitting on both sides of the House here to support this motion. I'd like to introduce Garrett Tomlinson, the reeve of Northern Sunrise county, and Ken Noskey, who is a council member of NADC.

On the other side of the House I'd also like to introduce my daughter Marni and my grandchildren Noah, Reuben, Virgil, and Azula. Please give them the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Welcome.

Motions Other than Government Motions

Northern Alberta Development Strategy (continued)

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to talk about Motion 506, which urges the government to direct the Northern Alberta Development Council to develop a comprehensive northern Alberta development strategy that will identify the government's vision and plan for achieving enhanced social and economic prosperity in the region.

Now, on the NADC website it says:

the Northern Alberta Development Council advances the promise of Alberta's North.

It goes on to say:

NADC's mandate is to help the region's 150 communities and 350,000 people realize their rich potential and strengthen their diverse economies. The Council is made up of a dedicated group of provincial and local leaders and staff tasked with producing quality regional development information, supporting education and skills enhancement programs and building strategic partnerships.

Now, Madam Speaker, I may be confused, but I was under the impression that NADC was intended to act somewhat independently from the provincial government; hence, they were set up independently from the government. It appears that this motion would be setting out direct orders to NADC.

The council was established by the Northern Alberta Development Council Act, which outlines the functions of the council.

To investigate, monitor, evaluate, plan and promote practical measures to foster and advance general development in northern Alberta, and to advise the Government accordingly, and without limiting the generality of the foregoing, the Council may investigate the requirements of the people resident in northern Alberta and make recommendations in that regard in respect of

- (a) social and economic development,
- (b) development of communities and service delivery, and
- (c) development of government services and programs.

Now, it would appear to me that the motion being debated today is somewhat redundant and really unnecessary as the NADC already has the power to go ahead and do these things that this motion is suggesting. But if the member believes it will actually result in the government taking concrete steps to support northern Alberta, then I will happily cast my vote in favour. Now, the mover of the motion, the Member for Peace River, as the chair of NADC really has a great opportunity to get things happening there.

Now, as someone who lives, works, and is raising a family in northern Alberta I understand the power and potential that Alberta's north holds. Northern Alberta represents 60 per cent of Alberta's land mass, contains 100 per cent of the province's oil sands and 86 per cent of the province's forests. Northern Alberta boasts some of the world's greatest fishing and hunting. That's something that I can attest to.

Some of the things that I've heard from my constituents and other people in the north are real, tangible ways this government can help northern Alberta. Some of those things are a common-sense caribou plan that doesn't destroy the industries that so many of the residents up there rely upon for their livelihood and the counties that rely on that area, too, for a tax base. Another thing is to kill the carbon tax, that exponentially affects residents and businesses in northern Alberta because of the distances we travel and the costs we have to heat our buildings there. Remove the 100-megatonne cap on oil sands emissions, which limits northern Alberta from realizing true benefits from our province's oil sands resource.

Finally, we have the lack of high-speed Internet access, and that's a huge stumbling block to developing the north. Too often I hear stories of local businesses being forced to shutter or move their operations down south because the spotty Internet access or substandard speed simply does not allow these businesses to conduct their business at the speed their clients demand.

There are many more issues unique to the north that need to be dealt with. Transportation is one that just right off the top I think of.

I hope that this government does finally take action to promote and invest in northern Alberta and begins a process by focusing on the areas that I've highlighted. When I travelled up to the northern Peace River region, those were some of the things that the people brought to me when I travelled up there and had meetings.

I hope this isn't just an opportunity for the government to promote itself. There is one phrase in the motion that does cause a little concern. That phrase is: "northern Alberta development strategy that will identify the government's vision." This should be about the people of the north's vision. It shouldn't be about this government. This government has its own business to do here. NADC has a different set of business and a different responsibility, and that's to represent the north.

Now, I've been advocating for northern Alberta since long before I was elected in this House, and I will continue to support northern Alberta long after I leave. I will vote in favour of this motion in support of northern Alberta.

Thank you.

5:30

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms McKittrick: Madam Speaker, I am delighted to rise and speak in support of the motion by the Member for Peace River on the development of a comprehensive northern Alberta development strategy that will identify the government's vision and plan for achieving enhanced social and economic prosperity in the region. I have not yet had the pleasure to visit the Peace River region but plan on doing so this summer. I have, however, worked with many of the organizations in northern Alberta in supporting community economic development.

The Member for Peace River in her role as chair of the Northern Alberta Development Council has brought leadership to the council in a number of areas. I would like to particularly highlight the work that has been done to promote and educate on the potential of renewable energy. I would also like to support efforts to encourage small-scale agricultural projects such as the development of value-added honey products, market gardens, and products arising out of communities in the north such as the francophone, Hutterite, and Mennonite communities.

The government is currently engaging in consultations to lead to the development of community economic development corporations as announced in Bill 30, Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act. These corporations, which can be incorporated also as co-ops, will help communities access local funds for community economic projects. I think that this will support the development of a comprehensive northern Alberta development strategy by providing a tool for local community investment and encouraging communities to invest in the provision of local employment and local value-added industry.

Madam Speaker, local community economic development is defined as action by people locally to create economic opportunities that improve social conditions, particularly for those who are the most disadvantaged. CED is an approach that recognizes that economic, environmental, and social challenges are interdependent, complex, and ever-changing. To be effective, solutions must be rooted in local knowledge and led by community members. CED promotes holistic approaches addressing individual community and regional levels, recognizing that those levels are interconnected.

Dr. John Loxley, a professor of community economic development in Manitoba, has written extensively about his work in aboriginal northern communities and economic development. His book Aboriginal, Northern, and Community Economic Development provides very useful research on how to work with northern aboriginal communities on economic development. I think that book would be very helpful in the development of a strategic plan for northern Alberta.

In the introduction Professor Loxley writes about the Manitoba northern plan:

First, it suggests there are no simplistic solutions to the problems facing northern and Aboriginal poverty and underdevelopment. Rather, multi-faceted, across-the-board approaches are called for, which are demanding both conceptually and politically. Second, the plan demonstrated that there are numerous possibilities for economic and social development in the small communities of the North, possibilities which become greater with co-operation among communities and with targeted state involvement and support, including subsidies justified by social considerations.

Dr. Loxley's book also discusses how challenging comprehensive northern economic development strategies can be in light of distinct thinking. Dr. Loxley discusses at length the need to work with indigenous communities in the development of the north in Manitoba. It's a good reminder for us in Alberta, and I was pleased to see that the member especially mentioned indigenous communities in her speech.

I would like to encourage anyone interested in supporting this motion to explore the existing literature on the promotion of northern community economic development: what has been successful, what are the challenges, and especially how to incorporate indigenous communities within the strategies.

I am pleased to support this motion because our government is committed to getting the most out of our natural resources while at the same time ensuring that our people and environment are looked after as well. That's why I read that definition of community economic development, because one thing that I really appreciate about our government is that it always puts people first. We know that we have to develop industries, but we also know that it's important for these industries to look after people and our environment. As a government we've made a lot of practical changes.

We also know that the residents of northern Alberta face additional challenges. Some of my colleagues have talked about transportation, access to markets, the way that the population is scattered all over vast numbers of kilometres. We know that there are challenges around rural schools and providing education, especially at the high school levels.

We also know that northern Alberta contains the majority of the province's oil, gas, and forestry resources. But the reality is that a lot of these resources create a boom-and-bust economy, so we need to ensure that we diversify the economy and engage in long-term planning to ensure sustainability. This is why I read from Dr. Loxley's book and introduction, because there are other provinces that have faced the same challenges as this motion speaks to and have studied the need and how we can create very viable northern community planning in terms of both the economy and social sustainability.

I think, as to what this motion calls for, there is a lot of literature in Canada that we can use and that the Northern Alberta Development Council can use in terms of ensuring that the planning that this motion calls for is done in light of the existing research and existing knowledge.

I'm also very proud to be part of a government that has tried to address the infrastructure deficit through an aggressive capital plan, and I'm thinking especially of the roads and the work that's going on on highway 28 and some of our roads in the north. That's going to allow much safer access for both people and industry.

I've heard the Member for Peace River speak about her work with the Northern Alberta Development Council, and I know that the council is made up of a diversity of people and interests, that it has indigenous communities, that it has local residents. I've had the pleasure of meeting, I think, a former school trustee who is proud of the council. I know that the framework for the motion is in place both through the diversity of the people on the council and the work that the hon. member has done as chair.

I wholeheartedly agree that the government should direct the NADC to develop a comprehensive northern Alberta development strategy that will identify the government's vision and plan for achieving enhanced social and economic prosperity in the region. I actually really like the fact that they're putting the social and the economic together because I think that if we only look towards economic and we don't worry about people and we don't worry about education and access to health, then we can't really have the economic prosperity that we really want. I am confident that the NADC is going to build on the success that it has achieved and that it can play a leading role in achieving a strategic plan for northern Alberta.

Madam Speaker, I will happily support this motion, and I would like to thank the member for her interest in the north, for the way that she has shared her passion for her community not only in her speech this afternoon but also in the interactions that we have with her. I would urge all members of the Assembly to vote in support of this motion.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm happy to rise on Motion 506, to direct the Northern Alberta Development Council to develop a comprehensive northern Alberta strategy that will identify the government's vision and plan for achieving enhanced social and economic prosperity in the region, and I am happy to be supportive of this motion.

Northern Alberta, like all of rural Alberta, is important to the success of our province. Everybody knows that the wealth of Alberta is almost entirely administered in Edmonton and Calgary, but what we don't think about often enough is that it's almost entirely earned and created outside of Edmonton and Calgary, which means that northern Alberta is an important aspect of that.

So I support the motion. In my view, I think NADC has done a good job for a long time. If they've been slow in the last couple of years, in my view it's largely because the current government has been really slow in appointing people to the board and letting them do their job. This is a sign that the government is going to let them do their job and encourage them instead of holding them back. I couldn't be any happier.

With that, I will sit down, making sure that everybody knows I am supportive of this motion as it is written.

5:40

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak about Motion 506, made by the hon. Member for Peace River. I would like to start off by saying that any motion that addresses some of the needs that northern Alberta has is a good motion, and I myself will be supporting this motion.

I do have a few concerns with this motion, and I will talk about them throughout the speech here, more or less to see where the member is going with this as the chair of the council. Let's start with that the motion seeks to provide guidance to the Northern Alberta Development Council to develop a strategy to promote prosperity within northern Alberta. Now, I'd like to start off talking about what its current mandate is, as listed on the website.

The mandate of the Council is to investigate, monitor, evaluate, plan and promote practical measures to foster and advance general development in northern Alberta and to advise the Government accordingly, and without limiting the generality of the foregoing, the Council may investigate the requirements of the people resident in northern Alberta and make recommendations in that regard in respect of

- (a) social and economic development,
- (b) development of communities and service delivery, and
- (c) development of government services and programs.

That's quite the mouthful. There's a lot there.

I will read this motion. The Member for Peace River to propose:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to direct the Northern Alberta Development Council to develop a comprehensive northern Alberta development strategy that will identify the government's vision and plan for achieving enhanced social and economic prosperity in the region.

The main difference between these two that I can see is that one is saying that they're going to create a government's vision moving forward, and this one here is saying that the NADC is looking to advise the government on moving forward. Now, I know that's splitting hairs, and I'm looking at this and saying: okay; what's the difference between the government's vision and advice? One of the things that I would say is: is this becoming a tool that the government is using to promote or advertise the north?

I guess that for myself I went through some of the newsletters that were brought forward. Unfortunately, the link for the 2014 newsletters is broken. That happens. You know, I understand that, and I'm not concerned about that. But the 2015 and 2016 newsletters appear to be completely nonpartisan. They appear to be completely nonpartisan. This is important because it looks like this group was actively trying to separate itself from the government, saying, "We are independent, and we're looking to move forward the north's needs," if you will.

But if you look at the 2017 one, that just came out, I see that the Minister of Transportation is in the opening remarks. I see a biography, more or less, of the Minister of Health, and I see the Minister of Education being mentioned there as well. The first page of the newsletter. I see this as us now moving towards a government's vision.

Now, if the member is actively going out and making sure that these ministers are listening to the north, I commend her on that. Absolutely. You know what? Having minister involvement in the north, having the ministers involved with the NADC is absolutely great. This is something that we should be looking forward to, and I want to see that kind of thing. But do we need to be promoting that through the north? Do we need to have that on the front page? Is this something that we can say: these are the areas that we're working on?

The Member for Calgary-Foothills brought up the highway between Peace River and Fort McMurray. Now, it's important that while we're looking at this newsletter, it's showing that there are clear needs for the north, and it is written in the letter from the Member for Peace River. To focus on those would be something that I would hope to see inside of this motion, something that's substantive that we can move forward. In this one here what we're seeing is "enhanced social and economic prosperity in the region." I would like to have seen something a little bit more precise. Even though I will say that the Fort McMurray to Peace River highway would probably not affect my constituency, I still see it improving all connectivity between all of the north, and that is a good thing. It would have been nice to see something along that line in this motion.

Now, if we look at the formal council, I would like to mention that if you go to the website here – and we're looking at the council itself – it would be nice to see that the council is recognized by being actually put onto the website. I do have the Member for Peace River on there, on the council. I also have the past chair, and I'm very thankful for Mr. Ken Noskey. I hear that he's probably above us here. I'm very thankful for the contributions that he has brought forward to this council. But it would be nice to see the other seven members that are on the council. Right now they don't seem to be on there. Why is this important? Well, it's important that we all kind of understand who exactly is a part of this. Seeing what they do for a living and how they are contributing towards the council would be a great thing.

The fact that we are looking at this motion is – we see that this council is already able to do what this motion provides, so my question is: is the member looking for a clear focus? When I look at what I originally mentioned as the mandate, does this mean that the mandate of the council is going to be focused in a smaller fashion? Are we going to be taking the development of communities and service deliveries and the development of government services and programs out of this? Is that something that no longer is the focus of the council? Because it's not in this specific motion. Are we going to see a mandate change? That means that we're going to possibly see less advocacy because of this.

Now, if that is not the case, then I apologize to the member, because that's not where I'm going here. What I'm trying to do is say that we all need to work together to try to be able to move northern Alberta forward to ensure that prosperity is seen in this province. When the northern part of Alberta prospers, the rest of Alberta seems to feel that impact. Calgary specifically is a city that has felt the fact that we have had low oil prices, and the fact that they've been seeing such high commercial vacancy rates is a real problem there.

If we look at this, I would like to say – and my colleague over there had touched on it – that the emissions cap, the carbon tax, and the caribou plan are all areas that are going to impact northern Alberta. I would have liked to have seen how the council is looking to move beyond this by saying, "How much of an impact is this going to be?" and studying this so that we can know how we can go around this or change it.

Now, I am concerned that when we look at northern Alberta, we've got significant heavy oil deposits. I know that this isn't shocking. I'm not telling you this to surprise you. What I am saying is that when I discuss these kinds of things about Hanna and other places that use coal, those communities are dying, and we are actively seeing those communities . . . [Mr. Cyr's speaking time expired]

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I stand here today as a proud long-time resident of northern Alberta. I have no memory of any place besides northern Alberta. I moved there when I was three years old, so I certainly can speak to both the strengths of northern Alberta and the contributions it makes as well as the challenges. I want to say thank you to the member for bringing forward this motion, which I support in terms of the role that it plays in highlighting the importance of northern Alberta to the province but also the important role that NADC can play in terms of addressing some of that as well.

Certainly, northern Alberta has many unique strengths and challenges compared to the rest of the province. Some of the strengths are an incredibly strong, resilient people. I mean, if we talk about the west being, you know, the final frontier, the north is certainly the frontier for this province in many ways. There are not nearly as many people there in terms of concentration. They're well dispersed across the north. It's not as well connected as it could be in terms of some challenges, Madam Speaker, but it offers so much in terms of the people and in terms of the resources.

The member talked about the industry that's there. We think of the north a lot in terms of oil, but it is also where our forestry industry lies and where there's a lot of agriculture as well. Certainly, the people of the north understand and take great pride in the contributions that they make to this province in terms of managing and harvesting the resources that this great province has to offer.

Madam Speaker, many of the challenges that are faced in the north relate, in particular, to the fact that despite the riches of the north, there's not a whole lot of people that live there in comparison to the rest of the province. There's a lot of work to be done, a lot of importance to the province, but a very wide, disparate area with not as many people. It's always a challenge to provide the quality of services that encourage people to want to be a part of that.

Certainly, I'm thankful for the role of the Northern Alberta Development Council and for their contributions in the past, but I also think very strongly that they could as community members, as people who are engaged in the north, who live there and think in a different way than perhaps government thinks, come up with some thoughts and creative solutions around what needs to be done in order to keep the north healthy and sustainable for the long term, Madam Speaker.

You know, in the meantime, I'm thankful for the recognition of the value, in particular, of the real north that I see by this government. As a member at the cabinet table I'm always happy to represent the north. I know that there are a number of us who do so, and I'm certainly hearing that. For example, some substantial investment in Northern Lakes College recently happened. A new campus in High Prairie really is going to make a difference.

The Acting Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Minister of Children's Services, but under Standing Order 8(3), which provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of a motion other than a government motion to close debate, I'd like to invite the hon. Member for Peace River to close debate on Motion 506.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to all the members of the House for the debate that we've had here today. In particular, I want to say thank you to the Member for Calgary-

Foothills for highlighting in great detail the many, many challenges we face in the north. I simply didn't have enough time in my 10 minutes to go into that great of detail, but we have many challenges. And he's quite right. The north has been neglected for a very long time.

There was a previous attempt to make a strategy, but the previous government did not get very far with that. This is why this has to change, and this is why I brought forward this motion. It's time. I'm proud to be part of a government that is making life better for all Albertans, including the 350,000 of us who live in Alberta's north. It's absolutely critical that we have a development strategy that will identify the government's vision and plan to achieve enhanced social and economic prosperity in northern Alberta, and we have to look at all of our challenges through a northern lens.

We do want to maximize the value of our natural resources, especially in terms of achieving sustainable prosperity for our northern residents and communities. The volatile world markets do impact Alberta as a whole, but the effects of the roller coaster are felt more profoundly in northern Alberta perhaps because it's not only jobs but it's our communities that are directly affected. So we need to work towards a more sustainable model for northern development because the fate of Alberta as a whole is forever intertwined with the fate of northern Alberta.

A northern development strategy informed and guided by a northern perspective will help to bring about this development in a way that recognizes and values the experience and knowledge of northern residents and organizations and builds on the new relationships that we're developing with our First Nations and Métis communities. It would not only support economic growth and infrastructure enhancements, but it will help to define how we manage health, social structures, education, and workforce in the north.

I see the challenges that we face in the north every day in my constituency of Peace River. Residents in the north are resilient and strong, and we know what it takes to live and thrive in these areas. I appreciate the comments of my fellow MLAs from the north because we all share these kinds of things, and we all know what we're up against.

The Northern Alberta Development Council is uniquely positioned to be the champion for our region. They have 50 years of experience working with distinctively northern issues. Their priorities, as identified already by the council, are a robust, diversified economy; strong, vibrant communities; and a skilled, educated workforce. The NADC knows that it will be necessary to work with regional partners, elected officials, ministry colleagues, and people of the north to achieve those priorities. They have the experience to bring together government and northern Albertans to develop a plan for all of these shared priorities. But to achieve these goals, they need to know that all the rest of Alberta recognizes the importance of the work that they are doing and are ready to support the objectives.

Other jurisdictions across Canada have recognized the importance of a northern strategy. Manitoba, Ontario, Saskatchewan, and Quebec have developed strategies that will improve the social and economic fabric of their northern jurisdictions, and we can learn from their strategies as they contain elements such as highlighting regional growth opportunities; challenges to growth; information to guide investment from both government and the private sector; ways to improve infrastructure, education, and health; encouraging collaboration and a co-ordinated approach to development; a focus on sustainability; working respectfully with indigenous and nonindigenous communities; and giving equal weight to those communities and to the principle of equality between men and women.

As I mentioned earlier, in 2009 the government of Canada also established a vision for northern development through the creation of a northern strategy. So it's time for Alberta to step up to the plate and provide the Northern Alberta Development Council with the mandate that will allow it to deliver on the potential of northern Alberta in a way that will truly maximize that potential and provide for the needs of Alberta's families in the north.

I always tell my community that there are not very many of us out there, so we have to be twice as loud. That's why I'm bringing this motion forward. It's time for us to be twice as loud, and I know that our government is going to listen.

Thank you again for participating in this debate. I look forward to your support of Motion 506.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 506 carried]

Ms Ganley: Seeing as we are so close to 6 o'clock, I move that we adjourn and resume tomorrow morning at 10.

Prayers

The Acting Speaker: Good morning.

Hon. members, let us pray or reflect, each in our own way. Let us remain humble for the opportunity to work on behalf of the citizens of our great province. Let us find strength and encouragement from them to seek out solutions and opportunities that will create a better tomorrow for our future generations.

Thank you, and please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I would like to call the committee to order.

Bill 13 Securities Amendment Act, 2017

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered in respect of this bill? The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to stand up to speak about the Securities Amendment Act, 2017, this morning. I would just like to start out my comments by briefly noting that not too long ago in this Chamber the Member for Strathmore-Brooks on behalf of the Wildrose caucus pledged to undertake an erasing and revising of history if they were ever to form government. I think it bears noting that that's been said, especially when we're considering a bill like this, that goes to protect investors and, particularly, seniors. It should be deeply troubling to Albertans that the Wildrose would plan to overturn bills like this. I think that deserves to be on the record.

I think also, Madam Chair, that Albertans deserve to feel comfortable and confident when they entrust their money to investment dealers, advisers, and their representatives. Organizations that regulate the investment industry need the capability to regulate effectively. Accordingly, the amendments proposed in this bill will provide regulatory organizations the same enforcement authorities as the Alberta Securities Commission. It will give regulatory organizations the ability to compel attendance and production of evidence so they are better able to do their jobs and protect Alberta investors. It will also protect the people who investigate these cases from liability when carrying out their duties in good faith.

Madam Chair, our government is working to make life better for everyday Albertans by making practical changes that help to make sure their investments are safe. I think the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board deserves a great deal of credit for working with the industry and taking actions to protect Albertans. As Wanda Morris from the Canadian Association of Retired Persons has said, "I've heard too many heart-wrenching stories of individuals who lost their life savings because they trusted the wrong person: an unscrupulous financial advisor." Individual investors and large investors need to know that the investment industry is being regulated properly. Financial markets are getting more and more complicated every day, and more and more people are relying on financial advisers to help guide their decisions.

As government we need to encourage investment because it is critical to the development of our economy, but we also must do everything we can to protect investors against the very few people in the system who would take advantage of them. We already have strong organizations in Alberta like the Alberta Securities Commission. The ASC is mandated to protect investors and foster a fair and efficient Alberta capital market. The commission currently has statutory powers to compel attendance and the production of evidence during both the investigation and adjudication phases.

However, self-regulatory organizations such as the Investment Industry Regulatory Organization of Canada and the Mutual Fund Dealers Association do not currently have this authority. These proposed changes that we have before us in Bill 13 will give these organizations the same authority as the commission and will strengthen their enforcement abilities and improve investor protection. In most provinces across Canada provincial governments have delegated certain aspects of their authority to these regulatory organizations to provide more efficient and effective regulation.

A well-regulated and efficient financial system where investors are protected is absolutely essential for confidence in the markets. The Canadian and international markets are also changing, and Alberta must ensure that our securities regulatory system aligns with international standards and regulatory reforms.

Another thing these proposed amendments will do is to extend immunity to the directors, officers, employees, and agents of these regulatory bodies. These proposed amendments will also clarify the conditions under which immunity is granted to these organizations, which will make it possible for them to conduct enforcement more effectively.

As with all legislation dealing with the fast-changing world of securities law, some of these proposed changes are merely housekeeping to ensure clarity and better compliance with Alberta's securities laws. Take, for example, amendments to regulations that will make sure these provisions apply to persons and companies, ensure the act is consistent, and allow the application to all parties as intended by the legislation.

Madam Chair, as the government was preparing these amendments, they consulted with the investment industry. The Alberta Securities Commission and the Investment Industry Regulatory Organization of Canada were both engaged with developing these changes, and these common-sense amendments that are being proposed have been welcomed by groups like the Canadian Association of Retired Persons. As I mentioned earlier, there are heartbreaking situations where people have lost their life savings, and we are proud to stand up for Albertans and make it safer for them to invest.

I agree with our Minister of Finance, and I think we can all agree that keeping our securities laws up to date is a great idea. It is in the best interests of Albertans, the best interests of our financial markets, and the best interests of our investors. The long-term health of our capital markets, our economy, and our citizens depends on it. That's why I support this bill, Madam Chair, and I'm hoping that all other members in the House will do the same.

I'd like to read into the record several quotes from stakeholders that have been consulted and were a part of the creation of this piece of legislation. I'll start out by reading from Ms Wanda Morris, who is the vice-president of advocacy at the Canadian Association of Retired Persons. She says:

I've heard too many heart-wrenching stories of individuals who lost their life savings because they trusted the wrong person: an unscrupulous financial advisor. Today's changes will help hold wrongdoers to account. We welcome today's announcement as a critical step in bringing rule-breakers to justice and deterring wrongdoing, thus better protecting investors in this province. We look forward to additional, practical steps like this from the Government of Alberta.

Another quote, from Andrew Kriegler, who is president and CEO of the Investment Industry Regulatory Organization of Canada. He says:

We congratulate the Minister of Finance and the Government of Alberta for their leadership in being at the forefront of investor protection in Canada. With these legislative changes, Alberta becomes the first province in Canada to provide IIROC with a complete toolkit, enabling us to more effectively fulfil our responsibilities as a public interest regulator and bring wrongdoers to justice.

The next quote I'll read is from Stan Magidson, who is chair and CEO of the Alberta Securities Commission. Stan says:

Strong investor protection is a critical component of our mandate, and we support meaningful and practical regulatory advances such as this that can have a real impact on protecting Albertans from financial misconduct.

Now, Madam Chair, I'd like to read in a little bit of background to why I support this bill but also why this bill was necessary in the first place. Alberta has made a commitment to ongoing reform and modernization and harmonization of securities laws in Canada, and since that commitment Alberta has had a practice of reviewing and updating its securities laws annually along with other provinces and territories. That was a result of a 2004 memorandum of understanding.

The securities regulatory landscape in Canada has become more complex, sophisticated, international in scope, and driven by technology than ever before. Since the 2007 financial crisis it has been more difficult to sustain quality capital markets. Alberta's challenge is to deliver the right regulation to support investor confidence and to encourage investment, innovation, and economic growth in Alberta and across Canada. Alberta must ensure that our securities regulatory system reflects the realities of today's markets and stays in step with evolving international standards and global regulatory reform initiatives.

Madam Chair, I've had a number of questions from constituents and stakeholders regarding this legislation, and I'd like to read some of those questions and their respective answers into the record as well. You know, of course, the most obvious question is: why is the government amending the Securities Act? Well, I've touched on this a little bit before, but I think it deserves a fulsome answer. Our government is committed to maintaining a well-regulated, efficient capital market in Alberta that protects investors and encourages innovation. We are enhancing investor protection by providing stronger enforcement authorities for regulatory organizations. These changes are also planned by other jurisdictions across Canada, and these changes mean that Alberta is first out of the gate and continues to be a leader when it comes to securities regulation.

Another question is: how will these changes promote a fair and effective Alberta capital market and protect investors? Well, the answer is that these amendments will help to ensure Alberta has a fair and effective capital market by extending powers to recognized regulatory organizations so that they can compel testimony and the production of evidence during a disciplinary hearing.

The changes will extend immunity from civil liability to the directors, officers, employees, and agents of regulatory organizations when conducting enforcement activity. Another question is: why are you providing immunity to these regulatory organizations? The answer is that the people responsible for enforcing securities rules must be able to do their jobs without fear of being held personally liable. Protecting them from liability when carrying out their duties in good faith makes it possible to enforce the rules more effectively.

Another question is: how do these legislative changes compare to other jurisdictions'? I mentioned before that Alberta is leading the way, and that's good to know, that our province is at the forefront of these changes. Immunity and the statutory powers to compel attendance and the production of evidence for securities law investigations were some things that were recommended by the Investment Industry Regulatory Organization of Canada. This came from broad public consultations with industry and investors. These changes are also planned by other jurisdictions across Canada. For example, Quebec is considering similar investigative authorities for regulatory organizations, and B.C., Ontario, Saskatchewan, New Brunswick, P.E.I., and the Yukon have also committed to adopting immunity provisions.

Another question that I received. You know, sometimes when you mention the word "securities" to people, it doesn't necessarily resonate with them. It's a bit of a technical term. Sometimes the average Albertan might not understand what it is exactly that we're talking about here, so I think that also deserves to be elaborated upon. So the question is: what is securities regulation? It's the regulation of the conduct of securities market participants, including issuers that raise capital through security offerings, and their directors and officers and securities firms, their directors and officers and their employees registered to advise and trade in securities.

Canada does not have federal securities regulation, but regulation instead falls under provincial jurisdiction. The provinces are working together through the Canadian Securities Administrators to co-ordinate securities regulation throughout Canada.

Securities regulation in Alberta is the responsibility of the Alberta Securities Commission. So that leads to the question: what is the Alberta Securities Commission? Now, the commission is an industry-funded provincial corporation that is responsible for ensuring that a fair and efficient capital market exists in Alberta. The commission develops and enforces securities regulations, offers information and resources to Albertans about investing, and administers Alberta's Securities Act and regulations.

What exactly is a regulatory organization? Organizations such as the Investment Industry Regulatory Organization of Canada and the Mutual Fund Dealers Association of Canada have authority that's delegated by the Alberta Securities Act to make sure their members' firms meet standards set by the province's securities laws. These regulatory organizations are an important part of the enforcement mosaic in Canada.

The three key regulatory organizations, as overseen by members of the Canadian Securities Administrators, are the Investment Industry Regulatory Organization of Canada, the Mutual Fund Dealers Association of Canada, and La Chambre de la Sécurité Financière. These three organizations concluded 139 enforcement cases in the year 2015 compared with 112 in 2014. In 2015 Canadian Securities Administrators members concluded matters involving 233 individuals and 117 companies, or 350 total respondents. Certain securities violations proceed to prosecution either through an administrative tribunal or Provincial Court, depending on the type of violation and the jurisdiction where it occurred.

Canadian Securities Administrators is an umbrella organization of Canada's provincial and territorial securities regulators, whose objective is to improve, co-ordinate, and harmonize regulation of the Canadian capital markets.

The Investment Industry Regulatory Organization of Canada is the national regulatory organization which oversees all investment dealers and trading activity on debt and equity marketplaces in Canada. They were created in 2008 through the consolidation of the Investment Dealers Association of Canada and Market Regulation Services Inc., and they set high-quality regulatory and investment industry standards, protect investors, and strengthen market integrity while maintaining efficient and competitive capital markets.

The Mutual Fund Dealers Association is the national regulatory organization for the distribution side of the Canadian mutual fund industry. The association regulates the operations, standard of practice, and business conduct of its members and their representatives.

A final question that people may be asking is: why does the government delegate authority to these regulatory organizations? The answer is that provincial regulators have delegated certain aspects of their authority to regulatory organizations to provide more effective and efficient regulation of the market to market participants.

Madam Chair, considering all of the information that I've just detailed and the intention of the bill to protect investors and given that seniors are specifically one of the groups that are targeted to be protected through this legislation, you know, it makes me a bit worried when the Wildrose proposes to undo the things that the NDP government has done. We'll be putting seniors at risk if they have their way, and that's dangerous. I think that the Wildrose ought to make it a little bit more clear what their plan is. All they do is propose to undo things. They don't propose to bring things forward.

Mr. Hanson: Carbon tax.

Mr. Westhead: An example that the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills just mentioned is the carbon tax. You know, of course, that's something that they have made very clear.

Mr. Hanson: Bill 6.

Mr. Westhead: And Bill 6, protection for paid farm workers: here they want to put workers at risk . . .

Ms Hoffman: Pipelines.

Mr. Westhead: . . . and pipelines at risk. They would prefer for Ottawa to impose their carbon plan on us. You know, Madam Chair, it's pretty worrisome that you have to ask the question: whose interests are they really looking after? It seems as though it's a quest for power, and that's all it is. It's not a quest to have people's backs and make life better for people; it's to make life worse. They want to undo protections for people who work in one of the most dangerous occupations. That's shameful.

Madam Chair, especially when it comes to securities acts, when we're talking about vulnerable populations who put their trust in people to look after their best interests . . .

Mr. Hanson: We're supporting this.

Mr. Westhead: You know, the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills claims that they're supporting this, but at the same time one of his own caucus members has committed to undoing everything and erasing from history and revising history in what we've done here. I mean, they can't have it both ways. They've got to really pick and choose. And how do they pick and choose, Madam Chair? Is it just with their ideology and no evidence-based practice here?

Mrs. Aheer: Yes. That's right. Exactly.

Mr. Westhead: The Member for Chestermere-Rocky View says, "That's right." They just do think blindly with ideology. You know, that's scary, Madam Chair. I think that the opposition ought to get up and explain to Albertans what exactly their plan is because we haven't heard anything from them on their plans other than that the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner attended an anti women's reproductive rights rally. That's one of their most clear policy directions that we've heard from them, and that's pretty scary.

The Deputy Chair: Before I call the next speaker, I just want to remind everybody in the House that we are speaking to the clauses of the bill, please.

Would there be any other members that would like to speak to the clauses of the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. As much as I enjoy pointing out all of the flaws in the opposition's ideology, I will of course stick to the clauses of the bill.

You know, it's good to rise this morning and speak on this bill. I've actually spoken on this bill previously. To review some of my comments from earlier, the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board has made clear that this government has laid out three key principles when it comes to approaching Alberta's capital market. The minister said that the government is focused on, number one, investor protection; number two, ensuring market integrity; and number three, ensuring that we have an efficient system for capital formation. From what I've heard thus far in this House, there seems to be some general agreement that these are indeed laudable goals and are useful guideposts when we consider changes to the Securities Act.

As a result, as we consider this bill, you know, I feel like we must consider the following questions. If they sound familiar, they should be. I've talked about this at length previously. Does this legislation serve to enhance consumer protection? Does this legislation serve to further improve market integrity? And will these changes continue to ensure that we have an efficient system for capital formation? Well, Madam Chair, I believe the answer to all three of these questions is yes, and I note nods of agreement from the opposition, so that's great.

Now, one, specifically in the bill's section 69.1, I believe really meets that second test, that being: does this legislation serve to further improve market integrity? If we look at page 2 of the bill that we have in front of us, section 69.1 talks about the powers regarding investigations. It says:

Where a recognized exchange, a recognized self-regulatory organization or a recognized quotation and trade reporting system is empowered under the bylaws or rules of the exchange, self-regulatory organization or quotation and trade reporting system, as the case may be, to conduct investigations, the following applies for the purposes of such an investigation:

- (a) a person appointed to conduct an investigation has the same power as is vested in the Court of Queen's Bench for the trial of civil actions
 - (i) to summon and enforce the attendance of witnesses,
 - (ii) to compel witnesses to give evidence on oath or otherwise, and
 - (iii) to compel witnesses to produce documents, records, securities, derivatives, contracts and things.

I'd be very interested to note – I'm assuming the “and things” part is for all-inclusive documents that might not otherwise be covered under this particular act, but if we want to debate what those things are, I would love to do so.

In section 69.1(b) it goes on to say that

- (b) the failure or refusal of a person summoned as a witness under clause (a) to attend at the required location and time, to answer questions or to produce documents, records, securities, derivatives, contracts and things that are in that person's custody or possession makes that person, on application to the Court of Queen's Bench by the person appointed to conduct the investigation, liable to be committed for contempt by the Court of Queen's Bench in the same manner as if that person were in breach of an order or judgment of that Court.

I think that's a very interesting clause, Madam Chair.

Section 69.1(c) goes on to say that

- (c) a person appointed to conduct an investigation may take evidence under oath.

Part (d) goes on to say:

- (d) a person appointed to conduct an investigation or a person authorized by a person conducting an investigation may administer oaths for the purpose of taking evidence.

Now, section (e) goes on to say:

- (e) notwithstanding the Alberta Evidence Act, another very interesting piece of legislation if you have some time to read it, a bank or any officer or employee of the bank is not exempt from the operation of this section.

Now, if you're following along at home, continuing on to page 3, section 69.1(f) says:

- (f) a person giving evidence at an investigation may be represented by legal counsel.

Of course, in our justice system being able to have legal counsel or a lawyer at your disposal is a very reasonable and prudent thing to do. I would imagine if you were under investigation by this act, that would probably be a wise choice.

That is section 69.1. Now, I really do believe that it meets that question of: does this legislation further serve to improve market integrity? I think it does. It talks about adding investigation powers just as if they are members of the Queen's Bench and have the full power of our courts to compel the attendance of witnesses and to compel witnesses to give evidence under oath and so on.

One thing that is interesting, though – I mean, this section is fine and good, but if you combine it with the amendments we're making to section 222(1), it lays out additional and I think very necessary protections for those who are going to be investigating wrongdoing that would be covered under this act.

Now, it's actually quite extensive, you know. Section 222(1) is actually repealed and is substituted with a great deal of extra detail, and what it talks about is immunities, in fact, though I know the opposition would like to be immune from fact. But this specifically talks to immunities for those doing the investigations. I think this is a very necessary part of the bill, especially when it goes in combination with the new investigative powers.

Section 222(1) starts off by saying that

No action or other proceeding for damages may be instituted against the Commission, a member of the Commission, the Executive Director, the Secretary, a person employed by the Commission or a person appointed under this Act or [through] regulations to perform a function or duty of or for the Commission, the Executive Director or the Secretary

- (a) for any act done in good faith

- (i) in the performance or intended performance of any function or duty, or
 - (ii) in the exercise or intended exercise of any power,
- or
- (b) for any neglect, omission or default in the performance or exercise in good faith of any function, duty or power.

10:30

Now, as interesting as that is, subsection (2) goes on to say:

(2) No action or other proceeding for damages may be instituted against a recognized auditor oversight organization or its directors, governors, members, officers, employees or agents for

- (a) any act done in good faith
 - (i) in the performance or intended performance of any function or duty, or
 - (ii) in the exercise or intended exercise of any power,
- or
- (b) any neglect, omission or default in the performance or exercise in good faith of any function, duty or power,

Now, those last sections that I just read, subsection 2(a) and its appropriate subclauses, go to further say:

in respect of a function, duty or power that has been assigned to the recognized auditor oversight organization pursuant to its recognition under section 64.1.

From there it goes on to subsection (3) of section 222.

(3) No action or other proceeding for damages may be instituted against a recognized self-regulatory organization or its directors, officers . . . or agents for

- (a) any act done in good faith.

Now, it further goes on to say:

- (i) in the performance or intended performance of any function or duty, or
- (ii) in the exercise or intended exercise of any power.

Then in subsection (b) it goes on to further clarify:

- (b) any neglect, omission or default in the performance or exercise in good faith of any function, duty or power, in respect of a function, duty or power that has been authorized under section 64 or 66.

Now, section 222 goes on to further state – and this is also quite interesting as well – that

(4) No person or company has any rights or remedies and no proceedings lie or may be brought against any person or company for any act or omission of the last mentioned person or company done or omitted in compliance with Alberta securities laws.

Section 222(5) goes on to a further clarification. It reads:

(5) Subsection (1) does not, by reason of section 5(2) and (3) . . .

I will note that subsection (3) was the one that I actually just read previously, which was talking about that no actions or proceeding for damages may be instituted against a self-regulatory organization or its directors, against its agents.

I think we've sort of gone on at length about this, Madam Chair. I'm of course going to be very happy to talk more about this, I'm sure, as we go through Committee of the Whole. For the moment I will leave my comments there, and I'm sure I'll be up again speaking to this.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member, for speaking to the clauses.

Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Madam Chair. As always, it's a pleasure to get up and speak in the House. I rise today to say a few words about the Securities Amendment Act, 2017, in particular and a few words more generally about our capital markets.

As members of this Chamber come together to consider this bill, I think it's important that we reflect on the big picture and how we can ensure that our capital markets work well. As all observers of capital markets know well, the decision-making in financial markets is driven by one very important factor, and that's good information, and by trust. When investors have access to good-quality information, when risk is credibly priced, and when trust is high, our capital markets work well. However, we also know what happens when investors have access to poor information and when the trust is low: the health of our capital markets deteriorates rather quickly.

All members of this House can remember the great scandals of the recent past that eroded trust in capital markets around the world. Take, for example, the actions of Bernie Madoff, whose failed Ponzi scheme cost investors an estimated $65 billion, or Jérôme Kerviel of the Société Générale, whose secretive futures trades cost the bank nearly $8 billion, or, for that matter, Nick Leeson of Barings Bank, whose risky bets in Singapore on the International Monetary Exchange resulted in the stark collapse of one of Britain's most iconic and historic investment banks.

Madam Chair, I raise these examples as they serve as a cautionary reminder of what can happen in our capital markets when bad apples are allowed to take action, and that's exactly what the Securities Amendment Act, 2017, is to address. As all members of this Chamber know, the direct loss to investors in these scandals was significant. Many people were impacted. Many people's retirement savings were impacted. I'll remind members of the House of when I spoke to the Securities Amendment Act, 2017, during second reading, when I talked about Maria and her savings and how these people depend on that as they move into retirement. We don't want people to have to go through that experience.

Of course, there was a broader cost, a wider cost, and that was borne by all participants in the capital markets. Because of the actions of a few bad apples, trust was eroded: trust in the investment industry, trust in our institutions, and trust in the broader market. When trust in our capital markets erodes, it has an effect on everyone. Liquidity dries up, investment declines, and, as we saw with the financial crisis of 2008, declining levels of confidence and trust coupled with poor information can lead to a world-wide recession.

Madam Chair, as you and all members of this Chamber know well, Alberta has the second-largest capital market in the country. Our capital market is unique and is largely driven by the enormous capital needs of our resource sector. As we consider this bill, I think it's important that we keep in mind how critical our capital markets are to the future economic health of our province.

What should be the principles that guide our decision-making when it comes to keeping the Securities Act and our regulatory framework up to date? In his remarks the other day during second reading the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board laid out those principles. As a reminder to members of the Assembly those principles were: strong investor protection, continued market integrity, and developing an efficient system of capital formation. In my view, these are the right principles to guide our decision-making with respect to this bill because it gets to the core of the issue of trust in our capital markets, and anything we can do to increase trust in our capital markets is good for capital formation, good for Alberta businesses, good for investors, and good for the long-term health of Alberta's economy.

On that note, Madam Chair, it is through this lens and with these thoughts in mind that I'd like to discuss the amendments before us today with the Securities Amendment Act, 2017. As we've all heard, the amendments before us are largely focused on increasing investor protection. As members know well, the Alberta Securities Commission currently has the statutory powers and authority to compel attendance and the production of evidence during investigations and during the adjudicative phases of their enforcement work. Of course, these powers and authorities are entirely appropriate for the Alberta Securities Commission. In fact, absent these powers and authorities, it is not clear that our capital markets could function properly as market integrity would be put at risk.

In the amendments before us the government is seeking like powers for self-regulatory organizations that have devolved powers under the Alberta Securities Commission. As members know well, self-regulatory organizations like the Investment Industry Regulatory Organization of Canada, also known as IIROC, and the Mutual Fund Dealers Association play an important role in ensuring market integrity and in protecting investors. By providing like powers and authorities to organizations like IIROC and the Mutual Fund Dealers Association, we are increasing trust in the marketplace and increasing investor protection. Perhaps more importantly, we are creating an institutional disincentive for bad apples to operate in our marketplace in the first place. Madam Chair, keeping bad apples out of our capital markets is good for investors. It's good for Alberta businesses and good for our overall economy.

I should add, Madam Chair, that extending immunity to directors, officers, employees, and agents is an important step in investor protection. By ensuring that we are only providing immunity for good-faith acts in the exercising of regulatory or deregulated duties, functions, or powers, we are enabling these self-regulatory organizations to conduct their enforcement much more effectively. All these things considered, the amendment before the House takes another important step forward in ensuring trust in the marketplace and therefore enhancing overall market integrity. The rest of the amendments in the bill before us are housekeeping in nature, but they are important nonetheless.

I would like to commend the Finance minister for taking the time to regularly review this act and make sure it is crystal clear whenever possible. Ensuring regulatory and, for that matter, legislative clarity is critical for all market participants. When the rules governing capital formation are clear, when we have smart regulations like we do here in Alberta, we provide the institutional framework that allows our capital markets to flourish. As I said before, having well-functioning capital markets in Alberta is critical for our economy, particularly because our resource sector is so dependent on raising huge sums of capital.

Madam Chair, as I wrap up these brief remarks, I want to emphasize how important this legislation is for Alberta, and I want to encourage all members of this House to support this bill. I think all members appreciate how important it is to develop trust in our capital markets and how important investor protection is to that end.

As all members of this House know, Alberta has a long and proud tradition of innovation in our capital markets. We're often looked at as leaders in the country and rightfully so. Today, with this legislation, Alberta is once again leading in Canada. We'll be the first jurisdiction in Canada to extend these powers to self-regulatory organizations like IIROC and the MFDA. As I read in the paper and as I hear on the street, these types of actions are being demanded by regular Canadians, trade associations, civil society, and, most importantly, investors and firms trying to raise capital. Quite frankly, everyone is onboard precisely because the amendments before this House are reasonable and, at the end of the day, will make our capital markets stronger while protecting investors.

On that note, Madam Chair, I encourage all members of the Assembly to support this bill. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak to Bill 13, which is the Securities Amendment Act, 2017, and I wish to commend my associates on both sides of the House that have spoken already on this. This is a good bill, and I think it fulfills our government's mandate to provide a suite of consumer protection legislation that tells Albertans that their government – and that's this whole government – really has their backs.

I'm very proud of what our government has done so far on consumer protection. Actually, it's not just me; there have been several commentators recently that have said that we're on the right track. We're looking after middle-class problems and making sure that vulnerable folks are protected from predatory financial actions. The payday loan legislation that was passed a year ago I think has been very successful. It has prompted basically the reversal of usurious interest rates that were being charged and has prompted a whole new class of lending institution that is going to provide short-term loans at more reasonable rates. I actually want to thank ATB as well as various credit unions in the province for stepping up on this. This will have a big impact on the welfare of lower income Albertans.

Another act that I'm very proud of is the one that banned door-to-door sales, at least has tightened up the contractual relationships that people enter into. I think that there are some analogies with this particular act, Bill 13, and the banning of door-to-door sales for certain products. Along those lines, the bill that we just passed licensing contractors and making sure that people that are building new homes can trust the contractor to have the appropriate background and education and facilities and as well provide some redress for the buyer of the new homes is very good and actually, again, has analogies to this bill.

The fourth thing that I would mention – it hasn't been mentioned recently, but the seniors' home adaptation and repair program is another example where, through an act that involves both grants and a type of reverse mortgage, seniors are able to get credible renovations done on their facilities. These renovations will help them stay in their home for longer periods of time.

Now, none of this, Madam Chair, is actually in a clause of this bill, but I think it's important as context to why we need to have clauses such as the powers re investigation, which is clause 69.1. I think that this is actually the real meat of this bill. It's what gives investors as well as the investment community and our businesses such as oil and gas and other entities that require strong investment support the trust in our system here in Alberta that will make for improved economic activity as well as the welfare of all Albertans. Clause 69.1 says:

Where a recognized exchange, a recognized self-regulatory organization or a recognized quotation and trade reporting system is empowered under the bylaws or rules of the exchange, self-regulatory organization or quotation and trade reporting system, as the case may be, to conduct investigations, the following applies for the purposes of such an investigation:

- (a) a person appointed to conduct an investigation has the same power as is vested in the Court of Queen's Bench for the trial of civil actions.

That's really powerful language: a justice of the Court of Queen's Bench can summon and enforce the attendance of witnesses.

Somebody can't say that they're away on other business or on vacation or need a sick day off. They actually can be compelled to attend, and they can be compelled to give evidence on oath, which means that if they provide testimony that is later found to be in error, there are consequences for that. Those consequences can be dire. So this ability to compel the witnesses to give evidence as well as to attend is very important.

10:50

Witnesses are also compelled "to produce documents, records, securities, derivatives, contracts and things." I know there has been some discussion about what the definition of "things" is in the context of another piece of legislation, but this means that the witness really needs to bring all the information pertinent to the case.

Under clause 69.1

- (b) The failure or refusal of a person summoned as a witness under clause (a) to attend at the required location and time, to answer questions or to produce documents, records, securities, derivatives, contracts and things that are in that person's custody or possession makes that person, on application to the Court of Queen's Bench by the person appointed to conduct the investigation, liable to be committed for contempt by the Court of Queen's Bench in the same manner as if that person were in breach of an order or judgment of that Court.

Again, very, very powerful language.

- (c) A person appointed to conduct an investigation may take evidence under oath.

I think I mentioned that before.

- (d) A person appointed to conduct an investigation or a person authorized by a person conducting an investigation may administer oaths for the purpose of taking evidence.

So we don't have to actually go to court and bring these people before a Court of Queen's Bench. This can be done under oath in a lawyer's office or other suitable environment.

- (e) Notwithstanding the Alberta Evidence Act, a bank or any officer or employee of the bank is not exempt from the operation of this section.

Again, it's very often that the persons providing investment advice and handling investments actually are employees of a bank, so this part of the legislation is, again, crucial.

In another section there is immunity to civil suit for these investigators. Again, this is very strong language that is going to help make sure that the investigators in these situations get all of the information that's pertinent to the situation.

I've lived in Alberta for 40 years, and I've basically started a career and had a successful career in medicine, started a family, bought a home, got my children educated with the help of RESPs, been a strong supporter of the RRSP systems in this province as well as the tax-free savings account, that is actually a federal responsibility, and I'm also trying to plan for my retirement, which may come sooner than later, I guess, if the opposition has its way. But in all of these segments of my life, in all of these segments of my financial life I've actually had to trust that the financial system is operating correctly. As I said in the second reading of this bill, that trust is very, very important, not only for me as an investor but also for the financial institutions that are providing the investments and by extension, as I mentioned earlier in this speech, the various industries and services that require investment support to flourish and to improve our economy.

Back in the day not so long after, 40 years ago, this province was devastated by the failure of something called the Principal Group. I don't know if any of those in the Chamber today remember the Principal Group. This was devastating. This was basically kind of a hybrid mutual fund, savings bank operation. They actually charged a 9 per cent upfront sales fee on their products and then purported to give a higher rate of return than comparable mutual funds. But it turned out that it was a form of Ponzi scheme that was going on, and it failed. It caused economic devastation in this province when it failed, not only to the employees of Principal Group, of which there were many that were devastated by the loss of their job, but also to a wide range of investors who had put their life savings into that. There were other groups.

One of the things that I'm pleased with that the previous government did was set up or at least made amendments to the Securities Act, which I think has prevented something like the Principal Group from ever occurring again in this province. But we need to keep being vigilant, and I think that's what this act is doing, to make sure that newer products – we don't even talk about mutual funds much anymore – that are available, derivatives and high-speed trading and all these other things, are being controlled.

Just to come to the current, just to today, there's an issue on the Toronto Stock Exchange with Home Capital. This is a company that provides high-risk mortgages, and they've had to be bailed out by a variety of pension funds and other corporations. The problem that I have with this is that Home Capital has the investment of a large number of Canadians in the mortgages as well as in the stock of this company, and those folks are at risk. It just points out the need to be vigilant, to keep on track of that. It was the failure of those high-risk mortgages in 2007 and 2008 which led to the collapse of Lehman Brothers in the United States and the financial crisis of 10 years ago. I certainly don't want to see a repetition of that either in Toronto or in Alberta.

For all of these reasons and largely, basically for investor protection and to protect the integrity of our capital markets, I think that this bill deserves our fulsome support. Thank you for the opportunity to speak to it.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to Bill 13? The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Madam Chair. I was trying to find a quote by the president and CEO of IIROC, Andrew Kriegler. So I googled "Bill 13 Alberta," and the first subject I saw was A Little Bit of it is Jealousy: Alberta Town Proud of Nickelback Despite Haters. I doubt that those two apply. With that being said, I did find my quote in relation to this.

I'm going to speak in relation to three pieces that Bill 13 underlines, which are that it provides regulatory organizations the same enforcement authority as the Alberta Securities Commission, gives regulatory organizations the ability to compel attendance and production of evidence so they are better able to do their jobs and protect Alberta investors, and protects people who investigate these cases from liability for carrying out their duties in good faith. As the CEO of IIROC did associate, these are three pieces that we need, the three legs of the stool. With the introduction of this legislation, when it passes, then we will have them, and we will be excited to have them. It really provides that leverage and allows justice for individuals who've been defrauded.

When I spoke a couple of days ago, I spoke about Bill 12, the New Home Buyer Protection Amendment Act, 2017, and I talked about how having regulatory bodies that enforce regulations can be a good thing. I alluded to whenever we entrust someone with our well-being, whether it is our financial well-being, our physical or emotional or psychological well-being, we put a lot of trust in them. I alluded to the fact that there are regulatory bodies that oversee the guy outside the Federal building who sells hot dogs, that he's monitored by Alberta Health Services. It's important that we ensure that we give the proper powers for these individuals to investigate. If I got sick because of the hot dog I enjoyed yesterday, it's important that Alberta Health Services has the ability to investigate in good faith and doesn't have the liability that they could fall under by doing that investigation.

It's important that as we move forward, the Alberta Securities Commission has those powers as well because we put a lot of trust into securities, and there are many heartbreaking stories of when individuals are defrauded when their life savings have been entrusted with someone. To be frank, it becomes too emotionally overwhelming for those individuals, and those individuals take their own lives. It's heartbreaking, and it's tragic. If they were protected, then they probably would still be around today. At the end of the day, it's important for those individuals who have been defrauded that, first, we find ways for them to recoup their capital, if possible, and that we provide them with closure from the situation as well.

I reflect to when I had my first child at the age of 21. There was a commitment that me and my then partner made, which was that we were going to invest in their education. We were going to put away $100 every single month to make sure that they had a great education. While it seemed like a little bit at the time, we knew that it would continue to add up for our children. You know, we were living from paycheque to paycheque, but this was an important investment for us, so we continued to make it and continue to make it.

Fortunately, we have a financial adviser we trust, who is a family friend, and we know very well that he's not going to do anything to us. But if we reached out to an investor that we did trust but they defrauded us, I can only envision how heartbreaking it would be for us to lose this nest egg that we are saving up for them, especially at a time when, you know, maybe we didn't go on the nice trip or maybe we bought the chairs from Value Village. These were hard decisions that were made on the merits that we wanted to make sure that we had a better life for our kids. I can only empathize with those who have been defrauded and feel sympathy for the pain that those individuals have had to go through.

It's important that we give these investigative bodies the tools that they need. The Alberta Securities Commission is mandated to protect investors and really foster a fair and efficient capital market here in Alberta. It's not about interfering. It's not about sticking our nose where it doesn't belong.

You know, I often hear the analogy of bureaucratic red tape. Well, you know what? When you don't give investigative bodies the powers that they need to investigate properly and when they have to continuously seek other avenues to get all the information they require and they can't compel people to provide that information in meaningful time, that just creates more red tape for those individuals. I'm happy that this government is moving forward to really cut the red tape when it comes to investigating securities.

At the end of the day, I think a lot has been said by many of the members here in the House. With that being said, I'm happy to support Bill 12 – sorry; Bill 13. I'm also supporting Bill 12, but I support Bill 13 because I think it's going to create some very positive protection for many Albertans, especially those who are first entering the capital market and may not entirely know all the laws and regulations that exist or may be really, really busy and it's hard for them to really do a lot of their homework in relation to that.

I will take my seat.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Madam Chair. I think we've made a lot of good progress and had some good discussion on the bill this morning in Committee of the Whole. I would move that the next time the committee rises and reports, it report Bill 13.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, just to clarify: rise and report? So you would like to call the question on the bill as of now?

Okay. Anybody else looking to speak at this point on Bill 13? Seeing none, I will call the question.

[The clauses of Bill 13 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 11 Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Amendment Act, 2017

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered on this bill? The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Yes. Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today to speak to Bill 11, the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Amendment Act, 2017, better known as the whistle-blower act. In a perfect world whistle-blower legislation would never have to be used, but as we heard during the deliberations of the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee and as we heard during the debate on Bill 11, there are those who abuse the system, leading to gross mismanagement of government resources. These people need to be held to account, and whistle-blowers are in the best position to bring these cases forward.

It's not an easy decision for a whistle-blower to come forward and file a complaint. They take on a significant amount of risk. They risk their career advancement and soured relationships with other employees. You know, frankly, it's terrible to think that someone who is trying to make Alberta a better place may actually have to suffer for it. The risk is necessary and important to make sure that taxpayer resources aren't being wasted or the public being put in harm's way. As legislators it's our responsibility to ensure that we are equipping these brave men and women with as many tools as possible to allow for reprisal-free disclosure.

I think that Bill 11 has incorporated a significant change to the act which makes it safer for employees to blow the whistle when they see wrongdoing. When we take a step back and look at Bill 11, we can see that the government actually listened to the recommendations made by the all-party Ethics and Accountability Committee. This is how committees are supposed to work. I know that my colleagues spent a significant amount of time last summer hammering out the details of PIDA, and the results are something that all parties in the Assembly should be proud of.

It's worth noting that the well-functioning committee did take an unfortunate turn for the worse in the late stages of summer and into the fall mainly because the government was more concerned about stacking the deck on electoral finance rules than actually completing the committee's mandate. The committee was also tasked with reviewing the Conflicts of Interest Act, an act that still has some significant problems. These problems are preventing members of the Assembly from one side to the other from speaking on legislation which has a big impact on our constituents, the people who have hired us to be here. It's unfortunate that the committee couldn't continue to function well and produce legislation that could benefit all Albertans and not just the NDP.

Like I said before, the opportunity was missed, the opportunity to work with the Conflicts of Interest Act. There was a bill before this House, which was Bill 12, that my constituents would have benefited from if only I were able to comment. The Ethics Commissioner is bound to work with the rules that exist. Those rules still have not changed, yet perhaps they should have changed. However, it seems that the NDP was more concerned with advancing their own interests above the interests of the great people of Alberta and Battle River-Wainwright.

Like I said before, I think that Bill 11 is a great example of what this Assembly can accomplish if we actually work together to help Albertans and not just the governing party, but I also believe that it could have been a better bill. I will be supporting Bill 11 and encourage other members of the Assembly to do so.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Madam Chair. Unlike my friends across the way, I'm actually going to focus on the bill and give you a little tour. I'm going to contrast a little bit so that there's really clear understanding about what was existing and what is proposed.

Just a little background. The Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act came into force in 2013. The act provides a process for employees in government or certain public-sector entities to report potential serious wrongdoings related to government and to receive protection from reprisal when they have done so. The Public Interest Commissioner along with the chief officer and designated officer in each government department or public-sector entity is charged with investigating wrongdoings and making recommendations.

This bill proposes to enhance protection for whistle-blowers and expands the scope of the act. I'm going to walk you through a few of the finer points and describe what is existing now and what the new bill or the amendment will provide. Currently the act applies to government departments, offices of the Legislature, and public entities such as Alberta Health Services and school boards. The amendment act references prescribed service providers, which are persons or entities that provide public services as a result of an arrangement or contract with government under an enactment. Specifics regarding which service providers and any exemptions will be dealt with in the regulations.

It's not clear whether the current act applies to ministers as heads of departments. The act does not apply to MLAs. Constituency staff are employed by the Legislative Assembly so are covered as employees. The current act does not apply to the Premier's or ministers' staff. With the amendments that we are proposing, the act will clearly lay that out. Subject to parliamentary privilege, MLAs, ministers, and the Premier can all be investigated when a disclosure is made to the Public Interest Commissioner. Likewise, political staff will be protected from reprisal should they choose to blow the whistle.

Currently Alberta's legislation already applies to physicians who are directly employed in public entities as well as other health practitioners and professional staff with admitting privileges in hospitals run by those public entities such as Alberta Health Services and Covenant Health as well as others. The new bill will have regulation-making authority that could be used in the future to expand the legislation to physicians who are in alternative relationship plans or receive other forms of payment from government.

The current act covers gross mismanagement of public funds or a public asset but not mismanagement of the public service or human resources. Gross mismanagement is not defined in the act, and the commissioner interprets when something constitutes gross mismanagement. The new bill will define gross mismanagement to include acts or omissions that are deliberate and that show reckless or wilful disregard for proper management of public funds, public assets, public service delivery, or the management or performance of a contract, arrangement, or enactment, or funds administered under a contract, arrangement, or enactment. In addition, gross mismanagement also includes egregious and/or systemic cases of bullying and harassment.

Around reporting requirements, currently whistle-blowers are required to report to the designated officer of their department or employer. In limited circumstances they can make a disclosure directly to the commissioner. Otherwise, they are not protected under the act. The new amendments will allow an employee to disclose to the designated officer or the commissioner at the employee's choice. This will apply to employees of departments, offices, and public entities. Employees of any contractors, prescribed service providers added in the regulations will report directly to the commissioner.

A whistle-blower may approach their boss about a wrongdoing, and their protection from reprisal would start at that very moment. The employee must still make the official disclosure to their designated officer or the commissioner before an investigation can begin. This avoids new obligations and procedures for supervisors.

Currently we require that the commissioner report an alleged offence to a law enforcement agency or to the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General. Designated officers are not obliged in the same way. The new bill will have a reporting obligation that applies consistently to the commissioner, chief officers, and designated officers.

Now, around freedom of information currently the commissioner is not subject to freedom of information and protection of privacy. However, if disclosures are made to designated officers, those disclosures may not be protected from a FOIP request and could result in the name of a whistle-blower being released. The new bill ensures that the name of the whistle-blower and other identifying information is exempt from those FOIP requests.

Around timeline to decide, currently the regulation provides that the commissioner has 10 business days to decide whether or not to investigate an alleged wrongdoing. The new bill will have the timeline extended to 20 business days. This balances the need to ensure that the decisions are made promptly and that cases do not fall through the cracks with the commissioner's need to make an informed decision.

Around powers to investigate, currently the act provides that the commissioner may require any person to produce or provide information. The changes would authorize the commissioner to go to an employer's work site to view records on-site, similar to the Auditor General's powers.

Currently there's an authorized designated officer or chief officer or the commissioner to collect personal information, including individually identifying health information and other information necessary to investigate disclosures. The changes would require a chief officer, designated officer, or the commissioner to use reasonable efforts to inform someone if they have received their individually identifying health information.

Currently when a designated officer or the chief officer is involved in an alleged wrongdoing, the Public Interest Commissioner will investigate. Normally the commissioner would provide a report and recommendations to the chief officer and designated officer, and the commissioner can request that they report back to the commissioner on actions being taken. However, if the chief officer and/or the designated officer is involved in the alleged wrongdoing, a report must be provided to other specified individuals, but the act is missing the requirement for those individuals to report to the commissioner on the steps taken. Changes would include an obligation on the specified individuals to report to the commissioner on the steps taken.

In terms of no remedies being allowed in the old legislation, currently while reprisals are prohibited, there are no remedies available if a reprisal occurs. Changes would see the Labour Relations Board empowered to decide on restitution to the whistle-blower, and the board's order would be enforceable as if it were a court order. The commissioner will investigate and decide whether or not a reprisal has occurred, and if a reprisal is found to have occurred, the commissioner refers the matter to the Labour Relations Board.

Around annual reporting, currently it requires the commissioner to annually report to the Legislative Assembly. The required contents are mainly statistics related to the number of inquiries, disclosures, and investigations. The changes would require more detailed annual reporting, including the types of proven wrongdoings and the disclosures received by the Public Interest Commissioner, a summary of findings in cases where wrongdoings or acts of reprisal are found to have been committed, the specific recommendations made to the public entities or offices of the Legislature and entities' responses to such recommendations, and also any offences committed or penalties given under the act. The annual report must also contain information about referrals to the Labour Relations Board and dispositions of those cases.

Currently the commissioner does not have the ability to delegate authority. The changes will give the commissioner the ability to delegate authority in the event of normal absence. This would be done at the discretion of the commissioner and would allow investigations to continue if the commissioner is away.

[Mr. Hinkley in the chair]

Currently the commissioner and staff are not exempt from giving evidence or appearing as witnesses in any other proceedings of a judicial nature. The changes would provide that the commissioner and their staff are not compellable in other judicial proceedings but still allow the Labour Relations Board to ask the commissioner for relevant information when determining restitution for the whistle-blower. It will also provide that the Labour Relations Board members and staff are not compellable.

Currently in terms of records management the legislation does not include any records management provision for the office of the commissioner. The changes allow the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices to make an order related to records management similar to the records management provision for other legislative offices.

With that, I am going to end my little tour of the changes in this very important bill. Thank you.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. The discussion on Bill 11 today has been interesting, and I appreciate the comments made by both the Member for Battle River-Wainwright as well as the Member for St. Albert. I have an amendment to the bill if the pages can come pick up a copy. The original is on the top of the stack. I'll wait until everyone has had a chance to take a look at it.

I'll just make a few comments to preface the talk on the amendment, Mr. Chair. I would concur with other members who have spoken both in second reading and also during the committee stage of this bill that it has been an important update to a piece of legislation which was passed in a past Legislature, and I think it made some very important improvements. I think that among the improvements I'm particularly pleased to see is the option for people who are whistle-blowers – if they don't feel comfortable bringing knowledge of a wrongdoing to an immediate supervisor or a designated officer, they can also go to the Public Interest Commissioner and make that information known to them. We had a very compelling presentation on behalf of a whistle-blower who felt that that was something that was very important to include in the act, and it has been adjusted to do so.

Mr. Chair, I'd like to read for the record that I move that Bill 11, the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Amendment Act, 2017, be amended in section 27 by striking out the proposed section 26(5) and substituting the following:

(5) The Speaker of the Legislative Assembly must lay the report referred to in subsection (4)(c) before the Legislative Assembly, if it is then sitting, or if it is not then sitting, within 15 days after the commencement of the next sitting, for review, referral to a committee of the Legislative Assembly or other action as the Legislative Assembly considers appropriate.

The Acting Chair: Thank you, hon. member. We will call that amendment A1. You may now proceed.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Now, some may ask: well, what exactly is the purpose of the amendment? The purpose of the amendment – and there's certainly not anything earth-shattering or groundbreaking in this amendment – is to create a sense of urgency and timeliness for the report that is being provided. During debate in second reading I believe it was the Member for St. Albert that talked about how the whistle-blower legislation would create a situation where that legislation would make Alberta a leading jurisdiction in terms of supporting and promoting the activities of whistle-blowers in reporting wrongdoings.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

I took a little bit of disagreement with that because I don't know that legislation alone can do that. In my view, what needs to happen is that there needs to be an overall culture whereby, first of all, wrongdoing is discouraged, obviously, but that, secondly, if wrongdoing occurs, anyone in a position to make a report, anyone who is a whistle-blower, you know, feels that they have the opportunity to do this.

One of the important improvements in this proposed act is the fact that reprisal is dealt with and some remedy for reprisal is dealt with, and that's specifically what this specific clause refers to. The reason I'm proposing this amendment is because I don't want a situation whereby there is no specific time limit on when a report can be dealt with and when a report can be recorded and tabled in the Legislature. This particular clause is actually quite common in lots of pieces of legislation, and it is common whenever we have a situation where we want to see something dealt with in a very timely and forthright manner. I can't think of many things that would fall into that category more than a report on a reprisal or a report on a remedy for a reprisal.

I think that's an extremely important part of creating that overall culture in our province whereby not only is wrongdoing discouraged but also that whistle-blowing, you know, in the public interest – people can come forward and report a wrongdoing, whether that report is done through a traditional channel, through the designated officer within the department of government, or whether that report goes directly to the Public Interest Commissioner.

I would ask my colleagues in the Legislature to seriously give consideration to this amendment. I think that it makes a small but not insignificant improvement to a bill that is important and one that we have, you know, basically stated has broad support across all parties within the Legislature, and I would ask for your support in supporting this amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak to amendment A1? The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm just having a look at this amendment. I'd like to thank the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster and actually agree. I think it's important that the Legislative Assembly be informed about what is happening as soon as possible. I'd just like to thank him for making this reasonable amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A1?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Deputy Chair: We are now back on the original bill as amended. Are there any members wishing to speak to the bill as amended? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'm hoping to continue speaking to what I consider the riveting points I brought up during second reading in terms of the culture that we have here in the province of Alberta and how we can make it a little bit better when it comes to the PIDA specifically and this act – right? – the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Amendment Act, 2017.

Last time I was speaking about the fact that under the current legislation people feel reluctant to come forward and disclose information regarding potential wrongdoing within the ministry that they're working in. I was speaking about how important it is within the public sector that public servants feel that they can come out and speak directly to issues of wrongdoing or gross mismanagement and even bullying and harassment, which aren't considered under the current legislation, and how that directly impacts the level of democracy that we have here in the province of Alberta.

If people do not feel secure – I think that is the ideal word we need to make sure that we're addressing here – that they can come forward and not suffer reprisals for what they are disclosing, then that actually makes our democracy poorer, right? I think that we can all agree on that. This amendment act is really important in that sense because it's making sure to address exactly that.

Now I want to go a little bit more into specifics when it comes to the act being proposed before us and speak a little bit about gross mismanagement because under the previous piece of legislation it wasn't very clear what was meant by gross mismanagement, what was included in gross mismanagement. It wasn't broad enough to include mismanagement of public service or human resource issues, which the current act will now encase within it.

With the proposed amendments gross mismanagement will include an act or omission that is deliberate and that shows a reckless or wilful disregard for the proper management of public funds, public assets, public service delivery, or the management or performance of a contract, arrangement, enactment, or funds administered under a contract, arrangement, or enactment. In addition, gross mismanagement will also include egregious and/or systemic cases of bullying and harassment, as I alluded to before. Ultimately, the commissioner, as an independent officer of the Legislature, will interpret when something constitutes gross mismanagement.

I think that this is a step in the right direction, where we're being more clear about what the intent is or, specifically with this definition, of what gross mismanagement is. Not only our government, but I do want to recognize at this time that the all-party committee was very constructive in the support that it gave to the minister responsible for democratic renewal and Minister of Labour when it came to putting this piece of legislation together. I want to applaud the fact that gross mismanagement is now going to include systemic cases of bullying and harassment.

I want to say how important this is because I've heard specifically from public servants who have experienced what they would consider systemic bullying or harassment on behalf of others within departments, specifically when it comes to their day-to-day work within the government. I want to say how important it is that people should feel free from that kind of bullying and harassment in their day-to-day life. Can you think about the level of stress that it would cause an individual to have to consistently put up with that kind of behaviour when they go to work every day, to put up with that kind of bullying day in, day out? You know, I can only imagine how tough that would be. So I'm very glad and I'm very happy that that will now be included if this amendment act were to be approved.

On another note, this legislation would improve the reporting process and ensure that whistle-blowers are protected when they need it. Under the old legislation a potential whistle-blower had to report to a designated officer before a wrongdoing would be investigated, and they were not protected from reprisal until that time. Under the proposed legislation potential whistle-blowers could bypass their designated officer and report directly to the Public Interest Commissioner if they chose to do so. Furthermore, the new act would clarify that a whistle-blower may approach their boss about a wrongdoing and that their protection from reprisal would start from that very moment. That's another move in a positive direction, making sure that they would be protected from the moment that they disclosed.

In some cases employees may not know their designated officer, and as a result they may be more comfortable speaking with their supervisor before going to their designated officer. In other cases a potential whistle-blower may prefer to go directly to the commissioner, which I think is important. If I'm not mistaken, that was requested by the commissioner himself, opening up that possibility. Also if I'm not mistaken, in committee I think that received support from everybody, and I want to acknowledge that.

Another matter that was considered was: what happens if during an investigation the commissioner has reason to believe that an offence has been committed? Under the current act they must report it to law enforcement. When this happens, the commissioner's investigation is suspended pending the results of the law enforcement investigation. The new legislation would clarify that designated officers and chief officers are also required to report to law enforcement in the same way, which is something that the old legislation overlooked. This change was requested by the Auditor General.

It is also important that the identity of whistle-blowers be protected. To that end, it's already the case that the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act does not apply to records held by the Public Interest Commissioner. However, if a designated officer initiates an investigation rather than the commissioner, it is possible for a third party to submit a FOIP request asking for records connected to the investigation.

Our new legislation will ensure that the name of the whistle-blowers and other identifying information is exempt from these FOIP requests, of course, to the all-important objective of protecting the whistle-blower and making sure that they're free of reprisals. Madam Chair, let's not forget that at the end of the day that's the major objective that we're trying to achieve, to make sure that people feel confident when coming forward to disclose a wrongdoing or gross mismanagement that they will be protected.

Another aspect that the all-party committee considered was: how long should the commissioner have to decide whether or not to investigate a complaint? Under the current act the commissioner has 10 business days to conduct initial inquiries and decide whether or not a full investigation is warranted. The act establishes a timeline to ensure that these decisions are made promptly and that cases do not fall through the cracks. However, this should be balanced with the commissioner's need to make an informed decision. Therefore, we have accepted the committee's recommendation and will extend that deadline to 20 days. Since the current deadline of 10 days is in the regulation, the change will be made in the regulation.

A further aspect that the all-party committee considered was: how should identifying health information be treated in whistle-blower investigations? Custodians of health information are obligated by other legislation to limit disclosure of that information to the least amount necessary. When the all-party committee was reviewing the whistle-blower legislation, the Public Interest Commissioner noted that there had never been a situation – I repeat: there had never been a situation – where his office received identifying health information. However, the legislation already provides the authority for the commissioner to collect that information in the course of an investigation. With this in mind, the new legislation will require the Public Interest Commissioner to make reasonable efforts to notify someone if their office receives identifying health information.

Now, another aspect that the all-party committee considered was: what happens if a chief officer or designated officer is involved in an alleged wrongdoing? For example, after conducting an investigation, the commissioner would normally provide a report and recommendations to the chief officer and the designated officer for the department or agency that was the subject of the investigation, and these officers would then report back to the commissioner on actions being taken. I'm sure that all members can see how this would be problematic.

If a chief officer and/or designated officer is involved in the alleged wrongdoing, the amended act will identify alternates to fill in for them. Under the new legislation it would clarify that these alternates have obligations that are as consistent as possible with the normal obligations of the chief officer or designated officer. If the commissioner found that there had been a reprisal against a whistle-blower, the Labour Relations Board would hear the matter and determine a remedy, as I will now describe.

I think that this is really important with the new piece of legislation coming forward, this whole issue of reprisals because, of course, I go back to my opening remarks about how important it is that public servants feel that they're being protected and that they are able to bring forward issues. At the end of the day, that makes our democracy all that more rich. It improves our democracy. I honestly believe that all members, regardless of what side of the House they sit on, can agree on that, on strengthening our democracy, and that's what this piece of proposed legislation is doing.

One of the most important goals of this piece of legislation is to protect whistle-blowers from any sort of punishment or retaliation from their employer. Under the existing legislation an employer in the public sector can already be charged for punishing an employee for exposing a wrongdoing – this is true – however, the old legislation does not provide for any sort of restitution to the whistle-blower if they suffer an unlawful reprisal. To solve this problem, the new legislation would enable the Labour Relations Board to order remedies when there has been a reprisal.

For example, the board may decide that the whistle-blower should get their job back if they were fired for blowing the whistle, or in other cases they may be entitled to compensation for lost wages. Ultimately, it will be up to the board to decide what is appropriate, and the board's order would be enforceable like a court order.

Now, that being said, I hope that it would never come to that. But it's reassuring to me and I believe to many members of this Assembly and to many of those in the public sector to know that this is written into the proposed amendment act that we have before us. This provides a sense of security to those that would be potentially coming forward if they were to disclose a wrongdoing or gross mismanagement that they may encounter.

While the current act requires the commissioner to issue an annual report, the required contents are mainly statistics relating to the number of inquiries, disclosures, and investigations. The amended act would require more details, including the types of proven wrongdoings in the disclosure received by the Public Interest Commissioner, summary findings in cases where wrongdoings or acts of reprisal are found to have been committed, the specific recommendations made to public entities or offices of the Legislature and the entities' responses to such recommendations, and any offences committed or penalties given under the act. This will make it more clear to Albertans what the commissioner achieves every year.

Additionally, the all-party committee also considered: what should happen if the commissioner is away while there is still work to be done? I'm sure that we've all found ourselves in that kind of a situation, where we've had to leave for whatever reason and need to delegate our responsibility to someone else. Under the new legislation this would give the commissioner the ability to delegate authority in the event of a normal absence, and this would be done at the discretion of the commissioner and would allow investigations to continue if the commissioner is away. The provision we are proposing is effectively the same as the delegation authorities already given to the Information and Privacy Commissioner and the Alberta Ombudsman.

In conclusion, Madam Chair, I just want to say how important I feel this piece of legislation is. Not only is this contributing to an improvement in our overall culture and making sure that we are working hard together with public servants here in the province of Alberta to make sure that our ministries are functioning well, but we are making sure that we're doing it at the same time as we're strengthening our democracy. At the same time, this strengthens our public service here in the province and makes sure that things are functioning in the best way possible.

With that, I'm going to complete my remarks. I'd encourage all members to support this particular bill. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Madam Chair. This is a very important bill, in my mind. I have a very strong belief in accountability, honesty, transparency in government as in all dealings.

One of the things in listening to other speakers that's really clear is that it's not just having the ability to report but the fact that individual people are making the choice to basically, in some ways, take a very big chance on their future employment, on their standing in different settings to make these reports. The choice is always there. Every one of us at every stage in our lives every day have choices to make. Do you report something you see that you know to be a wrongdoing, or do you sometimes, you know, ignore it or leave it till later because you haven't got the time? First and foremost, I think I would really admire the people that do come forward when they see or are aware of something that they know to be a wrongdoing.

Wrongdoings can be the very obvious ones like somebody creating a substantial, specific, or undue danger to the public or to the environment. Even there, though, you're taking a chance. You're putting yourself out there, and there is some potential for harm. The one that really spoke to me, though, was the section on gross mismanagement of public funds or a public asset and/or knowingly directing or counselling an individual to commit any of the other wrongdoings already mentioned. It's not that one so much but the gross mismanagement, including egregious and/or systemic cases of bullying and harassment.

Actually, when I thought about it, I realized I know someone in this situation right now, and it's pretty horrendous. This is a person who's working in a very responsible position, has been for 35 years, and another person in the same building, in the same institution but not directly her supervisor, has taken it upon herself to bully the person I'm speaking about. Bullying is a very difficult behaviour to counter because bullying is often subtle, and it can be repeated and subtle, and then it becomes harassment if it's regular and ongoing. Somebody looking in from the outside might say, "Well, it's not causing physical harm," but it's causing harm in so many invisible ways.

One of the things that comes out is that the person starts to experience – or several of the things that come out is that the person upon whom this bullying is inflicted starts feeling unsure of themselves: did I really do something wrong? They begin to doubt their own abilities even, like I said, when working in a position for over 30 years very successfully with no complaints, no problems, never any problem at work, no work complaints. They start doubting themselves. They've got anxiety about what they're doing. They start suffering. In a lot of cases there's some depression because it's very, very hard to go into work every day being pretty certain that you're going to be facing behaviour that is negative to you, negative about you.

If it carries on for long enough, it spreads, behaviour like that. Things can be said to other people. People who are not directly affected in the workplace can start taking sides. You know: am I on the side of the victim, or am I on the side of the bully? The bully has the advantage because they often have the power, and then people who are undecided, uncommitted may go with them because this is the side most likely to come out on top. As you can see, the person who is being bullied is put increasingly into a very solitary, very lonely, and very anxiety-ridden corner, where they don't know what they should do, what is the best thing to do to not be bullied even more.

When you put all that together, you know, I'm really, really happy that this description of bullying and harassment is in the new whistle-blower legislation because it does give the person who is being harassed or bullied another way they can get justice for themselves; that is, if their union maybe helps to a certain point but hasn't completely helped, if human rights legislation hasn't helped. When all things are exhausted, then they can go to the Public Interest Commissioner, the Ombudsman, and be free of danger of reprisal. This is so important because we are speaking about people's livelihoods.

By the time it gets to the legislative and the point where they're taking action against the bully or trying to, they're often very worn down in points of confidence, so the more supports they have and the more they feel that society as a whole supports them in fighting for themselves and in stopping something that everybody knows in their heart of hearts is wrong is a good thing.

I am very happy about this legislation and support it completely. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill as amended? The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Mr. Horne: Yeah. Thank you, Madam Chair. You know, I was very interested to see not just this bill but many related bills that this government has brought forward in the two years that we've been here. I was thinking about this bill earlier this week, this one in particular, when I was taking a document I had gotten from my grandmother to get framed. As I've spoken about in this House a few times, my great-grandfather was a Member of Parliament back in the '50s and '60s. We would not have seen eye to eye on many policies as he was a Diefenbaker Conservative, but this meant that he was present for the passing of the Human Rights Act. As such, being a personal friend of Diefenbaker, he had a hand-signed copy of the Bill of Rights. It had been sitting in a box in my grandmother's basement for a number of years. She felt that it was appropriate that she hand it on to me, so I brought it in to get framed.

I was thinking about, you know, what that bill intended to do. It ended up not being as effective as it could have been, which is why we now have the Charter of Rights as opposed to the Bill of Rights. But I was reflecting back on all of the developments in Canadian democracy that we've seen over the years. There are things that have always been a part of Canadian democracy, things like freedom of the press, mostly freedom of speech, things like that that are truly part of any Westminster-style parliament, indeed part of any democracy. I was happy to see that all of these are continuing to be brought forward.

You know, the public interest disclosure act, often referred to as whistle-blower protection, was brought forward previously, and it allowed for employees of various public bodies to come forward . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but pursuant to Standing Order 4(3) we will now rise and report.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 13. The committee also reports progress on the following bill: Bill 11. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Does the Assembly concur with the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I think we've made some great progress and had some vigorous debate this morning, so I would move that we call it 12 o'clock and adjourn until 1:30 this afternoon.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, May 16, 2017

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you 74 students from the wonderful school of Eastview in Red Deer-South. They are accompanied by teachers Kim Foster, Isaac Terrenzio, and Tracy Beingessner and chaperones Jodi Quintal, Gail McDonald, Sandi O'Brien, Mike Hudak, Angie Desharnais, and Laurette Woodward. Would you all please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my absolute pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you 43 students from the amazing school of St. Timothy. They are accompanied today by Miss Kyra Reilly and Mrs. Kristina Schmidt. I would ask all the students and their teachers to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other school groups here today?
Seeing and hearing none, the hon. Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today on your behalf to introduce to all members of the Assembly Ms Wilma Shim, chair of Special Olympics Alberta; Mr. Johnny Byrne, CEO of Special Olympics Alberta; Mr. Brian Varga, chair of the provincial games; and the athletes, volunteers, and staff of the Special Olympics. An hour ago we saw the torch run final leg relay kick off on the front steps of the Legislature with the Law Enforcement Torch Run as guardians of the flame. In 52 days the Special Olympics Alberta Summer Games will take place in Medicine Hat, from July 7 to 9. It will be a thrilling weekend for over 1,000 athletes from all over Alberta, full of incredible competition and celebration of the Special Olympics community.

Ms Shim, Mr. Byrne, Mr. Varga, and the participants of the Special Olympics are seated in your gallery, Mr. Speaker. I would ask them all now to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, it would be amiss – I didn't know until after the event, but one of the torch runners is, in fact, a sister of the hon. Minister of Service Alberta. And I would advise all of you – I'm sure you'll be on a waiting list – that when you come down to Medicine Hat to spend some of your money in July, we'd be more than happy to have you there.

The hon. Minister of Labour and minister responsible for democratic renewal.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly some special guests from the Canadian Franchise Association. With us today is Mr. Ryan Eickmeier, vice-president of government relations and public policy for CFA, along with 20 representatives from some of Alberta's and Canada's biggest franchises. There are too many for me to name individually today, but I want to thank them all for joining us. I will point out that our guests are here on a special occasion for their organization, Franchise Awareness Day. It also marks the 50th anniversary of the CFA. There are 40,000 franchisees operating coast to coast; 60 per cent of their membership operates in Alberta. I thank them for joining us today, and I'd like to ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Tim Parnett. Tim is the founder of Mightywheels.ca, an advocacy website for people with physical disabilities. Tim is joined today by his father, Glen Parnett; his mother, Kelly Parnett; as well as my devoted constituency office assistant, Joscelyn Proby; our social work placement student, Adiatu Kuyatah; and another constituent, Jennifer Easaw, who joins us here in the House for the first time today to witness the proceedings. I invite them now to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you the following incredibly smart and hard-working individuals from the Department of Advanced Education, which is indisputably the best department in the government of Alberta. In the gallery with us today we have Charles Barnard, Cheryl Naundorf, Claire Tunney, David Williams, and Lauren Chomyn. I also want to recognize people who are not here today but have contributed significantly to some work that we have recently accomplished: Debbie Andre, John Muir, Kelly Turner, Natasha McKenzie, Peter Pagano, Roderick Wiltshire, Sandra Wagenseil, and Waqas Yousafzai.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to recognize the hard work, dedication, and expertise that these people have so generously contributed in guiding our ministry, stakeholders, and the province through the legislation of Bill 7, An Act to Enhance Post-secondary Academic Bargaining. I'm very proud of my department and of the comprehensive rigour that they have applied to the process on everything from gathering data through the many consultation avenues to getting right the fine print of the actual bill. They were instrumental in helping us listen to all Albertans so that we could find the right balance and deliver the long-neglected rights that Bill 7 ensures. I'd ask them to please rise to receive my heartfelt thanks and the recognition of all in this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly representatives from the Boys and Girls Club of Strathcona County. I will be speaking about their work later on in my member's statement. Tyler Roed is the executive director, who has worked hard for many, many years to achieve the success of the club, and from the board of directors are Brock Day, Helen Conroy, Leta Shannon, and Sean Jenkinson. I would like them now to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Service Alberta and of Status of Women.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like very much to take this opportunity to introduce to you and through you to the House my sister Jessica McLean. Jessica is here today with the Special Olympics torch run. As you mentioned, she was one of the torch runners. She is an athlete and an accomplished swimmer with Special Olympics. She has competed at the national level, winning numerous gold medals. She is a member of their masters' swim club, and she is on the Edmonton and provincial athletes' committee. I am very proud of her and her accomplishments. Seeing her run today brought a tear to my eye. I'm honoured to have the opportunity to introduce her today in the House. I'd ask that she rise and please receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: A special welcome to you.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Sunalta Community in Calgary

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I want to speak about a neighbourhood in Calgary-Currie that is working hard to create a welcoming community for all. That neighbourhood is Sunalta. Built in the early 1900s by the CPR, its name is a fusion of sunny plus Alberta, hence Sunalta. Today Sunalta is home to Albertans who live in one-, two-, and three-storey walk-ups, who live in basement suites, condos, side-by-sides, and you name it. Some, unfortunately, do not have a place to call home, but everyone is welcome in Sunalta.

1:40

I am so proud of the work Sunalta does to foster inclusion. This summer the Sunalta Community Association and five other organizations are creating a 10-day camp for immigrant and refugee youth aged 13 to 17, calling this initiative My Summer Journey YYC. Youth will participate in urban art projects, go on field trips to local tourism destinations, and explore Calgary by bike. The goal, Mr. Speaker, is to engage recent immigrant and refugee youth in hands-on art and cultural activities as well as to teach technical and practical skills.

Another example is Jane's walk, part of an international initiative to help communities foster growth. This walk was attended by myself and people of all ages. We visited what was once a vacant lot that has since been transformed by the community members into a wildflower garden with picnic tables, memorial stepping stones, and a crabapple tree.

Sunalta is also home to local businesses like One Way Foods, where you are greeted with the aroma of banana bread, and Mikey's juke joint, a well-known local music venue.

Sunalta is where I met a man using solar panels to heat his garage eager to know more about our energy efficiency programs. It's also where I met a couple who provide services to people with disabilities eager to hear about my Henson trust consultations.

This is Sunalta, Mr. Speaker. Sunalta has been welcoming change, families, and diversity for well over 100 years, and I hope they will continue to welcome everyone for many more years to come.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Federal and Provincial Government Policies

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The NDP government just does not have the backs of Albertans, especially when this NDP government deals with their BFF, Justin Trudeau. There was the closing of the Vegreville immigration centre, killing hundreds of good rural jobs. When Trudeau brought legislation forward solidifying the tanker ban along the B.C. coast, where was the NDP? Missing in action. Does the NDP even understand the significance of the tanker ban and the impact it will have on our oil industry? Either they don't understand, they don't care, or, worse yet, they actually revel in the potential demise of Alberta's number one industry.

Last week the Prime Minister's hand-picked panel recommended moving the National Energy Board from Calgary to Ottawa. Where was the NDP? Out in left field. Is there anyone over there in left field that understands that the heart of Canada's energy industry is right here in Alberta? The federal government continues to kick Alberta when it's down, with things like GST on the carbon tax and billions in unfair equalization, and the NDP remains complacent if not complicit in these actions.

Let's face it. Social licence is a hoax. Those opposed to our oil and gas industry still oppose it today. The tanker ban is a classic example. The highly touted carbon tax, the biggest tax increase in the province, got us nothing. Well, it did get us free light bulbs installed by an out-of-province company. Albertans don't need light bulbs. They need timely health care, quality education, safe communities, well-maintained highways, and jobs.

This government simply does not have Albertans' backs, but they do have their bestie Trudeau's back and the backs of environmental radicals from around the world. This government has brought forward three brutal, debt-laden budgets in a row. These budgets are creating record levels of debt, and Albertans will be paying billions in annual interest payments.

This government has done nothing to create a stable, business-friendly environment. In fact, it has taken every opportunity to destroy the Alberta advantage. Without business investment, there can be no jobs and prosperity.

Wildrose believes Alberta's government agenda should be to put Albertans first. We need to build relationships with the rest of Canada and the world, relationships built on trust and respect, with strength, rather than to cower and appease. If we have just one plea . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Government Accountability

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the constant criticisms of this Legislature is that we as legislators too often put partisan politics before the best interests of our constituents. That's a fair criticism. Members on both sides of the House have been accused of being in the pocket of big business or unions or of lacking compassion or not respecting democracy or deliberately acting against the best interests of Albertans.

Often these complaints are not based on the actions of the specific member being accused. In our system of government members answer to the actions of caucus colleagues past and present because one of the most important aspects of representative democracy is that there is someone answerable to the people. We wear the collective history of our political affiliation because the people who elect us bear the weight of the decisions made in this Chamber.

It's true that the Progressive Conservatives, after 44 years of governing this great province, have more history to account for than any other party in this House. While we wear that history proudly with names like Klein and Lougheed, finding admirers across the province as well as across party lines, we also acknowledge that we've made our fair share of mistakes. We've taken our lumps from the government for some of those mistakes.

That is why I find it so disappointing that the government is taking question period as simply another opportunity to repeat key messages and attack the opposition, when a question about transitions for worried coal communities draws accusations from the minister that these communities were being ignored by the opposition instead of actually taking the opportunity to inform concerned Albertans, when questions about the safety of children in care are brushed off by the Premier because that specific case didn't happen on her watch.

Mr. Speaker, a preference for your own political team is to be expected. But when that preference for your own team or your disdain for the opposition continues to cloud your better judgment and prevents you from answering questions given to us justifiably by concerned Albertans, then your preference has become a prejudice and an obstacle to good governance.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Asian Heritage Month

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak about Asian Heritage Month. Here in Edmonton Asian Heritage Month has been around since 1998, and in 2002 May was declared Asian Heritage Month by the government of Canada. This month gives us an opportunity to reflect on the contributions made by individuals of Asian descent to Canada and its culture. Our society is a rich mosaic of diversity and inclusion, and a significant part of that mosaic is due to the many individuals of Asian heritage who make this province home. As the Canadian Heritage Minister reminded us earlier this month, "Whether from East Asia, South Asia, Western Asia, Southeast Asia or the Middle East, Asian Canadians have helped our country prosper and grow."

Asian-Canadians and Asian-Albertans have been here in Alberta for many generations, Mr. Speaker. I myself am proud to be a second-generation Asian-Albertan that has the opportunity to celebrate my heritage right here in this House.

I know that our Asian communities across this province are extraordinarily proud and vibrant. In fact, every single year I attend numerous new year events across the province for weeks on end, Mr. Speaker, to celebrate and share in the prosperity a new year brings to our communities. Here in Edmonton during Asian Heritage Month there are opportunities to experience films, choirs, and even opera. I encourage all members to seek out and attend these and other events in your communities.

Our Asian communities are working people in this province. They're business leaders, they're doctors, they're teachers, they're nurses, they're labourers, and indeed even MLAs, Mr. Speaker. So I'm proud of this province for being inclusive and for the opportunity that it offers to our diverse communities. Our province and indeed our nation are better because of the unique diversity that our Asian heritage and culture bring to the table.

Diversity and inclusion are something that I am proud this government stands for, and I hope all members of this House will strive to uphold those values and be strong ambassadors for the diversity in this province, whether that's for our Asian culture or any other. Alberta is stronger together.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Boys and Girls Club of Strathcona County

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Boys and Girls Club of Strathcona County has been hard at work in my community since 2001. Starting with one small program, they have expanded to serve more than 750 youth through the support of businesses, community groups, and family and community services.

One of the things that makes the Boys and Girls Club unique is their sole focus on serving young people. No child is ever denied access to the wide range of programs due to their inability to pay.

Programs at the Boys and Girls Club are created to provide opportunities that build leadership and character for every individual through every stage of their lives. This strength-based perspective and capacity-building focus have earned fantastic results and have been adopted by many other groups. My own practice as a community and social planner has benefited from learning about this asset-based philosophy.

The club has grown so quickly in Strathcona county that they have recently opened a third location in Sherwood Park. Executive Director Ty Roed has said that one reason for their growth is that the Boys and Girls Club offers an affordable solution in a tough economy.

They have worked hard to become a part of the community. I particularly like how the two satellite locations are situated in schools to offer before and after school programs. In addition to before and after school care programs, the club runs summer programs and adventure camps, where there are opportunities for kids to go on trips to places like Banff, Calgary, Drumheller, and maybe the Legislative Assembly.

I strongly encourage you all to visit your local Boys and Girls Club to meet the dedicated teams that work to deliver these important services and to learn more about the multitude of ways in which this club strengthens communities by always seeing the best in our youth.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Property Rights and Bill 204

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to express my disbelief that this government, that claims to champion protecting property rights for Albertans, would be so completely out of touch on the matter. Despite their claims to champion this topic while in opposition, when the rubber hit the road, they drove straight into the ditch, throwing one of their few rural MLAs under the bus in the process.

The now Infrastructure minister even had his picture on a glossy brochure titled Your Land, Your Rights, which contained all sorts of indignant quotes on how evil some of the sections of bills 19, 24, 36, and 50 were. It's ironic, considering that when this side of the House gave them the opportunity to actually fix some of these egregious parts, they failed landowners completely. The hon. minister even once stated, "I find it ironic in a way that it's the New Democrat opposition that is standing up and has stood up from the beginning for the [property] rights of [Albertans] in this province." Well, Mr. Speaker, we know from yesterday's actions by the government that they say one thing and do another. I believe that meets the definition of two-faced.

The government made no efforts to work together to address any concerns they had with this bill. They could have proposed meaningful amendments or even suggested sending it to committee so that they could hear from experts on the subject. An all-party committee even recommended unanimously that the government abolish adverse possession. Then the same government members of that committee voted yesterday to destroy this bill in the House, a disgraceful position to take from a party who had released property rights propaganda stating, "Together we can change these laws that trample on important rights of citizens."

Mr. Speaker, the bottom line is that this government once more failed its citizens, not just rural Albertans but all Albertans, by destroying this bill. Albertans have long memories, and they will remember who voted for property rights and those that failed to do so. The Wildrose Party was formed in large part because of attacks on property rights. This is important to Albertans. Any government would be wise to remember that.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members.

I wonder if we could have unanimous consent to introduce guests that were missed in the earlier introductions.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly two guests today. Kathleen DeSousa has just completed her social work diploma program at NorQuest College and is completing her practicum in my constituency office this spring. In the fall Kathleen will be entering the bachelor of social work degree program offered here through the University of Calgary. Arike Akomolafe is a first-year social work diploma student from NorQuest College who is doing her practicum with the New Democrat caucus this spring. She also will be continuing her education at NorQuest in the fall and hopes to work with families and children after graduating.

I want to wish both of them the very best in their education and their future. I would ask them to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Federal-provincial Relations

Mr. Jean: Earlier today I sent a letter to the Prime Minister urging him to use common sense when it comes to proposed changes to the National Energy Board and the pipeline approval process in our country. I'm deeply concerned that the idea is being floated right now to have the headquarters of the NEB moved from Calgary to Ottawa. The Prime Minister might think it's okay to alienate the west, but the everyday Albertans I talk to would truly disagree. What pressure is the Premier putting on Ottawa and Trudeau to keep the NEB in our province?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, I must say that it is always a pleasure to be able to get up and speak to something where the Leader of the Opposition and I are in fundamental agreement, because we absolutely agree that it is not a wise decision to move the NEB to Ottawa. We made that position very clear to the crew that was reviewing the NEB previously, and just today as well we had a press conference, at which point I made it very clear that our government was absolutely opposed to the NEB moving and that we would continue our work to oppose that because it makes no sense. It makes about as much sense as moving the Atlantic marketing board to Winnipeg, and that doesn't make sense either.

Mr. Jean: The threat to move the NEB is just the latest in a string of decisions that clearly show that Ottawa is ignoring our province and Albertans. While the Premier may be comfortable with her current complacency with Trudeau, Albertans are getting a raw deal during really tough times. The Infrastructure Bank went to Ottawa, not Calgary. Valuable jobs are moving away from Vegreville, and now the NEB could be closing up shop in Calgary. Will the Premier just admit that she is failing to defend Alberta's interests with the Trudeau Liberals?

Ms Notley: Well, in fact, Mr. Speaker, I think what I just outlined is the very opposite of that. We are of course always working to promote and create jobs here in Alberta and to preserve those that we have. Of course, it makes obvious sense for the NEB to stay in Alberta, which is, of course, the centre of the energy industry for all of Canada. In fact, as we move forward in terms of growing the ability of our energy industry to diversify our markets, it makes sense for the NEB to stay here with those people who are leading that growth, and that is the message I will continue to deliver to Ottawa each and every day.

Mr. Jean: The Premier can't say that she's using diplomacy when she spends her time taking potshots at our neighbouring western provinces, who should be our greatest allies. Albertans are rightly frustrated. They're losing out on their hard-earned dollars to the NDP's carbon tax, all in the name of social licence. The federal government is suggesting that the pipeline approval process should take three years now instead of 15 months. This is unacceptable. Will the Premier wake up to the facts and realize that she doesn't have a friend in Trudeau and that Alberta is being hurt in the process?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, what I will of course remind the members opposite is that after a decade of a Conservative government here in Alberta and a Conservative government in Ottawa we didn't get a pipeline built. But you know what we are doing? We have gotten a pipeline approved – construction is scheduled to start this fall – and that happened because our government is working hard on addressing and accommodating national interests, including those with respect to climate change, because that is the way you lead. I am very proud that that is exactly what our government is doing.

The Speaker: The second main question.

Oil and Gas Transportation to the West Coast

Mr. Jean: Alberta isn't just being overlooked in the federal government's eyes; we're also being ignored when it comes to major policy decisions. Last week Trudeau introduced legislation that will establish a ban on tanker ships along the central and northern coast of British Columbia. Out of this government, not even a peep. The tanker ban is a direct attack on the viability of Alberta's oil and gas industry. Why did the Premier sit on her hands while the federal government was firing the latest shots in its war on Alberta?

Ms Notley: Again, Mr. Speaker, the member opposite is misinformed. In fact, our government was very clear in our representations to the federal government about how they should move forward with respect to the northern coast port possibilities. We believe that we still need to leave it open for more upgraded product to be able to leave those ports, and we'll continue to engage in conversations with the federal government on exactly that point.

Mr. Jean: This tanker ban will have a real negative impact on our province, but the NDP is only willing to support our energy industry when they're embarrassed into doing so. That's the only reason they supported our Wildrose motion to urge the government to not have a tanker ban. Since then, they've been entirely silent on the issue. Albertans aren't having the wool pulled over their eyes on this. Is the shell game of a Premier that you'll say one thing, then do another to serve your NDP world view?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, what our government is going to do is that we are going to look at all the issues that are being considered when it comes to building national energy infrastructure, and we're not going to point fingers and yell at people from inside our echo chamber and pretend that there aren't legitimate issues that other provinces need to consider. It is that approach that got us the approval for Kinder Morgan, and it is that approach that is going to ultimately see that pipeline built.

Mr. Jean: Not that it matters to the NDP, but the tanker ban means Northern Gateway will never, ever happen. The Northern Gateway pipeline project proposed a safe, reliable option for transporting Alberta oil to world market. It was supported by a majority of the First Nations along the proposed route. It would have resulted in thousands upon thousands of jobs for Albertans, and it was approved by the rigorous NEB process. When the province is experiencing hundreds of thousands of lost jobs, why in the world did the Premier fail to advocate for an important project like the Northern Gateway pipeline?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, the reason that the Northern Gateway pipeline was rejected by the courts was because of the way in which the members opposite and their government approached decision-making: plug their ears, not listen to anybody, call people names, demonize their opposition, and absolutely destroy the process so that, as a result, the courts reversed the decision. That is not the way you build a nation. That is not the way you get infrastructure built. That's not the way you build an economy. We have a different approach, and it's working.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

2:00

Pure North S'Energy Foundation

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Minister of Health, Dr. Carl Amrhein, has been accused of personally lobbying for Pure North. What's worse is that he was pushing his private agenda while maintaining his post as the most senior official at Alberta Health Services. This kind of nepotism and insider trading is exactly why Albertans voted out the last government, which is why the Wildrose has written to the Ethics Commissioner asking for an investigation. Albertans want to know: does the Minister of Health think the actions of her deputy minister are appropriate?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I want to reiterate that under the previous government $10 million was awarded in funding. If you have questions about that funding for the wellness program, please ask the Member for Calgary-Lougheed because he was the associate minister at the time. If you have questions about what's happened under this government, I'm proud that this government has worked outside the box to find a nurse practitioner program. That's a program that is very different from the wellness program that's been spoken to in the past. My deputy gave advice twice not to fund the wellness program, but the previous government did.

Mr. Yao: Albertans are tired of hearing the NDP's secrecy, and they're tired of seeing this government work so hard to cover up their own mistakes. On April 10 we asked if the minister knew of this issue, and she said no. We have now seen a brief from September 2016 that says otherwise. The minister and her staff are refusing to comment on this very serious issue and have repeatedly dodged the media. Why has the minister been silent on an issue of this magnitude, and what are you hiding?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to rise in this House and speak to the matter of this case. Specifically, the pilot project that's being referred to I believe today was evaluated by three committees led by the Institute of Health Economics and includes leading national nursing researchers and educators. With regard to the program of the past I absolutely agree. That's why I refused to fund extensions on the program of the past. I don't believe that that was a proper use of funds, and that's why this government stepped up, did things differently, and refused to move forward with what the Member for Calgary-Lougheed clearly endorsed at the time.

Mr. Rodney: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order, please.

The second supplemental.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When this government is spending Alberta's tax dollars, they better be sure they're getting the best value for the dollar spent. This means picking contracts based on a fair, transparent proposal and bidding process. Sadly, this concept seems to be completely lost on this Health minister. To the Premier: what are you doing to ensure that all contracts and Albertans' hard-earned money are being awarded based on facts and not personal relationships, and will you dismiss this deputy minister?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, I have all the confidence in the world that this process was appropriate. As the members opposite have heard, the minister in question was involved in a decision about a completely different issue than that which they are trying to confuse everybody else with. If they're concerned about that other decision, that was made based on personal relationships, I suggest they look to their left and ask their dance partners why they did that, but in the meantime the minister is making contracting decisions in the appropriate way.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The left doesn't look that good.

AIMCo Board of Directors

Mr. McIver: The NDP has proudly proclaimed that now all Albertans can apply to be on all boards appointed by this government. When it comes to handling $90 billion as an AIMCo board member, I'm not sure I want just any person in charge unless, of course, they're well qualified. To the Premier: why can't you admit that your socialist dogma does not make all people equally able to manage $90 billion, and will you re-establish minimum requirements that let only qualified people do this important job?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me begin by saying that we have very great confidence in the professionals at AIMCo to make sound investment decisions. Indeed, this is why we're seeing excellent outcomes as a result of their work. But I'd just like to read the following quote:

In making an appointment, the Lieutenant Governor in Council shall have regard to the desirability of having a board that is comprised of individuals who, in the aggregate, have the full range of skills, knowledge and experience necessary to ... [run] the Corporation.

That is in the regulation, that is the rule that we are following, and I suggest that the member opposite judge us on our record.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. AIMCo manages $90 billion, including the heritage trust fund, and about $70 billion in pension funds belonging to Alberta workers. Here's what the NDP took out in section 5: "proven and demonstrable experience and expertise in investment management, finance, accounting or law or experience as an executive or a director in a senior publicly traded issuer." Much different than what the Premier just said. Premier, where can we look up something comparable to that, not what you just put in but something that actually has teeth and is specific and makes people be qualified?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, to begin with, I think it's important for the members opposite to understand that what I just read actually ensures exactly what he's referring to.

In addition, the board of AIMCo is looking at guidelines that will also include exactly the additional issues that he's talking about. And you know what? The quality and the competence of the people that this government has appointed to that board are absolutely stellar, and nobody could possibly criticize them. So I would suggest that the member opposite look at our record rather than looking for problems that aren't there, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McIver: All the qualified people the Premier refers to were appointed before these changes that they made.

Premier, there are four new members coming on. Section 6 required a nominating committee to keep AIMCo at arm's length to stop political interference. Albertans don't trust that that won't happen. To the Premier. I ask you once again: will you assure this House and all Albertans, after admitting that you need to make more changes, that you will not stack this board with your friends simply to propagate the NDP world view?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much for the opportunity to address this. You know, look at the quality of the people who have been appointed recently. Those people were appointed in October. We changed the system, Mr. Speaker, in September. Ken Kroner, who previously managed $4 trillion in assets, was appointed. Phyllis Clark, formerly the vice-president and CFO of the U of A, also came on. We've got several more appointments going. Judge us by the people who come onto the board. They're going to be stellar, like these people are. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, you may want to listen sometimes, not keep talking all of the time.

Pure North S'Energy Foundation (continued)

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, the former PC government gave a $10 million grant to Pure North for a vitamin/mineral supplement program against the advice of medical officials who expressed concerns over its effectiveness and potential health risks. The NDP last year gave another $4.2 million to the same group for a nurse practitioner program led in a primary care clinic. Fourteen million dollars represents a significant investment in a group that third-party reviewers said should not receive funding. The Minister of Health claimed to have no knowledge of her ministry's concerns before approving the grant, but an AHS briefing note suggests otherwise. To the minister: given the concerns...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. On what he does say about the $10 million for the wellness program, I have to agree. That's one of the reasons why my department gave me advice not to extend the funding that was granted under the former government. Twice they gave me that advice; twice I acted on their very important advice.

When it came to nurse practitioner demonstration projects, I think all members of this House – I hope all members of this House – would agree how valuable nurse practitioners are, particularly in working with vulnerable populations, and there are a number of different nurse practitioner demonstration projects currently under way just to prove that thing, Mr. Speaker.

Dr. Swann: CBC news reported that former AHS official Carl Amrhein reportedly has a history of participating in and lobbying for Pure North. This raises serious concerns about a potential conflict of interest in the awarding of both these grants. Albertans deserve to know what role he played and whether or not his involvement biased the approval process. I've asked the Auditor General to investigate, but perhaps the minister could set the record straight. Were you aware of your deputy and his conflict of interest, and if so, when?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and again to the member for the question. It's my understanding that Dr. Amrhein made his disclosure to the Ethics Commissioner. If the Ethics Commissioner wishes to look into this further, we certainly welcome that, and it's my understanding that there were also questions today brought forward to the Auditor General. Again, if the Auditor General chooses to pursue that, we welcome that. The nurse practitioner project has very rigorous oversight, and we welcome that to any of the other decisions that were made under the former government, of course, as well.

Dr. Swann: It doesn't sound like the minister wants to answer the question.

In Public Accounts today I asked the assistant deputy minister if he was concerned that the latest $4.2 million grant to Pure North for a nurse practitioner led clinic program would be used to further the supplements of vitamins and minerals. He denied any connection to Pure North, which clearly views this as an extension of their program. Can the minister assure us that no megavitamins are being handed out by this clinic and table their contract?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much. Just to clarify, the disclosure was made to the Ethics Commissioner. I don't recall any discussions that spoke to that specific matter with regard to the previous question.

With regard to the nurse practitioner grant agreement, which this question relates to, the agreement very clearly spells out that Pure North must obtain written permission to use any of the information outside of the agreement, which has not been granted. If any organization does not follow the grant agreement, Pure North or any other, their funding could be discontinued. Clinicians are beholden to their colleges as well as to those who are granting this funding. We, of course, work in partnership with the colleges, but these are for nurse practitioners, RNs, LPNs, and health care aides.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Support for Persons with Disabilities

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans who use wheels to be mobile like my friend Tim Parnett, who joins us today in the Legislature, often report difficulties in navigating parts of everyday life due to barriers many of us take for granted. To the Minister of Community and Social Services: what strategies has this government taken to make sure Albertans with physical disabilities have accessible options?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. Our government is protecting and investing in things that make a difference in the lives of Albertans. We have heard loud and clear from advocates: nothing about us without us. That's why our track record is very clear that we are working with advocates, we are working with service providers, and we are working with individuals with disabilities to make sure that the policies respond to their needs.

Thank you.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many Albertans with disabilities are reporting long wait times for approval of new AISH applications. To the same minister: tell us what is being done to alleviate the backlog of AISH approvals.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. For 55,000 Albertans who rely on this program, it's more than a cheque, more than a government program. We have increased funding to this program, and we have a comprehensive set of benefits through Health that supports this program. We have put together an AISH action plan which actually sets out the details on how we will address the long-standing issues under the previous government.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta building code was recently updated, in the fall. However, Alberta's Barrier-free Design Guide, which is part of the building code, has not been updated since 2008. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: does the government plan to update this guide given new advances in technology and increased awareness of accessibility issues facing people with disabilities?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'd like to thank the hon. member for the question. Alberta has established the Barrier Free Sub-Council, and this group deals specifically with barrier-free access and is in place to review all code changes. This council is responsible for producing a guide to help builders, municipalities, and Albertans transition towards more accessible, barrier-free communities. It is my understanding that the subcouncil completed work on an updated guide in March, and a finalized version should be available in early June.

Coal Workers

Mr. MacIntyre: Float like an indifferent butterfly and sting like a killer bee: that was the Minister of Municipal Affairs' approach to answering the questions from concerned coal workers last night on the telephone town hall. Minister, the Albertans that called in weren't looking for your repetitive talking points. They were really looking for hope. I'm going to give you another shot to answer their questions. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: please answer the mayor of Hanna's question. Will the Advisory Panel on Coal Communities' report be made public?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, I did have a telephone town hall, two hours of it last night. I listened to concerned citizens and workers from around the province, and I was glad to take their questions, as I took the mayor's question. I did tell him that once we get the feedback from the coal transition panel, we will be making it available.

Mr. MacIntyre: The Albertans that called in needed compassion, not canned talking points. Given that one caller pointed out, "You talk about the power companies receiving financial benefit, but I haven't heard anything yet about how you're going to help the coal miners," and given that in response the minister spoke about a transition from coal to natural gas plants and that skilled coal miners aren't trained to work in natural gas plants, Minister, what is the compensation planned for coal miners losing their jobs due to government policies?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, the conversations last night were centred mostly around the power plants, and that's what we were discussing, the three companies that did receive funds to help these workers transition. Those plans are ongoing. We will work with those communities, as we have been, and with those workers and those leaders in those areas on what that transition is going to look like. I'm not going to deal in hypotheticals, even though they want me to, until we have all of the information that comes out. We will wait for that, and we will work with it when we get it.

Thank you.

Mr. MacIntyre: Coal workers know that the companies they work for are in no position to commit to retraining opportunities. That is why they were asking you, Minister. Given that 69 per cent of the callers were looking for retraining opportunities and that we're two years into this plan and these workers and their families are desperate for the NDP to offer specifics, Minister, will there be any training funding for laid-off employees? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just for your information, 12 out of the 18 coal plants were going to come offline by the feds with zero help from anybody. Unlike the previous federal government and what these guys would do, we're working with the communities on a transition plan to make sure that we do what's best for all of their unique circumstances.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

High School Education Funding Formula

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, thank you. It's high school graduation season, and while graduates are excited about finishing grade 12, many principals and teachers I've spoken with are gravely concerned about the reduction in funding from 60 to 45 credit enrolment units in this year's Education budget. It's estimated that this change translates to a $6.4 million funding cut to 24 of Alberta's rural school boards. To the Minister of Education: why did you make this reduction that disproportionately harms rural school boards and, more importantly, rural students?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much for the question. In regard to the high school credits, first of all, we were looking for efficiencies, certainly listening to the members opposite to find efficiencies, and we found that the majority of high schools are now using the high school redesign programming. We also found that the average high school student is taking 37 credits, so the cap that we put at 45 credits was, I think, a pretty reasonable way to deal with this because we're looking to make sure that we spend public money in the most efficient way possible.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that statistics show that rural students average a higher number of CEUs than urban students, in fact, 41 versus 37, and given that this funding change could result in some rural boards having to either lay off teachers or restrict educational options for students and given that this is surely not what this minister had intended, to the minister: what are the total savings that you expect to realize from this funding change, and what projected impact will it have on high school completion rates?

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. minister

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Those are both very good questions. We did look at all of those issues. I just made an announcement, for example, to put $16 million over the next four years into dual credit programming, which is focused very much on rural high school students. As well, I don't think it's a mystery to anybody that we have been putting money in for enrolment, building and modernizing schools across the province, including in the hon. member's area. We're looking for ways by which we can make a shift to make sure that we are funding schools and making life better for Alberta families.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the analysis of statistics from one school division showed only 28 students taking more than 60 CEUs but some 249 taking over 45 CEUs, fully one-quarter of the high school enrolment, and given that these additional CEUs are often earned in dual credit, green certificate, and work experience programs that this government, as has just happened, has been eager to promote and given that this means students in rural Alberta will have reduced choices in attempting to finish high school, to the minister: will you consider revisiting this change in your funding model?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, it's important to make difficult decisions, but it's also important to be modernizing and moving along as we build a proper high school funding formula. The high school redesign program has now moved into the majority of all of the schools here in the province of Alberta. It allows flexibility for students and for teachers and principals to make decisions that are best for their education. We can see discernible improvements in high school completion rates, in attendance and so forth. [interjections] So, yes, we're putting more investment in dual credit, more investment in green certificate as well, and we're making sure that we are funding our . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, please keep your volume down.

Provincial Deficit

Mr. Fildebrandt: The budgets are all in for 2017. All provinces in Canada will run a combined deficit of $12.8 billion this year. Of that number, 80 per cent is Alberta. Every other province running a deficit, minus Alberta, adds up to $2.5 billion. This government, though, with a projected deficit of $10.3 billion, is literally running a deficit the size of the rest of the country combined multiplied by four. The sheer recklessness is breathtaking. Does the Minister of Finance believe that this is responsible?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much for the question, Mr. Speaker. What we're doing is making the lives of Albertans better. We will balance by 2023-2024, and in doing that, we're bringing down the operational spending, that in the past was all over the place. Sometimes it was as high as 11 per cent year over year by that side over there. We are going to be reducing our spending under population plus inflation. That will get us back to balance.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Weak sauce, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, given that the Premier's role model, Kathleen Wynne of Ontario, has run their province into the ground, spending recklessly, driving energy costs through the roof, and incurring an entire generation to pay for it, and given that, despite this, Ontario, with three times the population of Alberta, will run a smaller deficit by the NDP's accounting standards – if the Premier has national ambitions, she's on track because she's running a national level debt – is the Premier's next goal to exceed the federal deficit?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just want to point out that the economy is turning around in this province. We have full-time employment that is rising for the third straight month. Rigs are up 100 per cent since last year. Exports are up. Manufacturing is up. We are doing the things in this province that we need to do to get back to balance. We'll continue on that path because that's the path that Albertans require and that we were elected on.

Mr. Fildebrandt: A hundred thousand out-of-work Albertans disagree.

Given, Mr. Speaker, that under a best-case scenario our debt will reach $71 billion by 2019 – and that best-case scenario requires this minister to keep spending within his budget, something he's never done, and this best-case scenario also requires oil to be 40 per cent higher than it is today – and given that the Minister of Finance has grossly exceeded his deficit projections in all three of his budgets, he clearly can't do his job. If the Minister of Finance exceeds his deficit target for a fourth time, will he just quit?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm quite enjoying this job, I want to say. Faced with the collapse of the world oil price, we rejected the reckless path that the government over there put us on. Members opposite would make reckless cuts to important public services that would harm Albertans. We're not doing that. We'll get back to balance. We're going to be turning the province around because of the work of this government.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Educational Curriculum Review

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are concerned. I received another e-mail just yesterday from someone who understands that specially chosen members of interest groups are invited to participate in community face-to-face engagement sessions to work on the curriculum rewrite. As you can imagine, they're extremely concerned that the new online survey will be another attempt at a nod to stakeholder engagement. Will the minister make the answers to the written submission portion of the first survey available to Albertans, and will he make the written part of the second survey available when it is completed?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much for the question. Yes, we launched the second phase of our curriculum interface with Albertans, and in the first day we already have 2,000 submissions. That's very good. We had 32,000 last time. I'm trying to open it up even more so that we in fact have more public interactions with the working groups and have more participation and presentations to those groups as well. I'm open to any suggestion that continues to make this the most successful process by which we have transparency . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mrs. Aheer: I'd really like to see those written submissions, Minister.

Given that agriculture is a critical industry in Alberta and given that our farmers are world leaders in the industry and some are becoming extremely successful in diversifying the industry to include uses for hemp and expanding markets for pulses and other products and given that our agribusiness opportunities are growing and diversifying, how is the government including this industry and all its complexities, seed to table, in the curriculum rewrite and ensuring that resources and professional development are available to teachers to meet the learning needs of all students?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much for the excellent question. We know that the second-largest industry and probably one of the fastest growing industries continues to be agriculture here in the province. It forms a really important opportunity for us to make that bridge between urban and rural, between food and table and so forth. In our curriculum we will definitely be working to strengthen that across different subject areas and across all grade levels, too, because – you know what? – we want to make sure that we build and continue to build the strongest education system in the country.

Mrs. Aheer: Well, we've heard many times in this House and all over the province that there needs to be changes and that education should focus on literacy and numeracy and also develop 21st-century competencies. This is what's been stated by the government. Given that these guiding statements are of vital importance to those working on the revisions and given that it is important to be clear about the meaning of these terms, to the minister: what exactly does 21st-century competencies mean, and how will it be guiding the new curricula?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a great opportunity for all Albertans to make sure they are engaging in building this new curriculum because the most important investment that we can make in our future is to ensure the highest quality education for our students. So 21st-century competencies are making sure that we have those basic skills in numeracy, in math, basic skills in communication and language, and we're moving them across all subject areas so that students are looking at content, yes, but they're looking at building those basic skills that they can carry with them for the rest of their lives so that we can improve our economy, diversify, and to make sure . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Educational Delivery Choices

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's proud history of supporting school choice is an undeniable success which has resulted in better results for our entire education system, including within the public system. Now, unfortunately, a group of NDP-linked front groups have continued their attacks on school choice, demanding that long-standing funding be rescinded. Parents and students are concerned that this government is going to oblige ideological allies and end school choice. To the Minister of Education: will you unequivocally commit today that the funding model for Catholic, charter, private, and home-schooling will indeed remain the same?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you. I find it interesting that every few months I have to stand up to the same question because we have from the very beginning as a government invested in education. We've invested in enrolment to fund increases in enrolment in all forms of education. We continued to do so in this budget even during very difficult economic times. We made sacrifices in other areas to make sure that we fund education right across the board. I won't apologize for what we have been doing. You know, when you cast aspersions like this member does, it only causes a bigger problem.

Mr. Rodney: Here's why the question keeps coming up. Given that members of the current government, when in opposition, demanded an end to school choice and given that Public Interest Alberta, the group spearheading the attack on school choice, has well-established links to the governing party and given that the executive director used to work for the Minister of Infrastructure and that their president is a former NDP candidate and that their founder is now the chief of staff within the government, Minister, is your government quietly encouraging PIA in an attempt to build the political conditions to introduce policy that you long advocated for while you were in opposition?

Mr. Eggen: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, while the member opposite likes to concoct conspiracy theories like he wants his own TV show or something, we are funding for education, we are making sure that we're building schools, and we're making sure that we're actually strengthening our education system in all of its different manifestations across the province. While other people cast aspersions, as the hon. member is doing here, we're actually getting the job done. We're doing a great job, and I think Albertans think so, too.

Mr. Rodney: No aspersions, just facts.

Given that the minister of seniors is a former vice-president at Public Interest Alberta and the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie chaired a special PIA education task force and that this government is clearly very closely aligned with this organization and given that a number of the other NDP MLAs and their partners, including the Premier, have very close ties to a number of the 14 organizations listed on PIA's website, to the minister: have you or your staff had any direct or indirect discussions about changing the current school funding model with any of the 14 organizations lobbying against school choice?

Mr. Eggen: I would like to see after a couple of years that the opposition member, while fitting into his opposition role, would actually ask questions that are meaningful and actually constructive. In fact, we are building to strengthen education, and each time someone like the member opposite is spreading rumours in order to knock public education down. You know what? You've got to rise above it. We certainly do, and we make sure that our students get the very best education here in the province of Alberta. That's why the member opposite got voted out of office, because they didn't do that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

School Construction in Edmonton-South West

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituents expect and deserve the best quality education in our communities. Given that the new Kim Hung school in my constituency has already been delayed for opening this year, to the Minister of Education: what is the status of this school build after the site caught fire last week?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks for the question. Our department has been working very closely with Infrastructure and Edmonton public's planning department to get the impact and still have the opening in January 2018. We're hoping that the damages will be found to be minimal and will have no impact on the time of completion.

I want to take this time as well to commend our hard-working first responders, whose quick response prevented the complete destruction of this facility. Your constituents should know that as soon as the investigation is complete – construction is still ongoing, and the insurance is being finalized – our top priority will be to make sure we . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

First supplemental.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. As I've asked many times already, the constituents in Edmonton-South West need more schools, specifically high schools. Given that I continue to hear from my constituents about how the previous government failed to open schools, can the minister tell this Assembly how this government is taking the needs of our students seriously?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you. Our government is committed to making life better for Albertans. Our Budget 2017 has funding for 26 new schools, and we're managing the very largest school build in Alberta's history. It's going very well. I can tell you that as I travel around the province opening new schools, I hear from people how grateful they are that they have a government that's actually getting the job done building those schools and making sure that we are reducing school fees, funding for enrolment. It's a very, very good time for education.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again as I've asked before, given that my constituents deserve a modern and effective high school, can the minister detail to this House if we can expect space in school to provide quality and much-needed education for my constituents?

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, we know that we have a growing population. We can see it from the enrolment. We announced five new schools here in Edmonton, one major modernization. Those were K to 9 schools. So guess what? Of course, we're going to need to build high schools to meet those graduates coming from those schools. We will make sure that we have adequate space in all areas, not just in Edmonton but right across the province. You know what? The New Democrats get the job done.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Health Care Capital Funding in Central Alberta

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week my colleague asked about the gross inequity of funding to AHS central zone. Instead, the Minister of Health spoke about projects outside of central Alberta. Minister, this isn't good enough. The central zone has the longest wait times in the province, and Albertans deserve a real answer. Is solving the inequity of per capita funding to AHS central zone a priority for this government? If not, why not?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. It's a priority that we make sure that no matter where you live in Alberta, you get the right care. That's one of the reasons why we're moving forward with a very long overdue Calgary cancer hospital in the city of Calgary. That's one of the reasons why in Edmonton we're building a new hospital. It hasn't happened in Edmonton since 1989. Of course, there is need in central Alberta, but I'm not going to stop spending money in other parts of the province. I'm going to make sure that we get the projects we need for all of Alberta, including central Alberta.

The Speaker: The first supplemental.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the central Alberta health zone has increased in geographical size and has a ballooning population and given that the per capita funding received by central Albertans is a small fraction of its neighbouring zones, residents are rightly concerned. Again to the minister: how much longer do central Albertans and front-line workers have to put up with substandard infrastructure?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to assure everyone that they are in safe hands. I have to say how proud I am of the work we're doing to invest in communities like Red Deer. Certainly, the families that are benefiting from having those new labour and delivery spaces and recovery spaces at the Red Deer hospital, for example, or the families who are going to be receiving care in Sylvan Lake because this government worked with the community instead of doing things to the community – we've worked in partnership. I'm very proud of the progress that we're making. Is there more to be done? Absolutely. What would undo that? Having the member opposite in government because they're pushing for $9 billion in infrastructure cuts. Keeping this government here is what's going to make life better.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you. Again, Mr. Speaker, given that consulting residents and doctors and nurses and other stakeholders is a positive step towards finding a solution to health care delivery in central Alberta and given that these meetings will mean nothing if the minister does not act on the repeated legitimate outcries of the community, when is the minister going to eliminate this gross inequity and provide front-line workers the infrastructure that they need to deliver the care that central Albertans need?

Ms Hoffman: Speaking of central Alberta, Mr. Speaker, I was really proud during the last constituency break to spend some time with front-line workers in the Red Deer hospital. We had a very productive meeting not only with the physicians in the community but also with registered nurses, people who work in diagnostic imaging, and people who work as porters. Do you know what they told me? They are so glad that they have stable funding. They're glad that they're not seeing billions of dollars in cuts, as proposed by both parties opposite. Yes, they want to work with us on long-term infrastructure plans, and we want to work with them, too.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

2:40 Growing Forward 2 Agricultural Policy Framework

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week during the committee meeting on Public Accounts the deputy minister of agriculture mentioned that the minister was meeting with the federal minister of agriculture to discuss specific elements of the new Growing Forward 3 program after Growing Forward 2 expires in 2018. To the minister of agriculture: what specifics came out of this meeting, and what progress have you made on Growing Forward 3, if that's what we're calling it?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of agriculture.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It would be my bet that it will be called Growing Forward 3. Yeah, we had an opportunity to meet with all the agriculture ministers across Canada, including the federal minister, last week in Ottawa. It gave us a good opportunity to look at our priorities going forward to the larger federal-provincial-territorial meeting on the next national policy framework, which will be happening in St. John's. Discussed at this last meeting in Ottawa was everything from risk management policies to trade and other issues as well. It was a very fruitful meeting. I'm looking forward to the meeting in July.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that current funding from the Growing Forward 2 program is helping our agricultural industry increase innovation, sustainability, and profitability and given that this program is a key part of diversifying Alberta's agricultural industry, to the same minister: how are you ensuring a smooth transition to the new GF 3 program?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. It is true that the last five years of the current Growing Forward 2 program have put $400 million into the agricultural industry in Alberta. It's a very successful program, with everything from business risk management for crop insurance, that kind of thing, to grant programs for infrastructure and agrifood processing. It's a great program. I'm looking forward to working with my colleagues across the country to ensure that funding continues in Alberta. There will be different types of discussions. There will be bilateral discussions, Alberta with the federal, and also multilateral with all the provinces. I'm looking forward to it.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that there is a wide array of programs funded by the current GF 2 and given that some programs which are not currently available in GF 2 could help Alberta farmers if added to Growing Forward 3, to the minister: how are you ensuring that the new GF 3 gives Alberta enough flexibility to address specific Alberta priorities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the very good question. As I said in my previous answer, there are opportunities to do bilateral discussions as well, you know, on assistant deputy minister, deputy minister, and minister levels. In those bilateral discussions we'll talk about what the member is actually asking: is that flexibility available with the province and the federal government for those funds to help specifically our agriculture industry right here in Alberta? I'm looking forward to those discussions. It's an opportunity to support the industry right across the province.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm giving notice that tomorrow I will move that Bill 205, the Advocate for Persons with Disabilities Act, be moved to Government Bills and Orders on the Order Paper.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Bill 14

An Act to Support Orphan Well Rehabilitation

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 14, An Act to Support Orphan Well Rehabilitation.

Mr. Speaker, we all know that safety around oil and gas sites that are orphaned is a concern for all Albertans. The proposed bill allows us to take additional and immediate action to close and reclaim infrastructure from upstream oil and gas companies that no longer exist, the results of which will be more jobs and a healthier environment for Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 14 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the 2015-2016 annual report of the Family Violence Death Review Committee, and I have the requisite number of copies for that.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I received information from Onoway liquor, but it's with regard to highway 777 south. This morning the grader got stuck in the middle of the road, and their concern is with the secondary highway, that it is a disgrace and needs significant repairs, so bringing it to the attention of this House. I have five copies.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today in my member's statement I referred to Your Land, Your Rights, in which the NDP opposition mentioned they have a petition to repeal bills 19, 36, and 50. They had the opportunity to change that yesterday, and they failed to do so.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table five copies of a letter I sent to Canada's Transport minister, Minister Garneau, with copies to the Minister of Natural Resources, Minister of Environment and Climate Change, and Minister of Fisheries, Oceans and the Canadian Coast Guard, regarding the oil tanker moratorium. In this letter I make our government's position clear in pressing Ottawa to ensure that Alberta energy products have access to international markets.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a few tablings. The first is from Alberta Health Services to the minister relating to applications by Pure North S'Energy Foundation funding requests, in which a number of medical experts suggest to the ministry that this not be funded and that it, in fact, may risk people's health.

The second set of tablings has to do with the International Code of Marketing of Breast-milk Substitutes and relevant World Health Organization resolutions, which have been copied to the Minister of Health. First is a request to stop the marketing of infant formula, which decreases the rate of breastfeeding both in our communities and beyond. The second is a copy of the World Health Organization code and how Alberta is violating the International Code of Marketing of Breast-milk Substitutes.

The third is my letter to the minister advising that we need to address this as a matter of urgency.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

2:50

The Speaker: I believe we had a point of order today. The Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Point of Order

Allegations against a Member

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on a point of order. I will cite the notations Standing Order 23

- (h) makes allegations against another Member;
- (i) imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member;
- (j) uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder.

Mr. Speaker, very shortly after 2 p.m. today the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo asked questions related to the current Health minister's deputy minister. The hon. member was not asking questions about me politically, professionally, or personally, yet the Minister of Health made it clear not once but twice that I made an endorsement and/or signed something.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Health knows very, very well that neither of those things occurred, yet she said that they did on two occasions today and on a separate occasion on a different day. Clearly, there was an allegation made against another member, false or unavowed motives were referred to, and the language did indeed – we saw it – create disorder. I would simply ask that you would rule that the minister simply apologize and withdraw her remarks.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I listened carefully to the Minister of Health when she was responding to the question. The question had to do with an allegation of lobbying on the part of one of her officials with respect to a program. That program was a vitamin therapy program approved by the previous government, and the hon. member was the Associate Minister of Health at the time that program was put into place. Previous to that, from January 2012 to May 2012, he was the parliamentary assistant to the Health minister, and the wellness program received its funding on December 23, 2013, from the previous government while the hon. member was the associate minister.

What the Health minister merely said was: if you have questions about the program, you should direct them to the hon. member because he was associate minister. Now, either he didn't know about the program, in which case I think he's not doing his job, or he did have some knowledge of the program. It has to be one or the other, Mr. Speaker.

I would just indicate that I don't believe there's any point of order. Unfortunate as it may seem, it is not against the rules to hurt the feelings of the hon. member.

The Speaker: Hon. members, specifically, section 494 of Beauchesne's is relevant here for the point that "statements by Members respecting themselves . . . must be accepted." There are very rare occasions that something is different. This does allow these two versions, opinions about the case at hand.

So in this particular instance I believe that there is no point of order. I would hope, however, that mutual respect continues in the House as we direct comments across the aisle.

Privilege Access to Information

The Speaker: I will at this point in time make a ruling on the point of privilege which was raised by the hon. House leader for the third party on May 11, 2017.

Hon. members, on May 11 the House leader for the third party raised a purported question of privilege with respect to statements made by the Minister of Children's Services in Oral Question Period the previous day. He alleged that the minister repeatedly delayed answering questions in this Assembly so that it could be shared first with the media. I've listened to the arguments with respect to the purported question of privilege, and I am now prepared to rule on the matter.

Dealing first with the procedural requirement under Standing Order 15(2):

A Member wishing to raise a question of privilege [must provide] written notice containing a brief statement of the question to the Speaker and, if practicable, to any person whose conduct may be called into question, at least 2 hours before the opening of the afternoon sitting.

My office did receive a letter from the House leader for the third party on May 11 at 10:55 a.m. indicating that he would be raising a question of privilege with respect to the hon. Minister of Children's Services later that afternoon. The letter does not indicate whether a copy was also provided to the Minister of Children's Services or anyone else, nor is the basis for the purported question of privilege set out, hon. member, as required in Standing Order 15(2). Though my office did forward the notice to the House leaders, the onus as we move forward, hon. members, is on the member raising the question to ensure that the notice is provided to all parties involved.

The purpose of the notice requirement in part is to provide a member implicated in a purported question of privilege with sufficient notice prior to the afternoon sitting to effectively respond to the allegation being raised or to have another member do so on their behalf. In this case all members wishing to speak to this matter have been given the opportunity to prepare and to make arguments. I therefore find that the requirements under Standing Order 15(2) have been met. I would however urge all members to keep in mind the purpose of the notice requirement, and I would hope and expect that they will be observed more carefully going forward.

As members well know, when a purported question of privilege is raised in the Assembly, it's the role of the chair to determine whether there is a prima facie breach; in other words, whether there is a breach of privilege upon first appearance. The House leader of the third party indicated on May 11 that during Oral Question Period for the preceding day the Minister of Children's Services repeatedly refused to answer questions with respect to the child welfare system in Alberta and instead indicated she would share information with the media before giving it to the members. This refusal, he argued, prevented members from discharging their duties as elected representatives, and her actions were disrespectful to this Assembly.

The Minister of Justice and Solicitor General responded yesterday by referring to Beauchesne's, sixth edition, at page 13, paragraph 31(10), which states that there is no precedent to justify the suggestion that members are entitled as a part of their parliamentary privilege to receive information ahead of the public. In short, the government is expected to govern, and it is well within its rights to make announcements in public without first providing notice to this Assembly.

The House leader for the Official Opposition, for his part, noted that while the government may not be required to provide answers to the opposition, there may indeed be a situation where a prima facie question of privilege could arise where a deliberate attempt is made to deny answers to an hon. member.

The statements made by the Minister of Children's Services that are at issue can be found starting at page 966 of Alberta Hansard for May 10, in which she states in response to the second main question from the Leader of the Official Opposition: "I will be speaking further to Albertans on this matter later this afternoon, but I want to remind members that when people make statements without all the facts, inaccurate information is given to the public." In a following supplemental response, also found on page 966, the minister again states: "I will be sharing more information about this matter this afternoon." Finally, in response to a question from the Member for Calgary-West, found on page 973, she states: "Mr. Speaker, again I will say that I am sharing more information for Albertans later this afternoon. I do want to continue to caution the members of this House about making statements without the facts."

Well, the arguments made with respect to this matter have touched upon several different points. I find that the central issue being raised by the purported question is whether the dignity of the Assembly was offended as a result of the minister's statements indicating that she would share information about the child welfare system outside of the House before providing it to members.

As I have done previously, I will start by clarifying that the question being raised in this case is properly called a contempt, which is more a form of a question of privilege. Speaker Zwodzesky commented on a somewhat similar question of contempt in connection with the disclosure of information in his ruling on November 7, 2013, which can be found on page 2845 of Alberta Hansard for that day. In that case, a concern was raised about a government press release that was provided to select reporters, detailing a decision to increase funding to postsecondary educational institutions. The former Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills argued that selectively giving information to journalists but otherwise refusing to make the information public prevented members from discharging their duties both inside and outside of the Assembly.

In his decision Speaker Zwodzesky noted that "governments are at liberty to share . . . information in whatever way they wish . . . provided it's done within the rules and conventions" of this House. The government is not required to inform members prior to a news conference or a policy announcement, despite the fact that it may be difficult for the opposition to respond and to comment. This is not necessarily a form of contempt.

Speaker Levac of the Ontario Legislative Assembly came to a similar conclusion on June 9, 2016, which can be found on page 9998 of the Ontario Hansard, in response to a question of privilege raised with respect to the government's proposed climate change action plan. It was argued that the release of the plan to the media before its announcement or tabling in the House amounted to a contempt. Noting that Ontario has no procedural ruling requiring notice be given to the Assembly prior to the government making a policy announcement, Speaker Levac found that a prima facie case of contempt could not be established. In so ruling, he emphasized the important role of the Legislative Assembly in its claim to be first recipient of major announcements.

Referring to a November 2, 2009, ruling, Speaker Levac stated:

I and my predecessors have repeatedly conveyed our deep concern about how these types of extra-parliamentary announcements erode the stature of Parliament. Speakers have repeatedly implored governments to consider the impact of this erosion and how it damages the reputation of the foundation institution of this province . . . In an ideal world where the legitimate and historic role of the Legislative Assembly, and specifically of the loyal opposition, were given first consideration, I expect that what a previous Speaker referred to as these types of 'administrative discourtesies' would not arise.

Returning to the matter at hand, while I must find there is no prima facie question of contempt with respect to this matter, I'm a bit troubled by the suggestion that a minister would be answering members' questions at a media event instead of in the Assembly. Although there may not be a rule under which the government is obligated to provide important and timely information to members before disclosing it outside of this Assembly, it is a principle of responsible government that the executive branch is accountable to this Assembly.

It is incumbent upon all members to respect our system of parliamentary democracy and to demonstrate respect for this institution. Declining to share significant information in this place diminishes the reasons we come together, and I would encourage the ministers of the government to carefully consider the important role of this Assembly when deciding when to share information. While Oral Question Period may not be the best forum to communicate complex and often sensitive policy decisions, I also want to note that the ministers have other means of providing information to this Assembly such as ministerial statements, and I would encourage them to do so when appropriate.

I hope all members carefully consider my comments today. This matter is now concluded.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 11

Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Amendment Act, 2017

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Chair. I have a suggested amendment for Bill 11, the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Amendment Act, 2017, which I'll circulate.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A2.
Go ahead, hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Chair. My amendment is that Bill 11, the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Amendment Act, 2017, be amended in section 39 by striking out the proposed section 52 and substituting the following:

Proceedings of Commissioner subject to review

52(1) Subject to subsection (2), no decision, report or proceeding of the Commissioner is invalid for want of form.

(2) A decision of the Commissioner may be questioned or reviewed by way of an application for judicial review seeking an order in the nature of certiorari or mandamus if the application is filed with the Court of Queen's Bench and served on the Commissioner no later than 30 days after the date of the decision, report, proceeding or reasons, whichever is latest.

(3) The Court may, in respect of an application under subsection (2),

- (a) determine the issues to be resolved on the application,
- (b) limit the contents of the return from the Commissioner to those materials necessary for the disposition of those issues, and
- (c) give directions to protect the confidentiality of the matters referred to in Part 4.1.

The intent of this amendment, Madam Chair, should be clear. Under the current writing of the bill there's no appeals process. This, I think, would give all of us some sense that no one is inviolate. There should be access to some kind of an appeals process based on circumstances, contingencies, specific facts of the concerns, and that any officer of the government should be subject to a second review. Currently there's no ability to appeal in the bill as it's written.

This is simply an attempt to ensure that if an error has been made or there are extenuating circumstances, an individual may be able to have recourse to an appeal.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

3:10

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. I, of course, didn't have advance notice that this was coming, but I have to say that it seems pretty common sense to me, and it seems like a good idea to consider that decisions have an appeals process. All of us being human beings and with the frailties that go along with that are subject to making an error now and again. As such, it seems to me to only make sense that there should be an appeals process to look after those circumstances when an error may occur from time to time.

I'm in support of this, and I would encourage other members of the House to also be in support for those reasons. Thank you.

The Chair: Any other speakers to amendment A2? The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'd like to thank the Member for Calgary-Mountain View for submitting this amendment. As the Member for Calgary-Hays rightly noted, you know, we hadn't received advance notice of the amendment, so I think it's worth taking some time to carefully consider this amendment. I know that the Member for Calgary-Mountain View is very passionate about the principles of natural justice, and the appeals process is potentially something that we can look at and consider for the bill. But I think it's going to take us a bit of time to carefully consider that a little bit more.

I know that the members of the all-party committee that looked at the public interest disclosure amendment act took a lot of time going through the clauses of the act to consider the different amendments that they might suggest for improvements going forward. I wasn't personally on the committee myself, but I understand that they've undertaken a great deal of work in looking at the various clauses, perhaps the appeals process as well. I know that there are some other members of the committee here in Chamber today who might be able to speak a little bit more about the appeals process or how that was considered during the committee hearings.

You know, I think that when we're looking at a piece of legislation of this magnitude, that has such far-reaching implications, it serves us to spend a little bit more time considering amendments like this, asking questions and clarifying intentions because we want to make sure that when we're making these kinds of substantive changes, we're doing what's right for Albertans.

I plan to speak a little bit later this afternoon to the bill itself, perhaps, if the opportunity arises. For myself as a registered nurse whistle-blowing and sort of the aim to do the right thing is very central to nursing practice. Also, you know, the amendment speaks to an appeals process whereby someone doesn't feel that the principles of natural justice have been adhered to or if there are questions arising from that decision of the commissioner. I think it's something that's worth considering.

If there are other members of the committee that might be able to expand a little bit on the concept of an appeals process and how that fits into the legislation, I would certainly welcome hearing from them on that very issue. Perhaps they might want to chime in on that.

The Chair: Any other members on the amendment? The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Madam Chair. I was actually just trying to briefly go back to when we did the PIDA review and we had the summary of submissions. I don't remember having discussed an appeals process within it. I could see some of it. I mean, honestly, we looked at how to make sure that we strengthen it to make sure that there are mechanisms within the PIDA amendments that we're introducing that allow for better capacity to really review the allegations and what is being brought forward early on to make sure that it's kind of set up for success. I was just wondering if the member could clarify if there was a point when that was brought forward that I'm just not remembering that talked to the appeals, who would bring this forward, and what kind of a background there is to it.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Chair. I don't actually remember discussing this at the committee, but I, too, have lost time and memory around the details of the discussions. What I can say is that the appellant could be the individual who has blown the whistle and feels not appropriately addressed by the commissioner, or it could be a lawyer on behalf of that individual, or indeed, I suppose, it could be the employer who for whatever reason decides that the decision was not appropriate. It's trying to create a fair playing field for both sides to resolve where there is still dispute.

The Chair: Any other speakers to the amendment? St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Madam Chair. Well, not being a lawyer, I actually had to look up your terms, some of the terms in the amendment, because I wasn't sure what the Latin words were. I think, you know, like the member indicated, it's been a while since we sat as the all-party committee. I was fortunate to be a member for the entire time. I do think that we looked at a lot changes. One of the things that we thought we would do is: let's go with step 1 first, and let's see how that works, then we can come back and look at it.

I think, just having heard from the commissioner and having heard about the recommendations that he made around the processes and also being able to look at restitution, although I understand where the member is coming from with the desire to give people an opportunity to appeal a decision that is made and, really, that impacts their lives, that it's important to take this a step at a time. I think that we've expanded the scope and the depth and the ability to award restitution in the cases. I think that that indeed covers a lot of the problems that we heard of, and it covers a lot of recommendations that we heard from the experts and some of the submissions.

While I certainly appreciate where this is going, I don't know that it's necessary at this time. Anyway, thank you to the member.

The Chair: Any other speakers to the amendment? The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today to speak against the amendment, and I will explain the reason for that. Section 52(1), the way it's drafted now, essentially doesn't violate any principles of natural justice in that it may sound like that it's restricting a review by a higher court; what it does is that it gives the commissioner kind of more authority, more flexibility on its own process so that his decision is not challenged, as you have mentioned in your amendment, just for want of the form, just from some procedural point of view, just for lack of jurisdiction. So he can look at any matter in a more holistic manner to address the issue properly while in subsection (2), if it's the substantive content of that bill, any person will still be able to challenge the commissioner's decision. So I would suggest to all members that 52(1) is more about the procedural matters and extending flexibility to the commissioner – that should stay the same – while on the substantive matters his decision certainly is challengeable, and anybody can challenge that as outlined in this section.

Based on that, I would suggest that members vote against this amendment. Thank you, Madam Chair.

3:20

The Chair: Any other speakers to amendment A2?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: We're back on Bill 11. Any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to rise to speak to Bill 11 in Committee of the Whole. Our government is committed to having accountability, ethics, and transparency front and centre in Alberta, and this bill will ensure that.

I tried to recount my working life in the 10-year period between the time I graduated from high school and the time I ended up as a new real estate agent at age 27. In those 10 years I did a lot of things, some which I've recounted in this House, but I don't think I ever actually mentioned that I was a public servant working for the housing ministry for a short period one summer during a STEP program position. It was a short position. It was counting calculators and staplers and so forth. It was an inventory job, and I really found that it wasn't my cup of tea after a few weeks, but nonetheless I know that during that period of time as a public servant working within the housing ministry, had I at that point in time come forward with a complaint of wrongdoing, I wouldn't have had the protection under the act that this legislation prescribes.

I tried to think about what my decision-making process would have been at that time as a young employee within the government ministry for the first time and whether or not I'd be inclined to go ahead with a complaint given that there was a fear of potential reprisal or fear of losing a job in that young working life at that point in time that I was at. One of the biggest fears of employees and one of the reasons they don't come forward is the fear of reprisal by their employer. A younger employee especially, newer to the workforce, would be less likely to come forward than somebody who had a bit more experience. I can think back to those early days of my working life within the housing ministry and know that I would really have a limited amount of confidence in proceeding with a complaint of wrongdoing even if it might have been egregious.

Now, there is some protection in regard to the right of reprisals. Any employer in the public sector can be prosecuted for punishing an employee who exposes a wrongdoing, but there is no mechanism in place to determine what kind of restitution should be made to the whistle-blower if they are subject to such an unlawful punishment, so I'm proud to say that the new legislation would enable the Labour Relations Board to order remedies when there has been a reprisal. The board may decide that the whistle-blower deserves to get their job back if they've been fired or that they might be entitled to compensation. In the end, it will be up to the board to decide what is appropriate, and the board's order would be enforceable, much like a court order.

Now, our government hopes that these changes will encourage whistle-blowers to feel safe in coming forward. Thinking back to those early days within the housing ministry as a young employee relatively fresh to the workforce, knowing that legislation protected my ability to come forward with complaints of wrongdoing might have given me some comfort in deciding to bring to light of day a wrongdoing had I been in a position where I felt I had to report something or felt that something should be reported in the workplace while acting as a public servant in the housing ministry in my early days of employment.

Now, another problem with the old legislation is that it doesn't protect political staff working in ministers' offices or the Premier's office, and as well, Madam Chair, Members of the Legislative Assembly aren't covered at all. This just doesn't seem right. As Members of the Legislative Assembly in this province we should be leaders in ethics and accountability, not people who are excluded from being held accountable. I support the changes this legislation makes in these areas as well. If passed, this bill will mean that MLAs, ministers, and the Premier can all be investigated when an accusation of wrongdoing is made to the Public Interest Commissioner.

Now, we know that this has to be subject to parliamentary privilege, and matters regarding parliamentary privilege would still be ruled on in the Legislative Assembly by the Speaker. This is where Alberta will once again be a leader, Madam Chair. Right now no other jurisdiction in Canada has whistle-blower legislation that applies to MLAs in this way, and Ontario is the only jurisdiction that covers ministers. If this recommendation is accepted, it will help make our government one of the most honest, transparent, and accountable governments in Canada.

Now, when I was that young worker in the housing ministry, I may have had cause to raise issues of wrongdoing that I may have witnessed; however, I may not have actually known how to go about it, how to blow the whistle. This new legislation would also improve the reporting process and ensure that whistle-blowers are protected when they need it.

Currently each government department or public-sector entity has a designated officer to handle whistle-blower complaints, and a potential whistle-blower has to report to a designated officer before a wrongdoing will be investigated. They are not protected from reprisal until that time. This can create some problems and concerns and possibly prevent whistle-blowing from occurring because of fear of reprisal, but this new legislation will help the process by allowing whistle-blowers to approach their supervisor or the Public Interest Commissioner directly. Also, this new legislation means that whistle-blowers will be protected from reprisal as soon as they approach their supervisor and not to have to wait until the designated officer is informed.

Madam Chair, the all-party special ethics committee did a lot of work on this bill, as we have heard, and it has been some time since that committee met and made recommendations. I want to acknowledge the hours that were spent by many members thinking through this legislation and preparing a final report.

One of the things that this committee spoke about was that contractors hired by the government and some designated service providers such as some physicians and some nursing home operators do not currently fall within the scope of the act. This government supports the idea that this act should extend to some of the service providers who provide services paid for with taxpayer money. However, it is also important that everyone takes time to review and consider which services should be included and how they should be included. Therefore, our government supports the part of this new legislation which would consult with government contractors and designated service providers to see how best to move forward without stepping over the line into the private sector. One of the recommendations of the all-party committee was to ensure that these regulations do not affect the private sector, and our government supports the committee's recommendation on that.

3:30

Madam Chair, in order to make this legislation effective and in order to create an atmosphere where whistle-blowers feel secure coming forward regardless of whether they're brand new to the workforce or whether they're closer to their retirement years and considering the pension period that they might be looking at, it is critical that their identity be protected. In the existing legislation it is already clear that FOIP does not apply to records held by the Public Interest Commissioner. However, there is an exception to this, and that is when a designated officer initiates an investigation rather than the commissioner. In that case, it is possible for a third party to submit a FOIP request asking for records connected to the investigation. This is not a secure situation for the whistle-blower. The new legislation will ensure that the names of the whistle-blowers and other identifying information are exempted from such FOIP requests, therefore ensuring that the identity is not exposed and that the safety of and ability for the employee with the concern to move forward are enhanced.

The new legislation will also require that more details be reported annually by the Public Interest Commissioner. This will help everybody, both in the Chamber and in the public, see that these issues are being taken seriously and what the outcomes of the investigations are.

Madam Chair, everybody in this Chamber knows and everybody in the public knows that most whistle-blowers merely want to help fix mistakes and make things right. I know that as a young worker I may have been worried, perhaps even scared, to come forward with wrongdoing that I may have witnessed in my early workplace in the housing ministry. In this position, knowing that there are many young people in their early careers working for various ministries in various areas of our public service throughout the province, I'm proud of legislation that, I hope, will make legitimate whistle-blowers feel more secure in coming forward with their concerns. Everyone in this Chamber can agree that when it comes to public money and resources, opportunities to identify and correct mistakes should be welcomed. I'm confident that this legislation, if passed, will help to make that happen and help to protect those who come forward.

This is just one way that our government is working to make life better for all Albertans and to increase the transparency and accountability of the public sector. I support this legislation, and I hope that everyone in this Chamber does as well so that individuals, no matter what stage of their career they're at within the public service, feel absolutely confident that they can come forward and do the right thing and report wrongdoings without fear of reprisal, know that there's a process that is clear and transparent for them to follow when they do see fit to make such a report, know and understand that in coming forward with their wrongdoing reports, they will be protected by law, surrounded by due process, and, as well, make an effective, positive contribution to their workplace, the public service of Alberta, and also, going forward, to the working environment of those in the provincial sector, transferable by right of example to other workplaces throughout the province.

With that, I conclude my remarks.

The Chair: Thank you.

Hon. members, I've had a request to revert to Introduction of Guests.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to the members of this House some very important people that do very important work in this province. As I mention their names, I'd like them to stand: Lance Sheppard, who is a primary care paramedic and council member with the Alberta College of Paramedics, and Pete Helfrich, who is the president of the Alberta College of Paramedics and an advanced care paramedic. These are two people that do important work in this province along with other council members and the registrar and other administrators. I just thank them for their service and their dedication to Albertans. I would ask the House to give them a warm welcome.

Thank you.

Bill 11

Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Amendment Act, 2017

The Chair: Are there any other hon. members wishing to speak to Bill 11? The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm proud to stand in the House today in support of Bill 11, the public interest disclosure act, also known as whistle-blower protection. This legislation will better protect employees already covered by whistle-blower legislation, and it will increase the number of people who would be protected, like staff in the offices of the Premier and the ministers.

I'm a proud union member and proud of the rights that we as members have negotiated in our collective bargaining agreements. We have protection from reprisal. In our last set of negotiations my union was able to include time during training to explain what the new employees' rights are. It was included in the health and safety training I provided to every employee. Our CBA gives my fellow members the ability to report bullying and harassment, unfair labour practices, or serious wrongdoings. They don't have to fear losing shifts or being given less desirable shifts or losing their jobs for reporting incidents. They know who to turn to.

But not all workers have this type of protection. This bill will make sure that public-sector employees feel safe to report serious wrongdoings and are free from reprisal. This is the right thing to do both for employees and for all Albertans. A good public service and a fair and honest public sector are something that Albertans count on, and we are making it better. Our government wants to ensure that serious wrongdoings in the public sector are reported and addressed. Often employees are the ones who see things going on that shouldn't be, and many are afraid to report these incidents for fear of losing their jobs or of other types of reprisal. These wrongdoings need to be reported and investigated. This legislation is going to strengthen the current law and better protect whistle-blowers from reprisal.

Currently each government department or public-sector entity has a designated officer to handle whistle-blower complaints. A potential whistle-blower has to report to a designated officer before a wrongdoing will be investigated, and they are not protected from reprisal until that time. This new legislation will help the process by allowing whistle-blowers to approach their supervisor or the Public Interest Commissioner directly.

I can give you a real example. An employee – well, let's call him Tom – had his wife call the office and say that he was sick and wouldn't be in that day. The person taking the call – we'll call her Sally – knew that the supposed sick employee was actually facilitating a seminar in another province as a consultant. This bothered Sally as Tom was getting his work pay and a consultant fee, and she thought it was wrong. When it happened a second time, Sally reported it to her supervisor. It ended up that the supervisor wasn't the designated officer, and he was also Tom's good friend. Sally ended up losing her job when the supervisor eliminated her position. Because she had not reported it to the right person, she was not protected.

One of the biggest fears of employees and one of the reasons they don't come forward is the fear of reprisal from their employer. There is some protection in that regard. Right now any employee in the public sector can be prosecuted for punishing an employee who exposes a wrongdoing, but there is no mechanism in place to determine what kind of restitution should be made to the whistle-blower if they are subject to an unlawful punishment. I am proud to say that the new legislation would enable the Labour Relations Board to order remedies where there has been a reprisal. The board may decide that the whistle-blower deserves to get their job back if they have been fired, or they might be entitled to compensation.

Another problem with the old legislation is that it doesn't protect political staff working in ministers' offices or the Premier's office. As well, Madam Chair, Members of the Legislative Assembly aren't covered at all. This doesn't seem right. As Members of the Legislative Assembly in this province we should be leaders in ethics and accountability, not people who are excluded from being held accountable. I support the changes this legislation makes in these areas. If passed, this bill will mean that MLAs, ministers, and the Premier can all be investigated when an accusation of wrongdoing is made to the Public Interest Commissioner. This is where Alberta will once again be a leader. Right now no other jurisdiction in Canada has whistle-blower legislation that applies to MLAs in this way. Ontario is the only jurisdiction that covers ministers.

We have to make it easier for people to report serious wrongdoing or any kind of wrongdoing without the fear of losing their jobs, their livelihoods. I sat on the Ethics and Accountability

Committee, and I believe we came up with a good bill from our consultation. I urge everyone in this House to support this bill.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to stand and speak in support of Bill 11 this afternoon. I'd like to begin my remarks by referring to part 2.1, regarding disclosure to the commissioner, and I'd just like to preface my remarks by reading briefly from the bill.

15.1(1) An employee referred to in section 9 may make a disclosure directly to the Commissioner . . . and any provision in the procedures established under section 5 . . .

(2) If an employee referred to in section 9 has made a disclosure to the designated officer, the employee may also make a disclosure directly to the Commissioner even if the designated officer has made recommendations or concluded the investigation.

I read that to preface my remarks.

I'd like to bring my perspective as a registered nurse to the table this afternoon. One of the articles that I'll be happy to table tomorrow and that I will refer to this afternoon is by the Canadian Nurses Association. It's an ethics in practice series, and this particular one revolves around whistle-blowing. The title is I See and Am Silent / I See and Speak Out: The Ethical Dilemma of Whistle-blowing. This may seem a little elementary, but I think it's worth putting in the context of nursing in terms of the question of: what is whistle-blowing?

Whistleblowers are people who expose negligence, abuses, or dangers, such as professional misconduct or incompetence, which exist in the organization in which they work. The decision to blow the whistle on a colleague, associate, or employer is never an easy one; unless there is a legal obligation to report, it should be considered a step one takes when all else has failed.

In health care institutions, threats to patient safety may come from prescribed treatments, environmental hazards, staffing inadequacies, or illegal, incompetent or unethical conduct of any employee or person such as a family member or volunteer. Employees, especially nurses, may be the first to recognize unsafe practice or to identify actual or potential hazards. However, a nurse may often be caught between the values and standards of the profession and the values and norms of the organization in which he or she works.

In the above cases, nurses face a decision: should they disclose information learned in the course of their work?

Madam Chair, the tension that I mentioned there at the conclusion of that paragraph, that a nurse may be caught between the values and standards of their profession and the values and norms of the organization where they work, is central to the question of whistle-blowing.

In terms of the nursing profession it's interesting to see and study the trajectory of a brand new nurse who has just graduated and entered the profession. Oftentimes you'll hear nurses describe that perhaps the first couple of years of their practice is spent learning how to be a good nurse, just how to get things done, where the supplies are, how to organize yourself and make the best use of your time. You know, new nurses will come across these ethical dilemmas of whistle-blowing when they're new, but they have so much on their plate in trying to learn the profession, sometimes they don't know how to deal with these situations. As a nurse goes through their trajectory, becoming more of an expert, you get much better at the job and much more proficient, and then with these ethical dilemmas that you've encountered, you have a little bit more headspace to tackle these difficult issues.

I think something that was brought up a little bit earlier, about the fear of reprisal, is also central to this question because especially, you know, as a new nurse you're worried that if you bring things up, you might lose your job. Certainly, nurses go through a great deal of education and spend a lot of time and a great deal of money getting their education, and once they get a job, they aim to keep it. There can sometimes be a perception of: "I don't want to rock the boat. I'm new here. I'm going to take care of patients the best way I possibly can, but I'm afraid that if I speak up, I might lose my job."

This is particularly so in smaller institutions and in rural and remote settings because that nurse might be the only nurse there. You know, it's a very special calling when health care practitioners go to these rural and remote communities because they are often either the only health care provider or one of the very few that are there. If they start to question or ask themselves – you know, in health care we refer to these as ethical dilemmas or moral dilemmas. People in these remote situations might ask themselves: if I rock the boat, I don't want to lose my job. But, at the same time, they have a very deep professional interest in taking care of their patients.

Based on my experience in the operating room – you know, I was fortunate to have entered the operating room after several years of practice on the floor. We call it the floor, working on a unit. By this point I felt like I was a fairly proficient nurse, and I was in the space where I could start asking these difficult questions. It was interesting because I started in the operating room in about 2006, and I quit my job when I was elected in 2015. Working there for about 10 years, even in that short time period I saw a dramatic culture shift with new doctors coming into the operating room.

I'd like to refer a bit to the culture of health care and how that's changing and how that influences whistle-blowing behaviour. There are some parallels that are used between the airline industry and the operating room. Both are very complex and technical environments that require multiple levels of support staff and also tend to have an ingrained or entrenched hierarchy, if you will, of people that may be considered more important or less important than others. Of course, we all know that it's a team that is required to make these things happen, so to say that one person is more important than the other isn't really accurate. We all do different jobs. We all have different levels of experience and training. But, you know, a nurse can't do their job without a housekeeper who cleans up in between and a sterile instrument processor who uses their professional skills to make sure that they have clean instruments to take care of patients.

In referring to the culture and airlines, that is what I'm getting at here. Quite some time ago the airline industry examined their practices and why they were having accidents, and one of the conclusions that they reached was that oftentimes, you know, those considered lower on the hierarchy may have had concerns about the aircraft or some other maintenance issue, but in the past they were afraid to bring that up for fear of the pilot or a more senior person having some act of reprisal or speaking down about them. So there was a culture of being afraid to speak up and say what was on your mind and sort of, so to speak, challenge those who may be seen as superiors. The airline industry recognized this as a safety concern, so they changed the culture so that it allowed all members of the team to speak in a more equal manner to each other so that they weren't afraid to bring these safety concerns forward.

This was a culture shift that was also adopted by the operating rooms and surgical suites because, you know, there's a very similar, invisible hierarchy in the operating room. Surgeons and anaesthetists might tend to be at the top, and housekeepers or whatnot may be at the bottom, but, like I said, we're all part of a team. Everybody there is focused on patient care. So in the operating room we learned some lessons from the airline industry about shifting the culture in terms of feeling more free to speak up and identify safety concerns, and that was a paradigm shift. That's what I referred to.

In my brief 10 years or so that I was in the operating room – and I should say that, by and large, in 99.9 per cent of staff interactions in the operating room people feel free to speak up and say what they want. You know, there's a misperception that surgeons are prima donnas and that it's their way or the highway. I can tell you that, by and large, that's not the case. The vast majority of surgeons and anaesthetists and other doctors appreciate any level of staff bringing concerns forward, so I want to reassure Albertans that in their health care system they've got absolutely professional staff dedicated to caring for them.

I want to just use a couple of examples of things that I had experienced myself in terms of – you know, maybe “whistle-blowing” in the context that I'm about to describe is a little bit overboard, but it's still with the same intention. I had an instance where in a former job that I'd had I identified some safety concerns where I was working, and I tried to go through the proper processes to have those addressed by talking to the nurse clinician and making my case and saying what I identified as a problem and how I think we could solve that.

I didn't get a satisfactory resolution at that level, so I took my concerns up to the manager, and it was a very troubling situation, even reflecting on it to this day. Like I say, in the majority of cases Albertans are absolutely safe. What I'm about to describe may alarm some people. Guess what the manager that I spoke to about the safety concerns that I had described to him and that I hadn't had a satisfactory resolution to told me, Madam Chair? He said: if you don't like it, go work somewhere else. And my jaw must have dropped to the floor. I couldn't believe he had said that. In fact, that person was a registered nurse as well, which made it even more shocking. You know what? After hearing that, I still tried to take measures to correct the situation and went above that manager to the director, and I did see some resolution at that level.

You know, I think what the bill contemplates is escalating levels of whistle-blowing, so to speak, that there are processes in place that should be followed to make sure that we're going through a proper chain of command, and that is to say that the first time we notice something wrong, we don't necessarily go to the commissioner or the media right away. Of course, it all depends on the context of a person's work situation, but we always owe it to our managers and whatnot to bring those things to their attention first and try to seek resolution at that level and then escalate as necessary.

There is a concept called duty of fidelity, and that is whereby an employee owes it to their employer to give the employer every opportunity to fix situations that the employee may see as unsatisfactory and that the employee also has an obligation not to paint the employer in a negative light in public, because the relationship of the employee and the employer hinges on this duty of fidelity. I think that's important, but at the same time we don't want that to limit people to not come forward and blow the whistle.

I think that in the nursing profession nurses and, I think, all health care providers, for that matter, are driven by a strong desire to do the right thing. They're in this for the right reasons. Certainly, nursing is an incredibly rewarding job, but it's not very glamorous, or oftentimes it's not. You know, we're looking after people's bodily functions and whatnot. There's no shame in that, Madam Chair. When you go talk to your family and they say, “What do you do at work?” I used to say, “Well, I change diapers for adults.” That's kind of a pejorative way of putting it, but sometimes, in essence, that's what nurses do in different circumstances. I don't mean to demean that. It's an extremely important job because of skin integrity and personal dignity and whatnot. It's an extremely important job.

I'd like to describe another scenario that I encountered. We were doing an operation where we were going into the chest cavity, and in these circumstances you have to have an experienced surgeon and a resident. At the time the two operators were a fellow and a resident, a first-year resident for that matter, and going into the chest cavity is kind of a big deal. I informed the surgeon that, you know, there is a policy that the surgeon had to be at least in the room and ready to scrub in if necessary. So I called the surgeon and described the situation. I'm paraphrasing, but this is relatively accurate. He told me: if you don't tell me how to do my doctor job, I won't tell you how to do your nurse job. I was gobsmacked. That's the kind of culture that we're aiming to change.

We want it so that new doctors coming into the profession would never say something like that. They'd say, “Thank you for letting me know; here's the reason why I made that decision” or whatnot, but they would certainly never seek to demean another professional. Certainly, in a situation where if a doctor noticed me doing my quote, unquote, nursing job in a fashion that they had a concern about, I would welcome them to bring that to my attention. That's the kind of culture we're seeking to change, and I think that's absolutely important.

There is another section in the bill that I wanted to refer to because I think it also speaks to going about whistle-blowing sort of in the appropriate fashion. I'll just read briefly this one section. This is from section 20 in the bill.

Before beginning an investigation into a disclosure where the disclosure alleges gross mismanagement in relation to employees, the Commissioner must be satisfied that all applicable mechanisms, including any human resource processes or processes under a collective agreement, to address bullying, harassment or intimidation . . . have been used or considered.

I'd like to speak about something that I know relatively intimately, which is the professional responsibility clause in the United Nurses of Alberta's collective agreement. This is a fantastic clause because it speaks to precisely that article in the bill. That is that when nurses encounter a professional responsibility concern in their workplace here in Alberta and elsewhere in Canada – I believe they have similar provisions in collective agreements across the country – there's a defined mechanism in the collective agreement for nurses to bring professional responsibility concerns forward.

I'd really like to applaud the United Nurses of Alberta because they have taken this matter extraordinarily seriously. They've hired researchers and nurses that do research on professional responsibility to examine this exact matter. Especially under the management of the former government, who would make cuts to health care and put patient care at risk by their gross mismanagement of public resources and political interference, the United Nurses of Alberta really ramped this up. They were afraid that the decisions of the former government were going to put patients at risk.

This is something that I was involved with. Frankly, that's one of the reasons I ran for election. When the PCs were planning to cut a billion dollars out of health care, I knew that the system was already strained and that nurses and staff were doing everything they could to hold it together.

If the PCs had had their way and cut that significant amount of funding, things may have gone a much different way. The United Nurses of Alberta have taken this very seriously. They have committees, and they have a professional responsibility adviser. They've done an admirable job, you know, looking at the essence of what nursing is and making sure that all health care situations are safe across the province.

With that, Madam Chair, you know, I think this is an excellent bill. I know that the minister has done a fantastic job of putting this together in terms of consultation and captured the various scenarios that we can encounter here in Alberta. I'd also like to thank the members of the Ethics and Accountability Committee, who put so much work into creating the recommendations, working long hours and through difficult circumstances as they contemplated the various aspects of this legislation. I'd like to encourage all members to vote in favour of this bill.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill?

Ms Fitzpatrick: I've said many times in this room that I spent 20 years as an activist in my union. I worked for the federal government and the territorial government for 32 and a half years within corrections, and throughout that time there were certainly a number of incidents that occurred that I felt were incidents that needed to be reported. Anybody who knows me – well, the Member for Banff-Cochrane used a phrase about rocking the boat. One might have been able to use the words "boat rocker" as an indicator for me. When things happened and my instincts said that there was something wrong – guess what? – there was probably something wrong.

I have a number of incidents and a number of issues on reprisals. When I worked at the jail in Yellowknife, I was a recreation supervisor when I started there. The gym was a little short, so we talked among management about what we could do because a couple of the offenders had injured themselves running into the wall when playing floor hockey or basketball. We came up with a solution. We were going to put a wood frame along both end walls, and we were going to use all the exercise mats as padding on those walls, but the only time we could do it was during the night because the gym was in use from 7 o'clock in the morning until 10 at night. So I decided that I would get a crew of offenders who wanted to volunteer to do this, and I brought them into the gym at about 11:30 at night on a Friday night. We took all the wood we were using, sanded it all down, put some varnish on it, and put Velcro on the top so that we could hook the mats up.

The rule in corrections is that there have to be rounds done every hour. All the inmates have to be counted. You want to make sure everybody is there, and you want to make sure everybody is safe. As I said, I went into the gym at 11:30, and I never saw anybody until 2:30. At 2:30 one of the guys on duty came in, and he said: "We're just getting supper for the staff, so the inmates can come and have something to eat." I said okay. I asked them, and they said that, all right, they'd go for something to eat. We went into the dining room. He had frozen fish and chips out for the offenders, and he had steaks and some other goodies out for the staff. He said, "You can have a steak." I said: "Well, no. I'm going to have exactly what the offenders are having." That's the procedure in the jail during the daytime, that whatever is on the meal plan for one group is on the plan for everybody. So we ate fish and chips, and then we went back to the gym.

We finished the job at 4 o'clock, and I didn't see anybody else coming to count the offenders or to check on us. I was in there with 10 guys who were offenders, who were in jail for committing crimes, and nobody came to check on me. Nobody came to check on them.

Anyway, we finished, and they went back to their units. I went to the front door of the jail, and there was smoke coming out of the front door. What I realized was that they had a barbecue between the front door and the outside door. That's the only exit from the jail. They've got a barbecue in there, and they were barbecuing their steaks. I was a little perturbed, and I spoke to the officer in charge. I said: "What the heck are you doing? You can't have a barbecue between the two doors. You're putting the whole building at risk. You're putting everybody's life at risk." And he said, "What are you going to do about it?" I said: "Well, you've put me at risk, you've put all the staff at risk, and you've put every offender in this jail at risk. This is against the rules." He said, "What are you going to do?" I said, "I'm going to report this incident." And he said, "Just remember that nobody is going to have your back if something happens."

Anyway, as I said, I'm a boat rocker. If you're not going to put the safety of everybody in the jail first, then somebody has to do something about it. So I reported it to my supervisor, and my supervisor reported it to the superintendent. The officer in charge was disciplined, and he was suspended for three days. I can't remember what his position was, but he would be the senior person for the correctional officers in that jail who assigned shifts. They were a little ticked that I made that report and that he was suspended, so they scheduled him for overtime so that he wouldn't actually lose any money. To me, that was such a lack of integrity.

Again I went back, but this time I went to the superintendent, and I said: "This person was disciplined for what they did, which put everybody at risk. They didn't observe the schedule to check on inmates or staff in the institution every hour, yet they had written it in the book that they had done that." You had lots of witnesses because all of the offenders who were in the gym with me remarked that no staff came to check on them. There was no other way to check but to come in the door and come into the gym. Anyway, I went back, and I reported it.

There were certainly reprisals. I got left in the gym with some remanded offenders. If two of those offenders hadn't stood by my side and backed the other offenders off in a particular situation that happened, I could have been killed. Again I reported the situation. It was the same shift supervisor who had done it on the night shift. You've got to report that. It finally went to the head of corrections in the Territories before any action actually happened.

That was one example. I've had enough experience in my life that I'm not going to put up with any kind of baloney like that that's going on. I stand up, and I say something.

Eventually I get to a parole office. An incident happened when one of my colleagues was being sexually harassed by another one of our colleagues. She went to the district director and said: this is what's happening; I need you to take some action. The person who was doing it was a friend of the director. He did nothing. So she came to me and said: I need to file a grievance against management for not following our own procedure and policy on harassment. The first thing he should have done was to separate the two of them so that she would be safe.

It took two years before that was resolved, and it meant that I had to continue all the time fighting this. Somebody said to me: like, what are you prepared to give up? My career was in the tubes as far as advancing within corrections in that work setting. But I could not let something like that happen without standing up and saying: no, this is not going to continue, and there are going to be consequences for that behaviour.

As I said, my career didn't go anywhere while I was in that office. It wasn't that I didn't apply in competitions that I was more than qualified for and certainly more qualified than those people that they put into those positions. But I wasn't going anywhere. In fact, the district director told me that I wasn't going anywhere. I couldn't keep my mouth shut, so I wasn't going anywhere.

It wasn't until I went to Ottawa that, in fact, my career did progress. Because I was a union rep, there were people who came to me when things happened. In Ottawa I didn't mess around. If something didn't happen right away, I went to the commissioner. We had a policy in the federal government on harassment, on bullying, on sexual harassment, and the department was going to follow it because if not, I was going public with it. He knew that I'd go public with it. One of the things I learned in those years of being a union rep was to document every little bit of evidence that had occurred in every one of those cases. So you fix it, you do the right thing, but as I said, my career was impacted for a long time because I did that.

This legislation will change that. Hopefully, it will change that culture that I talked about. Certainly, there was a correctional culture when I was there, but that culture, I've found, is in many other places as well. There are always people who want to bully you and don't want their actions to be made public. Except, their actions are causing pain to somebody else. They are causing pain to the institution.

In corrections one of the things that you were expected to do was to be a good example. If we wanted offenders to change their behaviour, we needed to model good behaviour. What went on in Yellowknife when I was there at that jail was not good behaviour, and those offenders that were there saw that it wasn't good behaviour.

If we want things to get better, yes, this legislation needs to go forward. We need to change that culture about respect and to stop bullying and those power games that are going on.

With that, I'll sit down. I have lots of other examples, but I think I'll leave it at that. To be very honest, I expect everybody in this room to support this bill.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other questions, comments, or amendments to Bill 11? West Yellowhead.

Mr. Rosendahl: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I'm going to try and work my way through this. I've got a real bad cold, so hopefully I can work my way through my speech.

I'm proud to stand in the House in support of Bill 11, the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Amendment Act, 2017. I say that it's about time. It's long overdue. The old legislation that was in place: a lot of people thought it was okay, but it was weak. I always said that it was full of holes like a sieve, which is unfortunate, but a lot of people and employers took advantage of it.

One of the biggest fears that employees have is the fear of reprisal from employers. In some cases it even goes beyond that to peer pressure from other workers that you're working with because when you raise an issue, they're afraid that it's going to be a reflection on them as well. I guess I learned early on that you have to stand up. Like Maria, you know, you're not afraid to stand up and say that this isn't right.

Maybe that's why I was very well respected in the union in later years, because I had that opinion. It didn't matter whether it was something that the employer did or whether or not it was about issues of harassment and those kinds of things that went on in different workplaces that I dealt with. Once again, it was the fact that I wasn't afraid to stand up. It took us a while, even where I worked in the union at the plant in Hinton, where I really got my training and those kinds of things, to really understand workers' health and safety, for example, or when you're looking at the chemicals that we dealt with in the plant, what was going on with it. Of course, a lot of the issues that we dealt with in there were environmental concerns because the chemicals that we dealt with in the plant had a huge repercussion on the environment in one way or another if there were spills or leaks or anything else that occurred.

I learned early on in my employment career, when I worked for a government agency, for example, that when we found some silly things – and I'll say that it was silly things – that went on and when we raised the issue with our boss, who was our immediate supervisor, we were told to shut up or face reprisals one way or another. You could end up with a shortened career, which isn't right, but that's the way it was then.

In later years I was working for another employer, that was doing some kind of an experiment, and the animals that they were looking after were near starvation. I said: "This isn't right. You can't do that. Even in an experimental situation you do not have a right to treat animals like that." Well, I won't go into the harassment and stuff that I ended up with because I stood up and said: "No, you can't do that. These animals need to be fed. You don't have a right. You're breaking the law." I was subjected to all kinds of things, but I said: "You know, this is important. You don't have a right to do these things."

When I went to work for – and I'm going to be clear about the pulp mill in Hinton. In the early '70s, of course, there weren't a lot of environmental things there. Sure, they had their operating licence and everything else. They did all kinds of I won't say stupid things, but some people made some real bad decisions. It wasn't good for the environment, for sure, but we learned the hard way, in some cases, in standing up to them and saying that you can't be doing these things. Some of us got days off for sticking up for workers and those kinds of things.

Through that we learned that we had to look at our collective agreements. Through our collective agreement we had to make considerable changes and address the issues of environment, for example. We also had to address the issues of harassment in the workplace. Of course, it took us a few years to get that recognized in the collective agreement as being a real problem because the laws in Alberta really didn't help the workers in there if you stood up and said something against the employer or whatever.

That's why this is so important today, because when you're dealing with a workplace that is dealing with all kinds of chemicals like we did and in quite a vast amount – in some cases the large vessels that we had of various material could certainly harm the environment. When we stood up to that employer because they decided to drain the vessel for repairs or wash the stuff out and not deal with it in a proper manner, we had to stand up to them and say: "This isn't right. You can't do that." Because of my steadfast relationship in looking after air and water and those things, we ended up forming an environment committee, for example, in the plant to try and deal with it so that we all had a collective voice. Meanwhile we've had employees get time off, including myself on a few occasions, when I was threatened or even just about fired a few times because I stood up.

What was good in that case, though, was that because it was a union environment, the union workers stood with me. That's the only way that we could stand up to the employer that this isn't right, what you're doing. In some cases it was so bad we had to phone or even report the mill for environmental laws that they were breaking or whatever. We had to do that. It's too bad that we had to go through all those things. Meanwhile the employees, including myself and a few others, had to endure harassment and bullying in some cases because we were standing up and believing that what we were doing was the right thing to do.

That's why this Bill 11 is so important. It gives a voice to people and the ability to stand up and say: "Look, you can't do that. You can't threaten me with firing or removing my livelihood because I don't think that what you're doing to me is the right thing to do." Being the president of the labour council in West Yellowhead for many years, we ran into that from several other employers, whether it was some people at McDonald's or whether it was some workers at the different hotels or whatever, some of the things that went on dealing with harassment and bullying in the workplace. Of course, I got told on several occasions that I should mind my own business, that I shouldn't interfere, that because it wasn't a unionized workplace, I should butt out or a few other things. What we were thinking was the fact that nobody should have to work under those conditions.

Another case – and I'll say it this way – was that my wife was working for an employer, and she does not see well. She's technically blind, carries a CNIB card. She was working for this employer, and the manager of the hotel cornered her in the hotel room while she was making the bed and made some gross advances to her. She cornered herself in the closet, called me when she had the opportunity, and, needless to say, I went over there. I won't repeat what I said to the guy, but she didn't work there anymore either because we don't need to put up with that. That's harassment. It's not right, especially the fact that when they do this to people with disabilities, it's even more concerning because they can't fight for themselves. They try their best to do the job, and, if anything, they try harder than anyone else to prove themselves, that they can do these things.

In another case my wife was working for another employer because she was bound and determined that she had a right to work, which she does, and I supported that, but this employer would do nasty things: hide her cleaning supplies and then complain that she took too long to do her job. She would phone me and say: "The stuff is missing. Can you come and help me find the stuff so I can do what I need to do?" So I would go over there and help her out. My wife can't see blue on a piece of paper. If you write a note in blue ink, for example, she can't read that, so what this employer would do is write a note half in blue ink and half in black and then complain to her because she couldn't read the note. What we did for that, once we found out that this was going on: she would send me a picture of the note. I would read it for her so that she knew what it said. This is wrong.

This is why this is so important, to protect people like that from this kind of thing. It's important that we look at that because, like I said, people with disabilities try their hardest. They work harder than some people because they're trying to prove that they can do it. That's why I'm so much in support of this. It's not only for them; it's for other people to stand up and say: this is wrong.

I know I've got issues going on in West Yellowhead right now. I know that there's a case in another situation where another worker is being harassed because of their age. It's wrong. I confronted the employer about it just a little while ago. This individual needs the job because, unfortunately, her husband died and didn't really leave her much of a pension. She's trying to make ends meet, so she needs this bus-driving job so that she can pay her rent and stuff. She's being harassed, which is ridiculous. There are other cases out there where this is going on. It's not right. This is why it's so important that I support this.

Everybody in the Chamber knows and everybody in the public knows that most whistle-blowers merely want to help fix things and make things right. That's the principle that we've got to look at because that's what they're trying to do, whether it's a supervisor that's dumping chemicals when they shouldn't or out in the oil and gas sector, for example.

Of course, I'm always out there when I have the chance, poking around and seeing what's going on, and I find that a whole bunch of chemicals are leaking from a bunch of old barrels that are left on an abandoned oil site. Boy, did that stir up a hornet's nest. I got harassment phone calls and a few other things. I got told to mind my own business and a few other expletives in there. It's important that these kinds of things should be reported. Everybody should have a right to report these things without the fear of bullying and harassment and threats.

That's why I'm in full support of Bill 11. I think that we need to look at this, and I think that we need to pass it a hundred per cent. With that, I'll sit down.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's always tough to follow the Member for West Yellowhead, but I will do my best. It is my privilege to rise and speak in Committee of the Whole about the amendments to the public interest disclosure act. One of the things that I wanted to touch on was talking about reprisals. There is some significant work that's been done in terms of reprisal being captured in the legislation, so I'll just go over a bit of what's in the legislation, in the amendments.

We know that one of the most important parts of public disclosure legislation is having employees have faith in the system of being able to come forward with information that would otherwise not come to light. Unfortunately, one of the things that happens in that process is that there can be reprisals against that employee in the workplace. I know that for the many public service employees that I've had the privilege of meeting in this role as MLA, all of them take what they do quite seriously in service of the province, and I thank them absolutely for all the work they do.

Some of the sections where section 24 would be repealed and substituted would be:

- 24(1) This section applies to an employee or a prescribed service provider who has, in good faith,
 - (a) requested advice about making a disclosure as described in section 8 or, in the case of an employee of a prescribed service provider, the regulations made under Part 1.2, whether or not the employee made a disclosure,
 - (b) made a disclosure under this Act,
 - (c) co-operated in an investigation under this Act,
 - (d) declined to participate in a wrongdoing, or
 - (e) done anything in accordance with this Act, [and]
- (2) No person shall take or direct, or counsel or direct a person to take or direct, any of the following measures against an employee of a department, a public entity, an office of the Legislature, the Office of the Premier, an office of a minister or a prescribed service provider for the reason that the employee took an action referred to in subsection (1):
 - (a) a dismissal, layoff, suspension, demotion or transfer, discontinuation or elimination of a job, change of job location, reduction in wages, change in hours of work or reprimand;
 - (b) any measure, other than one mentioned in clause (a), that adversely affects the employee's employment or working conditions;

- (c) a threat to take any of the measures mentioned in clause (a) or (b).

(3) Subject to the regulations, no person shall take or direct, or counsel or direct a person to take or direct, any measure prescribed in the regulations against a prescribed service provider for the reason that the prescribed service provider or an employee of the prescribed service provider took an action referred to in subsection (1).

Of course, with reprisal, unfortunately, for very good reason it's one of the biggest fears that employees do have and one of the reasons that they don't come forward: fear of reprisal by their employer. We know that this has taken place, but there haven't necessarily been the remedies to actually deal with a reprisal that's happened. There wasn't the power of the office to be able to either prescribe or have a body that could prescribe a remedy for that person.

This is a step towards making sure that there is some protection in regard to that. Right now any employer that is in the public sector can be prosecuted for punishing an employee who exposes a wrongdoing, but there is no mechanism that is currently in place that would determine how that restitution would be made to a person who is the whistle-blower if they are subject to such an unlawful punishment. So one of the recommendations that was made by the committee was that there would be an ability to enable the Labour Relations Board to order remedies where there has been a reprisal. That board may decide that the whistle-blower deserves to get their job back if they've been fired or that they might be entitled to compensation.

Of course, in the end, it would be up to the board to decide what would be appropriate, but it's important to note, I should say, that the board's order would be enforceable like a court order. It's with that that this would provide encouragement for whistle-blowers to feel more safe coming forward with information about their workplace. We saw this legislation actually come into real-life experience when we saw that the Public Interest Commissioner was able to rule that there had been a contravention of the rules of Alberta Innovates: technology futures, that they had been found to be directing their staff to change information of parties that were engaging with AITF, and it was likely as a means to expedite the process of finding those – I shouldn't say companies – providers, those contractors that would partner in the office for work, and someone was brave enough to come forward. As I was saying before, you know, someone like this, that works in the public sector, would be doing that because they are wanting to ensure that there is accountability in the body that they're working in and that the resources that are in the office that they are fulfilling the duties of are being appropriately used.

When I was going through the clauses here, I thought that it was also important to note that it will also expand this act to ministers and MLAs. Right now that coverage is not currently in effect with ministers' offices or MLAs' offices. This will increase that scope of accountability so that if somebody has a similar sort of complaint in regard to someone not using public resources in a way that follows the rules and regulations of that office, they can go through the process of making that public disclosure in the interests of the province, really.

It's very important to talk about how those that go through the process of making a disclosure and could be putting their future livelihoods at risk are able to have more faith in the process. You know, it has been said that for people that do this or think about doing this, their concern is that they are really taking their entire practice, their training, their years of school, their years of service to the public and they're putting it all on the line, not just in regard to their current livelihood but also going forward. They're worried about their future livelihood, earnings all being put at risk because often they do not believe that they will actually be able to return to the public sector to be able to gain employment.

So I want to thank those that have come forward with disclosures and those that will do so in the future because, just as the member previous was saying, it's incredibly important for people to be able to hold public institutions to account. It's important to have faith from the public in those institutions, and that's what I believe is the bedrock of this legislation.

That would be why I am proud to stand and speak in favour of this, because I know that a lot of people have put a lot on the line and also lost a lot in the interest of the public good. I want to again thank those people and thank the minister for democratic reform for tabling these amendments. I want to give them my full support.

Thanks, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I move that the committee rise and report progress.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on that bill, Bill 11. I wish to table copies of the amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Bill 8

An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government

[Adjourned debate May 11: Mr. Eggen]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to once again rise in this Assembly and talk about the Municipal Government Act. It's a pleasure for me because in my past life I actually worked in municipal government, and I knew the importance of the MGA in terms of the activities that it regulated in the municipalities that I worked for. In the Assembly we have spoken at length about the changes to the Municipal Government Act and the way that this act now strengthens municipal governments. When I worked for municipal governments, I would encourage residents to get involved in their local government decision-making, to engage with municipal candidates during elections, and, especially, to exercise their democratic rights by voting.

It has always disturbed me that often the percentage of persons who vote in the municipal election for municipal councillors, mayors, and school trustees is less than 50 per cent because, actually, municipal governments have the most impact on a family's life. Through zoning regulations municipal governments have an impact on the affordability, style, and type of housing that is available. Through the municipal development plan municipalities decide where roads will be, green spaces, public amenities, schools, and the density of subdivisions. Municipalities set bylaws that can determine if your dog and cat need licences, if you can keep hens, bees, pigs, and so on in your backyard; set speeds on roads; decide on photoradar; fund libraries, affordable housing, seniors' lodges; support families and community services programs.

I want especially to talk about libraries, not only because we have a fantastic library in Strathcona county but because our government actually funds libraries as opposed to what happened in Saskatchewan, where library funding was cut.

4:50

Mr. Carson: They went back on it.

Ms McKittrick: Okay. Well, sorry.

Anyway, I'm always happy to visit my library, and I'm always reminded that it is a part of municipal government.

Municipalities also work to ensure industrial and retail tax bases, encourage economic development, honour volunteers and community leadership. As you can see, Madam Speaker, any revision to the Municipal Government Act has a huge impact on the life of every single Albertan.

I was very pleased to see the addition in Bill 8 of section 63, about the joint-use and planning agreements. During my school trustee days planning for schools and finding the appropriate land were an ongoing challenge. We were fortunate that our board and municipal government had established, at the staff and political level, committees to discuss planning for schools, joint-use agreements for parks, green spaces, and school facilities. The issue of joint-use and planning agreements is one which was advocated for strongly during the original MGA consultations by one of my boards, the Elk Island public board. I'm really grateful for their willingness to speak about this issue. My thanks to the former and current ministers of Municipal Affairs for having listened to Elk Island public board and all the other boards that spoke to the need of adding this section to the MGA.

Land, especially a portion of land big enough for a school, playground, playing fields, parking, and so on, is really hard to set aside in many urban municipalities. There is also the need for appropriate access to and exit from the schools, with provisions for emergency situations. Planning for schools must happen with attention paid to demographics, future growth, suitability, and to the kinds of businesses and developments that can be located close to schools. For example, you have to make sure that you don't build dangerous industries close to school sites. Land is also costly and hard to acquire if careful planning has not happened early on in any area structure planning.

The section that was added to the MGA in Bill 8 reads in part:

670.1(1) Where on the coming into force of this section a school board is operating within the municipal boundaries of a municipality, the municipality must, within 3 years after this section comes into force, enter into an agreement under this section with the school board.

(2) Where after the coming into force of this section a school board commences operating within the municipal boundaries of a municipality, the municipality must, within 3 years after the school board commences operating in the municipality, enter into an agreement under this section with the school board.

I won't bore the Assembly today by reading all of this section, as my colleague the MLA from Calgary did a few days ago, but I think everybody understands the importance of this section in terms of ensuring that municipal government and school boards meet early on and really spend time thinking about the use of land within the municipal or county boundaries and how this land can best be used to ensure that the children that live in the area can have access to schools.

Bill 8 will make sure that each school board will sit down with their one or in many cases more than one, maybe even up to 10 municipal governments and discuss school site needs, suitability, demographics, and, hopefully, share each other's strategic plan as to programs and land use. I think of my own school boards, that have probably seven or eight municipal governments that they have to work with in terms of planning for schools. They have to work with not only Strathcona county but Fort Saskatchewan, Vegreville, for one of the boards Camrose, Mundare, Tofield, and so on. This section of the act is really going to encourage every partner in municipal governments to really think about the need to use land for schools.

Also, in many municipalities there is more than one board, as there is in my own municipality. In Strathcona county we have public, Catholic, and francophone boards. All three and the municipal governments, hopefully, will work together to figure how best to use land to the benefit of schools and public amenities. I'm really hoping that this part of the act will encourage not only the municipalities that come to agreement with individual boards but that all boards in one municipality will come into agreement jointly with the municipality so we can really use land as well as possible to create the kind of schools that we need.

I should also add, Madam Speaker, that I'm so pleased that the Minister of Education has worked so hard to build new schools not only in my own riding but in all of the other ridings. It's very timely that this section has been added to Bill 8 because it's going to establish the planning for years to come as the government initiates the building of new schools.

Madam Speaker, other members in the Assembly have spoken eloquently about the provisions that allow municipal government to establish parental leave policies and about the need for all municipalities to work and collaborate with their nearby First Nation communities. I myself had the opportunity to see the importance of this collaboration when I worked with a municipality in B.C. to develop their municipal plan. The plan was given in draft to the nearby First Nation communities and their feedback incorporated in the final draft. It was a very respectful process, that led to these communities' engagement with the municipalities on other matters, and I'm really hoping that that experience will be replicated in many, many of the municipalities in Alberta that are adjacent to First Nation communities.

I would like to also remind all members of the extensive consultation processes that led to Bill 8. Al Kemmere, who's the president of AAMD and C, stated:

Through the MGA review process, AAMDC has been grateful to have been at the table. This journey has been open, inclusionary and fair. Though you never get everything you ask for, in the end we have current legislation that for the most part reflects municipal challenges and we are proud to have been part of it.

I again want to commend both ministers, the current Minister of Municipal Affairs and the former minister, for the time, the energy, and the way they carefully consulted with everyone who wanted to be part of revision of the act.

Madam Speaker, it is my hope that all members of this Assembly will support Bill 8 and will also work with their local municipalities, First Nation communities, and school boards to support collaboration and thoughtful planning.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I'll recognize the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker, and good afternoon, everyone. I appreciate the opportunity to be able to speak once again to Bill 8. It is a fact that this bill had a significant number of topics in it, and it's difficult to actually pay proper attention to all the topics that it has, in fact, in the time that's allowed today, but I'd like to go through a few things if I could.

I'd like to start out just by saying that we identified from the briefings 44 different topics that were in Bill 8 that were under review. There were some proposed changes, and they were divided up into three or four major topic areas: governance, how they work together and plan for growth, and funding. These kinds of topics are important and vital to how municipalities work with the ratepayers in their areas.

I'm pleased to say and be able to say that I'm glad the government did come forward with some of these things. They were, for the most part, fairly welcomed, and I thought they were worth while to discuss. I only wish we had more time to discuss them in greater detail. There are a lot of them I'd like to touch on just a little bit, so I'll just mention a few of them.

The first one is collaboration with indigenous communities. That's certainly something that we do support. In the bill municipalities with adjacent First Nation reserves or Métis settlements are required to notify them of any new municipal development plans and area structure plans. It clarifies that municipalities are able to collaborate with their neighbouring First Nation communities, you know, on matters of regional service delivery, and it empowers municipalities to form collaborative agreements with those communities. While many municipalities are already doing this, during last summer's MGA tour it became clear, however, that there was and probably still is today some confusion. This amendment perhaps will give some clarity that may be needed there. I'm not sure how the indigenous communities feel about this – it will be interesting to hear back from them – but it's certainly a change that I support and that our party supports.

Conservation reserves were another interesting one. From my previous experience in municipal work we had conservation reserves in some manner but not to the extent that this is indicating now. It's the ability for a municipality to establish a reserve. That was actually created in Bill 21. The idea then was to address an issue that municipalities were facing when dealing with development requests. The change was largely welcomed by developers.

It looks like Bill 8 is going to enhance and expand the rules around that new idea. It'll allow for reimbursement, actually, of the purchase cost to be considered during annexation proceedings as well. It further restricts those funds to be used for conservation purposes only. It also clarifies that the conservation reserve land is exempt from municipal taxes, and it encourages municipalities to include conservation goals and objectives in their statutory plans. Finally, it does close a loophole that would have left municipalities unable to reclassify a conservation reserve that had suffered substantive changes that eliminated the land's conservation value; for example, when lands are often destroyed by flooding. Some of these changes are good, and I do support that one.

There was also another topic. It was taxation of provincial agencies. It makes it clear that any property held by a provincial corporation will be considered taxable for the purpose of property taxation. I welcome this acknowledgement on the part of the province, too. It was a responsibility that I think is important. The AUMA had a quote on that, and they thought it was good. They said that it's "to compensate municipalities for the services the municipality provides." It's a change that I, too, support.

Another big one that was mentioned, I think, just a bit by the previous speaker: joint-use and planning agreements. Bill 8 proposes to establish the requirement for a municipality to establish joint-use and planning agreements, or JUPAs, with the school boards within its boundaries. These JUPAs will include basic things leading to the planning, development, and use of school sites; the transfer of municipal and school reserves in a municipality; the disposal of school sites; the servicing of school sites on municipal reserves in the municipality; and the use and maintenance of school and municipality facilities and playing fields in the municipality, including what the fees, if any, for use will be. The proposed changes should result in improved collaboration, I think, between school boards and municipalities, so it's definitely a change that I can support.

Unfortunately, Madam Speaker, all the good that this bill offers is overshadowed a little bit, in my opinion, by the government's insistence on maintaining complete secrecy over the phase-in of the 5 to 1 property tax ratio. Now, let me make this clear. I'm not opposed to the principle of linking nonresidential and residential property tax rates, nor am I opposed to the ratio being 5 to 1. But what I am opposed to is the government's complete unwillingness to provide any certainty with a timeline to those municipalities and all of their residents, local business owners, and industries that exceed the 5 to 1 tax ratio currently on when the government expects them to become compliant with the 5 to 1 linkage.

During the Committee of the Whole debate two reasonable amendments were proposed that would have established within the legislation itself the government's expectation in terms of a timeline for municipalities to come into compliance. We thought this was a reasonable request. We didn't think that it was something that could not be fairly considered by the government.

The first proposed amendment would have allowed a municipality until 2029 to bring their property tax rates into compliance. It did this simply by including the date in the body of the proposed bill. This was a timeline suggested by the communities that would be the hardest hit. The response from the government was that they didn't want to establish timelines in the legislation because it was too restrictive and that it didn't allow for flexibility for different municipalities that have different ratios and established a horizon that might be too long.

The second amendment accommodated the comments and concerns of the minister and proposed a different timeline of 2027, or 10 years, by which to become compliant with the 5 to 1 ratio. Again the response from the government members was a concern that the 10 years was too onerous a horizon by which these municipalities had to become compliant.

As my hon. colleague from Calgary-Hays pointed out that day, a compromise of 11 years seemed to be a number that fit nicely between 10 and 12. However, instead, as most people know, the government insisted that they had things well in control, that assurances had been made to the nonconforming municipalities, and that the only thing required was that they have a little trust in them. Well, frankly, Madam Speaker, trust-me clauses in this government are not necessarily appropriate, in my opinion. I'm unwilling to trust them to do what they say, and I think most municipalities that we've talked to have the same feeling.

I'd like to give a little reminder on a couple of key words that I'd given during Committee of the Whole. There was the word "uncertainty." Uncertainty can lead to speculation, and speculation in municipalities and marketplaces and all that kind of thing, whether it's in the stock market or in the municipal world, especially to do with real estate and the value of people's properties, can lead eventually to economic difficulty if it's not managed correctly.

Instead, however, if you have predictability, you can have prosperity, whether it's the community itself or the businesses that are involved in that community or the ancillary businesses that are providing employment like in the Fort McMurray area with the oil sands operations. The oil and gas business is vital to the Canadian economy. It's vital to the Alberta economy. We support the oil and gas industry heavily on our side of the House, and we would really have appreciated having that predictability and that prosperity as a result of having a proper timeline in place. It didn't look like that was going to happen. We're disappointed with that.

While there are many things in Bill 8 that are improvements – and I'm happy to see them in this bill – since the government has failed to address the critical issue of bringing certainty to the timeline for the phase-in of that 5 to 1 ratio, I'm sorry, but I will be voting against this bill during this reading.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), questions or comments?

Seeing none, I will recognize the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Like my colleague from Livingstone-Macleod, I'm happy to stand up and speak today to Bill 8, An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government, at third reading. I agree with him as well that there are a lot of good proposals contained in Bill 8, including enabling municipalities to create parental leave for councillors, a great idea; clarifying that municipalities may collaborate with First Nations reserves and Métis settlements on regional service delivery – I think, again, that's, you know, a gimme – and establishing a framework for municipalities and school boards within their boundaries to create joint-use and planning agreements, also a good choice, where we try to take advantage of every tax dollar that we can to make sure that it's utilized to its full potential.

There's also a requirement that a municipality initiating an amalgamation or annexation must notify all local authorities operating or providing services within the affected municipalities; exempting school boards from paying off-site levies on the construction of public school building projects, which is also good; allowing municipalities the freedom to provide receipts for taxes paid at the request of the taxpayer; clarifying that property held by a provincial corporation is taxable – I hear that quite a bit, especially in my community of St. Paul, where there are a lot of provincial buildings – clarifying that assessors may not compel a property owner to provide records during an inspection or respond to a request for information relative to the current assessment year if the property owner has filed a complaint about their assessment.

Unfortunately, all these good proposals are overshadowed by the proposed changes that grant the minister complete and total discretion to set the deadline for compliance to meet the required nonresidential to residential property tax rate of 5 to 1. I would just like to point out that the reason I have an issue with that is that some of the municipalities, especially up in northeastern-northwestern Alberta, are already facing issues with nonpayment of linear tax by companies that have defaulted or have gone bankrupt or insolvent. You know, they already have to sort of tack on some of this stuff as carry-over onto residential taxes, so this is just going to make it a little bit harder for the municipalities, especially the smaller ones, to meet their goals.

Now, while I don't have an issue with the ratio myself, granting the minister absolute authority to set the timeline is completely unacceptable. In some cases the decision of the minister could cause residential property taxes to increase by double or more. I understand that the minister has committed to working closely with municipalities on a case-by-case basis when developing the phase-in timeline for each nonconforming municipality, but without clearly laying it out in the legislation, it remains completely at the discretion of the minister, and it makes a few of the municipalities a little nervous. If they could have some set dates, if you're dealing with them on an individual basis, the sooner that we could get those dates set up with them, the better. Through the chair, of course.

I represent a constituency that includes two municipalities whose nonresidential tax rate exceeds its lowest residential property tax rate by more than five times.

An Hon. Member: Two municipalities?

Mr. Hanson: Two of them, yeah. I believe one has a ratio around 7.3; the other one is a little closer, at 6.25.

Compared to other municipalities who exceed the ratio, 6.25 may not seem that bad, and that may be correct. However, the fact remains that there are provisions within Bill 8 that require all municipalities that exceed the ratio to become fully compliant, with no mention of a specific and clear timeline in which to do so. That's where the issue comes in. I believe that in the previous legislation, that was passed here by this government, there was kind of a set timeline of five or 10 years for people to come into compliance, and this bill doesn't allow for that. It just puts it solely at the discretion of the minister. Like I said, it makes some of the industries and municipalities, actually, nervous because they don't have any real dates that they can set their priorities and their schedules and their funding on.

Instead, it provides for those deadlines to be established through regulation. Unlike legislation, which is required to be debated and voted on by the Legislature, regulations are established behind closed doors at the cabinet table. It's important to note that none of these regulations currently exist. The government is asking us to trust them to set compliance timelines for municipalities. I consider myself a reasonable person, and even for me that's asking a lot. I'm not prepared to bet my constituents' hard-earned money on this government's promise that they won't simply impose a timeline on municipalities unilaterally.

I'll close by reaffirming that there are many positive proposals offered in Bill 8. I agree with many of them. Unfortunately, without addressing the need for certainty around the 5 to 1 ratio, I will be unable to support it at third reading.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the comments and the concerns from the members opposite. I appreciate that they like 99.9 per cent of the second-biggest piece of legislation in Alberta. That's fantastic. What I'm curious about is the fact that they say that they can't support it because the 5 to 1 is under the minister's discretion.

Well, everything is under the minister's discretion when it really comes down to it. The fact of the matter is that I've been in discussions with industry. They say that there are concerns. Fair enough. I've been discussing with them. Municipalities: there are concerns, granted. I've been discussing with them, and I've committed to them since I've been onboard as the minister that we are going to wait for their feedback to understand what their timelines are. They didn't want me to impose timelines on them when we suggested those things. Now things have changed, apparently. I'm supposed to believe the members opposite. They say that they don't want to trust me. Well, how can I trust that? The conversations that I've had personally with a lot of different people out there: I will go on that, thank you very much.

I do appreciate the comments and the concerns, you know, but to not want to support a bill like this, where you agree with so much of it, almost the whole thing, because I've said that I made a promise and a commitment to the municipalities and industry to work with them in collaboration to set timelines that they can agree with rather than dropping the hammer and using my ministerial power — I would rather not have to do that. I can if I want, but I would rather work with people because that's the way we get things done in a good way, moving forward, to make it sustainable. I will continue to work with these communities, going forward, because I think that when we work together — the whole point of the MGA is collaboration, making sure that what we're doing is better for residents. I don't think my dropping the hammer and just setting a hard timeline that might not work for certain communities is appropriate for a lot of the communities out there, so I don't want to do that unless I have to in the long run.

We've committed for this regulation itself, apart from the rest of the bill and the other regulations, that we'll take the time it needs to make sure we get it right with these communities, working in collaboration going forward. As I said, the MGA is meant for that. It's meant to make sure that we're here working for the residents and our constituents. You know, I'm not here about power or any of these types of things, about taking things back or any of that. It's all about working for the people, and I've committed to that, and I will continue to do that. I want my kids to know that the promises that I make they can count on. When I look a person in the eye and shake their hand and commit to something, then I will commit to that, and I will continue doing that. I'm not going to go back on my word. That's not how I was brought up.

I understand their concerns and what they're saying, but I don't appreciate trying to sit here and pretend that by throwing hard timelines down, I'm going to end all of the uncertainty out there. The uncertainty is coming from over there. I would appreciate it if we go on the facts, which they did for 99.9 per cent of this bill, but to spread things about the 5 to 1 ratio and start talking about this after I've had all these conversations, to try to bring things up that haven't been brought to me, you know, I don't appreciate. I'd appreciate it if maybe you bring them to me next time. I'm here to work in collaboration. I'm here for the people of this province. I'll say it every single time I'm in here. That's how I was brought up.

Going forward, you know, I understand they say: "Oh, you don't want to trust the government. You don't want to trust anybody that's saying things on the opposite side." One of the reasons why I got involved in politics was because I was sick of that. I didn't like it when people would get up and say things that weren't true or purposely mislead or misconstrue things. Then the public would shrug and say, "Well, that's politics." No, it's not. We're elected officials, and we should be accountable to our people and our constituents. That's a promise that I made, and it's a promise I'm going to keep.

Thank you. I appreciate the comments from the other side, but I will continue to work with the people out there that I promised to work with, and we'll make sure that we have positive outcomes in the end.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, you have 15 seconds.

Mr. Hanson: Fifteen seconds? Oh. Well, I'll sit. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any others wishing to respond in the few seconds we have left under 29(2)(a)?

All right. The time has expired on that. I'll recognize Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise in the House today in support of Bill 8, An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government. When I look at this act, the first word that comes to mind is collaboration. What a beautiful word, "collaboration." It's bringing people to the same table for discussions, getting their opinions, getting their views, including people, including Albertans. That's what the province is about. Albertans define Alberta.

We're making the MGA a responsive and forward-looking piece of legislation that gives municipalities practical tools and resources to support strong and sustainable communities and a more resilient and diversified economy for Alberta families. There are so many people across Alberta who care about their communities, and we heard from these people about how our government can make practical changes to make their lives and communities better. The process of engagement was involved, which means that it's collaboration, once again, getting people involved in how they would like to pursue things together, the sense of togetherness.

We made some of the changes in the form of 40 additional amendments to the Modernized Municipal Government Act last fall before it was passed unanimously in December 2016. This bill incorporates feedback received during engagements with municipal leaders, families, young people, school boards, indigenous communities, small businesses, and industry, which included new ideas for how the MGA can support sustainable and collaborative communities. Again I highlight the words "sustainable and collaborative communities."

This bill delivers ideas that were heard from Albertans. A key focus of the MGA's modernization is municipal collaboration because we believe that all Albertans benefit when municipalities are good neighbours, working together to provide services and strengthen the economy. It's a sense of developing synergy when people are all together on the same boat for a common objective, the betterment of the province and Albertans.

I would like to specifically highlight the indigenous communities aspect because I'm very grateful and honoured to be the representative of Calgary-Glenmore, which is adjacent to Tsuut'ina Nation. Working with that particular nation as my neighbour, it is my privilege that I have this opportunity to do so, to have more engagement and develop that sense of understanding with each other and strengthen our relationship with the First Nation.

Indigenous communities intersect with municipalities through regular interactions for a variety of reasons such as utility service delivery. Our government is committed to implementing the principles of the United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples. As such, it is important to encourage the province's municipalities to continue to take meaningful and reasonable steps to understand and engage with neighbouring indigenous communities and citizens in a respectful and culturally appropriate manner, particularly with respect to land-use planning and service delivery.

Municipalities will be required to notify neighbouring indigenous communities of any new municipal development plans or area structure plans. Madam Speaker, I can tell you that these changes are a first step to improving the relationship between indigenous communities and municipalities. As we look at the history, this is what was missing when it came to strengthening our relationships with indigenous communities, engagement and collaboration.

Requiring municipalities to notify adjacent indigenous communities of any new municipal development plans or area structure plans mirrors current legislation regarding statutory plan preparation, where municipalities must notify adjacent municipalities of the plan preparation. The MGA review has included meetings with Treaty 6, Treaty 8, Siksika, Tsuut'ina, Stoney, Kainai, Metis Settlements General Council, and the Métis Nation of Alberta Association. We talk about and say with pride that we are on treaty lands depending on where we are in the province, but when we acknowledge that, we need to ensure that they have the voice at the table when the decisions are made.

This MGA is actually that bridge, that road that is leading towards strengthening those relationships, thus strengthening our communities. In preparation for this bill Municipal Affairs sent e-mails and letters to all First Nation bands and Métis so that they would know what amendments were coming forward. The MGA doesn't apply on indigenous lands but can be used to help bridge the gap between indigenous communities and municipalities by creating an avenue for collaboration and conversation. Again, I repeat the words "collaboration" and "conversation." The MGA is bringing in a new era of collaboration for all Alberta communities. This approach should include First Nation and Métis communities. Bridging the gap is important to build a strong Alberta.

Therefore, I'm very proud to say that I'm supporting this bill with pride, and I'm amazed how collaborative it is and how it is conveying or encouraging the message of friendships and relationships through this modernized MGA.

Now I would like to move to adjourn the debate. Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Mr. Mason: Good progress today, Madam Speaker. I would therefore move that we call it 6 o'clock and adjourn until 9 o'clock tomorrow morning.

Bill 8

An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government

[Adjourned debate May 16: Ms Kazim]

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition. Good morning.

Mr. Jean: Good morning and thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to Bill 8 at third reading. I want to begin by offering my thanks to my colleague from Livingstone-Macleod for providing my input, my comments for the record at the Committee of the Whole stage. I appreciate that, and I know that with his help we have been able to come up with some amendments and proposed amendments and, actually, to overcome some of the challenges that have been identified to inspire stakeholders, in particular municipalities, in relation to this bill.

I do share his disappointment that the government saw fit to reject both of his amendments, however, because I think that they were reasonable and thoughtful and certainly reflected some of what we've heard in discussions with municipalities and members of municipal governments across Alberta. What they told me was that they wanted predictability and flexibility, not all municipalities because, obviously, some are more mature in their development and also their population growth and some of the demands that they've needed over the years. The provincial government, frankly, in the past has provided some of those areas with more stable, predictable, long-term funding, and they've been able to as a result control some of their tax base and their ratios on taxes.

Now, Mr. Speaker, my Wildrose colleagues and I have long been proud advocates for municipal governments, and of course we have proposed many things, including the 10-10 infrastructure plan, which we believe gives stable, long-term funding to municipalities. We've also proposed some other municipal government suggestions that would strengthen municipalities. It's always our purpose in the Wildrose to strengthen municipal governments because they're closer to the people and they make better decisions, in my opinion, with the people's money.

Also, long term they are more accountable to the people and more instantly are able to deal with the needs and demands as well as to reflect at the ballot box what the people of that constituency or municipality want. We understand that when you empower local municipalities and provide them with resources that they need, they flourish and, in turn, Mr. Speaker, Albertans flourish. That's what it's all about here, to serve the people of Alberta and make sure that they are provided with the opportunity to have greatness in their lives as they see fit for their lives.

When it comes to Bill 8 specifically, I have been clear about my position from the beginning. There are a lot of good things in this legislation, Mr. Speaker, a lot of things that I actually support and have been advocating for for years. I think it's important also to give stability and predictability to industry and to corporations as well and, most importantly, to the citizens of Alberta, the everyday Albertans that pay their taxes, pay their dues, and want their government to simply stick up for them when they ask.

The bill's title, An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government, is, I think, well deserved. As I said, many of the proposed amendments will indeed strengthen municipal governance in our province. Of course, that is a very good thing because if we strengthen the municipal governments, we will strengthen, ultimately, the accountability to the people of Alberta, and I believe better government will happen as a result.

Unfortunately, however, providing absolutely no details whatsoever and leaving it completely up to ministerial discretion regarding when a municipality that exceeds the 5 to 1 tax ratio will be expected to become compliant are not things I can support. Mr. Speaker, this gives, I believe, the absolute opposite effect than what the Federation of Canadian Municipalities asked for from our government and previous governments, federal governments, regarding predictability, stability, long-term understanding of what the result of this bill will be in regard to the ratio.

You might be asking yourself: why am I so hung up on the 5 to 1 ratio? Why am I prepared to vote against an entire bill full of good ideas – and they are good ideas – that actually strengthen municipal governments and support municipal governments all across Alberta? Well, the answer is simple: because I want every Albertan to experience the amazing life I've had in Fort McMurray. I've lived there 50 years, Mr. Speaker. It's been fantastic. Two blocks away from my home of over 20 years, before it was burned down, I would be able to take my kids and my family out fishing in the morning and actually, in 15 minutes, be able to catch some fish and have them on the banks of the Clearwater. Now, that's not important to everybody, but it is important to me. I do believe that the lifestyle that I've had has been incredible.

I do think Fort McMurray is the greatest place in the world. Certainly, Alberta is. I've had the honour of representing the Wood Buffalo region, including Fort McMurray, for 12 years, both federally and provincially, and I've lived in the community since 1967. I have spent the greatest years of my life in Fort McMurray. Great memories, Mr. Speaker, and I do see that being a challenge today, being able to continue, especially under the uncertainty that this act brings to the stability and the long-term predictability of taxes.

Mr. Speaker, I'm going to say it a couple of times in my speech, but this has the possibility and, I believe, the likelihood of the minister being able to bring in ramifications that are, frankly, unaffordable. Right now we pay, in Fort McMurray, municipal taxes. The citizens of Fort McMurray pay municipal taxes that are comparable to Edmonton's and Calgary's for the same home, yet because of this change and because of the neglect of previous governments with Fort McMurray and the huge growth rate, the expansion by over 120 per cent over the last decade or so, we have had challenges that most communities don't have, mature communities. We've grown, as you know, from 1,700 people in 1967 to 100,000 people just two years ago and now a few less than that, about 82,000, I understand. There are a ton of challenges.

Mr. Speaker, I know that although our birthplace does leave a mark on us, the place where we are raised, I believe, makes a permanent mark on your soul, your family, and your future. It creates the foundation which builds who we are.

The opportunity of our municipal taxes, which are currently competitive with the rest of the province, seeing a 300 per cent increase, Mr. Speaker, in just five years I believe is unconscionable. It certainly, from what I've read in the notes from the government, seems to definitely be within the realm of possibility, which means that the people of Fort McMurray, notwithstanding that they have seen devastation there in just the last year, will be subject to a 300 per cent increase in their tax rate. I would suggest that that will encourage people to move out of town.

I don't want to be the doom and gloom person. I do believe that Fort McMurray, as I mentioned, and that area, northern Alberta, northeastern Alberta, is the greatest place in the world, as, I would hope, anybody that was raised there thinks. But it is going to present a lot of challenges, and right now we have more than enough challenges.

That's why I'm asking for predictability and stability and knowing what's going to happen long term. I want to talk about Fort McMurray in 20 years. I'd like to make it 50 years, Mr. Speaker, maybe even 100; that would be so nice. But I'd like to talk about Fort McMurray not in the way it was and how it was the economic engine of Canada, how it was providing so much tax base and so many riches to the people of Canada and Alberta. I don't want to talk about "was." I want to talk about "is," and I can't talk about "is" if nobody lives there, if people fly in and fly out, they stay at the camps, they don't contribute to the community. Everybody here is part of a community, and I want my community to thrive, flourish. I want people to be proud of it.

Mr. Speaker, we've lost over 2,000 homes. Some people put the estimate as high as 2,600 homes. At a time when our tax base is shrinking and people are earning a lot less money, we're seeing an increased cost of 300 per cent, possibly, and that's why I can't in good conscience support this bill. That's why I've asked the government and why our amendments suggested that we do what municipal leaders have suggested we do, and that is, for those municipalities that exceed the 5 to 1 ratio, to put forward an opportunity for them to know how it's going to lay out in the future so they can adjust accordingly before we vote on this bill, not afterwards.

I'm not going to take up a lot of time, Mr. Speaker. I think everybody knows where I stand on this bill and why I want to vote against it, notwithstanding that there are some incredible parts to it.

I would support the bill if they just moved to a different time frame to implement this and gave the certainty and predictability to the municipalities. It doesn't, Mr. Speaker, just matter to my municipality; it matters to 19 other municipalities across Alberta. They're not just in northern Alberta; they're all over Alberta. I believe that many of these municipalities don't even understand at this stage the large ramifications for their tax base and ultimately the ability of their community and their citizens to thrive.

I simply can't go back to Fort McMurray and look the residents in the eyes – many of them lost everything they had, including, Mr. Speaker, some without any adequate insurance – and tell them not to worry, that they can trust this government to bring forward predictable, balanced, sustainable legislation and regulation, that will support them and not encourage them to move out of Fort McMurray, that won't double, triple, or even do worse over a very short period of time just because they said so. That's why we need governments that bring forward predictable, long-term legislation based upon proper accountability mechanisms and that make sure they listen to the people and do what the people ask.

That's why the consultation process is so important for any government. Without the legitimacy of consultation with the people, I don't think you have the right to govern and certainly not the right to bring forward legislation that is going to impose dramatic costs and a change of lifestyle on the people that have lived in northern Alberta for so long or on any community, Mr. Speaker, any of the 19 municipalities across Alberta. After the year many of the residents have survived, they certainly need stability, predictability, need to know that this government is on their side and has their backs.

I'm also one that believes that we need to give the same ability to businesses to have long-term projections and know what their costs will be going forward. Mr. Speaker, we know that it's going to be less. Why not just have the ability to move that over a greater period of time so people have more flexibility to get to the point where they have to be, ultimately, with this government?

For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I will be voting against Bill 8 at third reading. I think my community is depending on me, as all municipalities that are going to be affected by this legislation are. They want predictability, they want stability, and they want to know long term what they are facing because they have to make those decisions for their lives. Many people within my community and the 19 others across this province will have their personal lifestyle and quality of life affected by these changes by this government.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I just had a question for the hon. member relating to his comments about municipalities. I appreciated those comments. He talked about the importance of municipalities being independent, being able to determine their own futures, that they were more accountable to the people. He was supportive of the FCM position with respect to predictability and autonomy of municipalities as well, I assume.

But on Monday afternoon during question period one of his members asked me some questions about the green line issue in Calgary – it was the Member for Calgary-Foothills – in which he demanded that we intervene to tell the city council what to do with respect to the green line. I'm just wondering if he supports the position that was taken by the Member for Calgary-Foothills, that the provincial government should overrule the city of Calgary when it comes to the design and so on of the green line, and whether or not he feels that's consistent with the principles that he's just stated.

Mr. Jean: I thank the member for the question, Mr. Speaker. As you know, there are only really three levels of government in Canada. One is the federal government. The others are the provincial government and, of course, aboriginal government. As such, the municipal governments are actually under the purview of the province, and although this government, the NDP government, might try to download as many decisions on them as possible, the truth is that they are ultimately responsible for all of these changes because it's called the Municipal Government Act, and that means the authority rests with this minister and with this government.

I do believe that decisions closer to the people are better decisions, but that doesn't mean consultation does not have to be on the wide breadth of all Albertans. Mr. Speaker, this is being funded, in part, by the people of Alberta, from all across Alberta. Much like the federal model of tripartite involvement – municipality, province, and the federal government – I would suggest that it would be no different in this particular case. I do believe that we have to have something that this government has been missing, and that is consultation with the people: having the ability to talk to them, having a committee that actually hears them, and that they get to vote on those decisions. [interjections] Now, they may bicker and laugh, but we know what happened with Bill 6. Was there consultation? No. That's why we had thousands of people out on the front steps. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Jean: Was there consultation on any of the bills they brought forward? Thirty-six days for the labour bill, Mr. Speaker: that's not consultation. That's telling people what's going to happen. This government is not a consultative government. They want to download the decisions, ultimately, onto people that they can blame in the future. They should take the responsibility that they have been elected to have and make the decisions in consultation with municipal governments and with the people of Alberta and businesses and citizens, everyday Albertans, because that's who they serve, not themselves.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any other questions or comments to the Leader of the Official Opposition under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing and hearing none, are there any other members who would like to speak to the bill?

Seeing and hearing none, I would call upon the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs to close debate.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's truly an honour to stand here to close third reading of Bill 8, An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government, but before I do, I'd like to address some of the last member's comments. Time after time I've listened to the members of the Official Opposition fearmonger Albertans with hypothetical scenarios, and frankly I won't let the member of the Official Opposition get away with that today. Listen, these are real families. I've met some of these families, and they deserve better than what the member opposite is offering. They deserve facts, not rumours and conspiracies. Albertans deserve a better opposition, and so do the people of Fort McMurray.

I want to speak to the regulation-making authority proposed in Bill 8 for compliance with the linked tax ratio of 5 to 1. I understand there are some concerns, and I think there's been a lot of misinformation about this. During the MGA review and consultation we heard very clearly that municipalities over the 5 to 1 ratio should have to comply with the ratio. All this bill will do is provide a mechanism to set a compliance schedule. This bill changes nothing for the property tax rates in Wood Buffalo right now. No changes have been put in place in Bill 8, and no changes are imminent.

The Official Opposition has been stating that this is going to raise taxes by 300 per cent, and this is patently false. That is not the case. Let me explain this clearly to the hon. members across the aisle. We are talking about a long-term, phased approach, a phased approach that takes into account the assessment growth and capital planning of each affected municipality so that we can protect residential ratepayers and municipal services. This is a thoughtful and balanced approach. This approach is supported by both RMWB and industry, who are working together in collaboration on a solution that works for families and the economy.

Municipalities will not be asked to do this overnight. We are working with our municipal partners and industry to determine timelines that work best for them and their residents, and I'll remind the House that supporting our municipalities also means supporting the industries that their residents depend on. During this time of low oil prices we are working to help our oil sands industry remain as competitive as possible. The bottom line is that if the oil sands aren't succeeding, Fort McMurray and other communities aren't succeeding. We're moving forward with a thoughtful and balanced approach.

Bill 8, if passed, gives the minister regulation-making powers in terms of timelines – just timelines – and this gives us the flexibility to ensure that communities have plenty of time to adapt. Each community is different, and that's why we will develop local solutions with the local municipalities through consultation. We can't just put through arbitrary timelines. We need to respect the diversity and needs of each community and make collaborative decisions from there. I'll say it again: nothing is imminent, and we'll continue to move forward collaboratively with the RMWB, other municipalities, and industry with a balanced approach that improves industrial competitiveness and protects residents.

Now, as I have previously said, I'm very proud to close third reading of this bill. The Municipal Government Act has been the gold standard of government consultation. This has been an ongoing process since 2012, and I want to take a second to truly thank my department staff. None of us would be here without the hard work and long hours put in by our staff, and I am certainly no exception. Without a doubt, I have the best staff in the government, and I really want to thank them for the hard work that they have put into this. It's incredible.

The MGA has been about two things all along, collaboration and consultation. We wanted to make sure that this bill encourages municipalities to work collaboratively with their neighbours to the benefit of their residents. We wanted to make sure that the voices of Albertans were reflected in this legislation, and this bill represents a lot of the ideas and feedback we received directly from Albertans during our town halls last summer in 21 communities. We wanted to make sure that this bill supported families by enabling councils to create parental leave policies for municipal councillors and to ensure that municipalities can work together towards shared services such as libraries and rec centres.

It's easy for members on both sides of the aisle to get caught up in the day-to-day politics of the Legislature, but we should never forget that at the heart of this work must be Albertans. With that, I want to end by thanking all of the Albertans who participated in our consultation and shared valuable feedback and ideas. I want to thank the members in the Assembly for thoughtful and constructive, for the most part, discussion of these amendments. I appreciate all the consideration you've given this bill, and I welcome your support of an Act to Strengthen Municipal Government.

I move that the bill be read a third and final time. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move second reading of Bill Pr. 1, Calgary Jewish Centre Amendment Act, 2017.

It is my pleasure to rise in the House today to support Bill Pr. 1, Calgary Jewish Centre Amendment Act, 2017. Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud to say that as the MLA for Calgary-Glenmore it is my honour to represent the Calgary Jewish Centre, an exemplary and unique community centre in Calgary that has been serving all the individuals in our city at great length. In 1979 the Jewish community of Calgary opened the Calgary Jewish Centre, a recreational, cultural, and social facility in southwest Calgary. The Calgary Jewish Centre today and as it has been since 1979 is open one hundred per cent of the time to any and all who wish to attend and participate, Jewish or not. All programs are open to all. With this policy the Calgary Jewish Centre is a major recreational, cultural, and daycare facility in its part of the city.

Considerable work and legal planning and a petition to the Alberta Legislative Assembly to amend the Calgary Jewish Centre Act with expanded objects and a name change have brought them to the point where they're ready, finally, to begin moving forward with fundraising towards execution. Their expansion is amazing. I have gone to this facility multiple times myself, and the amount of work they have put in and the effort to serve our communities is commendable. I have seen how it is serving all the communities, particularly in Calgary-Glenmore, in so many ways. When I talk to seniors, children, parents, whoever, they all talk very highly of the facility, and I've seen with my own eyes that the kind of events, festivals, and programs that are conducted through the facility are exceptional.

So when this bill was brought forward with the amendments for further expansion of this facility – I can't express how delighted I was to see what great work is being forwarded by the Jewish community, that is serving all the communities in our society. It was my pleasure to stand up and speak on their behalf.

In order to explain a little bit more in terms of what this expansion entails – it comes in different phases, and phase 1 consists of renovation of the existing Jewish community building and building a new, enlarged daycare facility. As we could see, the vision about having a daycare facility along with the seniors' care facility is excellent. With the existing building and its amenities as the base, including meeting rooms, recreational facilities, aquatics centre, gymnasium, the upgrades are going to be definitely very helpful to the members.

In phase 2 the focus is mostly to have a new theatre, basically to have seats that will be for up to 400 people as well as 250 people for a banquet and social function. The rest of the phases would consist of a new seniors' care centre and independent housing with a kosher kitchen in it, so that will make the facility a very unique place and very different in comparison to other facilities. Also, the aquatic facility's expansion and the gymnasium along with the Jewish day school or independent housing are something that is part of the scope of this project.

All in all, I would say that it's a very well-researched, very thorough approach with long-term vision in terms of how it is going to serve our communities, understanding the fact of how our demographics are changing over time and having that vision in terms of how our communities are going to look in the next few years. Planning something by anticipating or having foresight is excellent, and I would like to really commend the Calgary Jewish Centre for their excellent work.

I am very happy and honoured to stand up today to support this bill. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Are there any other hon. members who wish to speak to Bill Pr. 1?

Hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, any closing comments?

Ms Kazim: I'm good. Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Bill 12 New Home Buyer Protection Amendment Act, 2017

The Chair: Any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm always pleased to rise, as the members of this Assembly will know, to speak to matters relating to the real estate industry and particularly where it concerns consumer protection and the protection of the public's interest in the greatest transaction that most Albertans will undertake in their lives. It is one of the biggest financial decisions that most families or individuals will make if they're buying their property for their own principal residence or as a revenue purchase, and they deserve to be protected and have confidence that that home is being built to a high standard by builders with a good track record.

It's common knowledge throughout the province that people have suffered at the hands of builders who were not well trained or lacked the skills required to complete the construction of a particular building. It's a nightmare when that happens to a family that is expecting to have their hard-earned dollars invested in a product that's going to last 50 years, 100 years if indeed it's built to the standards that it was supposed to be built to in the first place. When that doesn't happen, as I said, it's a nightmare for that family and usually a big financial burden if not financial ruin if indeed there's no compensation available because the builder that built that home, that caused the problem, no longer exists.

This bill is a fair and balanced measure which helps both consumers and the home building industry because participants in the home building industry are the last ones who want to see unscrupulous or unworthy contractors building homes for buyers who end up getting stuck with a property that requires all kinds of renovations or ends up being unfit for habitation and costs them financially something that they can't bear.

After great consultation with industry, consumer stakeholders, municipalities, and others this bill is being brought forward today to protect consumers and to maintain the high standard of integrity that we typically see in the home construction industry, notwithstanding the fact that some builders have caused this legislation to be necessary. Now, builder licensing programs already protect about 75 per cent of Canadians. We need to be in line with the other provinces so we're not a destination for bad builders from elsewhere.

This is just one more practical way that we're making life better for Albertans, and I'm proud to be a part of a government that's focused on that, particularly when we're looking at, as I said, the largest financial transaction that a family will undertake. It's a significant undertaking. I know that when I did speak with individuals in my past life as a real estate agent, that was one of the major questions in mind. When you're talking about what you actually want to buy, do you want to look at a resale property, or do you want to look at a brand new property, that's first on the market from a builder? Whether it is a resale property or whether it was one that's now going to be your first home or the home that's first occupied by you as a purchaser, the legislation is out to protect both of those buyers, the resale buyer as well as the initial buyer of a brand new property.

Madam Chair, the signs of difficulties or problems in construction don't always occur right after the purchaser moves in. Sometimes it's a subsequent purchaser who will be the recipient of the flaws in construction in the form of perhaps mould, perhaps leaky windows, perhaps a balcony that's tilted in towards the house and accepting water that goes down the wall. It doesn't really appear till a year or two later in the form of mould or seepage. There can be any number of incidents or problems that may occur even two to three or more years after the house is built, and quite often that house has already been sold to a subsequent buyer, maybe two or three subsequent buyers over the course of those few short years. The people who initially bought that house from the builder weren't probably aware of the problems that were endemic in the flawed construction in the first place.

What we want to make sure is that we try to be proactive and prevent those flaws from occurring in the first place by ensuring that those contractors who are constructing homes for sale in this province are qualified to do so and that there's a registration mechanism to ensure that those individuals who have been found to have a track record of flawed construction are not able to set up under another name in the future and do the same thing to somebody else down the road.

Currently new-home buyers are vulnerable because there are no specific requirements to be a residential builder. This doesn't just put consumers at risk; it also damages the home construction industry because one or two bad builders can tarnish the reputation of the industry as a whole. When I would sit down with homebuyers who would be making that choice as to whether they'd go ahead and buy a brand new home from a builder or perhaps a resale home that was a few years older on the market, that choice was often clouded by fears that they would end up being stuck with a home that was built by one of those so-called bad builders.

Reputations of certain names of builders got around within the industry. Homebuyers would stay away from them if they could, but sometimes those same builders would end up naming themselves something else under a new company and continue to build homes. Quite often a homebuyer would, with that fear in mind, simply opt to buy a resale home so that they knew they were buying something that had a bit of history in it and perhaps would have been showing its flaws already after it's two or three years old. They would have some confidence that anything that was going to surface had actually surfaced.

That's one of the reasons that new-home builders certainly want to make sure that buyers have confidence in the products that the industry is putting on the market, so that the buyer will, when they're considering whether to buy a brand new home or a resale home, opt without fear for the new-home builder's product. That's something that I actually had conversations about with numerous buyers, particularly first-time homebuyers who were fearful of getting into a brand new home because they didn't want to get stuck with something that would need remediation as a result of a construction flaw. The new legislation is supported by organizations like the Canadian Home Builders' Association, the Insurance Bureau of Canada, and the Alberta chapter of the Canadian Condominium Institute.

We've heard from homeowners, home builders, owner-builders, and renovators at targeted engagement sessions across the province. Further than that, this licensing program is partially based on the new-home buyers public registry pilot, which is helping Wood Buffalo residents during the process of rebuilding their homes and their communities in the Wood Buffalo-Fort McMurray area. Mayor Melissa Blake is also a supporter of the licensing program and has publicly stated that it promotes builder accountability and protects homebuyers.

I just want to point out, Madam Chair, that because the opposition always makes this claim that government doesn't do enough consultation, I'd like to head that off right at the start and say that we're not just wasting time listening to people complain; we are listening to engage with them and make sure that we get the legislation right.

The number of homes a company has built or typically builds in a year will have no effect on its ability to be licensed. Builder licensing is not going to have a negative impact on the trades or prevent smaller builders from entering the industry. It's not going to require owner-builders who are building their own home to be licensed. It's not going to cost taxpayers a whole bunch of money. It's going to be a fee-operated system on a cost-recovery basis. It's not going to place an unfair burden on Alberta builders. The proposed license fee is $600 for a new application and $500 per year for a renewal. That's the same as in British Columbia and lower than in Ontario and Quebec, where new applications are $2,500 and $1,000 respectively.

So the $600 initial fee for application and $500 for a renewal is a pretty small portion or percentage of what it costs to buy a new condo or single-family dwelling. I don't believe that we're going to see a lot of push-back from builders over this cost because when you add that into the price of a home, it's probably not going to be something that buyers would balk about if the builder decided to pass it on. Also, if the builder decided to absorb that cost, it still is something that's within the range of their ability to do given the price of homes and apartment or townhouse condominiums.

It's also considered, I would think, by the home builders as an investment in their own industry standards and reputation. It could be considered an investment in their businesses because it has the result of really making it much more difficult for unscrupulous builders to participate in the industry, and it makes it a lot easier to weed them out and prevent them from continuing to build homes after having been identified and caught out as a builder who should not be in the industry.

Madam Chair, not only has the government held constructive engagement with many builders in order to shape this bill so far; we've actually gotten their support, as I mentioned before in talking about the various stakeholders who expressed themselves positively towards this legislation. To quote the Canadian Home Builders' Association:

Alberta is looking forward to working in partnership with the provincial government on including licensing as part of the New Home Buyer Protection Act. While there is . . . plenty of work to be done, the ability to remove builders who demonstrate a proven, negative track record will be a benefit to every Albertan – including those in the industry. Our members have always been on the leading edge of the industry, including requiring warranty coverage for more than 40 years. We want to make sure that licensing protects affordability and choice for Albertans – while also recognizing the many upstanding builders providing homes and jobs throughout the province.

That's a quote from Ryan Scott, president of the Canadian Home Builders' Association, Alberta chapter.

Madam Chair, I wish I had had this protection, this legislation in place when I was representing my buyers when they were making choices about building versus buying a resale home. It would have made the choice a lot easier, a lot more comfortable when there wasn't this added fear or cloud of fear over their decisions, when they were wondering if indeed there was a risk of themselves becoming the victims of a home builder who never decided that they would be acting in the interest of the consumer but were looking just to simply flip another home and get another one on the market and darn the consequences down the road with the buyer who would be suffering from their shoddy workmanship.

That element wouldn't now be a part of the equation should this legislation be passed. Buyers would have a much higher degree of confidence when they're deciding to go ahead with the purchase of a brand new home, and ultimately down the road the individuals whom they sell that home to will also know that there's probably a higher level of probability that the property won't have the endemic problems that we see in houses that have been built over the last couple of decades.

That would more likely be in terms of water infiltration. That is the most common issue that I've seen in the industry, particularly more than likely around windows and balconies, where in times of economic booms, when houses are under construction at a rapid rate and labour is in short supply, skilled people have to have the oversight of supervision, which they don't always get, and what results is that the techniques are not properly followed or not known. Windows get installed without proper sealant, and balconies get attached to buildings and constructed in a way that they end up having water trend towards the house instead of away from it. Eventually water infiltrates the borders of the house and the perimeters, gets inside the house, and once that happens, you've got mould issues, and that is a huge, huge problem.

Many of us have seen scaffolding around three- or four-storey walk-up buildings, even taller buildings in Edmonton, Calgary, other cities in the province, and those buildings are only half a dozen years old. It makes one wonder: what in the world is going on? These buildings are being shrouded by scaffolding, and they're undergoing major renovations, and they're only a few years old. This is quite often the result of water infiltration because of poor construction and because builders weren't skilled in what construction methods were required in order to keep water out.

This legislation will go a long way to really highlighting the fact that if you're a builder in this province, you will need to be qualified, you'll need to know what you're doing, and you'll have to make sure that the interests of those people that you are serving, those people that you're building those homes for, are protected. In the home building industry and in the resale industry as well there's a high level of pride of workmanship, but there's a percentage, a small percentage, of individual builders out there who really don't regard the public interest as something that they need to follow. It's those builders that we are targeting with this legislation here to protect the public and consumers at the point of purchase, where they first buy the home from the builder, and resale subsequently down the road.

This legislation will go a long way to protect the consumer as well as the industry and make it a much safer transaction for buyers, whether they are buying a brand new home or a resale home, because of the fact that the builders who are licensed to construct homes in this province have proper oversight and a need to be licensed, a need to be educated to a required standard, and that indeed is what the home building industry seeks to do. There's no pride in somebody who builds a home that ends up causing problems and hardships for that buyer. It does the industry no good to have those types of players involved in the construction industry, and the Home Builders' Association and other builders and participants in the industry would be the first ones to admit that this legislation is probably a long time overdue. Given that we're going to be joining the other 75 per cent of the Canadian population, the 75 per cent who are covered already by this type of consumer protection legislation, it's high time that we did pass this.

It's not something that's going to be a large cost to consumers. The $600 initial licensing fee, as I mentioned, or the $500 subsequent annual fee is a good insurance for the reputation of builders. It's a reassurance to the consumers of these new homes, that they will be putting on the market for buyers to purchase, knowing that the people who constructed them were licensed, were subject to educational standards, and were members of an industry that sought to look to the long term in providing a quality product to the consumer that was going to last beyond the first purchase and go on to subsequently be homes that stand proudly and don't require a huge investment to remediate problems that shouldn't have happened in the first place.

With that, Madam Chair, I'll close my remarks and encourage all members to wholeheartedly support this legislation. Thank you.

The Chair: Any further questions, comments, or amendments? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Chair. I have an amendment to suggest and will circulate that and await your approval.

10:10

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A3.
Go ahead, hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Madam Chair. This is an excellent bill that I think all Albertans will welcome. My amendment seeks to simply add a little more transparency around the background of specific builders and suggests that the public has a right to know a little more than is currently required of builders and their past history.

The New Home Buyer Protection Amendment Act, 2017, would be amended by striking out section 12 and substituting the following:

12 Section 9 is repealed, and the following is substituted:

Registry

9(1) The Registrar shall establish and maintain a registry that must include information on

- (a) licences applied for, issued, renewed, suspended, cancelled or reinstated under this Act,
- (b) authorizations applied for, issued, suspended or cancelled under this Act,
- (c) exemptions applied for or issued under this Act,
- (d) claims that have been made under a home warranty insurance contract or under Part 1 of this Act,
- (e) legal proceedings against a residential builder for structural defects, defects in materials or labour or any deficiency related to the construction of a new home,
- (f) new homes built or under construction by residential builders, including details of the home warranty insurance contracts covering the new homes,
- (g) new homes built or under construction by owner builders, including details of the home warranty insurance contracts covering the new homes, if applicable,

- (h) persons in respect of whom administrative penalties have been imposed or compliance orders have been issued under this Act,
- (i) persons convicted of an offence under this Act, and
- (j) any other prescribed information.

(2) A warranty provider, residential builder or owner builder must notify the Registrar when a claim is made under a home warranty insurance contract or Part 1 of this Act within 30 days after the claim is made.

(3) The Registrar shall establish and maintain an online registry accessible to the public that consists of the information in the registry, and may publicly disclose that information.

Madam Chair, it is clear that we want more public access to information. This is simply going to add to the access the public has to information about a particular builder, their history, any concerns that have been found to be warranted relating to improper or inadequate building standards, any previous actions to withhold approval to this particular builder. It will simply give public access to the information that now is not included on the current website, to allow the public themselves to make their own judgments about whether the past history of this builder is acceptable or not. I think it will simply add to the confidence that people will have in this important new legislation and give them access to more information that relates to specific builders and their past history.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'd like to thank the member for putting forward a thoughtful amendment. You know, we've just received this, so it might take some time for us to consider this. I would strongly encourage the member that if it's available to him in the future, if we can have a little more notice so that we have a bit of time to understand the ramifications of the proposed amendment. I know that the member certainly brought this forward in good faith and is attempting to improve the bill.

I guess, as we're considering this, I have some questions on whether or not the information that is being requested here could potentially be obtained elsewhere in the bill. I just want to make sure that this information isn't redundant and hasn't been captured elsewhere. You know, I'm just wondering. Reading through the section that is relevant here, it currently reads:

Section 9(1)(a) is repealed and the following is substituted:

- (a) licences applied for, issued, renewed, suspended, cancelled or reinstated under this Act,
- (a.1) authorizations applied for, issued, suspended or cancelled under this Act,
- (a.2) exemptions applied for or issued under this Act.

The amendment contemplates adding quite a bit of additional information. You know, my question to the member is: does he feel that what's currently in there is not accurately captured? What specifically is the reason for these additional items?

Dr. Swann: Well, indeed, this gives more information to the public. This may be knowledge that the ministry might have, but in the current bill legal proceedings that have been raised against a builder in the past aren't necessarily included, past convictions. I think consumers have a right to know what's gone on in the past, not just what's happening in the current state of affairs. This would add more information, more data, more accountability to this particular bill. It's a question, I guess, of just how much transparency is reasonable. For the homebuyer, I think, the more the better, and looking at a builder's past history and previous convictions, to me, should be part and parcel of what is available to the consumer.

Thanks, Madam Chair.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you for the additional information. I suppose a question that came up for me in the explanation was: would this information be retroactive, or do you contemplate this being once the bill comes into force, that this would be information that's kept moving forward from that point in time? Or would this be retrospectively looking at future convictions, future exemptions? The information you're seeking: would it be retroactive, or would it be forward looking?

Dr. Swann: I think that, as indicated in the details of the amendment, this should include past convictions and should be part of the record indeed if there has been a violation and a conviction around inadequate building standards or misrepresentation of building quality.

Thanks, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just have a couple of quick questions for my colleague from the Liberal caucus with respect to the registry and if he feels that some of the additional requirements in the registry will have any significant impact on costs. We've seen in the past other Liberal organizations with respect to registries and ballooning costs, and I'm just wondering if that is a possibility with the additional requirements in this registry.

Dr. Swann: Well, Madam Chair, reliable information does cost a little more. There's no question that if you want more information and you want more reliable information and you want more disclosure, more accountability of inadequate builders, it's going to cost a little more. It takes more time, more searching, more uploading of information. Presumably, we would better protect consumers.

Mr. Cooper: In all seriousness, though, have you given any consideration to what those costs might be with respect to the additional information? I know I was joking around about the gun registry there, but have you considered what the additional costs might be? Perhaps the government can provide some comment around whether or not they think that the additional associated costs to the builder would be able to cover the additional pieces of information that you are also trying to include in the registration.

I do agree that having more information available to those that would like to seek it when making such an important decision is, obviously, an important goal to try to achieve. The legislation, hopefully, balances the amount of red tape associated with the bill, allowing industry to also act in a way that is helpful to industry, helpful to the consumer and to finding that balance. I don't know if the government could respond with respect to the total costs and how this may affect that, or perhaps you've considered it. In addition to adding regulations to builders already, does it tilt the balance, or do you think the balance has been struck appropriately?

Dr. Swann: Well, fair question. I guess that what I would say is that this new bill is going to add costs to builders. It's going to require them to upload more information about their past, especially about inadequacies in their past and violations in their past building practices. Once that is done, there would be no additional expense because the foundation has been set and they simply add each year any concerns that have been raised or found inadequate in their building.

I don't see it being a significant increase – some increase but not a significant increase – in the initial requirements based on this new bill. The bill itself is going to require significant new information, a new website, new reporting practices and standards. Yes, it's going to cost more but not significantly more than is currently being asked for.

The Chair: Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just want to rise as well and make a comment, a couple of questions to the hon. member who's proposing the amendment because it does give me some concern. I'm just wondering if he has given consideration to the consequences of some of the measures that he's proposing, particularly in terms of gathering some of the information that he's proposing be registered. Some of that is readily available and could be verified quite easily. What I believe the hon. member is asking builders to do is self-report certain information that might incriminate them and that they would rather not see reported.

I don't think we can leave it up to the legislation to force builders to self-report. I think there would have to be a means of actually verifying this information; therefore, there would have to be some kind of oversight watchdog that would collect information on legal proceedings that were under way or had taken place. I'm not sure how this information would be gathered. There is certainly a huge cost to that, to raking in all this information about new-home builders. To rely upon them to self-report I think would be naive at best.

I'm concerned that this amendment doesn't really consider the ramifications of how difficult it will be to actually gather the information that the amendment proposes be registered. Therefore, I have these significant concerns about it. Perhaps the hon. member might comment on this aspect of requiring self-reporting to self-incriminate oneself and also the difficulty of gathering the information that would come from disparate sources and would require oversight, which would need a significant amount of staff, in my view, and be quite logistically difficult.

Dr. Swann: Well, thanks for those comments. No question that there are going to be additional costs to confirm reporting. That's also the case with the present bill. You're relying on builders to self-report into this registry as it is. The question is: do we have a reasonable and robust oversight body within the ministry to ensure that what's being reported is accurate? That goes without question. Will it involve additional searches through the law courts, perhaps, and the registered convictions? I think that's the price of accountability and transparency, and it's what consumers expect of a government, that they not only provide information to the public but verify that the information that's being put up there from whatever source is reliable and reasonable.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Chair. This proposed amendment refers to section 9. Now, currently this section reads in part:

9(1) The Registrar shall establish and maintain a registry that must include information on

(a) authorizations and exemptions issued or applied for under this Act.

What's proposed in Bill 12 is that section 9(1)(a) be repealed and the following substituted:

(a) licences applied for, issued, renewed, suspended, cancelled or reinstated under this Act,

(a.1) authorizations applied for, issued, suspended or cancelled under this Act,

(a.2) exemptions applied for or issued under this Act.

Now, as I understand the amendment, we have quite a number of changes. This amendment proposes:

9(1) The Registrar shall establish and maintain a registry that must include information on

- (a) licences applied for, issued, renewed, suspended, cancelled or reinstated under this Act,
- (b) authorizations applied for, issued, suspended or cancelled under this Act,
- (c) exemptions applied for or issued under this Act,
- (d) claims that have been made under a home warranty insurance contract or under Part 1 of this Act,
- (e) legal proceedings against a residential builder for structural defects, defects in materials or labour or any deficiency related to the construction of a new home,
- (f) new homes built or under construction by residential builders, including details of the home warranty insurance contracts covering the new homes,
- (g) new homes built or under construction by owner builders, including details of the home warranty insurance contracts covering the new homes, if applicable,
- (h) persons in respect of whom administrative penalties have been imposed or compliance orders have been issued under this Act,
- (i) persons convicted of an offence under this Act, and
- (j) any other prescribed information.

So with that particular part it seems to me that the idea is to create, essentially, a Carfax for houses. I'm wondering if the member who introduced the amendment can explain how much consultation has gone into the development of this list with the stakeholders.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you very much for the question. I've had no consultation on this. This is based on, I guess, common-sense requirements that seem applicable to all consumers who would want to know, ideally, how much has gone on in the background of a particular builder and as comprehensive a list as is possible to gather so that buyers can be aware, buyers can know as much as possible about the background of a builder and ensure that they're getting what they think they're buying.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Chair. Thank you to the member for the amendment. He's right. It's common sense. That's why we're making sure that this information is online. I just want to get a couple of things on the record of kind of how this is working, and then I'll speak to the registry part of it. Then we'll go from there.

In regard to the licences and suspensions and how this is going to work, the consumer protection measure will create provisions to remove or suspend bad builders from Alberta before they get hired to construct their homes. The intent is to screen for bad behaviour and patterns of behaviour, obviously, that are presenting risks to consumers. Court records will also be used to determine behaviour that represents risks. Licence issuance is for one year. A probationary licence is issued when there is inadequate builder history or when there are red flags to demonstrate a pattern of noncompliance or lack of understanding of the safety code system, and the builders will be required to complete remedial steps.

A suspended licence is based on more serious infractions and offences. Builders would be unable to build until a plan is implemented. Licence rejection is based on situations of fraud, criminal violation, substantive outstanding court actions with homeowners and contractors, which are all things that the registry will be looking at.

Now the appeals. All registered decisions on the issuance, suspension, or cancellation of licences will be open to appeal. Appeals will be heard by the New Home Buyer Protection Board. If a decision is made to deny, suspend, or cancel a builder's licence, this information will be provided through written notice to the builder along with the reasons why.

Now, if we get to the online registry part, as I said, we want to make sure that – the whole point of this is to make sure the information is online for the consumer. An online registry will be kept up to date for consumers, with a listing of all builders who are licensed to build. Licence status – active, probationary, suspended, provisional, as examples – will be listed as well as reasons why the decision was made in the case of a probationary or suspended licence. In addition to providing more information to homeowners to help them make informed decisions when selecting a builder, this will provide homeowners with the assurance that builders meet government criteria.

This registry will build on existing infrastructure – and that's important – that is housed and maintained within Municipal Affairs and which lists the number of homes registered in Alberta. The current new-home buyer registry has approximately 6,400 users that utilize the system daily. This infrastructure will be leveraged to ensure a seamless application process.

One might ask the question: will this be a new registry? This is not a new registry, nor is it related to registries under the purview of Service Alberta. The new-home buyer registry currently lists all homes in Alberta which have a home warranty insurance contract. This will be expanded to list information about all of the licensed builders in Alberta, including licence status such as probationary or suspended licences, to provide consumers with information about builders. This is not associated with the Association of Alberta Registry Agents but is stand-alone and maintained and housed in Municipal Affairs. So when we're talking about the cost, all of these are already in-house.

There are other examples across the country where people use in-house. Ontario is actually going to go in-house, I believe, because they agree with the way that we are going about our system. In that respect it does make a lot more sense to have that in-house. It's interlaced. It's a system that works well together with our new-home warranty system.

He's right. I mean, we need to make sure this information is out there. And that's the whole point of the – one of the points of the bill, to begin with, is to make sure that we communicate to consumers and customers out there who are building their homes what infractions they've had in the past.

As I'm looking over the amendment, I mean, I'm trying to find what isn't covered in the bill at the moment. In all honesty, my staff is trying to look at that right now, too, so that we can have a little peek at it. I would have liked a little more time. We all would like more time to look at amendments – of course, we would – but when we're looking at something that's a consumer protection bill, we want to make sure that we get the right information out there.

Mr. Cooper: Time is on our side. Yes, it is.

Mr. S. Anderson: I appreciate the singing across the way from the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

That's something that's very important: to make sure that we get that information out there. You know, I've heard from builders, from homeowners, from realtors, buyers that that's what they want. We started that pilot in Fort Mac just for that reason, not quite as robust as what we are thinking of implementing with this bill, but it is part of what we're doing.

As I said, I'm just trying to figure out, you know, from what I've read from the amendment in the short time that we've had this, what possibly is not in the bill right now. Hopefully, I'll have an answer pretty quickly for the member, and then I can let him know.

Yeah. I'm just kind of curious as to – I know the member probably read my bill, obviously. It was why I brought this amendment up. If he knew, obviously, that it was under Municipal Affairs already, the registry, so that the costs are going to be there – the licensing fees, the $600 for the initial and the $500 going forward to renew, are all going to be simply to cover the cost of the program. That's where those fees will go.

I'm just open. I know the member has read it. He's very good at what he does. Just curious if he sees any other way that there are going to be costs there above and beyond what the price of those licences are, to handle this in-house system.

The Chair: Other speakers to the amendment? Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Madam Chair. Yeah. I just have some questions for the hon. member as well, specifically to the warranty and insurance reporting provisions. Just looking over the wording here, I see some, you know, potential – I'm sure quite unintentional – vagueness in the wording of the amendment, that could present some challenges for it to be fulfilled. Looking at 9(f) for the registry here: "New homes built or under construction by residential builders, including details of the home warranty insurance contracts covering the new homes." Now, it doesn't specify precisely what details of those contracts would be available to the registrar, and I would have a bit of pause on that because, I mean, there could be valid reasons, commercial reasons, where some details such as premium, that type of thing, might not actually be something that insurance companies want to disclose.

Also, you know, what are the reporting requirements for any changes in wording, and is it meant that they need to be reporting if it's valid at the time? Is there reporting needed to be done when it expires? Before even looking at that, I think you would need to – I think it would be advisable, anyway – discuss that with people in the industry to try and see just what would be reasonable and unreasonable in that circumstance and indeed how helpful that might actually be, in particular.

Also, that's a similar kind of concern I have if we look at a subsection (2): "A warranty provider, residential builder or owner builder must notify the Registrar when a claim is made under a home warranty insurance contract or Part 1 of this Act within 30 days after the claim is made." Does that mean that, you know, both parties or three parties, in a sense, to the warranty contract would have to report this claim? The company providing the warranty, the builder, perhaps the person making the claim – it doesn't specify, but at least two for sure.

Then, of course, the other question would be: when we say "after the claim is made," does that mean when a claim has been opened? Opening a claim just means that the individual has contacted the warranty provider and made a complaint, has brought up a concern. At that point it may not be a valid claim. So then the question becomes: if you have claims that are invalid, should they be recorded?

Also, should it come when a claim has actually been closed? Once a claim is open, you know, once the individual reports it, they have a certain period of time whether to decide they're going to go through with it as well. Standard? I don't know. I can't say particularly to warranty, but it could be up to two years. So the timing is kind of important and whether, you know – because having a claim opened on a warranty does not necessarily speak to any sort of culpability, irresponsibility on behalf of the homeowner unless the claim is actually deemed to be valid and a payout was made.

It's just a lot of questions, I think, that I have on just how this is meant to work in practice. I think it's well meaning, but I would be concerned, personally, about accepting an amendment like this without having an opportunity to discuss it with the parties who would be responsible for reporting it. I just wonder if the hon. member might have some comments or a rebuttal to my concerns. I'd be very happy to hear them.

10:40

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just wanted to rise to thank the Member for Calgary-Mountain View for his amendment. Very well intentioned and with some great opportunities here to clarify and, I guess, highlight some of what the minister has said that is going to be embedded into the intent and the spirit of this bill. There is, I think, an opportunity here for us to take a look at the fact that there are many different opportunities through various channels for accountability for the builders. I think that Bill 12 is a great step in new-home buyer protection, in ensuring that there are at least minimum standards met by the builder community in protection of the consumer. I think that's a good thing.

There are lots of other channels where buyers can access information, which I think is very positive: through the Canadian Home Builders' Association, or Build Calgary, as it's called now in Calgary, and also through organizations such as Better Business Bureau. Anybody who's been in the industry, as I have been, knows that there are many different ratings – Avid Ratings, J.D. Power, and HomeStars – where consumers can also go and get additional information on the builders, whether there are any issues outstanding or whether there's a trend towards not meeting the needs of the consumers and their purchasers.

I think there is some great intent here. Again, as the minister has said, his staff is looking through to ensure that these are items and issues that are covered. But I do thank again the member for his intent in looking at some of these.

Again, having been in the industry, I think one of our greatest protections for the consumer is the fact that we have a highly competitive industry, where we have very good quality builders, not just the large ones but the medium-sized and the smaller ones. But we do have to ensure that there is protection and a level of expertise and a level of accountability to the consumer within those. I'm hopeful that that is what will bear fruit with this bill as we move forward.

I again thank the member for his intent on that. I thank the minister for ensuring that these protections are in there for the consumer and the fact that this is, I think, a great opportunity for us to work with industry and to ensure that the government is there and also to ensure that we find the most efficient ways for us to move forward in terms of providing that homebuyer protection.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other speakers to the amendment? Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Yes. I would also like to thank the member for taking the time to put an amendment forward. Reading through this amendment actually brought up a concern that I hadn't thought of until now, and I'm sure that the minister has probably already dealt with this. Should we put forward all this information on licensing that is being, I guess, detailed by the minister and let's say, for instance, that government isn't efficient in getting all of this information onto the website or into the type of vehicle that the government is trying to get this information out to the consumer and let's say, for instance, that a consumer uses that outdated information to purchase a house, will there be liability for the Alberta government because of that information not being updated? If it's in there, I apologize; I must have just missed it when I glanced through the bill. In this case here, obviously, our liability would be a lot higher if we had a lot more stuff within the requirement to bring forward information to the consumer.

The next one is one of the concerns that I brought forward already. It seems that there is going to be a lot of work, if you will, to bring this forward in a way that – it maybe seems that there's going to be a lot of work involved with implementing this. Has the minister brought forward a line item that he can reference in his budget that will show this extra work to get this moving forward so that we don't end up in March of next year with a supplementary budget for an extra $50 million to create a program? As our Opposition House Leader has stated, when these programs start, a lot of times we say that, well, it's going to cost $500,000 or $1 million to implement, but it ends up being $150 million or $200 million. Has the minister got this as a budget item? There's obviously going to be some upfront work to make this happen.

Also, I heard the minister say when he was talking that Service Alberta will not be involved in this process. I may have misunderstood that, but how can Service Alberta not be involved in this process if it is in charge of all the registration of land titles, if you will? Will we be putting a lot of burden on the Service Alberta department that is unforeseen? Will Service Alberta end up going for supplementary supply, if you will, when it comes time for implementing this because they're going to have to bring forward some sort of mechanism to, I guess, flag or move this transition information from registry services into Municipal Affairs?

I would love to hear some thoughts from the Minister of Municipal Affairs regarding some of my concerns.

Mr. S. Anderson: I will read the registry stuff for you again because the reason why Service Alberta is not involved in this part is because it's not their registry that's being used. It's not a new registry, nor is it related to registries under the purview of Service Alberta like drivers' licences, birth certificates, et cetera. The new-home buyer registry currently lists – so it's existing. There's already a new-home buyer registry under my ministry that lists all homes in Alberta which have a home warranty insurance contract. This will be expanded to list information about all licensed builders in Alberta, including licence status, et cetera. That is not associated with the Association of Alberta Registry Agents. It's a stand-alone registry that will be maintained and housed within Municipal Affairs. That's why I say that it's in-house; it's there.

When you're talking about the line item in the budget, it's staff that have been reallocated from other projects that we used for this already. It's people that are already in our ministry that we're using, so there are no issues there. And the licensing fees would cover any of the additional costs that are involved in that. So all that's there. If there's any, you know, really fine detail that I can get the member if he has any questions, I can certainly get that for him.

On to the amendment. As I said before, you know, a lot of these changes that we're talking about here are already under this bill and in the regulations for the New Home Buyer Protection Act. We are planning and we do have more work to do on the consultation and the rollout with our stakeholders, and all of the stakeholders that have been involved in this are all onside, whether it be CHBA, the Condominium Institute, small builders, consumers, realtors, things like that.

I do appreciate the member's amendment, and I appreciate the thought he's put into it. But, to be honest, without some further consultation going forward, as we've promised these stakeholders, unfortunately I will have to be voting it down. But I do appreciate, as I said, the member's time and effort, and I hope that he comes forward with some more information and is willing, if he has any more ideas, to bring those forward and work with us on this because this is a nonpartisan issue. This is something that helps consumers in Alberta. I think it's a good thing that we can all work on.

So I appreciate it, but unfortunately I will have to be voting that down. Thank you.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to A3? Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Yes. I did ask a question about liability, if that was a part of this as well. That is a concern.

I also heard that you're going to be reallocating staff within Municipal Affairs. How exactly is it that we're going to have this additional staff be moving around, Minister, when you've got the MGA, that has actually been reviewed, and we've made some significant changes to your department? Do you feel that it's reasonable to assume that suddenly you're going to be freeing up staff when it appears that you're actually going to be allocating staff to making sure that the new recommendations for the MGA legislation are going to be instituted?

Specifically, I guess for myself it would be that ICFs would be in play. We have a lot of these big-piece items that I'm sure you're working through as we speak. How exactly is it that you're going to be moving staff to get through to this department without adding extra cost and coming to us for a supplementary increase in the spring?

Mr. S. Anderson: The liability question: that's a little more detail that I'll have to get for you just to make sure that the nuances are worked out.

The reallocation part is because there are programs that – I mean, my ministry is pretty big. There's a lot of staff in there. Not everybody is working on the MGA just because it's the second-biggest piece of legislation around. There are some programs that are coming to fruition, and we are going to use those staff that would have been moved into other programs and things like that. That's where we're doing that. There are just simply staff that are coming to the end of certain projects or things that they were working on, so then they'll be transitioned into this. That's simply all it is for that.

Mr. Cyr: I'm sorry. I just want to clarify that in the spring we're not going to see a line item that specifically says that it's additional staff for the MGA or for instituting this program or programs that you didn't anticipate to stop, just to be clear on the record.

Mr. S. Anderson: I'll answer the question again and say that we are reallocating staff that have their projects ending. I'm not going to look to the future and make assumptions and do hypotheticals on what's going on. I don't think that would be fair to anybody. What I am saying is that staff are reallocated in my ministry and aren't affecting any of the budget in my ministry.

The Chair: Any further speakers to amendment A3?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Chair: Back on the main bill, the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today to table an amendment to Bill 12, New Home Buyer Protection Amendment Act, 2017. I have the requisite number of copies here for the chair.

The Chair: This will be amendment A4.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that Bill 12, New Home Buyer Protection Amendment Act, 2017, be amended in section 8 in the proposed section 4.1(1) by striking out “The Registrar may, on application, issue a licence to a residential builder if” and substituting “On receipt of an application and within 30 days of a residential builder satisfying the requirements under this section, the Registrar shall issue a licence to a residential builder if.”

Madam Chair, this is a relatively simple amendment which I think provides some degree of certainty and additional clarity for builders applying for licences. The current wording of this section allows the registrar latitude to not issue a licence even if all requirements are met. I’m going to assume that this is not the intent of this section, and we are suggesting and seeking support to amend the wording to ensure a greater level of certainty for applicant builders and to ensure we do not create any unintentional barriers to conducting their business, investing in and building communities, and creating jobs.

Further, adding “within 30 days” of all the requirements being met in addition to changing the “may” to “shall” ensures that decisions on licence applications are made in a timely manner and, again, are not impeding much-needed economic activity and job creation. This amendment simply gives clarity with some certainty in timing for builders by allowing them to know within 30 days if they will or will not receive a licence. This also gives the builder the ability to quickly meet any shortcomings of their application or to begin any additional training deemed necessary by the registrar.

I would encourage all members to support this amendment and thank the minister for his kind consideration and, hopefully, his endorsement. Thank you.

The Chair: Any other speakers to amendment A4? The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Chair. Yeah. Thank you to the member for the amendment. These are the types of things that I’m talking about when we’re working together on a bill that I think is beneficial to all consumers out there. What this bill does, obviously, is that it protects consumers.

I know that the member opposite has experience in the industry. What I’m curious about is that he’s brought amendments to me before, that were pretty good, and unfortunately we had to vote them down. But I’m curious on this one about when he’s talking about substituting in the bill here the “shall” and the “may” and these types of things, and he’s putting in the 30 days. Does he think that it’s going to take away flexibility from the registrar? For example, there is a builder that through no fault of his own can’t get the information in time from, say, a broker or somebody like that. You know, that’s just an example. Does he think that it would bog things down and that, unfortunately, there might be a little bit too much red tape in that sense and a lack of flexibility for that registrar to say, “I understand what your situation is. You need three more days, four more days,” whatever it is? I’m just kind of curious if that’s something that he’s considered while looking at bringing this amendment forward.

Thank you.

The Chair: Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the minister for his request for clarification. Minister, that actually is not going to be one of the challenges of this amendment because it says, “Within 30 days of a residential builder satisfying the requirements under this section.” In fact, my comments earlier about giving them a chance to meet those requirements were actually not entirely correct because what this is saying is that they have met all of the requirements.

All it says is that if the registrar has said that you’ve met all the requirements, you’ve checked all the boxes here, you have met both the paperwork and the financial and also the background checks or funding or financing that may be required within your more detailed regulations – if those are met, that decision then has to be made within 30 days.

It’s really just for someone who has taken the time. They may have gone back and forth already with the registrar’s office to meet those requirements, but once they have satisfied those requirements to the satisfaction of the registrar, that decision has to be made within that 30-day period to give them some certainty in moving ahead with their business.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other speakers to amendment A4? The hon. minister.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Chair. Unfortunately, that’s not the way that I’m reading this right now. I understand where the member is trying to come from here. To be honest, I think this might have unintended consequences, and that’s where my worry has been all along. I think that if there is a situation that could arise, possibly where a builder application is rejected, that because of these delays, the builder would have to reapply and repay the fee, which is something that I don’t want. We want to avoid this.

I think the concern over administrative burdens is plausible. You know, we are aware of this and of those and manage on the principle of not creating unintended bureaucratic roadblocks to homeowners and builders. Nobody wants bureaucratic roadblocks and red tape. That’s something we really want to avoid.

Unfortunately, I think that this might create unintended impact contrary to the principles that we’re going for here. I think that in the event of a processing backlog we will actually be able to work with the permit issuer so that construction isn’t delayed because of processing delays. You know, that would include issuing a provisional licence. So there are those options there. Also, if they meet the requirements, it wouldn’t take 30 days. So I don’t think that this is needed, to be honest, and I think it might actually . . .

Mr. Cooper: But you’re not sure.

Mr. S. Anderson: I am sure. I am sure.

I don’t think it is needed. I am sure that it isn’t needed, so I will be voting it down, unfortunately. But I do appreciate that this member always brings good amendments forward to me, and he’s always willing to work together on this. It’s great that he does that, and I very much appreciate that. Yeah. Unfortunately, I think it might tie our hands a little bit too much, so I will be voting it down.

Mr. Gotfried: Madam Chair, again, thank you to the minister for his comments. I think what we’re asking for in this amendment, really, is to ensure that there are no undue delays. I mean, in embedding this in the legislation, what we’re doing is ensuring that we don’t get a backlog, that we have no excuses in allowing the private sector – they’ve met the requirements and have satisfied the requirements under this section, so everything that the minister has put into place is met. I guess, when we look at this: is there a situation here where due to a backlog – a builder is applying. They meet all the requirements. There is nothing outstanding with respect to their application, so we’re not talking about a rejection. We’re not talking about anything like that. We’re talking about a situation where a builder has checked all the boxes, has met all the requirements.

It would be my suggestion that we have a responsibility to the private sector, to the builders, and to their customers as well to ensure that we do not have undue delays, and I think that 30 days is a reasonable amount of time if the system is efficient and the processes are put in place. Again, the builder maybe has gone back and forth several times, but they’ve met all the requirements. They are hoping to build homes either on a speculation basis to sell, or they have a client who is anxious to get building.

The other part of that, of course, is that if we hold it up, we are holding back economic activity, we are holding back the creation of jobs, we are holding back stimulation within the economy, where, again, we’ll assume that there is demand for that housing or need for that housing.

This, Minister, could be some of the not-for-profit groups that we’re dealing with as well. This could be Habitat for Humanity applying for a licence. It could be other nonprofit groups that are trying to step in. It could be people trying to work with those other groups or build affordable housing as well.

I think that that certainty of meeting all the requirements – and we’ve had this, Minister, in some other legislation, where we changed a “may” to a “shall,” and those were graciously accepted, in fact, by the minister of economic development, which then held the ministry and your department accountable to the people that we’re serving to make sure that we do not cause undue delays in the processing and approvals for them to move ahead in conducting their business.

I think therein lies the intent of this, and I hope that not only the spirit but the intent and the wording of this, to ensure accountability from your ministry and your department and your staff, is that if everything is met, there will not be undue delays beyond that 30-day period. What happens if it stretches out to six months? I mean, that person may end up being out of business. The person who has contracted them to build their home has said: “Sorry, I can’t wait. I’m moving on. I’m going to find somebody else.” Again, I think we’re trying to ensure that there are not undue barriers to entry into a marketplace.

I was talking with the Home Builders’ Association. I think that they’ve got about 400 registered members across the province. In fact, I think from information that they got from your department, there are actually about 4,000 builders in Alberta, so many of them are not large builders. They’re not a part of the bigger associations. It’s very important, I think, that we allow that economic activity, that entrepreneurial spirit to occur within Alberta without undue delay.

I would again implore the minister and the members to support this amendment to ensure that we do not cause barriers or undue delays to economic activity during difficult times. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other speakers to amendment A4?
Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Chair. I’m pleased to rise to speak against this amendment. I appreciate the intent and motivation of the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, who is always intent on making sure that the consumer is protected. On this side of the House we’re certainly all for economic development and making sure that we don’t have impediments in place to economic development, particularly home construction, in this time of economic downturn.

However, there is an inherent assumption in the amendment that I do reject, and that assumption is that the department will sit on applications when there’s no reason to do so. I reject that because I believe strongly that the ministry and the department are certainly wanting to make sure that any applications which meet the requirements, you know, get out the door and get finalized so that those builders who do meet the requirements can begin operating and construct homes. The assumption that the department will sit on these applications for no reason whatsoever is something that I don’t feel comfortable with. I don’t think it was the intent of the mover of the amendment to suggest that the department or ministry would do such a thing.

What I do see this amendment also doing as far as, perhaps, forcing the hand of the ministry or the department when they are considering finalization and getting these applications out the door is that there may be – even if, as the wording of the amendment says, the builder has satisfied the requirements under this section, they may have not got all the documentation that the ministry or the department required them to get in, therefore satisfying the requirements under this section. However, there’s also a time period within which the ministry will have to verify information. To say that the 30-day time window will be the limitation that the department has to meet, I think, as the minister indicated, will unnecessarily tie the hands of the department. Even though they may have met the requirements under this section, as the member states in his amendment, the department still, therefore, may have a time period within which they would have to verify some of the information provided by the builder to meet the requirements. Putting a 30-day time limit on it may not be enough time for those verifications to be made. For that reason as well I see problems with this amendment.

For two reasons. The assumption that the department will not get the applications out the door once all the requirements have been made I reject. I don’t believe that will happen, and I don’t think that the onus should be put upon the department to perform within 30 days. There may be no more time necessary to verify information provided under the application even though all requirements are satisfied. The information needs to be verified, and it may not be done within 30 days. Therefore, I’m more than comfortable entrusting the department to get the applications approved and out the door once they’re comfortable that the information that is provided has been verified, and the builder can go ahead and build the home.

I propose to all members to reject this amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: Any further speakers to amendment A4? Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

The Chair: We’re back on the main bill. Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? No other speakers to the bill?

Are you ready for the question?

[The remaining clauses of Bill 12 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.
The hon. Government House Leader.

11:10

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Pursuant to the notice provided yesterday . . .

The Chair: Rise and report.

Mr. Mason: Oh, rise and report. Sure. Let's do that. I move that the committee rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Rosendahl: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill Pr. 1. The committee reports the following bill with some amendments: Bill 12. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? Say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed, say no. So ordered.

Government Motions

Bill 205

19. Mr. Mason moved:
Be it resolved that Bill 205, Advocate for Persons with Disabilities Act, be moved to Government Bills and Orders on the Order Paper.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Now, Madam Speaker? Thank you very much. I'd like to indicate that Bill 205 is a very positive act that's been brought forward initially as a private member's bill by the Member for Calgary-North West. I know that a great number of members of this Assembly are very supportive of this bill, and moving it to Government Bills and Orders will help it to receive fuller discussion and consideration, which I believe it merits.

I would urge all hon. members to support this motion.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak in favour of Government Motion 19, that will move Bill 205, a bill that a number of my colleagues on this side of the House have already spoken in favour of, a bill that many, many individuals on this side of the Chamber as well as that side support. I think that it will be a positive step in the right direction, and I look forward to discussing that a little bit further when we are back in debate. So I encourage members of the Assembly to support the motion.

I also look forward to having some discussions with the Government House Leader around other bills that we might like to try and provide some expedient passage for, including Bill 206, a bill that was introduced last week in the House, that I know has some widespread support. I know that the mover of that bill would also like to be able to see that bill moved through the House prior to the end of this session. I encourage the Government House Leader to do the same.

I look forward to such discussions, where we can work together, like we will on Bill 205, to see safe passage, if you will, of that piece of legislation and get on to supporting the good people of this province in, hopefully, what will be a number of different areas.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the motion?

Seeing none, the hon. Government House Leader to close debate.

Mr. Mason: Just to close, Madam Speaker. Well, this is to give fuller consideration, not to give it quick passage but to allow greater consideration by the Assembly of what is an important bill. With respect to other bills, if the Opposition House Leader is suggesting that a bill put forward by a member of the opposition should be made a government bill – it's an interesting and unique proposal – it might have to entail the member proposing the bill becoming a member of the government, so you may want to consider that.

[Government Motion 19 carried]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 205

Advocate for Persons with Disabilities Act

[Debate adjourned May 15: Mr. Shepherd speaking]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to have the opportunity to continue to speak about this, I think, very important, invaluable bill. You know, I have a niece, a niece named Brooklynn. She's on the fetal alcohol spectrum. As a result, since she was a child, she's faced a lot of challenges, both mental and physical, challenges that, I'm happy to say, she's largely been able to meet head-on and that she's been very successful in managing through the support of a lot of family, friends, and some very dedicated support workers. At the end of May she'll be turning 21. Brooklynn is a very talented drummer, she's a skilled painter, and she's about halfway through the early childhood development program at MacEwan University here in the constituency of Edmonton-Centre.

Now, Madam Speaker, it wasn't that long ago that Brooklynn was very reliant on family and friends to be able to navigate through a lot of areas in her life. She faced real challenges in handling money. She wasn't able to travel alone. However, now, thanks to some wonderful support staff, having access to them, and to assistance from organizations like Inclusion Alberta Society, Brooklynn has become quite independent. She's now able to travel alone by bus to school, she spends time with her friends, and she's become a very valued employee working with children at a YMCA in the north end of Edmonton. I can tell you that I'm incredibly proud of how well Brooklynn has done, to see that growth, that success in her life, to see how happy she is now in having gained these skills and these new opportunities and being able to pursue some of her own dreams of working with young children.

You know, earlier this week, this past Sunday, we had Mother's Day. It's fitting to note how hard I saw my mom work to help track down the supports and the resources that made all of this possible for Brooklynn, that helped her to be able to succeed in school and make what's been a very successful transition for her now into her adult life. But the truth is, Madam Speaker, that not all individuals with disabilities have someone like my mom in their court. Not all of them have someone who's able to look out for them, who's able to help navigate those systems, who's able to dedicate the time and the energy it takes to navigate all of the government programs, systems, resources to get the help and the support they need. Certainly, there are more than a few who actually face some significant barriers and challenges in doing so for themselves.

Now, we know that there are many great community organizations. I mentioned Inclusion Alberta Society and Skills Society, which is here in Edmonton-Centre and which I've had the chance to get to know, and Bev Hills there, who is a fantastic advocate for people with disabilities and people in the disability community. There are many others who are assisting and working to make sure that people are able to access supports now. But even these dedicated people, who go above and beyond in their work to assist people with disabilities, sometimes face some barriers in trying to make progress when they face some of these long-standing, systemic issues and challenges that can cause some people to fall through the cracks.

That's why I'm very happy to stand today to speak in support of Bill 205, the Advocate for Persons with Disabilities Act. This is a proposal that will ensure that all members of the disability community have a voice. If we pass this bill, it will create a disabilities advocate with the power to identify and study issues that are of concern to persons with disabilities, to review the programs and policies that affect persons with disabilities, to participate in processes in which decisions are made about persons with disabilities.

The minister has noted the motto of the disability community, Nothing about Us without Us. This advocate would be there to ensure that that would happen, that that would be the case, to promote the rights, interests, and well-being of persons with disabilities through public education. They would help to provide information and advice to the government with respect to any matter relating to the rights and the interests and the well-being of persons with disabilities. They would be there to assist individuals who are having difficulty accessing services for people with disabilities and related programs, including directing them to appropriate resources, persons, or organizations who may be able to help them.

You know, Madam Speaker, in the two years that we've been here in government, we've heard it very clearly from the disability community: Nothing about Us without Us. I commend the Minister of Community and Social Services for his dedication and his work to adopt that mantra as he's been moving forward now. He's taking concrete action in revoking the intrusive safety standards and holding substantive consultations on what should instead take their place. We've heard from members of the disability community that they deeply appreciated those consultations and that they felt that their voices were indeed heard.

Indeed, Madam Speaker, I also want to thank the minister for his decision to end the use of the supports intensity scale. That was an incredibly important step, to end what was for people from this community a truly humiliating experience, which I heard about from constituents and from those who worked with them. I know it meant a lot the day that that minister rose in this House and said that that would not be the practice of the government of Alberta anymore.

Indeed, that is one more reason why we need to look at passing this bill and having someone like the disability advocate. Think, Madam Speaker. If someone like that had been present when they first considered putting forward the supports intensity scale, they could have been here to say that they had spoken with members of the community, that this would be a system that would reduce their dignity, that it would strip it away, that there were better ways, that there were better approaches that could be taken.

To have that voice available inside the ministry, I think, is incredibly valuable and important to making sure that we understand these issues and these concerns from the perspectives of those who are most affected by them. The creation of a disability advocate can help to ensure that we develop much more respectful and effective systems to deliver the supports and services to members of the disability community and that we do so with a full understanding of what the members of that community truly want and need to be able to live with the full dignity and freedom that all of us enjoy here in the province of Alberta.

That is action, Madam Speaker, that will make life better for Albertans, for all Albertans, by helping more individuals with disabilities be able to find and retain employment, like my niece Brooklynn has been able to do, by giving better supports to parents of children with disabilities so that they can spend less time navigating systems and focus instead on providing good care and support for themselves and their families.

I'd like to thank my colleague the Member for Calgary-North West for bringing this bill forward. I know that she's bringing this forward after having done months of consultation, having conversations with many, many people from across the disability community, and based on feedback that we received through our own PDD safety standard consultations last year. Madam Speaker, this is an excellent example of how government can learn and improve and build new and better systems that will truly serve the people of Alberta.

Thank you again to the member for bringing this forward. I look forward to voting in favour of Bill 205.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a) any questions or comments? The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Madam Speaker. That was wonderful to hear. I'm so happy to be able to rise and even ask questions about Bill 205. Your comments about the supports intensity scale are absolutely accurate. Actually, this particular assessment tool was brought in a number of years ago, and the original writer or creator of this tool actually said that it was not to be used to determine funding. Sadly, at some point, without consultation, there was a determination – this happened a few years ago – that they would use this tool to determine what kinds of funds people with developmental disabilities, adults with developmental disabilities need.

You're right. The process was quite humiliating. It took a few hours to interview a person with a disability and their family, and they would ask the same questions to any person. It didn't matter if you were able to speak or not able to speak. It was a difficult process for people to go through, and I saw more than a few family members have to leave the room or just sit there in tears. I'm wondering if you could just expand for us on some of the feedback that you heard from your community and your constituents regarding how they felt or what they think should replace it or how they think their voices need to be included when creating a new step to determine what people need for funding.
